This was a House committee, which I am sure does competent work—

said Wednesday that 15,000 children with psychiatric disorders were improperly incarcerated last year because no mental health services were available.

This was a report. This came out yesterday. The study:

. . . found that children as young as 7 were incarcerated because of a lack of access to mental health care. More than 340 detention centers, two-thirds of those that responded to the survey, said youths with mental disorders were being locked up because there was no place else for them to go while awaiting treatment. Seventy-one centers in 33 states said they were holding mentally ill youngsters with no charges.

The 15,000 youths awaiting mental health services accounted for 8 percent of all youngsters in the responding detention centers.

Dr. Ken Martinez of the New Mexico Department of Children, Youth and Families said the data showed ''the criminalization of mental illness'' as ''juvenile detention centers have become de facto psychiatric hospitals for mentally ill youth.''

Mental health advocates, prison officials, and juvenile court judges all testified and recommended three types of solutions. . . .

The main one is ''more extensive insurance coverage.''

Just a couple more things from this same report.

In Tennessee, a juvenile detention center administrator said:

Those with depression are locked up alone to contemplate suicide. I guess you get the picture.

That is a direct quote.

Carol Carothers, who directs the Maine chapter of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, says:

Surely we would not dream of placing a child with another serious illness, like cancer for example, in a juvenile detention center to await a hospital bed or community based treatment. It is outrageous that we do this to children with mental illness.

So I say to my distinguished friend from New Mexico, thank you for coming down today and enlarging this debate. It needs to be enlarged. We so believe that we need to pass Senator SMITH's legislation that I proudly cosponsor. But we also have to move to the next step because the next step is just as important, if not more so, because it includes so many more people.

The Senator from New Mexico is known for a lot of things, but his resume will never have anything on it more important. I repeat, we need to get it passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I received a note from Senator HILLARY CLINTON asking that she be added as an original cosponsor to the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act. So on her behalf, I ask unanimous consent that she be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this afternoon, I have listened to my colleagues speak courageously about their family members they have lost to suicide. My heart goes out to all of them, especially, my colleague and dear friend, Senator GORDON SMITH. By speaking openly about the circumstances of his son, Garrett's death, he has raised awareness to the serious matter of youth suicide. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act. I believe the Senate will approve this legislation today due primarily to Senator SMITH's courage to speak openly about his own family's experience.

This legislation is necessary because it raises awareness of the alarmingly high rate of youth suicide—it is much higher than most would believe. Suicide is the third leading cause of death for young people aged 15 to 24, and the fourth leading cause of death for children between 10 and 14. My own State of Utah is ranked among the top 10 states in the nation for suicide.

I cosponsored this bill because it provides grant funding to states so each may develop a youth suicide and intervention strategy through the administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration in order to prevent teen suicide. This money may be used to develop statewide early prevention and suicide intervention strategies in schools, educational institutions, juvenile justice systems, substance abuse programs, mental health programs, foster care programs and other child and youth support organizations.

The bill also creates a federal Suicide Technical Assistance Center to provide guidance to state and local grantees on establishing standards for data collection and the evaluation of this data. Finally, this legislation provides grant funding to colleges and universities to establish or enhance their mental health outreach and treatment centers and improve their youth suicide prevention and intervention programs.

I became deeply interested in this issue when I found out that my home State of Utah suicide rates for those ages 15 to 19 have increased almost 150 percent in the last 20 years. According to the CDC, in the mid-1990s, Utah had the tenth highest suicide rate in the country and was 30 percent above the U.S. rate. This is one statistical measure on which I want to see my state at the bottom.

Teen suicide is an issue that is rapidly becoming a crisis not only in my State of Utah but throughout the entire country. Young people in the United States are taking their own lives at alarming rates. The trend of teen suicide is seeing suicide at younger ages, with the United States suicide rate for individuals under 15 years of age increasing 121 percent from 1980 to 1992.

Suicide is the second leading cause of death among college students. In a 1997 study, 21 percent of the nation's high school students reported serious thoughts about attempting suicide, with 15.7 percent making a specific plan. Although numerous symptoms, diagnoses, traits, and characteristics have been investigated, no single fact or set of factors has ever come close to predicting suicide with any accuracy.

We need to understand what the barriers are that prevent youth from receiving treatment so that we can facilitate the development of model treatment programs and public education and awareness efforts. This bill provides the funding to get these types of initiatives started.

Again, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation and I commend my colleague, Senator GORDON SMITH for his commitment and dedication on this matter. I know it is such a difficult subject for him but his openness today will make a difference tomorrow.

In fact, I believe our floor discussion today on the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act has already made a difference because families who have lost someone to suicide now know that they are not alone. And, if one life is saved because of our consideration of this bill today, we have done our job.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I might add, I think Senator KENNEDY as well wants to be added as a cosponsor. I ask unanimous consent that Senator KENNEDY be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I do not know if there is any further discussion on this subject matter. If not, I want to move back to the subject matter of the bill.

I see my colleague from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask if I might speak for a minute.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to say that the parity bill, which is now at the desk, had to go through a standing committee. Senator KENNEDY is the ranking member of that committee, I say to Senator DODD. I thank him because he was pushing very hard for a long time that we get that bill taken care of. It took a long time, but it is out now, and it is in a form that very few can object to.

So I say thank you to Senator DODD and Senator REID for giving me the reassurance that we are going to get it done. I cannot believe we are so inept that we cannot. I will, because of tonight, reinstate my dedication, and we will get it done before the session is over for sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DODD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be added as an original cosponsor of the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I want to let my colleagues know what I am going to do at the end of these remarks. So that there will be no surprises, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the anticipated vote on cloture that is going to occur later today or tomorrow morning be vitiated indefinitely. I am not making that motion yet, but I am going to make the motion. I want to give them notice so they can find someone here who may want to object. I am going to make the motion because my view is that we have worked long and hard on getting this class action reform bill done. This bill is not perfect, but it is a reasonable bipartisan compromise that will reform the nation's class action system.

Having worked on this legislation last fall with a number of my colleagues, we now find ourselves in the middle of July dealing with this issue. I still have never received an adequate explanation of why this matter was not brought to the floor in January, February, March, April, or any point earlier. Why we waited until as late as we have to bring up an issue that has been as important as this makes little sense.

But my plea to the leadership, particularly the majority leader, is to not insist upon this cloture vote right now. Instead, I would like to give the leadership some ample time over the weekend to see if they can't fashion a compromise which would allow for the consideration of a number of amendments, both relevant and nonrelevant, as is the normal course of Senate business. Then we would come to a final vote and go to conference on the class action reform act.

I thought the decision to invoke cloture was one that was made last evening out of frustration because we were not getting very far with the class action reform bill. We began Tuesday night, but there were no votes that evening. On Wednesday morning, before any amendments were offered at all, the majority leader filled the amendment tree, precluding any amendments from being offered without getting his approval. Then Wednesday night, the decision was made to file cloture.

I am looking at a piece of correspondence dated July 6, the day before the decision to invoke cloture, from the National Association of Manufacturers. In his letter to all 100 Senators—dated July 6, not July 7—he notes a cloture vote will occur and that it is going to be considered a vote that will be scored on their annual legislative report card.

I ask unanimous consent to print the letter in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 6, 2004.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the 14,000 member companies of the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM), including more than 10,000 small and medium-sized manufacturers, I urge you to vote for S. 2062, the Class Action Fairness Act; vote in favor of cloture; and vote against all amendments except managers' amendments.

Created for the purpose of efficiently addressing large numbers of similar claims, far too many class action lawsuits are brought solely for settlement value and fees as opposed to helping aggrieved consumers. The Class Action Fairness Act would help mitigate the current situation by giving federal courts original jurisdiction over class action lawsuits where diversity of citizenship occurs and by creating a ''Bill of Rights'' for class members to stem the most flagrant abuses of the current system. Federal courts more consistently decide when class actions should be allowed, and these courts are better equipped to deal with complex cases involving interstate commerce fairly and efficiently. The current system allows plaintiff-friendly jurisdictions to unduly influence national policy through litigation.

S. 2062 does not make any changes to substantive law. Rather, it is a reasonable response to an unanticipated problem with the federal rules of judicial procedure and simply reinforces the intent of the Founders that lawsuits involving litigants from different states should be heard in federal court. The NAM believes that this bipartisan legislation will increase judicial efficiency and provide a forum better suited to adjudicating complex class action litigation.

Votes for cloture and in favor of S. 2062, the Class Action Fairness Act, and against any weakening amendments (including those that would endanger final passage), substitutions or motions to recommit will be considered for designation as Key Manufacturing Votes in the NAM voting record for the 108th Congress.

Sincerely,

JERRY JASINOWSKI,
President.

Mr. DODD. My point is, I would have thought this letter might have been dated on July 7, not the day before the decision to invoke cloture. It raises some suspicion that maybe the intention was all along to file cloture and not to give us a chance to go through the normal processes of debate and amendments.

Apparently the fix was in even before we started, which indicates to this Senator that the intention was never to get to this bill. There were numerous meetings over the last several. One of the things we talked about was the importance of setting aside an adequate amount of time for the full consideration of this bill.

The Democratic leader offered a proposal of limiting several nongermane amendments and a limited number of relevant amendments. The majority leader countered and offered to have even fewer nongermane amendments and an unlimited amount of germane or relevant amendments. I was mystified by that offer because had it been accepted, we could have spent weeks on this bill without ever invoking cloture if we had had hundreds of amendments filed that were germane to the underlying bill.

I am convinced there is still a formulation of germane/nongermane amendments that would allow us to consider those in a relatively expedited fashion and then get to final passage of the class action reform bill. My plea will be at the appropriate time that we vitiate the cloture vote, let the leaders over the weekend see if they can't come up with some formulation on amendments, and then next week or so to return to the legislation.

It is a great travesty that we are going to abandon this bill many of us have worked long and hard on because a small minority are unhappy over the possibility that we might consider as amendments several proposals that enjoy broad support in this institution. I realize that can be difficult. But nonetheless, it seems to me you don't shut down the underlying bill entirely because there are some proposals that may be offered that are unappealing to only a handful. Yet that is the situation in which we find ourselves.

For those who have worked on this, we are about to miss this opportunity, maybe not only for this Congress but for many years to come. That can happen. I have been around here long enough to know if you don't strike when the iron is hot, you may lose the opportunity for a long time down the road.

I appeal to the majority leader, who filed the cloture petition last evening, to vitiate that cloture motion. Give himself, the Democratic leader, and others who are interested a chance over the next several days to see if they can't come up with a formulation that will allow for the consideration of several amendments under time agreements. That ought to be the way we proceed, rather than abandoning this effort.

I am told the next two issues to be brought up—and the minority whip can correct me if I am wrong—are a constitutional amendment on gay marriage and a flag-burning constitutional amendment, neither of which have any chance of passage in this body. I don't believe anyone agrees there is any chance of them becoming the law of the land. Yet we are going to shove class action reform, based on the decision of the majority leader, off the table, maybe permanently, in order to consider two matters that have no chance of being adopted whatsoever.

If that is in fact the situation, then those who have been such strong supporters of this proposal outside of this Chamber ought to understand what the game is. As I have often said, I was born at night, but not last night. I think I understand what is going on here. Maybe all this time was only a game to bring the issue up with the full knowledge that once you close the opportunity for further amendments, you are then guaranteeing the outcome we are about to have.

I am terribly disappointed, after a lot of time being spent on this effort, that we have come to this particular moment. We just listened to the eloquent comments of our colleague from Oregon on legislation that will be adopted later this evening or next week dealing with teenage suicide. We have listened to the Senator from New Mexico, Mr. DOMENICI, who has worked for 15 years on trying to achieve parity in the provisions providing coverage for people with mental illnesses. There is a significant majority of us in this body who believe that legislation ought to be adopted and then sent to the House for their consideration. They may reject it. It may not be adopted in conference, but we owe those who have fought long and hard a chance to vote on these measures. Certainly the American public might be more impressed with the Senate if we were to deal with the issue of mental health rather than with the issue of gay marriage or flag burning.

Literally thousands of cases, I am told, by people out there are being filed in State courts when they belong in Federal courts. I am a strong supporter of that effort. Are people here to tell me the flag-burning amendment and a gay marriage constitutional amendment are more important than dealing with reforming the class action system or the issue of mental health parity? I hate to see what the outcome would be if I polled the American public what they felt about the priorities of the Senate so close to the election.

What issues would America like to see us address? We have the issue of the minimum wage. Senator CRAIG of Idaho has an issue dealing with immigration and joblessness which enjoys the cosponsorship of three-quarters of the Members of this body and the support of the White House. We can't get it to the floor of the Senate. We have the provisions offered by our colleagues from Hawaii who are seeking some support for legislation that is critically important to their State. I mentioned the minimum wage. I mentioned mental health parity. These are only some of the issues.

On the question of importation of drugs, we are constantly being told that matter is going to come to the Senate floor for debate. Yet we are finding all of these issues being scuttled, including class action reform, to the sidelines so we can deal with a couple of issues that have limited support in this Chamber and I think marginal support if people thought about them out across the country.

So I am disappointed by the priorities here. I realize the majority has the right to set the agenda; it is their business to set the agenda. The majority party controls this Chamber, they control the other body, and they control the White House. They set the agenda. They have decided that the agenda—America's agenda—ought not to be class action reform, ought not to be mental health parity, ought not to be the minimum wage, ought not to be immigration reforms, which the Latino and Hispanic community and agribusinesses care about so much, and ought not to be the legislation offered by my colleague from Hawaii. Instead, it ought to be gay marriage and flag burning, neither of which have any chance of being adopted by this body.

My colleagues know full well constitutional amendments require supermajorities in order to leave here for consideration by the various States.

I see the presence of a colleague on the other side. I wanted to make sure someone was here before I make a unanimous consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that the motion to invoke cloture, scheduled for tomorrow morning, be vitiated indefinitely, and that the reason for doing it is to give the leadership an opportunity to try to formulate a structure that will allow for the consideration of the class action reform bill in some manner that we can all endorse, support, and allow us to get to that issue. I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I respectfully object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

SENATE INTELLIGENCE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, tomorrow's report of the Senate Intelligence Committee will be intensely and extensively critical of the CIA for its intelligence failures and mischaracterizations regarding Iraq's possession of weapons of mass destruction. That report is an accurate and a hard-hitting and well-deserved critique of the CIA.

It is, of course, but half of the picture. Earlier today I released an example of the other half.

A few days ago the CIA finally answered, in an unclassified form, the question I have been asking them about whether the Intelligence Community believes that a meeting between an Iraqi intelligence official and Mohamed Atta, one of the 9/11 hijackers, occurred in Prague in the months before al-Qaida's attack in America on 9/11. The answer of the CIA illustrates the point that tomorrow's Intelligence Committee report is extremely useful regarding the CIA's failure, but it does not address another central issue—the administration's exaggerations of the intelligence that the CIA provided to them. That is left for the second phase of the Intelligence Committee's investigation.

This newly released, unclassified statement by the CIA demonstrates that it was the administration, not the CIA, that exaggerated the connections between Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida. The new CIA answer states that the CIA finds no credible information that the April 2001 meeting occurred and, in fact, that it is unlikely that it did occur.

A bit of history. On December 9, 2001, Tim Russert asked the Vice President whether Iraq was involved in the September 11 attack. The Vice President replied:

It's been pretty well confirmed that he [Mohamed Atta] did go to Prague and he did meet with a senior official of the Iraqi intelligence service in Czechoslovakia last April, several months before the attack.

Vice President CHENEY also said in his interview with CNBC on June 17 of this year that the report from the Czechs was evidence that Iraq was involved in the 9/11 attacks. In his interview with the Rocky Mountain News on January 9 of this year, the Vice President also said that the alleged meeting between the hijacker, Atta, and an Iraqi intelligence official in Prague a few months before 9/11 ''possibly tied the two together to 9/11.''

President Bush frequently exaggerated the overall relationship between al-Qaida and Saddam Hussein. For instance, on the deck of the aircraft carrier, President Bush stated:

The liberation of Iraq is a crucial advance in the campaign against terror. We have removed an ally of al-Qaida.

Now, relative to the alleged Prague meeting itself, Vice President CHENEY continues the misleading rhetoric by stating that we cannot prove one way or another that the so-called Prague meeting occurred. Vice President CHENEY said on June 17 on CNBC:

We have never been able to prove that there was a connection there on 9/11. The one thing we had is the Iraq—the Czech intelligence service report saying that Mohamed Atta had met with a senior Iraqi intelligence official at the embassy on April 9, 2001. That's never been proven; it's never been refuted.

But what the Vice President continues to leave out is the critical second half of the CIA's now unclassified assessment that ''although we cannot rule it out, we are increasingly skeptical that such a meeting occurred.''

The Vice President also omits the key CIA statement:

In the absence of any credible information that the April 2001 meeting occurred, we assess that Atta would have been unlikely to undertake the substantial risk of contacting any Iraqi official as late April 2001, with the plot already well along toward execution.

In summary, the CIA says there is no credible evidence that the meeting occurred, and it is unlikely that it did occur. The American public was led to believe before the Iraq war that Iraq had a role in the 9/11 attack on America, and that the actions of al-Qaida and Iraq were ''part of the same threat,'' as Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz has put it.

Well, it was not the CIA that led the public to believe that; it was the leadership of this administration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that four documents, which I referred to in the body of my remarks, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESPONSE OF DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE GEORGE TENET TO SENATOR LEVIN QUESTION FOR THE RECORD, MARCH 9, 2004, ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE HEARING

Question 8. Director Tenet, do you believe it is likely that September 11 hijacker Muhammad Atta and Iraqi Intelligence Service officer Ahmed al-Ani met in Prague in April 2001, or do you believe it unlikely that the meeting took place?

Answer. Although we cannot rule it out, we are increasingly skeptical that such a meeting occurred. The veracity of the single-threaded reporting on which the original account of the meeting was based has been questioned, and the Iraqi official with whom Atta was alleged to have met has denied ever having met Atta.

We have been able to corroborate only two visits by Atta to the Czech Republic: one in late 1994, when he passed through enroute to Syria; the other in June 2000, when, according to detainee reporting, he departed for the United States from Prague because he thought a non-EU member country would be less likely to keep meticulous travel data.

In the absence of any credible information that the April 2001 meeting occurred, we assess that Atta would have been unlikely to undertake the substantial risk of contacting any Iraqi official as late as April 2001, with the plot already well along toward execution.

It is likewise hard to conceive of any single ingredient crucial to the plot's success that could only be obtained from Iraq.

In our judgment, the 11 September plot was complex in its orchestration but simple in its basic conception. We believe that the factors vital to success of the plot were all easily within al-Qa'ida's means without resort to Iraqi expertise: shrewd selection of operatives, training in hijacking aircraft, a mastermind and pilots well-versed in the procedures and behavior needed to blend in with US society, long experience in moving money to support operations, and the openness and tolerance of US society as well as the ready availability of important information about targets, flight schools, and airport and airline security practices.

NEW CIA RESPONSE RAISES QUESTION AGAIN: WHERE DOES VICE PRESIDENT CHENEY GET HIS INFORMATION?

On July 7th, I finally received an unclassified answer to a Question for the Record that

I had posed to Director of Central Intelligence George Tenet after he appeared before the Armed Services Committee on March 9, 2004. I am releasing this response today, because it is further evidence that Vice President Cheney has and continues to misstate and exaggerate intelligence information to the American public. This pattern, the record of which has continued to grow over time suggests that Vice President Cheney is getting his intelligence from outside of the U.S. Intelligence Community. In February I asked him to clarify the basis for some of his statements, but he has not yet responded to my request (letter attached). I am therefore left to continue wondering what his sources are.

ALLEGED ATTA MEETING IN PRAGUE

Vice President Cheney persists in his representation that a leader of the 9/11 hijackers, Mohammed Atta, may have met with an Iraqi intelligence official in Prague in April, 2001. When asked on Meet the Press on December 9, 2001 about possible links between Iraq and the 9/11 attacks, he claimed that the April Atta meeting was ''pretty well confirmed.'' His subsequent statements on the Prague meeting have been more qualified, but he continues to present the alleged meeting as if it were something about which there wasn't enough information to make an informed judgment, i.e., it may have happened, or we don't know that it didn't happen. Most recently, on June 17, he wrapped the suggestion in the following verbal package: ''We have never been able to confirm that, nor have we been able to knock it down, we just don't know . . . I can't refute the Czech claim, I can't prove the Czech claim, I just don't know. . . . That's never been proven; it's never been refuted.''

This characterization does not fairly represent the views of the Intelligence Community. I have long been aware of this difference, and have pressed the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) to declassify their views on whether they believe this meeting took place. Finally, a few days ago, they provided a public, unclassified response to that question.

The CIA states publicly, for the first time, that they lack ''any credible information'' that the alleged meeting took place. They note that the report was based on a single source whose ''veracity . . . has been questioned,'' and that the Iraq intelligence official who was purportedly involved and who is now in our custody denies the meeting took place. Further, they assess that Atta is ''unlikely'' to have ever sought such a meeting because of the substantial risk that it would have involved. The full CIA response is attached.

As we learned Tuesday, the 9/11 Commission reviewed all of the intelligence, including investigations by both U.S. and Czech officials, and indeed all of the intelligence that the Vice President received, and stands by its conclusion that the meeting did not occur.

The CIA and 9/11 Commission staff statements are not equivocal; while it is impossible to disprove a negative, after a systematic and thorough review of the evidence it is their judgment that the meeting was unlikely or did not take place. However, the Vice President continues to simply claim that the evidence is some how ambiguous or unclear, and leaves out the conclusion of the CIA. On June 17, Vice President Cheney said that ''we just don't know'' whether the meeting took place. He went further to suggest that the report has ''never been refuted,'' but acknowledged that the only piece of evidence he'd ever seen to support an Iraq connection to September 11 was ''this one report from the Czechs.'' This is the one report from the single source that the CIA now publicly acknowledges has been called into question.

Earlier this year in a January 9, 2004 interview with the Rocky Mountain News, Vice President Cheney said that, after the initial Czech report of a meeting, ''we've never been able to collect any more information on that.'' But again, this is simply not true: the 9/11 Commission lays out information that was gathered by the FBI that places Atta in the United States during the week of the alleged meeting in Prague, and the CIA clearly had information about the unreliability of the source as well as the refutation by the other purported party in the meeting.

In his numerous public statements Vice President Cheney has not been reflecting the view of the Intelligence Community on the issue of the Atta meeting. On what information has the Vice President been relying?

Outside of the Intelligence Community, the only other U.S. government source of information I know on the Iraq-al Qaeda connection, including the alleged Atta meeting in Prague, is the Office of Under Secretary of Defense for Policy Douglas Feith. Under Secretary Feith has acknowledge that his office provided information to Vice President Cheney's office on these matters.

In the summer of 2002, Under Secretary Feith prepared several versions of a classified briefing on the Iraq-al Qaeda relationship. The briefing was given first to Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld, then to Director Tenet and the CIA in August, and finally to the staffs of the Office of the Vice President (OVP) and the National Security Council (NSC) in September. The version of the briefing given to Vice President Cheney's staff included three slides that were not included in the version given to the CIA.

One of those slides, which has since been declassified at my request and is attached, was critical of the way the Intelligence Community was assessing the Iraq-al Qaeda relationship. Under Secretary Feith has acknowledged to Armed Services Committee staff that he added two other slides which concerned the Atta meeting issue, and which were not part of the briefing given to the CIA.

The two slides remain classified despite my request for declassification.

The Atta meeting is, unfortunately, not the only instance in which the Vice President appears to have relied on analysis other than that of the Intelligence Community. As the Intelligence Committee report to be released tomorrow will indicate, the CIA intelligence was way off, full of exaggerations and errors, mainly on weapons of mass destruction. But it was Vice President Cheney, along with other policymakers, who exaggerated the Iraq-al Qaeda relationship.

WEEKLY STANDARD ARTICLE ON IRAQ-AL QAEDA COOPERATION

On January 9, 2004, Vice President Cheney told the Rocky Mountain News that, on the question of the relationship between Iraq and al qaeda, ''one place you ought to go look is an article that Stephen Hayes did in the Weekly Standard here a few weeks ago, that goes through and lays out in some detail, based on an assessment that was done by the Department of Defense and forwarded to the Senate Intelligence Committee some weeks ago. That's your best source of information.''

The article to which Vice President Cheney astonishingly enough referred as the ''best source of information'' says it was based on a leaked Defense Department Top Secret/Codeword document. Aside from the sense of wonder that is engendered when the Vice President seems to confirm highly classified leaked information by calling it the ''best source'' of information, the Intelligence Community did not even agree with the Defense Department document on which the Weekly Standard article was purportedly based. On March 9th, when I asked Director Tenet, the Director of Central Intelligence, about Vice President Cheney's comments, allegedly based on the classified Defense Department document, he said that the CIA ''did not agree with the way the data was characterized in that document.'' He also said that he would speak to Vice President Cheney, to tell him that the Intelligence Community had disagreements with the Defense Department document.

The document in question was prepared by Under Secretary Feith. It was very similar to the series of briefings that Under Secretary Feith had provided to Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld, then to Director Tenet and the CIA, and finally to the staffs of the Office of the Vice President and the National Security Council in the summer of 2002.

OTHER EXAMPLES OF EXAGGERATION BY VICE PRESIDENT CHENEY

Unfortunately, these are not the only cases where the Vice President, as just one key Administration spokesman, has exaggerated or misstated the intelligence on issues related to Iraq. In fact, they are just two examples of a consistent pattern of such exaggeration where the policymakers—not the CIA—were the exaggerators, before and after the start of the war, and continuing up to the present. There are others.

IRAQ'S MOBILE BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS VANS

As late as January 22, 2004, Vice President Cheney said to National Public Radio that ''we know for example that prior to our going in that he had spent time and effort acquiring mobile biological weapons labs, and we're quite confident he did, in fact, have such a program. We've found a couple of semi trailers at this point which we believe were, in fact, part of that program.'' He concluded by saying ''I would deem that conclusive evidence, if you will, that he did in fact have programs for weapons of mass destruction.''

That is not what the Intelligence Community believed at the time. David Kay, the CIA's chief inspector in Iraq said the previous October that the Iraq Survey Group had ''not yet been able to corroborate the existence of a mobile BW [biological warfare] production effort,'' and that it was still trying to determine ''whether there was a mobile program and whether the trailers that have been discovered so far were part of such a program.''

When I asked Director Tenet about Vice President Cheney's comments, he said he had spoken to him about it, to tell him that was not the view of the Intelligence Community.

ALUMINUM TUBES FOR NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On September 8, 2002, Vice President Cheney made an unqualified statement about the aluminum tubes on Meet the Press:

''He [Saddam] is trying, through his illicit procurement network, to acquire the equipment he needs to be able to enrich uranium to make the bombs.''

Tim Russert: ''Aluminum tubes.''

VP Cheney: ''Specifically aluminum tubes. . . . it is now public that, in fact, he has been seeking to acquire, and we have been able to intercept and prevent him from acquiring through this particular channel, the kinds of tubes that are necessary to build a centrifuge. . . . But we do know, with absolute certainty, that he is using his procurement system to acquire the equipment he needs in order to enrich uranium to build a nuclear weapon.''

There was a fundamental debate within the Intelligence Community before the war as to the intended purpose of the aluminum tubes that Iraq was trying to import. The Department of Energy, the Nation's foremost nuclear weapons experts, and the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, did not believe the aluminum tubes were for centrifuges to make nuclear weapons. Instead, they believed they were for conventional artillery rockets. But Vice President Cheney did not acknowledge any division within the Intelligence Community. He stated that the U.S. knew ''with absolute certainty'' that Iraq was trying to obtain the tubes for nuclear weapons purposes.

Tomorrow the CIA will be properly called to account for their failures expressed in Phase I of the Intelligence Committee report. Phase II will follow, regarding the policymakers' use of intelligence.

The CIA's belated public acknowledgment to my earlier question that the Intelligence Community has no credible evidence of an Iraqi-al Qaeda meeting in April 2001 dramatizes the need for that Phase II review.

FUNDAMENTAL PROBLEMS WITH HOW INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY IS ASSESSING INFORMATION

Application of a standard that it would not normally obtain: IC does not normally require juridical evidence to support a finding.

Consistent underestimation of importance that would be attached by Iraq and al Qaeda to hiding a relationship: Especially when operational security is very good, ''absence of evidence is not evidence of absence''.

