Windstorms cause damage and deaths every year throughout the country. Far too much damage, far too many deaths. One is unacceptable. We may not be able to do anything about the weather, but we can do more than talk about it. We can build and retrofit structures so they are better able to survive windstorms. But we can do that successfully and affordably only if we conduct the research and development needed to learn more about storms and about structures. That is exactly what this bill will enable us to do.

This is not a vain hope. Congress created the same kind of program for earthquakes in the late 1970s. And as a result, we are able to do much more today than we were 30 years ago to make structures earthquake resistant. We hope this similar program will yield a similar result for windstorms.

So in this bill we are following a proven formula. So again let me congratulate once again the gentleman from Texas (Mr. NEUGEBAUER) and the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) for this bill. They worked together in a bipartisan basis to fashion something that earns our support.

Let me thank also the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, and I am privileged to serve on that committee also, for working with us on the FEMA portions of this bill. And let me thank the American Society of Civil Engineers and the other groups that have guided us in drafting the bill. We did not just get in some closet someplace and say this is a problem, how do we deal with it. We reached out under the gentleman from Texas's (Mr. NEUGEBAUER) leadership and the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE), and we invited opinion, we invited input; and as a result of all that, we were able to fashion something that is pretty darn good, and I am proud of it. And I want to commend it to the attention of my colleagues and urge its overwhelming adoption.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), who helped get an initial ''big wind earmark'' that brought $3.8 million to Texas Tech's Wind Disaster Research Program in 1998 and helped lay some of the foundation for the bill that is now going to come to the floor for a vote.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3980. With the rain, wind, hail, and tornadoes that passed through West Texas last month and again today, this legislation could not be more timely.

This bill will give us the tools to research the effects of these storms, and it will provide us with a foundation from which we can learn how to minimize the damages associated with them. A working group comprised of officials from many Federal agencies will be formed to assess ways to reduce losses of life and property caused by these storms. As a farmer from West Texas, I know how damaging tornadoes and windstorms can be, and I understand the importance of this legislation. In the past I have strongly supported the efforts of research entities like the Texas Tech Wind Science Center to study ways to mitigate the damages caused by large windstorms. The Wind Science Center at Texas Tech has done yeomen's work identifying the best ways to reduce structural damage to properties caused by high winds associated with tornadoes and hurricanes. As a member of the Wind Hazard Reduction Caucus, I have supported efforts to make available the resources needed to study and minimize the damaging effects of these windstorms.

As has already been pointed out, in 1997 I worked on a bipartisan, bicameral basis with Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON to ensure the Texas Tech Wind Science Center got its first Federal earmark of $3.8 million, which was included in the fiscal year 1998 appropriations bill. As is quite often the case, when some folks do not understand, quite frankly, what wind is all about, some suggested this was pork. We contacted the then-Chief of Staff for the White House, Erskine Bowles, and requested that the funding be supported by President Clinton and be kept off the line item veto list. These efforts paid off. The center has since received anywhere from $1.1 million to $2.4 million each year since then.

I want to close by thanking the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) for his work on this issue and the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) first introduced this legislation in 1999, and he has been a champion of wind hazard reduction efforts since he has come to Congress. I know that he is happy to have this bill on the floor, as I am here today happy to support these measures again and encourage my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from South Dakota (Ms. HERSETH), the newest Member of the House of Representatives.

Ms. HERSETH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3980, the National Windstorm Impact Reduction Act of 2004. In an average year, more than 1,000 tornadoes are reported in the United States. With winds that can reach in excess of 200 miles per hour, these storms cause an average of more than 80 deaths and over 1,500 injuries per year.

In South Dakota, we have our fair share of severe weather. In the summer months, this takes the form of violent thunderstorms that often contain powerful winds. In fact, barely 1 year ago, South Dakota experienced the worst tornado outbreak in its recorded history. June 24, 2003, will be forever known in South Dakota as ''Tornado Tuesday.'' In one 24-hour period, we had a confirmed 67 tornadoes touch down in the State.

This ''superstorm'' produced over 350 weather warnings, and at least one tornado reached F–4 status, meaning it had winds reaching over 260 miles per hour. Miraculously, no one lost his or her life on this day, but at other times we have not been so lucky.

On May 30, 1998, a category F–4 tornado pummeled the small community of Spencer, South Dakota. The town of 400 residents was almost totally destroyed and six people lost their lives.

We have also experienced loss on my State's Indian lands. On June 4, 1999, a deadly tornado swept across the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. One person was killed and the property damage was widespread. More than 1,000 people were left temporarily homeless.

Because the people of South Dakota have seen firsthand the devastation that tornadoes and strong straight-line winds can bring, I am proud to support this legislation. It would create incentives for Federal agencies to work together to address the threats caused by wind damage. It would also improve our understanding of windstorms and how they create such intense devastation.

I believe that we need a proactive approach that will mitigate the damage caused by these remarkable natural events. This bill will save lives, result in decreased property damage and reduce the overall cost of Federal disaster relief.

I appreciate the bipartisan efforts of my colleagues, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. NEUGEBAUER) in moving this important legislation forward, and I urge all Members of this House to support the bill.

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE).

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this National Windstorm Impact Reduction Act. This legislation will help us take great strides in reducing the loss of life and property from windstorms.

We in North Carolina know all too well how devastating tropical storms and hurricanes can be. While flooding from hurricanes is often the culprit for the majority of the deaths, the winds generated from these storms range from 74 to 155 miles an hour or more, indiscriminately wreaking havoc to lives and property wherever they strike.

The National Windstorm Impact Reduction Act will develop windstorm impact reduction projects that could lead to new designs and construction practices that could mitigate, if not withstand, the force and damage generated by these high windstorms. This is an important piece of legislation, which I encourage all Members to support.

I want to congratulate the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) for his work and leadership on this issue. Kansas does not have the hurricane problems that my State has, but I know its position in the middle of Tornado Alley makes it a life-and-death issue for the State of Kansas. So I thank the gentleman.

As a Member of the House Committee on Science, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) has been fighting to improve research in wind-related hazards for years. I have been proud to cosponsor and support very similar legislation that he introduced both in this Congress and during the 107th Congress.

Very simply, this legislation will save lives in North Carolina, in Kansas and throughout this country. I congratulate my friend and colleague on his success in this effort, and urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 3980.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to close by saying that this bill consolidates and coordinates windstorm research that has been going on throughout multiple agencies and brings oversight to that process, and I think that is very important. I think the American people expect us to oversee the moneys that we are appropriating and authorizing; but it also is a public and private partnership, and the whole goal of this bill is to make sure that we get the important research out of the laboratories and into practical solutions that are going to be saving lives and reducing property damage.

So I encourage my colleagues to vote yes on H.R. 3980, the National Windstorm Impact Reduction Act of 2004.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support H.R. 3890, the Steel and Aluminum Energy Conservation and Technology Competitiveness Act. I'd like to commend my colleague from Pennsylvania, MELISSA HART, for introducing this important legislation.

During a very busy week in May, I chaired two Energy Subcommittee hearings on the issues of energy efficiency R and D. The first hearing took a broad look at research and development in the area of energy efficiency.

The second hearing focused on the legislation under consideration today, H.R. 3890. This bill authorizes a research and development program at the Department of Energy aimed at improving the energy efficiency of the metals industry.

Some may have wondered why we didn't simply combine the two hearings, on similar topics, into a single hearing. But there were two main reasons why it was important to give the metals industry initiative a dedicated place on the Subcommittee's calendar, and why the Department of Energy has an initiative focused on this one industry to begin with.

First of all, the metals industry is highly energy-intensive. Taken together, the steel, aluminum, and copper industries account for more than 10 percent of industrial energy usage in the United States. President Bush's National Energy Plan recognized that improving energy efficiency in our most energy-intensive industries could yield large improvements in productivity, product quality, safety, and pollution prevention.

Second, we have a strategic national interest in helping our metals industry remain competitive. For any industry, energy efficiency means increased production without increased energy consumption or costs. Improving energy efficiency helps improve the bottom line, making American metal products more competitive on the global market. That means more jobs here at home.

But energy efficiency is more than that. Reducing energy use reduces our emissions of pollutants and greenhouse gases, and it increases our energy security. In this way, energy efficiency just makes sense—dollars and cents—for the nation. Again, I commend Ms. HART for all her hard work on this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. NEUGEBAUER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3980, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

STEEL AND ALUMINUM ENERGY CONSERVATION AND TECHNOLOGY COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 1988 REAUTHORIZATION

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3890) to reauthorize the Steel and Aluminum Energy Conservation and Technology Competitiveness Act of 1988, as amended.

H.R. 3890

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 9 of the Steel and Aluminum Energy Conservation and Technology Competitiveness Act of 1988 (15 U.S.C. 5108) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

''There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this Act for fiscal year 2005, an amount equal to the amount appropriated for the same purposes for fiscal year 2004, and $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2009.''.

(b) STEEL PROJECT PRIORITIES.—Section 4(c)(1) of the Steel and Aluminum Energy Conservation and Technology Competitiveness Act of 1988 (15 U.S.C. 5103(c)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (H), by striking ''coatings for sheet steels'' and inserting ''sheet and bar steels''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(K) The development of technologies which reduce greenhouse gas emissions.''.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The Steel and Aluminum Energy Conservation and Technology Competitiveness Act of 1988 is further amended—

(1) by striking section 7 (15 U.S.C. 5106); and

(2) in section 4(b)—

(A) in the subsection heading, by inserting ''AND REPORT'' after ''MANAGEMENT PLAN'';

(B) by striking ''Within 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act'' and inserting ''Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the Act enacting this sentence'';

(C) by striking ''to expand the steel research and development initiative to include aluminum and''; and

(D) by inserting '', and shall transmit such plan to Congress'' after ''carry out the purposes of this Act''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART) and the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART).

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3890, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the gentlewoman from Illinois (Chairman BIGGERT) and the ranking member, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON) of the Subcommittee on Energy of the Committee on Science, and also the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and the ranking member, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) of the full Committee on Science, for working with me on H.R. 3890, a bill which will reauthorize the Steel and Aluminum Energy Conservation and Technology Competitiveness Act of 1988.

The legislation reauthorizes the Steel and Aluminum Competitiveness Act of 1988, which established a public-private research initiative, with cost sharing from industry, focused on improving industrial energy efficiency in the steel and aluminum smelting and fabrication industries.

The bill would result in improved energy efficiency in the domestic metals industries, thereby improving our international competitiveness in those industries. Improved industrial energy efficiency also offers environmental benefits through reduced emissions per unit of steel or aluminum produced. It can also help reduce the future demand for energy in the industrial sector, which is extremely important as we see rising fuel prices.

The bill authorizes $13.3 million for this program in fiscal year 2005, the same level that was appropriated for fiscal year 2004. For the outyears, that is, fiscal years 2006 through 2009, the bill authorizes $20 million per year, for a total $93.3 million over the 5-year cycle of the legislation.

This bill is right for industry, Mr. Speaker; it is good for our energy security, and it is good for the environment.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART) for her work on H.R. 3890, a bill to reauthorize the steel and aluminum research and development program at the Department of Energy. This energy conservation program is part of the Industries of the Future program in DOE's Office of Industrial Technologies. It is carried out through cost-shared partnerships with industry.

Past research under this program has made such steel mills and aluminum production facilities less polluting, more efficient and more productive.

The budgets for such programs have been cut significantly during the past 3 years, Mr. Speaker. This sends the wrong message to American workers, who are relying on these industries to remain competitive in a global market.

By reauthorizing the metals R&D program at H.R. 3890's authorization funding levels, we can give appropriate support for this research program. Restoring this funding will benefit the domestic steel and aluminum industries, the manufacturers who use American steel and aluminum in their products, and, ultimately, the American consumer.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend support for the bill by my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania, for her work on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the reauthorization of this very worthy program. As we all know, the last few years have been difficult for America's steel industry and continuing the Metals Initiative will go a long way towards easing those burdens.

This Nation's steel industry is second to none, and it is this Congress' responsibility to do everything in its power to enable American-produced steel to compete in a global economy.

The Metals Initiative lends private industry the resources it needs to develop energy-saving technologies that increase productivity and cut pollution. These innovations are a vital component to a strong American steel industry.

I can think of few other programs that offer so much with a prudent investment. Not only does this program create jobs by making the steel industry more competitive and reduce environmental impacts caused by steel production, but any costs incurred are recouped. A portion of all royalties realized by these new technologies are repaid until the full Federal investment has been recovered.

At a recent hearing held by the Subcommittee on Energy of the Committee on Science, U.S. Steel cited just one example of how the company has utilized these moneys. Several projects have been funded through the Metals Initiative to research and develop Advanced High Strength Steels.

This steel allows for the creation of lightweight cars that maintain the same standards of safety currently available to today's drivers. By using Metals Initiative funds, Advanced High Strength Steels production requires 171 million fewer gallons of gasoline, 4 million fewer barrels of oil, and emits 2.1 million fewer tons of carbon dioxide per year.

Such innovation reduces our dependency on both foreign steel and foreign oil, while further contributing to a safer road system and a healthier environment for us all.

This Nation would not be what it is today were it not for the contributions of the American Steel Industry and American steelworkers. Congress should recognize the significant strides the industry has taken to remain competitive despite many obstacles.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3890.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this initiative is one that is not as common for government, I think, as the American people would like to see. It is designed to help industry to become more efficient in its processes, but also more efficient in its use of energy. So, in the long run, it helps preserve American jobs.

That is why we are here today, Mr. Speaker. We are working on efficiency in technology and efficiency in energy use and, obviously, better emissions.

It is important to our industries to be competitive worldwide as we move this legislation forward.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3890, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARMFUL ALGAL BLOOM AND HYPOXIA RESEARCH AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2004

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1856) to reauthorize the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research and Control Act of 1998, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 1856

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act of 2004''.

SEC. 2. RETENTION OF TASK FORCE.

Section 603 of the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research and Control Act of 1998 (16 U.S.C. 1451 note) is amended by striking subsection (e).

SEC. 3. SCIENTIFIC ASSESSMENTS AND RESEARCH, DEMONSTRATION, AND TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER PLANS.

Such section 603 is further amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by adding at the end the following:

''In developing the assessments and plans described in subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f), the Task Force shall work with appropriate State, Indian tribe, and local governments to ensure that the assessments and plans fulfill the requirements of subsections (b)(2), (c)(2), (d)(2), (e)(2), and (f)(2). Additionally, the Task Force shall consult with appropriate industry (including agriculture and fertilizer industry), academic institutions, and nongovernmental organizations throughout the development of the assessments and plans.''; and

(2) by striking subsections (b) and (c) and inserting the following:

''(b) SCIENTIFIC ASSESSMENTS OF HARMFUL ALGAL BLOOMS.—(1) Not less than once every 5 years the Task Force shall complete and submit to Congress a scientific assessment of harmful algal blooms in United States coastal waters. The first such assessment shall be completed not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act of 2004 and should consider only marine harmful algal blooms. All subsequent assessments shall examine both marine and freshwater harmful algal blooms, including those in the Great Lakes and upper reaches of estuaries.

''(2) The assessments under this subsection shall—

''(A) examine the causes and ecological consequences, and economic costs, of harmful algal blooms;

''(B) describe the potential ecological and economic costs and benefits of possible actions for preventing, controlling, and mitigating harmful algal blooms;

''(C) evaluate progress made by, and the needs of, Federal research programs on the causes, characteristics, and impacts of harmful algal blooms; and

''(D) identify ways to improve coordination and to prevent unnecessary duplication of effort among Federal agencies and departments with respect to research on harmful algal blooms.

''(c) SCIENTIFIC ASSESSMENT OF FRESHWATER HARMFUL ALGAL BLOOMS.—(1) Not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act of 2004 the Task Force shall complete and submit to Congress a scientific assessment of current knowledge about harmful algal blooms in freshwater locations such as the Great Lakes and upper reaches of estuaries, including a research plan for coordinating Federal efforts to better understand freshwater harmful algal blooms.

''(2) The freshwater harmful algal bloom scientific assessment shall—

''(A) examine the causes and ecological consequences, and the economic costs, of harmful algal blooms with significant effects on freshwater locations, including estimations of the frequency and occurrence of significant events;

''(B) establish priorities and guidelines for a competitive, peer-reviewed, merit-based interagency research program, as part of the Ecology and Oceanography of Harmful Algal Blooms (ECOHAB) project, to better understand the causes, characteristics, and impacts of harmful algal blooms in freshwater locations; and

''(C) identify ways to improve coordination and to prevent unnecessary duplication of effort among Federal agencies and departments with respect to research on harmful algal blooms in freshwater locations.

''(d) NATIONAL SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, DEMONSTRATION, AND TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER PLAN INTO REDUCING IMPACTS FROM HARMFUL ALGAL BLOOMS.—(1) Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act of 2004, the Task Force shall develop and submit to Congress a plan providing for a comprehensive and coordinated national research program to develop and demonstrate prevention, control, and mitigation methods to reduce the impacts of harmful algal blooms on coastal ecosystems (including the Great Lakes), public health, and the economy.

''(2) The plan shall—

''(A) establish priorities and guidelines for a competitive, peer-reviewed, merit-based interagency research, development, demonstration, and technology transfer program on methods for the prevention, control, and mitigation of harmful algal blooms;

''(B) identify ways to improve coordination and to prevent unnecessary duplication of effort among Federal agencies and departments with respect to the actions described in paragraph (1); and

''(C) include to the maximum extent practicable diverse institutions, including Historically Black Colleges and Universities and those serving large proportions of Hispanics, Native Americans, Asian-Pacific Americans, and other underrepresented populations.

''(3) The Secretary of Commerce, in conjunction with other appropriate Federal agencies, shall establish a research, development, demonstration, and technology transfer program that meets the priorities and guidelines established under paragraph (2)(A). The Secretary shall ensure, through consultation with Sea Grant Programs, that the results and findings of the program are communicated to State, Indian tribe, and local governments, and to the general public.

''(e) SCIENTIFIC ASSESSMENTS OF HYPOXIA.—(1) Not less than once every 5 years the Task Force shall complete and submit to Congress a scientific assessment of hypoxia in United States coastal waters including the Great Lakes. The first such assessment shall be completed not less than 12 months after the date of enactment of the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act of 2004.

''(2) The assessments under this subsection shall—

''(A) examine the causes and ecological consequences, and the economic costs, of hypoxia;

''(B) describe the potential ecological and economic costs and benefits of possible actions for preventing, controlling, and mitigating hypoxia;

''(C) evaluate progress made by, and the needs of, Federal research programs on the causes, characteristics, and impacts of hypoxia, including recommendations of how to eliminate significant gaps in hypoxia modeling and monitoring data; and

''(D) identify ways to improve coordination and to prevent unnecessary duplication of effort among Federal agencies and departments with respect to research on hypoxia.

''(f) LOCAL AND REGIONAL SCIENTIFIC ASSESSMENTS.—(1) The Secretary of Commerce, in coordination with the Task Force and appropriate State, Indian tribe, and local governments, shall provide for local and regional scientific assessments of hypoxia or harmful algal blooms, as requested by State, Indian tribe, or local governments, or for affected areas as identified by the Secretary. If the Secretary receives multiple requests, the Secretary shall ensure, to the extent practicable, that assessments under this subsection cover geographically and ecologically diverse locations with significant ecological and economic impacts from hypoxia or harmful algal blooms. The Secretary shall establish a procedure for reviewing requests for local and regional assessments. The Secretary shall ensure, through consultation with Sea Grant Programs, that the findings of the assessments are communicated to the appropriate State, Indian tribe, and local governments, and to the general public.

''(2) The scientific assessments under this subsection shall examine—

''(A) the causes and ecological consequences, and the economic costs, of hypoxia or harmful algal blooms in that area;

''(B) potential methods to prevent, control, and mitigate hypoxia or harmful algal blooms in that area and the potential ecological and economic costs and benefits of such methods; and

''(C) other topics the Task Force considers appropriate.''.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 605 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 605. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

''There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for research, education, monitoring, demonstration, and technology transfer activities related to the prevention, reduction, and control of harmful algal blooms and hypoxia, $19,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007, to remain available until expended. The Secretary shall consult with the States on a regular basis regarding the development and implementation of the activities authorized under this title. Of such amounts for each fiscal year—

''(1) $1,500,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007 shall be used to enable the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration to carry out research and assessment activities, including procurement of necessary research equipment, at research laboratories of the National Ocean Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service;

''(2) $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007 shall be used to carry out the Ecology and Oceanography of Harmful Algal Blooms (ECOHAB) project, with $1,000,000 of such amount used to carry out research on freshwater harmful algal blooms;

''(3) $4,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007 shall be used to carry out the research program described in section 603(d)(3);

''(4) $7,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007 shall be used to carry out the Monitoring and Event Response for Harmful Algal Blooms (MERHAB) project;

''(5) $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007 shall be used for activities related to research and monitoring on hypoxia; and

''(6) $1,500,000 for each of fiscal years 2005, 2006, and 2007 shall be used to carry out the activities described in section 603(f).

Amounts authorized under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) shall only be used to support competitive, peer-reviewed research programs. ''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 1856, as amended, the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is timely that we are considering this bill about harmful algal blooms and hypoxia. Just last week, beaches in the Chesapeake Bay were closed due to a harmful algal bloom.

I introduced H.R. 1856 more than a year ago after learning about the nationwide problems caused by harmful algal blooms, also known as HABs, and also, the harmful effects from hypoxia. Harmful algal blooms are dense mats of toxic algae that can harm marine animals and humans. Hypoxia occurs when an algal bloom depletes oxygen in the water and leaves behind conditions that essentially choke all of the marine life in the affected area.

Harmful algal blooms and hypoxia occur nationwide in areas including the Chesapeake Bay, California, the Pacific Northwest, the Great Lakes, and the Gulf of Mexico. In 1998, Congress passed a 3-year bill authorizing harmful algal bloom and hypoxia research programs with a focus on the dead zone in the Gulf of Mexico and Pfiesteria in the Chesapeake Bay. Since the authorization of these important research programs expired, I decided to reexamine the issue at a hearing in the Committee on Science last year.

At that hearing we learned that successful research supported by the 1998 authorization enabled scientists to move closer to being able to predict HAB outbreaks; and in some regions, they have learned enough about the phenomena to start developing mitigation and control methods. We also learned that the occurrence of harmful algal blooms and hypoxia is increasing in fresh-water locations such as the Great Lakes, and there is sometimes a disconnect between the research being performed and the local resource managers who should benefit from the science. In response, I developed H.R. 1856 to amend and update the 1998 act. Today, I offer a manager's amendment that reflects discussions with the Committee on Resources and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure who are also interested in this bill. I especially want to thank the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) from the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, the chair of the Subcommittee on Water Resources, as well as the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) from the Committee on Resources, chair of the Fisheries Subcommittee, for their help in guiding this bill through the process. Also I thank my colleagues on the Committee on Science, including the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and my friend, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD), who have provided useful input. I appreciate all of their help in improving the bill.

The manager's amendment maintains the current level of authorization for harmful algal blooms and hypoxia programs at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, better known as NOAA, and maintains that current level of authorization at $19 million annually over the next 3 fiscal years. It adds fresh-water regions such as the Great Lakes as an important focus area for harmful algal bloom and hypoxia research.

The bill also increases participation of local resource managers to ensure that the research is prioritized to address the questions facing people managing these problems. Also, the bill requires that NOAA administer all research funding through a competitive, merit-based, peer-reviewed process.

Finally, the bill reauthorizes funding for effective programs that evolved out of the 1998 act. For example, the MERHAB program, which stands for Monitoring and Event Response For Harmful Algal Blooms, partners State and local research managers with university researchers. Research from this program has resulted in innovations such as rapid test kits that beach managers can use directly in the field to test for harmful algal blooms. These kits eliminated the need to take samples back to a lab and wait days for confirmation of the presence of toxins, providing an early warning for the public about harmful algal blooms.

H.R. 1856 does not mandate any specific regulatory actions. It is purely a research, development, and demonstration bill, with a goal of improving our understanding of these phenomena so that we can predict their occurrence and develop tools for improved detection and mitigation of these problems.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the manager's amendment and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to offer my support for H.R. 1856, the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act of 2004, authored by my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS). I thank my colleague on the Committee on Science and my colleague on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN), for working with me to develop language that will move the research results of this program from the laboratory and the field closer to their application. I would also like to thank the members of the Committee on Science for their support and help in this effort.

Since the inception of this program in 1998, we have developed a better understanding and appreciation for the dimensions and complexity of harmful algal blooms and hypoxic zones. We have made progress in identifying harmful species and in providing timely information to fisheries and recreational managers to prevent human health problems. However, we have not been very successful in developing and implementing management strategies or technologies to reduce the frequency or the intensity of the blooms.

Harmful algal blooms are not just an unpleasant nuisance. They are hazardous to human health, damaging to fish and wildlife, and they are economically devastating to the coastal communities that depend on coastal resources for their livelihoods. The razor clam fisheries, for example, along the coast of Washington have experienced three extended closures in the past 10 years. Each one of these represents the loss of over $10 million to coastal communities in my home State. I can tell my colleagues that local restaurants, hotels, and the tourism industry depend on the annual influx of clam diggers; and when the beaches are closed, they lose millions of dollars in important revenue and jobs.

Also, Washington State's Hood Canal region of the Puget Sound has experienced harmful algal blooms that threaten to create an ecological dead zone. Due to the proliferation of harmful blooms, levels of dissolved oxygen in Hood Canal have declined during the past several years to such an extent that many fish, shellfish, and invertebrate species are threatened. Indeed, last fall, two dozen species of fish washed up on Hood Canal's beaches, unable to survive in the oxygen-depleted waters. In an effort to protect Hood Canal's increasingly threatened ecosystem, the Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife has been forced to close much of the canal to fishing, costing rural Washington communities valuable jobs. Oxygen levels drop during the summer, and State officials expect significant losses as this summer continues.

Our States need funding to implement plans to identify and eradicate the causes and to prevent such blooms. We must act now to clean our coastal waters and restore the ecological and economic health of our fisheries. I urge all of my colleagues to support H.R. 1856. And again, I commend the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman EHLERS) for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, we have no other speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words for the Members who may not understand what harmful algal blooms are, and I also want to emphasize that this bill does not increase authorization or funding above the previous bill; it maintains the same level at $19 million per year, and we believe that will be sufficient to continue the project.

Harmful algal blooms are sometimes referred to as a ''red tide.'' These are algae that for some reason proliferate very rapidly under certain conditions, and the net effect of that is that they consume so much oxygen and produce toxins that they basically create a dead zone. In the Gulf of Mexico, it is not unusual to have a dead zone equal in size to the State of New Jersey. Obviously, this is not only harmful to the Gulf of Mexico, but also harmful to the fishing industries who like to use that area because of the large number of fish that are killed by the lack of oxygen and the toxins.

What is of special concern is that the harmful algal blooms now are appearing in fresh-water areas, particularly the Great Lakes, one of the greatest sources of fresh water not only in this Nation, but in the world.

We want to head that off very early, and try to find out precisely what is happening in the Great Lakes that would allow these harmful algal blooms to develop there and create the same difficulties that we have observed in the Gulf of Mexico, as well as in the State of Washington in the bay area around Seattle and Puget Sound.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely essential for us to address this. We reached the conclusion after our hearing that a great deal of good research has been done, that the emphasis now can switch from research, although not entirely; we must continue some research, but we also have to convert that into action now. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) in particular has a problem in the Puget Sound area that has to be addressed immediately. We hope that, as a result of this bill, we will see greater action through demonstration projects, and more than demonstration projects as time goes on, so that we can deal with this problem, actually solve it, and get rid of the harmful algal blooms and the hypoxia which occurs and which kills other organisms.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that this bill has reached this point. I want to thank the gentleman from Washington. He is one of the most helpful committee members on the Committee on Science, but particularly on this bill because of his expertise and the situation they have in the State of Washington. He has been most helpful in our discussions; and I hope that, as a result of this action, we will be able to address the problems in the State of Washington as well as other areas of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also express my thanks to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) for their work on moving this bill through the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, as well as the Committee on Resources. Finally, I thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) for his hard work bringing this bill to the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1856 will provide a timely update for these important programs that help our coastal communities deal with harmful algal blooms and hypoxia. I urge all of our colleagues to support H.R. 1856.

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, as someone concerned with the health of the Great Lakes, I rise in support of H.R. 1856, the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendments Act.

I would also like to thank my distinguished colleague from Michigan for offering this bill as well as for his leadership on this and other issues of importance to the Great Lakes.

As has been noted, harmful algal blooms are dense patches of toxic algae, which can poison marine life.

Harmful algal blooms can also become airborne and cause respiratory problems in humans.

Worse still, when the toxic algae decays, it can cause hypoxia, or a condition where all the oxygen in the water surrounding the algal bloom is consumed, resulting in a ''dead zone'' where no living thing can survive.

These algal blooms plague the Gulf of Mexico, the Chesapeake Bay and many of the Great Lakes, notably Lake Erie.

In fact, a recent report estimates that more than half of the Nation's estuaries experience hypoxic conditions at some time each year.

Economic impact of harmful algal blooms in United States average annually $50 million, but individual outbreaks can cause economic damage that far exceed the annual average.

Total public health impacts due to shellfish poisoning from harmful algal blooms averaged $22 million between 1987–1992.

H.R. 1856 will help us to better understand harmful algal blooms by increasing and updating research programs at NOAA.

But, importantly, H.R. 1856 will begin new research into Great Lakes algal blooms, which present different challenges and concerns than their ocean relatives.

Indeed, this bill will do a lot to help us better understand just one of the many problems facing the Great Lakes, and ultimately help us to begin to restore the health of one of our greatest national treasures.

This bill is a good first step, and I hope it will renew this body's interest in providing resources to conserve our nation's lakes and oceans, including the Great Lakes.

For this reason I support H.R. 1856, and urge my colleagues to do so as well.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1856, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPORTING THE GOALS AND IDEALS OF THE WORLD YEAR OF PHYSICS

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 301) supporting the goals and ideals of the World Year of Physics.

H. CON. RES. 301

Whereas throughout history physics has contributed to knowledge, civilization, and culture around the world;

Whereas physics research has been and continues to be a driving force for scientific, technological, and economic development;

Whereas many emerging fields in science and technology, such as nanoscience, information technology, and biotechnology, are substantially based on and derive many of their tools from fundamental discoveries in physics and applications thereof;

Whereas physics will continue to play a vital role in addressing many 21st-century challenges related to sustainable development, including environmental conservation, clean sources of energy, public health, and security;

Whereas Albert Einstein is a widely recognized scientific figure who contributed enormously to the development of physics, beginning in 1905 with his groundbreaking papers on the photoelectric effect, the size of molecules, Brownian motion, and the theory of relativity that led to his most famous equation, $E = mc^2$;

Whereas 2005 will be the 100th anniversary of those important scientific achievements; and

Whereas the General Assembly of the International Union of Pure and Applied Physics unanimously approved the proposition designating 2005 as the World Year of Physics: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) supports the goals and ideals of the World Year of Physics, as designated by the General Assembly of the International Union of Pure and Applied Physics;

(2) encourages the American people to observe the World Year of Physics as a special occasion for giving impetus to education and research in physics as well as to the public's understanding of physics;

(3) encourages all science-related government agencies and nongovernmental organizations, the private sector, and the media to highlight and give enhanced recognition to the role of physics in social, cultural, and economic development as well as its positive impact and contributions to society; and

(4) encourages all those involved in physics education and research to take additional steps, including strengthening existing and emerging fields of physics research and promoting the public's understanding of physics, to ensure that support for physics continues and that physics studies at all levels continue to attract an adequate number of students.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H. Con. Res. 301, the resolution now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are considering this resolution recognizing the importance of physics to our everyday lives. This resolution supports the goals and ideals of the World Year of Physics and at the same time celebrates the 100th anniversary of Einstein's development of the theory of relativity. I am certain we are all familiar with the equation $E = mc^2$ which, for the first time, recognized that mass is a form of energy and in fact could be converted into energy. This was a key factor in discovering nuclear fission and nuclear fusion.

The resolution recognizes the important contributions of physicists to technological progress and the health of many industries. I could go on and on listing all the various benefits that we have developed in today's world resulting from the work of physicists. Many people do not realize, for example, that some of the most important developments in health care come directly from the world of physics. As an example, x-rays were discovered by a physicist. The CAT scan was developed based on work that physicists had done. And MRI imaging, which is very useful for health diagnosis and research, was developed by physicists resulting from work done on nuclear magnetic resonance, which was discovered while I was still a graduate student.

In addition, what has developed with lasers is a very important aspect of what was at first a small, unknown field of research, very related to the field of research in which I received my doctorate. Discovery of lasers was the first proof of something that had been developed years ago theoretically, that photons passing through a material in an excited state would result in the emission of additional photons precisely in phase and at the same frequency as the photon that initiated the emission. That was the heart of developing the laser.

The ramifications and uses of the laser are so numerous that I can scarcely begin to mention them. They are used in surgery. They are used in factories to cut steel and to cut out patterns for clothes. In many, many other areas lasers play an extremely important role.

As I said, I could go on and on talking about the contributions that physicists have made to technological progress in many industries, but this resolution, in addition to recognizing that, encourages the people of the United States to observe next year as the World Year of Physics in conjunction with the United Nations declaration of 2005 as the International World Year of Physics.

As a physicist, I recognize the physics principles that are part of our everyday lives. From mechanics and gravity to optical technologies that enable our CD players, physics is all around us. Through physics we can explore the depths of the universe and black holes, as well as the tiniest parts of the atom. And what has always fascinated me about my study of the atomic nucleus and also my readings in cosmology is that we humans are basically at the center of that scale. We are about as far removed from the size of an atomic nucleus, as we are from the size of the universe. I think it is just absolutely marvelous that we can explore our world in both the smaller and larger directions and have not reached limits at this point.

This resolution encourages the American public to take note of the physics used every day and encourages them to learn more about it. I hope that the American people will observe the World Year of Physics by supporting physics education and research. I encourage physicists and educators to engage the public, especially the children, in physics to inspire the next generation of scientists and engineers.

I commend the American Physical Society for promoting the World Year of Physics. This is a perfect opportunity to recognize and celebrate the importance of physics in our lives, promote public understanding of physics, and express our support for physics research and education.

I urge my colleagues to support H. Con. Res. 301, supporting the goals and ideals of the World Year of Physics.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Con. Res. 301 which recognizes the goals and ideals of the World Year of Physics. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT) for bringing this resolution forward. I also personally want to say how much I enjoy serving with the gentlemen on the Committee on Science and what a rewarding experience it is to have two physicists on the Committee on Science itself. Some of the more esoteric details we often turn to these gentlemen to help us understand.

Physics, of course, is the discipline that underpins all of science in some way, and so much of our technology deals with the most fundamental understanding of the properties of matter. Emerging fields such as nanotechnology, information technology and biotechnology are substantially based on the results of fundamental discoveries in physics.

The General Assembly of the International Union of Pure and Applied Physics unanimously approved the proposition designating 2005 as the World Year of Physics. This will be the 100th anniversary of Albert Einstein's remarkable series of scientific papers on the photoelectric effect, the size of molecules, Brownian motion, and, of course, the theory of relativity itself.

This makes 2005 an appropriate year to recognize the importance of physics to the advance of civilization and the important role physics plays in social, cultural and economic development in our society and throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this resolution to my colleagues and ask for their support for its passage by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT) for their work in bringing this resolution to the floor today.

As I mentioned before, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) has been most helpful in the Committee on Science. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT) and I, as the two physicists in the Congress, have worked together closely on many issues, including this one. So I want to recognize both of them for their work and for their long history in recognizing the importance of not only physics but science in general.

I urge all of my colleagues to vote for H. Con. Res. 301.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, physics is all around us. Physics has been highly successful in explaining many of the phenomena governing our natural world; it was a basis for the Renaissance and the enlightenment of western civilization. Through physics we can explore the diverse phenomena from the existence of black hole and to the composition of the atom and nucleus. Understanding mechanics, gravity and propulsion allowed us to develop machinery, bridges and rockets while knowledge about electricity and magnetism and matter led to lasers, light bulbs, telescopes, fiber optics, the internet and the huge market of consumer electronics.

Physics research creates technological innovations, which drives the world's economic growth and markets. It has changed human life for the better. It has made major contributions to cutting-edge technologies such as Nanotechnology, Biotechnology and Information Technology. Physics research will help us to solve major new challenges in homeland security and find new energy sources.

In 2005, we celebrate the 100th anniversary of Einstein's theory of relativity. This resolution is the perfect opportunity to recognize and celebrate the importance of physics to our lives.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 301.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4754, DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 701 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 701

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. Points of order against provisions in the bill for failure to comply with clause 2 of rule XXI are waived except as follows: section 108; beginning with ''Provided'' on page 48, line 13, through the colon on line 19; beginning with ''and'' on page 57, line 24, through page 58, line 2; section 603; beginning with ''or (6)'' on page 97, line 21, through the semicolon on line 23; and section 607. Where points of order are waived against part of a paragraph or section, points of order against a provision in another part of such paragraph or section may be made only against such provision and not against the entire paragraph or section. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 701 is a traditional open rule providing for consideration of H.R. 4754, the Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 2005.

The rule does not restrict the normal open amending process in any way, and any amendments that comply with the standing Rules of the House may be offered for consideration.

H. Res. 701 provides 1 hour of debate in the House on the bill, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. The resolution waives all points of order against consideration of the bill. H. Res. 701 waives points of order against provisions in the bill for failure to comply with clause 2 of Rule XXI, prohibiting unauthorized appropriations or legislative provisions in an appropriations bill, except as specified in the resolution.

In order to facilitate the consideration of amendments on the floor, the rule gives the Chair the ability to provide priority in recognition to those Members who have preprinted amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Finally, H. Res. 701 provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by noting the work of the subcommittee in bringing this legislation forward to the House floor. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) testified together before the Committee on Rules yesterday in bipartisan support of their work product, and they have done a good job in setting the funding priorities of these departments and agencies within the budgetary limitations we currently confront.

Mr. Speaker, debate time on the rule should primarily focus on the fairness of this rule and the wide open amendment process that it outlines for House debate and consideration. However, I do want to note that this appropriations bill maintains the continuing pledge of the House to meet the challenge of international terrorism and to ensure that law enforcement across the Nation has the resources necessary to combat crime in America.

Funding for the Department of Justice, in particular, is indicative of the Committee on Appropriations' obligation to provide the necessary funds to address terrorism, increase our Nation's intelligence capabilities and maintain a focus on law enforcement threats such as illegal drugs, cybercrime and espionage.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for an open amendment process for consideration of the Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary appropriations bill. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to commend the chairman and the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary and Related Agencies of the Committee on Appropriations, my good friends, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) for their hard work and cooperation in drafting the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill for fiscal year 2005.

The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) took an absurdly low Presidential budget request, worked with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) to produce a decent allocation and made the best of a bad situation.

For example, I am pleased that the bill restores funding for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership. The Fiscal Year 2004 Omnibus Appropriations Conference Report cut the program by 60 percent to just $39.6 million, and the President's fiscal year 2005 budget requested $39.2 million for the program. The MEP program serves small businesses, and these small businesses would be severely hurt if last year's cuts were extended.

I have firsthand knowledge of the value and importance of the MEP program, because the Massachusetts MEP is headquartered in my congressional district. Earlier this year, I joined 157 of my colleagues in a letter to the Committee on Appropriations requesting $106 million for the MEP program. The restoration of this funding in this bill will help ensure the sustainability of our domestic small manufacturing industry and its high-quality jobs, and I want to again thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) for working to support this important program.

But even though the entire fiscal year 2005 CJS appropriations bill provides $240 million above President Bush's overall request, still some serious deficiencies remain.

For instance, I am deeply concerned about the lack of funding for the Economic Development Administration. EDA is an agency that is chiefly responsible for providing assistance to urban areas for revitalization. Any cuts to this program, especially in these difficult economic times, will seriously jeopardize the revitalization efforts that are currently under way in urban areas, like Attleboro, Massachusetts, in my congressional district, as it continues to move through the legislative process and into conference negotiations.

I am also disappointed that this bill zeroes out funding for the Small Business Administration's 7(a) subsidy program and the SBA's Microloan Technical Assistance program. The microloan program helps low-income and unemployed individuals become self-sufficient. There is strong data showing that the household income for low-income recipients increased by 72 percent over 5 years and that more than half of these entrepreneurs moved beyond the poverty line during that time. The microloan program should be maintained, not sacrificed.

Additionally, Congress created the 7(a) program to help small businesses with the high costs associated with starting a new business. It is the largest SBA financing program and is a real lifeline for small businesses. The gentleman from New York (Ranking Member SERRANO) offered an amendment in the Committee on Appropriations that would have restored funding for this important program. Unfortunately, it was defeated by a party-line vote. Later this afternoon, a bipartisan amendment will be offered to restore funding for this important small business program, and I urge all of my colleagues to support this effort on behalf of our small businesses and entrepreneurs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am extremely disappointed that this bill reduces funding for the COPS program and for State and local law enforcement grants. Although the fiscal year 2005 CJS appropriations bill provides $3 billion for these programs, it is $103 million less than last year's funding level. While this is an improvement, a vast improvement, over the President's request, which zeroed out many of these programs, I think we can still do better.

These grants are vital for the safety and the protection of our cities and towns all across this country. More than 118,000 officers around the country have been funded through this program. Community policing and neighborhood activism make a real difference in the battle for public safety. During these difficult economic times, our State and local budgets are very, very tight. It is critical that the Federal Government act as a partner in the area of public safety.

In my congressional district, for instance, the COPS program recently provided $3.75 million for 50 new police officers in Worcester, $225,000 for three new police officers in Attleboro, and $75,000 for an additional police officer in Seekonk. Homeland security starts with hometown security, and we should be doing more for the COPS program, not less.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a perfect bill, but it is a good one. The funding deficiencies in this bill I hope can be worked out in the conference, and I am confident that the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Ranking Member SERRANO), two Members who I have extremely high regard for, will work with the other body to provide the necessary funding for these important programs.

I want, once again, to commend the committee for its hard work, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE).

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Georgia for yielding time to me.

I would just like to take my time here to discuss an amendment which I am afraid I cannot write so it would be germane to the legislation that will be before us for which this rule has been written, but it does pertain to Commerce-Justice-State, and it pertains to something that is happening in this country.

On September 13, the automatic assault weapon ban is going to expire. If I looked at my calendar correctly, that is 17 legislative days from now. This is a ban which has been in effect for a period of 10 years now in this country. It is supported by the President of the United States, that is, the extension of it. It is supported by both Presidential campaigns; and in my judgment, it is very, very important that we bring this, however we possibly can.

We are talking about semiautomatic weapons. In this case, we are talking about the AK–47, Uzis. We are talking about high levels of ammunition, depletion of guns in rapid time, various aspects that have frankly caused every law enforcement entity that I know of in the United States of America to support this ban.

We also know that there has been a reduction in crime with the use of these weapons since the ban has been in effect. In fact, that reduction has been more than 65 percent since the ban went into effect in 1995. So we now have a situation in which we have proven, I believe, that the assault weapon ban is something that actually makes sense as far as the safety of Americans is concerned.

As far as the right to bear arms and the rights that are prevalent, I believe in those. I believe they should be continued, but I do believe that the assault weapon ban needs to be continued as well.

It also shows that most Americans believe this. If one looks at polls, they virtually in every category, or 75 percent or more of Americans believe that we should continue this assault weapon ban.

I have legislation introduced, and that legislation would do that for 10 years. It does not change another word. It just extends it for 10 years because I believe it has worked well.

My concern is are we going to be able to bring it to the floor in a reasonable period of time that will allow a debate, that will allow a vote on this so we can consider it before the House of Representatives, a piece of legislation which seems to be so supported by so many individuals living in America today. I would encourage the leadership to consider this.

I do not frankly think it should be an amendment to an appropriation bill, or an amendment to anything. It should have its own set of committee hearings, its own time on the floor of the House of Representatives and the opportunity to vote for it. So I will not introduce an amendment.

I do appreciate a great deal the time yielded to me by the gentleman from Georgia to discuss this. I would encourage the leadership of the House and the Senate to take a good look at this legislation and make absolutely sure that that date does not come and go without us doing anything about it.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

We have no other requests for speakers, but let me just close by again saying that while I wish the overall funding level for this bill were higher and I wish there was more money available for the COPS programs and for a number of other small business programs, I nonetheless want to again commend the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), the chairman, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking member, for really an excellent job. They have worked together in a bipartisan way, and the entire subcommittee deserves credit for the final product that is before us, a bill which I will support.

Let me also conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying something that I rarely get an opportunity to say, but I gladly say it today, and that is, I support this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I also want to commend the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Ranking Member SERRANO) for a very fine job done under strained circumstances. I urge my colleagues to support this rule and support the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, and that I may include tabular and other extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LINDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 701 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4754.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER) to assume the chair temporarily.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to bring the fiscal year 2005 Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary and related agencies appropriations bill before the House. In this bill, we have taken an austere allocation and done our best to arrive at a bill that funds important national priorities, including counterterrorism, State and local crime-fighting and embassy security. The result is a solid bill, and I encourage the Members to support the bill today; and my understanding is that we will finish the bill today.

I want to thank the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) for supporting us. I also want to thank the gentleman from New York (Ranking Member SERRANO) for his help in crafting the bill. I very much appreciate the close and cooperative relationship we have established, and I want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking member of the full committee, for his assistance.

The recommendation we bring before the House today includes $39.8 billion in discretionary spending. Program increases are focused on most critical areas including counterterrorism, State and local law enforcement, assistance to American manufacturers, and protection of the Judiciary, and the security of our personnel overseas.

As my colleagues know, Mr. Chairman, we are operating under a very restrictive budget resolution, which is $1.6 billion below the President's request overall for nondefense discretionary spending. Our subcommittee allocation is .6 percent above the President's request for our agencies.

The bill continues the major progress we have made in the fights against terrorism and crime, and builds on the important gains of the past few years on embassy security. At the same time, it also reflects our commitment to responsible stewardship of public funds.

For the Department of Justice, the recommendation includes $20.6 billion, $900 million above the request. We have restored needed funds for State and local crime-fighting to keep our streets and schools safe. The bill also includes significant increases for Federal law enforcement for both terrorism prevention and traditional law enforcement. A $38 million anti-gang initiative will provide both enforcement and prevention funding, including $20 million for State and local grants and $18 million for additional Federal law enforcement efforts.

For the FBI, the bill provides $5.2 billion, $100 million above the request, to provide 1,100 additional agents, analysts and support staff for intelligence and counterterrorism activities. We have also established a new intelligence directorate in the FBI and given the Bureau additional retention, recruitment and retirement authorities with the concurrence of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), the chairman of the Committee on Government Reform. I thank him for that help and cooperation, and the country will be better for it.

We maintain the commitment to fighting illegal drug activities with $1.7 billion for the DEA, the full amount requested. With this increase, we will now have restored the total number of Federal agents working on drug cases to a number above the pre-9/11 levels.

The bill includes $3 billion for proven State and local law enforcement crime-fighting programs, restoring $886 million to the highest priority programs, including Juvenile Justice and the SCAAP, most of which the administration proposed to eliminate or drastically reduce.

For the Department of Commerce and related trade agencies, the recommendation includes $5.76 billion, a decrease of $186 million below 2004, which is largely a result of the reduction of lower priority spending in NOAA and elimination of the ATP program.

Full funding is included to empower our trade agencies to negotiate, verify, and enforce trade agreements that are more free and fair, and to ensure an even playing field for American businesses.

The bill includes vital assistance to the ongoing recovery of our manufacturing sector. Members on both sides have spoken to us about this. So $106 million is included for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program. It is an increase of $67 million above the current request and the current year, and this is important for creating jobs throughout the entire country. The bill also includes $4 million for the Bureau of Economic Analysis, including funding for a study on the economic impacts of offshoring on the U.S. economy.

The bill continues funding for critical core programs of NOAA. The National Weather Service and NOAA's satellite programs are funded at the full requested level; and funding is continued, as requested, for many established ocean and fisheries programs.

The bill preserves the vitality and innovation of our economy with a historic funding increase for the Patent and Trademark Office to reduce the growing backlog in patent processing. The bill provides for $1.52 billion in spending, the same amount that the PTO expects to collect this year in fees.

And finally, under Commerce we are fulfilling the Department's constitutional responsibility to conduct the census. We provide an increase of $149 million to support the ramp-up of the 2010 decennial census, including funding for the American Community Survey.

For the Judiciary, the recommendation provides $5.2 billion, an increase of $391 million above 2004, to enable the courts and probation offices to process record caseloads.

For the State Department and the Broadcasting Board of Governors, the recommendation includes $8.9 billion, an increase of $299 million over 2004, and $80 million below the request.

Within this total, we are providing $1.57 billion, the full request for worldwide security improvements and replacement of vulnerable facilities and funding to support over 100 new positions aimed at improving security and strengthening the visa process.

The bill also includes $1.84 billion, the full amount requested for international organizations and peacekeeping.

We strongly support public diplomacy and international broadcasting to continue television broadcasting to Iraq, which was initiated last year and is very critical for the effort now taking place in Iraq. As sovereignty is transferred to an Iraqi government, we need to maintain the lines of communication with the Iraqi people and assure that they are receiving accurate and balanced news and information. This bill will also ensure that the broadcasting to Iraq continues without disruption.

For Related Agencies, the recommendation provides inflationary increases to most agencies, again fully funds the FTC's Do-Not-Call program, and includes a $102 million increase for the SEC to protect American investors.

For the SBA, the recommendation provides a 6 percent increase for operations and additional funds above the request for the Small Business Development Centers. The bill adopts the President's request for the 7(a) business loan program, which provides for up to $12.5 billion in general business loans, an unprecedented level, without requiring an appropriation.

The bill provides $335 million for the Legal Services Corporation, $6 million above the request. The committee has worked over the past few years to successfully bring Legal Services away from controversy. The bill again continues our commitment to provide civil legal aid to those who cannot afford counsel and are seeking justice.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, this is a summary of the recommendations before you today. It will strengthen the operations of Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies. It provides needed assistance to ensure that our economy and our manufacturing sector continue to grow. It provides for a secure and effective diplomatic operations overseas. It enables the judicial branch to successfully manage its growing workload. It represents our best take on matching needs with resources.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would also want to close by thanking the staff. The staff has worked very, very hard, and in fact, not many people realize how hard these staff members work. And I want to thank the members of the subcommittee staff who are putting in very long hours on the 2005 CJS bill. All members and staff of the subcommittees have worked hard, and put in long hours that I believe will be helpful to the country.

I want to particularly thank Mike Ringler, the clerk of the subcommittee who has led this through the House appropriations process. I also want to thank Christine Kojac, John Martens, and Anne-Marie Goldsmith for their tireless efforts. Their work is much appreciated.

I also want to thank our detailee, Jonathan Mattiello, who has lent his support to the bill. In my personal office, Dan Scandling, Janet Shaffron, J.T. Griffin, Samantha Stockman and Neil Siefring for their efforts and work with the subcommittee. And from the minority staff, because we have had a good working relationship which I think can be a model, I want to thank David Pomerantz, Lucy Hand, whom I have known a long while, all the way back to the days where she worked for Mr. Lehman on the Committee on Appropriations, Subcommittee on Transportation, Treasury and Independent Agencies; Linda Pagelsen, Nadine Berg and Rob Nabors, who have worked with our staff in a bipartisan manner to produce this bill.

I want to thank them, and I want the American public to know and Members of the House to know who they are.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact you are attempting to close general debate here. I did want to come over and compliment you and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) on the excellent legislation here. I particularly appreciate the kind of support we Nebraskans have received from the subcommittee in the past in dealing with the very real methamphetamine problem, we have, but secondly, I also wanted to compliment the subcommittee on providing funding above the administration's request for the Judiciary.

I know the Nebraska Federal District Court was concerned that the so-called ''hard freeze'' initially proposed would cause layoffs and furloughs, and the Federal court has already taken a big hit in Nebraska with the loss of a temporary judgeship in May of 2004, when one of the judges took senior status.

So it is my opportunity today not only to compliment you but to send a message to the two authorizing judiciary committees that this judgeship and the failure to fill it is creating real hardships for the people of Nebraska, for the judges, for the law enforcement personnel and, I think, for justice. There is a saying that ''justice delayed is justice denied,'' and I am afraid that is just about to be the case in Nebraska.

So you have done your job as an Appropriations subcommittee, and I thank you for the things that I have mentioned and for the other things that relate to the State, Commerce, and Justice departments.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for yielding me this time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill providing appropriations for the Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary and related agencies for fiscal year 2005.

From the outset, I must say the 302(b) allocation given to the subcommittee, in our opinion, was too low. I am grateful to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), however, for providing $226 million above the request; and I am impressed with how much the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), was able to accomplish within the allocation he was given. On the whole, I think the distribution of funds is quite fair and sensible and reflects priorities I believe most of us would share.

I would be remiss if I did not say how much of a pleasure it is to work with Chairman WOLF on this bill. Our working relationship and our friendship are major factors in producing it. I must also say that I am very grateful for the openness and fairness with which the chairman's staff has treated mine. Much is said, Mr. Chairman, about the poisonous atmosphere in the House these days, but that is not the case on this subcommittee, and I credit the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for that. His attentiveness and that of his staff to the needs of our side have been terrific, even if they could not always do everything we would like.

Mr. Chairman, I thank Chairman WOLF and the staff, Mike and Christine, John, Anne-Marie, and Jonathan have served the committee well, as have on our side David, Linda, and Laura, and on my personal staff Lucy, Nadine, Diaraf, Sean and Jennifer. I wonder at times, Mr. Chairman, if the American people have a full understanding of the fact that behind the work that is seen on the House floor and in press conferences there is always such a large number of young, dedicated people who put together so much of the work that goes on in this House, and I think it is something we should always remember.

Again, Chairman WOLF was able to accomplish much. To list just a few highlights, the bill includes full funding or better for the FBI, the DEA, international organizations, worldwide embassy security, and most of the related agencies. Also, much more than requested for MEP and SCAAP. Funding levels on which we can build for NOAA. Continuing support for the Office of Privacy and Civil Liberties Protection in Justice.

I am also gratified that the bill and report direct the EEOC not to proceed with its workforce repositioning without complying with the committee's reprogramming procedures, which will give us essential oversight of potentially very disruptive changes proposed by that agency.

I do worry that first responder funding shortfalls between the Homeland Security bill and this one, despite the efforts of Chairman WOLF and our previous chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), to improve on deeply flawed request levels, represent a one-two punch at our public safety agencies.

I regret the inability to give the SBA the resources it needs, although there will be amendments today to restore funding for the 7(a) business loans program and microloans, or to fund programs such as TOP and PTFP, where real needs will go unmet.

I also would have liked to address a serious problem that the restrictions on the use of non-Federal funds pose for the Legal Services Corporation grantees, which face administrative and financial burdens probably unmatched by any other class of Federal grantees, but that is a discussion for another day.

One other issue I would like to mention is the census. Halfway between decennials, few Members pay much attention to the Census Bureau. But accurate statistics about the Nation's population and activities collected, analyzed, and published by the Bureau are crucial to both government and the economy. Not only is membership in this House apportioned according to census data, indeed the Constitution requires 10-year censuses for that purpose, but many important decisions and many Federal grant programs are based on accurate census information, both from the decennial and from other periodic censuses. Business, too, relies on census data for final decisions on marketing, locating facilities, and the like. The census is of extraordinary importance to minority communities because it is the basis for their ability to establish their identity and secure their rights.

As the chairman knows, the Census Bureau is a bureau that I always feel plays a special role in the South Bronx and, indeed, throughout our society. Whenever anyone gets up and speaks about we have such a number of this and a number of that, and this happened and that is happening, those figures are always taken from the work of the Census Bureau, and so we not only tip our hats to them but show them our support.

Again, Chairman WOLF has shown exceptional sensitivity to what the Census Bureau needs to continue its activities and prepare for the 2010 short-form-only decennial, and I thank him for that.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this bill is a good one, and I will support it as it continues to move through the process. Once again, I thank Chairman WOLF for his support, for his kindness, for his friendship, and above all, for being a man of great conviction who sticks with issues that other people dare not bring up, as we will see during this debate.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY).

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, today the House is considering the spending levels for the U.S. Federal Court system contained in H.R. 4754. Unfortunately for the State of Nebraska, it is not the level of funding for the Judiciary that is at issue, it is the failure of this Congress to address the problem of the loss of a Federal judgeship in Nebraska.

Since 1999, the judges of the Nebraska Federal District Court have requested Congress to either convert a temporary judgeship to a permanent one or at least extend the temporary judgeship. However, on November 22, 2003, even that last option was lost when the authority for the temporary position expired.

My colleagues in the Nebraska delegation have introduced legislation in this House and in the Senate to restore this single judgeship. The Senate Bill, S. 878, passed in the Senate in 2003, but this House has yet to take action.

This situation has created a major hardship for our Federal judiciary in Nebraska. The Nebraska district has the third highest per judge criminal caseload in the country. It exceeds the caseloads of the districts like Los Angeles, New York City, Chicago, and Miami. According to Nebraska Chief Judge Richard Kopf, ''The criminal caseload has exploded over the last 5 years. From 1998 to 2003, it has risen 97 percent.''

The chief judge has indicated that criminal cases take priority over all civil cases because of the United States Constitution, which requires that defendants have a speedy trial. This need to deal with the criminal docket has a major impact on lawyers and their clients with civil matters before the Federal courts.

Nebraska State Bar President John Grant has noted, ''Without the four judgeships, very few noncriminal cases will be handled. Cases concerning Social Security benefits, health insurance coverage, civil rights and personal injury are not going to be heard on a timely basis.''

This is an important issue to the State of Nebraska.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I am rising today to discuss this bill because it cuts the NOAA funding by 15 percent and ignores essentially the two in-depth ocean reports released to Congress this past year. I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking member, for a commitment that they made during the full committee markup to work to increase the funding levels for the ''National Ocean Service'' and for the National Marine Fishery Service during conference. I appreciate their acknowledgment that the levels need to be increased.

I also want to thank our ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), for stating his concern on the NOAA funding cuts. I am deeply concerned about NOAA. With the commitments in mind, I want to highlight the funding levels for some of the NOAA programs. The hardest hit, and I would reference a bipartisan letter that was sent to the Committee on Appropriations by 59 Members of the House, the Coastal Zone Management Grants and the Coastal Nonpoint Pollution Grants, both of which States heavily rely on. Florida, for example, loses $345,000; Virginia has a net loss of $620,000; California also has a net loss of $620,000. This may not seem like much when we are usually dealing in millions and billions, but to the States who rely on these funds for ongoing coastal zone management and nonpoint source grants, it is a great deal of money.

The Cooperative Fisheries Research Programs were cut also by $20 million. These programs bring the fishing community together with scientists to better understand fishery resources. This is a big issue that both of the ocean reports talked about, the fact that the right hand on science does not necessarily work well with the left hand on fisheries, and we need to make sure these two groups come together, and the fishermen understand the science, and the scientists better understand the economics of fishing so we can better meld these two groups together. We cannot do this if we are cutting the programs that bring people together.

Another area, the Marine Mammal Protection area, will be severely hampered under the House mark which, once separate lines are combined, equals roughly $4 million. The National Marine Fisheries Service will not be able to fund top-priority studies as identified by the multi-stakeholder take reduction teams. The National Marine Fisheries will not be able to design or implement fishery management plans that protect marine mammals. The agency will not be able to conduct research on population trends, health and demographics of marine mammals, and the National Marine Fisheries will not be able to carry out the education and enforcement programs.

The other program that was affected by this was the Marine Mammal Health and Stranding Response Program which was cut last year and that has not yet been resolved. The program funds our investigations of die-offs of large numbers of marine mammals, including the recent bottlenose dolphin die-off in Florida, which involved more than 100 animals.

If we combine the cuts in the State Coastal Zone Management Grants and the Coastal Nonpoint Pollution Grants, both of which are, as I said, relied on heavily by the States, you get these additional losses. So without these funds, we lose the opportunity to study and to work with the States in implementing good programs.

In my constituency, I have 24 national organizations which have signed a letter to every Member of the House, which describes deep concerns with the NOAA funding. They have fundamental problems with the cuts that NOAA received.

I believe the commitment made by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) to increase funding levels is sincere and they will work on that in conference. The NOAA programs such as the ones I have highlighted will ensure that our future in the oceans will remain vital and components of our economy and our communities and our lives will be sustained.

Lastly, because of the good work done by both the Pew Commission and the National Oceans Commission, we will be able to implement with these fundings some of the strong recommendations they made for healthy oceans.

Mr. Chairman, I submit the following letters for the RECORD:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, April 8, 2004.

Hon. FRANK WOLF,
Chairman, Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Subcommittee, Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Hon. JOSÉ SERRANO,
Ranking Member, Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Subcommittee, Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN WOLF AND RANKING MEMBER SERRANO: As Members concerned with our nation's diverse and productive coastal areas, we are requesting your support for funding the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). Our oceans and coasts support more than 2.8 million jobs, generate more than $54 billion in goods and services per year, and are the most popular destinations for recreation and tourism in the U.S.

Established by Congress in 2000, the Conservation Trust Fund dedicates $560 million in FY05 for critical coastal conservation programs within NOAA. We greatly appreciate the Subcommittee's full use of this funding over the last four years to provide vital support for high priority coastal conservation initiatives and urge the Subcommittee to again make full use of this fund in FY05.

On the eve of the release of the U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy draft report, we ask for your assistance in meeting the significant challenges and threats now confronting our oceans. We recognize the Committee has extraordinarily difficult choices to make this year; however, the continued health and prosperity of our coastal communities depend on our willingness to invest today to preserve our nation's coastal legacy for future generations. We respectfully request the Subcommittee seriously consider the funding levels for the following programs.

COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT

State Coastal Zone Management Grants—$80 million. These funds, which are matched dollar for dollar, are critical to support the efforts of 34 states and territories to reduce the impacts of coastal development, expand public access, reduce the damages from coastal hazards, restore and protect critical habitats and support the nation's important and diverse coastal communities.

Coastal Nonpoint and Community Resource Improvement Grants—$10 million. We urge the Subcommittee to reject the Administration's proposed termination of this program. This funding is only a fraction of what is needed by states to address polluted runoff, the most significant source of pollution of coastal waters.

National Estuarine Research Reserve System (NERRS)—$20 million grants, $15 million acquisition and construction. This funding will enable NERRS to support the addition of a new Reserve to the current system of 26 and fund the ongoing coastal stewardship training, research and education programs and construction needs.

Coastal and Estuarine Land Conservation Program—$60 million. Nowhere in the nation is the threat of ecosystem fragmentation, sprawl and habitat loss more prevalent than in our nation's coastal zone. In the first three years of this program, CELCP funds have leveraged non-federal funds and protected thousands of acres of coastal lands in 25 states.

MARINE CONSERVATION AND OCEAN EXPLORATION

National Marine Sanctuaries—$40 million operations, $10 million construction. The National Marine Sanctuary Program protects our nation's most unique and nationally significant marine ecosystems and resources. Level funding for operations in FY05 is critical to reducing staffing shortages, supporting conservation, community outreach, research, and education programs, and updating sanctuary management plans as required by law. We support no less than the fully authorized level for operation of sanctuaries and encourage the committee to recognize the pressing need for higher levels. In addition, we support $10 million for construction, as the backlog in facilities maintenance remains a significant operations liability at many sanctuaries.

Coral Reef Construction—$28.25 million. Coral reef ecosystems are among the most diverse, biologically productive, economically valuable, and threatened marine habitats in the world. Increased resources are urgently needed to reduce land-based pollution and address overfishing, diseases, and other threats to coral reefs. Funding for local action strategies will support on-the-ground solutions, such as critical monitoring, mapping, restoration, outreach and protection activities that reduce threats to coral reefs.

Ocean Exploration—$13.9 million. Less than 5% of the ocean has been explored or characterized to the same degree of resolution as we have characterized Mars and Venus. Ocean exploration is the vital first step in a new approach to ocean resource management, improved marine science and education, and a new vision for ocean stewardship. We urge the Subcommittee to support last year's funding level to demonstrate U.S. leadership in this important global issue.

SUSTAINABLE FISHERIES, MARINE MAMMALS AND INVASIVE SPECIES

Fisheries, Research and Observer Programs—$75 million. Recent scientific reports conclude that too many of our nation's fisheries are on the brink of collapse. Reducing the backlog in research days-at-sea and increasing fishery observer coverage and cooperative research efforts will give managers baseline information critical to better managing our fisheries. We commend the Subcommittee's efforts for increase funding in these areas in FY04 and urge $25 million for expanding stock assessments, $20 million for cooperative research, including data collection and analysis, and $30 million for regional and national fishery observer programs in FY05.

Vessel Monitoring System (VMS)—President's request of $9.3 million. VMS is a satellite-based fishery enforcement system that provides real-time catch data from participating vessels in a range of fisheries. The President's request would allow for the establishment and implementation of VMS systems and placement of transponders onboard many of the estimated 10,000 boats in the U.S. commercial fishing fleet. VMS programs augment existing enforcement efforts at approximately 1% of the cost, enhance data collection, and benefit fishermen by improving safety at sea and allowing fishing right up until a quota is reached.

Marine Mammal Protection—$9.1 million. This funding will help NMFS more fully assess and take measures to recover depleted and strategic marine mammal species, such as common dolphins, pilot whales and bottlenose dolphins, through take reduction team activities as well as other research, conservation and recovery efforts.

Endangered Species Act, Cooperative Agreements with States—$4 million. This cooperative program makes funding available on a competitive, matching basis to carry out conservation activities at the state and local level. Providing $4 million to the states in FY05 would support local researchers, non-governmental organizations, and volunteers to accomplish monitoring, restoration, science and conservation of species at risk of extinction.

Invasive Species Initiative—$5.5 million. This funding will be used by NOAA's Invasive Species reducing the potential for invasive species to be introduced in US ports and coastal waters, and to promote increased collaboration among the many groups working to understand invasive species, including NOAA, other agencies, and the scientific community.

Our oceans are a public trust whose stewardship is critical to our economy, our environment, and our future. We greatly appreciate your past support for these programs and your consideration of our requests.

Sincerely,

FUNDING FOR AMERICA'S OCEANS AND COASTS SLASHED NEARLY HALF A BILLION DOLLARS IN THE FY05 CJS BILL

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The Fiscal Year 2005 (FY05) Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations bill that you will consider today guts funding for critically needed ocean and coastal protection activities and abrupt climate change research. The bill slashes $446 million for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) from FY04 enacted levels, disregarding mounting scientific evidence and recommendations for greater investments. We oppose these deep cuts to NOAA and ask that they be rectified in the final bill.

The U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy, appointed by President Bush, recently released its preliminary report and confirmed the health of America's oceans is in severe decline. The Commission noted that our nation's current investments in ocean science, management and conservation are inadequate to address the major threats facing ocean ecosystems and coastal communities. This bill flatly ignores the Commission's warning about the state of our ocean and coastal resources, taking a step backwards at a time we should be making bold new efforts to protect the waters that give us life.

In addition, a bi-partisan letter signed by 61 Members of Congress in April called for providing adequate funding levels in key programs, such as coastal zone management; fisheries research, management, and enforcement; national marine sanctuaries; coral reel conservation; and marine mammal protection. Unfortunately, the bill not only fails to accept many of the increases the Congressional letter sought, but makes further cuts to the already inadequate Administration request for many of these programs.

Conservation Trust Fund. We are very disappointed to note that the bill fails to live up to Congress' groundbreaking commitment in 2000 to fully fund NOAA's part of the Conservation Trust Fund. The dedicated level for FY05 should be $560 million. Abandoning the historic Conservation Trust Fund is a significant retreat from a bi-partisan agreement to restore and sustain America's environmental legacy.

National Marine Fisheries Service. The status of roughly two-thirds of our commercially caught ocean fish populations is unknown due in large part to lack of resources for basic research and regular stock assessments. In addition, bycatch reduction and essential fish habitat protection are critical conservation priorities that do not receive appropriation attention. Finally, inadequate resources hamper the agency's ability to keep pace with the need for proper enforcement coverage. While we appreciate the Subcommittee providing additional funds for expanding fisheries stock assessments, the following programs are below FY04 appropriation levels: fishery observer programs, cooperative research, essential fish habitat protection, and protected resources (marine mammals, sea turtles).

National Ocean Service. Activities that support managing coastal zones and national marine sanctuaries, restoring coral reefs, protecting sensitive coastal and estuarine lands areas, and reducing coastal pollution merit increased funding. However, the bill's devastating 31 percent cut—$160 million—to the National Ocean Service's budget will jeopardize efforts to maintain and improve the quality of our coasts and will abolish entire portions of programs such as national marine sanctuaries, coral reef conservation, coastal state nonpoint pollution grants, and other vital conservation initiatives of the National Ocean Service.

Pacific Salmon Recovery. Pacific Northwest salmon are a vital part of that region's economic, cultural, and environmental well-being and an important part of our nation's history and commitment to the native peoples of this land. Unfortunately, many salmon runs in the Pacific Northwest continue to decline, and federal funding is currently insufficient to meet federal salmon recovery goals up and down the West Coast. The bill cuts $20 million from the Administration's request for conservation and habitat restoration and recovery grants for Pacific salmon populations.

Abrupt Climate Change Research. Funding for Abrupt Climate Change Research ($2 million) and Paleoclimate research ($1.3 million) has been zeroed-out, and the overall NOAA budget for climate and global change research has been reduced by an additional $6 million. These NOAA research programs are vital to improving our understanding of the impacts of climate change. Already, scientific and anecdotal evidence shows that increased temperatures from climate change are impacting ecosystems around the world. The National Academy of Sciences (NAS) recent report stated there is increased evidence that the climate does not respond to change gradually but rather in sudden, abrupt changes. The NAS called for additional research on sudden climate change, which is why these NOAA programs are so important.

While we appreciate the Committee's ongoing work to limit the number of anti-environmental riders attached to this bill, we oppose the woefully inadequate funding levels for NOAA and urge that they be rectified in the final bill. We thank you for considering our request.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG).

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4754, the CJS Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2005. I commend the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), for producing what I believe to be an excellent bill, and the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) as well; and I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this legislation.

There are many reasons to support this bill. I want to note one program in particular, the Manufacturing Extension Partnership. I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for recognizing the importance of the MEP program to our Nation's manufacturers by funding it at $106 million. At that level, all MEP centers will continue to provide their valuable service to this country's manufacturers.

The MEP program, as has been discussed, is a Federal-State private network of over 60 centers with 400 locations in all 50 States. In fiscal year 2002 alone, MEP served approximately 18,000 small- and medium-sized manufacturers nationwide. These manufacturers reported an additional $2.8 billion in sales, $681 million more in cost savings, and 35,000 more jobs simply as a result of their projects in these MEP centers.

In my district alone, which has over 1,500 manufacturing companies, 92 percent of which are under 100 employees, Tru-Val Tubing Company in Waterford, Michigan, has seen dramatic improvements in productivity from the training provided by the MEP. The MEP center in Michigan, called the Michigan Manufacturing Technology Center, taught Tru-Val how to streamline the processes and reduce their inventory.

By embracing the concept of ''lean thinking,'' Tru-Val can now produce more products in less space. The result is higher productivity and huge savings for the company. In fact, because of these improvements, Tru-Val has been able to increase its employees from 85 to 120. It is truly a success story. And for these reasons, I strongly support the MEP program, and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up on the statements made by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) with regard to the coastal and ocean levels of funding in the bill.

First of all, let me say that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and our ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), have over the years made major commitments to our oceans and coasts. And so when we say today we would like to see more funding placed in conference for things like NOAA, marine mammals, coastal zone management, it in no way takes away from what these two gentlemen and the subcommittee have accomplished over the years.

I think the reason that we feel very strongly right now that there needs to be more of a funding commitment in these ocean- and coastal-related activities is because of the reports that came out by the National Ocean Commission and Pew Ocean Commission, which both stress the need for a lot more funding in these programs. They basically pointed to the decline of the ocean environment and increasing stress on the ocean and coastal areas over the years; and also because of the lack of scientific understanding, that more money was needed for basic science so we understand what the problems are in oceans.

I do not want to repeat everything that the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) said, but as was mentioned, there is a 15 percent cut in funding for NOAA. There is about $160 million less than the fiscal year 2004 enactment for the National Ocean Service and other programs like fisheries, marine mammals and coastal zone management which could use more funding.

We are hoping during the conference these needs will be addressed. Knowing both the chairman and the ranking member, I am sure they will make every effort to try to accomplish that when we go to conference in having to deal with the other body. I thank the gentlemen for their support over the years, and I hope we can see increased funding for these vital programs given the recent reports from the National Ocean Commission and the Pew Ocean Commission.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG).

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to compliment the work of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and what the subcommittee has done on this bill, which tends to be controversial on occasion. The markup in subcommittee and full committee, led by the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) went extremely well, which was a little unusual because the bill does tend to attract some interesting debate on occasion. The gentlemen worked in partnership to bring a good bill.

As the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) stated earlier, the 302(b) allocation was a little lean, but all of the 302(b) allocations were a little lean this year. They did a good job and produced a good bill with a lean 302(b) allocation.

And I want to take a minute to give a status report. As of today, the Committee on Appropriations has marked up 10 of the 13 bills in subcommittee, 7 of the 13 bills in the full committee. This will be the fifth bill passed through the floor, and the legislative branch will be passed on tomorrow. That means that we are moving very quickly considering we got off to a very late start since we did not get the deeming budget resolution until May 19.

The committee has worked very effectively and worked pretty much on a bipartisan basis, and all of the members have been contributors to the work effort. We are moving the bills with pretty good votes on the floor. Again, I just wanted to give this brief status report and again say to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) what great leaders they are and what great leadership they have provided the subcommittee and the full committee as they brought this bill to this point where we will pass this bill and send it to the other body today.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for their excellent efforts on this important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about a limitation amendment that I will be offering at the end of this bill. That amendment is modeled after H.R. 1157, the Freedom to Read Protection Act, which I have offered and which has 145 bipartisan cosponsors. This legislation is supported by a wide range of groups across the ideological spectrum, from those who are very conservative to those who are very progressive.

The amendment I will be offering later is cosponsored by the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER). This amendment addresses section 215 of the USA PATRIOT Act, and it is a section which has engendered a great deal of controversy.

Mr. Chairman, there is no disagreement in this body or in the United States of America that our country has got to do everything that it can to prevent another 9/11, to prevent acts of terrorism against the American people. But I think there is also widespread belief in this body and throughout this country that we can and must fight terrorism without undermining the basic constitutional rights that have made this a free country.

All over this country, in hundreds of cities which have passed resolutions, in four States which have passed resolutions, among hundreds of different organizations, there is a concern that within the USA PATRIOT Act in section 215 it gives the right of the government, with virtually no probable cause, to go into our libraries, to go into our bookstores and to ascertain the reading habits of the American people. That is not, I believe, what this country is about or what this body believes in.

So we are going to be offering an amendment that would disallow the government from gaining the reading records of people who buy books at bookstores or take books out of the library or use Internet service in the library.

I am delighted we have so much support for this legislation.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I come to the floor today to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), chairman of the subcommittee, and, of course, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), ranking member. But the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) just got back from the Sudan. He has a passion for human beings, all human beings, and he works to protect their life. And I just thank him for that work. In human rights there is really not a Member of this House that cares more, that does more, that goes into more dangerous places than the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF). I thank him and I thank him for this bill.

In the foothills of Appalachia, where I live, in east Tennessee, methamphetamine production has been overtaking us. But I want to thank the leadership of this subcommittee, going back to when the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) was the chairman of this subcommittee, this subcommittee began to resource what is now the East Tennessee Methamphetamine Task Force. It is 42 counties. We have seized over 3,500 meth labs in the last 5 years in east Tennessee, 3,500, with the support of this subcommittee at $1 million a year. It sounds like a lot of money. In the scheme of things in this bill, it is not; but 3,500 labs have been seized.

I want to hail Sandy Mattice, our U.S. Attorney; Russ Dedrick, our assistant U.S. Attorney; and the entire task force, who are sheriffs, local government, the DEA, the FBI. It is a true local-State-Federal partnership. It is state of the art, and we are winning the battle on methamphetamine; but it is destroying families. In these pockets of pain in rural America, methamphetamine production is catastrophic; but this is very helpful, the money that this subcommittee is targeting, putting in to help organizations like the East Tennessee Meth Task Force. It needs to be done at the local level.

This is really a grassroots effort, not a Federal program. But the Federal Government is assisting local government, fighting this problem. And we cannot clean the labs up without the Federal money. We do not have the resources at the local level, and the coordination needs to happen at the local and regional levels. It is happening in east Tennessee. And I thank the committee and the people that are in the field fighting methamphetamine production to save our children.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS).

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill. It makes great strides in protecting our Nation. First off, it fully funds the FBI, $5.2 billion, which is a significant increase over current year, some $687 million more than this year. And especially important to me is the language in the bill that encourages the FBI to work closely with the Department of Homeland Security to complete an interoperable system as soon as possible, to help us check people coming across our borders against the FBI's criminal watch list.

That is terribly important because we have had some unfortunate experiences on the border of murderers making it across the border after having been stopped; but the inability to check against the criminal records of the FBI needs to be remedied forthwith, and this bill has language encouraging that.

And then, as the gentleman from Tennessee just said, this bill fully funds the President's Prescription Drug Abuse Program. And for those of us in the parts of the country where prescription drug abuse, like the overuse and abuse of Oxycontin, it is terribly important that we tackle this problem head on, and that is what this bill does. In my district, we have started an organization called UNITE, which stands for Unlawful Narcotics Investigations, Treatment and Education. There are literally thousands of people now involved with the support of this subcommittee in a three-pronged attack against methamphetamine and prescription drug abuse: investigations and the law enforcement part of getting rid of the pushers; treatment for those who are addicted and need treatment; and, of course, education to try to encourage young people, especially, to stay away from the abuse of these drugs. And this bill supports that program, and I thank the chairman for that especially.

The bill fully funds the DEA, $70 million above the current level. It has $10 million for the Prescription Drug Monitoring Program, which allows States to receive grants to establish a program to prevent people from double-filling prescription drugs and using the excess for sale as pushers. It includes $50 million for drug courts, which I believe in very strongly. We are seeing that work in my district, among others, where the power of the law is used for the good of people who are arrested and have no other crime except the use of drugs. And the drug courts work, and they rehabilitate people back into society in a good way. And then there is $60 million in the bill for methamphetamine hot spots, a problem that is particularly important in the rural parts of America.

And then the bill reinforces the presence of the U.S. abroad. There is $1.5 billion for Embassy Security, Construction and Maintenance, which is $148 million over current levels. And, most importantly, I think, it continues the efforts to right-size the staffing at the embassies, saving us money and improving efficiency at all the places where Americans serve abroad in our embassies and consulates. Those are some of the more important features of the bill as far as I am concerned.

I want to compliment the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), ranking member. I had the pleasure of working as chairman of this subcommittee for 6 years, working with the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), who was ranking at the time; and I found him to be especially helpful in constructing a good bill. And certainly the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) has just done a great job, in my judgment, a very challenging bill this year because of lack of funds. So I compliment the chairman and the ranking member for bringing to us a very worthy bill, and I urge 100 percent support of it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to thank and congratulate the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF), and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) for bringing this issue to our attention.

Too often in this country when we speak about drug abuse and drug addiction and the problems related to drugs, the image that the American people get is that of youngsters in the inner cities. Yet one of America's so misunderstood secrets is the fact that drug addiction and drug abuse is a problem that plagues the whole society. And I really think that before the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF), the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) started to speak about this issue, this House was not fully aware of that. They put it on the map. They put provisions in this bill to deal with it. We have worked on allocating dollars to deal with the issue. And I think the country will benefit and attention will be focused, Mr. Chairman, on the fact that this is a national problem.

We can speak about the issues that can really hurt the society in the long run, and certainly right up there, in my opinion, with the everlasting, unfortunate, lingering racial problems in this country is the fact that so many members of our society abuse drugs and are caught up in the horrible use of drugs. Again, in the inner city it is easier to see. We see it on street corners. We see it in front of buildings. We see it in school yards where there are thousands of students attending one school. In some of the rural and suburban communities, it is not seen the same way. It does not have the same face. But it does have the same suffering; it does have the same pain; and it threatens the society we live in in the same way.

So I want to thank the three gentlemen for that, having brought this to the House's attention.

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct. In my rural district in Kentucky, it is an epidemic of the abuse of Oxycontin, particularly, but methamphetamines as well. And we have had dozens of young people die from the overabuse of these very addictive drugs, and it truly is an epidemic, and it strikes rich and poor, urban and rural. It does not matter. Wonderful families are broken up by this. People dying, families ruined, no place to go for treatment, no hope involved.

And I want to compliment the gentleman for further drawing attention to this real epidemic that is sweeping the whole country, not just the cities, but I think probably especially now the rural areas. And I compliment him for bringing this up again, but also the chairman and him for including funds to help us fight it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, another additional comment is the fact that the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) has done a lot of work especially in this bill on the issue of gang violence, again, one of those issues that a lot of people relate to certain parts of the country and certain types of communities. Yet we find out that gang violence is spreading throughout the country. And this bill begins to address it in a proper and strenuous way.

Interestingly enough, those of us who have lived in the inner city know that there is a relationship between gang violence and drug abuse and drug addiction because those who do not use drugs but who become millionaires by providing the drugs make sure that people who are in gang-related activities and other activities in the community become addicted. Their line of business is to get people addicted, and this is the way they do it.

So it is interesting that we are speaking today on a bill that addresses both issues. But the main point here is for the American people to fully understand that this is not a disease, this is not a condition, this is not a crime that is only related to certain parts of our community. It is related to the whole Nation; and it threatens us, in my opinion, as much as anything else. Years from now if we do not deal with this issue, if we let the full Nation go the way that some communities have gone, we will regret the fact that we missed an opportunity.

So I am proud to be part of this effort today, and I congratulate again the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP), the gentleman from Kentucky (Chairman ROGERS), and the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF).

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Sanders-Otter-Conyers-Paul-Nadler Freedom to Read amendment. This amendment curtails one of the most invasive provisions of the Patriot Law by prohibiting law enforcement from making sweeping searches and seizures of library and bookstore patron records.

We can all recall October 2001 when the PATRIOT Act was hastily passed by this body. Many of us, myself included, didn't have the chance to read this lengthy and complicated legislation in the few hours we had before the vote. I voted against the unseen legislation because I was concerned that its passage would amount to the blind abandonment of our civil liberties. As the details of the PATRIOT law came to light, it became all too clear that this law contained numerous infringements on our long-held civil liberties.

Today, we all know what is in the PATRIOT law, and our constituents know too. In my district, the local governments of Pacific Grove, Salinas, Santa Cruz, and Watsonville, CA, have all passed resolutions expressing their concerns with the anti-privacy and antiliberty portions of the PATRIOT Act. Supporting this amendment is an opportunity to respond to those concerns and rollback one of the most invasive provisions of the PATRIOT law.

Passing the Freedom to Read amendment would ensure that library or book store records relating to an American who is not the subject of an investigation will not end up in the government's hands without the benefit of the protections of the courts. I would urge my colleagues to stand up for the civil liberties that our country has always stood for and pass the Freedom to Read amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following statement of comparative budget authority.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the overall bill before us today. Chairman WOLF and Ranking Member SERRANO have joined together in a bipartisan fashion to present a bill that adequately reflects the funding priorities for our Nation in the area of Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary and related agencies.

I am especially pleased that money was added to the bill to confront the growing problem with gang activity that jurisdictions throughout the country are facing. In my congressional district and in the northern Virginia region, we are dealing with a growing gang problem that if left unchecked, will expand significantly in a very short time. The additional resources in this bill will help enable our law enforcement officials to acquire the necessary tools to tackle this problem before it grows out of hand. Efforts to increase law enforcement capabilities and strengthen community prevention programs are required to meet the rising gang threat head on.

While I am generally supportive of the funding levels provided in the bill, there are also a number of issues that should be addressed in this bill and others that should be deleted.

An area in which this bill needs amending concerns the USA PATRIOT Act. Communities throughout the country including Arlington County and the city of Alexandria in my district, have recently expressed serious objections with a number of provisions included in the USA PATRIOT Act passed in October 2001.

I share the concerns of my constituency and feel that these issues did not receive the appropriate public debate needed on such sensitive subjects as the protection of our civil liberties. In my opinion, the Attorney General's interpretation of definitions in the PATRIOT Act have eroded our basic civil rights and threaten to further damage the public's image of the Justice Department and Federal law enforcement in general. For these reasons and others, I am supporting amendments to the bill which would stop funding for certain Justice Department activities related to section 213 and section 215 of the PATRIOT Act.

Section 213, also known as the ''sneak and peek'' provision, authorizes the issuance of delayed notification search warrants for physical evidence through a court order from the secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court Act (FISA). These delayed notification warrants allow federal law enforcement to conduct a secret search and seizure of physical evidence without alerting the target until an unspecified time after the search is completed. The amendment introduced by Representative OTTER seeks to impose reasonable limits on the government's ability to obtain sneak and peek warrants. It would continue to allow the authorization of a court issued delayed warrant if the life or physical safety of an individual were endangered, if it would result in a flight from prosecution or if it would result in the destruction or tampering of the evidence sought under the warrant. This amendment would also require notification of a covert search within seven days, rather than an undetermined ''reasonable period'' currently in law. Unlimited, additional seven day delays at the court's discretion will be available under the Otter amendment and the same provisions subjected to the original warrant apply for each extension.

A second amendment that would curtail one of the more troubling provisions in the USA PATRIOT Act concerns section 215. Section 215 has the effect of requiring public libraries and booksellers to submit themselves to secret searches of purchase and checkout records with minimal justification from the FISA Court. Librarians and booksellers across the country fear that this is causing a ''chilling effect'' and making users self-censor their reading choices.

While the Attorney General has released figures on how the PATRIOT Act has been used in the past 2 years which state that this provision has yet to be employed, the fact remains that the law raises questions of future federal mis-use of this provision. The Sanders-Paul-Conyers-Nadler Freedom to Read amendment would restore and protect the privacy and first amendment rights of library and bookstore patrons which were in place before the USA PATRIOT Act. The amendment would not stop law enforcement from accessing these records, it would simply require them to do it with regular court-ordered search warrants or grand jury subpoenas.

While the PATRIOT Act remains an area the underlying bill does not reform, another subject which was confronted in full committee and that passed is equally troubling. I opposed in full committee, an amendment offered by Representative TIAHRT which would prevent the city of New York from having access to federal gun tracing data in a lawsuit against gun manufacturers. Not only did this appropriations rider set a troubling precedent in that it was directed specifically to affect an ongoing court case, it also hampers future lawsuits that could be aided by this data. I am strongly opposed to the inclusion of this language in the bill. We need to be at a minimum maintaining our current common sense gun control measures, not weakening existing laws.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, while not everything I would have liked to have seen is in this bill, it is a good balance of the priorities our law enforcement, small businesses and other related agencies require. I am supportive of this measure and look forward to a continued debate of the issues not addressed in the bill.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on H.R. 4754, the Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies Appropriations bill for fiscal year 2005.

H.R. 4754 provides $39.8 billion in budget authority and $40.4 billion in outlays—an increase of $878 million in BA and $1.7 billion in outlays from fiscal year 2004. Budget authority in the bill is $240 million above the President's fiscal year 2005 budget request.

H.R. 4754 contains $983 million in BA savings, including $902 million in BA and $341 million in outlays from mandatory spending changes; and $81 million in rescissions of previously enacted BA.

As chairman of the House Budget Committee, I am pleased to report that the bill is consistent with the conference report on the concurrent resolution on the Budget for fiscal year 2005 (H. Con. Res. 95) which passed the full House but has yet to pass the Senate. The bill comes in at its 302(b) allocation of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies and therefore complies with section 302(f) of the budget resolution, which limits appropriations measures to the allocation of the reporting subcommittee. H.R. 4754 also complies in fiscal year 2005 with section 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act. Section 302(f) prohibits consideration of bills in excess of a subcommittee's 302(b) allocation.

This bill is a clear exercise in setting priorities and responsible spending practices. I was encouraged to see that the Appropriations Committee was able to work within the budget framework that we outlined earlier in the year to find the available resources to increase funding for the Department of Justice by $275 million over the 2004 level and $624 million for the Federal Bureau of Investigation [FBI]. It is certainly appropriate to shift resources from some lower-priority programs at the Department of Commerce toward more important and higher-priority public safety and crime prevention programs at the Department of Justice.

Making those tough priority decisions isn't always easy but it can be done and needs to be done until we get our financial house back in order.

Today, I applaud the members of the Appropriations Committee for demonstrating that they can set priorities which fit within the overall framework established by the budget resolution.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, this Member rises to express his support for H.R. 4754, a bill making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary for FY2005. In particular, this Member would like to thank the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), chairman of the Subcommittee and the distinguished gentlemen from New York (Mr. SERRANO) for their hard work under difficult budget circumstances.

As a member of the House Caucus to Fight and Control Methamphetamine, this Member strongly supports the inclusion of $60 million for methamphetamine enforcement and cleanup, otherwise known as the ''hot spots'' program. These funds are critical in State and local efforts to combat the scourge of methamphetamine that is sweeping across our country.

This Member also appreciates the subcommittee's commitment to Nebraska's efforts to fight a growing plague in Nebraska—the manufacture, trafficking, and abuse of methamphetamine. The Nebraska State Patrol will continue the work began with the $1.8 million appropriated over the past 2 years, with an emphasis on funding for the cleanup of clandestine labs. Federal dollars are critical to the success of Nebraska's anti-meth efforts.

Of additional concern is the strong link between methamphetamine abuse and crime. Methamphetamine manufacture, use and trafficking has completely changed the face of crime in Nebraska—especially nonmetropolitan Nebraska. Crime resulting from methamphetamine abuse is soaring, which places great demands on law enforcement. Certainly, methamphetamine use and related crime is the top law enforcement problem in Nebraska. In fact, a study entitled, ''The Rebirth of Rehabilitation: Promises and Perils of Drug Courts, 2000," noted that "an individual who has a severe addiction, to methamphetamine, commits nearly 63 crimes a year."

In closing, Mr. Chairman, this Member urges his colleagues to support H.R. 4754.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. TERRY). All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Clerk will read.

H.R. 4754

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For expenses necessary for the administration of the Department of Justice, $124,906,000, of which not to exceed $3,317,000 is for the Facilities Program 2000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed 45 permanent positions and 46 full-time equivalent workyears and $11,078,000 shall be expended for the Department Leadership Program exclusive of augmentation that occurred in these offices in fiscal year 2004: Provided further, That not to exceed 26 permanent positions, 21 full-time equivalent workyears and $3,305,000 shall be expended for the Office of Legislative Affairs: Provided further, That not to exceed 15 permanent positions, 20 full-time equivalent workyears and $1,990,000 shall be expended for the Office of Public Affairs: Provided further, That the latter two aforementioned offices may utilize non-reimbursable details of career employees within the caps described in the preceding two provisos.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MANZULLO

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the dollar amount insert the following: ''(reduced by $27,000,000)''.

Page 94, line 2, after the dollar amount insert the following: ''(increased by $79,132,000)''.

Mr. MANZULLO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I first want to congratulate the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), chairman of the Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary and Related Agencies Subcommittee; and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), ranking minority member, for crafting an excellent bill. Regardless of how this amendment turns out, I am going to vote for it and encourage the rest of the Members of Congress to vote for it. It is very difficult to balance all the conflicting interests, and I commend them for coming up with a good bill.

With all due respect and honor to the gentlemen, I offer this amendment today to freeze funding for SBA 7(a) guaranteed lending program at last year's level.

The 7(a) is the flagship lending program of the Small Business Administration. This amendment means small businesses will be able to get started and grow. The 7(a) program is on track to create and retain half a million jobs this year. It has a proven track record by providing approximately 30 percent of the long-term financing needs for all small businesses.

Increasing fees on small business borrowers and lenders, particularly as interest rates are rising again, puts another barrier in access to capital and crimps our national economic recovery.

No matter how anybody states it, if this amendment fails, small business borrowers and lenders will face a fee or tax increase based on the amount of loan starting October 1 by as much as 100 percent. Some may characterize this as only a few dollars up front. But as the truth in lending disclosure form shows, he or she will pay up front at the time of the signing of the loan documents, hundreds if not thousands of extra dollars. The fee for a typical $100,000 loan would increase from $850 to $1,700.

On top of the up-front fee, lenders will once again see their annual fee on the outstanding balance of 7(a) loans made after October 1 increase, just after they shot up 30 percent this past April to keep the 7(a) program functional in fiscal year 2004. These fees cannot be passed on to the borrowers.

Many lenders, particularly small community banks that serve rural areas, are seriously considering leaving the program. Fewer banks offering 7(a) loans will translate into decreased access to credit for small businesses, which will result in fewer jobs created.

Mr. Chairman, my congressional district just dropped below 10 percent unemployment. Manufacturing jobs leveled off for 4 months. We lost another 11,000 this past month. We are not out of the woods yet. On top of it, the Fed decides to raise the interest rate. The last thing that we need is to have more of a crimp in capital access for the small businesses.

The amendment does not increase business spending. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office estimates the amendment will reduce outlays by $7 million in fiscal year 2005 by offering cuts in other programs.

The reductions are in other programs. The reductions will not be sensitive. They are in the Department of Justice General Administration Account. The Legal Activities Office Automation Program gets cut by $33 million for a program that they never asked for; the National Endowment For Democracy gets cut by a little over $10 million, which is still $1 million above the fiscal year 2004 level; and the salaries and expenses account at the SBA would make up the difference, to reach a $79,132,000 appropriations level for 7(a). That account would be cut by $8.46 million.

So the purpose of this amendment in making the tough choices is to keep funding level, keep the 7(a) program where it is, and although I support the goal of eventually getting the 7(a) program to a zero subsidy rate, now at the time we are just starting to see the light at the end of the tunnel, just starting a recovery, this is not the time to impose additional fees and taxes, not only upon the people that borrow the money, but upon the lenders that make it all possible.

Mr. Chairman, I again urge my colleagues to shift this $79 million from other accounts to the Small Business Account in order to help out the small businesses and keep the 7(a) program alive.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill, and commend the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) for crafting a fair and balanced bill, including the Justice Department, Commerce and State, as well as the Federal Judiciary. I would like particularly to comment on several issues of importance to me.

First, this bill provides a 4 percent increase for the International Trade Administration of the Department of Commerce. The ITA serves several important functions that promote economic growth for U.S. workers and firms, including the opening of foreign markets for U.S. goods and the enforcement of trade laws and agreements. I join the chairman in strongly urging the Commerce Department to carefully analyze market trends in order to anticipate unfair trade practices and consult with foreign governments to preempt the requirement for unfair trade cases to be filed. This is particularly helpful to small- and medium-sized companies that have neither the time nor the resources to file lengthy and costly trade cases, but they do deserve the protection of our U.S. trade laws.

Further, I would like to highlight the directive to the Commerce Department to contract with the National Academy of Public Administration to conduct a comprehensive study of the effects of offshoring jobs on the United States workforce and economy. Many manufacturing jobs have left my congressional district in recent years, and I believe it is critical to have accurate data of where jobs are going and what economic impact this job movement is having on the U.S. economy.

I support the $10 million increase over the request for public diplomacy programs in this bill. It is important that we counter the anti-American sentiments that are being voiced in foreign public opinion polls and reflected in foreign media content. Public diplomacy is a critical tool to spread the message of who we are as Americans. The person-to-person exchanges that are promoted by these programs allow for the development of personal, long-term relationships that lead to mutual understanding and respect. We must continue to support these programs worldwide, but in particular, we must focus on programs with the Arab and Muslim world.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of this important appropriations bill that funds our national and international security needs.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) as well as the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) for their work on this important legislation. The bill before us has attempted to do the most with a limited amount of dollars. One area where it falls short is the Small Business Administration.

As the ranking Democrat on the House Committee on Small Business, I always hear, during good economic times or bad, small business owners need access to affordable capital in order to be successful. That is why I always say access to capital is access to opportunity in this country.

Small business owners have told me stories of having to max out credit cards, having to borrow money from relatives, and having banks ask them to put their homes up as collateral for a $20,000 loan, all so they can afford to start a new business or expand an existing business.

The amendment I am offering today with the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman MANZULLO) will restore funding for the 7(a) loan program to fiscal year 2004 levels, $79 million. This amendment offsets several programs, but keeps the funding consistent with their fiscal year 2004 level. These are the real challenges facing small enterprises, and this is the whole reason the 7(a) loan program was created.

The 7(a) program is a public and private partnership for banks, lenders and small businesses. The 7(a) program is this country's largest source of long-term small business lending for both the private and public sectors, providing 30 percent of this Nation's long-term loans.

Given its tremendous success over the years, it is unbelievable to me that this critical loan program has been under nothing but attack from the Bush administration. This is the same administration that claims to be the champion of small business. The first thing this administration did 4 years ago was to eliminate funding for the 7(a) program. Then, earlier this year, the 7(a) program was shut down, and this happened because the Bush administration ignored Congress' warning and they ignored the industry. They simply chose to ask for less funding than what this loan program requires.

Now, today, we face a new issue for the 7(a) program. This same administration wants to zero out the program's funding and let small businesses and lenders pay more. We heard small business owners say this was unfair, and we promised to do something about this. Well, that is what we are doing today, delivering that promise to our small businesses.

What is so ironic is that we are talking about a successful small business lending program here. For every 60 cents, the 7(a) program provides $100 in loans. They have continually done more with less. A decade ago, they received $300 million in the appropriations process, and now we are asking for only one-third of that. Last year alone, the 7(a) program touched over 350,000 jobs.

The most unfortunate part is that over the past 10 years, the 7(a) program has managed to do more for small firms in an environment where they were being overcharged by the government. We fixed this problem in a bipartisan manner in 2001, but the Bush administration wants to go back to the days when small businesses were taxed.

Well, let me tell you, it is not what our Nation's small businesses want and it is not what we want. President Bush travels across the country touting his small business agenda, but his talk proves to be rhetoric; his actions do not match his words.

If you vote against this amendment today, then you are voting to increase the costs facing small businesses. Our hope is that this amendment passes, which would allow the 7(a) loan program to do record volumes with the same amount of money.

It is these small business owners who use the 7(a) program that serve as anchors for our economy. The truth of the matter is, this is an outstanding loan program, and this is the right thing to do. With this amendment, we will be enabling our Nation's small businesses to continue creating the jobs that we so desperately need.

If you support our Nation's economy, if you support job creation and small business, then you will vote ''yes'' on this amendment.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in support of the Manzullo-Velazquez amendment to the Commerce, Justice bill. But before I speak to that amendment, I want to commend the very distinguished chair of the committee and the ranking member for their leadership in bringing this bill to the floor.

As one who served many years ago, in my earlier time with the Committee on Appropriations, on this subcommittee, I have an appreciation for the many difficult decisions that you have to make and the great opportunity there is for the American people in this particular appropriations bill.

I also want to take the opportunity to acknowledge the tremendous leadership of the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF). He knows this, but I want to take a public opportunity to say that there is no person in this House that I admire more than I do the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF). He is a champion for human rights throughout the world, and as one who has spoken out, as with many of our colleagues in the Congressional Black Caucus, on the situation in the Sudan, I want to recognize his exceptional leadership in that regard and say how much we all appreciate your visit, your trip there, and your relentless, persistent advocacy for the underprivileged throughout this world, in this case in particular, in Darfur. I know many of us are eager to hear a report of the gentleman's trip there.

Once again, I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for being the great challenge to the conscience that he has been in his service in Congress.

I would like to now address the amendment that is being proposed to improve the small business access to 7(a) loans. As you may know, Mr. Chairman, the SBA 7(a) loan program is the most commonly used Small Business Administration loan, and backs approximately $11 billion in loans to small businesses each year. And yet it has faced shutdown caps and restrictions this year and received no funding under the latest Bush budget and Republican appropriations bill.

The President's budget proposes to run the program solely through fee increases, substantially raising the costs for small businesses to use the program and taking billions of dollars out of the economy.

Democrats, and in this case in a bipartisan way with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), are fighting to adequately fund the 7(a) loan program and make more loans available to small businesses.

We know that small businesses, Mr. Chairman, are the engine of our economy. They account for 95 percent of employers in our country, create half of our gross domestic product and create three out of four new jobs nationwide.

We have a chance today to save the 7(a) program, and I hope that our colleagues will join the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) and the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman MANZULLO) in supporting the bipartisan amendment. It will provide fuel to our small businesses which run our economic engine.

I would like to again recognize the leadership of the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), our ranking Democrat on the Committee on Small Business, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) for cosponsorship of this amendment.

We are very proud of the service and leadership of the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ). She is making history in her role as the ranking member on a full committee in the House; and in her service on that committee and in this body she has been a champion for small businesses.

I know she will be joined by the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY) and others from the committee who have worked very hard.

When we had our small business summit in June, small businessowners came from around the country, and access to capital was one of their top priorities. Passing this amendment will go a long way to addressing the need for capital. Capital attracts talent, talent attracts capital, the dynamic goes on and on. And while we want to promote the growth of many, many more jobs in our country, it is important that we do so by creating much more equity for potential businessowners and for current businessowners.

With that, I urge my colleagues to support the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for her comments, too; and I appreciate it very much.

I rise in strong opposition. Let me just say that I think the intention of the amendment is a good intention, so I want to thank them for their comments. But the amendment really does not work, and I know it has been dramatically changed, it really does not work what it was supposed to do. If it were passed, the SBA would not be able to use the money for the 7(a) loans because it puts it into an administrative account and not into 7(a). So it just does not do what people would like it to do.

The amendment would augment the administrative appropriation for the business loan account. Because subsidy and administrative loans must be separately appropriated pursuant to the Federal Credit Reform Act, the Manzullo-Velázquez funds could not be used.

It would also violate OMB guidelines. We have followed the President's request for the 7(a) program. This program can provide for $12.5 billion in loans, an unprecedented level, without the appropriation. The Small Business Administration is very, very strongly opposed to this.

But the programs that this would go after; this would take money out of the National Endowment for Democracy and out of the initiative with regard to the Middle East. It would scuttle that program. As my colleagues will recall, the original request for that was $80 million. That has now been reduced in this bill to $50 million. This would take that money out. The President's Greater Middle East Initiative would basically be eliminated with this amendment.

I would remind the sponsors that during the President's State of the Union message, he told the Nation and the world that he would double the funding for the National Endowment for Democracy. The National Endowment for Democracy was established by Congress during the Reagan administration and probably has done more to bring about democracy and freedom in the world than almost anything else that we have done.

Last year the NED budget totaled $39.6 million. The President called for doubling the NED budget; and with this bill, it calls for a $10 million increase, and we would now take that away. It would also deal with the whole issue of an administrative account at the Justice Department. The amendment proposes to reduce the Department of Justice General Administrative Account by $27 million. The bill already reduces this account by $62 million below the request. It would have an impact on counterterrorism, and some might say it could have a devastating impact on the war on terrorism. The only increase provided for above the fiscal year 2004 level for this account is $9 million for inflation to maintain current staff. We would, in essence, take that away.

There are many other reasons, and in the interests of time, and I know the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) is here to speak against it and there are others, but, the amendment does not do what it says they would like to do. Because the reason it does not do that is because had it been put in that account, it would have been ruled out of order. Members from both sides came and said they wanted the Legal Services Corporation protected and we protected it. And others, Members on this side wanted a Manufacturing Extension Program, we protected an increase. When they wanted State and local law enforcement, we did that. So they are having an even more difficult time finding the cuts, so they are now going to NED. Earlier today, they were at international broadcasting, and now they are sort of scurrying around.

Secondly, to wound NED, the National Endowment for Democracy and the Middle East Initiative would be horrible. And lastly, to wound the Justice Department and the effort on the war on terrorism is horrible.

So I urge all Members, if you had an amendment which would have done what you would have liked to have done, that is one thing. This amendment does not do it.

So I urge defeat of the amendment.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me at the outset say that the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) knows that I know how difficult it was to put this bill together and to deal with the issues that this bill takes care of. He is right, we had to move around with a smaller allocation. In fact, the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) was gracious enough to admit that the allocation, I think he said, was thin. Yet within that allocation, we were able to come up with a bill that I think we can all support.

But in the middle of that bill, or actually at the beginning of the bill, there is this gaping hole, this problem with the SBA now. There are different views as to how much of a problem this truly represents. But the fact of life is that many people on both sides of the aisle feel that it is a problem and one that needs to be dealt with.

Now, in committee, full committee, I proposed an amendment which would have provided the $79 million by declaring an emergency. What I basically did at that time was move emergency disaster funds and replace the 7(a) allocation in its place. By the way, that amendment was not approved; otherwise, we would not be here right now. Under our rules, that same amendment, then, cannot be presented on the floor because of the way it was presented, and so we have this one where we have dollars that we shift around in the bill.

I am not going to repeat what everybody has said. But in so many communities throughout this country, the small business community and the providers of loans believe that this is an important amendment; that this is an amendment that should, in fact, be approved and one that both sides of the aisle can support.

So with the respect and admiration that I have for my chairman, and knowing well that I was an architect in putting this bill together and our staffs were, nevertheless, I feel that this is an amendment that should be approved; and I will hope that on both sides it can get the sufficient votes to pass.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to our colleagues, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), for their conscientious and cooperative efforts reflected in this bill. Despite the inadequate allocation the committee had to start with, they were able to redirect much-needed resources to a number of law enforcement programs, to antigang initiatives, to scientific research, and to business programs.

As I said when the Homeland Security appropriations bill came to the floor, I am concerned about how the cuts to the COPS program and the Byrne grants for local law enforcement will affect our first responders' ability to protect us from, and to respond to, terrorist attacks. But I commend my colleagues for the improvements they have made in the President's budget request.

Today, I rise in support of the amendment being offered by the chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on Small Business to restore funding for the Small Business Administration's flagship 7(a) loan program. With all due respect to my friends on the Committee on Appropriations, these are the two Members who spend the most time dealing with small business issues and have the best understanding of small business programs.

The fact that the two of them have come together to offer this bipartisan amendment should be all the proof that most Members need that 7(a) does, in fact, need Federal funds to survive. But for those who are not willing to take their word for it, let us look at the facts. Small businesses are the number one job creators in this economy. 7(a) loans account for nearly 30 percent of all long-term loans for small businesses in America. This is a program that has returned an estimated $12 billion to the economy with only a $120 million investment. I cannot understand how anyone could say that 7(a) is not good business.

The administration is apparently still clinging to their claim that 7(a) can continue entirely as a fee-based program. They say we could simply increase fees to make up the difference in funding. We could. But if we did so, any company hoping to take out a $150,000 7(a) loan would have to ante up something like $10,000 in fees just to get the loan. In private real estate markets that would be like a mortgage broker charging seven points just to process a mortgage application. Such a policy would kill 7(a). That is why the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) have decided to offer this amendment, and I strongly encourage my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Chairman, this bill unfortunately shortchanges small business in yet another respect, zeroing out funding for the very successful microloan program.

Microenterprises are the foundation of our economy, and although a microenterprise by definition has fewer than five employees, they account for something like 17 percent of our employment in this country. In the 12 years it has been in existence, the microloan program has resulted in 19,000 microloans responsible for the creation of more than 60,000 American jobs. In my district alone, this program has resulted in 223 loans totaling $1.26 million.

That is a huge impact. Each of those loans represents a new business, a new American realizing his or her dream. The economic effects of each of these loans ripples and expands throughout the local, State, and ultimately, the national economy. The gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) will offer an amendment later to restore most of the funding for the microloan program, and I urge my colleagues to support their amendment.

Mr. Chairman, America's small businesses represent the dreams, the innovation, the drive that have made this country great. Especially as we struggle to replace the 1.2 million American jobs that have been lost in the last 3 years, we need to ensure that the programs best qualified to create jobs are given the resources that they need. The 7(a) program and the microloan program have proved themselves in creating jobs, building businesses, and expanding our economy. I urge my colleagues to give them the resources to continue.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, my respect and admiration for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) is very large, but it does not extend to this amendment. I hope this amendment does not pass, and I will tell my colleagues my reasons.

I am very concerned that in adding $10 million to the program that the gentleman wishes to nourish will result in that size of a cut from the National Endowment for Democracy. If ever there was a time we needed public diplomacy, we need the services of the National Endowment for Democracy to help tell the truth about America throughout the Middle East, as well as the rest of the world, it is now. This is not the time to be cutting these funds, and this Manzullo amendment would end up doing that.

Small business is very important, we all agree. Small business we trust has been adequately compensated in this general legislation, and even if this method of funding the program the gentleman wishes to protect is removed, the program will continue, I am informed, because it can be funded in other manners.

But in any event, this is a very important amendment. It is one that if it passes would limit our ability to tell the story that we need to tell throughout the Middle East and the rest of the world about democracy and freedom. We are on the defensive now. This is no time to tie us in knots.

So with warm respect for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), I respectfully hope this amendment is defeated.

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the chairman and the ranking member, the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), for their leadership. In spite of the cuts in funding and the sacrifices that we are having to make in terms of budget shortfalls, they are showing their leadership in providing as much funding as possible for those critical programs that are endemic to working families.

Mr. Chairman, I do rise, though, in strong support of the amendment offered by my colleagues on the Committee on Small Business, the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), the ranking member, which would provide full funding for the Small Business Administration's primary lending program, the 7(a) loan program.

Mr. Chairman, we on the Committee on Small Business have heard small business owners throughout this country, and they are all saying the same thing, that the one hurdle faced by America's 23 million small businesses is gaining access to affordable capital. I believe that the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment, which maintains the $79 million in funding provided to the agency last year, helps SBA reach its goal of providing small companies with the financing they need through the agency's access to capital lending programs. Without this funding provided for businesses by this amendment, many small businesses could be denied the loans they need to be successful.

Funding for this program, and if it is not restored, small businesses will be unable to target new markets, grow or even hire new workers. The 7(a) loan program is the SBA's core lending program and accounts for roughly 30 percent of all long-term small businesses in America. In addition, these loans are the only source of affordable long-term financing for many of our Nation's small businesses, especially minority- and women-owned businesses.

As the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Tax, Finance, and Exports, I understand the importance of small businesses to our Nation. They employ 97 percent of our Nation's workforce and are often called the engine of the Nation's economy. Without the funding provided for by this amendment, both lenders participating in the program and borrowers will be faced with higher fees; some lenders could be forced to withdraw from the program, leaving small businesses with fewer options for financing.

Mr. Chairman, the passage of this amendment is critical to the capital needs of thousands of small businesses. I urge its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), the ranking member on the committee.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding. A concern was raised by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) regarding the properness of where the amendment places the money within SBA. With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, because the SBA 7(a) program was eliminated, a program account does not exist. But I want to read from the committee's report and the gentleman says, ''The committee recommends a total of $128 million under this account for administrative expenses related to business loan programs.''

So what we have done is to operate within the constraints that the committee provided us. And regarding the concern that was raised about the money, $10 million that had been taken from the National Endowment for Democracy, even by taking the offset of $10 million, the program remains funded at last year's level. And we do support spreading democracy, but we also support creating jobs in our country.

Mr. MCCOTTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

In many ways, it is with somewhat of a heavy heart that I rise in support of the amendment, especially as the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has been so helpful in restoring the Manufacturing Extension Partnership funds which will help my State of Michigan, and because of the enormous respect I have for the chairman of the Committee on International Relations on which I sit, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE).

But being from Michigan, my small businesses have asked me to come and support this amendment and ask that we not raise these fees at a time when the Fed is raising our interest rates. As the backbone of our economy, our small businesses deserve no less during difficult times, especially while, despite a recovering economy, pockets of persistent downturn remain, many of them in the industrial States, one of which I represent.

As for the National Endowment for Democracy, in many ways it is important to remember that democracy begins at home. It will be very difficult to continue to mobilize Americans' resolve to spread democracy abroad if in an economic downturn we are tempted to turn inward towards our own struggling economy.

The continued support of small business, the perpetuation of their entrepreneurial dreams, is the seed of democracy which we are endeavoring to sow throughout the world. Let us not forget them and turn our backs today.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by my good friends, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), of the House Committee on Small Business.

I speak as a former president and chief financial officer for 20 years of a small business firm, and I speak as a former member of the Committee on Small Business. I understand how difficult it can be to access capital when you run a small business or when you want to start one. Restoring $79 million for the Small Business Administration's SBA 7(a) loan guarantee program in fiscal year 2005 is a step in the right direction.

The 7(a) loan guarantee program deserves among the SBA's business loan program to help qualified small businesses obtain financing when they might not be eligible for business loans through small lending channels. It provides 30 percent of all long-term small business financing. This program is also the SBA's most flexible business loan program since financing under the 7(a) loan program can be guaranteed for a variety of general business purposes. Regardless, funding for the 7(a) program has dwindled from approximately $330 million a decade ago down to only $79 million today as borrowers and lenders have absorbed much of the program's costs.

Many small businesses are attempting to emerge from the current economic downturn and they do not have the balance sheets necessary to obtain conventional financing. Consequently, they need the 7(a) program.

It has been my experience that start-up businesses in particular rely on the 7(a) loan guarantee as the last resort to access desperately needed capital. The SBA 7(a) loan program is vital to the funding of these small businesses. Without a supportive funding appropriation, many small businesses simply will not be financed and many jobs will not be created.

My State needs this program to be funded. They have contacted me repeatedly, requesting my assistance, and I have responded in kind, cosigning letters requesting funding for the program. Today is the day we need to heed the call of most, if not all, of our small business constituents who comprise such a large percentage of all businesses in the United States.

I support restoring funding for the 7(a) program. I urge my colleagues to support small business and the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment to this legislation.

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Today is an important day for small business, their owners, their employees, those out of work and desperately searching and, indeed, the entire American economy.

In June, our economy was estimated to add 112,000 new jobs. Make no mistake, this is a significant number, especially for those individuals that found these new jobs and for their families. However, there are still far too many individuals and families that are suffering from the effects of unemployment, and unfortunately, that number of new jobs falls drastically short of the number of new jobs needed each month just to keep up with the growing working population. Yet, here we are on a day when Oregon's unemployment is still 6.7 percent.

There is a bill before us that seeks to cut all funding for the Small Business Administration's loan program, 7(a). The SBA 7(a) loan program is vital to America's small business, and American small businesses are vital to the American economy and the American worker.

Demand for more small business loans, especially 7(a) guaranteed loans, have increased dramatically as America's small businesses seize a glimmer of hope that we are emerging from our recession. To pull the very rug out from under them by cutting funding to the 7(a) program just when they see this glimmer of hope is nothing short of cruel. These SBA 7(a) loans are especially important to start-up businesses which are so reliant on ready access to capital.

These start-up businesses are our future. They will be where our new growth comes from. It makes no sense whatsoever to cut their access to capital when our economy needs every boost of stimulus it can get.

A vote for the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment is a vote for America's small business which, in turn, is a vote for America's economy and the American worker. That is why I am supporting this amendment to restore the funding needed for the 7(a) SBA program, and that is why I am asking all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to join me in this effort.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to rise in opposition to this amendment, because of its sponsor. I know that his heart is in the right place. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) is an outstanding chairman of the Committee on Small Business. I know that he has worked very hard for the strength of small businesses because he understands, as most of us do, that without all of our small businesses in America, we would not have any big businesses because the big businesses rely on small businesses in order to get the job done. But the sponsors of the amendment are of the opinion that there is no money or that the 7(a) loan program needs more money.

In this bill, if I remember correctly, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) provides $12.5 billion in loan guarantees for this program. So we have not forgotten this program in the appropriations bill. The amendment does not really add money to the loan program anyway. It adds money to the SBA administrative account and, therefore, will not even be spent on the loan program as the drafters intend.

At the same time, and this is my larger concern, the amendment cuts not only other SBA administrative functions, hurting the agency that oversees the loan programs, but it also reduces programs in the Department of Justice, impacting homeland security initiatives, by $60 million. The impact of this would be devastating on the war on terrorism. For example, the cuts include the office that oversees Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act applications which are vital to the war on terrorism and which are vital to keep track of terrorists who may try to enter this country. I believe that there are more prudent ways to address the gentleman's issue.

Again, I would like to compliment him for his strong commitment, not only as a Member of the House, but as chairman of the Committee on Small Business, and for his support of small businesses because, again I will repeat, that small businesses are important to this Nation and are important to our economy. Small businesses create many of the jobs that Americans hold and draw paychecks from. Without our very successful number of small businesses, the large businesses in America would find it very difficult to function because they do rely on small businesses.

So, all in all, I do not think this money is certainly not needed for the loan program. But it would not be invested in the loan program anyway. But what it does is take money away from homeland security programs in the Department of Justice, and I just think that is a mistake.

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment to the fiscal year 2005 Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Act and mainly to support small business.

This amendment will provide the necessary funding to maintain the integrity of the Small Business Administration's flagship small business lending mechanism, the 7(a) loan guarantee program.

Mr. Chairman, I represent the Territory of Guam, where 90 percent of our businesses are small businesses.

I applaud the bipartisan leadership demonstrated by our dynamic duo, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), in constructing this amendment; and I am proud to have worked with my colleagues on the committee, whether participating in hearings or writing letters or meeting with small business owners, so that we can today arrive at a consensus that reflects the needs of the small business community and the role of the Federal Government to help foster growth, innovation and jobs in this important economic sector.

The 7(a) loan guarantee program is a principal source of funding for small businesses, representing 30 percent of all long-term small business borrowing in the United States. Oftentimes, the 7(a) program is the only source for long-term financing on reasonable terms for small businesses, particularly those in poor, rural, and underserved areas. These small firms represent the future of our economy, as they account for 75 percent of all new jobs created in the United States.

Consider these statistics: the current Federal burden for supporting every $100 of a 7(a) loan is 60 cents. Statistics also show that a new job is created in the small business sector for every $33,000 of loans.

Mr. Chairman, that means that it costs the Federal Government only $198 to create an additional job for the economy through the 7(a) program. A Federal program that demonstrates this level of success should never, ever be cut back, but, rather, expanded.

Suspending Federal funding of the 7(a) program will result in an increased cost to small businesses, as banks will pass new costs on to their 7(a) customers in the form of higher fees.

There is also fear that some banks, particularly in poor, rural and underserved areas, will no longer see the incentive of offering 7(a) loans and will suspend this financing mechanism altogether. This will have the effect of halting both economic and job growth at a time, Mr. Chairman, when we are just beginning to recover from the recent economic downturn.

Recognizing the budget challenges this year, the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment modestly proposes to fund the Federal subsidy of the 7(a) program at fiscal year 2004 levels. It is also budget-neutral. This amendment is supported by Democrats and Republicans, by small business owners throughout the country and by banks that offer federally backed financing mechanisms.

Mr. Chairman, this is the right thing to do, and I hope my colleagues will vote in favor of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment to H.R. 4754, the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill. I strongly support the Small Business Administration's (SBA), 7(a) business loan program and have joined some of my colleagues from Connecticut in advocating improvements and increases in the program.

I understand the serious issues facing small businesses today and believe that, as the backbone of our community, it is vital we do what we can to help them thrive and I appreciate the spirit of the amendment.

But this is not what the amendment does in its entirety. It cuts $60 million out of the Department of Justice and $10 million out of the National Endowment For Democracy. And so, therefore, the amendment is fatally flawed.

If my colleagues believe that the cold war still exists, they could probably make an argument for this amendment. They could probably say we do not need the National Endowment For Democracy as much as we do today, and they could probably say that the Department of Justice does not need the initiatives that it needs; but the Cold War is over, and the world is a far more dangerous place. We have to deal with the issues that confront us.

The idea that we would contain and react to threats and have mutually assured destruction in the days of the Cold War has been replaced by the need for detection and prevention. Our actions may have to be maybe preemptive and maybe sometimes even unilateral, but the key part is prevention and detection; and there is no way we are going to be able to detect and prevent, in my judgment, if we are not doing more to give our intelligence community the skills to detect and to prevent.

We have a letter from the Department of Justice that makes clear that, to accommodate an additional $10 million cut in the OIPR budget for intelligence, they would need to forego requested adjustments to base, including the funding needed to support the annualization of second-year costs for 16 OIPR positions. This would further degrade OIPR's ability to process FISA's applications for intelligence searches and surveillances before the foreign intelligence surveillance court of review, when the number of applications has increased significantly since September 11, 2001. The letter goes on.

This is crazy at this time to act like somehow this is pre-September 11.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I listened to the debate, and I just want to make a couple of closing comments. One, this does hurt NED. At this time for the Middle East to do this is just not good.

Secondly, it hurts the war on terrorism. Thirty people from my district died in the attack on the Pentagon, and we heard it. Lastly, and I know this is not the intention of the sponsors, this is not, I say, the intention of the sponsors, but the reality of this amendment is that this is a subsidy to put money into the bankers' pockets. That is basically what it is. If one were helping the poor or the hungry or the people that really need it, one ought to support the amendment; but look and listen to the groups that contacted us, the American Bankers Association. This is an amendment to put money in the pockets of the bankers, not the poor, not small business, and for those reasons, in addition to the National Endowment For Democracy when we are trying to get peace in the Middle East on the war on terrorism.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAYS. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding; but with all due respect, I sit on the Committee on Financial Services.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MCHUGH). The time of the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SHAYS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAYS. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. For members of the subcommittee of Congress to be here doing the job for a financial institution is completely wrong.

This amendment will address a Hispanic woman who goes shopping around to make a loan and is being denied a loan by commercial banks. Unless we have a loan guarantee, and my colleagues know that we hear time and time again about minority businesses, women-owned businesses who are denied loans through traditional financial institutions, this amendment helps those people who are trying to set up their businesses or expand their businesses.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I understand what the gentlewoman is doing and I admire that. I think her purpose is very, very good and I think on the microloan issue is exactly right. That is why the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and I have an amendment to restore that and deal with this. I want to make sure the record should state that is not the gentlewoman's purpose of doing it, and so I only attribute the honorable, the most wonderful.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would further yield, we can mix oranges and apples. Microloan and 7(a) are two completely different programs.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me begin by recognizing the hard work of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO). I know this is a difficult bill, and I know there is not a lot of money available.

Let me more importantly, however, recognize the bipartisan spirit and hard work of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), the Chair of the Committee on Small Business, and also the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), the ranking member.

This is an absolutely critical bill. This is not a bill for the banks. This is a bill for the small businesses in America that are struggling. This is a bill for the companies in this country that are trying to create jobs. We have a sluggish, sputtering economy. We have just raised interest rates on these same small businesses.

We hear a lot of rhetoric on this floor about the engine of our democracy, creating jobs, we love Main Street, we want to support small businesses; but when it comes time to make a policy decision, which is where we are today, so many people have all kinds of reasons why we should not put creating jobs and helping small businesses at the front of the line.

Yes, there is a need for democracy funds; and, yes, there is a need for 16 additional personnel to process visas. And we can get that money. We wasted more money on Halliburton than this bill involves. That money can be obtained. The fact of the matter is this is an absolutely critical bill.

Now, it is amazing to me to hear people dismiss cavalierly the needs of the small business community. Why? Because unlike many big businesses and unlike the Halliburtons, these small businesses are creating jobs here in the United States. These are not jobs that are going to be exported or offshored. These are jobs here in our local communities.

The gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) cited the example of minority businesses who go around shopping for loans and that cannot get those loans without this program. This program created 300,000 jobs in America last year. This program used $79 million and leveraged that into loans totaling over $12 billion. Those loans, those jobs are the things that make America work.

So it seems to me that for the relatively modest sum of $79 million we ought to give small businesses and job creation in America a greater priority and fund other worthy causes that have been discussed on this floor through other means.

We have given great tax cuts to very wealthy people. I mentioned Halliburton. We have given them loads of money; and they have misused it, overcharged the United States. The money can be found to address my colleagues' concerns, and they are worthy concerns; but today, we have to ask ourselves a very fundamental question. Are we serious about helping the small businesses in our community? If we are, we should support the Manzullo-Velazquez amendment and restore the funding for the 7(a) loan program.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I thought I would recite the names of some of the organizations that are in favor of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment. Sure, we have the American Bankers Association that is in favor of it, but just listen to the names of these groups that represent small businesses.

The Asian American and Hotel Owners Association; Women Impacting Public Policy, that is over 2.5 million women-owned small businesses. The Air Conditioning Contractors of America, those are all small businesses. American Society of Farm Managers and Rural Appraisers, those are small business people. American Society of Appraisers, those are small business people. America's Community Bankers, those are many small community banks in rural areas. Financial Services Roundtable, banks of all sizes, including large banks. Independent Community Bankers of America, those are mostly small banks, many in rural areas.

International Franchise Association, thousands and thousands of small business owners across America. National Association of Government Guaranteed Leaders, NAGGL, that represents people that get small business loans. National Association for the Self-Employed, I think the average membership of their group is less than five employees.

National Association of Women Business Owners, small business people.

The National Bankers Association, National Black Chamber of Commerce, the National Small Business Association, the Small Business Legislative Council, the Appraisal Institute. The Tire Industry Association, these are guys that have tire shops across the country. The United Motorcoach Association, these are guys that buy buses for tourism, et cetera; and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which represents the large and small businesses.

The reason all these groups are behind the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment is that the core purpose of the Small Business Administration is to make capital available to small businesses, and why the SBA is fighting small businesses is beyond the recognition of the chairman of the Committee on Small Business. I cannot understand it, why the SBA is fighting this bill, which is the core program of the entire SBA.

It does not make sense. $79 million in the huge $3 trillion budget that we have is not a lot of money. But what it does amount to is the doubling of the fee of the little guys that get loans of under $150,000. The little ones get hit, the very ones that are trying to make this Nation recover.

In my district, we just dropped below 10 percent unemployment and the Fed raised the interest rate. I stand here in the gap as the chairman of the Committee on Small Business to say the Small Business Administration is wrong on this issue, and they ought to be ashamed of themselves for fighting this Congress to defund the very program that has made the SBA the organization that it is.

Sure, I could get very impassioned over little people. I come from a small business. My dad had a grocery store and then a restaurant, and the family restaurant continues today. And if my brother wants to get a loan from the SBA, why should his fees be doubled?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, although I support the intention of the chairman of the Committee on Small Business, my concern would be where the money comes from. So, in the MEP program, it is already sacrificing, and this also takes funds out of that. So I do not know how to rebalance.

Mr. MANZULLO. If the gentleman will continue to yield, this does not take funds of the MEP.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. Chairman, this takes funds out of the Justice Department, and that is part of the sourcing of funds that I understand the money would come from. And I will be happy to yield for a final word from the chairman.

Mr. MANZULLO. Well, I commend the chairman for funding the MEP program, but out of Justice this comes out of the administration account. It has nothing to do with FBI agents or the DEA or people involved in those positions.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time once again, let me ask a question of the chairman. Where is this $60 million of the funds coming from in Justice?

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, the letter from Justice says it would be ''devastating to the management of the Department, including the Office of Intelligence Policy and Review's support for the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.'' It also says, ''This would further degrade OIPR's ability to process FISA applications.''

Ms. MAJETTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise today in support of this bipartisan amendment offered by my colleagues on the Committee on Small Business, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), the chairman, and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ).

This amendment would restore funding for the Small Business Administration's signature 7(a) loan program to the fiscal year 2004 levels of $79 million. The underlying bill would eliminate funding for this critical program, potentially crippling many small businesses that rely on the 7(a) program as their only source of capital.

The number one problem cited by America's small businesses is gaining access to affordable capital. As you know, the 7(a) loan program provides loans on favorable terms to small businesses and allows funds to be used for operating capital. The SBA offers the program through private lenders and the SBA guarantees 50 to 80 percent of the loan's amount. The 7(a) loan program accounts for 30 percent of all long-term small business lending, and it is a proven catalyst for job creation and economic development.

This loan program has proven itself productive and successful. Last year, in Georgia, 1,498 loans were issued for a total of $367 million under the 7(a) program. And in my district, Georgia's Fourth Congressional District, 184 loans were issued, totaling $47 million. Those loans kept and produced jobs in our community. Those loans supported the very businesses that managed to weather a weak economy, and now some wish to take those loans away.

Small businesses cite access to capital as their main barrier to growth. By not fully funding the 7(a) program, we will be denying vital funds to small businesses across the country. This means fewer small businesses, less growth in those that survive, and fewer jobs created.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and to restore funding for a program vital to our small businesses, our families and our economy.

Mr. WATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. MAJETTE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WATT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me, because it will not take me 5 minutes to do what I want to do. I am with my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), on this. I do not understand the priorities that the Small Business Administration are using when they talk about not supporting a loan program that has generated 360,000 jobs in the last year.

How could this administration, that has lost as many jobs as it has through the almost 4 years of being in office, now be talking about doing away with a program that is a job creation mechanism? I, for the life of me, do not understand that. And the only thing I can say is, this is just not rational decision-making being made.

This argument that somehow we are going to restore these funds by increasing fees on small business people who apply for the loans just makes even less sense to me. Because those are the very people who need the money without additional fees being generated and charged and assessed to them.

So the priority setting here in an appropriations process tells a lot about the values of an administration and the values of an SBA. And, apparently, this SBA and this administration simply do not care about small businesses or about job creation, even though it is giving lip service to it throughout the country.

I think we should support this amendment, and I appreciate the gentlewoman yielding to me. It does not take a long time to say this administration's priorities are out of whack on this issue, and we should support the amendment that has been offered by the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), who cannot understand the priorities that this Republican administration is putting forward any more than we can on this side.

Ms. VELAZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. MAJETTE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. VELAZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the fact that this amendment takes money from homeland security, I will say that there is nothing in this amendment that will take money from homeland security. The offsets are from DOJ automation projects.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think the virtues of the small businesses have already been outlined time, time, and time again. The only question is what is the biggest problem that small businesses have in this country? The biggest problem that small businesses have is access to capital. How do they get the money that they need to really start up? How do they get the money to expand? How do they get the money to operate? Without capital, there can really be no small businesses.

So it seems to me that, notwithstanding all of the difficulties that have been cited about where the money is or what we have to do with it, if we do not generate it, if we do not produce it, then we do not have the businesses that we need.

I would simply urge support for the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment, and also indicate support for the microloan program. I come into contact with hundreds of small business people every week, every month, who, with just a little bit of money, would really help them over what they call the ''hump.'' It would keep them in business, keep them employed, and keep the economy thriving.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think the first order of business is to acknowledge the good work that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) have done on this appropriation with the deck of cards they have been given. I think this debate should stray away from the work that has been done by the appropriators. We already know the vigorous debate that has taken place between the budget people and the appropriators, trying to find dollars where they may not be.

Let me just say that as a member of the Select Committee on Homeland Security, I believe we have unanimity in at least recognizing that homeland security is important. We may do it differently, but we understand it is important and we want to secure the homeland.

I frankly believe there are ways to improve the resources necessary to do what is important for the American people, secure the homeland, and also do what the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), want us to do, and that is to rebuild the crumbling infrastructure of the SBA 7(a) loan program.

Let me cite, if I might, and compliment Milton Wilson, who heads my SBA agency in the Houston region, talk about the many, many hundreds of small businesses that have created jobs in Houston. When we were falling on our very knees just about 3 years ago and Enron laid off 5,000 employees in my community, the domino effect was enormous from businesses that were supported by this very large company and other energy companies who felt the brunt of the economic engine failing in this country.

Now, we just realized that we only created in the last month 112,000 jobs when, in actuality, to be even minimally healthy economically, we needed to create 150,000. Well, Mr. Chairman, the place to create those jobs is through small businesses.

I am frankly disappointed to announce to the American public and my colleagues that 2 days before Christmas, just a year ago, the administration encouraged or announced significant changes to the 7(a) program. Two weeks later, the SBA shut the program down. What does that mean to small businesses, which are basically the infrastructure of America?

They are the job creators of America. That is what all of us say. When we go home to our districts, it is the small business owners that we encounter, with all their ups and downs. The only way they have been able to access dollars has been to use their credit cards, with their usurious interest rates. That is how they have been funding their businesses.

These are the floral shops, these are the cleaners, these are the small computer offices, these are the human resource offices. These are the small businesses of America. Frankly, they may be in Houston, they may be in Jackson, Mississippi, they may be in Charlotte, North Carolina, they may be in New York, they may be in Ohio and Illinois and California. All over America, what is happening is that we are losing the ability for these small businesses to engage in business by getting these kinds of loans.

According to the GAO, over the past 10 years, small business lenders and borrowers have paid over $1 billion in miscalculated government fees and under-the-table taxes. This was fixed by a bipartisan move 2 years ago, yet the administration wants to go back to a time when lenders and borrowers were overcharged. That does nothing but hurt our small businesses.

So this amendment that has been offered by the distinguished gentlewoman from New York and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois is, frankly, the right way to go. And I would like to be able to say to the ranking member and the chairman of this subcommittee, let us go find some dollars somewhere where they are not needed, like the enormous tax cuts that are taking away from the working men and women of America. Let us go find money that will support the 7(a) loan program that can, in effect, provide the resources that are necessary to create jobs.

Who would stand on the floor of the House today and ignore the fact that we only created 112,000 jobs? The only way we can add to those jobs, besides boosting our manufacturing, is to give small business the ability to secure loans that will help them grow their businesses. They grow them two employees, three employees, and five employees at a time.

This is not about responding to a constituency, the small business community of America, it is about responding to Americans who need jobs.

I support this amendment because I believe it is a viable amendment. This program generated more than 60,000 jobs last year across America. It is not going to create any jobs if we continue to dumb down the program and do not provide it with the resources it needs.

In closing, the ranking member and the chairman of the subcommittee have worked with what they had to work with. I also want to acknowledge that we are all supporters of the National Endowment for Democracy, but we need to find dollars to do the important business of America: securing the homeland, providing loans for small businesses, and creating jobs. If we do that, we will improve the quality of life in America. I ask Members to support this amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment, and any amendments thereto, be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent, except that the chairman and ranking minority member may each offer one pro forma amendment for the purpose of debate.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MCHUGH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield half of my time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and that he be permitted to control that time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair would advise Members that under the unanimous consent request, the 15 minutes for the proponent is controlled by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), so he would have any prerogative to yield such time to other Members.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield half of my allotted 15 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) and that she may control that time.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN).

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment to restore funding to the SBA 7(a) program.

In its fiscal year 2005 budget, the administration dealt a near-mortal blow to our Nation's small businesses by taking the funding from that program to zero. This amendment breathes new life into it by restoring that funding. It is critical to at least maintain funding for SBA's 7(a) loan program to last year's level of $79 million. Providing just level funding will leverage more than $13 billion in lending opportunities under the 7(a) program. But if this bill passes without the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment, small businesses will be required to pay nearly $80 million currently subsidized by the Federal Government, the equivalent of a new tax on small business.

Today, with double-digit rising health care costs, expanding energy costs, and pressure from overseas competitors, this increase is more than our small businesses can bear.

The 7(a) loans spur economic development in underserved areas like my district in the Virgin Islands, especially the island of St. Croix. The 7(a) loans are used to purchase land or buildings to expand existing facilities. These loans are used to buy new equipment, machinery, or even furniture.

In sum, the 7(a) loan program is SBA's core lending program, as Members have heard, and accounts for roughly 30 percent of all long-term small business borrowing in America. I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), the ranking member, for their leadership and their strong passionate bipartisan effort to salvage this program which is so critical to the small business sector and thus to the economic health of our Nation.

I urge my colleagues to walk the talk and support America's small businesses by supporting this amendment. Without this amendment, the 7(a) lending program and many of our small businesses will not survive.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ).

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I think in any debate, whether it is this amendment or any other amendment, I do not think we should ever question any Member's commitment or dedication to the war on terror. The funding that is sought in this particular amendment will not jeopardize our effort on the war on terrorism, and I think we need to start off with that understanding so we remain focused on the true intent of this particular amendment, and that is the very lifeline or lifeblood to small businesses in securing loans.

Small businesses already operate at great disadvantage. They do not get the same deductions as big corporations. They cannot go and establish their headquarters offshore and abroad to avoid paying taxes. This is all about the American dream. This is all about sweat and toil and commitment to this great capitalist system that makes this great democracy the great democracy that we have today.

We will never support democracy without a strong economy. I look at this as the greatest investment we can possibly make. We have to remain focused on the true intent of this particular amendment. These will be loans that are being made because of the funding in the guarantee. These are loans that would not be made otherwise. This is not a subsidy to banks. It is about risk, and there is nothing wrong with taking risk into consideration. We make that accommodation which makes money and capital available to the small businesses, the very strength of our economy, which lends credence, which lends viability to this great democracy. This is what it is all about, and I would hope everyone in this Chamber when we vote today will support small businesses throughout this country.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Hawaii (Mr. CASE).

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment. I came to this Congress and asked to serve on the Small Business Committee. Coming from a State that has 96 percent of its businesses as small businesses, 60 percent of its businesses as minority-owned businesses, I came here ready to roll up my sleeves believing that Washington, D.C. cared about small businesses.

Let us put this amendment into perspective and ask ourselves is that true. As we look at the actions of this administration, and many times this Congress, Members have to say that small business has not been treated well. I have sat on the Committee on Small Business, as bipartisan a committee as there is in this Congress, where we are all trying to help small business, and I have watched as the discussion has turned to small businesses being squeezed out of the Federal procurement process. I have watched as we have had hearings on all of those measures to help small businesses, from reducing paperwork, the Paperwork Reduction Act, and instead we see this administration presiding over increases in paperwork. Regulatory relief, this administration presiding over huge increases in regulation, and the Small Business Administration coming in to us and trying to defend the actions of the Office of Management and Budget telling them to cut, and we see the pain in their eyes when they have to carry that policy down here.

Now we find ourselves facing an amendment that should never have had to have been brought to the floor of this House to preserve a program which has been the flagship program of small business, and we are being put in a box where we have to elect between two different things that we both support. Of course we support it.

But I have to ask, why do we not take a look at the billion dollar sole source contracts for huge businesses that are out there? This is a blip on the radar screen when we compare it to that. This is not about banks. Banks are consolidating. Big banks are getting bigger. Small banks are getting wiped out. Small banks serve small businesses; small businesses are not cared for by the big banks. They are being squeezed out. Take it to a rural community in my district, Na'alehu, a small mom and pop operation, trying to get just a little capital to get going; and if they are going to the big banks, they are not going to get that capital.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong, unqualified support of the bipartisan Manzullo-Velázquez amendment to save the Small Business Administration's section 7(a) small business loan program.

Mr. Chairman, the Small Business Administration (SBA) was created 51 years ago by President Dwight D. Eisenhower to meet a critical nationwide capital shortage. SBA's top priority was to provide small companies with access to capital through its lending programs. The 7(a) loan program is the signature program within the SBA. Over the last decade, the SBA has approved more than 424,000 loans for over $90 billion, assisting countless small businesses across the country with their basic capital requirements.

Tragically, funding of the 7(a) program is in grave danger of being eliminated. Should the administration prevail in its attempt to dismantle this proven program and Congress proceed on its current path, our Nation's small businesses would have to bear an additional $80 million in SBA expenses, and the fees per loan would increase by over $1,000. These loans are the only source of affordable, long-term financing for many of our Nation's small businesses, as 7(a) loans spur economic development in underserved areas, are used to purchase land or buildings or expand existing facilities or buy new equipment, machines, or even furniture, and provide long-term working capital including accounts payable—allowing small businesses to start and continue in business where otherwise if may not be possible.

In my own state of Hawai'i, for example, the viability of small business is the linchpin to economic vitality. In 2002, the most recent year for which numbers are available, the SBA Office of Advocacy estimates that there were 28,800 small businesses in my state, representing 96.7 percent of all business in Hawai'i.

Hawai'i is also home to one of the largest percentages of minority-owned businesses. Minority-owned businesses represented 57.8 percent of the state's businesses and they generated $14.8 billion in revenues in the most recent year for which this data is available.

The SBA and its programs are critical to the sustainability of our economic base. In Hawai'i, FY03, the SBA made 269 loans worth nearly $29 million. Of that number, 132 of those loans, worth nearly $15 million—nearly half of all loans—were made to companies operating in the rural communities of the Second District that I represent.

The situation is even more promising for my state in this fiscal year. Through May 31, 2004, the SBA had approved 260 loans, worth about $18.5 million to Hawai'i small businesses. Rural small business have received 61 of those loans—representing over $6 million.

The 7(a) program is also crucial to small businesses because of recent consolidation of banks and other financial institutions throughout the country. My state is no exception. According to the Federal Reserve Board, there were 13 small-business-friendly banks in Hawai'i in 1998. In 2002, that number had shrunk to 7. Of those seven in 2002, four had assets between $1 billion and $10 billion. Because small business traditionally depend on local banks services and use commercial bank lenders, this recent consolidation has not had a positive effect upon lending to small businesses.

During my time in Congress, as a member of the House Committee on Small Business as well as the Blue Dog and New Democrat Coalitions, I have argued for fiscal responsibility during our budget and appropriations process. The SBA's 7(a) program is a perfect example of a federal effort that is entirely consistent with this needed approach, for it both increases revenue-generating economic activity and pays for itself. By supporting, nurturing and growing small businesses, we are allowing these companies to increase in size, revenue, employment and purchasing power, ultimately benefiting the community where that company is located as well as the country as a whole. And these are repayable loans, not outright grants.

Mr. Chairman, this is a crucial amendment for all concerned, not least the small businesses of my Second District of Hawai'i. According to a survey published by the National Federation of Independent Business in May of this year, the top three ''severe problems'' for small-business owners is cost of health insurance, liability insurance and workers' compensation. Let's not give these small businesses one more reason to fail in these trying times. Let's pass this important amendment. It is the right thing to do, and I implore my colleagues to support the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment and support the underlying bill.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I have the utmost respect for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ); but since I said that, Members know what position I am taking on their amendment. I am adamantly opposed to it.