Assumption that secularists and Islamists will not cooperate, even when they have common interests.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, DC, February 12, 2004.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I am writing about two intelligence matters related to Iraq: the first concerning weapons of mass destruction, and the second concerning alleged cooperation between Iraq and al Qaeda.

On January 22, 2004, you made the following comment during an interview with National Public Radio concerning two trailers in Iraq: ''we know for example that prior to our going in that he had spent time and effort acquiring mobile biological weapons labs, and we're quite confident he did, in fact, have such a program. We've found a couple of semi trailers at this point which we believe were, in fact, part of that program. . . . I would deem that conclusive evidence, if you will, that he did in fact have programs for weapons of mass destruction.''

In his speech on February 5, 2004, Director of Central intelligence George Tenet said that ''there is no consensus within our community over whether the trailers were for that use [biological weapons] or if they were used for the production of hydrogen.''

David Kay, former leader of the Iraq Survey Group, testified to Congress on October 2, 2003 that ''we have not yet been able to corroborate the existence of a mobile BW [biological warfare] production effort.'' He indicated that the ISG was still trying to determine ''whether there was a mobile program and whether the trailers that have been discovered so far were part of such a program.''

In July, David Kay was interviewed by BBC television for a program that aired in England in late November, and here in the United States on January 22, 2004. In response to a question as to whether he thought it had been premature for the Administration to assert in May that the two trailers were intended to produce biological weapons agents, Kay said ''I think it was premature and embarrassing.'' He said ''I wish that news hadn't come out,'' and concluded ''I don't want the mobile biological production facilities fiasco of May to be the model of the future.''

On January 28, 2004, Dr. Kay stated in testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee that ''I think the consensus opinion is that when you look at those two trailers . . . their actual intended use was not for the production of biological weapons.''

Given those assessments, I would appreciate knowing what is the intelligence basis for your statements that ''we're quite confident [Saddam] did, in fact, have such a [mobile biological weapons labs] program,'' that the trailers ''we believe were, in fact, part of that program,'' and that those trailers are ''conclusive evidence'' that Iraq ''did, in fact, have programs for weapons of mass destruction?''

I would be pleased to receive that information on an unclassified or classified basis.

With respect to the second intelligence issue, during your interview with the Rocky Mountain News on January 9, 2004, you recommended a source of information relative to the issue of whether there was a relationship between al Qaeda and Iraq: ''One place you ought to look is an article that Stephen Hayes did in the Weekly Standard here a few weeks ago, that goes through and lays out in some detail, based on an assessment that was done by the Department of Defense and was forwarded to the Senate Intelligence Committee some weeks ago. That's your best source of information''

That article states that it is based on ''a top secret U.S. government memorandum'' prepared by the Defense Department, which was purportedly leaked to the Weekly Standard. The article then goes on to describe in detail and quote extensively from the document it says was leaked.

On October 15, 2003, the Defense Department had issued a News Release about the article that seems to disagree with what you said. According to the Defense Department, ''News reports that the Defense Department recently confirmed new information with respect to contacts between al Qaeda and Iraq in a letter to the Senate Intelligence Committee are inaccurate.''

Furthermore, the DOD news release noted that the ''classified annex'' sent by the Defense Department to the Senate Intelligence Committee ''was not an analysis of the substantive issue of the relationship between Iraq and al Qaeda, and it drew no conclusions.''

I would appreciate if you would advise whether you were quoted accurately.

I look forward to your reply.

Sincerely,

CARL LEVIN,
Ranking Member.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COLEMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2062. I am sorry the Senator from Connecticut is not in the Chamber.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Certainly.

Mr. REID. We have had a signoff—people heard me a little earlier today say we had an objection to having a vote on the cloture motion that the majority leader has filed. We can now do that. I understand the majority wants that to take place. I ask unanimous consent that the cloture vote on the matter now scheduled for tomorrow occur tonight at 6:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, as I was saying, I am sorry the Senator from Connecticut is not in the Chamber because I have such great respect for his opinion, particularly his opinion regarding this bill. I know what a keen interest he has in this bill, and when he talks about the fact that we ought to delay this for 1 more week because the majority has set the agenda and the agenda next week calls for matters that might not be relevant to this particular issue, I simply remind the Senator from Connecticut, who is my dear friend, that this bill has not just come to the floor.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I was there in April of 2003 when this particular bill was voted out of the Judiciary Committee. We were all here in November of 2003 when we had a cloture vote on this bill. So this is not something new that has just come about. This bill has been under negotiation actually since the 105th Congress.

In 1996, the negotiations began on a class action bill. I think to now ask for another delay for another week on the cloture vote is just simply not called for, and that is the reason we need to go ahead with the vote tonight. My colleagues are either for class action reform, they are either for a bill that is a bipartisan bill, or they are against it. It is that simple at this point in the negotiations.

There was a proposal made by this side of the aisle to the other side of the aisle that when this bill came to the floor that we allow only germane amendments, amendments that are relevant to the issue of class action, to be brought to the floor as legitimate amendments that would be debated and voted on. The other side of the aisle would not agree to that. So therefore we have evolved into a different format on the floor today.

I do rise in strong support of S. 2062, the Class Action Fairness Act of 2004. It is a product of negotiations between Senators on both sides of the aisle in an effort to gain the 60 votes needed to invoke cloture and proceed to an up-or-down vote on the merits of the bill. To a great extent, the bulk of the tort reform needed in this country will be handled on the State court level, where most civil complaints are filed.

That is a very significant point. As a trial lawyer, I remember that I usually wanted to file my cases in State court, and they ought to still have that right to do so. But there are times when it was dictated to you as a lawyer that you had to go to Federal court. It is because we have had a handful of State court jurisdictions in the United States where a grossly disproportionate number of class action suits are filed, and that is just not right. That is why these negotiations were instituted in 1996. That is why over the last 8 years we have been going back and forth with Members on both sides of the aisle being involved and have come up with a fair bill that does allow for certain exceptions that I am going to talk about in just a minute.

People have referred to these jurisdictions where a majority of the class actions have been filed as magnet courts because they draw in class action suits with their soft juries and their pro-plaintiff judges. That is just a matter of fact. Under the Class Action Fairness Act, businesses can break loose from these magnet State courts and get a fair trial in a Federal jurisdiction.

S. 2062 differs from the previous versions of the class action bill in several ways, and those changes have been negotiated on both sides of the aisle over the period not from just last April or November, but from 1996, over the last 8 years. I am going to focus my remarks on one change I think makes a lot of sense, and that is the addition of a local class action exception.

Under the provisions of S. 2062, class action cases will remain in State court if the following conditions are met: First, more than two-thirds of class members have to be citizens of the forum State. Second, there has to be at least one in-State defendant from whom significant relief is sought by members of the class and whose conduct forms a significant basis of the plaintiffs' claims. Third, the principal injuries resulting from the alleged conduct or related conduct of each defendant have to have been incurred in the State where the action was originally filed. Finally, there cannot be any other class action cases asserting the same or similar factual allegations against any of the defendants on behalf of the same or other persons filed in the preceding 3 years.

Those are pretty fair and reasonable exceptions. You are still going to have probably most of the class action suits filed in State court with this exception being in place.

Under the local class action exception, a limited group of local class action cases would be allowed to stay in State court where the facts of the case warrant this treatment. Some examples would be a plant explosion or an oil spill, where one or more of the defendants are in the same State as the catastrophe and a supermajority of the plaintiffs are there as well. These are truly local actions and ought to be treated as such because they do not lend themselves to the egregious forum shopping that lands cases which should be filed in Federal court in one of these so-called magnet courts around the country.

Despite all of the progress we have made in our negotiations on S. 2062, it seems we have some Senators who plan to offer amendments that would weaken this bipartisan legislation or weight it down with nongermane issues that will lead to the bill's defeat. The passage of nongermane amendments to this class action reform bill will probably doom its passage. For this reason, I will vote against all nongermane amendments, and I plan to vote against any germane amendments that would weaken S. 2062 in its present form.

In summary, we now have a class action bill which is supported by both sides of the aisle. Despite the misinformation that has been spread around, this bill will actually promote the proper assignment of class action cases between State court and Federal court dockets. I urge my colleagues to vote against any amendments that would weaken or kill S. 2062 and then to vote in favor of this bill as a first step in restoring fairness and balance to our Nation's tort system.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM of South Carolina. Mr. President, I, like others of my colleagues, would like to see closure on this issue. Before I got into politics, I was a lawyer. I admire our legal system. In many ways, people have their chance to be judged by their neighbors. I am very respectful of the jury trial. However, in the class action arena of the law, I find more abuses than solutions. I don't believe the Constitution ever envisioned the class action litigation model that we have come up with where you can create your own false diversity and you can run everybody to Illinois or Mississippi because business is involved.

I believe the removal process in this bill where the judge has discretion to remove cases from State court to Federal court will correct some abuses. I believe the coupon cases were never what the law was meant to be about.

The legal reforms in this bill I support. I have an amendment. I hope we can get to it. It would allow a procedure to be had in terms of pursuing settlement. Consumers need to be told about the Pinto case and need to be informed when products are dangerous, but companies need not be required to give proprietary information without having their say.

I have an amendment that would allow the judge in a particular case to rule on whether documents would be subject to seal. I think the South Carolina rule is a very reasonable rule. But whether we get to this, I believe this bill's time has come, and it is now time for the Senate to act. The abuses that are going on in class action are not about treating people fairly, they are about simple greed. These abuses need to be stopped for the betterment of us all. Claimants and businesses find themselves subject to this.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of cloture on S. 2062, the Class Action Fairness Act of 2004. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I supported the bill during committee consideration and I will be voting in favor of cloture and final passage as well.

The need for this bill is pointed out daily by stories of abuse. We hear of attempts to sue McDonald's because people who eat there are getting fat. We hear of lawyers negotiating coupon settlements for their clients, while they receive millions of dollars in fees. We hear of class members actually losing money on settlements.

I am a lawyer and I am not happy with that state of affairs. I don't think anyone is more in favor of a strong legal system than I am. And I define a strong legal system as one where all parties are treated fairly, wrongs are redressed, and justice is afforded equally and without bias.

The Class Action Fairness Bill of 2004 does not weaken our legal system. It rectifies the current imbalance in some areas where some parties are not treated fairly; new wrongs are committed, not redressed; and justice is overlooked, if not outright disregarded.

I say to my friends who oppose this bill that, just as it is important to make sure that victims have an opportunity to be heard in our courts, it is just as important to insure that the defendant is treated fairly. And I don't believe anyone can credibly claim that that is the case today in many areas of our country. Justice requires that we act to remedy that.

Although I may not believe this bill is perfect, and actually have an amendment or two of my own, I do not believe we should delay this bill one moment longer. My amendment is slightly technical, but very simple.

It would merely provide for uniform judicial scrutiny of sealed documents. I have based my amendment on the South Carolina district rule for how to obtain a protective order for trade secrets or other proprietary information. I haven't heard from one person in South Carolina who doesn't like the way it works.

It puts all parties on equal footing and preserves judicial discretion. However, though I firmly believe my amendment would improve the bill, I will be voting for cloture because this bill is more important.

I firmly believe that the Class Action Fairness Act of 2004 is exactly that, fair to all parties.

It is narrowly aimed at some of the most egregious abuses of the class action system. In fact, I have heard from some folds that the bill does not go far enough. However, in my opinion, it is a reasonable first step in the effort to control what are clearly abuses of the system.

It is reasonable because I don't think anyone in the chamber can complain about judges taking a look at settlements to make sure the class members are not being victimized further. I don't think anyone can complain about giving federal judges the power to block worthless settlements based on coupons or other gimmicks.

We have even had some firms sanctioned for filing cases just to settle with no damages for the class, but significant attorneys' fees for them. We have had other lawsuits end with the lead plaintiffs and their lawyers receiving large sums and other class members receiving nothing, but losing their right to legal action in the future.

When the very people class actions are supposed to help are being hurt, it is time to do something different.

This bill is a reasonable step in the right direction. While some of my friends on the other side of the aisle may not like some provisions, they have to admit that there is a problem that needs to be addressed.

In closing, I would just like to urge my colleagues to help us move this bill to conclusion. File your amendments, I have one myself, but don't let your personal desire to offer your amendment get in the way of this much needed legislation.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise to speak about a case that I think perfectly illustrates some of the problems produced by our current class action system. This case is, unfortunately, not unique. These outrageous decisions happen all too frequently. The bill currently under consideration will help fix some of these problems.

Reproduced on this poster beside me is an actual settlement check from a recently settled class action lawsuit. This check is made payable to a member of my staff who received it in the mail earlier this year. You will notice that on the check's ''pay to the order of'' line, I have covered the name of my staffer so that she may remain anonymous.

I have also obscured the name of the defendant in this case. Plaintiff's lawyers have soaked them once already. I would hate to see others sue this company just because they heard the company settled one class action suit.

Along with this settlement check, my staffer received a letter, which says in part:

> You have been identified as a member of the class of . . . customers who are eligible for a refund under the terms of a settlement agreement reached in a class action lawsuit . . . The enclosed check includes any refunds for which you were eligible.

Now as you know, Senate staffers are certainly not the highest paid people in this town. So this woman on my staff reports she was excited about receiving some unexpected money.

And then she looked at the enclosed check to see just how big her windfall was. It was a whopping 32 cents. That is right, she received a check made out to her in the amount of 32 cents.

I guess it goes without saying that she was a bit disappointed in her newfound riches.

Now, don't misunderstand me. I am not suggesting my staffer deserved a bigger settlement check. In fact, she tells me she had no complaint whatsoever against the defendant. And she never even asked to be part of this lawsuit.

Apparently, she just happened to be a customer of a defendant who was sued, and it was determined that she theoretically could bring a claim against the defendant, and so she became a member of ''a class'' that was due a settlement.

If this doesn't precisely illustrate the absurdity of the current class action epidemic in this country, I don't know what does.

To demonstrate just how far out of whack the system is, let's start with the letter notifying my staffer that she was a member of a class action lawsuit, and had been awarded a settlement. This letter and check arrived via the U.S. mail. The last I knew, it cost 37 cents to mail an envelope. The settlement check is for 32 cents.

You can probably see where I'm going with this.

It cost the defendant in this class action suit, 37 cents to send a settlement check worth 32 cents. That sure makes you pause and think about the absurdity of our class action system.

Now, I don't claim to have the economic expertise of some—like my good friend, the distinguished former Senator Gramm of Texas—but I can tell you that forcing a defendant to spend 37 cents to send someone a 32-cent check doesn't make much economic sense. And it certainly defies common sense.

But let me point out the most disturbing element about this lawsuit. My staff researched this case and it may interest my colleagues to know that while the unwitting plaintiff received just 32 cents in compensation from this class action lawsuit, her attorneys pocketed in excess of $7 million.

All in all, not a bad settlement—if you happen to be a plaintiff's lawyer rather than a plaintiff.

And in case you think this plaintiff received an unusually low settlement in this litigation, let me quote from the letter accompanying the settlement check:

So, you see, even before the settlement, it was clear that each plaintiff would on average receive less than $1. Yet the attorneys still got more than $7 million.

My colleagues may also be interested to know how much the defendant was forced to spend defending this lawsuit.

Knowing the extent of the defendant's defense costs is instructive in demonstrating how unjust these abusive suits can be. So we asked the defendant how much it spent defending this suit that provided a plaintiff with pennies and her lawyers with millions. But perhaps not surprisingly, the defendant was not willing to discuss that matter.

You see, the defendant told us that if it were readily known just how much they spent defending these types of suits, then that information would almost certainly be used against them in the future.

This defendant feared that if their defense costs were known, then another opportunistic plaintiff's lawyer would file another one of these suits. And then that lawyer would offer to settle for just slightly less than the millions he knew it would cost the defendant to defend the action.

That perfectly illustrates how plaintiff's lawyers exploit and abuse defendants under the current system.

Can there be any doubt that the current class action system is in need of repair? When the lawyers get more than $7 million and a plaintiff gets a check for 32 cents, something is terribly wrong. When defendants fear disclosing how much they spend fighting these ridiculous suits because to do so would invite more litigation, something is terribly wrong.

Justice is supposed to be distributed fairly. This is clearly not a fair way to distribute justice.

Let's try to correct some of the abuses in class action litigation by passing this legislation.

We are not going to end every 32-cent award to plaintiffs and multimillion dollar award to attorneys, but surely we can curb some of this nonsense.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise to express my continued disappointment in the Republican leadership's ability to manage the Senate floor effectively. As my colleagues are aware, we have only a few weeks left in this legislative session. Instead of negotiating short-time agreements on a finite number of important amendments, the Republican leader has decided that he would rather slam the door shut for all nongermane amendments.

The Republican leader's actions have frustrated Members on both sides of the aisle who sincerely want to have a productive legislative session. The citizens of this country did not elect us to engage in a staring contest. We should be using our remaining floor time to accomplish consensus legislation.

I note that yesterday the Senior Senator from Idaho observed the following:

We have watched an unusual process this morning. There are a good many of us in a bipartisan spirit who are reacting to and I am one of those who does not appreciate what the majority leader has now just done.

Senator DASCHLE, who has frequently called for civility and bipartisan action on the floor, similarly expressed frustration. I could not agree with them more.

Senators have a right to have their legislation be considered by their colleagues. And despite the majority leader's actions, even Senators in the minority should be allowed to offer amendments to the class action legislation before us.

Senate CRAIG acknowledged as much when he ''recognized that Senators, unless effectively blocked by [the] procedural action that has just occurred, do have the right to offer amendments. Germane or relevant and non-relevant.''

Yesterday, the senior Senator from Idaho hoped to offer an amendment with wide bipartisan support that would help protect the security of our country. He should be allowed to offer this legislation. Similarly, other Members of this body should be allowed time for the normal amendment process.

Time and again, the Republican leadership has accused my colleagues of obstructing and refusing to give certain measures an up-or-down vote. Well, this most recent procedural tactic is the majority leader's latest attempt at looking busy with full knowledge that nothing will be accomplished.

Senator FRIST's drastic action yesterday has stymied the legislative process and threatened the underlying class actions bill that many of my colleagues have worked so hard on over the past few years.

I am disappointed that the Republican leadership has decided that we can afford to waste another week of floor time when bipartisan measures could have been considered and enacted.

Mr. President, yesterday I received a letter on behalf of 16 environmental protection organizations—American Rivers, Clean Water Action, Defenders of Wildlife, Earthjustice, Earthworks, Environmental Working Group, Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace, League of Conservation Voters, National Environmental Trust, Natural Resources Defense Council, Sierra Club, The Ocean Conservancy, The Wilderness Society, 20/20 Vision, and the U.S. Public Interest Research Group—in opposition to this class action bill.

These environmental protection advocates declare that this bill ''is patently unfair to citizens harmed by toxic spills, contaminated drinking water, polluted air and other environmental hazards involved in class action cases based on state environmental or public health laws.''

I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 7, 2004.

ENVIRONMENTAL HARM CASES DO NOT BELONG IN CLASS ACTION BILL

DEAR SENATOR: Our organizations are opposed to the sweepingly drawn and misleadingly named ''Class Action Fairness Act of 2004.'' This bill is patently unfair to citizens harmed by toxic spills, contaminated drinking water, polluted air and other environmental hazards involved in class action cases based on state environmental or public health laws. S. 2062 would allow corporate defendants in many pollution class actions and ''mass tort'' environmental cases to remove these kinds of state environmental matters from state court to federal court, placing the cases in a forum that could be more costly, less timely, and disadvantageous to your constituents harmed by toxic pollution. State law environmental harm cases do not belong in this legislation and we urge you to exclude such pollution cases from the class action bill.

Class actions protect the public's health and the environment by allowing people with similar injuries to join together for more efficient and cost-effective adjudication of their cases. All too often, hazardous spills, water pollution, or other toxic contamination from one source affects large numbers of people, not all of whom may be citizens of the same state or may be from the same state as the defendants who caused the harm. In such cases, a class action lawsuit in state court based on state common law doctrines of negligence or nuisance, or upon rights and duties created by state statutes in the state where the injuries occur, is often the best way of fairly resolving these claims.

For example, thousands of families around the country are now suffering because of widespread groundwater contamination caused by the gasoline additive MTBE, which the U.S. Government considers a potential human carcinogen. According to a May, 2002 GAO report, 35 states reported that they find MTBE in groundwater at least 20 percent of the time they sample for it, and 24 states said that they find it at least 60 percent of the time. Some communities and individuals have brought or soon will bring suits to recover damages from MTBE contamination and hold the polluters accountable, but under this bill, MTBE class actions or ''mass actions'' based on state law could be removed by the oil and gas companies to federal court in many of these cases.

This could not only make these cases more expensive, more time-consuming and more difficult for injured parties, but could also result in legitimate cases getting dismissed by federal judges who are unfamiliar with or less respectful of state law claims. For example, in at least one federal court MTBE class action, a federal court dismissed the case based on oil companies' claim that the action was barred by the federal Clean Air Act (even though that law contains no tort liability waiver for MTBE). Yet a California state court rejected a similar federal preemption argument and let the case go to a jury, which found oil refineries, fuel distributors, and others liable for damages. These cases highlight how a state court may be more willing to uphold legitimate state law claims. Other examples of state law cases that would be weakened by this bill include lead contamination cases, mercury contamination, perchlorate pollution and other ''toxic torts'' cases.

In a letter to the Senate last year, the U.S. Judicial Conference expressed their continued opposition to such broadly written class action removal legislation. Notably, their letter states that, even if Congress determines that some ''significant multi-state class actions'' should be brought within the removal jurisdiction of the federal courts, Congress should include certain limitations and exceptions, including for class actions ''in which plaintiff class members suffered personal injury or personal property damage within the state, as in the case of a serious environmental disaster.'' The Judicial Conference's letter explains that this ''environmental harm'' exception should apply ''to all individuals who suffered personal injuries or losses to physical property, whether or not they were citizens of the state in question.''

We agree with the Judicial Conference—cases involving environmental harm are not even close to the type of cases that proponents of S. 2062 cite when they call for reforms to the class action system. Including such cases in the bill does no more than benefit polluters in state environmental class actions at the expense of injured parties in those cases for no reason other than to benefit the polluters. No rationale has been offered by the bill's supporters for including environmental cases in S. 2062's provisions. We are unaware of any examples offered by bill supporters of environmental harm cases that represent alleged abuses of the state class actions.

More proof of the overreaching of this bill is that the so-called ''Class Action Fairness Act'' is not even limited to class action cases. The bill contains a provision that would allow defendants to remove to federal court all environmental ''mass action'' cases involving more than 100 people—even though these cases are not even filed as class actions. The S. 2062 contains a narrow exception to the ''mass action'' removal rule if the injury to the plaintiffs is caused by a ''sudden, single accident,'' but has no exception for injuries caused by toxic exposure that occurs over days, months, or years, as frequently happens in environmental harm cases.

For example, the bill would apply to cases similar to the recently concluded state court trial in Anniston, Alabama, where a jury awarded damages to be paid by Monsanto and Solutia for injuring more than 3,500 people the jury found were exposed—with the companies' knowledge—to cancer-causing PCBs over many years. Documents uncovered in the case showed that Monsanto kept the public in the dark for decades regarding what the company knew about PCBs, so the ''sudden, single incident'' exception would not apply in large measure because of the companies' own bad behavior. There is little doubt in the Anniston case that, had S. 2062 been law, the defendants would have tried to remove the case from the state court serving the community that suffered this devastating harm. It is, at best, unjustified to reward this kind of reckless corporate misbehavior by giving defendants in such cases the right to remove state law cases to federal court over the objections of those they have injured.

The so-called ''Class Action Fairness Act'' would allow corporate polluters who harm the public's health and welfare to exploit the forum of federal court whenever they perceive an advantage to doing so. It is nothing more than an attempt to take legitimate state court claims by injured parties out of state court at the whim of those who have committed the injury.

Cases involving environmental harm and injury to the public from toxic exposure should not be subject to the bill's provisions; if these environmental harm cases are not excluded, we strongly urge you to vote against S. 2062.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to express my extreme disappointment over the procedural bind the Senate is in on the class action reform bill.

Last October I was one of the 59 Senators who voted to allow the Senate to proceed to the Class Action Fairness Act because I believed that it was an issue that should be considered and debated in the Senate. I still believe that this is an appropriate matter to be considered in the Senate, and was looking forward to a constructive debate on the legislation this week.

In meetings with both supporters and opponents of the legislation I have continually stressed that there needs to be a fair and open debate on the matter. To me, this means that Senators must be allowed to offer amendments to the bill. Unfortunately, even before the debate had even really begun, the majority leader came to the floor and created a procedural situation where no Senator would be allowed to offer an amendment, on class action reform or any other issue.

It is regrettable that this path was chosen for consideration of this legislation. I find this to be especially true when the minority leader has offered to limit the number of amendments to the legislation, even though he opposes the bill. If the Republican leadership had accepted this offer we could have been working on substance rather than discussing procedure for the last few days.

As this debate has not been free or fair, in fact no amendments have been considered, debated and voted upon, I cannot at this time support limiting debate on the Class Action Fairness Act. I am hopeful that the majority will reconsider its rejection of the minority leader's offer to proceed on this legislation with limited amendments and that we can then begin to actually debate the legislation.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to be standing here today to debate the merits of why we should be voting for cloture on this bill. But since we all know how this vote will turn out, I just want to congratulate in advance some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle for killing yet another civil justice reform measure this Congress.

The constituents that they serve—the powerful and well financed plaintiffs bar—owe them a deep debt of gratitude for not only killing class action reform but also derailing the asbestos trust fund bill, the medical malpractice reform bill, and gun liability reform bill, to name a few. Their truly special interest constituent has survived yet another year devoid of tort reform, and as a result, will continue raking in millions of dollars in cash to help finance the Democratic party in the coming months.

I am hoping the 62 people who committed to vote for cloture last November will vote for it. We can even lose two of them as long as we have 60 to vote for cloture. If we have 60, then I will feel a lot better than I do in giving these remarks.

But unlike the caution chorus that they rolled out to kill the asbestos bill, the tactics used by my Democratic colleagues to defeat class action reform have been disappointing at best, and downright disingenuous, at worst. We tried to proceed on this bill last year and were led to believe that we would command enough votes to overcome a Democratic filibuster. Indeed, before the cloture vote, we had certain members declare their support publicly for the bill. But when the moment of truth came, there was at least one member from the other side who voted against proceeding on the bill despite statements to the contrary. And what happened? We fell one vote shy of invoking cloture.

After the vote, we had three additional Democratic members come to us just days before our Thanksgiving recess eager to strike a deal on class action reform. So we listened, and we negotiated, and then we compromised. And at the end of the day, we reached an agreement on a more modest version of the class action bill. But the honeymoon certainly did not last long as the supporters of the measure started demanding extraneous labor-oriented amendments that included a measure to raise the minimum wage; a measure to extend unemployment insurance; and a measure to overturn the administration's overtime regulations.

We gave them votes on two of the three and then offered yesterday to give them a vote on the third. But of course, we all know that three was not enough.

We heard the stories of how the Senate must work its will, and how the hallmark of this institution's procedures cannot be compromised; that we must take on more extraneous amendments that have absolutely nothing to do with the business at hand. But what these colleagues know very well is that the more amendments this bill takes on, the less likely it will become law.

We have a bipartisan deal on class action reform that now stands on the verge of collapse—a broken deal that will forever stain the honor of this hallowed institution the minute the supporters of this bill cast a no vote on cloture. In a court of law, we would call it a breach of contract, but in the Senate we are not governed by common law principles when we legislate. Rather, we are governed by honor and credibility—attributes that will lose stock the minute this bill fails.

Let me just finish by saying that a vote against cloture means that you are not committed to class action reform. Let us not dance around the issue any further, and just call a spade a spade.

A vote against cloture means that you care more about helping certain unscrupulous plaintiffs' lawyers rather than every day consumers like Martha Preston, Irene Taylor and Hilda Bankston. These are the real victims whose horror stories will fall on deaf ears.

And a vote against cloture means that a deal will never be a deal unless strings are attached. That true bipartisanship will always come at a price to be disclosed later.

I have been here 28 years. I have never seen, when we finally put a deal together, people who have not been willing to live up to their commitment.

Everybody knew back in November of last year that we needed one more vote to get cloture. We compromised. We accepted amendments which we probably wouldn't have accepted because we had—we had 59 who would have voted for the bill as it was—to get those extra votes. Now there is some indication that those three votes will not be there, and we will probably lose on cloture again. I am hoping that is not true. I am hoping all three votes will be there, or at least one that will be there so that we can invoke cloture and proceed on this bill. If we can't, then I have to say this is one of the few times that I have seen where commitments are made that have not been honored that should have been honored, and it is a disgrace to this institution, in my humble opinion.