I appreciate their hard work, their commitment to the small business sector of our economy; but this amendment is wrong. Every single Member in a bipartisan way should oppose it for several reasons.

First, I want to talk about the fact that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and I came here 24 years ago, elected to serve in Congress the same day Ronald Reagan was elected President of the United States. One of the great visions put forth in 1985 in a speech delivered by President Reagan at Westminster College at Fulton, Missouri, was establishing the National Endowment For Democracy.

The notion behind this was the goal of ensuring that, rather than simply pursuing bullets, we would pursue ballots. What are we trying to do in the Middle East, in Iraq, and in other parts of the world? We are trying to do everything we possibly can to encourage self-determination, the rule of law, respect for democratic institutions, political pluralism. Why are we doing that? We are doing that in an attempt to help these people and to try and diminish the threat of engaging militarily.

So this amendment, as well intentioned as it is, is bringing about a cut in the funding for that institution, the National Endowment for Democracy, which has done a phenomenal job all over the globe helping people who have been trying to claw their way to self-determination to have the kind of success that is so important.

In the State of the Union message delivered by the President delivered right here, he called for a doubling of the funding for the National Endowment for Democracy. While the subcommittee of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has not quite gone to the level the President has requested, the $50 million level is a very good and important start because we know that we have been working to build these democratic institutions as part and parcel of the global war on terror, and we are having success and so we should not in any way jeopardize that.

Passage of this amendment undermines the effort that we are leading in moving towards democratization around the world.

Number two, the global war on terror, we are looking at a $60 million cut if we were to pass this amendment for the Department of Justice, which would tragically undermine the ability to deal with the very important threat that we live with every single day and have lived with every single day since September 11 of 2001, and that is the threat of global terrorism. We have seen activities take place just within the last few days, actions taken to keep ships that potentially posed a threat to our security offshore, and a wide range of other things which the Department of Justice has been involved in to try and help us turn the corner on the global war on terror.

As we look at these issues, as well intentioned as this amendment may be, I think we should look at the people who join us in opposition. Hector Barreto, the director of the Small Business Administration, a fellow Californian who has provided great leadership at the SBA, he is opposed to this amendment. They oppose this amendment at the Small Business Administration.

And as we look at the overall impact of this amendment, it is not even going to go towards its intended goal. This goes toward administrative expenses and will not provide assistance within the 7(a) program. It is well intentioned, but the amendment does not do anything like it is designed to do; and with what it does do, it undermines our quest towards encouraging democratization around the world, helping the people of Iraq in their quest to build those democratic institutions which are so important, and it threatens our overall goal of trying to deal with the global war on terror.

For every single reason, I believe it is important for us to do everything we can to in a bipartisan way vote ''no'' on this amendment.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

The issue has been raised here by the gentleman from California as to the National Endowment for Democracy. The fact is the National Endowment for Democracy is funded $1 million above last year's level. So that is not the issue before us today. The issue before us is whether we are going to take care of our small businesses, our small businesses which provide us with growth, which provide us with strength, which provide us with an economic base in this country. That is why this amendment is so important.

One of the biggest obstacles to entrepreneurs is establishing and growing a small business. And if entrepreneurs cannot get access to capital, they often have to turn to more costly alternatives. Without access to financing, companies are unable to target new markets, growth, and even hire new workers. That is why the 7(a) program is so important. The 7(a) loan program is the SBA's core lending program. Over the last decade, the SBA has approved more than 424,000 loans for over $90 billion. Think about it, $90 billion pumped into our economy to support small business growth.

Unfortunately, despite the immense popularity of this program, the Bush administration has continued its efforts to systematically dismantle this important program. The recent budget request by this administration for the 7(a) program has steadily declined while demand for 7(a) loans has continued to increase. As a result, the SBA was recently forced to shut down the loan program, injuring thousands of small businesses and lenders that had submitted applications for loans. After the outcry from the business community, the SBA reopened the program; but they capped all 7(a) loans, thus limiting the ability of American small businesses to get financing.

One of the key ways to help stabilize the 7(a) program is by providing more funding, and that is what this amendment does today. A bipartisan amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman MANZULLO), our chairman on the Committee on Small Business, and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), our ranking member. They have come together. This is the most bipartisan committee in the United States Congress, and they reached an agreement on an amendment. I applaud that effort to reach bipartisan support, and I urge my colleagues to support the Manzullo-Velazquez amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I simply want to respond to the comments of my good friend from New Mexico and say at the outset that this notion of a $1 million increase in funding for the National Endowment for Democracy does not even maintain a level at the inflation rate that it is; and this is a program which, remember, the President of the United States asked us to double, he asked us to double the funding for the National Endowment for Democracy. Why? Because when we think about the kind of success that it has had since we saw the demise of the Soviet Union and the Berlin Wall come down, what we have witnessed in the emergence of tremendous democracies of Eastern and Central Europe, the kind of effort that has been put into place, bringing about leaders who have addressed us in joint sessions of Congress like the former President of Poland, Lech Walesa, like the man who went from prisoner to President in 6 months in Czechoslovakia, Vaclav Havel. These people were able to enjoy success in large part due to the work of the National Endowment for Democracy.

What is it we want? We want throughout the world for people to enjoy the same kind of liberties that are now taken for granted in Eastern and Central Europe, and this program needs to have a dramatic increase. And I believe it is very important for us to do everything we possibly can to ensure the further success of the National Endowment for Democracy.

I also think it is important to note that this administration is strongly committed to the small business sector of our economy. There is no doubt about the fact that keeping the tax rates low for small businessmen and -women, encouraging economic growth, keeping interest rates low for small businesses, they are the backbone of our economy. But dramatically expanding a program when we have the director of the Small Business Administration opposed to this kind of a program, when, again, this amendment, this amendment does not allow the funding to get to that program. There already is a $12.5 billion level, as the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has just informed me. It seems to me that it is the right thing for us to do to oppose this amendment.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I would just like to respond to the fact that the gentleman was talking about the National Endowment for Democracy. The numbers do not lie. They are right here. The National Endowment for Democracy was funded $39.5 million. The full committee provided $51 million. It is on page 77 of the bill. If we take $10 million, they still have more than $1 million from last year.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I think that is what my friend from New Mexico was arguing. And my point is that if that would take place, it would not even allow us to maintain the inflation rate that we have. That is why that it needs to be substantially higher than that.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from the State of California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO).

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I have heard all the rhetoric; and sitting 6 years on the Committee on Small Business, I cannot help but wonder. We talk about funding small business and the engine of our economy, which is the small business, and yet we do not put money behind it to make it work. We talk like we want to help small business; yet we put billions, billions with a ''b,'' into loans, into grants, into whatever for the airline industry. We cannot put in 79 lousy million into small 7(a) loan programs, that for every $33,000 loaned, they would create one new job. Talk about $79 million versus $12.5 billion that we can be able to have our economy move forward; yet we are scrabbling around and arguing about why we should not take this money and invest it in the source of job development that this country so dearly needs.

Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), do they really think that it is the time to cut small business when we most need it?

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), the minority leader.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I will not be using that full amount, but I did want to rise once again to commend the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) and the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman MANZULLO) for their excellent leadership in bringing this amendment to the floor. I again want to commend the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), chairman of the full committee, for his great leadership in bringing a very important appropriations bill to the floor; and I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) also for moving this section 7(a) provision in full committee. Although he was not successful, his leadership was important to the momentum that we have today. I thank him for his leadership.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to close by saying this one thing: I always say that the only thing more optimistic than starting a new business is getting married. In order to take on the responsibilities of a marriage or a business, a person has to be very entrepreneurial, very optimistic, very confident. There are so many risks involved in starting a small business. At the very least, we should have access to capital so that we can increase the equity, the ownership that the American people have in businesses that do create jobs, that do create capital in our country, which in turn attracts the talent that we need to be internationally competitive.

This is a very important amendment today. It is not to say that the decisions that have to be made to fund it are not difficult; and as I said earlier, I commend the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), ranking member, for the difficult decisions they had to make to bring this Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act to the floor.

But we have to choose in favor of small businesses in our country if we are going to grow the economy. Small businesses are the engine of the economy. We cannot just talk about supporting small business. We have to put our resources there and give them access to the capital they need to succeed to accompany the great optimistic spirit and entrepreneurial spirit that they bring to the endeavor of starting a new business.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I urge our colleagues to support this bipartisan Manzullo-Velázquez amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MCHUGH). The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 8 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me first address the issue of offsets. We take $33.251 million out of a program that the President did not even request, this Legal Activities Office Automation Program at the Department of Justice, $33 million out of a program they never even requested.

I voted and continue to support the war on terrorism, but we reach a certain point when we have to ask ourselves, when do we take care of our own? When do we take care of the little people? This is not an outrageous request to ask that we have level funding this year that we had last year; $79 million is a lot of money, but compared to how far it goes to continue the program is something else.

The problem here is this: we all want to get away from this subsidy. I am in favor of a zero subsidy rate and have continued to work towards that each year that I have been chairman of the Committee on Small Business. To do it all at once at a time when the Fed has just increased the interest rate, when the unemployment in the district that I represent has just fallen below 10 percent, and at a time when small entrepreneurs continue to scramble for capital is simply unwise. To have a complete recovery, we need to make sure that the resources, the loans, are there for the little people, the ones that get up early in the morning and work 18 hours a day, sometimes 7 days a week, just for the opportunity to make a lot less money than they could working somewhere else, but who choose to do that because the spirit of entrepreneurship rings within their heart, because they know that eventually they will create more jobs and add to the economy.

That is what this bill does. It restores the same amount that they would have had last year, and I ask my colleagues to vote in favor of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a lot has been said about this amendment today, and I want to reiterate my respect and admiration for the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), and the fact that I cannot run away from the issue that we both participated in putting this bill together. But as I said in my original comments, and I will say again, even when we approved and supported this bill, as I do now and I would ask all my colleagues to do so for final passage, I still knew that there was a problem that had to be dealt with, and the most glaring of those problems was the 7(a) issue.

It is for that reason that I stood up today and continue to stand in support of the amendment. I think the amendment speaks to an issue of a constituency throughout this country that is not only based in the lending institutions, heaven forbid I should ever be accused of supporting the lending institutions at that level, but people who feel that this is a good program and should continue to exist.

Because of my support for the bill, I am very leery when we put forth any cuts, but I must say that I am not totally upset about cutting the National Endowment for Democracy, because every so often what they partake in is improperly trying to overthrow governments that they should not be involved in. So I am not going to cry tonight if we indeed take some money from them.

However, I understand the concern of many members of the subcommittees. I would just hope that we see this for the greater good, which is the need to have this program restored, to have this hope fulfilled. And if we do that, if we do that, I think that we would have gone a step ahead of where we were a couple hours ago in saying that this was a good bill. The bill then would be a great bill, and that is my support.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentleman from New York for his comments. Let me try to close and put some things in perspective.

The gentleman from Illinois said that the administration did not make any requests for the legal activities office automation. The President did. So we cannot just throw things out. The President requested $80 million. We, the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and I, only provided $50 million. This amendment cuts $33 million, leaving only $17 million.

Now, what would the impact of that be? Cutting the program any further would delay the deployment of needed information technology and improvements to the Bureau of Prisons, the U.S. Attorneys, the Marshals Service, Federal law enforcement, who continue to be criticized for not being able to connect the dots; and if we now give the Justice Department the ability to make standardized its information technology systems, we will be hindering their ability to share the information. The results could be catastrophic.

That was the whole issue at the 9/11 hearings, the lack of sharing of information. If we expect Federal law enforcement to prevent acts of terrorism, the FBI must be able to have surveillance applications approved in a timely manner.

So the amendment proposes a $33 million reduction in the Department's legal activities office, which funds the Standard Office Automation System, which 15 Department of Justice components operate, their mission and critical applications, the U.S. Attorney, Marshals Service, Bureau of Prisons, civil and criminal and many others.

So they did ask for it. What the gentleman from Illinois said was not accurate. They did ask for it, and the committee was not able to fund the entire amount. I was saying to my friends on the other side and on this side, part of the reason we were not able to do it is we wanted to put money in the manufacturing extension program, MEP. The administration's numbers were 39. We got up to 106. It is like no good deed goes unpunished.

We also wanted to protect the Legal Services Corporation for justice, justice for the poor. We actually have $6 million in here, above, to go after $60 million now with regard to the antiterrorism activity, eliminating funding for processing intelligence. I mean, I would have hoped that the gentleman from Illinois would have found another place, but in the war on terrorism that is just not the place to go.

Also, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL) made the comment about NED. Well, that amount barely would keep up with the rate of inflation. We want to bring about democracy for China. In China today, Catholic priests and bishops are being persecuted. There are 11 bishops in jail in China today.

The gentleman, and I know he has an interest, I was in Tibet where the Chinese are persecuting the Tibetans. We want to bring democracy to Tibet. They are also persecuting the Muslims up in the northwest portion. Nobody speaks out for the Muslims in China. We are trying to have the money for the National Endowment for Democracy to help bring about democracy in China.

The Evangelical Protestant Church, ripped apart; we want to help. We want to do what we did for Eastern Europe or what we did for the Soviet Union. My friends on this side, Ronald Reagan would never have supported this amendment to take all this money out of the National Endowment for Democracy. It almost makes me sick. We came here in 1980, as the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) said, to bring about freedom.

What about Syria? Should not we try to bring about democracy and freedom in Syria? Should not we try to do something in Egypt? Should not we try to do something in Iran and places like that? And I commend the gentleman and the gentlewoman for what they are trying to do, but it does not make sense to take it from the war on terrorism and to take it from the National Endowment for Democracy.

Strangely enough, too, and I think people have to know, this amendment would result in a RIF of 160 SBA employees. So they want to give to one area but RIF from another area. Now, I understand they had a hard time finding it. They had a hard time finding it.

We protected the Legal Services Corporation. They had a hard time finding it because we protected MEP. They had a hard time finding it, because many on their side and my side said we need COPs grants, we need State and local law enforcement grants.

They asked me, ''Can you help us out?'' And the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) will say many on that side spoke to me about this, and we said we are going to try to help, because we know it is a problem.

We also put in money for a new antigang initiative. We also put in money to study offshoring, because I believe personally it is a problem.

So you have not taken it from any of those areas. You take from terrorism, you take from the National Endowment for Democracy, you take from the administrative account and RIF SBA employees.

Administrator Baretto reiterated zero subsidy is not only good for the taxpayer, but for the stability of the program, the most crucial aspect of the program, according to borrowers and lenders.

He also wrote to me a letter the other day and said, ''I am confident the bill will continue to improve the 7(a) program by serving the capital needs of small businesses in the most efficient and effective manner.''

I understand what both sponsors have been trying to do, and I guess indirectly the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and I should probably take it as a compliment that they had to struggle to find something. But we are in a war on terrorism.

I was the author of the National Commission on Terrorism, 1998. I had just gotten back from Algeria, where 100,000-some people had been gutted, killed. It was the year of the Nairobi bombing. It was the year of the Tanzania bombing. I introduced a bill for the National Commission on Terrorism, the Bremer Commission.

I could not get any support from either side of the aisle, so I put it in the appropriations bill and we passed it, and Bremer went on, and all the recommendations were made. On the cover of the National Commission on Terrorism report, which I authored, was a picture of the World Trade Center on fire. But it was not the World Trade Center from 9/11, because the report came out in the year 2000; it was the attack on the World Trade Center in 1993.

I just do not believe you could not have found some other place. You could have found some other place.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge Members to vote ''no,'' because we ought not cut terrorism funding, we ought not cut the National Endowment for Democracy.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the CJS appropriations committee recommendation to eliminate funding for the SBA 7(a) program and in support of the Manzullo-Velázquez Amendment. The challenges for small businesses in this stagnant economic climate are formidable—rising health insurance costs, increasing energy expenses and dramatic outsourcing competition. The SBA 7(a) program is the only source of affordable, long-term financing for many of our nation's small businesses. It offers assistance to established small businesses and acts as a catalyst to energize and foment the entrepreneurial spirit that, as Americans, we must celebrate and nurture.

The 7(a) program not only serves as a lifeline to entrepreneurs, it also creates American jobs. Small businesses account for approximately 75 percent of the net new jobs in America. The SBA 7(a) program annually generates 360,000 jobs. If the Bush administration is truly serious about growing the economy and creating jobs on Main Street instead of offering tax cuts for Wall Street, they should not have zeroed out this program in their budget.

We must continue to fund this important program that is instrumental to fostering the entrepreneurial spirit. How can we deny our constituents the chance to realize the American dream and create their own business and be their own boss? Every job counts in this economy and the U.S. government has the obligation to foster free enterprise and small businesses by funding the SBA 7(a) program.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment to the Commerce Justice State Appropriations bill. This amendment will provide critical funding for a program that is fundamentally important to our small businesses: the Small Business Administration's (SBA) 7(a) loan program.

American small businesses' number one problem is gaining access to affordable capital. Many small businesses face substantial barriers in accessing capital, and are often forced to turn to more costly lending alternatives. As a result, small businesses are often financially strapped with insurmountable debt before their companies have even had a chance to get off the ground. Without access to financing, like that embodied by the 7(a) loan program, companies are unable to target new markets, hire new workers and ultimately succeed.

The 7(a) loan program is the SBA's core lending program and accounts for roughly 30 percent of all long-term small business borrowing in America. 7(a) loans spur economic development in underserved areas. 7(a) loans are used to purchase land or buildings, or to expand existing facilities. 7(a) loans are used to buy new equipment and machinery as well.

Most importantly, the 7(a) program creates jobs. Small businesses are the number one job creator in America, accounting for 3 of every 4 new jobs added to the economy. For every $33,000 in 7(a) loans, a new job is created. Just last year, the 7(a) loan program generated 360,000 jobs across America. However, if funding of the 7(a) program is not maintained at its current level our economy and our people will lose many of those jobs, as well as any new jobs and new small businesses that would be created with the help of the 7(a) program.

The CJS bill that we consider today provides no funding for the 7(a) program. As the federal deficit will hit a record $477 billion this year, fiscal restraint is important, but this program has already sacrificed significantly over the last few years. According to the General Accounting Office, over the past ten years small business lenders and borrowers have overpaid a billion dollars in miscalculated government fees. Instead the Bush administration and the SBA argue that simply maintaining fees at these ''historic'' levels will be good enough to support a robust 7(a) program.

This is just plain wrong. If the CJS bill is approved without this amendment, small businesses will be required to pay the nearly $80 million currently subsidized by the federal government. Based on FY 2003 loan volume and distribution, fees on small businesses will increase by over $40 million. Fees per loan will increase by over $1,000.

The Manzullo-Velázquez amendment will ensure that small businesses can still benefit from the program by restoring funding for the 7(a) program to the FY04 level of $79,132,000. This amendment will foster further economic recovery, and stronger job creation. For the good of the economy, for the good of our workforce and for our future, I encourage my colleagues to support the Manzullo-Velázquez amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired on this amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

□ 1538

Messrs. MORAN of Virginia, BURTON of Indiana, QUINN, COX, GARY G. MILLER of California, TURNER of Ohio, BEREUTER, PETERSON of Pennsylvania, FOSSELLA and GINGREY changed their vote from ''aye'' to ''no.''

Messrs. HOLDEN, COBLE, TIAHRT, NEY, BURGESS, BOOZMAN, FORBES, SCHROCK and Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT NO. 14 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the dollar amount, insert ''(decreased by $1,000,000)''.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to add $1 million to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, having little negative impact on this appropriations legislation.

It is clear, as we have celebrated the 40th anniversary of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, that civil rights in America is still a challenge. And the necessity of government intervention raises its head every day. In fact, as I stand on the floor today, recently over the weekend in Houston, there was a bombing of a Muslim mosque or a mosque, obviously suggesting that not only are there problems with civil rights, but there are also questions of whether hate crimes are still being perpetrated throughout the United States.

The mission of the United States Commission on Civil Rights is to investigate complaints alleging that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote by reason of their race, color, religion, sex, age, disability or national origin; or by reason of fraudulent practices, to study and collect information related to discrimination or denial of equal protection under the laws for a variety of reasons such as race, color, religion, sex, age, disability or national origin, or the administration of justice; to appraise Federal laws and policies with respect to discrimination or denials of equal protection under the law because of such differences; to serve as a national clearinghouse for information with respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability or national origin; to submit such findings and recommendations to the President and Congress and to issue public service announcements.

We know, under the leadership of Dr. Mary Frances Berry, they have sought to be current and they have sought to be provocative, as well as they have sought to be, if you will, aiding in fighting against discrimination in this Nation. They were the first to go in in the election in 2004. They worked on a commission advancing environmental justice. They also worked on opposing the ban on racial data collection. They were very much part of tackling the discriminatory practice of eliminating so-called felons from their right to vote.

They have been working very hard against racial profiling, providing for corporate diversity and other areas. They worked very hard on the issues dealing with affirmative action.

There is no doubt that the Commission's work is needed, but yet there are problems; one, in the amount of staffing. We were apprised by a letter that I signed on May 5, 2004, written by both the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on the Judiciary, a letter to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, highlighting some concerns that we need to be concerned about: An audit that has not occurred in the last 13 years to be able to determine what the needs of this particular agency are at this time and, as well, to be able to assure the proper use of Federal dollars.

Some might think than an audit might bring about a demise of this particular agency. I would offer to say that all of us want to know the facts to be able to provide the right kinds of resources for an agency that are necessary to be strengthened, that needs to have better staffing and better support services so that it can do its job.

Clearly, the work of this commission has not yet ended. The celebration of the 40th anniversary of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is only an indication that we must continue our work.

I would hope my colleagues would see the value in this amendment, particularly in its concern for ensuring that the Civil Rights Commission is both strengthened and, as well, that we have an appropriate audit that has not taken place in the last 13 years.

One of the things that I hope my colleagues recognize is that we should not condemn the messenger for the message. The U.S. Civil Rights Commission reinforces the fact that civil rights in America is still a work in progress. It needs more resources, more staff, and certainly it needs more competency as it relates to providing the resources to give it the utensils, if you will, the tools to do its job.

I would hope my colleagues would find in this legislation the ability to support this amendment or at least begin to look at working with the U.S. Civil Rights Commission and Dr. Berry and her efforts to make it the very best agency that it can possibly be.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment to H.R. 4754, the CJS Appropriations Act. I offer this amendment to increase funding to the Civil Rights Commission by $1 million. In order to achieve the goals of my proposal, the Salaries and Expenses account under Title I, General Administration would be reduced by $1,000,000 and the account designated for the Commission on Civil Rights in Title V, Related Agencies would be increased by $1,000,000.

Too many times, I have made requests to the Department of Justice to investigate civil rights matters, which have resulted in a stack of more unresolved investigations. The Department of Justice should not be the only vehicle to which requests are made considering the existence of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should help to ameliorate the stain placed on the Department of Justice, but it cannot do so without adequate funding.

The mission of the Commission on Civil Rights is:

To investigate complaints alleging that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote by reason of their race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin, or by reason of fraudulent practices;

To study and collect information relating to discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;

To appraise federal laws and policies with respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;

To serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin;

To submit reports, findings, and recommendations to the President and Congress; and

To issue public service announcements to discourage discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws.

I have requested investigations to be conducted by the Department of Justice regarding such cases as the death of Eli Eloy Escobar II. This incident involved the shooting death of a 14-year-old boy whose civil rights were likely violated. The possible misuse of Houston Police Department law enforcement positions was questioned. These types of occurrences are becoming more like the norm instead of an anomaly. Tragically, in the same month of the shooting death of Eli Eloy Escobar II, a Houston police officer shot and killed Jose Vargas, 15, because the youth and his friends ''looked suspicious'' in a movie theater parking lot. Given that, in the current situation, I requested that the Department of Justice analyze these facts to ensure that there is not a pattern of civil rights violations by government officials under ''color of law.''

Just a couple of months ago, a Harris County Deputy Sheriff shot 25-year old Hiji Eugene Harrison to death in the course of making a traffic stop. In this case, I requested an investigation by the Department of Justice regarding three alleged circumstances of this incident that may involve a violation of civil rights. I have requested an investigation of Josiah Sutton's case, a young man wrongly convicted of rape, who will be released from prison with a tarnished record because of the reservations of the district attorney in this case. Yet another example of civil rights abuse. Most recently, I requested an investigation to be conducted by the Department of Justice because of the possible civil rights violation of Houston Community activist Quanell X, who was arrested by the Houston Police Department after he attempted to deliver a wanted suspect.

While my inquiries of the Department of Justice are, indeed, necessary, their outcomes have been unresolved or ongoing. These floating investigations would be resolved more expeditiously if more funding were provided to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, which is currently known to be deprived of resources. Increased funding would enable the Commission to aid in the resolution of Department of Justice investigations, many of which remain unresolved.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge my colleagues to pass the Jackson-Lee amendment not only because of the necessary efficiency of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, but also because of this opportunity to protect the civil rights of all Americans.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we will be glad to work with the gentlewoman to see if we can help her resolve that issue.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if I might, and I appreciate the offer to work with me on this, I would hope that in the work that we would be looking at, we would be considering the lack of resources and staffing that they have in order to complete their task.

I know this is a challenging commission because their work is always not the most pleasant. It does not make people the most happy, if you will, but it is vital work because the work of civil rights, as I know you and the ranking member know, is very vital work.

So I am hoping that we could work along the line of providing the adequate resources, along with studying the needs of the commission through an audit that has not taken place in 13 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we will be glad to work with the gentlewoman to see if we can work on this problem for a resolution of it. It is my understanding the gentlewoman was withdrawing the amendment. The gentlewoman wanted a commitment that we would work with her; is that correct?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. As I mentioned, yes, I was mentioning the issues that needed to be addressed for the commission and was hoping that we could specifically work along those lines

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman would further yield, we will work with her, yes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there were several parts of this legislation on which the Committee on Government Reform could raise points of order. I have had discussions with the chairman on these issues, and I just want to go through them and through the agreements that I think the chairman and I have on these items.

In section 108, the Personnel Management Demonstration Project through the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. It permits bonus and incentive pay for more than 200 ATF forensic experts. We think this has merit. We wish that they had gone through the committee of jurisdiction on this instead of just writing this into the law, but we will not raise a point of order on that section.

The section pertaining to the National Technology and Information Administration, Spectrum Management, this provision allows the NTIA to collect fees from Federal agencies for providing spectrum allocation services for those agencies. These fees provide approximately 80 percent of NTIA's budget. As was true last year, the Parliamentarians ruled those are within our committee's jurisdiction. We ask that in the future, as the appropriators look at these areas, they consult with us; but we will not raise a point of order on this issue.

Section 201 permits the Department of Commerce to make advance payments on contracts without regard to the general prohibition on such advance payments and the narrow exceptions to provisions set out under title 31. Again, this is within the purview of the Committee on Government Reform. I understand this has been in the legislation in previous years. We ask in the future they work with us in crafting language so it is consistent with what we are seeing in other Federal agencies.

Section 603 requires contracts for consulting services to be a matter of public record. We believe they already are and is redundant. We will not raise a point of order on that section.

Finally, section 605 under the bill before us requires a 15-day notification to the Committee on Appropriations before any of the CJS agencies can engage in certain acts that would require their reprogramming of appropriated funds, including contracting out or privatizing. We believe this is within the purview of the Committee on Government Reform and would ask the chairman that as this goes to conference, if this provision remains in and we do not raise our point of order, if we include notification to the Committee on Government Reform as well. We think it is important we work in tandem and in partnership with the appropriators, both the authorizers and appropriators together. The chairman, I think, wants to do this. We have had some miscommunication at the staff level. I just want to clarify that as this moves forward they can include us in this language should we, as I intend, not raise a point of order on that.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we would gladly share that with the gentleman, and let me also say that I appreciate his willingness to allow us to move ahead on employee changes with regard to the FBI, which I think will strengthen the country. The gentleman is a good friend, and we will certainly do that.

On these other issues next year, I think a lot of this language has really been in the appropriations bill long before I was ever, ever involved; but we will be glad to consult with the gentleman as we move forward.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I thank the chairman.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we did work closely with the gentleman, as he noted, on a number of other improvements to civil service which I think will make the FBI and some other agencies more effective in recruiting and retaining the best and brightest.

Just for the chairman's notice, we do intend to raise a point of order on section 607 regarding the Buy America Act, as we have on every other appropriations bill.

I thank the chairman for his courtesies and compliment him on what I think is otherwise an excellent bill.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would further like to engage the chairman and the ranking member in a brief colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment which I believe the chairman is aware of.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYNN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we are not aware of any amendment from the gentleman, but I will be glad to talk to him. Maybe I should look at it first. We do not have anything from him.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, my intention would be not to introduce it.

Mr. WOLF. Well, let us chat about it and see what happens.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman. Basically, it was an amendment dealing with the issue of drug courts, which, as the gentleman knows, is a very important diversionary program designed to provide drug users with a program of intense scrutiny, rehabilitation, drug testing, counseling and the like which has proven to be very successful in reducing drug crimes. It has an outstandingly low recidivism rate.

Studies from the American University, the Columbia University, as well as the National Institute of Justice, have all indicated that where we have a criminal placed in a drug court program there is a very low rate of recidivism.

For this reason, we believe this program ought to be funded robustly. The program was authorized at $60 million. The committee reported a funding level of $50 million, and I would like to ask the chairman if he would work with the ranking member and myself in conference to see if we could boost that funding level from $50 to the authorized $60 million.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would yield, we will work with the gentleman to the best of our ability that we can. I think drug courts make a lot of sense.

Our problem has been just allocations from legal services to NAP and others, but certainly we will work with the gentleman as we get to conference. My colleague has my commitment on that.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYNN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, as I told the gentleman from Maryland, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has been very much aware and supportive of these kinds of issues, and as this bill moves to conference, sometimes there is a window of opportunity to do some things. While we cannot promise what the end result will be, we certainly promise the gentleman from Maryland that we will work together with him to see that this moves along in a better way.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, well, I would like to first thank the chairman for his willingness to work with me on this issue, as well as the ranking member. I would like to thank him. I know this is a tough bill, and there is not a lot of money to work with. So I appreciate any cooperation and support my colleagues can give me.

AMENDMENT NO. 15 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the dollar amount, insert the following: ''(reduced by $10,000,000)''.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is an amendment that we have had the challenge of discussing for the last couple of sessions of Congress, and that is, dealing with the viability of the Nation's DNA lab.

Since it has come to our attention in the criminal justice system of the value of DNA lab work as relates to the promotion of individuals' innocence or guilt, many of whom have sat on death row, some of whom have been convicted of rape while the actual rapists have gone free, I believe it is imperative that we continue on the President's commitment to eliminate the backlog of DNA analysis and as well the backlog of cases that permeate around the Nation. This $10 million added to the $175 million would make good on our promise to believe in justice.

I am citing, if you will, the troubles that we have experienced in one particular area with a gentleman by the name of Josiah, I will simply use his first name, who sat in jail starting at the age of 17 when he was sentenced to 25 years in prison in 1999 until he was released last year at the age of 21 on the basis of a conviction that proved to be false.

The question there, of course, was a faulty DNA lab. To add insult to injury, our own district attorney, Chuck Rosenthal, refused to join in a request for a full pardon. It was only after the advocacy of many in our community, including elected officials, my office and led by the ministerial community in Houston, that this particular individual was set free.

Josiah, however, is an example of the results of faulty DNA testing around the Nation. It was through this case and many others that the House Committee on the Judiciary considered themselves a viable part of fixing the problem. That problem was fixed by legislation that argued for and worked toward decreasing the backlog of cases of those who are sitting on death row for many of those who likewise are involved in cases that a DNA correction could improve.

I supported H.R. 3214, the Advancing Justice Through DNA Technology Act. As I expressed at that time, this technological tool must be improved because it plays such a key role in streamlining and expediting our criminal justice system. Our law enforcement agencies are becoming increasingly more reliant upon the analysis of the DNA tool to verify or rule out the identity of a suspect or charge an individual in processing criminal justice cases. We will not be able to reach the level of decreasing the backlog unless we invest and put our money where our intent is.

This simple request of $10 million takes it out of the salaries and expenses of the Department of Justice to be able to focus on increasing and improving the DNA lab. It also allows for laboratories around the country to apply for grants to improve the training, to improve the staffing, to improve the analysis, and to expedite the analysis which expedites justice.

I cannot imagine a more important aspect of our work here in this Congress than to promote justice; and adequate, secure, safe and skilled DNA staffing and adequate DNA labs will be part of improving justice.

I would ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment to H.R. 2754, the Commerce, Justice, and State Department Appropriations bill. It would call for the reduction of the Salaries and Expenses account in Title I, General Administration (page 2, line 7) by $10 million, the increase of the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) account in Title I by $10 million (page 26, line 20), and the specific increase of the provision in that account that deals with DNA analysis (page 28, line 4) by $10 million, amounting to an overall reduction in outlays by $7 million for fiscal year 2005.

In November 2003, I supported H.R. 3214, the ''Advancing Justice Through DNA Technology Act,'' of which I was a co-sponsor. As I expressed at that time, this technological tool must be improved because it plays such a key role in streamlining and expediting our criminal justice system. Our law enforcement agencies are becoming increasingly more reliant upon the analysis of deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) to verify or rule out the identity of a suspect or a charged individual in processing criminal cases. The more reliant we become, the more our individual rights are at stake. We must, however, significantly raise the bar of our technology and the standards of review for DNA and ballistics crime lab accreditation to minimize mistakes that cost people years of their lives. The Jackson-Lee amendment seeks to so minimize the margin of error that threatens individual liberties and rights.

CRIME LAB ACCREDITATION

The certification of our crime labs for conformance to our accepted standards is done by groups such as the American Society of Crime Laboratory Directors (ASCLD). The accreditation process is part of a laboratory's quality assurance program that should also include proficiency testing, continuing education and other programs to help the laboratory give better overall service to the criminal justice system. Certification and accreditation are done via a process of self-evaluation led by individual crime laboratory directors.

Our labs are not functioning at optimum levels, and this sub-par performance translates to the miscarriage of justice and prosecution of innocent people. Improvement of lab performance begins with tighter employment policies for the lab staff. For example, the ASCLD's Credential Review Committee has a DNA Advisory Board and codified standards for its technical staff. The following was taken from its website:

> DNA Advisory Board Standard 5.2.1.1 provides a mechanism for waiving the educational requirements for current technical leader/technical managers who do not meet the degree requirements of section 5.2.1 but who otherwise qualify based on knowledge and experience. Consequently ASCLD has established this procedure for obtaining a waiver.
> One waiver is available per laboratory if the current technical leaders/technical manager does not meet the degree requirements of DAB Standard 5.2.1. Waivers are available only to current technical leaders/technical managers. Waivers are permanent and portable for the recipient individual. A laboratory may request a second waiver if the first recipient leaves the employ of the laboratory.

Although experience is quite important in selecting staff, formal education and increased resources are vital when it comes to technical performance and the legal implications of that performance. We are in desperate need of dollars and appropriate legislation to set forth and maintain the standards of DNA/ballistics lab accreditation.

TEXAS LAW AND CRIME LAB ACCREDITATION

In 2001, Texas passed a law formalizing a process for post-conviction access to DNA testing. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, however, has not applied the law as it was designed to work and has denied access to testing in a number of cases.

The Texas House passed a bill in April of this year requiring crime laboratories that test DNA to meet accreditation standards, a law designed to prevent future scandals like the one that recently plagued the Houston Police Department.

The Houston Judicial System convicted Josiah Sutton in 1998 for the rape of a woman whose body was dumped in a Fort Bend County field. But the Court eventually granted him bail in March after an independent lab determined that he was sentenced to 25 years in prison for a rape he didn't commit. An audit and an ongoing series of retesting of DNA samples by the Texas Department of Public Safety and a crime lab professional from Tarrant County revealed potential contamination problems at the subject lab as well as poor working conditions and inadequate training. Attorney Neufeld remarked that ''[t]he most important question for the people of Houston and the people of Texas is, 'What went wrong that allowed this young man to be convicted for a crime he didn't commit?' 'And it is absolutely clear that what you have going on is a system of malpractice by the Houston crime laboratory that allows its criminalists to distort and conceal evidence.' '' What I fear about the dangers of poor training and placement of checks may be summed up by what Neufeld added,

> One of the biggest problems of . . . [crime labs] is that they [are] much more concerned with being a servant to the police and prosecutors than they [are] to science . . . [a]nd if people want to pursue a career in science, the word science has to come before law enforcement.

The objectivity that is required to make forensic science effective must be divorced from the latitude exercised by some of our law enforcement personnel. Therefore, we must include adequate technology and resources to prevent injustice and the ruination of young lives like the young Houston man, Josiah Sutton.

Furthermore, other problems with DNA testing in criminal cases affect the inmate directly. The discretion with which the decision whether to use DNA testing leaves room for inconsistent adjudication and differential treatment of convicted persons. Statutory guidelines regarding when to order the test would exclude some cases that might not meet the standards but still might deserve testing. Moreover, some inmates who seek exoneration may request executive clemency. In addition to requiring very difficult measures to achieve justice, some argue that the tests administered are inadequate because they do not provide specific, clear, and fair procedures for inmates to bring claims of innocence.

In addition to negligent handling or unskilled analysis of DNA evidence, the backlog of cases causes our criminal justice system to crumble despite the level of sophistication of our technology. Houston police have turned over about 525 case files involving DNA testing to the Harris County district attorney's office, which has said that at least 25 cases warrant re-testing, including those of seven people on Death Row. The numbers will grow significantly as more files are collected and analyzed, according to the assistant district attorney supervising the project.

The Fort Worth police crime lab's serology/DNA unit has been criticized recently for a backlog that was slowing down court cases. The unit's performance suffers from understaffing and overworking.

My concern as to the practice of using these DNA tests is that the inmates' civil liberties and rights to due process are continually placed into jeopardy because of a lack of resources. Furthermore, our staffing and personnel problems threaten to undermine the benefits of technology.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Jackson-Lee amendment to increase funding for DNA analysis and crime laboratories so that individual liberties may be better preserved and protected.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentlewoman's amendment.

The amendment proposes to reduce the Department of Justice's general administration account by $10 million. The bill already reduces the account by $90 million below the request.

Based on the passage of the Manzullo amendment, the reduction will result in massive layoffs and RIFs and hinder the Justice Department's ability to deal with the whole issue of terrorism. I mean, put this on top of Manzullo, it would be devastating.

In regards to the DNA program, and I strongly support that and so does the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the gentlewoman proposed to increase this bill. We fully fund the President's $176 million DNA initiative. This is a $77 million increase, a $77 million increase over the current level. This is the largest increase provided to any State and local law enforcement program. It is an increase of 44 percent.

So I urge rejection of the gentlewoman's amendment. It proposes an unacceptable funding reduction, in addition to the Manzullo reduction, with something that we have had additional funding with a 44 percent increase. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Let me first continue to do what I have always done and that is to show my respect for the gentlewoman from Texas who always speaks to these issues with great compassion and with great concern; and under normal circumstances, one could agree with her, but these are not normal circumstances: one, because this budget is so tight; two, as I keep repeating, because I believe the chairman has been very fair in providing dollars; and, lastly, we just had an amendment where we were looking for $79 million for SBA. Well, if I add this correctly, this program went up from last year's just about that amount, $79 million. So this program has done very well.

To now strike at legal activities account for another $10 million, I really do not think it is necessary, and so I would oppose it and hope everyone else would; but in anticipation of a good decision by the gentlewoman from Texas, I will now yield to her.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman, and I do respect his opposition. It comes down to simply the question of whether or not we have enough money, so I respect his responsibility for this particular appropriation.

I would just say to the gentleman that we are both supporters and advocates of a better justice system, and enhanced funding to help with DNA labs across the country, I believe, is an effective way to utilize this money.

To the distinguished gentleman from New York and to the chairman I must say that it is tragic that we have had to take money and spend it on a 7(a) program that should have been funded for small businesses, which I supported, I understand that, but let it be known, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the work we do as authorizers, that every day we are finding DNA labs across the country that contribute to the backlog. We are backlogged in Washington. These dollars were simply to add that provision.

I accept the responsibility that my colleague has. He has to tighten the belt and to worry about where the money is coming from. I hope that as we look forward to working in conference that we will find a way to be able to address squarely this backlog problem, making sure that DNA labs will be able to function as they should.

With that, I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as many of us know, the Child On-line Protection Act, or legislation better known as COPA, was signed into law on October 21, 1998. I was the author of that legislation, which was designed to shield minors from Internet pornography. And despite my attempt to craft a narrowly tailored requirement involving only commercial, on-line pornographers to screen out minors before they distribute or sell pornographic materials on the Internet, by verifying their clients' adult status through the use of credit cards, adult access codes, or other reasonable technologies, last week the Supreme Court, on a 5-to-4 vote, voted to uphold a preliminary injunction that would block COPA from being implemented. This is now 6 years into this issue.

After COPA was enacted, the Supreme Court ruled that mechanisms designed to filter minors away from graphic and obscene images on the Web may not be the least restrictive alternative available to accomplish our goal of protecting minors from porn on the Internet.

I echo the opinion expressed by Justice Stephen Breyer, who wrote in dissent, ''My conclusion is that the Act, as properly interpreted, risks imposition of minor burdens on some protected material, burdens that adults wishing to view the material may overcome at modest cost.'' In other words, Justice Breyer felt that the burden ought to be on the pornographer, not on the parents to provide this kind of protection for their children.

The popularity and growth of the Internet presents opportunities for minors to access information that can frustrate parental supervision and control. Seventy million individuals visit pornographic Web sites each week, of which about 11 million are minors. This is not a Playboy magazine type of situation. These are very, very graphic and very, very much other than the usual centerfold one might expect. Once posted on the Internet, sexually explicit material has entered all communities and virtually any home that has access to the Internet.

Minors often stumble upon sexually explicit material on the Internet by mistake. To use one example, they use copycat URLs to take advantage of innocent mistakes. A child searching the Internet for the official Web site of the White House can be confronted by hard core pornography by mistyping www.whitehouse.com, rather than www.whitehouse.gov. In my mind, COPA's requirement that purveyors of pornographic material on the Web utilize technological safeguards was the practically available and least restrictive way to limit minors' access.

In light of last week's disappointing decision, I was pleased to see the report language for H.R. 4754, which includes $2.605 million for 25 new positions to investigate and prosecute adult obscenity and child exploitation crimes. This level of funding is in addition to the $5.2 million which is included in this bill for the investigation and prosecution of these crimes by the existing staff at the Department of Justice. My thanks go out to the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), for his leadership in this regard.

Because of the magnitude of the problem of adult obscenity and child exploitation, I believe these 25 new positions at the Department of Justice are a good start. However, I believe it is not proportionate to the volume of obscenity being disseminated by the Web sites of commercial American pornographers. Type the word ''sex'' into a Internet search engine like Google, and you will get 180 million hits.

Today, pornography accounts for more than one-tenth of all on-line consumer purchases. According to one study, purveyors of pornographic material on the Web earned $12 billion in revenue last year. In the space of a generation, a product that was once available in the back alleys of big cities is now delivered directly into homes by some of the biggest companies in the United States. I have serious concerns that the Congress' $7.8 million is simply not enough to handle the problem.

If the distinguished chairman would join me in a colloquy, I would ask him if he supports the prosecution of adult obscenity and child exploitation crimes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OXLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, my answer is ''absolutely.''

Mr. OXLEY. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to working with the chairman to ensure these crimes are investigated and prosecuted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. WOLF. If the gentleman will continue to yield, as the gentleman said, the bill includes $2.6 million and 25 positions.

Secondly, I want to thank the gentleman, because I went over to the Center for Missing and Exploited Children in Alexandria, and every member of the court ought to go over there and see it. Those two decisions from the court have severely hurt law enforcement with regard to child exploitation.

So, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) is absolutely right. And if the gentleman comes up with language that he thinks would be appropriate to put on this bill, I will do anything. And I thank the gentleman for what he has done.

I cannot understand, and I stipulate that all the men and women on the court are good people, but I cannot understand. The decision by Justice Kennedy is actually shocking. So I agree with the gentleman, and we will work with him and do anything we can to help.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in order to enter into a colloquy with the chairman and the ranking member, would the chairman allow me to ask a question about the funding for the American Community Survey?

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MALONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. I certainly will allow the colloquy.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand the committee has reduced the funding for the American Community Survey by $19 million. I was concerned about that cut, but I have been told that the Census Bureau has assured the committee that these cuts will have no effect on the quality of the survey; is that correct?

Mr. WOLF. If the gentlewoman will yield once more, that is correct. The Census Bureau and the Department of Commerce have informed us that the American Community Survey can be fielded successfully with the funds allocated in the bill. That is correct.

Mrs. MALONEY. I thank the Chairman.

Currently, this bill does not include group quarters in the American Community Survey for fiscal year 2005. My understanding is that the Census Bureau agrees that students in dorms, inmates in prisons, seniors in nursing homes, some assisted living facilities, and those on military bases in the United States do not need to be included in the survey this fiscal year, and this will not impact accuracy for 2010. Is that also correct?

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman will continue to yield, that is my understanding. The Census Bureau has informed the committee that the survey can be fielded successfully in 2005 without including people living in group quarters.

I would also say to the gentlewoman that there is an amendment to this bill by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) coming up later on today, which will cut $106 million out of Census. With a cut of $106 million out of Census, Katie bar the door. Census will not be able to do the job.

So I appreciate the gentlewoman's raising this. Her questions are exactly right, but with the adoption of the Weiner amendment, everything we are saying would be wiped out.

Mrs. MALONEY. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I agree, and I feel that we need to fund the census. We have to get ready for the census that is to come, and if we do not fund it now, then the census will not be accurate when the time comes to go forward and get an accurate accounting of Americans.

Mr. Chairman, if the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), would allow me to ask a question about the funding for research on migration into and out of the United States, I understand the committee did not fund a new initiative proposed by the Census Bureau. The Census Bureau was going to spend $1.23 million in fiscal year 2005 to improve the migration estimates and demographic analysis.

As my colleague from New York will remember, the Census Bureau estimates failed to capture the dramatic increase in the migration of Hispanics during the 1990s, and as a result, those estimates were seriously flawed. Is it correct that the committee has eliminated funding to improve those estimates?

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MALONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman is correct, and I share her concern.

During the last 2 decades of the 20th century, the Census Bureau did not provide sufficient investment in these programs to keep up with the changing social and demographic character of the country. Eventually, the system failed, due to lack of attention.

I was encouraged when the President's budget requested funds to reverse that trend. I am going to work with the chairman to see if there is some way we can rectify this situation in conference.

Mrs. MALONEY. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman and I appreciate his efforts to assure funding not only for the 2010 census, but for the many other important programs at the Census Bureau. I believe this small amount of research funding now will pay great dividends down the road, and that the failure to fund this research will have serious consequences for the accuracy of a great many census programs besides the 2010 census.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman will yield once again, I want to thank her for her tireless work on the census. I share her enthusiasm in this area, and I assure her that we will continue to try to make their work easier and better.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman and the ranking member.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise to enter into a colloquy with the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

I rise today on behalf of myself, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD), and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) to request that as the gentleman moves forward with this appropriation bill, he will work to include language in conference with the Senate that will instruct the Secretary of Commerce, in cooperation with the Secretaries of Energy and Labor, to study the economic impacts of rising natural gas prices on energy-intensive industries in the United States and potential market adjustments, including energy-intensive industries shifting operations overseas.

We are concerned about the growing imbalance between natural gas supplies and the ever-increasing demands of this fuel source. The goal of this study would be to better understand what effects the volatile rise in natural gas prices and decreases in domestic supply have had on U.S. energy-intensive industries, including how they operate their facilities in the U.S., reducing United States production, postponing plant expansions, and shifting work to parts of the world where energy prices are lower.

The U.S. today has the highest natural gas prices in the industrialized world, forcing companies to shift jobs overseas to countries with greater supply and lower energy costs. U.S. chemical companies have lost an estimated 78,000 jobs since the natural gas shortage began in 2000.

Mr. Chairman, these economic numbers are alarming, and we need to take a closer look at how these energy costs are affecting our country's economic recovery. We hope Chairman WOLF will support this request as he undergoes the difficult task of guiding the fiscal year 2005 Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary appropriations bill through this process. We thank the gentleman for his leadership on these important economic issues.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASTLE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, let me tell the gentleman from Delaware that if we can do it, we will do it. We will work with him as we move through the process, but stay in touch as we get ready to go to conference.

I thank the gentleman for raising it, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON). I think all three gentleman are right on target, and it is a good idea.

Mr. CASTLE. I thank the gentleman, Mr. Chairman.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CROWLEY

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is with no great joy that I rise to offer this amendment. My amendment seeks to transfer $50,000 from the Department leadership account funds at the Office of the Attorney General and shift those funds to the Public Safety Officers Benefits Program under the Office of Justice Program. These funds should be used by the Office of Justice Programs to provide the resources to issue the Public Safety Officer's Medal of Valor posthumously to the 414 public safety officers who lost their lives on September 11, 2001.

After those awful events of September 11, our whole Nation unified together as one people.

We looked with long-deserved respect at our police and fire fighters and emergency medical technicians, as well as court officers, for their heroism and their bravery.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, these are the people who were running into the buildings when everyone else was attempting to escape those buildings. As a posthumous honor for these fallen heroes, I worked with Republicans and Democrats to pass a resolution 2½ years ago, expressing the sense of Congress that the Public Safety Officers Medal of Valor be presented to the public safety officers who had perished for outstanding valor above and beyond the call of duty during the terrorist attacks in the United States on September 11.

That resolution unanimously passed by a vote of 409 to 0. Then under Senator LEAHY's leadership in the Senate, he secured passage of a resolution in that body which was identical to the one that passed here with the unanimous vote just a short while later. While nonbinding, these resolutions put the Congress on record as urging special recognition through the issuance of the Medal of Valor for those individuals. In fact, the authorizing legislation of the Public Safety Officers Medal of Valor allows the special recognition and permits the Attorney General to issue, ''and in extraordinary cases,'' an increase in the number of recipients in a given year for this award.

September 11 was an extraordinary case, and the heroism we saw that day was more than extraordinary. Unfortunately, after a number of meetings with the Attorney General's office and several calls to the White House, still after 2½ years, no action has been taken, nor is it apparent that any action on this issue is forthcoming.

Last year, thank you to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), at my request, they graciously included language in their bill urging the Attorney General to posthumously award the Public Safety Officers Medal of Valor to the 414 public safety officers who perished on September 11 of 2001. I do not understand the holdup of the issuance of this medal.

While I do not begrudge those brave officers who have already received these honors in 2002 and 2003, I believe that the Attorney General should immediately issue these same awards to our heroes of 9/11.

When this amendment passed, and I understand through a negotiation with the majority, they are willing to accept this amendment, it would have been the third time that this House has acted to instruct the Attorney General's Office and the administration to issue the Medal of Valor to those men and women, public safety officers, who fell on 9/11.

We have a medal in place already. We do not need to create a new medal to give to those who paid the ultimate sacrifice and demonstrated the highest acts of bravery on that day. If those who fell on 9/11 do not deserve this medal, I do not know who would. It would be an honor for those who have received it already and an honor for those who will one day receive this medal to know that they are among the 414 men and women who gave the ultimate sacrifice in bravery on 9/11.

Now, it is my understanding in conversations with the administration that there is a hold on issuing this, after 2½ years of foot-dragging on issuing this medal, that there may be an attempt to create a new medal to give at maybe another time. I do not want to specify. I do not know when that time may be, but I would hate to see that this be done for political purposes.

Two and a half years have gone by. Enough time has happened and dragged by. These men and women and their families have been through so much already. They have been anticipating the receipt of this medal, and yet the administration has failed to cooperate and issue this medal to these 414 families who so deservedly are expecting this medal.

I think it is time to put politics aside and stop dragging feet and have this medal that is already in existence. We do not have to create another one. We do not have to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to create a new medal. One exists today, already, to give to those families and the men and women who paid the ultimate sacrifice in such a brave way on 9/11.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment. My dad was a policeman in the city of Philadelphia over 28 years. We will, one, accept the amendment, and what we will do is try to do more than that. We will try to work with the gentleman and his office and call down to the Justice Department.

I will personally place a call to see, I mean, why should we wait until this bill gets signed? Why should we not do something next month, do something in September, do something quickly?

So, one, we will accept the amendment, so it is accepted; but, two, we will make a call and work with the gentleman's office, if he can work with our staff, and we will try to see if we can make a call by the end of this week so he will get some sense of relief.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman's demonstration of desire to make this a reality by what he has just said on the floor, and I too am the son and the grandson of a police officer. And I think most people know that my first cousin was killed on 9/11, John Moran, as well as numerous friends of mine who were police officers and fire fighters. So there is a personal element to this issue as well.

I do appreciate the gentleman's offer to verbally contact the administration and the Attorney General's Office, and I hope, again, that something can be done after 2½ years of really, if nothing else that I can describe, just dragging feet. I wish I had a better answer as to why this has not taken place already. It is not the Senate. It certainly is not you, Mr. Chairman, or anyone in this House.

We have spoken unanimously in the past, and as I said before, this is the third time on the floor that we will have spoken. So I appreciate the gentleman's advice and his counsel on what he will do on his side to make this a reality before this goes any further.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, my father's badge number was 3990, and we will get the gentleman an answer by Friday if we can.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), my friend and colleague, for this effort. Our eyes do not deceive us. It is not $50 million. It is not $50 billion. It is $50,000. But in so many ways it is trillions, because it affects people who have been hurt. And while the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) is not to wear this on his sleeve, I happen to know that, as we all do, his family was touched by this tragedy. And so the support that he continues to give the victims and the families is one that makes a lot of sense to all of us.

Again, we have done so much to honor those folks who have served and who gave their lives and the families that were touched; and yet this little symbol, and it is little in the sense of what it costs and yet gigantic in what it means to people, is something that should move ahead.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) and commend the chairman for doing this. There is nothing that can bring back those brave heroes from September 11, but clearly for so many who lost their lives from Staten Island, Brooklyn, and throughout the city and region, this is one way that our country continues to honor them. I think it is fitting, appropriate and overdue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) that the report accompanying this bill calls for an external review of the NOAA laboratories and of the management of NOAA's research activities. As the gentleman knows, these issues have been of great interest to the Committee on Science, and indeed are addressed in an NOAA Organic Act that I recently introduced.

Our committees have worked together on these issues of research management, and I would like some assurance from the chairman that our committees will continue to work together on this matter. I would not want to see any directive coming from the Committee on Appropriations in this or any other bill regarding the management and structuring of science at NOAA that did not reflect agreement between our respective committees.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOEHLERT. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we thank the gentleman for his comments. I appreciate our cooperative relationship, particularly since I have known the gentleman since he was a staffer for Mr. Pirnie and I was a staffer for Mr. Biester a long time ago. Absolutely, I can assure the gentleman we will not direct NOAA to make any changes in the structure of its science programs that the gentleman's committee would not approve.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that cooperation and assurance.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. KING of Iowa) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

REPORT ON H.R. 4766, AGRICULTURE, RURAL DEVELOPMENT, FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. BONILLA, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 108–584) on the bill (H.R. 4766) making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 1, rule XXI, all points of order are reserved on the bill.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KING of Iowa). Pursuant to House Resolution 701 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 4754.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, with Mr. HASTINGS of Washington in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today, the bill was open for amendment from page 2, line 6, through line 22.

Are there further amendments to this paragraph?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOINT AUTOMATED BOOKING SYSTEM

For expenses necessary for the nationwide deployment of a Joint Automated Booking System including automated capability to transmit fingerprint and image data, $20,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 2006.

INTEGRATED AUTOMATED FINGERPRINT IDENTIFICATION SYSTEM

For necessary expenses for the planning, development, and deployment of an integrated fingerprint identification system, including automated capability to transmit fingerprint and image data, $5,054,000, to remain available until September 30, 2006.

NARROWBAND COMMUNICATIONS

For the costs of conversion to narrowband communications, including the cost for operation and maintenance of Land Mobile Radio legacy systems, $100,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 2006: Provided, That the Attorney General shall transfer to the ''Narrowband Communications'' account all funds made available to the Department of Justice for the purchase of portable and mobile radios: Provided further, That any transfer made under the preceding proviso shall be subject to section 605 of this Act.

ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW AND APPEALS

For expenses necessary for the administration of pardon and clemency petitions and immigration-related activities, $202,518,000.

DETENTION TRUSTEE

For necessary expenses of the Federal Detention Trustee, $938,810,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the Trustee shall be responsible for managing the Justice Prisoner and Alien Transportation System and for overseeing housing related to such detention: Provided further, That any unobligated balances available in prior years from the funds appropriated under the heading ''Federal Prisoner Detention'' shall be transferred to and merged with the appropriation under the heading ''Detention Trustee'' and shall be available until expended. Provided further, That the Trustee, working in consultation with the Bureau of Prisons, shall submit a plan for collecting information related to evaluating the health and safety of Federal prisoners in non-Federal institutions no later than 180 days following the enactment of this Act.

OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

For necessary expenses of the Office of Inspector General, $63,813,000, including not to exceed $10,000 to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character.

UNITED STATES PAROLE COMMISSION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the United States Parole Commission as authorized, $10,650,000.

LEGAL ACTIVITIES

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, GENERAL LEGAL ACTIVITIES

For expenses necessary for the legal activities of the Department of Justice, not otherwise provided for, including not to exceed $20,000 for expenses of collecting evidence, to be expended under the direction of, and to be accounted for solely under the certificate of, the Attorney General; and rent of private or Government-owned space in the District of Columbia, $639,314,000, of which not to exceed $10,000,000 for litigation support contracts shall remain available until expended: Provided, That none of the funds made available in this Act shall be used in any way whatsoever to support or justify the use of torture by any official or contract employee of the United States Government: Provided further, That of the total amount appropriated, not to exceed $1,000 shall be available to the United States National Central Bureau, INTERPOL, for official reception and representation expenses: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, upon a determination by the Attorney General that emergent circumstances require additional funding for litigation activities of the Civil Division, the Attorney General may transfer such amounts to ''Salaries and Expenses, General Legal Activities'' from available appropriations for the current fiscal year for the Department of Justice, as may be necessary to respond to such circumstances: Provided further, That any transfer pursuant to the previous proviso shall be treated as a reprogramming under section 605 of this Act and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures set forth in that section.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KING OF IOWA

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING of Iowa:

Page 5, line 22, strike ''expended:'' and insert ''expended, and of which $1,000,000 shall be available for enforcing subsections (a) and (b) of section 642 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (8 U.S.C. 1373):''.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment today to enforce existing Federal law that prohibits localities from refusing to allow their officers to report aliens who commit crimes to the immigration authorities. My amendment would provide funding for the Department of Justice to enforce current law, which is section 642 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigration Responsibility Act of 1996.

Section 642 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigration Responsibility Act of 1996 does not allow localities to prevent their police officers from reporting immigration information to the Federal Government. However, some cities have continued to refuse to allow their officers to provide information to the Federal Government. Without this information, the Federal immigration authorities cannot take steps to remove these criminal illegal aliens from American streets. Under these so-called sanctuary policies in certain cities, the police cannot report the illegal aliens who commit crimes to the immigration authorities for deportation.

As a result, taxpayers pay to incarcerate illegal alien prisoners who are later released back on to the streets rather than being deported. This sanctuary policy has disastrous consequences for future victims.

Repeat offenses by criminal illegal aliens are preventable crimes. These offenders should have been removed from the United States as soon as their first crime was discovered. Their prompt removal prevents future crimes. We can act to prevent crime by funding enforcement of section 642 by the Department of Justice.

An unfortunate situation that occurred in New York City, a crime that could have been prevented by enforcement of section 642, indicates the urgent need for our action. On December 19, 2002, a 42-year-old mother of two was seized and brutally assaulted in a shanty near railroad tracks in Queens. She and her boyfriend were robbed by a group who then took the woman to the woods, leaving her boyfriend unconscious. During the 2-hour attack, she was abused and her life was threatened. A police canine unit rescued her before her attackers could carry out their deadly threats. In response, the New York Police Department arrested five aliens, four of whom had illegally entered the country and three with extensive arrest warrants in New York City.

This crime could have been prevented. Four of the five suspects had entered the country illegally. Three of these had prior arrests and convictions, and always they were released. Even so, the INS was never contacted about these individuals prior to the 2002 attack. New York City's sanctuary policy prohibited a New York police officer from contacting information authorities about these attackers when they committed their previous crimes or were discovered to be in the United States illegally. As a result, the immigration authorities could not remove these aliens because they did not know that they were illegally present in the United States.

Sanctuary policies tie the hands of local law enforcement officers and keep illegal aliens who commit crimes in our country rather than deporting these criminals according to U.S. law.

My amendment will ensure enforcement of the Federal law that can prevent additional heinous crimes by illegal aliens with criminal records. We must not allow criminal illegal aliens whose presence was never reported to Federal immigration authorities due to illegal sanctuary policies to continue to commit brutal crimes.

We must not provide sanctuary to criminals. Please support my amendment, which funds enforcement of section 642 and reestablishes and supports current law.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

My concern is on the germaneness of the amendment. The function that this is involved with has been transferred to Homeland Security, and so I rise in opposition to it. It would earmark funding for litigation support contracts, really earmarking just the Department of Litigation Support Contracts, but I believe all this function has been transferred also to the Department of Homeland Security out of the Justice Department.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I looked into this argument; and to transfer this authority to Homeland Security, there is no existing precedent for enforcement of this law by Homeland Security. It is a legitimate function of the Department of Justice to enforce Federal law; and, in fact, this would be bringing an action against local government. And that is something that there is a precedent for under the Department of Justice, but no precedent for that under Homeland Security. So if this were all transferred to Homeland Security, we would not have action that could be brought by the Department of Justice in many other cases as well as this.

I thank the chairman for yielding to me.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I continue to reserve a point of order.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

As I understand this amendment, this brings us into an area that we have discussed before, and it is this whole issue of local law enforcement involved in immigration activities.

This is interesting. When we took this up before on different occasions, we were able through this amendment to unite law enforcement throughout the Nation because local police departments continue to tell us that it is in their best interest not to appear to the immigrant population to be involved in enforcing immigration law. In other words, what the police departments at a local level want more than anything else is to be able to speak to residents of that community, be they citizens, legal residents, or undocumented aliens, needing their information, needing their support, in dealing with crime in the community.

There are many things that are wrong with this amendment. But the one that I single out is that one because what that does is immediately create a wall between local law enforcement and the immigrant community, saying if I go to him to tell him I know who stole that car, if I go to him to tell him I know who robbed the local grocery store, I am then being faced by a local official who has to by law, in these cases, if these amendments are approved, has to turn me in on my immigration status. And that is totally unacceptable.

So if anything else, I would hope that we fully understand that this does not enjoy the support of local law enforcement and should not be a burden. It is, in fact, and I cannot believe I am actually going to say this in one of my conservative moments, it is, in fact, an unfunded mandate because we are telling them to engage in activities that we are not paying for.

For that reason, I rise in strong opposition and hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I will not take the full 5 minutes. I just want to join the leaders of the communities in expressing strong opposition to this amendment. This is not an academic issue in New York City. We had a circumstance after September 11 where FBI agents fanned out into the neighborhoods doing interviews at corner stores in Arab American communities. And the FBI was required to notify the INS anytime they found anything untoward. The word spread within hours, and I think the gentleman from the Bronx would acknowledge this, spread within hours, do not cooperate, do not give the information. The FBI in the City of New York turned to the NYPD and said since they have a trustful relationship with many of these recent immigrants, can they go conduct these interviews.

And a lot of the information that was gathered, including some about threats to blow up the Brooklyn Bridge, was gathered that way. So from a law enforcement perspective, this amendment has no merit. Proof of that is I can read a list as long as my arm of police departments and police organizations who are opposed to this type of initiative. As the gentleman from New York said, they do not want their officers in the position of breaking down what is often years and years of trust because of this type of thing. It is demagogically very appealing to say the minute they find out someone has violated the immigration laws, let us turn them in. But from a realistic, real life, particularly antiterror amendment, one could not imagine a worse amendment.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I rise to strike the requisite number of words because I want to thank the chairman and the ranking member for the funding that they put into the MEP program, the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program, and I was not able to be here earlier.

The Members of the House talk constantly about how important manufacturing is to a strong economy, that indeed we cannot have a strong economy if we do not have a strong manufacturing sector. Mr. Chairman, we cannot have a strong manufacturing sector if we do not have strong small manufacturers. The big global manufacturers simply cannot compete if they do not have U.S. small suppliers who are ISO 9000 certified, who are lean and mean, who are high quality, who are high productivity. And if you are one of those small manufacturers like I represent, and so many of the rest that my colleagues represent throughout the country, that have 25 to 60 employees who are struggling hard to meet payroll every single month and facing health care costs increases of 20 percent, who are out there finding customers and orders and dealing with delivery problems, those people just cannot mobilize the time, the focus, the expertise to improve productivity and quality at the pace that our modern economy demands it.

So these Manufacturing Extension Partnership programs are located throughout all 50 States. There are about 400 locations. In Connecticut they are called CONNSTEP. They are one third Federal, one third State, and one third fee based. Our program in Connecticut now is even more fee based. But nationally they have created 35,000 jobs over the year 2002, increased sales by $953 million, retained sales of almost $2 billion, realized cost savings of almost $700 million; and invested $940 million in plant equipment, workforce training, extremely important, and information management systems.

In fact, experts from these centers simply come into a plant, onto the floor with the owner, and help that owner understand, whether he needs to rearrange equipment or make other changes. Does he need to buy new equipment? Is it new manufacturing equipment? Is it new information technology? Is it new energy efficiency capability? Is it a different communications system? And, in fact, they analyze what that small plant can do to do one of two things: improve the quality of the product they are making, improve the productivity.

Without them, the infrastructure that our global manufacturers depend on in America would have disappeared a number of years ago. Without them, lean manufacturing would not have been able to permeate those small manufacturers who day in and day out are struggling to meet payroll in a way that none of us here have to take responsibility for.

So they are important to our very existence as a strong economy. They are important to our global competitiveness. In manufacturing we have developed this remarkable partnership capability to bring to the service of the small manufacturing the engineering expertise, the machinery and equipment expertise, the systems expertise, the ISO 9000 certification expertise, certain expertise in getting European certifications so the small guy can export.

All together, this partnership program has acted exactly like the partnership program we have through our great agricultural extension programs at our Land Grant colleges to help agricultural producers, that is, the farm community, have the expertise they need to develop conservation plans, deal with waste management issues and improve quality of product and productivity in the agricultural area.

We have done very well in agriculture, we have done very well in manufacturing, but we do not know it about ourselves. So this program is always under fire. That is why I have come to the floor to talk about it and to congratulate my friend, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for standing up for it.

I see my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), who knows a lot about it and represents a manufacturing community in Grand Rapids, is here to speak also.

This is as important a program, it is as important a partnership, as any single partnership the Federal Government is a part of, bar none, because it not only does the things I have described, but it has helped train workers on more sophisticated machinery, it has helped train workers in language skills, on systems issues and all kinds of things.

I am very proud that our free Nation has understood there is a public-private partnership that strengthens the entrepreneurial manufacturing community and enables us to make good on that promise to our kids, that they will have an economic opportunity equal or better than that of my generation.

This, combined with the Department of Commerce's recent in-depth study on the problems of manufacturing and the issues they are addressing, are going to assure that we will be competitive and strong in the global economy, because we will have a strong manufacturing sector.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Connecticut for her astute comments on the Manufacturing Extension Partnership and the role it plays. I have worked extensively on this issue, because it is under my jurisdiction as chairman of the Subcommittee on Environment, Technology and Standards of the Committee on Science. We have spent a considerable amount of time over this past year working on this issue and have developed a bill which will be on the floor tomorrow which will deal with this.

Everything that the gentlewoman from Connecticut has observed about the program is absolutely true, and it has always puzzled me why there is some opposition to this program.

Just to give an example of the benefits of this type of program, I think one of the finest programs we have had in the Agriculture Department for a number of years is the Cooperative Extension Program, which has been invaluable in getting research out of the laboratory and into the field. It has always amazed me that we have an amazing technology transfer rate in the agriculture arena, because of that program. A laboratory researcher at a university can discover something new one year and the farmers are actually using it in the field the next year, a tremendous accomplishment in terms of transferring technology from the lab to actual operations. We certainly do not do that well in most other fields. We do not do that well in manufacturing.

I find it interesting that we, as a Federal Government, spend $441 million per year for the Agriculture Cooperative Extension Program, and yet we seem to fuss and muss a lot about $100 or $110 million for essentially the same program for manufacturers. At the same time, there are only about 1.5 percent of Americans employed in farming, and there are roughly 14 percent employed in manufacturing. So clearly our priorities are wrong if we think we are spending too much in assisting manufacturers.

The MEP program, Manufacturing Extension Program, is designed to help small- and medium-sized businesses, and particularly provides technology transfer from the lab to the marketplace. In addition to that, it also provides business expertise, as the gentlewoman from Connecticut observed, to assist in exporting, and to assist in getting permits from other countries to export. The MEP program has been a very, very valuable program for small- and middle-sized businesses and, in many cases, has allowed them to increase and become large businesses. So it is an excellent program.

I certainly want to support what the gentlewoman has said. This is a good program for us to do, and I hope that tomorrow we will have the support of a large number of Members as we consider the bill which will reauthorize the program. I certainly support what the chairman of this Appropriations subcommittee has done in allocating money for that program.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, earlier today the Committee on House Administration, which I chair, along with our ranking member the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON) and our members, held a hearing on electronic voting system security. A diverse group of technology specialists and election administrators testified before the committee regarding issues relating to the reliability of electronic and computer-based voting systems and discussed what is needed to ensure the integrity of the latest generation of voting systems.

Though a wide range of opinions were offered throughout the course of the hearing, everyone agreed that well-written standards and a rigorous testing and certification process are absolutely necessary for maintaining the integrity of electronic voting systems under the Help America Vote Act of 2002, known as HAVA, of which I am proud to have been a principal author with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and also the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT) and others in the House. That bill is an important bill for voting in the United States, and again, I am proud that that bill has passed.

In that bill, NIST plays a crucial role in both the standards setting and testing and certification processes. First of all, HAVA tasks the director of NIST with chairing the Technical Guidelines Development Committee, known as TGDC, which HAVA created to assist the Election Assistance Commission, known as EAC, in crafting standards to ensure the security and reliability of voting technologies used in our Federal elections.

NIST is also tasked with evaluating testing laboratories and providing recommendations to the EAC as to which laboratories should be accredited for voting systems testing and certification.

Now that jurisdictions across the country are beginning to upgrade their voting systems, the American people demand and deserve to know that the latest generation of voting equipment will cast and count their ballots accurately and will be tamper-proof and free of technical malfunctions, for the purpose of HAVA was to make it easier to vote and harder to cheat.

The successful achievement of this objective of the bill will depend in great part upon the ability of NIST to fulfill its responsibilities under the Help America Vote Act, which in turn will hinge on whether NIST receives sufficient funding specifically allocated for its HAVA-related obligations.

Therefore, I believe it is urgent, and I want to stress urgent, that we get the needed resources to NIST as quickly as possible. I am joining today with my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), in support of the report language for this bill that urges NIST to devote funds for these functions.

I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), who has always supported the idea of NIST. I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) for his attention to this issue and for his consideration today. I also have been in contact with the gentleman from Oklahoma (Chairman ISTOOK) to see if the money dedicated to NIST, via the EAC, can be included in the Transportation-Treasury appropriations bill.

The vehicle for the funding is not of greatest importance. What is important is that the funding be absolutely provided. Regardless of the vehicle, we need to see that NIST will receive the money it needs to carry out its important statutory obligations.

I would like to note that the White House recently submitted amendments to its fiscal year 2005 budget that would provide an additional $10 million for the Election Assistance Commission. Perhaps funding for NIST to meet its obligations under HAVA could be taken from this amount. I will be talking again to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Chairman ISTOOK).

I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF), and express appreciation for the diligence of our colleague the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) on this issue and the bill.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his statement. I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman NEY) for his leadership on the Help America Vote Act. Without his leadership and strong support, it would not have passed. Indeed, the gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT), the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) of the Committee on Appropriations and others were critically important in its passage and funding.

I want to rise with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) in strong support of report language that was offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) during the June 23 markup of the bill before us today. I applaud the Committee on Appropriations for including it in the report. I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) for their leadership and attention to this very important matter.

That report language reads: ''The committee strongly urges NIST to give priority consideration to Help America Vote Act outreach to the election community; expediting work on a new voting standards accreditation program; and its work with the Technical Guidelines Development Committee working with the Election Assistance Commission. NIST is directed to provide in advance of the fiscal 2006 hearings a report detailing what steps must be taken to bring its activities in line with the timetable established by the act.''

The gentleman from Ohio (Chairman NEY) indicated that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) had worked with us. In fact, of course, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) was the principal sponsor in assuring that NIST was included as an integral part of the Help America Vote Act.

Obviously, technology is one of the critical issues in the HAVA proposal, which funds new technology for voting around the country. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) correctly said that we ought to have the best possible advice regarding technology, and NIST was the agency to provide that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) has expired.

(On request of Mr. HOYER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. NEY was allowed to proceed for 4 additional minutes.)

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I continue to yield to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, under the Help America Vote Act of 2002, of which I and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) were sponsors, NIST is required to conduct several important research and technical projects connected to election reform. NIST is already busy working with the new Election Assistance Commission to advance HAVA's objectives. However, much more must be done if NIST is to fulfill its important role.

As we learned in the controversial 2000 election, voting systems in many parts of the country are antiquated and obsolete. There continues to be controversy about various technologies. NIST can make a critical difference.

As the 2004 election fast approaches, there are concerns in some quarters about the security and reliability of some voting systems. Properly directed, NIST will make a significant contribution, ensuring that new voting systems are rigorously tested, easy to use and maintain, and secure.

I strongly urge NIST to follow the spirit and substance of the report language and give priority consideration to the Help America Vote Act in fiscal year 2005.

Mr. Chairman, I would follow up with the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman NEY) that I look forward to working with him and the gentleman from Oklahoma (Chairman ISTOOK) as we consider the Transportation-Treasury bill and the additional appropriations for the Election Assistance Commission to attempt to get some of the money that NIST needs for 2005 out of the funds that are authorized for the Election Assistance Commission.

Again, I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), the chairman of this subcommittee, and I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking Democrat, for their leadership and assistance in this effort, and I thank the gentleman for his leadership and for yielding me time.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time just to close on this issue, let me just say that this funding is a critical component. The entire funding where we get to the $3.9 billion, which we have gotten some money and have a little more to go, the gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT) has been assisting on that funding. We worked with the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG), as the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) mentioned. Originally when this started we went to the Democratic leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT) at that time. Everybody along the way has been very good on providing the money.

We still have some more components to go, but this particular aspect right now is just so important, to provide this for NIST to be able to really do its job and to interact with the EAC.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I want to thank him for his continuing comments and again express, this was probably the most substantive bipartisan bill that passed in the last Congress. The Speaker indicated that and others have as well. If we, however, fail to fund it properly, it will be a promise unfulfilled, and our democracy will not be as well served as all of us hoped when we supported the Help America Vote Act.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his time.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to this paragraph?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition, for reimbursement of expenses of the Department of Justice associated with processing cases under the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, not to exceed $6,333,000, to be appropriated from the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund.

□ 1700

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take my 5 minutes; I just want to put a statement in the RECORD.

I rise in support of this bill for the Subcommittee on Commerce, State, Justice, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies and to say congratulations to both the chairman and ranking member for their efforts. I know there are particular projects, and I would like to put a special word in for NOAA's Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Program.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of this bill to fund the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary.

In crafting this legislation, our appropriators faced the difficult task of adequately funding many national priorities. On balance, they did a remarkable job and have produced a bill worthy of our support.

For sure, there are programs that we would all like to see funded at higher levels. One of particular interest to me and my constituents in Houston is NOAA's Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Program. This program exists to protect important coastal and estuarine areas that have significant conservation, recreation, ecological, or historical values and are threatened by development or conversion.

In Houston, we are involved in an effort to preserve the Buffalo Bayou, which is the historic waterway on which the Allen Brothers founded Houston in 1836.

NOAA's Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Program has allowed us to partner with the Trust for Public Land to conserve critical tracts of land along the Buffalo Bayou in order to further our conservation efforts.

Ultimately, we seek to revitalize the Buffalo Bayou in a manner that balances the need to conserve the Bayou's wetlands and waterways with the recreational and business development needed to transform the Buffalo Bayou into an active and vibrant urban waterfront center.

While the House bill provides only $3 million for the Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Program, I am hopeful that our appropriators will see it fit to raise that funding level during conference.

An increased funding level would allow the federal government to continue its investment in areas like the Buffalo Bayou that have been recognized by this Congress and conservation groups alike as nationally and historically significant areas worthy of preservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, ANTITRUST DIVISION

For expenses necessary for the enforcement of antitrust and kindred laws, $135,463,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, not to exceed $101,000,000 of offsetting collections derived from fees collected for premerger notification filings under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (15 U.S.C. 18a), regardless of the year of collection, shall be retained and used for necessary expenses in this appropriation, and shall remain available until expended: Provided further, That the sum herein appropriated from the general fund shall be reduced as such offsetting collections are received during fiscal year 2005, so as to result in a final fiscal year 2005 appropriation from the general fund estimated at not more than $34,463,000.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

For necessary expenses of the Offices of the United States Attorneys, including intergovernmental and cooperative agreements, $1,535,000,000; of which not to exceed $2,500,000 shall be available until September 30, 2006, for: (1) training personnel in debt collection; (2) locating debtors and their property; (3) paying the net costs of selling property; and (4) tracking debts owed to the United States Government: Provided, That of the total amount appropriated, not to exceed $8,000 shall be available for official reception and representation expenses: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000,000 of those funds available for automated litigation support contracts shall remain available until expended: Provided further, That, in addition to reimbursable full-time equivalent workyears available to the Offices of the United States Attorneys, not to exceed 10,238 positions and 10,361 full-time equivalent workyears shall be supported from the funds appropriated in this Act for the United States Attorneys.

UNITED STATES TRUSTEE SYSTEM FUND

For necessary expenses of the United States Trustee Program, as authorized, $172,850,000, to remain available until expended and to be derived from the United States Trustee System Fund: Provided, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, deposits to the Fund shall be available in such amounts as may be necessary to pay refunds due depositors: Provided further, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, $172,850,000 of offsetting collections pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 589a(b) shall be retained and used for necessary expenses in this appropriation and remain available until expended: Provided further, That the sum herein appropriated from the Fund shall be reduced as such offsetting collections are received during fiscal year 2005, so as to result in a final fiscal year 2005 appropriation from the Fund estimated at $0.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, FOREIGN CLAIMS SETTLEMENT COMMISSION

For expenses necessary to carry out the activities of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission, including services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $1,220,000.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, UNITED STATES MARSHALS SERVICE

For necessary expenses of the United States Marshals Service, $752,070,000; of which $17,472,000 shall be available for 106 supervisory deputy marshal positions for courthouse security; of which not to exceed $6,000 shall be available for official reception and representation expenses; and of which $4,000,000 for information technology systems shall remain available until expended; of which not less than $8,221,000 shall be available for the costs of courthouse security equipment, including furnishings, relocations, and telephone systems and cabling, and shall remain available until September 30, 2006: Provided, That, in addition to reimbursable full-time equivalent workyears available to the United States Marshals Service, not to exceed 4,578 positions and 4,404 full-time equivalent workyears shall be supported from the funds appropriated in this Act for the United States Marshals Service.

CONSTRUCTION

For construction of United States Marshals Service prisoner-holding space in United States courthouses and Federal buildings, $1,371,000, to remain available until expended.

FEES AND EXPENSES OF WITNESSES

For fees and expenses of witnesses, for expenses of contracts for the procurement and supervision of expert witnesses, for private counsel expenses, including advances, $177,585,000, to remain available until expended; of which not to exceed $8,000,000 may be made available for construction of buildings for protected witness safesites; of which not to exceed $1,000,000 may be made available for the purchase and maintenance of armored vehicles for transportation of protected witnesses; and of which not to exceed $7,000,000 may be made available for the purchase, installation, maintenance and upgrade of secure telecommunications equipment and a secure automated information network to store and retrieve the identities and locations of protected witnesses.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE

For necessary expenses of the Community Relations Service, $9,833,000: Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, upon a determination by the Attorney General that emergent circumstances require additional funding for conflict resolution and violence prevention activities of the Community Relations Service, the Attorney General may transfer such amounts to the Community Relations Service, from available appropriations for the current fiscal year for the Department of Justice, as may be necessary to respond to such circumstances: Provided further, That any transfer pursuant to the previous proviso shall be treated as a reprogramming under section 605 of this Act and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures set forth in that section.

ASSETS FORFEITURE FUND

For expenses authorized by 28 U.S.C. 524(c)(1)(B), (F), and (G), $21,759,000, to be derived from the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund.

PAYMENT TO RADIATION EXPOSURE COMPENSATION TRUST FUND

In addition to amounts appropriated by subsection 3(e) of the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act (42 U.S. Code 2210 note), $72,000,000 for payment to the Radiation Exposure Compensation Trust Fund, to remain available until expended.

INTERAGENCY LAW ENFORCEMENT

INTERAGENCY CRIME AND DRUG ENFORCEMENT

For necessary expenses for the identification, investigation, and prosecution of individuals associated with the most significant drug trafficking and affiliated money laundering organizations not otherwise provided for, to include inter-governmental agreements with State and local law enforcement agencies engaged in the investigation and prosecution of individuals involved in organized crime drug trafficking, $561,033,000, of which $50,000,000 shall remain available until expended: Provided, That any amounts obligated from appropriations under this heading may be used under authorities available to the organizations reimbursed from this appropriation.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in 1990, in response to more than 100,000 dolphins killed each year by the tuna fishermen, Congress passed legislation that my colleague, BARBARA BOXER, and I authored, creating the popular ''dolphin safe'' label on cans of tuna. For over a decade, this label gave consumers the option to purchase tuna with the confidence that the dolphins were not being chased, netted, and killed along with the tuna.

The dolphin-safe label has been a huge success. Since passage of the label, dolphin mortality decreased by 98 percent, to fewer than 2,000 kills each year.

But despite the success of this program, the Bush Commerce Department issued a finding in 2002 that allowed dolphin-safe labels to be placed on tuna harvested through the chase and encirclement method, a manner that kills dolphins.

With this shift in policy, the Commerce Department ignored its own scientific information showing the high dolphin mortalities caused by this harvest technique. Indeed, this change completely undermined the integrity of the dolphin-safe label.

Now, thanks to evidence uncovered by a lawsuit filed against the change, we learn that while the Bush administration was weakening the dolphin-safe label, it knew, it knew that observers from the Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission on Mexican tuna-fishing vessels were being bribed to misreport tuna as dolphin-safe.

An internal NOAA e-mail states that it ''was common knowledge throughout the fleet that the observers were regularly paid off to misreport what happened during the cruise.''

Yet the Commerce Department argues that these allegations are irrelevant to its decision to relax restrictions on foreign-caught tuna. And the Commerce Department has not provided an explanation for its modification of the scientific data, nor has Commerce taken the steps that we are aware of to address the bribery issues.

Meanwhile, the U.S. pays much more for its fair share to the Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission, the body allegedly being bribed to look the other way during dolphin kills.

The appropriations bill that we are considering today provides nearly a 40 percent increase for the Tropical Tuna Commission. Yet, the Commerce Department is apparently doing nothing to ensure that the Tropical Tuna Commission is doing its job.

Without an investigation into these allegations of bribery, and until the Commerce Department decides what science will guide its decisions, we should not be subsidizing foreign fishing practices that damage the dolphin-safe label.

The dolphin-safe label was created at the urging of hundreds of thousands of students from across this country; hundreds of thousands of schoolchildren participated in the process and saw the suggested improvements to protect dolphins enacted into law.

What message is this administration sending to those very same children and to the committed scientists at NOAA by cynically undermining the dolphin-safe label and failing to investigate the allegations of bribery by those who are entrusted to protect the dolphins during the harvest of the tuna, and to make sure that the consumers are aware that, in fact, this is dolphin-free tuna.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply concerned that we have failed to address these issues while, at the same time, dramatically increasing the funding for the Tropical Tuna Commission.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the chairman in a colloquy on a proposal by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to establish a national contact center. Hopefully, we can address the concerns of those Members who have expressed misgivings about this proposal.

Recently, we observed the 40th anniversary of the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In the years since the enactment of that landmark legislation, the EEOC has had a pivotal role in fighting discrimination in the workplace and ensuring that all Americans are treated fairly. However, despite the important role of the EEOC, it has experienced the same budget constraints as most other agencies in this bill.

The EEOC sought the assistance of the National Academy of Public Administration in finding ways to streamline its organizational structure and use its personnel to continue meeting its missions in the 21st century.

Among the NAPA recommendations was a proposal to create a National Contact Center using contract employees. The EEOC has proposed to enter into a contract to establish a call center as a 2-year pilot project at an estimated cost of $2 million. Of this amount, $1 million is available through a reprogramming of current-year funding. This bill will provide $1 million in fiscal year 2005.

NAPA made a number of additional streamlining proposals, including possible office closures, which might result in personnel reductions. Although the administration requested funding for a reposition of EEOC resources, the bill does not provide any of the requested increased funding for repositioning because a spending plan has not been submitted to the committee.

Many EEOC employees across the country have heard of these proposals and are worried about losing their jobs as a result of office closures or outsourcing of the call center.

The commission's reorganization proposals, including specifically the National Contact Center, were discussed in detail at a subcommittee hearing earlier this year. At that time, both the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and I expressed concerns about the possible cause of this proposal. Accordingly, we advised the Chair, Cari Dominguez, that the subcommittee expected her to come back to us prior to entry into a contract to establish the call center. Ms. Dominguez made a commitment to us that she would do so. Both the Chair and her staff have continued to reiterate that commitment.

Similarly, Ms. Dominguez has repeatedly reassured the subcommittee that EEOC is not planning to close any of its existing offices or cut jobs or current employees. This bill provides full funding for the commission's current base staffing level.

So I ask the chairman of the subcommittee, is it his understanding that expenditure of any funding in 2005 for the proposed National Contact Center is contingent on the EEOC notifying this subcommittee, consistent with the long-standing requirement of section 605, prior to taking any formal action to obligate the funding?

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York for raising this issue, because it is a concern for Members on my side of the aisle and for many others, and also for constituents of mine. I want to assure the Members and the gentleman that the subcommittee is aware of these issues and will do everything we can to protect the rights of Federal employees. Ms. Dominguez has promised us, and I went back and I looked in the hearing record the other day, that the commission has no intention of closing offices or cutting jobs of current employees and that she will come to the subcommittee before spending any money on the call center or any other reorganization proposal.

So I completely agree.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I thank the chairman, as always, for his support.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of entering into a colloquy with the chairman. I would like to draw the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to the proposed reductions in the appropriations for NOAA of nearly $400 million.

The appropriation subcommittee over the years, including this one, has been very supportive of the issues dealing with the oceans and those issues that surround our oceans, our exploration, and our coastal problems. I also understand the delicate balance and appreciate the difficulty faced by the subcommittee in allocating limited funds across the board when there are so many pressures. Our oceans and coasts support over 2.8 million jobs, generate over $54 billion in goods and services, and are the most popular destinations for recreation and tourism in the United States.

But I can see next year some major initiatives dealing with the oceans in this particular Congress as a result of the Ocean Commission Report. Some of the more pressing needs include an integrated ocean observing system, ocean science and exploration. We currently know more about the Moon than we know about our oceans. It is important for us to adopt the principles of ecosystem management for our oceans and coasts and focus on control of marine and coastal aquatic invasive species.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to work with the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) as we move the process along, knowing the difficulties of a limited budget, so that we can continue to fund adequately the science and the kinds of science that NOAA needs.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHREST. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In conference last year, the subcommittee worked with the Senate to make NOAA appropriations a priority, with a 15.6 percent increase over fiscal year 2003 levels. The proposed fiscal year 2005 level, I believe, returns NOAA funding to historic levels and allows the subcommittee to restore necessary funding to certain Department of Justice programs, FBI, and also the MEP program that we did for Commerce that were not adequately addressed; also the COPS program, local law enforcement programs in the President's request.

I understand the significance of the coming year, and I saw the ocean reports that came out. I look forward to working with the gentleman who is really a leader on these issues to ensure that every effort is made to maximize funding support for these purposes in this and coming fiscal years.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I thank the chairman. I look forward to working with the gentleman from Virginia and his fine staff.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the Federal Bureau of Investigation for detection, investigation, and prosecution of crimes against the United States; including purchase for police-type use of not to exceed 2,988 passenger motor vehicles, of which 2,619 will be for replacement only; and not to exceed $70,000 to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 530C, $5,205,028,000; of which not to exceed $150,000,000 shall remain available until expended; of which $916,000,000 shall be for counterterrorism investigations, foreign counterintelligence, and other activities related to our national security; of which $56,349,000 shall be for the operations, equipment, and facilities of the Foreign Terrorist Tracking Task Force; and of which not to exceed $20,000,000 is authorized to be made available for making advances for expenses arising out of contractual or reimbursable agreements with State and local law enforcement agencies while engaged in cooperative activities related to violent crime, terrorism, organized crime, gang-related crime, cybercrime, and drug investigations: Provided, That not to exceed $200,000 shall be available for official reception and representation expenses: Provided further, That, in addition to reimbursable full-time equivalent workyears available to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, not to exceed 30,078 positions and 29,102 full-time equivalent workyears shall be supported from the funds appropriated in this Act for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WEINER

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEINER:

Page 26, line 20, after the dollar amount, insert the following: ''(increased by $106,850,000)''.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and any amendments thereto be limited to 40 minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent, except that the chairman and the ranking minority member may each offer one pro forma amendment for the purpose of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman will be offering a secondary amendment to the amendment? I did not understand.

Mr. WOLF. No, we are not.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to offer my thanks and gratitude to the chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee who, with great grace and dignity, often have to find ways to put 10 pounds' worth of things into a 5-pound bag.

This amendment is one that simply argues that in one case, the COPS program, we are allowing the program to effectively die in this bill; and we must not have that.

First, some of the facts. The COPS program has been an enormous success. From coast to coast, big towns, small cities, police departments as few as five members and as many as the New York City Police Department of 40,000 have benefited enormously from the COPS program.

Over the course of time, the program has not only shrunk but morphed and become more efficient. Many of my colleagues, including in the city of New York, have suggested, well, we need less money for hiring, but we do need more money for things like radios and equipment and cars. So the program has morphed into a block grant. The problem is, it has also hemorrhaged to an enormous degree.

In 1997, there was $1.3 billion allocated by this Congress just for hiring. In last year's bill, we were down to $219 million. What we see here is how this reorganization happened. We have now block granted the entire program into the COPS Enhancement Grant Program, something that, by the way, I support; it gives greater flexibility to police departments. But the bottom line is, we have reduced this to $113 million.

Again, to reiterate, we have taken a program, an enormously successful program that at its high-water mark reached $1.3 billion, not decades ago but in 1997; we are now proposing to cut that to $113 million.

It is so bad, there is so much demand, there are 2,000 applications for hiring grants totaling $511 million last year. So far, they are only able to provide funding for $385 million of them. That is only 15 percent of the eligible States and localities that have been able to get grant funding, because this program has hemorrhaged so far.

Everyone agrees that it works. John Ashcroft praised the program. The University of Nebraska did a study to show the COPS program in a 5-year period resulted in a reduction of 756,000 violent crimes.

And just a word, a brief word, about the offset. We propose to take the funds, and here I want to thank my colleagues, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KELLER), the gentleman from New York (Mr. QUINN), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTED), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS), to take the money from the largest step-up that is in the bill, which is the Census Bureau.

I have no beef with the Census Bureau. They do a difficult job. They do it every 10 years, and there is a need to ramp it up, but the ramping up that is going on is coming at the cost of the COPS program. Fiscal year 2005, I believe we are going to have other opportunities to ramp up the Census Bureau.

In fact, at this point in the last census, the software for the census had not even been purchased yet. That is how early we are in the process, but I mean no disregard to that bureau. They do an excellent job. Unfortunately, I believe the COPS program deserves greater attention.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the reduction in the amendment would debilitate the 2010 census, and the census department said it will be the worst census ever in the history of our Nation. Once the cuts are made, there will be no opportunity to restart the program. They said the impact of the cuts, human costs in the loss of more than 1,000 Federal jobs at the U.S. Census Bureau. There is no catching up. The cut wastes the $500 million already spent and adds another $1 billion to the cost for the year 2010 for the census. It would cut the Census Bureau by $106 million, resulting in, as I said, the loss of thousands of jobs.

The bill is already $55 million below the request of the administration. The census is a constitutional responsibility, collected every 10 years to apportion the seats of the House of Representatives. The census is one of America's oldest and most enduring traditions. The first census was collected in 1790. The results were delivered to George Washington during his first term.

The United States is a rapidly changing and growing country. The population has grown by 10 million people since 2000, 10 million since 2000. By 2010, there will be more than 300 million Americans living in America, so we need to keep up and monitor and know about that population.

This population will need more homes, stores, hospitals, roads, new schools, and the information is needed to make good decisions. Most of the data used by State and local governments and the Federal Government have come from the Census Bureau.

Further, the Census Bureau collects mostly all of the Nation's economic data. Gross domestic product is delivered in part by the data of the Census Bureau.

In spite of the unprecedented success of 2000, the General Accounting Office, an arm of the Congress, concluded that Census 2000 was conducted at a high cost and great risk and recommended extensive and early planning for the testing. The funding provided in this bill for the Census Bureau is already scaled back from what the Census Bureau requested to fully fund the planning and testing for the 2010 census and the American Community Survey.

A current Congresswoman informed me earlier today, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY), who was here today expressing concern that we were even a little bit lower than what the Census Bureau thought was appropriate.

Should there be any additional cuts to the Bureau, there will be both a long- and short-form census that will cost the government upwards of $15 billion.

The budget requests for the Bureau of the Census has already been reduced by $55 million. Further reduction would be irresponsible, as it would endanger our ability to carry out this critical constitutional responsibility.

Regarding the proposed increase to COPS, this bill already significantly improves the President's proposals for State and local law enforcement accounts by providing $886 million above the request. This includes providing an increase of $251 million above the request for programs funded in COPS heading, such as $130 million above the request for law enforcement technologies, $40 million above the request for Meth Hot Spots.

Other important State and local law enforcement programs funded above the request include the Edward Byrne Justice Assistance Grants programs, funded at $125 million above the request, SCAAP funding at $325 million above the request. In fact, that was zeroed out. Juvenile Justice programs are funded at $105 million above the request.

A further increase above the request is not a high priority, particularly if one were taking it from the Census Bureau, which would pretty much decimate that.

So I strongly urge a ''no'' vote on the Weiner amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would just point out, we in this House authorized $1 billion for the COPS program. It is authorized this year at $113 million, and as far as the Census Bureau, I agree they do very important work. In 2000, they acknowledge they made mistakes in the undercount and refused to adjust, so I am not even convinced, if they had the money, they would do it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KELLER), the cosponsor of the amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Weiner amendment to restore funding for the COPS program to last year's level.

Here is the bottom line. At a time when our homeland security threat levels are up, does it make sense that our funding for COPS should go down? Of course not. Yet this bill cuts the COPS grant programs by nearly half. Common sense suggests that cities all across America would be expanding, not decreasing, their police forces in the face of growing homeland security demands.

Now, Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge has consistently said that homeland security starts in our hometowns. I can tell you firsthand that when it comes to making our hometowns safer, there is no Federal program more popular with the sheriffs and police chiefs in Orlando, Florida, than the COPS program.

The COPS program has helped local communities in central Florida and all across the Nation by hiring an additional 118,000 additional police officers. A study by the University of Nebraska found that the COPS program is directly linked to the dramatic drop in crime since 1995. Literally every single congressional district has received funding and has benefited in some way from the COPS program.

The COPS program is popular because it works and because it allows local law enforcement agencies to apply directly to the Department of Justice for the money by filling out a simple one-page grant form.

Now, I have listened to the opponents of the Weiner amendment. They are all reasonable, well-intentioned people. And this is essentially what they have to say: They say the bill is fine the way it is because the $3 billion it provides for State and local law enforcement is over the President's budget request, and that the offset of $106 million from the Census Bureau programs is too much of a cut from the Census budget.

On the surface, that argument sounds pretty good, but it is a bit misleading in three areas: The amount of the funding, the type of the funding, and the supposed cuts from the Census Bureau. In the interest of straight talk, I will squarely address each of these three issues.

First, I will address the amount of funding. The total amount appropriated in this bill for local and State law enforcement represents a cut of $103 million from last year's level. The threat levels are up, yet the law enforcement funding level goes down? No, sir, that dog will not hunt.

Second, I will address the type of funding. While the COPS hiring grants have been cut, other types of funding to State and local police agencies are inadequate replacements because these other types of funding do not go directly to the law enforcement agencies, but rather are sent to the States where much of the money is eaten up in administrative costs; and there is a long delay in getting the money sent to law enforcement agencies. Moreover, even when the local law enforcement agencies finally do get the money, it is usually not used to hire new police officers because they are based on a 1-year grant.

In stark contrast, money out of the COPS program goes directly to the local law enforcement agencies, using a one-page form, and can be used right then to hire new police officers for 3 years without bureaucratic delay, red tape and any unnecessary expense.

The third and final flaw deals with the supposed cuts from the Census Bureau. Here is the deal with that: The Census Bureau programs received an increase in funding levels by 32.4 percent this year. By cutting this dramatic increase down to the more reasonable amount of an 8 percent increase, it will allow us to still increase the Census budget and yet restore the COPS funding levels to last year's appropriated level.

Do our COPS, who are on the front lines of homeland security, not need the money more than the bureaucrats at the Census Bureau?

I urge my colleagues to restore funding to the COPS program and vote ''yes'' on the Weiner amendment.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

First of all, let me go on the record, as I have before and will today and will tomorrow, and say that given an opportunity to have more dollars available to us, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and I would have done more to provide for the COPS program. I know that. That is not a statement on my part; that is an understanding of his philosophy and what he believes in.

However, in spite of that problem, in spite of the fact that we do not have the dollars in this bill that we want to, because everyone could get up here and tell us what section of the bill should be increased and just about every section, except for a couple that I will mention in a second, could be increased.

In spite of that, it is interesting to know that local law enforcement is $885 million above the President's request in this bill. So there has been a serious effort to deal with this issue.

But here is my problem. My problem is that my colleague from New York (Mr. WEINER), whom I respect and admire, tells us that we can take the money from the census and he, in the process, will devastate not only the Census Bureau but the ability to conduct a census.

If I was to carry this to an extreme, which I never would do, this may be unconstitutional because if there is an issue that is in the Constitution, it is to conduct a census every 10 years. So we do not make those decisions around here.

The Census Bureau, those of us who understand the work, they do fully understand that this cut, which incidentally and we should know this, my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), my understanding is will come up with yet a second amendment which cuts more money from the census, so when it is all over today, he will have cut the census by over $225 million.

Well, first of all, 1,000 people would have to be laid off. No one has made a decision in this Congress that those 1,000 people are no longer needed. No one in any of the two Houses has decided that those folks have to go. Yet, this amendment would immediately and arbitrarily decide that those folks have to go.

In addition, we are gearing up for the 2010 census. We are already in 2005, as we speak here today. That means that half the gearing up has been done. One could argue that instead of saving money, this would waste money because all the money that has been spent up to now will be for naught, because obviously the census is not going to be able to function or be conducted the way it should for the next 5 years.

There is a point, however, that is of great interest to me, and that is the census count in the inner cities and especially the census count in the minority communities.

For Hispanics and African Americans and other minorities in this country, there is at times nothing more important than a proper count; and I have been in the past a critic of undercounts, and I continue with the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) and the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) to work with the Census Bureau to get a better count. This would not discuss the issue of a better count. This would discuss the issue of no count at all.

When we speak in the minority community, in the poor community of what we need to do to grow to become part of the American society, we always cite census figures. We say we have grown by this much, and yet our educational level has fallen back by this much. We say we have grown by this much, and yet our per capita income has gone down.

Whatever the issue may be, we run to the Census Bureau to get the numbers to make our argument to build our case that we need help. I would carry this to a point where I say to destroy the Census Bureau, to destroy the next census is a frontal attack on the aspirations of people in my community who need an accurate count and hopefully a better count to make the arguments that we can make.

Now, a lot of what is happening here today, when we say COPS, the program stands for different things, but the short name is COPS, the people right away think of a police officer. Well, my staff just spoke to the City of New York, which always comes up in these discussions. The city folks tell us that because crime is down and the matching funds for any new hires are not in place or not available in New York City's current economy they are not hiring any new cops. So any dollars that supposedly would go to New York would not be available to them at this point. They could not use them.

On the other hand, they say that they look to the census, they look to the next count, they look to the American survey as the one chance that they have to really move ahead and be able to get the dollars necessary for the city in the future, because let us remember, and I will conclude with this, that the census also figures in what different localities get in Federal help based on the population they have.

So for those reasons, and a million more that maybe I will get a chance to elaborate on, I wholeheartedly oppose this amendment and ask for its defeat.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I just want to address a couple of the points that have come up.

First of all, the chairman as addressed many times the level to which we exceed the President's request for COPS. Yes, the President proposed zero for COPS. He proposed zeroing out the program. This is a bipartisan amendment because we think that is bad idea.

The second point that is made is it is going to cost personnel at the Census Bureau. Well, I would just remind my colleagues we do not touch the salaries and expenses line of this budget. We only refer to the part that is periodic censuses and programs, but I can tell my colleagues what eliminating the COPS program has done. It has meant that less cops are on the beat. We have fired cops in the real world because the COPS program is hemorrhaged.

Finally, if I can make reference to the final point of the distinguished ranking member about how the City of New York does not hire cops with its funding anymore. That is exactly right. That is why the program is now in a block grant formula that allows police departments to buy radios, something the city has done; paid overtime, something the city has done; and provided overtime. These are ways that the program has become more responsive in response to some of the objections that our colleagues have raised about the COPS program. In boom hiring times, it hires. Now, we allow it to backfill for overtime and other types of programs.

The City of New York, as we speak, has an application in for the Safe Schools Program, which is part of the COPS program. Well, they are going to get zero with the budget that is before us now. They will get funded with some certitude if the Weiner amendment passes.

I would make one final point to my friends who are supportive of the Census Bureau, particularly my friends, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO). If someone comes to this floor right now and says the improved funding will lead to a census undercount adjustment in the year 2010, I will withdraw my amendment; but that is not going to happen. We provided them all kinds of funding, and let me tell my colleagues what happened.

In 2000, the Census Bureau, not courts, not Congress, decided we are not going to do an undercount adjustment. What did it cost? The county of the Bronx, $262 million because of that undercount; the county of New York, $212 million as a result of that undercount; and here we are fighting and scratching to defend their funding. Well, God bless them, but they have already showed that money is not their problem. When we give them more money, they acknowledge an undercount and they still do not fix it.

So I have got to tell to my distinguished colleagues from my hometown of New York, at least we know the COPS funding winds up getting to New York. We cannot say that about census funding.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank the gentleman for his comments. I am ready to yield to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM), the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Technology, Information Policy, Intergovernmental Relations and the Census; but the account that the gentleman cut with the decennial census does have personnel in it. So he does cut 1,000 jobs, boom, they are gone; and so whether the gentleman is not Xing the counts, he does cut personnel with the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM), the chairman of the subcommittee that has jurisdiction over the census.

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), the distinguished chairman, for yielding me the time.

I rise to oppose this amendment, the Weiner amendment. As chairman of the subcommittee that has oversight over the Census Bureau, I must strongly oppose efforts to take the money needed for the important work that the Census Bureau continues to do for our Nation. I want to offer my support to the full mark of $774 million that was voted out of the Committee on Appropriations.

It is ironic that a Member from an area that was affected by an undercount, that is a critic of the effectiveness of the Census Bureau, would respond by gutting it, by taking boots out of the streets that have the effect of making sure that that undercount does not occur, by finding all of those additional people, by making sure that there is a fair and accurate count. He guts the budget that would correct those types of things.

The Census Bureau is the preeminent provider for the data that keeps our Nation running. We have an economy that is information-based. Without the information to make good decisions our economy and our Nation suffers.

I support the efforts of the Census Bureau to plan an accurate and fair census for 2010, and the planning for that is ongoing. It is not something that we ramp up the year before. The modernization and early planning for census 2010 is money well spent, particularly full funding for the American Community Survey.

We cannot be shortsighted when it comes to the census. The American Community Survey, for example, would give a city like New York that has seen a great deal of change since the last census as a result of horrible events beyond our control in 2001, it would give New York accurate data on an annual basis rather than having to wait an entire decade to reflect the change that occurred there on September 11. The American Community Survey, at its heart, is designed to give areas like New York City, like Washington, D.C., like small Midwestern towns that disappear overnight with the fury of a tornado accurate data on an annualized basis rather than having to wait 10 ears to have good, solid, sound information.

This amendment, the Weiner amendment, drastically reduces the money that the Census Bureau needs to do its valuable work to prepare for the 2010 census and to implement the American Community Survey. They have already sustained a $19 million cut from the President's budget request. The money that is needed for the gentleman from New York's (Mr. WEINER) amendment, regardless of its tremendously good intent, is money that the President and full committee have provided to fund the Census Bureau and the implementation of the ACS that will replace the long form and provide the detailed demographic and economic data annually for areas around the Nation.

The impact of the cut proposed by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) and the Weiner amendment will stop the American Community Survey with no opportunity to restart it. It would mean a loss, as the chairman has said, of over 1,000 Federal jobs at the Census Bureau, boots on the ground that could provide the gentleman the accurate count that he is rightfully concerned about; and it wastes the $500 million already invested on the American Community Survey and would add significant new costs to the 2010 census.

The Census Bureau, Mr. Chairman, does important work every day that keeps our economy running. It is important work to plan for the 2010 census and fully implement the ACS. We cannot eliminate this funding, and I strongly urge the House to reject this.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUTNAM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEINER. First, I appreciate the gentleman's expertise on this issue. Should I take it from his concerns and comments about the undercount in New York that under his leadership he will commit to doing something the Census Bureau has refused to do, which is a statistical adjustment to take into account the undercount and adjust New York accordingly? I mean, I appreciate the gentleman's protests; but to be honest with him, it was not a shortage of data. It was a shortage of a desire on the part of the Census Bureau to use that data to enfranchise those who were disenfranchised.

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the 2000 census was the most accurate census in this Nation's history. In a Nation as large and diverse as ours, we will never, ever have a perfect count, and they have been doing these since Caesar. There is yet to be a perfect count.

I acknowledge the gentleman's concern with the undercount; and I also acknowledge that gutting their budget, which is what the gentleman's amendment does, will not improve the accuracy of the 2010 census.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I just want to make a couple of quick points here.

Look, the problem is not that there is an undercount. The problem is they discovered the undercount and steadfastly refused to do anything about it. By the way, in the data that we are going to be accumulating over the next 10 years, we can include the number 7,300. That is the number of employed police officers in the State of Florida today as a result of the COPS program. Those are working men and women in my colleague's hometown, in the hometown of the gentleman from Virginia, in my hometown that are simply not going to be there because we are eviscerating the COPS program.

We have taken a $1.3 billion hiring program, and we propose in this budget to make it $114 million, and to say, well, the President said nothing, so we should be thrilled.

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEINER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman answer, for the purpose of enlightening the House, how much additional money local law enforcement New York City has received under homeland security grants?

Mr. WEINER. Under homeland security grants, well, frankly, per capita, about one-sixth the amount of Wyoming. Any other question?

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would yield, give us the bottom line number for those who are not into per capita, how many billions of dollars has New York received since September 2001?

Mr. WEINER. Reclaiming my time, in homeland security funding? Actually, let us talk about how much is cut.

The COPS program at one time funded 7,000 police officers in the City of New York; and by the way, I can check for a moment if the gentleman gives me his hometown how many funds in his neighborhood and that has been steadily slashed.

John Ashcroft, the Attorney General of the Nation of the United States, said that this is the best program to reduce crime. Secretary Ridge said homeland security starts in our hometown. What are we doing? Slashing the COPS program.

I can assure my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, they oppose slashing the COPS program, not knowing my colleague all that well, but knowing how it has been helpful to his community. We are doing it. We are not happy about doing it.

All I am saying is let us bring it to at least last year's level. Do not bring it to what we authorized in the House, $1 billion. I am sure the gentleman voted for it, $1 billion authorization level, $113 million half of what it was last year.

Listen, I do not have any beef with the census; and as I said, the chairman and the ranking member have a Herculean task trying to make these numbers work. All I am saying is this is one program that is a dramatic step up for something that they are trying to ramp up that I think they should, but we have to be sure we do not ramp down the COPS program into the ground in the process. The COPS program will cease to exist effectively.

As of last year, 15 percent of the States that applied got the grants. Effectively, if we cut that in half, do the math, effectively the COPS program is dead.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, while I am extremely sympathetic to the cause my good friend from New York supports, I cannot support this amendment. Taking money from the census planning will cripple that effort and have consequences that will damage the census throughout this decade.

All of our representation in this Congress and our local and State bodies is based on census numbers. The funding that we receive in localities across this Nation are based on census numbers. Working to make it as accurate as possible is absolutely fundamental to the fairness of our democracy.

The 2000 census was the most expensive in history and was not very much more accurate than the 1990 census. Demographic analysis failed to capture the growth in Hispanic migration and, as a result, was of little use in measuring the accuracy of the census.

The census annual estimates of the population were off by almost 8 million in 2000. These and many other errors were the result of a failure of Congress to adequately fund the planning for the 2000 census.

The census is an enormous management undertaking. It is the largest peacetime mobilization the government undertakes. The census requires planning to mobilize hundreds of thousands of workers for a few weeks. In 2000, it took 500 offices and 500,000 workers. The Census Bureau opens those offices, hires a staff, and closes those offices all in a few weeks. Over 100 million forms have to be printed, labeled, and mailed. Those forms have to be returned by mail and the information on them tabulated, and all of this must be done in the 9 months between April 1 and December 31, when the director must submit to the President the State numbers for apportionment.

The budget for 2005 is essential for a fair and accurate census in 2010. The cut called for in this amendment will result in a poorly executed 2010 census. That, in turn, will result in millions of errors that will distort the apportionment of the seats in this House. These cuts will result in a more costly or less accurate census or both.

In this Information Age, we need reliable information in order to make good decisions for this Nation. Without good data, we cannot administer the laws of this country fairly, and I, for one, will continue to do all I can to make sure that the Census Bureau has the capabilities to provide the Congress and the Nation with the ability to provide all of us with high-quality data needed by the public and the private sector and its elected representatives to make informed public policy decisions. Therefore, I urge a ''no'' vote on this amendment.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I have yet to hear a single opponent of the amendment say the words ''with full funding we will have a statistical undercount adjustment.'' And the reason we cannot is that the Census Bureau is not committed to that.

It is not a matter of collecting the information, I say to my colleagues. It is a matter of what you do with it. And simply collecting the information, as we learned in 2000, is not the problem. When you have a Census Bureau that is unwilling to make adjustments, we are arguing for the wrong thing.

I can tell you this though, in the census figures, when they do employment, they are going to have less folks for cops. It is what they will have as a result of this idea of ending the COPS program.

Let us try to remember here what we are talking about. We are talking about a program that has not only hired over 125,000 cops, not only paid overtime in over 4,000 different jurisdictions, not only bought radios and repeaters, and Sprint systems for inside cars in dozens of police forces, it has resulted in the reduction of at least 150,000 violent crimes. It is an enormously successful program. Let us keep our eyes on the ball.

We all recognize here that both programs are good. It is just a matter of whether one will be ramped up very much at the expense of the other. That is all this amendment seeks to do, is to just try to restore the COPS program to a barely living, barely heartbeating pace. If we restore it with my amendment, I want to just caution my colleagues, it will still mean that only 15 percent of the applicants are going to get grants. That is all it means. Last year, they did not accept everyone's applications because we had strangled the money so sharply. They used fiscal year 2003 applications.

If we continue on this path and halve it again, I am convinced, my colleagues, when we come here in future years, the COPS program will cease to exist on almost any level that we know it. We must not allow the structural reforms that we made here to block grant the whole program being an excuse to slash it by 50 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, let me make a few brief comments here. We keep talking about full funding and an adjustment to the census count. We have all been in support of that. But let us remember that perhaps the largest reason why the Census Bureau did not adjust the count was for the tremendous congressional pressure that fell upon it when it was discussing that issue.

Now, that is not going to satisfy the sponsor of the amendment. However, I would like just to alert the sponsor of the amendment that the biggest bump-up this year, or in years past, certainly since September 11 of 2001, has not been the Census Bureau. The Census Bureau is just an easy target because, supposedly, it does not have a constituency, except for poor minorities who want to get counted and do not get counted. The big bump-up has been the Department of Justice, the Department of State, and the FBI. But no one would dare take money from there to pay for cops in the city, because that has big congressional, Presidential, administration and local support.

So if we are going to talk about who to take money from, let us sometimes be courageous enough to take it from where it exists, in bundles, and not where we could cripple the future count in our communities.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume just to respond to two of the points.

First of all, it was the Census Bureau, the Secretary of Commerce, who decided not to do the undercount. You are absolutely right, some of our colleagues opposed it. It was the Census Bureau that took this to the Supreme Court, insisting they had the right, and the Supreme Court agreed with them. They did it, the administration of the agency that you are standing up for did it.

The second point I would make is that 225 Members of this House supported the reauthorization of the COPS program at $1 billion. If you think that this program is some fringe program that very few people care about, I can show you on the map how many police departments have benefited from it. This is an enormously popular program. The difference is that these are cops that go directly to our neighborhoods, directly to our districts, directly to sheriffs' offices. This even bypasses the States, this program is run so well. That is what we have reduced to virtually nothing in this, and that is what we are trying to at least bump up to last year's level. Not an overly ambitious thing, just to last year's level.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. Just one last point, Mr. Chairman. I am, for the record, and continue to be a strong supporter of the COPS program. I will be working with the chairman to see how we can get better in conference and will be working with the chairman next year, hopefully, or should I say that next year the chairman will be working with me to make sure that we can bump up the COPS program.

But just for the record, when President Clinton proposed to this Congress the COPS program, it was a temporary program to reach 100,000 new cops. We are at 119,000 cops. So while it is true that we want to do more, let us not paint it as a failure or a shortcoming. In fact, it has produced and accomplished quite a bit.

Mr. WOLF. Would the Chairman tell us how much time is available for both sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 5 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. WOLF. Who gets to close?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I want to thank the chairman and the ranking member of the subcommittee, both of whom I have profound respect for and the difficulty of the job they face. But I think one thing needs to be made very clear. We have had a dramatic, precipitous drop in crime in this country under Democratic Presidents, under Republican Presidents, under Democratic Congresses, under Republican Congresses.

One thing that has been consistent is that, when that happens, although criminologists wring their hands trying to think of reasons, the bottom line is very simple. We, the Federal Government, got off the sidelines and said this is not just a local problem. This is a national priority. And we started systematically helping localities fund a COPS program. And it has worked; as hiring has gone up, crime has come down.

In the midst of all of that, September 11 happened, where we once again wrapped ourselves in the dogma of support for local law enforcement. We needed to do it. This program is the embodiment of a local law enforcement program that works. And what have we done? We have, through the course of time, virtually eliminated it. It is not hyperbole. We now have a $114 million allocation from a high of $1.4 billion. That is the fact.

What I propose to do in this amendment is frankly quite modest. It is to raise it up to last year's paltry level of $230-something million. And again to reiterate, the Census Bureau, while I have my beefs with it and I know other colleagues do, this is not intended to target them. This is intended to simply prioritize a program that we are ramping up towards a 2010 census and a program that is dying a slow death today, and also a program that I think we all agree is the front line of defense in our homeland security plan.

What we need to recognize with this amendment is that we have been given a false choice that the chairman did not choose and I did not choose. It is to take a bill that is underfunded, indisputably underfunded, take programs that are underfunded, even the census line is below the President's request, and what we are trying to do is trying to make a minor change to this one program which will allow the Census Bureau to go on. We do not touch the personnel line at all. But more importantly, we will allow the COPS program to continue functioning until we can pump some life into it.

We started that process. This Congress authorized the COPS bill that the other body has yet to act on for $1 billion, $1 billion, which is down, but it is still, in comparison to the $114 million that we see in the chairman's mark, obviously, a dramatic increase.

What does my amendment do? It does not stop us from counting people. It does not do that. What does my amendment do? It does not cause a raft of people to be laid off. It says what we are going to do is, we are going to take this ramp-up of the census department, make it a little slower, and we are going to allow the COPS program to breathe, to see another day, in a bipartisan fashion.

The COPS program is probably the most democratic, with a small ''d'' program, that we in Congress act on each year. There is no pattern of urban and rural, no pattern of north and south. Just about every locality, every city and State, every town and sheriff's department gets funds from it. They used to get hiring funds; now they get funds to either allow backfill with overtime or provide other resources to local police departments.

If my colleagues go home today and ask your police department what program do they care most about that the Federal Government provides, they will doubtlessly say, the COPS program, because they have seen it work.

There is a directory the size of a phone book of State, cities, and localities that have gotten aid from the COPS program. We are now at the point where only 15 percent of all of the eligible applicants are getting funding. If we allow this chairman's mark to pass, that number, by theory, will reduce in half, 7 percent.

What are we going to tell our police departments and our sheriffs' offices? Well, you are eligible for the grant, you got it a couple of years ago, but I am sorry, we cannot because we are funding a ramp-up in the Census Bureau. I do not believe they will be very satisfied with that.

I urge a ''yes'' vote on the Weiner/Keller/Ramstad/Quinn/Andrews/Van Hollen/Platts amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, and I thank the gentleman from New York as well. He and I have talked about this amendment.

I am a very strong supporter of the COPS program, I have been and continue to be a very strong supporter of the COPS program. And what the gentleman's amendment does is dramatically point out that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) do not have sufficient funds to properly reach the levels that would be appropriate for funding for some very, very worthwhile programs.

On the other hand, when you are in this position, obviously you have to make choices. If you are going to have a zero sum game, that is, add no additional dollars, which would not be allowed, you have to take from some place if you want to increase in another place. The problem with this amendment, as I have told my friend from New York, is not its objective, which is an excellent one, but it is the means that it employs to attain that objective, which will have very serious adverse results, in my opinion.

Now, the gentleman has indicated that he is confident it will have no adverse effect on employment levels. I think that is not the case. It is not the information I have. Now, as I have told the gentleman, obviously, I, as a matter of fact, went to high school a mile down the road from the Census Bureau, so I know something about the Census Bureau. It will, according to the Census Bureau, result in possibly as many as 1,000 RIFs. Now, that is a lot of people.

Now, in addition to adversely affecting the people, the gentleman's amendment will affect the product adversely. Now, what is the product? The product is getting ready for the census of 2010. Now, that sounds very simple, but in fact it is a multiyear process. And if you slow it down, you can never get back that time.

Therefore, although I strongly support the gentleman's objective, I cannot support and will therefore oppose his amendment, the means he employs to obtain that objective. I hope this amendment is defeated not because we should not be expanding the COPS program, but because we should not be doing it in this particular way.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for his comments. He is exactly right. Also, the COPS program is not authorized. It has not passed the Senate. And as the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) said, the goal was to get 100,000 cops; and they are well beyond.

I think the important points are the reduction, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM) said, will actually debilitate the 2010 census, resulting in the worse census ever. If this amendment were to pass for 1 year, we would have arguments in the future about how this count is not right and Members would be up in arms.

Secondly, once the cuts are made, there is no opportunity to restart the program.

The impact of this cut in this amendment: 1,000 jobs would be lost, no catching up, stops the census and this wastes the $500 million already spent and adds another $1 billion to the cost to the census in 2010. I urge strong defeat of the amendment.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support and as a cosponsor of this very important amendment.

After 9–11, the Federal Government called upon our States and locals to be even more vigilant and prepared for possible acts of terrorism in addition to their daily responsibilities to protect their communities from routine crime.

However, it doesn't make sense to put a whole lot more on their plates and then cut off the resources to help them meet these obligations. For example, this bill cuts the COPS program by more than 50 percent to $113 million.

That's why I am a proud cosponsor of this amendment to restore funding to the 2004 level—$237 million—for the COPS grant program.

We're not talking about a lot of money. In fact that's just a fraction of the $1 billion authorized that this chamber overwhelmingly approved in the DOJ reauthorization bill.

COPS has been repeatedly slashed over the years.

Mr. Chairman, I am also disappointed with the lack of funds in COPS to provide local and State agencies assistance to upgrade their communications systems so they can talk to each other, no matter the jurisdiction or agency. The lack of interoperable communications was a key factor in why at least 121 firefighters died in the World Trade Center's Towers in 2001.

Last year, Congress provided $84 million in the COPS program for interoperability upgrades, That's not much compared to the $10 billion estimate to make our Nation's first responders fully interoperable.

But this year it was zeroed out. And that's exactly what happened in the Homeland Security appropriations bill this chamber approved last month.

Meanwhile, we know it will cost between $6 billion and $10 billion to make our Nation's public safety agencies and first responders interoperable.

Bottom line: There's an awful lot of talk around here about interoperability, but no real, reliable resources to help make that happen so agencies can talk to each other in times of a catastrophic disaster or terrorist attack.

So Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Weiner-Keller-Stupak amendment to at least bring us back to where we were last year.

A 50 percent cut to the COPS grant program is a slap in the face to the millions of police officers who work tirelessly to protect their communities every day.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today on a bipartisan basis to support the amendment offered by my fellow New Yorker, Mr. WEINER, and the gentleman from Florida, Mr. KELLER, that would increase funds for the COPS program to last year's enacted level from what is currently more than a 50 percent cut.

Mr. Chairman, for the past few years, I have worked with countless Members on both sides of the aisle to restore and increase Federal funding for the COPS program. There are few programs that our government funds that work better or more efficiently than the COPS program does. Every day, our police men and women are patrolling our streets, keeping our constituents safe from crime and drugs, and have served as our first responders in times of national crises. Since implementation of the COPS program in the 90s, our Nation's violent crime rate has plummeted, and at least some of this drop must be attributed to the number of officers put on our streets through the COPS program.

The amendment we are offering today is a modest request for maintaining last year's funding level of $219 million. While the program could definitely use more money, and is actually authorized for FY2005 at $1 billion, we must as a Congress put more highly qualified men and women on our streets and at least fund COPS at last year's level.

In closing, while these are tight budgetary times, I believe that funding law enforcement programs like COPS is a justified use of our limited resources.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I urge my colleagues to support the Weiner-Keller-Quinn amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) will be postponed.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I have an amendment that I will not be offering, and I just say to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and Members, I have taken a good deal of time on the previous amendment, and I will not offer this amendment. But, frankly, it goes to another real weakness that we have to address, not only in this bill but across Congress.

Last year as we pursued the effort to step up the technology of DNA, we recognized that some fundamental things have been going on in the world for the last 10 years or so. As DNA has become an important crime-solving tool, States and localities have begun the process of databasing samples of DNA of convicted offenders. All 50 States have a program of one size or another, capturing one universe or another of convicted offenders; and we need to get all of them essentially in a giant Federal database so we can solve crimes.

But according to data which was collected, a program funded by this Congress through legislation that I wrote in the Committee on the Judiciary, we have found that hundreds of thousands, in the neighborhood of 600,000, victims of crimes at whose crime scenes evidence has been collected is sitting on the shelves waiting to be analyzed for shortage of only one thing, money.

No one thinks it is good policy. In fact, many of those victims are pressing up against the statute of limitations which means their case will not be able to be prosecuted, even if we get around to testing it.

Included in the report was an assessment that there are not enough crime labs, there are not enough facilities to store samples. There is not enough money to do tests. In the committee mark, the chairman does an excellent job of funding the President's request at $175 million. It is estimated we need three times that amount to be able to start to dig out of the backlog.

There is no doubt in anyone's mind that we have a problem. Of the law enforcement agencies surveyed nationwide for this study, 61 percent said they do not have enough space to store their evidence and had to dispose of some of it; 70 percent said the need for more space is highly critical, and State crime labs have an average of a 23.9-week backlog of analyzing data.

When a detective is investigating a sexual abuse case or rape, if they have to wait 23.9 weeks on average before the evidence is returned to them, they will tell you that justice delayed is justice that is denied.

My final point, we have had 154 cold cases solved because of additional DNA testing that the City of New York has funded on its own. We have leads of 204 more cases. What have they learned as they have done these hits, they have learned what we and criminologists already know, that rape and sexual abuse is a highly recidivistic crime. Someone that goes out and does one, chances are is going to find their way back into the system, having committed the crime again and again, finding more and more victims.

In the last exchange, we talked about how crime has plummeted. The one statistic that has not dropped, rape; rape has not. That has stayed virtually level throughout this decline in crime everywhere in the country. One of the ways we can solve six, seven, eight, or perhaps 10 or 20 crimes is by investing in DNA technology. For those who it catches, it obviously finds justice for those victims; and for those whom it frees, it allows those of us who are strong law enforcement types, like myself, to say that the system is working better.

I will not offer my amendment today because I do not want to rehash the same debate we just had; but I would ask that the chairman and the ranking member strongly consider the need for additional increases, and express my gratitude to them for fully funding the President's request.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman not going through this because of the time. I thank the gentleman for that. I did not want there to be any misunderstanding. In the subcommittee mark, there is a $77 million increase over the current level. We also have gone out of our way to make sure there are earmarks.

This is the largest increase provided to any State and local law enforcement program. It is a 44 percent increase. So I do not want the record to indicate that the committee has been slacking. We have really increased it quite dramatically, even more so particularly in a tight budget. But it is an important program, which I strongly support; and I know the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) strongly supports it also.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I rise to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Before I begin, I would like to thank the chairman and the ranking member for their support of the Legal Services Corporation. Legal Services funds 143 legal aid programs around the Nation to help poor Americans gain access to the judicial system. I appreciate the bipartisan full funding of the LSC program, and I hope we can work together in the neare future to remove some of the few remaining obstacles that are preventing this program from reaching its full potential.

My primary concern is over the ''private money restriction'' in this bill that applies to any nonprofit legal services organization receiving LSC funding. This restriction precludes these nonprofits from using any of their private funds—including individual donations, foundation grants, and State and local government funds—for any non-LSC-qualified services.

Non-LSC-qualified services include representing many categories of legal immigrants, including battered women and children; representing mothers in prison trying to maintain visitation and custody of their children; filing class actions to stop predatory lenders from preying on elderly homeowners; and educating people about their legal rights and then offering assistance in enforcing those rights. As a result of the private money restriction, most civil legal services providers are forced to stop providing non-LSC-qualified services altogether. Many of the most vulnerable individuals and families find themselves without access to legal services at all.

LSC recognized that this was a problem, but their attempted ''fix'' of this problem—allowing organizations to use their own private funds for non-LSC-qualified services only if they create physically separate nonprofits with separate staff, offices, and equipment—is prohibitively expensive and will result in fewer families being served.

There is a much simpler and more effective way to address the problem. Congress should require LSC grantees to abide by the same longstanding rules promulgated by OMB for nonprofit grantees of Federal agencies, by the IRS for all nonprofit 501(c)(3) and (c)(4) organizations, and by the Bush administration for faith-based groups. All of these rules authorize nonprofits receiving Federal funds to engage in various privately funded activities—like lobbying and praying—without requiring them to do so through physically separate entities with separate staff and equipment. I am hopeful that future conversations on LSC funding will consider similar rules so that we can remove the physical space requirement, which will make our LSC-funded providers much more effective.

My colloquy focuses on the issue of concentrated media ownership which has concerned colleagues on both sides of the aisle. Among the leaders in this fight is the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY), who unfortunately could not join us on the floor here today.

On June 2 of last year, the FCC voted to further relax the rules on media ownership in a move which many felt threatened the core democratic values of localism and diversity in the media.

As troubling as these new ownership rules were, the process by which the FCC arrived at them was equally troubling. Despite its mandate to include the American public in its rulemaking procedures, the commission held just one public hearing as it wrote these new rules, and it did not release the rules for public comment until just before it voted on them. Our communities were given virtually no say in the type of programming they are subjected to by broadcast television and radio.

Mr. Chairman, on June 24, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Philadelphia Circuit echoed the voice of the American people and many in Congress by reversing most of the FCC's media ownership rules. As a result, aside from the national media ownership cap that was adjusted by Congress last year, the rules in effect before the FCC's June 2, 2003, decision are again in place.

As the commission begins the process of proposing any new rules, we must make sure that the process is as open and inclusive as possible. Specifically, I believe the FCC should, first, hold a series of public hearings across the country to collect and analyze the various perspectives raised by citizens.

Secondly, allow sufficient time for public comment on the specifics of any proposed rules before the commission votes on them.

And, thirdly, take into account any independent studies of the effect of media consolidation on the level of indecent programming on the public airwaves.

I would ask my colleagues to comment on these expectations.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's comments. The gentleman from North Carolina over the past year has demonstrated that the rules governing media ownership are of great importance to the American people. I agree that the FCC's new media consolidation proceedings should be as open and as inclusive as possible and should include full periods of public comment on proposed rules and full consideration of any relevant independent studies as part of the process.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. I thank the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I also offer my strong support for an open, public rulemaking process that includes multiple public hearings, sufficient time for public comments, and any relevant independent studies.

The more than 2 million people who contacted the FCC to register their opposition to the rules offers clear evidence that we cannot rewrite media ownership rules without including the American public in the process. I will be monitoring the FCC's activities closely as it begins this process, and I urge all of my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk which I will not offer, but I would ask the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking member, if they would comment at the end of my comments.

My amendment would have increased money for ex-offender reentry by $50 million. It is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that our country has become the most imprisoned Nation on the face of the Earth per capita. We have about 2 million people in jails and penitentiaries in this country. Each year more than 600,000 of them return home to neighborhoods and communities. Many of them obviously have no place to go. Many of them have no programs to access.

Studies have suggested and have shown that if nothing happens with them, about 67 percent of them will have reoffended within a period of 3 years. About 53 percent of them will be back reincarcerated. In many States and localities, they cannot access jobs. For example, in my State, the State of Illinois, there are 57 job titles that an ex-offender cannot hold by State law without some kind of waiver. For example, an individual cannot cut hair, cannot get a license to be a nail technician, to be a cosmetologist, cannot work around any medical facility, cannot wash dishes in a nursing home or a hospital. So many of these individuals revert right back to whatever it was that got them incarcerated in the first place. That is, they are back on the streets in their neighborhoods hauling pills and thrills, nickles and dimes, whatever it is they have done to become a part of the underground economy.

It would seem to me that it would be far more cost effective if we were to create programs to facilitate their reentry back into society. Therefore, there is a need for far more resources to do so. I must confess I was hardened when I heard the President give his State of the Union address and suggested in that address that we needed to do something more for the more than 600,000 people who return each and every year from our Nation's jails and prisons.

Some communities are far more hard hit than others. Obviously, inner city communities that are severely depressed economically and rural depressed communities end up with the bulk of these individuals. Other communities may not feel them at all, but the reality is that if we want to have the opportunity to move freely throughout our Nation, throughout our country, then we have to do a more effective job of helping reclaim those individuals who have been incarcerated and are back trying to make a new life for themselves.

I would appreciate comments from the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking member.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) 100 percent. I was in a program called Man to Man with Charlie Harroway before I got elected to Congress. It was a prison reentry program helping men out of Lorton.

And I completely agree with the gentleman. I have been a great fan of Chuck Colson in Prison Ministries for that very reason. And the night the President offered that, I applauded, although I might tell the gentleman I do not think there was an awful lot of applause when he made that comment. There is $10 million in here. We have a budget problem. There is money in Labor-H. There is also money in VA–HUD.

I would urge the gentleman to also talk to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN). The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) have a very good bill. He may very well be on it, talking about re-entry. And I think it is absolutely critical. Unfortunately, we are number one in the world in the number of people in prisons per capita, and we just cannot put people in prison for years and years, no rehabilitation and no training when they come out and expect them as they get out to come back and be productive.

So I completely agree; and as we work through this process, anything I can do to help the gentleman. I just want to ask the gentleman one question: Why can they not cut hair and why can they not do those jobs that he mentioned?

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in that particular instance, State law prohibits it. There are barriers, hundreds of them, to the successful reentry of these individuals because many people have thought that the best way to handle crime was to have the most severe punishment for individuals that they could come up with. And many of those laws are still lingering on the books in many States throughout the Nation, and they too need to be revisited.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, in the book of Jeremiah it talks about justice, and I think the people need justice, but it also talks about righteousness and we have to deal with those. And perhaps there is an opportunity for the Committee on the Judiciary or we would be glad to maybe sometime have a hearing on that issue because I agree with everything the gentleman has said. And I have learned most of this really through Chuck Colson. We cannot just open the gate, allow a man to walk out, and expect him to have the opportunity to make it because he goes back to the same neighborhood, the same environment; and they need training. So as we move along, if we can work with the gentleman and do that. And the Portman-Souder bill, is the gentleman on there?

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, if we can work with him and help him, we will be glad to do that. And I appreciate his bringing up the amendment too.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his response.

And we are working with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER). We are all working on that bill.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Let me first say how I continue to be impressed by the gentleman's passion and ability to present this issue as he presents other issues. He speaks from the heart, and that is something that we always see. And he speaks for people who unfortunately in this society sometimes are totally forgotten. But he is speaking to the right two individuals.

First, no one, no one, does more for the concerns of those inmates than the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF). The gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) has through different approaches been careful to make sure that there is not a punishment but a rehabilitation of people, not a forgetting but perhaps a forgiving and a desire to have people be part of the society.

And, of course, as the gentleman knows, I represent an area of the Bronx that has always had an issue of crime and an issue of people wanting to come back into the community and at times being accepted and at times not being accepted.

So I assure the gentleman that we will continue to pay attention to this matter, continue to pay attention to the dollars allocated in the hope that some day this society fully understands the need to rehabilitate and welcome back people in a way that says they did what they did, they paid for that crime, now we want them to be a productive member of society. And I thank the gentleman for his work.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill through page 47, line 5, be considered as read and printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

There was no objection.

The text of the bill from page 28, line 19 through page 47, line 5 is as follows:

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN PREVENTION AND PROSECUTION PROGRAMS

For grants, contracts, cooperative agreements, and other assistance for the prevention and prosecution of violence against women as authorized by the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (''the 1968 Act''); the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (Public Law 103–322) (''the 1994 Act''); the Victims of Child Abuse Act of 1990 (''the 1990 Act''); the Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to end the Exploitation of Children Today Act of 2003 (Public Law 108–21); the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 (''the 1974 Act''); and the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000 (Public Law 106–386); $383,551,000 to remain available until expended, as follows—

(8) $2,950,000 for grants to improve the stalking and domestic violence databases, as authorized by section 40602 of the 1994 Act;

(9) $9,175,000 to reduce violent crimes against women on campus, as authorized by section 1108(a) of Public Law 106–386;

(10) $39,322,000 for legal assistance for victims, as authorized by section 1201 of Public Law 106–386;

(11) $4,458,000 for enhancing protection for older and disabled women from domestic violence and sexual assault as authorized by section 40802 of the 1994 Act;

(12) $14,078,000 for the safe havens for children pilot program as authorized by section 1301 of Public Law 106–386;

(13) $6,922,000 for education and training to end violence against and abuse of women with disabilities, as authorized by section 1402 of Public Law 106–386; and

(14) $10,339,000 for management and administration not elsewhere specified.

JUVENILE JUSTICE PROGRAMS

For grants, contracts, cooperative agreements, and other assistance authorized by the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 (''the Act''), and other juvenile justice programs, including salaries and expenses in connection therewith to be transferred to and merged with the appropriations for Justice Assistance, $349,000,000, to remain available until expended, as follows—

(1) $350,000 for concentration of Federal efforts, as authorized by section 204 of the Act;

(2) $84,000,000 for State and local programs authorized by section 221 of the Act, including training and technical assistance to assist small, non-profit organizations with the Federal grants process;

(3) $70,000,000 for demonstration projects, as authorized by sections 261 and 262 of the Act;

(4) $80,000,000 for delinquency prevention, as authorized by section 505 of the Act, of which—

(A) $10,000,000 shall be for the Tribal Youth Program;

(B) $20,000,000 shall be for a gang resistance education and training program to be administered by the Bureau of Justice Assistance and to be coordinated with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives and the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention; and

(C) $25,000,000 shall be for grants of $360,000 to each State and $6,640,000 shall be available for discretionary grants to States, for programs and activities to enforce State laws prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages to minors or the purchase or consumption of alcoholic beverages by minors, prevention and reduction of consumption of alcoholic beverages by minors, and for technical assistance and training;

(5) $10,000,000 for Project Childsafe;

(6) $20,000,000 for the Secure Our Schools Act as authorized by Public Law 106–386;

(7) $10,650,000 for Project Sentry to reduce youth gun violence, and gang and drug-related crime;

(8) $14,000,000 for programs authorized by the Victims of Child Abuse Act of 1990; and

(9) $60,000,000 for the Juvenile Accountability Block Grants program as authorized by Public Law 107–273 and Guam shall be considered a State:

Provided, That not more than 10 percent of each amount in this section may be used for research, evaluation, and statistics activities designed to benefit the programs or activities authorized, and not more than 2 percent of each amount may be used for training and technical assistance.

PUBLIC SAFETY OFFICERS BENEFITS

To remain available until expended, for payments authorized by part L of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796), such sums as are necessary, as authorized by section 6093 of Public Law 100–690 (102 Stat. 4339–4340); and $3,615,000, to remain available until expended for payments as authorized by section 1201(b) of said Act; and $2,795,000 for educational assistance, as authorized by section 1212 of the 1968 Act.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

SEC. 101. In addition to amounts otherwise made available in this title for official reception and representation expenses, a total of not to exceed $60,000 from funds appropriated to the Department of Justice in this title shall be available to the Attorney General for official reception and representation expenses.

SEC. 102. None of the funds appropriated by this title shall be available to pay for an abortion, except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term, or in the case of rape: Provided, That should this prohibition be declared unconstitutional by a court of competent jurisdiction, this section shall be null and void.

SEC. 103. None of the funds appropriated under this title shall be used to require any person to perform, or facilitate in any way the performance of, any abortion.

SEC. 104. Nothing in the preceding section shall remove the obligation of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons to provide escort services necessary for a female inmate to receive such service outside the Federal facility: Provided, That nothing in this section in any way diminishes the effect of section 103 intended to address the philosophical beliefs of individual employees of the Bureau of Prisons.

SEC. 105. Authorities contained in the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act (Public Law 107–273) shall remain in effect until the effective date of a subsequent Department of Justice appropriations authorization Act.

SEC. 106. Not to exceed 5 percent of any appropriation made available for the current fiscal year for the Department of Justice in this Act may be transferred between such appropriations, but no such appropriation, except as otherwise specifically provided, shall be increased by more than 10 percent by any such transfers: Provided, That any transfer pursuant to this section shall be treated as a reprogramming of funds under section 605 of this Act and shall not be available for obligation except in compliance with the procedures set forth in that section.

SEC. 107. Section 114 of Public Law 107–77 shall remain in effect during fiscal year 2005.

SEC. 108. The Attorney General is authorized to extend through September 30, 2006, the Personnel Management Demonstration Project transferred to the Attorney General pursuant to section 1115 of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107–296 (6 U.S.C. 533).

SEC. 109. (a) None of the funds made available in this Act may be used by the Drug Enforcement Administration to establish a procurement quota following the approval of a new drug application or an abbreviated new drug application for a controlled substance.

(b) The limitation established in subsection (a) shall not apply until 180 days after enactment of this Act.

SEC. 110. The limitation established in the preceding section shall not apply to any new drug application or abbreviated new drug application for which the Drug Enforcement Administration has reviewed and provided public comments on labeling, promotion, risk management plans, and any other documents.

SEC. 111. (a) Section 8335(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking ''(b)'' and inserting ''(b)(1)''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) In the case of employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the second sentence of paragraph (1) shall be applied by substituting '65 years of age' for '60 years of age'. The authority to grant exemptions in accordance with the preceding sentence shall cease to be available after December 31, 2009.''.

(b) Section 8425(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking ''(b)'' and inserting ''(b)(1)''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) In the case of employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the second sentence of paragraph (1) shall be applied by substituting '65 years of age' for '60 years of age'. The authority to grant exemptions in accordance with the preceding sentence shall cease to be available after December 31, 2009.''.

SEC. 112. (a) Subchapter IV of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 5759. Retention and relocation bonuses for the Federal Bureau of Investigation

''(a) AUTHORITY.—The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, after consultation with the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, may pay, on a case-by-case basis, a bonus under this section to an employee of the Bureau if—

''(1)(A) the unusually high or unique qualifications of the employee or a special need of the Bureau for the employee's services makes it essential to retain the employee; and

''(B) the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation determines that, in the absence of such a bonus, the employee would be likely to leave—

''(i) the Federal service; or

''(ii) for a different position in the Federal service; or

''(2) the individual is transferred to a different geographic area with a higher cost of living (as determined by the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation).

''(b) SERVICE AGREEMENT.—Payment of a bonus under this section is contingent upon the employee entering into a written service agreement with the Bureau to complete a period of service with the Bureau. Such agreement shall include—

''(1) the period of service the individual shall be required to complete in return for the bonus; and

''(2) the conditions under which the agreement may be terminated before the agreed-upon service period has been completed, and the effect of the termination.

''(c) LIMITATION ON AUTHORITY.—A bonus paid under this section may not exceed 50 percent of the employee's basic pay.

''(d) IMPACT ON BASIC PAY.—A retention bonus is not part of the basic pay of an employee for any purpose.

''(e) TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.—The authority to grant bonuses under this section shall cease to be available after December 31, 2009.''.

(b) The analysis for chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''5759. Retention and relocation bonuses for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.''.

SEC. 113. (a) Chapter 35 of title 5 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SUBCHAPTER VII—RETENTION OF RETIRED SPECIALIZED EMPLOYEES AT THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

''§ 3598. Federal Bureau of Investigation Reserve Service

''(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation may provide for the establishment and training of a Federal Bureau of Investigation Reserve Service (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'FBI Reserve Service') for temporary reemployment of employees in the Bureau during periods of emergency, as determined by the Director.

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

For expenses necessary for collecting, compiling, analyzing, preparing, and publishing statistics, provided for by law, $202,765,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there points of order to the bill?

If not, are there any amendments to this portion of the bill?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PERIODIC CENSUSES AND PROGRAMS

For necessary expenses related to the 2010 decennial census, $399,976,000, to remain available until September 30, 2006: Provided, That, of the total amount available related to the 2010 decennial census, $173,806,000 is for the Re-engineered Design Process for the Short-Form Only Census, $146,009,000 is for the American Community Survey, and $80,161,000 is for the Master Address File/Topologically Integrated Geographic Encoding and Referencing (MAF/TIGER) system.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HEFLEY

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 8, after ''$399,976,000'' insert ''(reduced by $173,806,000)''.

Page 47, lines 10 through 12, strike ''$173,806,000 is for the Re-engineered Design Process for the Short-Form Only Census,''.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and any amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent, except that the chairman and ranking minority member may each offer one pro forma amendment for the purpose of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First of all, I would like to commend the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), ranking member, for the very conscientious job they have done on this bill. They have had a difficult task. There is very much that is good in this bill, and I do not take away from that at all.

Also, I have sat here for an hour listening to the virtues of the Census Bureau; and, indeed, that is a very important function of our government, and I do not want to attack that.

But I do rise today to offer an amendment to reduce the budget for the Census Bureau by approximately $174 million. And the reason for that is that this is a particular thing, and let me read from the bill. $173,806,000 is for the reengineered design process for the short-form-only census. In a time of record or near-record deficits, and at any time, one wonders how in the world we can spend $173 million, almost $174 million, on redesigning a form, and a short form at that. And I think the short form probably does need to be redone, but at what cost? And I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) that perhaps they could come back to us next year or the next as we get closer, and we are talking 5 years out, that they could come back to us with a little more reasonable effort about what it takes to redesign a short form. If we do not have people at the Census Bureau, and he talked about the thousand jobs lost and all of that, but if we do not have people at the Census Bureau that have the ability to redesign a form for a whole lot less than $174 million, then we need some new people.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong opposition to the gentleman's amendment. The amendment would strike all funds to conduct a short-form census. In spite of the unprecedented success, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM) said, in 2000, the General Accounting Office concluded that Census 2000 was conducted at a high cost and great risk. As a result, the GAO recommended extensive and early planning and testing, including re-engineering of the process.

We are already well under way in the planning for 2010 Census. This plan relies on the short-form-only census that fulfills the core constitutional requirement, a complete and accurate count of the population of our country.

The Census Bureau's redesign distributes the cost of the decennial census throughout the decade, rather than lumping the entire cost during the decennial year. It ramps up. The gentleman's amendment would totally eliminate the funds for the short form. The cost of delaying or canceling the 2010 redesign and reverting to the old census method would result in higher costs for the taxpayer. The cost of returning to the old method would cost a total of $15 billion, $4 billion more than the current plan. The White House statement on the bill states clearly that the funding provided in this bill is the minimal amount viable for the 2010 census. So I urge rejection of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I have a lot of respect for the gentleman, but I guess today is beat-upon-the-census day. But a very short point: it would seem to me in saving dollars, as he wishes to do, the net effect is that we cannot have a census. We cannot take away that much money from the preparation and then conduct the census.

So I am not going to repeat all of the comments I made about the importance of the census. Only one, and that is that the community that I represent in the Bronx, the only way that the poorer communities can get a piece of the pie, be counted properly, is to continue to improve the census in how it is conducted and not devastate it. And, again, I do not know and, in fact, I would venture to say that I do not think the gentleman's intent is to stop the census from taking place because that is a constitutional question; but the effect is that while there may be a census taking place, we do not know what kind of a census it would be because if we cut out all the moneys for the preparation and the setup, there is no way that we can conduct it properly.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment for many of the reasons that the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and I gave earlier in support of having an accurate census. It takes years of planning for a census, and the funds people would cut today are the funds that pay for that planning. These cuts will result in a more costly or less accurate census or both. We need to put this funding forward now; and if we do not do it now, we will have to pay for twice the work next year, and that really does not save money.

A lot of the questions that are on the American Community Survey and on the census forms are questions that are required by law and are required by a legislative-mandated program. For example, we collect information on income to determine the number of children in poverty, and this data is used to distribute the title I education funds, and that pays for reading teachers and other specialists.

I know that every one of my colleagues has heard from their local communities when these funds are cut, and all of these funding formulas are tied to census numbers. The more accurate the numbers are, the fairer our democracy is.

So those who would cut the funding for this census and offer no replacement for the functions that the census serves, they would have us do without accurate numbers; and in the absence of accurate information, funds get distributed by those who control the purse strings, not based on the merit of the programs or the merit of the numbers.

So I would urge my colleagues to oppose the Hefley amendment in favor of directing Federal funds to where they can do the most good based on accurate census numbers. I urge a ''no'' vote on this amendment.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I do not want to extend the debate on the virtues of the census. We have heard the same things over and over again, and all of us agree with that. And I have no desire whatsoever, as the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) said, to do away with the census. We are supposed to do the census, and we need to do it as accurately as we possibly can. And we are not with this amendment doing away with all the setup for the census. We are doing away with the engineering of one form at the expense of $174 million, the engineering of one form. And we have 5 additional years to look at this and determine what is reasonable. There is going to have to be some money to do this because the form ought to be redone.

So we have 5 years for them to come back to us with a reasonable figure, and we will grant that figure so they can do it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, to close, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM), the chairman of the Committee on Government Reform's Subcommittee on Technology, Information Policy, Intergovernmental Relations and the Census.

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman from Virginia, and I rise to oppose the Hefley amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that we preserve the American Community Survey for a couple of reasons. One, it is optional. The controversy that has arisen over time is with the intrusiveness of the long form. The ACS replaces that.

But, secondly and even more importantly, the ACS gives communities and States and businesses and demographers annual data, good, solid, accurate annual data, not a snapshot on a decennial basis. If you look at the towns that are wiped out by tornadoes in the Midwest, they have to wait 10 years for the formulas affecting them to be updated. If you look at what has happened to midtown Manhattan since 2001, or northern Virginia, or what happened all around the country for a variety of reasons, the information is not updated until 10 years after the fact. They have to wait until the next big census.

The ACS replaces that with a shorter version that is a sampling of the Nation that is done every year. It is more accurate information, it is more helpful to the local governments who depend upon that information for the formulas that are generated by our government, and frankly, it is less intrusive to the American people.

Defeat the Hefley amendment. Protect the American Community Survey. It is a modernization of the American census.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUTNAM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, just very briefly, for instance, I just came across some information, just to give you an idea of what we are up against here.

The Naomi Berrie Diabetes Center of New York Presbyterian Hospital plans to use the American Community Survey data to identify Bronx, that is my district, neighborhoods with demographic characteristics associated with the risk of Type II diabetes in children.

I bring that up because I have been making the argument you have all day long that this information gathered by the census goes beyond what people think. It is vital information needed to provide incredible services to the community. Once they use those numbers based on the census data, they can make their argument before us at a public hearing, or at any kind of institutional hearing, saying we need this kind of help.

Who would have thought that Type II diabetes would be an issue for the census to be helpful with? That is just one of the countless items that they cover. So I say that, and I thank the gentleman for granting me this time, in agreement and in support of the gentleman's comments and words.

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the gentleman's point is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). All time having expired, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) will be postponed.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition, for expenses to collect and publish statistics for other periodic censuses and programs provided for by law, $171,140,000, to remain available until September 30, 2006, of which $73,473,000 is for economic statistics programs and $97,667,000 is for demographic statistics programs: Provided, That regarding construction of a facility at the Suitland Federal Center, quarterly reports regarding the expenditure of funds and project planning, design and cost decisions shall be provided by the Bureau, in cooperation with the General Services Administration, to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives: Provided further, That none of the funds provided in this or any other Act under the heading ''Bureau of the Census, Periodic Censuses and Programs'' shall be used to fund the construction and tenant build-out costs of a facility at the Suitland Federal Center.

AMENDMENT NO. 13 OFFERED BY MR. KUCINICH

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 57, line 11, after the dollar amount, insert the following: ''(reduced by $50,000) (increased by $50,000)''.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and any amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent, except that the chairman and ranking minority member may each offer one pro forma amendment for the purpose of debate.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) will control 15 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the Kucinich-Visclosky amendment corrects a significant flaw in the administration's manufacturing policy.

Let us review recent history. During President Bush's term, manufacturing has shrunk, factory jobs have decreased, steel companies have closed; 13 steel companies and 14.6 million tons of capacity have been shut down since this administration took office. Cheap foreign imports are up. The trade deficit is up. This was a $549 billion drag on the economy last year, and that is a record. In other words, on this administration's watch, the manufacturing base of our economy has eroded.

Now, it happens that much of American manufacturing occurs in a few States, and we are in an election year when those States get some attention. After ignoring the deterioration of American manufacturing for most of its term, this administration wants voters to believe that it cares, so the President announced just last month the creation of a Manufacturing Council.

The purpose of the Council, according to a news release, is to ''work with the Commerce Department to advocate, coordinate and implement policies that will help U.S. manufacturers compete worldwide.''

The Council is comprised of CEOs from a number of industries. However, it is marred by the omission of any union representative or, surprisingly, steel industry representatives. Apparently, we have to remind the administration about the importance of steel.

Steel makes the railroads, it holds up the buildings of our cities, it armors our tanks and ships, but basic steel is completely excluded from the President's Manufacturing Council.

All manufactured goods are made by people. Steel is made by people. These people form unions. Union labor built modern America. Union labor builds steel. But the President excluded union labor from his Manufacturing Council.

How can this administration be serious about manufacturing, when it ignores the basic steel industry and union workers? Does it think that buildings build themselves, that cars forge, stamp and assemble themselves, and that America can make basic steel appear by magic? Or does the administration's manufacturing plan actually consist of offshore factories, freely flowing imports and out-of-work American steelworkers?

The Kucinich-Visclosky amendment sends a clear message to the President: Congress believes that a manufacturing policy for America must include the steel industry and the participation of union labor. The amendment accomplishes this by expanding membership on the President's Manufacturing Council to include the steel industry and America's manufacturing unions. The amendment will cut a nominal amount of funding for the President's Manufacturing Council until that essential change is made, but it will have no effect on spending levels of the bill as a whole.

The Visclosky amendment is supported by the steelworkers union, and at the appropriate point in the record, Mr. Chairman, I will insert a letter from the United Steelworkers of America in favor of the Kucinich-Visclosky amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join with me in correcting a significant flaw in this administration's vision for America's future. A ''yes'' vote on the Kucinich-Visclosky amendment will encourage a future for domestic basic steel, a future in which respect, as well as good wages, are paid to unionized American workers.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The reason is, the amendment really does not do anything. I just read the amendment. It says, ''Page 57, line 11, after the dollar amount insert the following: 'Reduced by $50,000) (increased by $50,000).' '' So I understand what the gentleman is trying to do, but this does not do it. It just really moves money around.

I understand the gentleman's concern, and I would like to bring to the gentleman's attention to page 46 of the bill, line 22. We put $2 million in the bill for a grant to the National Academy of Public Administration to study the impact of offshoring on the economy and on the workforce in the United States.

I personally believe it is a problem. We have asked the National Academy because they are not involved in the political process. We use them for the FBI reforms and others. So they will look at that issue.

But this amendment, if it had been drafted to do what the gentleman intends it to do, it would be subject to a point of order. Because of that, I object to the amendment and urge a ''no'' vote.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, before I yield time to my good friend, the cosponsor of this amendment, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKY), I would like to respond to my good friend from Virginia that it is true that the amendment reduces the spending for the Council by $50,000 and then increases it by $50,000.

Our amendment is intended to condition $50,000 for the Manufacturing Council on the expansion of its membership to correct a serious mistake, and that is omitting basic steel and organized labor from advising them on manufacturing. The form of the amendment has the effect of referring to floor debate to instruct the interpretation of the bill. The amendment will literally do what we say it will do.

I also want to commend the gentleman for the concern that he has expressed about offshoring of our industries. I think it is important that we pay attention to that. This amendment will help this country put a renewed emphasis on a Manufacturing Council which has a glaring omission: They do not have the steel industry represented on it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKY), who has been an outstanding champion of American working men and women and the steelworkers, not only in his district, but all across America.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for originating the idea for this very necessary amendment; and as my colleague mentioned, the purpose is to point out two very serious flaws with the President's manufacturing council and to work through the adoption of this amendment their correction.

The President in September of last year comprised his manufacturing council theoretically to work with the Commerce Department to advocate, coordinate, and implement policies that will help U.S. manufacturers compete worldwide.

As my colleague from Ohio mentioned, however, the domestic steel industry is not represented on the council. I would point out that since December 31, 1997, 40 companies, more than 40 steel companies, have entered into bankruptcy, many of which have never emerged.

Since December 2000, 35,700 individual workers who were employed in basic steel have lost their jobs. During that period of time since December 31 of the year 2000, we have also seen a decline in tonnage to be produced in the United States by 14.6 million.

We have an industry that over the last 6 years has been in crisis, despite their beginning to come out of that crisis during the last 6 to 9 months. It was a mistake, and it was wrong for the President and the Department of Commerce not to have this very vital industry of our national defense included. They should be.

Secondly, I would note that there is no representative of organized labor on the council. The fact is 2.2 million individual American workers belong to unions and work in manufacturing. We do have Karen Wright, the president of Ariel Corporation, which makes gas compressors in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, on the President's council, but we do not have a member of the Boilermakers. We have Jim Padilla, who is the chief operating officer of Ford Motor Company; but we do not have a member of the United Auto Workers. We have George Gonzalez, who is president of Aerospace Integration Corporation, which is engaged in aircraft modifications; but we do not have a member of the Machinists Union. We have Wayne

Murdy, who is chairman of Newmont Mining Corporation of Denver, Colorado; but we do not have a member of the Mine Workers Union. We have Charles Pizzi, president of Tasty Baking Company, a baking corporation headquartered in Philadelphia; but we do not have one member of the Bakery, Confectionery, Tobacco Workers Or Grain Millers.

We have a lot of people making seven-figure salaries on the commission. We do not have people making five figures. We have Daniel Stowe, president of R.L. Stowe Mills, Inc., who is engaged in dyed yarn; but we do not have any members of the Union of Needle Trades, Industrial Or Textile Employees. We have Scott Thiss, who is chairman of S&W Plastics that does acrylic displays; but we do not have anyone from the Graphics Communications Workers. We do not have anyone from the Electrical Workers. We do not have anyone from the PACE Union. We do not have Sheet Metal Workers, Steelworkers, Teamsters or anyone from the United Food and Commercial Workers.

I do think it is important, given the fact that it is the workers for these very companies who are most at risk who have lost their jobs in the tens of thousands be represented on this council; and I would ask that the colleagues of this body adopt this amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to read a brief statement.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a brief statement and then yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

I have here a letter from the United Steelworkers of America, which says,

The United Steelworkers of America urges your support for an amendment that will be offered by Ohio Congressman Dennis Kucinich and Indiana Congressman Peter Visclosky. The United Steelworkers of America strongly supports the Kucinich-Visclosky amendment to H.R. 4754, because it corrects two substantial omissions from the Bush administration's recently created Manufacturing Council.

They go on to point out that no one from Labor is on the council and also that no one from the steel industry is on the council.

Mr. Chairman, I include this for the RECORD as follows:

UNITED STEELWORKERS OF AMERICA,
AFL–CIO–CLC,
Washington, DC, July 7, 2004.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The United Steelworkers of America (USWA) urges your support for an amendment that will be offered by Ohio Congressman Dennis Kucinich and Indiana Congressman Peter Visclosky to amend the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations bill. The USWA strongly supports the Kucinich-Visclosky Amendment to H.R. 4754 because it corrects two substantial omissions from the Bush Administration's recently created Manufacturing Council.

The new Council is comprised of CEO's from a number of industries, however, the steel industry was not included; and we can think of no other industry better prepared to offer constructive advice than the newly reconstituted American steel industry. The steel industry has become a national leader in such areas as technological innovation, productivity and labor relations.

The second glaring omission is that no one from labor is included on the Council. The labor movement has worked closely with all of its manufacturing companies to ensure continuing employment opportunities for American workers. The President's Manufacturing Council is seriously handicapped by not having the expertise of American labor in the important areas of health care, pensions and compensation.

The Kucinich-Visclosky amendment would cut a nominal amount of funding for the Council, but will have no effect on spending levels on the bill as a whole. We urge you to vote ''YES'' on the Kucinich-Visclosky amendment and help to ensure a manufacturing council that represents a broader cross section of American society.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM J. KLINEFELTER,
Assistant to the President, Legislative and Political Director.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say if someone has steel in their State, if they have a mill that was closed down, if they have workers, steelworkers that have been laid off or who face layoffs, if they have a mill which is at risk of closing, if they have retirees whose benefits have been adversely affected by changes in the economy with respect to steel, this amendment is something that they are going to care about because it says that it is time to give steel full status in the direction of America's manufacturing economy.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS), an outstanding voice for workers in this Congress and in America.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Ohio for yielding me this time. I rise in strong support of his amendment.

When I was a child, the three largest employers in my district were a shipyard, a soup factory, and an electronics plant that made radios and television sets. Today, the three largest employers in my district are a mortgage company, a hospital, and the State government. I have seen what it means when your manufacturing base erodes and blows up and shrivels away.

When the country tries to solve this very important problem, we need all voices heard; and it disappoints me that the administration is trying to tackle this problem belatedly, without hearing the two voices that are so very importantly added by this amendment: the steel industry, without which the country cannot defend itself and cannot continue as an industrial power; and the collectively bargained, duly elected voice of organized labor through labor unions.

Now, I know that sometimes the steel industry disagrees with the administration and, often, organized labor disagrees with the administration. But in our country, we do not just listen to people with whom we agree; we welcome all points of view, all interests so that we can come up with the best policy solution for the country.

The Kucinich amendment adds two very important voices: the steel industry and organized labor. Even if one does not agree with their positions on these issues, their positions ought to be heard as we approach the manufacturing atrophy of the United States of America.

So I would urge everyone who wants all voices to be heard to vote for this amendment which is so very much in the tradition of good government in this country. I urge a ''yes'' vote.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) will be postponed.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LIMITATION ON AMENDMENTS DURING FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4754, DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during further consideration of H.R. 4754 in the Committee of the Whole pursuant to House Resolution 701, no further amendment to the bill may be offered except:

Pro forma amendments offered at any point in the reading by the chairman or ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations or their designees for the purpose of the debate;

Amendments 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 20;

Amendments 5 and 6, each of which shall be debatable for 20 minutes;

Amendment 2, which shall be debatable for 40 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. PITTS regarding Department of State Diplomatic and Consular programs;

An amendment by Mr. WOLF regarding the Sudan;

An amendment by Mr. BACA regarding video violence;

An amendment by Mr. HEFLEY regarding an across-the-board cut of total appropriations;

An amendment by Mr. HEFLEY regarding an across-the-board cut of appropriations not required to be appropriated;

An amendment by Mr. HEFLEY regarding the Court of Federal Claims;

An amendment by Mr. BURGESS regarding the Federal Trade Commission;

An amendment by Mr. WEINER regarding Jerusalem;

An amendment by Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD regarding women's business centers;

An amendment by Mr. INSLEE regarding Justice Department detention of individuals;

An amendment by Mr. KING of Iowa regarding litigation support contracts;

An amendment by Mr. SHERMAN regarding enemy combatants, which shall be debatable for 20 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. WOLF or Mr. SERRANO regarding SBA microloans, which shall be debatable for 12 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. FLAKE regarding Cuba, which shall be debatable for 60 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. SMITH of Michigan regarding NIST and Contributions to International Organizations, which shall be debatable for 20 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. SHERMAN regarding preemption of State laws, which shall be debatable for 20 minutes.

Each such amendment may be offered only by the Member designated in this request, or the Member who caused it to be printed in the RECORD or a designee, shall be considered as read, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or the Committee of the Whole.

Except as otherwise specified, each amendment shall be debatable for 10 minutes, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent. All points of order against each of the amendments shall be considered as reserved pending completion of debate thereon; and each of the amendments may be withdrawn by its proponent after debate thereon. An amendment shall be considered to fit the description stated in this request if it addresses in whole or in part the object described.

The Speaker pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 701 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 4754.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, with Mr. HASTINGS of Washington in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole House rose earlier today, a demand for a recorded vote on amendment No. 13 offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) had been postponed and the bill was open for amendment from page 47, line 16, through page 57, line 13.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, no further amendment to the bill may be offered except:

Pro forma amendments offered at any point in the reading by the chairman or ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations or their designees for the purposes of debate;

Amendments 4, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 20;

Amendments 5 and 6, each of which shall be debatable for 20 minutes;

Amendment 2, which shall be debatable for 40 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. PITTS regarding Department of State Diplomatic and Consular programs;

An amendment offered by Mr. WOLF regarding the Sudan;

An amendment by Mr. BACA regarding video violence;

An amendment by Mr. HEFLEY regarding an across-the-board cut of total appropriations;

An amendment by Mr. HEFLEY regarding an across-the-board cut of appropriations not required to be appropriated;

An amendment by Mr. HEFLEY regarding the Court of Federal Claims;

An amendment by Mr. BURGESS regarding the Federal Trade Commission;

An amendment by Mr. WEINER regarding Jerusalem;

An amendment by Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD regarding women's business centers;

An amendment by Mr. INSLEE regarding Justice Department detention of individuals;

An amendment by Mr. KING of Iowa regarding litigation support contracts;

An amendment by Mr. SHERMAN regarding enemy combatants, which shall be debatable for 20 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. WOLF or Mr. SERRANO regarding SBA microloans, which shall be debatable for 12 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. FLAKE regarding Cuba, which shall be debatable for 60 minutes;

An amendment by Mr. SMITH of Michigan regarding NIST and Contributions to International Organizations, which shall be debatable for 20 minutes;

Each such amendment may be offered only by the Member designated in the request or a designee, or the Member who caused it to be printed in the RECORD or a designee, shall be considered as read, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question.

Except as otherwise specified, each amendment shall be debatable for 10 minutes, equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent. All points of order against each of the amendments shall be considered as reserved pending completion of debate thereon; and each of the amendments may be withdrawn by its proponent after debate thereon. An amendment shall be considered to fit the description stated in this request if it addresses in whole or in part the object described.

If there are no further amendments to this portion of the bill, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

For necessary expenses of the Office of Inspector General in carrying out the provisions of the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App.), $22,249,000.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I just take this time because I think it is important for Members to understand that when this bill is opened up that means that Members who think that they are protected under this unanimous consent request, they should not assume that if their amendments are at the end of the bill, they can simply come back tomorrow and they will be handled.

The Members need to protect their rights by being here at the time that the amendments need to be called up or else it is possible they could lose their right.

So I think Members needs to understand, everybody cannot go away and have a drink or supper until 9 o'clock. We are here working and if somebody needs to offer an amendment, they need to protect themselves. They cannot protect them if they are not here.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill through page 108, line 22, be considered as read and printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

There was no objection.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

SEC. 201. During the current fiscal year, applicable appropriations and funds made available to the Department of Commerce by this Act shall be available for the activities specified in the Act of October 26, 1949 (15 U.S.C. 1514), to the extent and in the manner prescribed by the Act, and, notwithstanding 31 U.S.C. 3324, may be used for advanced payments not otherwise authorized only upon the certification of officials designated by the Secretary of Commerce that such payments are in the public interest.

SEC. 202. During the current fiscal year, appropriations made available to the Department of Commerce by this Act for salaries and expenses shall be available for hire of passenger motor vehicles as authorized by 31 U.S.C. 1343 and 1344; services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109; and uniforms or allowances therefore, as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901–5902).

SEC. 203. Not to exceed 5 percent of any appropriation made available for the current fiscal year for the Department of Commerce in this Act may be transferred between such appropriations, but no such appropriation shall be increased by more than 10 percent by any such transfers: Provided, That any transfer pursuant to this section shall be treated as a reprogramming of funds under section 605 of this Act and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures set forth in that section: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall notify the Committees on Appropriations at least 15 days in advance of the acquisition or disposal of any capital asset (including land, structures, and equipment) not specifically provided for in this or any other Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act.

SEC. 204. Any costs incurred by a department or agency funded under this title resulting from personnel actions taken in response to funding reductions included in this title or from actions taken for the care and protection of loan collateral or grant property shall be absorbed within the total budgetary resources available to such department or agency: Provided, That the authority to transfer funds between appropriations accounts as may be necessary to carry out this section is provided in addition to authorities included elsewhere in this Act: Provided further, That use of funds to carry out this section shall be treated as a reprogramming of funds under section 605 of this Act and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures set forth in that section.

SEC. 205. Hereafter, none of the funds made available by this or any other Act for the Department of Commerce shall be available to reimburse the Unemployment Trust Fund or any other fund or account of the Treasury to pay for any expenses authorized by section 8501 of title 5, United States Code, for services performed by individuals appointed to temporary positions within the Bureau of the Census for purposes relating to the decennial censuses of population.

This title may be cited as the ''Department of Commerce and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2005''.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be used for publicity or propaganda purposes not authorized by the Congress.

SEC. 602. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 603. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any consulting service through procurement contract, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3109, shall be limited to those contracts where such expenditures are a matter of public record and available for public inspection, except where otherwise provided under existing law, or under existing Executive order issued pursuant to existing law.

SEC. 604. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of each provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 605. (a) None of the funds provided under this Act, or provided under previous appropriations Acts to the agencies funded by this Act that remain available for obligation or expenditure in fiscal year 2005, or provided from any accounts in the Treasury of the United States derived by the collection of fees available to the agencies funded by this Act, shall be available for obligation or expenditure through a reprogramming of funds that: (1) creates new programs; (2) eliminates a program, project, or activity; (3) increases funds or personnel by any means for any project or activity for which funds have been denied or restricted; (4) relocates an office or employees; (5) reorganizes offices, programs or activities; or (6) contracts out or privatizes any functions or activities presently performed by Federal employees; unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress are notified 15 days in advance of such reprogramming of funds.

(b) None of the funds provided under this Act, or provided under previous appropriations Acts to the agencies funded by this Act that remain available for obligation or expenditure in fiscal year 2005, or provided from any accounts in the Treasury of the United States derived by the collection of fees available to the agencies funded by this Act, shall be available for obligation or expenditure for activities, programs, or projects through a reprogramming of funds in excess of $500,000 or 10 percent, whichever is less, that: (1) augments existing programs, projects or activities; (2) reduces by 10 percent funding for any existing program, project, or activity, or numbers of personnel by 10 percent as approved by Congress; or (3) results from any general savings, including savings from a reduction in personnel, which would result in a change in existing programs, activities, or projects as approved by Congress; unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress are notified 15 days in advance of such reprogramming of funds.

SEC. 606. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used for the construction, repair (other than emergency repair), overhaul, conversion, or modernization of vessels for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in shipyards located outside of the United States.

SEC. 607. (a) It is the sense of Congress that, to the greatest extent practicable, all equipment and products purchased with funds made available in the Act should be American-made.

(b) In providing financial assistance to, or entering into any contract with, any entity using funds made available in this Act, the head of each Federal agency, to the greatest extent practicable, shall provide to such entity a notice describing the statement made in subsection (a) by the Congress.

(c) If it has been finally determined by a court or Federal agency that any person intentionally affixed a label bearing a ''Made in America'' inscription, or any inscription with the same meaning, to any product sold in or shipped to the United States that is not made in the United States, the person shall be ineligible to receive any contract or subcontract made with funds made available in this Act, pursuant to the debarment, suspension, and ineligibility procedures described in sections 9.400 through 9.409 of title 48, Code of Federal Regulations.

SEC. 608. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to implement, administer, or enforce any guidelines of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission covering harassment based on religion, when it is made known to the Federal entity or official to which such funds are made available that such guidelines do not differ in any respect from the proposed guidelines published by the Commission on October 1, 1993 (58 Fed. Reg. 51266).

SEC. 609. None of the funds made available by this Act may be used for any United Nations undertaking when it is made known to the Federal official having authority to obligate or expend such funds that: (1) the United Nations undertaking is a peacekeeping mission; (2) such undertaking will involve United States Armed Forces under the command or operational control of a foreign national; and (3) the President's military advisors have not submitted to the President a recommendation that such involvement is in the national security interests of the United States and the President has not submitted to the Congress such a recommendation.

SEC. 610. The Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Small Business Administration shall provide to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and of the House of Representatives a quarterly accounting of the cumulative balances of any unobligated funds that were received by such agency during any previous fiscal year.

SEC. 611. (a) None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act shall be expended for any purpose for which appropriations are prohibited by section 609 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999.

(b) The requirements in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 609 of that Act shall continue to apply during fiscal year 2005.

SEC. 612. Any costs incurred by a department or agency funded under this Act resulting from personnel actions taken in response to funding reductions included in this Act shall be absorbed within the total budgetary resources available to such department or agency: Provided, That the authority to transfer funds between appropriations accounts as may be necessary to carry out this section is provided in addition to authorities included elsewhere in this Act: Provided further, That use of funds to carry out this section shall be treated as a reprogramming of funds under section 605 of this Act and shall not be available for obligation or expenditure except in compliance with the procedures set forth in that section.

SEC. 613. None of the funds provided by this Act shall be available to promote the sale or export of tobacco or tobacco products, or to seek the reduction or removal by any foreign country of restrictions on the marketing of tobacco or tobacco products, except for restrictions which are not applied equally to all tobacco or tobacco products of the same type.

SEC. 614. (a) None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act shall be expended for any purpose for which appropriations are prohibited by section 616 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999.

(b) The requirements in subsections (b) and (c) of section 616 of that Act shall continue to apply during fiscal year 2005.

SEC. 615. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to this Act or any other provision of law may be used for—

(1) the implementation of any tax or fee in connection with the implementation of subsection 922(t) of title 18, United States Code; and

(2) any system to implement subsection 922(t) of title 18, United States Code, that does not require and result in the destruction of any identifying information submitted by or on behalf of any person who has been determined not to be prohibited from possessing or receiving a firearm no more than 24 hours after the system advises a Federal firearms licensee that possession or receipt of a firearm by the prospective transferee would not violate subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, or State law.

SEC. 616. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, amounts deposited or available in the Fund established under 42 U.S.C. 10601 in any fiscal year in excess of $650,000,000 shall not be available for obligation until the following fiscal year.

SEC. 617. None of the funds made available to the Department of Justice in this Act may be used to discriminate against or denigrate the religious or moral beliefs of students who participate in programs for which financial assistance is provided from those funds, or of the parents or legal guardians of such students.

SEC. 618. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of State shall be available for the purpose of granting either immigrant or nonimmigrant visas, or both, consistent with the determination of the Secretary of State under section 243(d) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, to citizens, subjects, nationals, or residents of countries that the Secretary of Homeland Security has determined deny or unreasonably delay accepting the return of citizens, subjects, nationals, or residents under that section.

SEC. 619. None of the funds made available to the Department of Justice in this Act may be used for the purpose of transporting an individual who is a prisoner pursuant to conviction for crime under State or Federal law and is classified as a maximum or high security prisoner, other than to a prison or other facility certified by the Federal Bureau of Prisons as appropriately secure for housing such a prisoner.

SEC. 620. (a) None of the funds appropriated by this Act may be used by Federal prisons to purchase cable television services, to rent or purchase videocassettes, videocassette recorders, or other audiovisual or electronic equipment used primarily for recreational purposes.

(b) The preceding sentence does not preclude the renting, maintenance, or purchase of audiovisual or electronic equipment for inmate training, religious, or educational programs.

SEC. 621. None of the funds made available in this Act may be transferred to any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government, except pursuant to a transfer made by, or transfer authority provided in, this Act or any other appropriation Act.

SEC. 622. The Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Small Business Administration shall, not later than two months after the date of the enactment of this Act, certify that telecommuting opportunities are made available to 100 percent of the eligible workforce: Provided, That, of the total amounts appropriated to the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Small Business Administration, $5,000,000 shall be available only upon such certification: Provided further, That each Department or agency shall provide quarterly reports to the Committees on Appropriations on the status of telecommuting programs, including the number of Federal employees eligible for, and participating in, such programs: Provided further, That each Department or agency shall designate a ''Telework Coordinator'' to be responsible for overseeing the implementation and operations of telecommuting programs, and serve as a point of contact on such programs for the Committees on Appropriations.

SEC. 623. (a) Tracing studies conducted by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives are released without adequate disclaimers regarding the limitations of the data.

(b) The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives shall include in all such data releases, language similar to the following that would make clear that trace data cannot be used to draw broad conclusions about firearms-related crime:

(1) Firearm traces are designed to assist law enforcement authorities in conducting investigations by tracking the sale and possession of specific firearms. Law enforcement agencies may request firearms traces for any reason, and those reasons are not necessarily reported to the Federal Government. Not all firearms used in crime are traced and not all firearms traced are used in crime.

(2) Firearms selected for tracing are not chosen for purposes of determining which types, makes or models of firearms are used for illicit purposes. The firearms selected do not constitute a random sample and should not be considered representative of the larger universe of all firearms used by criminals, or any subset of that universe. Firearms are normally traced to the first retail seller, and sources reported for firearms traced do not necessarily represent the sources or methods by which firearms in general are acquired for use in crime.

SEC. 624. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available under this Act may be used to issue patents on claims directed to or encompassing a human organism.

SEC. 625. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to pay expenses for any United States delegation to the United Nations Human Rights Commission if such commission is chaired or presided over by a country, the government of which the Secretary of State has determined, for purposes of section 6(j)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)(1)), has repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism.

SEC. 626. Section 604 of the Secure Embassy Construction and Counterterrorism Act of 1999 (title VI of division A of H.R. 3427, as enacted by section 1000(a)(7) of Public Law 106–113) is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end:

''(e) CAPITAL SECURITY COST SHARING.—

''(1) AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all agencies with personnel overseas subject to chief of mission authority pursuant to section 207 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 3927) shall participate and provide funding in advance for their share of costs of providing new, safe, secure United States diplomatic facilities, without offsets, on the basis of the total overseas presence of each agency as determined annually by the Secretary of State in consultation with such agency. Amounts advanced by such agencies to the Department of State shall be credited to the Embassy Security, Construction and Maintenance account, and remain available until expended.

''(2) IMPLEMENTATION.—Implementation of this subsection shall be carried out in a manner that encourages right-sizing of each agency's overseas presence.

''(3) EXCLUSION.—For purposes of this subsection 'agency' does not include the Marine Security Guard.''.

TITLE VII—RESCISSIONS

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

OFFICE OF JUSTICE PROGRAMS

STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE

(RESCISSION)

Of the unobligated balances available under this heading, $20,000,000 are rescinded.

COMMUNITY ORIENTED POLICING SERVICES

(RESCISSION)

Of the unobligated balances available under this heading, $61,000,000 are rescinded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order to this portion of the bill?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against section 607. This provision violates clause 2(b) of House Rule XXI. It proposes to change existing law, and therefore constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill in violation of House rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other Member wish to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair will rule.

The Chair finds that this section, in part, expresses a legislative sentiment. The section, therefore, constitutes legislation in violation of clause 2 of Rule XXI. The point of order is sustained, and the section is stricken from the bill.

Are there further points of order to this portion of the bill?

If not, are there any amendments to this portion of the bill?

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge any Members, following up what the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) said, any Members that have amendments, we have been here since noon and we are waiting on them, so I would urge them, if they are listening, to come to the floor and offer the amendments so we can move the process along. So if Members can hear and are available, we would encourage them to come so amendments could be offered.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PITTS

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 67, line 19, after the dollar amount, insert the following: ''(reduced by $25,000) (increased by $25,000)''.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House today, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to commend the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) on his leadership in the human rights issues around the world. It is because of his leadership on these issues that I offer my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the human rights organizations that have produced myriad accounts of torture in detention facilities and prisons around the globe, our own State Department in the annual Country Reports, the Human Rights sections, reports on the use of torture in each nation covered by the report, and our Congress has passed the Torture Victims Relief Act of 1998 to fund recovery programs for victims of torture, both in the United States and abroad.

Men, women, even children have endured torture at the hands of government officials around the world. Although it is difficult to find exact figures, Amnesty International estimates that 117 countries worldwide still practice torture.

My amendment provides $25,000 for the State Department's Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor to compile and publish a list of foreign government officials who order the use of, are involved in, or engage in torture as defined by the United Nations against torture and other cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment or punishment.

I have had the privilege but heartwrenching experience of hearing about torture from firsthand accounts of the victims, from a woman in North Korea to firsthand reports in Egypt. We remember one case in Al Qush where a government official, in order to find a criminal, arrested and tortured many of the 1,100 Coptics in order to find someone to confess committing the crime.

In China, there are numerous reports of Tibetan Buddhists, Falun Gong members, house church pastors and congregants, democracy activists who spent time in prison reform camps where they endured torture by communist officials. A recent account, Pastor Gong Shengliang, who may die in prison because of the effects of torture, is ongoing.

In May of last year, the Washington Post detailed a story of Concei da Silva who was brutally tortured in Angola. While in prison, officials hung him upside down, his veins were slashed, chunks of flesh were carved out of his chest with a machete, electricity applied to parts of his body, teeth removed. Awful things have happened.

In Latin America, terrible stories of torture. Sister Dianna Ortiz has spoken out strongly regarding her horrible kidnapping torture at the hands of the Guatemalan security forces.

The torture is horrifying, deeply affecting victims' lives. And those responsible for these crimes should be brought to justice. Unfortunately, in many countries the perpetrators will not be punished for their crimes as torture is systemic.

I and many of my colleagues strongly believe that publicizing the names of those involved in torture, government officials, can help in the campaign to end the use of torture by government officials; and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment that provides $25,000 to the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor to compile and maintain a public list of individuals involved in torture.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I want to thank the gentleman for offering it.

This really follows the principle that was used during the Carter administration and during the Reagan administration by keeping lists. Therefore, if you happen to be going to a country, when you go to China you are able to check to see that X and Y have been tortured, so when you meet with government officials, you can raise those cases. This is the way it was done in the Carter administration and in the Reagan administration.

This is a very good amendment, and I thank the gentleman for offering it, and I rise in strong support of it. I urge that we accept it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I join the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) in strong support. This is an issue that the chairman has been very strong on. We all are.

The whole situation, however, brings up a question, and I ask the gentleman not to take this as a sarcastic statement; I just need clarification. Does this include any ordering of torture used by a government near to us, like our own government, or is this just for foreign governments?

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PITTS. The gentleman knows that our policy is not to torture. Our system is progressing in the light of day with the investigations and the prosecution of torture, but this would apply to any government officials who use torture.

Mr. SERRANO. But it would be any foreign government official? I know this sounds like some sort of a sarcastic comment, but I am really trying to get to the bottom of this. Are you only applying this to foreign governments, or could this, in fact, be a question of our own government if, in fact, somebody ordered torture on some people in recent times?

Mr. PITTS. We do not specify, we do not say ''foreign.'' We specify that the State Department compile a list of any government officials who use torture.

Mr. SERRANO. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman does open up an issue which is greater perhaps than what he intended to do, but the possibility exists that if the State Department did its job properly, and in this case it probably will not, we will never get to the bottom of the issue of who ordered torture on some people that we may be dealing with in this country. But, nevertheless, I think it is a great thought and a great idea, and I support it.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

So the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 7 OFFERED BY MR. PAUL

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Chairman. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 7 offered by Mr. PAUL:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used for the American Community Survey.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House today, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment that denies all funding for the American Community Survey. And if anyone has been listening to the debate early on, the Census has come up numerous times already, and much of what I have to propose here has in many ways has been debated. But I do want to bring it up one more time dealing specifically with the American Community Survey.

One of the reasons why it came to my attention is just recently I received this survey in the mail here in my temporary residence in Virginia. It is rather intimidating and it is rather threatening when you receive this in the mail. And I have the envelope here and right up on the front they have warned me. They said ''The American Community Survey form enclosed. Your response is required by law.''

This was the second time. Evidently, I missed it the first time, so the second time around I have been threatened by the census police that I better jolly well fill it out or the police will be knocking on the door. And that does happen because I have known other individuals who have not filled out the long form, and they come to the door, the police are there deciding they want this information.

It was stated earlier in the discussion about the census that this was certainly the law of the land. The law of the land is very clear that the Congress gave the authority; the Census Bureau certainly does not do this on its own. We, the Congress, gave it the authority to do this. But it just happens to be an authority that we had no right to give. We have no right to give this authority to meddle into the privacy of American citizens.

Article 1, section 2 of the U.S. Constitution mandates a national census every 10 years. I am in support of that, and I vote for funding for a national census every 10 years for the sole purpose of congressional redistricting. But, boy, this is out of hand now. We are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars and it is perpetual. The argument earlier was, we have to have to survey continuously because we save money by spending more money. Ask people a lot of questions, personal questions about bathrooms and incomes and who knows what.

This survey I have got here, here is a copy of it. It is called the American Community Survey. And it says the Census Bureau survey collects information about education, employment, income, housing for the purposes of community uses so that they can do community economic planning.

How did we ever get involved in all of this? It is almost sacred now that we fund these programs and they are going to be perpetual, perpetual meddling in the personal lives of all American citizens, 24 pages here.

I got to wondering, I did not fill it out the first one. I got the second one, and they are threatening me. I know I did not vote for it, but you who did means, you are ready to send the census police out to get me.

I am getting worried about this. I mean, what is the penalty? So I looked it up, and it is not insignificant. Do you know what my colleagues have done and threatened me with? A $1,000 penalty for every question I do not answer. Wow, that is scary stuff. I had a friend that he did not answer the long form, after a couple of requests, the census police came and knocked on his door and said you better, you better answer all these questions or you are going to be penalized.

So that is the kind of thing that we do and everybody talks about all these wonderful advantages, but it is stuff we do not need. I mean, if we want this information, if people need this information in the communities, they ought to get it themselves. This whole idea that we have to collect all this information for the benefit of our communities to do all this economic planning, I mean, it is just so much more than we need, and we are not talking about 10 or $15 million. We are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars, and it is not just every 10 years.

It is continuous with this perpetual threat, you tell us what we want to know and we are going to put it into the record, and if not, for every question you do not answer, we can fine you $1,000 if you do not tell us your age and where you work and how far you have to go to work and how long it takes you to go to work.

I mean, this is way too much of Big Brother. Let me tell my colleagues, I think the American people cannot be very happy with all this meddling.

So my proposal is let us at least get rid of the American Community Survey, which is the ongoing nuisance that we put up with, and limit what we do here to what the Constitution has told us we can do and what we should do, and that is, count the people every 10 years for the purpose of redistricting. But big deal, who cares. For all we do around here, how often do we really pay attention to the details of the Constitution?

So I ask my colleagues to support this amendment and cut this funding.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in opposition. The census is one of the oldest civic functions of our Nation. Article I of the U.S. Constitution requires enumeration of the population every 10 years. The census is the largest peacetime mobilization of our government personnel.

The American Community Survey is designed to replace the long-form portion for future decennial censuses, therefore leaving only the short-form portion.

Many Americans found that filling out the long-form survey to be burdensome, and many said this contributed to the declining response rate of the long form, therefore costing the American taxpayer more money to have census takers returning to the nonresponding households.

The Committee on Government Reform and the Committee on Appropriations have worked to ensure that the Census Bureau has the necessary funding to carry out its mission and to ensure that for 2010 there will only be a short form census.

The question of constitutionality of the American Community Survey is not new. On April 4, 2002, the General Accounting Office responded to the vice-chairman of the Committee on Government Reform's request for an opinion. The GAO stated, ''Census clearly has authority to conduct the ACS.'' There is sufficient legal authority.

If we do not fund the ACS, we will ensure we have a two-form census in 2010, which will cost an additional $4 million for the taxpayer.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Paul amendment. This amendment would kill funding for the American Community Survey, which is one of the most exciting and innovative improvements to the Census in decades.

The American Community Survey is a new approach for collecting accurate, timely information needed for critical government functions such as funding highway planning, school lunch programs, and community block grants.

The decennial census used to have two parts: (1) it counted the population for reapportionment and redistricting purposes; and (2) it obtained demographic, housing, social, and economic information by asking one out of every six households to fill out a "long form."

This data has been used for the administration of Federal programs and the distribution of billions of Federal dollars funding.

Planners and other data users had to rely on long form information that was only gathered every ten years to make decisions that were expensive and affected the quality of life for thousands of people.

In a nation changing as rapidly and profoundly as ours, using eight, nine or even ten-year-old data was simply unacceptable.

Starting in 1996 the Bureau began developing the American Community Survey to replace the long form. It had three main purposes:

1. To provide Federal, state, and local governments an accurate information base for the administration and evaluation of government programs,

2. To improve the 2010 Census by allowing everyone to only be required to fill out the short form, and

3. To provide data users with timely demographic, housing, social, and economic data updated every year that can be compared across states, communities, and population groups.

In order to insure that the data are available for use in time for the 2010 Census we must fund as completely as possible the ACS for this next fiscal year.

It is also important to point out that Congress mandates every question asked by this survey.

If this amendment were to pass, every one of these questions would still be asked, but the Census would have to use the old-fashioned, less effective long form method.

Finally, I want to take notice of the fact that there have been several amendments offered today which reduce or zero out funding for various aspects of the 2010 Census development. Members need to understand that funding cuts today cannot just be added in three or four years from now. It takes time to develop an excellent Census and Congress should give the Bureau the time it needs to create that Census.

I urge my Colleagues to stand up for our communities and states and oppose the amendment to kill the American Community Survey.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WOLF

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLF:

Page 92, line 16, before the colon insert the following: '', of which $13,000,000 shall be available for microloan technical assistance, and of which $1,000,000 shall be transferred to and merged with appropriations for 'Business Loans Program Account' and shall remain available until expended for the cost of direct loans''.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and a Member opposed each will control 6 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of the amendment. We worked with the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking member, on this amendment. It restores the microloan program. We are in agreement, and I ask that the amendment be approved.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) rise to claim the time in opposition, even though he is in favor?

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, let me first clarify something. Am I correct in that there has been a mix-up here and I am no longer allowed to strike the last word on a pro forma basis?

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendments are in order on the bill and not to the amendments.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I should have read the small print.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, would it be possible to reclaim my time?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) reclaims his time.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 5½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank the chairman for this amendment. This amendment is one that committee members and other Members had asked for, and it is important that we move ahead on it.

We had a long discussion before on the 7(a) loan, and we passed an amendment. We needed to take care of this one which we already had agreed on in order to really move ahead the support that we put forth for the SBA and for the various loans, and so I am a full supporter, and I thank the chairman for bringing it forward.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER).

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bipartisan amendment which the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has offered to restore funding for the Small Business Administration's microloan program, and I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman Wolf) and the gentleman from New York (Ranking Member Serrano) and both of their staffs for their good work in bringing the amendment to the floor.

The SBA microloan program began as a 5-year pilot in 1991; and throughout its existence, the program has had strong bipartisan support in both Chambers.

The Small Business Programs Reauthorization Amendments Act of 1997 made the microloan pilot a permanent program, and the accompanying House report in 1997 stated: ''Begun in 1991, this program has served the smallest and often least noticed section of the small business community. The committee has recognized the efficacy of this program and changed it from demonstration to permanent program status.''

Today, 170 microloan intermediary lenders nationwide provide loans to our smallest businesses whose financial needs can often not be met by traditional lenders.

Since its creation, the program has provided $213 million in loans, as well as technical assistance to 19,000 microenterprises; and in the process, it has created 60,000 jobs. We should remember that the average loan here is about $12,000, well below other SBA programs and far below conventional business loans by banks.

Most importantly, microloans have assisted large numbers of women- and minority-owned businesses, rural businesses and start-up businesses.

The microloan program is the only SBA program to offer both loans and technical assistance to small businesses, a combination that enables an entrepreneur with a good idea to become a businessperson with a good bottom line.

In my district, one intermediary, the Western Massachusetts Enterprise Fund, has made 113 loans totaling over $1.4 million, and that program has made a difference for many entrepreneurs, providing the financing and technical assistance necessary to launch or expand their businesses.

If we fail to restore funding for the microloan program, we will hamper the efforts of small entrepreneurs nationwide. Small businesses bring innovative ideas to market and create much-needed jobs.

I urge a ''yea'' vote on the Wolf-Serrano amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 8 OFFERED BY MR. PAUL

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Insert before the short title at the end of the bill the following title:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. (a) None of the funds made available in this Act to the Department of Justice may be used—

(1) to take any legal action against a physician for prescribing or administering a drug not included in schedule I of the schedules of controlled substances under section 202(c) of the Controlled Substances Act for the purpose of relieving or managing pain; or

(2) to threaten legal action in order to prevent a physician from prescribing or administering such a drug for such purpose.

(b) None of the funds made available in this Act to the Department of Justice may be used—

(1) to take any legal action against a person for acts relating to the prescribing or administering by a physician of such a drug for such purpose; or

(2) to threaten any legal action against a person in order to prevent the person from engaging in acts relating to the prescribing or administering by a physician of such a drug for such purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, what this amendment does is it denies funding to the Department of Justice to prosecute doctors for prescribing legal drugs.

The reason I bring this up is to call attention to the Members of a growing and difficult problem developing in this country, and that is, that more and more doctors now are being prosecuted by the Justice Department under the laws that were designated for going after drug kingpins, for illegal drug dealers; but they are using the same laws to go after doctors.

It is not one or two or three or four. There are approximately 400 doctors who have been prosecuted, and I know some of them, and I know they are good physicians; and we are creating a monster of a problem. It does not mean that I believe that none of these doctors have a problem. As a physician, I know what they are up against and what they face, and that is, that we have now created a system where a Federal bureaucrat makes the medical decision about whether or not a doctor has prescribed too many pain pills. I mean, that is how bureaucratic we have become even in medicine; but under these same laws that should be used going after kingpins, they are now being used to go after the doctors.

As I say, some of them may well be involved in something illegal and unethical; and because I still want to stop this, this does not mean I endorse it, because all the problems that do exist with some doctors can be taken care of in many different ways. Doctors are regulated by their reputation, by medical boards, State and local laws, as well as malpractice suits. So this is not to give license and say the doctors can do anything they want and cause abuse because there are ways of monitoring physicians; but what has happened is we have, as a Congress, developed a great atmosphere of fear among the doctors.

The American Association of Physicians and Surgeons, a large group of physicians in this country, has now advised their members not to use any opiates for pain, not to give adequate pain pills because the danger of facing prosecution is so great. So the very people in the medical profession who face the toughest cases, those individuals with cancer who do not need a couple of Tylenol, they might need literally dozens, if not hundreds, of tablets to control their pain, these doctors are being prosecuted.

Now, that is a travesty in itself; but the real travesty is what it does to the other physicians, and what it is doing is making everybody fearful. The other doctors are frightened. Nurses are too frightened to give adequate pain medications even in the hospitals because of this atmosphere.

My suggestion here is to deny the funding to the Justice Department to prosecute these modest numbers, 3 or 400 doctors, leave that monitoring to the States where it should be in the first place, and let us get rid of this idea that some bureaucrat in Washington can determine how many pain pills I, as a physician, can give a patient that may be suffering from cancer.

I mean, this is something anyone who has any compassion, any concern, any humanitarian instincts would say we have gone astray; we have done too much harm; we have to do something to allow doctors to practice medicine. It was never intended that the Federal Government, let alone bureaucrats, interfere in the practice of medicine.

So my suggestion is let us take it away, take away the funding of the Justice Department to prosecute these cases, and I think it would go a long way to improving the care of medicine. At the same time, it would be a much fairer approach to the physicians that are now being prosecuted unfairly.

And let me tell you, there are plenty, because all they have to do is to be reported that they prescribed an unusual number of tablets for a certain patient, and before you know it, they are intimidated, their license is threatened, their lives are ruined, they spend millions of dollars in defense of their case, and they cannot ever recover. And it is all because we here in the Congress write these regulations, all with good intentions that we are going to make sure there is no abuse.

Well, there is always going to be some abuse. But I tell you there is a lot better way to find abusive doctors from issuing pain medication than up here destroying the practice of medicine and making sure thousands of patients suffering from the pain of cancer do not get adequate pain medication.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition, and I yield myself such time as I may consume. At this point I just want to say that my mom died of cancer, my father died of cancer, and I would have done anything to help them, and OxyContin can make a big difference. But there has been a lot of abuse. There have been a lot of doctors that have been doctor factories that are just prescribing this.

There were some in my area, and I have seen families that have been devastated in southwest Virginia. I understand what the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is saying, but in southwest Virginia, in the rural areas down in Lee County, there is probably not a family that has not been impacted by the abuse of prescriptions. So it is a balance.

I understand the gentleman, being a doctor, how he feels, but there are cases where there is tremendous abuse. That is why I think we have to keep monitoring this.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PAUL. This amendment would have the practical effect of putting doctors above the law. It would prevent the federal government from taking action against a doctor who abused his privilege of issuing prescriptions for controlled substances, including addictive and dangerous drugs like OxyContin. While I have great respect for doctors, and I know that the vast majority of them are honest, law-abiding and motivated solely by their concern for their patients, we can't exempt them from our drug laws.

First, there is no evidence that the federal government is ''persecuting'' doctors for prescribing pain killers. Last year, in fiscal 2003, only 50 doctors nationwide were arrested for illegal prescriptions. That is only five one-thousandths of one percent (.005%) of all the doctors who have DEA licenses to write prescriptions. No one can seriously argue that the DEA is engaging in some kind of campaign to stop doctors from writing prescriptions for pain killers.

Second, the tiny number of physicians who were arrested were not arrested just because they prescribed pain medication. They were arrested because they abused the public trust and the clear standards of the profession set by their peers. These were essentially drug dealers hiding behind a white coat. They used their professional status to obtain sexual favors, drugs, and money.

Last year, six doctors were arrested for trading drug prescriptions for sex. Twenty-three doctors were arrested for writing prescriptions in exchange for money, four doctors were arrested for issuing prescriptions in exchange for other illegal drugs, and seventeen were arrested for writing prescriptions to obtain drugs to feed their own drug habits. (I am attaching a listing of those arrests, provided by the DEA, to my statement for the RECORD.)

Let's take a look at some examples. Dr. Bernard Rottschaefer was convicted last March for writing 153 illegal prescriptions for painkillers; five women testified that he demanded sex in exchange for those prescriptions, usually for OxyContin. Another doctor wrote them in the dressing room of an adult nightclub, and another issued prescriptions for sex, firearms, lawn and farm equipment, and labor on his personal property. I don't think anyone in this House would want to give people like that a blanket immunity from the law.

Now, it may be argued that the amendment would only prohibit enforcement when drugs are prescribed ''for the purpose of relieving or managing pain''. But this distinction is meaningless—because anyone who uses a narcotic can argue that it is to relieve pain. When dealing with problems like drug trafficking and abuse, we can't just rely on the word of drug dealers and addicts. Instead, current law already recognizes a reasonable judge of the conduct of doctors—the professional standards set by their peers. I would like to note that the American Medical Association, the largest professional organization in the country representing doctors, has itself refused to support this amendment—precisely because it would immunize the few bad apples who abuse their professional trust.

In closing, I'd like to point out that this amendment would seriously undermine our goal of reducing OxyContin and other prescription drug abuse. As President Bush stated in the National Drug Control Strategy for 2004, the problem of prescription drug abuse is a growing threat that needs to be addressed. The misuse of prescription drugs was the second leading category of illicit drug use after marijuana, with an estimated 6.2 million Americans having used prescription drugs for nonmedical, illegal purposes. OxyContin was abused in 2002 at a rate ten times higher than in 1999. Abuse by high school seniors of Vicodin is more than double their use of cocaine, ecstasy or methamphetamine. Meanwhile, Internet pharmacies (which frequently rely on illegal prescriptions), ''doctor shopping'' and other illegal drug diversion tactics are presenting new challenges to law enforcement and the community. Those few doctors who contribute to this problem must be held accountable for their actions. I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

DEA ARRESTS OF PHYSICIANS—FISCAL YEAR 2003

SUMMARY

Prescriptions in exchange for sexual favors—6; prescriptions in exchange for drugs—4; prescriptions for money—23; obtaining drugs by fraud/personal abuse—17. Note: 50 arrests reported for Fiscal Year 2003 which includes 2 separate arrests of the same physician.

PHYSICIANS OF NOTE

Two physicians, Dr. H and Dr. S, maintained medical practices specializing in the treatment of chronic pain. While both physicians treated some legitimate pain patients, they both also practiced outside the scope of legitimate medical practice by prescribing OxyContin for other than legitimate medical reasons. These illegal activities led to their investigation and subsequent arrests. Two individuals died from overdoses of the OxyContin prescribed by one of the physicians. One physician has been convicted of conspiracy to distribute controlled substances. The other physician is awaiting trial.

PRESCRIPTIONS IN EXCHANGE FOR SEXUAL FAVORS

Dr. R—Pittsburgh—provided prescriptions for controlled substances in exchange for sex. Date opened: 4/16/01; date of arrest: 6/3/03; conviction date: pending; charges: unlawful distribution of Oxycodone, Fentanyl, & Xanax.

Dr. W—Washington—wrote prescriptions to female members of motorcycle gangs in exchange for sex. Date opened: 6/10/03; date of arrest: 6/10/03; conviction date: 1/14/04; charges: unlawful distribution of Percocet.

Dr. A—Dallas—obtained morphine through fraudulent use of another physician's DEA registration. Date opened: 12/19/02; date of arrest: 12/30/02; conviction date: 4/24/03; charges: acquiring CS by fraud (Morphine).

Dr. T—Greensboro—used hospital DEA registration to write prescriptions in phony names for self abuse. Date opened: 4/8/03; date of arrest: 7/17/03; conviction date: pending; charges: acquiring CS by fraud.

Dr. J—Kansas City—diverted Fentanyl from hospital for personal use and falsified patient records to cover up the diversion. Date opened: 12/14/02; date of arrest: 4/1/03; conviction date: 6/18/03; charges: unlawful possession of CS.

Dr. R—Kansas City—used DEA to fraudulently obtain Hydrocodone for personal use. Date opened: 4/8/02; date of arrest: 12/2/02; conviction date: 11/13/03; charges: acquiring CS by fraud (Hydrocodone).

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment because it proposes to change existing law and constitutes legislation in an appropriation bill and therefore violates clause 2 of Rule XXI.

The rule states in pertinent part: ''An amendment to a general appropriation bill shall not be in order if changing existing law. The amendment imposes additional duties.''

So I ask for a ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any Member wish to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair finds that this amendment includes language requiring a new determination, namely the purpose for which certain controlled substances were prescribed. The amendment therefore constitutes legislation in violation of clause 2 of rule XXI.

The point of order is sustained and the amendment is not in order.

AMENDMENT NO. 9 OFFERED BY MR. PAUL

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 9 offered by Mr. PAUL:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to pay expenses for any United States contribution to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This amendment denies funds to UNESCO, and it is an amendment that is identical to what I brought up last year and got a recorded vote on and had a debate on last year.

Last year, I brought it up because we were just getting back into UNESCO. President Ronald Reagan, in 1984, had the wisdom of getting us out of UNESCO because of its corrupt nature, not only because it had a weird, false ideology, contrary to what most Americans believed, but it was also corrupt. He had the wisdom to get us out of it, yet last year we were put back in UNESCO, and I was hoping that we would not fund it.

Last year, the Congress approved $60 million for this purpose, which was 25 percent of UNESCO's budget. Does that mean we have 25 percent of the vote in UNESCO? Do the American people get represented by 25 percent? How much do we get out of it? What is the American taxpayer going to get? The American taxpayer gets a bill, that is all. They do not get any benefits from it.

And there is one part of UNESCO that is particularly irritating to me, and it is called the Cultural Diversity Convention. This is an organization that actually is very destructive and will play havoc with our educational system. It also attempts to control our education through the International Baccalaureate Program, and that, too, introduces programs and offers them to our schools. It is not forced, but there are already quite a few schools that have accepted these programs.

Now, let me just give my colleagues an idea of the type of philosophy they are promoting, but what we as the Congress promote with what the American taxpayers are paying for. Here it is:

''The international education offers people a state of mind, international mindedness. We are living on a planet that is becoming exhausted. And now listen to this, this is what the U.N. UNESCO people are saying about education in the various countries, including ours. Most national educational systems at the moment encourage students to seek the truth, memorize it and reproduce it accurately.'' Now, one would think that is not too bad of an idea. ''The real world is not this simple,'' so says UNESCO. ''International education has to reconcile this diversity with the unity of the human condition.''

I mean, if those are not threatening terms about what they want to do, and yet here we are funding this program and the American taxpayers are forced to pay for it. Now, there are a few of us left in the Congress, I see a couple on the floor tonight, that might even object to the Federal Government telling our States what to do with education, and of course there is no constitutional authority for that. We have the Leave No Child Behind, but it looks like everyone is going to be left behind before we know it.

But here it is not the Federal Government taking over our Federal education system; this is the UNESCO, United Nations, taking over our educational system. It does have an influence. Sure, it is minimal now, but it will grow if we allow this to continue.

So I ask my colleagues to please vote for my amendment, and I sure hope they allow a vote on this amendment. It was permitted last year, so it surely would be permitted this year.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, when we had a vote on the floor, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) offered the amendment to not join UNESCO. I supported the amendment. I did not believe that we should have joined UNESCO. The decision was made by the Bush administration. Also, on that vote, if my memory serves me, I was on the losing side. I think it may have been Lantos v. Hyde. I voted with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and we were on the losing side. History will have to check the exact timing of that vote.

The bill includes $71.9 million for the U.S. share of funding for membership in UNESCO, and I have had serious questions about UNESCO. UNESCO was rife with corruption and problems. The Bush administration, who wanted to join, has a very good and a very tough ambassador, a kind of a no-nonsense person. I have met her and think highly of her. The President announced 2 years ago at the United Nations, and I remember seeing the speech, that the U.S. would rejoin UNESCO. The First Lady, Mrs. Bush, addressed the UNESCO plenary session in Paris, France, last year.

The U.S. withdrew from UNESCO in 1984 when the organization was rife with corruption and anti-Western bias, and I think the current ambassador, I have spoken to her, is going to make sure they do not go back to the corruption and anti-Western bias. It was mismanaged, and she has pledged that she would stay after that.

Since that time, they have undergone reforms and the current leadership is committed. They say it stands for fundamental human rights and democratic principles; and participation in the UNESCO, many say, will allow us to be engaged as international partners in a number of issues. This year, the U.S. was elected to the UNESCO legal committee, the intergovernmental biotechnics committee, and other committees.

I think now, although I do tend to agree with the gentleman, I think it is a fact and I think he raises some very, very valid points, but to strike funding for UNESCO just after the Bush administration has joined, just after President Bush's wife, Mrs. Bush, has spoken at a plenary session, I think would send a wrong message. So I reluctantly rise in opposition to the amendment out of respect to the Bush administration, having been on the losing side.

But we are going to watch this. We are going to watch and see what UNESCO does, and I am glad this issue was raised by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL). But in light of the vote on the floor and in light of the Bush administration request and the President's speech, and in light of the First Lady attending and addressing the plenary session, I would ask defeat of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time and conclude with another statement from a director of UNESCO, who further explains exactly what they are up to. He said in June that ''the program remains committed to changing children's values so they think globally rather than in parochial national terms from their own country's viewpoint''. So if we talk about an attack on national sovereignty starting at the lowest level through an educational system, it is right here.

The chairman, obviously, is not very enthusiastic about this. But my job as a representative is not to follow what other people tell me. My job is to read these bills and to know what they say and to represent my district. Because somebody asks us to finance this and our instincts tell us there is something very sinister about this, I would say that that is not a very strong reason to oppose this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 5 OFFERED BY MR. TANCREDO

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 5 offered by Mr. TANCREDO:

At the end of the bill, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act for the State Criminal Alien Assistance Program under the heading ''DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—OFFICE OF JUSTICE PROGRAMS—STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE'' may be used in contravention of section 642(a) of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (8 U.S.C. 1373).

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO).

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I rise once again this evening to propose an amendment similar in some respects to one I have proposed in the past and different in others, that is to say, it is similar in that it does this: It says we have a law on the books, it was passed in 1996, and the law says that all States and localities therein are prevented from impeding the flow of information to the Immigration and Naturalization Service. The successor agency is, of course, BICE. They are also prevented by the law from actually stopping any information from coming from the old INS and now BICE.

That is what the law says. It is there, on the books, and every single time I offer this amendment the other side gets up and starts arguing the law as to whether or not we should have the law, why it should be in place, would we not be better off without a law? But that is not the purpose of my amendment, of course, to repeal the law. It is to enforce the law. That is all I ask.

We are a body that makes laws. We should, of course, also encourage the enforcement of those laws or we should repeal them. That is what we should be doing here. It is, I suggest, quite inappropriate in a way for us to pass laws and then essentially tell the country and the people out there that we should wink at them; pretend they do not exist; pretend they are really not on the books, because enforcing them would be problematic from certain standpoints, especially politically.

Now, what kind of message does that send every time we do this? But every time there is a vote against my amendment, that is essentially what we are saying, that even though we have laws on the books, we will ignore them.

My amendment is designed to prevent those local governments from obtaining SCAAP funding if they violate the law. That is it. If they are in line with the law, doing what the law requires of them to do, no problem. Presently, the law does not have any sort of mechanism that would suggest we are enforcing it. There is no penalty, and so we have got cities, counties, that are in fact violating the law. They are doing that with impunity. We should not allow that to continue. We should either repeal the law if we do not like it, or we should have some sort of mechanism to enforce it.

I have proposed time and time again that we should try and enforce the law. That is all this amendment does.

If State and local governments violate the Federal law and pass sanctuary policies that encourage illegal aliens to come here, why should any American taxpayer be asked to absorb these costs? That is what we are doing. SCAAP funds are funds that we provide to cities and counties for the purpose of reimbursing them for the costs of keeping people in their prisons who are here illegally. They are illegal aliens, and there are costs involved.

On the one hand, we have counties submitting bills to the Federal Government for the incarceration of some of these folks, but on the other hand refusing to provide that information to the Bureau of Immigration Control and Enforcement, BICE. They want the money for what they say they are putting out for enforcement of the law, but then they refuse to actually give that information to BICE. It is not a situation that is sustainable and certainly not one that we should countenance. We should at least say if you are not going to abide by the law of the land that requires you to provide this information, you cannot get the money from the SCAAP funds. That is all it is.

Again, I know we are going to get into this argument about whether or not we should have the law on the books. That is a different argument. Let us just argue whether or not once we have the law on the books we should not try to enforce it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

A similar amendment was offered on DHS, and it failed by a vote of 148 to 259, so we are back to exactly the same thing. SCAAP funds are not available to States that violate current law, and the Justice Department tells us the gentleman's amendment would have no impact.

I understand what the gentleman is trying to do. In the State of Virginia, we have a program where our State police are basically deputized to in essence enforce the immigration laws. But it is like Don Quixote. So what I would recommend the gentleman to do, and I mentioned this to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) earlier, the gentleman and the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) and others ought to sit down with the administration, with the Department of Justice and also with the Department of Homeland Security and fashion a regulation in that sense. I think there are other ways of doing this. I think you are just sort of coming up against it. My sense may be wrong. Maybe the 148 will go to 152, I do not know.

But I think the gentleman really wants to be successful and do something. However, the Department of Justice says the Tancredo amendment would have no effect on those who receive SCAAP grants. I am not going to take a lot more time, but I would urge the gentleman, and I will be glad to help the gentleman set up a meeting with BICE and with the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Justice to see how to do this. But since it does nothing and says nothing and is in essence the same amendment I believe was offered on homeland security, I think the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) defeated by 148 for and 259 against, for that reason I urge a ''no'' vote on the amendment, and offer to work with the gentleman, BICE, and the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) to set up a meeting.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman for extending his offer in helping the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) on his amendment.

I think the gentleman has made a very clear point about the Tancredo amendment. I rise to oppose it because it is a law that is already in force; but more importantly when it comes to local and State governments and first responders and people dealing with homeland security, it is threatening to deny them funds because of some inadvertence that might occur as relates to Federal immigration laws.

We recognize what the laws are in this land. We recognize the responsibilities of Federal law enforcement on immigration issues. But if we begin to start cutting resources from local communities, we can be assured that national security will be jeopardized, and that is what the Tancredo amendment does. It makes communities less safe.

Let me say, for those of us who come from very diverse communities, it is particularly difficult for the police to establish relationships that are the foundation of successful police work if the impression is that resources are going to be cut if they do not do the work of the Federal Government. That means they are going to create an atmosphere of fear and intimidation and an attitude that anyone who has a different surname or looks differently is under the scrutiny of local law officials.

I would hope that this amendment would not be supported, and of course recognize that in the exploitation possibilities you also have the potential of criminals exploiting the fear of immigrants by forcing local law enforcement authorities to be immigration officials. I would hope that this amendment would not be supported. It has been defeated, as the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) said earlier, earlier in the year, in the homeland security legislation.

I can tell Members it makes it very difficult for communities who are working toward better relationships with our immigrant communities. Might I say to my colleagues, this is not the way to enforce immigration laws. The way to do it is to have real immigration reform that will help secure the homeland and balance the rights of individuals within this country. I think we can do that by not having this amendment which then would further divide Federal and local officials by cutting funds which are so desperately needed for homeland security.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to Representative TOM TANCREDO's amendment to the Commerce, Justice, and State Appropriations Act for FY2005. The effect of this amendment would be to enact a provision from the CLEAR Act (H.R. 2671) and its Senate counterpart (S. 1906). These bills compel State and local police officers to become Federal immigration agents by denying them access to Federal funds they are already receiving if they refuse these additional duties. Specifically, the Tancredo amendment would deny funds to any State or local government that limits disclosure of immigration status.

We count on State and local governments and law enforcement authorities as first responders when national security is threatened. Since 9/11, they have taken on significant new duties and are facing dwindling resources. Further cutting their resources is not going to help enhance national security, and, in fact, the Tancredo provision could make our communities less safe.

In immigrant communities, it is particularly difficult for the police to establish the relationships that are the foundations for successful police work. Many immigrants come from countries in which people are afraid of police, who may be corrupt or even violent, and the prospect of being reported to the immigration service would be further reason for distrusting the police.

In some cities, criminals have exploited the fear that immigrant communities have of all law enforcement officials. For instance in Durham, NC, thieves told their victims—in a community of migrant workers and new immigrants—that if they called the police they would be deported. Local police officers have found that people are being robbed multiple times and are not reporting the crimes because of such fear instilled by robbers. These immigrants are left vulnerable to crimes of all sorts, not just robbery.

Many communities find it difficult financially to support a police force with the personnel and equipment necessary to perform regular police work. Having State and local police forces report immigration status to the Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement, ICE, would be a misuse of these limited resources.

ICE also has limited resources. It does not have the resources it needs to deport dangerous criminal aliens, prevent persons from unlawfully entering or remaining in the United States, and enforce immigration laws in the interior of the country. Responding to every State and local police officer's report of someone who appears to be an illegal alien would prevent ICE from properly prioritizing its efforts.

Local police can and should report immigrants to the immigration service in some situations. The decision to contact the immigration service, however, should be a matter of police discretion.

I urge you to vote against this amendment.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Tancredo amendment. The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) stands in front of us today, as he has in the past, as a strong voice to try to gain the attention and support of Members of Congress towards a problem that we refuse to deal with. This Congress is refusing to deal with one of the greatest threats to the well-being of our people. In California, our education system is going down. The health care available to our people is being diluted and people are dying because of this. Our criminal justice system is breaking down. People are being murdered because we are not dealing with this issue. The issue, of course, is illegal immigration. We have to do something about it.

In this case, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) is simply saying the cities or States that will not help us enforce the laws that already exist, they should not be getting government money in the name of that enforcement.

If we do not handle this situation, our people are going to pay an even heavier price. I can see a day when the Social Security system totally falls apart because we have not dealt with this issue. It is a disgrace that Congress is refusing to act upon this. At least support this issue which is very reasonable.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell the gentleman from California that he left out in blaming immigrants the Chicago fire and the San Francisco earthquake, which they probably were also responsible for.

It is amazing in 2004 we continue this immigrant-bashing situation. The fact of life is the gentleman read off a list of things that are falling apart in California somehow because people are not being reported or because local police departments are not engaging in activities that local police departments do not want to engage in.

We had 24 discussions before, and it is a simple issue. Local law enforcement does not want to be involved in this issue. Regardless of what we like to see here and how much we would like to bash these folks, local law enforcement does not want to do it. Let me try to say once more why, because no one seems to be paying attention to this issue.

Local law enforcement wants to be able to have a person, regardless of their immigration status, come to them and report a crime, come to them and participate in solving a crime. If they now feel that the local police officer, the local sheriff, has been deputized, if you will, as an immigration officer, we are never going to get any help from the local community.

Now, one issue is the fact that we may have people in this country who are not here with documents. That is one issue. But since they are here, what are we going to do, ignore them, ignore their ability to help us and solve a local crime, ignore their ability to help us be involved in the community?

My God, we talk so much here about how much we want to help local law enforcement and how we stand for them and how much money we want to give them, and now we want to burden them with a situation that they, I repeat for the last time, do not want to be involved with. This amendment should be defeated for what it is, a Latino outreach program that will fail miserably.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Once again I keep thinking when I hear these arguments that somehow we have not gotten the point across of what exactly this is doing. I wish we had a big sign that said: This is the law and this is my amendment. This is the law that is on the books. This is not debatable at this point, or at least it is not part of my amendment.

If the gentleman does not like the fact that we have a law on the books saying that the people of the cities and counties should help, or let me put it this way, there is a law that says that they should not actively oppose our attempts to actually enforce immigration law, that is what it is. It does not require anything. It does not require deputization of more people or to get them involved with the actual immigration enforcement. It just says you cannot take an action that prevents the flow of information or the acceptance of information. That is it. That is the law that is on the books. What we are trying to do is assess a penalty.

The idea that local law enforcement, they do not want this because somehow people will not come forward, the reality is this, their task is to enforce the law also. They take an oath to do that, just as we do. Here we sit debating as to whether or not we should enforce a law we have already passed. That is the bizarre nature of this debate. It has nothing to do with immigrant bashing or any of the other stuff that gets brought up in this discussion.

It has to do with whether or not the law on the books should be enforced. It is a simple measure that should not be clouded with all of the kind of rhetoric and epithets that are thrown around every time we start to debate this. It is the law. Should we have it? If we should not, let us repeal it. As long as it is there, let us enforce it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, let us note we are not talking about legal immigrants. Over a million people are permitted in this country legally every year. We can be very proud of that. In fact, the people most concerned about illegal immigration in this country are the million legal immigrants every year who obey the rules and stand in line and who we are slapping in the face by permitting millions of illegals to come into our country.

Trying to blur the distinction between legal and illegal is not an honest way of presenting the case. The bottom line is we are only talking about illegal immigration. We are not talking about local crime. I am not in favor of having the local judiciary to enforce criminal matters that are made criminal by the Federal Government. I am, however, in favor of the Federal Government presiding over its constitutional authority and obligation to control immigration policy in this country. And if States and cities want money from the Federal Government concerning illegal immigration and the incarceration of illegal immigrants, they will have to go along and enforce that Federal law because immigration is the rightful authority of the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, let me just note this. We can make light of the fire that has swept through Chicago and destroyed homes and natural disasters. This is not a natural disaster that is befalling our people, and it is not funny. The fact is our health care system is breaking down in California and people are losing their lives. It is breaking down in other parts of the country. Our criminal justice system is breaking down. People are being murdered. Our citizens are losing their lives because we refuse to deal will illegal immigration.

The Social Security System could fall apart in 10 years if this illegal immigration continues to overwhelm us. What are we doing? Why are we permitting our children to go into our educational institutions to have a diluted education? This is ridiculous.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) 30 seconds.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California knows me well and knows I was not being funny when I mentioned the fact that the gentleman left out the Chicago fire and the San Francisco earthquake. My point was that the gentleman is blaming immigrants for everything that is wrong in this country. The fact of life is that that is what we do, and the fact of life is that sometimes we look at people who bash immigrants on a daily basis, and then when an amendment comes before us, we cannot believe that it is anything else. But more of the same, which is immigrant bashing, that is what it is. That is what it looks like, that is what it smells like, and that is how I see it.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is a difficult issue, because I want to respond to my friend, my colleague's advice and his willingness to work on this issue, and that is a strong allure, because number one, I know he is a gentleman of great integrity, and I do want to do more than just simply make a statement to, as he said, be a Don Quixote. I do want to in fact move this issue forward; and if that is the best way to do it, then perhaps what I will do is withdraw this amendment, but I will do so only after I once again state that it is important for this body to make laws and then enforce them.

We call ourselves a Nation of laws ruled by law. There is only one way we can actually prove that. It is to stop this ridiculous winking at the laws we make. Enforce them or repeal them. That is all I ask, and that is what I hope that we will do. And I will work with the gentleman and take him up on his offer.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 6 OFFERED BY MR. FARR

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 6 offered by Mr. FARR:

Insert before the short title at the end the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act to the Department of Justice may be used to prevent the States of Alaska, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Maine, Maryland, Nevada, Oregon, Vermont, or Washington from implementing State laws authorizing the use of medical marijuana in those States.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved, and pursuant to the order of the House today, the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is very straightforward. In simple terms, the Farr-Rohrabacher-Hinchey-Paul amendment prohibits the use of funds in the bill from preventing States that have medical marijuana laws from implementing them.

As a result, the States have medical marijuana laws on the books they can implement, regulate and enforce them, just like now. States that do not have medical marijuana laws on the books remain subject to the overarching Federal law.

This amendment does not stop law enforcement officials from prosecuting illegal use of marijuana. This amendment does not encourage the use of marijuana. This amendment does not encourage the use of drugs in children. This amendment does not legalize any drugs. This amendment does not change the classification of marijuana. This amendment is recognized as States' rights to oversee the medical scope of practice of doctors in their States, to prescribe drugs as doctors see as necessary for medical conditions.

Today's Los Angeles Times points out that the Justice Department's medical marijuana war seems increasingly out of step with the whole country. Last fall, the Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling barring Federal officials from prosecuting doctors for their recommendations.

Just 2 weeks ago, the United Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and other mainstream religious groups supported doctors' rights to prescribe pot as a when-all-else-fails treatment for the seriously ill. The best way to thwart casual use of this drug is to let doctors prescribe it in closely circumscribed and regulated ways such as the States do.

Now, there are nine States that have passed these laws. The voters are speaking, and they are doing it more in every State. Just recently Vermont. Alaska, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Maine, Nevada, Oregon, Vermont, and Washington have enacted State medical marijuana laws. Because of these State laws, thousands of patients are able to alleviate their pain and suffering without fear of arrest by State or local authorities.

The threat of arrest by Federal agents, however, still exists. In the past, the Federal Government has impeded research on medical use of marijuana, even though thousands of patients have testified, explained, and acknowledged that it helps relieve some of the debilitating symptoms, such as nausea, pain, loss of appetite associated with serious illness.

Despite Federal admonitions against marijuana, the American people support medical marijuana and pretty overwhelmingly. Most national polls show the support around 70 percent.

This amendment is not necessarily about the actual medical purpose of marijuana, though I know scores of doctors have attested to marijuana's medical benefits. In States where medical marijuana is legal, thousands of licensed physicians have recommended marijuana to their patients. This amendment is not about legalizing drugs, though some will argue that it should be.

No. What this amendment is about is States rights. In so many areas we trust States rights. And I think of us here in the United States Congress. We allowed States to draw our district boundary lines.

We allow States to set the fee we have to pay to run for office. We allow the States to create the primary procedures for getting elected to Congress. We allow the States to fashion Medicaid packages. We allow States to license doctors to practice. We trust the States to do what is best for their residents of that State. When it comes to health care policy or palliative care, the care of alleviating pain, nine States of the United States have determined that it is appropriate public policy to allow the use of marijuana as a prescribed treatment.

If Congress respects States rights in so many other areas, why does it not respect it with regard to medical marijuana?

Mr. Chairman, this amendment would prevent the Federal Government from interfering with state medical marijuana laws. It would end the DEA raids on medical marijuana patients and caregivers who are acting in accordance with state law. It would not—let me repeat—it would not prevent the DEA from arresting individuals who are involved in marijuana-related activities unconnected to medical use.

Here is the simple question posed by this amendment: Should the Federal Government arrest individuals who are trying to alleviate their own suffering or the suffering of others in compliance with state law?

I am only too familiar with the tension between DEA law enforcement and state and locally-sanctioned marijuana cooperatives in California. On September 5, 2002 in Santa Cruz, California—my district—dozens of heavily armed DEA agents stormed into the home of Valerie and Mike Corral where the cooperative garden of the Wo/Men's Alliance for Medical Marijuana (WAMM), a medical marijuana hospice, is tended by collective members. They destroyed 167 plants, which would have been distributed—free of charge—to more than 200 seriously and terminally ill WAMM members. Although the Corrals did not resist, the agents pointed loaded rifles to their heads, forced them to the ground, and handcuffed their hands behind their backs. The DEA agents kept them handcuffed in their home for 4 hours before taking them 30 miles to the Federal courthouse in San Jose where they were eventually released without being charged. Meanwhile, Federal agents handcuffed the Corral's over-night guest, Suzanne Pfeil, a WAMM member who was disabled by polio, and detained two other members, one with AIDS and a caregiver. Pfeil happened to be sleeping when the raid occurred. Despite the fact that her leg braces and crutches were in plain sight, the agents demanded she stand, which she was unable to do with her hands cuffed. Pfeil's blood pressure shot up and she experienced chest pains. Agents then refused to call an ambulance. All this pain, confusion and fear—yet WAMM was operating with the full knowledge and consent of state and local authorities.

Many people who oppose medical marijuana say that there is only anecdotal evidence of its effectiveness. But these anecdotes cannot be simply dismissed; they are the stories of real people who are suffering. Just this morning in Roll Call, there was a powerful example of this. Talk show host Montel Williams discussed his struggle to live with excruciating pain caused by multiple sclerosis. Montel Williams, a former Marine and decorated naval officer, who made anti-drug PSA's for the White House drug czar's office, explained in this article that marijuana is the ''only'' drug that allows him to function on a day-to-day basis. Now if he is using marijuana with his doctor's advice and is following state law, why on earth should we waste Federal resources trying to prevent him from alleviating his own pain? And taking it a step further, if someone else is growing that marijuana for him and is following state law why should we take that medicine away from him by interfering with the grower?

The answer most opponents of this amendment will give is that marijuana simply is not a medicine. But this had become an absurd claim. First of all, both the Netherlands and Canada have enacted medical marijuana laws, with marijuana available at pharmacies in the Netherlands. In the United States, nine states have medical marijuana laws that allow doctors to recommend marijuana to their patients. And in those states, hundreds of doctors have recommended marijuana to thousands of patients.

Even our Federal Government has acknowledged the therapeutic benefits of marijuana. In 1999, the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine conducted a study funded by the White House Office of National Drug Policy. The principle investigator from the study said upon its completion, ''We concluded that there are some limited circumstances in which we recommend smoking marijuana for medical use.'' An even stronger endorsement came from the DEA in 1988. Then, Administrative Law Judge Francis Young, after an exhaustive, 2-year study of marijuana, called for its rescheduling on the grounds that ''marijuana, in its natural form, is one of the safest therapeutically active substances known to man.'' He concluded, even 60 years ago, that marijuana offered a ''currently accepted medical use in treatment.''

Over the past year, medical marijuana has gained even wider acceptance. It has been endorsed by the American Nurses Association, whose 2.6 million members care for the Nation's most seriously ill patients; by the United Methodist Church, the Nation's third largest religious denomination; by the New York and Rhode Island Medical Societies; and by many other health care organizations. Other longtime supporters of medical marijuana include the New England Journal of Medicine, the American Bar Association, and the American Public Health Association.

Do opponents of this amendment honestly believe the American Nurses Association, the New York State Medical Society, the United Methodist Church, the Episcopal Church, and others are supporting this issue because they hope to legalize marijuana for all purposes? Of course that isn't the reason. These organizations support legal access to marijuana for medical purposes because they know one simple fact: it helps sick people.

Other opponents of this amendment say that they will not support medical marijuana until more research is complete. The problem is that the Federal Government has effectively blocked research. To cite just one example, in July 2001, the University of Massachusetts applied to the DEA for a license to manufacture marijuana for medical research. This is the same kind of license a company called GW Pharmaceuticals applied for in England a few years ago. While GW Pharmaceuticals has now concluded Phase III trials and is nearing market approval for its marijuana spray, the DEA—3 years later—has not even bothered to deny the University of Massachusetts' license. Of course, they have not granted it, either. They have just let the application sit in limbo.

Antoher application to the Federal Government, requesting permission to import just 10 grams of marijuana for research has languished for 10 months. Does our government think 10 grams of marijuana is going to increase the drug problem in this Nation? Of course not. The Federal goal seems to be to purposely block research that would prove—or disprove, once and for all—that marijuana has therapeutic benefits.

But let's assume for a minute that all of the obstacles to research were suddenly removed. That does not get us past the immediate question: Should the Federal Government, over the course of the next year, while research is proceeding, arrest patients and caregivers who are complying with state law in order to alleviate their own suffering or the suffering of others?

Another objection raised by opponents of this amendment is that passing it would send the wrong message to children. It would make children think that marijuana is not dangerous. Let me tell you something. Children know how dangerous marijuana is already. Allowing seriously ill patients to use it will not change that. And associating the use of marijuana with AIDS and chemotherapy is not likely to increase its appeal. On the other hand, if you deny cancer, AIDS, and MS patients the opportunity to use this drug to alleviate their pain—while permitting the medical use of powerful addictive drugs like Vicodin and OxyContin—the only message you are sending to children is that you are intellectually dishonest and completely lacking in compassion.

The truth is, where medical marijuana is legal, there has been no increase in marijuana use among teens. In fact, in my home state of California, teen use of marijuana has dropped 34 percent among 7th graders, 44 percent among 9th graders, and 21 percent among 11th graders since the California medical marijuana initiative passed in 1996. The same Institute of Medicine study described earlier noted, ''there is no evidence that the medical marijuana debate has altered adolescents' perceptions of the risks associated with marijuana use.'' Listen closely today to hear whether opponents of this amendment back their warning about sending the wrong message to children with any evidence demonstrating that medical use has caused a change in attitude about recreational use; I doubt there will be any with any scientific weight.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is reasonably drafted and built on scientific evidence, judicial review, and medical studies. It reflects the grass roots demand and legislative will of nine of our United States. It is time for Congress to recognize the powerful dynamics of this issue and adopt my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. This is a bad amendment. It will be bad for the country.

Marijuana is the most abused drug in the United States. According to the Department of Health and Human Services, more young people are now in treatment for marijuana dependency than for alcohol or for all other legal drugs combined. The amendment does not address the problem of marijuana abuse and possibly, perhaps probably, makes it worse by sending a message to young people that there can be health benefits from smoking marijuana.

In testimony before the Committee on Government Reform, the DEA provided an example of how marijuana trafficking is occurring under the guise of medicine. And there is so much more I could say, and we have the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) here and the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE). This is not a good amendment. The message that this sends to the young people is absolutely wrong. This was overwhelmingly defeated the last time it came up. I urge defeat of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman I yield 3 minutes and 15 seconds to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, today I call for a broad coalition of my colleagues to support the Hinchey-Rohrabacher amendment to H.R. 4754, introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Over the past 8 years, 10 States have adopted laws that decriminalize the use of marijuana for medical purposes. These States have passed these laws to allow the use of marijuana to relieve intense pain that accompanies several debilitating diseases, including AIDS, cancer, multiple sclerosis, and glaucoma. In seven of these States, such as my own State of California, these laws were adopted by a direct referendum of the people.

The Federal Government, however, has made it nearly impossible for these States to implement their own laws, the laws that the people voted for. The DEA has conducted numerous raids on homes of medical marijuana users, prosecuting patients who were using marijuana in accordance with State law to relieve intense pain and other symptoms caused by a variety of illnesses. Despite these State laws, the Justice Department is working overtime to put sick people and those who would help them in jail.

It is time for the Federal Government to respect the rights of individual States to determine their own health and criminal justice policies on this matter. A growing movement of Americans from conservative to liberal is calling for the Federal Government to keep its hands off the States that wish to allow their citizens to use marijuana for medical purposes. In my State, the people have spoken overwhelmingly. Both Republican and Democrat counties voted for medical freedom. Our new Governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger, has made it clear in regard to the Federal Government's interference with California's medical marijuana policy in his message to Washington, and what is it? It is ''Hasta la vista, baby.'' Even more poignant, Tom McClintock, Arnold's leading conservative opponent in the recent recall election, has spoken out even more strongly against the Federal interference with California's medical marijuana laws. The Governor of Maryland also, our former Republican colleague, Robert Ehrlich, has signed Maryland's new medical marijuana law and has lobbied Members of Congress on this issue.

As a conservative, I am increasingly troubled by the federalization of criminal law that has occurred in recent years. It seems that more and more crimes are being declared to be Federal crimes. While sometimes this is appropriate, for example in immigration law, which is a federally mandated issue by our Constitution, but criminal justice constitutionally is the domain of the State and local government. This is especially true when the people of these many States determine by their own vote the policy concerning this specific personal behavior.

It is time for the conservatives and liberals to join together in calling for the Federal Government to keep its hands off. Liberals, moderates, and conservatives should unite in order to protect the freedom of our people. This is a freedom issue, and it is also a humanitarian issue. We should make sure that the local people have a right to determine if the doctors in their community, and that is what we are talking about, the doctors are able to prescribe marijuana for people who are suffering from AIDS and suffering from cancer and other types of diseases. This is not fair, and it is not humane to go the other way; and it is un-American to centralize this type of criminal justice matter in the hands of Federal bureaucrats rather than the people who vote in our specific communities.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS).

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to point out that as a physician before I came to Congress, medical marijuana is actually not necessary because the active ingredient in medical marijuana is delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol. This is a compound that is readily available not in a handful of States as medical marijuana is, but in every State of the Union. It is legal today. It is called Marinol. It is a pill. It is easy to take. And people who suffer from cancer, people who have anorexia from chemotherapy, people who suffer from AIDS may use Marinol today to their benefit.

Mr. Chairman, it just challenges the imagination. As a physician, I wrote a lot of prescriptions for morphine for patients who were in pain. I would have never recommended to a patient that they go home and score some opium and smoke it. That would be an inappropriate way for them to deliver the drug.

This drug is delivered in a humane and compassionate way. It is delivered in a way that deals with the symptoms it is designed to deal with, and we do not explode the drug culture in this country by doing so.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, am a physician from Texas, but I have a little different opinion about Marinol. No doctor that I know of ever prescribes Marinol.

I think marijuana is a helpful medical treatment for the people who have intractable nausea. I would like to point out this is not something strange that we are suggesting here. For the first 163 years of our history in this country, the Federal Government had total hands off, they never interfered with what the States were doing. They interfered only after 1938 through tax law. So this is something new.

The States' rights issue is almost a dead issue in the Congress, but we ought to continue to talk about it, and I am delighted somebody has brought this up.

But if you do have compassion and care for patients, they ought to have a freedom of choice. I think that is what this is all about, freedom of choice.

I would like to point out one statistic. One year prior to 9/11 there were 750,000 arrests of people who used marijuana; there was one arrest for a suspect that was committing terrorism. Now, that, to me, is a misdirected law enforcement program that we could help address here by at least allowing the States to follow the laws that they already have on the books.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BURNS).

Mr. BURNS. Mr. Chairman, in 2001, the FDA approved the pain killer OxyContin, knowing that it had a high probability of being diverted for illicit use. We felt that the gain was worth the risk. The abuse, unfortunately, of OxyContin is now a nationwide epidemic.

In spite of the fact that, unlike OxyContin, there are safe and effective and legal alternatives to smoking pot for pain relief, we are now considering the use of marijuana for its medical purposes.

The active ingredient, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) pointed out, is readily available in an FDA-approved capsule. This pill delivers THC, it does not carry the dangers inherent with smoking marijuana, nor does it undermine the law enforcement efforts that fight illegal drug use.

Mr. Chairman, the legalization of medical marijuana is simply the first step in a scheme to overturn all the substance abuse laws that we work hard to enforce today. We need to vote ''no'' on legalization of marijuana and its use in America.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute of the 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE)

Mr. OSE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in absolute, 100 percent opposition to this amendment. I have listened to the arguments of my friends from Texas and my friend from California in one case and my friend from California in the other, and I have to say that their argument on States' rights is a unique application as it relates to so-called ''medical marijuana.'' But I have not yet heard a single bit of testimony dealing with whether or not there is any medical value to the application of marijuana in this case.

Now, the so-called phrase ''medical marijuana'' is a misnomer. It was invented by the people who passed the proposition in California that, frankly, hoodwinked the voters of California into voting in favor of it. But I just want to run through a couple of things here.

The FDA looks at all sorts of prescription drugs and pharmacological treatments, and they have looked at marijuana, and by and large, we have deferred to the FDA on all these analyses. But, all of a sudden, when it comes to so-called ''medical marijuana,'' the FDA is no longer competent. But I do want to enter into the RECORD that the FDA, in fact, did look at marijuana as a medical substance and found absolutely no value whatsoever to its use.

Now, the FDA has, in fact, looked at Marinol, in which the active ingredient in so-called ''medical marijuana'' is present, THC, and has approved that for use in treating nausea and pain and the like, and it is readily available by prescription, a true prescription, from a doctor.

Let us dwell for a minute in California, which I am familiar with, on this so-called ''medical marijuana'' and the facade that people go through to obtain it.

First of all, the referendum requires that a doctor issue a so-called prescription. However, the doctor refuses to issue a prescription on a prescription form for so-called medical marijuana. They write it on a piece of blank paper, because the doctors know that it is not a prescription, it is a facade perpetrated upon the people of California that this has any medical qualities whatsoever.

Now, my friend from Indiana is going to share with you the story of a tragic occurrence in San Francisco, and I am not going to jump the gun on him, because this is absolutely heartbreaking, what he is going to tell you. But I do want to tell you, that incident is not singular in nature.

The fact of the matter is we have children, young people across this country, watching you and me and our peers across this country as it relates to the use of so-called medical marijuana, and if you think for one minute that they are going to turn a blind eye to our acquiescence, that just because it happens to be a little bit difficult to tell people ''No, you are not going to be able to smoke dope,'' just because it happens to be a little bit difficult to tell people that, that we are going to roll over and pass this prohibition on funds, just begs the imagination about what leadership really constitutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, who has the right to close?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has the right to close.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I thought the author of the amendment has the right to close.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the subcommittee, controlling time in opposition to the amendment, has the right to close.

The gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) has 1¾ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment because my mother had glaucoma and we bought her marijuana because it was a relief, and that was before this bill was passed in the State of California.

I support this amendment because it respects State authority, because the people in our State believe medical marijuana is a way to relieve those suffering from cancer, from glaucoma, from AIDS, from spastic disorders and other debilitating diseases.

This amendment will do only one thing: It will stop the Justice Department from punishing those who are abiding by their State laws. It changes no law.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues, support this amendment so that those who suffer from debilitating diseases can get the relief that they need, and they can get it without fear of the Federal Government.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to respond to the comment of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF). I am going to read here that in the State of California, teen use of marijuana has dropped 34 percent among seventh graders, 44 percent among ninth graders and 21 percent among eleventh graders since the California medical marijuana initiative passed in 1996.

Also, I would like to point out that this is not such a radical amendment. It only affects the States that have State laws, that have the enforcement. We have not heard from law enforcement opposing this. We have heard from the American Nursing Association, the United Methodist Church, the New York Medical Society, the Rhode Island Medical Society, the New England Journal of Medicine, the American Bar Association, the American Public Health Association and the Episcopal Church. They all support this amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, first, do not let any Member kid themselves; if you cannot enforce a Federal law, you do not have a Federal law. This would eliminate our ability to enforce marijuana laws in States that have passed this.

My friend from California alluded to a very sad case in the State of California. When we as Members use phrases like ''medical marijuana'' and responsible officials imply that drugs like marijuana are medical, tragedies like this happen.

Irma Perez, age 14, the late Irma Perez, was overdosing on Ecstasy. Her friends had heard that marijuana was medical, and instead of getting her to a doctor, where they said she would have been saved, they gave her marijuana on top of her Ecstasy and she died.

When we have silly debates like this, quite frankly, we bear responsibility. Yesterday, in Ohio, six people died, including a family of four, two adults and two children, when a young person on marijuana and alcohol collided into a truck that hit two other vehicles and killed six people.

If you have medical marijuana laws, like has happened in a court case in the State of Oregon, drug testing laws for truck drivers have been thrown out. It is now being appealed higher, but it is not even clear that you can be assured that our congressional drug testing law for truck drivers will stand up, given the way the courts are interpreting this.

In California, we have a doctor that has given 348 patients under this medical marijuana, including for anxiety and restless leg syndrome. In Oregon, we have a doctor who gave it to 4,000 people over the last few years. We have another doctor in California who uses it, we actually had this person at our hearing, for ADD and hyperactivity, even though she admitted she has no evidence that it worked for those things, but she felt it would make them feel better.

You either believe you have an FDA or you do not have an FDA. We hear about all kinds of other things that FDA cracks down on. Either you have a national FDA or you do not have an FDA.

Furthermore, just last week in Oakland, California, they pulled over a group of guys with about 66 pounds of marijuana. They said it was for medicinal purposes. They found where it was coming from, and they found a warehouse. In this warehouse, they found millions of dollars of marijuana where the people started fleeing, and then these advocates of medical marijuana in California said, Oh, it was so medical.

The person who owned the building had already been busted for transporting illegal drugs. He had lost his license as a pawnbroker. But, no, this was medical marijuana. Some estimate that up to 90 percent of the cases, this is the pro-medical marijuana cases, of marijuana use in California, would be classified as medical.

That is why we have letters, and I will include these in the records, from the Community Antidrug Coalition, and Dr. Dean, who coordinates these efforts, says he opposes it; the Fraternal Order of Police; the Partnership for a Drug-Free America, who plead on behalf of the drug treatment and prevention groups in America to oppose this; the Drug-Free America Foundation; and the U.S. Department of Justice, which is concerned that they will not be able to enforce any drug laws if we do not allow the Federal Government to enforce.

We need to defeat this amendment because it is the wrong message to our youth, it is the wrong message to our law enforcement, it is the wrong message to our drug treatment people, it is the wrong message to the people in the streets of their neighborhoods trying to reclaim their often crime-ridden neighborhoods from drug dealers and addicts in their areas, and it is, quite frankly, unconstitutional.

We fought a Civil War over nullification. States do not have the right. If we can have States nullify an existing Federal law, then on what grounds can this not happen under the same precedent, a lack of enforcement on environmental laws, of civil rights laws, of the Americans with Disabilities Act, of any law? Because once a State can nullify a Federal law by saying, We cannot enforce it, you do not have a Federal system.

This is an amendment fraught with difficulties and should be overwhelmingly defeated by both sides for a multitude of reasons.

Mr. Chairman, I include for the RECORD the letters referred to earlier in my statement.

COMMUNITY ANTI-DRUG
COALITIONS OF AMERICA,
Alexandria, VA, July 1, 2004.

Hon. MARK SOUDER,
House of Representatives, Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources, Rayburn House Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the 5,000 coalition members that Community Anti-Drug Coalitions of America (CADCA) represents, I am writing to strongly urge you to oppose an amendment to be offered by Representative Maurice D. Hinchey (D–NY) to the Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary and Related Agencies FY 2005 Appropriations bill which would effectively prohibit enforcement of Federal law with respect to use of ''medical'' marijuana. I strongly urge you to oppose this amendment not only because marijuana is an illegal, addictive Schedule I drug, with no medicinal value, but also because this sends the entirely wrong message to the youth of America.

Marijuana is not a harmless drug: it is the most widely abused illicit drug in the nation. According to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's Treatment Episode Data Set, approximately 60% of adolescent treatment cases in 2001 were for marijuana abuse. Research shows that the decline in the use of any illegal drug is directly related to its perception of harm or risk by the user. Advertising smoked marijuana as medicine sends the wrong message to America's youth—that marijuana is not dangerous. Congressman Hinchey's amendment goes even further by removing the ability of law enforcement officials to enforce Federal law. The efforts of the drug legalization movement, to promote the myth of ''medical'' marijuana and to stifle the efforts of law enforcement agencies to enforce Federal law severely dilutes the prevention efforts that community anti-drug coalitions across America are undertaking to communicate marijuana is dangerous, it has serious consequences, and is illegal.

Congressman Hinchey's amendment is offered under the guise of compassion towards seriously ill patients, when in reality it is a ''Trojan horse'' to legalize marijuana. To date, the FDA has not approved nor has it found any medicinal value in smoked marijuana, which is why it remains a Schedule I controlled substance. Furthermore, in the States that have legalized marijuana for so-called ''medicinal'' purposes, seriously ill, elderly patients are not the only patients receiving marijuana—children are also. At a hearing before your Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources, Dr. Claudia Jensen, of Ventura, California, testified that she prescribes marijuana as medicine for adolescents under her care who have been diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD). In a policy statement from the American Academy of Pediatrics stating their opposition to the legalization of marijuana, they state that ''Any change in the legal status of marijuana, even if limited to adults, could effect the prevalence of use among adolescents.'' What kind of a message are the youth of America receiving when doctors willingly give children marijuana—it tells children that marijuana is not a dangerous drug.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge you to help us protect our nation's youth and oppose any and all amendments limiting the enforcement of the Federal law pertaining to marijuana use. Thank you for considering my views.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR T. DEAN,
Major General, U.S. Army, Retired,
Chairman and CEO.

GRAND LODGE,
FRATERNAL ORDER OF POLICE,
Washington, DC, July 6, 2004.

Hon. MARK SOUDER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy, and Human Resources, Committee on Government Reform, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing on behalf of the membership of the Fraternal Order of Police to advise you of our strong opposition to an amendment which may be offered to H.R. 4754, the appropriations measure for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary, which is scheduled to be considered on the House floor this week. The amendment, which was offered last year by Representative Maurice D. Hinchey (D–NY), would effectively prohibit enforcement of Federal law with respect to marijuana in States that do not provide penalties for the use of the drug for so-called ''medical'' reasons.

In these States, Federal enforcement is the only effective enforcement of the laws prohibiting the possession and use of marijuana. Federal efforts provide the sole deterrent to the use of harder drugs and the commission of other crimes, including violent crimes and crimes against property, which go hand-in-hand with drug use and drug trafficking. Federal investigations of marijuana producers also serve to disrupt larger drug trafficking organizations, particularly in the State of California where marijuana is sometimes traded for precursor chemicals for methamphetamines, and in the Sate of Washington, which is a significant gateway for high-potency marijuana that can sell for the same price as heroin on many of our nation's streets.

Such an amendment threatens to cause a significant disruptive effect on the combined efforts of State and local law enforcement to reduce drug crime in every region of the country. On behalf of the more than 318,000 members of the Fraternal Order of Police, we urge its defeat. If I can be of any further help on this issue, please feel free to contact me or Executive Director Jim Pasco through my Washington office.

Sincerely,

CHUCK CANTERBURY,
National President.

PARTNERSHIP FOR A DRUG-FREE AMERICA,
New York, NY, July 7, 2004.

Hon. FRANK WOLF,
Chairman, House Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, and State, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter is to express our opposition to an amendment being proposed to the Commerce, Justice, State FY 2005 appropriations bill, scheduled for consideration today. Congressman Maurice Hinchey is proposing an amendment that again seeks to prohibit the enforcement of federal law pertaining to marijuana in states that have decriminalized the use of marijuana for medicinal application. The proposed amendment is likely to have the unintended effect of handicapping federal law enforcement agents from enforcing all laws pertaining to marijuana use and trafficking. Therefore, we encourage you and members of the committee to oppose this amendment.

The issue of medical applications of smoked marijuana is one for the medical and scientific communities to evaluate. As you know, state-based referenda on this issue are not homegrown initiatives, but rather are being driven and financed by a handful of national organizations that seek to legalize marijuana and other drugs. The position of the medical community is quite clear on this issue. The American Medical Association, for example, calls for further adequate and well-controlled studies of smoked THC for serious medical conditions, but the AMA recommends that marijuana be retained in Schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act pending the outcome of such studies.

The last thing we need to do is making marijuana more available on the streets of America. Please ensure that federal law enforcement officials can enforce federal laws relevant to marijuana.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN J. PASIERB,
President, Chief Executive Officer.

NATIONAL NARCOTIC OFFICERS' ASSOCIATIONS COALITION,
West Covina, CA, July 1, 2004.

Hon. MARK SOUDER,
Chairman, Committee on Government Reform, Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SOUDER: I am writing on behalf of the forty state narcotic officers associations and more than 60,000 state and local law enforcement officers that are represented by the National Narcotic Officers' Associations' Coalition (NNOAC) to offer our strong opposition to an amendment that will be offered in the United States House of Representatives that would effectively prohibit the enforcement of Federal marijuana laws in states that do not provide penalties for the use of what has been deemed ''medical'' marijuana.

As you know, despite opposition by the American Medical Association and other credible medical and health organizations, drug legalization activists have chosen to seek the medicalization or legalization of marijuana by relying on the emotions of local voters rather than science based data and the recommendations of the medical community. This reckless approach has resulted in several states adopting medical marijuana laws and relying on public emotion rather than science to approve crude, smoked marijuana for medical use. This action has circumvented the patient protections provided in the Pure Food and Drug Act, which have served to keep Americans safe from dangerous or untested remedies since it was enacted in 1906.

Because marijuana enforcement by Federal officials is now the only effective enforcement of the marijuana laws in several states where medical initiatives have all but legalized the drug, the passage of this amendment would have disastrous results. This enforcement of marijuana laws provides a strong deterrent to the use of marijuana, which also helps reduce the use of hard drugs and the resulting property and violent crimes. Enforcement also sends a strong message to our young people that marijuana use is dangerous and unacceptable. And finally, law enforcement provides a social stigma to marijuana use that helps to prevent the normalization of drug use. Without this enforcement, many people will be lured into believing that marijuana use is safe and poses no threat of addiction.

Federal investigations of marijuana cultivators also serve to disrupt larger drug trafficking organizations, particularly in the state of California, where marijuana is sometimes traded for precursor chemicals for methamphetamine into the state of Washington, which is a significant gateway for high potency marijuana that can sell for the same price as heroin. The HINCHEY Amendment threatens to cause a significant disruptive effective on state and local law enforcement of both drug laws and of other crimes affecting public safety in states where it would apply.

The members of the NNOAC strongly encourage you and your colleagues in the Congress to support their local law enforcement officers, health-care workers, educators, and community anti-drug activists, who are dedicated to working towards safe drug free communities by vigorously opposing this dangerous amendment. The passage of the HINCHEY Amendment would have a catastrophic effect and would result in increased drug use and related violence, marijuana related DUI collisions, lost productivity and work place accidents.

Please accept the thanks of our 60,000 members for all that you and your colleagues do to support law enforcement and to help us keep this great nation safe and drug free.

Sincerely,

RONALD E. BROOKS,
President.

JULY 6, 2004.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: I have dedicated the past three decades to fighting the war on drugs and as such, I am urging you to oppose the Hinchey-Rohrabacher amendment because of the staggering effect it will have on society.

I have helped form public policy in the United States' campaign against drugs through participation in the White House Conference for a Drug Free America, as a member of the Governor's Drug Policy Task Force in Florida and as a board member of DARE Florida (Drug Abuse Resistance Education.) I presently reside in Rome while my husband serves as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Italy.

With this experience, I can tell you that drug legalization efforts abound today in the United States with deceptive campaigns that exploit the sick and dying. Medical excuse marijuana is the most common tactic used by legalization proponents. This new amendment intends to prohibit the U.S. Justice Department (including the DEA) from interfering with state medical excuse marijuana laws. If passed, the pro-drug lobby will once again undercut the federal government.

In reference to using the medical marijuana excuse, there has never been controversy about the use of purified chemicals in marijuana to treat any illness; however, marijuana cigarettes are not medicine. The false portrayal of smoked marijuana as a helpful medicine has contributed to the increased use of marijuana and other drugs by young people. Sixty percent of youths in drug treatment today are there for marijuana addiction.

In areas where medical excuse marijuana is legal, people are toking up under the guise of treating conditions such as premenstrual syndrome, athlete's foot and migraines. The Institute of Medicine (IOM), found marijuana effective in addressing symptoms of nausea, appetite loss, pain and anxiety. However, the same report concluded that, ''smoked marijuana is unlikely to be a safe medication for any chronic medical condition.''

Our nation is under attack by extremely well-financed groups, whose sole intention is to profit from drug legalization. They don't care about civil liberties or our nation's children. They only care about getting rich at the cost of a deteriorated society. They frequently use compassion for the sick and dying as one of their manipulative tactics to normalize drug use. These groups would like nothing more than to eliminate governmental regulation. It is imperative that state government be accountable to federal government, especially when it comes to drug policy.

As a drug prevention and policy expert, caring mother and grandmother, I urge you—do not vote for the Hinchey-Rohrabacher amendment.

Sincerely,

BETTY S. SEMBLER,
Founder and Chair,
Drug-Free America Foundation.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 7, 2004.

Hon. FRANK WOLF,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Department of Justice would oppose any amendment to appropriations legislation preventing the Justice Department or the Drug Enforcement Administration (''DEA'') from enforcing the Controlled Substances Act with respect to marijuana either generally or in specified States. Any such limitation would interfere with the protection of public health and safety against marijuana, which is dangerous to both users and non-users and is the most widely abused illicit drug in America. Moreover, a provision applying only to certain States would unfairly and inappropriately prevent uniform enforcement of Federal law nationwide.

Marijuana is a widespread health and social concern. More young people are currently in treatment for marijuana dependency than for alcohol and all other illegal drugs combined, and mentions of marijuana use in emergency room visits have risen 176 percent since 1994, surpassing those of heroin. Marijuana also can have a dangerous impact on non-users, as demonstrated by the problem of drugged driving. Marijuana affects alertness, concentration, perception, coordination, and reaction time—skills that are necessary for safe driving. Use of marijuana and other illicit drugs also comes at significant expense to society in terms of lost productivity, public health care costs, and accidents. Accordingly, the Justice Department and the DEA continue to vigilantly enforce Federal laws against marijuana trafficking. Any limitation on enforcement of the Controlled Substances Act with respect to marijuana would jeopardize our efforts to continue reducing youth drug use and to protect the public.

The same considerations are important for persons who, contrary to controlling Federal law, would use smoked marijuana for purported medical purposes. States are free to define criminal acts and impose corresponding penalties, under State law, in the manner they see fit. However, it does not follow that the absence of penalties in a particular State for marijuana use in these circumstances ''legalizes'' conduct that remains clearly illegal under the Controlled Substances Act. Moreover, this issue is not only one of legal form; it also is a compelling problem of public health and safety. Smoked marijuana has not been approved for use under the rigorous Federal drug approval process conducted by the Food and Drug Administration (''FDA''), which prohibits drugs from being sold or distributed in interstate commerce as medicine unless they have been proven in sound clinical studies to be both safe and effective for their intended use. To date, no sound scientific study has shown that smoking marijuana is safe and effective for any disease or condition. The Institute of Medicine has concluded that ''[t]here is little future in smoked marijuana as a medically approved medication,'' and the British Medical Association linked its use to greater risk of heart disease, lung cancer, bronchitis, and emphysema. The DEA, in conjunction with the FDA, has approved and will continue to approve research into whether discrete ingredients of marijuana can be adapted for medical use. However, with respect to smoked marijuana, the clear weight of evidence is that it is not medicine—it is harmful.

Finally, any amendment that would restrict enforcement and prosecution in certain specifically named States, but not in others, would prevent the Department of Justice from uniformly enforcing the law throughout the United States. As a practical matter, residents of States listed in such an amendment would be exempted from Federal enforcement and persecution for cultivation, distribution, and use of marijuana in certain circumstances, while residents of other States would continue to face potential criminal liability for precisely the same conduct. We also note that the amendment would effectively establish a classification among residents of different States with respect to the enforcement of the Federal drug laws. Consequently, Federal persecution of persons in non-covered States for marijuana-related drug violations potentially could be subject to challenge under the equal protection requirements of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, particularly in States that may enact future medical marijuana laws that are not covered by the language of this provision.

Again, the Department of Justice opposes any amendment restricting enforcement of the Controlled Substances Act. We appreciate your continued support of our efforts to continue meeting the goals of the President's strategy to reduce youth drug use in America.

If we may be of further assistance in this matter, please do not hesitate to contact us. The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM E. MOSCHELLA,
Assistant Attorney General.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment offered by my colleagues SAM FARR, DANA ROHRABACHER, MAURICE HINCHEY, and RON PAUL, and I salute their courage in bringing it to the House floor.

This amendment to the Fiscal Year 2005 Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary Appropriations bill would prohibit the Justice Department from spending any funds to undermine state medical marijuana laws. It would leave to the discretion of the states how they would alleviate the suffering of their citizens.

Eleven states, including my home state of California, have adopted medical marijuana laws since 1996. Most of these laws were approved by a vote of the people. More than 70 percent of Americans support the right of patients to use marijuana with a doctor's recommendation.

I am pleased to join organizations that support legal access to medical marijuana, including the American Academy of Family Physicians, the American Bar Association, the American Nurses Association, the American Public Health Association, and the AIDS Action Council.

Religious denominations supporting legal access to medical marijuana or state discretion on this issue include the Episcopal Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church, the National Council of Churches, the National Progressive Baptist Convention, the Presbyterian Church, the Union for Reform Judaism, the United Church of Christ, the Unitarian Universalist Association, and the United Methodist Church.

Proven medicinal uses of marijuana include improving the quality of life for patients with cancer, multiple sclerosis, and other severe medical conditions.

In my city of San Francisco, we have lost nearly 20,000 people to AIDS over the last two decades, and I have seen firsthand the suffering that accompanies this awful disease. Medical marijuana alleviates some of the most debilitating symptoms of AIDS, including pain, wasting, and nausea.

In 1999, the Institute of Medicine issued a report that had been commissioned by the Office of National Drug Control Policy. The study found that medical marijuana ''would be advantageous'' in the treatment of some diseases, and is ''potentially effective in treatment pain, nausea, and anorexia of AIDS wasting and other symptoms.''

To fight the war on drug abuse effectively, we must get our priorities in order and fund treatment and education. Making criminals of seriously ill people who seek proven therapy is not a step toward controlling America's drug problem.

Again, I commend Mr. FARR, Mr. ROHRABACHER, Mr. HINCHEY, and Mr. PAUL for their leadership on this issue, which affects the health and well-being of so many Americans.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the Farr/Rohrabacher/Hinchey amendment, which will end federal raids on medical marijuana patients and providers in states where medical marijuana is legal.

Despite marijuana's recognized therapeutic value, including a National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine report recommending its use in certain circumstances, federal law refuses to recognize its medicinal importance and safety. Instead, federal penalties for all marijuana use, regardless of purpose, includes up to a year in prison for the possession of even small amounts.

But since 1996, eight states have enacted laws to allow very ill patients to use medical marijuana in spite of federal law. The present administration, however has sought to override such state statutes, viewing the use of marijuana for medicinal purposes in the same light as the use of heroin or cocaine. In 2002, federal agents raided the Wo/Men's Alliance for Medical Marijuana or WAMM, an organization that under California state law legally dispensed marijuana to patients whose doctors had recommended it for pain and suffering. Eighty-five percent of WAMM's 225 members were terminally ill with cancer or AIDS.

The federal government should use its power to help terminally ill citizens, not arrest them. And states deserve to have the right to make their own decisions regarding the use of medical marijuana. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) will be postponed.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. OSE) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MAKING IN ORDER PRO FORMA AMENDMENT BY CHAIRMAN AND RANKING MEMBER TO EACH AMENDMENT MADE IN ORDER DURING FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4754, DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during further consideration of H.R. 4754 in the Committee of the Whole pursuant to House Resolution 701 and the order of the House of earlier today, the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations or their designees each may offer one pro forma amendment to each amendment for the purpose of further debate.

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. OSE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 701 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 4754.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, with Mr. HASTINGS of Washington in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole House rose earlier today, a demand for a recorded vote on amendment No. 6 offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) had been postponed, and the bill was open for amendment from page 57, line 18 through page 108, line 22.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations or their designees may offer one pro forma amendment to each amendment for the purpose of further debate.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FLAKE

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLAKE:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to implement, administer, or enforce the amendments made to sections 740.12 of title 15, Code of Federal Regulations (relating to license exemptions for gift parcels and humanitarian donations for Cuba), and 740.14 of such title (relating to license exemptions for baggage taken by individuals for travel to Cuba), as published in the Federal Register on June 22, 2004 (69 Fed. Reg. 34565–34567).

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) and a Member opposed each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the Flake-Davis-Emerson-Delahunt amendment simply prohibits the enforcement on the new Department of Commerce restrictions published June 22 of this year.

These new restrictions added to the list of items prohibited in the sending of gift parcels, namely, clothing, personal hygiene items, seeds, fishing equipment, soap-making equipment, and veterinary medicine and supplies. As I read through the new list, it occurs to me that these items would promote self-sufficiency among Cubans.

The rationale in the new regulations, however, seems to promote a dependency of Cubans on their oppressive government, the same government that has deprived them of freedom for the past 45 years. To quote the Federal Register that contains these new restrictions: ''Such parcels decrease the burden on the Cuban regime to provide for the basic needs of its people.'' By prohibiting these items from being sent to Cuba, we are, in fact, promoting dependence of these people on a dictator.

This amendment would simply take us back to June 21 of this year, at which point several restrictions were already in place.

The message of this amendment is that it is unreasonable for our government to prevent Americans from sending clothes, personal hygiene items, seeds, et cetera to people in Cuba who are struggling under the dictatorship of Fidel Castro. Withholding of such items will have little effect on Castro and a significant effect on individuals who already struggle for the basics.

This amendment would also prevent the enforcement of the new restriction that says gift parcels can only be sent once a month per household instead of once a month per individual. Again, why should we limit the help that Cuban Americans can send to their families?

Finally, it would prevent the enforcement of the new restriction that says travelers are only allowed to carry 44 pounds of luggage, another way to limit the amount of help that can be sent to struggling families.

In Cuba, the average salary is about $10 a month. When a Cuban family receives simple household items in a parcel, it can save its limited income and spend it on food and other necessities. It is hard to think of an economic sanction that does more harm to the welfare of families in Cuba or does more to make the United States seem meanspirited towards families who already have the misfortune to live under Communism.

We Republicans have diverse views on the Cuban embargo, but we are united on family values; and we should stand up for them here.

As President Reagan said in 1984, ''We must be careful, in reacting to actions by the Soviet Government, not to take out our indignations on those not responsible.'' I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is what we are doing here. We are taking it out on those who are not responsible.

The United States should not be targeting economic sanctions directly against Cuban families, nor should we take away from Cuban Americans the right that all immigrants have, to help loved ones who are left behind.

I urge support of the Flake-Davis-Emerson-Delahunt amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. Still allowed is food, medicine, medical supplies, equipment; receive only radio equipment for reception. It does not eliminate humanitarian aid. So the amendment prohibits implementation of a regulation that is still under development. This regulation, as I understand it, would provide several categories of items that BIS has approved for export to Cuba, the eligibility requirements for gift parcels that can be sent to Cuba without a license.

The Commerce Department had told us that based on input from the public since they published the regulation and in consultation with the State Department, the Department is revising the rule.

Castro has a number of people that are in prison today, many speaking out for human rights; and I think it would be important to send a message; and, as a result of that, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I respectfully disagree with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. I think this is a human rights issue.

This is not an issue about whether the embargo is going to stand with Cuba. This is a more fundamental issue about the human rights of Cuban-Americans living in the United States: in my home, the Tampa Bay area of the State of Florida, throughout the country, and their families who have been left behind in Cuba.

As the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) alluded to, under the new restrictions that have been announced by the State Department that have taken effect, we now as a country prohibit Cuban-Americans from sending to their own family members, soap, toothpaste, or underwear. Those will no longer be allowed to be mailed by family members in the United States to their families in Cuba. On top of that, these regulations specifically prohibit United States citizens from sending anything to family members other than their mother, father, brother, or sister. In other words, if you had a cousin or an aunt or uncle in Cuba that you care about and are trying to help, under this rule which has now taken effect, you can no longer send to them medicine or food or medical supplies.

This is tragic. This is absurd. This is unforgivable. This is something that we should not countenance as a House. This is not a policy we ever would have adopted as a Congress.

There are a few things that I believe people on both sides of this amendment agree upon: first, that the conditions under the horrific Fidel Castro regime are insufferable for Cubans and their families living down there; secondly, that for years, this government has done very little to help their people and will continue to do very little. We can also agree that one of the few sources of hope and comfort that families in Cuba have is the hope that their own family members will try to help them. I know from visiting Cuba 18 months ago with the gentleman from Arizona (Chairman KOLBE), I saw for myself the horrific, intolerable, unmerciful conditions this regime has inflicted on its own people. There are people walking around without adequate clothing, without adequate food, without adequate medical supplies.

Now, we are telling those people that we are going to take away one of the last sources of hope and support they have: their own family members who are trying to assist them by mailing to them food, medicine, clothing, toothpaste, soap. I represent a lot of people who work very hard so they can set aside money to buy the things that we take for granted every day in our own homes; and they mail it, they used to mail it to their family members, their aunts, their uncles, their cousins, their parents, their children. They can no longer do so under these regulations that are not in development; these regulations are in effect.

This is having an impact today on the lives of people here in the United States and in Cuba who are hanging on for dear life. We all know there are times in our lives where the only person you can count on to help you is your own family because the government lets you down, other people cannot or will not help you. This is one of those times in the horrific history of Cuba where family members are there. They are the only thing that is there to keep people alive, to keep them healthy, to keep them from starving; and we as a government have stepped in, through a rule that was developed very quickly without a lot of public discussion and debate, and we have cut off that family support.

This is not who we are as a country. This is not what we stand for. These are not our values. They are also not the values of these people in Cuba who are fighting to maintain their dignity and their health. We should adopt the Flake-Davis-Delahunt-Emerson amendment. We should repeal these rules. This is a mistake. I urge my colleagues to adopt the amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I asked to go to Cuba. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and I asked to go. We were denied. We were denied by Castro for the ability to go visit church leaders in Cuba. Yet, I constantly see, and I guess we are not supposed to mention the names of those in the other body, different members of the other body sort of floating into Havana and coming back out. We were not given the ability to go. The State Department was not able to help us. Castro would not let us go. So it would be a little more objective and a little more fair if those who are opposed to what Castro stands for who basically are taking the Reagan doctrine that he took to Eastern Europe there were able to go.

Even in the Soviet Union under the dark days of Krushchev, we were able to go; and when we went, we brought computers in and different things.

So I just want the record to show there has not been a case that I know of of any Member in this body, and there are good people on both sides, I know both sides do not favor Castro, but I have never seen a Member from this body who strongly opposes and speaks out against Castro to ever be given a visa to visit. You even have to go through the pro-Castro groups to ask for an opportunity to go.

So I think the record ought to show that I want to go. And for those of my colleagues who have been and feel that they speak a little bit and have some influence, pick a time and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and I will go and we will go into the prisons; we will go into the churches. But the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and I have never been able to go.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART).

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

As a matter of fact, when Castro denied the authority, because he knows very well who he does not want to allow from this body to enter Cuba, he called the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) provocateurs for having sought permission to enter, because the dictator knows that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) would go and try to visit Dr. Oscar Elias Biscet and the other political prisoners, the thousands of political prisoners in Cuba. That is their attempt, and the dictator knows.

The issue here, Mr. Chairman, is very simple. The people who have family in Cuba, Cuban-Americans who send aid to family members in Cuba, are in our districts, in the district that I am honored to represent, in the district of the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN), of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART), and of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ). But this amendment says, our constituents cannot know what is right for their families. This amendment says, we know better.

By the way, the gentleman from Florida made a series of statements that were factually untrue. He said that the new regulations that have just come into effect promulgated by President Bush prohibit humanitarian aid of food and medicine. I believe the gentleman from Florida said that. That is untrue.

The gentleman also said that the new regulations promulgated by President Bush prohibit family members from sending such humanitarian aid to immediate family members. He said that. That is factually untrue.

So I would recommend to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) that he read the new regulations.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. I think the gentleman should read the regulations first.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. I have read the regulations.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Well, then why would the gentleman say that immediate family members would not be able to receive food and medicine?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. If the gentleman would yield, I would be happy to answer his question.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Why would the gentleman say that if he had read the regulations?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Because under the regulations, if you are trying to send something down to your cousins, to your aunts——

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. That is not what the gentleman said.

Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, the new regulations, this gentleman said and it is on the record, that food and medicine is prohibited to, he said, children and fathers and sons. So anyway, that is factually incorrect.

I am glad that he said he read the regulations, but obviously he did not understand them. Maybe he should read them again.

Now, Mr. Chairman, prodemocracy leaders inside of Cuba, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) just mentioned that he sought to visit with them, risking their lives, have sent us a statement that we received just a few days ago, supporting President Bush's measures, stating, ''These measures of the United States Government are designed to bring about democracy in Cuba. These measures will not only benefit the Cubans who live on the island, but also those in exile, leading Cuba to a peaceful transition, and the people themselves will claim their legitimate rights which were stolen from them by the Communist dictatorship in 1959. The dollars that enter the country go directly into the coffers of Castro's Communist system, allowing them to continue enjoying the goods and pleasures that are denied to the Cuban people. They will continue to live above Cuba's working and exploited class, without even thinking of the common Cuban.''

Now, they signed this. They risked their lives to send us this statement. Numerous prodemocracy activists. They are not, by the way, the so-called ''dissidents'' that are allowed by the regime to travel the world to get awards or to come here to Congress to lobby against sanctions on the dictatorship. These are people in the political prisons or risking their lives because they know that at any moment they could be thrown into those totalitarian gulags and given sham trials where they are sentenced to decades in the gulag.

But this amendment, Mr. Chairman, says, We know better than those people. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is dishonest. This amendment is condescending. It seeks to undermine an entire policy that President Bush has just implemented to serve the interest of a brutal dictatorship.

The Democratic Party November 30 ''Frank País'', along with the November 30 Movement in Exile, after debating the pros and cons of the new measures that will be enforced beginning June 30, 2004 state the following consensus:

As far as we are informed, we agree to accept the measures imposed by the United States government. We know that they are designed to bring about democracy in Cuba.

We recognize that many common Cubans will be severely affected and specially the children, the elderly and the ill but we, as members of the Cuban opposition, will try to care for those families as best we can, relying on the unconditional assistance of the Exile community.

On the other hand, there are tens of thousands of Cubans who live off the remittances sent to them by their families in the United States. They even travel to the United States and do nothing to help improve the situation of common Cubans.

We believe, and are almost certain that these measures will not only benefit the Cubans who live on the island, but also those in Exile, leading Cuba to a peaceful transition and the people themselves will claim their legitimate rights, which were stolen from them by the communist dictatorship in 1959.

It is important that the people know that the government of Fidel Castro, as a decaying system, no longer has anywhere to purchase goods because it is in debt to the entire World and the dollars that enter the Country go directly into the coffers of Castro's communist system, allowing them to continue enjoying the goods and pleasures that are denied to the Cuban people. Furthermore, they will continue to live above Cuba's working and exploited class, without even thinking of the common Cuban.

Many families live off the clothes and shoes that their families in Exile work so hard to send them, but the Cubans over there, just like the ones here, must remember that the first one who separated the Cuban family was Castro's communist government, who forbade the people from receiving even a single letter from relatives. Many Cubans—far from going out on the streets in protest—chose to settle in Exile and now they protest against whom they should not protest. They should come and protest against Fidel Castro who is the only one responsible for all these measures.

The double standard must cease, they must go out into the streets if they wish to receive remittances to change the grey and sad destiny of the homeland of Martí. Let no one doubt it, victory is closer each day. We only need the unity of all, and with all, of all and by all, therein lies the success of victory against the dictatorship that for 45 years has sunk the people of Cuba into mud and misery.

We are counting on you, our Cuban brothers and sisters in Exile and within Cuba.

Long Live a Free Cuba!

Statement given via telephone by Ada Kaly Márquez Abascal—National Coordinator for functions of the Democratic Party November 30 ''Frank País'' and correspondent for the Oriental Zone of the Information Bridge Cuba-Miami, for the Information Bridge Cuba-Miami and Net For Cuba on the 27th day of June, 2004.

I would ask all of our colleagues to reject this amendment, to support President Bush's policy to hasten the democratic transition in Cuba. Oppose the Flake amendment.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to say again, this is not about travel. This is about the freedom of Cuban Americans to send packages of soap and clothing and personal hygiene items to their families in Cuba.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT).

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time. I yield to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. I just want to further respond to the gentleman's comments because I agree, we need to be clear on the facts. We will disagree on the policy. The rule specifically states that if you are sending something to a spouse, a child, a parent or a grandparent, you can send down food and medicine. But if you are sending something to an aunt, uncle or cousin, you cannot, and that is what the regulations say. And with respect to anybody in your family, you are prohibited from sending down soap, toothpaste or clothes. So I think that sets the record straight.

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Chairman, in a recent interview, the chief of staff of Secretary of State Colin Powell said that the U.S. embargo has not worked for 40 years. ''It is crazy,'' he said. And, again, I am quoting the chief of staff to Secretary Powell. He went on to say, ''It is the dumbest policy on the face of the Earth.'' That is his language.

Well, let me suggest now it just got dumber. Several weeks ago, as the others have said, these new regulations were implemented by the administration. Allegedly they are designed to hasten Cuba's transition to a free and open society, which I think we all agree is a worthy goal. But, tragically, the impact of these changes fall heaviest on Cubans on the island and their families here in the United States who want to help them, to assist them.

It is as if 45 years of this tough approach has not already been proven to be an abysmal failure. So today's debate on this moment focuses clearly on one of the most absurd of the new provisions. The regulation of the Department of Commerce that takes the existing restrictions on the contents of gift packages to their relatives from Americans to their relatives in Cuba, and narrows the list even further.

The new rule would make it illegal for U.S. citizens to send Cuban relatives clothing, soap, shampoo, and other personal hygiene items. And furthermore, since June 30 it is now illegal to send parcels to cousins, aunts, nephews, anyone who is not a member of your immediate family. It is also illegal to send more than one nonfood gift parcel each month to a household, for up until now you could send a monthly care package to each individual in a household. But that is over.

So now it is U.S. foreign policy to prohibit American citizens from sending their relatives soap and shampoo and clothes. I would suggest this hardly constitutes weapons of mass destruction. And the U.S. government is breaking new ground, because it is now in the business of defining family for its own citizens.

Under these regulations, grandparents trump uncles and sisters beat out cousins. In past debates in this Chamber about restrictions on the right of Americans to travel to Cuba, I have referred to the travel police. Well, now we have the shampoo police. We have the soap police. We have the deodorant police. We have the clothing police guarding, at taxpayers' expense, against the possibility that these items might make it across the Florida straits.

This is just as much folly as the fact that the Treasury Department now has more people tracking grandmothers bicycling in Cuba than it does looking at the finances of Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein. What in the world are we doing? What have we come to?

You might want to review some of the other new regulations, two announced at the same time, like limiting family visits to once every 3 years with no humanitarian exceptions such as the occasion of the death of a mother, the death of a father, the death of a daughter or the death of a son.

President Bush got it right 2 years ago when he went to Miami and said, I love being with my family. There is nothing more important than family in my life. But he got it dead wrong when he announced these regulations. They are antifamily, they are mean-spirited, and they are un-American; and I urge support for this amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY).

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, sometimes our speeches get away with us and trivialized. The oppression of people in Cuba, sometimes in making a speech we joke about what is going on in Cuba as if it does not even exist. I think that is pretty unfortunate.

People are dying in Cuba. They are imprisoned in Cuba. The entire island is nothing but a prison of a Communist dictator. The author and proponent of the Flake amendment does not intend to help Fidel Castro's brutal regime grind its boot heel of tyranny deeper into the necks of Cuban people, but that is exactly what this amendment will do.

The premise upon which the Flake amendment is based is that gift packages sent from the United States to Cuba will be delivered to their addresses by some chipper little mailman with a wink and a smile.

No, Mr. Chairman, it works more like this:

A family of refugees in Miami hears that their relatives in the proletarian paradise that is modern Cuba are short on capitalist luxuries like clothing or soap. So this family gathers together a package of supplies to help their relatives get through the month.

The U.S. Postal Service delivers the package to Cuba where it is taken to a central depository. Once the package is secured by Castro's goon squads, the relatives are notified of its arrival and of the price that they must pay to have it released.

More than a billion dollars of charitable goods are given to the Cuban people by their friends and families from America every year, either in gift packages or personal deliveries by relatives. That is $1 billion that Castro does not have to spend on government services but instead can spend on overtime for his secret police.

Meanwhile, under this arrangement, Castro's regime has pocketed more than $36 million over the last 2 years in revenues from ''delivery fees.''

Now, whether this $36 million went to fund international terrorism, more efficiently torture political prisoners, or simply put in an Olympic-size jacuzzi in Castro's rec room, we do not know. What we do know, however, is that Fidel Castro gleefully, gleefully, profits off the generosity of Cuban-Americans and the desperation of the Cuban people.

This is Totalitarian Dictatorship 101, Mr. Chairman. There is practically a chapter on it in the Communist Manifesto. And it is the very arrangement that our Commerce Department will curb with these new regulations. The new regulations ensure, I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT), ensure that the goods sent to Cuba are truly humanitarian. They will thereby cut into Castro's profits. They are supported by the Cuban-American community and, given the chance, they will work.

The Flake amendment, however innocuous it would seem, would undo those regs, further underwriting Communist oppression and welcome Castro's vile snout back to the trough of American charity.

That is why this amendment will not do. And that is why I urge my colleagues to stand with the Cuban people and vote no.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON).

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, the Flake amendment is very simple, and I will repeat what my colleagues have heretofore said. It prevents the Department of Commerce from carrying out new misguided regulations, further restricting gift parcels and personal baggage going to Cuba.

Now, the stated purpose of these regulations, as my colleagues have said, is to prevent gift parcels sent to Cuba from supporting the Castro regime.

In reality, we all know that these regulations will have little effect on the Cuban regime and, instead, will seriously hinder the ability of Cuban-Americans to send critical humanitarian aid to their family members in Cuba.

I want to examine, if I could, Mr. Chairman, again some of the supposedly regime-supporting items that these Commerce Department regulations would prohibit Cuban-Americans from sending to family members in Cuba as a gift parcel.

Seeds, so that a family might plant vegetables or flowers; clothing; personal hygiene items; fishing equipment; soap. Now, do those sound like items that if withheld from the Cuban people are going to bring down Castro's regime? I do not think so. There will be an impact, and there is no question that Cuban families will suffer.

Mr. Chairman, imagine living with the knowledge that a member of your family residing in Cuba cannot afford adequate clothing, and we all know that the Castro regime makes it almost impossible to afford clothing, new items; but imagine that you could not send him or her this very basic item. Oh, you could send them a receive-only short-wave radio, but you cannot send them clothing or Kleenex, toilet paper? Come on. This is absolutely ridiculous.

I know personally that if I had distressed family members in Cuba or any other country, that this country might prohibit me from sending items to them, that I would use every tool available in order to assist them. Securing travel to Cuba, I might try to pack as many essential items for my family that I could fit into my luggage; but then again, my efforts would be in vain because I would run into these restrictive Commerce Department regulations. These regulations would keep me from bringing more than 44 pounds of luggage per passenger, including my own personal clothing for the trip.

By the way, as my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT), said, thanks to the new regulations issued by the Treasury Department, I could only visit family in Cuba once every 3 years. It is kind of hard to pack 3 years of assistance to your family in 44 pounds of luggage. In this situation, how am I supposed to send my family clothing and other essentials?

These regulations, Mr. Chairman, do not reflect this Nation's family values. I think, Mr. Chairman, that family values mean letting family members help each other.

The Cuban people have experienced enough oppression. Let us not fund policies that cut them off from their families, intensifying their hardship. Vote for commonsense policies that reflect our values. Vote ''yes'' for the Flake amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN).

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank my wonderful friend, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), for his steadfast leadership throughout the years in favor of human rights; and that is really what is before us today.

I know that it is tempting to make quips and jokes about this situation. It is not very funny to the Cuban people. It goes at their expense, but I want to point out some of the facts that have been misrepresented on the other side.

There will be no soap police. There will be no deodorant police. I know this is so funny. There is not much laughter in Cuba since Castro took office illegally. There will be no shampoo police because of these regulations, no toothpaste police. Call the Commerce Department and find out what the regulations say. All of those goods will be allowed to go into Cuba. Call the Commerce Department tomorrow and my colleagues will read what the regulations say. Please read them.

I rise in strong opposition to the Flake amendment. Mr. Chairman, after the deplorable attacks against our Nation on September 11, we committed ourselves to denying terrorists and their sponsors the financial resources to threaten the United States and our allies and our interests, and this became the pillar of our foreign and our domestic policy in our war against terrorism.

Yet, when President Bush takes steps to deny more than $1 billion annually to the Castro regime, a rogue regime that has been repeatedly classified by our own State Department as a state sponsor of terrorism, the President is rebuffed and undermined.

After reviewing the evidence of how the Castro regime has manipulated U.S. regulations to fill the coffers of his regime, the President was compelled to act firmly and expeditiously, and what was this evidence? I will tell my colleagues, Mr. Chairman.

More than $1 billion annually in funds and goods are sent to Cuba from those living outside the island through the shipments of gift parcels, remittances, and from vacations. In the year 2002 to 2003, the Castro regime received over $36 million in revenues from delivery of gift parcels. He is making a lot of money.

The regime earns another $20 million per year from excess baggage fees and customs duties, and the proponents of this amendment would ask us to ignore these facts, and they will claim that they would justify their positions using humanitarian claims, while Castro becomes one of the richest men in our hemisphere.

The facts are the following: the new regulations continue to allow gift parcels for humanitarian reasons. That is the truth. That is the fact, but focus these gift parcels to include truly necessary items such as medicines, medical supplies and devices and unlimited food, just to name a few; and the fact is that gift parcels can be sent to immediate family members. This will ensure that the senior regime and Communist Party officials are not the beneficiaries.

Again, I ask my colleagues, what is wrong with a policy that seeks to deny the Castro dictatorship millions and billions in hard-earned currency? This Castro dictatorship is a regime that just a few days ago, just a few days ago from today hosted the foreign minister of Iran and other Iranian regime officials. What happened there?

The Iranian officials thanked the Cuban dictator for the regime support for Iran's nuclear quest, and he indicated that Iran and Cuba must stand together against U.S. efforts to deny Iran access to nuclear technology.

The Iranian foreign minister underscored the significance of sharing expertise and technical knowledge between two countries in various enterprises.

He said he ''conveyed the warm greetings'' of Ayatollah Khomeini and Khatami to Castro for ''resisting the political and economic pressure'' from the U.S.

What pressure was he referring to, Mr. Chairman? The very regulations and policies that we are debating today, that the proponents of this amendment seek to revoke.

The Iranian foreign minister also referred to Castro's 2002 visit to Iran. He called it a turning point in relations between the two countries, leading to stronger Cuba-Iran ties; and notably, it was during this visit that Fidel Castro, with the Ayatollah, stated, ''Together, Cuba and Iran can bring America to its knees.''

So this stronger Cuba-Iran relationship that the foreign minister was referring to is built on this mission, this shared goal of destroying the United States.

So I ask, why would we want to assist the Castro regime, a regime that seeks to destroy our country? Why would we want to assist this regime? What is wrong with trying to deny the Castro regime the financial means to pursue this goal of bringing America to its knees?

The facts speak for themselves, Mr. Chairman. The new regulations implemented by the President are in keeping with our global anti-terrorism efforts, specifically targeting terrorism financing. They do not affect true humanitarian flows between the U.S. and the Cuban people. They do not, and as our dear former President Ronald Reagan would say, toward those who would export terrorism and subversion in the Caribbean and elsewhere, especially Cuba, we will act with firmness.

So I hope that our colleagues will act with firmness, will follow the Reagan example and act with firmness against the Castro regime because the Commission for Assistance to a Free Cuba has given us a mandate to identify measures that are going to help the Cuban people bring an end to the Castro dictatorship, and this is an element of a plan for U.S. assistance to a postdictatorship Cuba.

Castro has exploited U.S. humanitarian policies to shift burdens that should be assumed by the Cuban state; and instead, he has used it to generate hard currency that he uses to maintain the regime's repressive apparatus. These families can continue to send on a monthly basis medicine, medical supplies, food, personal hygiene products to their immediate family members, and also, and we have not talked about it, but nongovernmental organizations are providing humanitarian support and assistance to civil society groups in Cuba, and they will continue to do so with the President's recommendations.

I thank the chairman again for his time.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to the time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) has 13½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume before yielding to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I just wanted to clarify what the rule actually says. The rule we are seeking to amend states this rule removes seeds, clothing, personal hygiene items, veterinary medicine and supplies, fishing equipment and supplies, and soap-making equipment from the list of commodities that may be sent to Cuba in gift parcels.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN).

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Flake-Davis amendment. This amendment will help not the Cuban regime, but this is an amendment that will help the Cuban people.