Keep in mind that if we invoke cloture, that doesn't mean those who want to bring up extraneous, nongermane amendments or nonrelevant amendments can't do it. They can bring them up after cloture, but they are going to have to get a supermajority vote to win. That doesn't foreclose them.

Anybody who argues that they ought to be able to bring up any amendments they want when it is hurting the Senate, is not shooting straight. The fact is, they can bring up any amendments they want. They just have to get the votes to win. Maybe they will postcloture. I don't know.

But in all honesty, we all know the game. It is either we are going to get cloture and people are going to live up to their commitment or not, and bipartisanship is even hurt more than it has been up until now. It has been in shambles as far as I can see almost all year long. This has been one of the worst years in my Senate career because of the lack of partisanship, the lack of comity that normally exists in this body in the desire to make everything political and the effectiveness of making everything political as well.

This is one bill that does not deserve that kind of unfair treatment, especially since we compromised last year and took amendments we would not have taken and changed the bill we would not have changed, all for the purpose of getting enough votes to vote for cloture. And now we are here again this year—another year, 6 years in a row—whereby the same people who said they were for this bill and talked us into all these amendments on the basis that they would vote for cloture may not. I personally hope they will. If they will, it will do more for comity in this body, more for bipartisanship than we have seen all year. It would be a ray of hope to everybody in this body that maybe there is a chance of us getting together on things that are important, the things that are right, things that we promised, things that will benefit the business community, things that will correct the ills which literally have been wrecking this institution and hurting our country immeasurably and will put the screws to these jurisdictions, these magnet jurisdictions, that do not seem to care about the law or anything else.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the cloture motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on Calendar No. 430, S. 2062, a bill to amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, and for other purposes:

Bill Frist, Orrin Hatch, Charles Grassley, Peter Fitzgerald, Craig Thomas, Mitch McConnell, Ted Stevens, Robert F. Bennett, Jim Talent, George Allen, Jon Kyl, Rick Santorum, Jeff Sessions, Pete Domenici, Susan Collins, Lamar Alexander, John Cornyn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the quorum call has been waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on S. 2062, a bill to amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, and for other purposes, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. CAMPBELL), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. ENSIGN), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. ENZI), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. FITZGERALD), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HAGEL), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SANTORUM) are necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD), the Senator from New York (Mrs. CLINTON), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EDWARDS), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY), and the Senator from Maryland (Ms. MIKULSKI) are necessarily absent.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 44, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—44

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 44, the nays are 43. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO HENRY COUZENS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I wish today to pay tribute to Henry Couzens, a genuine World War II hero and survivor. Mr. Couzens performed extraordinary acts of courage during some of world history's most difficult and tumultuous times.

The day after his 18th birthday in 1942, Mr. Couzens applied for the Aviation Cadets, and after passing all requirements was accepted into the Air Corp Training School. A year later, Mr. Couzens graduated as a pilot and was commissioned as a second lieutenant to fly P–47 fighter planes. In early 1944, Mr. Couzens arrived in England to fight on the front lines in the European Theatre alongside the 8th Infantry and 356th Fighter Group. His unit's assignment was to control an area along the English Channel. Their purpose was to escort and protect B–17s and B–24s on bombing missions to Germany and other occupied countries.

On April 23, 1944, Mr. Couzens was assigned to destroy German airplanes on the ground. His target that day was the airfield at Haguenau, France. On his third pass over the airfield, he was hit by German anti-aircraft fire. The hit was so substantial it stopped the engine of his plane, forcing him to ''Belly in.'' While he was fortunate enough to land alive, the group commander and another pilot were shot down. For a little over a year, Mr. Couzens was a prisoner of the Germans at the famous Stalag Luft III Camp. He endured one of the coldest winters in decades and finally saw freedom when they were liberated on April 29, 1945, and became part of General Patton's Third Army.

Thank you, Mr. Couzens for defending freedom and democracy. The heroics you and your comrades displayed will forever be remembered; you truly are the Greatest Generation.

TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to address the value of free trade, and of the process by which we get it.

From ancient times, people have learned that trade among nations means more economic growth and higher incomes. People have better standards of living, thanks to trade.

Free trade allows each nation to devote more resources and energy to those things for which it has a comparative advantage. Partners to free trade thereby get goods and services at lower cost than they would in isolation.

Conversely, protectionism stunts growth and reduces income. Tariffs are taxes. And like other taxes, they can impede the efficient allocation of resources. Where nations impose quotas and tariffs, goods and services cost more. People live less well than they would with free trade.

But you don't have to take my word for it. Look at the record. Take America's two biggest recent trade agreements.

America entered into the North American Free Trade Agreement, NAFTA, in 1993, and the Uruguay Round Agreements, the WTO, in 1994. In the years following those major trade agreements, America experienced one of its strongest economic expansions.

Yes, balancing the budget and funding education also had something to do with it. But trade helped.

America experienced 8 years of economic growth. The American economy created more than 20 million new jobs. The average household's real income rose 15 percent. Americans' standard of living improved.

Put the other way around: The opponents of free trade have a difficult job to explain how those major trade agreements hurt the American economy in the 1990s.

I am a proud advocate of trade. I am an advocate of stronger economic growth and higher incomes. I want a better standard of living for Americans.

So how can we achieve freer trade? How do we lower barriers to trade? That brings us to a discussion of trade procedures.

The Senate considers trade agreements under somewhat unique procedures. These special procedures go by several names: fast-track, trade negotiating authority, or trade promotion authority.

Under these procedures, legislation to implement a trade agreement gets an up-or-down vote within a limited time. Debate is limited to 20 hours. No amendments. No filibusters.

The Senate is about to consider legislation under these procedures to implement the United States-Australia Free Trade Agreement. We may also soon consider legislation under these procedures to implement the United States-Morocco Free Trade Agreement.

Two other agreements with six Central American countries and Bahrain are signed and ready for us to consider whenever the administration chooses to move them.

With so much trade activity, it is a good time to review the applicable procedures.

It all begins with the Constitution. Article I, section 8, clause 3 says that: ''The Congress shall have the power . . . to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations.'' Since the founding of our Country, it is, and has always been, Congress that holds primary responsibility for trade.

Now, 535 Members of Congress cannot negotiate trade agreements. The logistics are unimaginable. So our predecessors figured out fairly early that the actual negotiating would have to be delegated to the executive branch.

But that does not mean that Congress has delegated its Constitutional responsibilities. To the contrary, under United States law no trade agreement is self-executing. It has no effect on domestic law until Congress passes implementing legislation.

A system where one branch of government negotiates trade agreements and another must accept them and turn them into domestic law presents challenges.

The system worked well enough in the early days of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Back then, the executive branch was negotiating agreements to reduce tariffs. Congress would delegate authority to the President to agree to cuts within a specific range. All the President had to do was proclaim those changes once agreed to.

In the 1960s, however, the United States and its trading partners in the GATT began to expand the scope of trade negotiations to non-tariff measures. Without any advance authorization from Congress, the administration negotiated several deals on non-tariff measures in the GATT's Kennedy Round.

It brought those agreements back to Congress. Congress rejected the agreements, refusing to implement them into domestic law. This embarrassed the administration. And it frustrated our trading partners. They learned that negotiating with the executive branch is not enough. The final word lies with Congress.

Our trading partners became wary. They didn't want to devote years of effort to another round of trade negotiations in the GATT if American negotiators could not keep the promises they made. The executive branch wanted advance authorization from Congress to negotiate non-tariff trade agreements.

The administration proposed treating tariff and non-tariff agreements the same. The executive branch said: Congress should simply authorize the President in advance to negotiate and implement the deals that the President makes.

The Finance Committee resisted. Yes, tariff deals are easy to approve in advance. All Congress has to do for a tariff deal is to tell the Executive how low the negotiators can go.

But non-tariff deals are more complicated. They can cover things like Customs rules, trade remedies, food safety rules, and intellectual property rights. It would be too difficult for Congress to approve parameters for these kinds of agreements in advance. Congress would want to see the details before deciding to approve and implement these deals.

Congress and the President reached a compromise and enacted it in the Trade Act of 1974. That Act created the so-called ''fast-track'' process.

Fast-track has something for everyone. It gives the Executive express authority to negotiate tariff and non-tariff agreements, so long as our trade representatives meet general negotiating objectives set out by Congress. And it guarantees our trade partners that any agreement will receive an up-or-down vote by a date certain. That way, when they negotiate with the United States, they know that Congress cannot later amend the agreement or kill it with a filibuster.

But, most importantly, fast-track preserves Congress's Constitutional primacy on trade. No agreement gets implemented unless a majority of Congress approves.

Fast-track procedures require close collaboration between the Executive and Congress at every stage. The President must notify committees of jurisdiction and consult with them before a negotiation begins and regularly throughout the negotiations. Once talks are complete, the President must notify Congress 90 days before signing the agreement, to permit Congress time to review the terms of the deal.

Once the agreement is signed, the President must submit it to Congress, along with a draft implementing bill, for approval. Congress has no more than 90 days in which the Congress is in session to act. And amendments are not in order.

But the time when close coordination between the Executive and Congress is most critical is the period between when the agreement is signed and when the President submits the agreement to Congress.

This is the time when the administration and the trade committees sit down together to craft an implementing bill. The law requires the Executive to consult with the committees of jurisdiction. But because the details of this consultative process are not spelled out by law, some call this stage the ''informal process'' or the ''mock process.''

No one should be fooled by these titles. This cooperative drafting venture—while not spelled out in the law—is the centerpiece of the fast-track process.

It is at this stage—before the implementing bill becomes unamendable—that the trade committees can weigh in and bring their own ideas to the table.

Congress and the President first used the procedures adopted in the Trade Act of 1974 to implement the GATT Tokyo Round agreements in 1979. The Government has since used these procedures to implement the WTO Uruguay Round Agreements, as well as free trade agreements with Israel, Canada, Mexico, Singapore, and Chile.

From the beginning, the Finance Committee has strived to make the informal process operate as much as possible like the normal legislative process.

For that reason, the Finance Committee always holds a mock markup of the draft implementing bill. Like any markup, this event is open to the public. And Members are free to offer amendments to the draft bill that has been developed by the administration and committee staff.

The committee holds a recorded vote on each amendment offered. It then votes on whether to approve the draft bill, as amended, in a recorded vote.

Amendments are common events at mock markups. When the Committee considered the United States-Israel Free Trade Agreement in 1984, committee members offered 13 amendments, and the Committee adopted 3. In 1988, when the committee considered the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, members offered 9 amendments, all of which were adopted. When the Finance Committee considered draft implementing legislation for the North American Free Trade Agreement in 1993, members offered at least 15 amendments, of which 14 were adopted. There were more than 30 differences between the Senate and House versions of the bill at the end of the mock markups.

By contrast, no amendments were offered last year when the committee considered the Singapore and Chile implementing bills. That was unusual.

In each of these cases, consideration of amendments was followed by a committee vote to approve the draft bill, as amended.

In every case except Singapore and Chile, amendments added in the mock markup led to differences between the versions of the draft bill approved by the Finance Committee and the bill approved by the Ways and Means Committee.

Consistent with normal legislative practice, the two committees resolved these differences in an informal or ''mock'' conference. Each House appointed conferees to participate.

To begin the conference process, staff from both parties and both Houses jointly prepared a document identifying all the differences between the two versions of the draft bill. Where agreement was possible, staff recommended a resolution.

Typically, the House and Senate exchanged offers on more difficult issues, which were then resolved at the Member level. In each case, Members and staff were able to resolve all or virtually all conflicts. Both committees could then recommend identical draft bills to the administration for formal submission.

This time-tested process really works. It allows Congress to exercise its Constitutional prerogatives in full, while still guaranteeing the President and our trading partners a timely vote on trade agreements.

Although these informal procedures are not statutory, they were certainly on my mind when I worked to secure a renewal of the President's trade negotiating authority in the Trade Act of 2002. I firmly believe that Congress should continue to insist on a meaningful and robust informal process.

One of the keys to a meaningful informal process is time. In the case of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, the informal process took 7 months. That is how much time elapsed between when the U.S. signed the agreement and when the President formally submitted the implementing bill to Congress. During that time, the Finance Committee held hearings, conducted several weeks of informal drafting, and held four mock markup sessions. The informal conference alone included 3 days of Member-level meetings and took close to 2 months to complete.

The informal process for NAFTA lasted a full year. It included five hearings in the Finance Committee as well as hearings in five other committees. The Finance Committee staff worked with the administration for months on legislative drafting. The Finance Committee's markup involved 3 sessions over 2 weeks, followed by a conference.

The informal process for the Uruguay Round Agreements Act took about 9 months.

The Singapore and Chile FTAs took less time. That makes sense. The agreements required many fewer changes to U.S. law than those that came before.

After walking through the draft bills in detail with the administration, with Committee staff, and with legislative counsel, Members were satisfied. They chose not to offer any amendments at the mock markups. No conference was necessary.

Affording sufficient time to the process pays off. After the President formally submits an implementing bill, the fast-track procedures allow Congress up to 90 days to complete action. That is 90 days on which Congress is in session not calendar days.

But nowhere near that much time has ever been used. The formal process took 56 calendar days for the U.S.-Canada Agreement—including the August recess. NAFTA, Singapore, and Chile took a mere 16 days each.

What lesson can we learn from all this experience? Process matters.

Congress needs to be engaged throughout the negotiations. The trade committees need to play an active role in drafting implementing legislation. Committee members need to have enough time to give meaningful consideration to amendments and to resolve any differences between the Houses before the Government completes an implementing bill. When that happens, the formal fast-track process goes quite smoothly.

What does this mean for the future? First, we should not get overconfident. Just because the process works smoothly and quickly for some agreements, like Singapore and Chile, doesn't mean we can start skipping steps. In fact, with a vote on whether to extend the President's trade promotion authority for an additional 2 years possible next summer, now is no time to get sloppy.

More complex agreements may be ahead. CAFTA involves six countries and could raise controversial new issues. Any agreements that come out of the WTO Doha Round or the FTAA talks could require extensive new implementing legislation. In sum, we would be foolish to assume the process of developing implementing bills will always be as easy in future as our recent experience with Singapore and Chile.

Second, timing should always be Member-driven. Members should have the time that they need to review the relevant materials and participate in the informal process. We should never cut that time short just to meet artificial deadlines.

When we shortchange the process, we shortchange the Constitution. When we start cutting corners on process, we begin to abdicate Congress's constitutional role in making trade law.

A good agreement is no excuse for bad process. A good agreement is no excuse for Congress to surrender its Constitutional role. The ends do not justify the means.

Let us work together to advance the process of free trade. Let us ensure a fair process for reaching our trade agreements, and thereby make future trade agreements easier to achieve. And by advancing those agreements, let us work together to earn those benefits of free trade of greater economic growth and higher standards of living for generations of Americans yet to come.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2003

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the need for hate crimes legislation. On May 1, 2003, Senator KENNEDY and I introduced the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, a bill that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

On November 20, 1995, a young transsexual woman named Chanelle Picket was beaten severely and then strangled to death after leaving a gay bar in downtown Boston.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

SUPPORT FOR PRIVATE RELIEF

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I offer into the RECORD my statement of support of S. 2548, private relief legislation to provide lawful permanent residence status to Shigeru Yamada, a 22-year-old Japanese national who lives in Chula Vista, CA.

I have decided to offer private relief legislation on his behalf because I believe that Shigeru Yamada represents a model American citizen for whom removal from this country would represent an unfair hardship. Without this legislation, Mr. Yamada will be forced to return to a country in which he lacks any linguistic, cultural or family ties.

Mr. Yamada legally entered the United States with his mother and two sisters in 1992 at the young age of 10. The family was fleeing from Mr. Yamada's alcoholic father, who had been physically abusive to his mother, the children and even his own parents. Since then, he has had no contact with his father and is unsure if he is even alive. Tragically, Mr. Yamada experienced further hardship when his mother was killed in a car crash in 1995. Orphaned at the age of 13, Mr. Yamada spent time living with his aunt before moving to Chula Vista to live with a close friend of his late mother.

The death of his mother marked more than a personal tragedy for Shigeru Yamada; it also served to impede the process for him to legalize his status here. At the time of her death, Mr. Yamada's family was living legally in the United States. His mother had acquired a student visa for herself and her children qualified as her dependents. Her death revoked his legal status in the United States. Tragically, Mr. Yamada's mother was engaged to an American citizen at the time of her death. Had she survived, her son would likely have become an American citizen through this marriage.

Mr. Yamada has exhausted his options under our current immigration system of the United States. Throughout high school, he contacted attorneys in the hopes of becoming a citizen. Unfortunately, time has run out and, for Mr. Yamada, the only option available to him today is private relief legislation.

For several reasons, it would be tragic for Mr. Yamada to be removed from the United States and sent to Japan.

First, since arriving in the United States, Mr. Yamada has lived as a model American. He graduated with honors form Eastlake High School in 2000, where he excelled in both academics and athletics. Academically, Mr. Yamada earned a number of awards including being named an ''Outstanding English Student'' his freshman year, an All-American Scholar, and earning the United States National Minority Leadership Award. His teacher and coach, Mr. John Inumerable, describes him as being ''responsible, hard working, organized, honest, caring and very dependable.'' His role as the vice president of the Associated Student Body his senior year is an indication of Mr. Yamada's high level of leadership, as well as, his popularity and trustworthiness among his peers. As an athlete, Mr. Yamada was named the ''Most Inspirational Player of the Year'' in junior varsity baseball and football, as well as, varsity football. His football coach, Mr. Jose Mendoza, expressed his admiration by saying that he has ''seen in Shigeru Yamada the responsibility, dedication and loyalty that the average American holds to be virtuous.''

Second, Mr. Yamada has distinguished himself as a local volunteer. As a member of the Eastlake High School Link Crew, Mr. Yamada helped freshmen find their way around campus, offered tutoring and mentoring services, and set an example of how to be a successful member of the student body. Since graduating from high school, he has volunteered his time as the coach of the Eastlake High School girl's softball team. The head coach, Mr. Charles Sorge, describes him as an individual full of ''integrity'' who understands that as a coach it is important to work as a ''team player.'' His level of commitment to the team was further illustrated to Mr. Sorge when he discovered, halfway through the season, that Mr. Yamada's commute to and from practice was 2 hours long each way. It takes an individual with character to volunteer his time to coach and never bring up the issue of how long his commute takes him each day. Mr. Sorge hopes that, once Mr. Yamada legalizes his status, he can be formally hired to continue coaching the team.

Third, sending Mr. Yamada back to Japan would be an immense hardship for him and his family. Mr. Yamada does not speak Japanese. He is unaware of the nation's current cultural trends. And, he has no immediate family members that he knows of in Japan. Currently, both of his sisters are in the process of gaining American citizenship. His older sister has married a United States citizen and his younger sister is being adopted by a maternal aunt. Since all of his family lives in California, sending Mr. Yamada back to Japan would serve to split his family apart and separate him from everyone and everything that he knows. His sister contends that her younger brother would be ''lost'' if he had to return to live in Japan on his own. It is unlikely that he would be able to find any gainful employment in Japan due to his inability to speak or read Japanese.

As a member of the Chula Vista community, Mr. Yamada has distinguished himself as an honorable individual. His teacher, Mr. Robert Hughes, describes him as being an ''upstanding 'All-American' young man''. Until being picked up during a routine check of his immigration status on a city bus, he had never been arrested or convicted of any crime. Mr. Yamada is not, and has never been, a burden on the State. He has never received any Federal or State assistance.

Currently, Mr. Yamada is a sophomore at Southwestern Community College, where he is working on finishing his general education so that he can go on to earn his BA in criminal justice from San Diego State University. Mr. Yamada's commitment to his education is admirable. He could have easily taken a different path but, through his own individual fortitude, he has dedicated himself to his studies so that he can live a better life. In the future, Mr. Yamada is interested in pursuing a career in criminal law enforcement by serving as a police officer or an FBI agent.

With his hard work and giving attitude, Shigeru Yamada represents the ideal American citizen. Although born in Japan, he is truly American in every other sense. I ask you to help right a wrong and grant Mr. Yamada permanent status so that he can continue towards his bright future.

I ask unanimous consent three letters of recommendation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EASTLAKE HIGH SCHOOL,
Chula Vista, CA, May 21, 2004.

Hon. DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
U.S. Senator.

I am writing to bring to your attention the need to support a fine young man, Shigeru Yamada. I am a teacher and coach at Eastlake High School; I have known Shigeru for 8 years, both as a student and as a volunteer coach during the last 5 years. What has singularly impressed me about this young man is that he has created himself and never complained about his life's struggles. His mother died when he was young. He got little support from his aunt—materially, emotionally, spiritually. Yet all the while you would not have known that. He set goals for himself academically and athletically; modeled himself on good ideals of community service and service to his school. He was vice-president of the Associated Student Body at Eastlake High and would have pursued an academic future at UCLA were it not for his citizenship status. Instead, he did what he could do and has gone to community college in an effort to pursue his college degree.

All the while, he volunteered his time during these past 5 years to help coach our school's softball team (as well as other sports on campus). It was only recently that I had discovered that it would take him 2 hours with bus transfers just to get to softball practice.

I provide this information to you as a testimonial to the character of this young man. Exceptional in attitude and determination. We need this kind of spirit and resolve in America. We do not want to export it somewhere else. Please help.

Respectfully,

CHARLES R. SORGE, EdD,
English Teacher and Head Softball Coach.

To Mr. BOB FILNER:

I'm honored to write this letter for Shigeru Yamada. I have known Shigeru since 1997. A very energetic, bright young man whose personal charge and get after if attitude toward accomplishing his goals, have no equal. A person who personifies the notion of a ''hard charger.''

As an Instructional aide and Varsity Football coach I have earned great admiration toward Shigeru's work ethic. While in high school, Shigeru received academic honors as an All-American Scholar ('99), United States National Minority Leadership Award ('99 & '00), the National Honor Roll ('00), Golden State Awards, and Who's Who Among High School Students ('98–'00). His commitment toward his duties goes with out question. He managed to be a member of the Associative Student Body. Here he received a Presidential Award ('00), ASB Leadership Award ('00), and Eastlake High School ASB Life Membership Award ('00).

Through his many academic accomplishments Shigeru managed to dedicate himself to many extra curricular activities, such as Football, Baseball, and Wrestling. Other activities included, the Boys Choir (The ''E'' Males), AVID (Advancement via Individual Determination), and Link Crew (assisting incoming freshmen).

Through my personal experiences as a squad leader in the United States Army (Infantry) and Department Head at Home Depot. I have seen in Shigeru Yamada the responsibility, dedication and loyalty that the average American holds to be virtuous.

So with great appreciation please endorse a Bill, so that Shigeru Yamada can stay in the United States and become a patriotic citizen.

Sincerely,

JOSE MENDOZA,
Instructional Aide.

EASTLAKE HIGH SCHOOL,
Chula Vista, CA.

To Whom It May Concern:

I would like to write this letter of recommendation on behalf of Shigeru Yamada for his outstanding contributions to Eastlake High School and the Eastlake Community. I have been closely tied to Shigeru for approximately 2 years as teacher, coach, and as a friend. Throughout his years at Eastlake High School, Shigeru has participated successfully in many extra-curricular activities and has earned the respect and admiration from staff members, fellow students and the surrounding community. Shigeru has developed into an outstanding performer in Eastlake's football, wrestling and baseball programs. He is strongly admired for his sportsmanship, work ethic and most of all his natural ability as a team leader. For his efforts, Shigeru was recognized for athletic and academic achievements by being selected to the 1998–99 San Diego Union Tribune All-Academic Wrestling Team. Although Shigeru spends much of his time with competitive sports, he always finds time to help other students in need. Shigeru is an active participant with the Eastlake Link Crew. This organization was established to assist our ninth graders with finding their way around campus, learning school traditions, tutoring, mentoring, monitoring academic progress and setting examples of how to be a successful member of our campus environment. Academically, Shigeru excels in the mathematics and is presently taking Honors Pre-Calculus while carrying a 3.8 overall Grade Point Average. In addition, Shigeru is an active member in the AVID (Advancement Via Individual Achievement) program. This program helps our students develop academic skills that are beneficial for them when they attend college. Shigeru is also a member of the Associated Student Body. The ASB is the bloodline of our campus. This outstanding group of students work endless hours organizing pep assemblies and lunchtime activities, sells concessions at all extra-curricular events and assist in all campus elections and dances as well as providing support services for faculty and staff members. In several conversations, I have discovered that Shigeru has a strong interest in the field of Physical Therapy with an emphasis in Sports Medicine. I strongly believe that Shigeru is capable of reaching his goals because he is highly motivated, conscientious and extremely competent.

It is very easy to praise Shigeru for his personal achievements, but I think his personality is what makes him a great human being. Shigeru is responsible, hard working, organized, honest, caring and very dependable. On a daily basis, Shigeru volunteers his time selling concessions during nutrition break and lunch hour for the ASB food services. This job holds Shigeru accountable for large sums of money, an accurate account of inventories and timely service. Very few students have been trusted with this major responsibility. Another word that describes Shigeru is resiliency. Within the past couple of years Shigeru lost both of his parents in a tragic automobile accident. Consequently, this sad episode has left a permanent impression on Shigeru. Fortunately, Shigeru has overcome this tragedy and has maintained a standard for other young people to follow. Shigeru has proven to me that life is too important to waste and to enjoy every moment by being an active member of society, not just a spectator.

Sincerely,

JOHN INUMERABLE.

TRIBUTE TO PHISH

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, on August 15 in Coventry, VT, a beloved chapter in American music history will come to a close as the jam band Phish holds its final concert for legions of devoted ''phans'' and ''Phish-heads.'' We in Vermont are well known for our superb maple syrup, our wonderful ice cream, our award-winning cheese and our beautiful scenery, but after 21 remarkable years, the jam band Phish has certainly become one of our most famous exports.

The four musicians of Phish—Trey Anastasio, Mike Gordon, Page O'Connell, and Jon Fishman—met and started playing together as undergraduates at the University of Vermont in the early 1980s. The band quickly moved beyond its humble beginnings in a dormitory basement to playing a small nightclub in Burlington called Nectar's. While they toured for 5 years before releasing any commercial albums, the buzz around the band spread as their striking melodies and lively jam sessions endeared them to a growing legion of fans.

Phish released its first commercial album, Junta, in 1989. Since then, the band has put out more than 35 studio and live albums that have sold millions of copies. They have more than 200 original songs, and many of the songs die-hards love most were never recorded in the studio.

But the magic of Phish is not as much in its studio recordings as it is in its live performances. In an era when slick marketing techniques often overshadow the musical accomplishments of the artists themselves, this talented band from Vermont has provided a refreshing contrast by promoting free spiritedness and individuality in their music.

The band has always been unconcerned about releasing catchy singles and making millions of dollars from record sales. Instead they play long jams—oftentimes with songs lasting 30 minutes or longer—and tour yearround. Bucking a trend in the industry, they even encouraged people to tape their shows for free and trade them on the Internet. For the members of Phish, it really is all about their music and their fans.

Every night on stage is a new and different showcase for the talents of the versatile and endlessly creative band members. Whether they are playing electric guitars, keyboards, drums, or vacuum cleaners, Phish's improvisational talent has never disappointed. Many fans—often referred to as ''Phish-heads''—follow the band from concert to concert living off veggie burritos, grilled cheese sandwiches and the charity of others.

Through it all, Phish has always considered Vermont home. In a tribute to their Burlington roots, the band's first album produced with a major record company was titled A Picture of Nectar. And the band's share of proceeds from sales of the popular ''Phish Food'' Ben and Jerry's ice cream flavor goes directly toward environmental projects in Vermont's Lake Champlain Watershed. Now, as they prepare for their final show in Vermont, it is appropriate that they finish where they started.

Though Phish has sold millions of albums and become a huge success, in spirit they remain a group that is unpretentious and unfailingly loyal to their fans. Their admirable generosity has fostered a sense of community among those who follow the group. The band's break-up is a source of sadness to all of us who know and love them.

I congratulate Trey Anastasio, Mike Gordon, Jon Fishman and Page O'Connell on their remarkable success. I am grateful for all they have done for Vermont, for American music, and for their fans. Most importantly, we sincerely appreciate their authenticity, their enthusiasm and their generosity.

While no one wants to see Phish stop playing after this summer, we can all take some solace that their music will live on, in these words from their song, ''Down With Disease.''

Waiting for the time when I can finally say
That this has all been wonderful, but now I'm on my way.
But when I think it's time to leave it all behind,
I try to find a way, but there's nothing I can say to make it stop.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

LAUREN AMBER COOK

• Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I pay tribute and congratulate Lauren Amber Cook of Princeton, KY on being awarded the William R. Sprague Scholarship from the Kentucky Farm Bureau Education Foundation. This academic scholarship will provide Lauren with $4,000 toward her education.

Lauren has proven to be a very able and competent student by winning this prestigious award. She will represent the graduates of Caldwell County High School very well when she enrolls at Vanderbilt University in the autumn. There she plans to study chemical engineering with a focus on agriculture.

The citizens of Caldwell County should be proud to have a young woman like Lauren Amber Cook in their community. Her example of dedication and hard work should be an inspiration to the entire Commonwealth.

She has my most sincere appreciation for this work, and I look forward to her continued service to Kentucky.•

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT HOMEOWNERSHIP TAX CREDIT ACT

• Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, President Bush officially declared the month of June as ''National Homeownership Month,'' and with this annual tradition, America's attention was again drawn to the importance of homeownership and the stability it can bring to families and neighborhoods. It is often homeownership that financially anchors American families and civically anchors our communities. But I believe our focus on homeownership also returns our attention to the basic ideals of the American Dream. Ensuring access to homeownership, and through it access to the American Dream, is among the most significant ways we can empower our citizens to achieve the happy, productive and stable lifestyle everyone desires.

Having a house of one's own that provides security and comfort to one's family and that gives families an active, vested interest in the quality of life their community provides is central to our collective ideas about freedom and self-determination. As a nation, we know that homeownership helps the emotional and intellectual growth and development of children. We know that homeowners show greater interest and more frequent participation in civic organizations and neighborhood issues. We know that when people own homes, they are more likely to accumulate wealth and assets and to prepare themselves financially for such things as their children's education and retirement.

In America today, homeownership is at a record high. Unfortunately, however, there remains a significant gap between minority and non-minority populations, leaving homeownership an elusive financial prospect for many. The homeownership rate for the nation's African American and Hispanic households lags more than 25 percentage points below White households.

In Congress, we have the responsibility of ensuring that the dream of homeownership is possible for more of our citizens. Last year, Senator JOHN KERRY and I drafted and sponsored S. 875, the ''Community Development Homeownership Tax Credit Act,'' a bill that enjoys strong bipartisan support in the Senate. This legislation would give developers and investors an incentive to participate in the rehabilitation and construction of homes for low- and moderate-income buyers. This measure is aimed at reaching President Bush's goal of increasing American minority homeownership by 5.5 million families, thus making 5.5 million new dreams come true.

Owning a home is an integral part of attaining the security, continuity, and comfort of living the American Dream. I will continue to advocate policies that help make this dream become a reality for our Nation's families. I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting homeownership by cosponsoring S. 875.•

TRIBUTE TO LIEUTENANT GENERAL ROBERT B. FLOWERS

• Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I want to take a few moments today to publicly thank Lieutenant General Robert Flowers, who left his post as commander and chief of engineers of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers on July 1. General Flowers is one of the finest individuals I have worked with as a U.S. Senator representing North Dakota. He is not only a fine, trusted public servant, he is also a good friend.

North Dakota and the Nation owe General Flowers a deep debt of gratitude. He served as chief of engineers for 4 years, and he served admirably. During that period, he helped advance the construction of the Grand Forks flood control project and other important flood control projects in the Red River Valley. He also fought hand in hand with the North Dakota congressional delegation as we have worked to implement solutions to the chronic flood at Devils Lake. Throughout it all, he has always gone above and beyond the call of duty.

General Flowers is one of the most capable leaders of the Corps of Engineers I have ever had the pleasure of working with. He is a true professional, and has a unique ability to walk into a difficult condition, assess the situation, and calmly, but decisively, take action. He listens carefully to people and has a leadership style that invites creative solutions to complex problems.

General Flowers is also a man of tremendous integrity. He cares deeply about the people of this Nation, and his commitment to doing the right thing was unmatched. He was willing to fight for the needs of common citizens, even if it meant leading an uphill fight and challenging others within the Corps. To General Flowers, ''no'' was simply unacceptable. He worked diligently to turn over every stone and formulate solutions that are workable and responsive to the water challenges faced by communities across the country.

I know that the General Flowers leaves the Corps a much better organization due to his leadership. The General set high standards for his team, and they delivered time and time again. I will not forget the contributions General Flowers has made to the people of my State and the country.

I want to again express my deep appreciation and respect for General Flowers for his service to my state and to our Nation. We in North Dakota will miss you, General, but wish you all the best.●

RETIREMENT OF ADMIRAL JAMES O. ELLIS, JR. FROM U.S. STRATEGIC COMMAND

● Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, today, it is my honor and my privilege to recognize one of the finest officers in the U.S. Navy, and a good friend of mine, ADM James O. Ellis, Jr.

For the past 3 years, ADM Jim Ellis has demonstrated his leadership as commander of United States Strategic Command. During his time at Offutt AFB, in Nebraska, Jim Ellis personified the Navy's core values of integrity, selfless service, and excellence in all things. I join the many Members and staff who enjoyed the opportunity to meet with him on a variety of strategic issues and came to appreciate his ability to integrate his many talents at Offutt.

Admiral Ellis is retiring from his post tomorrow. There will be a ceremony in Omaha to honor him that I will attend.

Today, it is my privilege to recognize with admiration and thanks some of Admiral Ellis' many accomplishments since he entered the military 35 years ago, and to commend the superb service he provided the Navy, the Congress and the Nation. Admiral Ellis is a 1969 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy. He was designated a Naval aviator in 1971 and has held a variety of sea and shore assignments since 1972.

His sea duty billets as a Navy fighter pilot included tours with Fighter Squadron 92 aboard USS Constellation, CV 64, and Fighter Squadron 1 aboard USS Ranger, CV 61.

From early in his career, Jim Ellis' exceptional leadership skills were evident as he repeatedly proved himself in select command positions. Admiral Ellis was the first Commanding Officer of Strike/Fighter Squadron 131, deploying in 1985 with new F/A–18 Hornets aboard USS Coral Sea, CV 43. He served as executive officer of the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier USS Carl Vinson, CVN 70, and as commanding officer of USS LaSalle, AGF 3, the Arabian Gulf flagship of the Commander, Joint Task Force, Middle East.

In 1991, Admiral Ellis assumed command of the USS Abraham Lincoln, CVN 72, and participated in Operation Desert Storm while deployed during her maiden voyage in the western Pacific and Arabian Gulf. In June 1995, Admiral Ellis assumed command of Carrier Group FIVE/Battle Force SEVENTH Fleet, breaking his flag aboard USS Independence, CV 62, forward deployed to the Western Pacific and homeported in Yokosuka, Japan. As carrier battle group commander he led contingency response operations to both the Arabian Gulf and Taiwan Straits.

Admiral Ellis also excelled in a variety of key shore and staff assignments that included tours as an experimental/operational test pilot, service in the Navy Office of Legislative Affairs, and duty as F/A–18 program coordinator, deputy chief of Naval Operations, Air Warfare. He also served as deputy commander and chief of Staff, Joint Task Force FIVE, the counternarcotics force for U.S. Commander in Chief Pacific. In November 1993 he reported as inspector general, U.S. Atlantic Fleet, and subsequently served as director for Operations, Plans and Policy, N3/N5, on the staff of the commander in chief, U.S. Atlantic Fleet. He assumed duties as deputy chief of Naval Operations—Plans, Policy and Operations—in November 1996.

Admiral Ellis became commander in chief, U.S. Naval Forces, Europe headquartered in London, England, and commander in chief, Allied Forces, Southern Europe headquartered in Naples, Italy, in October 1998. During his time serving in Europe, Admiral Ellis provided support to NATO forces as they waged war over Kosovo.

I was especially pleased when he was nominated to continue service to the Nation as commander, U.S. Strategic Command in 2001. As such, Admiral Ellis is responsible for the global command and control of U.S. strategic forces and provides a sweeping range of strategic capabilities and options for the President and Secretary of Defense. While combatant commander in 2002, Admiral Ellis oversaw the merger of U.S. Space Command with U.S. Strategic Command, demonstrating exemplary leadership during a critical period of transition.

Over the years, Admiral Ellis's leadership, professionalism and expertise enabled him to foster exceptional rapport with many Members of both the Senate and the House. I am personally grateful for his friendship. I offer congratulations to him and his wife, Polly, on his exceptionally well-deserved retirement. The Congress and country applaud the selfless commitment his entire family has made to the Nation in supporting his military career. I know I speak for all my colleagues in expressing my heartfelt appreciation to Admiral Ellis. We wish our friend the best of luck. He is truly a credit to both the Navy and the Nation.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2619. A bill to designate the annex to the E. Barrett Prettyman Federal Building and United States Courthouse located at 333 Constitution Ave. Northwest in Washington, District of Columbia, as the ''Judge William B. Bryant Annex to the E. Barrett Prettyman Federal Building and United States Courthouse''; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce a bill to designate the recently-constructed annex to the E. Barrett Prettyman United States Courthouse in Washington, DC as the ''William B. Bryant Annex.''

Thomas F. Hogan, this Court's current Chief Judge, has expressed his support and the unanimous support of the other judges on the District Court for the District of Columbia. I am proud to join with Congresswoman ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON in moving ahead with the Chief Judge's request.

Judge Bryant served with distinction of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia since 1965. He was the Chief Judge on that court from March 1977 to September 1981.

Judge Bryant graduated from Howard University in 1932, and from Howard University Law School, receiving an LL.B. in 1936.

Judge Bryant's lengthy public service career is one of great distinction. In addition to the time he spent on the Federal bench, Judge Bryant served in the United States Army during World War II and as an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia. After serving four and one half years as Chief Judge, Judge Bryant took senior status in January of 1982.

Naming the new annex to the E. Barrett Prettyman courthouse after Judge Bryant would be a fitting tribute to this distinguished jurist. Much like Judge Prettyman, Judge Bryant had an illustrious career in public service and on the bench. I am honored to offer this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to join Congresswoman NORTON and me in support of this well-deserved commendation.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. REID, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. CARPER, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LEAHY, and Mrs. CLINTON):

S. 2620. A bill to provide for the establishment of an Office of High-Performance Green Buildings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the ''High Performance Green Buildings Act of 2004.''

I would like to thank Senator LAUTENBERG and the other cosponsors for working with me to introduce this important legislation.

Preliminary studies are showing that high-performance green buildings generate huge savings in operations and maintenance costs due to their efficient operating systems. These studies have also demonstrated that high-performance green buildings provide a healthier work environment for the occupants, resulting in fewer absences due to illness. The outcome is huge savings in health related costs. All of these savings are generated, while sustaining very little impact on their surrounding environment.

In the United States, buildings account for: 36 percent of total energy use; 65 percent of electricity consumption; 30 percent of greenhouse gas emissions; 30 percent of raw materials use; 30 percent of waste output and 12 percent of potable water consumption. Why not build buildings that strive to conserve our precious resources and reduce the harmful pollutants that are damaging to the environment?

In an era of great security concern, green buildings have reduced energy requirements and may use renewable sources of energy that are off the electricity grid. Green buildings also use less water and some even collect rainwater to use throughout the building. Should there be a terrorist act that damages or destroys our Nation's resources, these buildings could assist in keeping our government up and running.

There is no downside to utilizing high-performance buildings. This initiative is taking off in the private sector. According to the US Green Building Council, there are 118 certified green buildings across the United States with 1,395 in the pipeline. This legislation would ensure that the Federal Government is keeping pace with the real world and doing its part to protect the environment and provide a safe work place for its employees.

The General Services Administration, GSA, is the largest landlord in the United States, with over 8,700 buildings in their current inventory. This legislation creates an office within GSA to oversee the green building efforts of agencies within the government. GSA is a natural leader to focus on our federal buildings and ensure that they are safe, healthy, and efficient.

This legislation will coordinate the efforts within the Federal Government to promote high-performance green buildings, provide public outreach, and expand existing research.

The bill creates an Interagency Steering Committee to advise the Office within GSA. The Committee will be comprised of key representatives of each relevant agency, state and local governments, nongovernment organizations, and experts within the building community. This Committee will ensure that the Federal Government stays up to date with technology and the latest advancements to ensure that high-performance buildings operate efficiently while continuing to provide a healthier environment for the occupants.

In addition, research efforts will be expanded to focus on buildings and the impacts that their systems have on human health and worker productivity. We just don't know enough. Are we making our employees sick by providing poor workspace?

The High-Performance Green Buildings Act also requires that a good hard look be taken at the budget process we have used for years and explore ways to improve the approval process for government projects. We need to grow with the times and ensure that our budget process allows us to take into account life-cycle costing. This means that we allow our financial experts to factor in savings that green buildings generate over time, and don't just look at the upfront cost of a building. It has been documented that high-performance green buildings recover any initial upfront costs from incorporating efficient systems within the first few years of operation. The average life of a federal building is 50 years. In the times of soaring budget deficits, it is imperative that the Federal Government pursue all cost-saving options.

High-performance green buildings are not just for federal buildings, but involve any type of building, including schools. This legislation also focuses on providing healthier, more efficient school facilities for our children. The bill provides $10 million in grants to state and local education agencies for technical assistance and the implementation of the Environmental Protection Agency's, EPA, Tools for Schools Program. The bill will help schools develop plans to focus on the design, construction, and renovation of school facilities, and look at systematic improvements for school siting, indoor air quality, reducing contaminants, and other health issues. This legislation also encourages research to study the effects that these systems are having on student health and productivity. Our children deserve to learn in an environment that is safe and conducive to learning.

Lastly, this bill will promote leadership within the Federal Government and provide incentives for government agencies to build high-performance green buildings. It also creates a clearinghouse to keep individuals and entities, including Congress and the government, informed on the information and services that the Office will provide.

I strongly encourage your support of the ''High-Performance Green Buildings Act of 2004.'' This has been a long time coming and will benefit all of us.

I ask unanimous consent that the ''High-Performance Green Buildings Act of 2004'' be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2620

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''High-Performance Green Buildings Act''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) buildings have profound impacts on the environment, energy use, and health of individuals, and numerous studies suggest that building environments affect worker productivity;

(2) buildings in the United States consume 37 percent of the energy, 68 percent of the electricity, and 12 percent of the potable water used in the United States, and overall construction of buildings (including construction of related infrastructure) consumes 60 percent of all raw materials used in the economy of the United States (excluding materials used for food or fuel);

(3) in the United States, buildings generate—

(A) 40 percent of the nonindustrial waste stream;

(B) 31 percent of the mercury in municipal solid waste; and

(C) 35 percent of the carbon dioxide (the primary greenhouse gas associated with climate change), 49 percent of the sulfur dioxide, and 25 percent of the nitrogen oxides found in the air;

(4) buildings contribute to the ''heat island effect'' by eliminating vegetative cover and using paving and roofing materials that absorb heat and raise ambient temperatures, accelerating the reaction that forms ground-level ozone;

(5) according to the Environmental Protection Agency, on average, people in the United States spend approximately 90 percent of their time indoors, where the concentration of pollutants may be 2 to 5 times and, in some cases, 100 times, higher than pollution concentrations in outdoor air;

(6) the Centers for Disease Control and the Environmental Protection Agency have connected poor indoor air quality to significantly elevated rates of mortality;

(7) health impacts from building materials, such as adhesives, paints, carpeting, and pressed-wood products, which may emit pollutants such as formaldehyde or other volatile organic compounds, are still uncertain but are believed to be potentially significant;

(8) according to the Building Owners and Managers Association, because costs relating to employees, at $130 per square foot annually (including health insurance costs), are by far the highest business costs of a building, as opposed to total energy costs at $1.81 per square foot, measures to improve the indoor air quality of a building can be an important investment in reducing long-term employee costs;

(9) the use of energy efficient systems and alternative sources of energy—

(A) reduces building costs; and

(B) improves the security of the United States by ensuring continuing operations despite any potential interruptions in the primary energy supply of the United States as a result of terrorism or other disruptions of the electricity grid;

(10) by integrating issues relating to natural resource use, human health, materials use, transportation needs, and other concerns into planning the life cycle of a building, architects, designers, and developers can construct buildings that—

(A) are healthier for occupants;

(B) reduce environmental impacts; and

(C) are less wasteful of resources;

(11) a well-designed high-performance green building can be less expensive to build and operate throughout the lifetime of the building than a building that is not a high-performance green building;

(12) in 2003, in the document entitled ''The Federal Commitment to Green Building: Experiences and Expectations'', the Office of the Federal Environmental Executive found that ''[t]here is a mixture of diverse Federal green building mandates in law, regulation, and Executive Orders, but not one definitive, clear, and unified policy statement on environmental design. Many within the Federal government are working on green buildings, but additional coordination and integration are needed.'';

(13) a central coordinating Federal authority for green buildings would increase efficiency of, improve communication between, and reduce duplication within green building programs; and

(14) the General Services Administration, as the largest civilian landlord in the United States, managing more than 8,300 buildings owned or leased by the United States, is the appropriate agency to provide Federal agency coordination of green building programs.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term ''Administrator'' means the Administrator of General Services.

(2) COMMITTEE.—The term ''Committee'' means the steering committee established under section 103(a).

(3) HIGH-PERFORMANCE GREEN BUILDING.—The term ''high-performance green building'' means a building the life cycle of which—

(A) increases the efficiency with which the building—

(i) reduces energy, water, and material resource use;

(ii) improves indoor environmental quality, reduces indoor pollution, improves thermal comfort, and improves lighting and noise environments that affect occupant health and productivity;

(iii) reduces negative impacts on the environment throughout the life cycle of the building, including air and water pollution and waste generation;

(iv) increases the use of environmentally preferable products, including biobased, recycled content, and nontoxic products with lower life-cycle impacts;

(v) reduces the negative impacts of emissions under the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7401 et seq.);

(vi) integrates systems in the building; and

(vii) reduces the environmental impacts of transportation through building location and site design that support a full range of transportation choices for users of the building;

(B) considers indoor and outdoor impacts of the building on human health and the environment, including—

(i) improvements in worker productivity;

(ii) the life-cycle impacts of building materials and operations; and

(iii) other factors that the Office considers to be appropriate.

(4) HIGH-PERFORMANCE SCHOOL.—The term ''high-performance school'' has the meaning given the term ''healthy, high-performance school building'' in section 5586 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7277e).

(5) LIFE CYCLE.—The term ''life cycle'', with respect to a high-performance green building, means all stages of the useful life of the high-performance green building (including components, equipment, systems, and controls of the building) beginning at conception of a green building project and continuing through siting, design, construction, landscaping, commissioning, operation, maintenance, renovation, deconstruction, and removal of the green building.

(6) LIFE CYCLE ASSESSMENT.—The term ''life cycle assessment'' means a comprehensive system approach for measuring the environmental performance of a product or service that includes an analysis of the environmental impacts of—

(A) each stage in the life of the product or service (including acquisition of raw materials, product manufacture, transportation, installation, operation and maintenance, and waste management); and

(B) each component of the product or service.

(7) LIFE-CYCLE COSTING.—The term ''life-cycle costing'', with respect to a high-performance green building, means an analysis of economic costs of impacts and choices made regarding materials used and activities carried out with respect to the life cycle of the high-performance green building.

(8) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The term ''local educational agency'' has the meaning given the term in section 9101 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7801).

(9) OFFICE.—The term ''Office'' means the Office of High-Performance Green Buildings established under section 102(a).

TITLE I—OFFICE OF HIGH-PERFORMANCE GREEN BUILDINGS

SEC. 101. OVERSIGHT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall establish within the General Services Administration, and appoint an appropriate individual to, a position in the career-reserved Senior Executive service to—

(1) establish and oversee the Office of High-Performance Green Buildings in accordance with section 102; and

(2) carry out other duties as required under this Act.

(b) COMPENSATION.—The compensation of the individual appointed under subsection (a) shall not exceed the maximum rate of basic pay for the Senior Executive Service under section 5382 of title 5, United States Code, including any applicable locality-based comparability payment that may be authorized under section 5304(h)(2)(C) of that title.

SEC. 102. OFFICE OF HIGH-PERFORMANCE GREEN BUILDINGS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The individual appointed under section 101(a), in partnership with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Office of the Federal Environmental Executive, the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and heads of other relevant Federal agencies, shall establish within the General Services Administration an Office of High-Performance Green Buildings.

(b) DUTIES.—The Office shall—

(1) ensure full coordination and collaboration with all relevant agencies;

(2) establish a senior-level Federal interagency steering committee in accordance with section 103;

(3) provide information through—

(A) outreach;

(B) education;

(C) the provision of technical assistance; and

(D) the development of a national high-performance green building clearinghouse in accordance with section 104;

(4) provide for research and development relating to high-performance green building initiatives under section 105(a);

(5) in partnership with the Comptroller General, review and analyze budget and life-cycle costing issues in accordance with section 106;

(6) complete and submit a report in accordance with subsection (c); and

(7) carry out implementation plans described in subsection (d).

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and biennially thereafter, the Office shall submit to Congress and the Comptroller General a report that—

(1) describes the status of the implementation of programs under this Act and other Federal programs in effect as of the date of the report, including—

(A) the extent to which the programs are being carried out in accordance with this Act; and

(B) the status of funding requests and appropriations for those programs;

(2) identifies steps within the planning, budgeting, and construction process of Federal facilities that inhibit new and existing Federal facilities from becoming high-performance green buildings, as measured by—

(A) a silver rating, as defined by the Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design Building Rating System standard established by the United States Green Building Council; or

(B) an improved or higher rating standard as identified, and reassessed biannually, by the Committee;

(3) identifies inconsistency of Federal agencies with Federal law in product acquisition guidelines and high-performance product guidelines;

(4) recommends language for uniform standards for use by Federal agencies in environmentally responsible acquisition; and

(5) includes, for the 2-year period covered by the report, recommendations to address each of the matters, and a plan and deadline for implementation of each of the recommendations, described in paragraphs (1) through (4).

(d) IMPLEMENTATION PLAN.—The Office, in consultation with the Comptroller General, shall carry out each plan for implementation of recommendations under subsection (c)(5).

SEC. 103. INTERAGENCY STEERING COMMITTEE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Office shall establish within the Office a steering committee.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Committee shall be composed of representatives of, at a minimum—

(1) each agency referred to in section 102(a);

(2) State and local governments;

(3) nongovernmental organizations, including the United State Green Building Council, the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy, and the Rocky Mountain Institute;

(4) building design, development, and finance sectors in the private sector; and

(5) building owners, developers, and equipment manufacturers, including renewable, control, combined heat and power, and other relevant technologies, as determined by the Office.

(c) DUTIES.—The Committee shall—

(1) assess Federal activities and compliance with Federal law applicable to high-performance green buildings;

(2) make recommendations for expansion of existing efforts and development of new efforts to support activities relating to the life cycles of high-performance green buildings by the Federal Government, including consideration of the benefits to national security and implementation of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq.);

(3) evaluate current high-performance green building standards and recommend improved, higher, or supplemental rating standards, as necessary, that are consistent with the responsibilities of the Federal Government under this Act and other applicable law; and

(4) provide to the individual appointed under section 101(a) such recommendations relating to Federal activities carried out under sections 104 through 106 as are agreed to by a majority of the members of the Committee.

SEC. 104. PUBLIC OUTREACH.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Office, in close coordination with Federal agencies and departments that perform related functions, shall carry out public outreach—

(1) to inform individuals and entities in the public sector, including the Federal Government, of the information and services available through the Office; and

(2) to determine how to most effectively deliver that information to the individuals and entities.

(b) DUTIES.—In carrying out this section, the Office, in close cooperation with Federal agencies and departments that perform related functions, shall—

(1) establish and maintain a national high-performance green building clearinghouse on the Internet that—

(A) coordinates and enhances existing similar efforts; and

(B) provides information relating to high-performance green buildings, including—

(i) information on, and hyperlinks to Internet sites that describe, the activities of the Federal Government;

(ii) hyperlinks to Internet sites relating to—

(I) State and local governments;

(II) the private sector; and

(III) international activities; and

(iii) information on the exposure of children to environmental hazards in school facilities, as provided by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(2) develop clear guidance and educational materials for use by Federal agencies in implementing high-performance green building practices;

(3) develop and conduct training sessions with budget specialists and contracting personnel from Federal agencies and budget examiners to apply life-cycle cost criteria to actual projects;

(4) provide technical assistance on methods of using tools and resources to make more cost-effective, health protective, and environmentally beneficial decisions for constructing high-performance green buildings;

(5) assist all branches of government at the Federal, State, and local levels, and any other interested entity, by providing information on relevant application processes for certifying a high-performance green building, including certification and commissioning;

(6) assist interested persons, communities, businesses, and branches of government with technical information, technical assistance, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice that would be useful in planning and constructing high-performance green buildings, particularly with respect to tools available to conduct life-cycle cost assessment;

(7) provide technical training and guidance on high-performance green buildings; and

(8) obtain such information from other Federal offices, agencies and departments as is necessary to carry out this Act.

SEC. 105. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Office shall carry out research and development—

(1) to survey and coordinate existing research and studies;

(2) to recommend new areas for research; and

(3) to promote the development and dissemination of high performance green building tools.

(b) DUTIES.—In carrying out this section, the Office shall—

(1) ensure interagency coordination of relevant research;

(2) develop and direct a Federal high-performance green building research plan that identifies information needs and research that should be addressed and provides measurement tools—

(A) to quantify the relationships between human health and occupant productivity and each of—

(i) pollutant emissions from materials and products in the building;

(ii) natural day lighting;

(iii) ventilation choices and technologies;

(iv) heating and cooling choices and technologies;

(v) moisture control and mold;

(vi) maintenance, cleaning, and pest control activities;

(vii) acoustics; and

(viii) other issues relating to the health, comfort, productivity, and performance of occupants of the building;

(B) to monitor and assess the life-cycle performance of public facilities (including demonstration projects) built as high-performance green buildings, including through consideration of the report required under section 401(b)(1)(D); and

(C) to quantify, review, and standardize techniques for use in performing life cycle assessments;

(3) assist the budget and life-cycle costing functions of the Office under section 106 in the development and implementation of performance-based standards and life-cycle cost measures, including the development of performance measure tools and software for use by Federal agencies and other interested entities; and

(4) support other research initiatives determined by the Office to contribute to mainstreaming of high-performance planning, design, construction, and operation and management of buildings.

SEC. 106. BUDGET AND LIFE-CYCLE COSTING.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Office, in coordination with the Office of Management and Budget and relevant agencies, shall carry out budget and life-cycle costing for green buildings.

(b) DUTIES.—In carrying out this section, the Office shall—

(1) consult, as necessary, the report of the Office of the Federal Environmental Executive entitled ''The Federal Commitment to Buildings: Experiences and Expectations'' and dated September 2003;

(2) be responsible for—

(A) examining policy of the Office of Management and Budget relating to life-cycle costing for Federal capital investments;

(B) assisting in the development of clear guidance and implementation of life-cycle cost policy with budget offices of other Federal agencies by establishing a consistent standard of life-cycle cost practices for Federal agencies;

(C) identifying tools that could support the use of life-cycle costing to assist sound Federal budget decisionmaking; and

(D) examining—

(i) the practicability of linking high performance green building life cycle stages with Federal budgets;

(ii) the effect that such a link would have in reducing barriers to the construction of high-performance green buildings and renovation of existing buildings; and

(iii) means by which to incorporate the short-term and long-term cost savings that accrue from high-performance green buildings.

SEC. 107. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2005 through 2010.

TITLE II—HEALTHY HIGH-PERFORMANCE SCHOOLS

SEC. 201. GRANTS FOR SCHOOLS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency may provide grants to State educational agencies and local educational agencies for use in—

(1) providing intensive technical assistance for and assisting the implementation of the Tools for Schools Program of the Environmental Protection Agency; and

(2) development of State-level school environmental quality plans, in partnership with the Environmental Protection Agency, that may include—

(A) standards for school building design, construction, and renovation;

(B) identification of ongoing school building environmental problems in the State;

(C) proposals for the systematic improvement (including benchmarks and timelines) of environmental conditions in schools throughout the State, including with respect to—

(i) school building siting, construction, and maintenance;

(ii) indoor air quality;

(iii) pest control;

(iv) radon contamination;

(v) lead contamination;

(vi) environmentally preferable purchasing of products for instruction and maintenance;

(vii) hazard identification and remediation; and

(viii) maximization of transportation choices for students, staff, and other members of the community; and

(D) recommendations for improvements in the capacity of the State to track child and adult health complaints relating to schools.