Mr. Chairman, for the past 5 years, this House and the other body have voted time and time again to lift various U.S. restrictions on travel and on commercial food and medicine sales. Yet this administration has moved with ruthless determination to tighten and increase restrictions on heretofore legal interactions between Americans and Cubans.

Who have they targeted to be most affected by these new rules and regulations? Who is so subversive, so threatening to our national security that they must face tighter and tighter and tighter restrictions on their activities? Well, it is not members of the Cuban Government. Mr. Chairman, it is Cuban families that will suffer as a result of these new policies.

The Bush administration has even gone so far as to redefine what the word ''family'' means for Cuban-Americans; and it does not include uncles or aunts or cousins or nephews or nieces, let alone your godparents or godchildren or any other member of your extended family. As far as the Bush administration is concerned, if these extended family members are beloved by a Cuban living in America, too bad.

As the sponsors of this amendment have already described, the new Commerce Department policies demand that Cuban-Americans in the United States restrict humanitarian or gift parcels to just one per household in Cuba once a month, rather than a parcel once a month to each individual family member, and while the package may include food, it cannot include seeds so that the family might grow more of their own food or fishing equipment so that they might catch their own food or veterinary medicines and equipment so that a family might care for animals that help them supplement their diet or income.

While the parcel may include medicines, it cannot include personal hygiene items or soap-making equipment; and I would say to my colleagues here, I have the regulations. They are right here in black and white. I am happy to show them to my colleagues and give them to them so they can read.

While Cuban-Americans can send their family members receive-only radios, they cannot send them clothing. Clearly, in the minds of officials at the Commerce Department, listening to Radio Marti is a greater priority for Cuban families than adequate clothing.

Mr. Chairman, our Nation has always placed an emphasis on families, on family values, on the reunification of families. As a Nation of immigrants, we have thrived on supporting our extended families, both those living in the United States with us and family members still struggling to survive in their mother countries.

The new restrictions issued by the Commerce Department make a mockery of this common heritage that binds all Americans together. No matter what any Member of this body believes about the rightness or wrongness of our current policy toward Cuba, and for the record, Mr. Chairman, I believe that our policy is a miserable failure, but no matter what one believes, we should not place the burden and price of those beliefs on Cuban-Americans and their relatives still living on the island.

No constituency in America has fought more fiercely for a free Cuba. Yet, these are the very families Commerce is going to punish.

These new policies were specifically made to isolate Cubans on the island from their relatives in the United States. They were specifically made to increase the hardships faced by those families.

Mr. Chairman, these new policies are cruel, these new policies are inhuman, and these new policies are cold-hearted and their enforcement should not be funded.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote in support of the Flake-Davis amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment, which would weaken the pressure on Castro's gangster regime. Yes, Cuban families will be suffering. Yes, Cuban families will suffer more than they suffer now. But they are not suffering because of the United States of America. No.

It is always America's fault, right? It is always America's fault whether the Cuban people are suffering or any of the people who live under tyranny are suffering anywhere in the world. It is always our fault.

No, the people of Cuba are suffering, as they have for the last 3 and 4 decades, because of the Castro regime. It is a brutal dictatorship that has suppressed the people, that has eliminated freedom, that has permitted the economy, that once-proud economy, one of the most prosperous economies of the hemisphere, to go right down the tubes.

The people of Cuba know why they are suffering. It is not because of the people of the United States. And, in fact, we should have policies that differ between democratic countries and dictatorships. If we have the same policies, what pressure are we going to be able to put on these dictatorships to change? That leaves us with only the military option. We should have an economic policy that will pressure this hemisphere's most brutal dictatorship, and we should make sure that we do not relieve that pressure at this moment.

It is important that the people of Cuba fully understand the consequences of Castro's dictatorship. It is not the fault of the people of the United States, as we have heard here. It is not the fault of this administration. It is the fault of this bearded dictator who has murdered all of his opposition in Cuba. That is why there is no prosperity. That is why the people are living in misery. It is not because of anything we are doing here.

Yes, we should put economic pressure on Cuba to get rid of Castro. Castro has not only a dictatorship that oppresses his people, he supports insurgents and terrorists throughout this hemisphere. He uses his territory as a base of operations that is designed to hurt the people of the United States of America.

Fidel Castro rules with an iron fist. Yes, you do not grow much food when you have iron fists on your hands. That is right, you do not grow much food and you do not have a high standard of living when you spend all your money subsidizing terrorists and a heavy military regime, as Castro has. That is why the people of Cuba are suffering.

The best thing we can do right now is continue the pressure on Castro until he is gone. That is what we can do for the people of Cuba. And if we right now take the measure that is being suggested by the Flake amendment, it will be seen as a weakness on the part of the United States towards this hemisphere's most brutal dictatorship. It will not encourage change for the better, it will encourage intransigence on the part of dictators and terrorists like Fidel Castro.

It is time for us to oppose any type of suggestion like that proposed by the Flake amendment today.

Let us be for Cuba and the people of Cuba, for freedom and democracy, and say, yes; Cuba, si; libertad, si; Castro, no mas.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume before yielding to the gentleman from Idaho.

I would just say that let us do stand for freedom, let us allow Cuban Americans to observe the freedom that they have to send personal hygiene items and food, medicine, and clothing to their family members in Cuba.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER).

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) for his leadership and once again for bringing forth, I think, a very important doctrine relative to our policy here in the Western Hemisphere.

I rise today in support of this amendment, with great concern about the more than 40 years of failed American policy towards Cuba.

We talk a lot about bringing democracy to Cuba and other parts of the world, especially for those who have suffered under the cruel fist of Communist tyranny for decades. Yet for decades we have worked to shut off their access to their very best hope for freedom, and that is to experience it by conversing with people who are free, or at least were free up until June 30, when once again we adopted another tyrannical national policy toward Cuba.

Instead of bringing about positive change for the people of Cuba, this decrepit policy has hurt ordinary Cubans. It has hurt their families and has deprived ordinary Americans of the opportunity to become ambassadors of freedom. The new restrictions that were put into effect last month only cripple our ability to see change come to the Cuban people.

We say we are trying to help the Cuban people, but by imposing even stricter limits on how Cuban Americans can help their family members in Cuba, these changes hurt not only the Cuban Government but ordinary Cuban citizens who are struggling under that very dictatorship that we try now to depose.

These new restrictions and the underlying policies are unreasonable and fly in the face of what everyone knows is the best way to make people hungry for change, and that is to show them the benefits of what they are missing and the benefits of what they will gain by changing.

Is anyone surprised, then, that in 4 decades we have seen little change in the Cuban political climate? How can we claim to support families while our policies encourage the breakdown of family units by limiting the support of Cuban Americans that can provide family members while they struggle in Cuba? How can we claim to value our God-given freedoms, while denying American citizens the right to move about the world as they please? And how can we claim to want a free and democratic Cuba while refusing the Cuban people the opportunity to see freedom in action and at its best?

Our failed Cuban policies toward Cuba cannot continue. Making them tougher only makes them worse. If we truly seek to end ruthless and brutal human rights violations in Cuba while showing the Cuban people the way toward social and economic freedom, we must begin by changing our own policies of restriction and denial. I urge the support of this amendment.

And let me just say in closing, Mr. Chairman, that I wonder, because I have heard tonight about the iron fist, the restrictions, the suppression, and government directed. Is that not what we are talking about in our directions toward Americans and their want of travel to Cuba? Is that not what we are talking about in our government restricting the activities and relationships between families? Is that not what we are talking about with our religious associations and the lack of our ability to have our religious associations go to Cuba? Is that not what we are talking about when we are afraid, for some reason, to expose the Cuban people to another form of political thought?

I wonder from where that iron fist and that tyrannical hand comes into play?

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN).

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for my good friends, but as a naturalized American, as a political refugee from an enslaved Communist regime, I would hope that my colleagues would never compare this greatest Nation on Earth, the United States of America, the beacon of hope and democracy for oppressed people everywhere, to what is going on 90 miles from my constituency, the beast of Fidel Castro, who enslaves his people and who denies his people basic liberties.

Please do not insult my adopted country in that manner.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FEENEY).

Mr. FEENEY. Mr. Chairman, it is an important night tonight, because I find myself in between a fight with two sets of freedom fighters, two groups that care deeply about freedom. But the suggestion made by the last speaker, who is a dear friend of mine, that we are interrupting relations between families, in my view, is a little bit like saying that somehow the United States was responsible for a catastrophe visited upon us by Hitler because we refused to give Anne Frank lunch buckets before the Holocaust.

My colleagues, there is way too much at stake here to sit back and say that this is a totalitarian regime that we are going to do business with. I have freedom fighters, including the sponsor of this amendment, who is a hero of mine, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), who believes deeply in limited government. He believes deeply in free trade. He believes deeply in the things that make our country and free nations great. But I have to say that the question before us tonight is, are we going to accommodate, will we appease, will we compromise with, will we do business with, will we facilitate, will we provide basic resources to a dictator that has put his own people in jail, under the knife in prison, who has basically undermined every single basic liberty we have ever experienced?

Our own State Department has identified, as one of the sixth major exporters of terrorism, the Cuban government. Are we going to recognize that, or are we going to reward that and facilitate that? That is the question here tonight. The question is what Lady Freedom would do here tonight.

I have freedom fighters on both sides of this argument and people I respect. But fundamentally if we send the message to Castro that he and whoever replaces Castro can stay forever and punish freedom, throw 70 reporters in jail on an annual basis simply for reporting the truth, if they will constantly undermine what is good about our free world, then we have got to live with ourselves as the price comes due for allowing freedom to be undermined.

It is true that this is a policy that for some 45 years has not worked. The first 35 the Soviets supported them. With the last 10 years, we have had a chance to undermine Castro. Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to please oppose the amendment.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to the time remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) has 5½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I think we have to stop and listen and look at what is going on here. What we are talking about is regulations that went into effect 7 days ago. These are new regulations. There was no oversight by Congress. We are providing the opportunity here to give that oversight and to do the checks and balances.

The regulations are anti-American because they only affect us. They do not affect Cubans. We are the ones that cannot do this. Our government is telling us that we cannot be compassionate Americans. We cannot send seeds, cannot send clothing, cannot send fishing equipment, cannot send soap to people in another country. And we are going to have to have a police force that goes out and enforces that? That is not a compassionate America.

We cannot be a country that says that we can leave no child behind when we cannot even send hygiene products to this country. We cannot. Americans cannot. We can send to every other kid in the world something that we cannot send to Cuba. That is not leave no child behind.

What are we afraid of? What are we so afraid of that we have to make these regulations so restrictive that we Americans just cannot send a goodwill package to people? How are we going to have friendships? How are we going to instruct about democracy? How are we going to talk about this great country?

This country is turning into the ugly American, the really ugly American by making these really dumb and anti-American restrictions; and we in Congress should lift them by voting for this amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. We all know that Castro was kept alive for decades by the Soviet regime, and they have collapsed. So how does he stay alive? One of the things he is doing is he is making a lot of money from people that are going back and forth and back and forth.

There are Americans essentially vacationing down there, and to say, You cannot send packages, you cannot go at all, I mean, these are gross exaggerations.

This is a very well-thought-out policy of the President of the United States, and we should support our President in this. And the Cuban Americans in my district, it amazes me for people to get up and say the Cuban Americans do not like this. The Cuban Americans in my district like this. They think it is a very good thing to do, that Castro is being helped by the previous policy and that this policy will be much, much better for our foreign policy interests, which happen to be to support freedom.

And I think this is a very poorly thought out amendment. Vote against it. Support the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) in this.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for this amendment. This, to me, is a freedom issue, as the gentleman from Florida has indicated. I think everyone in this body is concerned about freedom in Cuba, and we should be, and we should do whatever we can to encourage it, but obviously some believe you can encourage freedom by sanctions, which has not worked very well, but it seems to boggle my mind that if we restrain freedom here, that we help freedom there.

This is what we are doing. We are restraining the freedom of our people to send a package, and of course not dealt with in the amendment, but travel as well.

The founders of this country gave strong advice to us, and for 100 years or so we followed it. They said friendship and trade with everyone who is willing, alliances with none; and that is pretty good advice. But what have we done in recent years? We have a hodgepodge when we deal with other countries.

Just think of what has happened recently. We took the gentleman from Libya, the so-called gentleman Omar Qadhafi, who is now scheduled to shoot four nurses and a doctor, and we have given him normal trade sanctions, and we are going to subsidize trade with him. And here he admits to having shot down one of our airplanes or blown up one of our airplanes. He is a terrorist, but here we are dealing with him in that way.

We have trade with China. Things have gone better with China, not worse.

Where are the free traders? It really bothers me when I hear the free traders who promote free trade in every other area except the freedom of an American citizen to send a package to Cuba.

I do not believe you can enhance freedom in Cuba by limiting the freedom of American citizens. We must be more open and more confident that freedom of choice by American citizens is worth something to defend; and I stand strongly for this amendment and I compliment the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) for bringing it to us.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM).

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment, and I will tell you why. Ask the Cuban exiles if they support this amendment. Every single one of them in my district says no. They know what Castro represents. Ask Cuban exiles all over.

I want to be able to walk into a free Cuba with the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN), with the gentlemen from Florida, the DIAZ brothers, and the millions of people that have been exiled out of Cuba. What is helping the Cubans is to get rid of Castro.

Mr. Chairman, this is also personal. Here sat the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM JOHNSON) tortured, tortured brutally by Castro interrogators. They took a pistol and blew the head off of one of our Americans that was a prisoner of war in Vietnam. Remember Elian Gonzales? Remember them shooting down an American airplane that was along their coast?

You know, I do not forget things. Look at the movie Hanoi Hilton. It is not made up. I see people shaking their heads. A Castro torturer stood and held a gun to an American prisoner of war and blew his head off. Ask SAM JOHNSON. He was there. And it is appalling.

Now, there are American stakes. Some of my friends said, Well, DUKE, we are trying to open up agriculture trade. We represent agriculture districts in the opening up of sanctions to Cuba. Sometimes things are worth fighting for. Sometimes things are worth giving up.

Let us give up a little bit so that the Cuban people can be free and that Castro dictator can be eliminated. God bless this country. To hell with Castro.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his leadership in sponsoring this very common-sense amendment.

The point is very simple and clear. Not one dime, not one penny of U.S. tax dollars should be spent to regulate how much soap and toothpaste Cuban Americans can send to their loved ones. Very basic.

I know that many want to topple the Castro government. Regime change, of course, has been central to United States foreign policy under the Bush administration. I happen to believe, however, that we should end the embargo, allow Americans the right to travel, which is their right, and also allow families to embrace each other. Forty-five years of an embargo against an Afro-Hispanic country 90 miles from our shores is fundamentally wrong and immoral.

The United States has normal relations with China. Even the Cuban dissidents believe that ending the embargo makes sense for that cause. This amendment does not even do that. All it does is allow soap and toothpaste and gift boxes to be sent to Cuban people. We should support this modest amendment and stop punishing ordinary people because of a backwards foreign policy.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART).

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I just heard that the dissidents in Cuba do not support the sanctions. That is just not correct. As a matter of fact, yesterday, Mr. Antunes, a black Cuban leader who has been in prison since he was 16 years old, imprisoned by that white Spanish son, and grandchildren of Spanish people, Spanish white people who have imprisoned mostly blacks, and again the blacks in prison like Dr. Biscet, like Mr. Antunes, all support these sanctions.

Let me just tell Members who do not support the sanctions: Castro himself does not support sanctions, he supports this amendment as a matter of fact. But the primary reason we have heard today for this amendment, and we have heard it time and time again, is that the Cuban Americans are going to suffer. Those of us who represent the Cuban Americans do not know. The Cuban Americans, you see, according to this amendment, do not know what is right for them. No, those people, we have heard that before, those people do not know what is right for them. So, therefore, this amendment sponsored by people from Arizona and Massachusetts, very far-away places, this amendment knows what is best for that group of Hispanics and their families.

There are two words for what this amendment is, Mr. Chairman, two words for an amendment that says those people, those Hispanics do not know what is right for them, so this amendment has to tell them what is right, two words, ''patronizing'' and ''racist''; you see, because the Cuban American people do know, Mr. Chairman, what is right for themselves and their families. The Cuban American people do know what is the right thing to do, which is why they do not support this amendment. They overwhelmingly support the President's smart, well-thought-out, responsible measures.

Let us oppose this amendment that again tries to tell that group of Hispanics what is right for them, what is right for Cuban Americans. We who represent the Cuban Americans can tell you, they know what is right for them and their families, and they will tell Members to vote ''no'' on this amendment.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, up until most recently, this has been an enlightening discussion. I think it is unfortunate that those who seek to enhance the freedom of individuals to decide whether or not they can send their families services or goods, that is considered racist or that is considered patronizing or condescending. Nothing can be further from the truth. We are simply allowing freedom.

It would be the ultimate irony if we allow Fidel Castro, as William F. Buckley said in a column today, it would be the ultimate irony if we allow Fidel Castro to impinge on the rights of Americans.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at some of the supporters of this amendment and the way that they are supporting the amendment, as I will. They actually sound like this is on the level. They actually debate this like this is for real.

Let me refresh Members' memories, those who support my position in favor of the Flake amendment on how this happened. A group of Florida legislators wrote the White House and said, if you do not tighten up on Cuba, you are going to lose votes in Florida. That is what happened. That is the truth. So I am surprised that some of my colleagues would actually debate this as if this was real and on the level. This is not on the level.

If you arrived from the moon tomorrow and did not know this was an election year and Florida was in play, how would you have a hint that it was an election year and Florida was in play? Tighten up on Cuba to make Florida not in play, but fall into one column. That is why we bring up Elian Gonzalez, who is playing soccer in Cuba minding his own business. That is why we have decided that Castro stands at the gate and every single dollar and every single tampon and every single Kleenex that goes in Cuba he grabs for himself, and that is why he is the richest guy in the hemisphere, except there is no sign that he is going anywhere and he is nearing 80, so I do not know when he is going to spend all of this money he accumulated.

In 1950, my family came from Puerto Rico. We were not coming from a foreign country, but we felt like we were, and in some cases, we were treated like we were. What do I remember the most? I remember the cold of New York. That was new to me. I arrived in short pants. My father dressed us for Puerto Rico and not for New York.

And I remember my father made $40 a week, and every single Friday upon being paid, he ran to the post office and bought a green money order that he sent back to the folks that we left behind.

So I grew up not understanding a policy that says, to bring about political change, you bring pain to the people you left behind. I do not understand that. That is not right and not correct.

Now, I realize there are rules in the House about how one deals with other Members, and I am one of the most respectful Members when it comes to that, but it was nice to see the majority leader come to the floor and denounce this policy when he is always a leader on trade with China. So whenever he denounces policies like this towards Cuba, I try to see if he is crossing his fingers behind his back since he is such a strong supporter of trading with China.

What are we saying here, that to bring down a government you will deny a family member the ability to visit but once every 3 years. What are we saying, that you are so intent on bringing down a government that has lasted, for whatever reason, for whatever reason, for over 40 years, because you will not allow a cousin toothpaste? Is that who we are as a people? Is that what we believe in?

The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is like a brother to me, one of the most humane Members in this Congress, and I know the role he has to play on this amendment, just like he understands the role I play on other amendments. But he cannot really believe we are hurting people in the Government of Cuba by denying toothpaste to people in Cuba. That is not what we are doing.

Mr. Chairman, what we are doing is looking for votes. And you know something? It might work. But there are hollow victories, and this may be one of those. This may be one of those victories where you say, Sure, I won, but the people lost, and I was supposed to be representing the people.

And so in memory of my father, remembering that $10, $5 check that he sent back every week to help those who stayed behind, in respect to the Dominicans and so many people in my district and Mexican Americans who send money back every day, in respect for all of those folks and for what they stand for, I cannot be part of this policy. The only change now is that I am no longer alone here. There was a time when the Ron Dellums and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and I were totally alone. Now I am glad to say that all those ideas are now Republican ideas, and I welcome that. I love these Republican amendments that try to deal with Cuba in any way.

But, Mr. Chairman, we cannot continue down this route. We are not going anywhere. We are just making enemies of everybody that we can find in Cuba, and that is not the way to do it.

And one last point. Yes, I have seen TV, Spanish radio interviews with dissidents in Cuba who are saying if we want to help them do not do this, that we are just alienating them. And there is one good sign. And it is the hope; it is the future. A significant number in Florida of Cuban-Americans are saying this is wrong. This is not the way to win. This is not the way to help me. Let me talk to my cousin. Let me visit my grandmother. Let me close to the family I left behind because I am in this country, they are not, and I do not want them to miss out on some of the things I have.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I sometimes think the institution that we serve here is so economically driven that we worship at the alter of trade. We are becoming an economic institution. I remember the days of Ronald Reagan where we were more concerned about freedom than anything else.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is not here. He said things are better in China. Things are not better in China. I opposed MFN for China. Things are worse in China. There are 11 Catholic bishops in jail in China. They have just arrested the person who was identified with regard to SARS. They are persecuting the Tibetans, the Muslims, the evangelicals. Things are worse in China today with MFN and with trade than they have been for a long time.

Secondly, I am really kind of sorry that we are really divided. We should be together, and I think things like this send messages that are not necessarily positive. I wish there had been more discussion, quite frankly, on both sides about those who are being persecuted and those who have been arrested and those who are in jail. Have any Members read the book, and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) has met with him, and I have met with him once, by Armando Valladares? The persecution and the suffering that has gone on. I have heard almost no one here tonight say that if Castro were to open up the prisons and the jails and release the people, I may change my position. But we should be asking Castro to do something, and we never do that. Why does Castro not open up the prison doors and allow peaceful people out? Why does Castro not allow the journalists to write whatever they want? Why does he not do that? So there should be more discussion on this and less interest in economic interests on both sides and more on human rights and religious freedom.

Lastly, Ronald Reagan took away MFN from Rumania when all the business interests and the Congress was opposed to it. Ronald Reagan was the one who stood up with regard to Communism. The policy in Castro's Cuba has not been a total failure. They are no longer exporting their political situation around the world.

In the interests of those who are suffering, we should be together; and I would hope that whatever amendment would be offered, and it is too late to amend this amendment, so whatever amendment would be offered would also carry the stipulation that those who are in prison for what they believe in, for religious freedom and persecution, as we do whatever the Flake amendment does, that the prison jails are opened and that people be released.

With that I urge a ''no'' vote on the amendment.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. FLAKE] for the time.

I rise to support the Flake amendment to prohibit the use of funds in this bill to enforce the Commerce Department's recently-announced anti-family restrictions on sending gifts to Cuba.

These restrictions are part of an extensive set of new Bush administration rules that punish Cuban-Americans who have families in Cuba. These regulations include limiting family visits to Cuba by Cuban-Americans to once every three years and further restricting the ability of Cuban-Americans to send money to their families in Cuba.

The Commerce Department's new regulations would make it illegal for Cuban-Americans to send clothing, seeds, soap, personal hygiene products and veterinary medicines to their families in Cuba. Other gifts would be limited to one gift parcel per month per household in Cuba. Gifts could be sent to parents and children, but not to aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews or cousins.

What conceivable rationale could there be for this cruel, misguided assault on Cuban-American families? Is there anyone who truly believes that we are achieving anything productive by keeping Cuban-Americans from helping their family members who remain in Cuba? How dare this administration tell American citizens they can't send clothes, toilet paper or toothpaste to the families they love!

I urge my colleagues to protect the right of Cuban-Americans to assist their families. Let's help these families, not punish them. Support the Flake amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 10 OFFERED BY MR. PAUL

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 10 offered by Mr. PAUL:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), add the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to pay any United States contribution to the United Nations or any affiliated agency of the United Nations.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This is an amendment that I have offered several times in the past, and it is very simple. It says none of the funds made available in this act may be used to pay any United States contribution to the United Nations or any affiliated agency of the United Nations. So very simply, it would defund the United Nations.

The United Nations and the international organizations are now receiving more than $3 billion; so there would be some savings there. But that is not the whole reason why I bring this up. My concern, of course, is for national sovereignty, and I think that we have drifted a long way from the time when this Congress and the President decided on foreign policy to the point now where we are more or less driven by the United Nations. The United Nations has not too long ago set up an international criminal court that we are trying to avoid jurisdiction on our people but nevertheless it hangs out there as a threat to our military. We now pay a larger sum to the United Nations than anybody else. For the administrative part, it is 22 percent, and for the peacekeeping part, it is 27 percent. So essentially we are paying a quarter of the U.N. dues; and, of course, we do not get 25 percent of the vote.

In recent months, we have all become aware of the scandal involving the United Nations, the Food for Oil program, and there is $10 billion missing. And if there was ever a time that we ought to send a message that we do not condone this type of activity, it is now. There is an investigation going on led by Paul Volcker, but he has no subpoena power. The United Nations and the personnel have no intention so far of cooperating. The odds of our really finding out where this $10 billion went are really quite slim.

But the whole process is wrong. So over the years I would say not only the $10 billion that was taken but the many tens of billions, if not hundreds of billions, of dollars that we have pumped into these international organizations have essentially been money down a hole.

But the bigger issue, of course, is the United Nations making decisions for us. We do now capitulate to the WTO. I am a free trader. I have talked this evening about free trade, true free trade. But the WTO is an organization that, because we are a member, we obediently come and change our tax law to conform with what the WTO tells us to do. We should not be very pleased with that type of an organization that does not really even defend free trade. And we have the IMF and the World Bank, and all it is is a big payment and a big burden for the American taxpayer.

Shortly after the United Nations was established, one of the worst acts occurred early on, and that was that our President took us to war in Korea. And it is ongoing. There is a U.N. war that has been going on, and we have had troops in the United Nations there for over 50 years, and that is quite a bit different than if war would be declared by the Congress and we would fight and win wars.

Even the current war that we are having today, it is not a war, but it is a war when it is necessary to call it a war; but we did not declare a war against the Iraqis, and yet in 1991 we went to war under a U.N. resolution. It was said at that time we did not even need a congressional resolution. We could just go because it was under U.N. orders. Even this current time it confuses us quite a bit because when we voted on going again into battle in Iraq, the United Nation was mentioned 21 times to give this authority, but still it was not a declaration of war.

But at the same time that we use the United Nations to do something to enforce U.N. resolutions, then we turn around and we defy the United Nations. They might ask for a resolution of support. We do not get it, but we do it anyway, which does not do a whole lot to build friendship around the world.

So I see this as totally chaotic, not in our interests. It exposes our men and our women to battle in undeclared wars that are generally not won. Ever since World War II, since wars have not been declared and they have been fought essentially under United Nations, wars have not been won, a lot of men and women are killed, and the resolution is never complete.

So my argument is it is time to send a message to those who are questioning whether or not we are too unfriendly to the United Nations, but at least we ought to assume that there should be a responsibility here for us to have the prerogatives of making these decisions ourselves and not by an international body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) has expired.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong opposition to the gentleman's amendment. As imperfect as the U.N. is, there is no other forum which exists to further the U.S. goals. The Security Council's unanimous resolution on Iraq on June 8 was critical to a U.S. priority and to the Bush administration, their effort with regard to bringing some sort of resolution to the issue in Darfur in Sudan, the peacekeeping effort to stop the genocide in Liberia and in Sierra Leone and other places. So the U.S. maintains a key factor here. So I think there are so many arguments that in the interest of time I would hope the amendment would be overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) will be postponed.

SEQUENTIAL VOTES POSTPONED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on those amendments on which further proceedings were postponed in the following order: the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY), amendment No. 13 offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH), amendment No. 9 offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), amendment No. 6 offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR), amendment No. 10 offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first vote in this series.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FLAKE

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the noes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

The Clerk redesignated the amendment.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

The CHAIRMAN (during the vote). There are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 2312

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following statement appear in the appropriate place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD behind the votes for Wednesday, July 7, 2004: unfortunately, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present for the recorded Rollcall votes number 326 through number 335, I would have voted in the following way:

No. 326—H. Con. Res. 410—Motion to Suspend the Rules and Agree, as Amended Recognizing the 25th anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the Republic of the Marshall Islands. I would have voted ''yes.''

No. 327—H. Con. Res. 257—Motion to Suspend the Rules and Agree Expressing the sense of Congress that the President should posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Harry W. Colmery. I would have voted ''yes.''

No. 328—On agreeing to the Manzullo, Velázquez, Serrano amendment to provide $79.1 million for the Small Business 7(a) loan program, the amount provided last year, to finance more than $13 billion in small business loans. I would have voted in favor of the amendment.

No. 329—On agreeing to the Flake (Arizona) amendment prohibiting use of funds to implement new restrictions on gift parcels and other items allowed for travellers to Cuba. I would have voted ''yes.''

No. 330—On agreeing to the Weiner amendment increasing COPS funding by $107 million and offsets that funding by cutting funding for the Census. I would have voted ''yes.''

No. 331—On agreeing to the Hefley amendment eliminating funding for the re-engineering design process for the 2010 short-form only Census. I would have voted ''no.''

No. 332—On agreeing to the Kucinich amendment on funding for the Commerce Department to expand the membership of the President's ''Manufacturing Council.'' I would have voted ''yes.''

No. 333—On agreeing to the Paul of Texas amendment No. 9. I would have voted ''no.''

No. 334—On agreeing to the Farr of California amendment prohibiting funds from being used to prevent states from implementing state laws authorizing the use of medical marijuana. I would have voted ''yes.''

No. 335—On agreeing to the Paul of Texas amendment No. 10. I would have voted ''no.''

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. MILLENDER-MC DONALD

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD:

Page 92, line 16, after the dollar amount insert the following: ''(increased by $1,500,000)''.

Page 93, line 8, after the dollar amount insert the following: ''(reduced by $1,500,000)''.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD).

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

My amendment would provide increased funding for the Small Business Administration's Women's Business Centers Program. This amendment would provide for an additional $1.5 million in funding for the Women's Business Centers Program that is currently funded at the level of $12 million, which is included in the committee's version of the report, bringing this total level of program funding to $13.5 million.

The United States Small Business Administration network of Women's Business Centers provide a wide range of services to women business owners at all levels of business development through grant funding to private, nonprofit economic development organizations. These centers are located in 46 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and the Virgin Islands, and provide financial and general business management and marketing assistance, as well as long-term training and counseling, to existing and potential women business owners, many of whom are socially and economically disadvantaged.

Many centers make a special effort to assist women on welfare become self-sufficient and administer programs and workshops in business ownership, other employment or a combination of the two. All of the centers provide individual counseling and access to the SBA's programs and services.

I have always been a strong supporter of women-owned small businesses and have led efforts in past Congresses to increase authorized funding levels for the WBC programs.

Mr. Chairman, women-owned businesses are a dynamic and thriving force in the U.S. economy. Business ownership has been one of the most effective means of improving women's economic well-being. Female participation in business ownership at all levels is climbing. Women now own 40 percent of all small businesses and are growing at twice the rate of all other businesses. America's 9.1 million women business owners employ 2.75 million people and contribute $3.6 trillion to the economy.

Additional funding for this program will go a long way to ensuring that both existing and new centers will have the funding to help women entrepreneurs with additional training and technology assistance, especially minority women and start-up businesses.

I would like to thank the chairman and the ranking member for their support and guidance as I have introduced this amendment, and I ask all of my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BURGESS

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURGESS:

Page 108, after line 22, insert the following (and make such technical and conforming changes as may be appropriate):

SEC. 801. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Federal Trade Commission should provide to Independent Physician Associations guidance on contracting with health plans, on practice business arrangements, and on member communications, and a reasonable time for such Associations to ameliorate certain arrangements that could lead to Federal Trade Commission enforcement of antitrust laws against any such Association that has engaged in alleged anticompetitive activities.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is an extremely important issue to physicians and patients around the country.

Over the past few years, the Federal Trade Commission has been targeting groups of doctors known as Independent Physician Associations, alleging anticompetitive business activities. These groups, IPAs, are integrated groups of physicians that can provide a wide array of medical services to patients in their community.

While it is important that the Federal Trade Commission enforce the antitrust laws when organizations engage in anticompetitive behavior, they must understand that the recent complaints brought against IPAs could and do disrupt patient care. This amendment would ask that the Federal Trade Commission keep in mind and provide Independent Physician Associations with guidance and a time to ameliorate any arrangement that could violate the law before the FTC pursues enforcement action.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, if you are an Independent Physician Association, in the eyes of the FTC, you are by definition a conspirator or in the process of conspiring. In fact, the FTC seems to pursue a mission statement that you are guilty unless you happen to be able to prove your innocence, and these actions are extremely expensive to fight.

My concern is not so much the innocence or guilt of the organizations, but the impact that the lack of guidance from the Federal Trade Commission can have on the provider community and patients who receive a high quality of care from IPAs. IPAs consistently rate high in customer satisfaction and positive health outcomes.

One such organization in north Texas, the North Texas Specialty Physicians, provides excellent health care. With over 600 doctors, they serve around 11,000 patients a day. They are the only Medicare risk provider in north Texas. This is important because Medicare risk is the old Medicare+Choice. Here is the group that took that Medicare HMO and made it work, made it work for the doctors and made it work for the patients; and as a consequence, they are punished for their success.

They accept new Medicare enrollees when many other networks in the area do not. Most emergency calls are responded to by their physicians. Their access ratings are very high. At a time when most doctors will not take new Medicaid clients, they are one of the few networks that take new Medicaid enrollees every day.

Federal agencies should not be punishing businesses when their only transgression is success. By having the FTC give IPAs basic guidance on how they contract with health plans and how they communicate with other IPA members and established business relationships, patient care in the community will not suffer. That should be our concern.

It is important for the FTC to enforce the law. All this amendment asks is that a reasonable standard be applied and care be exercised when patient care could be disrupted.

What brought this to my attention was this particular group which has been charged by the FTC with an action. This group has spent $1 million over the last year and a half, defending itself against what it believes are unfair allegations, and probably the FTC has spent, conservatively, three times that amount, and these are dollars we can scarcely afford out of this appropriation. Groups that are procompetitive and manage risk are being punished.

Mr. Chairman, I plan to withdraw my amendment, but I hope to work with the chairman in the future to bring more balance to this situation.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I withdraw my amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WOLF

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLF:

At the end of title VI, insert the following:

SEC. 627. It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State, at the most immediate opportunity, should—

(1) make a determination as to whether recent events in the Darfur region of Sudan constitute genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide; and

(2) support the investigation and prosecution of war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in the Darfur region of Sudan.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment is very simple and concerns recent events in the Darfur region of Sudan, which I visited last week. I offer the amendment on behalf of myself and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE).

The amendment asks the Secretary of State to support the investigations of war crimes or crimes against humanity in Darfur, and I have done this in consultation with my colleague on the other side, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Senator BROWNBACK and I just returned from spending 3 days and 2 nights in Darfur, Sudan. During our trip we visited five refugee camps: Abu Shouk; Tawilah; Krinding; Sisi and Morney—all sprawling tent cities jampacked with thousands of displaced families and fast becoming breeding grounds for disease and sickness. We drove past dozens of pillaged villages and walked through what was left of four burned to the ground. We heard countless stories about rape, murder and plunder.

We talked to rape victims. We saw the scars on men who had been shot. We watched mothers cradle their sick and dying babies, hoping against all odds that their children would survive. We saw armed Janjaweed waiting to prey on innocent victims along the perimeter of refugee camps.

We saw Janjaweed—who are carrying out these attacks—sitting astride camels and horses just a short distance from where young and old have sought what they had hoped would be a safe harbor.

The same stories were repeated at every camp we visited. The raids would happen early in the morning. First comes the low rumble of a Soviet-made Antonov plane to bomb the village. Next come helicopter gunships to strafe the village with the huge machine guns mounted on each side. Sometimes the helicopters would land and unload supplies for the Janjaweed. They would then be reloaded with booty confiscated from a village. One man told us he saw cows being loaded onto one helicopter. The Janjaweed, some clad in military uniforms, would come galloping in on horseback and camels to finish the job of killing, raping, stealing and plundering.

Walking through the burned out villages we could tell the people living there had little or no time to react. They left everything they owned—lanterns, cookware, water jugs, pottery, plows—and ran for their lives. There was no time to stop and bury their dead. The Janjaweed made certain that there would be nothing left for the villagers to come home to. Huts were torched. Donkeys, goats and cows were stolen, slaughtered. Grain containers destroyed. In one village we saw where the Janjaweed even burned the mosque.

ETHNIC CLEANSING

What is happening in Darfur is rooted in ethnic cleansing. Religion has nothing to do with what unfolded over the last year. It was clear that only villages inhabited by black African Muslims were being targeted. Arab villages sitting just next to African ones miles from the nearest towns have been left unscathed.

While government officials are adamant in saying there is no connection between the Government of Sudan and the Janjaweed, the militiamen we saw did not look like skilled pilots who could fly planes or helicopters.

We also were told the Janjaweed are well armed and well supplied. They have satellite phones, an astonishing fact considering most people in the far western provinces of Darfur have probably never even seen or walked on a paved road.

The impunity under which the Janjaweed operate was most telling as we approached the airport in Geneina on our last day in the region for our flight back to Khartoum. In plain sight was an encampment of Janjaweed within shouting distance of a contingent of Government of Sudan regulars. No more than 200 yards separated the two groups. Sitting on the tarmac were two helicopter gunships and a Russian-made Antonov plane.

The situation in Darfur is being described as the worst humanitarian crisis in the world today. We agree. But sadly things could get worse. Some say that even under the best of circumstances, as many as 300,000 Darfuris forced from their homes are expected to die from malnutrition and diarrhea or diseases such as malaria and cholera in the coming months.

The impending rainy season presents its own set of problems, making roads impassable for food deliveries and the likelihood of disease increasing dramatically with the heavy rains.

DIFFICULT LIFE IN IDP CAMPS

Abu Shouk was the first of five IDP (Internally Displaced People) camps we visited. More than 40,000 people live in this sprawling tent city. Families arriving at the camps—almost all after walking for days in the hot sun from their now abandon villages—are only given a tarp, a water jug, cookware and a small amount of grain.

At Mornay, the largest of the IDP camps in Darfur with more than 70,000 inhabitants, it was hard not to step in either human or animal feces as we walked. In a few weeks, when the heavy rains begin, excrement will flow across the entire camp. Mortality from diarrhea, which we were told represents one-third of the deaths in the camps, will only increase.

To their credit, all the non-governmental organizations (NGOs) that have been allowed to operate in Darfur have done—and continue to do—a tremendous job under extremely trying circumstances.

Rapes, we were told, happen almost daily to the women who venture outside the confines of the camps in search of firewood and straw. They leave very early in the morning, hoping to evade their tormentors before they awake. With the camps swelling in size and nearby resources dwindling, they often walk several miles. The farther the women go from the camp, the greater the risk of being attacked by the Janjaweed.

As we approached Mornay, we saw a number of Janjaweed resting with their camels and horses along the perimeter of the camp, easily within walking distance. In one camp we heard the horrific story of four young girls—two of whom were sisters—who had been raped just days before we arrived. They had left the camp to collect straw to feed the family's donkey when they were attacked. They said their attackers told them they were slaves and that their skin was too dark. As they were being raped, they said the Janjaweed told them they were hoping to make more lighter-skinned babies. We were told that some of the rape victims were being branded on their back and arms by the Janjaweed, permanently labeling the women.

We also received a letter during our trip from a group of women who were raped. To protect them from further attacks, we purposely do not mention where they are from or list their names. The translation is heartbreaking:

> We are forty-four raped women. As a result of that savagery, some of us became pregnant, some have aborted, some took out their wombs and some are still receiving medical treatment.
> Hereunder, we list the names of the raped women and state that we have high hopes in you and the international community to stand by us and not to forsake us to this tyrannical, brutal and racist regime, which wants to eliminate us racially, bearing in mind that 90 percent of our sisters at (. . .) are widows.

These rape victims have nowhere to turn. Even if they report the attacks to the police, they know nothing will happen. The police, the military and the Janjaweed all appear to be acting in coordination.

DIRE SITUATION IS MAN-MADE

The situation in Darfur is dire, and from what we could see, it is entirely man-made. These people who had managed to survive even the severest droughts and famines during the course of their long history are now in mortal danger of being wiped out simply because of the darker shade of their skin color.

Over the course of 3 days, we saw the worst of man's inhumanity to man, but we also saw the best of what it means to be human: mothers waiting patiently for hours in the hot sun so that they could try to save their babies; NGO aid workers and volunteer doctors feeding and caring for the sick and the dying; and the courage and bravery of men, women and children eager to talk to us so that we would know their story.

The world made a promise in 1994 to never again allow the systematic destruction of a people or race. ''Never again''—words said, too, after the Holocaust.

In Darfur, the international community has a chance to stop history from repeating itself. It also has a chance to end this nightmare for those who have found a way to survive. If the international community fails to act, the next cycle of this crisis will begin. The destiny facing the people of Darfur will be death from hunger or disease.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

The amendment was agreed to.

□ 2320

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. GINGREY) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3598, MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 2004

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 108–589) on the resolution (H. Res. 706) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3598) to establish an interagency committee to coordinate Federal manufacturing research and development efforts in manufacturing, strengthen existing programs to assist manufacturing innovation and education, and expand outreach programs for small and medium-sized manufacturers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4755, LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 108–590) on the resolution (H. Res. 707) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4755) making appropriations for the Legislative Branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take my Special Order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

SMART SECURITY AND IRAQ TRANSFER OF POWER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, at the end of last month, the United States Government handed control of Iraq ''back to its people.'' And everyone I know who is being at all intellectually honest believes that the choice of a June 30 deadline was driven more by the political calendar than anything else.

The Bush administration wants to have it both ways. They want to go before the voters with ''clean hands'' in the fall to say that the job has been completed just as they tried to declare ''mission accomplished'' a year ago, but at the same time remaining in charge of this occupation, while even after the handover, U.S. troops and other officials will enjoy full immunity if they should destroy property or kill Iraqi citizens.

Coming on the heels of the Abu Ghraib revelations, this arrogance and lack of accountability is absolutely staggering. The war in Iraq has already cost lives of hundreds of American soldiers, 25,000 being injured, the lives of thousands of innocent Iraqi civilians, and billions of dollars that should have been invested right here at home.

This war has diverted resources from the struggle against al Qaeda, the group actually responsible for the atrocities of 9/11. Now al Qaeda has regrouped and poses as great a strength and threat as ever.

This case for war was built on dubious intelligence and outright deceptions. The 9/11 Commission recently announced that it had access to all the same information as Vice President CHENEY; yet there is ''no credible evidence'' that Saddam Hussein's government in Iraq collaborated with al Qaeda.

Our presence in Iraq has been met not with gratitude but resentment. Instead of throwing flowers at American troops, Iraqis now throw torches at Humvees.

Mr. Speaker, our current national security approach is an unmitigated disaster, but do not take my word for it. Listen to the statement issued in mid-June by a group of 27 former senior diplomats and military officials. They said the Bush administration ''has failed in the primary responsibilities of preserving national security and providing world leadership.'' They went on to say: ''Instead of building upon America's great economic and moral strength to address the causes of terrorism and to stifle its resources, the administration, motivated more by ideology than by reasoned analysis, led the United States into an ill-planned and costly war from which exit is uncertain.''

It is clearly time for a new national security policy, Mr. Speaker. And I have introduced H. Con. Resolution 392 to create a SMART security platform for the 21st Century. SMART stands for Sensible Multilateral American Response to Terrorism. SMART security treats war as an absolute last resort. It fights terrorism with stronger intelligence and multilateral partnerships. It controls the spread of weapons of mass destruction with aggressive diplomacy, strong regional security arrangements, and vigorous inspection regimes. SMART security invests in the development of impoverished nations to prevent terrorism from taking root in the first place. SMART security is about preventing war as opposed to preemptive war. It emphasizes brains over brawn. It is tough, but diplomatic; aggressive, but peaceful; pragmatic, but idealistic.

President Bush loves to think that those who support his efforts in Iraq are patriotic and those who think there is a better way are unpatriotic, or worse, un-American. But I can think of nothing more patriotic than pursuing a national security policy that protects America by relying on the noblest of American values, our capacity for global leadership, our compassion for the people of the world, our commitment to peace and freedom.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take my Special Order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN IN CIUDAD JUAREZ, MEXICO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. PEARCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. Speaker, I often criticize the media for the things that I think are inattentive and improper. Tonight, I would like to rise to give tribute to the media where I think good has been done.

A long-time friend, Rebecca Allen, an editor from the Orange County Register, forwarded to me eight articles in a series they printed in mid-June. The articles, written by the brave and courageous Yvette Cabrera and Minerva Canto, four articles apiece, detailed the difficulties that face young women in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

My district butts up to the very corner of Juarez, and I have watched the problems of hundreds of deaths of young women, but until reading a series of articles, it was not personal. The first in the series of articles talked about she never came home. Concentrating on Erendira Ponce, 17, all that she dreamed of was a life beyond her poor neighborhood. At 17 she ended up as one of hundreds of women killed in Juarez, Mexico, skull crushed, raped and just thrown down into the dirt.

The second in the series of articles is about the investigator Angolee Talavera, 29 years old, the lead investigator who still has no one to try for all of the killings.

The third in the series of articles concentrates on a suspect's wife. The police have tried to silence the suspect's wife. The suspect, a truck driver, Victor Javier Garcia Uribe, was summarily arrested by two men who were dressed with masks over their head and other men that came up with Halloween costume masks. Little did they understand that Victor had married his wife Mary Ann Garcia when she was still in a wheelchair from an accident suffered while they were dating. He nursed her back to health, moving in with her, and because of the love and the faith that they have built up, she stands by him continuing to provide more and more evidence that he is innocent. Yet, he stays in prison today. Her persistence is rewarded by three beatings from the local authorities, with the admonition that this is a message from the governor, Stop making noise.

The fourth in the series of articles is about a mother's pain. Irma Monreal just lives with the loss of her 15-year-old, the one around whom her and her family's dreams operated. Her 15-year-old daughter just brought the light and life and laughter into their home. Esmerelda wanted to rescue her mother from the poverty, getting a job as a secretary to pour a new concrete floor in their dirt-floored home. At 15, she was taken and brutally murdered. Her body was found purple and swollen with all of the flesh and even the hair missing, just a blank skull on top of her body. What kind of tremendous terror are the people in Mexico living with and the authorities unable to solve?

The fifth series is about an orphan, the inevitable orphans that suffer from the loss of moms.

The sixth is about an activist, the activists who are ignored, who are threatened to keep silent, to stop making waves.

The seventh was about an imprisoned reporter who dared to write about the loss of her friend and blame the authorities, and now she sits in prison.

And finally the eighth article is the hope for the future, talking about women such as Esther Chavez.

The one common trait, Mr. Speaker, is the impunity with which these young ladies are killed. The common element is the careless violence that discards these young ladies as if they had no value.

Mr. Speaker, I add my voice to those speaking up on behalf of justice. We are told in the Bible that the worst sins are those which are committed against the poor and the fatherless, against those who are innocent and unwilling and unable to provide their own protection. Mr. Speaker, these are the people who are suffering in Mexico today. These are the people who are suffering in Ciudad Juarez. I commend the Orange County Register for printing this bold series of articles and drawing to the attention of the United States the difficulties that lie just across the border for women who have done no wrong.

NEW DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION TO UNITE AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, last night a Republican from Florida shamed the People's House when he stood at the podium and insulted every Native American in this country. Using cheap partisan rhetoric against the new Democratic vice presidential nominee, the Republican flung bigotry and racism against America's first citizens. And the Republican leadership stood by and said nothing and the administration stood by and said nothing.

The words spoken here were so insulting to Native Americans that I will not repeat them. I will say on behalf of every Native American, and there are many in my home State of Washington, that we categorically detest such rhetoric. I will say on behalf of every Democrat that we wholeheartedly support Native Americans, we support treaty rights, and we recognize that this generation can and must honor the culture and contribution of Native Americans.

Last night, the Republican rhetoric should remind us all that 100 years later, there still is much left to be done in this country. I will say that that Republican from Florida made the case for why America needs people to defend its citizens on the battlefield and in the courtroom.

Civil rights, civil liberties, the First Amendment, the Second Amendment, all the amendments, the right to be safe in your home, the right to be safe from unsafe products and unsafe practices, Americans have rights we have paid for in world wars and in cold wars.

Somehow the Republicans think defending those rights in a court of law is un-American. Somehow the Republicans think that defending Americans in an American courtroom is un-American.

Truth is stranger than fiction these days in Washington, DC. It has gotten so bad that the other body had to reaffirm that the United States actually supports the Geneva Convention. And there is a question about whether the Republicans in this House will even support it here. They may not even bring it to a vote. What kind of message is that? The Geneva Convention is not for us?

We have to take a vote to say moral leadership is something he still think is a good idea. The issue is before Congress because of what administration civilian leaders have done to America's moral leadership in the world.

Senator JOHN EDWARDS, the vice presidential nominee, speaks of two Americas; one for the rich friends of the administration and the other America for the rest of us. How right he is.

America has been divided by this administration into the have-less and the have much, much, much more. The Republicans would like to continue that trend. They shift the money through massive tax cuts to the rich.

Forget the rhetoric. Here are the numbers. Over $112,000 a year to the average millionaire; under 700 bucks for the rest of us.

Now Republicans want to shift power to their corporate patriarchs to ensure that companies can escape responsibility and accountability when they do something wrong. Fairness is not a word in the Republican dictionary, nor is accountability.

They will tell you the fiction that America suffers because lawyers can go to court and defend Americans. I thought protection under the law was something the Founding Fathers thought was a pretty good idea. It seems Republicans think accountability belongs in the same closet with the Geneva Convention, civil liberties and the basic respect for our first citizens.

Republicans like us to believe that every American has a right to keep and bear arms in order to defend themselves. These same Republicans would like us to believe that Americans do not have the right to defend themselves in court.

Republicans advocate unilaterally disarming Americans. Why? Why would the Republican Party want to prevent average Americans from defending themselves in court? Who benefits? Average Americans or corporate lobbyists? You decide for yourself. I think the words defy gravity.

Republicans would have us believe they know best. They are willing to let big corporations operate without the checks and balances our legal system provides for the safety and protection of every American. That is not representative government, it is Republican doctrine. Reward the rich, over and over and over and over again.

There are two Americas today, but that is going to change. America needs one America, the Nation where ordinary people count and where the common good is what we practice, not preach. The world needs one America, the Nation that recognizes its moral leadership is not secondary to military might or arrogance.

The current Republican administration divided America. The new Democratic administration will unite us.

There are only 118 days left. It is a long time to wait. But America is strong enough to hold on and compassionate enough to hold out until JOHN KERRY is President. If you have lost hope, hang on. Help is on the way.

Mr. Speaker, let the President know he only has 117 more days down at the White House, and he ought to start packing.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEARCE). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that the House will resume proceedings on H.R. 3980 tomorrow.

EXCHANGE of SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the time of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

CONGRATULATING COLUMBUS HIGH SCHOOL BLUE DEVILS BASEBALL TEAM, THE 2004 AAAA BASEBALL CHAMPIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Columbus High School Blue Devils baseball team in Georgia's 11th Congressional District. Columbus added the 2004 AAAA State baseball crown to its trophy case this year by defeating the Northgate Vikings of Coweta County for the championship.

Columbus is no stranger to State championships. This year's title marks the school's eighth. It was the twelfth time the school had played in the finals.

In this year's 2-game series final, Columbus outscored the Northgate Vikings 20 to 1. The Newnan Times-Herald stated that the Blue Devils, who finished the season with a 35 and 2 record, are arguably the best team in Georgia, regardless of any classification. Two members of the team have signed on to play with Division I college teams.

In two games, Columbus' fielders avoided a single error, while the Blue Devils' pitchers held the Vikings to one run and five hits over two games. At the same time, their offense was at its peak, racking up 23 hits.

Although teammates mobbed Ric Bishop after he caught a foul ball to end game 2, that was not the only memorable moment of the playoffs for the first baseman. Earlier in the week, Bishop hit his 13th home run of the season, a school record. The previous record-holder at Columbus High was former Blue Devil Frank Thomas of the Chicago White Sox. Bishop knocked out another homer in the championship series to finish the year with 14 home runs.

The Blue Devils' pitchers also put in notable performances. Iain Sebastian and Brad Rulon quieted the powerful bats of the Northgate Vikings who entered the series hitting 357 as a team. Sebastian shut out the Vikings and Rulon allowed only one run.

As Coach Bobby Howard told the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, ''Everybody has talked about our hitting, but our common denominator for winning is with our pitching. I would have hated for anybody to try to hit those guys today.''

Sebastian's fastballs zipped at speeds up to 90 miles an hour and Rulon notched nine strikeouts. They contributed to an overwhelming team effort for which the high school and the entire Columbus community can be proud.

Congratulations to the Columbus Blue Devils for continuing a tradition of excellence.

JUNE JOBS NUMBERS AND MIDDLE-CLASS SQUEEZE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for half the time until midnight as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, last month we witnessed another disappointing jobs creation month. Economists say our economy must create 150,000 jobs a month just to keep up with increases in population. But last month, only 112,000 jobs were created. And even more troubling, the economy witnessed declines in the length of the average work week and average weekly earnings.

One would think this disappointing news would concern President Bush. After all, he already has the dubious distinction as the only President since Herbert Hoover to lose jobs on his watch. Mr. Speaker, 1.8 million private sector jobs have been lost over the last 3 years, thanks to the economic neglect of both President Bush and Republicans here in Congress.

Instead of showing any concern over these disappointing job numbers, President Bush embraced them, describing them as steady growth. The President also had the audacity to say that our economy does not need ''boom or bust-type growth.''

Now, I ask my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, when is President Bush going to realize that our economy desperately needs a boom? When is President Bush going to finally realize that the failed economic policies that he has been touting over the last 3 years are not creating enough jobs to put millions of Americans back to work? And when is President Bush going to realize that today's economy, the economy he created with his major tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans, is benefiting the wealthiest Americans to the detriment of middle-class Americans? And when is he going to realize that while middle-class Americans face skyrocketing health care costs and ever-increasing college tuition costs, their paychecks are not even increasing at a rate that will keep them equal with inflation?

The economic record of President Bush and this Republican House of Representatives has been an utter failure, and the President's statement that an economic boom is not needed today shows that he is certainly out of touch with the economic realities middle-class Americans presently face. Perhaps the President has been spending too much time hanging around with his wealthy friends to realize that middle-class Americans are struggling to make ends meet.

A report over the weekend by Bloomberg News determined that record-high corporate profits are not trickling down to U.S. workers in the form of pay increases. Economists Paul Krugman said today's economy is passing working Americans by. Krugman points to the fact that average weekly earnings of nonsupervisory workers rose only 1.7 percent over the past year, lagging well behind inflation. And this dismal increase takes place amid continued gains in worker productivity, the amount that workers produce in an hour. If middle-class workers are performing so well and if their hard work is paying off and making the economy grow, then one might ask, why are their wages not growing as well?

Middle-class Americans are getting squeezed by their employers and by government policies. Since March of 2001, corporate profits skyrocketed by more than 50 percent, while wages and salaries decreased by 1.7 percent. American companies raked in an enviable $1 trillion in profits in the last 3 months of 2003 alone, but even while profits soared, companies froze pay.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, Uncle Sam is only making matters worse by shifting the tax burden from wealth to work. Taxes on wages now average almost 24 percent. Taxes on income from investments, by contrast, like stock and bonds, average less than 10 percent. That means that middle-class Americans who depend more on their paycheck than stock market investments are actually paying more in taxes on individual dollars than they bring in. It is an incredible, incredible fact.

While families are earning less and less, ''kitchen table costs,'' the items that directly affect a family's budget, are soaring. Under President Bush, health care costs have skyrocketed almost 50 percent, college tuition has gone up 35 percent, and gas prices are up more than 25 percent. How does a family face these skyrocketing price increases when their paychecks only increase about 1 percent from year to year?

Now, Mr. Speaker, for the past 3 years, Republicans have been telling the American people that the best way to create jobs and expand the economy was to drastically cut taxes for the wealthiest Americans. Not only has that misguided policy created a $400 billion Federal deficit, but it has just not lived up to the expectations that the Republicans create.

Democrats by contrast have a real plan that would truly boost America's economy. Over the last 3 years, many economists have argued that the most effective job creating policies would be increased aid to State and local governments, extended unemployment insurance, and tax rebates for lower and middle income families. Democrats have been fighting for measures that would create jobs immediately by ending the current tax incentives for shipping jobs overseas, enacting a bipartisan manufacturing tax cut bill, enacting a robust highway bill that would create jobs all over this country and pump millions of dollars into State and local economies, provide a tax credit to small businesses so they can lower health care costs, extend Federal unemployment insurance for more than 2.9 million Americans, and make tax cuts for the middle class permanent and paid for.

Mr. Speaker, President Bush seems content with the economic status quo. Democrats, by contrast, realize that middle-class Americans have been squeezed by the policies of this President and this Republican House. We are not satisfied with the latest economic indicators, and we will not quit fighting until all Americans are back to work and bringing home a paycheck that will not squeeze every last dime.

REAL REPUBLICAN SOLUTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GINGREY). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) is recognized for the remaining time until midnight as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to first remind the Members here that there is some convenient memory loss for the Democrats when they want to blame President Bush on the current economy, especially when they want to target the tax relief. So let us just go back to 1999 and remember how our economy got into this current situation.

In 1999, we had the tech bubble burst and we saw tremendous loss of jobs in the tech industry, especially in northern Virginia. It caused the NASDAQ to drop by over half, almost by two-thirds. Then, in 2000, November 2000, the recession technically started while President Clinton was still in office, even before President Bush was sworn in.

And then, of course, who can forget September 11, 2001, when terrorists brought the war on terror to America and attacked us in our homeland and tore down the World Trade Center and attacked the Pentagon and put our economy into a tailspin. It was those events that caused our economy to drop dramatically.

In my hometown of Wichita, Kansas, we had a greater percentage loss of jobs than any other community in America following September 11. We are the air capital of the world, Wichita, Kansas. It is the home of Boeing, Beech, Cessna and Learjet. When you take the number of jobs lost, the percentage of those compared to the total number of jobs in the community, we were the hardest hit. It was because of the September 11 terrorist attacks.

It was the tax relief that President Bush pushed for and that was passed in the House in a bipartisan fashion, passed by the Senate in a bipartisan way, that has turned our economy around.

When tax relief is passed, people can do one of three things with the money they have in their pocket. The first thing they can do is spend it. That is a demand for good, which is a demand for jobs, and that is good for the economy.

The second thing they can do is save it. When they save it, that makes money available for home mortgages. Today, we have the most homeowners in America, more than we have ever had in the history of our Nation. Particularly minorities are owning more homes than they ever have in the history of our Nation, and tax relief has been a part of that.

The third thing they can do is invest the money. When the money is invested, it allows small companies and large companies to expand their plants, to buy more equipment and to hire more workers. And that is what we have been seeing.

Our economy has been growing by 1.5 million jobs just since last August, 1.5 million jobs. Today, there are more Americans working than ever before in the history of our country. We have more homeownership. We have a higher average pay than ever before in the history of our country. The economy is turning around. But the Democrats have convenient memory loss.

Now, we do have a plan, we have a plan for improving the economy even further. Now, we know that the people who keep and create jobs in America have been having to overcome some barriers that were way beyond their control. We have listed these barriers in eight categories, and the Republicans in the House have addressed a plan to provide relief for these categories. Change the environment so we can bring jobs back into America.

These issues were created over the last generation by Congress. Congress with good intentions has, in fact, created bad policy. So we are in the business of changing that bad policy and bringing jobs back into America.

The eight issues we have taken, one a week at a time; we have gone through four issues already this week. We are on the fifth issue. But we started with health care security. We have passed legislation in the House to help reduce the cost of health care in America. We have passed flexible savings accounts, medical savings accounts, medical liability reform. Those issues are going to bring down the health care costs in America.

We next went on to bureaucratic red tape. We are cutting the amount of red tape in America because those are things that are costs to employers that forces them to pay these costs even though they cannot control them, and it prevents them from bringing more jobs back to America.

Then we went on to lifelong learning so that we would have an educated workforce available. Then we moved on to energy self-sufficiency. We heard from an earlier speaker about gas prices going up. Well, it has been the policies of this Congress over the last generation that have caused this problem.

We have not built a new refinery since 1976 in America. We have not allowed for exploration in places that are as far away as the Northern Slope of Alaska. Nobody on this floor has ever been to the North Slope of northern Alaska. And out of the amount of country the size of California, we cannot even allow 1,800 acres to be used to develop more resources which would provide more oil than we are importing from the Middle East today.

So there is a great deal that could be done to bring down the price of energy in America, but we cannot get the policy passed by Members in this Congress. So we are doing an incredible amount to bring down the price of energy to help bring jobs back to America.

This week we are talking about spurring innovation. We have several pieces of legislation that we have brought to the floor. They include the High-Performance Computing Revitalization Act. They include the Department of Energy High-End Computing Revitalization Act. They include the National Windstorm Impact Reduction Act, the Harmful Algal Bloom and Hypoxia Research Amendment Act, and the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act, and the Stock Option Accounting Reform Act.

All of these things are designed to improve research and development or take that research and development and put it into practical application.

Now, tomorrow we will be dealing with legislation that will take research and development and put it into practical application. We are calling it the Manufacturing Extension Partnership Program. It is already in existence, but we are going to authorize it and expand it.

The MEP, or the Manufacturing Existence Partnership, is a network of 60 nonprofit centers in over 400 locations in 50 States. It served 19,000 clients in 2002. When you do a survey of those 19,000 clients, you find out that we created and retained over 35,000 jobs, that we increased $953 million in sales in America. That is production of American goods in the form of sales, $953 million.

We also retained sales of $1.84 billion. So the $953 million is in addition to the $1.84 billion.

We realized $681 million in cost savings by applying research and development to these small companies. And we have invested $940 million in modernization, including plants and equipment and information systems.

Now, how this helps small businesses is very clear. It helps firms understand and applies lean manufacturing technology. We take these good ideas that have been created through research and development, some of it funded by the Federal Government, some of it funded by the Federal Government through the universities, some of it is coming out of industry itself. We take those ideas to small businesses and we allow them to apply them, redesign factory floors, help firms determine what new equipment they need, how they need to place it. It just teaches them how to apply the technology that will help them create more jobs.

So the concept of having a research and development application has been something that is going to be successful in bringing jobs back in to America.

Now we are going to continue on. In the following week we will be dealing with trade fairness and opportunity. Then we will deal with tax simplification. Then we will end up with lawsuit abuse. Right now lawsuit abuse costs us 2.5 percent on any product made in America. We could reduce our costs by 2.5 percent.

Now, when you look at the current Presidential team that the Democrats have, both of them represent trial lawyers. The vice presidential candidate has made millions and millions and millions of dollars by suing companies, and all that gets absorbed back into the cost of creating jobs.

So to think that the Democrat team is going to create jobs, it is just the antithesis of that. They are going to be working in the opposite direction.

We have these eight issues that we are using to break down the barriers and change the environment so we can bring jobs back into America. Again, they are health care security, reducing the bureaucratic red tape, lifelong learning, energy self-sufficiency, spurring innovation, trade fairness and opportunity, tax relief and simplification, and ending lawsuit abuse. Through these issues we will be able to bring jobs back into America.

Kansans and Americans are known for their ingenuity, a trait fostered by our society since Pilgrims found a way to survive the harsh New England winter and develop into a thriving community that eventually became a great nation. Knowledge and ideas are our most important raw materials.

The American economy has led the world because our system rewards innovation. From Benjamin Franklin through Eli Whitney, Thomas Edison, George Washington Carver, the Wright Brothers, Henry Ford, Jonas Salk, and Spaceship One promoter Burt Rutan, our entrepreneurs, scientists and skilled workers create and apply the technologies that have changed and will continue to change our world.

Our leaders have realized that while they shouldn't tell people what to think or how to do things, there is a vital national interest in helping the best ideas come forward. America's strength has been in encouraging thought and exploration, and providing the resources to bringing those dreams to life.

The United States remains the world's most dominant economy and scientific powerhouse. The rest of the world, however, is catching up and challenging our competitiveness. Fundamentally, there has been a significant increase in the quality and quantity of science and engineering (S&E) capacity around the globe. At the same time. America has grown complacent in her position as innovation leaders. Without adequate support at home, the impact of these two factors has been not only a decline in science and engineering professionals, but also the movement of corporate high tech investments and jobs to other countries.

The Republican Congress has made great strides in funding research and development. We have met and exceeded our goal of doubling the National Institutes of Health (NIH) medical research funding, we have made necessary reforms to streamline the Patent and Trademark Office and FDA processes, and we have promoted nanotechnology, broadband dissemination, and a myriad of other important high tech investment. Similarly President Bush has focused on evaluating the scale, quality, and effectiveness of the Federal effort in science and technology.

Research and development investments are still the keys to our nation's future competitiveness, and thus we must increase our efforts to spur innovation. This week, as part of the ongoing 8 week kickoff to the Careers for a 21st Century America competitiveness agenda, the House is focusing on efforts to spur the innovative, creative and entrepreneurial spirit that has always driven America toward phenomenal achievement.

Democrats constantly lament our declining dominance in the sciences, yet offer no solutions. ''You need a partnership,'' says NSF Deputy Director, Josh Bordogna. ''You need new knowledge out of universities and labs, new processes from industry, and a government willing to enable it all through appropriate R&D policy and frontier research and education investment, by and for the citizenry.'' That is the challenge House Republicans have taken to heart.

Instead of political rhetoric, Republicans are offering real solutions. We invite our colleagues to join us in moving America forward.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. BLUMENAUER (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for today after 5:00 p.m. and the balance of the week on account of personal reasons.

Mr. CARDIN (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for July 6 and today on account of official business.

Mr. LAHOOD (at the request of Mr. DELAY) for today after 2:00 p.m. and the balance of the week on account of official business.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. EMANUEL, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. LIPINSKI, for 5 minutes, today.

Ms. WOOLSEY, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. MCDERMOTT, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. PEARCE, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. PENCE, for 5 minutes, July 8.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas, for 5 minutes, July 12.

Mr. GINGREY, for 5 minutes, today.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 59 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 8, 2004, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of rule XII, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

8908. A letter from the Acting Comptroller, Department of Defense, transmitting a report of a violation of the Antideficiency Act by the Department of the Army, Case Number 04–04, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

8909. A letter from the Acting Comptroller, Department of Defense, transmitting a report of a violation of the Antideficiency Act by the Department of the Navy, Case Number 02–06, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

8910. A letter from the Acting Comptroller, Department of Defense, transmitting a report of a violation of the Antideficiency Act by the Department of the Army, Case Number 04–03, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

8911. A letter from the Secretary of the Air Force, Department of Defense, transmitting notification that the Space Based Infrared System (SBIRS) High System Program exceeds the 15 percent PAUC threshold, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2433(e)(1); to the Committee on Armed Services.

8912. A letter from the Secretary, Department of Energy, transmitting a report concerning plutonium storage at the Savannah River Site, located near Aiken, South Carolina, pursuant to Public Law 107–314, section 3183; to the Committee on Armed Services.

8913. A letter from the Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, transmitting the fourteenth annual report on the Profitability of Credit Card Operations of Depository Institutions, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 1637 note. Public Law 100–583, section 8 (102 Stat. 2969); to the Committee on Financial Services.

8914. A letter from the Assistant General Counsel (Banking and Finance), Department of the Treasury, transmitting the Department's final rule—Terrorism Risk Insurance Program; Claims Procedures (RIN: 1505–AB07) received June 23, 2004, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Financial Services.

8915. A letter from the Fiscal Assistant Secretary, Department of the Treasury, transmitting notification of a significant modification to the auction process for issuing United States Treasury obligations, pursuant to Public Law 103–202, section 203 (107 Stat. 2359); to the Committee on Financial Services.

8916. A letter from the Fiscal Assistant Secretary, Department of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report to Congress on material violations or suspected material violations of regualtions relating to Treasury auctions and other offerings of securities by Treasury, pursuant to Public Law 103–202, section 202 (107 Stat. 2344, 2358–2359); to the Committee on Financial Services.

8917. EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. PITTS and I, would like to welcome King Mohammed VI of Morocco to the United States and wish him well during his visit. We strongly urge His Majesty to uphold and implement his nation's agreements regarding the conflict over the Western Sahara. In addition, we urge His Majesty to uphold U.N. Security Council Resolution 1541 as a tribute to former Secretary of State James A. Baker III, who promoted international legality and justice while responding to the true long-term interests of both parties concerned in this conflict. His Majesty's support for the former U.N. Special Envoy Baker's Peace Plan would be the best contribution to peace and stability in the region. In addition, upholding the Peace Plan would demonstrate the effectiveness of the pursuit of national aspirations through non-violence in the greater Middle East, a region that has been the target of much violence.

Mr. Speaker, last week, a number of Members sent a letter to President Bush requesting that during his meeting with the King, he strongly encourage His Majesty to implement the United Nations Settlement Plan in order to achieve a just, peaceful, and lasting resolution to the conflict over Western Sahara. The letter welcomed United Nations Security Council Resolution No. 1541 adopted April 29, 2004, which reaffirmed support for the Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara devised by U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan's Special Envoy, James Baker, and shared deep regret over the departure of Mr. Baker and the circumstances that led to his resignation.

In addition, the letter welcomed the confidence-building measures taken by the Polisario Front which released a further 643 Moroccan POWs since July 2003; the number of POWs the Polisario has liberated since 1991 now totals 1,760. However, the Members of Congress expressed their regret that the Government of King Mohammed VI has not reciprocated in a commensurate way. The fact that the Sahrawis have opted for non-violence in the affirmation of their identity and have respected the terms of the cease-fire signed in 1991 between their representative and Morocco, is telling in terms of who is committed to settlement of the conflict.

Further, the letter expressed great concern that if the conflict between these two parties is left unresolved, it has the potential to disrupt peace and stability in the Maghreb region, thus threatening the interests of the United States. The Members expressed that the United States should use its unique influence in that region to press the Moroccan Government and the Polisario Front to agree to the Peace Plan and to implement it under the supervision of the United Nations. Although U.S. attention is primarily focused, as it should be on Iraq and on the war against terrorism, the letter underscores the concern of the Members that the Western Sahara conflict needs to be addressed urgently and fairly to the benefit of the peoples of the region and in the interest of the United States. A peaceful, successful resolution of the conflict over Western Sahara will provide a signal to the Broader Middle East and North African region that in the 21st century there are successful alternatives to violence in the pursuit of national aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, we again extend our welcome His Majesty and strongly urge him not to stand in the way of progress towards the peaceful resolution of the conflict over Western Sahara.

HONORING GRACE CLAYTON ON THE COMPLETION OF HER INTERNSHIP

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the contributions Grace Clayton has made while interning in my Washington, D.C., office. Grace, a fellow Middle Tennessean, has been a wonderful addition to the office and a great servant to the constituents of Tennessee's Sixth Congressional District.

Grace is finishing her second internship in my Washington, D.C., office, but she must return to the University of Alabama, where she is majoring in public relations. She is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, a volunteer for Big Brothers/Big Sisters and an acolyte in the Episcopal church.

During her internship, she has been a tremendous help to me and my staff as she assisted us in numerous projects. Not only did she win us over, but she also won over constituents as she guided them through the U.S. Capitol.

I hope Grace has enjoyed her fast-paced internship as much as we have appreciated her hard work. I wish her all the best in the future.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. PETER DEUTSCH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent from the chamber Wednesday, June 23, Thursday, June 24, and Friday, June 25, during rollcall votes.

Had I been present, I would have voted "Yea" on rollcall No. 288, and "Yea" on rollcall No. 300, "Yea" on rollcall No. 304, "No" on rollcall No. 318, and "Yea" on rollcall No. 325.

HOUSE FOOD SERVICE WORKERS SHOULD BE COMMENDED

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the food services workers of the Longworth, Rayburn, and Cannon House Office buildings, I submit for the record a letter signed by thirty-eight Members of Congress to Guest Service Inc. CEO/President Gerald T. Gabrys denouncing his decision to have his workers pay his company a day of wages on The National Day of Mourning.

The men and women who serve Members of Congress, staff, and the public each day in the House cafeterias are some of the most dedicated, hard working, and patriotic workers in our nation. They spend hours on their feet each day, ensuring that the House functions smoothly. Their characteristic smiles are a testament to the professionalism with which they go about their jobs.

But while the House food service workers have served Members of Congress for years—often without recognition—it has become time for Members of Congress to serve them. The rest of nation set aside June 11, 2004 to honor and pay solemn tribute to former President Reagan, but Guest Services Inc. (GSI) used the National Day of Mourning as a unique opportunity to extract compensation from its workforce.

Indeed, as federal employees across the nation were granted a one-day paid "holiday" on the National Day of Mourning, Guest Services employees were barred from reporting to work and required to expend a vacation or sick day to be paid for this previously scheduled day of employment. As a government contractor, GSI knew that Congress or the President could close the government at any time. This is a business risk inherent in GSI's relationship with the government. GSI passed the cost along to its employees.

The thirty-eight Members of Congress who signed this letter believe that decision was wrong. We have called upon GSI to pay its workers for the National Day of Mourning and return any vacation or sick time used as a result of their policy.

The House food service workers should be commended—not punished—for their admirable service to the federal government and our nation.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, June 25, 2004.

Mr. GERALD T. GABRYS,
President/CEO, Guest Services Inc., Fairfax, VA

DEAR MR. GABRYS: We write to express our concern and disappointment regarding the decision by Guest Services Inc. (GSI) not to pay its food service workers on June 11, 2004, The National Day of Mourning.

As you know, all executive departments, independent establishments, and other governmental agencies were closed on June 11th so that our nation could honor and formally pay its respects to the late former President Ronald Reagan.

While federal employees across the nation were granted a one-day paid ''holiday'' for this purpose, non-salaried Guest Services employees in the Longworth, Rayburn, and Cannon House Office Buildings were summarily barred from reporting to work, and GSI announced they would not be paid for this previously scheduled day of employment. Instead, GSI employees were told that they would be required to utilize an accrued vacation or sick day.

What GSI has done is to compel its employees to effectively pay GSI one day of wages for the National Day of Mourning. This is extraordinary. As a government contractor, GSI must have been aware of the possibility that Congress or the President could designate a one-day National Holiday shutting down the federal government at any time. But while the rest of the nation set aside June 11th to honor and pay solemn tribute to former President Reagan, GSI appears to have used the National Day of Mourning as a unique opportunity to extract compensation from its workforce in retaliation for a cost inherent in GSI's relationship with the government.

We do not believe this was appropriate or within the spirit of this historically important day. We request that you both pay your workers for the day of June 11th and return any vacation or sick leave utilized by employees in response to your policy. Your employees should be commended—not punished—for their hard work and dedication in service to the federal government and our nation.

We look forward to your prompt response to this request. Please do not hesitate to contact us with any questions.

Sincerely

TRIBUTE TO MR. DEREK WINANS

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it is with sorrow that I rise to inform my colleagues of the sudden passing of Derek T. Winans. Mr. Winans, a direct descendent of William Wheeler, a founder of Newark with Robert Treat in 1666, lived in my hometown of Newark for over 40 years. He was known for his deep commitment to civil rights and was a major figure in organizing and winning support for anti-poverty, alternative education, and community development programs.

He was a graduate of St. Paul's in Concord, NH, and of Harvard College. His senior thesis at Harvard received a magna cum laude. His own success in education inspired him to devote himself to providing similar opportunities for the youth in our community. Derek founded the Newark Day Care Council/Springfield Avenue Community School, the Ironbound Community Corporation/Ironbound Children's Center, and the Community Mobilization Center. He was co-founder of the Newark Community Project for People with AIDS, served as secretary of the Newark Coordinating Council, was active with the Newark Community Union Project, and acted as a spokesperson and planner for many civil rights and community-based organizations in Newark. He worked as deputy director for the International Youth Organization (IYO), planning director of the United Community Corporation, and was the staff person for Councilman Donald Tucker during his founding of the NJ Black Issues Convention.

Derek was not only involved locally but he also made an impact nationally. He was very active with Congressman BARNEY FRANK of Massachusetts, a Harvard classmate, on the enactment of the Ryan White Legislation in the early 90's, which significantly increased funding for education and treatment of HIV and AIDS. Earlier this year the House of Representatives approved a proposal written by Derek: The New Jersey Underground Railroad Cultural Heritage Project, for which IYO is serving as the lead agency. It was my privilege to work with Derek not only on these two projects but many others mentioned earlier.

Derek loved public policy, believed in the power of people to govern well, and possessed a long history of civic and political involvement. He was an important figure in many New Jersey political campaigns, with State Assemblyman George Richardson, Mayor Ken Gibson, and the Newark City Council campaign of the late Jesse Allan. He was truly a great friend of mine.

Derek was the son of the late Elizabeth Carrington and James Dusenberry Winans. He is survived by his stepmother, Polly Dudley Winans Beischer of Lakewood, NJ; a brother, Pete Torrey Winans of Amelia Island, FL; two stepbrothers; a stepsister; and numerous nieces and nephews.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join me in remembering the life of this remarkable man, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in recalling his lifelong commitment to service, integrity, and compassion. I express my condolences to his family and friends as they grieve his passing.

HONORING THE DEDICATED SERVICE OF PAUL RUMLER

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the tremendous contributions Paul Rumler has made to Tennessee's Sixth Congressional District. Paul has been an integral part of my Washington staff for the last few months, but he has moved on to greener pastures.

Paul was a versatile contributor in the office, lending a hand to constituent services and the development of legislation. His research on methamphetamine abuse played an important role in the development of H.R. 4636, the Methamphetamine Remediation Act.

During his time here, he quickly won over the staff as well as Middle Tennesseans who were visiting our Nation's Capitol. His easy-going attitude and gentlemanly demeanor made him a wonderful addition to the office.

Although my staff and I will miss his hard work and enthusiasm, we are happy for Paul as he embarks on his new journey. I wish him all the best.

WESTERN SHOSHONE CLAIMS DISTRIBUTION ACT

HON. RICHARD W. POMBO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I request that the following letters between the Committee on Resources and the Committee on Ways and Means regarding H.R. 884, the Western Shoshone Claims Distribution Act, be submitted for the record under General Leave.

As you know, H.R. 884 passed the House under suspension of the rules on June 21, 2004. I wish to include these letters between the two Committees concerning the legislation as part of the RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES,
WASHINGTON, DC, JUNE 3, 2004.

Hon. BILL THOMAS,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I request your help in expediting consideration of H.R. 884, the Western Shoshone Claims Distribution Act, authored by Congressman Jim Gibbons. The bill authorizes the distribution of a monetary judgment awarded to the members of the Western Shoshone tribe in 1979 based on land claims against the United States and mismanagement of their tribal accounts by the federal government. The funds have been appropriated and have been accruing interest for over 20 years. Under current law, legislation is required before the tribal members can receive their awards and to establish an education trust fund for the tribe. The Committee on Resources favorably reported the bill on October 7, 2003.

H.R. 884 is the House companion measure to S. 618, which was passed by the Senate by unanimous consent on October 17, 2003. The Joint Tax Committee has determined that Section 3(c)(3) of the Senate bill contains revenue provisions and would be subject to a blueslip by your Committee. To avoid this Constitutional problem and to facilitate passage in the Senate, I wish to amend H.R. 884 with the text of S. 618 as passed by the Senate and have this considered by the House of Representatives under suspension of the rules next week.

I recognize the Committee on Ways and Means' jurisdictional interest in Section 3(c)(3) of the proposed amendment but ask that you allow H.R. 884 to go forward. I agree that by allowing the revised bill to be scheduled, the Ways and Means Committee does not relinquish any jurisdiction over H.R. 884 or similar legislation. I would also support your request to be represented on a conference on H.R 884, if one should become necessary. Finally, I will include my letter and your response in the Congressional Record during Floor consideration of the measure.

The Western Shoshone have waited for over 25 years to receive their just awards, and Congressman Gibbons has been a tireless advocate on their behalf. We both appreciate your cooperation on this measure and the able assistance of David Kavanaugh of your staff.

Sincerely,

RICHARD W. POMBO,
Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, June 17, 2004.

Hon. RICHARD W. POMBO,
Chairman, Committee on Resources, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN POMBO: Thank you for your letter dated June 3, 2004, regarding H.R. 884, the ''Western Shoshone Claims Distribution Act.'' As you have noted, the Committee on Ways and Means has jurisdiction over Section 3(c)(3) of S. 618, the Senate companion bill to H.R. 884. I appreciate your agreement to amend the text of H.R. 884 and include the language passed by the Senate, thus avoiding any potential Constitutional problems. Further, I appreciate your recognition that this agreement does not prejudice the jurisdictional interests and prerogatives of the Committee on Ways and Means on this provision or any other similar legislation, and it should not be considered as precedent for consideration of matters of jurisdictional interest to the Committee in the future.

Thank you for your assistance and cooperation with this issue. We look forward to working with you in the future.

Best regards,

BILL THOMAS,
Chairman.

HONORING THE MEMORY OF AMELIA, OHIO NATIVE ARMY SERGEANT CHARLES A. KISER, WHO DIED IN IRAQ

HON. ROB PORTMAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the memory of Army Sergeant Charles A. Kiser, a brave soldier, who died Thursday, June 24, 2004, in an explosion near Mosel, Iraq. Sergeant Kiser is a native of Clermont County, OH, an area I represent.

Sgt. Kiser grew up in Amelia, OH, attended St. Bernadette School, and began competing in track in the third grade. He graduated from McNicholas High School in 1985, where he was a champion sprinter and later a member of the University of Cincinnati's track team. It is said that he was one of the most talented sprinters ever at U.C. Several of Sgt. Kiser's records still stand at U.C., including the 300 yard dash indoors and the 300 meters.

After a year at the University of Cincinnati, he left to join the Navy. He spent 7 years in active duty, mostly in Italy, where he met his wife, Debbie, who was also in the Navy. Sgt. Kiser followed that with 7 years in the Naval Reserve.

They settled in Wisconsin, and had two children, Alicia and Mark. Two years ago, Sgt. Kiser joined the Army Reserve and trained at Ft. McCoy, Wisconsin. He left for Iraq in late 2003 with the 330th Military Police Detachment, based in Sheboygan.

Close to his family, Sgt. Kiser grew up with six women: his mother and five sisters, all of whom still live in the Clermont County area. Last night, there was a community-wide celebration of Sgt. Kiser's life at the Clermont County Courthouse in Batavia.

All of us in the Cincinnati area are grateful for Sgt. Kiser's service to our country, and express our deepest sympathy to his family and many friends.

THOMAS F. FARLEY RETIRES AS DISTRICT ADMINISTRATOR FOR THE VIRGINIA DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION'S NORTHERN VIRGINIA DISTRICT

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the contributions of Tom Farley to transportation efforts in northern Virginia. For the past 11 years, Tom has served as district administrator for the Virginia Department of Transportation's (VDOT) northern Virginia district which is the most populated and congested area of the Commonwealth.

District administrator for northern Virginia is a difficult job which often bears the brunt of public scrutiny. He is often on the front line when someone has a complaint about roads, snow, or potholes. Nevertheless, Tom has excelled because he is adept at bringing people together to find transportation solutions.

In the course of his career, Tom has worked with hundreds of citizens, homeowners, community groups, and elected officials. Tom has personally been a friend to me and helped with many projects that have benefitted the l0th District. He has also been involved in almost every major transportation issue in northern Virginia in the past 11 years including the Springfield Interchange, the new Woodrow Wilson Bridge, Route 50 traffic calming, the Fairfax County Parkway, and the Capital Beltway Safety Study.

I want to thank Tom for his contributions to northern Virginia and wish him the best as he retires from VDOT knowing that he has been a true public servant to the people of Virginia.

TRIBUTE TO COUNCIL MEMBER-AT-LARGE, DONALD K. TUCKER

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a distinguished public servant from my district. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to recognize Councilman Donald Tucker for his 30 years of service to the City of Newark. This is a major accomplishment, and its celebration is a well deserved honor for Councilman Tucker. Having served on the City Council and Southward Democratic Committee with Councilman Tucker, I can attest to his dedication to our community and would like to share a few of his many passions, projects, and accomplishments with you today.

Since 1974, Councilman Tucker has devoted his time and energy to the pursuit of enhancing the quality of life for the residents of Newark. As the senior member of the City Council, he has the historical perspective that makes him a nationally prominent municipal leader. In addition to serving as the President of the National Black Caucus of Local Elected Officials (NBCLEO) for four years, he was on the Executive Board of the National League of Cities. He has been pro-active in his efforts to assist in making Newark a ''Model City.'' Councilman Tucker is founder and State Chairman of the renowned Black Issues Convention (NJBIC). Under his leadership, NJBIC is the longest serving State Black Issues Convention in the country. He is the main operative of the annual ''Newark Day'' observance in Atlantic City during the State League of Municipalities Convention.

In addition to his duties as a Councilman, Donald Tucker finds time to serve the community in other ways. He serves on several advisory boards and has received numerous awards and citations for his dedicated service. Always an advocate for children and senior citizens, Councilman Tucker is the founder of The Centre, Inc., a community services multipurpose center that serves these individuals.

I salute Councilman Tucker for his dedication to our community and I am proud to have him in my district. Mr. Speaker, please join me in extending my thanks to Councilman Tucker, and I invite my colleagues to join me in sending our sincere congratulations and best wishes as he celebrates 30 years of service to Newark's deserving citizens.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO FRANCIS S. CURREY FOR HIS HEROIC SERVICE

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and honor Francis S. Currey for his heroic service during the Second World War. I am very pleased to submit this tribute to Sergeant Currey, as the Town of Fallsburg in Sullivan County, New York prepares to celebrate ''Francis Currey Day,'' designated for July 10, 2004. The day of festivities will pay homage to the outstanding and invaluable service that Sergeant Currey provided to our nation during World War II, which earned him the Medal of Honor. Mr. Currey is the only living native of Sullivan County to have received this distinguished award.

The details of Sergeant Currey's courageous actions are chronicled in a citation dated July 27, 1945 and signed by President Harry S. Truman. At the time of the events depicted in the citation, Francis Currey was nineteen years of age. It reads as follows:

''Sergeant Francis S. Currey, U.S. Army, Company K, 3rd Battalion, 120th Infantry, 30th Infantry Division. He was an automatic rifleman with the 3rd Platoon defending a strong point near Malmedy, Belgium, on 21 December 1944, when the enemy launched a powerful attack. Overrunning tank destroyers and antitank guns located near the strong point, German tanks advanced to the 3rd Platoon's position and, after prolonged fighting, forced the withdrawal of this group to a nearby factory. Sergeant Currey found a bazooka in the building and crossed the street to secure rockets meanwhile enduring intense fire from enemy tanks and hostile infantrymen who had taken up a position at a house a short distance away. In the face of small arms, machine gun, and artillery fire, he, with a companion, knocked out a tank with one shot. Moving to another position, he observed three Germans in the doorway of an enemy-held house. He killed or wounded all three with his automatic rifle. He emerged from cover and advanced alone to within 50 yards of the house, intent on wrecking it with rockets. Covered by friendly fire, he stood erect, and fired a shot which knocked down half of one wall. While in this forward position, he observed five Americans who had been pinned down for hours by fire from the house and three tanks. Realizing that they could not escape until the enemy tank and infantry guns had been silenced, Sergeant Currey crossed the street to a vehicle, where he procured an armful of antitank grenades. These he launched while under heavy enemy fire, driving the tankmen from the vehicles into the house. He then climbed onto a half-track in full view of the Germans and fired a machine gun at the house. Once again changing his position, he manned another machine gun whose crew had been killed; under his covering fire the five soldiers were able to retire to safety. Deprived of tanks and with heavy infantry casualties, the enemy was forced to withdraw. Through his extensive knowledge of weapons and by his heroic and repeated braving of murderous enemy fire, Sergeant Currey was greatly responsible for inflicting heavy losses in men and material on the enemy, for rescuing five comrades, two of whom were wounded, and for stemming an attack which threatened to flank his battalion's position.''

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join the Town of Fallsburg in honoring Francis S. Currey, who repeatedly risked his life in order to protect his fellow soldiers and to halt the Nazi offensive near Malmedy, Belgium during the Battle of the Bulge. The enemy offensive that Sergeant Currey thwarted may have prolonged the duration of the War in Europe and cost the lives of many more American soldiers had it been successful. It is with great pleasure that I hereby recognize Sergeant Currey's courageous and selfless actions and express my deep gratitude and appreciation for his tremendous service to this country.

A TRIBUTE TO GREATER FREE GIFT BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Greater Free Gift Baptist Church in recognition of the church's 50th year of existence, serving as a place of spiritual leadership in the community.

The Free Gift Baptist Mission was first organized on May 9, 1954 in the Home of Reverend J.W. McCray on 714A Monroe Street in Brooklyn, New York. The church leaders included Deacon Lee Gains who was chairman of the deacon board; Deacon Brodie who was treasurer; Sister Gertrude Ortory was who the church clerk; and Deacon Roosevelt Kirkland who served as chairman of the trustee board. There were about 25 charter members.

On the following Sunday, worship services were also held at 494 Lexington Avenue, where Reverend Wayne was pastor. In June of that same year, the church occupied its premises at 77 Sumner Avenue. On October 24, 1955, an Advisory Council meeting of the Eastern Baptist Association was held for the purpose of recognizing Free Gift Baptist Church as a regular Baptist church. In September 1956, the pastor, members, and many visitors and friends marched from 77 Sumner Avenue to 1058 Myrtle Avenue.

In June 1959, Reverend Daniel Webster Batts was called to serve as pastor of the church. In 1961, the Free Gift Baptist Church due to legal reasons changed its name to Greater Free Gift Baptist Church. Under new leadership, congregants continued worshipping at 1058 Myrtle Avenue. In 1962, membership was instructed to look for larger and better quarters, and through the help of the Almighty, church members located its present site at 146 Stockton Street. On December 12, 1991, the church lost its pastor Reverend Dr. Daniel Webster Batts and for three years while under the leadership of the Deacon Board, the church searched for a new pastor.

Finally, on February 26, 1995, the church installed its current pastor, Reverend William Raymond Whitaker, Jr. and since then the ministry has continued to grow. Under Reverend Whitaker's leadership, the church now has a ministerial staff consisting of three ministries, a nurses unit, the Greater Free Gift Bible Institute, which includes a General Bible Class and Child and Youth Evangelism Classes, an in-house library, a remedial reading assistance class, a basic computer training class, two vans, the D.W. Batts Fellowship Hall as well as the formation of the Drama and Dance Ministry and Serenity on Stockton Street. In May 2003, the main sanctuary and the D.W. Batts Fellowship Hall were renovated.

Mr. Speaker, the Greater Free Gift Baptist Church has served as a religious sanctuary for 50 years, inspiring spiritual growth, knowledge and understanding in the community. As such, the church is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable congregation.

HONORING COLONEL JACK V. SCHERER

HON. MARION BERRY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen and an admirable leader, COL Jack Scherer of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Memphis District.

On July 12th, COL Scherer will step down as Memphis District Commander after finishing his 3-year term. He leaves behind a legacy of infrastructure and development all along the Mississippi River from Cairo, Illinois, to Rosedale, Mississippi.

COL Scherer has served his country with distinction as a member of several troop assignments including as Platoon Leader, Company XO and Battalion Logistics Officer for the 326th Engineer Battalion, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault). He also commanded Company E (Mobile Assault Brigade), 1st Engineer Battalion, and 82nd Engineer Battalion, 1st Infantry Division (Mechanized).

His wide-ranging experience in the field and with the Defense Logistics Agency in Ft. Belvoir, VA, has led to a vision and knowledge of water-borne infrastructure far exceeding the norm. The rivers and levees, especially the Mississippi River and tributaries, of our area have not known a greater advocate than COL Scherer; his absence from our future efforts will be terribly apparent.

In addition to his infrastructure development, COL Scherer has been involved in many humanitarian relief operations. Deployed to Bosnia-Herzegovina in support of Operation Joint Guard, he was the Multi-National Division (North) Engineer. While there, he coordinated the work of eight national engineer units supervising land mine-removal operations.

COL Jack Scherer is a hero not only for his courage and leadership as Army colonel, but for his commitment to the infrastructure our region is so reliant upon. On behalf of the Congress, I extend deep appreciation to COL Scherer for his leadership and his dedication to making the area's waterways efficient and practical.

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF CAMP SHALOM

HON. TAMMY BALDWIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 50th anniversary of Camp Shalom, the Madison Jewish Community Council's Day Camp. Camp Shalom has become the oldest day camp in the entire Madison area. It continues to serve children without regard to race, gender, religion, ancestry, creed, sexual orientation, political affiliation, disability, or national origin.

During the past five decades, Camp Shalom has fulfilled its commitment of never denying a child access to its facilities due to family finance. It maintains a nurturing, safe, educational, and enjoyable camp experience for children from ages five through thirteen.

From 1954 through 1999, Camp Shalom made its home in Madison's Wingra and Olin Parks. Since 1999, it has been located at the Irwin A. and Robert D. Goodman Jewish Community Campus in Verona. The new facility has an aquatic center, community center, art center, and basketball courts, enabling children to enjoy a diversity of activities while at day camp. Camp Shalom also operates the Irwin A. and Robert D. Goodman Aquatic Center in a joint venture with Madison Schools—Community Recreation. This joint venture exemplifies an ideal partnership between the non-profit and public sectors.

I wholeheartedly congratulate Camp Shalom for fulfilling a fifty year mission of service to the children and families of the Madison-area community and significantly contributing to the advancement of peace.

SPENDING CONTROL ACT OF 2004

SPEECH OF

HON. MARSHA BLACKBURN

OF TENNESSEE

Thursday, June 24, 2004

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4663) to amend part C of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 to establish discretionary spending limits and a pay-as-you-go requirement for mandatory spending:

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to support the RSC budget amendment. It is a responsible amendment, and necessary in a time of war budgeting—and I would suggest, it should even be applied in times of peace.

Congress can act to reduce spending. Public support is there—I hear it from constituents all the time. People have priorities—the war on terror, economic growth through tax relief, and Less Government. They don't want millions more spent on wasteful programs that benefit narrow special interests.

We passed record tax relief and it has helped fuel growth and to create jobs. Now we can put in motion a plan to bring down federal spending—This is the next step in the Republican economic plan for America.

This amendment reverses the cycle of higher spending and higher taxes; it balances the budget within 5 years through spending caps and real deficit reduction.

HONORING CONGRESSMAN DOUG BEREUTER

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a good friend and outstanding public servant, Congressman DOUG BEREUTER.

I have become familiar with DOUG and his work having served as a member of the U.S. House delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, which he chairs. I have participated in numerous congressional delegations abroad which he has led and was always impressed with his knowledge of world affairs and his determination to increase understanding among NATO partners.

DOUG also has been a tireless advocate for his Cornhusker State constituents during his 26 year House tenure. He has served longer than any other Nebraskan, during which time he has penned many laws to help his diverse constituency, including ones to promote his State's agricultural exports, improve health care and child welfare, end international hunger, and protect Native Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to call DOUG BEREUTER a friend and colleague. His constituents and our country are losing an honorable and dedicated public servant, the likes of which bring credit to this hallowed institution in which we are so fortunate to serve. I wish him and his wife, Louise, health and happiness in their future endeavors.

BOWDOIN INTERNATIONAL MUSIC FESTIVAL CELEBRATES ITS 40TH ANNIVERSARY SEASON

HON. THOMAS H. ALLEN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, this summer marks the 40th anniversary season of the world-renowned Bowdoin International Music Festival. I take particular pride in this program, which is housed on the beautiful campus of my alma mater, Bowdoin College, in Brunswick, Maine, in my Congressional District.

Each summer for 6 weeks, more than 200 gifted young musicians of graduate, college and high school levels gather here from around the globe. They learn from and perform with some of the best teaching and performing musicians in the world. In this international community, students and faculty thrive in an intense but joyful atmosphere. The program consists of individual classes and practice, chamber coaching and group practice, master classes, and numerous performance opportunities. These include student concerts and an outreach program, in which students perform at local venues such as retirement homes and resorts. The public is also invited to the festival's ''MusicFest,'' a formal chamber music series that features festival artists and internationally-renowned guest artists, ''Upbeat!,''a mix of contemporary and traditional music in an informal atmosphere, and the week-long Charles E. Gamper Festival of Contemporary Music.

The Bowdoin International Music Festival has furthered the artistic mastery of numerous students, enriched Maine's educational and cultural environment, and brought pleasure to thousands of listeners. I am confident that its success will continue for decades to come.

70TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LADIES AUXILIARY OF CLEARY-KRECH POST #1707, VFW

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Ladies Auxiliary of Cleary-Krech Post #1707, Veterans of Foreign Wars, from Portage, Wisconsin, who recently celebrated their 70th anniversary. This group, comprised of wives, widows, mothers, grandmothers, daughters, and sisters of those who were eligible for membership in the Veterans of Foreign Wars, came into existence thanks to the tireless efforts of Ella Johnson and Dorothy Krech.

From its inception, the dedicated women of the Ladies Auxiliary have held fundraisers, including bake sales, card parties, pot-luck dinners, bingo, old time dances, and WLS amateur shows at the armory. Those efforts raised money for the National Home in Eaton Rapids, Michigan and a banner for the Auxiliary. In 1937, the Auxiliary began sponsoring the National Essay Contest, giving cash prizes to the three winning essays from high school students.

In anticipation of the district conference, the Auxiliary formed their now famous kitchen band in order to provide entertainment. This band created music using instruments such as brooms, a wash tub, rolling pins, clothes pins, and a skillet. At several special occasions, the band performed their musical talents, including the Portage Harvest Festival. In 1948, 28 members went to the Veterans Hospital in Tomah where they entertained over 350 veterans.

When the Veterans held their Midwinter Conference in Portage in January of 1950, the attendees had to stay in private homes as the hotels were filled. Two national leaders and five hundred representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars attended the conference, making it the largest event ever hosted by the Cleary-Krech Post #1707. In anticipation of this large crowd, the vacated police station was purchased from the city and remodeled so that it could house the participants of the conference.

Currently, the auxiliary offers services to local schools, such as the Patriot Pen Award for the best student essay about democracy. They also provide rehabilitation services to veterans and their families, senior citizens, and at-risk homeless veterans. Today, I join the City of Portage in celebrating the Ladies Auxiliary for seventy years of outstanding service to the community and the nation.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MAC COLLINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I was not present for debate on the Spending Control Act (H.R. 4663), rollcall vote 305, an amendment by Brady (TX); rollcall vote 306, an amendment by Chocola; rollcall vote 307, an amendment by Castle; and rollcall vote 308, an amendment by Hensarling; rollcall vote 309, an amendment by Hensarling; rollcall vote 310, an amendment by Kirk; rollcall vote 311, an amendment by Ryan; rollcall vote 312, an amendment by Ryan; rollcall vote 313, an amendment by Ryan; rollcall vote 314, an amendment by Spratt; rollcall vote 315, an amendment by Hensarling; rollcall vote 316, an amendment by Kirk; rollcall vote 317, a motion to recommit with instructions; and rollcall vote 318, final passage.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 25th, I was meeting with constituents in North Carolina and unavoidably missed rollcall votes Nos. 321, 322, 323, 324, and 325.

Had I been present, I would have voted ''no'' on rollcall vote No. 321; ''no'' on rollcall vote No. 322; ''no'' on rollcall vote No. 323; ''no'' on rollcall vote No. 324, and ''yes'' on rollcall vote No. 325.

HONORING CONNECTICUT GOVERNOR JODI RELL

HON. ROB SIMMONS

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, on July 1, 2004, my home state of Connecticut saw the dawning of a new political era. The cloud of controversy that had covered Connecticut in recent months was lifted as Lieutenant Governor Jodi Rell was installed as Connecticut's 87th Governor.

I have known our new governor for many years. We served together in the State Legislature and she has been lieutenant governor for nine and a half years. Jodi Rell understands government at both the legislative and executive levels. She is a leader and a hard worker. She understands that among her primary responsibilities is to bring high standards and confidence back to the office of governor. I have no doubt she will succeed.

On a sunny day last week, Governor Rell took office with a pledge of honor, respect and modesty. She spoke of the ''culture of corruption'' that has infected Connecticut's state government and she acknowledged that her predecessor's ethical problems had shaken the public's faith in government and belief in the dignity of public service.

Governor Rell said, ''Today, we begin to restore faith, integrity and honor to our government. It is our solemn obligation. It will be our lasting legacy.''

Governor Rell was gracious towards her predecessor. She said, ''These have been very difficult and trying times for everyone, including Governor Rowland and his family. My thoughts and prayers are with them.''

It was the proper tone for the day.

It was heartening to see officials from both sides of the aisle rally in support of the new governor. They understand that when faith in government is shaken and when our belief in the intrinsic virtue of public service is called into doubt, it is the business of everyone—regardless of political affiliation—to raise the level of dialogue and conduct. Truly, as Governor Rell stated, ''The time to heal has begun.''

The public deserves absolutely nothing less than the meritorious and disinterested public service of our elected officials. Connecticut's newest governor understands this and I am proud to offer her my full support.

A TRIBUTE TO JOSEPHINE AND HENRY BOLUS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Josephine and Henry Bolus in recognition of their 50th wedding anniversary.

Josephine and Henry first met back in 1948 as junior high school students in lower Manhattan. Their courtship was interrupted when Henry began his service in the Korean war. He was stationed in Japan but had to return home due to a family illness. While home, Henry proposed to Josephine, and the couple got married on May 11, 1954 in Harlem, NY at Mount Zion Lutheran Church.

Henry returned to Japan to continue his service to our country. He would later return, and he and Josephine would start their family in Brooklyn, NY.

Henry and Josephine have two children, Michael and Sabrina, three grandchildren, Michael, Ana Margaret, and Hector, and one great-grandchild, Jasmine.

On May 1, 2004, Josephine and Henry will come together in front of friends and family to renew their vows in celebration, love and commitment to each other.

Mr. Speaker, Josephine and Henry Bolus have dedicated their lives to each through 50 years of wonderful marriage, serving as an example to us all. As such, they are more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable couple.

TRIBUTE TO ARTHUR PHILLIP ''PHIL'' JONES

HON. MARION BERRY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a great civic leader and great Arkansan; I am honored to recognize Phil Jones in the Congress. His recent death was a great loss to his community, his family, his state, and this Nation.

Phil Jones' commitment to Northeast Arkansas was beyond compare. Mr. Jones demonstrated an energy few can match. In addition to tirelessly serving his church and his community, he is survived by his seven children, eight grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Mr. Jones was born in Jonesboro, Arkansas, and graduated from Jonesboro High School. He served his country honorably as a supply corps officer in the U.S. Navy during the Korean Conflict and has served in a public accounting practice since the late 1950s. Mr. Jones is a member of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants and the Arkansas Society of Certified Public Accountants (ASCPA) and received the First Annual ASCPA Outstanding CPA in Business and Industry Award for his accomplishments in the field. Most notable in a distinguished professional career was more than 40 years of service with Hytrol Conveyer Company, most recently as vice chairman of the board of directors prior to his retirement last year.

But Mr. Jones made one of the most important realizations a member of a rural community can make: education and health care drive a region's growth. Mr. Jones graciously served on several boards affecting education issues for students ranging in age from kindergarten to college. He also served on a fund raising committee for St. Bernard's Cancer Treatment Center, as a board member of St. Bernard's Hospital Development Foundation, and as president of the Parish Council at Blessed Sacrament Church.

Mr. Jones' commitment to others did not end at our Nation's borders, however. He and his wife, Flo, helped bring health care to the under-privileged in Mexico, Colombia and the Czech Republic.

Phil Jones knew that in order for a community to thrive, it must be supported by those within it. He was an impassioned community leader and was deeply devoted to his family. On behalf of the Congress, I extend sympathies to his family, and gratitude for all he did to make the world a better place.

HONORING JUDGE ROGER KENT WARREN

HON. ADAM B. SCHIFF

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a great American jurist. He not only served with great distinction on the bench, but went on to improve the quality and caseloads of other judges as well. Today I rise to acknowledge the tremendous service of Judge Roger Kent Warren, the outgoing President of the National Center for State Courts.

Judge Warren received his bachelor of arts degree from William College in 1963, and served on a Fulbright Fellowship to Iran in 1964. He was appointed as a judge to the California Municipal Court in 1976, and was elevated to the superior court in 1982. He held this post until 1993, when he became the first-ever presiding judge of the consolidated superior and municipal courts.

Judge Warren was repeatedly recognized for his excellent conduct on the bench, winning the Sacramento Judge of the Year award in 1987, 1993 and 1994; he was awarded the California Jurist of the Year award in 1995 and won the American Judges Association Award of Merit in 1996.

In March 1996, he was appointed President and Chief Executive Officer of the National Center for State Courts, a non-profit organization designed to provide courts with up-to-date information and hands-on assistance that helps our judges better serve the public. He promptly went about providing invaluable educational and consulting services to the judiciary. He formed the Assembly of Court Associations to encourage collaboration among national judicial organizations, developed initiatives such as Communities of Practice to examine the best practices for dealing with family violence, jury reform, and court performance.

On the occasion of his retirement as President and CEO of the NCSC, I rise to honor Judge Warren. The people of the United States have been fortunate to have been served by a person of his stature, and we wish him and his family the very best in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO MATTIE STEPANEK

HON. CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Mattie Stepanek—a remarkable poet and precocious young man from my district. Mattie died recently from complications due to a rare form of muscular dystrophy. The 13-year-old captured the hearts of millions with his poetry and message of peace.

Mattie will forever be remembered as a bright-eyed boy with a big, dimpled smile whose personal philosophy was ''remember to play after every storm.'' Mattie's poetry rose to the top of the New York Times best seller list and will now inspire people for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, Mattie was an incredible role model and inspiration for all Americans. In spite of his hardships, he dedicated his life to spreading harmony and hope. Mattie's message will live on through his poetry. My thoughts and prayers go out to his family and friends during this time of loss.

CONGRATULATIONS TO BROOKE AND MIKE MAROTH

HON. JO ANN EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Brooke and Mike Maroth—the recipients of the 2004 Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Award. Mr. and Mrs. Maroth have provided food aid to thousands of the nation's less fortunate. By greatly expanding the Rock and Wrap it Up! program, they are feeding the hungry in Detroit and around the nation.

Mr. and Mrs. Maroth's innovation came at Mike's workplace—he has been a pitcher for the Detroit Tigers since 2002. After games at Comerica Park, leftover food would simply be thrown away. Brooke and Mike connected their effort to distribute that food with Rock and Wrap It Up—a program which donated leftover food from concert events—and started a whole new facet of the mission. Sports Wrap was the new venture, using the leftover food recovered from the stadium and clubhouse at Comerica. They have fed over 5,000 people in the Detroit area since 2003.

Programs are underway at other stadiums throughout the country. Because of the philanthropic vision of Mr. and Mrs. Maroth, their good work has been repeated in other major-league cities. That is the mark of great volunteers—that others repeat their example. This is truly the case with Mr. and Mrs. Maroth.

This is the vision my husband Bill Emerson had for domestic food aid programs when he worked to pass the Good Samaritan Food Act protecting these donations from liability.

Mr. and Mrs. Maroth have more than earned the Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Award. Bill's hopes for hunger relief in America were very high when he worked to make Rock and Wrap It Up! possible in 1990.

Rock and Wrap It Up! is a volunteer hunger relief charity, which has fed over 20 million since its inception. With over 4,000 volunteers in 500 cities across America, its dedicated supporters recover food in schools, colleges, music concerts, sporting events, and political and corporate functions. Rock and Wrap It Up! was adopted by resolution in 2003 by the United States Conference of Mayors to teach its successful strategies to cities to fill America's food pipeline to feed the indigent.

Brooke and Mike are a major reason the program continues to gain notoriety and grow. They are proof that our commitment to feed America's hungry can always use new initiative and better ideas. As long as there are men, women and children who need the helping hand of other Americans, others like Brooke and Mike Maroth have proven they will be there with a helping hand to offer.

Thank you for your kind service to our nation, Mr. and Mrs. Maroth. Congratulations on earning the 2004 Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Award. Best of luck to both of you as you continue your noble work.

RECOGNIZING PENN STATE'S 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. TOM FEENEY

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. FEENEY. Mr. Speaker, in 1854, a young and dynamic America witnessed several historic events. The Republican Party was organized. Commodore Matthew Perry signed a treaty opening Japan to American trade. And Penn State University was founded.

Penn State was at the forefront of the uniquely American practice of widespread higher educational opportunity. In 1863, Penn State became one of the first two land grant educational institutions. Penn State now includes over 20 campuses with 83,000 students.

Penn State is nationally known for its athletic triumphs. More importantly, it has affirmed the value of the scholar-athlete. Penn State graduates its athletes at rates substantially higher than fellow Division I schools. It's no accident that Penn State's library is named for its beloved Joe Paterno while its sports arena is named for a former Penn State president.

Penn State consistently demonstrates its prowess in the sciences and engineering. My district's Kennedy Space Center has launched four Penn State alums into space including Guion Bluford, the first African American to fly into space. Penn State ranked ninth in university patent recipients in 2002. Several Penn State graduate schools rank in U.S. News & World Report's top ten.

But alumni are the real interpreters of Penn State. 466,000 serve as teachers, farmers, physicians, lawyers, artists, scientists, engineers, and yes even Congressmen and women.

So this Penn State alum sends his congratulations to Penn State for its sesquicentennial.

A TRIBUTE TO MEDGAR EVERS COLLEGE

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Medgar Evers College for adding a Baccalaureate degree program in Social Work to its curriculum. Social Work is an invaluable profession for creative and positive change in our communities, and I commend Medgar Evers for fulfilling this vital social need.

The announcement of this degree program coincides with National Social Work Month. Being a social worker myself, I know the vital role this profession plays in empowering individuals and enhancing social well-being.

Social workers are able to reach the most disaffected members of our communities. People who otherwise would have fallen through the cracks are taught to identify and manage the underlying environmental forces behind their social problems.

There are approximately half a million social workers actively involved in helping individuals with various needs in areas such as health, mental illness, diversity, children, families, aging, poverty, human rights, and social injustice. Despite the far-reaching benefits of social work it is a profession in need of new members. Nearly three fourths of all social workers were born before 1960, and their median age is 50. Programs like the one being started at Medgar Evers are essential for preparing a new generation of social workers to address the complex problems facing society today.

Social workers are on the front lines, battling the many social problems plaguing our communities. The very nature and goal of social work is to help people. I cannot think of a profession more worthy of praise or more significant in impact.

Medgar Evers College faithfully serves the community by fulfilling its mission of meeting ''the educational and social needs of Central Brooklyn through the development and maintenance of high quality, professional career-oriented undergraduate degree programs in the context of liberal education.'' The creation of a degree in Social Work is another step forward in this fine educational tradition.

I know that my own education in social work has been invaluable in both my personal and professional lives, and I am happy that Medgar Evers is supporting this noble and important profession.

Mr. Speaker, Medgar Evers College is working hard to serve its community through the addition of a Social Work degree to its curriculum. As such, it is worthy of receiving our recognition today, and I urge all of my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable institution.

HONORING PENN STATE UNIVERSITY

HON. JOSEPH R. PITTS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania State University is among the most recognizable institutions of our state.

The school is home to one of the country's most storied and successful college football programs.

Today, we celebrate its 150th anniversary, not for its football program, but for its service to our state and its world class academic traditions.

For even the football program, led ably by Joe Paterno, sets the academic standard for programs across the nation. It is part of an athletic department defined by excellence on and off the field.

Penn State graduated 80 percent of student-athletes from the entering class of 1996–97 within 6 years, compared to a national average of 62 percent for student-athletes at all Division I NCAA institutions.

The football team produced an especially noteworthy academic performance, with 86 percent of the freshmen entering in 1996–97 earning their degrees—significantly above the national rate of 54 percent.

Since 1854, when the school was founded as Farmers' High School, Penn State has revolutionized the way our state approaches farming and continues to be among the world's leaders in agricultural research and innovation.

Over the years, Penn State has expanded its offerings to include every serious academic discipline.

U.S. News & World Report's ''America's Best Graduate Schools 2004'' places a number of Penn State programs among the nation's top ten, including supply chain/logistics, industrial/manufacturing engineering, materials engineering, nuclear engineering, agricultural engineering, higher education administration, administration/supervision, vocational/technical education, counseling services, ceramics, and rehabilitation counseling.

Penn State's Smeal College of Business has been ranked among the nation's top ''Best Undergraduate Business Programs'' at public universities.

The honors extend to undergraduate disciplines across the academic spectrum. In 2003, 15 Penn State faculty or staff members received regular grants to lecture or conduct research abroad as Fulbright Scholars, more outgoing Fulbright grants than any other institution in the United States.

But the measure of a university extends beyond commencement day and even beyond the classroom or research lab.

A university's reputation in businesses and communities across the nation is carried and enhanced by that university's alumni.

Penn State has 466,000 living alumni worldwide, 240,000 of them in Pennsylvania.

The Penn State Alumni Association, formed in 1870, has more than 146,000 members, making it the largest dues-paying alumni association in the nation.

These men and women carry the standard for their alma mater and are proof of the world-class education Penn State students receive during the time on campus.

I am honored to join my colleagues in both House and Senate from the Keystone State in honoring Penn State and thanking its administrators, professors, students, and support personnel for offering a terrific education at a reasonable price to so many for so long.

It is an honor well-deserved.

HONORING THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in support of the resolution congratulating the Pennsylvania State University on its 150th Anniversary and reaffirming its designation as a land grant university.

On February 22, 1855, Pennsylvania Governor William Pollock signed the charter that created what eventually became The Pennsylvania State University. Penn State will be celebrating its 150th anniversary from July 1, 2004 to June 30, 2005. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Penn State on its achievements over the years. In addition, I would also like to recognize the importance of the branch campuses to the success of Penn State University.

Initially a small college dedicated to the study of scientific agriculture, Penn State was designated the Commonwealth's sole land-grant institution in 1863. In 1874, the Agriculture College of Pennsylvania became the Pennsylvania State College and in 1954 became the Pennsylvania State University.

Currently, Penn State has an enrollment of 83,000 students, which consists of individuals at the main campus in University Park, the 20 branch campuses, located across Pennsylvania and students at the College of Medicine, the Dickinson School of Law and the Pennsylvania College of Technology. As a result, 1 in every 8 Pennsylvanians with a college degree attended the Pennsylvania State University.

In particular, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the branch campuses in my district for the role they play in educating Penn State students. There are three branch campuses located in my district: Penn State Hazleton, Penn State Wilkes-Barre and Penn State Worthington-Scranton. These branch campuses came about in the 1930's when students could no longer afford to travel away from home to college because of the Depression.

Since then, these branch campuses have evolved, offering the four-year bachelor degrees, associates degrees and a wide range of continuing education classes to students in our area. In addition, the branch campuses offer certificates and professional development credits. As a result, many businesses in my area encourage their employees to take classes at the branch campuses. The branch campuses, therefore, have not only increased the educational attainment level of the workforce in my district, they have also helped promote economic development in the region.

Over the next year, the Pennsylvania State University will mark its anniversary with series of special events highlighting the achievements of the university. I wish them well over the next year and in the years to come as they continue to provide quality education to students in Pennsylvania.

HONORING 150 YEARS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY

HON. JAMES C. GREENWOOD

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, since its inception 150 years ago as a pioneering land grant college located in an area now known to millions as ''Happy Valley,'' the Pennsylvania State University has come to the forefront of American collegiate academic and athletic achievement by doing things honorably and exceptionally . . . by doing things ''The Penn State Way.''

Today, Penn State still maintains their commitment to providing premier agriculture science education while expanding their national prominence in the areas of engineering, business, architecture, meteorology, social sciences, arts, and communications. Penn State's 24 campus locations boasts an unprecedented 83,000 undergraduate, graduate, law and medical students that have the opportunity to take 11,300 courses in 180 degree majors! With so many scholastic avenues worth pursuing and exploring, Penn State provides every undergraduate student with a well-balanced education through their extensive general education requirements. However, Penn State's educational leadership far exceeds the boundaries of the classroom through their distance education and statewide agricultural extension programs.

If you have ever talked to a Penn State alumnus—and with 1 in 720 Americans holding a Penn State degree, it isn't hard to find one, it will take just a moment for them to envelop you with their enthusiastic love for the Nittany Lions. As Americans we have all benefited in one way or another from either a Penn State alumnus, or Penn State research guided achievement. Imagine what our lives today without the only FDA approved heart pump, the electron microscope, the screenplay to ''Casablanca'' or a Fischer Price toy. In addition to the hundreds of my constituents graduating from Penn State every year, I have been able to personally benefit from Penn State's outstanding academic programs through the knowledge that was imparted to my current staff, Judy Borger, Amanda Murphy, and Jeff Urbanchuk, and to former staff member Sara McGraw.

If you are lucky enough to visit, it can take as little as a walk through Old Main lawn while enjoying a scoop of Peachy Paterno ice cream from the Creamery, or sitting among 108,000 of your closest friends in Beaver Stadium watching the Marching Blue Band perform their signature ''Floating Lions'' drill to perfection, to understand why Penn State has the largest alumni association in the world . . . because once you've experienced Penn State, you will never want to let go.

For years, Penn State has built a reputation of integrity, respect, and competitiveness in their nationally-renowned programs in fencing, gymnastics, women's volleyball, women's basketball, soccer, and swimming—while more importantly serving as a shining example to other universities by putting the student before the athlete.

And then there's the football. One cannot talk about Penn State's history and achievements without acknowledging the 53 years of unmatched leadership from Joe Paterno—a truly great example of what it means to be Penn State proud. Under his watchful eyes, Penn State has become a national powerhouse in men's college football, accruing 2 national championships and 5 undefeated seasons. However, when asked about his most important successes, Mr. Paterno will not quote these figures for you, nor will he mention that he is one of the most winning coaches in NCAA history, because the most important figure to Mr. Paterno is his team's graduation rate—with over 80 percent of Penn State football players graduating within 6 years, well above the national average.

Even if a student hasn't experienced the pride of playing in the nameless blue and white uniforms, or enjoyed a Saturday afternoon at Beaver Stadium cheering on the team with their friends—every Penn State student has benefited from Mr. Paterno's generosity and philanthropy as he contributed significant funds to an addition of the library that was completed in 2000, and was instrumental in raising more than a billion dollars for the university in only 5 years.

Happy 150th Birthday, Penn State . . . may we all be united in our own personal efforts to stand for your admirable principles and in that respect we will all be able to say, WE ARE . . . PENN STATE!

PENN STATE: 150 YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to join my colleagues in recognition of Penn State's 150 years of service to students in pursuit of higher education. Charted in 1854 in response to a request from Pennsylvania State Agriculture Society, Penn State was established as agriculture based school with the goal of applying scientific principles to farming. In time, its ability to draw intellectual talent and broaden its mission enabled it to grow into one of the premier educational institutions in the country.

Over the past 150 years, Penn State has continued to expand its mission to meet the challenges of tomorrow. Today, the University consists of 11 academic schools and 20 campuses throughout the state, including two in my district, located in Altoona and Mont Alto. Additionally, the Penn State system holds a College of Medicine, the Dickinson School of Law and the Pennsylvania College of Technology. All together the combined enrollment in Penn State programs is more than 80,000 students.

To give a sense of this school's impact over the years let me share some facts: one in every eight Pennsylvanians with a college degree is a Penn State graduate and one in 720 people in the U.S. is a Penn State graduate. On personal level, I have felt Penn State's impact in my own life, three of my siblings attended Penn State and numerous members of my staff over the years are Penn State alumni.

So why is it that thousands of students from all walks of life come to Penn State in pursuit of a higher education? They come knowing that their time at Penn State will translate into a top-quality education. Penn State has been consistently recognized as one of the best technical schools in the country and U.S News and World Report's ''America's Best Graduate Schools 2004'' selected a number of Penn State programs among the nation's top ten. These strong credentials are proof of Penn State's high standards.

Mr. Speaker, once again I want to congratulate Penn State on 150 years of excellence and to thank all of the professors, administrators, staff, students and alumni who dedicate themselves to making Penn State one of the most valuable educational institutions in our state and our nation.

CELEBRATING THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY SESQUICENTENNIAL

HON. DON SHERWOOD

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise before you today to honor the Pennsylvania State University as it celebrates its Sesquicentennial. On February 22, 1855, Pennsylvania Governor William Pollock signed the charter that created what is today The Pennsylvania State University. The University will be celebrating its Sesquicentennial for a full year from July 1, 2004 through June 30, 2005.

Penn State was started as a small college dedicated to the study of scientific agriculture; the University was then designated the Commonwealth's sole land-grant institution in 1863 by the Pennsylvania Legislature and has grown to become one of the world's most renowned public universities. The University is well known not only for its agricultural research and extension programs but also engineering, architecture, social sciences, medicine, and law.

Penn State has been instrumental in creating a heart-assist pump developed by medical and engineering faculty in 1976 to prolong the lives of cardiovascular patients. This pump was the first surgically implantable, seam-free, pulsatile blood pump to receive widespread clinical use. It led to the Penn State Heart, the only artificial heart approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. A Penn State surgeon and two engineers also perfected the world's first long-life, rechargeable heart pacemaker.

In 1955, physics Professor Erwin Mueller became the first person to ''see'' an atom, using a field ion electron microscope of his own invention. The device was a landmark advance in scientific instrumentation that allowed a magnification of more than 2 million times.

Penn State in 1955 became the first university to be issued a federal license to operate a nuclear reactor, which it continues to use for studies in the peaceful uses of atomic energy and the training of nuclear industry personnel.

Penn State is a leader in food science. In 1892 Penn State offered America's first collegiate instruction in ice cream manufacture, followed soon after by a pioneering ''short course'' program that has helped to make the University an international center for research in frozen confections. Ice cream gurus Ben & Jerry got their start from a correspondence course in ice cream making from Penn State.

Pennsylvania's and the nation's pure food laws stem partly from the work of pioneer chemist William Frear, who in the early 1900s analyzed foods for government agencies and headed an expert committee whose recommendations shaped the landmark Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906.

In the 1920s, Penn State became the first land-grant college to initiate a comprehensive mushroom research program. Researchers developed improved composts and production practices that were adopted by growers worldwide and also helped Pennsylvania retain its leadership as the number one source of domestic mushrooms.

This institution has contributed tremendously to the Commonwealth and the nation, with graduates throughout the world as well as the largest outreach efforts with programs in every state and 87 foreign countries. The University has 11 academic schools and 20 campuses located throughout the Commonwealth, as well as an extension program that reaches nearly one out of two residents annually. Penn State annually host the largest all student run philanthropy in the world raising over 3.5 million dollars for The Four Diamonds Fund which provides money for comprehensive care of children with cancer, support for their families, and for research of pediatric cancer.

One out of every eight Pennsylvanians and one in every 720 people in the United States, as well as one out of every 50 engineers and one out of every four meteorologists has a Penn State degree. The university also boasts the largest dues paying alumni association in the nation that was established in 1870.

The University has also produced many championship Division I athletic teams, as well as a record breaking and legendary football coach Joe Paterno.

The 150th anniversary of Penn State will highlight what is important and good about this distinguished institution and the fine people and research that it produces.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you and my colleagues to congratulate the administration, faculty, staff, alumni and students of Penn State as they celebrate the Sesquicentennial of this fine institution. I wish them all the best during their next 150 years.

A TRIBUTE TO HENRY BOLUS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Henry Bolus in recognition of his service to New York City and his country as well as his accomplishments in the beauty industry.

Henry was born to Henrietta and Roy Bolus on February 19, 1934, in City Hospital of New York, located on Welfare Island now known as Roosevelt Island. He was one of 5 children. Henry's solid education was obtained through the New York City public school system, from kindergarten straight through Brooklyn College. Long coupled with his wife, Henry has gone from teenage friend of Josephine, to a loving husband of more than 50 years, and the cherished and respected father of their two children: Michael Henry and Sabrina Jo. Henry is the warm and generous father-in-law of Ana Alicea; the cheerful, playful, and caring grandfather of three, Michael Luis, Ana Margarita, and Hector Luis; and lastly the proud great grandfather of Jasmine. At the urging of his young children, Henry went from never having a single pet, to happily living with cats and dogs.

Throughout his adult life, Henry has had a long history of dedicated and exemplary volunteer service to the community. He has touched and enriched the lives of many. From an altar boy in the Catholic Church, he found his way to becoming a member of the Knights of Columbus. He volunteers each week as an usher at the 10:30 a.m. Mass at the Shrine Church of St. Jude in Canarsie.

Voluntarily enlisting in the U.S. Army, Henry proudly served his country during the Korean conflict. First as a private infantryman, and later as a paratrooper, he served in the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team of the U.S. Army. His service, in support of our country's efforts to thwart the spread of communism into South Korea and perhaps beyond, led to his being the humble recipient of a 2003 New York City Council Proclamation which cited his exceptional service to this great Nation.

Henry went from a street-corner shoeshine boy, to an electrical appliance stock clerk, to a beauty equipment salesperson, and finally to a designer of many of Brooklyn's beauty salons & barber shops. His dedication to his clients and the beauty industry earned him the ''Cosmetology Man of the Year'' Award.

Henry has also become a valuable community activist. Working quietly in the background, yet always willing to help, he has provided transportation for those in need; helped setup health fairs for numerous civic organizations; and assisted in the resurrection of the Canarsie Memorial Day Parade. He has also served on numerous civic and special community associations, such as the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts of America, the Brooklyn Canarsie Lions Club Inc., the United Parents Fraternal, and Informed Voices of Canarsie, Etc. He has the distinct honor of having served as the only African-American on the 69th Precinct Community Council, in its 35-year history. For his hard work and commitment to the Canarsie Community, he received an award from the Friends United Block Association (FUBA) in 2001. For helping to establish the NYC branch of North Carolina A&T College Alumni, he was awarded an Associate Alumni membership.

As a longtime, 43 years resident of New York City Housing, he established the NYC Bayview Housing Sports Day. This is a festive day of multiple sports events, dancing, food, and awards for the children of the community.

Mr. Speaker, Henry Bolus has dedicated his life to serving his country and his community through his active participation in a vast array of civic organization. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

HONORING MILDRED HASTINGS

HON. PETER DEUTSCH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my sympathies to the Hastings Family. Mrs. Mildred Hastings, mother of Congressman ALCEE HASTINGS, passed away on June 24, 2004 after complications related to a heart disease. Her passing is deeply felt and she will be profoundly missed.

A woman of humble beginnings, Mildred Hastings worked hard to improve the circumstances of her family and those around her. She was revered by many in her community and developed personal bonds with constituents from the district. Mildred Hastings was a great motivator and her positive outlook on life not only influenced her family and friends, but also the members of Congressman HASTINGS' staff. The Congressman's Chief of Staff, Art Kennedy, greatly admired her positive energy and her unwavering support of her son. She has left those close to her with fond memories.

Congressman HASTINGS said, ''My mom was my greatest friend and mentor.'' Mildred Hastings guided her son throughout his life and along his milestones to becoming a lawyer, judge, and now Congressman of Florida's 23rd District, Miramar. Mrs. Hastings is survived by her son, grandchildren, and cousins. She was 82 years old. My sincerest condolences go out to the Hastings family in remembrance of this inspiring woman. She will be greatly missed.

H. CON. RES. 410—RECOGNIZING THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ADOPTION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE REPUBLIC OF THE MARSHALL ISLANDS

HON. MADELEINE Z. BORDALLO

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 410, which recognizes the 25th anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the Republic of the Marshall Islands (RMI) and expresses our nation's gratitude for our shared commitment to the principles of democracy and freedom.

Over the past 25 years and since attaining their independence as a sovereign nation, the RMI has emerged to become one of the greatest and most reliable democratic allies of the United States. Our special relationship with the RMI, embodied in the Compact of Free Association renewed last year, has helped fulfill the two principal U.S. objectives in the Western Pacific of forging strategic alliances and establishing democratic systems of government. The RMI was the first of the three former entities of the United Nations administered Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, to adopt their own Constitution and gain their independence. Their example and influence helped stabilize the Pacific Region and win the cold war.

For over 400 years, the people of the Marshall Islands were subjected to foreign and colonial control. The Spanish, the Germans, the Japanese, and the Americans all took control of the islands, named for English explorer John Marshall who visited the islands in 1799, at one time or another. Today, the people of the Marshall Islands strive to retain and preserve their identity and traditions. In many respects, they have been amazingly successful, even as they have faced and embraced the forces of Westernization and globalization. In January, I had the good fortune of visiting their beautiful country as a member of the Congressional Delegation led by Mr. POMBO, the Chairman of the House Resources Committee. While in Majuro, we met with President Kessai Note, as well as elected officials from Bikini, Enewetak, Rongelap and Utrok. We also visited the U.S. Army's Ronald Reagan Ballistic Missile Test Site on Kwajalein Atoll, which is a testament to the strength and dependability of U.S.-RMI relations. With 40 years of cooperation, the Missile Test Site has provided a critical role in development and success of our nation's missile defense and space programs.

On Sunday, July 4th, this nation celebrated our freedom and democratic progress. It has now been 228 years since our founding fathers declared our nation's independence and our democratic form of government. As we reflect upon our democratic experiment and the values we cherish as Americans, it is also fitting that we recognize those who embrace these same values and freedoms. The United States has a proven and trusting friend in the Republic of the Marshall Islands. As we continue to build our relationship, let us work to resolve the remaining issues that the nuclear testing era brought for the benefit of our strategic partnership and special relationship.

I want to thank the gentleman from Arizona, Mr. FLAKE, and my good friend from American Samoa, Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA, for their leadership in introducing this resolution and for their firm commitment to sustaining and strengthening the friendship between the people of the United States and the people of the Marshall Islands. Lastly, I want to recognize and congratulate the Marshalls' Ambassador to the United States for his efforts in strengthening the relationship between our governments, the Honorable Banny de Brum. Si Yu'os Ma'ase and Komol tata.

RECOGNITION OF ANN AND LYDIA ENDREJATIS

HON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to recognize Ann and Lydia Endrejatis of Collinsville, Illinois.

Ann and Lydia are recipients of this year's "Spirit of Excellence" award annually awarded by the Collinsville Chamber of Commerce. Ann and Lydia are being recognized for their lifelong commitment to making Collinsville a better place for all of us.

In nominating them, Diane Meyer wrote the following:

Diakonia. If you think diakonia is Greek to you, well you're correct. Diakonia is Greek for service, an ancient art still being practiced today in Collinsville. The number of people volunteering their time and talent for the good of the community is unrivaled. These "servants" exemplify the ancient meaning of the word mercy—concrete acts of kindness. Although most neither seek nor desire the spotlight, they certainly deserve our sincere thanks.

Ann and Lydia Endrejatis.

While many who volunteer specialize in one or two things, Ann and Lydia do about everything and through their many specific acts of kindness, truly define the word "volunteer." Since retiring, one or the other or both have worked for the following entities:

Anderson Hospital Auxiliary, Miner's Theater, Collinsville office of the American Cancer Society, Downtown Collinsville, Inc., Collinsville Senior Citizens, Cahokia Mounds Visitor's Center, City of Collinsville Shuttle Bus Dispatchers, senior citizen income tax preparations, Fox Theater usher, Holy Cross Lutheran Church Altar Guild and senior citizen worship meal, city historic researchers for Lucille Stehman's newspaper series, Meals on Wheels, schools library aid. The amazing thing about this extraordinary list is that it is a partial list.

The story of Ann and Lydia does not end with the work that they do. It continues with their encouragement and support of others who volunteer for the community. If someone is receiving an award, they are there. If something is being dedicated, they are there. If someone puts on a parade, they are there. If there is a civic ceremony, yes, they are there. With encouragement comes hope and with hope comes the wherewithal a city needs to tackle its future. Ann and Lydia Endrejatis provide Collinsville with concrete acts of kindness and to them we give our heartfelt thanks. Diakonia.

I offer my personal congratulations to my friends Ann and Lydia as well as my thanks to the Collinsville Chamber of Commerce for being as moved by Diane's nomination as I was.

COMMMENDATION OF TECH. SGT. THOMAS NEVIN

HON. TIM RYAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today in commendation of Tech. Sgt. Thomas Nevin, recipient of this year's USO Warrior of the Year award for the Cleveland area.

Sgt. Nevin is a member of the 910th Civil Engineer Squadron out of Youngstown Air Reserve Station in my district, and I am proud of his service to America in the war on terrorism. Sergeant Nevin was selected for volunteering to serve in Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom for over a year and a half. While deployed, he received high praise from his superiors as he demonstrated his technical skills in replacing generators, redirecting a power outage, and installing diesel generators. In Iraq, he led a task force that doubled the available power to an airport in an area that was considered potentially dangerous. As our service men and women work hard daily to rebuild and improve Iraq's power grid, I am confident Sergeant Nevin was vital to that effort while deployed.

Mr. Speaker, at a time that calls for men and women to stand up and volunteer, I am privileged to have a constituent that appeals to our best qualities as citizens. It is good to know the people of Ohio's 17th congressional district are represented in uniform by a man with character, courage, and commitment to national service.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JIM RYUN

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I missed five votes in the House of Representatives on June 25, 2004. Had I been in attendance I would have made the following votes:

Vote on the Sanders amendment to H.R. 4614, Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act of FY 2005. Had I been in attendance, I would have voted "no."

Vote on the Wilson (NM) amendment to H.R. 4614, Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act of FY 2005. Had I been in attendance, I would have voted "no."

Vote on the Meehan amendment to H.R. 4614, Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act of FY 2005. Had I been in attendance, I would have voted "no."

Vote on the Hefley amendment to H.R. 4614, Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act of FY 2005. Had I been in attendance, I would have voted "yea."

Vote on passage of H.R. 4614, Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act of FY 2005. Had I been in attendance, I would have voted "yea."

RECOGNIZING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE THORNE ECOLOGICAL INSTITUTE

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 50th anniversary of the Thorne Ecological Institute (TEI), its record of providing ecological education and environmental awareness to countless numbers of young people, and its development of forward-looking environmental policies.

I believe that many of the problems which face our Nation can be solved through better understanding and awareness of our natural surroundings. For 50 years, the Thorne Ecological Institute has been dedicated to fulfilling this goal by giving hands-on experience to children and adults in Colorado.

In 1954, Dr. Oakleigh Thorne, II, established the Thorne Ecological Institute in hopes of bringing environmental education to the community of Boulder, Colorado. He taught a variety of courses at the University of Colorado at Boulder, working to increase his students' understanding of the environment and its complex interrelationships. His goal was to "connect people to nature," and the last 50 years have seen this goal met with great success. To this day, the Thorne Ecological Institute maintains its commitment to environmental education, now with a focus on children and young people in the Colorado's Front Range. Innovative programs like Project BEAR—Building Environmental Awareness and Respect—reach inner-city children and establish a connection with the wonders of nature, an invaluable accomplishment and contribution to our society.

In addition to their outstanding efforts with children, the Institute was a catalyst in establishing environmental organizations in Colorado, including the first chapters of the Nature Conservancy, the Sierra Club, and the Denver Audubon Society. These organizations have been essential to the protection and promotion of Colorado's environment, and their impact is a direct result of Dr. Thorne's pioneering work.

I would also like to recognize the Thorne Ecological Institute for its innovation within environmental policy. The City of Boulder has been honored nationally for its policy of buying open-space to ensure a high quality of life for its residents. We must remember, though, that the Institute played a critical role in developing this landmark policy. Moreover, long before the Environmental Protection Agency required environmental impact studies, the TEI was conducting them in Colorado to increase understanding of the consequences of commercial development and to lay the foundation for their mitigation.

Mr. Speaker, environmental understanding and protection of environmental quality are things close to my heart—and the Thorne Ecological Institute has been at the forefront of the environmental movement in the Rockies for 50 years. Under the leadership of Dr. Oakleigh Thorne, II, the TEI has fulfilled the dream of connecting people to nature. I congratulate the Thorne Ecological Institute for its accomplishments and ask my colleagues to join me in appreciation.

A PROCLAMATION HONORING MARION STEWART ON HER 99TH BIRTHDAY

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker:

Whereas, Marion Stewart was born on July 19, 1905; and

Whereas, Marion Stewart is celebrating her 99th birthday today; and

Whereas, Marion Stewart, is a long-time active participant in the social and civic life of the community; and Therefore, I join with the residents of the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in wishing Marion Stewart a very happy 99th birthday.

PENN STATE UNIVERSITY'S 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MICHAEL F. DOYLE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join in this special order commemorating the 150th anniversary of the founding of Penn State University. As a proud alumnus of Penn State University, I can attest to the quality of education offered by this outstanding institution of higher learning.

Beginning like so many other state universities as a school to provide an education in farming and agricultural science to the citizens of Pennsylvania—which, by the way, is still one of its important missions—the Agricultural College of Pennsylvania in Centre County, Pennsylvania, grew rapidly and has educated thousands of Americans over the last 150 years.

Today, The Pennsylvania State University boasts 20 branch campuses across the commonwealth and offers a full range of undergraduate majors and graduate degrees, as well as a college of medicine and a highly respected law school. In fact, many of Penn State's grad schools are considered among the nation's top ten in their fields. It has an enrollment of over 80,000 students each year, and it is considered one of the premier research universities in the nation. I might add that it also has one hell of a football team, which has been led to many victories over the years by its legendary coach, Joe Paterno.

I look back fondly on my years in State College as some of the best years of my life. I received a world-class education at Penn State between 1971 and 1975, and I also had a pretty darned good time on campus.

Consequently, I am proud to mark this milestone in the life of my alma mater by participating in this special order commemorating the 150th anniversary of the founding of this remarkable institution of higher learning. I can't wait to see what Penn State and its alumni achieve in the next 150 years.

IN RECOGNITION OF MARY E. LEISHMAN, LIFELONG COMMUNITY ACTIVIST AND FRIEND OF NEW YORK CITY

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to acknowledge the achievements of Mary E. Leishman, a longtime resident and champion of New York City. Ms. Leishman, who passed away on June 12, 2004, leaves behind a large and caring family, devoted friends, loyal colleagues and an incredible record of community service. Mary worked every day to promote the interests of her community and to better the lives of New York City residents. The city and people of New York will miss her dearly.

Ms. Leishman was known as the ''Godmother of Yorkville''—the area of Manhattan she called home for the majority of her life. Yorkville lies between the Upper East Side and East Harlem neighborhoods of Manhattan, which are traditionally regarded as the borough's wealthiest and poorest areas. The great diversity of Ms. Leishman's neighborhood fueled her many accomplishments, and provided the setting for her significant contributions to the public good.

Mary was truly a servant of the people, devoting much of her time and energy to New York City politics and public policy. Ms. Leishman served for more than fifteen years as a District Leader of the Eastside Democratic Club and was a longtime delegate to the Democratic County Convention. Mary worked tirelessly for the causes in which she believed, and showed a particular affinity for ''grassroots'' campaigning. Mary was always available to work at polling locations, collect signatures and perform other administrative tasks—duties that are essential to the functioning of our democracy, but that are often overlooked.

Mary was always attentive to the adage that ''all politics is local.'' Ms. Leishman was a devoted member of Manhattan Community Board Eight, serving in both professional and volunteer capacities. Ms. Leishman was the Chairwoman of Board Eight's Roosevelt Island Committee and for decades visited the island at least twice a week to assess neighborhood concerns and needs. Mary is perhaps best remembered, however, for her efforts to help a great many New Yorkers, particularly veterans and the disabled, find affordable places to live. Indeed, Ms. Leishman led Board Eight's efforts to preserve the Upper East Side's stock of moderate-income housing.

In recent days, many of Ms. Leishman's friends have contacted me to relate stories of Mary's great kindness to individuals in her community. I understand that not too long ago, Ms. Leishman and a friend were walking along 34th Street in Manhattan when a man stopped to ask them for money. Noticing that the man was barefoot, Mary led him to a nearby store and bought him socks and a new pair of shoes. Similarly, Mary was known to regularly provide hot meals to homeless persons she encountered in her travels around the city. These are only a few examples of Mary's generous spirit, but they underscore the fact that Ms. Leishman never ignored the most vulnerable members of her community.

Mr. Speaker, I request that my colleagues join me in honoring the late Mary Leishman, whose lifetime of community service exemplifies the tradition of civic involvement that makes America the greatest nation in the world. To Ms. Leishman's friends, family members and colleagues, I offer my continuing respect, admiration and support.

HONORING FATHER FRANK PERKOVICH

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and honor Father Frank Perkovich, for his fifty years of faithful service and tireless ministry.

A native of my hometown, Chisholm, Minnesota, Father Perkovich recently announced his retirement as pastor of Saint Joseph's Catholic Church in Gilbert, Minnesota, and I know that all who know Father Perkovich will miss his original style of spreading ''The Good News.''

Father Perk, as he is known, believed it did not matter how one worshiped as long as it raised one's mind and heart to God. Drawing on his strong Slovenian heritage and the culture of his community, Father Perk created a Mass set to the old ethnic melodies of polka music and celebrated the first Polka Mass in 1973. For the next 30 years, this unusual blend of folk music and holy worship has become internationally popular, and Father Perk's recording of the Polka Mass has become one of the top-selling polka albums of all time.

In 1983, Father Perk traveled to Rome and celebrated the Polka Mass on the high altar of St. Peter's Basilica in the Vatican for Pope John Paul II, who blessed the ''Polka Priest's'' endeavor. It was the experience of a lifetime for a humble pastor from a small town in Minnesota who only wanted to create a liturgical service that would bring people together and closer to God.

On the occasion of his retirement, I want to join his many friends and parishioners to congratulate Father Perkovich for his many years of service to his Catholic faith community and Minnesota's Iron Range.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. KAY GRANGER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Ms. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, due to a death in my family, I was absent from the House of Representatives on June 24, 2004 and missed votes. Had I been present, I would have voted the following way:

Rollcall No. 303 (H. Res. 692) ''yea,''; Rollcall No. 301 (H. Res. 685) ''nay,''; Rollcall No. 304 (H. Res. 676) ''yea,''; Rollcall No. 319 (H. Res. 691) ''yea,''; Rollcall No. 318 (H.R. 4663) ''nay.''