(b) COST SHARING.—

(1) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the cost of a project or activity carried out using funds from a grant under subsection (a) shall not exceed 90 percent.

(2) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the cost of a project or activity carried out using funds from a grant under subsection (a) may be provided in the form of cash or in-kind goods and services, including goods and services used to create prototypical designs.

(c) GRANT PRIORITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In providing grants under this section for use in carrying out the program referred to in subsection (a)(1), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall give priority to school districts that have a demonstrated need for environmental improvement.

(2) RESPONSIBILITY OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS AND STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

(A) SCHOOL DISTRICTS.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, each school district that receives funds from the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to carry out a program described in subsection (a) shall submit to the State educational agency with jurisdiction over the school district a report that includes—

(i) a list of schools in the districts that, as of the date of the report, have accepted funds or other assistance from the Environmental Protection Agency for use in carrying out this section; and

(ii) an evaluation of the impact of the funds, including—

(I) general data regarding measures of student health and attendance rates before and after the intervention; and

(II) descriptions of toxic or hazardous cleaning, maintenance, or instructional products eliminated or reduced in use as part of the promotion or remediation of the indoor air quality of schools within the school district; and

(iii) basic information on the potential influence of other factors (such as the installation of carpet and HVAC systems and similar activities) on air quality.

(B) STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY REPORTS.—Not later than 180 days after the date on which each State educational agency has received the annual reports under subparagraph (A) from all participating school districts, the State educational agency shall submit to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and Congress a consolidated report of all information received from the school districts.

SEC. 202. FEDERAL GUIDELINES FOR SITING OF SCHOOL FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Using as a model guidelines such as those of the ''Child Proofing Our Communities'' School Siting Committee of the State of California, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall develop school site acquisition guidelines.

(b) VULNERABILITY.—The guidelines should contain an analysis of means by which to account for the special vulnerability of children to chemical exposures in any case in which the potential for contamination at a potential school site is assessed.

(c) ACCESSIBILITY.—The guidelines shall include an analysis of means by which to maximize transportation choices for students, staff, and other members of the community.

SEC. 203. EDUCATION RESEARCH PROGRAM.

The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in partnership with the Secretary of Education, shall carry out an education research program that—

(1) describes the status and findings of Federal research initiatives established under this Act and other Federal law with respect to education, including relevant updates on trends in the field, such as the impact of school facility environments on—

(A) student and staff health, safety, and productivity;

(B) students with disabilities or special needs; and

(C) student learning capacity;

(2) provides technical assistance on siting, design, management, and operation of school facilities, including facilities used by students with disabilities or special needs;

(3) once the relevant metrics have been identified or developed in accordance with section 105, quantifies the relationships between—

(A) human health, occupant productivity, and student performance; and

(B) with respect to school facilities, each of—

(i) pollutant emissions from materials and products;

(ii) natural day lighting;

(iii) ventilation choices and technologies;

(iv) heating and cooling choices and technologies;

(v) moisture control and mold;

(vi) maintenance, cleaning, and pest control activities;

(vii) acoustics; and

(4) cooperates with federally funded pediatric environmental health research centers to assist in on-site school environmental investigations;

(5) assists States and State entities in better understanding and improving the environmental health of children; and

(6) provides to the Office a biennial report of all activities carried out under this section.

SEC. 204. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $10,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2005 through 2010.

TITLE III—STRENGTHENING FEDERAL LEADERSHIP

SEC. 301. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

(a) RESTRUCTURING OF CAPITAL BUDGETS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of submission of the report under 102(c), the Comptroller General shall—

(1) review the current budget process; and

(2) develop and submit to Congress an implementation plan for life-cycle costing that—

(A) identifies and incorporates the short-term and long-term cost savings that accrue from high-performance green buildings; and

(B) includes recommendations for—

(i) restructuring of budgets to require the use of complete energy- and environmental-cost accounting;

(ii) the use of operations expenditures in budget-related decisions while simultaneously incorporating productivity and health measures (as those measures can be quantified by the Office, with the assistance of universities and national laboratories); and

(iii) means by which Federal agencies may be permitted to retain and reuse all identified savings accrued as a result of the use of high-performance life cycle costing for future high-performance green building initiatives.

(b) AUDITS.—The Comptroller General may conduct periodic audits of a Federal project over the life of the project to inspect whether—

(1) the design stage of high performance green building measures were achieved; and

(2) the high performance building data were collected and reported to the Office.

TITLE IV—DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

SEC. 401. COORDINATION OF GOALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Office shall establish guidelines for a demonstration project conducted as a public-private partnership to contribute to the research goals of the Office.

(b) PROJECTS.—In accordance with guidelines established by the Office under subsection (a) and the duties of the Office described in section 101(b), the individual appointed under section 101(a) shall carry out—

(1) for each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, a demonstration project, in a Federal building selected by the Office in accordance with the criteria described in subsection (c)(1), that—

(A) provides for the evaluation and, as practicable, use of the information obtained through the conduct of projects and activities under this Act;

(B) requires at least 1 project or activity referred to in subparagraph (A) to achieve a platinum rating, as defined by the Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design Building Rating System standard established by the United States Green Building Council (or equivalent rating), for each fiscal year; and

(C) requires the submission to the Office of an annual report describing recommendations for the use of information gathered as a result of programs carried out under this Act; and

(2) a demonstration project involving at least 4 universities, that, as determined by the Office in accordance with subsection (c)(2), have appropriate research capability and relevant projects to meet the goals of the demonstration project established by the Office.

(c) CRITERIA.—

(1) FEDERAL BUILDINGS.—With respect to the Federal building at which a demonstration project under this section is conducted, the Federal building shall—

(A) be an appropriate model for a project involving—

(i) location and design that promote access to the Federal building through walking, biking, and mass transit;

(ii) construction or renovation to meet high indoor environmental criteria;

(iii) deployment, and assessment of effectiveness, of high performance technologies;

(iv) analysis of life cycles of all materials, components, and systems in the building; and

(v) assessment of beneficial impacts on public health and the health of individuals that enter or work in the building; and

(B) possess sufficient technological and organizational adaptability.

(2) UNIVERSITIES.—With respect to the 4 universities at which a demonstration project under this section is conducted—

(A) the universities should be selected based on—

(i) successful and established public-private research and development partnerships;

(ii) demonstrated capabilities to construct or renovate buildings that meet high indoor environmental qualities;

(iii) organizational flexibility;

(iv) technological adaptability;

(v) energy and environmental effectiveness throughout the life cycles of all materials, components, and systems deployed within the building; and

(vi) the demonstrated capacity of at least 1 university to replicate lessons learned among nearby or sister universities, preferably by participation in groups or consortia that promote sustainability;

(B) each university shall be located in a different climatic region of the United States, each of which regions shall have, as determined by the Office—

(i) a hot, dry climate;

(ii) a hot, humid climate;

(iii) a cold climate; or

(iv) a mild climate;

(C) each university shall agree that the focuses of the project shall be—

(i) the effectiveness of various high performance technologies in each of the 4 climatic regions of the United States described in subparagraph (B);

(ii) the identification of the most effective ways to use high performance building and landscape technologies to engage and educate undergraduate and graduate students; and

(iii) quantifiable and nonquantifiable beneficial impacts on public health and worker and student performance.

SEC. 402. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) FEDERAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the Federal demonstration project described in section 401(b)(1) $5,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2005 through 2010.

(b) UNIVERSITY DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the university demonstration projects described in section 401(b)(2) $10,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2005 through 2010.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator JEFFORDS today in introducing the High-Performance Green Buildings Act. This legislation will reenergize the Federal Government's commitment to building design and construction into the 21st Century.

Buildings have an enormous impact on environmental quality, on energy use, and on natural resource consumption. The statistics are staggering. Buildings devour 37 percent of the energy used in this country, including 68 percent of electricity. They are responsible for 35 percent of carbon dioxide emissions, the primary greenhouse gas associated with climate change. And they account for 49 percent of sulfur dioxide and 25 percent of nitrogen oxide emissions and generate 40 percent of the Nation's non-industrial waste stream. Moreover, building construction and demolition produce 136 million tons of waste in this country, and use 12 percent of potable water in the U.S. Mr. President, for too long these prodigious effects have gone unrecognized.

The impacts are even more far reaching than that. Since Americans spend an average of 90 percent of their time indoors, buildings have a considerable influence on public health. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, EPA, indoor air pollution concentrations may be two to five times, and in some cases 100 times, higher than in outdoor air. EPA scientists estimates that about 20,000 deaths occur related to indoor levels of radon, and that 3000 lung cancer deaths occur among nonsmoking adults due to second-hand smoke each year.

Experts at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, CDC, estimate that an additional 35,000 coronary disease deaths occur each year in this country among nonsmoking adults due to second-hand smoke. These losses do not include exposure to toxic pollutants emitted from building materials, such as adhesives, paints, carpets, and pressed-wood products, which many researchers believe to be significant. We must confront these environmental and public health challenges and to do so we need a vision for the future. Our legislation offers that vision.

High-performance green buildings are designed and constructed in ways that significantly reduce or eliminate negative effects on the environment, on energy use, and on resource consumption. They are also designed to reduce or eliminate harmful pressures on the health and productivity of building occupants. According to the U.S. Green Building Council, a national nonprofit organization, green design and construction practices are directed at five broad areas: 1. Sustainable site planning; 2. Safeguarding water and water efficiency; 3. Energy efficiency and renewable energy; 4. Conservation of materials and resources; and 5. Indoor environmental quality.

Green buildings have many benefits, and while the initial investment may be higher (although not necessarily) than for a traditional buildings, they significantly lower long-term costs for things such as heating and cooling. Since new government buildings are intended to be used for a long period of time—at least 50 years—it is easier to justify any initial higher investment costs. By improving working conditions and increasing daylighting, case studies have shown that green buildings improve occupant productivity and reduce employee absenteeism. This legislation would provide for research to capture and measure those impacts and incorporate the lessons learned into future construction.

The High-Performance Green Building Act focuses Federal Government efforts to promote the environmental, energy, health, and economic benefits that can be realized from green buildings. This legislation incorporates the findings of two reports that make recommendations for improving the Federal Government's role in relation to high-performance green buildings. The first report, ''Building Momentum: National Trends and Prospects for High-Performance Green Buildings,'' was prepared by the U.S. Green Building Council and the second report, ''The Federal Commitment to Green Building: Experiences and Expectations,'' was released by the President's Office of the Federal Environmental Executive.

Our legislation changes the way the Federal Government manages its thousands of buildings. The bill establishes an Office of High-Performance Green Buildings within the General Services Administration, GSA, which is the logical place for this office since this agency is the Federal Government's primary landlord. GSA manages over 8,700 buildings owned or leased by the United States. The new office will promote public outreach, coordinate and focus research and development, and improve life-cycle analysis and budgeting for building construction. This title also creates an Interagency Steering Committee to improve coordination across Federal agencies, and with state and local governments.

This bill would expand the role of EPA in supporting healthier buildings at the nation's schools. Schools can serve as the vanguard for the effort to protect our children's health and the environment, so this title authorizes the Agency to administer grants to state and local education agencies to support implementation of EPA's effective Tools for Schools Program. It also authorizes the Agency to develop Federal guidelines for school location siting that take into account the special vulnerabilities of children to the contamination of land and water.

This legislation would incorporate building life-cycle costing as a tool to achieve more efficient and economical long-term investments in government buildings, by requiring the Comptroller General to review the annual Federal budget process and submit a plan to reach these goals to Congress.

In closing, investing in green buildings is good public policy for a variety of reasons. Our bill will allow the Federal Government to take a leadership role in promoting green buildings. We have a commitment to our children and grandchildren to protect and conserve the planet's resources and to safeguard public health. I urge my colleagues to support this important bill.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Florida:

S. 2621. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to extend the pilot program for alternative water source projects; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the Authorization for the Alternative Water Sources Act of 2000, which I originally introduced, expires this year. I am introducing a bill to extend this law for five years through Fiscal Year 2009 at an average authorization level of $25 million per year.

Our Nation's water supply needs are great and growing. For instance, each day the State of Florida adds 900 residents. To satisfy the water needs of this daily population increase, Florida must supply 200,000 more gallons of fresh water per day. Furthermore, the additional infrastructure needed to accommodate new residents blocks rainwater penetration into aquifers, lowering the water table. In fact, residents of Florida's west coast are increasingly resorting to drinking desalinated water as fresh water sources no longer suffice. Depletion of fresh water has resulted in saltwater intrusion into inland aquifers tainting water supplies and reducing the ability of soils to grow plants.

Other States are facing similar crises.

In southern New Jersey, water demands are so great that groundwater withdrawals from aquifers have lowered the water table by 200 feet, causing saltwater intrusion.

In Georgia and South Carolina, excessive water demand has significantly lowered water levels causing the upward migration of salt water in the Brunswick area and an encroachment of seawater into the aquifer at the northern end of Hilton Head Island.

On the East Coast, which gets on average 40 inches of rain per year, water resources have long been thought to be inexhaustible. However with changing population patterns and increasing personal and commercial water use, many water-rich areas are finding that the water will not always be there when they need it.

The extension of the Alternative Water Sources Act will provide States with the assistance they need to meet the needs of growing populations without harming the environment. It will also provide funds on a cost-shared basis to States for development of nontraditional water resources that will provide much needed water and prevent future environmental damages.

The bill I introduce today, authorizes the EPA to provide grants, at an average $25 million a year for Fiscal Years 2005 through 2009, on a cost-shared basis for alternative water source projects. The EPA administrator is required to take into account the eligibility of a project for funding under the existing programs when selecting projects for funding under this nationwide program.

This law is critical to the environmentally friendly development of water resources in the United States. It authorizes funds for innovative water reuse, reclamation and conservation projects—helping many States meet current and future water supply.

Populations in water-rich areas are drawing increasingly on limited groundwater supplies. In the past, groundwater users in the East might have been characterized as private wells and small public water systems. Today, as people move away from traditional population centers along major rivers, groundwater use is increasing. In Pennsylvania, about six million people rely on groundwater.

Yet, trillions of gallons of fresh water in the United States are wasted and flood into the sea annually. For instance, in Florida, every year approximately 970 billion gallons of fresh water are diverted into canals that flow into the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic. This precious fresh water would otherwise have replenished aquifers or nourished fragile aquatic ecosystems. If properly captured and stored, this water could be used for industrial or commercial activities, reducing pressure on precious drinking water sources.

Our increasing water needs require immediate attention.

We continue to make progress in conservation. In the South Florida Water Management District, nearly 200 million gallons of water are being reused per day. However, demands remain great. For instance, each resident in South Florida uses nearly 175 gallons of fresh water per day—almost twice the national average. Much of this potable water is used for watering landscaping. We must find ways to reserve potable water for drinking and make better use of other sources of water for agricultural, commercial and outdoor watering purposes.

With innovations in water quantity management, we can curtail such tremendous wastes of water and reuse the water that supply storage facilities now cannot absorb.

In 1999, I sponsored S. 968, the Alternative Water Sources Act, which authorized funding for alternative water projects in States that do not receive funds for water supply projects. In 2000, my bill was incorporated into S. 835, the Estuaries and Clean Waters Act of 2000, which became Public Law 106–457. Unfortunately, the authorization for the Alternative Water Sources Act is due to expire this year. With our Nation facing many water quantity management issues, we must act now to renew the authorization.

Congress can provide tools to ensure that Americans have the water they need for a healthy and productive future. The Alternative Water Sources Act is one such tool, and we must not let it expire. I hope that Congress will approve an extension of the Act before the end of the year.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2621

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PILOT PROGRAM FOR ALTERNATIVE WATER SOURCE PROJECTS.

Section 220(j) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1300(j)) is amended in the first sentence—

(1) by striking ''$75,000,000'' and inserting ''$125,000,000''; and

(2) by striking ''2002 through 2004'' and inserting ''2005 through 2009''.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 2622. A bill to provide for the exchange of certain Federal land in the Santa Fe National Forest and certain non-Federal land in the Pecos National Historical Park in the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today, I am introducing along with Senator DOMENICI the ''Pecos National Historical Park Land Exchange Act of 2004''. This bill will authorize a land exchange between the Federal Government and a private landowner that will benefit the Pecos National Historical Park in my State of New Mexico.

Specifically, the bill will enable the Park Service to acquire a private inholding within the Park's boundaries in exchange for the transfer of a nearby tract of National Forest System land. The National Forest parcel has been identified as available for exchange in the Santa Fe National Forest Land and Resource Management Plan and is surrounded by private lands on three sides.

The Pecos National Historical Park possesses exceptional historic and archaeological resources. Its strategic location between the Great Plains and the Rio Grande Valley has made it the focus of the region's 10,000 years of human history. The Park preserves the ruins of the great Pecos pueblo, which was a major trade center, and the ruins of two Spanish colonial missions dating from the 17th and 18th centuries.

The Glorieta Unit of the Park protects key sites associated with the 1862 Civil War Battle of Glorieta Pass, a significant event that ended the Confederate attempt to expand the war into the West. This Unit will directly benefit from the land exchange.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill I have introduced today be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2622

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Pecos National Historical Park Land Exchange Act of 2004.''

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) FEDERAL LAND.—The term ''Federal land'' means the approximately 160 acres of Federal land within the Santa Fe National Forest in the State, as depicted on the map.

(2) LANDOWNER.—The term ''landowner'' means the 1 or more owners of the non-Federal land.

(3) MAP.—The term ''map'' means the map entitled ''Proposed Land Exchange for Pecos National Historical Park'', numbered 430/80,054, dated November 19, 1999, and revised September 18, 2000.

(4) NON-FEDERAL LAND.—The term ''non-Federal land'' means the approximately 154 acres of non-Federal land in the Park, as depicted on the map.

(5) PARK.—The term ''Park'' means the Pecos National Historical Park in the State.

(6) SECRETARIES.—The term ''Secretaries'' means the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, acting jointly.

(7) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of New Mexico.

SEC. 3. LAND EXCHANGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—On conveyance by the landowner to the Secretary of the Interior of the non-Federal land, title to which is acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior.

(1) the Secretary of Agriculture shall, subject to the conditions of this Act, convey to the landowner the Federal land; and

(2) the Secretary of the Interior shall, subject to the conditions of this Act, grant to the landowner the easement described in subsection (b).

(b) EASEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The easement referred to in subsection (a)(2) is an easement (including an easement for service access) for water pipelines to 2 well sites located in the Park, as generally depicted on the map.

(2) ROUTE.—The Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the landowner, shall determine the appropriate route of the easement through the Park.

(3) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The easement shall include such terms and conditions relating to the use of, and access to, the well sites and pipeline, as the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the landowner, determines to be appropriate.

(4) APPLICABLE LAW.—The easement shall be established, operated, and maintained in compliance with applicable Federal law.

(c) VALUATION, APPRAISALS, AND EQUALIZATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The value of the Federal land and non-Federal land—

(A) shall be equal, as determined by appraisals conducted in accordance with paragraph (2); or

(B) if the value is not equal, shall be equalized in accordance with paragraph (3).

(2) APPRAISALS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Federal land and non-Federal land shall be appraised by an independent appraiser selected by the Secretaries.

(B) REQUIREMENTS.—An appraisal conducted under subparagraph (A) shall be conducted in accordance with—

(i) the Uniform Appraisal Standards for Federal Land Acquisition; and

(ii) the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice.

(C) APPROVAL.—The appraisals conducted under this paragraph shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for approval.

(3) EQUALIZATION OF VALUES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If the values of the non-Federal land and the Federal land are not equal, the values may be equalized by—

(i) the Secretary of the Interior making a cash equalization payment to the landowner;

(ii) the landowner making a cash equalization payment to the Secretary of Agriculture; or

(iii) reducing the acreage of the non-Federal land or the Federal land, as appropriate.

(B) CASH EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS.—Any amounts received by the Secretary of Agriculture as a cash equalization payment under section 206(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1716(b)) shall—

(1) be deposited in the fund established by Public Law 90–171 (commonly known as the ''Sisk Act'') (16 U.S.C. 484a); and

(ii) be available for expenditure, without further appropriation, for the acquisition of land and interests in land in the State.

(d) COSTS.—Before the completion of the exchange under this section, the Secretaries and the landowner shall enter into an agreement that allocates the costs of the exchange between the Secretaries and the landowner.

(e) APPLICABLE LAW.—Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the exchange of land and interests in land under this Act shall be in accordance with—

(1) section 206 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1716); and

(2) other applicable laws, including the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

(f) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretaries may require, in addition to any requirements under this Act, such terms and conditions relating to the exchange of Federal land and non-Federal land and the granting of easements under this Act as the Secretaries determine to be appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

(g) COMPLETION OF THE EXCHANGE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The exchange of Federal land and non-Federal land shall be completed not later than 180 days after the later of—

(A) the date on which the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) have been met; or

(B) the date on which the Secretary of the Interior approves the appraisals under subsection (c)(2)(C).

(2) NOTICE.—The Secretaries shall submit to Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of Senate and the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives notice of the completion of the exchange of Federal land and non-Federal land under this Act.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior shall administer the non-Federal land acquired under this Act in accordance with the laws generally applicable to units of the National Park System, including the Act of August 25, 1916 (commonly known as the ''National Park Service Organic Act'') (16 U.S.C. 1 et seq.).

(b) MAPS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The map shall be on file and available for public inspection in the appropriate offices of the Secretaries.

(2) TRANSMITTAL OF REVISED MAP TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 180 days after completion of the exchange, the Secretaries shall transmit to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States and the Committee on Resources of the United States House of Representatives a revised map that depicts—

(A) the Federal land and non-Federal land exchanged under this Act; and

(B) the easement described in section 3(b).

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today, Senator BINGAMAN and I are introducing the ''Pecos National Historical Park Land Exchange Act of 2004''. This bill will authorize a land exchange between the Federal Government and a private landowner that will benefit the Pecos National Historical Park in my State of New Mexico.

I am pleased to be working on this legislation again with Senator BINGAMAN. This bill is nearly identical to a bill that we worked on and marked up in the Energy and Natural Resources Committee in the 106th Session of Congress.

The bill will enable the Park Service to acquire a private inholding within the Pecos National Historic Park's boundaries in exchange for the transfer of a nearby tract of National Forest System land. The National Forest parcel has been identified as surplus and available for exchange in the Santa Fe National Forest Land and Resource Management Plan and is surrounded by private lands on three sides.

The Pecos National Historical Park is located between the Great Plains and the Rio Grande Valley and that has made it the focus of the region's 10,000 years of human history. The park preserves the ruins of the great Pecos pueblo—a major trade center—and the ruins of two Spanish colonial missions dating from the 17th and 18th centuries.

The Glorieta Unit of the Park, where this exchange is located, protects key sites associated with the 1862 Civil War Battle of Glorieta Pass, a significant event that ended the Confederate attempt to expand the war into the west. This unit will directly benefit from the land exchange.

By Mr. SMITH (for himself, Mr. KOHL, and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 2623. A bill to amend section 402 of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 to provide a 2–year extension of supplemental security income in fiscal years 2005 through 2007 for refugees, asylees, and certain other humanitarian immigrants; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined today by my colleagues, Senators KOHL and LUGAR to introduce this important piece of legislation. Legislation that will ensure the United States government does not turn its back on political asylees or refugees who are the most vulnerable citizens seeking safety in this great country of ours.

As many of you may know, Congress as part of Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA) modified the SSI program to include a seven-year time limit on the receipt of benefits for refugees and asylees. This policy was intended to balance the desire to have people who emigrate to the United States to become citizens, with an understanding that the naturalization process also takes time to complete. To allow adequate time for asylees and refugees to become naturalized citizens Congress provided the seven-year time limit before the expiration of SSI benefits.

Unfortunately, the naturalization process often takes longer than seven years because applicants are required to live in the United States for a minimum of five years prior to applying for citizenship and the INS often takes three or more years to process the application. Because of this time delay, many individuals are trapped in the system faced with the loss of their SSI benefits.

If Congress does not act to change the law, reports show that over the next four years nearly 30,000 elderly and disabled refugees and asylees will lose their Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits because their seven-year time limit will expire before they become citizens. Many of these individuals are elderly who fled persecution or torture in their home countries. They include Jews fleeing religious persecution in the former Soviet Union, Iraqi Kurds fleeing the Saddam Hussein regime, Cubans and Hmong people from the highlands of Laos who served on the side of the United States military during the Vietnam War. They are elderly and unable to work, and have become reliant on their SSI benefits as their primary income. To penalize them because of delays encountered through the bureaucratic process seems unjust and inappropriate.

I would like to share the story of Yelena, a victim of religious persecution in the former Soviet Union who sought refuge in the United States seven years ago and is currently living in Portland, Oregon. At the age of 82, Yelena relies on SSI and other public benefits programs to buy food and pay her monthly bills. Yelena is now stuck in a multi-year backlog waiting for her green card, the first step toward citizenship. She was raised in a small village in the Soviet Union where she had little access to formal education and never learned English. She has struggled to grasp the language since arriving in the US and as a result, her seven-year anniversary arrived before she was able to naturalize. Yelena is now without her SSI benefits and still fighting to become a citizen. We must help Yelena and others like her.

The Administration in its fiscal year 2005 budget acknowledged the necessity to correct this problem by dedicating funding in its budget to extend refugee eligibility for SSI beyond the seven-year limit. While I am pleased that they have taken the first step in correcting this problem, I am concerned the policy does not go far enough. Data shows that most people will need at least an additional two years to navigate and complete the naturalization process. Therefore, my colleagues and I have introduced this bill, which will provide a two-year extension. We believe this will provide the time necessary to complete the process.

I hope my colleagues will join me in support of this bill, and I look forward to working with Chairman GRASSLEY and other members of the Finance Committee to secure these changes.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President. In December, 2003, the U.S. government unexpectedly announced plans to resettle up to 15,000 Hmong refugees from Laos currently living in Thailand. These refugees will be reunited with some 200,000 Hmong family members who were resettled here in the years after the Vietnam War, some as recently as the 1990s. Many of these Hmong fought with the CIA in Laos during the Vietnam War, providing critical assistance to U.S. forces. After the fall of Saigon, thousands of Hmong fled Laos and its communist Pathet Lao government. The United States remains indebted to these courageous individuals and their families.

While we work with the Department of Health and Human Services to identify funds to help these new refugees resettle, it is extremely important that we act to help those refugees and asylees already living in the United States. In addition to the Hmong, America has served as a shelter for Jews and Baptists fleeing religious persecution in the former Soviet Union; and for Iraqis and Cubans escaping tyrannical dictatorships. Our policy toward refugees and asylees embodies the best of our country—compassion, opportunity, and freedom. I am proud of the example our policies set with respect to the treatment of those seeking refuge.

But I am disappointed in our decision to allow these people to enter the country and then deny them the means to live. Thousands of people who fled religious and political persecution to seek freedom in the U.S. will now be punished by a short-sighted policy. A provision in the 1996 welfare reform bill restricted the amount of time that elderly and disabled refugees and asylees could be eligible for Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits. These benefits serve as a basic monthly income for individuals who are 65 or older, disabled or blind. Over the next 4 years, it is estimated that 40,000 refugees and political asylees could lose these important benefits on which they often rely.

The 1996 welfare law included a 7-year time limit on SSI benefits for legal humanitarian immigrants. In order to avoid losing this important support, refugees and asylees must become citizens within the 7-year limit. Unfortunately, this has proved impossible for far too many. The process of becoming a citizen only truly begins after a refugee has resided in the U.S. for 5 years as a lawful permanent resident. And beyond that, there are many other barriers, such as language skills and processing and bureaucratic delays within the various agencies, which an immigrant must overcome before they become naturalized. Beginning in 2003, immigrants trapped in this process—too often the most vulnerable elderly and families—began to lose their SSI benefits with no hope of recourse.

This inherent flaw in the system has to be changed. That is why Senators SMITH, LUGAR and I are introducing the SSI Extension for Disabled and Elderly Refugees Act. This legislation extends the amount of time that refugees and asylees have to become citizens to nine years. The legislation will retroactively restore benefits to many who have already lost them, and will protect those who are scheduled to lose benefits in the next two years.