A PROCLAMATION HONORING MERLE W. MARBURGER ON HIS 90TH BIRTHDAY

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker:

Whereas Merle W. Marburger was born on July 21, 1914 and is celebrating his 90th Birthday today; and

Whereas, Merle W. Marburger is a long-time active participant in the social and civic life of the community; and

Whereas, Merle W. Marburger has exemplified a love for his family and friends and must be commended for his life-long dedication to helping others.

Therefore, I join with the residents of the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in congratulating Merle W. Marburger as he celebrates his 90th Birthday.

RECOGNITION OF THE LIFE OF MICHAEL LEHNEN

HON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Assistant Fire Chief Michael Lehnen of Bethalto, Illinois. Chief Lehnen passed away at the age of 57 after 29 years of service to his community. His funeral held in Bethalto drew large crowds of grateful citizens.

I rise today to honor more than simply one life of one man from my home district. I rise to honor a man, Michael Lehnen, whose work as a fireman represents what's truly good in America. He lived his life, day in and day out, always ready to rush into burning buildings to save the lives of whoever was in danger. Firemen and women, like Mike don't get many monuments, they don't get much in the way of recognition, but they should; because they represent the best that we should all aspire to be ourselves.

We live in a time where sports stars, rock stars and pro-wrestlers are our children's heroes. I hope that we might also commit ourselves to showing our children and grandchildren who are the real heroes in their lives—the many Michael Lehnens who serve their communities each day.

At Michael's funeral there were tears, particularly when the fire alarm sounded again in his honor. But more than sadness it was a celebration. Michael had lived a life of service to others. He put himself at risk of death every day for his fellow man. He is a man who we, while reflecting on his life, can honestly say made a difference.

What greater tribute can there be to a man than when his wife and family looked out at the huge crowd paying their respects, they may have asked themselves who in that crowd wouldn't be there today had Michael not lived. The incredible impact of saving lives has a power that far outlives the hero who makes it happen.

I'm sure some might find it trivial to pay respects to an Assistant Fire Chief from a small town in Illinois. But, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that there are few greater heroes we can praise from this noble House. I extend condolences and our thanks to the family of Michael Lehnen.

COMMENDING CAPTAIN BRENT DAVIS

HON. TIM RYAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commend a resident of my district who has raised the bar for personal sacrifice on behalf of others. His name is Captain Brent Davis, and he serves as the chief of public affairs for the 910th Airlift Wing at Youngstown Air Reserve Station.

What impresses me most about Capt. Davis is his desire to serve above and beyond the call of duty. Already serving his country in uniform, Capt. Davis was approached to shore up support for the C.W. Bill Young Dept. of Defense Bone Marrow Program, and he accepted the task with enthusiasm. He registered himself in the program, named for my distinguished colleague who formally served on the Armed Services Committee, and when he received word that he was a perfect match to donate marrow, he was equal to the task. With the support of his wife, Sonya, Capt. Davis went through the rigorous screening process to ensure his compatibility with the recipient, and on December 8th of last year, he successfully donated bone marrow at Georgetown University Hospital.

The recipient was a 17-year-old young man who was suffering with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, a type of cancer that afflicts the body's lymphatic system. A parent himself, Capt. Davis was determined to help this family. He was concerned first and foremost with the welfare of the recipient and was committed to helping him survive.

Mr. Speaker, our struggle with cancer in all its forms is one we must win. While we search for cures and effective treatments, I take comfort in the fact that there are men and women like Capt. Davis out there, volunteering and even risking their own health so that others may have hope of recovery. I commend Capt. Davis for his courage and sacrifice; he is a model citizen and exemplary officer.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT THE PRESIDENT POSTHUMOUSLY AWARD THE PRESIDENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM TO HARRY W. COLMERY

SPEECH OF

HON. JIM RYUN

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 6, 2004

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the vision and achievements of Mr. Harry W. Colmery, from Topeka, Kansas.

Because of Mr. Colmery's remarkable service to our country, I urge my colleagues to pass H. Con. Res. 257, calling on President Bush to posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Harry Colmery. President Truman established the Medal of Freedom in 1945 as an honor for exceptional service in war, and President Kennedy reintroduced the Medal in 1963 for distinguished service in peacetime. Harry Colmery embodied both of these things and is deserving of this highest civilian honor.

After serving as an Army aviator in World War I, Mr. Colmery spent his civilian life actively promoting and defending the rights of America's veterans. In 1929, he was part of a coalition that worked to pass a major veterans' hospital construction bill. In 1936, he was elected National Commander of The American Legion.

In 1943, while staying in Washington's Mayflower Hotel, Harry Colmery wrote the first draft of what would later become the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, also known as the World War II GI Bill of Rights. This legislation provided historic new benefits to military veterans as they transitioned back into civilian life. Most importantly, the new educational benefit would revolutionize America's higher education system.

Since the enactment of the GI Bill, America has continuously provided educational support for our nation's veterans. Exceeding all expectations, more than two million eligible men and women went to college using these educational benefits in the decade following World War II. The result was an American workforce enriched by 450,000 engineers, 238,000 teachers, 91,000 scientists, 67,000 doctors, 22,000 dentists, and another million college-educated men and women.

Building upon the success of the original GI Bill, Congress subsequently approved the Veterans Readjustment Benefits Act of 1966 and the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program for the post-Vietnam Conflict era. Finally, in 1985, Congress passed the Montgomery GI Bill.

Awarding the Medal of Freedom to Harry Colmery would be a tribute to all veterans in 2004, as we mark the 60th anniversary of the GI Bill.

HONORING PENFIELD TATE III OF DENVER, COLORADO

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize Mr. Penfield Tate III of Denver, CO, for his outstanding career of public service and his inspiring role as father and husband. I would like to thank him on behalf of all Coloradans for the depth and diversity of contributions he has made to ensure our public life.

Before my election to Congress, I served in the Colorado House of Representatives with a number of remarkable individuals who made a difference through their legislative excellence. I also served with some legislators noted for their warm, energetic personalities. However, in my experience there are very few people as gifted—personally and professionally—as Pen Tate.

Every day I worked with him reaffirmed the ideal qualities of a public official: idealistic, caring, optimistic, intelligent and principled. Spirited in debate, Pen was, nevertheless, always a gentleman, being open-minded and respectful to everyone with whom he worked. As a state representative, state senator, and mayoral candidate he was a tireless seeker for solutions to some of Colorado's most pressing problems, and a peerless advocate for children, seniors, workers, and civil rights, causes he championed both in and out of the State Capitol.

Since ending his tenure in the Colorado Legislature, Pen has returned to his law practice in Denver. He has also been given more time to spend with his wife Faye and daughter Elleana. Although he has returned to life as a private citizen, Pen remains as dedicated to his causes today as he was during his time in the legislature. He is active in many charitable organizations and gives generously to his community.

Not surprisingly, Pen's contagious combination of effective legislator and humanitarian has inspired members of his community to award him numerous civic distinctions. His unyielding pursuit of justice and equality was recognized with the 2003 Civil Rights Award given by the Anti-Defamation League. Most recently, Pen was awarded the 2004 Father of the Year by the National Father's Day Council and the American Diabetes Association. This impressive award is only a token of appreciation to a man who dedicates so much of his time to his family. I am attaching a newspaper report of this honor.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting such an honorable person and his distinguished career in public service. My family and I wish him, his wife, Faye, and their daughter, Elleana, good health and happiness in their future together.

[From the Denver Post, June 19, 2004]

A TIP OF THE HAT TO TATE THE DAD

MAYORAL ADVISER IS ONE OF SIX MEN HONORED AS REGIONAL FATHERS OF THE YEAR

(By Erin Cox)

For Elleana Tate, daughter of Denver lawyer and former state senator Penfield Tate III, it only takes a little task for Daddy to make her happy. ''Tuck me in,'' said 14-year-old Elleana, flashing her smile at her father. Tate, nestled next to his disabled daughter on a couch in his 27th-floor downtown Denver office, looked at her with soft eyes. ''Tuck you in still?'' Tate said, beaming.

Tate, partner in a Denver law firm, adviser to Mayor John Hickenlooper, winner of a 2003 Civil Rights Award and former state senator, is first and foremost a father. The National Father's Day Council and the American Diabetes Association honored him as a 2004 Father of the Year, along with five other Denver men. ''It sometimes feels strange to get honored for the things you ought to do,'' Tate said in his acceptance speech Tuesday night. The diabetes association also named Jeffrey Campos, Thomas Dyk, Steve Kelley, Jay Leeuwenburg and Sam Pegues as regional Fathers of the Year.

The National Father's Day Council was established in 1931 to promote the then little-known Father's Day holiday and has been honoring exceptional fathers across the nation since 1942. Tate was selected for the award because of his ability to balance his personal life with a successful career, organizers said. Tate's list of qualifications for what makes a Father of the Year is a little different. ''You have to be loving. You have to be patient, generous, consistent and persistent,'' he said. ''It's a continual reinforcing of things.''

Elleana, who has mild cerebral palsy and limited eyesight, spends a lot of time with Tate getting that reinforcement and fatherly support. Born premature, Elleana has made frequent trips to hospitals and surgery rooms during her life. Tate is always there. ''I'm bouncing off the walls, and he's very reasoned, measured, thoughtful,'' said Elleana's mother, Faye Tate. The struggles with Elleana's health and its potential limits have brought Elleana and her father close. She has been by Tate's side on the campaign trail and at his law firm.

Little exceeds Tate's affection for his daughter, whose artwork hangs on the door of his office. ''He spends a lot of time instructing Elleana,'' Faye Tate said. ''He lets her do everything. He lets her try everything.'' Elleana was barely out of the toddler stage when she rode her first horse, with the urging of her father and despite her mother's fears.

Tate believes there is no other way to parent. ''I don't know what she can or can't do until she tries. I don't know what she likes until she tries it,'' he said.

Tate's grandfathers and father shaped his approach to fatherhood. As a child, Tate spent summers with his three sisters and cousins at his grandfather Tate's farm, where his grandfather ''was everybody's babysitter. He spent a lot of time talking to you. They really made sure you were connected to family,'' Tate said. Tate's maternal grandfather, an immigrant from Jamaica, taught him to keep contact with extended family, and Tate's own father, Penfield Tate II, taught him about friendship. ''My dad was my best friend. He was my law partner and best man at my wedding,'' Tate said.

Tate and Elleana are best friends, too. ''We keep secrets from Mom sometimes,'' Tate said. ''We talk about boyfriends now, and boys.'' Elleana wiggled on the couch and gave an enthusiastic nod at the subject. She and her dad share a special language. ''They talk in code,'' said Tate's sister, Paula Tate. ''We'll hide under the pillows and just talk about stuff,'' he said. A father must be ''firm and fair. And playful,'' Tate said.

Tate brushes off the feat of balancing an impressive public career and the role of loving father. ''It's all a matter of scheduling,'' he said. ''When you work, you work. When you're home, you're home,'' he said. Even though fatherhood is a job in itself. ''You really have to enjoy being a dad,'' Tate said. ''It's too much work not to enjoy it.''

HONORING CARLA BARICZ FOR WINNING NATIONAL HISTORY DAY CONTEST

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Carla Baricz, a rising star at Springstead High School, for her achievements of winning the prestigious National History Day contest and earning a full four year scholarship to Case Western Reserve University in Ohio. Carla drafted a research paper entitled ''Vincent van Gogh and the Exploration of Emotion Through Art: An Encounter With the Human Struggle.'' This lovely manuscript earned Carla second place in the State History Day Contest. Despite this wonderful accomplishment, Carla strived for perfection. She revised the paper and submitted it for the national contest, where Carla's commitment to education separated her from the rest of the competitors and brought her to the forefront of this prominent competition.

I would like to recognize the dedication and drive that Carla Baricz has displayed. As a former educator, I take pride in knowing that students continue to aspire to great dreams and realize that education is the key to success. Carla has used her interests and love for history to create a marvelous opportunity for herself. Carla Baricz is a model student and an inspiration to all. Young people like her fill America with joy and hope as we see the future generation embracing the merits of education and the values of history. Carla is a testament to hard work and dedication. She makes me proud to represent the Fifth District of Florida.

BOOK REVIEW ON PRESIDENT REAGAN BY JUDGE JOHN C. HOLMES

HON. J. D. HAYWORTH

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the official end of the period of national mourning for former President Ronald Reagan. During this month there have been many tributes to this great President, all of which were deserving.

Recently, I was given a copy of a book review by the well-respected Administrative Law Judge John C. Holmes, who is now retired. In August 1998, Judge Holmes reviewed Dinesh D'Souza's book, Ronald Reagan: How an Ordinary Man Became an Extraordinary Leader. It was an excellent review that summed up how so many of us view Ronald Reagan and his life. I would like to submit the review for the RECORD and I commend it to my colleagues.

[From the Free Press, 1997]

RONALD REAGAN: HOW AN ORDINARY MAN BECAME AN EXTRAORDINARY LEADER

(By Dinesh D'Souza)

Dinesh D'Souza, who served briefly as a low-level advisor to President Reagan in 1987-88, is an open admirer of Reagan's accomplishments. Yet not even Reagan's harshest critics are more revealing of his character flaws and human weaknesses. Rather than expressing scorn and derision, however, the author is in turn bemused, delighted, curious, and intrigued in candidly reporting the former president's character and personality idiosyncrasies. After careful examination, he concludes that Reagan's very real limitations in fact assisted as much as deterred this seemingly ordinary man in becoming an extraordinary leader. Beneath his apparent simplicity was a complex and sometimes contradictory person.

For example, Reagan's sunny personality and near continuous optimism masked a psychological curtain that could descend on even his most intimate friends and family, keeping them at a distance. There was also the contradiction that, while constantly extolling the virtue of the family and its values, Reagan exhibited a disjointed personal one, having been divorced from his first wife, Jane Wyman, and distant from his son, daughter, and stepdaughter. Reagan's acknowledged short attention span masked a tenacious adherence to those principles and policies that concerned him most. His good-natured jokes and story-telling, sometimes criticized as irreverent and irrelevant, served to disarm and win over adversaries from Tip O'Neill to Mikhail Gorbachev. His famous line in the presidential debate with Walter Mondale that he ''would not use Mondale's youth and inexperience against him'' caused an involuntary grin and chuckle from his surprised opponent, totally diffusing the increasingly serious campaign issue of Reagan's age, and propelling Reagan into one of the largest presidential victories ever. He loved pomp and cavorted with the wealthy, but had a singular capacity to connect with, and was beloved by, the common man.

The author dispels or modifies some public misconceptions. While Reagan himself self-deprecatingly joked about his nap times, he worked sometimes grueling hours, particularly for a man of his age, exhibiting strong discipline in doing homework on those issues he needed to know. His discipline in keeping physically fit probably saved his life early in his presidency when he was the recipient of a would-be assassin's bullet that lodged less than an inch from his heart. His character was revealed during this frightening time when despite the seriousness of the situation he could extemporaneously joke to his wife Nancy: ''Honey, I forgot to duck!'' and to his treating physicians: ''I hope you're all good Republicans.'' Such good humor in the face of adversity won him a reservoir of good will by an appreciative public.

TAKING ON THE ''EVIL EMPIRE''

Reagan was a naive, rosy optimist, thinking that, if he could only show Gorbachev how ordinary Americans lived, Gorbachev would recognize the differences between the two systems and make big changes for the better. Reagan was a foolhardy, almost comical belligerent, standing at the Berlin Wall and challenging Gorbachev to ''tear down this wall!'' He was an embarrassment, a blind, unsophisticated patriot who had the gall, bad manners, and political incorrectness to call the free world's adversary an ''Evil Empire.'' He was an actor who knew nothing of foreign policy, a genial dummy who straddled between reckless action and somnolent inattention. Or so he was portrayed and so many believed.

But D'Souza recognizes Reagan's historic accomplishment in fostering the dissolution of the Communist empire, which emanated at least in substantial part from the man's own willful, steadfast purpose. This dissolution was not foreordained, as has become the fashionable view. The author demonstrates the transparency of Reagan's critics, quoting extensively from their pronouncements on the growth, stability, and power of the Soviet economy and the folly of attempting directly to challenge Russia itself. Liberal historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr. observed in 1982 that ''those in the United States who think the Soviet Union is on the verge of economic and social collapse are wishful thinkers.'' John Kenneth Galbraith, Harvard economist and guru during the Kennedy-Johnson years, pronounced that ''the Russian system succeeds, because, in contrast with the Western industrial economies, it makes full use of its manpower.'' Such assessment was concurred in by even ''neutral'' economists such as Paul Samuelson and Lester Thurow, who as late as 1989 marveled at the Russian growth process.

As for confronting Russian expansion, Sovietologist Stephen Cohen of Princeton University thought that Reagan was pathologically wrongheaded in apparently abandoning the comforting previous policies of containment and detente for the objective of ''destroying the Soviet Union as a world power and possibly even its Communist system.'' Strobe Talbot, then a senior correspondent at Time magazine and later deputy secretary of state in the Clinton administration, indignantly scoffed at Reagan's unrealistic and misguided attempts to return to the '50s goal of rolling back Soviet domination in Europe.

Though criticized as too ideological, Reagan appointed skilled pragmatists to implement his aggressive foreign policy. They included the maligned but effective Bill Casey at the CIA, Cap Weinberger at Defense, and George Schultz at State. Reagan's overarching plan was relatively simple: he would outspend the Russians on defense, thereby showing the vulnerability of the Russian economic system which Reagan, almost alone, was convinced would not keep pace. This culminated in the proposed future deployment of defense missiles and lasers dubbed ''Star Wars,'' a concept ridiculed by many, and not fully understood even by Reagan, but greatly feared by the Russian leadership. D'Souza presents the still-minority viewpoint, which I believe history will eventually confirm, that the elevation by the Russian leadership of Gorbachev was largely stimulated as an antidote for the very presence of Reagan, who by then had emerged as a popular and effective world leader who articulately advocated challenge of Russian aspirations for world dominance. Reagan took an immediate liking to Gorbachev and instinctively felt they could do business. His subsequent perseverance in challenging Gorbachev to reform the system, combined with U.S. military buildup, precipitated the eventual dismembering of the formerly impenetrable Russian political hegemony and military might.

For this accomplishment alone Reagan should be recognized as the single most important person in the second half of this century in pointing our world in the direction of freedom and democracy. However, to the surprise and even anguish of liberal opponents, and the consternation of some conservative friends, his challenge was not limited to the communist totalitarian system, but to dictators everywhere, whether in the Philippines, South America, or Africa. The resulting extensive conversion from socialist and totalitarian states to democracies and free economies was truly remarkable, never before seen in the history of the world.

TAKING ON BIG GOVERNMENT

As Reagan ran against the political wisdom and apparent majority public opinion in advocating defeat of, rather than detente with, communism, so too he opposed the belief that a powerful central government was essential to ensure freedom, justice, and the general welfare. Reagan presented the then-heretical view that central government was the problem, not the solution. While Reagan accepted much of Roosevelt's New Deal as a necessary reaction to the economic emergency following the Great Depression, he felt the Great Society agenda fostered by President Johnson took the country too far along the path toward a suffocating central government that would eventually stifle individual initiative and freedom. His conversion from Democrat to Republican resulted.

Reagan carried his message forward in speech after speech, initially while traveling the country for General Electric. Although the 1964 Republican Convention produced the spectacularly losing campaign of Barry Goldwater, Reagan's nominating speech—which has been since dubbed merely ''The Speech''—launched him into the national scene as the future messenger and leader of the conservative cause. It also brought him to the attention of king-makers in California, who lured him into a successful run against the incumbent, the firmly entrenched Governor Pat Brown, who, like every candidate Reagan has run against, underestimated his talents, personality, and character.

As Governor, Reagan preached austerity, but in his first term did little in practice to put California's economic house in order. His main contribution, perhaps, was in standing up to the most radical of the free speakers, thereby keeping the universities open and restoring a modicum of stability during those turbulent times. The author labels Reagan's governorship as only moderately successful. Reagan, however, gained a stage that eventually catapulted him into the presidency.

While running for and entering the presidency, his economic message remained the same: limited government. On the one hand, as his critics are quick to point out, Reagan never directly achieved his economic goals, as the high cost of defense build-up and his insistence on a tax cut made a balanced budget impossible. Moreover, this imbalance was exacerbated by the Democratic-controlled Congress, whose ''compromise'' meant more spending on cherished domestic programs rather than cuts that would have helped pay for the defense build-up. On the other hand, his intense lobbying efforts on his first budget, while not reaching all the results he envisioned, provided the mechanism for a future more limited domestic spending program, and provided more funds for the private sector through tax cuts. Through a numbing recession in 1982, with critics contending his ''voodoo'' supply-side economics were a proven failure, Reagan elected to ''stay the course,'' retreating to his California ranch for resuscitation and refusing the siren song to ''do something.'' He was assisted by a supportive Federal Reserve, which tightened credit to reduce the fever of double digit inflation prevalent during the preceding Carter administration. With recover came increasing public and business confidence. A growing economy meant more dollars to pay for the defense build-up.

The author points to the ''outrageous'' act of firing the air traffic controllers as a further plank in economic recovery. Though their union, the Professional Air Traffic Controllers (PATCO), was one of the few to support Reagan's presidential bid, Reagan had no compunction in firing them and replacing them by non-union workers. Considering them ''untouchables,'' no previous president had so directly taken on unions and government workers. To Reagan, the moral basis was simple: government workers were servants of the people and not their masters. The law supported his viewpoint. Condemned, ridiculed, and pressured even by allies, and temporarily losing popular support, particularly from new-found ''Joe Six-Pack'' converts to the Republican party, Reagan stuck to his guns. This action, and his subsequent refusal to compromise, so shocked and silenced union leaders and government workers that corporations and government agencies were afforded for years to come the opportunity to downsize and ''reorganize.'' The seemingly forgotten principal that jobs were a privilege and not a right was at least partially restored and the economy further stimulated.

Reagan's goals were not all achieved while in office. Nevertheless, he left an agenda that is still in many respects being followed today. Free international trade through agreements such as NAFTA, and the outline for fiscal savings as drawn up in the ''Contract for America,'' were Reagan initiatives. Even the line-item veto, scorned and laughed at as a campaign throw-away, and impossible to enact, has become law, ironically co-opted by President Clinton and touted as his own accomplishment. While temporarily contributing to a huge unbalanced budget and an unfavorable foreign trade deficit, the successful war against communism eventually allowed a resulting ''peace dividend,'' a prosperous economy, and a curtailed federal government. A balanced budget would be achieved 10 years after he left office.

Reagan again knew instinctively what the most sophisticated economists were oblivious to. Reduction of tax rates during times when government has become too large and costly can actually increase total revenues by freeing the private sector from stifling governmental costs and regulations, thereby enabling sales and profits (as well as taxes paid) to rise. What was to become known worldwide as ''privatization'' resulted from these policies. Where previous Republican administrations had merely attempted to cut around the edges to make governments a little more efficient and accountable, Reagan attacked it head on, by word and deed freeing the private sector to accomplish its goals with minimal intervention.

TAKING ON ''MALAISE''

A third area that Reagan sought to change flowed naturally from and was dependent upon success in his attack on communism and big government: restoration of the prestige and respect of the presidency, and the confidence, optimism, and patriotism of the American people. Following the ''Peace and Prosperity'' and ''Return to Normalcy'' of the 1950s under Eisenhower, we had experienced the assassinations of President Kennedy, Martin Luther King, and Robert Kennedy; the quagmire of Vietnam, causing President Johnson's decision not to run; Nixon's seemingly moderately successful presidency brought down by Watergate; and the failed Carter presidency, ending in American hostages being ignominiously held in Iran, communism seemingly on the march in international expansion, and Carter himself describing a ''malaise'' in the American psyche. Onto the stage strode the unlikely candidate the conservatives lusted for, but mainstream Republicans merely tolerated, and Democrats welcomed as ''easy pickings''—seemingly too old, too ideological, and too inexperienced to be elected or to accomplish the job.

The reigns of government had barely been grasped when a sickening feeling of deja vu returned as an attempt was made on Reagan's life. Reagan's humorous reaction and relatively quick recovery boded well, allowing him to initiate his foreign and domestic programs. The sputtering of the economy in late 1981, leading to recession, however, dispelled this good will and left the nation in a sullen mood. As recovery finally came and Reagan's ''stay the course'' was more or less vindicated, his personality and talents as a ''Great Communicator'' began to sharpen and shape the American and world landscape. He entreated the people of the United States, the country he felt destined to be ''a shining city on the hill,'' to support and further his program and policies. He restored a sometimes teary-eyed patriotism, encouraging Americans to take pride in and celebrate our country, its meaning, and its history. Using his powers as a former actor and the sincerity of his own belief in the goodness of America, whose ''morning had just begun,'' he sought to enlist the people to assist the world along a better path to a brighter future. He returned a pride in military service, severely wounded since the Vietnam war. His own dedication to duty and pride of office restored dignity and world leadership to the presidency.

History may record Reagan as having been extraordinarily lucky to have accomplished his successes at such an advanced age, barely before senility and the eventual ravages of Alzheimer's disease fully took over. D'Souza does not think so. He credits—too much, some will argue—Reagan's ability to cut through the thicket of unimportant matters and take the correct action at nearly every important juncture. Far from being a mere bystander, Reagan led on matters that mattered, even when his decisions were unpopular.

D'Souza notes a nearly mystical aura that President Reagan himself privately acknowledged as governing some of his actions. While many presidents donned the mantra of churchgoing for public consumption, and Reagan himself supported, mainly as a sop to the religious right, a constitutional amendment to allow public school prayer, his own religious beliefs were more complex. Not an active churchgoer before or during his presidency, he apparently firmly believed in an intervening and active higher authority from whom he privately sought solace and guidance. When asked what person he most admired, Reagan invariably answered, ''The man from Galilee.'' Though public ridicule was made of his wife Nancy's seeking guidance from astrologers, without serious objection and perhaps active support from the President, Reagan's truer belief would have been the personally delivered opinion of Mother Theresa that he had been put on this earth for a divine purpose.

This book will not find favor with liberal economists, with those Jeanne Kirkpatrick labeled ''Blame America Firsters,'' or with apologists for the former Soviet communist system who then had advocated accommodation and appeasement, but many of whom now find its demise historically inevitable and Reagan irrelevant. One of D'Souza's obvious purposes in the book is to attack this attempted instant historical revisionism. In so doing, he can fairly be accused of straying too often from a ''pure'' chronicle of Reagan to a strident attack on his critics. No doubt in anticipated rebuttal, D'Souza points to a ''stacked deck'' committee chaired by Arthur Schlesinger Jr. and commissioned by the editors of the New York Times in December 1996 to render a collective verdict on how history will rank the U.S. presidents. Not surprisingly these ''history experts,'' which included Doris Kearns Goodwin, James MacGregor Burns, ex-Governor Mario Cuomo, and ex-Senator Paul Simon, liberals all, ranked Reagan in the lower half, below George Bush and in the undistinguished company of Jimmy Carter, Chester Arthur, and Benjamin Harrison. In contrast, D'Souza believes Reagan should be ranked with the Roosevelts, Wilson, Lincoln, and Washington.

Interestingly, however, the ideologically conservative ''true believers'' who allege that Reagan was merely a popular messenger for an irresistible movement will not be overjoyed with the book. D'Souza paints Reagan as a unique individual, the likes of which are unlikely to return. Though Reagan articulated the principals of the ascending conservative movement, he was flexible rather than rigid, and his sunny personality lent itself to compromise on everything except his hardcore principals. This enabled Reagan to overcome popular reluctance to accept his conservative agenda.

D'Souza describes an apparently simple, but actually a flawed, complex, and contradictory man who accomplished his aims by concentrating on a few specifics that were fundamental to his beliefs. To this reviewer, who was initially extremely skeptical of Reagan's governing capability, let alone his electability to the presidency, but who has come to the happy realization that there really was something in the stars that brought forth this unlikely man to lead our country at such an important time in history, Ronald Reagan gets it exactly right.

IN COMMEMORATION OF THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the students, alumni, faculty and administration of The Pennsylvania State University, known more familiarly as Penn State, as the school turns 150 this year.

Established in 1855 as a land grant college, it began modestly as a one-building agriculture school in the center of Pennsylvania. Because there was not even a town there at the time, the town that grew up around the school eventually became incorporated as State College. In testimony to the grit and hardworking tradition of Pennsylvanians, Penn State grew quickly in size as well as academic stature among institutions of higher learning.

Penn State can be proud of its academic tradition. The university boasts a wide array of academic achievements in countless disciplines, from agriculture to engineering, from mathematics to meteorology, from the arts to applied research. Penn State is well-known and respected in national collegiate athletics for the strict academic standards it applies to its athletes. Penn State intercollegiate athletes graduate at a rate significantly above the national average. This sets a national example not only to other collegiate athletes but to college and high school students as well.

I am proud to join my Pennsylvania Colleagues in paying tribute to an institution that has so enriched Pennsylvania and our nation academically and culturally.

CONGRATULATING MRS. FRANCES HARRIETT COBB HART ON HER 75TH BIRTHDAY

HON. MARIO DIAZ-BALART

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and pleasure I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Mrs. Frances Harriett Cobb Hart on her 75th Birthday. Mrs. Hart, a native Floridian, has given much of her life to serving her family, church, community, and nation. She is truly an exemplary American.

Born on June 28, 1929, Mrs. Hart was born to Charles Ernest Cobb and Mary Elliott Cobb. As the daughter of citrus growers, Mrs. Hart spent much of her early life becoming acquainted with Florida's rich agricultural tradition. Not limited simply to citrus farming, Mrs. Hart's family raised both cattle and horses in a rural community once known as Cobb's Landing.

After graduating from Wesleyan College in Macon, Georgia, Mrs. Hart married Methodist Pastor James Wynne Hart. Choosing to leave her Florida roots behind, Mr. and Mrs. Hart have spent much of their adult lives between the hills and mountains of East Tennessee and Western Carolina.

An extremely active woman, Mrs. Hart was an avid athlete in her youth, often partaking in such physically strenuous activities as the amateur rodeo. In her maturity, Mrs. Hart has spent much of her time as a church historian and artisan. Throughout her life Frances has been an active member of her community, both willingly and unselfishly serving those around her.

Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate Mrs. Frances Hart's birthday we also celebrate her legacy as a wife, mother, and community volunteer. For her endless contributions and uncompromising devotion to her family and community we are proud to honor Mrs. Frances Harriet Cobb Hart on her 75th birthday. Let us rise today to honor this great woman of strength, character, and moral standing.

ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

SPEECH OF

HON. HEATHER WILSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 25, 2004

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4614) making appropriations for energy and water development for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes:

Mrs. WILSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I rise to address serious problems with this bill and particularly with its Report, which cannot be fully remedied by the amendment I propose.

The problem is not so much with the bill, which we have before us, but with the directive report language that goes along with it.

As members, we rarely focus on report language and our vote in favor of the bill does not approve the report language. Usually, report language tracks the provisions of the bill. In the case of this appropriations measure, the report language goes far beyond the authority of the appropriations committee, directly contradicts recorded votes taken by this House, and is inconsistent with the FY05 Defense Authorization Act which the House has passed.

I will vote for this Bill, which in itself generally provides funds necessary for Department of Energy to execute its important responsibilities in scientific research, energy, and national security. In fact, I applaud its increase in research funding for the Office of Science.

But with my "yes" vote today, I also feel compelled to speak in favor of the majority in this House and put in the record our well documented objection to a number of directions to the Department of Energy in the accompanying Report.

The Report language seeks to undermine initiatives supported by recorded votes in the Defense Authorization bill for the past two years, supported by votes on the House floor for two years, and sustained in the other body for two years. These initiatives have been advocated by the House majority in a policy statement; have been supported and requested by the Department of Defense and the Defense Science Board; and have been a sustained part of this Administration's development of a strategic forces policy for the 21st century consistent with reducing our nuclear forces to the lowest levels possible.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that Committee Staff sometimes overreach in reports, and I would bet a dozen Krispy Kreme Donuts that fewer than half a dozen members of this House are even aware of what has been included in the report accompanying this bill in very prescriptive terms. But this report seeks to give legitimacy to policy positions directly contravened by recorded votes in this House and we cannot allow there to be any confusion about where we stand.

The Bill appropriates $6,514,424,000 for Weapon Activities. The Report seeks to give the appearance that the House has limited funding for the Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator. But we have not. We will vote today to spend those funds and we voted in the FY05 Authorization bill on May 20th of this year to authorize $6,577,953,000, including $27.6M for the Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator study, approving that bill by a vote of 391–34. An amendment to explicitly remove authorization for this study failed on that same day by a vote of 214–204.

The Report seeks to give the appearance that we would like to restrict Laboratory Directed Research and Development at Department of Energy Laboratories. But we have not. We will vote today to fund out laboratories. Only the House Armed Services Committee can pass legislation to limit the LDRD program. On May 20 we passed the FY05 Defense Authorization Act that continued the previously authorized LDRD program at our laboratories.

After September 11, 2001, we were grateful that those Laboratories had been doing this kind of exploratory research under the LDRD program. The fact they have done so has helped secure our homeland and aid our troops in the field. To chill such research would be unwise.

Further, the Report would have you believe that we are voting to restructure the future LDRD program. But we have not. This bill does not change the LDRD program in any way.

Further, the Report language would have you believe that we are voting to have the NNSA focus solely on its missions of life extension of the existing stockpile and the current stockpile stewardship program. But we are not. The bill does nothing of the sort. In fact, if we were to pay any attention to the report language, we would be threatening those priorities. The Report suggests that we make major reductions in one Life Extension Program unsupported by an assessment of the impact and risks this would imply. It would also require a higher priority for dismantlement activities in a way that will likely come at the expense of meeting current Life Extension milestones for the Department of Defense. It would make significant reductions to numerous areas of the stockpile stewardship program that were designed by the NNSA to address technical needs to assess with adequately small uncertainty the safety, reliability, and performance of our weapons without nuclear tests.

None of this makes any sense and the report language would not stand up to any serious review by elected Members of Congress.

The Report suggests that by voting for this bill we are changing the way NNSA operates with other entities within the DOE. But it does not. The report suggests that we are adding a burdensome procedure for approval of NNSA activities at the request of, other elements of the DOE, and would hold hostage numerous unique activities of the NNSA labs within these energy and science programs.

The Report would suggest that we are approving a review of future requirements for the weapons complex development plan, to be conducted only by people with no experience in doing that work. That would be silly and the bill includes no such thing.

The reason we cannot vote to amend report language under the rules of the House is because report language is not law and does not have the authority of law. The law we are voting on is in the bill before us. In most cases, report language explains and supports the bill.

In this case, those writing the report went far beyond any reasonable authority as staff members and I think we need to make it clear that the measures included in the Report are inconsistent with statute, inconsistent with the FY05 Defense Authorization Act, inconsistent with recorded votes taken by this House and have no force or authority whatsoever. An error of this magnitude must be jettisoned in the conference committee so that agencies affected are not confused by the mixed messages sent here.

Mr. Chairman, the problems in this Report are many. I felt it important to clarify for the record that members of the House are approving the text of the Bill. We do not approve of the Report language, which is replete with practical problems and inconsistent with the law.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS #2055 RECOGNITION

HON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to the Ladies Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #2055. Every year the third weekend in September is set aside as National Prisoners of War and Missing in Action Day. For the last six years, the Ladies Auxiliary of VFW Post #2055 has honored the 196 soldiers from Illinois that are considered to be a prisoner of war or missing in action. I join the Ladies Auxiliary in honoring these brave individuals.

As well, I commend the auxiliary for their efforts to honor these men and their families. May God bless not only these 196 that will be honored by VFW Post #2055 but also those serving today. May God continue to bless America.

ENCOURAGING CONGRESS TO CONTINUE TO FUND INTERNATIONAL CREDIT UNION DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, more than 85 million Americans are familiar with the benefits offered by credit unions of a safe place to save, a place to get a good deal on a consumer or home mortgage loan and solid advice on how to manage their families' financial affairs. However, not everyone in the world has the same advantage of being able to choose to save and borrow at a credit union as we do here in the U.S. The World Council of Credit Unions is working on USAID-funded projects on six continents to develop and strengthen credit unions in ten countries. Current development projects have already resulted in nearly three million credit union members who have saved $1.6 billion and received affordable loans up to $1.3 billion in a number of developing countries such as the Philippines, Romania, Ecuador, Guatemala, Poland, Uganda, Rwanda, Uzbekistan and Mexico.

I met recently with representatives from Mexico's two largest credit unions, Caja Popular Mexicana and Caja Libertad, men who spoke with me about how the World Council of Credit Unions, with funds from USAID and U.S. credit unions, has helped more than a million of Mexico's poorest citizens through access to the benefits of credit unions.

The World Council of Credit Unions, as part of the credit union system that includes the Credit Union National Association (CUNA) in the U.S. and its affiliated state credit union leagues, is working in partnership to close the gap between people of the world that ''have more'' with those who ''have less.'' Today, 1.1 billion people on the planet ''have more'' and 5.2 billion ''have less.'' By 2050, projections indicate that while the ''have more'' number will remain constant, those ''having less'' will rise to 7.8 billion people. This widening gap represents a security risk to the U.S. Credit unions can help alleviate this crisis.

The World Council of Credit Unions' Caja Popular Mexicana project is a $3.5 million four-year project funded by USAID's Office of Microenterprise Development. Since the project began in late 2001, membership in Caja Popular Mexicana has increased by more than 60 percent and loan delinquency decreased by nearly 70 percent, enabling more of Mexico's citizens to access the services of a safer credit union. The World Council of Credit Unions provides Caja Libertad in-house technical assistance to support the credit union's efforts to strengthen its operations, increase its outreach and better compete in the evolving Mexican financial market. Last year, Caja Libertad opened four rural microfinance branches to serve very poor women and strengthened its financial structure with increased provisions for delinquent loans.

Both of these credit unions are involved with the International Remittance Network (IRnet), an international remittance product developed by the World Council of Credit Unions. Caja Popular Mexicana began distributing remittances in August 2003 on a pilot basis and increased distribution to three hundred branches by November of last year. As of May 2004, more than fifteen thousand remittances totaling $6.6 million were distributed. The overwhelming majority of receivers are women, and most receivers are credit union members. Non-members are encouraged to consider taking advantage of the benefits of membership, and are joining at a rate of 5 percent per month. Caja Libertad is on target to begin distributing remittances through IRnet later this year.

Through IRnet, money is sent safely and affordably to friends and family members who use the remittances to pay for food, housing, education, to start new businesses and to save for the future. It is this last part that makes receiving international remittances at a safe and sound credit union so important. Receivers can safely and easily deposit a portion of the remittances into their credit union accounts. A new product being launched by one of these Mexican credit unions will mean a consistent remittance history is even basis for loan approval. Remittance distribution, through credit unions, is enabling the Mexican people to improve their financial standing exponentially.

I congratulate Caja Popular Mexicana and Caja Libertad for their successes in becoming safer credit unions reaching out to more of Mexico's poorest people, and thank them for traveling to the U.S. to share with my colleagues and me the importance of U.S. support of their projects. I encourage Congress, through USAID and other avenues, to continue to fund international credit union development projects that promote the credit union ideal of ''people helping people to help themselves,'' and encourage the World Council of Credit Unions to continue its important work of making credit union membership available throughout the world, especially to those in underdeveloped countries.

THE DEDICATION OF UNION CHURCH IN BERRIEN TOWNSHIP

HON. FRED UPTON

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the dedication of Union Church in Berrien Township, as a Michigan Historical Marker. This celebrated Church has stood and continues to stand as a symbol of faith, hope, and reverence. It is vitally important to preserve our nation's sense of history and ideals, and this marker will certainly maintain both for many years to come.

On July 4, 2004, one hundred and forty-six years after its construction, Union Church's long and illustrious history was honored as a Michigan Historical Marker. I am very pleased that the communities of Southwest Michigan and Berrien Township in particular, were able to come together for this wonderful occasion and historic achievement.

Because of the dedication of individuals within the Union Church Historical Preservation Society, Southwest Michigan and our country continue to be great places to live, work, and worship.

DELAWARE RIVER MAIN CHANNEL DREDGING

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to set the record straight on the issue of dredging in the Delaware River Main Channel. I fear that some of my colleagues have been misinformed as to the economic and environmental impacts of dredging in the Delaware River.

Mr. Speaker, Delaware River's regional ports handle approximately 58 million tons of cargo yearly. More than 54,000 jobs in the region are dependent upon the Port of Philadelphia alone. The ports in my district bring $3.5 billion into the regional economy, creating $1 billion in wages, and contributing $486 million in state and local revenues. Those effects are not just felt in my district, or in the City of Philadelphia, or even just in Pennsylvania. They are felt in suburban Philadelphia, and in our sister states, Delaware and New Jersey. This project is economically sound and a good use of the taxpayer's money. In February 2004, a supplement to the Comprehensive Economic Reanalysis Report identified $24.2 million in annual benefits and $21 million in annual costs, yielding a net benefit of $1.15 for every $1 spent on the project.

Shipping is a volatile industry, which is increasingly moving toward larger ships. Today's container ships can be more than 1,000 feet long and require at least 45-foot channel depth.

Ports in the United States and throughout the world have undertaken projects to deepen their channels in order to accommodate larger vessels. In order to remain competitive with other ports across the Eastern seaboard, the Delaware River's Main Channel must be deepened.

And, this project is not simply about jobs and the competitiveness of my region's ports. The dredging of the Delaware River main channel is vital to the nation's energy needs and to our ability to wage the war on terror.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Defense selected the Port of Philadelphia as a Strategic Seaport for the Northeast Corridor of the United States. Since that selection, material has been shipped from Philadelphia in support or our troops under fire. We must have a deep, clear channel in the event that larger vessels are required to meet DoD's needs.

Military logistics often rely heavily on commercial shipping and thus are impacted by industry trends toward larger vessel.

Three quarters of the East Coast's refinery capability is located in the Philadelphia region. Due to the Channel's shallow draft, oil tankers cannot reach the Port of Philadelphia and must off-load oil on to small ships through a process called ''lightering.'' This is environmentally hazardous. Every time oil is off-loaded, there is a real risk of a spill. By deepening the Delaware, oil tankers will be able to sail straight to port, cutting the chance of a spill.

And when some raise the specter of environmental damage due to dredging, I must point out that Several series of tests were conducted using EPA testing procedures which mixed and stirred Delaware River sediment with Delaware River water to approximate dredging, and no toxic releases were found. New York EPA Region 2, and Philadelphia EPA Region 3, have both independently analyzed the river sediment and found the claims of toxic sediment false. Furthermore, both Pennsylvania and New Jersey Departments of Environmental Protection have evaluated the sediment to be dredged and also found it to be not toxic.

It is true that the dredged sediment from the existing Delaware River maintenance project has been placed at Tamaqua, PA, as one of my friends has stated on the floor of this House. However, it was placed there at the request of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in order to prevent pollutants from entering streams from existing, unused mines. Mine reclamation is the reduction of acid mine drainage, which is the number one cause of stream degradation in PA. Before being used, the material was tested and passed inspection by the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protections. And we are safely using this material even now in my district. The City of Philadelphia is using these so-called spoils to reclaim unusable wet lands at our old Navy Yard and for pier reclamation. And we'll take even more in the future. So, let's put to rest this false rumor about Philly sludge being dumped up state or in New Jersey. We're taking our fair share.

Mr. Speaker, the Delaware River deepening project is important for my constituents, for our region and for the entire nation. I trust that, when they examine the facts about it, every one of my colleagues will join me in supporting it.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. DENISE L. MAJETTE

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Ms. MAJETTE. Mr. Speaker, on July 6, 2004 I was not able to be here for two rollcall votes.

On rollcall No. 326 regarding H. Con. Res. 326, recognizing the 25th anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the Republic of the Marshall Islands and recognizing the Marshall Islands as a staunch ally of the United States, committed to principles of democracy and freedom for the Pacific region and throughout the world, I would have voted ''yea.''

On rollcall No. 327 regarding H. Con. Res. 257, expressing the sense of Congress that the President should posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Harry W. Colmery, I would have voted ''yea.''

TRIBUTE TO SAXTON, PENNSYLVANIA AS IT CELEBRATES ITS 150TH BIRTHDAY

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate Saxton, Pennsylvania as it celebrates its 150th Birthday. As the largest community in the Broad Top Mountain region of South Central Pennsylvania, the town's emphasis on energy production has made it an instrumental factor in securing the scientific success of America.

In the last one hundred and fifty years industrialization has dictated the progression of this land. The vast opportunities for employment in coal mining, iron production, and railroad construction throughout the nineteenth century attracted an eclectic group of workers, who worked diligently to build the Huntingdon and Broad Top Mountain Railroad and the East Broad Top Mountain Railroad. Proving instrumental in transporting natural resources to keep the communities flourishing, the railroads served the area for one hundred years. Within the last fifty years, Saxton has displayed its versatility, making the transition from the old industries to a community reliant on tourism, logging and manufacturing.

Throughout its history, Saxton has continually been a critical asset to Pennsylvania. It not only contributed to the industrial advances that became vital to the region, but as the home of the Saxton Nuclear Experimental Corp., the town pioneered many experiments from which the people of the United States have profited.

Since its founding, the citizens of Saxton have remained loyal and committed to industry—the very roots upon which this community was founded. The rich history that has been told through the sweat and tears of Saxton's past inhabitants parallels the history of our nation. As you immerse yourselves in this celebration of Saxton's 150th Birthday, you are learning about the people and the events that formed the very foundation of the United States of America.

Happy Birthday Saxton, and best wishes for many more.

CONGRATULATING THE LIONS CLUB OF MAPLE SHADE, NEW JERSEY ON 60 YEARS OF SERVICE TO THEIR COMMUNITY

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to rise today in recognition of the Lion's Club of Maple Shade, New Jersey as they celebrate 60 years of service to the township. This coming Sunday, July 10th, will mark the 60th anniversary of this great organization, which has become an important institution of community service in the local neighborhoods of Southern New Jersey.

The International Association of Lions Clubs is the largest service organization in the world with over 1.4 million members in more than 43,000 clubs covering 182 countries and geographic areas. Lions Clubs are not social clubs, although there are social benefits to membership. Rather, Lions Club members give their time, skills and resources to raise funds for charitable giving both in their communities and internationally.

The first organized meeting of the Maple Shade Lions Club was held in the Congregational Church on April 18, 1944. Arthur N. Cutler acted as temporary Chairman of the meeting and was later elected as the first President of the Maple Shade Lions. Since its inception, the Lion Club of Maple Shade has sponsored three clubs in New Jersey: Moorestown in April 1948, Burlington in February 1949, and Levittown (now Willingboro) in May 1959.

The Maple Shade Lions Club regularly donates money, services and needed items to organizations and projects such as the Decker Liver Transplant Fund, the Guide Dog Foundation, Camp Happiness, Camp Marcella, Recording for the Blind, Association of Blind Athletes, Lions Eye Research Foundation, Delaware Valley Eye Bank, Eye Institute of New Jersey, and the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation. In addition, they provide walkers, canes, and wheelchairs, as well as free eye exams and glasses for individuals in need. The Lions also donate funds to the Maple Shade youth sports leagues and the local Boy and Girl Scouts.

The Lions Club of Maple Shade has a simple motto: ''We Serve.'' The individual members of the Lions Club pride themselves on the many contributions that they have made to their community, and the citizens of Maple Shade owe them a sincere debt of gratitude for their efforts. Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me in congratulating the Lions Club of Maple Shade, New Jersey on their 60 years of loyal service, and expressing appreciation for their continued efforts.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, July 8, 2004 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, July 8, 2004

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Reverend John M. O'Neill, Pastor, Our Lady of Good Counsel Catholic Church, Vienna, Virginia, offered the following prayer:

God our Father, praise and honor and glory and power forever. Praised be Your Holy Spirit.

Lord God, we come before You this day. Open our hearts and minds to Your words and Divine Will today and every day. Help us to learn Your desires for our lives. Encourage us, through the assistance of those here present, our representatives, to always follow Your lead and to avoid straying from Your compassionate love.

Guide us in our deliberations during this session of Congress and counsel us always to be Your faithful children.

We especially pray, Lord, that You guide the leaders of our Nation and extend Your loving protection to our men and women serving in our Armed Forces around the world, particularly in Afghanistan and Iraq. Grant us the peace which is the fruit of justice and charity, and may Your peace reign in our land and throughout the world. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. BURGESS led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

INTRODUCTION OF GUEST CHAPLAIN, FATHER JOHN M. O'NEILL

(Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Father John O'Neill for joining us as guest chaplain and offering this morning's prayer.

Father O'Neill is the outgoing pastor of Our Lady of Good Counsel Catholic church in Vienna, Virginia, where he has served for the past 12 years. Father O'Neill received his undergraduate degree and master's degree in psychology from Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. He completed his theological studies at de Sales School of Theology in Washington, D.C., and was ordained in June of 1973. Father O'Neill served as a guidance director/teacher at Bishop Ireton High School for 10 years and then served as the academic dean and teacher at Paul VI High School in Fairfax, Virginia, for 2 years.

Under his guidance as associate pastor and pastor, Our Lady of Good Counsel Catholic Church enriched the spiritual lives of its parishioners and the community around it.

Father O'Neill's contributions both in northern Virginia and throughout the Commonwealth have made him an invaluable spiritual leader for my constituents. As he moves on to his sabbatical in Rome, he will be dearly missed by all of us.

We thank him for offering today's prayer.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will receive 10 1-minute speeches on each side.

DO NOT IGNORE WESTERN SAHARA

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, the King of Morocco is in Washington to tout the newly signed U.S.-Morocco Free Trade Agreement. I am a free trader, but I have serious reservations about this plan.

Morocco today illegally occupies a country in West Africa known as Western Sahara. The King's government has promised people of Western Sahara, the Sahrawi, a vote to determine their own future. It has not happened, and it keeps delaying.

A decade after that promise, powerful friends help the Moroccan Government postpone this vote and consolidate control over the occupied territory. The Sahrawis are a peaceful, pro-Western and prodemocracy people. Despite living under an illegitimate colonial power, they have established a deep-rooted culture of democracy capable of supporting a viable state. They elect their own leaders, many of them women, provide education and equal rights to all of their citizens, men and women.

The only stability a sovereign democratic Western Sahara disrupts is a status quo defined by tyranny. We should keep that in mind when we vote on the trade agreement on the House floor.

TOBACCO FARMERS NEED THE PRESIDENT'S HELP

(Mr. ETHERIDGE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to call on the President to get off the sidelines and support the tobacco buyout once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, across the country families are feeling the economic squeeze of higher prices for gasoline, food, and college, record job losses, and an uncertain future. In my State of North Carolina and in other rural areas, tobacco farm families are hurting because of the implosion of the Depression-era quota system. Farmers desperately need a tobacco buyout, which this House has passed, but the President continues to fail to support our farm families.

Yesterday the President flew to Raleigh to raise money for his campaign. Although he collected $25,000 per plate in campaign funds, he failed yet again to stand up for our tobacco farmers and support the buyout.

Let me state clearly: JOHN KERRY supports the tobacco buyout and rural America. JOHN EDWARDS supports the tobacco buyout and rural America. Democrats and Republicans alike in this House and the other body are working together to get it done.

We need leadership for a change from the President of the United States for our small towns and rural communities.

THE EDWARDS AND KERRY LIBERAL AGENDA IS OUT OF TOUCH WITH AMERICA

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the most liberal Member of the Senate chose the fourth most liberal Member of the Senate to become his running mate for Presidency of the United States.

It is important for Americans to know the truth about JOHN EDWARDS' liberal voting record that is out of touch with the mainstream values of America. JOHN EDWARDS voted twice against President Bush's tax relief that has lifted the economy and helped create 1.5 million new jobs since August. JOHN EDWARDS voted twice against the new prescription drug benefit added to Medicare that will help seniors live longer at reduced cost. JOHN EDWARDS has voted against banning partial birth abortions. JOHN EDWARDS has said he is against the Defense of Marriage Act. JOHN EDWARDS has voted to cut billions from our military. JOHN EDWARDS has also voted six times against President Bush's plan for the new Department of Homeland Security.

JOHN EDWARDS is the same as JOHN KERRY, a liberal Senator that does not represent the mainstream values of America.

In conclusion, may God bless our troops, and we will never forget September 11.

THE BUSH-CHENEY ADMINISTRATION

(Mr. EMANUEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, some people like to make experience the issue for the Vice President of the United States of America.

Let me ask how much experience does it take to wave the banner ''Mission Accomplished'' and watch another 700 Americans lose their lives and not change their policy? How much experience does it take to watch 44 million Americans without health insurance and have no policy for universal care? How much experience does it take to watch college costs rise by 26 percent and not pass or have any legislation to alleviate the financial pain for middle-class families when it comes to afford college education for their children? How much experience does it take to watch $200 billion worth of retirement savings evaporate and not have a plan for retirement security? How much experience does it take to see household bankruptcies rise by over a third in this country and not have a plan to deal with household bankruptcy? How much experience does it take to watch health care costs rise by a third and not have a plan to deal with the uncontrollable health care inflation in this country?

I am not sure we can take this much experience from the Bush-Cheney administration for another 4 years.

THE TOYOTA PRIUS

(Mr. BURGESS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, Congress has been unable to pass an energy bill, an energy policy, that would allow us some measure of independence from foreign oil imports in this country. But a couple of weeks ago just before our break, we were treated to the exhibition of several cars that embrace the hybrid technology, the gas/electric technology, here on Capitol Hill. Many of us did not have the chance to get over and look at those.

But I just wanted to call attention to the 2004 Motor Trend Car of the Year, the Toyota Prius, and if I could quote from their article, that the Prius brilliantly, more than any other car, is a feature-packed and user-friendly gas/electric hybrid capable of delivering an astonishing 60 miles to the gallon in city driving. They go on to say that the all-new 2004 Prius is an altogether more compelling car than any other, that it is the first hybrid that any enthusiast could not only enjoy, but it provides a tantalizing preview of what the future of extreme fuel efficiency, ultralow emissions, and stirring performance where they will happily coexist in one package.

Mr. Speaker, this was truly a bipartisan technology. I understand that on the other side even the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) owns a Toyota.

ENRON

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, finally, finally Enron chief executive Kenneth Lay, or ''Ken Boy'' as the President affectionately called him, has been indicted and done the perp walk. He masterminded Enron, a corporation that built billions from millions in the Western United States while his employees gloated about sticking it to Grandma Milly. Every Oregonian is paying 40 percent more for their electricity because of manipulation of the market by Enron.

Now the President does not return Ken Boy's calls anymore despite his past generosity, but the President should do more. The President should return the $139,500 Ken Lay personally contributed to him, the $602,625 that Enron gave to President Bush. This is money stolen from Grandma Milly and other Western consumers, and the President should give it to a low-income energy assistance fund. It is tainted money. Let us put this chapter behind us, but let us have restitution, Mr. President.

SUPPORT AMENDMENT TO REDIRECT $20 MILLION FROM UNITED NATIONS

(Mr. SMITH of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there is going to be a short time for debate this afternoon. I am introducing an amendment today to take $20 million from the U.N. and redirect it to come up to what the President requested for NIST, for research in technology and science.

And I would just suggest to my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, that after the fall of Iraq, information has come to light about the United Nations' Oil for Food program and some of the apparent corruption. Now there is an unwillingness of several countries, including the United Nations itself, to not release the kind of information that is going to help us solve this scandal. The U.N., according to the Wall Street Journal, has kept hundreds of millions of dollars of Oil for Food money that should have gone to the Iraqi people. Now the United States taxpayers are paying that.

I hope my colleagues will support my amendment today.

A NEW PRESIDENTIAL TICKET FOR A NEW AMERICA

(Ms. KILPATRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, 3½ years ago when the Bush administration took over, our country had a $236 billion surplus. We also had created in the Clinton administration 22 million new jobs. Today we are in deficit. The deficit will be higher than it ever has been in the history of our country, nearly $500 billion. Today we are losing jobs to outsourcing. And what do the President's advisers say? Outsourcing is good.

President Bush was in Michigan yesterday. Did he talk about our economy, how we are going to save our jobs, how we are going to keep higher tuition from going up? A 26 percent increase in tuition. How are America's children going to learn and have the opportunities they must have?

Something is wrong with this ticket. We have a new ticket: Kerry-Edwards, a new America for new people, so children can prosper, so that our schools can be well, so that our health system can be back to what it ought to be.

I say to America, come on, get out. It is their turn, express their views. A new America for a new American family.

ATTORNEY GENERAL ASHCROFT AND HOMELAND SECURITY FUNDING

(Mr. SHAW asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor today for the fifth time to speak in protest of the unfair allocation of Urban Area Security Initiative grants from the Department of Homeland Security. Broward and Palm Beach Counties in my district have not received nearly enough, no, not nearly enough, of the funding they need to keep our families and our communities safe from terrorist threats.

Attorney General John Ashcroft issued a warning in south Florida on July 1 that the terrorists behind the deadly assaults on September 11 are between 75 and 90 percent complete with their plans for a major attack against the United States this year. Mr. Speaker, our region with its ports, airports and millions of visitors cannot be ruled out as a possible target or terrorist base of operation.

In my district we are very much aware of the area's vulnerability. We are at a high level of intensity in south Florida. Broward County and Palm Beach County must be designated as its own urban area so that we can receive the funding we need to enhance the security measures that will protect our families, our communities and critical infrastructure.

□ 1015

The City of Miami cannot be trusted to allocate these funds.

FORCING KEN LAY AND FRIENDS TO REPAY STOLEN FUNDS

(Ms. WATSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, today is the first good day that Grandma Millie has had in a long time. Disgraced former Enron chairman Ken Lay has surrendered to the authorities. This is an important milestone. Many Americans, including myself, worried that Lay's close ties to President Bush would permit him to go free. I am heartened that it appears those fears have been proven wrong.

But while Lay's arrest is an important step on the road to justice, justice will not be complete until the victims of Enron's crimes get back the money that Lay and his cronies stole from them. The full scale of Enron's greed is laid bare on recently released tapes, where Enron traders openly crow about stealing millions of dollars each day from Grandma Millie.

What a shame. My congressional district in Los Angeles is full of Grandma Millies, hard-working homeowners who pay their bills on time and in full. They deserve better than this.

I call upon all of us to join to force Ken Lay and his friends to repay the total amount of stolen money.

SUPPORTING SMALL BUSINESS WITH 7(a) LOANS

(Ms. BERKLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. BERKLEY. Mr. Speaker, small businesses are the economic engine of this country. My home State of Nevada is considered one of the most business-friendly States in the Nation. In fact, Nevada has the fastest growing number of women-owned small businesses in the country.

The Bush administration talks about the importance of our small businesses, yet the President's budget eliminated funding for the SBA's 7(a) loan program. Our entrepreneurs depend on these loans as the only source of affordable, long-term financing for their small businesses.

Yesterday, the House voted to restore the funding for this program. That sent a clear message to this administration that we will not tolerate this attempt to jeopardize the strength of the small business community.

Yesterday's vote was a vote for small businesses in Nevada and throughout the United States that depend on the SBA's 7(a) loan program to live their dream of owning a business, expanding their existing business, and hiring new workers.

It is time for new leadership in the White House. We need a President that not only talks about the importance of our small businesses, but follows up those words with action to fight for our small business community.

VALUES

(Mr. MCDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the administration likes to wrap itself in so-called middle-class values. Let us compare the rhetoric to the record.

This administration has gutted section 8 housing. America's most vulnerable citizens literally may be evicted from their homes as a result.

This administration has refused to extend unemployment benefits, even though the money is there to help America's economically disadvantaged.

This administration has rolled back environmental regulations, fouling the air we breathe and the water we drink.

This administration has lavished tax cuts on the rich, and crumbs on the middle-class.

This administration has underfunded education to such an extent that every child is left out, not just a few left behind.

This administration did such a good job of working with big drug companies that they were able to raise prices three times the rate of inflation before the prescription drug bill passed.

These are not middle-class values. Middle class values are common sense, common decency and the common good.

Middle-class values are going to return to the United States in 117 days.

Mr. Speaker, let the President know he ought to start packing. They are about to leave.

PRAISING SELECTION OF JOHN EDWARDS AS RUNNING MATE

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to praise JOHN KERRY's selection of Senator JOHN EDWARDS as his running mate.

For more than 2 decades, Senator EDWARDS has been fighting on behalf of the little guy against America's large corporate interests. JOHN KERRY picked the perfect running mate to complete a ticket that brings hope to middle-class Americans that their needs will no longer be ignored at the White House.

Senator EDWARDS talks movingly and effectively about two Americas. Over the past 3 years, the bridge between them has grown dramatically, thanks to failed policies pushed by the Bush administration that benefit only the privileged few. I am confident the Kerry/Edwards ticket will energize Americans to demand a change of course and support a new vision for America.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3598, MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 2004

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 706 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 706

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3598) to establish an interagency committee to coordinate Federal manufacturing research and development efforts in manufacturing, strengthen existing programs to assist manufacturing innovation and education, and expand outreach programs for small and medium-sized manufacturers, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. All points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute are waived. No amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BASS). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

(Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 706 is a structured rule that provides for the consideration of H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act of 2004. The rule provides 1 hour of general debate, evenly divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. The rule also provides a motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

This is a fair rule, one that provides for a coherent bill. The underlying legislation is the realized result of extensive discussions on a bipartisan level. It is very important that this legislation move forward and that it be sent to the President's desk in an effort to support and assist our small and medium businesses, especially in the manufacturing sectors.

H.R. 3598 reauthorizes the Manufacturing Extension Partnership, MEP, which continues to be a resounding success. The MEP is a network of not-for-profit centers that assist businesses in their daily operations. From plant management to technical assistance, the MEP continues to strengthen our manufacturers through hands-on assistance.

It only takes a cursory look at a survey in 2003 on MEP's success to realize the benefits. As a result of MEP's help over that year, companies created or retained over 35,000 jobs and invested nearly $1 billion in new technology, equipment and training. During that same period, sales for small and medium MEP-assisted companies rose by $1 billion.

Boasting a long list of success stories, this program received $106 million in the House version of the Commerce, Justice, State, Judiciary appropriations bill which is expected to pass the House later today.

The legislation expands on previous achievement by authorizing a new Collaborative Manufacturing Research Grants program at $40 million in fiscal year 2005. The additional funding will allow manufacturing and small business to focus on the new challenges that face their economic livelihood. As a result of the new grants, manufacturing companies will be able to join with groups such as not-for-profit organizations, research groups and universities to focus on technology changes. All of this research will be used to accelerate industry technology and continue strong viability.

Of the many important small business manufacturers that use these important grants, Hialeah Metal Spinning in my congressional district stands out to me. I meet frequently with Karla Aaron, the president and owner of Hialeah Metal Spinning, regarding important manufacturing issues in south Florida. Ms. Aaron has served on various local, professional and national boards, including the Board of Directors for the National Association of Manufacturers. This incredible company over which she presides, with only 14 employees, is one of the leading manufacturers of precision metal-formed parts.

Hialeah Metal Spinning could not be as successful without MEP assistance. These grants are used to move forward important employee training in a successful effort to stay on the leading edge of manufacturing technology. I was surprised to learn that these grants only pay part of select training sessions, which may range up to $150 per hour. However, constant training is essential to the manufacturing business, and the MEP assistance is extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill that helps all of our local manufacturers. We bring it forward under a fair rule to the floor.

I would like to thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for their leadership on this important issue. I urge all of my colleagues to support both the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, historically, manufacturing has been a major generator of good, high-skilled, well-paid jobs and remains a staple of local and State economies throughout the Nation. But manufacturing jobs are disappearing.

From January 2001 to January 2004, the United States lost 2.5 million manufacturing jobs. Manufacturing's decline and the shipping of manufacturing jobs to other countries threaten the livelihood of millions of America's working families.

In western New York, I have seen firsthand the devastation that occurs when communities lose their manufacturing base. Across my district, from Rochester to Buffalo, tens of thousands of high-paying manufacturing jobs have vanished and are vanishing in just the last few years, as companies have been driven out of business by cheaper foreign imports or have outsourced jobs abroad for cheaper labor. Buildings once home to booming businesses and factories now stand abandoned. In western New York and across the country, people are outraged; and they want their Congress to do something.

One small way the Federal Government can help is through the Manufacturing Extension Program. MEPs around the Nation work with small and medium-sized manufacturing businesses to utilize technology so that the companies improve and grow. Experts help train manufacturing employees, adopt better business practices, and take advantage of new technology.

For every Federal dollar spent on MEPs, the client manufacturing companies have benefited more than $8. That is, every $1 benefits by $8. In New York State, over 1,000 manufacturers have benefited from MEPs. In western New York alone, almost 6,000 small manufacturers have been helped.

Just recently, High Tech Rochester, an MEP provider, joined forces with the New York State Research and Development Authority, the Greater Rochester Enterprise, and the Rochester Institute of Technology in a collaborative effort focused on identifying, incubating, and creating renewable energy companies in western New York. These public-private partnerships are the key to revitalizing our economy and creating good manufacturing jobs.

Inexplicably, the Bush administration wanted to end the MEP program last year. As the economy hemorrhaged jobs, the administration proposed to slash this program that works by 60 percent for fiscal year 2004, threatening as many as 40 MEP centers across the country. I was proud to join my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. QUINN), to protest these ruinous cuts.

Reauthorizing the MEP program is one thing that we can do, but we should be doing more. Congress could require the Secretary of Commerce to develop a revitalization program for the electronic component sector. Such a plan would evaluate the potential impact on the domestic electronic component sector if all America's new weapons and security equipment purchased by the Departments of Defense and Homeland Security contain domestically manufactured electronic components like computer chips. This could bring new life into this manufacturing sector, resulting in good, new jobs for hard-working Americans.

I offered an amendment in the Committee on Rules to require the Commerce Secretary to develop a revitalization plan, but the Committee on Rules refused to allow it. I also offered an amendment expressing the sense of the Congress that the Federal Government can be a partner not only in research and development of new products, but also revitalization of key sectors of domestic manufacturing. The Federal Government can take proactive steps to help revive the domestic electronics component sector by adopting Federal procurement policies that promote or require the use of domestic-made goods. The Committee on Rules also refused to make this amendment in order.

The changes in our Federal procurement policies could reignite the lagging high-tech sector. Why in the world do we not want to do that? Why are we stopping here with very little, albeit important measures? The ripple effect of such policies would be enormous and would help domestic manufacturers to compete with foreign manufacturers in private sector activities. Such an initiative could create jobs in the manufacturing sector.

Mr. Speaker, it is a truth that for most workers in America who have lost good-paying jobs, the second job not only pays less salary, but fewer or no benefits. Consequently, the standard of living is falling in the United States. It is high time that the Congress began to debate that and have a better understanding of what we, the Congress, can do.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Science.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. It is a fair rule that will enable consideration of all of the amendments that are directly related to this bill.

The stated goal of every Member of this body is to try to help smaller manufacturers compete, and H.R. 3598 is designed to do just that. But H.R. 3598 will only result in real assistance to manufacturers if it gets signed into law. We want something more than press releases. We want something more than the satisfaction derived from doing something worthy in the House only to have it die elsewhere. We want this signed into law. This is a good bill that can get signed into law.

So what we asked the Committee on Rules to do was to craft a rule that would allow debate on all filed amendments directly related to the bill, and I emphasize that: filed amendments directly related to the bill; but only on those amendments, and that is what the Committee on Rules did. It rejected amendments from both Democrats and Republicans that were not directly related to authorizing manufacturing R&D programs run by the National Institute of Standards and Technology. Now, that seems like a reasonable approach.

We can save for another day, and I am sure that day will come, general debates about outsourcing or specific debates about programs that do not focus exclusively on manufacturing, like the Advanced Technology Program. Indeed, any Member truly interested in funding ATP could have offered an amendment to the Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies appropriations bill that we have been discussing on the floor this week. So this rule is not cutting off any House debate on broader issues that may impinge on manufacturing. There are other vehicles for that debate. The rule simply says that this important bill should not be encumbered by those debates.

I should add that we had very extensive debate on H.R. 3598 in committee. We seriously considered numerous amendments from the other side of the aisle, and we accepted one amendment as offered and two others in modified form. This bill already reflects an animated, but open-minded discussion. This bill has the fingerprints of Republicans and Democrats alike all over it.

Also, as my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON), graciously pointed out at the Committee on Rules yesterday, no one thinks that this is not a good bill. It is a good bill that is needed to ensure the continued health of the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program. We all ought to be doing everything we can to move it swiftly through this House in a form in which it can move through the other body and be signed by the President. This rule will ensure that nothing extraneous can hold up our aid to our manufacturers. That is our number one objective: aiding our manufacturers, while allowing full and open debate on matters within the borders of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule and of H.R. 3598.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON).

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, as I listened to my friend, the gentleman from Florida, present the Committee on Rules majority view on the MEP program, it just reconfirmed my belief in epiphany.

Let me remind my colleagues that the MEP program was a bill and a program that the President of the United States, President Bush, has tried to kill for the last 3 years, that the House appropriators and the majority last year produced no funding for. So we are making progress today. And I am glad to hear, as I say, my friend present the view of the Committee on Rules, and I hope it is the view of the majority of this Congress, that the MEP program is important. And then I listened to my friend who is the chairman of the committee, who does know that the MEP is good, and he has fought for it over the years, say, well, even though there are some other things that we might be able to do to help unemployment, let us wait. Let us not mess up this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to tell those 2 million Americans who have lost their jobs over the last 3 years to wait a little longer, to wait, and maybe we will get to some more progress later. I just do not think we can do that.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to House Resolution 706, the rule for consideration of H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technological Competitiveness Act. This rule does not allow for consideration of many excellent Democratic amendments that would improve this bill.

For example, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COSTELLO) offered an amendment in committee that would have required data collection, study, and policy responses to offshoring of American jobs. We need to understand how these trends are affecting our manufacturing and professional workforce. It is hard to imagine a more needed or a more nonpartisan provision that could help us work together in addressing the challenges of American manufacturing. How in the world can we be addressing a bill that deals with manufacturing and not think about offshoring, and not at least say, can we have a study to see what are the problems and how can we correct that? How in the world in common sense could we not be dealing with that kind of an amendment today?

The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL) offered an amendment in committee that would have improved the training of manufacturing technicians at our community colleges. We clearly need to be doing more to address technical training in an increasingly competitive international marketplace. How in the world can we be dealing with a manufacturing bill and not talk about how we can make our workers more productive?

The gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) offered an amendment in committee that would have funded the Advanced Technological Program at the Department of Commerce at current levels; asking for no additional funds, just let us keep this important program going. The ATP program should be an increasingly important factor in providing needed resources for the entrepreneurs who will create jobs and industries in the future in America. This is not a wish. We know ATP works. It has worked. It has created thousands of jobs all across this country. And there were a number of other worthy amendments that were not made in order as well.

So, Mr. Speaker, during the past 4 years, perhaps nothing has dominated the economic news more than the loss of manufacturing jobs and our manufacturing base. Each new report on job creation and job losses on offshoring and on our growing trade imbalance stimulates lots of hand-wringing and partisan sniping, but the reality is that Congress has done little to directly assist our manufacturing sector, especially our small and medium-sized manufacturing base.

H.R. 3598 provides us with the opportunity to show what Congress can do. The rule for this bill should have provided every Member of this body with the opportunity to offer his or her ideas on dealing with the manufacturing crisis. Surely to goodness we need more ideas, not less ideas, on how to keep jobs here in America. Instead, the rule before us today limits both the amendments that can be offered and the debate time that they can be afforded. It is as if the majority wants to make sure that this bill gets as little public attention as possible. This is not the way one of the most important issues of the day should be handled in this House.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we need more ideas on how to create jobs in this country, how to stop offshoring, not less ideas. For that reason, I encourage a no vote on this rule so that we can come back with an open rule that will allow us to bring all of the ideas to help get America back to work.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), a leader in this Congress who has consistently been working for improvement of technologies and in effect for strengthening the economy of the United States.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the rule to bring up H.R. 3598, my bill on manufacturing technology competitiveness. I believe this rule is fair and balanced.

The main goal of H.R. 3598 is to authorize manufacturing programs at the National Institute of Standards and Technology that help small and medium-sized manufacturers innovate so they can remain competitive in the global marketplace. One of these programs is the highly successful Manufacturing Extension Partnership program.

This program has roughly 60 centers and 400 satellite offices throughout the country. These centers provide small manufacturers with tools and assistance to increase productivity and efficiency. They do many things, and for one, they try to bring ideas from the laboratory down to the manufacturing floor. Another example, they might help to redesign a factory floor or help to train workers on how to use the latest technology or equipment. The net impact of these centers has been very beneficial on small to medium-sized businesses and is strongly supported by them as well as the National Association of Manufacturers.

The legislation also creates a collaborative grant pilot program to support research partnerships between academia, industry, nonprofits, and other entities to develop innovative technologies and solutions to scientific problems in manufacturing.

To truly help the manufacturers, we must have a bill that can be passed into law. Therefore, I want to keep this legislation focused on these specific programs that have strong bipartisan support. However, others have wanted to add extraneous provisions that, while well intentioned, take away from the focus of the bill. This is why I may oppose some of the amendments made in order, because I believe they will detract from the bill.

This rule largely helps ensure that the debate will remain on the manufacturing programs at NIST. I think that is fair and is in the best interests of our manufacturing community. I urge my colleagues to support this fair and balanced rule.

I would like to take a few minutes to respond to the ranking member of the Committee on Science for his statements a few minutes ago. I have no question that his intentions and the intentions of his colleagues are good. They are genuinely concerned about manufacturing and manufacturing jobs, just as I am. My concern is that it has taken considerable effort to negotiate this bill. They mentioned that several attempts have been made to kill the MEP program. I believe this bill now fully supports that program, and as written will also receive the support of the administration. I urge my colleague to support the rule and the bill.

I have no difficulty with the ATP program. I think that is something that also has to be revised and resurrected, and I will be working in the future to do precisely that. So I want to assure my colleagues that we are in accord on basic ideas, but we have a lot of work to do before we can proceed with the additional activities that they recommend. And I am certainly willing to help them and work with them as we try to do that in the future.

With that, I conclude by once again urging my colleagues to support this fair and balanced rule, and we hope they will also support the bill and bring it into effect.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COSTELLO).

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to the rule on H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act.

The Committee on Rules blocked consideration of several amendments offered by my colleagues on the House Committee on Science to this bill. This body should have the right to discuss and to debate every amendment offered, not only by the members of the Committee on Science but Members of this body.

One of the amendments that was blocked yesterday by the Committee on Rules was an amendment that I offered which would have required the Under Secretary of Commerce for Technology to do a study on the effects that offshoring manufacturing and professional positions is having and will have on the U.S. economy both now and in the future.

Every day more Americans watch their jobs being shipped overseas. Jobs are disappearing from every sector of the economy, from engineering to health care workers, forcing hundreds of thousands of families into unemployment and low-paying jobs.

Since 2000, we have lost 2.7 million manufacturing jobs, of which 500,000 jobs were in high-tech industries such as telecommunications and electronics. Since 2000, 632,000 jobs have disappeared in high-tech service industries. In 48 of the 50 States, jobs in higher-paying industries have been replaced with jobs in lower-paying industries since November of 2001. Between 2000 and 2003, the number of unemployed college graduates grew at a rate of almost 300 percent compared to 155 percent for workers with a high school degree or lower.

A March survey of 216 CFOs found that 27 percent plan to send more workers offshore in the coming year. Twenty-seven percent of 216 CFOs said that they intended to send more jobs offshore this year.

We currently are unable to assess the short- and long-term effects of the problem because we do not have sufficient or accurate data on the problem.

As I testified yesterday before the Committee on Rules, I pointed to the fact that the Wall Street Journal, The Washington Post, and Business Week all have had recent articles pointing to the fact that we lack the data to determine the effects of outsourcing.

Some would have us believe that outsourcing is good for our economy. Others would say that it is negative, and they have drawn their conclusion based upon insufficient data. Mr. Speaker, I intend to offer a motion to recommit, instructing the Committee on Science to report the bill back to the House with a provision requiring the Commerce Department to complete a study on the effects that outsourcing is having and how we can address this issue both in the short and long term.

The administration, the Congress, and the American people deserve to know the facts so that we can work to make business more competitive and create better-paying jobs here at home. Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the majority, both on the Committee on Science, in the Committee on Rules, and the majority on the floor that will be voting on this legislation either today or tomorrow would not want additional information concerning the problem of outsourcing.

We simply are saying give us an independent study, assess the problem, tell us where these jobs are going and why they are going offshore, and also what effects it not only is having on our economy today and the future but also on young people who are trying to determine right now what fields to enter in and major in in college. Where are their jobs going to be tomorrow? Where will they be 10 years down the road?

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the rule so that we can have an open debate on outsourcing and the other amendments that Members choose to offer.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to make sure any colleagues who are actually listening to the debate realize what we are talking about. The bill we are bringing to the floor extends the Manufacturing Extension Partnership, the MEP, which is a very important program that helps small business stay competitive, which trains workers who are employed by small businesses to retain their competitiveness and increase, obviously, their skills in new technologies. It is a very important program, and that is what we are bringing to the floor today.

A lot of things can be said, and some of them are even true, about macroeconomics and the reality of the world we live in. But what we are bringing forward to the floor today is a bill that extends an important program, and this MEP program is important to small businesses, especially to the manufacturing sector in this country. That is what we are bringing forward.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished ranking member, who I have just promoted, but, in any event, the leader of the Committee on Rules, for yielding me this time.

I start out that way because I hope someone is listening to this debate. I believe it is important to add clarification to my good friend from Florida and to be able to tell the American people and our colleagues what we are really talking about. I wish it were as simple and as sedate as he has so effectively made it seem, but that is not what we are speaking about, Mr. Speaker.

Frankly, we are talking about a very small and narrow representation by our good friends in the majority to answer an enormous and devastating problem that Americans are facing every single day, and that is the loss of manufacturing jobs and the toppling of America as a major economic force, as a singular economic force in this world. We are talking about an R&D bill when we should be talking about retooling the manufacturing infrastructure of America.

The reason why we should be doing that is because we have lost over 3 million jobs, and are continuing to do so. We gained only 112,000 jobs in the last month, when we need 150,000 to barely keep up.

This rule does not do what we asked our colleagues to do in the Committee on Rules, which was to create an open rule so that together, in a bipartisan way, we could focus on creating manufacturing jobs in America. Our distinguished colleague, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), talked about ''buy America,'' ensuring that industries here, American-based industries, stay here; and not selfishly denying our international posture, but making sure we make jobs and keep jobs in America.

Why would we not have the Costello amendment that simply asks a question about outsourcing, which is the major burnout of manufacturing jobs in America? The fact that we are outsourcing, along with other type of necessary skills gives us a gaping hole in the creation of jobs in America. Why would we not want to have education and training, when we have thousands upon thousands of college students coming out of school and possibly not being skilled in the necessary skills of jobs of today? Why would we not suggest that that helps to create a better trained population?

The Advanced Technology Program has helped us generate increased and cutting-edge technology. Why we would not want to have that amendment to really have a vigorous debate on creating manufacturing jobs, I just do not know.

I am offering an amendment to ensure that the MEP centers are not stopped and closed, and I would hope my colleagues would support those amendments that would increase the opportunity for the MEP centers to be in place.

Mr. Speaker, what I wanted today was a vigorous discussion on creating manufacturing jobs and keeping them in America. I am sad to say we have not reached that point with this rule. I hope my colleagues will see fit to not support a rule so that we can have an open rule and do what we are asked to do, bring jobs back to America.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished leader of the Committee on Rules for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to this rule. It makes in order only three of the 10 Democratic amendments offered.

The essence of the bill, as well as many of the amendments offered at the Committee on Rules, were derived from legislation I introduced last year, the American Manufacturing Works Act, a bill that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) cosponsored before introducing his own bill 4 months later.

It is said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, so I must say that I am flattered that so much of the bill we are considering today originated from my bill and from Democratic efforts. But the imitation and flattery stopped during the committee markup, during which it was made clear that amendments not acceptable to the administration would not be viewed favorably. This is despite the fact that the amendments being offered made good policy sense and were endorsed, in many cases, by manufacturing groups, such as the Modernization Forum, which presumably have some knowledge about what the manufacturing sector needs to regain its health.

So along with many others, I offered an amendment that was voted down in the committee. My amendment recognized that one of the most critical elements of our manufacturing competitiveness is to have a technically trained workforce. This amendment would have expanded the National Science Foundation's Advanced Technology Education Program to include the preparation of students for manufacturing jobs.

Now, apparently, the Committee on Rules determined, as the Committee on Science majority already did, that providing training for our workforce is not important. The Committee on Rules also determined that we do not need a study assessing trends related to outsourcing and that we do not need to authorize the Advanced Technology Program, a program that the chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), and subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), support and that they recommended in testimony before the Appropriations Subcommittee be funded at $169 million.

The committee's decision, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, seems shortsighted, especially since the manufacturing sector is still suffering. In fact, 11,000 manufacturing jobs were lost last month, for a total of 2.7 million jobs lost over the last 3 years.

Mr. Speaker, as I conclude, it is obvious this rule does not give Members an opportunity to improve the bill. It seems like the majority is more interested in getting the bill's provisions right in order to meet the administration's requirements than they are interested in getting the bill right. So for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this rule and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EMANUEL).

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend from upstate New York for yielding me this time, and I rise in strong opposition to this rule because I had offered an amendment that was to literally add President Bush's own legislative initiative, the Jobs for the 21st Century Initiative.

On April 5, President Bush, finally realizing that we had a crisis in America of a loss of manufacturing jobs, offered the Jobs Initiative For the 21st Century. That was on April 5, just a short time ago. He said, and let me quote President Bush, ''We are not training enough people to fill the jobs for the 21st century. There is a skills gap. And if we do not adjust quickly, if we do not use our community colleges, we will have a shortage of skilled workers in the decades to come.''

Now, this is a rare moment of bipartisanship on my side. I agreed with the President, and I thought he was right. Now, what happened? You all craft a piece of legislation, and showing a total disrespect for President Bush, you did not include his own initiative on manufacturing jobs.

So I picked up the mantle, and I offered his amendment, his concept, his ideas that he put together; and the Committee on Rules did not think it was worthy of being included. It may not be. Maybe President Bush is not that smart when it comes to manufacturing jobs. He did lose 2.7 million manufacturing jobs under his watch.

The other side of the aisle, when they drafted the legislation, did not include it. There was an amendment offered by a Democrat, and they did not include that amendment. I cannot think of anything more disrespectful to the President than what the majority has done by not including his ideas, his concepts of how to prepare American workers for the 21st century.

Mr. Speaker, they left it on the editing floor. I gave them an opportunity, and they chose partisanship and politics over the skills of American workers for the 21st century.

However, I took a step back and thought about it. It makes total sense to me now that I think about it, because, in fact, the program that we are authorizing, the manufacturing extension program, President Bush has tried to eliminate every year in his budget. As a matter of fact, just a short time ago in his economic plan, his economic advisers said flipping hamburgers should be redefined as a manufacturing job. No disrespect to our hamburger flippers in America, McDonald's and Wendy's and Burger King, they work and do a good job; and we are outperforming Japan and Germany and China in the hamburger-flipping business.

But when this administration has an economic strategy that defines hamburger flipping as a manufacturing job, that literally tries to eliminate the manufacturing extension program year after year, and now in their moment of shame, after 3½ years of being the stewardship of lost jobs, they try to act in this holy picture that they are doing something, not one Republican had the common sense or decency or courtesy to include the President's own plan. And I tried to do it and was shown total disrespect.

Mr. Speaker, the President was not even up here, nor were the President's lobbyists up here, trying to get his initiative included. There is a reason we have lost 2.7 million jobs in manufacturing, because the other side of the aisle does not have a strategy for it and does not give a whit for it.

Mr. Speaker, I will probably in the end vote for the bill because there are some good things in here, but what has become clear to all of us is the President and this Congress run by Republicans do not care about 21st century jobs and the technical skills and the training that is required to fill those jobs.

As the President said, we can add and train an additional 100,000 workers each year, but what did the other side of the aisle do? They left those 100,000 workers and their skills on the editing floor.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON).

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I think we all recognize that we are in a manufacturing crisis right now, and it is going to impact the quality of life and the standard of living not only for our generation, but for my little girl's generation and for my grandchildren's generation. We have a crisis. By all accounts, a major portion of that problem is around outsourcing and offshoring of jobs. I have always understood that we cannot solve a problem until we better understand the problem.

We had an opportunity today to try to do something about understanding that problem. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COSTELLO) had an excellent amendment that would help us understand it, and I would like to have the gentleman explain to us how we are going to try to understand this problem of outsourcing.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, let me first say I was utterly amazed in the Committee on Science when I offered my amendment. I thought it would be noncontroversial. We had a number of amendments that there may have been some controversy and debate back and forth on, but I thought offering an amendment that would require an independent study of our government to address one of the major problems in the United States today, the loss of manufacturing and other high-tech jobs offshore, certainly would be acceptable to both sides of the aisle.

Mr. GORDON. It was just a study?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, it was exactly that. It calls for a study. It would mandate a study. The Secretary of Commerce would be required within 60 days after the President signed this legislation, he would be required to enter into a contract either with the RAND Corporation or any other credible company to do an independent study, report back within a year, and at the conclusion of the year, the Secretary of Commerce would have 4 months to put together his recommendation based upon the results of that study and make recommendations to the Congress.

So that is why I was amazed and again amazed yesterday at the Committee on Rules. We are asking simply to study the problem, identify how many jobs have been lost in what sectors, what does the future look like as far as outsourcing is concerned, and then take action. Members are talking about the number of jobs we are losing overseas, but no one is taking action. With this study the administration would have a blueprint and a plan as to what needs to be done.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman, did any Republicans on the Committee on Science vote for the amendment? Did they vote against it?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman, yes, they did. It was a partisan vote right down the line. The Democrats supported it, and the Republicans opposed it. I was told at the time the reason the Republicans opposed it was because of process; they were concerned about jurisdiction and that other committees would claim jurisdiction. And, of course, we have dealt with that problem before by exchanging letters.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I would point out that now we are on the House floor, and so there is no jurisdictional problem.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, there is no jurisdictional problem on the House floor, and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) made that point very clearly to the Committee on Rules, that if they allowed this amendment in order today, there would be no jurisdictional problem.

I frankly believe if this amendment had been allowed in order and debated, I cannot see how any Member of this House would vote against an independent study addressing the major problem that we have in this country of outsourcing jobs.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, we are getting ready to vote on this rule, and if we vote for this rule, any Member who votes for this rule is voting not to allow us to have the opportunity to have a study on outsourcing?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I would tell the gentleman that any Member who votes for this rule, in my opinion, is voting for the status quo, to take no action whatsoever to try to determine, to try to collect the data and determine what is going on with the offshoring of jobs and how to address the problem.

Mr. GORDON. But, Mr. Speaker, if we vote against this rule, we can turn right around and come back and have a vote not only on trying to find out better the problems of outsourcing, but allow any Member who has a good idea about trying to improve and increase our manufacturing base in this country, to allow them to bring it to the floor and try to improve this situation; is that correct?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct. If we defeat the rule, we can come back and debate the issue of outsourcing. I have to believe there are a number of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle who will vote against this rule in order to move forward with the study so we can gather the data and come up with a blueprint to address this problem.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act of 2004.

I find it very important that we address manufacturing technology competitiveness at a time when over 8.2 million Americans are without employment and over 10 percent of African Americans are currently jobless.

Today the American economy is facing challenges unlike any that it has ever faced before. The sector most drastically affected by this decline is the manufacturing industry. Historically, the manufacturing sector has been a pillar of the American economy. Without a strong manufacturing base, we will not have a strong economic recovery. Not only is manufacturing a key source of skilled, high-paying jobs, but it also is critical to our economic and national security that we have the ability to manufacture goods we need in this country.

In my home State of Texas, more than 156,000 jobs have been lost since January 2001. The manufacturing unemployment rate continued to rise last month.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill was marked up in the committee, the vast majority of the suggestions from this side of the aisle were dismissed. The markup was uncommonly partisan. No matter how good the amendment was, and there were many amendments spoken about as being good, but no support.

So as we debate this bill on the House floor today, I am hopeful we can reach constructive consensus on many of the amendments being offered today, and I do ask that as many Members as possible join me in voting against the rule.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Texas for her remarks.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, as a student of representative democracy, I continue to be amazed at the imagination demonstrated by our friends on the other side of the aisle. They talk about problems and talk about problems; we bring forth solutions.

Today we bring forth with this rule legislation that will authorize $160 million for the manufacturing sector of our economy for training of workers in small businesses in the manufacturing field to retain their competitive edge in technology. We bring forth solutions. We have to deal with things. When in the majority, we have to deal with things like whether amendments are germane and other technical matters, which sometimes may seem too technical, but they are important.

So it is nice to engage in theoretical debate, even about very important problems, like we have seen today. I maintain that it is even nicer to bring forth solutions for the problems of the people of this country. We have done that with this rule. We bring forth a very important piece of legislation. The $160 million for the manufacturing sector for training is critical at this time to retain jobs in this country. It is not theory, it is reality.

So I would ask all of our colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to support not only the very important underlying legislation, but the rule that will make possible the consideration by this House of this very important underlying legislation in order to help the manufacturing sector of our economy which is so important.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). The question is the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4755, LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 707 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 707

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4755) making appropriations for the Legislative Branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. The bill shall be considered as read. Points of order against provisions in the bill for failure to comply with clause 2 of rule XXI are waived. No amendment to the bill shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 707 is a structured rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 4755, the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act of 2005. It is a fair and appropriate rule and should be approved by the House so we can move on to consideration of the underlying legislation.

H. Res. 707 provides 1 hour of general debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. The resolution waives all points of order against consideration of the bill. It also provides that the bill shall be considered as read.

H. Res. 707 waives points of order against provisions in the bill for failure to comply with clause 2 of rule 21, which prohibits unauthorized appropriations or legislative provisions in an appropriations bill.

The rule makes in order only those amendments put in the Committee on Rules report accompanying this resolution. H. Res. 707 provides that the amendments printed in the report may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. The rule waives all points of order against the amendments printed in the report.

Finally, H. Res. 707 provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my friend and colleague from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON), the chairman of the subcommittee. He has worked very closely with his ranking minority member, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN of Virginia), in crafting this bill, and for that he deserves our support. This appropriations bill is one of the more challenging bills to manage, and he does so with respect to the institution in which we all serve.

I do want to specifically note that this is a fiscally responsible bill, and I commend the gentleman from Georgia's (Chairman KINGSTON) management oversight that will certainly ensure that organizational changes are managed better within the agencies of the legislative branch of government.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for a fair amendment process for consideration of the legislative branch appropriations bill. I urge my colleagues to support the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I was shocked to learn that House committee was sending mail into the committee members' districts. During yesterday's Committee on Rules hearing on the appropriations bill for the legislative branch, we learned that the Committee on Resources is sending mail to committee members' districts touting the individual Member's accomplishments on that committee. Mailed under the chairman's frank, these laudatory mail pieces are sent out as Committee on Resources reports.

But listen to what they say: ''Members of Arizona's congressional delegation are making a difference for Arizonans every day through their work on the House Committee on Resources. Arizona is fortunate to have Congressmen RICK RENZI, J.D. HAYWORTH, JEFF FLAKE and RAÚL GRIJALVA on these important issues.''

It goes on to read, ''Committee members RENZI, HAYWORTH and FLAKE supported the Healthy Forest Restoration Act, which provides resource managers with the tools they need to combat the dangers of overstocked forests.''

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have four of these committee mailings submitted for the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

The committee mailings are as follows:

RESOURCES COMMITTEE FIELD HEARING

What is the impact of the Endangered Species Act on southeast New Mexico? It's your chance to learn more.

What: Examining the Impacts of the Endangered Species Act on Southern New Mexico.

When: Monday, June 7th, 2004 at 9 a.m.

Where: Pecos River Village, Carousel Building, 701 Muscatel Avenue, Carlsbad, New Mexico.

Learn About the Impact of the Endangered Species Act on Southeast New Mexico.

Congressman Steve Pearce Represents the 2nd District of New Mexico. After a very successful hearing on the impact of the endangered silvery minnow last year in Belen, NM, Congressman Steve Pearce has asked the Resources Committee to learn about the impact of endangered species legislation on jobs and lifestyle in southeast New Mexico.

Congressman Pombo is Chairman of the House Resources Committee. Join Congressman Pearce and Congressman Pombo in Carlsbad on June 7th where they will hear first-hand from family farmers, ranchers, irrigation providers, oil and gas producers and local governments about how the Endangered Species Act has brought pain and suffering to their communities and families. The Resources Committee welcomes the opportunity to travel to New Mexico to personally visit with people who are directly affected by this outdated, onerous and unreasonable policy.

RESOURCES COMMITTEE REPORT ON HEALTHY FORESTS RESTORATION ACT

America's National Forests have become unnaturally dense, diseased, and insect infested, leaving them incredibly susceptible to catastrophic wildfire. To date, wildfires have burned over three million acres in the United States in 2003. These fires not only destroy forests, they kill wildlife and pollute air and water alike.

California has had more than its fair share of wildfire disasters. The House Resources Committee and its members are committed to protecting our environment from the devastating effects of catastrophic forest fires.

This report is meant to update you on what the Resources Committee and your California Representatives are working on to help keep our forests healthy and keep fires from destroying forests, property, and jobs.

RICHARD POMBO,
House Resources Committee Chairman.

''The Resources Committee and its members are charged with the responsibility of coordinating federal efforts to encourage, enhance and improve programs for the protection of the environment and the conservation of natural resources within our Public Forest areas. I am honored to have such dedicated and knowledgeable committee members to work with as we work to balance resource preservation and usage. I am particularly honored to work with California Congressmen in efforts to prevent further forest fires from devastating California's incredible resources and beauty. Together we will continue to work on the issues affecting California and the West.''—Richard Pombo

RESOURCES COMMITTEE WORK VALUABLE TO CALIFORNIA

Members of California's Congressional Delegation are making a difference for Californians every day through their work on the House Resources Committee. The Resources Committee deals with issues such as wildfire prevention, water rights, environmental protection, and land use. California is fortunate to have so many able men and women on this committee to work on these important issues.

CALIFORNIA CONGRESSMEN HELP PASS ''HEALTHY FORESTS RESTORATION ACT''

Committee Members Baca, Miller, Cardoza, Radanovich, Dooley, Nunes, Gallegly and

Calvert supported this bill, which provides resource managers with the tools they need to combat the dangers of overstocked forests.

The ''Healthy Forests Restoration Act'' establishes streamlined procedures to increase use of scientifically-proven management techniques of thinning and prescribed burning to avoid catastrophes to our forests, homes and water supply.

Additionally, the Act calls for additional open public meetings on all projects that fall under the Healthy Forests legislation, providing an opportunity for public input over-and-beyond current public hearing requirements.

And this landmark legislation makes for better forest management and helps protect communities from the dangers of uncontrolled wildfires.

It protects the rights of private landowners.

RESOURCES COMMITTEE REPORT ON ENDANGERED SPECIES ACT REFORM

As you may know, the application of the Endangered Species Act (ESA) has caused economic hardship and to farmers, ranchers, small businesses, and individuals—and it has done little to actually protect endangered species of animals.

The law has become more powerful than Congress ever intended it to be. It has been applied across millions of acres and hundreds of miles of waterways, at a cost of billions of dollars. We can improve this law—limiting unwarranted impacts—if we define the scientific standard federal agencies must meet when making ESA decisions.

This report is meant to update you on what the Resources Committee and your Arizona Representatives are working on to ensure that improper application of the Endangered Species Act will never threaten the economic security of Arizona and its people.

RICHARD POMBO,
House Resources Committee Chairman.

''Congress' efforts to improve the ESA stems from an April 2001 decision by the Federal government to shut off irrigation water to nearly 1,200 farmers and ranchers in the Klamath Basin in California in order to protect several species of endangered fish. This decision was later examined by a panel of the National Academy of Sciences (NAS), which found that the order to shut off the water had 'no sound scientific basis.' As a result of this decision—with 'no sound scientific basis'—the livelihoods of hundreds of farmers and ranchers in the area were destroyed, and the local economy and community was severely harmed. Your Arizona Representatives are working in Congress to reform the ESA to prevent this type of devastation from ever occurring in Arizona.''—Richard Pombo

RESOURCES COMMITTEE WORK VALUABLE TO ARIZONA

Members of Arizona's Congressional Delegation are making a difference for Arizonans every day through their work on the House Resources Committee. The Resources Committee deals with issues such as wildfire prevention, water rights, environmental protection, and land use. Arizona is fortunate to have Congressmen Rick Renzi, J.D. Hayworth, Jeff Flake, and Raul Grijalva working on these important issues.

RESOURCES COMMITTEE WORKING TO ENACT ESA REFORMS

Congressmen Renzi, Hayworth and Flake are co-sponsors of H.R. 1662, ''The Sound Science for Endangered Species Act Planning Act,'' to improve the way the law uses science and to further involve the public.

- Requires peer-reviewed science as basis for ESA decisions.
- Creates an independent process to amend the ESA to make certain that all aspects of science in the implementation of that act are sound and peer-reviewed.
- Establishes a mandatory independent scientific review requirement for all ESA listing and de-listing proposals to ensure the use of sound science and provide a mechanism for resolving scientific disputes during the rulemaking process.
- Requires the Secretary of the Interior to solicit and obtain additional data from landowners and others that would assist in the development of recovery plans, including the recovery goals.
- Requires that an action, including an action for injunctive relief, to enforce the prohibition against the incidental taking of a species must be based on pertinent evidence using scientifically valid principles.

RESOURCES COMMITTEE WORK FOCUSES ON SOUTHWEST'S FORESTS

Congressman Renzi introduced the Southwest Forest Health and Wildfire Prevention Act of 2003 to promote the use of adaptive ecosystem management to reduce the risk of wildfires and restore the health of fire-adapted forest and woodland ecosystems. Resources Committee member J.D. Hayworth is a co-sponsor of this bill, along with Arizona Representative Jim Kolbe. The Resources Committee passed the act this summer helping solidify the future of Northern Arizona University's Ecological Restoration Institute.

This is an important first step toward the future application of practical science-based forest restoration treatments that will reduce the risk of severe wildlife and improve the health of dry forest and woodland ecosystems across the country.

Mr. Speaker, this is an outrage that I think the Members of the House simply do not know anything about. That committee received a large increase in funding last year in order to send out this propaganda into Members' districts. I have heard of income protection, but this goes way too far. There is no excuse in the world for it, and I think we ought to take measures to stop it.

During the 107th and 108th Congress, most communities requested franking allocations somewhere between $10,000 and $30,000, and most spent far less than those allocations.

For example, the Committee on Government Reform franking allocation was $35,000. They spent less than 10,000. Not counting the Committee on Resources, the largest request in Congress was the Committee on the Judiciary, which asked for $80,000 for franking. However, the Committee on Resources requested a franking allocation of $500,000, half a million. It is more than a 10,000 percent increase over the amount of the money that the Committee on Resources actually spent on franking in the 107th Congress. What is even more shocking is that the House rules do not prohibit a committee from sending out this propaganda with taxpayer dollars.

The gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) offered an amendment to close this loophole to stop this practice. The amendment would limit mailing expenses for any committee to $25,000, which is more than generous. On a party-line vote, the Committee on Rules refused to make the sensible solution in order, and it is troubling that this problem has slipped under the radar for a year and a half and that the Committee on Rules refused to allow the full House to discuss the issue and vote up or down on this straightforward amendment. Debate on this serious problem has been quashed with a soft promise of future action.

Again and again, the Republicans silence the Democrats and the voices of millions of Americans. There is little time left on the legislative calendar. This problem deserves immediate attention. It is shocking in that this body will not even have the opportunity to debate the problem and to consider the solution of the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

This cries out for attention from this Congress, and I demand it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to note that we did have this discussion in the Committee on Rules about the printing yesterday. It just came up yesterday for the Republicans being criticized forever for rushing things to the floor. This seems a bit quick for the Democrats to do so. None of us on the Committee on Rules, Republican side, have seen that yet, but the committee of jurisdiction is actually the Committee on House Administration, and I think it would be appropriate to let the authorizing committee have a shot at this to take a look at the problem before we move to address it on the House floor in an appropriations bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, we need to defeat this rule so that I can offer an amendment to simply say that no committee in any year can spend more than $25,000 on just postage. That would be $50,000 a Congress. Why would such a limit be needed? Why is the $25,000 limit needed? After all, in the year 2002, the average committee spent only $2,104 on postage. The largest amount spent by any committee during the 107th Congress on an annualized basis was $6,807.

I know the gentlewoman from New York cited the amounts requested by committees. They requested a bit more than these figures. But when we look at what they actually spent, no committee needed to spend in the average year more than $6,807 in the 107th Congress.

But a new phenomenon has arisen. The Committee on Resources has decided it needs more resources. In the 107th Congress it spent $2,483 per year on postage. For the 108th Congress they requested a quarter million dollars per year for postage; $500,000, half a million dollars, for the whole 108th Congress.

Think of this from a fiscal responsibility standpoint. That is a 4,445 percent increase over what they requested before. Maybe that is not too bad. After all, 4,445 percent increase in the cost of a government agency, no fiscally responsible person would object to that. But do not compare it to what they requested last Congress. Compare it to what they actually spent. Then it is a 9,968 percent increase. Maybe somebody with some fiscal conservatism would be concerned about that, a committee which in the last Congress spent $2,483 on postage now wants to spend $250,000 on postage.

We do not know what they are spending all this money for. It is hard to get the information. But we do know that last quarter, just in 3 months, the committee spent $49,587 on postage, and when they spend money on postage, they inevitably have to spend money on printing, and, yes, they spent $40,732 on printing.

What did they use the money for? Not to carry on committee business in the sense of telling the press what the committee is doing, writing to experts to see if they can gather information. This is not individually sent-out letters, no. These were mass mailings into individual Members' districts, $250,000 per year. What kind of mailings went out? Here is an example that was referred to by the gentlewoman from New York. We will see that this mailing went out to Arizona. Our information is that it went it to the gentleman from Arizona's (Mr. RENZI) district, who happens to be one of the most targeted Members in the entire Congress by one political party. It praises three Members of the Arizona delegation for cosponsoring a bill, and if we read it very carefully, it attacks or implicitly criticizes a fourth Member of the Arizona delegation for not cosponsoring this bill. I might add it is a terrible bill, but the mailing praises those who cosponsor it. Our information is that it went just to the gentleman from Arizona's (Mr. RENZI) district; so the fact that it implicitly criticizes the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. GRIJALVA) is not of great significance unless he has statewide ambitions I am unaware of.

In any case, what does this mailing do? It lauds a Member. Some of these mailings are going out in violation or possible violation of the blackout period. So we are used to not sending out mailings 90 days before an election. Apparently the committee chairmen can. This mailing seems rather benign in that it lauds a Member, and it does so only on one issue.

Mark my words: If we do not draw the line now, the next piece will be a hit piece, and it will not be limited to one issue. It will not even be limited to a committee's jurisdiction. It will be an attack piece sent out a day or a week before an election.

How is this all different from the Member communications that we are aware of? Because many of us send mail to our constituents. First, a Member gets a limited Members' representational allowance. We are responsible to our districts, to the recipients of that mail. If the mail is informative, then I can tell my constituents we sent them informative mail that came out of our budget, which we could otherwise have used to hire personnel. But a committee chairman is not responsible to the people who receive the mailing, so they could look at it and say this is wildly uninformative. It is a terrible waste of money. It says it was paid for at taxpayer expense. I do not like it, but it does not matter because my Member did not send it. It comes out of the budget of some Washington committee.

Second, the MRA funds are at least distributed relatively equally by party. Each Member gets their own account. This $500,000 went solely to one political party. And it is not just $500,000. If we do not draw the line now, it will be 5 million, it will be 25 million. It will not be one committee; it will be every committee.

Members also know what information their constituents need to receive. Committee chairmen, with all due respect to the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO), I do not think he is an expert at what information people in the gentleman from Arizona's (Mr. RENZI) district need to hear. Then we are going to be told that these are to announce field hearings. I might add this piece of mail has nothing to do with any field hearing. But we could have a rule that we have these slush funds, but only if we are announcing a field hearing.

□ 1130

A field hearing should be a field hearing, not an excuse for propaganda, not a district-wide town hall on behalf of an endangered Member or a targeted Member.

Finally, I know here in Washington that our targeted watchdog groups publish lists. They criticize those who spend money on postage and printing. They wonder whether that is a good use of government resources.

Well, wait a minute. None of these groups caught this. They will attack a Member for spending $100,000 on postage. How about $250,000 on postage?

We need to do something about it, and we need to do something about it today. If you vote for this rule, you are voting for giant political slush funds, not just of half a million dollars, but for as large as they are done by whichever party controls this House. You cannot say you are going to deal with it tomorrow if you vote against dealing with it today. Vote against the rule.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the gentleman came very close to impugning the motives of the chairman and the actions of the committee. I would just suggest that he tread a bit more lightly on that.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, all I can say in response to the last comment is if the committees adhere more closely to the spirit of the rules of the House, maybe we will not tread so closely in questioning their motives.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to vote for this bill, and I am not going to vote for it for two reasons.

Number one, we have the continued saga of that ridiculous hole out in front of the Capitol, the Capitol Visitors Center. You remember back in the good old days when we had a budget surplus, and then we were told by the Republican majority that we could pass $6 trillion in tax cuts and still have money left over? Now we have dug ourselves into a huge deficit hole again, the biggest deficit in the history of the country. That hole in front of the Capitol, created for the construction of the so-called visitors center, really, in my view, is a symbol of what we have done to the Nation as a whole. We have dug a huge hole for the Nation.

In this case, in the case of the visitors center, you have an addition to the Capitol which started out to cost about a quarter of a billion dollars; it is now up to half a billion dollars. And the completion date, I would bet you, before it is over, will slip to sometime in 2007. I just continue to think it is a ridiculous, overblown use of taxpayers money.

But there is something else in this bill that really bugs me. I happen to believe that the number one national disgrace in this country is the fact that some 44 million people are struggling every day without health care coverage. There is a provision in this bill which enables a study to go forward to see whether or not we will add supplemental health and dental benefits for Members of Congress under our health care plan.

Now, I happen to believe that congressional employees should have dental coverage, and I think that Members of Congress should have dental coverage. But I also think that every citizen of this country ought to have access to health care and ought to have decent dental coverage.

We just marked up the Labor-Health-Education appropriations bill; and in contrast to the consideration that we are going to give Members of Congress about adding new health care benefits, what did the committee do this morning with respect to health care benefits for the rest of Americans?

I will tell you: the chairman's mark on the Labor-Health-Education bill today entirely terminates the Community Access Program, which is the glue that makes health delivery to the poor work in 70 communities in this country.

The chairman's mark cut several other programs. It cuts Rural Health Outreach grants, which support primary health care, dental care and mental health and telemedicine projects. It cuts those projects by 24 percent.

The Maternal and Child Health Care block grant is only 2.9 percent above the fiscal 2001 level, which means that we have a 10 percent loss of purchasing power for that program for average Americans.

Then, if you go on, you see that childhood immunization, the cost to immunize a child has gone up by 24 percent since 2001. Appropriations have increased by only 15 percent. So we are having a growing gap in terms of our ability to immunize children in this country.

So it just seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is a substantial gap between what we are willing to consider doing for the average American when it comes to health care and what we are willing to consider doing for Members of Congress.

I do not want to vote to deny health care coverage of any kind to anybody, but I want to say this to the majority in this House: if you vote for this legislative appropriations bill today, by God, do not dare to bring out an expansion of health care benefits for Members of Congress until you have also brought out legislation to this floor that covers health care for every American. And make sure that those Americans have the same kind of coverage, including dental care, that you would like to see for the average Member of Congress. Unless you do that, you will be giving hypocrisy a bad name.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I feel certain that the gentleman was not referring specifically to me, because I do not have Federal health insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that I plan to vote for this bill, but there is no way I can support this rule.

There were a total of eight amendments submitted. There were seven by Democrats, one by a Republican. The one by the Republican was allowed. Only one out of the seven submitted by Democrats was allowed.

A lot of them had no political overtones whatsoever. What is wrong, for example, with studying ways to improve and expand day care services on the Hill for our employees? That is hardly political. The only thing I can imagine is wrong is that a Member of the majority did not think of it; and I am sure if they had, it would have been made in order. But that should have been allowed, to study it.

Now, I acknowledge that at least four of the amendments have some political overtones, and I can appreciate the embarrassment that Members of the majority must experience when their legislative actions stretch the bounds of proper rules and procedures of the House.

How long, I think we know how long, what, 3 hours we kept that vote open on Medicare prescription drugs. We have subsequently read about all of the promises and the threats that were thrown back and forth to change the result, successfully, I might add.

Then, on a separate issue, how often have we seen conference agreements completed before the conference was even convened? The gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) had every right to bring our attention to that abuse of power.

I doubt the majority would have approved any of those amendments, but they should have been debated.

Then there are the two amendments by the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN). First, should C–SPAN tapes be rebroadcast for political purposes? I am not sure, but I think it is something that ought to be discussed on the floor of the House, and I regret the fact that we did not get an opportunity to discuss it.

He had a second amendment to curb another potential abuse of power. I think it could be a pretty serious one. It is inappropriate to use the franking privilege out of committee resources to mail mass propaganda pieces on behalf of any Member, on the majority or the minority side.

Now, if you look at the numbers that we have, the Committee on Resources apparently has asked for about half a million dollars to be mailing pieces into other Members' districts. We saw the explanation by the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN). No matter how much we want to cooperate with the other side, this is a major potential abuse of power, if somebody does not stand up and say wait a minute, there is something wrong with this.

This has to be discussed. The public needs to be aware of it before we embark on this. Of course, if nothing is said, other committees are likely to do the same thing, and no ranking member has that ability.

So this was an amendment that really needed to be discussed, and perhaps in that discussion we could get an explanation that would show us that this is not as abusive as it appears at first glance. Perhaps there is a logical explanation, but we sure ought to get that kind of explanation. The fact that we were denied the opportunity to discuss this is reason enough to vote against the rule.

What we are looking for is fairness. We are looking for the resources in this bill to continue this great institution at a reasonable level, a fiscally responsible level, one that is acceptable to both sides. But when the process is clearly not acceptable to both sides, I think we have an obligation to stand up and say no.

I would like to see some support from the other side of the aisle for raising objection to the way in which this rule was put together.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am in no way trying to defend or impugn any question of what the Committee on Resources did, but I think the appropriate place to have a look at that is through the Committee on House Administration or through the bipartisan Committee on Franking. I expect that will be done. Not on the floor of the House.

I know they do not want to miss an opportunity to make political hay over this, but the fact of the matter is, this is an inappropriate place to have that discussion.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN).

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, let me thank my friend from New York for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, let me take this time just to express my disappointment with this rule and my opposition to it. I listen frequently where Members of Congress like to say that we do not want to treat ourselves differently than we treat the general public. Yet on this appropriations bill that affects our budget, we use different standards than we do on other appropriations bills. That is wrong.

The ranking member, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), pointed out there are only eight amendments that were offered to the Committee on Rules. It would have been very easy to allow those amendments to be considered and then use the democratic process to either vote up or down those amendments. But, no, the majority refuses to allow us to have a debate on this floor on issues that affect the manner in which we operate the legislative branch.

I am particularly disappointed that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) was not made in order. We have an obligation to make sure that the resources of this body are used appropriately. That is the Committee on Appropriations' responsibility; that is the responsibility of our debate on the legislative branch bill. Yet we are not going to have an opportunity to see whether we could use a better standard on the franking privileges of our committees.

It is my understanding that the majority controlled that. The minority has no opportunity. The majority has used that at least in one committee in a partisan manner. That is wrong. We should have a chance to be able to debate that issue.

We work together to try to make sure that the resources of the legislative are used appropriately. In this case, it looks like it was not. Our opportunity to speak is when the legislative appropriation bill is on the floor. We are going to be denied that opportunity, because the majority refused to make in order an amendment so we could have that debate. That is wrong.

Therefore, I would ask my colleagues to reject this amendment, reject this rule, so that we have an opportunity to be able to have a full discussion on the legislative branch appropriation, as we would on any other appropriations bill that comes before this body.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just close by saying, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment offered by our colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN), was perfectly germane. The only reason in the world it was turned down was for political reasons. It was a major embarrassment that they had been found out, and I have to assure the people who are listening today that on my part, and I am sure on the part of others, that we will not rest until we rectify this mistake, although it is not a mistake. It is a blatant attempt, frankly, to misuse taxpayers' money as incumbent protection.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the rule, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This vote will be followed by two 5-minute votes on House Resolution 706 and H.R. 3980.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 223, nays 194, not voting 16, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). Members are advised there are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 1228

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 338 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall vote No. 338 I voted "nay." It was my intention to vote "yea." Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that this be noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, earlier today I attended the funeral of the Honorable John Stozich, former State representative and former mayor of my hometown of Findlay, Ohio.

As a result, I was absent from the House during rollcall votes on H. Res. 707, H. Res. 706, and H.R. 3980. Had I been present, I would have voted in favor of each.

REREFERRAL OF H.R. 4668 TO COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 4668) to designate the third floor of the Ellis Island Immigration Museum as the ''Bob Hope Memorial Library'' be rereferred to the Committee on Resources.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the further consideration of H.R. 4574, and that I may include tabular material on the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 701 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 4754.

□ 1228

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, with Mr. HASTINGS of Washington in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, July 7, 2004, the amendment by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) had been disposed of, and the bill was open for amendment from page 57, line 18, through page 108, line 22.

AMENDMENT NO. 2 OFFERED BY MR. SANDERS

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 2 offered by Mr. SANDERS: At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following new title:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to make an application under section 501 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1861) for an order requiring the production of library circulation records, library patron lists, library Internet records, book sales records, or book customer lists.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) and a Member opposed each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have a bipartisan amendment at the desk which is cosponsored by the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

This amendment, which addresses section 215 of the USA Patriot Act, is supported by citizens across the ideological spectrum, from conservative to progressive. This amendment is a narrower version of H.R. 1157, the Freedom to Read Protection Act, a bill I introduced last year and which now has 145 bipartisan cosponsors.

To date, 181 national and regional library, publishing, civil liberty and privacy groups have endorsed this legislation, including the American Library Association, the American Book Sellers Association and the NIA. In fact, book sellers are way on their way to securing 1 million signatures on a petition drive on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, as the Members of this House are well aware, in October 2001, Congress hastily passed the USA Patriot Act. This Patriot Act significantly broadened the government's investigational powers. Unfortunately, given the speed with which the Congress passed the Patriot Act, it should come as little surprise that this new law has created consequences that many Members did not intend.

Every Member of this body was appalled by the terrorist attack of 9/11, and I know that we all are going to work together to do everything we can to protect the American people from future attacks, but I am sure that I speak for the vast majority of the Members of this body when I say that while we fight terrorism vigorously, we must do it in a way that does not undermine the basic constitutional rights of the American people, what makes us a free country.

That is what this amendment is all about.

Mr. Chairman, this concern about protecting constitutional rights while we fight terrorism is not an ideological issue. Again, on this point I agree with people who I often disagree with. Let me quote Republican majority leader, former leader Dick Armey, when he said, ''Are we going to save ourselves from international terrorism in order to deny the fundamental liberties we protect to ourselves?''

I agree with Dick Armey. I agree with Newt Gingrich, who also voiced concerns about the USA PATRIOT Act. But also what we have are four State legislatures, including my own State of Vermont, 332 municipalities all across the country, conservative, progressive, going on record in passing resolutions expressing their concerns about this or that aspect of the PATRIOT Act.

Now, one of the areas of the PATRIOT Act that has received the most attention is section 215 as it relates to the government's ability to gain access to the files of America's libraries and bookstores. Mr. Chairman, under 215, government agents can go into a secret FISA court and get an order requiring that a library or bookstore turn over records that would tell them what innocent Americans are reading. They do this by informing the judge that they are doing an investigation on international terrorism, and having said that, a judge in the FISA court is obliged to give them a warrant to go into a library or into a bookstore so that they can determine the books that innocent Americans are reading. They do not need to have probable cause or specific information on an individual who is alleged to be a terrorist.

Mr. Chairman, just so the Members of this House understand how broad this authority is, let me quote from an October 29, 2003, declassified memo from the FBI's general counsel to all field offices. The memo expressly states that a request under section 215 ''is not limited to the records of the target of a full investigation. The request must simply be sought for a full investigation. Thus, if the records relating to one person are relevant to the full investigation of another person, those records can be obtained, despite the fact that there is no open investigation of the person to whom the subject of the records pertain.''

To make matters even worse, Mr. Chairman, all the proceedings are secret, so the innocent persons whose records are sought will not even know that his or her records have been seized.

Mr. Chairman, there are opponents of this amendment who are suggesting that if we pass this, the FBI and law enforcement officials will be unable to go into libraries and bookstores to track terrorists and that exempting libraries would ''create a terrorist safety zone.'' This is absolutely not the case, not the case. This amendment does not except libraries and book sellers from searches.

The FBI will still have many legal tools at its disposal as it always has, including search warrants and criminal grand jury subpoenas to attain library and bookstore records.

Mr. Chairman, we have an opportunity today to show the American people, yes, we are going to fight terrorism vigorously; but we are going to do it while we protect the constitutional rights of our people. Conservatives, progressive, moderates agree, let us pass this amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman's amendment is an attempt to roll back part of the PATRIOT Act, which should not be done on an appropriations bill with 20 minutes on each side. This is a matter that the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), ought to be holding hearings on and have an opportunity to take a look at it. The business records provision the gentleman wishes to amend sunsets at the end of 2005.

I think it is a great opportunity that the Congress has oversight on this issue, and I know that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) will be doing that aggressively, whereby the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) and others from both sides can come and testify; but the Committee on the Judiciary must be given an opportunity to review this policy, determine whether the gentleman's amendment is a good idea, whether it would create a potential safe haven for terrorists at libraries and address any of these issues particularly; and that is why the Congress legitimately wanted it to sunset.

Finally, and I would tell the gentlemen on both sides, OMB's Statement of Administration Policy states if any amendment that would weaken the USA PATRIOT Act were adopted and presented to the President for his signature, the bill would be vetoed.

I urge a ''no'' vote, and let the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and let the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) really take a lot of time to bring the best constitutional authority together and look at this. That is the right way to go.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), who has done a great job on this issue.

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Vermont for his leadership and for once again bringing this amendment before us.

Last year I believe if we had this amendment before us when we had the Otter amendment and several others relative to the PATRIOT Act, we would have had and should have had at least 309 votes for this amendment as we did the Otter amendment.

I would just like to speak to a couple of things. I know my office and several other offices have received calls regarding a veto threat on this amendment. This is the ninth such amendment that we have received a veto threat on.

Well, I would tell you that if there is that much consideration, if there is that much concern on this bill as a whole, then maybe we ought to take the bill back to committee and reconsider the bill itself rather than just the amendment.

There is no greater threat to this Nation in terms of terrorism than the drugs that are on our streets today. There is no greater threat and no greater form of terrorism against our children than the pornographers in this country, and there has been no greater threat in the past on a civil and law-abiding society than organized crime.

Yet, rather than add ''domestic terrorism'' to this list, we have taken domestic terrorism and elevated it above those three elements with special laws. We continue to say we are doing the same thing with domestic terrorism as we have done with pornography, as we have done with drugs and as we have done with organized crime.

Not so. Not so, Mr. Chairman, because what we have done with domestic terrorism is we have removed judicial oversight and that most important role that the judiciary plays—shining that bright constitutional light into the dark shadows of probable cause.

And so I would like to join the gentleman from Vermont. I would like to join others who are prepared to say we think that these other acts of terrorism against our children and against our civil society as a whole are no less important to fight against than domestic terrorism, and, in fact, have probably taken, no, have taken, Mr. Chairman, many more lives than were lost on 9/11.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume before I recognize the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE), to respond.

We just received a letter from the Justice Department, and I wanted to read it for the Members.

It said, ''In anticipation of the U.S. House of Representatives' consideration of an amendment that would prevent the Justice Department from obtaining records from public libraries and book stores under section 215 of the USA PATRIOT Act, your staff has recently inquired about whether terrorists have ever utilized public library facilities to communicate with others about committing acts of terrorism. The short answer is 'yes.' ''

The letter continued: ''You should know that we have confirmed that, as recently as this past winter and spring, a member of a terrorist group closely affiliated with al Qaeda used Internet services provided by a public library. This terrorist used the library's computer to communicate with his confederates. Beyond this we are unable to comment.''

This letter is to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), Mr. Chairman; and I am providing it herewith for the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 8, 2004.

Hon. F. JAMES SENSENBRENNER, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SENSENBRENNER: In anticipation of the U.S. House of Representatives' consideration of an amendment that would prevent the Justice Department from obtaining records from public libraries and bookstores under section 215 of the USA PATRIOT Act, your staff has recently inquired about whether terrorists have ever utilized public library facilities to communicate with others about committing acts of terrorism. The short answer is ''Yes.''

You should know we have confirmed that, as recently as this past winter and spring, a member of a terrorist group closely affiliated with al Qaeda used internet services provided by a public library. This terrorist used the library's computer to communicate with his confederates. Beyond this, we are unable to comment.

We hope this information is useful to you and your colleagues as you consider amendments relating to the USA Patriot Act.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM E. MOSCHELLA,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE).

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Virginia for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, reasonable men and women can disagree, and hopefully disagree agreeably, and this is a situation where this is going to happen. I think convincing arguments can be made on each side of the issue. And I do not want to sound like I am knee-jerking responding to this, but should terrorists be able to use taxpayer-funded public library facilities to plot a major attack without fear they will be investigated by the FBI?

I think that could come to play if this amendment is, in fact, enacted. As I understand my friend from Vermont, the amendment would exempt public libraries and book stores from section 215 of the USA PATRIOT Act, which permits the FBI, after obtaining a Federal court order, and I repeat, after obtaining a Federal court order, to obtain documents and other records relevant to international terrorism and espionage cases.

Now, there has been no abuse in this matter, Mr. Chairman. On September 18 of last year, the number of times to date that the Justice Department had utilized section 215 of the USA PATRIOT Act relating to the production of business records was declassified, and at that time it was made known that the number of times section 215 had been used as of that date was zero. So, obviously, there is no abuse here.

Furthermore, section 215, Mr. Chairman, provides for a thorough congressional oversight. Every 6 months the Attorney General is required to inform the Congress on the number of times agents have sought a court order under section 215, as well as the number of times its requests were granted, modified, or denied. No abuse at all on this. And I just believe we should vote down the amendment.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds before I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) to tell my friends that it is not accurate that under this amendment that the FBI cannot go into libraries and book stores. They sure can. They can get subpoenas. They can go to the grand jury. They can do it in the conventional way. We have no objection to that. But they cannot have a carte blanche, no probable cause to check on the reading records of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, we have to be very careful that because of this war on the Islamic terrorists we do not destroy our own civil liberties. The PATRIOT Act was passed in great haste, and parts of it do exactly that.

The gentleman from Virginia says this amendment should not be considered without hearings by the Committee on the Judiciary and given proper consideration, but the fact is there were no hearings before we passed the PATRIOT Act. The PATRIOT Act was warm to the touch. No one read it before it passed this House. No one knew what was in it. The bill that came out of committee was not the bill considered by the House. So that is where the original flaw lies.

We should now pass this amendment not to make libraries an exempt zone. As the sponsor, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), said, police will still be able to obtain records, so long as they can justify their actions based on probable cause. What is the difference if this amendment passes?

The difference is between good police work and a fishing expedition.

Do we want the government rummaging through the records of average Americans without reason, or do we want to insist at the very least that searches be based on probable cause? That is the issue. That is the issue: probable cause.

The Supreme Court of the United States, the Rehnquist court, gave a rap in the teeth to the administration last week for claiming powers that no executive in an English-speaking society has claimed since before Magna Carta. We do not want tyranny. We do not want tyranny.

This amendment is designed to say you can read without being afraid the government will someday reveal what you are reading. We do not want the chilling effect on free speech. If there is a real reason, if the government suspects someone is looking up how to make atom bombs, go to a court and get a search warrant, show probable cause. That is the way it worked for 200 years. It worked against the Nazis in World War II, it worked in the Civil War, and it will work today. We need not surrender fundamental liberty, and we should not.

That is what this amendment is about, and that is why we should urge its adoption.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I have 70 constituents who lost their rights on September 11; and to hear this debate, I am not sure we seem to care about that. Something told me on September 11 that we had received a wake-up call from hell, and that wake-up call from hell indicated we have to detect and prevent, because the old Cold War philosophy of contain and react and mutually assured destruction went out the window.

□ 1245

On an appropriations bill, we are trying to amend the PATRIOT Act because some librarians find it offensive that we may want to go in and find out who a terrorist talks with when they use a computer, and we are going to have another amendment that basically says we need to tell them first that we think they are a terrorist.

If we are going to detect and prevent, we have to break into these cells, and the only alternative left if we see this amendment pass is that we would then have to go before a grand jury and state our case, without probable cause, I might add, but state our case when we are talking about significant national security issues. We may be talking about a chemical weapon, a nuclear weapon. We may be talking about a biological agent. We may be talking about breaking into a cell to prevent that, and yet we are going to be told now we need to go before a grand jury to do the same things we can do in ordinary criminal cases.

I am amazed beyond comprehension at the lack of recognition that it is not a question of if; it is a question of when, where, and what magnitude we are going to have to face these kinds of attacks.

And I know what is going to happen when these attacks happen. There will be Members coming back to the floor saying how come the CIA did not know? How come our intelligence community did not know? Why did they fail us again? And we are going to tie their hands behind their backs anyway and say we have to let a terrorist know first before we break into a terrorist cell.

The gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) can throw his hands any way he wants, but the bottom line is we are at war with terrorists and we want to break into those cells and detect what is going on; and we sure as hell do not want to tell them we're coming.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Let me first say I am troubled by the comments of the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS). To tell a New Yorker, to have a New Yorker hear that we somehow do not care for the victims of September 11 is really the cheapest kind of blow a Member can put on this House floor. I care and everybody else cares.

But in the process of caring for the victims of September 11, no one said we were supposed to throw away the Constitution of this country. If in fact we were attacked, as some people would propose, because we are different, if in fact we were attacked because we are a great democracy, if in fact as some people propose we were attacked because people hate our freedom and hate our way of life, then the one thing we have to make sure in defending ourselves and getting the bad guys is we do not harm the good guys and throw away the Constitution. That would be the biggest victory for the terrorists.

I know that the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) is not listening to us now, but I personally take great offense to the fact; and I am glad that the gentleman from Connecticut is now listening because I think that was a low blow. I knew people that died there. I was friends with people who died there. We all are. Everybody in this country became a New Yorker that day. That is a fact of life. From Oklahoma to Portland, Oregon to Miami, Florida, everybody became an American and a New Yorker that day; so do not mix one with the other.

The fact of life is that we are talking here about a very difficult situation. The FBI still has the right under the gentleman's amendment to look at what terrorists are reading and at what terrorists are doing. We want them to do that. We want them to do that. That is why we support the FBI's efforts. But what somebody else is reading which has nothing to do with terrorists, with an opportunity now to invade our privacy like we have never seen before in this country, that is not what this argument is about, and it should not be mixed that way. I think it is offensive to some of us who believe we can defend our country and protect our Constitution to be reminded every day that if we question this policy and if we question the PATRIOT Act, we are somehow un-American and not patriotic enough. No one should ever question us. I never question anybody's patriotism or their love for this country.

Now there is traveling around the possible threat of a veto. If our President wants to veto this bill that funds the FBI's effort against terrorism, that funds the embassy security for our men and women who work overseas, that funds our war on drugs, that continues like in the homeland security bill, our fight on terrorism and the protection of our liberty and our system, let him veto it. Let the President explain to the American people that he vetoed it because the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) wanted to make one small change.

My friends, the PATRIOT Act, and I must commend the leaders of this House, they are good at taking a bill that does just the opposite and calling it something that it is not. The PATRIOT Act is everything but the PATRIOT Act. It is probably the act that takes away a lot of our abilities to continue to be patriots, but that is another issue.

This bill is what it is. The gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) is just trying to make it better. But I think my most important point here today is we should be careful what we say and how we say it because this is not the time to divide the country; this is the time to simply unite it.

Let me conclude my comments by reminding us of what one of our Founding Fathers, Benjamin Franklin, said: ''They that give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.'' That is our problem at the present moment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think one of the major issues, though, is this is something that should not be handled on the floor of the House in the heat of the moment with 20 minutes on each side. It is a serious issue.

Secondly, I was one of the Members who supported the 9/11 Commission. Thirty people from my congressional district died in the attack on the Pentagon. I think instinctively, no matter which side Members are on, they would want to wait until the 9/11 Commission.

I know some have been critical of the 9/11 Commission. I have not. I have been supportive of it. We would want to see what the 9/11 Commission said; did they think this was a problem. I am sure that they are looking at it. We have been in contact with the 9/11 Commission on the reorganization of the FBI, so there are two issues.

We would want to wait to hear them, and we would also want to bring in the librarians, constitutional scholars, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and others to come and review with thoughtful consideration, rather than a heated debate with 20 minutes on each side.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to this amendment. The PATRIOT Act is not designed to be a Draconian assault on our rights, despite the description some have given it. Rather, it is a necessary fool which allows for effective communication between law enforcement and intelligence agencies. Let me say that again: it is an effective communication tool between law enforcement and intelligence agencies.

Those of us who have studied what went wrong on 9/11 came up with a very dramatic conclusion which was published in a joint report put out by the House and Senate which said the problem was communication, there was a wall that needed to be taken down; and in fact the PATRIOT Act helped accomplish this, and it was a useful legislative contribution by the United States Congress as the legislative body to help fight the war on terrorism.

We have agencies that set forth every day in our country with the goal of keeping America safe. That is no small proposition these days. We have all read on the front page of the New York Times, the very New York Times the gentleman is referring to, that city we are all concerned about, the concerns about domestic attack, about right-now worries that there are things that should give us concern about our safety from terrorists, that their attention may very well be focused there. That has been reported on the front page of the New York Times.

The PATRIOT Act makes the task of dealing with these people and these threats a lot easier, and I continue to support the PATRIOT Act, and those who are working behind the scenes with our national security organizations do too.

We all know that no piece of legislation this body or any body produces is going to be perfect. We all know about unintended consequences. And so Congress has done something else. We have provided for oversight capability in case we got something wrong, and we have the capacity to investigate and correct any instances of misuse of the PATRIOT Act, just as we would in other cases where wrongdoing is alleged.

The Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, which I am the chairman of, regularly conducts oversight, and it has proven to be effective and reliable. To that end I have frequently described the Intelligence Committee when I make public speeches, which I do frequently, as the metaphorical 1–800 number for anybody who has concerns about abuses under the PATRIOT Act or any intelligence-related activities. The number to the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence has been and continues to be publicly listed and available to anybody who wants to call from around the world. If you have experienced a specific problem with the PATRIOT Act, you can now call us at our toll-free number. It only costs the taxpayers. The number is 1–877–858–9040. We will be happy to receive comments and exercise our congressional right to oversight as appropriate.

If there are problems with the PATRIOT Act, fine. Let us fix them in the kind of way that the chairman has properly suggested. I think the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has exactly described the right process that we should have questioning all the time whether we are getting it right, particularly in areas of our own rights; and I think debate is well warranted.

But this amendment and the half-truths which have been perpetuated against the PATRIOT Act are not the answer.

In closing, Members might be interested to know that we have not had any specific abuse complaints brought to our attention. Let me say that again: we have not had any specific abuse complaints brought to our attention. And on the contrary, we have had significant testimony that has shown utility of the PATRIOT Act. It is not unfair to say that the PATRIOT Act has been and is a vital weapon in the war on terrorism. I would say, in my judgment, that lives have been saved, terrorists have been disrupted, and our country is safer. I fully endorse the idea of oversight by Congress, I fully endorse a reporting system for any abuses, and I am happy to report I know of none, and I think I am in a position to report fairly on that. I urge opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Sanders amendment. Let me say that the problem of 9/11 was not with what Americans were reading in the libraries. It is what the intelligence community and the FBI were not reading from its regional offices.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be proper to rename this amendment and call it the ''partial restoration of the fourth amendment,'' and that is our attempt here. We are doing exactly what the gentleman early on suggested: this is oversight; this is our responsibility. This is the proper place to have the debate. It was the Congress that created the PATRIOT Act; it is the responsibility of the Congress to do something about it if it was a mistake. And it, indeed, was a mistake.

I would like to think that the American people are with us entirely, and I know a large number already are with us on trying to straighten up some of the mess caused by the Patriot Act, but I would like to say that there is one basic principle that we should approach this with, something I approach all legislation with, and that is the principle of a free society is that we never have to sacrifice liberty in order to preserve it.

The whole notion that the purpose of providing freedom and liberty to this country is that we have to give up some, I do not believe is necessary. It is never necessary to give up freedom to preserve freedom. I do think we made some serious mistakes. We made a mistake in passing the PATRIOT Act under conditions of an emergency and under the conditions of post-9/11. We did not do a very good job at Tora Bora. We failed to find the individuals responsible for 9/11 and we have not concentrated on the people who committed this crime. Instead, we have decided to invade and occupy a foreign country rather than protecting and providing security here, at home providing freedom for our people and more security for this country.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Sanders amendment which would make libraries and bookstores a sanctuary for terrorists. There are many misconceptions about the PATRIOT Act, but section 215 has received an unfair amount of criticism. Section 215 covers access to business records. Library records, among other types of business records, have always been accessible under this provision.

□ 1300

These records have been subject to subpoenas by grand juries for more than 30 years. For example, in 1997 a murder case in Florida allowed a grand jury to subpoena the records from the public libraries in Miami.

Section 215 actually provides more protections than the subpoena powers of grand juries. First, this provision does not apply to ordinary citizens engaging in ordinary criminal activity. In order to conduct a search of records, the FBI must have a court order.

Second, there are narrow restrictions on when such a record search may take place. It can only be used to obtain foreign intelligence information concerning a noncitizen of the United States or to obtain information relating to international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.

Again, this type of record search is not available in ordinary crimes or even for domestic terrorism. Library records can provide a legitimate source of information on individuals planning terrorist attacks against us. If we exempt library and book store records from foreign intelligence investigations, then terrorists will know exactly how to hide what they are doing. If this amendment passes, terrorists will know that if they use computers at taxpayer-funded public libraries, the FBI would be powerless to get records of their terrorist activities. When drug dealers or crime syndicates use these computers, these very same computers, these records have always been available to grand juries. Why not the terrorist records as well?

Mr. Chairman, finally, I would like to add that this is an issue that should be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, not as an amendment to an appropriations bill.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary, a hero of many.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, my congratulations to the gentleman from Vermont for bringing this forward.

Mr. Chairman, there are two ways that we can get the information from libraries, book stores, video stores, and that is through a regular criminal warrant and through a grand jury subpoena, all of which is frequently used. But doing it this way violates the fourth amendment, unreasonable searches and seizures; the fourteenth amendment, due process; the first amendment, freedom of speech; and the fifth amendment, due process.

For those who think they can call the Department of Justice's hotline and get the information, this information is classified. They will not reveal to the Committee on the Judiciary whether they have used it and how much they have used it. We know that they have through an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit, which in the course of the suit it came out that they use it, but they will not give this information.

For those who want to suggest that the oversight by Congress will take care of the Sanders amendment, let me tell them the entire PATRIOT bill was substituted the night before it was unanimously reported from the House Committee on the Judiciary by the Department of Justice up in the Committee on Rules. So much for oversight by Congress. Support the Sanders amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the freedom to read amendment. It is imperative that we do all we can to protect our country against terrorism, but reinstating laws that allow the FBI to conduct searches on libraries with search warrants and criminal subpoenas would not jeopardize national security. It would merely protect our constitutional right to privacy and make our Nation's libraries free once again.

But under the PATRIOT Act, the use of our local library is no longer free. It can cost us our civil liberties. And in the U.S. that makes it very expensive.

We are talking about the basic right to inform oneself without the threat of the Federal Government looking over their shoulder for whatever reason it likes or analyzing their intellectual curiosity for whatever reason they want. This is a chilling thought in a country that calls itself the land of the free.

The first amendment protects our right to express ourselves. We should not need a constitutional amendment that protects our right to inform ourselves, but section 215 of the PATRIOT Act makes us think it should be removed. I support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Freedom to Read amendment.

This amendment would abolish section 215 of the PATRIOT Act. Section 215 gives the FBI unlimited power to examine our library records and book-store purchases—without providing any evidence that one is under suspicion of terrorism.

The free library is one of America's great educational and cultural traditions, and a cornerstone of our communities. But under the PATRIOT Act, use of the local library is no longer free. It can cost you your civil liberties, and in the United States of America, that makes it very expensive.

We aren't talking about flag burning here. We're talking about the basic right to inform yourself without the threat of the Federal Government looking over your shoulder for whatever reason it likes.

When you are doing research in a library or browsing the bookshelves at Barnes and Noble, you shouldn't have to think twice about how your intellectual curiosity might be analyzed in a Federal investigation. This is a chilling thought in a country that calls itself the Land of the Free.

The first amendment protects our right to express ourselves. We shouldn't need a constitutional amendment that protects our right to inform ourselves. But section 215 of the PATRIOT Act makes you wonder.

It's imperative that we do all we can to protect our country against terrorism.

Reinstating laws that allow the FBI to conduct searches on library and bookstore records with search warrants and criminal subpoenas would not jeopardize national security. It would merely protect our constitutional right to privacy and make our Nation's libraries free again.

Support the Freedom to Read amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I have high regard for the gentleman from Vermont, my good friend, and the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), and I regret that I have to oppose their amendment. But I want to tell the Members why.

Obviously the PATRIOT Act does suspend some constitutional liberties. I am one of those people who loves the Constitution and believes we should not tamper with it. The problem that we have is that on 9/11 we had over 3,000 of our fellow Americans killed by terrorists because we did not know in advance what was going to happen. This is not the kind of situation where we can wait and say, okay, we suspect something is going on, we go get a court order from a judge and say, we think this guy is going to do something, and we go get him because in the interim he may have killed 4-, 5-, or 10,000 people. We have to nail that son of a gun before the act takes place.

So although some of our liberties have been temporarily suspended, the FBI told us yesterday, and many of us were at that meeting, that the PATRIOT Act has been very beneficial in stopping further terrorist attacks here in the United States of America.

The PATRIOT Act expires in the year 2005, next year; so we will have a chance to review it again. It has to be renewed because it has a sunset provision because we are all concerned about the Constitution. But we are in a war against terrorism right now. We cannot wait for a terrorist attack to take place and then say, oh, my gosh, why did we not do something about it? We have to use every tool that is available to us to prevent that attack from taking place in the first place, because once it happens, then God help us all.

So the FBI and the CIA and all of our intelligence people tell us right now the PATRIOT Act is a very valuable tool in preventing further terrorist attacks on America. We should not be tinkering with it right now. Next year we can review it, but right now in a war against terrorism, we were told yesterday that we may be in attacks this summer, and we have to do everything we can to prevent it. And that means do not mess with this thing right now, even though I love my good friend from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Chairman, let me just rise today in strong support of this amendment and thank the sponsors, especially the gentleman from Vermont for his leadership on this issue. Last year the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) came to my district where hundreds came to express opposition to this provision of the very onerous legislation that we are talking about before us today. Under section 215 of the PATRIOT Act, the FBI has the power to search for any tangible things, including books, records, papers, documents, and other items, in any location after showing minimal justification. This punishes all Americans and really has nothing to do with tracking down terrorists.

This amendment would allow the FBI to follow the procedures already in current law to obtain warrants to retrieve records for terrorist-related or criminal investigations. But come on. Families should not be afraid to check out children's books for fear that they may be investigated for collaborating with terrorists.

This amendment would restore and protect the privacy which is afforded to us by our first amendment, the rights of library and book store patrons which were in place before the USA PATRIOT Act. Those that did not know this was written in in the dark of the night, this was written in, we now know. Today we have a chance to get back the rights guaranteed by our Founding Fathers.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HOSTETTLER).

Mr. HOSTETTLER. Mr. Chairman, eliminating these authorities, as this amendment would do, would mean that we can get library records for run-of-the-mill criminal investigations with a grand jury subpoena that does not require a court order or judicial review, and it would also mean that we would be eliminating or restricting section 215 of the PATRIOT Act, and that would preclude the government from getting the identical library records as the run-of-the-mill investigation I mentioned earlier to protect national security interests of the United States. This is at best inconsistent with regard to law enforcement.

Congress recognized this inconsistency and corrected it in the U.S. PATRIOT Act. For example, today by grand jury subpoena the government can obtain similar records, library or other business records, related to the crime of cattle rustling under Title 18 U.S.C. section 2316. But under this amendment we could not get identical records using a court order for terrorism-related information.

Section 215 of the PATRIOT Act only applies to the foreign intelligence investigations and allows only for the collection of records for an investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities. This authority requires judicial review, whereas a grand jury subpoena for cattle rustling on the criminal side does not.

By exempting library records from the business records authority under section 215 of the PATRIOT Act, this amendment creates a safe haven for terrorists to communicate and do research on the next attack that is not created for cattle rustlers.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the freedom to read, and Americans' right to read and purchase books without fear of government monitoring has been wiped out, it has been erased, it has been undone by the passage of the PATRIOT Act. Congress must repeal this unconstitutional provision, and we must do it today with this amendment.

The PATRIOT Act forces library users to self-censor their reading choices out of fear. Mr. Chairman, censorship is not what America is about. The existing law would make one believe that by reading a book, the 9/11 terrorists came into existence. The existing law would lead one to believe that books are the enemy. Let us not forget the book burnings in Germany. Books are only the enemy if we do not want our population to be educated.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, just a short time away from the memorializing of the loss of over 3,000 of our brothers and sisters during 9/11, we stand on the floor to acknowledge our commitment in the war against terror and for homeland security. But not one single terrorist that perpetrated that heinous act was found in the libraries of America on 9/11. And so I rise to support this amendment on the simple premise that it reinstates legal standards for investigations of libraries and book stores which are part of the constitutional protection of the first amendment, and protectionss that were eliminated under the U.S. PATRIOT Act.