I cannot stress how important this legislation is to many in the State of Wisconsin. Just last month, an article in the Green Bay Press-Gazette told of the difficulties facing 79-year-old Sia Xiong, a Hmong refugee who could lose benefits in the coming months. Like many elderly refugees, she doesn't know English, which poses a huge barrier in her application for citizenship. Despite the assistance that has been given to refugees like Xiong from agencies such as Lutheran Social Services or Kajsiab House or the Neighborhood Law Project in Madison, the length of the naturalization process has proved overwhelming to too many refugees.

Congress must take action immediately to help people like Xiong, and her family. In addition to the Hmong population in Wisconsin, almost every State in the country is home to immigrants who will be affected by the limit. Our country has long been a symbol of freedom, equality and opportunity. Our laws should reflect that. Every day that goes by could result in the loss of a refugee's support system—I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and restore the principles we were put here to protect.

By Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. REID):

S. 2624. A bill to require the United States Trade Representative to pursue a complaint of anti-competitive practices against certain oil exporting countries; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation, with Senators DURBIN, LEVIN and REID, with Congressman DEFAZIO in the House, to bring fairness to the oil markets and do something to reverse the recent spikes in gas prices.

Our legislation will force the United States Trade Representative (USTR) to initiate World Trade Organization (WTO) proceedings against OPEC nations. Under WTO rules, countries are not permitted to maintain export quotas. But OPEC nations actually collude to set such quotas.

OPEC is an illegal cartel, plain and simple. We've allowed this cartel to operate for too long—it's time to put an end to it.

The American people are feeling the effects of the OPEC cartel every day at the gas pumps. Many families are already struggling with lost jobs, stagnant wages and the rising costs of health care. High gas prices have only made matters worse.

When President Bush took office, a gallon of gas cost $1.47. Today, a gallon of gas averages $1.90. For someone who buys one tank of gas a week, that increase costs $350 per year.

All this adds up. Oil imports now account for $125 billion annually, or one-quarter of America's trade deficit. That money could be invested here at home to create American jobs, but instead we are being gouged by oil exporters.

While Americans suffer, President Bush has done nothing to bring down gas prices. He says he will talk to his Saudi friends in the oil business. But talk is cheap. The American people want action. This bill today is an opportunity for action.

I have also released a report today, explaining the basis for a WTO complaint against OPEC.

In some ways, the allegations are simple and straightforward: OPEC manipulates world oil markets by imposing export quotas on oil. These quotas keep the price of oil artificially high.

Without OPEC, market analysts have estimated that the free market price of a barrel of oil would be around 10 to 15 dollars lower than today's price. That would make a difference in gas prices of 20 to 45 cents per gallon, saving American families hundreds of dollars per year. There is no reason to continue to tolerate OPEC's anti-competitive behavior.

Collusion to put quotas on oil exports—or any exports—is illegal under WTO rules. For example, the WTO has found that a treaty between the United States and Japan limiting semiconductor exports violated WTO rules.

The Bush administration has been lax in dealing with OPEC. In my view, President Bush's ties to the Saudis and to big oil companies prevent him from sticking up for the American consumer.

Indeed, while the squeeze was being put on American consumers, oil companies and refineries reported record profits in the first quarter of this year for operations in the United States. Earnings for U.S. domestic refining and marketing operations increased by 294 percent for Chevron-Texaco, 165 percent for BP, 125 percent for ExxonMobil, and 44 percent for ConocoPhillips over last year's levels.

So while OPEC and their oil company allies have seen a boom, American families have seen a bust. In fact, for those middle-income Americans who will see any benefit at all from the recent tax cuts, rising gas prices alone will eat up half of those cuts.

Since the Bush administration has failed to live up to its responsibilities, it's time for the Congress to stand up for the American people and force it to take action against OPEC.

I urge support of this common-sense legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2624

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Gasoline prices have risen 80 percent since January, 2002, with oil recently trading at more than $40 per barrel for the first time ever.

(2) Rising gasoline prices have placed an inordinate burden on American families.

(3) High gasoline prices have hindered and will continue to hinder economic recovery.

(4) The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) has formed a cartel and engaged in anti-competitive practices to manipulate the price of oil, keeping it artificially high.

(5) Six member nations of OPEC—Indonesia, Kuwait, Nigeria, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela—are also members of the World Trade Organization.

(6) The agreement among OPEC member nations to limit oil exports is an illegal prohibition or restriction on the exportation or sale for export of a product under Article XI of the GATT 1994.

(7) The export quotas and resulting high prices harm American families, undermine the American economy, impede American and foreign commerce, and are contrary to the national interests of the United States.

SEC. 2. ACTIONS TO CURB CERTAIN CARTEL ANTI-COMPETITIVE PRACTICES.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—

(1) GATT 1994.—The term ''GATT 1994'' has the meaning given such term in section 2(1)(B) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3501(1)(B).

(2) UNDERSTANDING ON RULES AND PROCEDURES GOVERNING THE SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES.—The term ''Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes'' means the agreement described in section 101(d)(16) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3511(d)(16)).

(3) WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''World Trade Organization'' means the organization established pursuant to the WTO Agreement.

(B) WTO AGREEMENT.—The term ''WTO Agreement'' means the Agreement Establishing The World Trade Organization entered into on April 15, 1994.

(b) ACTION BY PRESIDENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President shall, not later than 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act, initiate consultations with the countries described in paragraph (2) to seek the elimination by those countries of any action that—

(A) limits the production or distribution of oil, natural gas, or any other petroleum product,

(B) sets or maintains the price of oil, natural gas, or any petroleum product, or

(C) otherwise is an action in restraint of trade with respect to oil, natural gas, or any petroleum product,

By Mr. SMITH (for himself and Mr. WYDEN):

S. 2625. A bill to establish a national demonstration project to improve intervention programs for the most disadvantaged children and youth, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague, Mr. WYDEN, to introduce the ''Friends of the Children National Demonstration Act'' to authorize funding for Friends of the Children.

Friends of the Children is a promising early intervention program established in Portland, Oregon, in 1993. The program identifies the most disadvantaged children at the kindergarten or first grade level and matches those children with ''professional mentors'' (also known as ''Friends''). Once matched, professional mentors work with children for a period of up to 12 years.

Started over a decade ago with just three Friends serving as mentors to 24 children, Friends of the Children has grown to serve over 600 children in 11 communities throughout the United States. The mission of Friends of the Children is to help our Nation's most disadvantaged children to develop the relationships, goals, and skills necessary to break the cycles of poverty, abuse, and violence in order to become a contributing member of society.

Extensive research has shown that the single most important factor that fosters resiliency in children is having a long-term relationship with a caring, supportive adult. Friends of the Children is a unique program that provides just such a relationship for disadvantaged children.

In 1993, Friends of the Children welcomed T.R., a first grader, into the Portland program. At home, T.R. was routinely exposed to drug use, gang activity, and violence. Through the program, T.R. was matched with his mentor, Jerrell, to help maintain a support system in T.R.'s life. Jerrell tutors, counsels, advises and is a companion to T.R. whether it is discussing T.R.'s plans for the future or dealing with his family relationships. Without the help of someone like Jerrell, T.R. believes that he would probably have dropped out of school or joined a gang. Now, T.R. is giving back to his community by working for Self Enhancement, Inc., an organization that teaches leadership skills to middle school students. T.R. has overcome great adversity to mature into a responsible young adult. T.R. aspires to pursue a career in business and would like to run his own company one day.

Last week, T.R. became one of the first students to graduate from the Friends of the Children program. Along with his classmates, T.R. was identified by the program over a decade ago. He was part of a group of children identified as the most in danger of abuse, neglect, juvenile delinquency, gang and drug involvement, school failure, and teenage pregnancy. Today, these children have grown into young adults. They have positive values and show great potential to become healthy, productive members of their communities.

''The Friends of the Children National Demonstration Act'' will establish a national demonstration project to promote learning about successful early and sustained childhood intervention programs. This bill would authorize funding for Friends of the Children activities and local program operations at existing sites including ongoing evaluation, and dissemination of findings for the benefit of policy makers and other youth programs.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to enact this bill and make a commitment to improving the lives of disadvantaged children and youth.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I am introducing today, along with my colleague, Senator SMITH, the ''Friends of the Children National Demonstration Act'' to authorize funding for Friends of the Children. The companion of this bill is being introduced in the House today by Congressman EARL BLUMENAUER.

This innovative program is truly a best practice in the field of youth development. Friends of the Children was started in Portland, OR, and was modeled on extensive research indicating that the strongest protective factor for highly disadvantaged children is an ongoing relationship with a supportive, caring adult. Today, Friends of the Children is the only program in the Nation that provides carefully screened full-time professional mentors to disadvantaged youth for 12 years starting in kindergarten or first grade. Friends of the Children's first class of students is now graduating. These young people have outperformed their peer group of disadvantaged youth in every respect. They are in school, have passing grades, have not been incarcerated, do not abuse drugs or alcohol, and have not become involved in gang violence.

Let me share the story of one of these friends. In 1993, a first grader named Demarcus joined the Friends of the Children-Portland program in an attempt to overcome a family history of substance abuse and violence. His mother was raising three children as a single parent and she was overwhelmed. As a participant in the Friends of the Children program, Demarcus was matched with a ''Friend,'' Ruben, who has been his mentor for the past eight years. Ruben and Demarcus have developed a strong relationship through activities ranging from playing basketball to having serious conversations about life and preparing for the future. Ruben has helped Demarcus develop anger management skills and maturity. While many of Demarcus's friends and family have been incarcerated or have been victims of gun violence, Demarcus is a success story. Now 17 years old, he is a responsible young man who makes good choices and knows that actions have consequences. When he graduates from high school, he hopes to work toward becoming a pilot, either by joining the military or attending college. Friends of the Children mentors have been major supporters of Demarcus and his goal to attain higher education. The mentors have helped him grow into the focused young adult he is today.

Last week in Portland, the first class of Friends of the Children, including Demarcus, graduated from the program. By all accounts these children have beaten the odds and are success stories. Twelve years ago these young people were identified by their elementary schools as most likely to fail. Today, they are soon-to-be high school graduates.

Currently, Friends of the Children serves over 600 children in 11 communities across the United States. ''The Friends of the Children National Demonstration Act'' will establish a national demonstration project to promote learning about successful early and sustained childhood interventions. This bill would authorize funding for Friends of the Children activities and local program operations at existing sites, ongoing evaluation, and dissemination of findings for the benefit of policy makers and other youth-serving programs.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to pass this bill and make a commitment to improving the lives of disadvantaged children and youth.

By Mr. AKAKA (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 2628. A bill to amend chapter 23 of title 5, United States Code, to clarify the disclosures of information protected from prohibited personnel practices, require a statement in nondisclosure policies, forms, and agreements that such policies, forms, and agreements conform with certain disclosure protections, provide certain authority for the Special Counsel, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce the Federal Employee's Protection of Disclosures Act. Last year I introduced similar legislation, S. 1358, to amend employee safeguards for disclosing government waste, fraud, and abuse with the support of Senators GRASSLEY, LEVIN, LEAHY, DURBIN, DAYTON, PRYOR, JOHNSON, and LAUTENBERG.

Today, I am pleased that we can introduce a strong bipartisan version of this legislation with the additional support of Senators COLLINS, LIEBERMAN, FITZGERALD, and VOINOVICH. Thanks to the work of the bill's cosponsors, we have developed legislation that strikes the right balance between the protection of Federal whistleblowers and our national security.

As my colleagues know, the events of September 11, 2001, have brought renewed attention to the security lapses at our Nation's airports, nuclear facilities, borders, and law enforcement agencies. However, in many cases, the current whistleblower system fails to protect those who would disclose information that could ensure the safety and welfare of the American people. As of May 2004, Federal whistleblowers have prevailed on the merits of their claims before the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals only once since 1994. This record sends the wrong message. How can we expect civil servants to protect and defend the United States when we permit agencies to retaliate against them for doing their job?

I know the Department of Justice (DOJ) has objected to previous legislation concerning this problem. This comes as no surprise as the Department has an institutional conflict of interest with restoring whistleblower rights as it is charged with defending agencies charged with retaliating against the whistleblower. Nonetheless, I have worked with my colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee to address some the concerns raised by the Justice Department while still protecting federal employees.

One of the most significant changes in the bill relates to the protection of employees who find their security clearances stripped as a means of retaliation for blowing the whistle. Current law does not permit the whistleblower to have his or her case heard by an independent adjudicator when this type of retaliation occurs.

Under our bill, the whistleblower would be able to bring a case before the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) on an expedited basis when the employing agency revokes, suspends, denies, or makes another determination in relation to an employee's security clearance or access to classified materials. However, the employing agency need only prove by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have taken the action against the employee irrespective the whistleblower's disclosure. By lowering the burden of proof for the employing agency from clear and convincing, as is the standard with other whistleblower cases, to preponderance of the evidence, our legislation strikes a balance between having an open and transparent process for whistleblowers and the need to make security clearance or access determinations in the interests of national security.

The Department of Justice was also concerned with a provision in the prior bill, S. 1358, which granted independent litigating authority to the Special Counsel. In testimony before the Governmental Affairs Committee last November, the Department claimed that extending this authority to the Special Counsel would usurp DOJ's traditional unifying role as the Executive Branch's representative in court. The Department also claimed that the provision would undermine a number of important policy goals, including the presentation of uniform positions on significant legal issues and the objective litigation of cases by attorneys unaffected by concerns of a single agency that may be inimical to the interests of the Government as a whole.

However, many agencies have independent litigating authority, including the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the MSPB, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Moreover, interagency disputes are not unique. It is inappropriate for the Office of Special Counsel (OSC), the agency charged with protecting the Whistleblower Protection Act (WPA), to seek approval from DOJ, the agency charged with protecting agencies alleged to have retaliated against whistleblowers, in order to carry out its mission. Nonetheless, our bill would not provide the Special Counsel with independent litigating authority but rather provide it with independent authority to file amicus briefs with federal courts. This authority will allow the Special Counsel to protect the WPA while addressing concerns raised by the Justice Department.

In addition, our compromise measure would still provide protection to whistleblowers subject to retaliatory investigations, but not for routine or nondiscretionary investigations of the employee and codify the definition of reasonable belief an employee must have in order to determine when an employee has made a protected disclosure. I am pleased that our new bill, among other things, retains language restoring congressional intent regarding the definition of a protected disclosure, codifying the anti-gag provision that has been in every appropriations law since 1988, and establishing a more reasonable test for determining government mismanagement instead of irrefragable proof. According to the Federal Circuit, in order to determine that the federal government has engaged in gross mismanagement, the whistleblower must have irrefragable proof, meaning proof impossible to refute.

The bill also retains language, subject to a five-year sunset, providing whistleblowers the opportunity to have their cases heard by federal courts other than the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals. These provisions are necessary to facilitate disclosures of government mismanagement in order for Congress to do its job and make informed decisions when carrying out its legislative, appropriation, and oversight functions for the protection the American people.

Our government is responsible for services and programs that touch all Americans. The Federal employees who carry out these responsibilities on behalf of the American people must be able to communicate with Congress without fear of losing their jobs when reporting threats to public health and safety and government mismanagement. We must have a credible and functioning WPA. I urge my colleagues to support this bipartisan bill and ensure real protection for Federal whistleblowers.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2628

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROTECTION OF CERTAIN DISCLOSURES OF INFORMATION BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Federal Employee Protection of Disclosures Act''.

(b) CLARIFICATION OF DISCLOSURES COVERED.—Section 2302(b)(8) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking ''which the employee or applicant reasonably believes evidences'' and inserting '', without restriction to time, place, form, motive, context, or prior disclosure made to any person by an employee or applicant, including a disclosure made in the ordinary course of an employee's duties, that the employee or applicant reasonably believes is evidence of''; and

(B) in clause (i), by striking ''a violation'' and inserting ''any violation'';

(2) in subparagraph (B)—

(A) by striking ''which the employee or applicant reasonably believes evidences'' and inserting '', without restriction to time, place, form, motive, context, or prior disclosure made to any person by an employee or applicant, including a disclosure made in the ordinary course of an employee's duties, of information that the employee or applicant reasonably believes is evidence of''; and

(B) in clause (i), by striking ''a violation'' and inserting ''any violation (other than a violation of this section)''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(C) any disclosure that—

''(i) is made by an employee or applicant of information required by law or Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or the conduct of foreign affairs that the employee or applicant reasonably believes is direct and specific evidence of—

''(I) any violation of any law, rule, or regulation;

''(II) gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety; or

''(III) a false statement to Congress on an issue of material fact; and

''(ii) is made to—

''(I) a member of a committee of Congress having a primary responsibility for oversight of a department, agency, or element of the Federal Government to which the disclosed information relates and who is authorized to receive information of the type disclosed;

''(II) any other Member of Congress who is authorized to receive information of the type disclosed; or

''(III) an employee of Congress who has the appropriate security clearance and is authorized to receive information of the type disclosed.''.

(c) COVERED DISCLOSURES.—Section 2302(a)(2) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B)(ii), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (C)(iii), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(D) 'disclosure' means a formal or informal communication or transmission, but does not include a communication concerning policy decisions that lawfully exercise discretionary authority unless the employee providing the disclosure reasonably believes that the disclosure evidences—

''(i) any violation of any law, rule, or regulation; or

''(ii) gross management, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety.''.

(d) REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION.—Section 2302(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by amending the matter following paragraph (12) to read as follows:

''This subsection shall not be construed to authorize the withholding of information from Congress or the taking of any personnel action against an employee who discloses information to Congress, except that an employee or applicant may be disciplined for the disclosure of information described in paragraph (8)(C)(i) to a Member or employee of Congress who is not authorized to receive such information. For purposes of paragraph (8), any presumption relating to the performance of a duty by an employee who has authority to take, direct others to take, recommend, or approve any personnel action may be rebutted by substantial evidence. For purposes of paragraph (8), a determination as to whether an employee or applicant reasonably believes that they have disclosed information that evidences any violation of law, rule, regulation, gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety shall be made by determining whether a disinterested observer with knowledge of the essential facts known to and readily ascertainable by the employee would reasonably conclude that the actions of the Government evidence such violations, mismanagement, waste, abuse, or danger.''.

(e) NONDISCLOSURE POLICIES, FORMS, AND AGREEMENTS; SECURITY CLEARANCES; AND RETALIATORY INVESTIGATIONS.—

(1) PERSONNEL ACTION.—Section 2302(a)(2)(A) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in clause (x), by striking ''and'' after the semicolon; and

(B) by redesignating clause (xi) as clause (xiv) and inserting after clause (x) the following:

''(xi) the implementation or enforcement of any nondisclosure policy, form, or agreement;

''(xii) a suspension, revocation, or other determination relating to a security clearance or any other access determination by a covered agency;

''(xiii) an investigation, other than any ministerial or nondiscretionary fact finding activities necessary for the agency to perform its mission, of an employee or applicant for employment because of any activity protected under this section; and''.

(2) PROHIBITED PERSONNEL PRACTICE.—Section 2302(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (11), by striking ''or'' at the end;

(B) in paragraph (12), by striking the period and inserting a semicolon; and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (12) the following:

''(13) implement or enforce any nondisclosure policy, form, or agreement, if such policy, form, or agreement does not contain the following statement:

'' 'These provisions are consistent with and do not supersede, conflict with, or otherwise alter the employee obligations, rights, or liabilities created by Executive Order No. 12958; section 7211 of title 5, United States Code (governing disclosures to Congress); section 1034 of title 10, United States Code (governing disclosure to Congress by members of the military); section 2302(b)(8) of title 5, United States Code (governing disclosures of illegality, waste, fraud, abuse, or public health or safety threats); the Intelligence Identities Protection Act of 1982 (50 U.S.C. 421 et seq.) (governing disclosures that could expose confidential Government agents); and the statutes which protect against disclosures that could compromise national security, including sections 641, 793, 794, 798, and 952 of title 18, United States Code, and section 4(b) of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. 783(b)). The definitions, requirements, obligations, rights, sanctions, and liabilities created by such Executive order and such statutory provisions are incorporated into this agreement and are controlling.'; or

''(14) conduct, or cause to be conducted, an investigation, other than any ministerial or nondiscretionary fact finding activities necessary for the agency to perform its mission, of an employee or applicant for employment because of any activity protected under this section.''.

(3) BOARD AND COURT REVIEW OF ACTIONS RELATING TO SECURITY CLEARANCES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 77 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 7702 the following:

''§ 7702a. Actions relating to security clearances

''(a) In any appeal relating to the suspension, revocation, or other determination relating to a security clearance or access determination, the Merit Systems Protection Board or any reviewing court—

''(1) shall determine whether paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b) was violated;

''(2) may not order the President or the designee of the President to restore a security clearance or otherwise reverse a determination of clearance status or reverse an access determination; and

''(3) subject to paragraph (2), may issue declaratory relief and any other appropriate relief.

''(b)(1) If, in any final judgment, the Board or court declares that any suspension, revocation, or other determination with regards to a security clearance or access determination was made in violation of paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b), the affected agency shall conduct a review of that suspension, revocation, access determination, or other determination, giving great weight to the Board or court judgment.

''(2) Not later than 30 days after any Board or court judgment declaring that a security clearance suspension, revocation, access determination, or other determination was made in violation of paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b), the affected agency shall issue an unclassified report to the congressional committees of jurisdiction (with a classified annex if necessary), detailing the circumstances of the agency's security clearance suspension, revocation, other determination, or access determination. A report under this paragraph shall include any proposed agency action with regards to the security clearance or access determination.

''(c) An allegation that a security clearance or access determination was revoked or suspended in retaliation for a protected disclosure shall receive expedited review by the Office of Special Counsel, the Merit Systems Protection Board, and any reviewing court.

''(d) For purposes of this section, corrective action may not be ordered if the agency demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have taken the same personnel action in the absence of such disclosure.''.

(B) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 77 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7702 the following:

''7702a. Actions relating to security clearances.''.

(f) EXCLUSION OF AGENCIES BY THE PRESIDENT.—Section 2302(a)(2)(C) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking clause (ii) and inserting the following:

''(ii)(I) the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, the National Security Agency; and

''(II) as determined by the President, any executive agency or unit thereof the principal function of which is the conduct of foreign intelligence or counterintelligence activities, if the determination (as that determination relates to a personnel action) is made before that personnel action; or''.

(g) ATTORNEY FEES.—Section 1204(m)(1) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking ''agency involved'' and inserting ''agency where the prevailing party is employed or has applied for employment''.

(h) DISCIPLINARY ACTION.—Section 1215(a)(3) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(3)(A) A final order of the Board may impose—

''(i) disciplinary action consisting of removal, reduction in grade, debarment from Federal employment for a period not to exceed 5 years, suspension, or reprimand;

''(ii) an assessment of a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000; or

''(iii) any combination of disciplinary actions described under clause (i) and an assessment described under clause (ii).

''(B) In any case in which the Board finds that an employee has committed a prohibited personnel practice under paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b), the Board shall impose disciplinary action if the Board finds that the activity protected under paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b) was a significant motivating factor, even if other factors also motivated the decision, for the employee's decision to take, fail to take, or threaten to take or fail to take a personnel action, unless that employee demonstrates, by preponderance of evidence, that the employee would have taken, failed to take, or threatened to take or fail to take the same personnel action, in the absence of such protected activity.''.

(i) SPECIAL COUNSEL AMICUS CURIAE APPEARANCE.—Section 1212 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(h)(1) The Special Counsel is authorized to appear as amicus curiae in any action brought in a court of the United States related to any civil action brought in connection with section 2302(b)(8) or (9), or subchapter III of chapter 73, or as otherwise authorized by law. In any such action, the Special Counsel is authorized to present the views of the Special Counsel with respect to compliance with section 2302(b) (8) or (9) or subchapter III of chapter 77 and the impact court decisions would have on the enforcement of such provisions of law.

''(2) A court of the United States shall grant the application of the Special Counsel to appear in any such action for the purposes described in subsection (a).''.

(j) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 7703(b)(1) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(b)(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) and paragraph (2), a petition to review a final order or final decision of the Board shall be filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any petition for review must be filed within 60 days after the date the petitioner received notice of the final order or decision of the Board.

''(B) During the 5-year period beginning on the effective date of the Federal Employee Protection of Disclosures Act, a petition to review a final order or final decision of the Board in a case alleging a violation of paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b) shall be filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit or any court of appeals of competent jurisdiction as provided under subsection (b)(2).''.

(2) REVIEW OBTAINED BY OFFICE OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT.—Section 7703(d) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(d)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (2), this paragraph shall apply to any review obtained by the Director of the Office of Personnel Management. The Director of the Office of Personnel Management may obtain review of any final order or decision of the Board by filing, within 60 days after the date the Director received notice of the final order or decision of the Board, a petition for judicial review in the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit if the Director determines, in his discretion, that the Board erred in interpreting a civil service law, rule, or regulation affecting personnel management and that the Board's decision will have a substantial impact on a civil service law, rule, regulation, or policy directive. If the Director did not intervene in a matter before the Board, the Director may not petition for review of a Board decision under this section unless the Director first petitions the Board for a reconsideration of its decision, and such petition is denied. In addition to the named respondent, the Board and all other parties to the proceedings before the Board shall have the right to appear in the proceeding before the Court of Appeals. The granting of the petition for judicial review shall be at the discretion of the Court of Appeals.

''(2) During the 5-year period beginning on the effective date of the Federal Employee Protection of Disclosures Act, this paragraph shall apply to any review relating to paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b) obtained by the Director of the Office of Personnel Management. The Director of the Office of Personnel Management may obtain review of any final order or decision of the Board by filing, within 60 days after the date the Director received notice of the final order or decision of the Board, a petition for judicial review in the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit or any court of appeals of competent jurisdiction as provided under subsection (b)(2) if the Director determines, in his discretion, that the Board erred in interpreting paragraph (8) or (9) of section 2302(b). If the Director did not intervene in a matter before the Board, the Director may not petition for review of a Board decision under this section unless the Director first petitions the Board for a reconsideration of its decision, and such petition is denied. In addition to the named respondent, the Board and all other parties to the proceedings before the Board shall have the right to appear in the proceeding before the court of appeals. The granting of the petition for judicial review shall be at the discretion of the Court of Appeals.''.

(k) NONDISCLOSURE POLICIES, FORMS, AND AGREEMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) REQUIREMENT.—Each agreement in Standard Forms 312 and 4414 of the Government and any other nondisclosure policy, form, or agreement of the Government shall contain the following statement: ''These restrictions are consistent with and do not supersede, conflict with, or otherwise alter the employee obligations, rights, or liabilities created by Executive Order No. 12958; section 7211 of title 5, United States Code (governing disclosures to Congress); section 1034 of title 10, United States Code (governing disclosure to Congress by members of the military); section 2302(b)(8) of title 5, United States Code (governing disclosures of illegality, waste, fraud, abuse or public health or safety threats); the Intelligence Identities Protection Act of 1982 (50 U.S.C. 421 et seq.) (governing disclosures that could expose confidential Government agents); and the statutes which protect against disclosure that may compromise the national security, including sections 641, 793, 794, 798, and 952 of title 18, United States Code, and section 4(b) of the Subversive Activities Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. 783(b)). The definitions, requirements, obligations, rights, sanctions, and liabilities created by such Executive order and such statutory provisions are incorporated into this agreement and are controlling.''.

(B) ENFORCEABILITY.—Any nondisclosure policy, form, or agreement described under subparagraph (A) that does not contain the statement required under subparagraph (A) may not be implemented or enforced to the extent such policy, form, or agreement is inconsistent with that statement.

(2) PERSONS OTHER THAN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a nondisclosure policy, form, or agreement that is to be executed by a person connected with the conduct of an intelligence or intelligence-related activity, other than an employee or officer of the United States Government, may contain provisions appropriate to the particular activity for which such document is to be used. Such form or agreement shall, at a minimum, require that the person will not disclose any classified information received in the course of such activity unless specifically authorized to do so by the United States Government. Such nondisclosure forms shall also make it clear that such forms do not bar disclosures to Congress or to an authorized official of an executive agency or the Department of Justice that are essential to reporting a substantial violation of law.

(l) CLARIFICATION OF WHISTLEBLOWER RIGHTS FOR CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—Section 214(c) of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–296) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''For purposes of this section a permissible use of independently obtained information includes the disclosure of such information under section 2302(b)(8) of title 5, United States Code.''.