I simply ask my colleagues to recognize that the war on terror does not require us to drop our constitutional rights at the door of this body or the courthouse. Let us stand for the balance between democracy and security and support this amendment and defeat the unconstitutional intrusion on our rights!

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL).

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Sanders amendment. I voted for the PATRIOT Act, I voted for all the appropriations for the war against terror, I voted for all the intelligence appropriations, and will continue to do so. But I think we have to be careful. We have to carefully balance the war against terror with our personal freedoms.

With the passage of the PATRIOT Act, the FBI gained the unprecedented power to search libraries and book-buying records without probable cause of any crime or intent to commit a crime. Furthermore, librarians and others who are required to turn over records are barred from informing anyone that the search has occurred or that records were given to the government. This means that average Americans could have their privacy violated wholesale without justification or proper judicial oversight.

This amendment will not limit the ability of the FBI and the Department of Justice to fight terrorism. This amendment will ensure that library or bookstore records relating to an American who is not the subject of an investigation will not wind up in the government's hands without the benefit or protection of the courts.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, 9/11 was a great tragedy. An even greater tragedy is the destruction of our Bill of Rights.

The PATRIOT Act gives the government the right to search library reading lists. Our government should not care what people are reading; it should care that our people can read. Fear passed the PATRIOT Act, and fear will destroy our democracy.

When Francis Scott Key wrote that ''Star Spangled Banner,'' he raised a question: Does that star spangled banner yet wave, over the land of the free and the home of the brave? He made the connection between freedom and bravery, between courage and democracy.

This is a time for America to have courage. Courage, America. Freedom, America. Liberty, America. Support the Sanders amendment.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Sanders-Otter amendment, which would help restore the privacy and first amendment rights of library and bookstore patrons.

On the day the PATRIOT Act passed in this body, few Americans were aware of its harmful impact. Today, I can tell you Americans and my constituents are appalled at the emasculation of our Constitution.

Section 215 granted authorities unprecedented powers to search or order a search of library and bookstore records without probable cause or the need for search warrants. This is absolutely unprecedented. Those rights to a search warrant, to probable cause, are in the United States Constitution. They were swept aside in the PATRIOT Act.

We should make the commonsense changes that this amendment makes. I urge support of the Sanders-Otter amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I think we are swallowing camels and straining out gnats. We talked about the fact that you need probable cause under the PATRIOT Act. You do not need it under existing law. You can go to a grand jury under existing law and get this information, right now.

I would submit that we are not thinking straight. We are at war with terrorists. We need to respond to what we most fear: A chemical, biological, or nuclear attack. Or even a conventional weapon used in a pretty horrific way, with dirty weapons, dirty nuclear material. That is a fact. I am not inventing something. I have had 50 hearings on this.

The bottom line is, you remove this from the PATRIOT Act, and they can still do all the bad things they want. Under the PATRIOT Act, you have to go to the Justice Department, you have to go to FISA, and then you have to get a court order. I would submit it is a safer way.

The advantage is you do not have to tell a whole lot of people you are doing it. You get the records of what they are reading, what they are talking about, and then know whether we need to act more strongly.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, in the Bush-CIA-created democracy in Iraq, they just adopted martial law. The human rights minister said it is just like the American PATRIOT Act.

The Congress has tackled some unusual legislation recently. The Senate just voted to reaffirm that we actually support the Geneva Conventions, and today we are in the House debating no less than the freedoms guaranteed by the first amendment in our Constitution, freedoms that were compromised in a rush to judgment by this administration.

They did not get in martial law here yet, but they have got it in mind. They want to have the government able to reach into our lives, no matter what we are doing, no matter what you read in the library. Do not buy a ticket to ''Fahrenheit 9/11'' on the Internet, because they will get your Internet records. They are going to get everything about your life, and they will continue to do it until we finally wind up with martial law.

The amendment before the House would grant Americans the freedom to read books from the local library or your favorite bookstore, without the FBI looking over your shoulder.

Yes, we are here to restore one of the founding principles of this Nation. Today, we have to legislate freedom. There is a strong possibility that Republicans will vote against the amendment and kill the right for an American to read without fear of snooping by the government

There is every reason to believe that Americans will end this day not really knowing whether the book they just checked out of the library has placed them on the FBI watch list. Who is to say what books might get you placed under surveillance by the government.

Maybe you like history and want to know about the people who led nations against us. That alone would prompt Attorney General John Ashcroft to consider you a subversive. And, you will never know.

The so-called Patriot Act has made a patsy out of the first amendment. There is a secret court that can let the government peer into your private life. They can pry, snoop, spy, intrude, watch, poke around, and access your records, your life, without your knowledge, forget about consent.

The Attorney General wants the power. He insists he must have the power to protect America from Americans, any American he deems shady. What's the threshold? Well, that's a secret and a moving target. Today, maybe John Ashcroft won't like Catcher in the Rye and consider you subversive if you check it out. Tomorrow, maybe it will be The Great Gatsby, or perhaps Germany's Secret Weapons of World War II, or The Da Vinci Code. There's no limit to what the Attorney General might consider subversive. There's no limit to the spying he can order. There's no limit on government intrusion in your life. There are, however, new limits, severe limits to what this country is all about—freedom.

Are there bad people out there? Of course there are. And there are effective laws available to the Attorney General and the FBI to find these people. Every American does not need to be put under surveillance in order to protect America.

If you let government break into any American's private life without a rational check and balance, a cold wind will blow across this Nation and make us less free and no less vulnerable. We can fight the war on terror without declaring war on freedom. We can keep America safe and keep America free.

I urge the House to restore freedom to every American. I urge the House to pass the Freedom to Read Protection Act. If we are to remain the Land of the Free, we need to defend civil liberty as vigorously as we prosecute the war on terror.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, let me conclude. I am distressed by anybody in this body who suggests that any Member of this body is not going to do everything that he or she can to fight terrorism. We are all in that together. But in the process of fighting terrorism, it is imperative that this body maintain the basic constitutional rights which have made us a free country.

There is nothing in this amendment which prohibits the FBI or the government from going into libraries or bookstores as quickly as they can when they have to. This legislation that we are supporting is supported by conservatives, by moderates, by progressives, by people who are fighting hard, not only against terrorism, but fighting hard to maintain the basic freedoms which make our country the envy of the world and a free Nation. And in the fight against terrorism, we have got to keep our eyes on two prizes, the terrorists and the United States Constitution.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I again rise in opposition. The debate has been good, though; and I think it is good we have had it.

Let me say, first, that the PATRIOT Act does not allow or authorize martial law. It is important we know that. It does not.

Second, in the statement the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) made, it was inaccurate when he stated that grand jury subpoenas issued for business records, including library records, in ordinary criminal investigations are governed by a probable cause standard. That is not so. Rather, grand jury subpoenas in criminal investigations are governed by a standard of relevance, the same standard that applies to the issuance of court orders for the production of business records in intelligence investigations pursuant to section 215 of the PATRIOT Act.

So, really, you cannot just get down here and say this and say that, because we are moving people. People are listening back in their offices.

Third, there has been a lot of talk about legal issues here. We have not been hit since 9/11. No one has died in an attack on this country since 9/11. We know that.

We also know that al Qaeda, and frankly, Osama bin Laden lived in Sudan from 1991 to 1995 and nobody did a darn thing about it. Nobody did a thing about it. They could have picked him up several times, and they did nothing about it. But we know that Osama bin Laden and others want to bring about death and destruction and kill American citizens. We have seen the beheading of Nicholas Berg and others.

Has the PATRIOT Act helped us and our safety? I believe it has, and based on briefings that other Members on both sides have had, they do believe that it has actually helped us and kept what took place at the Pentagon, in my area, and I agree with what the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) said, up in their area, where they have deep, deep concern. We know it does and has helped.

Now, on this amendment, was Mr. Mueller, the Director of the FBI, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) would agree, has been asked what he thinks of this amendment? Has he been asked if this amendment hurt their efforts with regard to cutting off al Qaeda and other groups from killing United States citizens?

We see the letter that came from the Justice Department. I put it in the RECORD. It said, ''You should know,'' this was to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), ''we have confirmed that as recently as this past winter and spring,'' winter and spring, two times apparently, ''a member of a terrorist group closely affiliated with al Qaeda,'' the al Qaeda who did the 9/11, al Qaeda who did Tanzania, al Qaeda who did Nairobi, al Qaeda who did the USS Cole, al Qaeda who did the World Trade Center in 1993, that al Qaeda that ''used Internet services provided by a public library.''

Now, this says in here to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that in the winter and the spring somebody connected with al Qaeda used the Internet at a public library. If we can stop what took place in my area with regard to the Pentagon, then I want to stop that, because we have gone to enough funerals, and you all have gone to enough, and two of my children live in New York City, and I know how the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and those of you feel. It says they have used it.

Lastly, will this create a safe haven? I do not know. Let us let the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the members of the Committee on the Judiciary look at it.

It comes to an end. The Congress had wisdom to bring it to a sunset in 2005. Have hearings been held? I would ask the gentleman, Have hearings been held on this issue by the Committee on the Judiciary? There have not been. I see the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), and I say to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), I will not be at that 2 o'clock meeting we are going to have. The hearings have not been held.

Since hearings have not been held, since the FBI has not been asked, since we have not been hit, I strongly urge Members on both sides, even though you have reservations and doubts, to vote down this amendment and allow the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) to do their work and make sure that whatever they do is appropriate and constitutional and in the best interests of this country.

Mr. Chairman. I urge members for a ''no'' vote.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Chairman, although I have expressed serious concerns about our government's ability to search library and book store records, I do not believe that the Sanders amendment is the proper vehicle for addressing this concern. I will reluctantly oppose it.

The PATRIOT Act is a flawed law. It was passed just 7 weeks after September 11, 2001, without meaningful debate about how its new, wide-ranging powers would impact civil liberties. The Act contains some important provisions, such as modernizing law enforcement tools. But it also contains some highly problematic provisions, such as those that potentially give law enforcement officials a license to go on fishing expeditions for personal information unrelated to terrorism.

I believe we must carefully review the PATRIOT Act when it comes up for reauthorization next year. Congress should decide which provisions are necessary to win the war on terrorism, and which are unnecessarily harmful to civil liberties. This process should not be done ''on the fly'' in the middle of an election year, before we have an opportunity to understand the Act's full ramifications.

That is why I also oppose any effort to make permanent the PATRIOT Act. We adopted this bill in a rush. We wisely included sunset provisions that kick-in after sufficient time has passed to allow us to carefully assess the effectiveness of the provisions and their impact on civil liberties. Let's not rush to make permanent any of the provisions without the careful review we initially envisioned.

The responsible course of action is to revise the PATRIOT Act after we understand how best to improve it.

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, the freedom to read what we want—it may not be the first thing that comes to mind when we talk about those basic, unalienable rights for which generations of American heroes have fought and died. The idea of a government controlling what we read is the stuff of history books and horror stories about tyrants and dictators. It is not something we expect to face here in America—the Land of the Free.

That was before the passage of the USA PATRIOT Act. Section 215 of that law has given Americans reason to wonder whether the government might be looking over their shoulders when they check out books and materials from their local library. It has dangerously undermined the people's confidence in their government and threatens the precious freedoms we enjoy under the First amendment.

That's why I support this amendment today. I fully recognize the need to provide our law enforcement officers with the tools necessary to combat terrorism and keep Americans safe. However, security bought at the price of the freedoms on which our Nation was founded is no real security at all. Certain parts of the Patriot Act, including Section 215, may have seemed understandable in the short term, but they are intolerable over time. We need to set things right before our precious constitutional rights are eroded beyond recognition.

We sacrifice something much more dear than our physical safety when we fail to be diligent in defending our freedoms. Once lost, they seldom if ever are regained. And whether the tyranny that robs me of my liberties comes from abroad or starts here at home makes no difference. It is equally unwelcome. I am just as committed to protecting Americans from their own government's excesses as from the violence of foreign extremists.

The degree to which that commitment has captured America's imagination and has found growing support here among my colleagues is one of the most gratifying experiences in my public life. A vote for this amendment is a vote to restore Americans' confidence in the ability of Congress to protect the freedoms they hold dear.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) will be postponed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) addresses a portion of the bill that has been passed in the reading. Does the gentleman ask for unanimous consent for its consideration at this point in the reading?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to its consideration at this point in the reading?

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

□ 1330

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This amendment would take money from the United Nations and would put that $20 million in NIST, the National Institute of Standards and Technology, at a level that was recommended by the President.

I am offering this amendment, taking money from the United Nations appropriations, international organizations and, because I am concerned about the additional money that the United Nations has taken and has in their possession from the Oil-for-Food program.

I think this Congress should be very concerned about what has happened in the Oil-for-Food program. This particular line item appropriation was increased 19.4 percent above last year, even though there are reports that the U.N. kept $100 million of the Oil-for-Food money to pay for its own operating expenses. This money was intended to rebuild Iraq, but instead the American taxpayer is currently paying the tab.

Also, the U.N. collected .8 percent of the Oil-for-Food transactions to pay for weapons inspections, but between 1999 and 2002, the U.N. collected $400 million for weapons inspection, even though no inspections took place.

So that is where the $20 million would come from. It goes to increase the appropriation up to the President's request for the National Institute of Standards and Technology, NIST.

You know, it is a simple amendment that I think is fair, that I would hope would be in order so that this body could consider how far we wanted to go increasing some of the appropriations to the United Nations, again by 19.4 percent at a time when it is reported that they have, in effect, confiscated $400 million for weapons inspections that they did not make; at a time when they have taken another $100 million off according to an article in the Wall Street Journal, to pay for their own administrative expenses.

I think it is reasonable and appropriate that we send a signal to the United Nations that we are not going to have this dramatic 19.4 percent increase in those kind of appropriations, at a time when the United Nations has issued orders apparently to not release the background of the Oil-for-Food program, when countries that were involved in the Oil-for-Food program such as Russia, such as France, such as some of the other countries that now have instructed their people not to release the information so that we can appropriately investigate what happened in the misuse of that Oil-for-Food program funds.

Recently, both my Agriculture and International Relations Committees held hearings on the United Nation's Oil-for-Food (OFF) program scandal. That program taught us a lot about the United Nations' (UN) weaknesses and explain the actions of countries like France and Russia when they worked against us last year.

The UN placed trade sanctions on Iraq after Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait in 1991. By 1995, the sanctions were widely blamed for a developing humanitarian crisis in Iraq. The United States and Britain realized that Iraq, which has the second largest oil reserves in the world, could trade oil for food and medicine. We pushed for UN Security Council Resolution 986, and the OFF program was created. If effective, it would have reduced the humanitarian impact of the sanctions while preventing Hussein from buying weapons.

Unfortunately, Hussein cheated OFF and the UN didn't stop it. He managed to get his hands on at least $10 billion of OFF money. Other countries were complicit in helping him cheat. France and Russia demanded that we let Hussein design OFF. It allowed Hussein to pick the price for his oil, to pick his customers, and to control the people who audited him. Within a few years, the flawed program allowed Hussein to sell at low prices in exchange for kickbacks that were funneled into Swiss bank accounts. This was suspected at the time, but it was impossible to fix it. Fixing it would have required unanimous support of the Permanent Members of the Security Council, including France and Russia. At the time, these countries said that they wanted to end the sanctions completely. France, Russia, and China all had oil contracts with Iraq that would have been activated, resulting in huge benefits for these countries had the sanctions been removed.

At the same time, UN bureaucrats in Iraq were slow to file reports and bring irregularities to the attention of the Security Council and its oversight committee. Furthermore, Iraq paid its UN auditors. The more trading they allowed, the more money the UN got. These arrangements have only come to light since Saddam Hussein's fall. There are reports that even the UN's head of the Oil-for-Food program, Benon Sevan, was on the take from Hussein.

The United States and Britain have pushed for an audit to find out what happened. Paul Volcker, a former Chairman of the Federal Reserve, is heading a UN investigation. However, the UN is stonewalling. Sevan sent letters ordering UN offices to refuse to cooperate. Russia has asserted that it will not release any documents. And other UN bureaucrats have refused to share papers. I have sponsored legislation that would cut U.S. support for the UN if it doesn't cooperate.

The real story here is that many countries make decisions based solely on what is good for their country, with no regard for the goals and ideals of the UN Charter. Certainly, this calls the Security Council's moral authority into question and degrades its capacity to respond appropriately to events. Is it any wonder that, under pressure from these countries, UN could not agree to support us in Iraq? And is it any wonder that at the first threat of danger, the UN pulled out? We need to carry out a full and thorough investigation and make changes if the United States is to continue with some degree of confidence.

And with that, Mr. Speaker, we can proceed to the point of order. I would hope that inasmuch as this amendment was included in the unanimous consent to be allowed to be considered, that we would allow my amendment to be considered.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to question the ruling of the chair on whether or not the amendment has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous consent request to consider the amendment at this point was objected to. The amendment is not pending.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I refer to the unanimous consent request that was made last night asking unanimous consent that during further consideration of this bill, H.R. 4754, that the following amendments be allowed to be offered, and my amendment is included in that list.

The CHAIRMAN. That order of the House of yesterday did not waive the requirement that the amendment come at the appropriate place in the reading.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am not questioning the points of order against the amendment. I am questioning the ruling of the Chair that this amendment cannot be offered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The portion of the bill adderssed by the gentleman's amendment has already been passed in the reading. Therefore, the gentleman would need unanimous consent to return to that portion of the bill without which, the amendment would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And I guess, Mr. Chairman, reluctantly I will accept the ruling of the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 20 OFFERED BY MR. AKIN

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 20 offered by Mr. AKIN:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used in contravention of the provisions of subsections (e) and (f) of section 301 of the United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Act of 2003 (Public Law 108–25; 22 U.S.C. 7631(e) and (f)).

The CHAIRMAN. All points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) for 10 minutes.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

About a year or so ago we passed the $15 billion AIDS package, and we did so because we believed in the principles of prevention coupled with treatment.

Now, the amendment that I am offering here today is to make a crystal-clear understanding that the intention of the United States Congress and the American people is in regard to the distribution of this money.

The amendment simply codifies existing law by ensuring that no taxpayer funds designated for this bill, which has to do with tuberculosis, malaria, as well as AIDS, may be used to promote or advocate the legalization of prostitution or sex trafficking, and that no funds may be given to any group or organization that does not have a policy that is explicitly opposing prostitution and sex trafficking.

We have received word that there are groups who actively promote prostitution on their Web site, that they have received U.S. tax dollars in the past, and that is why this language is important and why it must be enforced.

If we subsidize any organization, we unavoidably enrich and empower all of the activities of that particular organization, and clearly it is not in the interest of our foreign policy to enrich or empower organizations that refuse to denounce prostitution and sex trafficking.

Now, I probably should make this point very clear that, first of all, my amendment applies only to the $15 billion of AIDS money, and also, that this amendment in no way prevents the distribution of condoms or medications to prostitutes or women sold into the sex trade. It simply mandates that the organization distributing these items must have a statement opposing prostitution and sex trafficking. In fact, in paragraph (e) of the law, it says, ''Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to preclude the provision to individuals of,'' and it goes on to the different types of medical care.

Mr. Chairman, when the United States sends tax dollars to treat and prevent AIDS in Africa, we are telling women that we are interested in their well-being, and we must never confuse that message by financially supporting organizations that actually promote prostitution and sex trafficking.

Now, this may be a little bit theoretical; sometimes we deal with statistics in this Chamber. But in my own experience, traveling to India, to Mumbai, we had a tour of the red light district, and we saw the people that were victims of the sex traffic trade. In fact, we saw their children, about two dozen of them. And one of the things that we were told is that when those children come, first of all, to this house where they can be finally treated decently, and they are told that they have a bed, when it comes nighttime, they crawl underneath the bed. They crawl under the bed because that is where their mother trained them to stay while she was making her living in the evenings.

So we do not want to have any way that any of our policies could be construed with United States money for in any way endorsing or supporting any organization that is not explicitly willing to denounce the trafficking and the misuse of women and children in the sex trade.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, just for 30 seconds. This is a good amendment, and I strongly, strongly support it. I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri for offering it.

The exploitation of women is very common, and, unfortunately, a growing, growing problem. I appreciate the leadership of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) and others on this issue.

So I strongly support the amendment.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to claim the time in opposition, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

To be honest, there is some confusion around here as to where this amendment is going. I know that the chairman already said it is a good amendment, and I understand my colleague said he would accept the amendment. But we are just trying to figure out if, indeed, this amendment should be on this bill at all, or if it should be in the foreign operations bill.

I would like to ask the chairman that question, if he feels this belongs here, or if he feels it belongs in the foreign operations bill. And secondly, if he understands, as I do, that this bill really speaks not to one section of our bill I guess, but to all sections, that if someone does not have a written policy, a policy, by the way, that no one is against in this House or should be against, that this would go into effect. In other words, this would not be the first time that there is some confusion on an amendment, and that is what we are trying to say.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, we have been led to believe that only, as the gentleman said, applies to the section that he made clear earlier, only to that section dealing with HIV/AIDS. I personally, though, would make it apply to everything, because of the thought of the exploitation to women. But unfortunately, it just applies to that one very narrow section.

I think it is appropriate on this bill, because we have extensive funding in this bill with regards to sexual trafficking. But unfortunately, it does just cover that narrow section with regard to HIV/AIDS.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the amendment extends the prohibition against all funds in this bill to assist any group or organization that does not have an explicit policy against prostitution or sex trafficking; again, something we are all in favor of getting rid of.

The bill funds the Justice Department, the Commerce Department, and the Judiciary. The question is why should we refuse to help a small manufacturing firm that seeks MEP assistance, for instance, because they do not have a written policy against prostitution? Why should we encumber COPS funds to local police departments or tell the courts they cannot pay a court reporting organization that does not explicitly prohibit prostitution? What effect does this amendment have on scientific grants from NIST and contracts from NOAA?

There are some who will question the motives of the opponents of this amendment and suggest that we do not fight strongly enough against prostitution and sex trafficking. I am just concerned that this will cast aspersions on us because we think this is an overbroad amendment with unintended consequences. I just wish, Mr. Chairman, that we would really take a closer look here in consultation with the sponsor, because this, I think, accomplishes or does much more than we think it does.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Akin amendment which affirms, reaffirms existing U.S. policy of two of the most heinous practices known to humankind: sex trafficking and prostitution.

It should be very clear that the Akin amendment reiterates that funding in this bill cannot be used to circumvent provisions already existing in law, Public Law 108–225. As with the existing law, the Akin amendment states that no taxpayer funds designated for HIV/AIDS prevention may be used to promote or to advocate the legalization of prostitution or sex trafficking, and that no funds may be given to any group or organization that does not have a policy explicitly opposing prostitution or sex trafficking.

As the author of both the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 and the Trafficking Victims Reauthorization Act of 2003, I believe that the U.S. should do everything in its power to combat and to eliminate human trafficking in prostitution.

Those who advocate the legalization of prostitution, I believe, are doing a grave disservice to women and demeaning their dignity.

□ 1345

Individuals and groups seeking to receive U.S. assistance to fight AIDS who believe that the legalization of prostitution or they turn a blind eye to prostitution are part of the problem. They are not part of the solution.

Mr. Chairman, the horrors of sex trafficking, which is indeed modern-day slavery, and the ugliness of prostitution cannot be understated. The recently released ''Trafficking in Persons Report,'' which was done pursuant to our Act, has pointed out that some 600,000 to 800,000 people are trafficked every year across borders. I urge a ''yes'' vote for the Akin amendment.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just make my last appeal to the gentleman. I think this may be an issue that people want to discuss; but it is certainly, from everything we can gather, not intended to be part of this bill. Secondly, it leaves incredible questions open. As I said before, anyone seeking a grant under this bill, this bill has many areas where you can, in fact, seek funding to do medical research, to do all kind of research, to contract with the government; and this is so open that nowhere else I think in our government do we say that you must first sign a document committing yourself to something before you can even be involved in receiving Federal dollars.

There are laws that cover behavior, yes, that is true, fair housing, discrimination and so on. But this one, my God, there are people who have not even looked at this issue. And to suggest that if they do not have it down in writing, they have a policy that they have to present this policy, they cannot engage in research or engage in building or something else, it is totally out of left field to me. I really think this is overreaching. This is too broad, and I was really hoping that the chairman would see it that way and oppose it for the time being. I hope we could reconsider it.

Ms. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Missouri, Mr. AKIN.

Not only is this amendment redundant and unnecessary, because the existing language is already contained in last year's Global HIV/AIDS bill, but this amendment is also an extension of a bad piece of public health policy.

Mr. Chairman, of course we don't support the legalization of either of these practices, and we would never allow the taxpayers money to be used to advocate or support for their legalization.

But to deny funding to an organization, any organization mind you, because it doesn't have a specific policy that is opposed to either of these practices is counterprodutive to achieving our long term goals of reducing the spread of the disease, and treating those already infected.

How can an organization that is seeking to mitigate the risk of infection for sex workers reach out to these women when we require them to have an affirmative policy in place that would turn these very women away from receiving education and treatment for HIV/AIDS?

It's not like the women who get involved in the sex trade are doing it as a matter of choice. They are doing it to survive. They are forced to sell their bodies to put food on the table for themselves and their families. For them, it is survival sex.

Last year I traveled to Zambia on a Congressional Delegation, where I had the opportunity to meet some of these women at Chirundu, one of the border crossings into Zimbabwe.

I can tell you, the women who live in the surrounding community at Chirundu are economically destitute with no employment opportunities, they are forced into the commercial sex industry to survive.

What incentive will such a woman have to learn about how to protect herself from contracting HIV, or how to avoid spreading it, if every organization she turns to rejects the very basis of her situation, of her existence? How can she trust an organization that believes that prostitution is a choice for her?

Just take a look at the case of Thailand. On Sunday the 15th International AIDS Conference will take place there, and I think we should take a look at how Thailand confronted its own HIV epidemic among its sex workers.

The government wasn't saying one thing and doing another by proclaiming its opposition to the commercial sex industry.

It was actively trying to reach out to sex workers and to make it easy for them to come into a health clinic, get information about HIV/AIDS, get access to condoms, and mitigate their risk of getting, or further spreading the disease.

Like the case in Thailand, we should be reaching out to these women, not turning them away. We should also be helping them to get an education, start a business, and hold down a job.

The amendment we passed last year was a flawed piece of public policy, and by extending this policy, this amendment we are considering today is equally flawed.

I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on this motion are postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 4 OFFERED BY MR. OTTER

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 4 offered by Mr. OTTER:

Insert before the short title at the end the following:

TITLE VIII—NOTICE OF SEARCH WARRANTS

SEC. 801. Section 3103a of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking ''may have an adverse result (as defined in section 2705)'' and inserting ''will endanger the life or physical safety of an individual, result in flight from prosecution, or result in the destruction of or tampering with the evidence sought under the warrant''; and

(B) in paragraph (3), by striking ''a reasonable period'' and all that follows and inserting ''seven calendar days, which period, upon application of the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, or an Associate Attorney General, may thereafter be extended by the court for additional periods of up to seven calendar days each if the court finds, for each application, reasonable cause to believe that notice of the execution of the warrant will endanger the life or physical safety of an individual, result in flight from prosecution, or result in the destruction of or tampering with the evidence sought under the warrant.''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(c) REPORTS.—(1) On a semiannual basis, the Attorney General shall transmit to Congress and make public a report concerning all requests for delays of notice, and for extensions of delays of notice, with respect to warrants under subsection (b).

''(2) Each report under paragraph (1) shall include, with respect to the preceding six-month period—

''(A) the total number of requests for delays of notice with respect to warrants under subsection (b);

''(B) the total number of such requests granted or denied; and

''(C) for each request for delayed notice that was granted, the total number of applications for extensions of the delay of notice and the total number of such extensions granted or denied.''.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER).

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, earlier today on another amendment, we heard the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee mention that we should leave the PATRIOT Act and my amendments there up to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and up to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS).

Mr. Chairman, we did not leave the PATRIOT Act up to the Committee on the Judiciary, up to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and up to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), as was discussed and has never been refuted. This PATRIOT Act that we have been having to deal with for the last 3 years was snuck in at the very last minute.

So the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), who the chairman now wants to turn over the jurisdiction for the PATRIOT Act, never got a chance to take a final look at the actual PATRIOT Act itself.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to discuss an amendment that, I believe, renews an important balance between protecting our liberties and protecting our Nation. I understand that the language is subject to a point of order, and I am prepared to deal with that. However, this issue drives to the core of who we are, or who I hope we are as Americans. And I believe it is important to address today.

The fourth amendment which protects us from unreasonable searches and seizures by government came from a firsthand experience of our Founding Fathers. Then King George III called it what it really was, writs of assistance, and before that it was also mentioned in the Magna Carta.

So what we have done with the PATRIOT Act and sneak-and-peek provisions of search warrants has destroyed many, many years of efforts by freedom fighters throughout the decades. This idea of individuality, that each person is created unique, is something unique to the United States and cannot and should not be taken away, especially not by its own government. If we cannot trust our own government to not make war on its own people, how can we trust this same government to make war with our enemies? That is why I am so concerned about the way we have expanded the power of government to do sneak-and-peek searches. The issue at hand is not when or where or how often these warrants may be executed or may be used; the fact that government has the power at all should be something of great concern to all of us.

I do not doubt that the provisions of the PATRIOT Act that address sneak-and-peek were well intended. It is important to know that we are safe and secure within the borders of this country. Mr. Chairman, we cannot, we will not be safe in this country unless we are secure under the fourth amendment to the privacy of our own person and our own property.

I understand that the sneak-and-peek warrants were used before the passage of the PATRIOT Act. We discussed that earlier. There were certain provisions which the authorities had to go through before they could simply waltz into somebody's home. By broadening the use of the sneak-and-peek warrants and making them the standard rather than the exception, the PATRIOT act threatens our liberties that were given us by our Creator and are now protected by the Constitution. That is why I am offering this amendment today.

As Americans, I believe our fundamental belief that each of us is ultimately responsible for safeguarding ourselves. It is our obligation and our duty as citizens to this great Nation to see to it that we are secure in our own liberties, and it is our responsibility first and then the government's.

We would be justifiably enraged if some individual or a group acted to destroy our Constitution, all at once to wipe away in one terrible moment the centuries of struggle and countless lives sacrificed to winning the liberties we hold so dear.

It is equally important that we jealously guard against allowing our freedoms to be chipped away piece by piece before our eyes, that we do all we can to hold back those small, but insignificant, strokes of tyrannical erosion which can in time fell even the greatest of our institutions, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

I am not the first to have these concerns. Those before me have said it more eloquently than I. James Madison recognized the importance of guarding our individual liberties with constant vigilance when he said: ''Since the general civilization of mankind, I believe there are more instances of the abridgment of freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations.''

Ben Franklin was already quoted today. And Thomas Jefferson, cautioning us against relinquishing our inalienable rights to even a well-meaning government said: ''A freedom government is founded in jealousy, not confidence. It is jealousy and not confidence which prescribes limited constitutions to bind those we are obliged to trust with power. So in questions of political power, speak to me not of confidence in men, but bind them down from mischief with the chains of the Constitution.''

Mr. Chairman, this is the deepest root in our tree of liberty and that is the rights of individuals to be free to exercise under the fourth amendment and to be secure in their own homes and their own privacy. A vote for the people and not the government is a vote for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Idaho, of which I am a co-sponsor.

The Fourth Amendment provides that ''The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.''

The Fourth Amendment's protections against unreasonable searches and seizures are put into practice, in part, by the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Rule 41 specifically requires the government to obtain a warrant before a search is conducted. It also requires that the government give notice to a person whose property was seized during a search, or from whose premises property was seized. And the Supreme Court has traditionally held that an officer must knock and announce his presence before serving a search warrant, absent exigent circumstances such as reasonable belief such notice would jeopardize life or limb, or result in destruction of evidence or escape of the person named in the warrant. Moreover, while delayed notice for searches of oral and wire communications are authorized by law under certain conditions, as a general rule, covert physical searches for physical evidence were not permitted prior to the PATRIOT Act.

The notice requirement enables the person whose property is to be searched to assert his or her Fourth Amendment rights by pointing out irregularities such as the police have the wrong address, or ensuring that only those areas specified are searched, if the area to be searched is a room in a house, that does not include the car in the garage.

The so called ''sneak and peek'' secret search warrant provision allows law enforcement to conduct a secret search on a person's premises or computer without notice. If they get the wrong house or business and it happens to be yours, you may never know about it. Or if the search is conducted improperly, but nothing incriminating is found, you may never know about it. Sneak and peek warrants provide no sanction for failure to notify the subject of the search or for unlawful activity if nobody is aware of it and if no incriminating evidence is found. Law enforcement personnel will need to validate a search only when property is seized and then delayed notice must be given. Meanwhile, the notice can be weeks or even months after the fact. And in that time period, several searches may have been conducted without any results or continuing justification.

Moreover, this gives law enforcement officials access to someone's personal property and information without the person's knowledge. Law enforcement personnel can search through your drawers, go through your files including medical and financial records, read your diaries, and surf through computer websites you have visited, just to name a few invasive practices. The person conducting the search will have access to very private, very personal, information about you and your family, without your knowledge. And what if the government agent conducting the search happens to be your neighbor or someone you see at the store or at a PTA meeting? Without your knowledge, that person has continuing access to—and knows the most intimate of details about—your life. This level of privacy invasion is unjustifiable.

Preventing terrorism has become a more urgent and necessary goal of law enforcement since the 9/11 tragedies. Yet, we don't want to accomplish for the terrorists something they could not accomplish themselves—reducing the rights, freedoms, and protections our system provides us all. The Otter amendment finds a working middle-ground that will satisfy our country's need for heightened security while at the same time ensuring that our freedoms and protections remain intact. The amendment limits the reasons for sneak and peek warrants to three specific circumstances, when notice would cause either the life or physical safety of a person to be put in danger, flight from prosecution, or the destruction of evidence. It also includes a seven-day time limit for the delayed notice. This time limit creates a pattern of uniformity for those involved in law enforcement and is a reasonable period by which to inform the person subject to the warrant of the clandestine search. In the case where a court finds that notice of the warrant within the seven-day period will lead to one of the three enunciated circumstances, the amendment authorizes unlimited additional seven-day delays. This amendment encourages use of these warrants in appropriate circumstances, will prevent misuse of the practice, and ensures the protection of our civil liberties.

Encouraging the judiciary to issue sneak and peek warrants without offering any meaningful guidance on their use will end in disaster. This amendment is unequivocally American. It recognizes the need to protect our country and our selves. It gives meaning to Section 213 of the PATRIOT Act within the parameters of our democracy so that it can be an effective tool rather than a wasted provision.

Mr. Chairman, safeguarding the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution is not a partisan issue. I ask my colleagues to join me in support of this essential legislation to protect the rights of all Americans.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's strong feelings and he makes a very powerful case, and I can see how passionate he is about it. I think this is one of those cases that ought to be done by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

As a result of that, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment because it proposes to change existing law constituting legislation in an appropriations bill and, therefore, violates clause 2 of rule XXI. The rule states in pertinent part: ''An amendment to a general appropriation bill shall not be in order if changing existing law.''

This amendment directly amends existing law. I ask for a ruling from the Chair. I am certain that this will be an issue that will be discussed quite deeply by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Idaho wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate what the good chairman has said relative to my amendment and its being out of order.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 23 OFFERED BY MR. KING OF IOWA

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 23 offered by Mr. KING of Iowa:

At the end of the bill, insert after the last section (preceding the short title), the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. (a) For expenses necessary for enforcing subsections (a) and (b) of section 642 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (8 U.S.C. 1373), $1,000,000.

(b) The amount otherwise provided in this Act for ''DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—LEGAL ACTIVITIES—SALARIES AND EXPENSES, GENERAL LEGAL ACTIVITIES'' is hereby reduced by $1,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING).

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment today to enforce existing Federal law that prohibits localities from refusing to allow their officers to report aliens who commit crimes to the immigration authorities.

My amendment would provide funding for the Department of Justice to enforce section 642 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigration Responsibility Act of 1996. Section 642 of the act forbids localities from preventing their police officers from reporting immigration information to the Federal Government. However, some cities and counties have continued to refuse to allow their officers to provide information to the Federal Government, and that is in violation of Federal law.

Without this information, the Federal immigration authorities cannot take steps to remove these criminal illegal aliens from American streets. Under these so-called ''sanctuary policies'' in certain cities and counties, the police cannot report the illegal aliens who commit crimes to the immigration authorities for deportation. As a result, taxpayers pay to incarcerate illegal alien prisoners who are later released back on to the street.

These sanctuary policies have disastrous consequence for future victims. Repeat offenses by criminal illegal aliens are preventable crimes. These offenders should have been removed from the United Nations as soon as their first crimes were discovered. Their prompt removal prevents future crimes. We can act to prevent crime by funding enforcement of section 462 by the Department of Justice.

The Subcommittee on Immigration, Border Security and Claims held an oversight hearing on the public safety consequences of local immigration sanctuary policies on February 27, 2003. But despite that February 2003 hearing, sanctuary policies remain in place with disastrous consequences. Less than 4 months after that hearing in June of 2003, a 9-year-old girl was dragged from her San Jose home in broad daylight and was kidnapped, tortured, and raped over 3 days before finally being released by her assailant.

According to press reports, the man arrested and charged with nine felony counts related to the terrifying abduction and sexual assault was an illegal alien who had already admitted a crime. Originally, the suspect was arraigned under the name Enrique Sosa Alvarez, but a fingerprint check identified him as David Montiel Cruz. Under the name Cruz, this man was previously convicted of auto theft. According to the San Jose Police Department's policy, section L7911 of the Line and Operations Procedure, officers may not ''initiate police action when the primary objective is directed towards discovering the alien status of a person.''

Because the officer who investigated the previous auto theft could not ask about Mr. Cruz's immigration status, his hands were tied and he could not verify with the Federal Government whether Mr. Cruz was allowed in the United States. We will never know if this crime against this 9-year-old girl could have been prevented if Federal law were enforced.

My amendment would fund enforcement of section 642. This section does not require local authorities to report all immigration information they would uncover to the Federal immigration authorities, but rather it simply prohibits local authorities from having a blanket policy to refuse to communicate this information with the Federal Government.

This is essential because in the example I just spoke of, the accused kidnapper and rapist never should have been in this country in the first place. We must not allow illegal aliens whose presence was never reported to Federal immigration authorities due to illegal sanctuary policies to continue to commit brutal crimes. We must not provide sanctuary to criminals.

I look forward to working with the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), and I appreciate his work on this entire bill and other Members to encourage the Department of Justice to enforce the Federal law which prohibits localities from having sanctuary policies.

I urge support for my amendment which funds enforcement of section 642.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1400

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I support what the gentleman is trying to do, but what agency would get the money?

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the agency that this amendment transfers to is the Department of Justice.

Mr. WOLF. But this law is not enforced by the Department of Justice. This law is enforced by Department of Homeland Security.

I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman's amendment provides $1 million to enforce two sections of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act. However, the amendment does not specify what agency would receive this funding.

Secondly, what agency would get this funding and be tasked with enforcing these immigration provisions? Enforcement of this section of the immigration law is the responsibility of the Department of Homeland Security. The Homeland Security Act specifically changed the responsibility from the Attorney General to the Department of Homeland Security. No agency funded in this bill has that responsibility. The gentleman should have done the amendment on the right bill as the other Members sought to do. So it just does not fit.

Now, I would say, and I have offered the gentleman a number of times and I will do it again, that I think either the gentleman is trying to get something out to get a vote to see what happens, or he is trying to get it done. I would rather get it done, and I know that it is a problem. That is a problem even in my region and other regions.

The way to do it is to bring the administration up, to bring the Justice Department up, bring the Department of Homeland Security up, and sit down and have them resolve the issue, and honey gets people more than a stick, and particularly this agency that the gentleman is amending the bill for the Justice Department is not the agency to enforce it.

I will be glad to set up the meetings and see what we can do to resolve this. Because of this reason, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) yielded back his time. Is the gentleman asking unanimous consent to reclaim his 30 seconds he yielded back?

Mr. KING of Iowa. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just point out that the Attorney General enforces the laws of the United States, and enforcement of this section would be under the Department of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

It almost gets tiresome to deal with the fact that this amendment keeps coming up every so often, and it just looks different, or it attempts to sound different, but it is the same amendment. And we have to understand that, but we need to explain it over and over again.

What these amendments try to do, and the King amendment is part of this approach, is to engage local law enforcement, local police departments, local sheriffs departments in enforcing immigration law. On its face that does not sound terrible, but in reality it is a major problem. That is the reason why just about every single local police department in the Nation has repeatedly stated that they do not want to take on the duties of enforcing immigration law.

Here is the problem. Whether you are here undocumented, or whether you are here legally awaiting citizenship or another status, and, in fact, I would venture to say if you are a citizen who looked at the immigration department as a group of folks who were not interested necessarily in helping you but making your life difficult, you do not feel comfortable dealing with immigration officials.

On the other hand, local police departments throughout this country have done a great job in letting immigrants, regardless of their status, know that they are here to help and they are here to work together with them. So what the local police departments have been able to accomplish above all is to gain the confidence of newly-arrived folks in this country so that when they see a crime, when they see someone committing a crime, they come forth, give information, participate and assist the police.

The reason local law enforcement does not want any of these amendments to pass or their involvement in enforcing immigration law, which would be the effect of this, is that they then would be seen by those immigrants as someone that cannot be trusted, someone they cannot deal with, and they will lose their ability to do what they do best, which is solve local crime and get the bad folks who create problems in our communities.

So, please, I would want everyone who looks at this series of amendments to pay attention to the fact that while it may look good on its face, the final result is local law enforcement officials being seen by the immigrant community as adversaries, as enemies in some cases. This is not what the police departments want to do. This is not what they should do, and this is not what we should ask them to do.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

We are opposed to the amendment. I want to put in the RECORD that we will be glad to work with the gentleman and bring the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Justice up and see if we can try to do what this amendment does not do, but we can really try to accomplish what they are trying to accomplish.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to Representative King's amendment to the Commerce Justice, and State Appropriations Act for FY2005. This is an indirect attempt to further the objectives of the CLEAR Act (H.R. 2671) and its Senate counterpart (S. 1906). These bills would compel State and local police officers to become federal immigration agents by denying them access to Federal funds they are already receiving if they refuse to become immigration agents.

Subsections (a) and (b) of section 642 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, 8 U.S.C. § 1373, (IIRIA) prohibits Federal, State or local government officials from preventing or restricting any government entity from exchanging information with the Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) regarding the citizenship status or immigration status of any individual. The King amendment would provide additional funds for enforcing these provisions. While these provisions just prohibit State and local governments from preventing this exchange of information, the ultimate objective, which is expressed in the CLEAR Act, is to require State and local police officers to assist ICE in enforcing the civil provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA). I oppose this objective.

In immigrant communities, it is particularly difficult for the police to establish the relationships that are the foundations for successful police work. Many immigrants come from countries in which people are afraid of police, who may be corrupt or even violent, and the prospect of being reported to the immigration service would be further reason for distrusting the police.

In some cities, criminals have exploited the fear that immigrant communities have of all law enforcement officials. For instance in Durham, North Carolina, thieves told their victims—in a community of migrant workers and new immigrants—that if they called the police they would be deported. Local police officers have found that people are being robbed multiple times and are not reporting the crimes because of such fear instilled by robbers. These immigrants are left vulnerable to crimes of all sorts, not just robbery.

Many communities find it difficult financially to support a police force with the personnel and equipment necessary to perform regular police work. Having State and local police forces report immigration status to ICE would be a misuse of these limited resources.

ICE also has limited resources. it does not have the resources it needs to deport dangerous criminal aliens, prevent persons from unlawfully entering or remaining in the United States, and enforce immigration laws in the interior of the country. Responding to every State and local police officer's report of someone who appears to be an illegal alien would prevent ICE from properly prioritizing its efforts.

Local police can and should report immigrants to the immigration service in some situations. The decision to contact the immigration service, however, should be a matter of police discretion.

I urge you to vote against this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I support the King Amendment, which would designate funds to enforce a section of the United States Code that has been law since 1996.

The Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, prohibits states and localities from refusing to share information with the Federal government on the immigration status of individuals.

Some localities don't allow their officers to report the illegal status of criminal aliens to the Federal government. This is a direct violation of Federal law and hinders our efforts to remove criminal immigrants from the United States. It turns these localities into resorts for illegal immigrants.

The Federal government cannot do its job of deporting criminal aliens if law enforcement is not telling the Federal government who these individuals are. This results in a situation where criminal aliens are arrested, jailed, and then released into our communities where they commit more crimes.

When State and local law enforcement officers arrest someone for a crime, and it becomes apparent that the person is an illegal alien, this should be reported to the Federal government so the individual can be deported. To hide the illegal status of a criminal alien only means more crime.

This amendment does nothing to change existing immigration law. This amendment simply requires the Federal government to enforce current law.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF MICHIGAN

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

Page 72, line 17, after the dollar amount insert ''(reduced by $20,000,000)''.

The CHAIRMAN. All point of orders are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This amendment is offered partially representing my concern that under the UC that was offered last night, this body would not allow the full amendment. However, under that UC this amendment is appropriate, according to the Parliamentarian.

My concern is that this body should express concern, if not outrage, about the actions of the United Nations in the Oil-for-Food program. It should be a heads-up, a reminder, that we cannot ask the United Nations to be responsible for so many things that affect our future.

The particular language of this amendment takes appropriations and dollars from United Nations contributions to international organizations line item. This appropriation is reduced by $20 million. I would call to my colleagues' attention that this appropriation is increased 19.4 percent over last year. Even with this amendment, there is still a 17.4 percent increase.

Recently, both my Committee on Agriculture and Committee on International Relations held hearings on the United Nations Oil-for-Food, the so-called OFF program, scandal. That program taught us a lot about the United Nations' weaknesses and I think explains the actions of countries like France and Russia when they worked against us over the last several years.

The U.N. placed trade sanctions on Iraq after Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait in 1991. By 1995, the sanctions were widely blamed for the developing humanitarian crisis in Iraq.

The U.S. and Britain realized that Iraq, which has the second largest oil reserves in the world, could trade oil for food and medicine. We pushed the U.N. Security Council Resolution 986, and the so-called Oil-for-Food program was created. If effective, it would have reduced the humanitarian impact of the sanctions while preventing Hussein from buying weapons.

Unfortunately, Hussein cheated the OFF program, and the U.N. did not stop it. He managed to get his hands on at least $10 billion of Oil-for-Food money. Other countries were complicit in helping him cheat. France and Russia demanded that we let Hussein design the OFF, the Oil-for-Food, program. It allowed Hussein to pick the price for his oil, to pick his customers, to control the people who audited him, and within a few years the flawed program allowed Hussein to sell at low prices in exchange for kickbacks that were funneled into Swiss bank accounts.

This was suspected at the time, but it was impossible to fix. Fixing it would have required unanimous support from the permanent members of the Security Council, including France and Russia, and at the time these countries said that they wanted to end the sanctions completely. Of course, France and Russia and China all had oil contracts with Iraq and Hussein that would have been activated, resulting in huge benefits for those countries had the sanctions been removed.

I repeat, this funding for this appropriation that we are trying to reduce by $20 million is from a line item that is increased 19.4 percent over last year, and even with the $20 million reduction still results in a 17.4 percent increase.

The U.N. bureaucrats and what is happening in the U.N. should concern us. There is no question that the U.N. was slow to file reports and bring irregularities to the attention of the Security Council and its oversight committee.

Furthermore, Iraq paid its U.N. auditors. Iraq, Saddam Hussein, was paying the auditors that were supposed to audit them, and the more trading they allowed, the more money the U.N. got.

These arrangements have only come to light since Saddam Hussein's fall. There are reports that even the U.N.'s head of the Oil-for-Food program, Benon Sevan, was on the take from Hussein.

Mr. Chairman, let us not go through this bill of making these kinds of huge appropriations from the United States taxpayers to the U.N. without calling to attention these kinds of discrepancies. The U.S. and Britain have pushed for an audit to find out what happened.

Paul Volcker, a former Chairman of the Federal Reserve, is heading a U.N. investigation. However, the U.N. is stonewalling. Mr. Sevan sent letters ordering U.N. offices to refuse to cooperate. I am going to say that again. This U.N. official sent letters ordering the U.N. offices to refuse to cooperate. Russia has asserted that it will not release any documents, and other U.N. bureaucrats have refused to share papers.

I have sponsored legislation that would cut U.S. support for the U.N. if it does not cooperate. I would hope that bill would at least come to this floor for debate.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would clarify that pursuant to the order of yesterday, this amendment is debatable for 10 minutes by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) and 10 minutes by an opponent.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong opposition to the amendment. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) for his persistence. He should get an ''A'' for that, if not for the content.

I called Volcker after this happened, and I have the same concern. I want to bring to the gentleman's attention, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) might get a copy of the report, page 107. Here is what we said.

''The Committee directs the Department to bring all necessary resources to bear on the investigation of fraud and bribery allegations regarding the United Nations Oil-for-Food program. The Committee expects the Department to provide all requested documentation to Congressional Committees, and to provide any requested support to the Secretary General's Independent Inquiry Committee. The Committee strongly supports this Inquiry and expects the Inquiry Committee's review to be thorough, rigorous and expeditious.''

Secondly, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), who has really done a good job, has been holding hearings.

I called Director Mueller, the Director of the FBI, and asked him would he give the best FBI agents that he has to be on the team with Volcker. He has agreed. He said he would get some of his best white-collar crime people. Mr. Volcker then called me and thanked me for that and is moving ahead, and he said when we need your help, we will ask you for that help.

We also are going to get FinCEN, the financial service center of the Department of the Treasury, to also be involved. We have also asked the Secret Service that does money laundering to be involved.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) is right, this ought to be condemned, and if the U.N. does not participate, if Volcker says he is not getting the cooperation, the only criticism of the Smith amendment is it will not do enough. It should not do $20 million; that is wimpy.

It should do $50 million, $60 million. It will be a wimpy amendment if they do not cooperate. Volcker has said he wants to pursue this, and he believes he is making progress. And the FBI and FinCEN and Secret Service will be involved.

Now, let me tell my colleagues what the Smith amendment does. It has nothing to do with that. It has nothing to do with that. It would cut money from the Food and Agricultural Organization. The Food and Agricultural Organization, where our former colleague, and my very best friend, Congressman Tony Hall, is running it and doing a lot to abolish hunger in the world, and talking about GMA and things that the gentleman is interested in, would be cut. That program would be cut.

The World Food Program. Jim Morris, an American, running the World Food Program, one of the people who are trying to bring food to Sudan and to Darfur, where there is a genocide, perhaps, going on. That organization would be involved.

Also, this amendment would impact on the International Atomic Energy Agency, whereby we are trying to make sure that Iran does not have nuclear weapons and is trying to deal with the issue of North Korea. Why would we want to go after them?

Lastly, NATO. This would cut all the international organizations. Why would we, when NATO is in Afghanistan and we are trying to get NATO to participate, as I believe they should in Iraq, and quite frankly I am disappointed that the Germans and French have not participated with us, why would we do this at this time?

Now, I think in fairness, that is not the intention of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH). I think the gentleman is trying to make a point, but the point is a very blunt point. And to cut FAO, to cut the Atomic Energy Agency, to go after NATO, and to deal with the World Food Program and the FAO, which is trying to bring an end to the famine and the hunger in Eritrea, Ethiopia, and particularly in Darfur would be a mistake.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. Chairman, let me just say that this is cut from one of the largest expenditures in the United Nations appropriations, that is, to the contributions to international organizations. I think the American taxpayer in general is not willing to increase this account by 19.4 percent at a time that the gentleman from Virginia admits that the U.N. is doing something that is unconscionable and that should not be acceptable.

When we have other countries that are complicit, apparently, in this graft-type program of oil for food, along with what appears to be a reluctance of the United Nations to cooperate, we need a signal. I would hope this $20 million would be spent for science and research, because I chair the Subcommittee on Research.

Mr. WOLF. Reclaiming my time, it is not. And I do not think the gentleman would want to do anything that would hurt Volcker with regard to the efforts. I would rather have the FBI and the Secret Service and the Financial Center there.

Also, when the gentleman says independent agencies, that is also the World Food Program. That is also the issue with regard to the SARS outbreak in China. We do not want SARS to come here to the United States. And NATO.

So for all those reasons, and God bless the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH), I give him an A for the intention and effort to pursue this, and I hope we see his son here next year taking his place, but this amendment that he meant to do does not do what he meant to do. I think it would do a lot of harm; and due to that, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

One of the reasons I did not ask the chairman for time and took my own time is I did not want to say anything the chairman did not agree with on his time. But I would imagine that the sponsor of this amendment has not voted against expenditures for the war, and yet he is concerned about expenditures for international organizations, my point being that this is probably the worst time in our history to withdraw from international organizations.

We are, and I am one of those who believes that we were wrong in invading Iraq; I am one of those who believes that we were misled on every issue, including weapons of mass destruction and to go into this war. But whether we were misled or not and whether one agrees with me or not, the end result is the same. We are rebuilding the country; and an incredible amount of money, paid for by the taxpayers, is going into Iraq.

And especially at a time now when so many people in that region and throughout the world have lost respect for us, this is not the time to withdraw from international organizations. On the contrary, this is the time when we should take some of that money we are spending on rebuilding in Iraq, some of that money we are spending on that war and use it to join still more organizations.

Why? Because, unlike the war, and unlike the invasion, these organizations give us an opportunity to look as the people we are, a good, caring Nation that cares about the rest of the people in the world and wants to help; not one that invades people on false assumptions and premises.

So I would say to the gentleman that his concern about taxpayer dollars being spent here, right now this is probably one of the better areas to spend taxpayer dollars, and not in the areas we are spending them right now. I would really wish that the gentleman would reconsider this amendment, because this amendment, unfortunately, may get some people's excitement up and foolishly support it in a way that would hurt our involvement.

Even President Bush, lately, has been quoted as saying that he is supportive of the work the U.N. is doing and the kinds of things that have to be done.

Lastly, the gentleman is still, as some Members are, upset at the fact that the Germans and the Russians and the French did not agree with us on this particular invasion. Well, we do not agree with them on a lot of things and that does not mean we drop out of dealing with them on a daily basis and working with them to make a better world for all of us.

So I would hope the gentleman would reconsider this. If not, then I would hope that people vote ''no'' on this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask how much time I have remaining, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would ask the ranking member if he does not object to the fact that the United Nations took $400 million of what was intended to be money to pay for inspections at a time when they were not having inspections.

I would ask the ranking member if he is not concerned with a report from the Wall Street Journal that the U.N. took $100 million from the Oil-For-Food Program and used it for operations.

I would be concerned whether the ranking member or any Republican or any Democrat is not concerned with the fact that a United Nations employee who was handling the Oil-For-Food Program, Mr. Sevan, has now written letters, according to Mr. Volcker's staff, suggesting that the information not be released regarding this program.

It is obvious there has been some misuse of money. I would like to suggest that the real story here is that many countries make decisions based on what is good for their country as representatives to the United Nations with no regard for the goals and ideals of the U.N. charter. Certainly this calls the Security Council's moral authority into question and degrades its capacity to respond appropriately to events throughout the world.

Is it any wonder that under pressure from these countries the U.N. could not agree to support us in Iraq? Is it any wonder that at the first threat of danger the U.N. pulled out of Iraq?

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we need to carry out a full and thorough investigation and make changes if the U.S. is to continue with some degree of confidence. And we need to send this signal of this reduction with this kind of testimony regarding a $20 million reduction for the U.N. I think this action sends the beginning of a message that our country and the taxpayers of this country will not stand for this kind of abuse.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. How much time do I have left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has 4½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WOLF. And then I can strike the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. Plus the gentleman has the pro forma motion.

Mr. WOLF. I thank the Chair. I wanted to be sure there was time for the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) to speak.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, if all the things have been done that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) thinks have been done, and I think they may have, the Smith amendment is a power puff amendment. It is too weak. We will follow this carefully. If they have done it, then I think it should be more drastic.

I would call to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan page 26 of the report. It says: ''Oil-For-Food: The committee directs the FBI to provide assistance in the United Nations' investigation of the Oil-For-Food Program, if requested by the recently established independent inquiry committee chaired by Paul Volcker. The committee strongly supports this investigation and encourages the FBI to make resources available as appropriate to assure its successful conclusion.''

So I think what the gentleman from Michigan is saying is accurate; and we will be very, very aggressive, but we called Mr. Volcker. I personally called the director of the FBI. He personally gave me a commitment to put his very best agents on this.

Having said that, I think the gentleman's language would be better if it had been conditional, saying that if there is not cooperation by the Russians and by others, then this will be the case. But I do not want to do anything to keep Volcker from getting to the bottom of this.

There are probably people involved in this that may very well go to jail, and I want to see the Secret Service, the Financial Service, and the FBI deal with this. So the amendment does not deal with that; it cuts, potentially, contributions to NATO or something like that.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLF. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me. I will place my full statement in the RECORD and just make a few other points.

First off, this is a huge scandal. I do not know any scandal that comes close to it. We are talking about a $5.7 billion smuggling of oil, a $4.4 billion underselling of oil and getting kickbacks, and overbuying for commodities and getting kickbacks. We are talking about the outing of U.N. and government officials around the world by, ironically, an Iraqi free press, exposed by a government leak of the Iraqi Governing Council.

This is huge. And I submit to my colleagues that the French and the Russians and the Chinese and U.N. officials never thought it would be known, because they knew they had their records and they would keep them. They would never share them with anyone, and we certainly would not get the records from Iraq because we would never attack Iraq and never free the Iraqi people. I guess that is what people thought.

The problem with this amendment is it is misguided, in the sense that we need the cooperation of the U.N. right now. If we do not get it, and if the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) is still here, we should pursue that. But when he asks is anyone concerned, I know the ranking member is concerned. I clearly know the chairman is because he came to me and told me that in conversations with Mr. Volcker he promised him that we would provide all the cooperation and provide him the best resources available. So I appreciate what the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has done.

Are we concerned? Absolutely. We have the Committee on Government Reform and my Subcommittee on National Security, Emerging Threats and International Relations, conducting investigations. We have staff dedicated to looking at this. I think we have the Committee on Agriculture looking at this. We have the Committee on International Relations looking at this. We will get to the bottom of the corrupt Oil-For-Food Program with or without U.N. support.

When we do, I do think people will be going to jail. I think it will be extraordinarily embarrassing for some governments. I think it might explain somehow why the French act like the French, and why the Chinese and the Russians were reluctant to confront the Saddam regime. I think it is going to tell us a lot of things about corrupt people, corrupt actions, and the motivations of government. But right now we need as much cooperation as we can get from the U.N.

I would request, frankly, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman withdraw his amendment and not require folks to vote for or against it, because I think the concern of the Members will be shown of the next few months. But I appreciate the opportunity the gentleman has given us to debate this issue.

Mr. Chairman, while I appreciate and share the gentleman from Michigan's concern about the Oil-For-Food scandal, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

Getting to the bottom of this scandal is the reason my Subcommittee on National Security, Emerging Threats, and International Relations convened a hearing on April 21; we want to help pierce the veil of secrecy that still shrouds the largest humanitarian aid effort in history.

This much we know about the Oil-for-Food Program; Something went wrong. The Hussein regime reaped an estimated $10.1 billion from this program: $5.7 in smuggled oil and $4.4 in oil surcharges and kickbacks on humanitarian purchases through the Oil-For-Food Program. There is no innocent explanation for this.

We want the State Department, the intelligence community, and the U.N. to know there has to be a full accounting of all Oil-For-

Food transactions, even if that unaccustomed degree of transparency embarrasses some members of the Security Council.

The purpose of our investigation, beyond returning to the Iraqi people that which was stolen from them, should be to improve the United Nations, not to create an excuse to withdraw our support from the body.

In Iraq, and elsewhere, the world needs an impeccably clean, transparent U.N. The dominant instrument of multilateral diplomacy should embody our highest principles and aspirations, not systematically sink to the lowest common denominator of political profiteering.

This emerging scandal is a huge black mark against the United Nations and only a prompt and thorough accounting, including punishment for any found culpable, will restore U.N. credibility and integrity.

That is why it is critical to get to the bottom of the corruption.

In the early 1990s, because of concerns about United Nations operations and the lack of reforms by that body, the United States began withholding its payments to the U.N. and fell into arrears. We subsequently debated this issue for years, and, in November 1999, Congress and the administration finally agreed on a plan to repay our longstanding debt to the U.N. in exchange for significant reforms by the world body.

Mr. Chairman, as the U.N.'s single largest contributor, the United States is granted unparalleled power to craft the U.N.'s agenda and budget. Our financial leadership truly gives us the ability to shape world events.

Countries all over the world are looking to the United States for leadership, yet if this amendment were to pass, what they would see is a very powerful and wealthy country refusing to live up to its international commitments. Why, as a nation, would we want to unnecessarily complicate our diplomatic efforts at a time when we need every ounce of leverage?

While we must continue examining its operations and recommending operational improvements, the United Nations deserves U.S. support as it continues to combat terrorism, promote economic growth and assist countries in moving toward democracy.

I urge opposition to this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just like to ask the previous speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), if he agrees with a 19.4 percent increase in this appropriation line item.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHAYS. Absolutely I do. Because the U.N. needs these resources for a lot of reasons and the nongovernment organizations that are involved in trying to help create some peace in Iraq, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. I do not think it is advisable, though, to subtract this money.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I do not think a 19.4 percent increase is justified at a time when the United Nations has instructed its people to withhold information from the Volcker Commission.

I do not think it is justified; and I would say to the chairman, if there was unanimous consent from him and the ranking member, and if there is no objection and it would be appropriate, I would be delighted to amend this amendment to say that this $20 million would be withheld on condition of full cooperation by other countries and by the United Nations.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

□ 1430

Mr. WOLF. I would have no objection to that at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would you support the amendment with that language?

Mr. WOLF. If it would say what again?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If it says that the $20 million is going to be withheld unless and until there is full cooperation by the United Nations and participating countries releasing available information on the Oil-for-Food program?

Mr. WOLF. Absolutely I would support it, and perhaps it maybe ought to be changed from 20- to 40-, but yes, I would support it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to change that, too. If there is no objection, I would make that amendment. I would ask for unanimous consent.

I understand that it has to be in writing. Is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman would withdraw his amendment, he could redraft his amendment so that it is clear, then without prejudice it could be considered, without objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw it, with the understanding that I could redraft it and bring it to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that the amendment be withdrawn without prejudice?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT NO. 25 OFFERED BY MR. SHERMAN

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 25 offered by Mr. SHERMAN:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to detain for more than 30 days a person, apprehended on United States territory, solely because that person is classified as an enemy combatant.

SEC. 802. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to defend in court the detention for more than 30 days of a person, apprehended on United States territory, solely because that person is classified as an enemy combatant.

SEC. 803. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to classify any person as an enemy combatant if that person is apprehended on United States territory.

The CHAIRMAN. All points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

As I indicated, I have two amendments that I would hope that those who wish to speak on either of them would be on the way to this floor.

My first amendment deals with the enemy combatant doctrine, and what the bill does is that it provides that none of the funds in this act can be used to detain for more than 30 days anyone apprehended on U.S. territory solely because that person is identified as an enemy combatant. That is to say, detention of over 30 days of anyone apprehended in the United States would be done under our regular criminal law.

Now, first let us talk about what this amendment is not. This amendment does not try to protect our privacy. There will be incursions into our privacy in this war on terror, but it is one thing to say the government may know something about what we are doing or reading. It is another thing to say that the executive branch alone can incarcerate any of us permanently, and that is the wrong that this amendment addresses.

Second, this amendment is not about those apprehended on foreign battlefields or on any foreign territory. It addresses only those apprehended on U.S. territory.

Third, this amendment does not authorize any Federal agency to do anything. It is a limitation amendment, and so by its terms, it prevents the use of funds to detain someone for over 30 days. That does not authorize anyone to detain someone for 29 days. This is an additional limitation on the expenditure of funds.

Now, the enemy combatant doctrine is the most dangerous doctrine propounded by anyone in this country. What does our criminal law do, and how does it work? First, Congress defines what is a crime. Then the judicial branch determines whether facts have occurred so that the defendant is guilty of that crime.

What is the enemy combatant doctrine? The administration vaguely defines what might be the crime, and that is subject to change any time they want, and the administration, whoever that might be, determines whether facts have occurred that cause someone to have committed that crime or that wrong.

So is someone an enemy combatant if they plant a bomb? Are they an enemy combatant if they applaud a bomb planter? Are they an enemy combatant if they defend someone who applauds planting a bomb? We do not know, but we do know that if you are classified as an enemy combatant, you can be incarcerated immediately, permanently, or at least until the end of the war on terror, which I would say means the same as permanently.

Now, is someone a bomb planter, or is it a case of mistaken identity? Under the enemy combatant doctrine, the courts do not determine whether a particular individual planted a bomb. The executive branch determines, locks the person up permanently or for as long as they think that person is dangerous, no matter how mistaken they might be.

Now, the courts have not solved this problem. We do have a recent court opinion, actually three of them, but in dealing with this issue, we have not a majority opinion, but a plurality opinion. So the court has not spoken with the majority. And on the key issues involved that I am speaking about, they remanded the case to a lower court.

It is time now for Congress to do all it can to reign in this doctrine of enemy combatants. To do otherwise, to be silent, as we have been for over a year, is to acquiesce in a new doctrine of criminal law where the executive can arrest anyone, after that arrest determine what it is that makes up the definition of enemy combatant, and then decide what facts have occurred, subject to no judicial review, as to whether that person has, in fact, violated those wrongs as previously determined by the administration. This is indeed a dangerous doctrine.

Today I do not know whether it is being misused, but if we do not act, I assure you it will be misused in the future. Someone will be erroneously accused of bomb-making by some local enemy of theirs. The executive will have detained that person for as long as they think they are dangerous and for as long as the war on terrorism continues. That could be for a long time.

Tomorrow those who simply loudly protest the war on terrorism will be called enemy combatants.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER), the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, let me say one does not have to go too far with this amendment before finding a very strong point for defeating the amendment and objecting to it. Quoting section 802, it states that none of the funds made available in this act may be used to defend in court. So the U.S. cannot even send in people to defend in court the detention for more than 30 days of a person apprehended on United States territory solely because that person is classified as an enemy combatant.

Very simply, we have people who have been in Guantanamo, in fact who have been released from Guantanamo, who have been proven to have gone back to the battlefield and taken up arms against the United States.

If the Sherman amendment passed, if we caught Osama bin Laden in the U.S. tomorrow, the Department of Justice would not be able to legally defend his detention as an enemy combatant. That makes absolutely no sense.

It states further that none of the funds made available in this act may be used to classify any person as an enemy combatant if that person is apprehended on United States territory. We could have somebody driving a hijacked airplane and clearly in an act of aggression against the United States, and none of the funds available in this act, even if that person intended and was attempting to drive that airplane into a U.S. building, killing Americans, none of the funds in this act could be used to classify that person as an enemy combatant.

So interestingly, the Supreme Court cases that have held on this subject have said at least the combatant is entitled to some type of a hearing to determine whether, in fact, he is a combatant and whether he is being held legally. Well, a hearing requires that there are attorneys present and that there are advocates for and against the position. If we take section 208 of the Sherman amendment, we cannot spend any of this money to have the lawyer representing the United States of America to make his point that that person is a combatant and that we cannot hold him for longer than 30 days.

I would simply ask Members to vote against this amendment on this basis: It makes absolutely no sense. It in no way represents or reflects determinations made in the relevant court cases with respect to enemy combatants, detainees at Guantanamo or any other place.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, what we use to protect American citizens is our criminal law. If bin Laden arrives in the United States, he has already been indicted. If someone smashes an airplane into a building, I suggest they be arrested for murder. What defends us from terrorists; how do we deal with mass murderers? We arrest them.

Why do we need instead to use this new doctrine of enemy combatant? To say that our only choice is to abdicate to the executive branch determining who has committed a wrong and what wrongs justify incarceration, or we have to incarcerate no one ignores the criminal law as we know it.

Yes, those who commit crimes should be arrested and detained, not under the doctrine of enemy combatancy, but under the doctrine of criminal law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, while I was watching the spectacular fireworks July 4 over the Washington Monument, I was reminded that our Revolution and experiment in freedom and liberty is still going on. We are still faced with struggles to protect our basic freedoms. We are still faced with the need to occasionally rein in unchecked authority of the executive branch of government.

We still need to stand up for the proposition that no Chief Executive should be able to throw into a dark, deep cell an American citizen without eventually affording that citizen a trial. That is a basic American proposition.

We still believe that reviewing an incarceration decision by the judicial system is the best way to ensure both security and liberty. And make no mistake, we face real threats to our physical safety, and those miscreants ought to be punished to the full extent of the law.

But we have always founded our democracy on the proposition that detention ultimately must be subject to a hearing and a review, and we should not abandon that principle now out of fear. In the words of Supreme Court Justice Stevens, we ''have created a unique and unprecedented threat to the freedom of every American citizen,'' and that ''unconstrained executive detention for the purpose of investigating and preventing subversive activity is the hallmark of the Star Chamber.''

Freedom is not free. It demands us to stand up against threats to freedom. It calls for us to speak against unchecked executive authority, just like what was done in 1776. And while I disagree with the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN), I am against the right of any President to throw someone in a dark cell and never give him a trial.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON).

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, while I believe misguided, is nonetheless a very important amendment because it changes the parameters, or at least it seeks to change the parameters, of the definition of enemy combatant.

□ 1445

It seeks to force in this case the United States to treat enemy combatants as criminals rather than as enemy combatants, and it fails to recognize, therefore, one very significant change that has taken place, something that is very different about this war that then existed in any war in modern history, and that is that there is no doubt that the attacks of September 11 constituted acts of war, and, therefore, by definition the United States territory, the 50 States and our territories, are part of the battlefield.

The gentleman from California's (Mr. SHERMAN) amendment does not seek to curb the definition of enemy combatant as it applies to Guantanamo or as it applies to Iran or Afghanistan, just the United States. So the gentleman makes a difference between the part of the battlefield that is offshore and the part of the battlefield that is onshore in this case. And I think that goes to create a mistake, because it places 30-day limits on the detention of an enemy combatant by the Department of Justice. What that means is that if the FBI apprehends an enemy combatant in the process of trying to carry out an act of terrorism in the United States, and he is charged by the Department of Justice and imprisoned, he can only be held for 30 days, and that seems to me to go in the wrong direction. It means that if Mohammad Atta were picked up and identified as an enemy combatant, that he would have to be released in 30 days.

The Sherman amendment kind of reminds me of when I chaired the Subcommittee on Fisheries Conservation, Wildlife and Oceans for 6 years, and it sounds like what the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) really wants to do is he wants the war on terror to be run like a catch-and-release fish tournament, and that obviously is something that we do not want to see done here.

So I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to oppose this well-intended amendment, but which takes us in exactly the opposite direction we should be going.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The gentleman assumes that we have no criminal law. He suggests that if a bomber is caught red-handed, we cannot charge him with being a bomber. We cannot arrest him. We cannot indict him. We cannot try him. We either have to release him, or we have to have this new doctrine of enemy combatants. I suggest if we catch a bomber, we arrest him. He suggests a doctrine in which anyone could be called an enemy combatant for doing whatever the administration thinks is harmful to the United States and incarcerated forever, and that the only alternative is to release all terrorists to swim amongst us.

What a preposterous alternative. What an attempt to put in the hands of the executive branch the right to arrest anyone and permanently detain them and to say that the only alternative is to release Mohammad Atta.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, in most of our wars, we have done things that have trampled civil liberties in the name of national security. Invariably we end up apologizing for it later when historians say that the internment of the Japanese Americans in World War II or the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 or whatever did not, in fact, aid national security. We are doing it again.

The Supreme Court 1½ weeks ago made very clear that we cannot simply hold people indefinitely by labeling them an enemy combatant. They gave a broad hint that when the Padilla case comes up, they will tell us that this amendment is mild, and that the power the President claims to throw anybody in jail in the United States because the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) says that the United States is a battlefield and hold them there indefinitely simply on their own say-so with no due process, this is a power that nobody has claimed since before the Magna Carta. Habeas corpus was invented to say that the President is a President; even a king is not a dictator.

Let me finally say that this amendment is necessary to say that we will fight this war against the terrorists, but we will fight it as Americans in the tradition of liberty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that each side be given an additional 15 seconds.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I will quote from Sir Thomas More in the play ''A Man for all Seasons,'' because we are told we must eliminate our traditions of liberty to get at the terrorists. Sir Thomas More was asked: ''So now you'd give the Devil benefit of law?

And More said: ''Yes. What would you do? Cut a great road through the law to get after the devil?''

''I'd cut down every law in England to do that.''

And Sir Thomas More finally said: ''Oh? And when the last law was down and the Devil turned round on you, where would you hide, the laws all being flat? This country's planted thick with laws from coast to coast, and if you cut them down, do you really think you could stand upright in the winds that would blow then? Yes, I'd give the Devil benefit of law, for my own safety's sake.''

And that is why this amendment must pass.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

This amendment raises serious constitutional issues which we should not deal with on this appropriations bill. This amendment has no limitations as to applying only to U.S. citizens or only applying to the global war on terrorism. It applies to any situation where the U.S. may be in conflict, and it would apply to anyone, not only U.S. citizens.

Under the proposed amendment, the President would not be able to detain anyone who is in this country on a mission for al Qaeda or any organization or country that had chosen to attack the United States. He would not be able to detain that person for more than 30 days as an enemy combatant. Instead, he would have to release the citizen or that person or prosecute him criminally. That change in the law would deprive the Commander in Chief of one of the traditional tools used in warfare and one that is particularly critical in the struggle with a secretive enemy like the current war on terrorism, like al Qaeda, because of the extent to which the United States must rely on intelligence sources to ferret out al Qaeda plots.

The reason that the executive may need the ability to detain a citizen as an enemy combatant is that proving a criminal case in court will often require compromising critical intelligence sources. As the Deputy Attorney General recently explained in discussing the Jose Padilla case, the one and only case of an American citizen seized as an enemy combatant in the United States, ''Had we tried to make a case against Jose Padilla through our criminal justice system,'' it would have ''jeopardized intelligence sources.'' And to be very clear, in this war jeopardizing the intelligence sources means putting American lives at risk. It is to avoid that very real threat to continued success of the war effort that criminal prosecutions may not always be a practical possibility for dealing with enemy combatants.

This amendment, although well intentioned, and though perhaps raising some issues that need to be discussed, they should be discussed going through the committee process and should not be hastily put onto an appropriations bill as an amendment without going through a full debate.

I urge my colleagues to be opposed to this amendment because of the severe limitations it will place on the executive branch, it will place on our ability to conduct not only a global war on terrorism, but any enemy combatants in the future.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER), who serves on the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an area we have to be pretty careful about. This is a very serious question, and, in fact, it raises grave constitutional questions that are unsettled, the principles of separation of power.

But with that aside, it also gets kind of confusing. So let us go back to not only our own Constitution, but also the Geneva Conventions. The Geneva Conventions under Article 5 say if one captures an individual and they know who they are, then they are automatically by the capturing power given POW status. If there is any doubt with regard to their status, under the Geneva Conventions, the capturing power then is to conduct what are called Article 5 tribunals.

What has happened here is when there is no doubt of the status of the individual, the executive branch has made the decision, then obviously they are not a POW; so they are not afforded the protections of the Geneva Conventions. And if they are not afforded in a tribunal Article 5 because their status is not in doubt, there is a term of art that has been used. They are called an enemy combatant, but they also can be called security detainees, unprivileged belligerents, unlawful combatants.

This is a very dangerous area what this amendment tries to do. It tries to dance into the area of the executive branch and say we cannot classify individuals as to these types of things.

Mr. Chairman, we are in a very unsettled part of the law. I have made a couple of notes with regard to the speakers who spoke before me who said that we need to rein in the doctrine. That is false because this is a doctrine that has been used very sparingly. In the 3 years for which we have had the war on terrorism, there is only one United States citizen that has been classified as an enemy combatant and has been detained, and if we were to only use the ''criminal process,'' what we then do is jeopardize our intelligence. And we are operating a war predominantly in the dark world. It is an intelligence war against a secret enemy, and for us to jeopardize that by going to the public domain is foolish on our part.

Doing this on an appropriations bill, number one, using the word ''foolish,'' that is foolish. We should not be doing that. The gentleman would like to entertain greater discussions on this. Let us take it through the authorizing committees, and let us, in fact, do that.

The other said that it is unchecked executive authority. That is false. It is not unchecked because we have the checks and balances, and that is why this case was taken to the Supreme Court.

I also would like to note that there is nothing, nothing, in current law requires resorting solely to criminal prosecutions. In the recent Hamdi decision, the United States Supreme Court did not directly address the Padilla scenario, but a majority of the Justices clearly agreed that ''there is no bar to this Nation's holding one of its own citizens as an enemy combatant.''

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) has 15 seconds remaining.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. COX), chairman of the Select Committee on Homeland Security.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, we are playing a dangerous game here. If the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) had written an amendment that dealt with how U.S. citizens are treated, whether they can be found to be enemy combatants and detained, we might have had an interesting discussion. There has been, for example, discussion of the Jose Padilla case during this debate. But that is not the amendment that he wrote.

The amendment that he wrote does not even apply strictly to terrorism. It applies to conventional warfare. So that if Adolph Hitler's Panzer Division were to land here in America, every single one of the Nazi troops would have to be sent through the judicial system. We could not deal with them as an enemy force. If Kim Jong-il sends his million-man army to land on America's shores, if they were to arrive in amphibious vehicles and roll tanks through our streets, every single one of those millions would have to be treated as a litigant in court under this amendment.

We have never done this before. Least of all should we be doing this in an appropriations bill. These sorts of novel concepts that strip the Commander in Chief of his authority to conduct war for the United States of America that I would say that go so far as to completely upend the legal right of the United States to defend itself should not be written on the back of an envelope and attached as authorizing language essentially in an appropriations bill.

Here is what the amendment says. It is a very short amendment. It says that we cannot use any of the funds available in this act to detain for more than 30 days a person apprehended on U.S. territory even if that person is an enemy combatant.

□ 1500

So we are not talking about people who might or might not be enemies of the United States. We are talking about people from foreign soil, not U.S. citizens, whether they be generals or troops, armies, coming over here. These people must be handled through the judicial legal system.

This is an outrageous interference with the ability of the United States to defend itself. It is very dangerous. I strongly urge my colleagues to defeat it.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS).

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up on what the gentleman from California said about this very simple amendment, and it is a very simple amendment. It simply says that if Mohamad Atta, you remember him, the leader of the 19 hijackers, if Mohamad Atta had been caught in this country prior to 9/11, this act would prohibit him from being classified as an enemy combatant. It would prohibit the funds to hold him for more than 30 days; it would prohibit the Justice Department from using any money to designate him as an enemy combatant.

If a terrorist in Iraq blows up a car bomb and it kills 50 people, he can be held an unlimited amount of time. If he is in the United States, this says if he is in the United States, whether he is a citizen or not, he cannot be held for over 30 days, and this says no funds may be used to classify any person as an enemy combatant.

Mr. Chairman, we are in a war; and there are people in this country who are against us, and they need to be designated as such.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. To drop this on this committee a day before it is brought up, I do not care what side you are on, it just should not be done that way.

How would this amendment treat Osama bin Laden? How would it treat Mohamad Atta? How would it treat people like that?

This amendment should be certainly covered by extensive hearings by the Committee on the Judiciary and also the Committee on Armed Services, but not language that we got yesterday with no opportunity to look at the impact.

Would this language result in the release of a terrorist? Should we look at and fully explore the ramifications and the consequences? Could the result of this be the release of a terrorist within the United States to commit further terrorist acts?

The amendment would prevent an enemy combatant from being detained, would prevent Osama bin Laden, let us not say enemy combatant, would prevent Osama bin Laden from being detained for more than 30 days. What is the rationale for only being able to detain Osama bin Laden for 30 days? Should it be 45 days?

A bad amendment, late, not the approach. I urge a ''no'' vote.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Sherman amendment that would limit the use of the enemy combatant doctrine to detain persons indefinitely.

While this amendment would only apply to those apprehended on U.S. soil, the government has detained American citizens, individuals whose rights are without a doubt protected by the U.S. Constitution, without charging them or allowing their case to be brought before our judicial system. This is simply wrong.

How can we expect the rest of the world to respect our way of life if we do not even adhere to the principles we claim to hold dear?

How can we expect our own constituents to believe in the protection of their rights if the rights of others are trampled on?

The Supreme Court recently determined that foreign citizens detained at Guantánamo Bay and American citizens detained in military brigs are entitled to their day in court.

Clearly, it's time that this Administration begin to respect the rights of the people it claims are criminals. The Fifth Amendment of the Constitution provides for due process of law, and it's time we remembered that.

I thank my friend Representative SHERMAN for offering this amendment today, and I urge my colleagues to support his amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

The amendment was rejected.

VACATING WITHDRAWAL OF SMITH OF MICHIGAN AMENDMENT

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the Smith amendment was withdrawn without prejudice be vacated, to the end that the Chair now put the question thereon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak on his reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do, Mr. Chairman, just for an explanation to the body. Originally, we thought we could work out a word change that would be acceptable, but it would still be subject to a unanimous consent request. We were informed there would be an objection, so that is why we vacated the rewording of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) will be postponed.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HEFLEY

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEFLEY:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE ___—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. ___. Of the funds appropriated in this Act under the first paragraph of the heading ''COURTS OF APPEALS, DISTRICT COURTS, AND OTHER JUDICIAL SERVICES—SALARIES AND EXPENSES'', not more than $7,500,000 shall be available for the United States Court of Federal Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment to reduce the budget for the U.S. Court of Federal Claims by one-half. Due to an unchecked law, a handful of Federal judges who decide claims against the government are collecting full-time wages for less than part-time work.

The judges on the U.S. Court of Federal Claims are appointed for 15 years, but jurists turn their terms into lifetime appointments by remaining as senior judges and collecting their full six-figure salaries. Currently, the Federal claims court has 16 active judges, and it has 13 senior-status judges.

The workload of the court is hardly burdensome, as it averages fewer than two trials a year. While a handful of senior judges work a full docket, others handle only a fraction of their former caseloads; and still others, Mr. Chairman, still others do no cases whatsoever. They keep an empty docket. Yet all of them are paid the full-time Federal judge salary of $158,000 a year.

This is known in the legal profession by lawyers who know this court, it is called ''charmed existence,'' and it is an abuse of judicial authority and a waste of taxpayer money. I would hope we would support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment; but the committee will look at this issue, because I tend to agree with the gentleman on the circumstances involved. If they want to retire, they should retire. But, unfortunately, I do not think this amendment gets to that.

The amendment would effectively reduce the amount of funds available to the U.S. Court of Federal Claims. A $7.5 million reduction would more than fully encompass the entire budget of the Clerk's office, both operating expenses, as well as salaries and benefits for the approximately 30 staff employed by the court, which is currently about $3 million.

It is uncertain how the remaining reduction would be absorbed, since most of the remaining costs are contractual, rent and the judges' salaries and benefits. So while the judges and chambers staff would remain on board, with no Clerk's office staff or operating funding, the court would eventually cease operations, few if any cases could be tried, and the backlog would grow.

In addition, this would result in extreme delay for plaintiffs in the more than 2,000 cases that are currently pending before the court that are waiting to have their cases against the U.S. Government.

In addition, because the court was created in part to give citizens a court with jurisdiction to consider claims against the government, it would not be unreasonable to think that this could be viewed by some as a way to eliminate the government's liability in cases brought against it.

So for those reasons, what it would do to the court, I oppose the amendment. But I would urge the Committee on the Judiciary to look into this whole issue of terms. I think once they are judges, they are judges. When they retire, to take a senior status and take no or few cases and still draw their full salary, quite frankly, it is not right.

So I think what the committee will do is to draft a letter, send a letter to the court of claims, the chief justice, to ask them to look into this. But I do not want to shut the whole court down.

Because of that, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman agreeing to look into this; and I think that is important, whether this amendment passes or not.

There is somewhat of a movement within the other body to shut that court down completely. The value of it, there is a real question about it.

In a recent Associated Press story, let me just quote a few lines from it, it says, ''Judges on a little known Federal court that decides claims against the government are appointed for 15 years, but collect their full six-figure salaries for the lifetime of the workload average, and they average fewer than two trials each in one recent year.'' It goes on to say, ''Taxpayers are spending top dollar for full-time judges who do not even perform part-time work.''

Finally, the statement is made, ''They go from doing next to nothing to doing nothing and we are paying for it.''

We still leave over $7 million in the budget for this court. We are not doing away with the court entirely. That decision is not being made at this point. I do not think this would be the appropriate place to do that. But this is a way to get at the abuse that is going on with that particular court and the abuse of taxpayer dollars.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I would ask for an ''aye'' vote.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I again rise in opposition. But I think the Committee on the Judiciary, and we will also look at whether this court ought to be abolished, I think this Congress passes things and creates things. Maybe this ought to be transferred to the D.C. Court of Appeals or some other court. If the conditions are the way that the gentleman said, my sense is maybe it just ought to be abolished. But until it is there, these 2,000 cases are moving. So maybe I would be very supportive of abolishing it, but I think they have to be able to operate.

So for that reason, we will do a letter. We will do a letter to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) asking him to look at this issue, as to whether or not the court ought to stay in existence.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) will be postponed.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SHERMAN

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERMAN:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following new title:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act to the Department of Justice may be used to implement, litigate or defend the legality of, or enforce the regulations prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency and published in the Federal Register on January 13, 2004, at 69 Fed. Reg. 1895—1904 (relating to the scope of visitorial powers of the Comptroller of the Currency) and at 69 Fed. Reg. 1904—1917 (relating to applicability and preemption of State law with respect to national bank operations).

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved.

Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) and a Member opposed will each control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This is the Sherman-Otter-Gutierrez amendment dealing with an issue very different from the one I was speaking about just a few minutes ago. But before I address this amendment, let me address that other amendment dealing with the enemy combatant doctrine.

First, of course, we did lose on the voice vote. I should point out for the record there were only six Members present here on the floor at the time.

The reason I did not call for a recorded vote is because I agree with some of the speakers on the other side. We need a better-crafted, more-considered amendment than the one I wrote. That is why the authorizing committees, particularly the Committee on the Judiciary, need to focus on this issue.

It is only frustration that after a year the Committee on the Judiciary has slept while this doctrine, which would allow not for the arrest only of Osama bin Laden, he could be arrested tomorrow, he has already been indicted, not for the arrest of Mohamad Atta, he could be arrested in a minute on a whole variety of charges. Somebody caught red-handed making a bomb could be arrested in a minute. But, rather, we have a doctrine out there that could lead to the permanent detention of people due to mistaken identity, could lead to somebody being permanently detained, because there is some local enemy that mis-accuses the individual, and eventually could be used by an administration to detain anyone it felt was an enemy of that administration.

So I look forward to a Committee on the Judiciary that does its job and a criminal code that criminalizes those things for which people should be incarcerated, and we do not incarcerate people because only one branch of government acts.

Now let me shift to the Sherman-Otter-Gutierrez amendment. It deals with an entirely different issue. That issue is that renegade regulators at the OCC published just a few months ago a regulation stating that all national banks are exempt from all State consumer protection laws.

This is an extreme and an absurd regulatory provision. It is one that would cause national banks to be free from all of the attempts by State governments to prevent predatory lending.

Now, I believe that we ought to have national standards, national standards to protect consumers from predatory lending practices and national standards to make sure that subprime borrowers are able to get credit. But to have this decision made by a renegade regulator is absurd.

I agree with those who say that this is an issue that should be dealt with by the relevant committee, the Committee on Financial Services. In fact, the relevant chairwoman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations had urged the OCC to wait and not publish these rules until Congress had had a chance to act. She was ignored.

I would hope that the Committee on Financial Services would go beyond the mere hearings that we have held, and we have had several, and would mark up a bill, either mark up a bill to tell the OCC that they cannot willy-nilly exempt all national banks from State regulation, or, perhaps even better, one that could also provide strong consumer protections and good access to capital to all those in the subprime borrowing market, protecting people from predatory lending practices.

Since we have not had action in the form of a markup at the Committee on Financial Services, since the OCC ignored the request that they wait for publishing their rules, I thought it was important to come to this floor and offer an amendment to act immediately.

I know that the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. GUTIERREZ) would like to speak and will be to the floor soon.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. The Comptroller of the Currency is not within this subcommittee's jurisdiction, it is within the Department of Treasury. This is not the right bill to change the Comptroller of the Currency's policies concerning the regulation of national banks and State roles in regulated banks. It is a complex issue. The gentleman seems to acknowledge that the Committee on Financial Services ought to be the one to deal with it. I understand the Committee on Financial Services opposes the language to be included in the bill, so I strongly urge that we defeat the amendment and that he offer it maybe when another bill comes up dealing with the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER).

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I also thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) for his comments. Whether or not this is the proper place to make this correction, I think it is terribly important that the correction be made.

The dual banking system in our Nation has a long and very productive and rich history. It has played a major role in making ours the strongest and most confirmed banking system in the world. The balance between the State-chartered banks and the national banks provides critical fuel to our economy, fosters innovation and competition, and provides Americans with a safe and sound banking system as a whole.

I am deeply concerned that the OCC's preemptive rules would take that balance and put it into jeopardy. These rules could radically change our financial regulation structure, and overriding State law enforcement authority and the State laws for national banks can have serious repercussions on our Nation's banking economy and on the consumers in the State of Idaho.

We do not have to look back very far in history, Mr. Chairman, to see the long-reaching effects of preempting State financial laws. Let us take, for example, the savings and loan or the thrift industry. Until 1980, State-chartered thrifts outnumbered those of Federal charters. But in 1980, the Federal regulator issued a preemptive policy similar to the OCC's recent rulings. As a result, we have watched the number of State-chartered thrifts decline until they now make up less than 10 percent of all of the thrifts in the country.

Until 1980, in my State of Idaho we had five State-chartered thrifts. Today, all thrifts in Idaho have national charters. None have State charters. Since 1980, 14 banks have received new State commercial bank charters, but there has not been a single thrift chartered in the past 24 years.

Our economy in Idaho depends on small community banks. These banks serve the members in their communities and constantly improve the way we do business in America and through innovation and diversity. If we allow the OCC to tip the balance toward the national banks, we put consumers at risk. State and local agencies in Idaho are better equipped than any Federal bureaucracy to meet the needs and address the problems of Idahoans. Allowing our banking system to be dominated by a single Federal regulator would harm consumers and our economy.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues' support for this amendment. My apologies to the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF), because if this is the wrong place to make this correction, I would like to work with the chairman to make that correction in the proper place.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS).

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

First I want to start by agreeing with something that the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) has said today, something that was published in the newspaper The American Banker this morning. He was talking about the amendment which he now brings to the floor. What he says about it is, ''This is a crazy way to do it.'' I would agree with that. It is, as he said, ''This is a crazy way to do it.''

The gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) has said this is an important issue. I agree with him; it is an important issue. It is one that ought to be debated. It is one that ought to be addressed. And, in fact, the Committee on Financial Services has had two hearings on this matter. Numerous Members, including the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KANJORSKI), to name two, have introduced legislation to address this OCC issue. The committee is working on it.

This particular amendment actually goes to the heart of the Committee on the Judiciary's jurisdiction. This is something that ought to be before the Committee on the Judiciary, because what it is, and I go back to what the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) says, and I agree with him, he says, what we are trying to do here is effectively pull the teeth out of the regulations. In other words, the OCC passed some regulations, he does not agree with those regulations, so he wants to effectively pull the teeth out of those regulations. Well, there are certain ways to do that. What he is doing is saying, so, I am going to prohibit the Justice Department from representing the OCC in court. But that is not the way to do it.

If you disagree with the regulations, you have, one thing you have is the Congressional Review Act, and our colleague on this amendment actually filed legislation under that act to review this regulation, and that is the proper way to do this. As the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) said, this is a crazy way to do it. This is a crazy amendment. It is a crazy way to do it.

We have rules in this House. I have rules at my house. There are rules. We all have rules, and we need to go by those rules. We either need to change those rules, or we need to go by those rules.

The place to address these issues, if we want to talk about whether the Justice Department ought to have the right to be a legal advocate for the OCC, and I sure hope that our governmental agencies, when they go into court as a representative of the people of the United States, I hope that they are going to have the right to legal counsel. If this amendment is passed, the OCC will be denied legal counsel. They will be denied Justice Department legal counsel. As the gentleman says, this is a crazy way to do it.

The gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) talked about something earlier that concerns all of us. We have State regulations, we have Federal regulations. They are both important. We ought to watch what we do in this regard. What ought to watch what we do when we preempt State regulations.

He is concerned about the number of national charters as opposed to State charters, that the national charter appears to be getting more valuable. That is something that ought to be addressed, but you do not address that in an appropriations bill. You let the committees that have jurisdiction over these matters, which are the Committee on Financial Services, and they are having hearings on these matters; there is numerous pieces of legislation introduced, that is where we address it.

I do not think any appropriators will vote for this particular legislation. If they do, I would say to them, this is authorizing legislation. Why would we support something like that in appropriations? Appropriators, and I say to all Members who are appropriators, you would not want the authorizing committee, you would not want the Committee on the Judiciary passing legislation appropriating funds for the Justice Department or the Commerce Department. Neither would you want the Committee on Financial Services to start making appropriations, and neither should the appropriating committee start doing authorizations. Members of the Committee on Ways and Means out there, they are charged with certain jurisdictions. The Committee on Commerce, the Committee on International Relations, all of these committees, that is where we authorize legislation. That is the rule. This amendment, although it is crafted in a way which simply says the OCC will be denied legal representation in court, which is a crazy thing, as the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN), the maker of this amendment, says, that is the only way that he could sort of bring this up to the body.

And I will say this to my colleague: The fact he brought this out, he mentions it, he has said that it ought to be addressed, I commend the gentleman for that. But this is not the mechanism.

I would say to any Member that votes for this, if you vote for this, you are voting really to disregard the rules and the structure of this whole body. If you serve on authorizing committees, you are basically saying it is okay for appropriators to authorize. If you vote for this legislation, you will say it is okay for the Committee on Appropriations to start doing the work of the Committee on the Judiciary. If you vote for this amendment, you will be saying I do not care if this is the Committee on Financial Service's matter, it is within their clear jurisdiction, but I do not care, I am going to vote for it on an appropriations bill.

What that will result in, if amendments like this continue to be brought up as they are, and that is why we are here for several days instead of addressing things that ought to be addressed in this bill, then this body will gravitate into mayhem.

I urge my colleagues for the right reasons to oppose this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 45 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. GUTIERREZ).

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Chairman, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this bipartisan amendment, which would provide no funds in the bill be used to defend the OCC preemption regulations in a court of law.

Earlier this year, the OCC issued preemption rules that indicated that many State laws did not apply to national banks, did not apply to national banks, and State officials such as the attorneys general elected in each and every one of our States did not have authority over national banks and to help consumers.

I think that is crazy. I think that is insane. And it does not defend the consumers.

The gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN), the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), and I and our staffs, with their inspiration and innovation, have brought this amendment to the floor because we want to defend consumers.

The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, or the OCC, regulates national banks. The name of the agency causes most people to think of it as the Mint or that it would be responsible for printing money. It is certainly not the agency that consumers think to call for help when a bank has violated the law, and perhaps it is because the OCC's Consumer Call Center is open only for business 28 hours a week and closed on Fridays. At least the attorneys general and your bank regulators in your States are open Monday through Friday, 40 hours a week, to defend consumers.

That is what the OCC thinks about consumer protections. They will not even defend you 5 days a week. When my constituents have a problem with the bank, they call the Illinois Attorney General, as I am sure in every other State people call their Attorneys General. But according to the OCC, the Attorney General has virtually no authority over the big powerful national banks. And that is wrong.

I remember when the gentleman from Alabama came here talking about States right and saying they are the incubator of ideas. Everything is done better at the local level. Yet, the gentleman from Alabama comes here, and we should have struck his words, I will not, calling us crazy on five different occasions.

It is not crazy to protect consumers. It is crazy not to protect consumers because that is our main responsibility, to defend the people and not to be quoting from the Bankers Journal. They publish that journal to defend their interests, and it should be our priority to defend the interests of consumers, as crazy as that may seem given all the special interest money that runs around the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY).

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully and reluctantly rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN), whom I respect.

As a member of the Committee on Financial Services, I have been at numerous hearings that have been held on the issue of OCC preemption. What the OCC did in promulgating these regulations is well within, in my opinion, their scope as a regulator of national banks. But I believe the issue is bigger than that of the powers of national versus State chartered banks or the presumed powers of the OCC. The real question here deals with ensuring the greatest protections of all American banking consumers with respect to stopping abusive lending practices. And that is why I salute the OCC's actions.

Our constituents have no idea where their bank is chartered, and they really do not care. But they really do care about protecting their money and their investments and keeping the access to capital free flowing. This action by the OCC will allow that to happen. For example, I know much has been made in Washington by some of my colleagues about a possible weakening of consumer protections between banks and their customers due to these OCC regulations. I disagree.

The famous First Tennessee case in New York proves this point, as once the OCC entered the dialogue, the case resolved in favor of the consumer in a matter of days, and the customers' losses were refunded, and their legal bills paid. Additionally, with the powers the OCC has, including on-site examiners actually in the actual banks on a day-to-day basis, they know the operations and the rules. They know how to make banks comply with them.

Remember, it was not the FBI who caught Al Capone. It was the IRS. That is the same approach under which the OCC will approach its bad actors with its on-site staff that have the ability to shut down banks.

Finally, these OCC regulations also created one uniform Federal standard for all national banks and their operating subsidiaries with respect to predatory lending as a way of creating a level playing field for all national banking customers.

While I do believe these predatory lending regulations that have been put in place are weak at best, their establishment drives home the need for real action by this Congress this year to address predatory lending with a strong national law that governs lending at all financial institutions and their operating subsidiaries, regardless of where they are chartered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The OCC gets its $500 million budget from the banks it regulates. It is financially accountable to the banks rather than Congress. That is why we had to offer an amendment dealing with the Department of Judiciary's budget. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. GUTIERREZ), who spoke with such passion and wisdom just a second ago, introduced in our committee, when we expressed our budget views and estimates, language criticizing these OCC regulations. And that language passed 34 to 28 with the support of the relevant subcommittee chairman, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY).

I would point out that now it is time for the Committee on Financial Services and this Congress not to just express our views but to legislate. That is why I will withdraw this amendment and hope that our committee will act instead of simply expressing views.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HEFLEY

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEFLEY:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. Total appropriations made in this Act are hereby reduced by 1 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This is an amendment I have offered on a great many appropriations bills over the last few years. In my desire to begin to get a grip on the deficit spending that we are doing now, and it is not a reflection on the chairman or the committee and the job they have done, there is a great deal of good in this bill; but I rise today to offer an amendment to cut by 1 percent the level of funding in this appropriations bill. For the CJS appropriations bill that amends amounts to $398 million, and that translates to one penny on every dollar we spend. One penny is all we are talking about on every dollar that we are spending.

I recognize there are many important law enforcement provisions contained within this bill, which is why I have structured my amendment using the Holman rule so that the administration may choose the accounts in which they want to reduce the spending in this bill. The tendency always is when you want to cut something or a Department is to say that the most desirable things are the things it will cut. No, it is not. The FBI that will get cut here or some of those law enforcement things, it will be the things that are the least important, if we do it in this way and under this particular rule.

As most Members are aware, as I said earlier, I have introduced similar amendments that would have cut spending in other appropriations bills and I have plans to continue doing so in other appropriations bills that are brought to the floor. My amendments are intended to draw a line. The budget for fiscal year 2005 is too large. We have the power to do something about the budget deficit right now. By voting for my amendment, Members are stating to the American taxpayers they should not have to pay higher taxes in the future because we could not control spending today.

Our budgets would be no different than the taxpayers' budgets at home. When we have less money, we simply need to spend less money, and there are plenty of places within the Federal budget where we are spending money that clearly does not make any sense whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this 1 percent cut in the budget.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The amendment would take $400 million from the bill. As you can see from the debate, other Members feel that the funding for a host of programs is inadequate. The budget resolution passed by the House, we are within that budget resolution. The bill we are considering stays well within it. A number of accounts in the bill are funded very close to the bone. For a number of reasons that other people would realize, we urge strong opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

There is not a member of this Congress that is more conscientious or more concerned about the deficit than the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF). I have the highest respect for him. I still say, Mr. Chairman, that we can find one penny on the dollar to cut in this particular appropriations bill. I would ask for an ''aye'' vote.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was put together by two staffs and two members in a very tight situation with a very low allocation. As I have said on many occasions during this debate, I think the bill is fair, but we know it is tight. And this is a large amount of money to take out of this bill, especially across the board, without any consideration to all the negotiations that went in to putting the bill together.

I just think it is a bad idea, and it should be defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on this amendment are postponed.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WEINER

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEINER:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used in contravention of the provisions of section 214(d) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 2003 (Public Law 107–228).

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order are reserved. Pursuant to the order of the House of yesterday, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER).

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I will not take the full 5 minutes. As a member of the Democratic baseball team, we have a date with destiny shortly.

I just wanted to explain the amendment, and then I will yield back my time.

This Congress in the 2003 State Department Authorization Act said that once and for all, any documents like passports and the like that refer to Jerusalem have to say the country. It is the only instance in our Nation where it says a city but it does not refer to the country, a strange form of record keeping that we clarify.

There are now some lawsuits from people who are trying to enforce that law that this Congress passed overwhelmingly, and the Justice Department and the State Department are fighting those suits. Mine would be an amendment saying that no funds can be used to stop Congress's will from being put into place. I urge a ''yes'' vote.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This amendment reiterates current law. We have no objection, and we accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments?

SEQUENTIAL VOTES POSTPONED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on those amendments on which further proceedings were postponed in the following order:

Amendment No. 2 by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS); amendment No. 20 by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN); amendment No. 23 by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING); the amendment by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH); the amendment by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY); the amendment by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first vote in this series.

AMENDMENT NO. 2 OFFERED BY MR. SANDERS

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the noes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

The Clerk redesignated the amendment.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 210, noes 210, answered ''present'' 1, not voting 13, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

The CHAIRMAN (during the vote). Members are advised there are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SANDERS (during the vote). Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, how much time is allowed for a vote to be cast? My understanding is 17 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The minimum time for electronic voting on this question is 15 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. Will the gentleman tell me how much time has expired on this vote at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Longer than the minimum time.

Mr. SANDERS. My understanding is over 24 minutes have expired.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. NADLER (during the vote). Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NADLER. My parliamentary inquiry is twofold. How much time has elapsed on this vote, and how much time will be allowed on this vote beyond what the rules provide for? How much time has elapsed on this vote? The time has expired.

How much time has elapsed on this vote? Are we going to hold this vote open until enough arms are twisted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would attempt to respond to the parliamentary inquiry. The minimum time for this electronic vote, as stated earlier, is 15 minutes. And, as always, if there are Members in the well attempting to vote, the vote will remain open.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. NADLER (during the vote). Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NADLER. I have two parliamentary inquiries. One you did not answer I asked before. How much time has elapsed on this vote so far? Not the minimum. How much time so far has elapsed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will repeat that the minimum requirement is 15 minutes. That has elapsed.

Mr. NADLER. That was not my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time elapsed thus far is 29 minutes. As long as there are Members wishing to vote in the well, the vote will remain open.

Mr. NADLER. My second question, sir, is I do not see anyone in the well waiting to vote. Is there anyone in the well waiting to vote?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Ms. PELOSI (during the vote). Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will state her parliamentary inquiry.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, in a previous response to a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair stated the vote would remain open as long as there were Members in the well wishing to vote. That case does not exist at this time, so when will the Chair be gaveling this vote down?

Mr. Chairman, apparently the basis for the Chair's response before is no longer true. Members are not in the well wishing to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind Members that the rules state that the vote shall be open for a minimum of 15 minutes, and as long as there are Members in the well to vote, the vote will remain open.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, how long has the vote been open?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is about to ask if any Member wishes to change his or her vote, so that changes may be reported.

□ 1622

Ms. HARRIS, Mrs. CUBIN, Messrs. GILCHREST, BEREUTER, TOM DAVIS of Virginia, BILIRAKIS, KINGSTON, SMITH of Michigan, BISHOP of Utah, WAMP, TANCREDO and Mrs. MUSGRAVE changed their vote from ''aye'' to ''no.''

Messrs. ACKERMAN, LANGEVIN, ALEXANDER, CRAMER, and SHERMAN changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT NO. 20 OFFERED BY MR. AKIN

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the ayes prevailed by voice vote.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

The CHAIRMAN (during the vote). Two minutes remain in this vote.

□ 1654

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated against:

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 343 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HEFLEY

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) regarding an across-the-board cut of total appropriations, on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the noes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

The Clerk redesignated the amendment.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. This will be a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 81, noes 327, not voting 25, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

The CHAIRMAN (during the vote). Two minutes remain in this vote.

□ 1701

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hard work of the members of the committee, and of Chairman FRANK WOLF and Ranking Member JOSÉ SERRANO on H.R. 4754.

Caseloads for U.S. district judges in Nebraska have climbed steadily. In fact, criminal cases have more than doubled since 1995.

Like many other states in the Midwest, Nebraska has been plagued in recent years by an influx of methamphetamine (meth), and criminal cases involving meth represent a significant increase in Nebraska's drug docket.

Interstate 80, which runs the length of the state of Nebraska, is one of the primary transit routes used for drug trafficking across the central United States.

Nebraska's ability to prosecute interstate drug trafficking affects the whole country.

In fact, Nebraska's judges carry a heavier criminal caseload than judges in New York City, Chicago, and Los Angeles.

Mr. Chairman, while I am grateful for the increased funding provided in this bill for the federal court system, the substantial increase in Nebraska's criminal trials leaves Nebraska's federal judges with impossibly heavy caseloads.

I also appreciate the generous funding the CJSJ committee has allocated in the last several years towards fighting meth in Nebraska. These funds have made a significant difference.

My colleague from Nebraska, Mr. BEREUTER, has introduced H.R. 4301, to authorize an additional district judgeship for the district of Nebraska.

The Senate has already passed legislation that included Nebraska in the list of judgeships to be made permanent and I am hopeful the House will do the same.

A fourth judgeship is critically important to Nebraska, and without it, criminal cases will move more slowly and handling civil cases will become increasingly burdensome.

I support and urge passage of the underlying appropriations bill and I look forward to continuing to work with the authorizing committee to address the judgeship issue in Nebraska.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Flake-Davis-Emerson-Delahunt amendment to the Commerce, State & Justice Appropriations bill. This bipartisan amendment would de-fund Commerce Department enforcement of its new anti-family regulations. These regulations set greater limitations on gift parcels that Cuban-Americans are allowed to send to their family members. Gift parcels are no longer allowed to contain such humanitarian aid items as clothing, seeds, personal hygiene items, veterinary medicines and supplies, fishing equipment and supplies, and soap-making equipment. Additionally, this regulation limits the delivery of gift parcels to Cuba to once per month per household, instead of once per month per individual recipient. The gift parcels can only be sent to the immediate family of a donor: grandparents, grandchildren, parents, siblings, spouses or children. All cousins, uncles, aunts, nieces, or nephews, or in-laws are excluded.

According to the Commission for Assistance to a Free Cuba, appointed by President Bush, gift parcels "decrease the burden of the Castro regime to provide for the basic needs of its people" which therefore allows the regime to "dedicate more of its limited resources to strengthening its repressive apparatus." This is ludicrous. The reality is that there are many Cubans living in poverty whose only way of getting necessary living materails—soap, clothes, sustenance supplies—is through gift parcels from their relatives residing in the United States.

This regulation is a human rights travesty; it directly hurts Cuban people and their concerned Cuban-American relatives. Family ties stretch across borders, despite foreign policy mandates, and denying family members from sending aid to their relatives does not only show complete disregard to the value of human rights, but also to the value of the family institution. Support the Flake-Davis-Emerson-Delahunt amendment to de-fund Commerce Department enforcement of its anti-family regulations.

Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 4754; Making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005. This bill includes a very important amendment that will address the inaccessibility to affordable capital for small businesses. This bill also includes important funding increases for the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

One of the biggest problems that small businesses in Puerto Rico and on the mainland face is access to affordable capital. The 7(a) loan program is the Small Business Administrations' core lending program and accounts for roughly 30 percent of all long-term small business borrowing in America. This public-private partnership provides important financing for our nation's small business at a good value for the American taxpayer. This means there can be more loans, more small businesses and greater job creation. These loans are the only source of affordable, long-term financing for many of our nation's small businesses. The continuation of this program is fundamental to a sound economic recovery.

The CJS Appropriations Act also includes $1.66 billion for the Drug Enforcement Administration. This represents a $77 million increase above the Fiscal Year '04 funding. These funds will go to keep drugs off our streets and out of the hands of our children. Additionally, it contains $870 million for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, representing a $43 million increase over fiscal 2004 funding. These necessary additions will provide for a safer society.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the passage of H.R. 4754.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant support of this bill.

Parts of the bill advance good policy.

The most welcome provision in the bill is the $106 million included for the Manufacturing Extension Program (MEP), a program the Administration has tried to eliminate for several years. Last year, MEP served more than 18,000 small manufacturers across the country. In 2002, MEP assistance resulted in $2.79 billion in increased/retained sales, $681 million in cost savings, $940 million investment in modernization, and 32,000 jobs created and retained. Every federal dollar appropriated for MEP leverages $2 in state and private-sector funding, which means that a small federal investment of $106 million translates into billions of dollars in benefits for the economy in terms of jobs created and retained, investment, and sales. While it is overdue, the appropriators' acknowledgement of MEP's importance is welcome—especially as manufacturers continue to experience tough economic times.

The bill also provides essential funding for the Department of Justice, the FBI, and the Drug Enforcement Administration, as well as for Office of Justice programs such as the State Criminal Alien Assistance program.

The bill improves on the President's request in some cases. It includes funding for the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program and state and local law enforcement assistance—less than the current funding level for these programs, but at much higher levels than the request. I do hope that conferees will see fit to increase funding to current levels for these programs in the final version of the bill.

On the international side, I'm pleased that the bill increases funding for education and cultural exchange programs, which are the most effective public diplomacy programs we can fund, and that it directs the State Department to establish a new permanent office to plan for reconstruction and post-conflict stability, making clear the preeminent role of the State Department—not the Pentagon—in such planning.

The bill also includes important language prohibiting any funds from being used in any way to support or justify the use of torture by any U.S. government official or contract employee. It also directs the Justice Department's Inspector General to submit a report to Congress detailing all internal and interagency documents regarding the obligation to the U.S. under the Geneva Conventions and related international agreements. I'm glad that the House supports this critical provision on a bipartisan basis, as the Administration to date has refused to provide these documents.

But I only reluctantly support this bill for the reasons I have expressed year after year—namely, that it attacks the Department of Commerce laboratories in my district in Colorado, the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA).

The trend of cutting these agencies to the bone continues. It continues not because there is fat to cut at these facilities, but because the Subcommittee allocation simply doesn't provide enough money to go around.

Under the bill as it stands, the NIST and NOAA laboratories will see more jobs lost and more cuts in funding. The bill cuts NIST fully 15 percent from last year's levels. Funding for NIST's Scientific and Technical Research and Services (STRS)—at $376 million—is at least 9 percent below the request. Never mind that the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act, which the House will pass this week, includes $425 million in FY2005 for STRS. The bill includes funding for important construction projects, but at levels 18 percent below the request.

The bill reduces NOAA funding by $543 million—a 15 percent cut from FY2004 levels. The office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research (OAR), which funds the important work being conducted in the labs in my district, is funded at $319 million in the bill—12 percent below the request level, and 16 percent below FY2004 levels. The bill zeros out funding for Abrupt Climate Research and Paleoclimate research, and the overall NOAA budget for climate and global change research has been reduced by an additional $6 million. These NOAA research programs are vital to improving our understanding of the impacts of climate change—something the president has said is a priority for his administration.

In addition to concerns about reduced funding for NOAA, I am also concerned about language included in the bill's report. The report notes: ''The Committee continues to believe that resource limitations require NOAA to act expeditiously on laboratory consolidation. The Research Review Team report provides a necessary first step toward rationalization of the enterprise-wide research effort.'' As far as I am aware, the Committee has never provided a definition for ''laboratory consolidation.'' If done because of ''resource limitations,'' it seems to me that ''consolidation'' is just a code word for program elimination. I will continue to fight to ensure that before NOAA takes any steps in this direction, it must provide Congress with further explanation as to the reasons for and outcomes expected from such action.

Mr. Chairman, clearly I have deep concerns about the parts of this bill that affect my district and that affect science and technology funding at the Department of Commerce. But the bill includes funding for many other deserving programs. So I will vote for this bill, and will work to see that it is improved in conference.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Paul Amendment on UNESCO.

During a speech before the UN General Assembly on September 12, 2002, President Bush announced that the United States would return to UNESCO. I support the President's decision, and I oppose efforts to prohibit funding to the organization.

Rejoining UNESCO reflects our national understanding that the body has a decisive role in advancing U.S. foreign policy goals. These goals include promoting education and understanding in areas of the world where desperate populations are susceptible to the preaching of those who would seek to destroy our Nation.

UNESCO is actively pursuing the UN's Millennium Development Goals, including achieving universal primary education in all countries by 2015; eliminating gender disparity in primary and secondary education by 2005; helping countries implement a national strategy for sustainable development by 2005; and reversing current trends in the loss of environmental resources by 2015.

Why wouldn't the United States want to be an active participant and contributor to this process?

We've debated these issues, and this body has decided the United States should continue to be a member in good standing at the UN and rejoin UNESCO.

Prohibiting funding sends a particularly bad message to the global community at a time when international support is needed for many of our initiatives, including the war on terror.

As a contributor and participant, the United States is granted owner to influence UNESCO's goals, programs and management. We should not pass up that opportunity.

Ms. HERSETH. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the House of Representatives narrowly defeated an amendment to the fiscal year 2005

Commerce, Justice and State Appropriations bill that would have increased funding for the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program by $106 million.

I voted in favor of this amendment because I believe it is critical to restore cuts that this bill makes to the COPS program. COPS has been a critical part of our nation's effort to put more police officers on the streets in order to reduce crime and improve homeland security. Given the increased security needs our country faces, there is no question that the COPS program is needed now more than ever.

This was a difficult vote because funding to pay for this amendment was taken from the Census Bureau, which is charged with the important responsibility of counting the American population. I fully support the mission of the Census Bureau. It is particularly important to ensure that the Bureau has the resources it needs to count hard-to-find populations, including Native Americans in South Dakota. Because of inadequate housing and high levels of poverty, Native Americans are traditionally undercounted by the Census. This means that they often do not receive their fair share of federal resources desperately needed to provide jobs, health care and education.

It is important to note that this bill provides the Census Bureau with a $149 million increase in funding over last year's level. The amendment would have shifted $106 million of these funds to the COPS program, thus restoring COPS to last year's level of funding while still providing the Census Bureau with an overall increase in funding. I felt that this approach was fair, and that it would improve homeland security and public safety while still ensuring that the Census can carry out its mission.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my disappointment with the wholly inadequate level of funding in the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State Appropriations bill for Fiscal Year 2005 for grants to combat violence against women. Women in this country are in the midst of a crisis, continuing to be terrorized by sexual assault, domestic violence, and stalking, and the situation is not getting much better. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, at least one out of every six women and girls in the United States will have been beaten or sexually abused in her lifetime.

So what is the Republican leadership's response? According to this bill, it is to cut funding for grants to states to combat violence against women. This bill closely follows the President's request and cuts VAWA funding by 1 percent from last year's levels down to $383.5 million. Funding for Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) programs in the Department of Justice, programs which serve to protect older and disabled women from violence, to provide transitional housing for women fleeing abusive partners, to protect students on campus from sexual assault, to reduce stalking, remains $55 million short of full funding. this is simply unacceptable.

We have the money in this country to help every women who is raped, to provide counseling and services to every family trying to overcome domestic violence, to train police officers to help victims of stalking—yet the President's budget chooses not to do this. Instead, the Republican majority chooses to spend more of our money on tax cuts for the wealthy.

I go back to my district and I see women who have worked so hard to survive domestic abuse and sexual assault. I meet families who have lost a mother or a sister to domestic violence. When they ask me—what is my government doing to help me? What is my government doing to make sure this doesn't happen to another woman?—I will have to tell them that the government is not doing nearly enough. The Republican leadership is cutting funding for programs to prevent violence against women. This is a disgrace.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Chairman, while I rise in support of the FY05 Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill, I am deeply disappointed in the significant cuts proposed to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration budget.

As you know, the 23rd Congressional District, on California's Central Coast, is an incredibly diverse and productive coastal and marine area.

Tourism and commercial and recreational fishing are major industries on the Central Coast and a staple of our local economy. The money spent by tourists and the fish caught by fisherman pay the bills and put food on the table for the people living in these communities.

Unfortunately, they know better than anyone that our oceans and coasts are facing a greater array of problems than ever before.

The impact of coastal development, pollution and some fishing practices have led to declining prospects for many of our oceans, coasts and marine life.

With the recent release of the Pew Oceans Commission report and the U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy report, we have an unprecedented opportunity to move forward to dramatically reform ocean policy.

That's why investment in our nation's coasts and oceans is needed now.

Sadly, the bill before us proposes over $400 million in cuts—that's a 15 percent cut—to the agency in charge of caring for and managing these assets. I am particularly worried by the decrease in funds proposed for the National Ocean Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The National Ocean Service is the primary federal agency working to protect and manage America's coastal waters and habitats. Unfortunately, this bill proposes a debilitating cut of $160 million from 2004 enacted levels.

Critical National Ocean Service programs have been severely cut, including activities that support managing coastal zones and national marine sanctuaries, restoring coral reefs, protecting sensitive coastal estuaries and reducing coastal pollution.

These cuts will cripple the agency and will impact all Americans who use our beaches and coastal waters for swimming, boating and recreation, in addition to threatening the 3 million U.S. jobs that our coasts and oceans support.

Mr. Chairman, I am also concerned by the proposed cuts to the National Marine Fisheries Service. The $96 million in cuts from the 2004 enacted level will further jeopardize our already troubled commercial and recreational fisheries.

While the bill does provide additional funds for expanding fisheries stock assessments, it fails to make available critical dollars for fishery observer programs, cooperative research, essential fish habitat protection, and efforts to conserve protected species like marine mammals and sea turtles.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize the Subcommittee has difficult choices to make this year. And, I appreciate the Chairman and Ranking Member's commitment to work toward rectifying the funding levels for NOAA in the final bill.

However, the verdict is in—our oceans and coasts are in trouble.

We need to invest in our oceans to ensure that future generations will be able to enjoy clean beaches, healthy seafood, abundant ocean wildlife, and thriving coastal communities.

As we move into conference, I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Subcommittee to address the challenges and threats confronting our oceans and coasts.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, today this House considers the Commerce, Justice, and State Appropriations bill. I rise to speak on the Commerce portion of the bill—and more specifically, the massive cuts in funding for National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) programs.

Sadly, the bill we debate today cuts NOAA funding by 15 percent when compared to fiscal year 2004 levels. The decision to cut the funding of vital NOAA programs flies in the face of two in-depth oceans studies, The Preliminary Report of the U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy and the Pew Oceans Commission Report, both released during the past year. These two reports document the crises facing our oceans—crises, as noted by the reports, which require attention now. Today. Unfortunately, instead of using the findings of the two reports to take steps forward, we will in fact be taking many steps backward if we decide to under-fund NOAA programs, especially those within the National Ocean Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Before I speak about some of the specific programs hardest hit, I want to thank CJS Chairman WOLF and Ranking Member SERRANO for the commitment they made during full committee mark-up to work to increase the funding levels for conservation programs, particularly programs within the National Ocean Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service, during conference with the Senate. I am grateful that they have acknowledged the importance of increasing the funding levels. I also thank Ranking Member OBEY for stating his concerns regarding the NOAA funding cuts.

As a co-chair of the House Oceans Caucus, I helped to lead a bi-partisan letter than garnered a total of 59 signatures supporting a variety of NOAA programs, including state coastal zone management grants, coastal nonpoint and community resource grants, the national estuarine research reserve system, the coastal and estuarine land conservation program, the national marine sanctuary system, coral reef conservation, ocean exploration, fisheries research and observer programs, marine mammal protection, and invasive species initiatives, among others. This letter was not for parochial projects; it was for national programs for this Country's largest public trust resource—our oceans. Despite this letter, the bill in front of us today actually cuts the funding levels of many of the programs we specifically noted were important to protect.

Mr. Chairman, let me highlight some of the most severe cuts and briefly discuss the likely consequences of the cuts.

When combining the cuts from decreases in coastal zone management grants and coastal nonpoint pollution grants—both of which are important to state efforts to address threats to the coastal ocean—many states will be left scrambling. For example, Florida will have a net loss of $345,000; Virginia a net loss of $620,000; and my state of California will lose $620,000. These numbers may not seem like high dollar amounts since we are used to dealing in millions; however, the states rely on these funds and it is unfortunate that we can't provide them.

Cooperative Fisheries Research programs have been dealt a huge blow—going from an FY04 enacted level of $19.9 million to $5 million in the bill before us. Cooperative Research programs bring scientists together with the fishing community to foster trust and to conduct collaborative studies aimed at better understanding our fisheries resources. If we are serious about resolving over-fishing issues, we cannot afford to cut a program that brings together the critical players.

Lastly, I am deeply concerned by the funding levels for marine mammal protection. Under the funding levels put forth in the bill, the National Marine Fisheries Service will not be able to fund top priority studies as identified by the multi-stakeholder Take Reduction Teams; the agency won't be able to conduct research on marine mammal population trends, health, and demographics; and sadly, the National Marine Fisheries Service will not be able to carry out marine mammal education or enforcement programs. Another unfortunate aspect of the bill in front of us today is that funding for the marine mammal health and stranding response program was zeroed out last year and the funds were not restored in this year's bill. This program funds investigations of die-offs of large numbers of marine mammals, including a recent bottlenose dolphin die-off in Florida that involved more than 100 animals. Without the restoration of this program, we lose the opportunity to study marine mammals during die-off events.

Mr. Chairman, our oceans are this Country's largest public trust resource. When are we going to start treating them as such in this chamber, including adequately funding ocean programs? Our job is to ensure a future in which our oceans remain vital components of our economy, our communities, and our lives. To do this, we must fund NOAA programs today.

Despite concerns by my constituents, many of whom are members of the more than 24 national organizations that signed a letter delivered to every member of the House urging a commitment for increasing NOAA funding, I am dedicated to moving this bill forward. Both the chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee have given me their commitment to work diligently to increase the funding levels for the NOAA programs hardest hit by today's bill. I sincerely appreciate their commitment and look forward to working with them. However, in the future, I hope that this House will adequately fund NOAA programs so that we don't find ourselves depending on the good will of the Senate to increase the funding levels of programs that so many of our constituents care so deeply about.

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Flake, Davis, Emerson, Delahunt amendment.

The Bush Administration recently announced a series of measures that tighten restrictions on travel to Cuba, and further limit the items that Cuban-Americans can send to their relatives on the island.

Mr. Chairman, it is inhumane and un-American to prevent Cuban-Americans from sending clothing and personal hygiene items to their relatives in Cuba. These restrictions deny the rights of Americans to help their families in Cuba who rely on packages from the United States to provide things that they cannot get at home.

Ironically, like the ongoing travel ban and embargo, these restrictions will do little to harm the Castro regime.

Our Cuba policy should not be built on punishing families and limiting the rights of Americans. We should support more family contact between Cubans and Americans and endorse a strategy of engagement. These latest restrictions may have some electoral impact in Florida, but 40 years of failure prove they will not loosen Fidel Castro's grip on power. We should reject these new restrictions and vote for this amendment.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this very harmful amendment, the Paul Amendment on U.N. funding.

In the early 1990s, because of concerns about United Nation's operations and the lack of reforms by that body, the United States began withholding its payments to the U.N. and fell into arrears.

We subsequently debated this issue for years, and, in November 1999, Congress and the Administration finally agreed on a plan to repay our longstanding debt to the U.N. in exchange for significant reforms by the world body.

This agreement conditioned U.S. payments of $819 million on substantial reforms at the U.N. In return for the United States making good on its commitment, the U.N. reduced our contributions to its regular budget from 25 to 20 percent, and to the peacekeeping budget from 31 to 25 percent. The U.N. also agreed to open up its financial books to the United States and to establish an office of an Inspector General at each of its program offices.

We've debated these issues, and this body has decided the United States should continue to be a member in good standing at the U.N. This amendment would send us back to a debate settled more than three years ago.

Mr. Chairman, as the U.N.'s single largest contributor, the United States is granted unparalleled power to craft the U.N.'s agenda and budget. Our financial leadership truly gives us the ability to shape world events.

Countries all over the world are looking to the United States for leadership, yet if this amendment were to pass, what they would see is a very powerful and wealthy country refusing to live up to its international commitments. Why, as a nation, would we want to unnecessarily complicate our diplomatic efforts at a time when we need every ounce of leverage?

While we must continue examining its operations and recommending operational improvements, the United Nations deserves U.S. support as it continues to combat terrorism, promote economic growth and assist countries in moving towards democracy.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

The Clerk will read the last three lines.

The Clerk read as follows:

This Act may be cited as the ''Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2005''.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTINGS of Washington, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 701, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. HOYER

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOYER. In its present form, I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOYER of Maryland moves to recommit the bill, H.R. 4754, to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the bill forthwith with the following amendment:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following new title:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to make an application under section 501 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1861) for an order requiring the production of library circulation records, library patron lists, library Internet records, book sales records, or book customer lists.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, some time ago we passed an act. It was called the PATRIOT Act. It was voted upon by the overwhelming majority of us. The objective then was to ensure the safety of democracy and the survival of freedom. That was the objective of the PATRIOT Act.

Now, there are many in this House, indeed the majority, who believed that there were provisions in that act that undermined democracy. The gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) and the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) and others raised a very specific provision of that PATRIOT Act as undermining of our democracy, of our civil liberties, and of our freedom.

The vote was called on that amendment, and at the expiration of 15 minutes, the majority of the House indicated that they supported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), and others. And then the vote continued, and it continued, and it continued, for over twice as long as the Speaker of the House early this year indicated votes would be held; indeed, for 38 minutes.

Now, I say to my colleagues, let me remind my colleagues of the remarks of our Vice President in 1987, when a similar tactic was employed, and I am quoting the remarks of the Vice President of the United States, RICHARD CHENEY, who at that point in time was a Member of this House. ''The Democrats,'' he said, ''have just performed the most grievous insult inflicted on Republicans in my time in the House, a vote held open for a shorter period of time.'' He went on to say that it was ''the most arrogant, heavy-handed abuse of power I have ever seen in the 10 years that I have been here.'' He went on to say, referring to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at that time, Jim Wright from the State of Texas, ''He is a heavy-handed son,'' and I will delete the next two words, ''and he doesn't know any other way to operate, and he will do anything he can to win at any price. There is no sense of comity left,'' said the Vice President, DICK CHENEY, then a Member of the House of Representatives.

Perhaps he felt better after he said that.

But my friends, if you campaign on changing the tone in Washington, if your objective was to bring comity to this House, if your objective, by voting for the PATRIOT Act, was to protect democracy, then protect it here. Protect it here in the People's House. Protect it here where every one of you has an opportunity to say that we will have a fair vote in a fair time frame, and the majority will prevail, not the intimidated will prevail.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), the sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the 191 Democrats and 18 Republicans who voted for that important amendment, but I am not going to discuss the substance of that amendment, because that debate took place, and I respect the people on both sides of that debate.

But what I do not respect is that when we are having a debate about basic American democratic rights and what our Constitution is supposed to be, I resent bitterly, on behalf of the American people, that the Republican leadership rigged the game. That is wrong. At the end of nine innings of a baseball game, at the end of nine innings of a baseball game, the team that has the most runs wins. At the end of the 17 minutes tonight, our side won, and it was not even close.

Now, what kind of lesson, what kind of lesson are we showing the children of America when we tell them, get involved in the political process, that we are a free country, that we are fighting abroad for democracy, when we rig a vote on this floor? Shame, shame, shame.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I will just make one comment, and then I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I want to read a letter that came out today. I wish it had come up yesterday and the day before, but it did not. I think every Member ought to know; it deals with the Sanders amendment. Here is what it says.

It says: ''Dear Chairman SENSENBRENNER. In anticipation of the U.S. House of Representatives' consideration of an amendment that would prevent the Justice Department from obtaining records from public libraries and book stores under section 215 of the USA PATRIOT Act, your staff has recently inquired about whether terrorists have ever utilized public library facilities to communicate with others about committing acts of terrorism. The short answer is 'Yes.' ''

And then they go on to say, ''You should know we have confirmed that, as recently as this past winter and spring, a member of a terrorist group closely affiliated with al Qaeda used Internet services provided by a public library. This terrorist used the library's computer to communicate with his confederates. Beyond this, we are unable to comment.''

I wish the Justice Department letter had really come up yesterday or the day before so all Members could have been able to see it before the vote.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, this motion to recommit should be defeated as the amendment was defeated, and the reason is that section 215, which this amendment proposes to defund, provides more rights to public libraries and booksellers than a grand jury subpoena would. Let us look at what section 215 does.

First, it requires the FBI to get a court order. To get a court order, a judge has to be convinced that the court order is necessary, and the burden of proof is on the Justice Department.

The section has a narrow scope. It can only be used to obtain foreign intelligence information not concerning a United States person or to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities. That is what this motion to recommit proposes to do away with.

So the people who are being protected are not United States persons, and people who are engaged in international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.

Section 215 cannot be used to investigate ordinary crimes or even domestic terrorists.

The section preserves first amendment rights, and it expressly provides that the FBI cannot conduct investigations of United States persons solely on the basis of activities protected by the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Now, if section 215 goes down, then the Justice Department can get a grand jury subpoena. Now, with a grand jury subpoena, there is no court order, there is no court review, and the person who receives the grand jury subpoena, a librarian or a bookseller, if you will, has to spend thousands of dollars hiring a lawyer at their expense to make a motion to quash the subpoena in the United States district court. And the burden of proof is on the bookseller or the librarian who wants to have the subpoena quashed.

I would submit to my colleagues that if we look at what this amendment proposes to get rid of, it gets rid of a procedure that grants more protection to booksellers and is of much narrower scope than the alternative of the grand jury subpoena.

Let us use common sense and not emotion and vote this motion to recommit down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for an electronic vote on final passage of the bill.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 194, noes 223, answered ''present'' 1, not voting 16, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY) (during the vote). There are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 1757

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4766, AGRICULTURE, RURAL DEVELOPMENT, FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 108–591) on the resolution (H. Res. 710) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4766) making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2828, WATER SUPPLY, RELIABILITY, AND ENVIRONMENTAL IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 108–592) on the resolution (H. Res. 711) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2828) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to implement water supply technology and infrastructure programs aimed at increasing and diversifying domestic water resources, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. HARRIS). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

INFLATION HURTS MIDDLE CLASS AND LOW-INCOME AMERICANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Madam Speaker, all government spending represents a tax. The inflation tax, while largely ignored, hurts middle-class and low-income Americans the most. The never-ending political squabbling in Congress over taxing the rich, helping the poor, PAYGO, deficits, and special interests ignores the most insidious of all taxes, the inflation tax.

□ 1800

Simply put, printing money to pay for Federal spending dilutes the value of the dollar, which causes higher prices for goods and services. Inflation may be an indirect tax, but it is a very real tax, and the individuals who suffer most from the cost-of-living increases certainly pay a tax.

Unfortunately, no one in Washington, especially those who defend the poor and the middle class, cares about this subject. Instead, all we hear is that tax cuts for the rich are the source of every economic ill in the country. Anyone truly concerned about the middle class suffering from falling real wages, underemployment, a rising cost of living and a decreasing standard of living should pay a lot more attention to monetary policy. Federal spending, deficits and Federal Reserve mischief hurts the poor while transferring wealth to the already rich. This is a real problem, and raising taxes on those who produce wealth only make conditions worse.

This neglect of monetary policy may be out of ignorance, but it may well be deliberate. Fully recognizing the harm caused by printing money to cover budget deficits might create public pressure to restrain spending, something the two parties do not want. Expanding entitlements is now an accepted prerogative of both parties. Foreign wars and nation building are accepted as the foreign policy of both parties.

The left hardly deserves credit when complaining about Republican deficits. Likewise, we have been told by our Vice President that Ronald Reagan proved that deficits do not matter, a tenet of supply-side economics. With this the prevailing wisdom in Washington, no one should be surprised that spending and deficits are skyrocketing. The vocal concerns expressed about high deficits coming from the big spenders on both sides are nothing more than political grandstanding. If Members feel so strongly about spending and deficits, Congress simply can do what it ought to do: cut spending. That, however, is never seriously considered by either side.

If those who say they want to increase taxes to reduce the deficit got their way, who would benefit? No one. There is no historic evidence to show that taxing productive Americans to support both the rich and poor welfare beneficiaries help the middle class, produces jobs, or stimulates the economy.

Borrowing money to cut the deficit is only marginally better than raising taxes. It may delay the pain for a while, but the cost of government eventually must be paid. Federal borrowing means the cost of interest is added, shifting the burden to a different group than those who benefited, and possibly even to another generation. Eventually borrowing is always paid for through taxation. All spending ultimately must be a tax, even when direct taxes and direct borrowing are avoided.

The third option is for the Federal Reserve to create credit to pay the bills Congress runs up. Nobody objects, and most Members hope that deficits do not really matter if the Fed accommodates Congress by creating more money. Besides, interest payments to the Fed are lower than they would be if funds were borrowed from the public, and payments can be delayed indefinitely merely by creating more credit out of thin air to buy U.S. treasuries. No need to soak the rich; a good deal it seems for everyone. But is it?

Paying for government spending with Federal Reserve credit instead of taxing or borrowing from the public is anything but a good deal for everyone. In fact, it is the most sinister, seductive ''tax'' of them all. Initially it is unfair to some, but dangerous to everyone in the end. It is especially harmful to the middle class, including lower-income working people who are thought not to be paying taxes.

The ''tax'' is paid when prices rise as a result of a depreciating dollar. Savers and those living on fixed income are hardest hit as the cost of living rises. Low-and middle-income families suffer the most as they struggle to make ends meet while wealth is literally transferred from the middle class to the wealthy. Government officials stick to their claim that no significant inflation exists, even as certain necessary costs are skyrocketing and incomes are stagnating. The transfer of wealth comes as savers and fixed income families lose purchasing power, large banks benefit, and corporations receive plush contracts from the government, as in the case of military contractors. These companies use the newly printed money before it circulates while the middle class and the poor are forced to accept it at face value later on. This becomes a huge hidden tax on the middle class, many of whom never object to government spending in hopes that the political promises will be fulfilled and they will receive some of the goodies. But surprise, it does not happen. The result instead is higher prices for prescription drugs, energy and other necessities. The freebies never come.

The Fed is responsible for inflation by creating money out of thin air. It does so either to monetize Federal debt or in the process of economic planning through interest rate manipulation. This Fed intervention in our country, although rarely even acknowledged by Congress, is more destructive than Members can imagine.

Not only is the Fed directly responsible for inflation and economic downturns, it causes artificially low interest rates that serve the interests of big borrowers, speculators and banks. This unfairly steals income from frugal retirees who chose to save and place their funds in interest bearing instruments like CDs.

The Fed's great power over the money supply, interest rates, the business cycle, unemployment, and inflation is wielded with essentially no Congressional oversight or understanding. The process of inflating our currency to pay for government debt indeed imposes a tax without legislative authority.

This is no small matter. In just the first 24 weeks of this year the M3 money supply increased $428 billion, and $700 billion in the past year. M3 currently is rising at a rate of 10.5 percent. In the last 7 years the money supply has increased 80 percent as M3 has soared $4.1 trillion. This bizarre system of paper money worldwide has allowed serious international imbalances to develop. We own just four Asian countries $1.5 trillion as a consequence of a chronic and staggering current account deficit now exceeding 5 percent of our GDP. This current account deficit means Americans must borrow $1.6 billion per day from overseas just to finance this deficit. This imbalance, which until now has permitted us to live beyond our means, eventually will give us higher consumer prices, a lower standard of living, higher interest rates, and renewed inflation.

Rest assured the middle class will suffer disproportionately from this process.

The moral of the story is that spending is always a tax. The inflation tax, though hidden, only makes things worse. Taxing, borrowing and inflating to satisfy wealth transfers from the middle class to the rich in an effort to pay for profligate government spending, can never make a nation wealthier. But it certainly can make it poorer.

REMEMBERING WHY WE FIGHT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. HARRIS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHIFF. Madam Speaker, in the early days of World War II, the government commissioned director Frank Capra to make a series of films that would explain the nature of the war to a hastily mobilized Nation.

Over the course of the next 3 years, Capra produced a remarkable series of films collectively known as ''Why We Fight.'' These films were instrumental in elevating the war from a fight for land and resources to a struggle between the ''free world'' of the Allies and the ''slave world'' of Nazi Germany and Imperial Japan.

As a Nation rooted in an ideology rather than ethnic or geographical identity, the United States has always looked at its wars as ideological conflicts between freedom and tyranny. Our national reluctance to go to war has shaped the prerequisite that when we fight, we do so for a high moral purpose that honors our principles and values.

When he addressed the Congress, the Nation and the world in the wake of the September 11 attacks, President Bush laid out the challenge posed by terrorism. Al Qaeda and radical Islamists, the President declared, attacked us because ''they hate our freedoms, our freedom of religion, freedom of speech, our freedom to vote and assemble and disagree with each other.''

The moral clarity the President expressed nearly 3 years ago has been clouded by the administration's ambiguity over whether the rule of law applied to the prosecution of the war on terrorism or in Iraq. The abuse at Abu Ghraib and the unreviewable and potentially unlimited detention of Americans and others as enemy combatants are incompatible with a Nation born in a struggle against tyranny and caprice.

Last week, three courts in three countries reminded us of what is at stake in the war on terrorism and in our efforts to rebuild Iraq.

In Iraq, Saddam Hussein and the surviving leaders of his government were arraigned for their crimes against the Iraqi people and for crimes against humanity. The sight of the former dictator and his henchmen in a court of law was a glimmer of hope that chaos and bloodshed will one day give way to a better life for Iraq's people.

Here in the United States, the Supreme Court circumscribed the President's power over its own citizens and others when it ordered that Americans and foreigners held as enemy combatants had a right to contest their detention before a neutral arbiter. Expressing confidence that courts would be able to balance individual rights and national security, Justice O'Connor wrote ''that a state of war is not a blank check for the President.''

Perhaps the most extraordinary assertion of principle was made in Jerusalem by the Israeli Supreme Court, which ordered the government to reroute part of the security fence it is building to prevent Palestinian suicide bombers from infiltrating into Israel. In reaching their decision, the Israeli justices conceded that from a military point of view, the alteration might not make protection against terrorism easier. ''This is the destiny of a democracy,'' the court said. ''She does not see all means acceptable, and the ways of her enemies are not always open before her.''

The ways of our enemies are not open to us. We do not behead our adversaries on camera for their families to witness in all its gruesome barbarity. Nonetheless, facing greater foes than we face now, we have prevailed and we will prevail again. At root, the rule of law is the source of our strength in war as it is in peace, and the assertion of the rule of law by courts in Iraq, Israel and here at home is a moving reminder of why we fight and also how we must fight to win the America we cherish.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I was, like everybody else in the Congress, home during July 4 and enjoyed being back in my district and meeting the people and listening to the people. I could not help but think that July 4 has different meanings for all of us: Freedom, independence. We think about what July 4 means and has meant to the history of our Nation.

I went back and found an article written in 1995 that was in the Boston Globe by Jeff Jacoby, and he had in the article about the Founders of this great Nation, the writers of the Constitution. I do not know if this is a quote from one of the leaders of that period of time or from Mr. Jacoby, but I want to share it: ''Religion can survive in the absence of freedom, but freedom without religion becomes dangerous and unstable.''

In addition, I would also like to share a quote by Alexis de Tocqueville. Alexis de Tocqueville was a French philosopher and historian who traveled to America in the 1830s, and he was so impressed with this great Nation. He wrote, ''In the end, the state of the Union comes down to the character of the people. I sought for the greatness and genius of America in her commodious harbors, ample rivers, and it was not there. I sought for it in the fertile fields, and boundless prairies, and it was not there. I sought it in her rich mines, and vast world commerce, and it was not there. Not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits aflame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power.''

Madam Speaker, I share that because our churches and synagogues in America are under attack. A lot of people would be surprised with me saying that, but recently the bishop of Colorado Springs, Bishop Sheridan, a Catholic bishop, wrote a three-page pastoral letter to every Catholic in his district. He did not say anything about Bush or KERRY, he did not say anything about Republican or Democrat, but being a Catholic, the Catholic Church stands for protecting the unborn. It is opposed to stem cell research and euthanasia. He said nothing about a party, nothing about a candidate.

But because he used the word ''prolife,'' Barry Lynn of the Americans for Separation of Church and State filed a complaint because this bishop is following the teachings of his church and his belief in Christ. And yet a complaint was filed that would challenge the 501(c)(3) status of that diocese.

It is a sad day in America when we have men and women overseas fighting for freedom for the Iraqis and the American people, and yet the reason why Mr. Lynn filed a complaint was because of code words.