(m) ADVISING EMPLOYEES OF RIGHTS.—Section 2302(c) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting '', including how to make a lawful disclosure of information that is specifically required by law or Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or the conduct of foreign affairs to the Special Counsel, the Inspector General of an agency, Congress, or other agency employee designated to receive such disclosures'' after ''chapter 12 of this title''.

(n) SCOPE OF DUE PROCESS.—

(1) SPECIAL COUNSEL.—Section 1214(b)(4)(B)(ii) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting '', after a finding that a protected disclosure was a contributing factor,'' after ''ordered if''.

(2) INDIVIDUAL ACTION.—Section 1221(e)(2) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting '', after a finding that a protected disclosure was a contributing factor,'' after ''ordered if''.

(o) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This Act shall take effect 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

By Ms. COLLINS (for herself and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 2635. A bill to establish an intergovernmental grant program to identify and develop homeland security information, equipment, capabilities, technologies, and services to further the homeland security needs of Federal, State, and local governments; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, the United States and Israel share a strong and enduring friendship. We also share the threat of terrorist attacks against our citizens. Yet, while terrorism within our borders is relatively new to us, Israelis have confronted this danger for decades. Israel's long history of fighting terrorism has spurred Israeli businesses, researchers and academics to develop highly sophisticated homeland security technologies, particularly in the fields of border integrity, transportation security, and first responder equipment. As the United States pursues new approaches to protecting our Nation, it only makes sense to look to Israel's extensive expertise in this area.

This is why I am introducing legislation with Senator LIEBERMAN to establish a program to provide funds to eligible joint ventures between American firms and businesses in countries such as Israel that are already highly focused on the homeland security issue and have demonstrated the capacity for fruitful cooperation with America in the area of counterterrorism.

This program will act as a revolving fund to develop new homeland security technologies. As these technologies are deployed and become profitable, the businesses that developed them will be required to repay the program for the amount of the funds. This requirement, which has worked for similar existing programs, will help sustain the availability of funds for future funds.

The program will be managed by the Department of Homeland Security. It will dedicate $25 million toward these joint ventures that develop, manufacture, sell, or otherwise provide products and services with applications related to homeland security.

This legislation will build upon a number of other highly successful public-private partnerships between businesses in the United States and those located in countries such as Israel. Since its founding in 1977, the Bi-National Industrial Research and Development Foundation (BIRD) has created numerous research and development partnerships between American and Israeli businesses. The BIRD Foundation has invested $180 million in 600 projects during the past 27 years. Similar partnerships also exist in the development of agricultural, defense, telecommunications, and other technologies. This record demonstrates the potential of a similar binational foundation in the area of homeland security.

As recent international events have demonstrated, the fight against terrorism knows no borders. This legislation will enable our Nation to deploy the highest quality and most innovative tools to improve our homeland security. I ask you to join me in supporting this effort to enhance our Nation's fight against terrorism.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 401—DESIGNATING THE WEEK OF NOVEMBER 7 THROUGH NOVEMBER 13, 2004, AS ''NATIONAL VETERANS AWARENESS WEEK'' TO EMPHASIZE THE NEED TO DEVELOP EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS REGARDING THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF VETERANS TO THE COUNTRY

Mr. BIDEN (for himself, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. BOND, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. CAMPBELL, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. CARPER, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. CHAMBLISS, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. COLEMAN, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. CORNYN, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. DAYTON, Mrs. DOLE, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. GRAHAM of Florida, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. GREGG, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MILLER, Ms. MURKOWSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SESSIONS, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. SUNUNU, Mr. TALENT, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. WARNER, Mr. WYDEN, and Mr. SMITH) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. RES. 401

Whereas tens of millions of Americans have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the past century;

Whereas hundreds of thousands of Americans have given their lives while serving in the Armed Forces during the past century;

Whereas the contributions and sacrifices of the men and women who served in the Armed Forces have been vital in maintaining the freedoms and way of life enjoyed by the people of the United States;

Whereas the advent of the all-volunteer Armed Forces has resulted in a sharp decline in the number of individuals and families who have had any personal connection with the Armed Forces;

Whereas this reduction in familiarity with the Armed Forces has resulted in a marked decrease in the awareness by young people of the nature and importance of the accomplishments of those who have served in the Armed Forces, despite the current educational efforts of the Department of Veterans Affairs and the veterans service organizations;

Whereas the system of civilian control of the Armed Forces makes it essential that the future leaders of the Nation understand the history of military action and the contributions and sacrifices of those who conduct such actions; and

Whereas, on November 10, 2003, President George W. Bush issued a proclamation urging all the people of the United States to observe November 9 through November 15, 2003, as ''National Veterans Awareness Week'': Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. NATIONAL VETERANS AWARENESS WEEK.

(a) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the President should designate the week of November 7 through November 13, 2004, as ''National Veterans Awareness Week''.

(b) PROCLAMATION.—The Senate requests the President to issue a proclamation—

(1) designating the week of November 7 through November 13, 2004, as ''National Veterans Awareness Week'' for the purpose of emphasizing educational efforts directed at elementary and secondary school students concerning the contributions and sacrifices of veterans; and

(2) calling on the people of the United States to observe National Veterans Awareness Week with appropriate educational activities.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 121—SUPPORTING THE GOALS AND IDEALS OF THE WORLD YEAR OF PHYSICS

Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. DOMENICI) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

S. CON. RES. 121

Whereas throughout history, physics has contributed to knowledge, civilization, and culture around the world;

Whereas physics research has been and continues to be a driving force for scientific, technological, and economic development;

Whereas many emerging fields in science and technology, such as nanoscience, information technology, and biotechnology, are substantially based on, and derive many tools from, fundamental discoveries in physics and physics applications;

Whereas physics will continue to play a vital role in addressing many 21st-century challenges relating to sustainable development, including environmental conservation, clean sources of energy, public health, and security;

Whereas Albert Einstein is a widely recognized scientific figure who contributed enormously to the development of physics, beginning in 1905 with Einstein's groundbreaking papers on the photoelectric effect, the size of molecules, Brownian motion, and the theory of relativity that led to Einstein's most famous equation, $E = mc^2$;

Whereas 2005 will be the 100th anniversary of the publication of those groundbreaking papers;

Whereas the General Assembly of the International Union of Pure and Applied Physics unanimously approved the proposition designating 2005 as the World Year of Physics; and

Whereas the Department of Energy is the leading source of Federal support for academic physics research, accounting for a majority of Federal funding for physics: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) supports the goals and ideals of the World Year of Physics, as designated by the General Assembly of the International Union of Pure and Applied Physics;

(2) encourages the people of the United States to observe the World Year of Physics as a special occasion for giving impetus to—

(A) education and research in physics; and

(B) the public's understanding of physics;

(3) calls on the Secretary of Energy to lead and coordinate Federal activities to commemorate the World Year of Physics;

(4) encourages the Secretary, all science-related organizations, the private sector, and the media to highlight and give enhanced recognition to—

(A) the role of physics in social, cultural, and economic development; and

(B) the positive impact and contributions of physics to society; and

(5) encourages the Secretary and all people involved in physics education and research to take additional steps (including strengthening existing and emerging fields of physics research and promoting the understanding of physics) to ensure that—

(A) support for physics continues; and

(B) physics studies at all levels continue to attract an adequate number of students.

''(vi) programs under part D of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 451 et seq.) (relating to child support enforcement); and

''(vii) programs carried out in the local area for individuals with disabilities, including programs carried out by State agencies relating to mental health, mental retardation, and developmental disabilities, State Medicaid agencies, State Independent Living Councils, and Independent Living Centers.''.

(b) PROVISION OF SERVICES.—Subtitle B of title I is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (e) of section 121;

(2) by moving subsection (c) of section 134 from section 134, redesignating such subsection as subsection (e), and inserting such subsection (as so redesignated) after subsection (d) of section 121; and

(3) by amending subsection (e) (as moved and redesignated by paragraph (2))—

(A) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking ''subsection (d)(2)'' and inserting ''section 134(c)(2)'';

(B) in paragraph (1)(B)—

(i) by striking ''subsection (d)'' and inserting ''section 134(c)''; and

(ii) by striking ''subsection (d)(4)(G)'' and inserting ''section 134(c)(4)(G)'';

(C) in paragraph (1)(C), by striking ''subsection (e)'' and inserting ''section 134(d)'';

(D) in paragraph (1)(D)—

(i) by striking ''section 121(b)'' and inserting ''subsection (b)''; and

(ii) by striking ''and'' at the end; and

(E) by amending paragraph (1)(E) to read as follows:

''(E) shall provide access to the information described in section 15(e) of the Wagner-Peyser Act (29 U.S.C. 49*l*–2(e)).''.

(c) CERTIFICATION AND FUNDING OF ONE-STOP CENTERS.—Section 121 (as amended by subsection (b)) is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

''(g) CERTIFICATION OF ONE-STOP CENTERS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The State board shall establish procedures and criteria for periodically certifying one-stop center for the purpose of awarding the one-stop infrastructure funding described in subsection (h).

''(2) CRITERIA.—The criteria for certification under this subsection shall include minimum standards relating to the scope and degree of service integration achieved by the centers involving the programs provided by the one-stop partners, and how the centers ensure that such providers meet the employment needs of local employers and participants.

''(3) EFFECT OF CERTIFICATION.—One-stop centers certified under this subsection shall be eligible to receive the infrastructure grants authorized under subsection (h).

''(h) ONE-STOP INFRASTRUCTURE FUNDING.—

''(1) PARTNER CONTRIBUTIONS.—

''(A) PROVISION OF FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, as determined under subparagraph (B), a portion of the Federal funds provided to the State and areas within the State under the Federal laws authorizing the one-stop partner programs described in subsection (b)(1)(B) and participating additional partner programs described in (b)(2)(B) for a fiscal year shall be provided to the Governor by such programs to carry out this subsection.

''(B) DETERMINATION OF GOVERNOR.—Subject to subparagraph (C), the Governor, in consultation with the State board, shall determine the portion of funds to be provided under subparagraph (A) by each one-stop partner and in making such determination shall consider the proportionate use of the one-stop centers by each partner, the costs of administration for purposes not related to one-stop centers for each partner, and other relevant factors described in paragraph (3).

''(C) LIMITATIONS.—

''(i) PROVISION FROM ADMINISTRATIVE FUNDS.—The funds provided under this paragraph by each one-stop partner shall be provided only from funds available for the costs of administration under the program administered by such partner, and shall be subject to the limitations with respect to the portion of funds under such programs that may be used for administration.

''(ii) FEDERAL DIRECT SPENDING PROGRAMS.—Programs that are Federal direct spending under section 250(c)(8) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 900(c)(8)) shall not, for purposes of this paragraph, be required to provide an amount in excess of the amount determined to be equivalent to the proportionate use of the one-stop centers by such programs in the State.

''(2) ALLOCATION BY GOVERNOR.—From the funds provided under paragraph (1), the Governor shall allocate funds to local areas in accordance with the formula established under paragraph (3) for the purposes of assisting in paying the costs of the infrastructure of One-Stop centers certified under subsection (g).

''(3) ALLOCATION FORMULA.—The State board shall develop a formula to be used by the Governor to allocate the funds described in paragraph (1). The formula shall include such factors as the State board determines are appropriate, which may include factors such as the number of centers in the local area that have been certified, the population served by such centers, and the performance of such centers.

''(4) COSTS OF INFRASTRUCTURE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'costs of infrastructure' means the nonpersonnel costs that are necessary for the general operation of a one-stop center, including the rental costs of the facilities, the costs of utilities and maintenance, equipment (including adaptive technology for individuals with disabilities), strategic planning activities for the center, and common outreach activities.

''(i) OTHER FUNDS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the funds provided to carry out subsection (h), a portion of funds made available under Federal law authorizing the one-stop partner programs described in subsection (b)(1)(B) and participating partner programs described in subsection (b)(2)(B), or the noncash resources available under such programs shall be used to pay the costs relating to the operation of the one-stop delivery system that are not paid for from the funds provided under subsection (h), to the extent not inconsistent with the Federal law involved including—

''(A) infrastructure costs that are in excess of the funds provided under subsection (h);

''(B) common costs that are in addition to the costs of infrastructure; and

''(C) the costs of the provision of core services applicable to each program.

''(2) DETERMINATION AND GUIDANCE.—The method for determining the appropriate portion of funds to be provided by each program under paragraph (1) shall be determined as part of the memorandum of understanding under subsection (c). The State board shall provide guidance to facilitate the determination of appropriate funding allocation in local areas.''.

SEC. 109. ELIGIBLE PROVIDERS OF TRAINING SERVICES.

Section 122 (29 U.S.C. 2842) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 122. IDENTIFICATION OF ELIGIBLE PROVIDERS OF TRAINING SERVICES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Governor shall establish criteria and procedures regarding the eligibility of providers of training services described in section 134(c)(4) to receive funds provided under section 133(b) for the provision of such training services.

''(b) CRITERIA.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The criteria established pursuant to subsection (a) shall take into account the performance of providers of training services with respect to the indicators described in section 136 or other appropriate indicators (taking into consideration the characteristics of the population served and relevant economic conditions), and such other factors as the Governor determines are appropriate to ensure the quality of services, the accountability of providers, how the centers ensure that such providers meet the needs of local employers and participants, and the informed choice of participants under chapter 5. Such criteria shall require that the provider submit appropriate, accurate and timely information to the State for purposes of carrying out subsection (d). The criteria shall also provide for periodic review and renewal of eligibility under this section for providers of training services. The Governor may authorize local areas in the State to establish additional criteria or to modify the criteria established by the Governor under this section for purposes of determining the eligibility of providers of training services to provide such services in the local area.

''(2) LIMITATION.—In carrying out the requirements of this subsection, no personally identifiable information regarding a student, including Social Security number, student identification number, or other identifier, may be disclosed without the prior written consent of the parent or eligible student in compliance with section 444 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232g).

''(c) PROCEDURES.—The procedures established under subsection (a) shall identify the application process for a provider of training services to become eligible to receive funds under section 133(b), and identify the respective roles of the State and local areas in receiving and reviewing applications and in making determinations of eligibility based on the criteria established under this section. The procedures shall also establish a process for a provider of training services to appeal a denial or termination of eligibility under this section that includes an opportunity for a hearing and prescribes appropriate time limits to ensure prompt resolution of the appeal.

''(d) INFORMATION TO ASSIST PARTICIPANTS IN CHOOSING PROVIDERS.—In order to facilitate and assist participants under chapter 5 in choosing providers of training services, the Governor shall ensure that an appropriate list or lists of providers determined eligible under this section in the State, accompanied by such information as the Governor determines is appropriate, is provided to the local boards in the State to be made available to such participants and to members of the public through the one-stop delivery system in the State.

''(e) AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER STATES.—States may enter into agreements, on a reciprocal basis, to permit eligible providers of training services to accept individual training accounts provided in another State.

''(f) RECOMMENDATIONS.—In developing the criteria, procedures, and information required under this section, the Governor shall solicit and take into consideration the recommendations of local boards and providers of training services within the State.

''(g) OPPORTUNITY TO SUBMIT COMMENTS.—During the development of the criteria, procedures, and information required under this section, the Governor shall provide an opportunity for interested members of the public, including representatives of business and labor organizations, to submit comments regarding such criteria, procedures, and information.''.

SEC. 110. ELIGIBLE PROVIDERS OF YOUTH ACTIVITIES.

Section 123 (29 U.S.C. 2843) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 123. ELIGIBLE PROVIDERS OF YOUTH ACTIVITIES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—From the funds allocated under section 128(b) to a local area, the local board for such area shall award grants or contracts on a competitive basis to providers of youth activities identified based on the criteria in the State plan and shall conduct oversight with respect to such providers.

''(b) EXCEPTIONS.—A local board may award grants or contracts on a sole-source basis if such board determines there are an insufficient number of eligible providers of training services in the local area involved (such as rural areas) for grants to be awarded on a competitive basis under subsection (a).''.

SEC. 111. YOUTH ACTIVITIES.

(a) STATE ALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 127(a) (29 U.S.C. 2852(a)) is amended to read as follows:

''(a) ALLOTMENT AMONG STATES.—

''(1) YOUTH ACTIVITIES.—

''(A) YOUTH CHALLENGE GRANTS.—

''(i) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—Of the amount appropriated under section 137(a) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve 25 percent to provide youth challenge grants under section 169.

''(ii) LIMITATION.—Notwithstanding clause (i), if the amount appropriated under section 137(a) for a fiscal year exceeds $1,000,000,000, the Secretary shall reserve $250,000,000 to provide youth challenge grants under section 169.

''(B) OUTLYING AREAS AND NATIVE AMERICANS.—After determining the amount to be reserved under subparagraph (A), of the remainder of the amount appropriated under section 137(a) for each fiscal year the Secretary shall—

''(i) reserve not more than ¼ of one percent of such amount to provide assistance to the outlying areas to carry out youth activities and statewide workforce investment activities; and

''(ii) reserve not more than 1 and ½ percent of such amount to provide youth activities under section 166 (relating to Native Americans).

''(C) STATES.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Of the remainder of the amount appropriated under section 137(a) for a fiscal year that is available after determining the amounts to be reserved under subparagraphs (A) and (B), the Secretary shall allot—

''(I) the amount of the remainder that is less than or equal to the total amount that was allotted to States for fiscal year 2003 under section 127(b)(1)(C) of this Act (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) in accordance with the requirements of such section 127(b)(1)(C); and

''(II) the amount of the remainder, if any, in excess of the amount referred to in subclause (I) in accordance with clause (ii).

''(ii) FORMULAS FOR EXCESS FUNDS.—Subject to clauses (iii) and (iv), of the amounts described in clause (i)(II)—

''(I) 33 and ⅓ percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of individuals in the civilian labor force who are ages 16–19 in each State, compared to the total number of individuals in the civilian labor force who are ages 16–19 in all States;

''(II) 33 and ⅓ percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of unemployed individuals in each State, compared to the total number of unemployed individuals in all States; and

''(III) 33 and ⅓ percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of disadvantaged youth who are ages 16 through 21 in each State, compared to the total number of disadvantaged youth who are ages 16 through 21 in all States.

''(iii) MINIMUM AND MAXIMUM PERCENTAGES.—The Secretary shall ensure that no State shall receive an allotment for a fiscal year that is less than 90 percent or greater than 130 percent of the allotment percentage of that State for the preceding fiscal year.

''(iv) SMALL STATE MINIMUM ALLOTMENT.—Subject to clause (iii), the Secretary shall ensure that no State shall receive an allotment under this paragraph that is less than 3/10 of 1 percent of the amount available under subparagraph (A).

''(2) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of paragraph (1), the following definitions apply:

''(A) ALLOTMENT PERCENTAGE.—The term 'allotment percentage', used with respect to fiscal year 2004 or a subsequent fiscal year, means a percentage of the remainder described in paragraph (1)(C)(i) that is received through an allotment made under this subsection for the fiscal year. The term, with respect to fiscal year 2003, means the percentage of the amounts allotted to States under this chapter (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) that is received by the State involved for fiscal year 2003.

''(B) DISADVANTAGED YOUTH.—The term 'disadvantaged youth' means an individual who is age 16 through 21 who received an income, or is a member of a family that received a total family income, that, in relation to family size, does not exceed the poverty line.

''(3) SPECIAL RULE.—For purposes of the formulas specified in paragraph (1)(C), the Secretary shall, as appropriate and to the extent practicable, exclude college students and members of the Armed Forces from the determination of the number of disadvantaged youth.

(2) REALLOTMENT.—Section 127 (29 U.S.C. 2552) is further amended—

(A) by striking subsection (b);

(B) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (b);

(C) in subsection (b) (as so redesignated)

(i) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

''(2) AMOUNT.—The amount available for reallotment for a program year is equal to the amount by which the unexpended balance, excluding accrued expenditures, at the end of such program year of the total amount of funds available to the State under this section during such program year (including amounts allotted to the State in prior program years that remain available during the program year for which the determination is made) exceeds 30 percent of such total amount.'';

(ii) in paragraph (3)—

(I) by striking ''for the prior program year'' and inserting ''for the program year in which the determination is made''; and

(II) by striking ''such prior program year'' and inserting ''such program year'';

(iii) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

''(4) ELIGIBILITY.—For purposes of this subsection, an eligible State means a State which does not have an amount available for reallotment under paragraph (2) for the program year for which the determination under paragraph (2) is made.''.

(b) WITHIN STATE ALLOCATIONS.—

(1) RESERVATION FOR STATEWIDE ACTIVITIES.—Section 128(a) is amended to read as follows:

''(a) RESERVATION FOR STATEWIDE ACTIVITIES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Governor of a State shall reserve not more than 10 percent of the amount allotted to the State under section 127(a)(1)(C) for a fiscal year for statewide activities.

''(2) USE OF FUNDS.—Regardless of whether the amounts are allotted under section 127(a)(1)(C) and reserved under paragraph (1) or allotted under section 132 and reserved under section 133(a), the Governor may use the reserved amounts to carry out statewide youth activities under section 129(b) or statewide employment and training activities under section 133.''.

(2) WITHIN STATE ALLOCATION.—Section 128(b) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) WITHIN STATE ALLOCATION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Of the amounts allotted to the State under section 127(a)(1)(C) and not reserved under subsection (a)(1)—

''(A) 80 percent of such amounts shall be allocated by the Governor to local areas in accordance with paragraph (2); and

''(B) 20 percent of such amounts shall be allocated by the Governor to local areas in accordance with paragraph (3).

''(2) ESTABLISHED FORMULA.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Of the amounts described in paragraph (1)(A), the Governor shall allocate—

''(i) 33 and ⅓ percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of individuals in the civilian labor force who are ages 16–19 in each local area, compared to the total number of individuals in the civilian labor force who are ages 16–19 in all local areas in the State;

''(ii) 33 and ⅓ percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of unemployed individuals in each local area, compared to the total number of unemployed individuals in all local areas in the State; and

''(iii) 33 and ⅓ percent on the basis of the relative number of disadvantaged youth who are ages 16 through 21 in each local area, compared to the total number of disadvantaged youth who are ages 16 through 21 in all local areas in the State.

''(B) MINIMUM AND MAXIMUM PERCENTAGES.—The Governor shall ensure that no local area shall receive an allocation for a fiscal year under this paragraph that is less than 90 percent or greater than 130 percent of the allocation percentage of the local area for the preceding fiscal year.

''(C) DEFINITIONS.—

''(i) ALLOCATION PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'allocation percentage', used with respect to fiscal year 2004 or a subsequent fiscal year, means a percentage of amount described in paragraph(1)(A) that is received through an allocation made under this paragraph for the fiscal year. The term, with respect to fiscal year 2003, means the percentage of the amounts allocated to local areas under this chapter (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Investment Act Amendments of 2003) that is received by the local area involved for fiscal year 2003.

''(ii) DISADVANTAGED YOUTH.—The term 'disadvantaged youth' means an individual who is age 16 through 21 who received an income, or is a member of a family that received a total family income, that, in relation to family size, does not exceed the poverty line.

''(3) YOUTH DISCRETIONARY ALLOCATION.—The Governor shall allocate to local areas the amounts described in paragraph (1)(B) in accordance with such demographic and economic factors as the Governor, after consultation with the State board and local boards, determines are appropriate.

''(4) LOCAL ADMINISTRATIVE COST LIMIT.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Of the amounts allocated to a local area under this subsection and section 133(b) for a fiscal year, not more than 10 percent of the amount may be used by the local boards for the administrative costs of carrying out local workforce investment activities under this chapter or chapter 5.

''(B) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds made available for administrative costs under subparagraph (A) may be used for the administrative costs of any of the local workforce investment activities described in this chapter or chapter 5, regardless of whether the funds were allocated under this subsection or section 133(b).''.

(3) REALLOCATION.—Section 128(c) (29 U.S.C. 2853(c)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking ''paragraph (2)(A) or (3) of'';

(B) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

''(2) AMOUNT.—The amount available for reallocation for a program year is equal to the amount by which the unexpended balance, excluding accrued expenditures, at the end of such program year of the total amount of funds available to the local area under this section during such program year (including amounts allotted to the local area in prior program years that remain available during the program year for which the determination is made) exceeds 30 percent of such total amount.'';

(C) by amending paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking ''subsection (b)(3)'' each place it appears and inserting ''subsection (b)'';

(ii) by striking ''the prior program year'' and inserting ''the program year in which the determination is made'';

(iii) by striking ''such prior program year'' and inserting ''such program year''; and

(iv) by striking the last sentence; and

(D) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

''(4) ELIGIBILITY.—For purposes of this subsection, an eligible local area means a local area which does not have an amount available for reallocation under paragraph (2) for the program year for which the determination under paragraph (2) is made.''.

(c) YOUTH PARTICIPANT ELIGIBILITY.—Section 129(a) (29 U.S.C. 2854(a)) is amended to read as follows:

''(a) YOUTH PARTICIPANT ELIGIBILITY.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The individuals participating in activities carried out under this chapter by a local area during any program year shall be individuals who, at the time the eligibility determination is made, are—

''(A) not younger than age 16 or older than age 24; and

''(B) one or more of the following:

''(i) school dropouts;

''(ii) recipients of a secondary school diploma or the General Equivalency Diploma (GED) (including recognized alternative standards for individuals with disabilities) who are deficient in basic skills;

''(iii) court-involved youth attending an alternative school;

''(iv) youth in foster care or who have been in foster care; or

''(v) in school youth who are low-income individuals and one or more of the following:

''(I) Deficient in literacy skills.

''(II) Homeless, runaway, or foster children.

''(III) Pregnant or parents.

''(IV) Offenders.

''(V) Individuals who require additional assistance to complete an educational program, or to secure and hold employment.

''(2) PRIORITY FOR SCHOOL DROPOUTS.—A priority in the provision of services under this chapter shall be given to individuals who are school dropouts.

''(3) LIMITATIONS ON ACTIVITIES FOR IN-SCHOOL YOUTH.—

''(A) PERCENTAGE OF FUNDS.—For any program year, not more than 30 percent of the funds available for statewide activities under subsection (b), and not more than 30 percent of funds available to local areas under subsection (c), may be used to provide activities for in-school youth meeting the requirements of paragraph (1)(B)(v).

''(B) NON-SCHOOL HOURS REQUIRED.—Activities carried out under this chapter for in-school youth meeting the requirements of paragraph (1)(B)(v) shall only be carried out in non-school hours or periods when school is not in session (such as before and after school or during summer recess.''.

(d) STATEWIDE YOUTH ACTIVITIES.—Section 129(b) (29 U.S.C. 2854(b)) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) STATEWIDE ACTIVITIES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds reserved by a Governor for a State as described in sections 128(a) and 133(a)(1) may be used for statewide activities including—

''(A) additional assistance to local areas that have high concentrations of eligible youth;

''(B) supporting the provision of core services described in section 134(c)(2) in the one-stop delivery system;

''(C) conducting evaluations under section 136(e) of activities authorized under this chapter and chapter 5 in coordination with evaluations carried out by the Secretary under section 172, research, and demonstration projects;

''(D) providing incentive grants to local areas for regional cooperation among local boards (including local boards in a designated region as described in section 116(c)), for local coordination of activities carried out under this Act, and for exemplary performance by local areas on the local performance measures;

''(E) providing technical assistance and capacity building to local areas, one-stop operators, one-stop partners, and eligible providers, including the development and training of staff, the development of exemplary program activities, and the provision of technical assistance to local areas that fail to meet local performance measures;

''(F) operating a fiscal and management accountability system under section 136(f); and

''(G) carrying out monitoring and oversight of activities under this chapter and chapter 5.

''(2) LIMITATION.—Not more than 5 percent of the funds allotted under section 127(b) shall be used by the State for administrative activities carried out under this subsection and section 133(a).

''(3) PROHIBITION.—No funds described in this subsection or in section 134(a) may be used to develop or implement education curricula for school systems in the State.''.

(e) LOCAL ELEMENTS AND REQUIREMENTS.——

(1) PROGRAM DESIGN.—Section 129(c)(1) (29 U.S.C. 2854(c) (1)) is amended—

(A) in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking ''paragraph (2)(A) or (3), as appropriate, of'';

(B) in subparagraph (B), by inserting ''are directly linked to one or more of the performance outcomes relating to this chapter under section 136, and that'' after ''for each participant that''; and

(C) in subparagraph (C)—

(i) by redesignating clauses (i) through (iv) as clauses (ii) through (v), respectively;

(ii) by inserting before clause (ii) (as so redesignated) the following:

(b) GENERAL AUTHORIZATION.—Section 131 (29 U.S.C. 2861) is amended—

(1) by striking ''paragraphs (1)(B) and (2)(B) of''; and

(2) by striking '', and dislocated workers,''.