I have introduced a bill, H.R. 235, that would eliminate the Johnson amendment that has put the restrictions on our churches, synagogues and mosques. But in addition to the Johnson law, in the early 1990s the IRS decided to expand the definition of the Johnson law, so now they have code words, and I will submit those later for the RECORD.

Regarding code words, this is what it says. The concern by the Internal Revenue Service is that 501(c)(3) organizations may support or oppose a particular candidate in a political campaign without specifically naming the candidate by using code words to substitute for the candidate's name in its message, such as conservative, liberal, prolife, prochoice, antichoice, Republican, Democrat, et cetera. When this occurs, it is quite evident what is happening, and an intervention is taking place.

What a sad commentary on the greatness of this Nation. From the beginning of America until 1954, there was never any restriction of speech on our churches, synagogues and mosques in this country, never until the Johnson amendment that went through the Senate on a revenue bill, never debated. Now ministers, priests and rabbis have the Federal Government through the Internal Revenue Service looking in on what they have to say when they are before their congregation.

Madam Speaker, I think that is a sad commentary on America. I think it is a sad commentary on those who have worn the uniform for this Nation and fought for freedom for the American people. If this was 1953, I would not be before this House because there would be no problem, there would be no restriction of speech. The first amendment right would be protected for those who speak on behalf of their Lord.

Madam Speaker, I close by saying that I hope that those of us in Congress on both sides of the aisle will do our part to make sure that the first amendment right applies to those who are spiritual leaders of America and protect their rights for which men and women have worn the uniform or are wearing the uniform.

Madam Speaker, I ask God to please bless our men and women in uniform and their families. I close by asking God to please bless America.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take my Special Order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MILLER of Michigan). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

IN HONOR OF PRIVATE FIRST CLASS SAMUEL BOWEN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I rise today in honor of one of my constituents who gave the ultimate sacrifice for this country, Private First Class Samuel Bowen. Private Bowen was killed in action yesterday in Iraq. He was a member of the 112th Engineer Battalion of Brookpark. Private Bowen was a resident of the city of Cleveland, a husband, and a father of three children.

Just last month Private Bowen saved the life of a fellow soldier during a rocket attack in Baghdad. I would like to read a portion of an article from today's Cleveland Plain Dealer that includes a quote from the soldier whose life Private Bowen saved.

It reads: ''I cannot believe he was under attack twice in 3 weeks,'' said Ron Eaton, who was rescued by Bowen's heroism June 16 north of Baghdad.

Another quote: ''I just wish that I would have been there for him like he was there for me.''

''He took care of me before he took care of himself, Eaton said. And he said, ''As soon as I got out of surgery, he called me. He told me that he needed to talk with me because I was his battle buddy, and he needed to hear my voice. I can't believe how hard this is.''

Private Bowen is the third soldier lost to the war in Iraq from my congressional district. It has been over a year since we declared major combat operations over in Iraq, yet our young people continue to die in this conflict. My heart aches for all of the families who have lost loved ones during this war.

I have been a vocal opponent of the war in Iraq, as many of my colleagues are aware. I have also been vocal in my support of the military troops over in the Middle East and across the world as well.

I pause today in remembrance of this brave young man, Private Samuel Bowen, who gave his life for our country. May the Lord bless and keep his family during this trying time.

I would ask that my colleagues join me in a moment of silence for Private First Class Samuel Bowen.

I do not pretend to be a great student of the Bible, yet my Sunday school lessons remain cemented in my head. All of those lessons talked about the importance of prayer, and some of them discussed how to pray; that a prayer can be general and that a prayer can be specific. My specific prayer is focused on all of the servicemen and women still serving in Iraq. I pray for their safe return and that the family of each young military men and women be comforted by their faith in God, a mighty God who will never let us down.

There is a passage in the Bible that reads: ''Put on the whole armor of God, that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we are not contending against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places. Therefore take the whole armor of God that you may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having girded your loins with truth, and having put on the breastplate of righteousness, and having shod your feet with the equipment of the gospel of peace; besides all these, taking the shield of faith, with which you can quench all the flaming darts of the evil one.''

SMART SECURITY AND ACCOUNTABILITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Speaker, the administration's war in Iraq has failed. It has failed to make the world a safer place. In fact, I fear that we are actually less safe from terrorism than we were. The world has actually been made less safe and more susceptible to acts of terror.

Who should be held accountable for this mess? The war is not going too well. Nearly 900 brave American soldiers have already lost their lives as a result of this deadly conflict, not to mention the thousands of innocent Iraqi civilians that have been killed. Worse, as many as 25,000 American troops have been evacuated from Iraq for medical reasons, 25,000. That is one-sixth of the number of troops currently stationed in Iraq.

This speaks to a systematic failure of leadership, and, sadly, examples of this failure are widespread and easily recalled: the failure to secure Iraq's borders, the failure to prevent postwar looting, and the failure to provide the security necessary for reconstruction. In fact, the abuse of POWs at the Abu Ghraib prison is yet another example of failed leadership by the Bush administration. And it is also an example of failed leadership in planning for the war and postwar reconstruction in Iraq.

But the most shameful aspect of our involvement in Iraq, our greatest failure of all, is our failure to provide adequately for our soldiers when it comes to equipment, the guidance, and the leadership they need to ensure their survival in Iraq and the success that they need to complete their stay in that country.

We failed to immediately provide our soldiers with the essential tools for their survival, body armor capable of stopping bullets, armor for tanks that would help prevent the destruction of U.S. military convoys, and the necessary water equipment to keep them hydrated in the desert heat. This issue is one that should have been accounted for during the planning phases of the war, not as an afterthought when our troops were stationed halfway across the world.

I ask my colleagues again who should be held accountable for this mess? Should it be Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, whom President Bush claimed was doing a ''superb job,'' and whom Vice President CHENEY, in an absurd statement, called the best Secretary of Defense in our Nation's history? If Rumsfeld is doing a superb job, if he is the best Defense Secretary in history, then I really want to know who is the worst and what is a bad job.

Rumsfeld's consistent failure to adequately plan for the war in Iraq and the postwar phase, during which the lives of far more American soldiers have been lost than during the war itself, Donald Rumsfeld should resign his post with the best interests of the Nation in mind.

But we must also take heed of the quote made famous by President Harry S. Truman: ''The buck stops here.'' President Bush would be well served to embrace this policy, a policy that served President Truman and our Nation well during an earlier wartime. Secretary Rumsfeld must not be used as a scapegoat for the President's failures.

I have introduced legislation to create a SMART security platform for the 21st century, H. Con. Res. 392. SMART stands for Sensible, Multilateral American Response to Terrorism. Three wonderful organizations, Physicians for Social Responsibility, Friends Committee on National Legislation, and Women's Action for New Directions, helped in writing this legislation.

SMART treats war as an absolute last resort. It fights terrorism with stronger intelligence and multilateral partnerships. It controls the spread of weapons of mass destruction with a renewed commitment to nonproliferation. And it aggressively invests in the development of impoverished nations with an emphasis on women's health and women's education.

The Bush doctrine of unilateralism has been tried, and it has failed. It is time for a new national security strategy based on our commitment to peace, our commitment to freedom, our compassion for the people of the world, and our capacity for multilateral leadership. Let us be smart about our future. SMART security, H. Res. 392, is tough, is pragmatic, is patriotic, and it will keep America safe.

ENRON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Madam Speaker, just before the July 4 recess, the Democrats on our side of the aisle attempted to offer an amendment to force the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, chaired by Pat Wood of Texas, appointed by George Bush of Texas, from continuing to conceal documents regarding Enron of Texas and the scandal and the fraud of which Enron has perpetrated upon the people of the Western United States, costing us tens of billions of dollars, a huge runup in our electricity costs, something that is continuing to hurt the economy of Oregon, Washington, and California. All the businesses depended upon energy, small businesses and residential consumers.

The Republicans would not allow that amendment to be debated on the floor of the House because of its kind of embarrassing links between Enron and the Bush administration and the fraud that was perpetrated on the Western United States.

Ken Lay, as the chief executive of Enron, was the mastermind of this fraud. He bilked billions of dollars from millions of people for his own personal profit and that of his executives, and he was finally today brought to justice. We finally saw him in handcuffs on television, and hopefully he will have a long stay in jail, and hopefully he will also have to work during that stay and not just get free room and board, because he has already extracted enough cost from hard-working Americans.

When we asked for a meeting with Vice President CHENEY during the huge runup in prices in the Western United States, we got together; he got together with the Northwest delegation. And he, in response to concerns I raised, said that I was really stupid, and I just did not understand that this had nothing to do with fraud, abuse, or market manipulation. This was all about market forces. I just did not understand markets and that Enron was a leader in markets, and I just did not understand markets, and unless we build one 500-megawatt plant every week for the next 15 years, and this is Vice President CHENEY, the $4,000 megawatt prices, about 100 times normal, would continue forever.

Of course, then we appealed to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, seeing that the Vice President's mind was slightly closed on the matter. And the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, chaired by Pat Wood of Texas, with a couple of other appointees chosen by Ken Lay of Texas, of Enron, refused to look into it. Finally, after additional pressure was raised, they said they would look into it. Then they said, no, it is just market forces. There is no market manipulation.

Then a strange thing happened. The Senate changed hands. When the Senator from Vermont changed to Independent, and the Democrats took over the Senate, and DIANE FEINSTEIN from California threatened to hold hearings on what was going on in the Western energy market, suddenly the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission reviewed its records and found, lo and behold, there was a scandal.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will refrain from referencing individual Senators.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Madam Speaker, certainly. I would not want to mention any individual Senators.

So the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission then suddenly said, oh, no, there is something wrong here. It is a little bit weird that prices are up to 100 times normal. And they reimposed the price caps, which we had during the Clinton administration.

Now we have the tapes of the Enron Corporation, and Ken Lay says he did nothing wrong. The tapes are incredible. The marketers talk about shutting off plants to drive up prices. They talk about gouging Grandma Milly. They talk about getting rid of the Clinton administration, price caps are gone, and Ken Lay is going to run things in this country, and, by God, they are going to make a lot of money. And they did for a while at tremendous pain and cost to the Western United States, all while the Bush administration looked the other way.

Pat Wood of Texas is still in charge of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. The Bush administration is continuing to push for more deregulation. They think the only thing that Enron did wrong and the only thing wrong with deregulation is that Enron got caught, because they were having a wonderful time making a bunch of money.

Now it comes that Ken Lay of Texas is the largest single, individual, lifetime contributor to George Bush of Texas, the President of the United States, and he has contributed over his life $139,500 to President Bush. His company contributed $625,000 to President Bush.

I would call upon the President to return these ill-gotten gains, the money that Ken Lay stole from Grandma Milly and others in the Western United States, and to show that he understands and has compassion. He could contribute the money to low-income energy funds in the Western United States to help Grandma Milly, who was taken to the cleaners by Ken Lay of Texas, of Enron, Mr. Bush's best friend, ''Ken Boy'' Lay.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

WAR WITHOUT END

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, another four soldiers died today in Iraq. Families mourn the loss of loved ones. Our Nation mourns the loss of brave soldiers. Over 900 Americans have died in Iraq so far. As many as 10 times that number have been injured. Americans spent $150 billion, and we know tens of billions dollars more will be spent this year. If only one soldier had died, the number would be too high, but the casualties and the grief are much worse.

The truth is we have not even begun to see the casualties of the Iraq war. The truth is that thousands of soldiers will face a lifetime of injury from the war. The truth is we will have not even begun to count the casualties that will come from post-traumatic stress disorder.

The magnitude of the coming casualties among returning U.S. soldiers is staggering. The prestigious New England Journal of Medicine in its most recent issue, which I will enter into the RECORD, gives a glimpse into the coming medical crisis facing our soldiers, families, and the Nation. The journal is known for credibility, thoughtful and factual reporting and analysis. The journal conservatively estimates that one in five soldiers will be afflicted with PTSD. In many cases, the symptoms will not even surface for a year or more. The casualties from the President's war of choice will affect tens of thousands of soldiers. There are 160,000 soldiers in Iraq today. Using the journal's conservative estimate, 30,000 U.S. soldiers will become post-traumatic stress disorder casualties in this war. Most do not even know that they are sick yet. Most do not exhibit any symptoms outwardly and will not for months or years. Tragically, when symptoms do appear, many soldiers will not ask for help.

Call it the tough-guy stigma. Soldiers are trained to be fearless no matter what the danger. Too many consider it a sign of weakness to need help. They will try to suffer in silence, but PTSD is as powerful as an artillery shell. Without help, PTSD can tear too many brave military men and women to shreds psychologically. I know. I was a Navy doctor and psychiatrist who treated soldiers returning from Vietnam with the post-traumatic stress disorder. Gut-wrenching is the only polite way to describe the anguish and suffering these soldiers experienced. Many of them still struggle against the demons of this disease.

As a doctor, you can do everything you can to help. All too often it is not enough, and all too often the only thing you can do is comfort the afflicted. You realize just how inadequate modern medicine is.

Some wonder why I strongly oppose the President's war of choice. Because I have seen the casualties. I have seen the pain inside the mind that no bandage can cover. I have treated the wounded, only to know in the dead of night just how little I and every doctor could do. We wanted to end the suffering. Who would not? We wanted to heal their wounds. Who would not?

Years later, long after the Vietnam War, years later after the media moved on to other issues, PTSD was still there haunting soldiers' minds. I saw it when I was a doctor working and treating prisoners in the King County jail. They include former soldiers who got into trouble because they struggled keeping their emotions under control. They struggled with PTSD. People who had served their country with no prior history of mental illness suddenly found themselves on the wrong side of the law. Were they felons or fallen heroes in need of help? I know what I think.

PTSD preys on the peace and happiness every American deserves, especially those who were drafted to fight in a war which this country came to loathe. After Vietnam, soldiers did not even have the thanks of a grateful Nation. We blamed them for the government's arrogance. It took decades before the wounds of the Nation began to heal. Thousands of names on a wall made us realize how much we had lost, how little we had gained, and how wrong it all was.

At least today America honors our soldiers, even as the opposition to the President's war grows. And it should. We are just beginning to realize the consequences of the President's war of choice. America has about 10,000 soldiers already dead or wounded. We face another 30,000 casualties. The wounds have already been inflicted. They are just not visible yet.

And they wonder why I strongly oppose the President's war of choice. The administration keeps inventing new reasons why we had to invade Iraq. They cannot even explain why 10,000 have already suffered or why 30,000 more will.

This is not about my opposition to the war, though. This is about preparing to help the men and women coming home from war. This is about honoring our soldiers by facing the truth about the coming wave of casualties here at home from PTSD. This is about a call to action in every city and town across America and in every home and every workplace. We must help them.

This is about a call to action in every city and town across America, in every home, in every workplace, PTSD is as real, as painful, as devastating as any shrapnel wound. If the effects could be seen like a bullet wound, we'd race the patient to the hospital for immediate care.

But PTSD doesn't work that way. It's silent. It's almost invisible. It's a war raging inside a person and we have to help. We can help by debunking the tough guy stigma. We can help by talking, listening and watching for signs of stress as our loved ones come home. We must help by demanding that the Veteran's Administration receives the funding to treat our returning soldiers. It's not a one-year supplement.

It is the recognition of the long-term consequences of the Iraq War. It is the commitment to treat our soldiers afflicted with PTSD with the best possible care for as long as necessary—and it will be years for many.

Every night the evening news graphically shows us the latest casualties and consequences of this war. It's awful. It didn't have to happen. And the overwhelming number of casualties are ahead of us, not mission accomplished. Before it is over, Iraq's casualties will top 40,000 U.S. soldiers. For what? Nothing at all.

ACKNOWLEDGING THE PSYCHIATRIC COST OF WAR

(By Matthew J. Friedman, M.D., Ph.D.)

The date presented by Hoge and associates in this issue of the Journal about members of the Army and the Marine Corps returning from Operation Iraqi Freedom or Operation Enduring Freedom in Afghanistan force us to acknowledge the psychiatric cost of sending young men and women to war. It is possible that these early findings underestimate the eventual magnitude of this clinical problem. The report is unprecedented in several respects. First, this is the first time there has been such an early assessment of the prevalence of war-related psychiatric disorders reported while the fighting continues. Second, there are predeployement data, albeit cross-sectional, against which to evaluate the psychiatric problems that develop after deployment. Third, the authors report important data showing that the perception of stigmatization has the power to deter active-duty personnel from seeking mental health care even when they recognize the severity of their psychiatric problems. These findings raise a number of questions for policy and practice. I focus here on post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), because there is better information about this disorder than about others and because PTSD was the biggest problem noted in the responses to an anonymous survey among those returning from active duty in Iraq or Afghanistan.

The rigorous evaluation of war-related psychiatric disorders is relatively new, having begun with the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study. This national epidemiologic survey of male and female veterans of Vietnam was conducted in the mid-1980s. The veterans were therefore assessed 10 to 20 years after their service in Vietnam. The prevalence of current PTSD was 15 percent among men and 8 percent among women. The lifetime prevalence of PTSD was higher—30 percent among male veterans and 25 percent among female veterans.

A retrospective cohort study of veterans of the Gulf War that was conducted between 1995 and 1997 showed a prevalence rate of 10.1 percent for PTSD among those who had experienced combat duty, in contrast to a prevalence rate of 4.2 percent in a matched cohort of Gulf War-era veterans who had not seen combat. The adjusted odds ratio for PTSD for those who had been in combat was 3.1; this is similar to the odds ratios in the present study of 2.84 for soldiers and 2.66 for Marines after deployment to active duty, as compared with soldiers before deployment.

In a longitudinal study of New England veterans of the Gulf War, the prevalence of PTSD more than doubled between the initial assessment performed immediately after their return to Fort Devens, Massachusetts, and the follow-up assessment performed two years later. The rates increased from 3 percent to 8 percent among male veterans and from 7 percent to 16 percent among female veterans. Higher levels of symptoms have been reported among members of the National Guard and the Reserves than among active-duty personnel.

Finally, a retrospective survey of American male and female soldiers deployed to Somalia between 1992 and 1994 showed an estimated prevalence of PTSD of approximately 8 percent, with no difference according to sex. When the focus of this mission shifted from a United Nations' humanitarian peacekeeping operation to a more traditional military deployment to subdue to Somali warlords, there was greater exposure to traumatic situations and a higher prevalence of PTSD among the American troops.

It is unclear at this time whether the prevalence of PTSD among those returning from Operation Iraqi Freedom or Operation Enduring Freedom will increase or decrease. On the one hand, it is encouraging that the Department of Defense has been active in providing mental health care in the war zone and psychiatric resources in the United States and has demonstrated a commitment to monitor psychiatric disorders, as reflected by the present report. Furthermore, the findings of the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study suggest that considerable recovery for PTSD among veterans is possible, as shown by the difference between the lifetime and the current prevalence of this disorder.

On the other hand, the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study cannot tell us whether the onse of PTSD occurred while Vietnam veterans were still in uniform or at some time later, during the 10 to 20 years between their exposure to war and the survey for the study. Indeed, there is reason for concern that the reported prevalence of PTSD of 15.6 to 17.1 percent among those returning from Operation Iraqi Freedom or Operation Enduring Freedom will increase in coming years, for two reasons. First, on the basis of the findings of the Fort Devens study, the prevalence of PTSD may increase considerably during the two years after veterans return from combat duty. Second, on the basis of studies of military personnel who served in Somalia, it is possible that psychiatric disorders will increase now that the conduct of war has shifted from a campaign for liberation to an ongoing armed conflict with dissident combatants. In short, the estimates of PTSD report by Hoge and associates may be conservative not only because of the methods used in their study but also because it may simply be too early to assess the eventual magnitude of the mental health problems related to deployment to Operation Iraqi Freedom or Operation Enduring Freedom.

A recent reanalysis of the data from the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study and the Hawaii Vietnam Veterans Project suggest that after the development of PTSD, the risk factors for persistent PTSD are ''primarily associated with variables relating to the current time frame: current emotional sustenance, current structural social support, and recent life events.'' This information is clearly useful for mental health policy and planning, because it raises the hopeful possibility that PTSD may be reversible if patients can be helped to cope with stresses in their current life.

There are obviously important distinctions between the period after the Vietnam War and the present. Americans no longer confuse war with the warrior, those returning from Iraq or Afghanistan enjoy nation support, despite sharp political disagreement about the war itself. In addition, the field of study of PTSD has matured to the point where effective evidence-based treatment and practice guidelines are available for use by the Departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs and by civilian mental health practitioners. Cognitive—behavioral therapies have been successful in the treatment of PTSD, and two selective serotonin-reuptake inhibitors have been approved by the Food and Drug Administration. Practitioners in the Departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs are sophisticated and strongly motivated to continue to improve their skills in treating PTSD. Collaboration between mental health professionals in the Department of Defense and those in the Department of Veterans Affairs is at an all-time high. For example, the Veterans Affairs National Center for PTSD and the Defense Department's Walter Reed Army Medical Center collaborated to develop the Iraq War Clinician Guide (available at www.ncptsd.org/topics/war.html) and to conduct a multisite, randomized trial of cognitive—behavioral therapy for PTSD among female veterans and female active-duty personnel.

In the best-case scenario, active-duty, Reserve, and National Guard personnel as well as veterans of Operation Iraqi Freedom or Operation Enduring Freedom with symptoms of PTSD will take advantage of the many mental health services available through the Departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs. Educational initiatives will be implemented to help veterans and active-duty personnel recognize that the loss of social support or the effect of recent adverse life events may precipitate a return of the symptoms of PTSD. Veterans and active-duty personnel will also be encouraged to monitor their psychological health and to seek treatment if and when it becomes necessary.

Alas, there is also a worst-case scenario that demands immediate attention. Hoge and associates report that concern about possible stigmatizaion was disproportionately greatest among the soldiers and Marines most in need of mental health care. Owing to such concern, those returning from Operation Iraqi Freedom or Operation Enduring Freedom who reported the greatest number of the most severe symptoms were the least likely to seek treatment for fear that it could harm their careers, cause difficulties with their peers and with unit leadership, and become an embarrassment in that they would be seen as weak.

These findings are consistent with those in an earlier report that showed low use of mental health services among Navy and Marine Corps personnel. In contrast to a rate of 28.5 percent among male civilians with a psychiatric disorder who sought treatment, only 19 percent of servicemen with a psychiatric disorder sought treatment, Furthermore, among military personnel with PTSD, the rate of seeking treatment was only 4.1 percent, which is substantially lower than that for other psychiatric disorders. This finding may indicate that within the military culture, ''succumbing'' to PTSD is seen as a failure, a weakness, and as evidence of and innate deficiency of the right stuff.

Hoge and associates suggests that the perception of stigmatization can be reduced only by means of concerted outreach—that is, by providing more mental health services in primary care clinics and confidential counseling through employee-assistance programs. The sticking point is skepticism among military personnel that the use of mental health services can remain confidential. Although the soldiers and Marines in the study by Hoge and colleagues were able to acknowledge PTSD-related problems in an anonymous survey, they apparently were afraid to seek assistance for fear that scarlet P could doom their careers.

Our acknowledgment of the psychiatric costs of war has promoted the establishment of better methods of detecting and treating war-related psychiatric disorders. It is now time to take the next step and provide effective treatment to distressed men and women, along with credible safeguards of confidentiality.

HONORING RACHEL GRANGER AND KYLE BAKER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BRADLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY of New Hampshire. Madam Speaker, I rise this evening to pay tribute to two New Hampshire residents. First, I pay tribute to a New Hampshire resident who recently passed away after fighting a long battle against a tough and debilitating illness. Rachel Granger died on Saturday, June 5, after a brave fight with Lou Gehrig's disease, or ALS. ALS is a fatal neurodegenerative disease that leaves its victims paralyzed, but still mentally alert.

On average, a person who has been diagnosed with ALS will die within 2 to 5 years of diagnosis, and 50 percent of patients die within 18 months. ALS is truly one of the most debilitating diseases to affect patients and their families.

In the last few months of her life, Rachel was unable to speak and to enjoy many of the activities she once loved, such as needlepoint and boating on Lake Winnipesaukee.

Rachel showed tremendous courage in attending a town meeting I hosted in Wolfeboro last year. Though she was afflicted with ALS and had many difficulties with mobility, she wanted to attend the meeting in order to shed light on a problem that affects thousands of other terminally ill patients. Rachel was having trouble getting her Social Security disability claim processed in enough time to actually receive any benefits before she passed away.

Her courage to bring this problem to my attention has encouraged me to work with my colleagues and the Social Security Administration to address this situation for all terminally ill patients. Rachel's determination to help others who face the same situation is commendable and inspiring. Rachel's friends remember her as someone who was full of life and always made others laugh, despite her physical handicap.

I am fortunate to have met Rachel during her lifetime and have been able to share in some of her triumphs and tragedies. Her courage and determination should not, and will not, be forgotten.

Madam Speaker, the second New Hampshire resident I rise tonight to honor is Kyle Baker of Milton. Mr. Baker is the national winner in the 2004 Veterans of Foreign Wars' Voice of Democracy Scholarship contest. This contest is held each year to give high school students the opportunity to voice their opinion on their responsibility to our country. The following is Mr. Baker's essay:

''It is a bright summer day, and a soft breeze gently whispers through the maple leaves. A little boy is playing alone in the driveway at his grandmother's house. Above him the American flag billows and waves, trying to remove itself from its anchor at the top of the flagpole and drift down in front of him to make its presence known. The boy plays on, not realizing what it took to keep that flag flying high.

''A few years later, on the 11th of September, 2001, the same boy, now a bit older, stares at the television in shock and disbelief. He watches as the towers collapse, ending so many lives and bringing anguish to so many families. The boy's classmates sitting all around him reflect in their eyes the desperation, sorrow and helplessness the boy himself feels. He realizes at that moment how precious the freedoms are that he sometimes takes for granted. He realizes what a privilege it is to live in America, and that the future of his country is now changed forever. He goes home that night wondering what he can do for his country at such a time of loss, what commitment can he possibly make to the future of America after such a tragedy:

''Now it is July of 2003, and the boy stands in front of the Vietnam Memorial seeing 'The Wall' for the very first time. He is overcome by how many names there are. He walks solemnly and slowly, passing by the countless flowers, letters, photographs, even teddy bears left at the wall by the families of the fallen. He wonders if some of the people walking near him are searching for one of the names, an uncle maybe, or even a father. He can picture a young man only a few years older than himself, crouching, frightened in the thick jungle brush, wondering if he will ever come home. He can picture this young man removing a photograph wrapped in plastic from his pocket. It is a photograph of the young man's high school girlfriend, the same girl this man had decided he would ask to marry as soon as he came home from the war. 'Be mine forever,' he would have undoubtedly said as he kissed her good-bye. 'Was it their last good-bye,' the boy wonders? 'Was this young man's name engraved here on the wall somewhere?'

''The boy walks on, gazing at panel after panel, feeling sadness, but also an immense gratitude with the passing of each and every name. He reads the names, trying to imagine what each man might have looked like. He wonders how many children they might have had or whether or not they, like the other young men he pictured, left a sweetheart behind when they went to fight for their country. So many names. So many faceless reminders of the highest commitment one can fulfill.

''The boy keeps moving slowly, when something at the foot of the wall catches his eye. He bends down to look, and there sits a small American flag, resting amongst a bouquet of flowers. Tears well up inside of him for a moment, and the boy can think of only one thing that he can do to show his appreciation for those lives reflected in the marble. He places one hand on a panel, closes his eye, and whispers 'thank you.'

''It is October 22, 2003, and that same little boy who used to play in the driveway at his Grandma's house underneath a billowing American flag sits in a classroom, wondering how he can write about his commitment to America's future. He wonders whether or not he should promise to do great things with his life, or whether or not he should tell the story of someone else who had. Yes. That little boy is me.

''Upon preparing for this essay I realized that it would not do to recite the words of our country's great leaders or prominent citizens, regardless of how moving and profound those words may be. I realized that this essay was not about how much research I had done, or how much I knew about the political structure of our nation. No. I realized that this time I needed to convey what I considered to be my commitment to America's future, using my own words, and expressing my own feelings. Well, here is what my commitment to America's future is. My commitment to America's future is simply to remember America's past.

''I will remember our fallen heroes, those brave souls who paid the ultimate price to ensure the safety of future generations. I will remember those that live on, continuing with the task bestowed upon them by the voices of days gone by. I will never lose sight of all that it took to provide me with the freedoms that I once took for granted, and I do not, and should not, stand alone with my commitment. When I see the flag in Grandma's driveway billowing proud and tall in the same soft breeze, I am reminded of why that flag is still flying. This is my commitment to America's future, and it is something that not only I, but all of us, as Americans, must never forget.''

CONCERN ABOUT DEMOCRATIC VICE PRESIDENT NOMINEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MICA. Madam Speaker, I come before the House tonight as a Member of Congress concerned about the impending Presidential race and particularly concerned about the Vice Presidential nominee chosen this week by the Democrat nominee for President.

I am very concerned, Madam Speaker, because the choice that has been made is a divider rather than a uniter, and I think we are about to engage in a debate that will determine who will lead us for the next 4 years. I am very concerned that someone has been chosen that has talked about two Americas, and that is a great concern to me, the framing of this debate around two Americas.

Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I am concerned about two Americas. I am concerned about giving access and a platform to the trial lawyers in America, a stage and the ability to launch their efforts, which is unprecedented in the history of our Republic.

I see two Americas. A lot of trial lawyers, attorneys are my best friends, but I see an America with a few trial lawyers who have benefited greatly and substantially financially, and I see an America in which the rest of us have paid and are paying every day for what those trial lawyers have done to our society and our country.

This is a very serious issue because we are going to decide in this campaign if we continue to let trial lawyers have two Americas, where a few benefit, and then we all pay.

I do not know any American that has been paying lower hospital bills or lower medical care costs. And if we look at the root of the higher costs, it is because of the system that has evolved. A few are suing, and a few are benefiting. I am very concerned about what I see for health care costs and, in manufacturing, the jobs that have been driven out of this country. I come from the business sector. I am so pleased I am not in business because of the threat of lawsuits today.

Everything we do in our society now, the cost is dramatically affected; not just prescription drugs or health care, access to health care, but also manufacturing, our ability to compete in the world. Sometimes we compete on a wage basis, but when we look at lawsuits, I will give two examples.

One, the only bill that we overrode when President Clinton was in office was one in which we attempted to do something about civil aircraft manufacturing. We were losing it in the United States, and we had lost most of it. We did override a veto, and we did restore some civil aviation manufacturing. However, we have lost all regional jet manufacturing, lost 50 percent of the large aircraft manufacturing. If we look around the States, North Carolina, the South, the North, Ohio, we see manufacturing closing down, because we would not want to manufacture in the United States when we can take that activity outside the United States.

Another example is Orlando Helicopter, in my own backyard in central Florida. It does not exist anymore. They moved to South America and China. Why? Because of liabilities.

So I see two Americas. I see an America where we may have a great opportunity for people to get health care at affordable costs, I see opportunity where we can expand jobs and have great economic opportunity, but I do not see it with, unfortunately, the Democratic nominee who is being brought forth.

What concerns me, too, having just survived 2 years ago a $5 million unprecedented election by a contestant who was a trial lawyer who spent $5 million to oust me from office, I see that same onslaught of funds coming in to try to capture the second highest office in our land. I see two Americas, and I see one that does concern me.

STOP PLAYING GAMES WITH AFRICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MILLER of Michigan). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WATSON. Madam Speaker, as we mark the first anniversary of the President's historic tour of Africa, we cannot help but wonder when, if ever, the government of this country will end the ''promise game'' they are so adept at playing with the peoples of Africa.

The administration's whirlwind, 1-week tour was ostensibly undertaken in pursuance of a policy ''to work with others for an African continent that lives in liberty, peace, and growing prosperity.'' It offered a laundry list of financial aid and development initiatives that could wipe out its poverty and dependence.

It is up to us to insist that the promises are kept and not relegated to unfunded programs for Africa, so characteristic of compassionate conservatives.

Startled by the realities of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, a threat potentially more devastating than global terrorism, the administration announced a tripling of its relatively modest commitment to battling the spread of the dreaded disease in Africa. The proposed $15 billion appropriation over the next 5 years in a region in which the pandemic has infected more than 30 million people, a tenth of them being children under the age of 15, is a drop in the bucket compared to the several billions we are committing annually to the pursuit of geopolitical strategies of a significantly less danger to the world at large.

But as generous and noble as this initiative is and touted to be, it is subject to political strings and is actually presented as another means of imposing our ideological concepts on the suffering people of Africa.

The other priority of the administration's African policy is the so-called advancement of political and economic freedom. Considering the means by which this government sat itself in power, it remains a source of wonder that they have had the unmitigated gall to propose to lecture any other state, least of all ancient African kingdoms, on the arts of governance and the democratic path to freedom.

The supposedly well-intended African Growth and Opportunity Act, known as an AGOA, is designed to build trade capacity with Africa and will, no doubt, be renewed and extended. Yet its full effect may never be realized until its implementation is not limited to those African nations that place themselves under the thumb of U.S. business interests.

The administration's third African policy priority is, they say, to create peace and regional stability. This would and could have been a lofty goal in itself had it not been proffered by an administration whose overall relations with other nations is based on a doctrine of preemptive aggression and regime change by violent external force.

We of the Congressional Black Caucus have been dubbed the conscience of this Congress. It is our duty to watch over the actions and activities of this government and to insist that, in words as well as in deeds, the interests of our constituency primarily and of the Nation ultimately are served.

In closing, Madam Speaker, our priority, therefore, is to ensure that the advantageous promises made to Africa are kept, and that every cent committed is spent as appropriated; that this and every other administration become fully convinced that its appropriations to Africa are not charitable contributions, but at least are reparations for past exploitations and, at the most, investments in the prosperity of Africa's people and all of the world.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD PROVES USEFUL FOR PRESERVING REMARKS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURGESS. Madam Speaker, we have heard from several people tonight on the other side of the aisle who spoke out against the activity in Iraq and said that they were opposed to the activity in Iraq, and that is their right, their privilege, their obligation to do so.

Madam Speaker, I was not here when the Congress voted on authorizing the use of military force in the country of Iraq. I think had I been here that I would have voted in favor of that use of military force, but that is merely speculation. I was not here.

But, Madam Speaker, I think it is useful to go back in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read the remarks of people who were here who had those debates, who had to work through those issues, and who did then ultimately vote for the use of force in Iraq.

I quote the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from September 12, 2002, where an individual said, ''I firmly believe the issue of Iraq is not about politics, but it is about national security. We know or have known for at least 20 years that Saddam Hussein has aggressively and obsessively sought weapons of mass destruction by any means available. We know that he has chemical and biological weapons today. He has used them in the past, and he is doing everything he can to build more. Each day he inches closer to his long-term goal of a nuclear capability, a capability that could be less than a year away. I believe,'' this speaker said, ''I believe that Saddam Hussein's Iraqi regime wants a clear threat to the United States, to our allies, to our interests around the world, and to the values of freedom and democracy that we hold dear.''

Madam Speaker, this individual went on to say, ''Saddam has proved his willingness to act irrationally and brutally against his neighbors and against his own people. Iraq's destructive capability has the potential to throw the entire Middle East into chaos and poses a moral threat to our vital allies. Furthermore, the threat against America is all too clear. Thousands of terrorist operatives around the world would pay anything to get their hands on Saddam's arsenal.''

The speaker went on to say, ''There is every possibility that he could turn those weapons over to terrorists. No one can doubt that if the terrorists had had weapons on September 11, had had those weapons of mass destruction, they would have used them. On September 12, 2002, we can hardly forget the terrorist threat and the serious danger that Saddam would allow his arsenal to be used. Iraq has continued to develop its arsenal in defiance of the collective will of the international community as expressed through the United Nations Security Council. It, Iraq, is violating terms of the ceasefire that ended the Gulf War and is ignoring as many as 16 United Nations

Security Council resolutions, including 11 resolutions concerning Iraq's efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction. These U.N. resolutions are not unilateral American demands; they involve obligations that Iraq has undertaken to the international community. By ignoring them, Saddam Hussein is undermining the credibility of the United Nations.''

Let me repeat that.

''By ignoring them, Saddam Hussein is undermining the credibility of the United Nations openly and openly violating international law and making a mockery of the very idea of international collective action.''

Madam Speaker, this individual on September 12 of 2002 wrapped things up with the very concise statement that goes on to say, ''The path of confronting Saddam is full of hazards, but the path of inaction is far more dangerous. This week, a week before we remember the sacrifice of thousands of innocent Americans made on 9/11, the choice could not be starker. Had we known that such attacks were imminent, we surely would have used every means at our disposal to prevent them and to take out the plotters.''

Well, Madam Speaker, unfortunately, these words were spoken by a Member of the other body, and the decorum of the House prevents me from properly attributing them, but most people would recognize the speaker of these words as the man who has recently been designated for the second highest office in this land, the Democratic, purported Democratic nominee for Vice President of the United States.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed with my 5 minute at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

A TRIBUTE IN HONOR OF ROLLAND ''BOB'' LYONS OF ANN ARBOR, MICHIGAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Madam Speaker, I rise this evening to honor and remember Rolland ''Bob'' Lyons, who lost his struggle with cancer June 17, 2004.

Bob was born in Ann Arbor, Michigan, and lived in several Michigan cities before graduating from Kalamazoo High School in 1948. He served his country in Korea as a second lieutenant in the Army. A graduate of the University of Michigan, he founded the Michigan Trenching Service, Incorporated, and became a prime contractor for service companies. Although he was a highly successful businessman, he humbly referred to himself as ''just a ditch digger from Ann Arbor.''

Bob Lyons inspired optimism and a community-minded spirit that has left a lasting mark on those who were fortunate enough to have known him. Bob's commitment to improving society can be seen through his membership on the Mackinac Center Board of Directors. However, he will best be remembered, I think, for his boundless energy and commitment to numerous causes: Cleary University, St. Joseph Hospital, the Boy Scouts, the Hands On Museum, and many, many others.

Bob Lyons' humor and outgoing personality made him a natural at fundraisers and political events where he was a regular. He recruited, encouraged, supported and helped elect many political candidates.

Bob was passionate for his causes and was a role model for all of us who seek to improve our communities and our country. Thank you, Bob, for all you did for us. You will be remembered fondly. We offer our condolences to your beloved wife Jan, daughter Suezahn, son Rob. Bob, your service to your community and your country will be remembered.

HONORING DOUG BEREUTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MILLER of Michigan). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the subject of my Special Order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, at this time we would like to honor the gentleman from Nebraska (DOUG BEREUTER), who is from the First Congressional District. I would like to begin the Special Orders by recognizing the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), who is the chairman of Committee on Ways and Means and who graciously arranged this hour for us.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) because those of us who came in the 96th Congress in 1979, and I see my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS), is with us who was a member of that class, there were 77 of us, both Democrats and Republicans who came. And when you come in the same class, you then have seniority established alphabetically.

So you need to understand that from the first day DOUG BEREUTER was envied by me for the seniority which he achieved immediately in the House. However, the years, and it is now 25, DOUG and Louise and my wife, Sharon, and I have gotten to know each other in a way that you can say that we are colleagues. We professionally deal with a number of issues, but probably as much as any other person in the House, DOUG is a friend, and I admire him so much.

If you look at his background, rarely is anyone as prepared as he was to take on the responsibilities as a Member of the House of Representatives. And then when you look at what he has done and the manner in which he has done it, I admire him so much for the professionalism that he has brought to this House. And I know that as he now decides to go a different way, and Louise leaves her home by the river and they move into other activities, that Sharon and I will keep in touch with them because the memories that we have shared will be renewed as he moves on.

I will conclude, I will tell the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE), by saying this: Republicans have now been in the majority for a decade. Some of us have been privileged to be able to chair committees in this great body. I can without refutation say that up to this point the most well-qualified mind-set approach, Member of the majority not to be able to be a chairman is DOUG BEREUTER. It saddens me. Although he has done a marvelous job in his professional career here in the House, in a number of committee assignments, I want to underscore that DOUG BEREUTER should have been a chairman of a full committee.

He and I will lament that over drinks in a number of countries over the next few years as we continue to share our lives in many ways. I am saddened to see DOUG go, but I am not sad because I get to move up one spot in seniority. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. OSBORNE. I thank the gentleman for his comments. I know Mr. BEREUTER appreciates very much those comments as well.

At this time, I would like to yield to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER), and I appreciate her participation in this Special Order.

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the finest Members of this institution, DOUG BEREUTER of Nebraska. After 26 years of service, DOUG is retiring from the House to be the president of the Asia Foundation, and this body will not be the same without him.

In his time in the House of Representatives, Madam Speaker, DOUG BEREUTER has embodied the best of public service. His commitment to his constituents and his Nation has never waivered. While staying true to his values, he has worked across party lines to achieve compromise and advance sound public policy. He is known all over Capitol Hill as a man with strong convictions but even stronger commitment to working in a bipartisan, collegial manner and a dedication to doing good.

DOUG BEREUTER is a committed internationalist who understands that in this world of ever increasing globalization, it is essential that our Nation maintain strong relationships around the world. DOUG has dedicated a significant part of his career to improving international cooperation, and he is known and respected around the world.

I have had the opportunity to travel with DOUG and Louise Bereuter as a member of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. I have been very impressed by his knowledge of our European allies and his grasp of the issues the alliance faces. I have seen the ease with which he relates to foreign leaders. And I have also seen the grace with which he conducts diplomacy.

On a very personal note, and I am sure to the great good news to my colleagues from California, I am pleased to tell you that not only will DOUG and Louise be relocating to the San Francisco Bay area, they are moving not only to my district but my home town. So I have the blessing of not losing DOUG and Louise completely. Although he has a very nonpartisan job, I believe that they will enjoy living in my town, and it is a beautiful place indeed. And we will be very, very blessed to have them. They will add greatly.

Louise is especially someone I have gained tremendous appreciation for. She is an artist, a great mom and a great grandmother; and I am happy to say that we are proud to have DOUG BEREUTER and Louise Bereuter moving to California. We are happy to have his service to the people of Nebraska and our Nation, and I wish him the best of luck. When he sees the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), he will be drinking California wine.

I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for hosting us.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her comments.

At this time I would like to call upon the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS), chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) very much for yielding to me. I must say to the coach that he has always associated himself with class throughout his career. I can see he is doing this one more time by handling this Special Order on behalf of a wonderful Member of the House of Representatives.

DOUG BEREUTER is one of the classiest people to have ever served in this place. As my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), suggested, there are few and far between those who have his kind of class.

The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and I came to Congress with DOUG. At that point, there were 79 Members in our class as freshmen; 10 of us remain. And, indeed, as DOUG leaves us, all who remain will remember him for as long as we can possibly maintain contact.

California is a long ways for some, but it is not very far for several of us. It is my intention as I visit my grandchildren up north, to certainly come visit DOUG and Louise and remember the times we had together way back when, several years ago when we arrived here in the House of Representatives.

DOUG BEREUTER is one of those classic Members for a number of reasons, not the least of which is the leadership that he has demonstrated in the field of foreign affairs. He is a Member of the House during my service here who has, from at least a Republican perspective, caused our caucus to focus in a way that recognizes that we are living in a shrinking world. And it is very, very important in that arena not to dwell upon partisan politics alone, recognizing that whoever the Commander in Chief is, whoever the President of the United States is, as we leave this country we need to speak in one voice on behalf of country.

In a very special way, he penetrated our caucus in connection with that understanding. DOUG BEREUTER is a person who I very much regret see leaving the House. But as he goes forth on his work on the part of the Asia Foundation, he will have a special way of communicating there as well, I am certain.

DOUG's impact here in the House of Representatives now will have a very special impact upon a very important part of the world, as we all know Southeast Asia is such a significant part of our future.

To my friend, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE), I really want him to know how much we appreciate his taking this time, this special effort to pay tribute to our mutual friend. It is a pleasure to be here with him.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much. I know Mr. BEREUTER will particularly appreciate the gentleman's comments.

At this time, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), who has shown great patience, endurance, who has even delayed a medical procedure to help us tonight. So we are honored to have him with us.

Mr. TANNER. I thank the gentleman. I wanted to be here tonight because I think so highly of DOUG and Louise Bereuter. I have had the privilege of traveling with DOUG and Louise, Betty and I have for the last 8 or 10 years, to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, which is arguably now in this age of worldwide global terrorism, one of the stronger links that we have with Europe, one of the most important relationships we have with respect to international cooperation and international help as it relates to our foreign policy.

I must tell Members, I know DOUG has been a terrific representative for the people of Nebraska while he has served here in the House, but he has made an enormous contribution to this country. As my friend, the gentlewoman California (Mrs. TAUSCHER), said earlier, his diplomacy and his ability to relate with legislators, parliamentarians from other countries around the world, and particularly in the time that I have been with him in Europe, is something that is going to be sorely, sorely missed.

We need the cooperation, respect and the help of other countries as we attempt to lead the world in this war of international terrorism. DOUG BEREUTER has made a contribution presently serving as President of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. And I want to pick up on something the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) said. When we go to Europe to the NATO meetings, DOUG does not go as a Republican. I do not go as a Democrat. We go as American parliamentarians, American Members of Congress, to try to further our country's interests abroad.

He was a quintessential and is a quintessential salesman, a man who is respected not so much because they always agree with him or us, but because he always treats people with the kind of kindness, understanding, and commitment to their point of view that we expect them to extend to us. And so I just wanted to come tonight and say thanks in this formal way to DOUG and Louise for their many years of service to our country and particularly for their leadership within the European sphere.

He is moving on now to the Asia Foundation, and I would hope and I know that his service there will be as rewarding and as fruitful to the country, to his country, to our country as his time serving in Europe has been.

I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for hosting us tonight in this tribute to DOUG. We appreciate it very much.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much. I appreciate his comments.

At this time, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I wanted to thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE). He is a good neighbor to DOUG, and he is doing a great service to bring and have this Special Order.

I would like to begin my tribute to the service of DOUG BEREUTER by quoting a noted Irish statesman and philosopher, Edmund Burke, who said: ''Your representative owes you not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion.''

This quote reflects the hallmark of DOUG BEREUTER's service to his constituents and his country.

□ 1915

He has brought integrity and leadership to his service in the Congress and the people of Nebraska have been well-served by his dedication to effective government.

On a personal note, Mary and I treasure the friendship of DOUG and Louise. We have been with them on their little farm out in Nebraska. It has been a wonderful relationship to have them as friends over the years.

It has also been a special privilege to be part of a U.S. delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly under the very capable leadership of DOUG. I am pleased today to join my colleagues in wishing DOUG Godspeed in his new challenge for service to our Nation.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments and appreciate his patience in being here this evening. At this time, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I appreciate his taking out this Special Order tonight to honor our colleague DOUG BEREUTER, retiring after 26 years of distinguished service in this body.

I first got to know DOUG as a thoughtful and productive Member of the House Committee on Banking soon after my arrival here, but I soon came to admire him even more for his knowledge and his involvement in foreign affairs. He is now completing his 22nd year on the Committee on International Relations where he chairs the Subcommittee on Europe. He is in his 10th year of service on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence where he chairs the Subcommittee on Intelligence Policy and National Security and serves as vice-chair of the full committee.

For most of his congressional career, DOUG has made it his business to understand the foreign policy challenges facing our country, and he has made enormous contribution to the House's capacity for and exertion of international leadership. He has earned the respect of Members on both sides of the aisle and among his counterparts in other parliaments. He has been a delegate to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly since 1986. He has led the U.S. delegation since 1995, and he was elevated to the presidency of the assembly 2 years ago.

DOUG represents our country's interests forthrightly and effectively in international forums, and he is equally skilled in informal diplomacy, listening well and engaging in candid dialogue, forming ties of mutual respect with leaders abroad. He has taken a particular interest in the challenges facing the NATO alliance after the Cold War, the role of the alliance in conflicts in the Balkans and beyond Europe, and the collective response to terrorism.

Under his leadership, the Assembly has played an important role in the eastward expansion of NATO, both in debating the terms of that expansion and in establishing ties with parliamentarians in the new member States.

Like others in this body, I have greatly enjoyed and benefited from my travels with DOUG, often with his wife Louise and my wife Lisa, on parliamentary exchanges, Aspen Institute seminars and NATO Assembly meetings.

Most recently, we have collaborated in drafting a resolution, H. Res. 642, establishing a commission in the House of Representatives to assist parliaments in emerging democracies. It is our hope that this commission might continue the work begun in Eastern Europe by the Frost-Solomon Commission in the 1990s, working in the Balkans, the Caucasus and other areas as they develop freely functioning parliaments.

Madam Speaker, as much as we respect DOUG's work, we also admire him as a colleague and value him as a friend. DOUG's a warm and sincere and genuine person, persistent and determined when he needs to be, but also cooperative, collaborative, willing to share the limelight and eager to help others succeed. One measure of DOUG's personal qualities and the loyalty friends feel to him is the longevity of his staff here. DOUG's staff obviously believes in him, and they have served for impressive periods of time.

Carol Lawrence has served for 26 years, plus 3 years when he was a State legislator. Robin Evans, 22 years; Jodi Detwiler, 18 years; Susan Olson, his chief of staff, 17 years, and we know Susan well from her NATO assembly work; Mike Ennis, 16 years; Alan Feyerherm, 15 years. That is remarkable. That is a remarkable display of not just staff longevity but staff loyalty, a kind of personal loyalty that DOUG inspires.

Mr. Speaker, DOUG BEREUTER has made a distinctive contribution to this House and to our country. We will miss him here, but we bid him and Louise farewell in the sure hope that we will have continuing opportunities to see them and to work with them. We know that DOUG's talents will find a worthy outlet in the presidency of the Asia Foundation, and we wish him well in that important work.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman and appreciate him being here this evening. At this time, I yield to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), the chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, who has worked very closely with Mr. BEREUTER.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to thank my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for his generosity and his leadership this evening. It is nice to be among colleagues talking about such pleasant things. Obviously we are all honored to rise to honor our friend DOUG BEREUTER and say good-bye. I hope it is not good-bye. I think in his new role we will be able to see more of him in a different capacity, but it is clear that I think the House feels we are losing a really nice guy and terrific resource. He has served us well.

I have actually had the pleasure, as most of us have tonight who have been talking, of working with DOUG in a number of capacities. How many times have we all flown back and forth across the Atlantic with DOUG? How many different airports have we stopped at on that airplane that sits out there that we sort of groan when we see, thinking how often we are going to have to stop for gas to get where we are going?

For all those years on the Parliamentary Assembly that he has worked and taken over the leadership, he has been working hard for the United States of America's position of a changing world, a changing times, and it has not been easy as we all know.

He has served as the chief congressional spokesman on NATO issues during the most difficult debates we had, I think, in Bosnia, Kosovo and Serbia, and he did it with eloquence and with clarity and a great amount of patience. Maybe patience should be underscored when we are talking about the NATO parliamentarians.

DOUG certainly diffused a number of disputes that have come up, and I think from everything from things as easy as the European Security Defense Initiative, which was relatively calm, to things like handling Mr. Zhirinovsky, a presidential candidate for Russia who continuously provokes our delegation with obnoxious effrontery on every occasion, DOUG did an absolutely tireless, fabulous and successful job on behalf of the United States and this institution, and I think everybody needs to know that and applaud it.

DOUG was rewarded for his efforts by being elected President of NATO Parliamentary Assembly. I am not sure that is a reward, but he took the job on and was celebrated for doing it so well, and it is an honor to have that position. It is also a lot of hard work, and he held that position at a very hard time, when NATO was admitting more members. Enlargement was not a subject that came across without controversy, and I think that now even controversies we hardly even dare breach out-of-area operations for NATO or things that are actually happening given what is going on in Afghanistan.

DOUG has been there during these critical times, providing leadership for the delegation, and it is very true to say he has helped direct NATO's support on the global war on terrorism, something of great interest to us all.

I am particularly appreciative, of course, in my position, for his service as the vice-chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and particularly the chairman of that subcommittee that tries to link up policy with our national security capabilities. That is not an easy job. It is unique. It is the only place I know where that happens, where that work is done, and I single out two issues in particular where DOUG has made a positive impact in the community.

First, he led the community's push to eliminate what we call the Deutsch Guidelines, the risk avoidance question, the hindrance to the agent requirement that crippled our ability to recruit productive assets, and DOUG was a tiger on that. When things were passed into law under his leadership and were not properly effected and executed, he went back and made it happen, and I take my hat off to him for his persistence and his vision on that.

Secondly, he has recently been responsible for crafting a comprehensive legislative package addressing the linguistic needs of the intelligence community. He and many others on both sides of the aisle have contributed, but he led the charge and he did it efficiently and he did it in a short period of time. We just passed an authorization bill that now provides for language capabilities that are critical to this country we did not have before.

I am very well aware that language capability is not a front page story for the New York Times, but it is essential for our collection of information that our Nation needs to pursue its foreign policy objectives. DOUG took on the task. His recommendations on language received enthusiastic bipartisan support, and now it is a major component of a passed authorization bill in the House, and I believe the Senate will see it the same way.

I guess I would sum up and say, as he ends his tenure on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, I will say without equivocation that DOUG BEREUTER has left the intelligence community better than he found it through his extensive, conscientious, creative initiatives, and those are words I would not say casually because those are things that matter a great deal to me. He has left a positive mark and left a great improvement for us.

He has also been a great friend and colleague, as everybody is here to say. I first met DOUG and talked about town planning. We had that in common together. He exposed me to the Niobrara River debate which was a very vigorous debate, important in his district, and he carried the day against big odds on that, and he did it with grace and helped out a lot of us who did not know much about that river to know a lot more quickly.

It is not a permanent good-bye. We wish DOUG and Louise the best, of course, and I think it is sort of strange. The ultimate irony is that the man we are celebrating so much tonight for all of his leadership on the transatlantic and the across Atlantic area interests is also a man who has huge experience on the Pacific side. So, DOUG, as you and Louise go from the Atlantic to the Pacific, we all wish you well and Godspeed. We now have another reason to visit San Francisco, which is a good thing. I would say that you are truly a global man for the global century ahead. God bless you and good luck.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for his kind kinds. At this time I yield to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE).

Mr. MOORE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for providing this forum tonight.

We are here tonight to thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for his distinguished service to our country. Congressman DOUG BEREUTER is a gentleman whose congressional service is characterized by civility, integrity and gentlemanly conduct. I have never heard any Member of Congress, Republican or Democrat, say an unkind word about DOUG BEREUTER. That may be a rarity around here.

DOUG has honored this institution of Congress with his service. He has provided leadership as the President of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, which I have had the honor to serve with DOUG and work. He has worked to further the objectives of NATO and strengthen the ties between each of the Nations who are parties to NATO.

Most importantly, perhaps DOUG BEREUTER is a good, decent man, and I am grateful he is my friend. DOUG, may you have great success in your new career. My wife Stephanie and I wish you and Louise the very best.

I again thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for providing this forum this evening.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman and appreciate his kindness in coming down here and waiting. At this time, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GILLMOR).

Mr. GILLMOR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I am going to be brief because there are a number of speakers tonight. I will enter my full statement in the RECORD, but I am very pleased to have the opportunity to pay tribute to a very special Member of this body who is leaving after 25 years of service.

All of us who serve here know the respect with which DOUG is held by his colleagues here, but what many Members of this body do not know is how widely known, how respected he is by parliamentarians all across this globe.

Throughout his 25 years in the House, DOUG BEREUTER has served on an exceptionally large number of important committees. He has also held the gavel as chairman of three different subcommittees. He has played a lead role in the House of Representatives for years, but throughout his 18 years of service on the U.S. delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly and his membership on numerous other congressional exchanges and international task forces, Congressman DOUG BEREUTER has become one of the most experienced voices in congressional debate on international affairs.

I have had the pleasure of serving with DOUG for 10 years on the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, and my wife Karen and I have had the opportunity to know both he and his wife Louise very well as a result of that experience. I think it is an example of the high regard in which he is held, the fact that he is now serving as the President of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. He was unanimously elected to that position by the parliamentarians of the all the NATO countries. NATO has now grown to 26 countries with the recent expansion.

His important achievements, both in Congress and abroad, will continue to pay tribute to his esteemed career as an effective legislator and accomplished diplomat.

His presence in this House will be sorely missed as he has been one of those Members who has always worked on behalf, not only of the American people, but also his Nebraska constituency.

□ 1930

It is a responsibility that he assumes going to the Asia Foundation, a very large and important institution; but it fits perfectly with his background, his experiences, his talent, where he will no doubt make a major contribution. He will be helping not only the United States but the many Asian countries where the foundation is active.

I wish Congressman DOUG BEREUTER and his wife, Louise, and his family the very best of luck in the years to come.

Mr. OSBORNE. Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Mr. BEREUTER, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr.

TERRY) for the remaining 30 minutes or 25 minutes, whatever we have left, to manage the last part of the hour.

I would just like to comment on the fact that DOUG BEREUTER has served an extraordinarily long period of time here in the House of Representatives, actually longer than any other Nebraskan has served in the House. As a matter of fact, it is rumored that he served under Roosevelt, Teddy Roosevelt, that is, and so his 26-odd years of service have been greatly appreciated.

DOUG represents a very diverse constituency, and he has represented that constituency very well. This was exemplified by the fact that when we redistricted in 2000, three of the counties in DOUG's district were going to be allocated to my district, and there was almost a complete revolt from those three counties. They did not want to leave DOUG and come with me, and so I think one of them managed to stay in DOUG's district.

DOUG is a small-town guy, Utica, Nebraska. He is proud of the fact that he has held over 1,000 town hall meetings. So he has really maintained close touch with his constituency. DOUG carried an extremely heavy work load here in Congress. He served on the Committee on Financial Services, Committee on International Relations, chairman of the Subcommittee on Europe, Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, was vice chairman of the full committee, chairman of the Subcommittee on Intelligence, Policy and National Security, vice chairman of the Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security. So very, very few, if any, people in Congress served in that large number of committees.

Also he is the president of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. He has been prominent in world trade issues and world hunger programs. DOUG attended the University of Nebraska-Lincoln where he was a Phi Beta Kappa. He went to Harvard graduate school and was a faculty member and guest lecturer at Harvard, University of Nebraska-Lincoln and Kansas State University, also in private business, United States Army, Nebraska State legislature. So there are very few people in Congress who have had the varied experience and the excellent background that DOUG BEREUTER has had.

His past committee memberships, honorary positions are really too numerous to mention; but the most important thing about DOUG, and this is what I would like to emphasize, it is really not so much what he has done as how he has done them. DOUG has been exceptionally self-sacrificing, not noisy, abrasive, and certainly not self-serving; and this has been appreciated by all of his colleagues. And I think this is an example of why so many people have shown up tonight to speak on his behalf.

His focus has been on serving the best interest of the country and his district and not on self-promotion. He has worked very well with Members of both parties, and I think that probably the finest compliment that was paid to DOUG was paid by EARL BLUMENAUER, a Member of the other party, who was not, unfortunately, able to be here because of an emergency, but EARL said that DOUG was one of those people who were the glue that held this place together. And I guess when you leave Congress, if somebody can say that about you from the other side of the aisle, that is an extreme compliment.

So DOUG certainly is somebody who has been a healer, somebody who has pulled people together; and I guess the last thing I would mention to you that, again, displays DOUG's character is the fact that I arrived here as a 64-year-old freshman who knew a little bit about football and almost nothing about politics. And DOUG and his wife, Louise, had Nancy, my wife, and myself out to dinner. And he tried to give us the basics, kind of Congress 101. And so he tried to steer me in the right direction and was always available, and I guess it is always the mark of a person's character as to how he treats somebody that can do nothing for him. Obviously, I had no seniority, was not anyone of any influence in Congress; and yet his kindness will long be appreciated and remembered. So DOUG was a great influence on me and on this body and will be greatly missed.

Madam Speaker, I yield the remaining time that we have to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY), who is also a great friend of DOUG's; and I am honored that he would come down here tonight and manage the last part of this hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Nebraska will control the remaining time.

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding the time, and I do think it honors DOUG by us doing this as a team approach. Certainly, though, you have taken much of the responsibility for tonight, and thank you for doing that.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) for as much time as he may consume.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for yielding me this time. I will not repeat many of the comments of my colleagues talking about specific aspects of DOUG's really quite incredible Congressional career. We all in this body have good days and bad days, and one of the really bad days for me was awakening to learn that, I think I was in California then, that Congressman BEREUTER of Nebraska had decided to retire at the end of this term, that somebody as essential to the work that I was interested in, particularly in international relations, who conducted himself in such a professional and thoughtful way, whose approach to every issue, sort of he had his philosophy and he had his values, but essentially it was a very meticulous, merit-based analysis of issues and what made the most sense, and he constantly stood firm and steadfast for the conclusions he had reached through that kind of an analysis. He did not pigeon-hole issues. He looked at each one fresh and came to terms with the merits after a great deal of thought and analysis.

One of the good days in this institution was the day when I learned he was going to seek and then get the presidency of the Asia Foundation, a very important organization doing very important work on the rule of law, human rights, and democracy in Asia and that part of the world, from Afghanistan to Indonesia, critical countries, large, important countries, and that DOUG would be devoting his professional career now to this. And I certainly wish him and Louise, whom I am also very fond of, great success. They will do an organization that has already made an excellent name for itself a great service by giving their efforts to that organization.

For me, what some of us over here view as the national tragedy of the 1994 elections, which shifted the majority control to the other party and all of the drama that surrounded that for those of us who had enjoyed being in the majority and all that went with that status, I got a consolation prize that I think a lot of my Democratic colleagues did not get, because I went from being a chairman of a subcommittee on the Committee on International Relations to being a ranking member of a subcommittee, the Asia subcommittee, which DOUG BEREUTER was the chairman of. And in the 4 years that I was ranking and that he was chair of that committee, I cannot remember a single issue where I left any meeting, any markup, any hearing without the greatest respect for his intellect, for his commitment, for his willingness to work on a bipartisan way, for the approach which I think is an important one that has been not always observed as well as it should be, but a tradition that in this body politics ends at the water's edge. And this is a gentleman who would never hesitate to work with the minority party or with minority Members that were willing to work with him in pursuit of what he saw as the national interest.

He had a number of different accomplishments; many of them have been touched on. The one that I did not hear mentioned, he played a very key role in drafting the Hong Kong Policy Act, which placed the issue of Hong Kong's continuing autonomy after the handover front and center in terms of our relationship with China. He did incredible work in terms of trying to deal with the human rights issue in the context of MFN status for China.

Over and over again, I could take more than enough time as allotted talking about specific issues and specific accomplishments. I am only sorry that I did not get to serve on the Committee on International Relations with him as chairman or, even better, with him as ranking member of that particular committee. I know he would have done a wonderful job, but I look forward to continuing to see him and Louise and to work with him at the time when it is appropriate on issues that the Asia Foundation will be engaged in, which will be issues that are very much in our national interest.

Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for conducting this Special Order.

Mr. TERRY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his words of high praise.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), chairman of the Committee on Small Business.

Mr. MANZULLO. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. It is a real joy to pay tribute to a person who has been a real role model, a mentor, and a teacher for the years that I have had the privilege of representing the people of the 16th Congressional District of Illinois.

For a long period of time, I served with DOUG on the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific on the Committee on International Relations, of which DOUG was the chairman.

In 1999, he invited me to go with him to Hong Kong in December of that year on an oversight mission to take a look at the result of the turnover of Hong Kong to Mainland China in the summer of that year, and I had never been to China before and really did not want to go, but knowing that DOUG BEREUTER would be the chairman of that little group gave me so much of a sense of confidence that, in case we got in trouble, he could get us out of it.

So we went over there and met with various people in China, including the Premier; and I recall when we were flying from Shanghai to Beijing, we encountered a diversion in the weather, and there was a huge dust storm that was blowing the dirt off the Gobi Desert. And so we just could not make it to Beijing. And the pilot came on, and he said, We are going to have to divert to Hohhot Inner Mongolia.

And the only thing I knew about Inner Mongolia was that it is right next to Outer Mongolia; and as the plane landed, we were given these reboarding passes that said, ''When in Hohhot, stay at the Inner Mongolia Hotel,'' which was owned by the Chinese airline. And we looked at each other, and our small delegation got in this bus. I know it was very quiet. I had two coats, and they were both stored in the belly of the airplane, and we rode late at night to this mysterious hotel and were greeted there in the lobby by so much confusion going on. It was just absolutely chaos broke loose in the lobby, and a man who was a complete stranger to our U.S. delegation, probably about eight people including Members and staff, came over and he said, ''If you give me your passports, I will get you your room.''

We did not even know who this guy was, except he looked official. And I looked at DOUG, we all looked at each other, took out our passports and gave them to this complete stranger, who then proceeded to get us our rooms and took care of that.

□ 1945

The next 2 days we were trying to find out ways we could get to Beijing. We thought about planes, trains, and automobiles. There were several people on that airplane from Israel, and we heard that they got in a van and drove across the Gobi Desert at night to get to Beijing. We called the U.S. Consul, and they said no, we do not want a bunch of Congressmen and their staff riding in a van across the Gobi Desert. It is a pretty dangerous place.

Eventually the weather cleared up, and we got on the airplane, landed in Beijing, and what a great opportunity to spend several days with a person who has such a deep sense of history, a real love of his country, and who took hours of his time to instruct me on his thoughts on the changing face of China.

Now, I am the chairman of the American-Chinese Interparliamentary Exchange and have been there several times subsequent to the 1999 trip with the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER). And a year ago in January, I had an opportunity to lead the largest delegation of Members of Congress to China. Were it not for the gentleman's insistence that I go with him to China in 1999, knowing that I had such a desire and interest in that country, I probably would not be the chairman of this Interparliamentary Exchange, probably would never have had an opportunity to open up markets over there and work on areas of human rights. I can only attribute this to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

He is one of the most decent people and kind individuals that I have met in my entire life. He has never raised his voice, always with a smile, and a sense of knowing that not only have the people of his congressional district been well served, brilliantly served by a truly dedicated public servant, but the people of America as a whole have been served by this outstanding individual.

It is retirement from Congress but not from life, and that is the good news. We look forward to working with the gentleman. I am excited about the possibilities of being the chairman of the American-Chinese Interparliamentary Exchange and to have the opportunity in the future to work with the gentleman and to continue to be his student.

Mr. TERRY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), and I yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. LAMPSON).

Mr. LAMPSON. Madam Speaker, it is an honor to rise to salute my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), on a quarter century of service to this body and particularly to thank him for the opportunity to bring an issue that was so close to me, international parental abduction, to the attention of our NATO counterparts.

I remember meeting the gentleman for the first time on one of our bipartisan retreats just a couple of months after I came into the House of Representatives. We were on that train that we have taken a number of times; and DOUG and his wife, Louise, came up to me and my wife, Susan, and carried on a conversation. He suggested that I look into his involvement with the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. I was aware of it, but it was at his invitation that I requested to become a member. I have been honored to attend many of the meetings in the last 6 years and speak at the Assembly's European meetings and to serve as a committee vice-chair.

My participation would not have been possible without DOUG's support. He reached over the magic aisle that runs through the middle of the room and reached out to me with the same kind of encouragement that he gave to every one of the delegates, regardless of party. Like one of my district predecessors, Jack Brooks, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) as chairman of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly displayed a strong belief in the collaborative values that the assembly stands for. He generates that belief among fellow Members of Congress.

In 2001, I was very proud to cosponsor legislation that he introduced to enlarge NATO as articulated by our current and past Presidents. Beyond his leadership in our delegation, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) served as both vice president and president of the Parliamentary Assembly representing the United States of America admirably in both rolls.

Madam Speaker, I will certainly miss the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) and Louise when we had an opportunity of being with them, and the gentleman particularly as a Member of Congress. His efforts here will inspire future Members to reach across the aisle and across national boundaries to fix problems that demand collaborative solutions. I wish him a fond farewell from this Chamber, and I know that our appreciation of his service will continue long after he leaves this body.

Mr. TERRY. Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), my very professorial friend, for his comments.

Mr. EHLERS. Madam Speaker, I have been in Congress almost 10½ years, and I have enjoyed the friendship of the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) almost that entire time. I have always been extremely impressed with him. He is a very fine person.

Approximately a decade ago, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) pulled me aside in his role as leader of the congressional delegation to NATO. He explained to me what the NATO Parliamentary Assembly was, explained to me that Europeans all had scientists serving on the Science Committee, but no one from the U.S. did. He asked me to serve since I am a physicist by training. I acquiesced rather reluctantly because it seemed like a huge assignment as a brand-new Member of Congress, but it has given me an opportunity to come to know DOUG and Louise much better.

I would like to talk about the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) as a diplomat. He is a consummate diplomat. He is patient, with a calm demeanor. He is always polite, no matter what point of view he is being forced to listen to. He is a careful listener. He is a good negotiator, and a decent person, a man of integrity. All of these are hallmarks of a good diplomat. DOUG has served not only Congress but our Nation well as a diplomat in his position of serving and leading the NATO Parliamentary Assembly delegation from the United States. It has been a pleasure to serve with him and to learn from him in that role.

His wife, Louise, is also a good diplomat in the many contacts she has had to make over the years with Members and their spouses, but also with members and spouses from other countries, and she has handled this role with grace, tact, and great care.

Also, I have been impressed with the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) as a legislator. He has done such good work in so many different areas but above all in international relations. Frankly, my heart is broken that he is leaving us, because I was looking forward to the day he would become chairman of the Committee on International Relations, and I knew he would be a superb chairman.

I would also like to mention DOUG as a friend. He has been a good friend to me, a confidante and an adviser. I could not have had a better friend and confidante to discuss issues with. He always had wise advice and helpful comments to make when I discussed with him the problems I was having on the Science Committee, particularly in dealing with recalcitrant members from other countries who seemed to enjoy making trouble more than making progress.

With his help, I was able to serve 4 years as a rappateur on the Science Committee. The rappateur controls all reports which come before the committee, in fact has to write most of them, and I am currently vice chairman of the Science Committee of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly and was asked to serve as president and declined with some regret simply because of my heavy workload in the Congress.

I am very pleased that DOUG has finally achieved the job of his dreams, to serve in this new position. He is a perfect fit for the job, and the job is a perfect fit for him. I certainly want to wish him and Louise well as they leave this area and move to San Francisco to take up this new position. We hate to see you go, DOUG and Louise; but we certainly wish you well and we know you will do well as well.

Mr. TERRY. Madam Speaker, I yield at this time to my classmate and good friend, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT).

Mr. HOLT. Madam Speaker, many of us here in the House of Representatives woke up one day and said, say it is not so, DOUG. We did not want to see him go. For many Members here, it was hard to understand how someone who did the job so well would want to leave voluntarily, but he has so much to give and will continue to give. I have worked with him on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, others on the Committee on International Relations. We all think he would be an outstanding committee chairman, and one of the things we lament is he is leaving before he gets to serve in that way.

Most recently, I worked with the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) on efforts to improve the proficiency of Americans in foreign languages. I must say, it was a delightful and very productive experience working with him on that issue.

The House will be diminished by his departure. There are very, very few people like the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) here. He is industrious, he is astute, he is judicious, he is well informed. He has a very broad perspective, and I mean that geographically, historically, and ideologically. By that I mean he is not ideologically entrenched. Sure, he has solid values and is a person with integrity, but he can work with others. A word that comes to mind is collegial. He is not self-serving. He is about serving others, his constituents, and, yes, other Members of the House, junior and senior Members. He is considerate. In every respect, in every circumstance, in every forum, I have seen nothing but the utmost consideration from the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER). In fact, I would say he is truly wise because he understands that kindness is the greatest wisdom.

We all wish the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) and his wife, Louise, well. It is the gain of the Asia Foundation. I am sure he will contribute a great deal there, and I am here to join my colleagues to say thank you, DOUG, for your service to us, to the House, to your constituents, and to America at large.

Mr. TERRY. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman coming down here to speak.

Frankly, this is my 6th year, and we have seen classmates come and go; but I do not know if I have seen a Member so balanced between Republicans and Democrats. Members have used words like collegial, diplomatic, intellectual, considerate, and friend when talking about the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER). And the fact is that we have already used up one full hour, and I too will miss the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER). What I will miss about DOUG leaving this body is not only his friendship and his steady leadership and his counsel, but his quiet sense of humor, too.

I remember the only time in 6 years of serving with the gentleman I heard him, and it struck me as odd because he almost spoke ill of someone, there is a gentleman who has a particular reputation for harshness when he speaks, and DOUG was speaking to me and then said, Wait, I want to listen to this person because he sometimes is a little too partisan when he speaks. I want to hear what he says.

That is as bad as he has ever said about anyone in this body, which is really rare.

Let me talk about the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) as just a person, because he was elected in 1978 at the age of 39. He and Louise had two elementary schoolchildren, boys, Kirk and Eric.

Madam Speaker, I will submit the rest of my statement in the RECORD.

Doug Bereuter has two sons, Kirk and Eric, one daughter-in-law, and a grandson, Ethan.

Elected to Congress in November of 1978 at the age of 39, Doug has served in the U.S. House of Representatives longer than any citizen of the Cornhusker State.

He's won every election with at least 60 percent of the vote. Last election he pulled in 85 percent of the vote.

During my first term here in the House of Representatives, I was lucky enough to have two of the most respected members of this body as my seniors in the Nebraska House Delegation. Bill Barrett, who has since retired, and the man we're here to honor today, DOUG BEREUTER.

I know everything that goes into moving a young family from Nebraska to Washington, DC. I did it myself after my first election. Granted, even though we made our move almost two decades later, it was still not easy. Eventually, my family and I left Virginia to go back to our home state of Nebraska, and I travel back and forth every week.

But this was not always an option. When DOUG, Louise and his elementary school-aged boys got in the car and drove to Washington, the world was a different place. The options were limited to (a) move your entire family to D.C. or (b) go for weeks without seeing your loved ones.

One thing I've always liked about DOUG and Louise is that, even though they chose option (a), they never left Nebraska behind. In 26 years, DOUG has always been a true Nebraskan.

Those first years, there wasn't the direct flight from D.C. to Nebraska like there is now. Depending on the time of day, it's possible to be in our state in just a few hours. DOUG, during his first years in Congress, spent many nights on the floor of O'Hare, thanks to the weather, to make the trip to Nebraska and back.

But he always did it, because that was what was required of him.

Sometimes, those sleepless nights in Chicago were trips back for one of his many, many town hall meetings. These are meetings that we all do. DOUG would do between 30 and 45 town hall meetings a year. For over a quarter of a century. Just the thought of how many people he talked with, argued with, laughed with at these meetings is amazing.

Through the years, he was also able to get to know the towns and cities in his district very well. Not surprisingly, he always knows where to get good ice cream after a town hall meeting.

Speaking of snacks, I'm not sure if everyone knows that Congressman BEREUTER loves popcorn, exactly as a good Cornhusker should. While my friend and colleague may never be known as a chef, he knows how to make popcorn.

Nebraskans have watched DOUG's family grow up in their annual Christmas card, which always included a recipe and a drawing or picture by a family member.

They are a part of Nebraska, just as much as they would be had they grown up in Lincoln, Utica, or Oakland, Nebraska. His sons looked for and found jobs in Nebraska. In this quarter of a century, DOUG's office has always been a little bit of home-away-from-home here in D.C.

I would also like to take a moment to compliment his staff. They are proud of the fact that even when a non-Nebraskan takes a job in their office, within a week they have them saying ''You bet'' and referring to ''pop'' instead of soda. It's little things like that which keeps the office in touch with Nebraska.

And they are loyal. Carol Lawrence, his press secretary, who is a wonderful person and has helped my office out on numerous occasions, has been with Doug since 1974, the same year my press secretary was born!

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Madam Speaker, I want to pay tribute today to a colleague and good friend who will be leaving the House when the 108th Congress adjourns, Representative DOUG BEREUTER.

DOUG brings to a close an impressive career working for Nebraska. For 26 years DOUG has been a strong advocate for the First Congressional District as well as a respected advocate on foreign affairs and intelligence issues, especially his efforts on the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. On these crucial issues he has consistently set partisanship aside, rolled up his sleeves and gotten the work done.

Not only does he retire as Nebraska's longest-serving member of the House, he has the third-longest service in Congress. He has a bipartisan record and close relationship with is constituents—nurtured at more than 900 town hall meetings. His constituents kept sending him back to Washington because he could be counted on to do what was right.

DOUG will next head The Asia Foundation as its new president. His leadership on the House International Relations Committee has well-prepared him for this challenging assignment. He brings precisely the right mix of qualifications: seasoned judgment, policy expertise, management acumen and well-developed rapport with key Asian leaders.

Madam Speaker, I am honored to join my colleagues in wishing only the best for DOUG and Louise as they move on to the next chapter in their lives.

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the finest members of this institution, DOUG BEREUTER of Nebraska. After 26 years of service DOUG is retiring from the House to be President of the Asia Foundation, and this body will not be the same without him.

In his time in the House of Representatives, Madam Speaker, DOUG BEREUTER has embodied the best of pubic service. His commitment to his constituents and his Nation has never waivered. While staying true to his values, he has worked across party lines to achieve compromise and advance sound public policy. He is known on Capitol Hill as a man with strong convictions but an even stronger commitment to working in a bipartisan, collegial manner and a dedication to doing good.

DOUG BEREUTER is a committed internationalist who understands that in this world of ever increasing globalization it is essential that our Nation maintain strong relationships around the world. DOUG has dedicated a significant part of his career to improving international cooperation and he is know and respected around the world.

I have had the opportunity to travel with DOUG as a member of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. I have been impressed by his knowledge of our European allies and his grasp of the issues the alliance faces. I have seen the ease with which he related to foreign leaders. And I have seen the grace with which he conducts diplomacy.

On a personal note, Madam Speaker, I am pleased that DOUG and his wife Louise will be relocating to the San Francisco Bay Area and that they will live in my district. I hope to see them regularly and continue to benefit from their kindness and wisdom.

I am grateful that DOUG BEREUTER has given so much of his life to the people of Nebraska and to this Nation. I wish him the best of luck as he leaves Congress and begins the next chapter of his life.

Mr. ROYCE. Madam Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in honoring DOUG BEREUTER and commending the 13 terms he has served in the House of Representatives. I have had the privilege of working with Congressman BEREUTER on the Financial Services Committee and the International Relations Committee for a number of years now. As we have heard today, he is a highly esteemed and respected member of these committees.

Congressman BEREUTER has been one of the House's resident experts on foreign policy matters—especially in Asia. I had the privilege of serving on the Asia Subcommittee when Congressman BEREUTER served as its Chairman and worked with him to strengthen U.S. ties with our allies in Asia. Congressman BEREUTER and I also had a chance to travel to Asia together during this time.

As this House knows, Congressman BEREUTER's interest in foreign affairs has not been confined to Asian nations. He plays an active role in European parliamentary exchanges and serves as Chairman of the European Subcommittee with distinction. As President of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, Congressman BEREUTER has highlighted the importance of establishing strong transatlantic relationships and the role of sustained and meaningful dialogue between the United States and Europe in achieving those goals. He worked diligently to include nations like Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Romania, Slovakia, and Slovenia in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Congressman BEREUTER and I have been encouraging greater involvement by NATO partners in promoting security in Afghanistan.

Congressman BEREUTER has also proved himself to be an expert on intelligence matters. As Chairman of the Intelligence Policy and National Security Subcommittee and Vice Chairman of the Terrorism and Homeland Security Subcommittee, he has led careful oversight of the transformation of U.S. intelligence agencies after September 11th. He has worked hard to improve the organization and operation of the intelligence community, enhance their language education and training, and improve the coordination of the Federal Government in identifying and responding to weak or failing countries that endanger international security or stability.

I have long respected DOUG's thoughtful and attentive manner and his focus on substance rather than rhetoric. When he spoke, people listened. This House will undoubtedly miss his presence and work.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the distinguished career of Representative DOUG BEREUTER. The people of Nebraska's First District wisely voted Mr. BEREUTER into the House of Representatives in November of 1978, the same year I was first elected to this chamber. As a member of the same freshman class I got to know Representative BEREUTER during those weeks preceding our first terms. Over that period, and in the years since, I have found Congressman BEREUTER to be a consummate professional and a remarkable representative for the people of Nebraska.

He is the quintessential public servant, having served as an officer in the United States Army, as well as various capacities within Nebraska's State government, including service as a State Senator, prior to his election to Congress.

Mr. BEREUTER has announced his retirement effective at the end of the 108th Congress. During his distinguished career, Mr. BEREUTER has left his mark in the halls of Congress. I know that Congressman BEREUTER will be missed in this body for the integrity with which he dealt with each person he came across during his tenure.

Madam Speaker, I join my colleagues in congratulating Congressman BEREUTER on a job well done. The people of Nebraska have been well served for the past twenty-six years. He has served with distinction, and will retire with the respect of his peers. Congratulations and best wishes for a long and prosperous retirement, Congressman BEREUTER.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor a good friend and outstanding public servant, Congressman DOUG BEREUTER.

I have become familiar with DOUG and his work having served as a member of the U.S. House delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, which he chairs. I have participated in numerous congressional delegations abroad which he has led and was always impressed with his knowledge of world affairs and his determination to increase understanding among NATO partners.

DOUG also has been a tireless advocate for his Cornhusker State constituents during his twenty-six year House tenure. He has served longer than any other Nebraskan, during which time he has penned many laws to help his diverse constituency, including ones to promote his state's agricultural exports, improve health care and child welfare, end international hunger, and protect Native Americans.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to call DOUG BEREUTER a friend and colleague. His constituents and our country are losing an honorable and dedicated public servant, the likes of which bring credit to this hallowed institution in which we are so fortunate to serve. I wish him and his wife, Louise, health and happiness in their future endeavors.

Mr. PETRI. Madam Speaker, I am honored to participate in this special order recognizing the many years of dedicated service to the 1st District of Nebraska and to our country by our good friend and colleague, DOUG BEREUTER.

DOUG is one of the hardest working, dedicated and principled Members to serve in this House. In his quiet way, he has successfully worked to bring about significant reforms and accomplishments in many areas. Through it all, he has done so with the highest moral character, unquestioned integrity, and has been true to his convictions. DOUG has been an example to us all by working in an effective and bipartisan manner, more interested in policy and legislation than scoring political points. He considers each issue on the merits and isn't afraid to follow his own convictions and do what he believes is right. If DOUG proposes a legislative initiative, you can count on it being well-considered and carefully thought out.

Perhaps his strength of character and principled behavior comes from his Midwestern Nebraska roots that go back five generations. He has served Nebraska and his constituents well, never losing sight of the special needs and concerns of his district. DOUG has been a leader in many varied initiatives that have benefited his constituents and the country. He has been active in promoting a national trail program that improves the quality of life for all Americans. As a colleague on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, I know he has been diligent in tending to the various transportation needs of his district. While not a Member of the Agriculture Committee, he nonetheless has been active in promoting proposals to aid farmers.

Just this year, the Financial Services Committee and the House have acted on other initiatives he has spearheaded for many years, including flood insurance reform and home loan guarantee programs.

Perhaps the area for which DOUG has become most recognized here in the House and, literally, around the world is that of foreign affairs. He is recognized as one of the hardest working members of the International Relations Committee and has served admirably as Chairman of the Asian Subcommittee and the Europe Subcommittee.

For many years he was the Chairman of the House delegation to the British American Parliamentary Group and remains an active member today. He is currently Chairman of the U.S. House Delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly as well as President of the NATO PA itself, positions that require countless hours of work and effort on a continuing basis. He is a co-founder of the Congressional-Executive Commission on China that was essential in winning permanent normal trade relations with China while ensuring that we continue to monitor human rights, guard against prison labor exports and put in place other related safeguards. The many other boards, commissions and task forces he has served on over the years are too numerous a to mention.

While I regret DOUG leaving the House, he is undoubtedly well suited for his next position as president of The Asia Foundation. He is keenly aware of the increasingly important role of Asia and in the benefit to Asia and to the U.S. in helping to encourage growth and prosperity from within the region. The goal of the Asian Foundation is the "development of a peaceful, prosperous, and open Asia-Pacific region." It accomplishes this through supporting programs that help improve governance, economic reform and development, increased participation of women, and other internal reforms. I know all of these are principles that DOUG shares, and he will provide strong and steady guidance to the organization.

I would be remiss if I didn't note another important ingredient to DOUG's—success—lovely wife Louise. An accomplished artist and musician, Louise has been a loyal and steadfast partner as DOUG has faced his many responsibilities. I will long remember one night on a recent BAPG trip to Ditchley Park outside Oxford. Louise played one song after another on the piano as the rest of us struggled to sing along. I'm afraid our vocal abilities were no match for her musical skills. But it was a lot of fun, and that is how I will always think of DOUG and Louise—good and decent people who know how to enjoy life.

So I wish them well as they move to San Francisco and begin this new phase of their life together. DOUG can be proud of his service here in the House, an I am proud to have served with him and to consider him a friend.

SENATE—Thursday, July 8, 2004

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

O God, the King of Glory, Your never failing providence sets in order all things both in Heaven and Earth. You give comfort to all who seek You. You have promised to supply all our needs with riches from Your celestial bounty.

You are at work in the events of our lives, bringing melody from cacophony and unity from division.

Bless our Senators as they trust Your mighty power. Bless, also, the members of their families who support them in their arduous work. Remind each of us that righteousness is the only true national defense.

O God, we wait for You to answer and trust You with our future. Help us to live by faith, so that we are acceptable to You. May the lives we live tell the world of Your marvelous deeds.

Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will be a period for the transaction of morning business for up to 60 minutes, with the first 30 minutes under the control of the majority leader or his designee, and the second 30 minutes under the control of the Democratic leader or his designee.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Democratic leader is recognized.

THE TRANSPORTATION BILL

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, this week we have been talking about a fundamental standard to guide our debates in the Senate.

As we do our work, we need to ask a simple question: ''Are we doing right by America?'' We need to ask that question on policies affecting farmers, seniors, and veterans. And we always need to ask whether we are doing right by American families when it comes to economic policies.

While the economy has finally started adding jobs these past few months, this comes after 2½ years in which the economy lost jobs every month. What is clear to many of us is that we still have a long way to go, and we need to do more to help improve our economy. That is one of the main reasons it is so unfortunate that we have not completed the long-overdue transportation reauthorization bill—legislation that expired at the end of last September.

The ability to plan how roads and bridges will be built has suffered greatly due to Congress's failure to get this bill completed on time. Well over 100,000 jobs have been lost due to this delay. And each month that we do not complete our work brings more job losses.

Job creation will suffer, too—in South Dakota and across the country. In my State, because our construction season is short, there is not enough time to plan ahead and put people to work, even if we passed a bill today. But we will not pass a bill today.

Earlier this year, on February 12, the Senate passed S. 1072, the Safe, Accountable, Flexible, and Efficient Transportation Equity Act. It was passed by an overwhelming, bipartisan vote of 76 to 21. The Senate bill would authorize $318 billion over 6 years and is revenue-neutral. It is fully paid for and does not increase gas taxes.

Nearly 400 organizations, representing the full spectrum of transportation interests, all support the Senate funding level.

The Chamber of Commerce, the Associated General Contractors, the governors, the State legislators—the list goes on and on. All attest to the need for this kind of infrastructure investment.

The Senate bill would create over 1.7 million jobs—new, good jobs for the millions of Americans who are looking for work. In my State, the Senate bill would create over 6,500 jobs. It would also provide for important transportation needs on our rural roads and Native American reservations, and would allow us to move forward with high-priority projects in towns like Sioux Falls, Rapid City, Yankton, and Pierre. These are important projects that simply will not get completed without the assistance of the Federal Government.

One might ask: ''What was the Bush administration's response to the Senate's bipartisan job-creating bill?'' Their response has been, a veto threat—hardly the answer that Republicans and Democrats alike were hoping for; hardly the response that the economy needs; and hardly the response that the infrastructure deficit we have in this country cries out for.

Fast forward to April 2. After a bipartisan House plan to offer a bill at a $375 billion level was scuttled by the Bush administration and the Republican House leadership, the House passed H.R. 3550, the Transportation Equity Act. This bill authorizes only $284 billion over 6 years, and is not fully paid for. Again, one might ask: ''What was the Bush administration's response to the House bill?'' If it did not like the original bipartisan House proposal at $375 billion, and it did not like the bipartisan Senate bill at $318 billion, how about the reduced bipartisan House bill at $284 billion? The answer was another veto threat.

Again, hardly the answer that House and Senate Republicans and Democrats were hoping for from their President and hardly the response the economy needs.

Fast forward one more time to June 23, when the Senate conferees voted in the conference committee meeting with the House to resolve the differences between the two bills. The Senate made a formal offer to the House in the amount of $318 billion and requested that the House respond to the offer at the next meeting on July 7. So, yesterday, after 2 weeks' time, the House and Senate met again. There had been hopeful signs that the House conferees might be prepared to accept the Senate's funding level, and many of us thought we might have a breakthrough that would move the bill forward. But what did we hear yesterday? The House was not yet prepared to respond to the Senate's offer.

What is clear to many of us is that unless the White House and the Republican leadership in the House release their stranglehold on House conferees, we will not have a transportation bill this year.

Transportation has almost always been—and has been in the Senate again this year—a bipartisan priority. Chairman INHOFE has done a superb job of guiding the bill forward. But he cannot do it alone.

I remain hopeful that the Bush administration will realize that our economy, our infrastructure, and American families need and deserve a good transportation bill, a bill that will create good jobs and provide the investments in our Nation's infrastructure that are so desperately needed.

We need more than a President who simply says ''no''—a President who says he will veto a final transportation bill with either the Senate or the House spending levels.

By continuing to say ''no,'' the President jeopardizes 1.7 million new jobs in our Nation and 6,500 jobs in South Dakota alone. He puts at risk necessary improvements for rural and Native American roads.

Next Tuesday, there will be another meeting of the conferees. I hope this critical issue of the investment level will be resolved, and that we can get on with the business the American people expect us to conduct. If we ask ourselves, Are we doing right by America on this transportation bill? The answer is that the Senate has done right. The House has made a start. But, unfortunately, without the President's constructive participation, we cannot complete the assignment. We will not have a transportation bill. We will not create needed jobs. We will be failing the American people.

I urge all Americans to let their Representatives in the House know, and let the President know, that we cannot afford to fail when it comes to this important bill.

We can do better, and I remain hopeful that the President will confront the challenge, reverse his continued opposition, and join the Senate in supporting a transportation bill that makes sense for our country.

Mr. President, I also want to address a concern that many of us expressed yesterday about our current circumstances, procedurally and parliamentarily.

The majority leader threw down the gauntlet again last night in a very unfortunate decision. That decision, of course, was to file cloture. Having filled the tree, which means not only are Senate Democrats precluded from offering amendments before we have even offered the first amendment or had one vote, it is now the majority's decision to thwart the effort to have the kind of debate that all of us anticipated on class action and, simply said, we will have wasted an entire week in what is a very limited legislative period to begin with.

There is no question the cloture vote will be defeated. We will have wasted that week. We could have disposed of most of the amendments by now. Most of my colleagues had already expressed to me a willingness to offer their amendments with very short time limits. How ironic that in the name of saving time we have wasted time.

I made a legitimate and bona fide heartfelt offer yesterday that we limit Democratic nonrelevant amendments to 5, relevant amendments to 10. I thought it was an interesting juxtaposition—the majority leader actually offered an unlimited list of relevant amendments which would have prolonged debate perhaps for weeks if that had been agreed to.

We have made a good-faith offer. I am troubled and again frustrated that we have come to this point. We have wasted a week. We will waste many more days, if not weeks, in the future with this practice. We have learned from the past how unproductive these approaches to debate can be. It is too bad we have to learn all over.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. BENNETT. I am happy to.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. First of all, I ask consent morning business be extended 5 minutes on each side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask on the Democratic side, when our time occurs in half an hour, that Senator HARKIN be given 15 minutes, Senator LAUTENBERG 10 minutes, and Senator CANTWELL 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MURKOWSKI). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. BENNETT. Madam President, one of the things that has struck me since I have been in the Senate is that during debate in the Senate, particularly during morning business, Senators seem to have no sense of history. They seem to create a crisis out of the moment and have no sense of placing their statements in any kind of historic context. This is an opportunity for missing what really is happening. If you do not place something in its context, you do not understand it properly. For that reason, I have decided to talk a little bit about the debates that have been going on with respect to the economy, where the economy is, where the economy is going.

Let me take listeners back to the election of 1992. I have particular focus there because that is the election in which I was first chosen to come to the Senate. During that election, there was a lot of conversation about the economy. We were in a recession, everybody said. We are in a terrible slowdown, everybody said. In fact, as we now know, looking at it in historic context, things were on the rise. There had, in fact, been a recession, but we were in recovery during the election of 1992. It just did not feel like a recovery.

That is one of the historic lessons we should all learn. The sense of where we are is almost always lagging events. That is, we have a feel that we are in a recession when, in fact, we are in a recovery. On the flip side of that, we can have a feel that we are in a recovery when we are, in fact, in a recession. It is because things take a little while to sink into the consciousness even though they are going on in reality.

In 1992, then-Governor Clinton and I, running, obviously, for different offices, both were faced with an electorate that felt the economy was in trouble. We both talked about what we needed to do to get the economy out of trouble. Then, when the normal course of the business cycle brought the economy back, the temptation on the part of all politicians was to take credit for that, as if the recovery that was taking place in 1993 and 1994 occurred solely because we had been elected. That is very satisfying for a politician to want to do. It does not happen to be intellectually accurate, but it is something everybody does.

As I say, I was elected in 1992. In 1993, I joined the Banking Committee. As a member of the Banking Committee, I had the occasion to listen to the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board when he came before the Banking Committee to make his report on the state of the economy. I remember very clearly because the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Alan Greenspan, had been appointed by a Republican President and was viewed as a Republican holdover, some of the Democratic members of the Banking Committee were very critical of him at the time. They said: If this is a recovery—voices dripping with sarcasm—where are the jobs? I remember charts being held up in the Banking Committee to confront Alan Greenspan to say, if it is a recovery at all, it is a jobless recovery. Where are the jobs? Greenspan was subjected to heavy criticism from Democratic members of the Banking Committee because somehow it must be his fault that there was a jobless recovery.

Looking back, again in the context of history, we know that the creation of jobs is always what the economists call a lagging indicator. That is, a recovery starts; it takes hold; the jobs that had been lost in a recession are always the last thing to come back in a recovery.

The jobs started to come back in 1994, in 1995. The Clinton administration took credit for that: We did it; the only reason the jobs came back is because Bill Clinton was elected President in 1992. The Republicans had an answer to that: No, we did it; the only reason the jobs came back is because Newt Gingrich became Speaker in 1995. In fact, of course, the business cycle was well entrenched, the recovery was underway, and the jobs came back, probably without regard to who was President or who was Speaker. It was part of the standard business cycle.

Then we got into that period of boom, and everybody was excited that the boom was going to go on forever. I remember asking Alan Greenspan in one of his other appearances before the Banking Committee, as we were talking about the continual rise in the economy: Mr. Chairman, have we repealed the business cycle? Is the business cycle over, and we are never going to have another recession?

Chairman Greenspan smiled that wry smile of his and said: No, Senator, we have not repealed the business cycle, and there will be a correction, a recession—call it what you will—at some point in the future. We cannot predict when and we cannot predict how deep, but it will be there.

The point of this in political terms is that President Clinton and the Congress that was elected with him in 1992 inherited a strong recovery tide in the economy. However much we took credit for it ourselves, we really had little or nothing to do with it.

Now, let's go ahead 8 years to the election of 2000. In the election of 2000, it felt as if the economy was still enormously strong. Remember, I discussed our feelings of how things are going usually lag reality. In fact, we now know that the economy started to slow down in 2000. We now know that gross domestic production growth, which is the main measure of recessions and recoveries, was dropping sharply in the last two quarters of 2000, but it did not feel like it. The layoffs had not started yet because businesses were hoping this was temporary. Employment was still up, and we talked about this enormously strong economy we were having.

Looking back on it now, we know that the President who was elected in 2000 inherited a slowing economy headed toward recession, in contrast to the President who was elected in 1992, who inherited a strong recovery headed toward a period of great growth. Naturally, in the political world, that President was blamed for that slowdown. It all happened on his watch, so it was all his fault.

Interestingly enough, I recall that in the election of 2000, there was one candidate who spoke of the coming slowdown, and he was attacked for trying to talk down the economy for political purposes. That was Governor George W. Bush of Texas, holder of a Harvard MBA, who could see the signs that this slowdown was coming and talked about it during the campaign, only to be attacked by his political opponents for his pessimism.

But he inherited a slowing economy, a slowdown that started in 2000. The GDP went negative in the first quarter of 2001 and hit its worst point in the third quarter of 2001, simultaneous with September 11 and the hit that gave to the economy.

So we did have a recession. It was advertised and forecast by the economic information that preceded it, and the President and the Congress have been struggling with that recession and the recovery that has followed ever since.

It is interesting to me that even though that recession was shorter and shallower than the recession that had occurred 8 or 9 years before, the rhetoric on the Senate floor referred to it as ''the worst economy in 50 years.'' We were told this President was ''the worst President since Herbert Hoover.'' No sense of history, no understanding of the reality, no connection with the real data—but that kind of rhetoric has been used on the floor of the Senate.

It is also interesting that the same attack that was made when Bill Clinton was a fresh President was made again with respect to this recovery: Where are the jobs? The same questions I heard thrown at Alan Greenspan by the Democrats on the Banking Committee have now been thrown not at Alan Greenspan but at George W. Bush: Where are the jobs? Once again, economic history shows that jobs are the lagging indicator, that jobs come at the end of the turnaround and not in the middle of it. And now, exactly on time where economic history would indicate, the jobs have started to appear.

All of a sudden, the argument that this is a jobless recovery no longer holds any water. We have increased jobs for 10 consecutive months. In the months of March, April, and May, we added more jobs to the economy than were lost in the 3 months following 9/11. We had the disaster of 9/11 and 3 months of a loss of jobs. As the airline industry went into the tank, the hospitality industry and others were shattered by the 9/11 situation. We lost a tremendous number of jobs. In March, April, and May of 2004, we added more jobs than were lost in that corresponding 3-month period following 9/11.

So now we do not hear about the jobless recovery any more. Now the rhetoric has shifted to ''the middle-class squeeze.'' I heard one Senator on the Senate floor stand here and say: Property taxes in my State have gone up so high the middle class cannot handle it—to which I want to say, you mean George W. Bush is responsible for the fact that property values in your State have gone up, and your State legislature has responded to that by reassessing property and raising property taxes in your State? That is the President's fault?

Well, in today's political atmosphere, of course, it is the President's fault. Anything that happens is the President's fault.

The point I want to make is, in historic terms, just as President Clinton inherited an economy that was on the rise because of forces that were in place prior to his election, just as President Bush inherited an economy where the forces were on the decline prior to his election, the next President, the one who will be inaugurated on January 20, 2005—whoever he may be—will inherit an economy that is strongly on the rise where all of the economic indicators are up and where the groundwork for a significant period of growth and prosperity has already been laid. Whoever that President is will take credit for that growth, even though the groundwork for it has been laid prior to his inauguration.

Now, I will say that if that President is George W. Bush, he might be entitled to some of that credit. But the fact is, the combination of the actions in monetary policy by the Federal Reserve Board and in fiscal policy by the Congress of the United States has been responsible for creating the atmosphere of economic growth and strength the next President and the next administration will preside over.

I repeat what I say here often: We politicians need to have a greater sense of humility and reality and understand we do not control whether the economy is good or bad. If we could control that, the economy would constantly be good. What politician of either party would deliberately preside over policies that make the economy go bad and the voters get mad? If it were up to the Congress to say, ''Do this, and the economy will be good'' or ''Do that, and the economy will be bad,'' every Congress, regardless of ideological stripe, would always say, ''Let's do what makes the economy good.''

So maybe it is time to visit just a little bit about what causes the business cycle. It is not elections. Recessions are caused by one of two general categories of events. One which we cannot control is outside shocks, such as 9/11, such as the oil shock that set off the recession in the 1970s. Recessions are caused by shocks that are outside our control.

Or the second general category: They are caused by a series of mistakes, mistakes that business men and women make. They make decisions about purchasing stock and then discover they have too much inventory. They make decisions about going into a market and discover that the market will not work, and they have to lay people off. They make decisions about the future of their product and then discover the product will not sell, so they have to cut back.

When the number of decisions that are wrong exceeds the number of decisions that are right, in an $11 trillion economy, you get a recession. The recession is the way those mistakes are paid for. The recession is the way the impact of those mistakes are corrected.

Perhaps the most dramatic one I can think of was the recession of 1958 where the automobile industry collectively made a series of major mistakes. They assumed the boom they had in previous years—1955 model year, 1956 model year, 1957 model year—was going to go forward, and then suddenly they discovered they had huge amounts of inventory on their hands, as people did not buy cars at the same level they had projected. As a consequence, the automobile industry started to shut down until the inventory got sold off. That meant the steel industry, the aluminum industry, the glass industry, the rubber industry, all had to shut down because they were not building cars, and we had one of the most difficult recessions we have had in the postwar period in 1958. The recession was the way you corrected those mistakes. It did not have anything to do with who was elected President or who was elected to the Congress; it was caused by a series of bad business decisions on the part of people in the automobile industry.

Look at the recession we have just gone through. What did it come on the heels of? Yes, 9/11 was there. Yes, there were some outside shocks. But it came after what we called the dot-com bubble. A lot of jobs were created in companies that were not earning anything. They had no income other than selling stock on the stock market. People got caught up in the froth of the dot-com bubble: This is going to be a great future; we are going to buy the stock, and we are going to get rich.

Somewhere along the line somebody said: But where are the earnings? When it dawned on people these companies with these brilliant projections and plans had no earnings, shareholders decided they did not want to hold those stocks anymore. The dot-com bubble burst. The stock market collapsed, and we were on our way toward a correction or, if you will, recession. It had nothing to do with who got elected.

But this point I want to make: Maybe we in government can't create economic growth. Maybe it doesn't matter who gets elected in terms of economic power. But we can certainly do dumb things that can hurt it. The Federal Government can't create jobs, but the Federal Government can mess up the economy in such a way that jobs are destroyed.

How do we do it? One of the ways that we disrupt the economy, and we do it regularly, is by our tax policy. We can create an atmosphere where it is easier for the economy to grow, or we can create an atmosphere where there are penalties in the form of taxes when the economy grows.

I have told this story before about my own experience founding a company and making it grow in what some have called the decade of greed. When Ronald Reagan was President and the Congress created a situation where the top marginal tax rate was 28 percent, oh, what a tremendous windfall for the rich to have the top marginal tax rate at 28 percent. What they don't realize, those who talk about how terrible this was, is that the enormous economic growth we had in the 1980s, and indeed on into the 1990s, in my view, was spurred by the fact that a company like ours, starting with four employees and growing ultimately to 4,000, was able to finance that growth because we were able to keep 72 cents out of every dollar we earned.

When the Clinton administration came in, and the Congress responded to his call, the top marginal tax rate went effectively to over 40 percent, which meant a starting business was able to keep only 60 cents out of every dollar that it earned and had to go someplace else to finance its growth rather than from internal funds.

I have made these points before. I have learned in the Senate there is no such thing as repetition because on the other side of the aisle we get the repetition day after day about how terrible the economy is.

I say again, in conclusion, the next President, whoever he is, will preside over a strong and robust economy. The groundwork for that reality has been laid during the last 4 years. Whoever takes credit for it in the next 4 years will be taking credit for work that was done prior to his taking office.

I yield the floor.

VENUE SHOPPING

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Utah. Certainly, the impact of the economy on all these things is a little hard to determine and easy to make political. I hope we can understand and stick with some of the economic elements that are there and then deal with the political ones that go with it.

First, let me say I am a little disappointed in the way we are moving in the Senate, frankly. We don't have many days left to deal with a number of issues. Frankly, I think we have about four or five issues that we ought to be dealing with. One, of course, is the difficult one called the budget.

Some people out there say: Why do you fool with it? You don't pay any attention to it anyway.

That is not true. It is a way to protect spending within the limits of the budget. If you don't have one, that makes it difficult.

Appropriations, of course, must be done by the end of September in order to continue to deal with the things we must do.

I believe our energy policy, where we are going in the future, ought to be laid out. That is one of the most important issues we have before us.

And as the Democratic leader said this morning, the highway bill has the most direct impact on the creation of jobs of anything we could do, and we have completed all the efforts on that for some time.

I am certainly hoping that we can move forward. Unfortunately, we have been held up by this idea of having unrelated amendments to every bill. We ought to fix that issue. When we are on an issue, we ought to stick with that issue and have only amendments that are pertinent. But that is not the case, of course. We use every bill as an opportunity to bring up something totally unrelated, and that has been a problem.

In any event, I will discuss a little while this morning something that is related to what we are talking about on the Senate floor. It isn't part of the bill, nor do I expect to put it in as an amendment, but I think it is something that is quite important to the legal system, particularly as it affects decisions vis-a-vis public lands. Of course, being from Wyoming—the Presiding Officer being from Alaska—a large percentage of our States is public lands. So how decisions are made with respect to those is very important.

Furthermore, we find ourselves with an increasing number of lawsuits. Unfortunately, we almost have ourselves in a position of managing through lawsuits as opposed to managing based on good decisions.

I would like to talk a moment about venue shopping. We have been steamrolled in Federal land issues by judges who are thousands of miles away from the area where the question is raised. Specifically, these courts have systematically denied access to Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks. We have national parks to protect them, and at the same time, so that people can enjoy them and have access to them. Those are the important things.

Special interest groups that have different feelings about it like to search out over the country for a venue where they think they can go that will give them the best opportunity to succeed in the lawsuits that they have filed. Environmentalists tend to go to a venue in Washington, DC, for a more sympathetic court than those courts they are closest to and deal with the issues that are there. This action, of course, is contrary to the system of circuit courts, judges thousands of miles away from disputes involving certain impacted areas. Those lawsuits should be tried in the courts of primary jurisdiction because they are the courts that are there.

We have had a real problem in Yellowstone National Park. The district court judge here in Washington decided to move back again on something that we thought was resolved. The Park Service had asked for relief from Judge Sullivan's December order because it would have left an impossible decision. It then moved back to a Wyoming court where it belonged, a Federal circuit court, of course. So now we find ourselves with 2 years of indecisiveness which means we have not made a decision. People don't know whether they can go into Yellowstone Park in the winter.

I have introduced legislation that would limit the ability of individuals to venue shop. Federal land issues arising in a particular State ought to go to that circuit court in which the Federal judges there are involved. These Federal judges have the same qualifications as anywhere else, and that is what Federal courts are for. That is why we have different venues. So it is important. Access to public lands is very important to our State and certainly we need to exercise the system that has been set up.

The Federal judiciary is a system of circuits. Wyoming is in the Tenth Circuit. Unfortunately, this system now allows people to go around the Tenth Circuit and go to another place where they think they will have better success.

My friend from Montana is here. I hope and I am pushing for a bill that says you ought to go to the circuit in which the problem arises for the Federal court jurisdiction.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

A ROCKY START

Mr. BURNS. Madam President, we all came back from our States after the Fourth of July break knowing that we would be working on a short timeline. Lots of legislation and policy has to be done before we end this Congress and all go home and campaign for election and reelection. We are off to kind of a rocky start. Not only do we not have a budget and the rules that we must abide by within a budget in order to proceed to appropriations and to make any sense out of the appropriations process, but we also do not have our appropriations process as being sort of supplanted, that we may have to take another tack in order to pass them and keep the Nation's Government in business.

This week, we have witnessed that we are not really ready to pass any legislation in this body. We, as 100 Senators, are concentrating on votes and issues that lean to doing the business of a political party rather than doing the people's business, which we were sent here to do. This is the people's forum. All people in this country expect us to get our work done. We have issues that are held up, yes, in policy, but the business of financing this Government in a direction that faces the challenges that we do at this time is also being held up.

I am sorry we could not move on to the class action legislation. It was not the intent of this Senate to do that, as objections were thrown out that blocked the legislation no matter what the conditions were, let alone amendments—no agreement on them or a timeframe in which to finish the legislation.

This is important for small business. Class action is important for a State such as mine, because we are a State of small businesses. We don't have any large corporations in the State of Montana. Lawsuits—and frivolous lawsuits—are just sapping the life out of the people who perform the services and deliver the goods for the rest of the citizenry in the State of Montana. That is not being allowed to move forward. Under any condition, there is an objection. Are we heading toward the small end of the tunnel whenever we get down to the end of the session, and then everything breaks loose—issues, bills, and articles are moved much faster. Sometimes they move so fast there are some unintended consequences.

I am disappointed that we don't finish our business. This is the people's house. Issues are on the line. We are just wasting our time. In fact, we are doing it to the point where we might as well be home, working at home, and whenever we decide we want to do business, then we will come back to town and complete the Nation's work.

It is incumbent upon all of us who share the same responsibility, not only to our States but to this country, to complete the work at hand, providing economic opportunities for more people, which we have done.

Look at the statistics. More people own homes now in the United States than ever before in the history of this country, and the same is true about Montana. More people are working today than any other time in Montana history. We gained jobs in the last 4 years, when the rest of the country was struggling. We want to keep that trend going, expanding. Yet we are held up here on issues that are very important in order to make sure that the expansion continues.

I appeal to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle. It is time to move from the frivolous discourse that we have heard in the last couple of weeks and this week, and get on with the business at hand and vote. Let the will of the American people be heard and done. It is our responsibility. It falls on each and every one of our shoulders, and if we are part of an obstructionist move, we must reassess our position and understand what is at stake.

I appeal to my colleagues. It is time.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. Is this Senator allotted a certain amount of time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifteen minutes.

CIA AGENT REVEALED

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, yesterday I stood before the Senate and noted that it had been almost a full year since the identity of a covert CIA agent was revealed in print by the columnist Robert Novak. It has been 360 days and counting. Next Wednesday, it will be 1 full year. It is time to ask, Why hasn't the White House cleared this up?

Madam President, 360 days have gone by since a CIA agent's name was revealed by top White House officials. We know how agent Valerie Plame's coverage was blown. Back in September, the Washington Post reported that two senior White House officials called at least six Washington journalists and disclosed the identity of a covert CIA agent.

It has also become fairly clear why the agent's cover was blown. It was part of an ongoing effort to discredit and retaliate against critics of this administration, especially those who revealed that intelligence used to justify the war in Iraq was flawed or fabricated. Now Ms. Plame, as we know now, is married to former Ambassador Joseph Wilson. Ambassador Wilson was sent on a factfinding mission to Niger to examine claims that Saddam Hussein had sought to purchase uranium from that nation. He found no evidence to support the claim. But President Bush, nonetheless, made that claim in his State of the Union Address.

How those famous 16 words read by the President to the listening Nation about the efforts by Saddam Hussein to purchase uranium from Niger made it into the State of the Union Address remains a great literary mystery. Who lied in President Bush's State of the Union speech? We still don't know. We do know that Ambassador Wilson published an article disputing the uranium claim in the New York Times. Apparently to discredit and punish Mr. Wilson, senior White House officials leaked the identity of Wilson's wife and the fact that she was a CIA operative.

One day Ms. Plame was a valued human intelligence asset; the next day she was political cannon fodder. What we still don't know almost 1 year later is who the senior White House officials responsible for this destructive leak were. We still don't know who it was that gave this classified information to the White House, to the leakers. Was it someone at the NSC? Was it someone at the CIA? Was it the same person who made the decision to include the false claims about uranium from Niger in the State of the Union Message?

Madam President, 20 years of training and experience and millions of dollars were invested in this agent. Leaking her identity violated the law and constituted a betrayal of this country. Yet, for all we know, the person responsible for this betrayal could at this very moment still be exercising a senior decisionmaking role in this administration. This apparently is an administration where the buck never stops, an administration where abuses occur, but no one at the top is ever forced to accept responsibility.

In her 20-year career, Valerie Plame operated with unofficial cover, which means she had no diplomatic immunity. Effectively, her only defense was a painstakingly created and maintained cover. She worked closely with undercover operatives and a network of contacts. All were potentially placed in jeopardy and exposed to danger by the disclosure of her status.

Last November, we heard testimony from three former CIA experts. They all agreed on the far-reaching damage this disclosure represented for Ms. Plame's broader network of contacts and for the intelligence community as a whole. After all, what guarantee does any intelligence agent now have that they could not be the next victim of some administration's smear campaign?

Vincent Cannistraro, former chief of operations and analysis at the CIA Counterterrorism Center, said of the Plame disclosure:

The consequences are much greater than Valerie Plame's job as a clandestine CIA employee—they include the damage to the lives and livelihoods of many foreign nationals with whom she was connected and it has destroyed a clandestine cover mechanism that may have been used to protect other CIA nonofficial cover officers.

James Marcinkowski, a former CIA operations officer, seconded this by saying:

The deliberate exposure and identification of Ambassador Wilson's wife, by our government, was unprecedented, unnecessary, harmful and dangerous.

Larry Johnson, a former CIA analyst and State Department employee, said:

For this administration to run on a security platform and allow people in the administration to compromise the security of intelligence assets, I think is unconscionable.

No one in this Chamber, after listening to these three men, could have any doubts about the damage this act has done to the relationship between the intelligence community and the administration. From all reports, the special prosecutor, finally appointed the day before New Year's, Mr. Fitzgerald, has been conducting a very aggressive investigation. He has issued subpoenas, called witnesses before a grand jury, and interviewed the President and Vice President.

I inquired as to whether the President or Vice President were put under oath. I am informed they were not. Now I find this more than passing strange that the previous President of the United States, President Clinton, when he was being questioned about his relationship with a White House intern, was put under oath and filmed, and yet this President and this Vice President, the head of an administration where people leaked the identity in clear violation of the law of a CIA operative, are interviewed; they are not put under oath; they are not filmed. Would someone please explain the priorities?

In fact, the President has been kind of cavalier and dismissive of this entire situation. In his only public statement about the leak, he told reporters, and this is a direct quote from President Bush:

. . . I don't know if we are going to find out the senior administration official. Now, this is a large administration, and there's a lot of senior officials. I don't have any idea.

That is what George Bush said on October 7, 2003.

What I would like to know is, where is the President's outrage? Where is the recognition that this is not the same as leaking promising numbers on the economy? Where is the President's fury that one of his own valuable intelligence assets has been destroyed? And what about the Vice President? We know he can be relentless when he is on a quest for information to justify the case for the war in Iraq. Where is his determination to find the people who have destroyed the confidence of the intelligence community in this administration?

All we hear from the President and the Vice President is silence on this issue, as if they do not want to know who leaked this information, or they know and they do not want to be held accountable. In either case, it is inexcusable for the President or Vice President.

The disclosure of Ms. Plame's identity represents an extremely damaging breach of national security. She worked gathering human intelligence, exactly the type of intelligence we have heard over and over again since September 11, 2001 that is so critical to our fighting terrorism.

Only 2 days ago, National Public Radio reported on the fact that there is a growing consensus on the need to improve our human intelligence capacity. There is a recognition that after years of increasing reliance on intercepts and satellite imagery, only solid human intelligence can help us deal with the type of insurgency we face in Iraq in effectively fighting al-Qaida.

The other critical point that was made is that sending troops to a training course on intelligence gathering is not enough. According to one CIA agent, he said it takes 10 years to season somebody as a case officer in order to judge the information and the people they are dealing with, check on bona fides. That is the kind of asset Valerie Plame used to be, and, as Mr. Cannistraro pointed out, the damage that was done was not only to her but to her network and potentially to all CIA human intelligence operatives.

One publication reported after reading of her own blown cover, Ms. Plame immediately sat down to make a list of all of her contacts and associates who could be in jeopardy. I can only hope when we find out the identity of this leaker or leakers, that person is forced to see this list and be confronted with the full extent of their betrayal of this country and our citizens.

Usually when the cover of agents like Valerie Plame is blown and their contacts placed in jeopardy, it is a result of espionage. The perpetrators, when convicted, face life in prison or even death. In many ways, it is almost worse that this was done as an act of political revenge. The disclosure of Ms. Plame's identity was unquestionably a vicious act of political intimidation and retribution, but it is much more than that. It is part of a clear pattern of coverup, concealment, and contempt for the truth. That is why so much rests on the outcome of Mr. Fitzgerald's investigation.

We need to identify and prosecute those responsible for this damaging episode, and in so doing we need to send a clear message to the President and the Vice President that sacrificing intelligence assets and breaching national security is too high a price to pay for maintaining the issue of deceit that was used to justify the war in Iraq to the American people.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

ENERGY POLICY

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I rise this morning to talk about where we are going with our Nation's energy policy and what this body and the House of Representatives are going to do in protecting consumers and ratepayers from continued market manipulation and energy fraud.

This morning, most of America woke up to a picture of one of America's corporate leaders led off to an indictment in handcuffs. Yes, that is right, Ken Lay from the Enron Corporation, while not found guilty today, was indicted on 11 different counts, including wire fraud, securities fraud, and making false and misleading statements. The question is whether this 65-page indictment of Ken Lay, which does prove that no one is above the law, is going to bring justice to ratepayers and consumers in America who have suffered from market manipulation at the hands of Enron.

I say that because there are still about 10 States in America that have utilities that are being sued by Enron. That is right, even though Enron has manipulated contracts, even though there are documents from Federal investigators showing that market manipulation has happened, Enron still has the audacity to sue utilities across the country forcing them to pay on fraudulent contracts. For the State of Washington there has not been an insignificant consequence for our economy. The fact that people in Snohomish County had a more than 50-percent rate increase and have had that rate increase in place for some time, shows the great impact it has had on our ability to keep jobs, keep people in their homes with proper heating. Even the school districts have had challenges. Snohomish, Mukilteo, and Everett School Districts have estimated that they will pay $2-plus million in energy costs if their utility is forced to pay Enron. That money could go for hiring teachers, putting classroom materials together, and helping to promote programs under the No Child Left Behind Act, but at the same time they are getting hit with exorbitant energy costs.

So my constituents want to know whether this 65-page indictment is going to lead to justice for Americans who have been impacted by this matter.

Washington is not the only State. Nevada, the State of the Presiding Officer who understands this issue well, has been impacted. There are States in the Midwest. There are many utilities that cannot believe that with all this information that has come about they are being asked to pay on these fraudulent contracts.

I think the question that Federal regulators ought to be asking themselves, and those who are responsible for the indictment of Ken Lay—I want to applaud the Department of Justice for doing the great work they have done in actually bringing about this indictment today. But the question becomes, How did Mr. Lay influence the rest of the regulatory process? If you are the Department of Justice you are bringing about justice to individuals believed to have manipulated the market, financial documents, or made false or misleading statements. Then is the Department of Justice not doing its job? The Securities Exchange Commission, an independent organization that has basically helped in producing this indictment, showing that there has been accounting fraud, aren't they doing their job? The question remains, Why aren't energy regulatory officials doing their job. They are the ones who are supposed to make sure there are just and reasonable rates and that there isn't market manipulation. And, basically, they have said you are right, there weren't just and reasonable rates as it relates to manipulated contracts, but we are keeping those contracts in place.

I raise the question this morning, with Ken Lay's indictment, whether in fact Mr. Lay did not have undue influence on the process of actually helping to get FERC Commissioners on board, and influencing policy by saying to them, stay the course with the California crisis and in the impact it is having on western markets. Today, I say we definitely need relief from these Enron contracts.

Still, Mr. Lay sent a letter to the executive branch basically saying: I am attaching a list of potential candidates we think would do an excellent job on the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Basically, he went on in that document to then give a list of issues that he thought were very important to consider for the Commission appointees that he thought would help influence the process. Specifically, he talked about how basically the free market should continue to be allowed, that they should not push in the energy crisis for a variety of resolutions.

In fact, he actually said one of the criteria should be: Willingness to abolish current native load preference under current tariffs. For us in the Northwest, right there he was lobbying the administration to say, only appoint Commissioners to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission who are going to let us have our way, putting whatever Enron power on the grid that can go on the grid. If we are willing to pay to put Enron energy onto the grid and pay more money than the Bonneville Power Administration is willing to pay, nominate FERC Commissioners that are going to let us do that.

He goes on to say that he wants to select people who are going to ensure that there are free markets and open access, which is a concern. While he mentions orderly rules of the road, one of the issues has been whether there have been any orderly rules of the road. I think that is part of the concern that we have with his indictment: how much did he influence the regulatory process?

A second thing came to light within the context of the Governmental Affairs Committee. The committee performed an investigation of how much Enron did influence the Commission. In fact, after reviewing memos that had been sent by Ken Lay to the Federal Government, to various individuals, including his support for the nomination of two of the Commissioners, basically the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee said that ''documents obtained indicate that Enron attempted to directly and indirectly influence the FERC investigation of the California markets and subsequent decisionmaking.''

So here we have Federal regulators that have been basically nominated and pushed by Ken Lay, and not in the normal, let's nominate somebody to head up an independent commission with such an important role for our economy and Government, way. He sent a letter basically with a litmus test:

Support these people to be Commissioners of the FERC if in fact they support this philosophy of continuing to let the market go without the proper rules and regulations, and basically let standard market design, something that this body has had a lot of concern about, let that be the policy of the day.

Well, one of our committees, the Government Affairs Committee, basically found that Enron attempted to have direct and indirect influence upon FERC's investigation of the market; that they were trying to lobby FERC, if you will, to do nothing about the California crisis. I find that a very interesting connection in this particular issue, again, because my ratepayers are continuing to pay exorbitant amounts for energy, being sued by Enron. They are on the hook for millions more. Madam President, $122 million just from the utility in my home county is what they want to get out of our ratepayers, when they have admitted market manipulation. I find this interesting. The day that Ken Lay actually sent the letter to the executive branch was January 8, 2001. In it, he is basically saying: I want to get Commissioners who think like Enron does. I want to get those people making these important policy decisions. Here are the policy decisions I think they should make. Make sure these markets continue to operate in the way that Enron likes.

I find it amazing because instead of Ken Lay doing his job on a daily basis as a CEO, with oversight over an organization, he was lobbying for FERC commissioners. Meanwhile, less than 2 days after Ken Lay writes this letter we have audiotapes from Enron traders talking about the ricochet scheme, which was selling power outside of California and then selling it back in, doing that because it could get a higher price.

So he writes this letter on January 8, and we have audiotapes on January 18 of Enron discussing how they were manipulating the market using the ricochet scheme. On January 23, about 2 weeks after he writes this, there are tapes of Enron traders on the phone discussing how they are going to take a contract with a utility in my State, in Snohomish County, and jack up the price, lying to make them think there was a higher demand for the power, and that way the county would pay more money.

Just after that, 2½ weeks after he sends this letter, there is another audiotape where Enron traders are discussing how much money they are going to make off of the Snohomish County deal and how they are going to account for it in two different ways, one at $10 million and the other at $20 million, just because that is the way they keep the books.

Here is a CEO who is spending his time lobbying Federal regulators on how they should not take a hard stance in California, how they should do nothing about the crisis, how they should continue to let the free market work its will, and at the same time his own employees are on the phone talking about how to manipulate price and gouge consumers.

In fact, 2 days after this letter—sent on January 8—on January 10, traders discuss whether they should lie to the Wall Street Journal about their activities.

Here are the people who work for this company. He could have been doing oversight of the people within his company and the market manipulation, particularly since these individuals, executives of his company, had come before Congress basically telling everybody that they were doing their job and that market manipulation was not occurring.

I have a great deal of concern about whether this indictment of Ken Lay is going to bring justice for the American people and the ratepayers. Again, I applaud DOJ for getting the indictment, but the question is whether people who are still being impacted by this crisis are going to get relief.

What does Chairman Pat Wood of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission say about Enron? At the time this happened, Pat Wood continued to be, I guess, a market-oriented person even though the deregulation experiment in California had proven to be ill-fated, it was proven people would take advantage and manipulate the market. The publication, Inside FERC, wrote that Pat Wood believed that ''the marketmaking style created by Enron should be emulated by other companies and supported by regulators.''

This is after Enron's bankruptcy. Enron had gone bankrupt and we had the chairman, supported by Ken Lay—we had the Federal regulator, who is the policeman on the beat supposedly protecting people—saying Enron should be emulated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Ms. CANTWELL. I ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. CANTWELL. I thank the Chair. What else did Chairman Pat Wood say about Enron and the market manipulation? I get that he thinks a market needs to be open, but a market without transparency and a market without aggressive regulators to make sure they monitor for manipulation is not a true market.

Pat Wood, again according to Inside FERC, shortly after Enron went bankrupt, said, While Enron may be a ''goner,'' . . . ''the innovation and entrepreneurial [spirit] that characterized this company remain . . . ''

I will hope Mr. Wood's observations have changed by today with the 65-page, 11-count indictment of Mr. Lay. There are lots of things going on here, and the entrepreneurial spirit that he thought existed in 2001 has definitely been characterized in a different light today. It has been shown that market manipulation has happened and was perpetrated by Enron.

I think where we are is taking a closer look at a deeper philosophy of what Chairman Wood really believes. It is a philosophy, again, where Chairman Wood of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission was quoted as saying:

. . . the new breed of energy company, in fact, is going to be the only game in town 5 years from now.

That is his philosophy. This leads to the kind of hands-off approach for which Ken Lay lobbied. And again, an approach that the Governmental Affairs Committee said Enron attempted to put in place through direct and indirect influence on the Federal energy regulators. This is basically the policy I think got us into so much trouble in California, without regulators responding in due time. It is the same philosophy that has gotten utilities in about 10 States in financial risk because Enron continues to sue them. Pat Wood is clear in his philosophy. He thinks that the Enron model is the only game in town and it is the way we should proceed.

I can tell you, I don't think it is the only game in town. I don't think we are doing enough on this matter. This body needs to take a firm stand that market manipulation is wrong. It can't be just and reasonable. It can't be in the public interest. And it is not what we ratepayers across the country should be forced to pay on.

Again, Pat Wood, Chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, has said, ''We're doing the maximum we can do.''

We are doing the maximum we can do. He said that in January of this year. In January of this year, while the utility in my State, in Snohomish County, was being the policeman on the beat, transcribing audiotapes, looking through documents, doing all the homework the Federal energy regulators should be doing. While Pat Wood was making the same statement saying we are doing all we can do, my constituents in Washington State were proving there was a heck of a lot more to do to give ratepayers justice.

Again, I applaud what the Department of Justice has done in the indictment of Ken Lay. They are going to try to get to the bottom of this story. But what my colleagues need to realize, and understand, is we have an imbalance. We cannot have the Department of Justice doing a great job with its Enron task force and prosecution of various Enron executives on accounting and securities fraud. We can't have the SEC doing a great job on making sure there are new securities regulations in place to make sure these violations don't happen again, and then have the Federal energy regulators who are in charge of protecting ratepayers fall down on the job. That is exactly what has happened. They have fallen down on the job, they are not protecting ratepayers. We are going to see that after this indictment we are going to continue to pursue this case in the Senate, if we have to, and in the House of Representatives, to make sure that all Federal agencies do their job, and they are giving justice to ratepayers who have been impacted by fraudulent contracts.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENSIGN). The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

CLASS ACTION FAIRNESS ACT OF 2004

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 2062, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2062) to amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Frist amendment No. 3548, relative to the enactment date of the act.

Frist amendment No. 3549 (amendment No. 3548), relative to the enactment date of the act.

Frist amendment No. 3550 (to the instructions of the motion to commit), relative to the enactment date of the act.

Frist amendment No. 3551 (amendment No. 3550), relative to the enactment date of the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I know that most in the Chamber, and those who are in their offices, went home to their home States over the Fourth of July break. It is always a treat for me to do that because, frankly, I think I come from one of the most beautiful places in the world. For me to go to California and get ''rooted'' in why I want this job, to protect that beautiful place, and to protect the people who live there and to work for them, it is always a joy.

Constituents asked me: What are you going to be doing when you come back? They had asked me about a number of issues they cared about. They are worried about this economy. They say it is uneven. They point out that college tuition is going up more than 20 percent. They are squeezed. They point out that gasoline prices in our State are raging. It is costing them more. They point out that their health care premiums are going up. They are worried about even keeping health insurance. Some of them do not have any.

Those on Medicare are very worried about what they view as a false promise of the administration's Medicare proposal which was supposed to be so great for them in terms of prescription drugs. It turns out the thing is so bureaucratic and such a nightmare they cannot figure it out.

Not only that, they express shock when I tell them in that bill we do something outrageous, saying to Medicare, you cannot negotiate for lower prices for the people on Medicare. Constituents say: Wait a minute. Why does that make sense? If you are sitting across the table from someone and you represent 40 million senior citizens, you have a good card in your hand that you can play. You can say, if you want to have your high blood pressure medicine on our formulary, if you want to have your heart medicine on our formulary, if you want to have an arthritis drug on our formulary, you have to give us a better deal.

No, this administration and the majority in this body decided to tell Medicare they could not negotiate for lower drug prices for our seniors.

When I go home, people are flooding me with these questions. They are very worried about Iraq. What is the plan? What is the plan to get more help there? Why are we spending so much there? Why aren't we focusing on our problems at home? This is what I heard all over my State.

They ask: Senator, what is on the agenda when you get back? Which one of these issues are you going to take up? What about rail security? We are worried about that because we have a lot of Amtrak ridership in California. What about nuclear plant security? When are you doing more about that? I have to tell them the truth; that is, I am not in charge. My party is not in charge of the Senate. The Republican leadership has chosen, instead of putting any of those issues you have mentioned on the agenda, they are taking up class action reform because there is too much forum shopping—at which point they look at me and ask, What?—and we have to protect business from these consumer complaints.

They kind of look at me quizzically and say: There are other things that mean a lot more to my family. Then they ask: What are you going to take up after you take up class action reform? We are going to talk about gay marriage. And they say: Well, wait a minute. Every day in my life I have all these pressing issues; I thought the States handled that issue. Well, I say, you are right; the States have always handled that issue.

I find it amazing, given the Republicans are in charge of this Senate and they always believe in States rights and local control, they are now going to bring up the issue of gay marriage, and not only take it up—it was taken up once before; Bob Barr in the House wrote the Defense of Marriage Act, and Bob Barr said that would take care of everything and still says it takes care of everything—but, no, they are going it take the most precious document known to human kind, the Constitution of the United States, and they are going to now talk about marriage in the Constitution. In fact, marriage has been sacred in the various religions, along with the rules surrounding marriage, and the States have handled marriage for years.

My constituents are completely confused. They have many worries. They have many concerns. They are worried about the fact they are not respected abroad. They are worried about this recovery that they see as very wobbly. They see better corporate profits—although those seem not to be going as well—and they do not see the increases in their standard of living.

If we look at the numbers, the increase in the take-home pay, when you include inflation and the high cost of living, has only gone up about 1 percent, while all the other issues have gone up over 20 percent, the issues people deal with every day.

Now I come back to Washington and I am called to a meeting in a secret room in the Capitol. The press knows all about this. We are called to a secret room in the Capitol. We have to discuss the threats to our country. This is very serious stuff. Of course, I cannot go into everything that was said, but I can state what has been reported in the press, which is not classified. And that is, we need to be on the alert at home. We have known since September 11 that al-Qaida has cells in our country and that they never give up. If they fail, they go back again. We know all this. We need to stay ahead of the threat.

That is why I am so proud to be on the Commerce Committee. I am so proud to have as part of the portfolio of the Commerce Committee, rail security, aviation security, and port security. These are key issues. Since Madrid, for example, and the horrible bombing of the train there, we need to be on our toes. That means we need to pass rail security legislation.

This is the great news I have for my constituents and for all Americans. At a time when we are in the middle of an election, where there is a lot of disagreement, where we have even seen language that is prohibited to be used in the Senate being used by the Vice President of the United States—in other words, a time where emotions are running high politically—guess what happened on rail security. Every single member of the committee voted for that bill—every single member. From liberal to conservative, to moderate, everybody voted for that bill. That means we could easily take up that bill. That means we could easily pass that bill.

But what do we have before the Senate? Class action. The people who want us to pass this bill say there is a lot of abuse and that we need to make sure we take these cases away from the States and put them more into the Federal courts. Again, I find it unbelievable that we have a Republican majority that keeps saying, States rights, States take care of it, States do it, but when they are not happy with the way it goes—oops, forget that. As Roseanne Rosanna-Dana used to say, ''Never mind.'' Take it to the Federal court. Everyone knows what will happen there.

A lot of these cases are very important. We remember Dalkon Shield was one of those class action cases where women were dying. Not until there was a class action lawsuit was that fixed. That does not mean there aren't abuses. It does not mean that we cannot have reforms.

It does say to me that there is no crying need to take this up when we are called to room 407 for a secret briefing about the threats that face this country before the election. It is extraordinary to me. And I believe the American people who are watching what we do here are thinking: What is the Senate doing about my life, about my family, about what I need for my kids?

I went to a press conference on the minimum wage. Do you know the minimum wage has not been raised in 8 years? Every colleague here has had a pay raise. For 8 years the minimum wage has not been raised. People are living below the poverty line. Mr. President, 61 percent of those people happen to be women, many single moms. All we want is a chance to do that. We should do that by unanimous consent today. Why do we need to debate it? Eight years long and no increase in the minimum wage, zero.

These are people who work hard. These are not mostly teenagers; these are grownups who are working hard to support their families on the minimum wage. The cost of living has gone up 14 percent in those 8 years. The minimum wage has stayed stagnant. These people are falling, falling, falling, falling—and we talk about family values here? And we are rushing to do a marriage amendment when the States are taking care of that?

My State has decided what it wants to do. They have a law. It is not perfect. It says there are domestic partnerships and they have rights and responsibilities. We could make it better. But do you know what. My State has taken care of this, thank you very much.

It is all about politics, folks, let's face it. For 5 minutes, why don't we put aside politics and pass the minimum wage and help the millions of people who need it to be done? What are we talking about? We are talking about an increase, over a couple years, of $3,800 a year for these people, who will still be below the poverty line. I bet if you had a vote in this Senate, the way it is made up, to give more tax breaks to the people making a million bucks a year, it would fly through here, it would fly through this place, even though those in the million-dollar range are already getting back hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. Imagine.

So every once in a while I come down to this Senate floor and I say: Why am I here? What are we doing? Are we meeting the needs of the people? And this is a perfect time to do it because there is a bill on the Senate floor that not one person in my State, except high-paid lobbyists in very fancy suits, want to take up. This is true. The things we should take up, the things we talk about in that room, that secret room in the Capitol—making our rail systems safe, making our ports safe, making our buses safe—oh, no, we do not have time for that because after we do this for the big businesses in this country, oh, we are going to go on to gay marriage before the Democratic Convention so some people can cast a vote that might hurt them in their election. Shame on us. We should be better than that as Senators. We should be better. So I am going to give us a chance to be better.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 2273

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to calendar No. 536, S. 2273, the Rail Transportation Security Act, that the bill be read a third time and passed, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from California that in my capacity as a Senator from the State of Nevada, I object at this time.

Mrs. BOXER. I understand.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mrs. BOXER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. REID. Is the Senator from California saying that we should be engaged on the Senate floor today on issues relating to homeland security; that is, the security of the State of California, the State of Nevada, and the other 48 States, and that we should not be wasting our time on class action? Next we are going to go to a gay marriage amendment. Would the Senator acknowledge no matter how strongly people feel about this gay marriage amendment, it has no—zero—I am from Nevada; I do not gamble personally, but I know a little bit about it, having been chairman of the Gaming Commission—it has zero chance of passing. None. It won't pass. And we are going to spend valuable Senate floor time on an amendment that stands absolutely no chance of passing when we have at the desk the homeland security appropriations bill, and I have been told today we are not going to go to that until September.

Now, is the Senator saying we should not be doing class action, we should not be doing gay marriage, we should be doing things that make my family and your family and the rest of America safe from these evil terrorists?

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank my friend. It is obvious he sees it the way I see it.

We were called up to a secret meeting today to hear about all the threats on our Nation. That is not an idle trip up to that room. If it is to mean anything, we better get busy. I meet with my local police and fire. Do you know what? When there is a terrorist attack, the White House does not get the call; the Senate does not get the call; the House does not get the call. They dial 911, and our local people—be they in Nevada, be they in New Mexico, be they in California—get the call. They are hurting.

The bill I wanted to get us to vote on today—and I have a couple of others I am going to ask since we got objection to this one. The Rail Transportation Security Act—this is one that passed out of the Commerce Committee, I say to the assistant Democratic leader, unanimously. It is very important. I will tell my friend what it does. The bill authorizes grants to all of our railroads and to hazardous material shippers for freight and passenger rail security. It is a critical bill.

We saw what happened in Madrid. You do not have to haul me up to any secret room. The minute we saw that happen in Madrid, the Commerce Committee, which the Presiding Officer of the Senate is on and participated in this, we for the second time voted in a unanimous fashion—100 percent of the committee—for this rail security bill. Unfortunately, there has been objection to it because the Republicans, who control the Senate, are not interested in moving this bill.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 2279

So I am going to give them a chance to move another bill, and that is the port security bill. Port security is another bill that passed out of our committee without one dissenting vote. We know the problem at our ports. We have containers coming into them. They are not checking them. We do not know who is going to be putting something in one of those containers. We are doing better, but we are not giving it the attention it deserves.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to calendar No. 530, S. 2279, the Maritime Security Act of 2004.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair again informs the Senator from California that in my capacity as a Senator from the State of Nevada, I object.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mrs. BOXER. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. REID. Ships coming into the United States today have on them transponders. The purpose of that is so those people ashore can find out where the ship is and have a better idea of where they are. As we speak, there are about 43,000 very large ships on our oceans—43,000. For them to come to the United States, one of the requirements is they have a transponder on them, like an airplane has, like the situation we had a few weeks ago where the plane was coming into National and the transponder was not working.

I say to my friend from New York, even though those ships have transponders——

Mrs. BOXER. I am from California. I was born in New York, but I am from California.

Mr. REID. I am sorry?

Mrs. BOXER. You said: I say to my friend from New York. I was born there, but I am from California and have been since I was 25 years old.

Mr. REID. We have only known each other 22 years.

Mrs. BOXER. I know. When we have known each other 23 years, you will get it right, I know.

Mr. REID. So I say to my friend, there is a transponder on every ship coming into the United States, but we do not have the equipment on shore to have the transponders picked up on shore. Why? Because we have not spent the money to do it.

The distinguished Senator from South Carolina has fought to have money placed in these bills so we can have the transponders on shore so we can do what they do with airplanes, with ships.

Is the Senator aware we don't even do that?

Mrs. BOXER. I am quite aware we have not done what Senator HOLLINGS has long asked us to do. We have not done the work of homeland security. There is a lot of talk. There are a lot of meetings. There is a lot of yackyack about it. But when it comes down to where we are putting the dollars and where we are putting the emphasis, we are on some bill here I can honest to God tell you, not one person except a highly paid lobbyist has ever talked to me about, class action. I can honestly tell you, on the gay marriage, people have a lot of views in my State, but they believe our State is handling that issue in a good way. So there is no reason to go to this.

In Madrid, 200 people died, 1,400 people were injured in that rail accident. And we go up to 407 up here and we hear all the talk about what we need to do. I am suggesting as a result of my unanimous consent requests today, both being objected to, when you have this majority party, it is very clear: there is a lot of talk, but there is no action.

That is a reason why people are disenchanted. It is the reason why people want change around here. They want us to be strong at home. They want us to be respected in the world. And it is time for many changes to occur. I am looking forward to those changes, to the day when we can vote these bills out of the Commerce Committee without one single objection, and no one on the floor here would then object to taking them up.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I came to the floor intending to talk about an amendment I had prepared to offer to the class action legislation, the underlying class action legislation. I think instead of getting into a discussion of that amendment, let me express my disappointment that we are not doing anything this week here in the Senate.

I was asked last week, as I am sure all of us were by our constituents, what are you doing in the Senate? What is Congress doing these days? I tried to answer honestly and said: Nothing. We are treading water in the Senate. We are not doing anything.

I checked with the Parliamentarian about the procedural status we are in in the Senate this morning. I am informed this is the status: We have S. 2062, which is this bill to reform class action procedures. There is an amendment offered to that by Senator FRIST, a perfecting amendment. There is a second-degree perfecting amendment offered to that. There is a motion to commit that has been made by Senator FRIST. There is a Frist perfecting amendment to the motion to commit, and there is a Frist second-degree perfecting amendment to the first-degree perfecting amendment to the motion to commit. So the obvious question I put to the Parliamentarian is, what is there that is in order for us to offer at this time for the Senate to consider? The answer is, nothing. Nothing is in order. The tree is full, as the parliamentary expression goes, and nothing can be offered.

There is also a cloture motion that has been filed on the underlying measure. That would be a motion that will come to a vote presumably tomorrow to bring the debate on the underlying bill to a close. Of course, that motion will come up without Senators having been able to offer amendments. I would doubt seriously that that cloture motion would prevail, but that would be a surmise. I don't know that that is the case.

All of this procedural mumbo jumbo I am reciting in order to make the point that there is no effort I am aware of to move ahead with a lot of the important items that need to be dealt with in the Senate. The Senator from California raised a couple of those items that relate to homeland security. There are many others also we could get unanimous consent to move ahead on and that would be good policy initiatives that would benefit our country. I am frustrated—as I am sure many Senators are—that we are in this circumstance. I am frustrated this week is essentially lost to any productive activity.

Next week I am informed we will be debating a constitutional amendment on gay marriage. I concur with the comments of the Senator from Nevada that there is no chance the necessary two-thirds vote of the Senate is going to be there to pass that constitutional amendment. The Founding Fathers had great wisdom in saying, when you are amending the Constitution, you can't just do it with a majority vote. You have to have a two-thirds vote. I can say with very little fear of contradiction, there are not two-thirds of all Senators who favor going ahead and passing a constitutional amendment at this time. So again, that will be another wasted week next week.

We have one more week then, and then we are in recess for 6 weeks. Then we come back in the second week in September and presumably have a few weeks of work there before we adjourn. I regret we are not able to do more. I regret our procedural circumstance we find ourselves in prevents me from offering the amendment I had intended to offer. But I will look forward to an opportunity to offer that amendment, if and when we get to a point where amendments are in order on this pending legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. What is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the second-degree amendment to the motion to commit.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to address a few remarks made by my colleagues on the other side of the aisle during yesterday's debate on the class action bill. First, they repeatedly accused the leader of jeopardizing the chances of getting this bill passed by filling in the amendment tree. Give me a break. That is the phoniest argument I have ever heard. The fact is, they are trying to kill this bill, and they are probably going to be effective in doing so.

I hate to give up—and I haven't given up yet—but that is what is happening. I have been through it so many times around here that I know when there is a real desire to kill a bill. The way you do it is with nongermane amendments that are called killer amendments or poison pills, because they are political amendments one side or the other does not want. The leader filled the tree because he wanted to protect the bill from extraneous amendments that would eliminate any chances of this measure becoming law. Anybody who argues otherwise is being deceptive.

Everyone here knows the class action bill was an extremely attractive vehicle for extraneous amendments, especially those amendments that were sure to be offered for the sole purpose of scoring political points during an election year. But what my Democratic colleagues conveniently overlook is this bill will find itself in the recycle bin if it is saddled with a host of irrelevant amendments. While this is certainly a win/win situation for those on the other side of the aisle who oppose this bill, apparently including some of the Democratic leadership, I find it a truly puzzling outcome for those who say they support class action reform. Not only does a loaded bill risk peeling away Senate votes from the underlying class action measure, it will, in all certainty, undergo changes when it goes through the House. And what happens then? Do we have a conference to resolve our differences? I think the answer is a resounding no. I don't think the other side is going to permit this because this bill flies in the face of the demands of one of their greatest hard money constituent givers, and that is the trial lawyers of America.

We all know there is little time left in this Congress to go through the motion of doing a conference. I think the chances of getting a conference done in this election year with two conventions and with all the problems we have to address. The appointment of conferees is further cast into doubt by virtue of the minority leader's threat earlier in the year to the appointment of conferees for the rest of the year. So if you add these poison amendments to this bill, these extraneous amendments that have nothing to do with the bill, you are basically killing the bill. Everybody knows that. The majority leader had no choice other than to do what he did.

I certainly did not hear any assurances from the minority leader yesterday on whether he would consent to the appointment of conferees to this bill. As such, I am led to believe his position remains unchanged. But even if he did consent, I don't think there would be enough time to do a conference. We have 62 people who said they would support this bill. That means all 62 should vote for cloture so we can actually pass this bill. But unfortunately, we have some who agreed they would vote for cloture—that was the whole reason for the agreement last November—and are now changing their minds and saying, well, this is something I can't support because we want our colleagues to have their right to put poison pills on this bill.

(Mr. TALENT assumed the Chair.)

Mr. HATCH. Well, they cannot have it both ways. Let me be clear. It is because of the potential feeding frenzy that the leader moved to safeguard the bill from an open season on nongermane, nonrelevant, extraneous amendments. He did it to advance the ball on this legislation so it can be considered without the same initiatives we saw with other measures that were considered by the Senate this year. He did it with the hope of reaching a time agreement on amendments. He was not being unreasonable. He even allowed one nongermane amendment the Democrats have tried to get an up or down vote on all year, which members on this side feel is a terrible amendment. But probably it would pass, who knows. At least some think it would probably pass. I think there needs to be a substitute amendment to it that would probably pass.

I want to remind my Democratic colleagues the majority leader made three extremely generous offers regarding the consideration of germane and nongermane amendments.

First, he asked unanimous consent that amendments be limited to five related amendments to be offered by each side. So nobody would be foreclosed from offering the amendments they might think are important. When the minority leader objected to the offer, he expanded the request to include 10 related amendments on each side. I don't know how he could have been more fair. When the minority leader rejected this even more generous counterproposal, the majority leader yet again expanded the agreement to include an unlimited number of related amendments. In other words, amendments that are pertinent to the bill, that are at least germane. Again, the minority leader rejected this third offer. Of course, let us not forget each offer included an up-or-down vote on a nongermane amendment that the Democrats demanded, which is an amendment by Senator KENNEDY on the minimum wage.

We also heard yesterday that filling the amendment tree was unprecedented, and we are somehow committing a terrible wrong against the institution of the Senate. How soon we forget the past. I remind my colleagues that the minority leader filled the tree in October of 2002 on the homeland security bill, which was even a more important bill than this one, although this is an extremely important bill for this country. Mind you, he filled the tree after promising at the beginning of his tenure as then-majority leader he would never fill the tree. But he did so, anyway. To be sure, we even saw Senator BYRD do it when he was the majority leader. Unprecedented? Come on, give me a break. Terrible wrong?

Let us not hide behind Senate process in order to play both sides of the fence on class action reform. I said it yesterday, and I will say it again today: S. 2062 represents a bipartisan agreement we reached in good faith with key Democrats who say they support class action reform. We agreed to a number of their amendments in order to get them to agree to vote for cloture. That was the agreement. And implied in that agreement was to vote down poison pill amendments that would kill the bill. Otherwise, they weren't sincere; we know they must have been at the time, but they would not have been sincere in the bipartisan agreement we reached. We reached a compromise because I thought the ultimate goal was to get class action enacted into law.

Let me be clear when I say my agreement to further moderate this bill was in no way predicated on letting this legislation become a ''Christmas tree'' for unrelated measures. This is never the way we have done business around here. Our agreement was about getting class action reform enacted, and that is the very direction our leader is moving us toward. I can only hope my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who say they support this bill can see that. A deal is a deal. They should not break it because politically it might be in their best interest to do so. That works both ways. We should not break it because politically it might be in our best interest to bring up extraneous, nongermane amendments and make them vote on them.

Another argument my colleagues on the other side raised repeatedly yesterday was the Judicial Conference and the Chief Justice of the United States are somehow opposed to this bill. I have heard this point made over and over. I think it is about time to set the record straight.

Let me start by saying Chief Justice Rehnquist has never written a letter, issued a statement, nor published an opinion that comes out in opposition to this bill. Rather, my colleagues who make this claim rely on outdated letters from the Federal Judicial Conference espousing opinions on prior iterations of this bill—prior iterations, not the same language of this bill.

On two prior occasions, the Judicial Conference expressed opposition to earlier bills, as offered in the 106th and 107th Congresses that would have expanded Federal diversity jurisdictions over purported class actions. But in March of last year, a substantial shift in position occurred. In a March 26, 2003, letter to the Judiciary Committee, the Judicial Conference expressed its position on the bill by stating:

> That Congress may decide to base a statutory approach to remedy current problems with class action litigation by using minimal diversity litigation. The Conference position recognizes that the use of minimal diversity may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-State class action litigation in the Federal courts.

The Judicial Conference also suggested employing provisions to raise the jurisdictional threshold and fashioning exceptions that would preserve a role for the State courts in the handling of in-State class actions.

Senator FEINSTEIN offered an amendment during the ensuing markup that was directly responsive to these suggestions. Those changes were reflected in the version of the bill reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee in early April 2003.

Perhaps more important than what was said is what was not said. Nowhere in the letter does the Judicial Conference express opposition to the bill now in consideration. I think this silence is deafening and speaks for itself on where the Judicial Conference stands.

I ask unanimous consent that the March 26 Judicial Conference letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUDICIAL CONFERENCE
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, March 26, 2003.

Hon. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chair, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN HATCH: I write to provide you with the recently adopted views of the Judicial Conference of the United States, the policy-making body for the federal judiciary, on class action legislation, including S. 274, the ''Class Action Fairness Act of 2003,'' introduced by you and other co-sponsors.

On March 18, 2003, the Judicial Conference unanimously adopted the following recommendation:

That the Judicial Conference recognize that the use of minimal diversity of citizenship may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-state class action litigation in the federal courts, while continuing to oppose class action legislation that contains jurisdictional provisions that are similar to those in the bills introduced in the 106th and 107th Congresses. If Congress determines that certain class actions should be brought within the original and removal jurisdiction of the federal courts on the basis of minimal diversity of citizenship and an aggregation of claims, Congress should be encouraged to include sufficient limitations and threshold requirements so that federal courts are not unduly burdened and states' jurisdiction over in-state class actions is left undisturbed, such as by employing provisions to raise the jurisdictional threshold and to fashion exceptions to such jurisdiction that would preserve a role for the state courts in the handling of in-state class actions. Such exceptions for in-state class actions may appropriately include such factors as whether substantially all members of the class are citizens of a single state, the relationship of the defendants to the forum state, or whether the claims arise from death, personal injury, or physical property damage within the state. Further, the Conference should continue to explore additional approaches to the consolidation and coordination of overlapping or duplicative class actions that do not unduly intrude on state courts or burden federal courts.

The Conference in 1999 opposed the class action provisions in legislation then pending (s. 353; H.R. 1875, 106th Cong.). That opposition was based on concerns that the provisions would add substantially to the workload of the federal courts and are inconsistent with principles of federalism. The March 2003 position makes clear that such opposition continues to apply to similar jurisdictional provisions.

The Conference recognizes, however, that Congress may decide to base a statutory approach to remedy current problems with class action litigation by using minimal diversity jurisdiction. The Conference position recognizes that the use of minimal diversity may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-state class action litigation in the federal courts. The use of the term ''significant multi-state class action litigation'' focuses on the possibility of multi-state membership within the plaintiff class. The actions to which this term applies are nationwide class actions, as well as class actions whose members include claimants from states within a smaller region or section of the country. Minimal diversity in these cases would facilitate the disposition of litigation that affects the interests of citizens of many states and, through their citizens, affects the many states themselves.

Parallel in-state class actions in which the plaintiff class is defined as limited to the citizens of the forum state are not included within the term ''significant multi-state class action litigation.'' Parallel in-state class actions might share common questions of law and fact with similar in-state actions in other states, but would not, as suggested herein, typically seek relief in one state on behalf of citizens living in another state. Accordingly, parallel in-state class actions would not present, on a broad or national scale, the problems of state projection of law beyond its borders and would present few of the choice of law problems associated with nationwide class action litigation. In addition, to the extent problems arise as a result of overlapping and duplicative in-state class actions within a particular state, the state legislative and judicial branches could address the problem if they were to create or utilize an entity similar to the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, as some states have done.

Further, the position seeks to encourage Congress to include sufficient limitations and threshold requirements so as not to unduly burden the federal courts and to fashion exceptions to the minimal diversity regime that would preserve a role for the state courts in the handling of in-state class actions. The position identifies three such factors that may be appropriately considered in crafting exceptions to minimal diversity jurisdiction for class actions. These factors are intended to identify those class actions in which the forum state has a considerable interest, and would not likely threaten the coordination of significant multi-state class action litigation through minimal diversity. (The factors do recognize certain situations where plaintiffs from another state may be included in an otherwise in-state action.)

The first factor would apply to class actions in which citizens of the forum state make up substantially all of the members of the plaintiff class. Such an in-state class action exception could include consumer class action claims, such as fraud and breach of warranty claims. The second factor would apply to a class action in which plaintiff class members suffered personal injury or physical property damage within the state, as in the case of a serious environmental disaster. It would apply to all individuals who suffered personal injuries or losses to physical property, whether or not they were citizens of the state in question. The third factor recognizes that it may be appropriate to consider the relationship of the defendants to the forum state. Such consideration is not intended to embrace the term ''primary defendants'' (or a similar term), which language has been used in past and present class action bills as part of an exception to minimal diversity. Such a reading could extend minimal diversity jurisdiction to cases in which a single important defendant lacked in-state citizenship. While the relationship of the defendant to the forum may have some bearing on state adjudicatory power, an insistence that all primary defendants maintain formal in-state citizenship is too limiting and may preclude in-state class actions where a defendant has sufficient contacts with the forum state, regardless of citizenship.

We would appreciate your consideration of these comments and the position of the Judicial Conference. Should you or your staff have any questions, please contact Michael W. Blommer, Assistant Director, Office of Legislative Affairs, Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, at (202) 502–1700.

Sincerely,

LEONIDAS RALPH MECHAM,
Secretary.

Mr. HATCH. To be sure, on the very day the bill was reported from committee, the ranking member sent letters to the Judicial Conference requesting comments on the revised version of S. 274 as reported out of committee and further urging that the Judicial Conference propose alternative legislative language reflecting its views on how the jurisdictional provisions should be structured.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter of April 11, 2003, from Senator LEAHY be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, April 11, 2003.

LEONIDAS RALPH MECHAM,
Secretary, Judicial Conference of the United States, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MECHAM: Today, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved S. 274; the ''Class Action Fairness Act of 2003,'' with several amendments. The bill, as amended, would determine whether a federal court has jurisdiction over a class action based on the fraction of the plaintiff class members that are citizens of the same state as the primary defendant.

I value the unique perspective of the Judicial Conference regarding class action litigation. Therefore, I request that the Judicial Conference provide Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee with its views on S. 274, the ''Class Action Fairness Act,'' as reported out of the Committee today, by April 25, 2003.

If you have any questions about this request, please do not hesitate to contact Ed Pagano or Susan Davies of my staff. They can both be reached at 202–224–7703. Thank you for your assistance and continued insight on class action litigation.

Sincerely,

PATRICK LEAHY,
United States Senator.

Mr. HATCH. In its April 25 response, the Judicial Conference noted that the markup changes to S. 274 were responsive to its previous comments about changing the jurisdictional threshold and preserving the role of the State courts in handling State class actions. Indeed, the Judicial Conference expressed no opposition to the revised version of S. 274 reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee.

The Judicial Conference explicitly declined Senator LEAHY's invitation to propose alternative language. The Judicial Conference's resolution deliberately avoided specific legislative language out of deference to Congress' judgment and the political process. The letter further noted that:

[T]hese issues implicate fundamental interests and relationships that are political in nature and are peculiarly within Congress' province.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter of April 25, the Judicial Conference response, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUDICIAL CONFERENCE
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, April 25, 2003.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Ranking Member, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: Thank you for your letters of April 9, 2003, and April 11, 2003. In those letters, you requested that the Judicial Conference provide the Senate Judiciary Committee with legislative language implementing the Judicial Conference's March 2003 recommendations on class-action litigation and the views of the Conference on S. 274, the ''Class Action Fairness Act of 2003,'' as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee on April 11, 2003.

As you know, at its March 18, 2003, session, the Judicial Conference adopted the following resolution:

That the Judicial Conference recognize that the use of minimal diversity of citizenship may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-state class action litigation in the federal courts, while continuing to oppose class action legislation that contains jurisdictional provisions that are similar to those in the bills introduced in the 106th and 107th Congresses. If Congress determines that certain class actions should be brought within the original and removal jurisdiction of the federal courts on the basis of minimal diversity of citizenship and an aggregation of claims, Congress should be encouraged to include sufficient limitations and threshold requirements so that the federal courts are not unduly burdened and states' jurisdiction over in-state class actions is left undisturbed, such as by employing provisions to raise the jurisdictional threshold and to fashion exceptions to such jurisdiction that would preserve a role for the state courts in the handling of in-state class actions. Such exceptions for in-state class actions may appropriately include such factors as whether substantially all members of the class are citizens of a single state, the relationship of the defendants to the forum state, or whether the claims arise from death, personal injury, or physical property damage within the state. Further, the Conference should continue to explore additional approaches to the consolidation and coordination of overlapping or duplicative class actions that do not unduly intrude on state courts or burden federal courts.

S. 274, as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, generally provides for federal jurisdiction of a class action based on minimal diversity of citizenship if the matter in controversy exceeds the sum of $5 million, exclusive of interest and costs. (S. 274 as introduced established a $2 million minimum amount in controversy.) The bill also now permits a federal district court, in the interests of justice, to decline to exercise jurisdiction over a class action in which greater than one-third but less than two-thirds of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate and the primary defendants are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed. The court would be required to consider five specified factors when exercising this discretion. (This discretionary provision was not included in the bill as introduced.)

In addition, S. 274 as reported provides that the federal district courts shall not have original jurisdiction over any class action in which: (A) two-thirds or more of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate and the primary defendants are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed; (B) the primary defendants are states, state officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or (C) the number of members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than one hundred. As introduced, the second and third exceptions were the same, but the first one originally precluded federal jurisdiction where ''the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed'' and ''the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of'' that state. The replacement language in essence substitutes a numerical ratio for ''substantial majority'' and eliminates the choice-of-law requirement.

We are grateful that Congress is working to resolve the serious problems generated by overlapping and competing class actions. The Judicial Conference ''recognizes that the use of minimal diversity of citizenship may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-state class action litigation in the federal courts.'' At the same time, the Judicial Conference does not support the removal of all state law class actions into federal court. Appropriate legislation should ''include sufficient limitations and threshold requirements so that federal courts are not unduly burdened and states' jurisdiction over in-state class actions is left undisturbed.'' Finding the right balance between these objectives and articulating that balance in legislative language implicate important policy choices.

Any minimal-diversity bill will result in certain cases being litigated in federal court that would not previously have been subject to federal jurisdiction. The effects of this transfer should be assessed in determining the appropriateness of various limitations on the availability of minimal diversity jurisdiction.

Mr. HATCH. The Judicial Conference concluded its letter by stating:

We are grateful that Congress is working to resolve the serious problems generated by overlapping and competing class actions.

Finally, another piece of evidence that counters the Judicial Conference's purported opposition to the class action bill is Chief Justice Rehnquist's 2003 year-end report on the Federal judiciary. While this report criticizes various legislative measures considered by the Congress, absolutely no mention is made of class action reform efforts.

I suppose this begs the question then, if the Judicial Conference and Chief Justice Rehnquist stand opposed to this bill, why is there no reference to such a measure in their year-end report?

Again, I think the silence speaks for itself. I ask my colleagues to refer to the 2003 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary which can be found easily enough on the Supreme Court's website.

With all of this said, is it credible to suggest that the Judicial Conference, much less the Chief Justice of the United States, stands somehow opposed to the class action bill? I think not.

I will refer to this ''myth'' chart. The myth is that the Federal Judicial Conference opposes the Class Action Fairness Act.

These are the facts: The Conference's opposition was directed at class action bills in previous Congresses. In March 2003, the Conference strongly criticized the current class action system and suggested several areas to modify the Class Action Fairness Act.

After the Class Action Fairness Act was modified during markup, the Conference declined an invitation to criticize or revise the version favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee and thanked the Senate for its efforts to clean up the State court class action mess.

That certainly rebuts everything that was said on the floor yesterday and today by those who are looking for any excuse they can to scuttle this bill. Unfortunately, some of them are people who have agreed to support the bill. That seems apparent to me. I hope it is apparent to all of those in the various States who have relied on these agreements, and at least this agreement made last November, that we would at least vote for cloture. That was the whole issue. Then, of course, they could still have any amendment they wanted to bring up that would be germane, and they might even be able to bring up nongermane amendments if they could get a supermajority vote on them. So nothing would stop them from at least an attempt to bring up nongermane amendments.

I would like to also reply to comments made yesterday in defense—can anyone believe it?—of Madison County, IL. I heard suggestions that the Madison County court is not as renegade as we have portrayed it. After all, the number of certifications has not escalated at the same rate as the number of cases brought.

Now, this fact may have some appeal on its surface but when one looks at why the certifications are so low, I think they will find themselves right back to the inescapable conclusion that this court is a downright embarrassment to our civil justice system. Any attempt to defend Madison County's record on class certification must account for the number of class actions that were not certified because the defendants, knowing that the judicial deck was stacked against them, simply conceded defeat and settled rather than go through the motion of defending their lawsuit in this court.

As I said yesterday, the plaintiffs' lawyers who descend on this small rural courthouse in southwestern Illinois know class certification is a sure thing and that all they need to do is come up with a complaint in order to extort a settlement from the unfortunate defendants. These settlements come well before the class certification phase of the lawsuit and is exactly why this court is so attractive to greedy, dishonest lawyers—greedy, flagrantly dishonest lawyers—looking to make a quick buck, money hungry lawyers looking to buy their next Gulfstream at the expense of everyday Americans such as Hilda Bankston, dishonorable lawyers looking to pay off their next multimillion-dollar mansion in Palm Beach, FL, at the expense of shattering public confidence in our civil justice system, and unscrupulous lawyers seeking to fund the next campaign of a State court judge who can tilt the playing field for them in yet another magnet jurisdiction.

There is something clearly rotten in middle America, and when it comes to Madison County, there is only one way to describe it: If you go there, they will pay. If someone is brought in as a defendant there, even though they do minimal business in that State, they are going to pay.

Finally, I would like to respond to the wild accusations from the other side of the aisle that the Republicans are trying to kill this bill because the measure does not go far enough to achieve class action reform. Give me a break. I do not think this accusation merits a real response, other than to observe that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will resort to just about anything in order to justify their vote against this bill, in order to justify this filibuster against this bill.

Despite all the rhetoric we have heard from the other side about how they support class action reform, about how terrible this system has become and about how we have a modest bill that fixes the problem, we will know their true colors when we vote on cloture either tonight or tomorrow.

It makes absolutely no difference whether Senators vote no because they oppose the bill or because they want to preserve the sanctity of the Senate process. A vote against cloture is a vote against class action reform. It does not get any simpler than that.

By the way, how can they make that argument when they have a right to bring up any amendment they want to after cloture is invoked? True, nongermane amendments will have to have a supermajority vote to pass, but all germane amendments only have to have a majority vote to pass. How can they make these types of clownish arguments?

To make a long story short, it is apparent that sometimes money does count around here, and the only reason this thing is fought so hard is because the major funding institution in this country happens to be the trial lawyers for those on the other side of the aisle.

Now, what galls me is that last November, when we had 59 votes for cloture, 1 less than was necessary to end the debate, we then made all kinds of concessions to three more Democrats—and I think the business community knows who they are—that are now in this bill to get their agreement that they would vote for cloture when the time came. There was no misunderstanding. Everybody knew there would be an attempt to load this bill up with poison pill amendments or killer amendments, if one wants to call them that. It meant that we at least go to cloture and get 62 votes for cloture, and I believe it meant more than that.

I think when we make a deal, those who enter into that deal agree to support the bill, against all amendments, unless we can agree otherwise. Unfortunately, that is not the interpretation of some who agreed to the deal last November. But there could be no misunderstanding. Their agreement last November was to vote for cloture. The whole issue was we lacked one vote in putting this bill before the Senate as a whole and letting it have its day in court, so to speak, in a court that is much more fair, much more balanced, and much more considerate than the courts in Madison County, IL.

There is no excuse for the arguments that have been made by the other side. If this bill goes down because we cannot get 60 votes for cloture, then shame on those who entered into the agreement with us. It was not an easy agreement for some of us because we had to make changes that literally some of us would not have made otherwise. So anybody who says this side does not want this bill to go forward is being less than candid, and I will put it in those terms, although I think probably more stark terms would be acceptable.

This is an important bill. This bill will correct some of the major wrongs in our society from a litigation standpoint. This bill is fair. It is not going to stop truly in-State lawsuits from being tried, even in Madison County, but this bill does correct some tremendously rotten situations in our country. It also would be supported by decent, honest lawyers throughout the country, at least lawyers who do not always think of the almighty dollar as the only reason they are practicing law.

This is a very important bill. There are a lot of great trial lawyers out there who I believe are embarrassed by some of the arguments that have been made by my Democratic colleagues. There are a lot of great trial lawyers who do not need phony courts, or dishonest courts, or courts that go way beyond reasonability, or courts that favor them, or magnet courts to win their cases. Great lawyers are going to be able to win their cases whether they are in State court or Federal court. In fact, I suggest they probably have an easier chance in Federal court because people automatically think those courts are more august and the cases more serious.

But here we have a case where true advantage is being taken of the class action system by a limited number of lawyers in our society who are getting fabulously wealthy and rich because of forum shopping to courts like the Madison County court that are going to find for the plaintiffs no matter what the law or the facts say. That is wrong. When plaintiffs are right, they ought to recover, but when they are not right, they should not recover. The courts ought to be the bulwark of standing for what is right and not what is wrong. In the political system that exists in Madison County, IL, it is a system that, if it is not corrupt, it is the closest thing to it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TALENT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TALENT. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Utah for being willing to assume the chair for a few minutes so I could make a brief statement about the bill pending before us. I want to say, as I listened when I was in the chair, I appreciated his eloquence on behalf of the bill.

The Senate will realize pretty soon that I have a bit of a cold. If I pause to take a sip of water now and then, it is not for the dramatic effect but so I can finish the statement.

I had originally not intended to say anything about the legislation, although I support it. Anybody who has gotten around their States and heard about the destructive impact of abusive lawsuits on jobs and economic growth has to support doing something. I was not planning to speak on it, but the other night I was presiding when this debate began, and I was fortunate to hear Senator CARPER from Delaware give one of his initial remarks. I don't think he realized I was listening as I was presiding because I was doing a little paperwork, but I did listen.

I heard him give examples of abuses of class actions that have occurred around the country, items such as a class action lawsuit in Illinois against a bottled water giant named Poland Spring which claimed that the company's water wasn't pure and wasn't from a spring. Under the settlement the consumers received coupons for discounts on the water. The company didn't agree they had done anything wrong, didn't agree to change the water, and all the plaintiffs got were coupons to buy more of the water they were complaining about. But their attorneys got $1.35 million.

In a Texas class action settlement with Blockbuster over late fees on movie rentals, class members received coupons for more movie rentals. The attorneys received $9.25 million. I don't know how my family missed out on those coupons—I guess because we didn't live in Texas.

I could go on, but Senator CARPER made the point that there was obviously a need to remedy these abuses and a need to do that without undermining the efficacy of the class action lawsuit in principle. In other words, we need to be able to have class action lawsuits because sometimes a whole lot of people will be done a small wrong. Each of them will experience some wrong that is so small it is not worthwhile for any one individual to sue, so if they can get together in a class we can remedy that wrong and the attorneys can get reasonable attorney's fees.

But when there is, in fact, no remedy for the plaintiffs, when there may have been no wrong, and when there are these outside attorneys' fees, it is obviously something unjust because it is unjust to make people pay when they have not done anything wrong and it is not very good for the rest of us.

We all know how it works. Those awards are paid and then it is passed along in the form of higher prices or fewer jobs. Senator CARPER's point was it should not be all or nothing at all. We should not have to have a system where either we have no class action remedies or we allow these abuses to continue year after year. There is no reason in principle why we should not be able to fix the abuses while keeping the remedy.

He is right. There is no reason in principle we should not be able to do that. There are people of good will on both sides of the aisle who want to do that. There is obviously a solid majority of the Senate who wants to do that. Yet year after year, we do not do that. Why?

It was his speech and my thinking about it that led me to decide to come down here and make a statement because I think I know the reason why. It is because of the filibuster, or more precisely it is because of the way the Senate allows the filibuster to be conducted.

This principle of filibusters is actually a pretty good thing. I think if a determined minority in any legislative body believes something is really bad, it makes sense to give them some remedy to stop that legislation from passing. In fact, I submit to you that the filibuster has been consistently abused in the Senate. Why has that happened? Because the discipline on the filibuster is public accountability. The public doesn't like obstructionism for its own sake. If they see that happening, they will not like it; and if the American people do not like something happening here and focus on it, it tends to stop. I have been around here long enough to see that.

But because of the way the filibuster is conducted in this body, it is almost invisible. Therefore, the people do not know it is happening, and therefore there is no accountability. That is why we have the abuses of it. Why is it invisible? In the Senate, in the first place, as you know, the passage of a bill requires many different steps: the introduction of the bill, assignment to a committee, first and second readings, and all of that.

In most legislative bodies, those steps are pro forma. In the Senate, many of those steps are debatable. And anything that can be debated can be filibustered.

The classic idea of a filibuster, as in ''Mr. Smith Goes to Washington,'' with final passage of some bill, people speaking all night to prevent it from being voted on doesn't have to happen in the Senate. You can filibuster a bill on any number of points. You can filibuster it after it has passed to keep it from going to conference. The public doesn't know what is happening.

The second and bigger reason is that in the Senate, as all of us here know—and I think the public may be beginning to realize—you don't have to talk to filibuster.

I have served now in my third legislative body. It is a tremendous honor to serve here. The pinnacle of the legislative career is to serve in the Senate. In most legislative bodies, when people are finished talking about the proposition that is pending, you vote on the proposition.

Many times I have sat in the Chair where the distinguished Senator from Utah is now sitting. When the last speaker has finished some eloquent set of remarks, I have asked, Who seeks recognition? And nobody seeks recognition. It doesn't mean we vote. It means we go to a quorum call, as we did a little while ago. You don't have to speak to filibuster. You don't have to debate. You just have to decline to agree that debate will end. Unless everybody here either agrees to a unanimous consent agreement, or vote by a 60-vote majority to end debate on a cloture motion, which itself is a rather clumsy way to end debate, the debate goes on and on.

To allow a filibuster in that way, and make it so invisible, tends to empower the extremes in a legislative body in any given proposition.

In most legislative bodies the power in any given proposition, once it reaches the floor of that body, belongs in the middle. It makes sense, doesn't it? Because to pass it you have to have the middle with you, typically. But here the filibuster empowers those folks who like confrontation most. I am not running them down. Every legislative body has to have people whose instinct is to say: I am not going to give in. I am going to stand up for this. I believe in this, or I think it is wrong, or I think it is right, and I am not going to give in much. It is important to have those folks in a legislative body. But you can't have them running the whole show all the time. It empowers those people. It tends to educate people to the temper of partisanship.

It is so tempting when you are in the minority to stop everything through the invisible filibuster and then blame the majority for not being able to pass something. That happens in this whole Congress. I don't blame my friends on the other side of the aisle.

It is so tempting it would require almost a heroic effort, particularly given how divided the country is on a partisan and philosophical standpoint, for them not to have done that.

The way the Senate does it makes interest groups more militant. This bill is a classic example of that. Everybody who looks at this issue knows that we have problems with litigation, at least in certain areas. We have problems in State class action abuses. We have problems with the whole asbestosis system which is driving dozens of big companies into bankruptcy and reducing the number of deep pockets that are available to pay for people who really are sick and have asbestosis. We clearly need reform in these areas.

What would happen if the process was healthier is that our friends in the personal injury bar would know that something was going to happen and would sit down and negotiate, and we would come up with a moderate bill, I think, probably pretty similar to what we have before us today. We would pass it more or less by consensus. But what do you do when you have this filibuster? You can just say no. You can say it doesn't matter how bad it gets, we are going to pressure and lean on those in the Senate who are generally with us philosophically, and we will stop everything from happening. We are empowering the tactically more extreme in this body. We are educating people to the temper of partisanship. We are driving interest groups, which are pretty militant anyway, to be even more extreme. Then we are gumming up the few bills that do pass because now, if you are sitting here and you have some constructive measure you are trying to pass, and you know the only legislation that is going to get through this body this year is the defense authorization, let us say, or the tax relief bill for manufacturers that we have to pass—because if we don't pass it we are going to get increasing trade sanctions all over the world—if these are the two or three bills you know you are going to pass, what do you do? You take your constructive measure which you have wanted to pass for months but can't because nothing else is going through the Senate, and you say: Well, that train is leaving the station and maybe none of the others are, so I am going to put my bill on that.

You use the opportunity to offer nongermane amendments, which personally I like and support. So you offer all kinds of amendments that are completely unrelated to the bill before you just because you know it is the only opportunity you are going to have to pass anything.

Then the public wonders how we get immigration bills on class action reform bills, or how I did this: I put a bill that I believe in very strongly to help fight sickle cell disease on a tax relief bill for manufacturing, and I would do it again. But that is because of the way we are running this place.

What is the effect? It affects everything that gets filibustered. We have seen filibusterss so far in this Senate and in this Congress on the Energy bill, medical malpractice reform, the welfare bill, a number of judges, the asbestosis bill, the class action bill, and a number of other bills which are slow-walked through—the highway bill, the JOBS bill, the faith-based bill. And that doesn't even count all the bills that aren't even brought up because the leadership knows they are going to be filibustered.

Nobody is ever held accountable. The public wonders why the Senate doesn't work.

I am going to say something. I get around this town and I get around Missouri. I am afraid that we are being held in increasingly low regard. I am afraid the Senate is being reduced to its constitutional minimum of authority and effectiveness in this town. We are like a big roadblock. Ideas don't come out of here and go places. It is like the commercial about the roach motel. They check in but they don't check out. That is what happens here. The legislative ideas check in and they never check out.

I know some people say that is a good thing. We don't want anything to pass.

I just sat down this morning preparing these remarks and I made a list of the things which I think we are going to have to address. This is a top 10 list: Keep America strong; a long-term solvency issue involving Social Security and Medicare—I am on the Aging Committee. I will go into that more in a moment. The Senator from Idaho, Mr. CRAIG, has spoken eloquently on those issues.

The rising cost of health care is a problem, shortage of oil and natural gas, need for alternative energy sources to protect our energy independence and security, the failing electricity transmission grid in all parts of the country, the need to renew the distressed and urban neighborhoods, a burgeoning immigration system, a crumbling transportation infrastructure system, shortages of water in parts of the country, contamination of water resources, management of federally owned natural resources, and a policy we are going to take regarding defense both in the war on terror and also the potential rising power of competitors, such as England and China.

This is the top 10 list. I am not even counting the more divisive issues or the cultural issues on which it would be nice if we could work them out and be able to act. Some of these problems may go away on their own. I am a believer in that.

America is a great country. Maybe if we do not do anything, some of them are going to go away. But they are not all going to go away. Some of them are going to get worse. We cannot solve any of them without some element of participation by the Federal Government. Maybe it is just reform of regulations to allow people in the country to solve the problem.

We are going to have to have Federal participation. That will require, at some point, a Senate that works better than the Senate is working now. We have reached the point where the paralysis in this body is threatening the welfare of the people. Some may say—and I heard it said with response to the motion for cloture—respect for the traditions of the Senate means we cannot do anything about this. Everyone who has been here a while, and I have not been here a while, tells me that never before has the filibuster been taken to this degree.

If we were to apply a corrective, we would be restoring rather than overturning the traditions of this great body. And it is a great body. It is a privilege to be here. I don't know that I have ever worked with as motivated and passionate and intelligent a group of people. I call on Members on both sides of the aisle to consider carefully whether it is not time to change our practices in a way that permits us to work together, that encourages those who seek compromise solutions to the problems facing the country. Not to do so would be a historic abdication of the responsibilities of this Senate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALENT). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I will speak in a moment about this class action bill and why I oppose it. I want to start by noting my strong disagreement with the procedural tactics used by the majority to block amendments to the bill. I have some familiarity with the strategy of filling the amendment tree. This was done time after time, year after year, when campaign finance reform legislation was brought to the Senate floor. This is the procedure that is used to block the Senate from working its will on a bill.

The Senate has a long tradition of an open process for amendments. Any Senator has the right under our rules to offer any amendment to any bill. That is how the Senate works. It is amazing to me that the majority leader would engage in this tactic when he has not only majority support for the bill, but a supermajority in support.

Democratic supporters of the bill thankfully are not prepared to block their colleagues from offering amendments. So I guess it appears that this bill is going to be sacrificed in order to prevent amendments from being offered. I commend my Democratic colleagues who support this bill for not being intimidated by the arguments made on the Senate floor that they somehow are breaking their agreement by standing up for the rights of their colleagues to offer amendments. From the very start, it was clear that these Senators had agreed to support the motion to proceed in order to get the bill to the floor of the Senate and to vote for cloture, if that motion was again filibustered. They never agreed to vote against all amendments or to block all amendments.

Turning to the bill itself, I oppose the Class Action Fairness Act, S. 2062, and I will vote against the bill.

The main reason for my opposition is that notwithstanding its title, I do not think this bill is fair. I do not think it is fair to citizens who are injured by corporate wrongdoers and are entitled to prompt and fair resolution of their claims in a court of law. I do not think it is fair to our State courts, which are treated by this bill as if they cannot be trusted to issue fair judgments in cases brought before them. I do not think it is fair to State legislatures, which are entitled to have the laws that they pass to protect their citizens interpreted and applied by their own courts. This bill is not only misnamed, it is bad policy. It should be defeated.

Make no mistake, by loosening the requirements for Federal diversity jurisdiction over class actions, S. 2062 will result in nearly all class actions being removed to Federal court. This is a radical change in our Federal system of justice. We have 50 States in this country with their own laws and courts. State courts are an integral part of our system of justice. They have worked well for our entire history. It is hard to imagine why this Senate, which includes many professed defenders of federalism and the prerogatives of State courts and State lawmakers, would support such a wholesale stripping of jurisdiction from the States over class actions. By removing these actions to State court, Congress would shift adjudication away from State lawmakers and State judges towards Federal judges, who are often unfamiliar with the nuances of State law. In my opinion, the need for such a radical step has not been demonstrated.

Class actions are an extremely important tool in our justice system. They allow plaintiffs with very small claims to band together to seek redress. Lawsuits are expensive. Without the opportunity to pursue a class action, an individual plaintiff often simply cannot afford his or her day in court. But through a class action, justice can be done and compensation for real injuries can be obtained.

Yes, there are abuses in some class actions suits. Some of the most disturbing have to do with class action settlements that offer only discount coupons to the members of the class and a big payoff to the plaintiffs' lawyers. I am pleased that the issue of discount coupons is addressed in the bill, because the bill we considered in October 2003 did nothing about that problem. The bill now requires that contingency fees in coupon settlements will be based on coupons redeemed, not coupons issued. Attorney's fees will also be determined by reasonable time spent on a case and will be subject to court approval. The bill also allows a court to require that a portion of unclaimed coupons be given to one or more charitable organization agreed to by the parties. These are all good changes, but they do not change my view that the bill, as a whole, unfairly interferes with the States' administration of justice.

There are three possible outcomes of this bill being enacted. Either the State courts will be deluged with individual claims, since class actions can no longer be maintained there, or there will be a huge increase in the workload of the Federal courts, resulting in delays and lengthy litigation over procedural issues rather than the substance of the claims, or many injured people will never get redress for their injuries.

I don't believe any of these three choices is acceptable.

I appreciate that the supporters of S. 2062 modified the new diversity jurisdiction rules for class actions in an effort to allow plaintiffs in class actions more opportunities to remain in State court. Under the new bill, a district court must decline jurisdiction if two-thirds of the plaintiffs and the primary defendants are from the state where the action was filed, there is at least one defendant who is a citizen of that State from whom significant relief is sought and whose alleged conduct forms a significant basis for the claims asserted by the proposed class. In addition, the principal injuries resulting from the alleged conduct of each defendant must have occurred in the State in which the action was originally filed. Finally, the new bill provides that district court can only decline jurisdiction if during the 3-year period preceding the filing of the action, no other similar class action has been filed against any of the defendants even if the case is filed on behalf of other plaintiffs.

These criteria are an improvement on the underlying bill. But the jurisdictional requirements for class actions to remain in State courts are still too burdensome. Under the new language, for example, a class action brought by Wisconsin citizens against a Delaware-based company for selling a bad insurance policy would probably be removed to Federal court even if Wisconsin-based agents were involved in selling the policies. And the filing of a class action in one State court may lead to the successful removal of a similar case filed in another State on behalf of plaintiffs in that State. The bottom line is that this bill will continue to send the majority of class actions to Federal court. The proponents of this bill have chosen a remedy that goes far beyond the alleged problem.

Furthermore, under S. 2062, many cases that are not class actions at all are included in the definition of ''mass action,'' a new term coined by this bill. S. 2062 simply requires that the plaintiff must be seeking damages of more than $75,000 for the case to be considered a mass action and removable to Federal court. This provision unfairly limits State court authority to manage its docket and to consolidate claims in order to more efficiently dispense justice.

A particularly troubling result of this bill will be an increase in the workload of the Federal courts. These courts are already overloaded. The Congress has led the way in bringing more and more litigation to the Federal courts, particularly criminal cases. Criminal cases, of course, take precedence in the Federal courts because of the Speedy Trial Act. So the net result of removing virtually all class actions to Federal court will be to delay those cases.

There is an old saying with which I'm sure we are all familiar: ''justice delayed is justice denied.'' I hope my colleagues will think about that aphorism before voting for this bill. Think about the real world of Federal court litigation and the very real possibilities that long procedural delays in overloaded Federal courts will mean that legitimate claims may never be heard.

One little-noticed aspect of this bill illustrates the possibilities for delay that this bill provides, even to defendants who are not entitled to have a case removed to Federal court under the bill's relaxed diversity jurisdiction standards. Under current law, if a Federal court decides that a removed case should be remanded to State court, that decision is not appealable. The only exception is for civil rights cases removed under the special authority of 28 U.S.C. § 1443. The original version of this bill allowed defendants to immediately appeal a decision by a Federal district court that a case does not qualify for removal.

Fortunately, the revised bill now requires such appeals to be decided promptly. It does not, however, do anything about the fact that the lower court may take months or even years to make a decision on the motion to remand. That means that a plaintiff class that is entitled, even under this bill, to have a case heard by a State court may still have to endure years of delay while its remand motion is pending in the Federal district court. Where is the ''fairness'' in that? I plan to offer an amendment, if I even get the chance to address that problem and I hope the bill's sponsors and supporters will give it serious consideration.

It is important to remember that this debate is not about resolving questions of Federal law in the Federal courts. Federal question jurisdiction already exists for that. Any case involving a Federal statute can be removed to Federal court under current law. This bill takes cases that are brought in State court solely under State laws passed by State legislatures and throws them into Federal court. This bill is about making it more time-consuming and more costly for citizens of a State to get the redress that their elected representatives have decided they are entitled to if the laws of their state are violated.

Diversity jurisdiction in cases between citizens of different States has been with us for our entire history as a Nation. Article III, section 2 of the Constitution provides: ''The judicial Power shall extend . . . to Controversies between Citizens of different States.'' This is the constitutional basis for giving the Federal courts diversity jurisdiction over cases that involved only questions of State law.

The very first Judiciary Act, passed in 1789, gave the Federal courts jurisdiction over civil suits between citizens of different States where over $500 was at issue. In 1806, in the case of Strawbridge v. Curtiss, the Supreme Court held that this act required complete diversity between the parties—in all other instances, the Court said, a case based on State law should be heard by the State courts. So this bill changes a nearly 200-year-old practice in this country of preserving the Federal courts for cases involving Federal law or where no defendant is from the State of any plaintiff in a case involving only State law.

Why is such a drastic step necessary? Why do we need to prevent State courts from interpreting and applying their own State laws in cases of any size or significance? One argument we hear is that the trial lawyers are extracting huge and unjustified settlements in State courts, which has become a drag on the economy. We also hear that plaintiffs' lawyers are taking the lion's share of judgments or settlements to the detriment of consumers. But a recent empirical study contradicts these arguments. Theodore Eisenberg of Cornell Law School and Geoffrey Miller of NYU Law School recently published the first empirical study of class action settlements. Their conclusions, which are based on data from 1993–2002, may surprise some of the supporters of this bill.

First, the study found that attorneys' fees in class action settlements are significantly below the standard 33 percent contingency fee charged in personal injury cases. The average class action attorney's fee is actually 21.9 percent. In addition, the attorneys' fees awarded in class action settlements in Federal court are actually higher than in State court settlements. Attorney fees as a percent of class recovery were found to be between 1 and 6 percentage points higher in Federal court class actions than in State court class actions.

A final finding of the study is that there has been no appreciable increase in either the amount of settlements or the amount of attorneys' fees awarded in class actions over the past ten years. The study indicates that there is no crisis here. No explosion of huge judgments. No huge fleecing of consumers by their lawyers. This bill is a solution in search of a problem. It is a great piece of legislation for wrongdoers who would like to put off their day of reckoning by moving cases to courts that are less convenient, slower, and more expensive for those who have been wronged. It is a bad bill for consumers, for State legislatures, and for State courts.

This bill seems not to be about class action abuses, but about getting cases into Federal court where it takes longer and is more expensive for plaintiffs to get a judgment. The cumulative effect of this bill is to severely limit State court authority and ultimately limit victims' access to prompt justice. Despite improvements made since the last time the Senate considered this bill, the bill will still place significant barriers for consumers who want to have their cases heard in State court. Remand orders are still appealable, and the mass tort definition does not protect State courts' authority to consolidate cases and manage their dockets more efficiently. All the elements outlined in the bill before us will result in the erosion of State court authority and the delay of justice for our citizens. Therefore, I cannot support this unfair ''Class Action Fairness Act'' bill, and I will vote no.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CLINTON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THREATS TO OUR NATION

Mrs. CLINTON. Madam President, this is a very difficult time for our Nation. A few hours ago, the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security appeared at a press conference to discuss in some detail what he could say publicly about the continuing threats our Nation confronts because of the diabolical plots of the terrorists to undermine our way of life, to destroy American life, to disrupt American life. Earlier today there was a closed door hearing for the Senate that went into even greater detail.

A few weeks ago I personally was briefed by representatives of the Department of Homeland Security, the FBI, the CIA, others within our Government who follow the terrorist threats on a daily, even hourly basis. I believe it is fair to say there has been, ever since September 11 and I think one can argue even before, a concerted effort by those who subscribe to the nihilistic philosophy or theology that underlies the fundamentalist Islamic terrorists that whatever they could do to strike against our country or American interests or American allies anywhere in the world somehow furthered their perverted cause, their sense of purpose to try to strike against freedom and democracy, against women's rights and roles, against what the United States represents as a beacon of opportunity for so many around the world.

Representing the State of New York, I saw firsthand the horrific damage the terrorists caused because of their attacks on the World Trade Center and of course at the Pentagon, and then the crash in Pennsylvania of a plane thought to be headed toward either this building or the White House.

I have met recently, about 2 hours ago, with a group of interns who came to my office. I love meeting with the young people who work here in Washington during the summer. They come with such energy and enthusiasm. They were asking me a variety of questions. One of them said: Senator, what do you spend most of your time doing?

I told them that certainly, because of September 11, I have spent the bulk of my time worrying about and working on behalf of New York to help us recover from the attacks, to help us rebuild, to help us try to repair, so far as possible, the shattered lives and lost dreams of so many thousands of people. Then, once having become a member of the Armed Services Committee in January, a year and a half ago, I have been immersed in the details and challenges of how we defend our country, how we best protect our interests, how we take care of the young men and women in uniform.

Running through all of that work has been a commitment to do everything I could do as a U.S. Senator to ensure that we were vigilant, we took every step necessary and possible to protect our fellow men, women, and children.

I have taken that responsibility very seriously. I have introduced legislation to try to put both more resources into homeland security and to allocate those more effectively to ensure that our first responders, our police and our firefighters and our emergency workers, had the resources necessary to do the job we expected them to do because, in effect, they are our frontline homeland soldiers.

I have worked to protect our rail lines and our courts, to ensure that our critical infrastructure has been given whatever help can be offered so we are prepared, so we are vigilant, because none of us can predict whether there will be an attack or where one might occur. I am well aware of that. That is not something that we can stand here today and say we know is going to happen, but we can say with confidence there are people right now, meeting throughout the world in cafes in Europe, in tents in North Africa, in caves in Afghanistan, who wish us ill and who will do everything they possibly can to kill as many Americans, to injure as many Americans, and to destroy as much of America as possible.

I don't think we have a higher priority in the Senate than to work together in a bipartisan—frankly, a nonpartisan—way to provide the resources and to do what is necessary to protect the people we represent.

That is why it grieves me to come to the floor of this Senate having watched now for several weeks as we have done nearly everything but focus on the real business of America. We have an appropriations bill standing in line for homeland security that we cannot get to the floor. Instead, we are engaged in these nonsensical, futile, parliamentary, politically partisan games. It is a shame, and it reflects on all of us, but it reflects most on the majority leadership of this body.

It is one thing not to know exactly all we should be doing to protect our homeland. It is something altogether different not to be doing the business we are expected to do to provide as many resources effectively deployed as possible to try to ensure that so far as humanly possible we have done our job.

Look at what we are doing today.

One can argue about whether dealing with class action is a priority given everything else going on in our world, but we can't even deal with that.

The majority leader comes to the floor, and in a parliamentary move makes it impossible to present any other issue, whether that issue is to try to raise the minimum wage for people who haven't had a raise in years or whether it is to try to bring about the reimportation of drugs from Canada so that people can pay an affordable price for the drugs they should be able to use for their prescriptions.

Some issues we hear about all the time. It is indeed frustrating that we are not even dealing with what is allegedly on the Senate floor.

But what really frustrates and disappoints me is that this impasse, this games playing, this pure, unadulterated partisan politics, is preventing us from dealing with the urgent business, the threats, and the dangers that confront our country. The Homeland Security appropriations bill just sits there. We can't get it to the floor. We have passed out of our requisite committees not once but several times steps to make our ports safer, to make our rail lines safer. For heaven's sake, we saw what happened in Madrid. How can we in good conscience act as though we don't have an obligation and a responsibility to protect our rail lines and our ports, our critical infrastructure?

We have just appropriated some additional funds to make sure we have more security in Boston and New York which will be the home of the Democratic and Republican Conventions, part of our great political democratic tradition in our country.

What about the people who do their job every day? What about the police officers in New York who walk the streets every day picking up information and conveying it to the intelligence-gathering operations of our New York Police Department and detectives coordinating with the FBI? What are we doing for them? We are cutting the COPS Program. That is what we are doing. We are not even adding additional money to homeland security. We are cutting the very lifeblood of what keeps the police on the streets in a city such as New York and so many other great cities around our country.

What about our firefighters? With budget cuts and cutbacks, we are not fulfilling the needs they confront for interoperable communications for hazardous materials, both training and equipment for the personnel that are needed with the highly developed skills to deal with chemical, biological, and radiological attacks.

I feel as if I am living in some kind of fantasy world, some parallel area.

We have the Department of Homeland Security Secretary standing before our Nation talking about the danger and threats we face. We have closed-door briefings for Members of the Senate and the House. Yet we don't get about the business of doing all we can to make sure we are prepared. It is bewildering.

When Secretary Ridge announced this morning that we have credible reporting that al-Qaida is moving forward with its plan to carry out a large-scale attack on the United States, then I think we act as though we have nothing better to do, at our peril. Shame on us. Yet here we are. We have a person in our Government responsible for giving us this information based on credible reports, and we are ground to a halt in the Senate.

This is one of those times when I think history is watching and will judge us harshly.

We are 4 days after our Independence Day, 4 months before the November elections, nearly 5 months after the President submitted his budget request to Congress, and the U.S. Congress has yet to send a single appropriations bill to fund the U.S. Government to the President for his signature.

The Department of Defense, Homeland Security, Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Secret Service, responsible for coordinating security at both conventions, Federal Emergency Management Agency, and a host of others charged with the solemn responsibility of protecting our country have not yet been funded. As is so painfully clear, we haven't even taken up the Homeland Security appropriations yet.

We could be right now debating on the floor of the Senate how much money our first responders need and whether we are going to take seriously the obvious threat to rail lines. And what about those ports with those thousands of containers that come in?

Last week, I was privileged to be in Seattle, WA, with my good friend and colleague, Senator MURRAY, who is the No. 1 champion of port security in this body. In fact, she was named Port Person of the Year because of her advocacy for our ports.

We went out across the water from downtown Seattle with the skyline spread before us to an island that processes a lot of the container traffic. We talked to the Coast Guard, Immigration, and other personnel who run that operation. It is an overwhelming task. You think about this, one of our ports—we have so many of them. The biggest are Los Angeles and Long Beach, Seattle-Takoma, and of course, New York-New Jersey. We have made some progress. I am proud of that progress. But we haven't done what we know needs to be done.

We have had report after report after report by distinguished Americans, by experts in security and intelligence, by people who understand the perverse mentality of our enemies, and they have said over and over again that we are not ready, we are not prepared, we have not done our part.

Let us get back to business. Let us get serious around here. Elections take care of themselves. That comes and goes. Our job is to do the people's work right now, today, in July, to deal with important pressing matters, and there isn't any that is more critical than homeland security.

We still have time, although it is a little hard to believe, but we only have about 2 more weeks, which usually translates around here into 6 days of work, and a day like today when nothing happens. It is discouraging.

There are 100 very smart, energetic, able people in this body who know how to work and how to get things done. They might as well be on a beach somewhere for all their efforts amount to with respect to the important issues facing us and the one I am most concerned about; namely, the security in our country.

Every intelligence report, every briefing, always mentions New York. It mentions other places, too, but it always mentions New York. The people I represent, who have already gone through so much—the firefighters and police officers I represent, who have already set the world class standard for courage and class—I don't want to have to look them in the face and say, We could not get around to giving you the funds you needed to be sure you got those additional pieces of equipment that were required. We could not figure out how we were going to have the Senate deal with the business as to whether you live or die.

I am proud and honored to serve in the Senate. I am especially proud and honored to represent New York. But it is hard to understand how we could be turning our collective backs on the most pressing need confronting our country.

In 2 weeks we are going to be recessing—Democrats will go to Boston; the Republicans, later in August, will go to New York—and I guess everyone hopes and crosses their fingers and prays to God Almighty that nothing bad happens.

I was raised in a faith tradition that believed God helps those who help themselves; that we were given a soul, a heart, and head, and we were expected to use all three. I can only hope we will get a signal from our majority leader that we are going to go back to business, we are going to get this process moving again, we are going to bring the appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security to this Senate and we are going to act—not that we can prevent every bad thing from happening but that we will have done our duty. There is still time. I hope, for all our sakes, we act.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mrs. CLINTON. Certainly.

Mr. REID. I say through the Chair to the distinguished Senator from New York, there is no question the citizens from your State, more than any State in the Union, are troubled every day because every day there is a story that something bad is going to happen, and New York, as the Senator indicated, is always mentioned.

I heard the Senator from New York state today that we, the Senate, are wasting our time. Class action is important, but is it as important to my family as having better security for my family? I have family members in the Washington, DC area, in Nevada, and one of my sons moved to Utah. I would rather we were working on this bill, Homeland Security, to make my family members more secure.

To top this off, when we leave class action—and the majority has decided they simply cannot allow a vote on immigration, or certainly they cannot allow a vote on drug reimportation—we are going to move off this legislation and are going to the gay marriage amendment. I know people have strong emotions about that one way or the other. However, I am willing to say the people for New York and the people of Nevada, if we weigh on one side the gay marriage amendment and on the other side the Homeland Security appropriations bill, this scale would tip 95 to 5. Does the Senator agree we have our priorities mixed?

And let me ask one other question. I went to my luncheon today and one of my friends in the press said, do you realize what the Republicans are doing?

They are going to say you are obstructing everything.

Does the Senator from New York understand that is their game? They will say we are the ones obstructing these bills, when, in fact, they do not want to address these issues because they do not want to take a vote on overtime, they do not want to vote on extending unemployment benefits, they do not want to have a debate on immigration and drug reimportation.

Would the Senator agree when a government is controlled by one party—President, the House, the Senate and, I am sad to say, the Supreme Court—it is a little hard to blame the other party for obstructing? Does the Senator agree?

Mrs. CLINTON. Certainly, I agree with my good friend and my distinguished leader who makes some excellent points.

Even more than that, as the Senator from Nevada knows so well, in the face of a disaster or another attack, all of this becomes unimportant, trivial, even frivolous.

I have enough respect for all of my colleagues that I hope we are not putting ourselves in a position where in the event what has been predicted, and given voice to today by Secretary Ridge, comes to pass, and people rightly can turn and ask, Where were our elected representatives?

This goes way beyond politics. This is not about Democrats and Republicans. This is about us as Americans. What are our priorities? What do we think is important? What are we willing to fight for, stand up for?

As my good friend points out, the majority has made a different set of choices. They have decided they want to create an atmosphere of gridlock and obstructionism which means we go so far as not even to take up the Homeland Security appropriations.

It is profoundly sad. It would be sad any time, but it is extraordinarily disheartening that on a day when the Senate was briefed behind closed doors about the threats, when the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security went before the world to talk about the threats, that we cannot get a debate on the appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security.

I have no doubt my good friend is right, there must be some political machinations going on in some back room, there must be some pollster whispering in someone's ear and saying, If you do this, that, and the other, you can come. Maybe people will be fooled into believing—even though you are in charge, and as my friend points out, you are in charge of the White House, the House, and the Senate—that somehow the fact that nothing has happened has to be the other side's fault.

I am sure people are saying that, but how pathetic is that. What does that say about our values and priorities as a nation? If that is what they care about, trying to score cheap political, partisan points at the expense of bringing up the Department of Homeland Security appropriations in the face of the warnings we received today, then it is going to be clear for all to see the responsibility rests on their shoulders.

It is not too late. There are a lot of Members who have worked day and night to deal with the real business of America. I am sure my good friend, our deputy leader on this side of the aisle who is literally here every waking hour, would be here even more in order to deal with the people's business. And what is the people's business? No. 1, keeping the people safe.

Again, I hope we get about what is important, that our majority leadership decide they want to put aside these petty, partisan, political games dealing with scoring cheap points at somebody's advantage, and work for the good of all of our people.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator from New York would yield for a question.

Mrs. CLINTON. Certainly.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 2537 AND H.R. 4567

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I would like to ask the Senator from New York if she would allow me to make a unanimous consent request at this time that the appropriations bills for homeland security be brought for immediate consideration on the floor of the Senate.

These bills—S. 2537 and H.R. 4567—are currently on the Senate calendar. After the warnings we received today from Secretary Ridge, could there be anything more important for us to do at this moment in time but to move to these bills so that units of government in New York, in Illinois, in Alaska, in Nevada are provided with the funds they need immediately, so we can move this process beyond all the political rhetoric and debate on so many issues that take a distant second place to the security of this Nation.

I wonder if it would be appropriate for the Senator to yield to me to make that request, and then I would return the floor to her.

Mrs. CLINTON. I so yield.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for immediate consideration S. 2537, the Homeland Security Act of 2005.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of Alaska and on behalf of Senate Leadership, I object.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for immediate consideration H.R. 4567, the Homeland Security Act of 2005.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of Alaska, I object.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I am disappointed with that decision based on what we have seen today and heard. I hope and I pray nothing happens in this country between now and the time we take these bills up. It reflects so badly on the U.S. Senate that we have been given fair warning by this administration that we face one of the most serious security threats since 9/11 and the Senate is unwilling—there has been an objection to even considering the Homeland Security bills at this moment when, in fact, we have nothing else to do here. I hope that history proves that this was not a wrong decision, but it is a decision which, sadly, we will have to live with until the leadership of this Senate decides to return.

At this point, I yield the floor.

Mrs. CLINTON. I thank my good friend from Illinois and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALEXANDER). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, what those who are following the Senate debate just witnessed is, sadly, a commentary on what has happened to the Senate. We are embroiled in debate on a class action bill relative to reforming the laws of America about how lawsuits can be filed. Many Members, in frustration, have wanted to consider many other issues: Should America now, after almost 6 years-plus of not increasing the minimum wage, finally increase the minimum wage for American workers? The Senator from Idaho has joined the Senator from Massachusetts in addressing a very important issue about agricultural workers and immigration. They would like to offer an amendment for that purpose, and it has broken down. There can be no agreement reached—at least there has not appeared to be an agreement reached.

Now we are just at rest, at ease, standing and doing nothing. It is hard to imagine that any of us were elected to the Senate for that purpose and particularly as many Members of the Senate, myself included, were called to a secret meeting, classified meeting this morning, with the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, Tom Ridge, as well as the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Robert Mueller, and were told at that briefing that we face an extraordinary threat to America's security. I am not saying anything out of school because I can tell you that Secretary Ridge had a press conference immediately after that private meeting and said as much to the American people.

It strikes me that under those circumstances we should be moving to consider issues relative to homeland security, not just the appropriations bills but issues relative to port security and railroad security. There are bills on this calendar which have just been languishing. At this moment in time, when we have nothing else going on on the floor of the Senate, why are we not moving as quickly as possible to consider those important appropriations bills?

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield for a question, Mr. President?

Mr. DURBIN. I will yield in just a minute. I will be happy to yield after I make my statement.

I just pray that we can reach a point where we can get to these bills before anything serious happens in America. But I know in my State of Illinois and in every other State there are units of local government as well as law enforcement units and those who are looking for the resources to be able to respond to a national emergency.

If something serious should occur, God forbid, it is not likely that people will be calling the Senate switchboard. They are going to be dialing 911. They are going to be hoping that on the other end of the line there will be a police department, a fire department, an ambulance, or a hospital that can respond extremely quickly. And the question is, obviously: Are we doing all we should do on a timely basis to provide the resources to these units of local government?

Secretary Ridge said today—and I have the highest respect for him; he is an old friend. I came to Congress with him over 20 years ago. He was an excellent appointment by the President. But he said how much we rely on State and local first responders. If that is the case, wouldn't we want to move as quickly as possible to make resources available for them so they can be prepared to defend America? That is why we should consider this legislation.

The Senator from California, Mrs. BOXER, came to the Senate floor today and made the same unanimous consent request to go to these issues. Again, the majority said no, we are not going to consider these issues. There is nothing more important. I would hope we would move to them quickly.

I yield to the Senator from Alaska for a question.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, I will seek the floor when the Senator is through.

Mr. DURBIN. All right. I would just say, in conclusion, then, at a time and place, I hope we can find this bipartisan agreement to move to these issues. The sooner the better. Once having moved to these issues, I think the Senate can dispatch them quickly, on a bipartisan basis, as it should.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—H.R. 4567 AND S. 2537

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am sort of surprised with the Senator from Illinois. I attended the same briefing. The Homeland Security bill has been reported by the committee to the Senate floor. We have been trying to get it to the Senate floor. I am prepared to present a motion to take up the bill right now, and I do.

I ask unanimous consent that at a time to be determined by the majority leader today, the Senate proceed to consideration of Calendar No. 588, H.R. 4567, an act making appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes. Further, I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause be stricken, that the text of Calendar No. 583, S. 2537, the Senate-reported bill, be inserted and agreed to in lieu thereof, without waiving any points of order by virtue of this agreement, and that the bill, as amended, be considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment; provided that no amendments shall be in order which will increase total discretionary spending provided by the bill in excess of the Senate-reported bill totals of $32 billion in budget authority and $29.729 billion in outlays; provided that no other points of order shall be waived thereon by virtue of this agreement; provided further that 2 hours be equally divided on the bill, that up to an extra hour be equally divided on each amendment, that all amendments be relevant and germane, that all votes occur before 5 p.m. on Monday, and that final passage occur by the same time, 5 p.m. Monday.

Now, I have an urgency to get this bill before the Senate, too. I am delighted the Senator has come to floor. I think it is the first time I have ever seen a member of the committee come to the floor of the Senate and ask to take up a bill without consulting the chairman. But I am prepared to take it up. We were prepared to offer this motion today. I ask for the unanimous consent agreement to start today—to start today—and we will finish it by 5 o'clock Monday.

Just as Governor Ridge indicated, there is a real urgency behind this bill. I would like to take it up. What this time agreement means is the bill will be subject to amendment, but anyone who wants to add money has to find some source to take it out. This bill is consistent with the budget resolution we are operating under, which is the budget resolution of 2004. We do not have a new budget resolution, but we do have the budget resolution for 2004, which put caps on 2005.

So I am ready to take up this bill. The chairman of the committee is ready to take it up. If the minority wants to come and ask that it come up, I am ready. We are ready right now. We will finish it by 5 o'clock Monday. We will have it to the President by 5 o'clock a week from tomorrow, I guarantee you that.

So I present the unanimous consent request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I would object, but I would ask the distinguished chair of the Appropriations Committee, who has worked harder than anyone I know in this Chamber to try to move the appropriations process forward, if we could not simply do what he is suggesting; that is, bring up the Homeland Security bill this afternoon. We can get agreement to go to the bill. No one has seen this bill. To be limited to a time limit without having had the opportunity to see it—we could even work out an agreement on relevant amendments. We could certainly work out a time agreement on amendments themselves. But there is no question that we could resolve these procedural issues immediately.

I ask unanimous consent that we set aside the pending business and take up the Homeland Security bill at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. STEVENS. My motion is before the Senate, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DASCHLE. Actually, I objected to that, and I have offered a counterproposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. STEVENS. The bill I have referred to was reported to the Senate. It was reported to the Senate on June 21. It has been before the Senate for quite some time. All I have asked is we have the amendments—it is open to amendment—and that there be an hour on each amendment. All I have asked is the amendments be germane and relevant and that there be an hour on each amendment. The only difference between what the distinguished minority leader and I have requested is I asked that no amendment would be in order which will increase total discretionary spending provided by the bill in excess of the Senate-reported bill totals which, again, is the amount that is consistent with the existing budget resolution.

I resubmit that unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, again, I think we are very close to reaching an agreement here. That is probably the good news that comes in this colloquy. I would object only because I am not sure I understand the implications of the final provision within his unanimous consent request having to do with the budget. There is no budget. We don't have a budget resolution. So I don't know how we can be guided by a budget resolution that doesn't exist. If anybody offers an amendment, my guess is it would be declared out of order, as the distinguished chairman is currently proposing. I don't think that is his intent, but I think that would be the interpretation. And that would, therefore, nullify any opportunity to make any alteration to the bill itself. If a 60-vote point of order is required on any amendment, it negates whatever opportunity there is to amend the bill.

I would hope perhaps within the hour we could work through that concern and come back and take up the bill this afternoon and, as the distinguished chairman suggests, finish the bill by early next week.

I will talk, of course, with our distinguished ranking member who would certainly need to be consulted before we agreed to do anything on the Senate floor. The distinguished ranking member has also expressed concern about our inability to move forward on this legislation, as well as the ranking member of the subcommittee. But I am pleased that the chairman has responded to our desire to move this legislation. Let's hope before the end of the afternoon we can have an agreement in place and take up the Homeland Security bill. No one could have been upstairs and heard what we heard and not want as much as possible to deal with all of the issues that are confronting us right now. The very least we need to do is to provide the funding necessary for the infrastructure that is already in place, and we have not even done that. So it is time we do it. It is time we recognize the concerns that are out there and deal with the responsibilities we have to fund the Homeland Security Department and all the related departments and not let this legislation languish as we tie ourselves up in procedural knots on legislation that has no place, at least right now, given our circumstances.

I will work with the chairman, work with the ranking member. Hopefully, we can come back to the floor sometime this afternoon and reach agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the distinguished leader has missed part of my unanimous consent request; that is, that the final vote take place at 5 o'clock on Monday. So we could go to conference with the House and expect to bring this bill back before we leave for the convention recess. Again, I state, I have a few years around here. I don't remember any Appropriations Committee member raising an issue to bring up a bill without consulting the chairman. I remember the days when had a Member done that, the Appropriations Committee chairman would not have forgotten it. So again, I say to the Senate, we are prepared to take up this bill under this time agreement and only under this time agreement today.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Let me again respond to the distinguished Senator from Alaska, chairman of the committee. I don't know why we have to have all these conditions for taking up an important bill like this. What is wrong with coming to the floor, working through the bill, dealing with amendments. I am frustrated, I suppose, by the extraordinary demands put before the Senate. Here it is Thursday afternoon. One of the most important appropriations bills we will confront and we must deal with, the Senator from Alaska, as well intended as I know he is, is asking the Senate to take it up on a Friday, when he knows most people travel, and then resolve it before the end of Monday which is also a travel day. We can argue how productive Fridays and Mondays are. And yes, we ought to be able to work here 5 days a week.

That has not been the practice. And certainly if we gave Senators warning, those who have already made travel arrangements could probably cancel those travel arrangements. But here we are. He can't really mean what he has suggested, that he is going to finish an important bill like this over 2 travel days and a weekend. That doesn't work. That certainly wouldn't be recognized by any standard as a good-faith offer.

Let's work this bill. Let's get it done. Let's have a debate. Let's have amendments. But let's recognize if we are going to do this, showcasing and posturing for purposes of trying to make it appear as if we are getting the work done is not going to satisfy the Senate. We need to lay this bill down. We need to work through it. We need to get it done. We ought to be doing it rather than playing all these political games with class action and all the other things that are contemplated now by the majority.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senator from Alaska—and we all care deeply about him; he is our President pro tempore—said he wanted to bring up the bill—that was objected to—the Homeland Security bill, but under specific conditions, limiting debate and amendments. Does the Senator from South Dakota believe every bill that comes up we want to create a new Senate? We never want to do things the way the Senate has acted for 200-plus years. We want to do things the way the House does it. We want to have a rule on every piece of legislation.

This is my second question. Doesn't the Senator believe we could take this bill up and do it in the ordinary course of business, as we used to do things? We could finish this bill in a couple of days?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator from Nevada is absolutely right. There are too many on the other side who want the House rules but the 6-year term. If they want the House rules, I would advise them to run for the House. We have rules in the Senate that allow for debate. One of the advantages of being a Senator is, you have an opportunity to offer amendments and have a good debate about issues. That doesn't mean they have to be extended indefinitely. These issues can be resolved and have been. But issues as important as homeland defense and appropriations ought to have an opportunity to be debated, to be vetted, to be discussed, and considered in a thoughtful way.

What the Senator has suggested, that somehow we take up the bill this afternoon and, with 2 travel days and a weekend, resolve all of these questions is not reasonable and certainly not realistic.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. DASCHLE. I am happy to.

Mr. REID. We have completed on this floor—and we did it in expedited fashion—the Defense Appropriations bill. The Senator from South Dakota consented to going to conference. We agreed to do it the day after the bill passed. The conferees were appointed. I have here the Senate calendar. The conferees were appointed June 24.

Is the Senator from South Dakota, our minority leader, aware of the fact that since this important bill passed the Senate, the House of Representatives—and now it is July 8—has simply never even appointed conferees? So all this about having to do it by 5 o'clock so we can go to conference is yelling out words that mean nothing. The House hasn't appointed conferees on the Defense Appropriations bill since June 24.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I acknowledge the Senator from Nevada is absolutely correct. It is mystifying that they would allow a bill as important as this to languish and not appoint the conferees we had every expectation would have been appointed the same day we did it in the Senate. Again, it is another illustration of the hyperbolic rhetoric we get about concern for conference and process, but when given the opportunity, no action is taken. That has been true on Defense, as well as many other bills. It is regrettable.

Clearly, this is another illustration of how unfortunate this whole schedule has been. We have wasted another week. We wasted a week with the Defense Appropriations conference report. We could have completed our work on the Homeland Security bill this week. Instead, I don't think we have had a vote. If we have had a vote, except for the nomination, I don't recall it. We had one vote on a nominee and no votes on any legislative substance. We have wasted this week.

We will waste next week, and as we continue to languish with all of this legislative work before us, we inexplicably have no opportunity to offer amendments and consider the legislative agenda that would make this a secure country. That is very unfortunate.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes.

Mr. DURBIN. Does the Senator from South Dakota, our minority leader, see any objection to our considering this appropriation bill first thing Tuesday, taking this up on the same type of expedited schedule by which we took up the Defense Appropriations bill, subject to the same basic rules and completing it next week? This could be done quickly, could it not, if we follow the precedence and rules of the Senate, and there would not be a necessity for some of the conditions the Senator from Alaska has asked for?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator from Illinois is exactly correct. We would be prepared to accept virtually the same conditions we have agreed to in the past on Defense Appropriations and other legislation. If that is what it takes to expedite consideration of Homeland Security, I think it is critical that we attempt to accommodate the Senate and try to work through this very important legislative priority in an expeditious way. So the Senator from Illinois makes a very good suggestion. This is yet another approach. Let's decide to pick it up on Tuesday and move through the legislation. We can probably finish by the middle or certainly the end of the next week, and get to conference, even though they have not appointed conferees in the House.

My hope is when it comes to Homeland Security, given what we have heard today at the briefing, it would be imperative for us to deal with both of these bills in the most expeditious manner.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I am not going to make a unanimous consent request. The Senator from Alaska doesn't care for that from a member of the committee. I would like to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that I hope there could be a conversation involving our leader on the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and Senator STEVENS, as well as Senator FRIST. I hope we can propose specifically to begin consideration of the Department of Homeland Security Appropriations bill on Tuesday morning and bring it to a conclusion and completion as quickly as possible.

I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he would consider trying to convene such a conversation with his fellow Senators.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, that will be, once again, the topic of discussion as I discuss the schedule with the majority leader. There cannot be a higher priority for our country and the Senate than dealing with homeland security issues.

Why we have not taken up the railroad security issue is another matter that is troubling to many of us. There are a number of bills related to our security that ought to be addressed, ought to have the highest priority. Certainly, Homeland Security Appropriations, railroad security, a number of other issues continue to sit without consideration. I cannot think of a better time to take it up than this afternoon and tomorrow, but no later than Tuesday; and I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois is a good one. I will make it to the majority leader.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes, I will.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I think we also have to project ourselves into next week. I have read in the press that the majority, when we get off of the bill we have been dealing with all week, class action, is going to go to a constitutional amendment dealing with gay marriage. Now is there anybody who believes that amendment, which is doomed to failure no matter how you feel about it—how do the people in South Dakota feel about going to an amendment dealing with gay marriage instead of doing an appropriations bill dealing with homeland security?

Mr. DASCHLE. I am sure the people of South Dakota share the same feeling as the people in Nevada, Illinois and across the country. They want us to do our work and they want us to recognize there are very serious obligations we have that ought to be met. I cannot think of a more serious obligation than to provide for the security of this country. The longer we ignore it, the more we put our country at peril. I think it is critical we address these issues in a bipartisan way, a nonpoliticized way, an expeditious way; and certainly by taking this legislation up next week, we would be doing that.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the current business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is considering S. 2062, the class action bill.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

The Chair has indicated that the Senate is presently considering the class action bill; therefore, I would think it appropriate for me to add a title to the remarks I am about to make, a title which would be as follows: ''Protecting the People's Interests Instead of the Campaign Interests.''

This morning, Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge and FBI Director Mueller briefed Senators, and I am told that he indicated that al-Qaida cells are operating in the United States and that multiple and simultaneous attacks are possible before the November elections.

Now, I have been listening, as I sat home with my sick wife, to talk about an amendment to the Constitution. I have been married now more than 67 years to a coal miner's daughter, and I have been listening to all of the wrangling that has been going on on this floor. I therefore felt it appropriate to make these few remarks, especially in the light of what I am told Secretary Ridge said; namely, credible reporting now indicates that al-Qaida is moving forward with its plans to carry out a large-scale attack in the United States in an effort to disrupt our Democratic process.

Just a month ago, the Attorney General announced that he had credible intelligence from multiple sources that al-Qaida plans to hit the United States hard in the next few months.

In the weeks following the Madrid railway bombing, the Washington Post reported that the President informed the Republican congressional leadership that he was all but certain that terrorists would attempt a major attack on the United States before the November elections.

Why are we wrangling over this political bill? Why not be talking about protecting the people of the United States and their properties against such an al-Qaida attack? It would seem to me that should have priority over politics.

Your lives, the people out there who are watching this Senate floor through those electronic lenses, your lives, we are told, are at stake. Then why do we have before this Senate this class action bill? Why not talk about the people's lives that are at stake? The administration says the people's lives are at stake and that we may expect multiple attacks. What a sinister threat we are obviously facing in this country. What are we doing on this floor? Wrangling, wrangling, wrangling over a class action bill. That is not going to sit very well with the American people, I don't believe, once they stop and think about it.

It would also be appropriate at this point, although it isn't very common that it is done on this floor—the Holy Bible is probably not something that one should carry onto the floor of the Senate, but I am going to read just two verses of Scripture from the book of St. Luke, chapter 13. These two verses are the sixth and seventh verses:

He [meaning Jesus] spake also this parable; A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down;—

Cut it down—
why cumbereth it the ground?

I believe there is a day of reckoning coming and it isn't afar off, when the American people are going to look at this fig tree and say: These 3 years I come looking for fruit on this fig tree and I found none, cut it down. They are going to say that to this administration, to this White House. These 3 years—these 3 years—behold, these 3 years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree and find none.

Where are all the wranglers? The people of this country are going to render a reckoning to those who are in the leadership in this country and they are going to say: Behold, these 3 years I came here seeking fruit on this tree and found none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?

Just a few weeks ago, the 9/11 Commission released interim reports concluding that the terrorists who are intent on doing us harm are cunning and agile. These reports also indicate that our Government agencies were not prepared to deter or respond to such attacks. I fear that we are still not prepared to deter or respond to such attacks. Despite the threats, despite the dangers, despite even today's warnings from Secretary Ridge, the Senate this afternoon continues to debate legislation to reform the class action lawsuit process.

The Senate has spent 3 days on the bill without a single rollcall vote. Next week it is expected that the Senate will debate a proposed constitutional amendment on marriage.

Now, hear me, listen to that, a proposed constitutional amendment on marriage. There are few people in this Chamber who know as much about that subject as I do. My wife and I having been married now 67 years, going on toward 70, if it is the Lord's will.

It is expected that the Senate will debate a proposed constitutional amendment on marriage. Well, these are important matters. Nobody would say otherwise. But, frankly, they are not that urgent. They are not life or death issues, but they are the priority for the Senate majority leadership.

I believe there are other, more urgent matters that we should be considering. The Senate Appropriations Committee unanimously reported the Homeland Security appropriations bill 3 weeks ago, on June 17. Since June 17, the bill has sat collecting dust. Why are we not debating that bill? I say to the leadership: Why are we not debating that bill?

In response to the Madrid train bombings, both the Senate Banking Committee and the Senate Commerce Committee reported bills authorizing new Federal programs to secure our mass transit systems and our rail systems. The Governmental Affairs Committee has reported a bill authorizing first responders grants. The Senate has passed an authorization bill to increase resources for the Coast Guard. But where is the bill? The bill is mired in conference.

Why are we not moving forward on these bills? Why are we piddling around here, talking about a political bill, class action suits—class action suits? In the face of all the dire warnings that this administration, this White House, this Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, this President—all of the dire warnings that we have heard, in the face of that yet we are here piddling around, dawdling, arguing, wrangling over a class action bill. How about that, those of you people out there in the prairies, out there on the rivers and the river valleys, out there in the Rocky Mountains, those of you in Appalachia? How about that? Your life, the lives of your children are at stake.

They say these terrorists are prepared to strike in multiple places and yet the Senate is dawdling, talking about a class action bill.

We only have 2 weeks left after this one. We need to act. Are we going to wait until we go home? Are we going to wait until after the conventions meet? Are we going to wait another 6 weeks and then come back and bring up the appropriations bill making appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security? Is that what we propose to do, daudle? Fiddle-faddle? What is wrong with the Senate?

The Senate is a do-nothing place these days, a far cry from what the Senate has been in the years I have seen go by.

While the Bush administration has consistently promised the American people that they are making this country safe, the facts show the administration has consistently put homeland security on the back burner. Time after time after time, the distinguished Democratic whip who sits on the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, not only a highly respected member of that committee but a very able member of that committee, knows that we have tried time and time and time again to add moneys for homeland security in that committee and here on the Senate floor. And time and time and time again, we have been turned down by a Republican administration and by the Republican leadership of this body. Deny that, if you may. I can furnish chapter and verse regarding the amendments that we have called up trying to bring greater safety to the American people against a terrorist attack, and time and time again those amendments have been defeated on the floor of the Senate.

For this administration, homeland security can wait and wait and wait and then wait. What do they want to do, wait another 6 weeks now until we come back after the August recess and then take up the Homeland Security appropriations bill? Is that the game? What might happen in the meantime?

This administration created a new Department of Homeland Security that rearranges the deck chairs, but it cannot energize that Department with the financial resources that it needs to make America and the American people safer, and many of the resources that are provided to the Department have yet to be spent. Get that. Many of the moneys are still in the pipeline. They have been in the pipeline. They have yet to be spent.

What a dawdling White House.

In response to the terrorist threat, one might have anticipated that the President would have requested the supplemental appropriations for securing our mass transit systems, for inspecting more containers coming into our ports, for increasing inspections of air cargo, or for increasing the number of Federal air marshals. One might have expected that the President would have amended his 2005 budget request to increase his anemic, 3-percent proposed increase for the Department of Homeland Security. What a shame. What a sad commentary on a White House that plays Russian roulette with the lives of the American people.

Instead, the White House did nothing. Instead, the Department seems satisfied with a go-slow, business-as-usual approach to homeland security.

The Department issued advice to mass transit systems for improving security but provided no funding to increase law enforcement presence or to deploy K–9 teams.

Despite the approach of a busy summer season for airline passengers, the Department of Homeland Security has allowed the number of Federal air marshals to shrink precipitously, and the President's budget would result in even deeper reductions next year.

I have worked with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator STEVENS of Alaska, year after year, month after month, time after time to increase appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security. Senator STEVENS and his committee have brought out bill after bill, and we brought bill after bill to the Senate floor over these years. We have joined together hand in hand on many occasions to seek the administration's help and have asked the administration to send up Tom Ridge before the Senate Appropriations Committee to testify back before he became a Secretary and subject to the confirmation of the Senate. Our requests fell upon deaf ears.

Despite concerns about the safety of our borders, the Department, in March, imposed a hiring freeze on Customs officers and Immigration inspectors. Millions of dollars that Congress approved for port security, for bus security, for hazardous materials grants 9 months ago have not been awarded. Millions of dollars that Congress approved in February of 2003, 17 months ago, for the purchase of additional emergency equipment for the 28 urban search and rescue teams have not been spent. Millions of dollars have not been spent.

Having this money sit in Washington, DC, does not make any American citizen any safer.

As a result of the President's decision not to seek supplemental appropriations, the Transportation Security Administration was forced to cut funding for training passenger and baggage screeners and for purchasing equipment for airport checkpoints.

You who listen today, it is your life and the lives of your family members and your neighbors and your friends that are at stake.

As the lines at our airports get longer and longer this summer, our citizens will wonder who is responsible. Who is responsible for this lackadaisical, careless attitude on the part of our government? Where are our government leaders? Where is the Senate? Why is the Senate so mute? That great deliberative body, where is it? Why is it so mute? Why are we today debating a class action bill when our lives are at stake?

It has been 2½ years since Richard Reid, the so-called shoe bomber, tried to blow up an aircraft in flight over the ocean with explosives that he carried onto the aircraft. Are we any closer to deploying systems that could check passengers for explosives? Sadly, sadly, the answer is no, no, no.

It has been over 2½ years since the Congress passed the USA Patriot Act and set a goal of tripling the Border Patrol and Customs officers on the northern border. Have we met the goal? Sadly, we are 1,428 officers short of the goal.

It has been nearly 3 years since 9/11 when police and firemen in the World Trade Center could not talk to one another on their radios and tragically hundreds of them perished never to rise in this world again.

Are we any closer to providing police and firemen across the Nation with interoperable communications equipment? Sadly, the answer is no.

The EPA has estimated that there are 100 chemical plants in this country—several of them down in southern West Virginia, where one of the greatest chemical complexes in the Western Hemisphere exists. The EPA has estimated that there are 100 chemical plants in this country, each of which if attacked could harm over 1 million people. In February of 2003, the National Infrastructure Protection Center, which is now part of the Department of Homeland Security, issued a threat warning that al-Qaida may attempt to launch conventional attacks on nuclear or chemical plants. A year and a half later, has the Department actually hardened the security of the chemical plants? Sadly, that same old refrain: No.

More than 95 percent of the Nation's overseas cargo moves through our ports. The U.S. Coast Guard estimates that a 1-month closure of a major U.S. port would cost our national economy $60 billion. We inspect only 9 percent of the cargo containers that come into our ports. There are 361 ports.

In order to help secure the ports, the Coast Guard estimates $1.1 billion is required to implement the Maritime Transportation Security Act in the first year and $5.4 billion over 10 years. How much did the President request? The President requested only $46 million for port security grants, a cut of 62 percent.

We need to do more than that. The American people expect more than that. The American people have a right to expect more than that. The American people have a right to expect from this administration, this White House, better consideration, better safety, greater concern.

There is a day of reckoning coming, and it is not far off.

Let me turn to this old book our fathers and mothers read.

> A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

He found none.

> Then, said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree and find none; cut it down. Why cumbereth it the ground?

The owner of that vineyard is coming soon, just a few more months. The American people are coming to that vineyard seeking fruit thereon and they are going to say these 3 years we have come seeking fruit on this fig tree and found none. Cut it down.

Listen to that, White House. Cut it down.

On March 11 of this year, terrorists attacked commuter trains in Madrid, Spain, killing nearly 200 innocent passengers. The President of the United States has not requested a dime for mass transit security. No one is suggesting we set up a passenger screening system at our train stations like we have at airports, but we should be investing in additional guards, better training, additional K–9 teams, better surveillance. Americans use public transportation over 32 million times per workday. The Senate Banking Committee has reported a bill authorizing over $3.5 billion for fiscal year 2005 for mass transit security and the Senate Commerce Committee has reported a bill authorizing $1 billion for rail and Amtrak security. Our citizens deserve to be secure as they travel to work and back home again.

Time and time again over the last 3 years I have offered amendments to provide funding for securing our mass transit systems and the White House consistently called the amendments wasteful or unnecessary spending. We need to do more.

The Hart-Rudman report on the terrorist threat in this country recommended a $98 billion investment in equipping and training for our first responders over the next 5 years, yet the President did not request an increase in first responder funding. Instead, the President has proposed to cut first responder funding in the Department by over $700 million, including a $246 million cut in fire grants, and governmentwide the President is proposing cuts of $1.5 billion. We need to do more, not less. We are living in perilous times. Perilous times. We are a country that faces increasing threats from terrorists right here at home.

As Secretary Ridge was said to have explained to the country this morning, there is a growing concern about a potential terrorist attack before the November election. We are vulnerable, and the continual warnings and calls for vigilance only magnify that vulnerability.

What is our response to the Secretary's warnings in this Senate, in this dear old body which has been my home for almost 46 years? We give whistles to staff in the Capitol and we hope for the best. We sit back and wait and wait and wait on an appropriations bill that is right here that could have been called up days ago. We sit back and wait and wait on this appropriations bill that would improve Homeland Security. Instead of action, we delay. Instead of action, we call up a class action bill. Instead of action, we get wrangled in political arguing. We delay Homeland Security funds for police officers and firefighters. We delay immediate investments in border security and port security. We say loudly for all the country to hear, Homeland Security can wait.

No, it cannot wait. Homeland Security cannot wait. And remember, there will be a day of reckoning. It will come as surely as I stand here in this place, as sure as the sparks fly upward. That day of reckoning is coming ever near around the corner.

Indeed, the majority leader could have scheduled the Homeland Security appropriations bill this week, but rather than bring up that critical legislation this week the majority chose to go to the class action bill. And once the Senate began consideration of the class action bill, then it was decided that Senators could only offer those amendments the leadership deemed appropriate. Now, how is that? How is that for filling the tree?

Here we are in the middle of July, with 11 more legislative days left before the Senate recesses for the respective party conventions; and that is going to be for 45 days we will recess, take or give a little. So the Senate has acted on exactly one appropriations bill, the Defense Appropriations bill.

Now that is not the fault of the Senate Appropriations Committee. No, you can bet on that. That is not the fault of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

It is said that actions speak louder than words, and I believe that to be true in this case. Given all of the priorities facing this country, the majority leader has said, I am told, the most urgent need the Senate should consider is the class action bill and has further indicated that next week the Senate will consider a constitutional amendment that no one believes has the number of votes needed for adoption. Amend the Constitution of the United States—here it is, folks. I hold it in my hand. Let's just amend it one more time.

Homeland security funding will sit on the sidelines. Is that what the Senate should be about, I ask you, the people out there? This Senate should step back from this folly and put the people's interests first—the people's business, the people's lives.

I simply do not understand why the Senate is twiddling its thumbs on legislation that could be considered at some other time rather than addressing homeland security issues when it matters most.

I watched them tear the building down,
A gang of men in a busy town;
With a ho-heave-ho, and a lusty yell,
They swung a beam and a sidewall fell.
I asked the foreman, ''Are these men skilled,
And the men you would hire if you had to build?''
He gave a laugh and said, ''No, indeed;
Just common labor is all you need.
I could easily wreck in a day or two
What builders have taken years to do.''
I thought to myself as I went away,
Which of these roles have I tried to play:
Am I a builder who works with care,
Measuring life by the rule and square,
Am I shaping my deeds to a well-made plan,
Patiently doing the best I can?
Or am I a wrecker who walks the town,
Content with the labor of tearing down?

Think about it.

Now, I had not been told about my dear friend's, the chairman's, proposal about taking this up, even though I am the ranking member, actually the senior member of the committee, the only person on that committee who has been on it for 46 years, the senior Democrat in this whole creation here. I was not told about any proposal that my chairman was about to make.

I would be happy to consider any proposal. I want to work with the chairman. I say, why not take up this bill on Monday of next week? Why not? Why not bring this bill up on Monday, and let's have at it? I will leave that question for the leadership. I hope it will receive some consideration.

A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GARRETT LEE SMITH MEMORIAL ACT

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, there are many arguments hot and heavy being made today about the important issues that confront our country, issues about our security, about our troops, about the hot summer that is threatened by terrorists, about our economy and its recovery, and I know there are strong feelings on both sides of the aisle. But I hope today to show the American people that we are bigger than just partisans, that there are times when our Nation's elected officials can come together, put aside political and party differences, and actually debate and pass legislation.

My bill that I am talking about now in the company of MIKE DEWINE, the Senator from Ohio—and I believe Senator DODD of Connecticut will soon join us—is a bill, I suppose, on a smaller subject than war and peace and economic recovery, but it is nevertheless a bill about life and death, so it is important. It is not a far-reaching bill. It is not even all that expensive, certainly not in relationship to all that our Congress will consider, but it represents an important milestone in our country's battle against mental illness and specifically youth suicide.

Later tonight, this bill will be introduced by the majority leader. I thank him for his sensitivity and willingness to proceed on this bill. He has been of enormous help to my wife and me in this struggle. I thank also Senator DASCHLE for truly making this a bipartisan issue. See, what Senator FRIST and Senator DASCHLE understand is that mental illnesses do not register by party; they afflict Republican and Democratic families alike.

I would like to thank Senator GREGG, the chairman of the committee, and his staff for their willingness to proceed with this legislation. It would not have happened without him.

I would like to thank Senator DEWINE. He and his wife Fran know something about family suffering, having lost a child of their own, so he has been unusually sensitive to Sharon and me on this issue. He has championed one of the bills, the major part of this bill we will take up today.

I thank you, Senator DEWINE.

I want to show further how we as partisans, as Republicans and Democrats, are first Americans. During the hearing we had on this bill, it was Senator DODD, who is the ranking member of the committee, who suggested that if we accomplish little else in this Congress, we at least ought to do this much. Senator DODD is one of the nicest and most decent Members of this Chamber.

There are other Senators of whom I want to take note.

Senator JACK REED has been especially sensitive and has helped to write a big portion of this bill as it relates to campus suicide.

Senator HARRY REID, the Democratic whip—his family also having suffered with a suicide—has been a champion of mental health issues and specifically on the issue of how to intervene, interdict, and to stop suicide when it is at all possible.

Finally, I would like to speak of Senator KENNEDY. I have looked at him often in this Chamber. I have thought of him as a lion in winter. He certainly has a lion's roar in this Chamber. Yet underlying the lion's roar, Senator KENNEDY has a heart that is filled with compassion for people. No one on either side of the aisle should ever question his motive, and his motive is as good as gold even though you can reasonably disagree with his method. He has been of unusual help to me and to Sharon as we suffer the loss of our son. He has known much suffering in his days, and I thank Senator KENNEDY.

Finally, I must mention ARLEN SPECTER, the subcommittee chairman of the Appropriations Committee that helps fund the mental health issues. For a long time, he has found ways to fund programs to help with mental illnesses. And he has been helpful in a tight year with a tight budget trying to find the resources that can be utilized for the authorization of funds this bill will provide.

Enough of those things, and now to the substantial.

Most of you can probably discern by now that my emotions are still somewhat tender. I didn't volunteer to be a champion of this issue. But it arose out of the personal experience of being a parent who lost a child to mental illness through suicide.

Last September, Sharon and I lost our son Garrett Lee Smith to a long battle that he suffered from mental illness. He suffered emotional pain that I cannot begin to comprehend, and he ultimately sought relief by taking his life. While Sharon and I think about Garrett every day and mourn his loss, we take solace in the time we had with Garrett and say to all those who suffer the loss of loved ones that the very best antedote for grief is the gratitude you had for your loved one for a time on Earth. Sharon and I have committed ourselves each in our own way to preserving Garrett's memory by trying to help others so that other families and children do not suffer a similar fate.

Sharon and I adopted Garrett a few days after his birth. He was a beautiful child, a handsome baby boy.

Forgive me.

He was thoughtful of everyone around him as he grew older. His life, however, began to dim in his elementary years. He struggled to spell. His reading and writing were stuck in the rudiments. We had him tested and were surprised to learn that he had an unusually high IQ, but he struggled with a severe overlay of learning disabilities, including dyslexia.

However, it would be many years later until we learned how extensive his true illness was because of his diagnosis, which was a bipolar condition. Bipolar disorder, also known as manic-depressive illness, is a brain disorder that causes unusual shifts in a person's mood, energy, and ability to function. Different from normal ups and downs that we all experience, the symptoms of bipolar disorder are severe. People who suffer from bipolar experience swings from manic highs where sleep and eating are not desired, to deep catastrophic depressions where simply getting out of bed can be too much of a challenge.

In the United States, more than 2 million American adults suffer from bipolar disorder. This illness typically develops in late adolescence or early childhood. However, some people have their first symptoms during childhood, while others develop them late in life. It can be a debilitating illness. And, as in Garrett's case, it can lead to worse tragedies.

As his parents, we knew how long and how desperately Garrett had suffered from his condition and his very dark depression. While we knew intuitively that suicide was possible in his case, there are simply no parental preparations adequate for this crisis in one's own child, no owner's manual to help one in burying a child, especially when the cause is suicide.

So I have committed myself to trying to find meaning in Garrett's life by helping to pass, with the help of my colleagues, an important first step to ending the epidemic of youth suicide. It is no small task, but one that I believe should be a top priority of this Congress because every year approximately 30,000 Americans commit suicide in the United States—a number that is almost twice as high as the number of homicides in our country. Almost 700,000 Americans are treated in hospitals every year for self-inflicted wounds and attempted suicides. But keep in mind these figures don't tell the whole story. They do not account for the families, the friends, the coworkers who are affected by each suicide. Suicide and attempts do not simply leave an impression on the individual's life, it leaves a deep impact on everyone who knows the person or a family member of that person.

America's youth are committing suicide at staggering rates. Suicide is the third leading cause of death for people age 10 to 24 years—the third leading cause. That is why this bill, at MIKE DEWINE's suggestion, named the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act, is so vitally important. It takes the first significant step toward creating and funding an organized effort at the Federal and State levels to prevent and intervene when youth are at risk for mental and behavioral conditions that can lead to suicide.

The loss of life to suicide at any age is tragic and traumatic. But when it happens to someone who has just begun life, has just begun to fulfill their potential, the impact somehow seems harsher, sadder, more out of season, more tragic.

Garrett had just begun to reach his potential. His big smile and generous spirit allowed him to befriend everyone, popular or not. Wisely or not, his mother and I showered him with creature comforts as yet another way to show him that we loved him and that we valued him. But as a testament to his character, we later found out that much of what we gave him in a material way he readily gave to others less fortunate.

He also wanted to accomplish three things in life. He wanted to be an Eagle Scout, he wanted to graduate from high school, and he wanted to serve his church on a mission. He accomplished those three things, largely because of the efforts of his angel mother. He loved his mission companions, he loved his church, he deeply loved his Savior, and a chance of serving others in his name. Unfortunately, his struggle against his periods of deep depression became too much. We sought out help from school and church counselors, psychologists, and ultimately a psychiatrist. But words of encouragement, prayers earnestly offered, and the latest medical prescriptions could not repair our son's hard-wiring defects.

Garrett's bipolar condition was a cancer to him, as lethal as leukemia to anyone else. It filled his spirit with hopelessness and clouded his future in darkness. He saw only despair ahead and felt only pain in the present, pain and despair so potent that he sought suicide as a refuge, a release. The bill I offer today with these great colleagues, Republican and Democrat alike, is intended to help other people who suffer from mental illnesses that are so devastating it places them at risk for taking their own lives. No family should experience the pain we have suffered and no child should face the challenges of mental illness alone.

When signed into law, this bill will authorize $60 million over 3 years to create a system focused on establishing in each State a statewide early intervention and prevention strategy. It ensures that 85 percent of the funding will be provided to the entities focused on identifying and preventing suicide at the State and community levels. Entities apply to the State for funding and can utilize a variety of options to implement the tenets of statewide strategy.

One option that Sharon and I have recently championed in our own hometown is the Columbia University Teen Screen Program. We have chosen to endow this program in our community in our son's memory, in the town of Pendleton, OR, from which I hail.

All sixth graders who have their parents' consent will be screened each year for mental illnesses that can lead to suicide and they will receive referrals for treatment. Our hope in sponsoring this program is to help as many children as possible at as early an age, as young as possible, because if we identify mental illness early, we may be able to prevent thousands upon thousands of youth suicides.

The bill also authorizes the Suicide Prevention Resource Centers that will provide technical assistance to States and local grantees to ensure they are able to implement their statewide early intervention and prevention strategies. It also will collect the data related to the programs, evaluate the effectiveness of the program, and identify and distribute best practices to other States around the country. Sharing technical data and program best practices is necessary to ensure that Federal funding is being utilized in the best manner possible. That information is being circulated among participants.

Finally, the bill will provide funding to help colleges and universities establish mental health programs or enhance existing mental health programs focused on increasing access to and enhancing the range of mental and behavioral health services for students.

Entering college can be one of the most disruptive and demanding times of a young person's life, but for persons with mental illnesses the challenges can be overwhelming. Loss of their parental support system, familiar and easily accessible health care providers can often become too much of a burden to bear. That is why we have, for the first time, focused Federal funding on improving the support structures available at our colleges and universities.

I simply say with emphasis to my colleagues, we have a suicide epidemic on American university campuses because kids leave their homes and need support structures. As in the case of our son, when you are not there and they do not have someone to fall back on, sometimes the most innocent kinds of disappointments for you and me can be life ending to them. These are the kinds of situations which we hope to better predict.

I say in conclusion, the components of this bill will ensure that we begin to address the staggering problem of youth suicide. I am pleased to be a champion of this cause, not because I volunteered for it but because I have suffered over it. This bill, with the support of my colleagues, will be a marvelous beginning to say to the American mothers and fathers, we care about you, we know your struggles, we know your suffering, and we are trying to help.

Where you cannot be there, we are going to do our level best to make sure there are professionals, there are people to help, so we can put an end to this epidemic and let our youth know that mental illness is not something from which they should shrink but something about which they should seek help.

If we do this, my colleagues, I assure you, whatever else we may or may not accomplish in this Congress, we can leave here with pride that we did a very good thing for the young men and women of the United States of America. I urge the passage of this bill.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The assistant Democratic leader.

Mr. REID. As my friend from Oregon knows, my father committed suicide. My situation was totally different than that experienced by my friend from Oregon. With my dad there was nothing that had happened that suggested a problem.

I went to watch Muhammad Ali work out, spent the morning with Muhammad Ali. I had a wonderful time. I took somebody who was working with me. Two of us were alone with Muhammad Ali for a long time. I returned to my office and walked in the door. Joan was the receptionist. I can still see her. This was many years ago. She said: Your mother is on the phone. I picked up the phone and she said: Your pop shot himself.

My dad had killed himself at home in Searchlight. For a long time, I was embarrassed; I did not know how to handle that. I, of course, acknowledged my dad was dead but like most people who deal with suicide, it takes a while to accept that.

My acceptance came many years later when I was part of the Aging Committee in the Senate. Bill Cohen was the chairman. We had a hearing on senior depression. Mike Wallace, a reporter on ''60 Minutes,'' testified before the committee. He said: A lot of times I wanted to die. I did the most dangerous things I could do, hoping that maybe something would happen that I would not return. He said: But you know, I now take a little bit of medication; I had the opportunity to talk to someone and I no longer feel that way.

So I shared, for the first time ever publicly, what happened to my dad. My dad was 56 or 57 years old, much younger than most members in the Senate. I said at that time to Chairman Cohen that I thought we should have a hearing on senior suicide. I shared, for the first time, the story of my dad's death.

I didn't know Garrett. Gordon didn't know my dad. My dad was a person who, as we look back, had been depressed his whole life. I cannot give a long dialog about my dear dad other than to say he was a very strong, physical person, bigger than I am, bigger than his four sons. He never lifted a weight, but with his shirt off at the age he was, people would think he had lifted weights. He had big arms, a big chest. He was very strong.

He didn't like to be around people, only his family. About a week before he killed himself, we came out to visit him in Searchlight. My dad did not have much in the way of material possessions, but he had one thing for which he was very proud. It was a specimen.

My dad worked hard all of his life, never made any money doing anything, but he worked like a dog. One time he had a lease on a mine and he found some very rich ore at the Blossom. The vein was very small. It was in a talc-like formation, and it assayed at $18,000 a ton. He got a few sacks of this. It was in such small quantities you could not even fill up a truck with it.

He saved a specimen. All he had left was a specimen; that was valuable to him, at least. Approximately a week before he died, he gave it to me. It was unlike my dad. But, of course, as I look back, he had been planning what he was going to do for some time. His health was not good and he had miner's consumption, and I am sure other problems. He smoked like a chimney all of his life. He coughed every night when I was a little boy. I thought all kids' dads coughed like my dad.

But had this legislation, introduced by my friend, been in effect, my dad may not have had all the problems he had as he proceeded through life. Suicide is an American tragedy. We know that at least 31,000 Americans every year kill themselves. We know that because those are the deaths that we can say: This was a suicide. But there are, I believe, thousands of others—automobile accidents, hiking accidents—that are really suicides.

So we have done a few things since my work with Senator Cohen. We are now studying, for the first time—it is hard to comprehend this—but for first time in the history of this country, we are trying to figure out why people kill themselves. We do not know for sure. One of the phenomenons is that most of the suicides are in the western part of the United States. We do not know why. You would think just the opposite, with the Sun shining and the wide open spaces. But we are studying that. The Surgeon General of the United States has stated it is a national problem.

I want my friend from Oregon to understand how important it is that he is stepping forward on this issue. Landra and I attended Garrett's funeral. We were so impressed because no one—no one—tried to mask what happened to Garrett Smith. Every speaker talked about this fine young man. Some of the speakers had known him his whole life. But there was not a single speaker who tried to make an excuse or cover up the fact that this young man had taken his own life.

You see, we have come a long way. After my dad died, killed himself, I bought a book on suicide. It was not long ago that you could not bury someone who committed suicide in a cemetery. Most religions would not accept and allow the normal religious ceremonies to take place if somebody had killed themselves. We have gone beyond that in most every instance, and that is good.

I want the Senator from Oregon to know how I appreciate his moving forward on this national problem. Nevada leads the Nation in suicide. I believe that anything we can do to focus attention on this problem is going to be of benefit to so many people.

Since this situation with my dad in the committee, we now have a national organization. They have a full-time lobbyist now. SCAN is the name of the organization. Their whole existence is based on dealing with the suicide problem that faces this country.

I appreciate very much the Senator from Oregon, I say for the third time, moving forward on this issue. It is a happy day and a sad day because, as life is, I do not focus on that day when my dad—I went out and saw my dad on the bed where he had killed himself. I do not focus on that, but I did today, and it is good for me that I did focus on it.

It is good for us that we focus on this. I used to think suicides happened to other people, but they happen to us. There are so many people who I come in contact with who have had a father, a mother—I had a wonderful TV reporter in Las Vegas—and you know it is all business with these journalists—who said to me once: Could I talk to you sometime alone? I said: Sure. She told me about the fact that her brother committed suicide, her father committed suicide. This story did not end there. She called me later, after we had our private conversation; her own sister then killed herself.

Suicide is an illness of which we have to get ahold. It is something that does not happen to others; it happens to us.

I am so glad I was able to hear the heartfelt remarks of the Senator from Oregon today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I compliment my colleague from Oregon, Senator SMITH, for his statement and also for the work he has done in putting together this legislation. I ask unanimous consent to be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I also compliment my colleague and friend, Senator REID, for his statement. I have a similar experience. My father also committed suicide. I am not going to go into the details, but it is a lot of pain. It is very evidenced by the pain in the expression by Senator SMITH and Senator REID that this is a very serious problem throughout our country. It is a serious problem, as Senator SMITH has experienced, unfortunately, particularly with teenagers.

For teenagers, this is a problem that most people cannot comprehend. I did know Garrett. Garrett was a troubled young man with mental illness. He was also a very fortunate young man because he had outstanding and loving parents. He had an angel for a father and a mother, and he received more love than most children would ever dream of receiving. Now maybe he is in some ways giving a gift to the country because Senator SMITH, in trying to rationalize maybe, combat this very serious problem, is trying to tackle it nationally. I have no doubt as a result of us passing this legislation we will end up saving a lot of lives, maybe thousands of lives. So I just want to associate myself with my very good friend Gordon Smith but thank and compliment him because we will never know—we will never know—did this save someone's life somewhere in Oregon or Oklahoma or Nevada or New York because there are a lot of troubled kids out there, frankly, who have not received the attention they need. Maybe it will also lead to greater research in combating suicide as a whole because it is a big problem throughout this country for many ages, particularly for teenagers.

I compliment Senator SMITH for the love and attention and focus both he and Sharon focused on Garrett. Garrett was a very fortunate young man to have such loving parents. The Senate is very fortunate, our country is very fortunate, to have his leadership on this very difficult, sensitive issue for them and, frankly, for our country. I compliment him for his work and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COLEMAN). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, first of all, let me thank both of my colleagues from Nevada and Oklahoma as well. Their remarks were very moving today. In the midst of all these other matters we debate and discuss—matters we think are of such great and global and national importance—I don't think anything we have listened to has been as important as the comments that have been made by our good friend and colleague from Oregon, GORDON SMITH, and my good friends and colleagues, HARRY REID and DON NICKLES. I was aware of the circumstance of my friend from Nevada. I was not aware of the circumstance of my friend from Oklahoma. I appreciate both of them adding their voices today to this discussion. Particularly, though, I think we all feel a special bond with Senator SMITH and what he and his lovely wife Sharon have gone through. I commend him for his courage and determination to share his story with us and the country today.

Time does heal wounds. I suspect my friend from Nevada and friend from Oklahoma still feel tremendous pain, and I suppose that time does remove some of the bitterness. But we know that our friend from Oregon lost his son only a matter of months ago, and we know the fact that he came to me, to MIKE DEWINE and Senator REED, to others, asking with great determination if there was a way to clear the legislation before us this year. I am so glad that he came to us. I will forever remember the hour or so we spent—not many weeks ago—talking about this legislation in my office and trying to find a way to clear it. Gordon, it is because of you that we are here today.

I commend the majority leader and the Democratic leader and others for insisting that we find some time here to allow this legislation to be considered and, I believe, adopted unanimously by our colleagues. I know the other body is considering legislation as well.

If I could, I would like to spend a couple of minutes speaking about this important issue, and I hope this time maybe there are people listening. I know occasionally people follow C–SPAN. There are probably times when they wonder why they are watching us at all, but maybe today, as a result of our conversation and the tremendous remarks by our colleagues who have talked about this issue in very personal terms, in addition to the underlying legislation, there will be people listening whose lives might be transformed. My admiration for the three of our colleagues who have spoken today, particularly our colleague from Oregon, is unlimited. He has done a great service, if nothing else, by sharing his story with America. That has great value.

There are people listening to this who I know full well are going through similar circumstances and wondering how to cope, or a child out there who may be wondering whether anyone can pay any attention to his or her needs, or trying to find a place he or she can go to try and resolve these conflicts. I think this discussion is a worthy one for this historic Chamber to be engaged in.

Adolescent years are the most difficult in many ways. We spend a lot of time talking about early childhood development, and rightfully so. Those are formative years in a child's life. There is much more we could do to try and assist parents and young children beginning the journey of life to get it right from the beginning. And we spend a great deal of time talking about higher education, talking about the cost and getting jobs and the like. Certainly that has great value as well. However, we don't spend enough time talking about those adolescent years, those middle years from age six to 24. I can think of only a few instances where we have actually had hearings and talked about the problems of adolescents, those tremendously changing years that can be so terribly complex for an individual of that age.

I hope that as a result this discussion, the legislation we are introducing will have some ability, some impact, maybe, in focusing our attention on those questions. Let me go back and, first of all, again thank my colleague Senator MIKE DEWINE, with whom I have worked on this issue, JACK REED of Rhode Island, who has done a tremendous job as well on this legislation, and my colleague RICHARD DURBIN of Illinois, who wants to be added as a cosponsor. I ask unanimous consent that he be added as a cosponsor to this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. As has been pointed out by our friend from Oregon, suicide among our Nation's young people is an acute crisis that knows no socioeconomic boundaries. My State of Connecticut, as well as all other states in the nation, suffer from this tragedy. In fact, my hometown of East Haddam, Connecticut—a small rural community of 8,000 people—has not been immune.

In 2001, I chaired the first Congressional hearing on youth suicide, and I was alarmed at the disturbing statistics that were read at that hearing. Well, those statistics have not changed and they are worth repeating again today. According to the most recent data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, almost 3,000 young people—10 percent of all suicides—take their lives in the United States every year. It is the third overall cause of death between the ages of 10 and 24. Young people under the age of 25 account for 15 percent of all suicides completed. In fact, more children and young adults die from their own hand than from cancer, heart disease, AIDS, birth defects, stroke, and chronic lung disease combined.

Equally alarming are the numbers of young people who consider taking or attempt to take their own lives. Again, recent CDC figures estimate almost 3 million high school students or 20 percent of young adults between the ages of 15 to 19 consider suicide each year, and over 2 million children and young adults actually attempt suicide. Simply put, these figures are totally unacceptable and of a crisis proportion.

Sadly, we rarely find these facts disseminated widely among public audiences. We rarely read them in newspapers or hear them on television. Individual cases, yes, but not the national numbers.

We know youth suicide is integrally linked to mental health issues such as depression and substance abuse. Yet we also know all too well that both youth suicide and children's mental health continue to carry an unfortunate stigma, a stigma that all too often keeps these crucial issues unspoken and discourages children and young adults from seeking the help they so desperately need.

We have a societal obligation to break through this stigma attached to youth suicide and children's mental health. Again, the comments of our colleagues this afternoon have taken a major step in that direction. When people in public life can address these issues in public forums and talk about them in personal terms, then they help us break down the barriers and stigmas that exist. That is why I feel so strongly about the willingness of our colleagues today, particularly Senator SMITH, to share their personal thoughts with us.

We also have a societal obligation to instill in our young people a sense of value, of self-worth and resilience. All too often children and young adults considering suicide lose sight of themselves, their talents, their potential in life, and all too often they lose sight of the love their families, friends, and communities have for them, as our friend from Oregon so eloquently described.

I am pleased our Nation has already taken positive steps toward better understanding the tragedy of youth suicide and its emotional and behavioral risk factors. Several recent reports like the President's New Freedom Commission on Mental Health, the National Strategy for Suicide Prevention, and the Surgeon General's Call to Action to Prevent Suicide have made youth suicide a top national public and mental health priority.

Today hundreds of community-based programs across the country offer a variety of early intervention and prevention services to thousands of children and young adults—services that include comprehensive screening, assessment, and individualized counseling. Every State and many tribal nations have begun developing or already have implemented a youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategy that coordinates appropriate services in schools, juvenile justice systems, foster care systems, mental health programs, substance abuse programs, and other youth-oriented settings.

Furthermore, the Federal Government has stepped up in its role in both supporting these community-based activities and conducting relevant research and data collection. Several mental health and public health agencies have shown a great interest in youth suicide, including the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, the Health Resources and Services Administration, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and the National Institutes of Health. However, despite these important gains, we still face significant challenges.

Today a large number of States, localities, tribes, and service providers are finding themselves with unprecedented budget deficits, making the establishment of new services and the retention of existing services increasingly more difficult.

Furthermore, youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies are often underfunded or understaffed to be properly effective. And while a number of Federal agencies have supported youth suicide activities, there have been no comprehensive interagency strategies implemented to share data, disseminate research, or evaluate the efficacy of youth suicide early intervention and prevention programs.

Today I am introducing bipartisan legislation with my colleagues Senators MIKE DEWINE, JACK REED, GORDON SMITH, HARRY REID, and DICK DURBIN, named in memory of Garrett Lee Smith. This legislation further supports the good work being done at the community level, the State level, and the Federal level with regard to youth suicide, early intervention and prevention in four principal ways.

First, it establishes new grant initiatives for the further development and expansion of youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies and the community-based services they seek to coordinate.

Second, it authorizes a dedicated technical assistance center to assist States, localities, tribes, and community service providers with planning, implementation, and evaluation of these strategies and services.

Third, it establishes a new grant initiative to enhance and improve early intervention and prevention services specifically designed for college-age students.

And last, it creates a new interagency collaboration to focus on policy development and the dissemination of data specifically pertaining to youth suicide. I continue to believe that funding for concrete, comprehensive, and effective remedies for the epidemic of youth suicide cannot be done by lawmakers on Capitol Hill alone. They must also come from individuals, such as doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists, counselors, nurses, teachers, advocates, clergymen, survivors, and affected families who are dedicated to this issue or spend each day with children and young adults who suffer from illnesses related to youth suicide.

I believe we have made an important first step with this legislation today. That step has been implemented by the comments of my colleagues on the floor of the Senate. However, I also know that our work is not done. I sincerely hope that as a society we can continue to work collectively both to understand better the tragedy of this incredible problem of youth suicide and to develop innovative and effective and public mental health initiatives that reach every child and young adult in this great Nation of ours, compassionate initiatives to give them encouragement, hope, and love, and most important, life.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, let me first congratulate my colleagues from Nevada and Oklahoma for their very moving statements in regard to their dads. Let me also say to my colleague from Oregon that his statement was certainly one of the most moving statements I think any of us have ever heard in this Senate Chamber. Our hearts, collectively as Senators, continue to go out to our colleague and Sharon for the loss of Garrett.

Senator SMITH and Sharon have taken their tragedy, the pain of this tragedy, the loss of Garrett and there is nothing in the world worse than the loss of a child—and focused it on trying to do good. We see it today with this legislation for which Senator SMITH has been such a strong advocate. We are on the Senate floor, frankly, because of him. We would not have been to this point without him, without his advocacy. We saw it in the testimony when Senator SMITH and Sharon came to our committee hearing that Senator DODD and I held several months ago. They publicly talked about Garrett's death; they talked about him and talked about the issue. Senator SMITH described earlier the community teen screening with sixth graders in Pendleton that they have established. So they are courageous. They have taken this immense pain and, in spite of that, in the face of that, they are doing something very positive.

Those of us in the Senate are blessed and we are burdened with the opportunity to use the bully pulpit of the Senate to focus public attention on issues. I say to my colleague that there are many parents, tragically, as he knows, who have suffered as he and Sharon have this year. He has the unique opportunity—and has taken that, as he is in a public spotlight; it is a burden he has, but he has taken that burden and done something with it. What he has done with it is he has taken that spotlight and used the bully pulpit of the Senate to talk to the American people about this issue. Many people today will watch this and many more will read about it tomorrow. There are many people who read about the committee hearing we held, and they heard when Senator SMITH and his wife talked about this issue. Many people they will never know have been impacted, or maybe they were alerted to a problem they might have with their child, and maybe parents were given inspiration and encouragement to seek help. These are things that individuals don't ever know about. But I know, and we all know, that what they have done has truly made a difference. This bill will truly make a difference.

I thank Senator DODD and Senator JACK REED for their work. This bill we are introducing today is a combination of two bills. One was introduced by Senator REED as the lead sponsor. It was his idea; he took the lead. I was the Republican cosponsor. We introduced a bill. The other bill was Senator DODD's bill. He was the lead on that, and I was the cosponsor. We worked on that bill together. This is a combination of those two bills that we bring to the floor today.

I also thank Senator HARRY REID for his great support and his work. I thank the majority leader. I thank Senator DASCHLE and I thank Senator GREGG. They all have been very supportive. We thank them for allowing us to bring this bill to the floor today.

We have held hearings on the mental health concerns of youth and children. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services, I have been able to do this. The one hearing we talked about, Senator DODD cochaired with me. At the hearing on youth suicide, it became clear that thorough and actionable plans are needed to deal with this issue affecting our children and young adults.

At that hearing, as I indicated, Senator SMITH, supported by his wife Sharon, courageously shared the story of their son Garrett. They told of his struggle, their family's brave struggle with his depression, and Garrett's struggle with that depression, a battle that he tragically lost this past September. In honor of their son, GORDON and Sharon are dedicated to helping other youth and their families who are struggling with mental illness.

At that same hearing in March, the Reverend Dr. Paul Tunkle courageously spoke of the loss of his daughter. Reverend Tunkle is an Episcopal priest now serving in Baltimore. His wife Judy is a psychotherapist. Their daughter Althea, or Lea to those close to her, began to exhibit symptoms of psychological problems when she was in grade school. She began to experience additional problems as she began her university studies. Her grades began to suffer. Exacerbating her mental health problems, Lea was raped while away at school. After attempting suicide twice, Lea killed herself on her third attempt at the age of 22.

Tragically, these stories that we have heard are not uncommon. Statistics tell us that approximately every 2 hours a person under the age of 25 commits suicide. We also know that from 1952 to 1995 the rate of suicide in children and young adults in this country tripled, and that between 1980 and 1997 the rate of suicide in 15- to 19-year-olds increased by 11 percent.

According to the National Institute of Mental Health, suicide was the 11th leading overall cause of death in the United States in the year 2001; however, it was the third leading cause of death for youths aged 15 to 24. Shockingly, we also know that suicides outnumber homicides 3 to 2 for the overall population. These alarming numbers emphasize the need for early intervention or prevention efforts. Too often, the signs may be subtle or hidden until it is too late. While research has created improved medications and methods for helping those with mental health problems to recover, there is still much work to be done in identifying those who need help.

Study has been done in identifying and categorizing the risk factors related to suicide. In children and youth, these are known to include depression, alcohol or drug use, physical or sexual abuse, and disruptive behavior. Of people who die from and who attempt suicide, many suffer from co-occurring mental health and substance abuse disorders. Children with these risk factors, as well as children who are known to be in situations at risk for acquiring them, should be included in comprehensive State plans.

Children and youth specifically addressed in State plans should include those who attend school, including colleges and universities, those already receiving substance abuse and mental health services, and those involved in the juvenile justice system, as well as those in foster care.

We also learned at our hearing that our colleges and universities are suffering under an ever-growing caseload and they need additional resources to help students in these critical years. We know that suicide is the second leading cause of death in college students today, and reports indicate there has been a dramatic increase in college students seeking care at campus counseling centers.

From 1992 to the year 2002, Big Ten Schools, for example, noticed a 42-percent increase in the number of students seen at these counseling centers. Surveys conducted over the past decade suggest the prevalence of depression among college students is growing and eclipses the rate of the general public. Many public and private schools have been dealing with budget crises recently which do not allow them to respond adequately for this growth in need. In fact, last year 27 percent of counseling centers reported cuts to their budgets.

The accreditation standards for university and college counseling centers recommend that the counselor-to-student ratio be 1 counselor per 1,000 to 1,500 students; however, alarmingly, the 2003 ratio in schools with over 15,000 students is instead 1 counselor per 2,500 students, and that is a problem. Due to these numbers, schools are reporting that students are forced to wait, sometimes days, to see a counselor. In the year 2002, 116 college students committed suicide; however, only 20 of these students had been seen by a college counselor before the suicide.

As a result of the need for increased attention to the problem of suicide and the need for increased access to help, Senators DODD, SMITH, JACK REED, HARRY REID, and I are introducing the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act. This bill will provide grants to States, tribes, and State-designated nonprofit organizations to create statewide plans for early intervention and prevention efforts in schools, juvenile justice systems, substance abuse programs, mental health programs, foster care systems, and other child and youth support organizations. These plans will seek to serve the children where the children are. This bill will help ensure that States with youth suicide rates that are higher than the national average are given preference so they are better equipped to combat this tragic problem.

This act also will authorize a suicide prevention resource center. This center will provide information, training, and technical assistance to States, tribes, and nonprofit organizations involved in suicide prevention and intervention for a number of purposes, including the development of suicide prevention strategies, studying the costs, effectiveness of statewide strategies, analyzing how well new and existing suicide intervention techniques and technologies work, and promoting the sharing of data.

Further, the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act would provide competitive grants to institutions of higher education to create or expand mental and behavioral health services to students. These grants will help financially strapped college and university mental health centers obtain the necessary resources to serve the mental and behavioral health needs of the students.

Let me again thank my colleagues for their support of this very important legislation. Our children are simply too important to not properly address their mental health needs. This is a good bill, and it is the right thing to do.

I add one final comment. I think this bill will be signed into law. This bill will save lives. This bill will make a difference. I thank everyone who has worked so hard on it. I thank my colleague again for being the spark behind this. He has been the person who has been talking to Members, getting their support, making the plea. I thank him so very much for doing it.

We are going to pass this bill and it is going to make a difference, but there is something else we should be doing, and that is the Mental Health Parity Act. This Senate, this Congress, must get around to this bill. That bill also will save lives. It will make a difference. It will make mental health services available to people.

I see my colleague from New Mexico, who just walked into the Chamber. He has been an advocate for this bill. The time is ripe for the Mental Health Parity Act to come to the Senate floor, to be voted on, and to be passed. I thank my colleagues. I thank the Chair.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I join my colleagues, Senators SMITH, DODD, DEWINE, and REID, to discuss the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act which will be introduced today. I thank and commend them.

I particularly commend Senator GORDON SMITH. We are here today literally because he has worked tirelessly to bring this legislation to the Senate floor, to work with us and to advocate strenuously that this legislation come to the floor of the Senate today. It is rightfully designated the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act.

Garrett, unfortunately, struggled for years and sadly took his own life last September. We heard this afternoon the heartfelt words of his father talking about this wonderful young man. We all sense that as Garrett struggled, he did it with loving and caring parents.

As my colleague Senator DEWINE pointed out, the Smiths have taken their pain and transformed it into purposeful action to ensure that other families and other young people do not have to suffer and endure even today the pain that lingers at the loss of this fine young man, and I thank the Senator for his leadership and for his decent and gallant heart.

We are here today because we are responding to an extraordinary problem, a problem that seems to many of us to be difficult to comprehend: why a young person, in the prime of life, with so much ahead, would take their own life.

Sadly, suicide takes the lives of over 4,000 children and young adults each year. It is now the third leading cause of death among 10 to 24 year olds in America. The rate of suicide has tripled from 1952 to 1995. Yet despite the astounding statistics, we still do not fully understand what is driving so many young people to the extreme of taking their own life.

What we hope to achieve with this legislation is to show them that there is an answer, that suicide is not the way out, that there is help for whatever is troubling them, and that they can live lives that are full, happy, and complete.

A Chronicle of Higher Education survey found that rates for depression in college freshmen are on the rise. Without treatment, the Chronicle points out, depressed adolescents are at risk for social failure, social isolation, promiscuity, self-medication with drugs and alcohol, and suicide. That is a description of failure, not a description of successful living.

A 2003 Gallagher's Survey of Counseling Center Directors found that 85 percent of counseling centers on college campuses are reporting an increase in the number of students in need of services.

Mr. President, 81 percent were concerned that increasing numbers of students are there with severe psychological problems; 67 percent reported a need for more psychiatric services, and 63 percent reported problems with growing demand for services without an appropriate increase in resources. That is why, working with Senator DEWINE, working with my colleagues Senator DODD and Senator SMITH, we have incorporated in this act support for college counseling centers. It is not coincidental that Garrett was beginning his first year at the University of Utah, had left home, was in a new environment, was struggling with all of the powerful forces of independence and of change young people experience when they go off to school. That is a particularly vulnerable time.

We understand college is a time of great intellectual development, but it is also a time of extraordinary personal and interpersonal growth and change. When children go off to college, we need to make sure they have the support they need during this critical transitional period.

Additionally, there are many adults going to college and they have a particular dilemma of balancing their studies with their family responsibilities. Yet campus after campus lacks the resources to support their counseling staffs to deal with these real issues, these real psychological issues.

Part of what we seek to do through the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act is ensure colleges and universities around the country have the resources to reach out to students, to provide essential mental and behavioral health services, and to educate families about potential signs of trouble.

Part of this process is not only treating the youngster, it is making parents aware of these signs so they can intervene successfully and in a timely fashion. Our colleges and universities are struggling to address the wide range of problems experienced by students—drug and alcohol problems, eating disorders, depression, schizophrenia, suicide attempts. With insufficient resources, many schools offer limited or very cursory services to students. We hope to begin to change that with this legislation.

We hope through this legislation to begin to shine a light on the growing problem of youth suicide. This legislation provides resources and technical assistance to States to develop and implement robust early intervention and suicide prevention strategies across the Nation. It also seeks to address the overwhelming need for mental and behavioral health services on college campuses, as I have discussed. This is an important bipartisan measure and a tribute, a fitting tribute to Garrett and to the faith and dedication and decency of the Smith family, GORDON and Sharon.

I again express my thanks to Senator DODD and Senator DEWINE. When you look at legislation in this body that attempts to provide practical support and help to young people, you usually find two names on the legislation—DODD and DEWINE. It is always a privilege to join these gentlemen.

I also want to thank Senator HARRY REID, who spoke movingly of his own experience, the death of his father through suicide. Senator DON NICKLES similarly gave a moving tribute to Sharon and GORDON. Let me also thank Dr. Harsh Trivedi, a fellow in my office, a psychiatrist who is now on a fellowship up in Boston. He did most of the work on the Campus Care and Counseling Act, which is the legislation incorporated in this act. I also thank Lisa German of my staff, who does so much to help us on these issues, and also Catherine Finley on Senator SMITH's staff, who has been of remarkable help and assistance.

Let me thank the leadership, Senator DASCHLE, Senator FRIST, Senator REID, Senator NICKLES, because they let us bring this bill to the floor today to move forward to pass it.

This is an example of the kind of work we can do when we work together, the kind of work the American people demand of us. It is, as I said, a fitting tribute to Garrett and I hope an enduring tribute to his father who worked so hard to get it to the floor today and to pass it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the leadership on the majority side asked if we could move the vote to an earlier time tonight, rather than have the cloture vote in the morning. I am sorry to report that the Senator from Delaware, Senator CARPER, has indicated he will not agree with that. All other Members on our side have agreed to the vote tonight. It is now set for the morning.

I apologize to all my colleagues that we cannot do this tonight. There are a lot of things Members have to do tonight, and especially tomorrow. It would save everyone a lot of time.

I want the record to reflect that I think it is unwise that that is the case. I told my friend from Delaware I would indicate he is the problem with our having the vote earlier.

I apologize, because I have had a number of calls from Senators on this side of the aisle. We thought we were going to be able to work that out, but we have been unable to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

CAMPUS CARE AND COUNSELING ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I first want to say to Senator SMITH, I want you to know that since we weren't going to do anything today, I had gone home. I don't live very far, so it is not a terrible sacrifice. But I was in less than good clothes, starting a restful evening a little early when I heard what was going on and I decided to quickly—maybe I look that way—dress up and come over here, after I heard you speak.

Let me say to you, I am very proud of you. I am not totally familiar with the bill, but I hope you will make me a cosponsor. I ask consent that Senator HUTCHISON be made a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to talk to the Senate today about a very sad situation. I want to address these remarks at a couple of Republicans, whose names I don't know, but I will soon, who have holds on the most important bill that has to do with mental illness in America. I am very hopeful we can carve out a niche as you desire, to try to give some help to those who are suffering so much that they commit suicide, and all of the various participants in that activity from mothers and fathers to doctors to counselors—everyone. I am hopeful we will get that done.

Second, I didn't hear anyone mention, but I will mention to you, Senator, the doctors, the general practitioners who see thousands and thousands of our young teenage men and women who are most vulnerable. Maybe we need an annual crash course for them because they are not seeing the basic signals of mental illness in their patients. I tell you, I am not a doctor and I am not a genius, but I can tell you, because I have already learned, what I would look for in a patient who came to me for anything so I could rule out whether they had depression; so I could rule out whether they were manic depressive, or one of the other serious mental illnesses. But I am afraid we are going to have to start with some system of insisting that our doctors find out about it as the first and biggest clearance mechanism in the United States.

Having said that, I want to discuss a little bit about the worst thing happening in the United States about mental illness. First, Senator SMITH, you are speaking of the effect of mental illness. Because someone is a depressive, they have an illness, and the illness may or may not lead to suicide. But there are five major illnesses that are mental, and any of them might cause suicide. But the most important thing is all of them cause tremendous sorrow and tremendous grief and tremendous misunderstanding on the part of parents and friends of those who have the disease.

I might say, Senators, we have at least moved away from the stigma and everybody is at least willing to talk about these as illnesses. Everyone is talking about how do we help rather than how do we hide.

Everyone is talking about getting these people who have symptoms to a good doctor so they can get both discussions going and medicines that are so helpful. Everybody is talking about that. But, my friends, the real problem is all children with these diseases are not the fortunate children of that Senator. They are the unfortunate children of poor people, of people who make a little bit of money, with a loving mother and father and a schizophrenic child who perhaps are living on $25,000 a year. The problem is they don't have enough money to have caregivers help them. Guess what. The insurance companies don't help them either because we have a definition of sick and illness in the insurance policies that is 50 years old. They did not know anything about mental illness. So they ruled it out.

I don't know if you know this, but almost every group insurance policy in America writes coverage for cancer, coverage for tuberculosis, and coverage for every major disease. But when it comes to mental illness, it is either stricken or it has an asterisk down at the bottom. It gets significantly less coverage, or none.

There are parents who have given up on their children because they cannot pay the bills anymore. They go look for their children in the slums; they go look for their children in jails, because there are more children with mental illness in the jails of America than in the hospitals to take care of the mentally ill people. Why are they there? Because nobody takes care of them. Why doesn't anybody take care of them? Because most people went broke trying to take care of them.

Sitting up there at that desk is a bill called parity—equal—parity of insurance coverage for the mentally ill. It has been cleared on that side. It came out of committee. And somehow or other a couple of Republican Senators have a hold on it. I will try to find out who they are and I will go beg them to let us pass the parity bill. But I tell you: If it doesn't work, we are going to take it up. I know the leader wants to get bills through expeditiously. But I am going to tell him tonight, patience has run thin and we have to get it done. It has been worked through the committee chaired by JUDD GREGG. He has one amendment. That is great. He has at least told us he wants one hour. But others are not even letting us know who they are, and they are holding up this bill.

Let me tell you what happened to America. America has the greatest medicine, the greatest services, and the greatest caretaking machine for the hearts of our people. If you have something wrong with your heart, they know how to take care of it. They will put you in a hospital. There is coverage by insurance if you have group insurance.

In the meantime, the tests, the knowledge, the information about heart conditions gets a lot of resources. Clinics are built and hospitals are built because there are resources because heart is covered by insurance.

We take care of our hearts and we fail to take care of our heads, our brains. We take care of our heart and spend money on it, and we will not spend anything on mental illnesses. It is no longer a joke. It is no longer a stigma. Everybody around knows. Our President, as recently as 6 months ago, said, Don't bother me. I already know it is a disease. Let us find some way to help. That is what I say. If your bill does it, let's pass it. I am on it. I would like to pass it.

But we are ready to pass the most significant bill to help anyone who has any of the major illnesses and be sure that the group insurance policy covers them. Thus, their parents can take them to doctors, parents can see to it their children get medical care rather than the asterisk on the policy that says you get less or nothing if the disease or illness is mental illness.

I came down here not because I wanted to set aside or argue or contend that I have the most important bill. There were 80 Senators on this bill at one time—79, bipartisan, the bill for parity.

I submit to my friend GORDON SMITH, who came to the floor and told us from his heart what this is all about, that you would agree and probably would agree wholeheartedly that all of the medicines and doctors you called upon to help your son did something good. You probably are not bashful or regretful of what you paid. But how much worse would you be in your heart if you couldn't afford it and you had an insurance policy from your business group and you took them to a doctor and they said schizophrenia isn't covered because it wasn't covered when we knew nothing about it, so we are going to leave it uncovered, even when we know something about it. It is still exempt.

This bill at the desk for parity is not a big cost. People say it is going to break business, and insurance companies are going to have to raise rates. We think we know what that is going to be. We are prepared to answer it.

But let me tell you, I am as capitalist as anyone here. I am as concerned about business and business men and women as anyone here. But this society has a real problem when it exempts insurance companies from having to pay the cost of mental illness while they pay the cost of all other illnesses. That isn't right.

I saw my friend Senator REID on the floor speaking about his family and his father. I saw the great Senator, Senator SMITH. I saw Senator NICKLES also. I don't have to tell you about my daughter. You all know about my daughter. I have eight children and I have one who has been sick since she was 13. So I know all about this. I am glad we can afford to pay for what she needs. But I would feel bad if I had an insurance policy and it covered everybody else in my family for diabetes and a heart condition and didn't cover her.

I think we have to pass the bill. I am really tired. When it comes to pushing, I am probably as easy a pushover as anyone around, so I just let it go by. It will come up someday. But I am saying it is going to get passed in this Senate before we get out of here.

I am going to tell our leader he has been patient with me. We weren't going to do anything until it got out of committee. We told you that. We worked hard and long to get it out of committee. It took a long time.

Now it is sitting at that desk. We are taking up all kinds of things while we are not able to send a signal to the 7½ million or 8 million parents who need this bill, who need some indication that we care, that we are not going to have an insurance policy that covers our heart and not an insurance policy that covers our brain.

That is what the issue is about. Can you imagine a country as great as ours saying, Well, when we first started writing health insurance policies we didn't know that schizophrenia was a disease. We did not know manic depression was a disease. We did not know severe depression was a disease.

We go through the years and we find out these illnesses are diseases, but since they weren't originally known to be a disease, we are going to let group insurance policies continue to exempt them.

Now we know. There is no one, I say to my friend Senator DODD, who has been a greater help on discussing the issue of whether these dread mental illnesses I have just enumerated are illnesses or diseases. Yet we let insurance companies continue to write policies as if we did not know it was a disease.

From my standpoint, I will do anything in any area that will help us help those with mental illness. If you have a bill that will help prevent suicide, I am for it. But I can state that if we do not have a bill that forces group insurance policies to cover mental illness as other illnesses, the effect of the suicide bill is going to be minimized to the extent that parents cannot afford what they need.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I would be pleased to yield.

Mr. REID. On our side, as the Senator knows, we have pushed very hard for this bill authored by you and the late Senator Paul Wellstone. It was an odd couple, Wellstone-Domenici, but it was one bound with friendship. The two Senators found a place where they agreed and they went to all ends to make sure that legislation passed.

As the Senator told me when I was talking a few minutes ago, we need to do this for a lot of reasons, but one is to respect the memory of Paul Wellstone.

On our side, we would be willing to take up that bill and spend 1 hour. We will do it at midnight, 6 o'clock in the morning. One hour is all we want. We will only take 30 minutes of that hour. I want everyone to understand, on our side, we want 30 minutes. If that is too much time, we will cut it down.

Does the Senator understand we will do everything? Everyone knows we have worked closely together for so many years on appropriations. What the Senator has done on this mental health parity will go down in the history books. We need to make sure it passes, and the history books have something definitive, not a matter only initiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DOMENICI be added as an original cosponsor of the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act, along with Senator CORZINE and my colleague Senator WYDEN, from Oregon, and Senator HATCH, who have also requested they be added as original cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I say to my friend, the Senator from New Mexico, in the darkest of hours after my son's death, his call was one of the most important that I received because he has struggled with his daughter. He has now spoken here with a passion on mental health issues so that I think all America better understands, if they listened to him.

PETE DOMENICI of New Mexico was the first person who said to me that my son had an illness that I could not fix. My son had an illness not unlike leukemia or cancer or congestive heart failure; that it was, in fact, a lethal illness and not to beat myself up about it. I beat myself up, anyway—I still do—wondering, would have, could have, should have, but PETE DOMENICI helped this Senator to go back to work, to find joy again in living, and to share with him the passion that comes from suffering and the understanding that comes from a loved one who is beyond rational reach.

I have come to believe that it is true, what PETE DOMENICI taught me in my darkest hour; that is, that mental health is just as real a problem as physical health and that we need to learn more about it. We need more professionals trained about it; we need more focus on it. It has ramifications for business that result in lost worktime, no-shows, layoffs, family tragedies.

With a little bit of intervention, a little more compassion, we can get ahead of this and begin to treat it as we might other diseases.

I admit, we have a lot more to learn. My bill, our bill, does not include parity. My bill is a start. My bill is a slice of the problem. The Senator from New Mexico is right. His bill takes on the whole problem in a way that ultimately we need to resolve as a Congress and as a country.

I thank Senator DOMENICI for listening to me, for putting his clothes back on, for coming back on down here, sharing with me, with all of America who care about this issue, that this problem is bigger than my bill addresses, our bill addresses, but it is legislating within the realm of the possible.

It is a good beginning, an important beginning. Perhaps it is aimed at just the most vulnerable among us, and that is our youth who need a little more help than we have been giving as a country.

I thank the Senator. I turn back his time to him.

Mr. DODD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me make an observation and I will yield.

When one is involved in an issue such as this for 15 years, as I have, you go to a lot of meetings. You go to a lot of meetings with mothers and fathers, with groups of those who are mentally ill. We hear the saddest stories one could ever imagine.

I remember a gentleman and his wife came up to me and said: We have two children.

I asked: Where are they?

She looked up at him as if, Should we tell him? He was a CPA, very proud. She said: Tell him. He said: Senator, we don't know where our two children are. Well, we think they are in the slums of some city or in the jails of some city.

I said: What are you talking about?

He said: Well, they are both sick with schizophrenia and we don't have any more money to pay for them. We are broke.

I said: Do you have insurance?

He said: Oh, we have a lot of insurance, but the insurance doesn't cover our kids' illnesses. So we spent everything we had and then they got arrested because they did not act right. They don't act right. They do everything strange. They steal; if they see these little carts, they steal hotdogs. Maybe somebody arrested them for that and put them in jail.

When people start telling these stories, it is not an accident, they did not tell of a one-time event. You know there has to be a lot more, right? You run into one in your own constituency—if you start running into one, two, or three problems that had to do with your mail, you would come home and ask: What is wrong with the mail? You don't say: What is wrong with the letter that came from HARRY REID that you didn't answer, but you know something is wrong when you have two or three people telling you, for a couple of days, about this thing that I just described.

It is a big problem. I can tell you there is no reason it has to be.

Last, there are no shelters. There is nobody in the business of providing facilities because there is no money to pay for anything, right? If money flows from the back of a mentally ill person—there is a little knapsack on him that says ''insurance''—if it flows from him, it will flow to businessmen who might build these kinds of facilities. But nobody is going to do that because there are no resources.

So with that, instead of yielding to my wonderful friend, Senator DODD, I am just going to yield the floor.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORNYN). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I was going to ask my colleague to yield, but he has spoken eloquently enough. I was just going to once again thank him and Nancy, his lovely spouse, as well, who have been real champions on this issue for as long as I have been here, almost a quarter of a century.

I was thinking of the number of times, in my own public service of now almost 30 years, that I have been with audiences—50 people, 100 people, 200 people—talking about this subject matter. I oftentimes will turn to the audience and say to the audience: I want any of you here who have not been affected by this issue to raise your hand. If there is someone in the audience out here who has not had a father or a mother or a sister or a best friend or a cousin who has been affected by one form of mental illness or another, just raise your hand. I am curious to know if there is anybody here who has not been touched by this issue. I have never, in my 30 years of public service, in my home State of Connecticut, when I have ever raised this issue, ever had anybody raise their hand—in 30 years. Everyone—every single American—has been touched by this issue.

You would think, in this kind of environment, when we all understand this issue—and we have gone through one of the most moving moments of my 24 years in the Senate today, listening to the eloquent comments of my colleagues from Oregon and Nevada and Oklahoma speaking about their own personal experiences—you might think at a moment like this we would be able to come together to not only deal with the legislation that we have authored together to deal specifically with teenage suicide and related issues, but we might also find some time, right now, in the midst of this, to bring up and vote on a bill that enjoys overwhelming support in this body.

It would be one thing if the Senator from New Mexico and others who have joined him in this matter were in a minority, but there is a majority of us who believe exactly as does the Senator from New Mexico, that it is the 21st century—we are not in the 17th, 18th, 19th, or even 20th century—and we are still treating this issue as if somehow it belongs in the recesses and shadows and darkness of some corner, despite the fact that almost every single one of our fellow citizens understands this issue because they have confronted it very directly in their own homes and in their own neighborhoods. Yet we can't seem to find, as the Senator from Nevada has suggested, the 15, 20, 30 minutes or an hour to give us a chance to vote. Maybe people will want to vote against it. If they do, that is their business. But I believe there is a majority of us who would like to see this get done.

So I want to say to my friend from New Mexico, who I have worked with on this issue—and I appreciate our colleague from Nevada raising the name of Paul Wellstone, who was a great champion of this issue as well during his service in the Senate—that I don't know when this is going to happen—I hope sooner rather than later—but I want my friend from New Mexico to know: Don't you ever doubt for a single second this is not going to get done. It may not be today and it may not be tomorrow or next week, but I promise you that before long—hopefully before this session ends, if not sooner—we are going to get this legislation passed, and we are going to give the President an opportunity to sign it into law to begin to make a difference for the people in this country. So then I can not only ask the question to those audiences in my own State, ''Is there anyone who has not been affected by this?'' but I can ask, ''Is there anybody who cannot get help?'' because we have insisted the insurance companies and others start treating this condition as if it were any other ailment people can get coverage for and their families get protection.

Once again, I thank my friend from Oregon, and I thank his lovely wife Sharon and their family for their courage and their willingness to share with the country their feelings.

There have been many moments of pride when you watch a piece of legislation become law. There are very few that will equal the moment we are going to have this evening. My hope is that we will adopt this legislation named after Garrett.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, one of our very able Senate staff brought to me something I need to share with everyone here today. This is a report from the New York Times, dated today. Among other things, it says:

Congressional investigators—