(c) STATE ALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 132(a) (29 U.S.C. 2862(a)) is amended to read as follows:

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

''(1) reserve 10 percent of the amount appropriated under section 137(b) for a fiscal year, of which—

''(A) not less than 75 percent shall be used for national dislocated worker grants under section 173;

''(B) not more than 20 percent may be used for demonstration projects under section 171; and

''(C) not more than 5 percent may be used to provide technical assistance under section 170; and

''(2) make allotments from 90 percent of the amount appropriated under section 137(b) for a fiscal year in accordance with subsection (b).''.

(2) ALLOTMENT AMONG STATES.—Section 132(b) (29 U.S.C. 2862(b)) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) ALLOTMENT AMONG STATES FOR ADULT EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES.—

''(1) RESERVATION FOR OUTLYING AREAS.—From the amount made available under subsection (a)(2) for a fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve not more than ¼ of 1 percent to provide assistance to outlying areas to carry out employment and training activities for adults and statewide workforce investment activities.

''(2) STATES.—Subject to paragraph (5), of the remainder of the amount referred to under subsection (a)(2) for a fiscal year that is available after determining the amount to be reserved under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall allot to the States for employment and training activities for adults and for statewide workforce investment activities—

''(A) 26 percent in accordance with paragraph (3); and

''(B) 74 percent in accordance with paragraph (4).

''(3) BASE FORMULA.—

''(A) FISCAL YEAR 2004.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), the amount referred to in paragraph (2)(A) shall be allotted for fiscal year 2004 on the basis of allotment percentage of each State under section 6 of the Wagner-Peyser Act for fiscal year 2003.

''(ii) EXCESS AMOUNTS.—If the amount referred to in paragraph (2)(A) for fiscal year 2004 exceeds the amount that was available for allotment to the States under the Wagner-Peyser Act for fiscal year 2003, such excess amount shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of individuals in the civilian labor force in each State, compared to the total number of individuals in the civilian labor force in all States, adjusted to ensure that no State receives less than 3/10 of one percent of such excess amount.

''(iii) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'allotment percentage' means the percentage of the amounts allotted to States under section 6 of the Wagner-Peyser Act that is received by the State involved for fiscal year 2003.

''(B) FISCAL YEARS 2005 AND THEREAFTER.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause(ii), the amount referred to in paragraph(2)(A) shall be allotted for fiscal year 2005 and each fiscal year thereafter on the basis of the allotment percentage of each State under this paragraph for the preceding fiscal year.

''(ii) EXCESS AMOUNTS.—If the amount referred to in paragraph (2)(A) for fiscal year 2005 or any fiscal year thereafter exceeds the amount that was available for allotment under this paragraph for the prior fiscal year, such excess amount shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of individuals in the civilian labor force in each State, compared to the total number of individuals in the civilian labor force in all States, adjusted to ensure that no State receives less than 3/10 of one percent of such excess amount.

''(iii) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'allotment percentage' means the percentage of the amounts allotted to States under this paragraph in a fiscal year that is received by the State involved for such fiscal year.

''(4) CONSOLIDATED FORMULA.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), of the amount referred to in paragraph (2)(B)—

''(i) 60 percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of unemployed individuals in each State, compared to the total number of unemployed individuals in all States;

''(ii) 25 percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative excess number of unemployed individuals in each State, compared to the total excess number of unemployed individuals in all States; and

''(iii) 15 percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of disadvantaged adults in each State, compared to the total number of disadvantaged adults in all States.

''(B) MINIMUM AND MAXIMUM PERCENTAGES.—

''(i) MINIMUM PERCENTAGE.—The Secretary shall ensure that no State shall receive an allotment under this paragraph for a fiscal year that is less than 90 percent of the allotment percentage of the State under this paragraph for the preceding fiscal year.

''(ii) MAXIMUM PERCENTAGE.—Subject to clause (i), the Secretary shall ensure that no State shall receive an allotment for a fiscal year under this paragraph that is more than 130 percent of the allotment of the State under this paragraph for the preceding fiscal year.

''(C) SMALL STATE MINIMUM ALLOTMENT.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall ensure that no State shall receive an allotment under this paragraph that is less than 3/10 of 1 percent of the amount available under subparagraph (A).

''(D) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this paragraph:

''(i) ALLOTMENT PERCENTAGE.—The term 'allotment percentage', used with respect to fiscal year 2004 or a subsequent fiscal year, means a percentage of the amounts described in paragraph (2)(B) that is received through an allotment made under this paragraph for the fiscal year. The term, with respect to fiscal year 2003, means the percentage of the amounts allotted to States under this chapter (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) and under reemployment service grants received by the State involved for fiscal year 2003.

''(ii) DISADVANTAGED ADULT.—The term 'disadvantaged adult' means an individual who is age 22 through 72 who received an income, or is a member of a family that received a total family income, that, in relation to family size, does not exceed the poverty line.

''(iii) EXCESS NUMBER.—The term 'excess number' means, used with respect to the excess number of unemployed individuals within a State, the number that represents the number of unemployed individuals in excess of 4 and ½ percent of the civilian labor force in the State.

''(5) ADJUSTMENTS IN ALLOTMENTS BASED ON DIFFERENCES WITH UNCONSOLIDATED FORMULAS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall ensure that for any fiscal year no State has an allotment difference, as defined in subparagraph (C), that is less than zero. The Secretary shall adjust the amounts allotted to the States under this subsection in accordance with subparagraph (B) if necessary to carry out this subparagraph.

''(B) ADJUSTMENTS IN ALLOTMENTS.—

''(i) REDISTRIBUTION OF EXCESS AMOUNTS.—

''(I) IN GENERAL.—If necessary to carry out subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall reduce the amounts that would be allotted under paragraphs (3) and (4) to States that have an excess allotment difference, as defined in subclause (II), by the amount of such excess, and use such amounts to increase the allotments to States that have an allotment difference less than zero.

''(II) EXCESS AMOUNTS.—For purposes of subclause (I), the term 'excess' allotment difference means an allotment difference for a State that is—

''(aa) in excess of 3 percent of the amount described in subparagraph (C)(i)(II); or

''(bb) in excess of a percentage established by the Secretary that is greater than 3 percent of the amount described in subparagraph (C)(i)(II) if the Secretary determines that such greater percentage is sufficient to carry out subparagraph (A).

''(ii) USE OF AMOUNTS AVAILABLE UNDER NATIONAL RESERVE ACCOUNT.—If the funds available under clause (i) are insufficient to carry out subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall use funds reserved under section 132(a) in such amounts as are necessary to increase the allotments to States to meet the requirements of subparagraph (A). Such funds shall be used in the same manner as the States use the other funds allotted under this subsection.

''(C) DEFINITION OF ALLOTMENT DIFFERENCE.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'allotment difference' means the difference between—

''(I) the total amount a State would receive of the amounts available for allotment under subsection (b)(2) for a fiscal year pursuant to paragraphs (3) and (4); and

''(II) the total amount the State would receive of the amounts available for allotment under subsection (b)(2) for the fiscal year if such amounts were allotted pursuant to the unconsolidated formulas (applied as described in clause (iii)) that were used in allotting funds for fiscal year 2003.

''(ii) UNCONSOLIDATED FORMULAS.—For purposes of clause (i), the unconsolidated formulas are:

''(I) The requirements for the allotment of funds to the States contained in section 132(b)(1)(B) of this Act (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) that were applicable to the allotment of funds under such section for fiscal year 2003.

''(II) The requirements for the allotment of funds to the States contained in section 132(b)(2)(B) of this Act (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) that were applicable to the allotment of funds under such section for fiscal year 2003.

''(III) The requirements for the allotment of funds to the States that were contained in section 6 of the Wagner-Peyser Act (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) that were applicable to the allotment of funds under such Act for fiscal year 2003.

''(IV) The requirements for the allotment of funds to the States that were established by the Secretary for Reemployment Services Grants that were applicable to the allotment of funds for such grants for fiscal year 2003.

''(iii) PROPORTIONATE APPLICATION OF UNCONSOLIDATED FORMULAS BASED ON FISCAL YEAR 2003.—In calculating the amount under clause (i)(II), each of the unconsolidated formulas identified in clause (ii) shall be applied, respectively, only to the proportionate share of the total amount of funds available for allotment under subsection (b)(2) for a fiscal year that is equal to the proportionate share to which each of the unconsolidated formulas applied with respect to the total amount of funds allotted to the States under all of the unconsolidated formulas in fiscal year 2003.

''(iv) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The amounts used to adjust the allotments to a State under subparagraph (B) for a fiscal year shall not be included in the calculation of the amounts under clause (i) for a subsequent fiscal year, including the calculation of allocation percentages for a preceding fiscal year applicable to paragraphs (3) and (4) and to the unconsolidated formulas described in clause (ii).''.

(3) REALLOTMENT.—Section 132(c) (29 U.S.C. 2862(c)) is amended—

(A) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

''(2) AMOUNT.—The amount available for reallotment for a program year is equal to the amount by which the unexpended balance, excluding accrued expenditures, at the end of such program year of the total amount of funds available to the State under this section during such program year (including amounts allotted to the State in prior program years that remain available during the program year for which the determination is made) exceeds 30 percent of such total amount.'';

(B) in paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking ''for the prior program year'' and inserting ''for the program year in which the determination is made''; and

(ii) by striking ''such prior program year'' and inserting ''such program year''; and

(C) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

''(4) ELIGIBILITY.—For purposes of this subsection, an eligible State means a State that does not have an amount available for reallotment under paragraph (2) for the program year for which the determination under paragraph (2) is made.''.

(d) WITHIN STATE ALLOCATIONS.—

(1) RESERVATION FOR STATE ACTIVITIES.—Section 133(a) (29 U.S.C. 2863(a)) is amended to read as follows:

''(a) RESERVATION FOR STATEWIDE ACTIVITIES.—The Governor of a State may reserve up to 50 percent of the total amount allotted to the State under section 132 for a fiscal year to carry out the statewide activities described in section 134(a).''.

(2) ALLOCATIONS TO LOCAL AREAS.—Section 133(b) (29 U.S.C. 2863(b)) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) ALLOCATIONS TO LOCAL AREAS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Of the amounts allotted to the State under section 132(b)(2) and not reserved under subsection (a)—

''(A) 85 percent of such amounts shall be allocated by the Governor to local areas in accordance with paragraph (2); and

''(B) 15 percent of such amounts shall be allocated by the Governor to local areas in accordance with paragraph (3).

''(2) ESTABLISHED FORMULA.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Of the amounts described in paragraph (1)(A), the Governor shall allocate—

''(i) 60 percent on the basis of the relative number of unemployed individuals in each local area, compared to the total number of unemployed individuals in all local areas in the State;

''(ii) 25 percent on the basis of the relative excess number of unemployed individuals in each local area, compared to the total excess number of unemployed individuals in all local areas in the State; and

''(iii) 15 percent shall be allotted on the basis of the relative number of disadvantaged adults in each local area, compared to the total number of disadvantaged adults in all local areas in the State.

''(B) MINIMUM AND MAXIMUM PERCENTAGES.—The Governor shall ensure that no local area shall receive an allocation for a fiscal year under this paragraph that is less than 90 percent or greater than 130 percent of the allocation percentage of the local area for the preceding fiscal year.

''(C) DEFINITIONS.—

''(i) ALLOCATION PERCENTAGE.—The term 'allocation percentage', used with respect to fiscal year 2004 or a subsequent fiscal year, means a percentage of amount described in paragraph (1)(A) that is received through an allocation made under this paragraph for the fiscal year. The term, with respect to fiscal year 2003, means the percentage of the amounts allocated to local areas under this chapter (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Workforce Reinvestment and Adult Education Act of 2003) that is received by the local area involved for fiscal year 2003.

''(ii) DISADVANTAGED ADULT.—The term 'disadvantaged adult' means an individual who is age 22 through 72 who received an income, or is a member of a family that received a total family income, that, in relation to family size, does not exceed the poverty line.

''(iii) EXCESS NUMBER.—The term 'excess number' means, used with respect to the excess number of unemployed individuals within a local area, the number that represents the number of unemployed individuals in excess of 4.5 percent of the civilian labor force in the local area.

''(3) DISCRETIONARY ALLOCATION.—The Governor shall allocate to local areas the amounts described in paragraph (1)(B) based on a formula developed in consultation with the State board and local boards. Such formula shall be objective and geographically equitable and may include such demographic and economic factors as the Governor, after consultation with the State board and local boards, determines are appropriate.

''(4) LOCAL ADMINISTRATIVE COST LIMIT.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Of the amounts allocated to a local area under this subsection and section 128(b) for a fiscal year, not more than 10 percent of the amount may be used by the local boards for the administrative costs of carrying out local workforce investment activities under this chapter or chapter 4.

''(B) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds made available for administrative costs under subparagraph (A) may be used for the administrative costs of any of the local workforce investment activities described in this chapter or chapter 4, regardless of whether the funds were allocated under this subsection or section 128(b).''.

(3) REALLOCATION AMONG LOCAL AREAS.—Section 133(c) (29 U.S.C. 2863(c)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking ''paragraph (2)(A) or (3) of'';

(B) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

''(2) AMOUNT.—The amount available for reallocation for a program year is equal to the amount by which the unexpended balance, excluding accrued expenditures, at the end of such program year of the total amount of funds available to the local area under this section during such program year (including amounts allotted to the local area in prior program years that remain available during the program year for which the determination is made) exceeds 30 percent of such total amount.'';

(C) by amending paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking ''subsection (b)(3)'' each place it appears and inserting ''subsection (b)'';

(ii) by striking ''the prior program year'' and inserting ''the program year in which the determination is made'';

(iii) by striking ''such prior program year'' and inserting ''such program year''; and

(iv) by striking the last sentence; and

(D) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

''(4) ELIGIBILITY.—For purposes of this subsection, an eligible local area means a local area which does not have an amount available for reallocation under paragraph (2) for the program year for which the determination under paragraph (2) is made.''.

(e) USE OF FUNDS FOR EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES.—

(1) STATEWIDE EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 134(a)(1) (29 U.S.C. 2864(a)(1) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) IN GENERAL.—

''(A) REQUIRED USE OF FUNDS.—Not less than 50 percent of the funds reserved by a Governor under section 133(a) shall be used to support the provision of core services in local areas, consistent with the local plan, through one-stop delivery systems by distributing funds to local areas in accordance with subparagraph (B). Such funds may be used by States to employ State personnel to provide such services in designated local areas in consultation with local boards.

''(B) METHOD OF DISTRIBUTING FUNDS.—The method of distributing funds under this paragraph shall be developed in consultation with the State board and local boards. Such method of distribution, which may include the formula established under section 121(h)(3), shall be objective and geographically equitable, and may include factors such as the number of centers in the local area that have been certified, the population served by such centers, and the performance of such centers.

''(C) OTHER USE OF FUNDS.—Funds reserved by a Governor for a State—

''(i) under section 133(a) and not used under subparagraph (A), may be used for statewide activities described in paragraph (2); and

''(ii) under section 133(a) and not used under subparagraph (A), and under section 128(a) may be used to carry out any of the statewide employment and training activities described in paragraph (3).''.

(B) STATEWIDE RAPID RESPONSE ACTIVITIES.—Section 134(a)(2) (29 U.S.C. 2864(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

''(2) STATEWIDE RAPID RESPONSE ACTIVITIES.—A State shall carry out statewide rapid response activities using funds reserved as described in section 133(a). Such activities shall include—

''(A) provision of rapid response activities, carried out in local areas by the State or by an entity designated by the State, working in conjunction with the local boards and the chief elected officials in the local areas; and

''(B) provision of additional assistance to local areas that experience disasters, mass layoffs or plant closings, or other events that precipitate substantial increases in the number of unemployed individuals, carried out in local areas by the State, working in conjunction with the local boards and the chief elected officials in the local areas.''.

(C) STATEWIDE EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES.—Section 134(a)(3) (29 U.S.C. 2864(a)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

''(3) STATEWIDE ACTIVITIES.—Funds reserved by a Governor for a State as described in sections 133(a) and 128(a) may be used for statewide activities including—

''(A) supporting the provision of core services described in section 134(c)(2) in the one-stop delivery system;

''(B) conducting evaluations under section 136(e) of activities authorized under this chapter and chapter 4 in coordination with evaluations carried out by the Secretary under section 172, research, and demonstration projects;

''(C) providing incentive grants to local areas for regional cooperation among local boards (including local boards in a designated region as described in section 116(c)), for local coordination of activities carried out under this Act, and for exemplary performance by local areas on the local performance measures;

''(D) providing technical assistance and capacity building to local areas, one-stop operators, one-stop partners, and eligible providers, including the development and training of staff, the development of exemplary program activities, and the provision of technical assistance to local areas that fail to meet local performance measures;

''(E) operating a fiscal and management accountability system under section 136(f);

''(F) carrying out monitoring and oversight of activities carried out under this chapter and chapter 4;

''(G) implementing innovative programs, such as incumbent worker training programs, programs serving individuals with disabilities consistent with section 188;

''(H) developing strategies for effectively serving hard-to-serve populations and for integrating programs and services among one-stop partners;

''(I) implementing innovative programs for displaced homemakers, which for purposes of this subparagraph may include an individual who is receiving public assistance and is within 2 years of exhausting lifetime eligibility under Part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.); and

''(J) implementing programs to increase the number of individuals training for and placed in nontraditional employment.''.

(D) LIMITATION ON STATE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENDITURES.—Section 134(a) is further amended by adding the following new paragraph:

''(4) LIMITATION.—Not more than 5 percent of the funds allotted under section 132(b) shall be used by the State for administrative activities carried out under this subsection and section 128(a).''.

(2) LOCAL EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES.— Section 134(b) (29 U.S.C. 2864(b)) is amended—

(A) by striking ''under paragraph (2)(A)'' and all that follows through ''section 133(b)(2)(B)'' and inserting ''under section 133(b)'';

(B) in paragraphs (1) and (2), by striking ''or dislocated workers, respectively'' both places it appears; and

(C) by redesignating subsections (d) and (e) as subsections (c) and (d), respectively.

(3) REQUIRED LOCAL EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES.—

(A) ALLOCATED FUNDS.—Section 134(c)(1) (29 U.S.C. 2864(c)(1)) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds allocated to a local area for adults under section 133(b) shall be used—

''(A) to establish a one-stop delivery system as described in section 121(e);

''(B) to provide the core services described in paragraph (2) through the one-stop delivery system in accordance with such paragraph;

''(C) to provide the intensive services described in paragraph (3) to adults described in such paragraph; and

''(D) to provide training services described in paragraph (4) to adults described in such paragraph.''.

(B) CORE SERVICES.—Section 134(c)(2) (29 U.S.C. 2864(c)(2)) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) is amended—

(i) by striking ''who are adults or dislocated workers'';

(ii) in subparagraph (A), by striking ''under this subtitle'' and inserting ''under the one-stop partner programs described in section 121(b)'';

(iii) by amending subparagraph (D) to read as follows:

''(D) labor exchange services, including—

''(i) job search and placement assistance, and where appropriate career counseling;

''(ii) appropriate recruitment services for employers; and

''(iii) reemployment services provided to unemployment claimants.'';

(iv) in subparagraph (I), by inserting ''and the administration of the work test for the unemployment compensation system'' after ''compensation''; and

(v) by amending subparagraph (J) to read as follows:

''(J) assistance in establishing eligibility for programs of financial aid assistance for training and education programs that are not funded under this Act and are available in the local area; and''.

(C) INTENSIVE SERVICES.—Section 134(c)(3) (29 U.S.C. 2864(c)(3) (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection) is amended—

(i) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

''(A) IN GENERAL.—

''(i) ELIGIBILITY.—Funds allocated to a local area under section 133(b) shall be used to provide intensive services for adults who—

''(I) are unemployed and who have been determined by the one-stop operator to be—

''(aa) unlikely or unable to obtain suitable employment through core services; and

''(bb) in need of intensive services in order to obtain suitable employment; or

''(II) are employed, but who are determined by a one-stop operator to be in need of intensive services to obtain or retain suitable employment.

''(ii) DEFINITION.—The Governor shall define the term 'suitable employment' for purposes of this subparagraph.''; and

(ii) in subparagraph (C)—

(I) in clause (v), by striking ''for participants seeking training services under paragraph (4)''; and

(II) by adding the following clauses after clause (vi):

''(vii) Internships and work experience.

''(viii) Literacy activities relating to basic work readiness, and financial literacy activities.

''(ix) Out-of-area job search assistance and relocation assistance.''.

(D) TRAINING SERVICES.—Section 134(c)(4) (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection) is amended—

(i) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

''(A) IN GENERAL.—

''(i) ELIGIBILITY.—Funds allocated to a local area under section 133(b) shall be used to provide training services to adults who—

''(I) after an interview, evaluation, or assessment, and case management, have been determined by a one-stop operator or one-stop partner, as appropriate, to—

''(aa) be unlikely or unable to obtain or retain suitable employment through intensive services under paragraph (3)(A);

''(bb) be in need of training services to obtain or retain suitable employment; and

''(cc) have the skills and qualifications to successfully participate in the selected program of training services;

''(II) select programs of training services that are directly linked to the employment opportunities in the local area involved or in another area in which the adults receiving such services are willing to commute or relocate;

''(III) who meet the requirements of subparagraph (B); and

''(IV) who are determined eligible in accordance with the priority system in effect under subparagraph (E).

''(ii) The Governor shall define the term 'suitable employment' for purposes of this subparagraph.'';

(ii) in subparagraph (B)(i), by striking ''Except'' and inserting ''Notwithstanding section 479B of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1087uu) and except'';

(iii) by amending subparagraph (E) to read as follows:

''(E) PRIORITY.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—A priority shall be given to unemployed individuals for the provision of intensive and training services under this subsection.

''(ii) ADDITIONAL PRIORITY.—If the funds in the local area, including the funds allocated under section 133(b), for serving recipients of public assistance and other low-income individuals, including single parents, displaced homemakers, and pregnant single women, is limited, the priority for the provision of intensive and training services under this subsection shall include such recipients and individuals.

''(iii) DETERMINATIONS.—The Governor and the appropriate local board shall direct the one-stop operators in the local area with regard to making determinations with respect to the priority of service under this subparagraph.'';

(iv) in subparagraph (F), by adding the following clause after clause (iii):

''(iv) ENHANCED INDIVIDUAL TRAINING ACCOUNTS.—Each local board may, through one-stop centers, assist individuals receiving individual training accounts through the establishment of such accounts that include, in addition to the funds provided under this paragraph, funds from other programs and sources that will assist the individual in obtaining training services.''; and

(v) in subparagraph (G)(iv), by redesignating subclause (IV) as subclause (V) and inserting after subclause (III) the following:

''(IV) Individuals with disabilities.''.

(4) PERMISSIBLE ACTIVITIES.—Section 134(d) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) is amended—

(A) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

''(1) DISCRETIONARY ONE-STOP DELIVERY ACTIVITIES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Funds allocated to a local area under section 133(b) may be used to provide, through the one-stop delivery system—

''(i) customized screening and referral of qualified participants in training services to employers;

''(ii) customized employment-related services to employers on a fee-for-service basis;

''(iii) customer support to navigate among multiple services and activities for special participant populations that face multiple barriers to employment, including individuals with disabilities; and

''(iv) employment and training assistance provided in coordination with child support enforcement activities of the State agency carrying out subtitle D of title IV of the Social Security Act.

''(B) WORK SUPPORT ACTIVITIES FOR LOW-WAGE WORKERS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.— Funds allocated to a local area under 133(b) may be used to provide, through the one-stop delivery system and in collaboration with the appropriate programs and resources of the one-stop partners, work support activities designed to assist low-wage workers in retaining and enhancing employment.

''(ii) ACTIVITIES.—The activities described in clause (i) may include assistance in accessing financial supports for which such workers may be eligible and the provision of activities available through the one-stop delivery system in a manner that enhances the opportunities of such workers to participate, such as the provision of employment and training activities during nontraditional hours and the provision of on-site child care while such activities are being provided.''; and

(B) by adding after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

''(4) INCUMBENT WORKER TRAINING PROGRAMS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The local board may use up to 10 percent of the funds allocated to a local area under section 133(b) to carry out incumbent worker training programs in accordance with this paragraph.

''(B) TRAINING ACTIVITIES.—The training programs for incumbent workers under this paragraph shall be carried out by the local area in conjunction with the employers of such workers for the purpose of assisting such workers in obtaining the skills necessary to retain employment and avert layoffs.

''(C) EMPLOYER MATCH REQUIRED.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Employers participating in programs under this paragraph shall be required to pay a proportion of the costs of providing the training to the incumbent workers. The Governor shall establish, or may authorize the local board to establish, the required portion of such costs, which shall not be less than—

''(I) 10 percent of the costs, for employers with 50 or fewer employees;

''(II) 25 percent of the costs, for employers with more than 50 employees but fewer than 100 employees; and

''(III) 50 percent of the costs, for employers with 100 or more employees.

''(ii) CALCULATION OF MATCH.—The wages paid by an employer to a worker while they are attending training may be included as part of the requirement payment of the employer.''.

SEC. 113. PERFORMANCE ACCOUNTABILITY SYSTEM.

(a) STATE PERFORMANCE MEASURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 136(b)(1) (29 U.S.C. 2871(b)(1)) is amended—

''(e) SPECIAL RULE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—From amounts made available under subsection (c) for the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and the Republic of Palau, the Secretary shall award grants to Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or the Republic of Palau to carry out activities described in this title in accordance with the provisions of this title as determined by the Secretary.

''(2) TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and the Republic of Palau shall be eligible to receive a grant under this title until an agreement for the extension of United States education assistance under the Compact of Free Association for each of the Freely Associated States becomes effective.

''(3) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The Secretary may provide not more than 5 percent of the funds made available for grants under this subsection to pay the administrative costs of the Pacific Region Educational Laboratory regarding activities assisted under this subsection.

''(f) HOLD-HARMLESS PROVISIONS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (c), and subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), for fiscal year 2004 and each succeeding fiscal year, no eligible agency shall receive an allotment under this title that is less than 90 percent of the allotment the eligible agency received for the preceding fiscal year under this title.

''(2) EXCEPTION.—An eligible agency that receives for the preceding fiscal year only an initial allotment under subsection 211(c)(1) (and no additional allotment under 211(c)(2)) shall receive an allotment equal to 100 percent of the initial allotment.

''(3) RATABLE REDUCTION.—If for any fiscal year the amount available for allotment under this title is insufficient to satisfy the provisions of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payments to all eligible agencies, as necessary.

''(g) REALLOTMENT.—The portion of any eligible agency's allotment under this title for a fiscal year that the Secretary determines will not be required for the period such allotment is available for carrying out activities under this title, shall be available for reallotment from time to time, on such dates during such period as the Secretary shall fix, to other eligible agencies in proportion to the original allotments to such agencies under this title for such year.

''SEC. 212. PERFORMANCE ACCOUNTABILITY SYSTEM.

''(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to establish a comprehensive performance accountability system, composed of the activities described in this section, to assess the effectiveness of eligible agencies in achieving continuous improvement of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs funded under this title, in order to optimize the return on investment of Federal funds in adult basic skills and family literacy education programs.

''(b) ELIGIBLE AGENCY PERFORMANCE MEASURES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For each eligible agency, the eligible agency performance measures shall consist of—

''(A)(i) the core indicators of performance described in paragraph (2)(A); and

''(ii) employment performance indicators identified by the eligible agency under paragraph (2)(B); and

''(B) an eligible agency adjusted level of performance for each indicator described in subparagraph (A).

''(2) INDICATORS OF PERFORMANCE.—

''(A) CORE INDICATORS OF PERFORMANCE.—The core indicators of performance shall include the following:

''(i) Measurable improvements in basic skill levels in reading, writing, and speaking the English language and basic math, leading to proficiency in each skill.

''(ii) Receipt of a secondary school diploma or the General Equivalency Diploma (GED) (including recognized alternative standards for individuals with disabilities).

''(iii) Placement in postsecondary education or other training programs.

''(B) EMPLOYMENT PERFORMANCE INDICATORS.—Consistent with applicable Federal and State privacy laws, an eligible agency shall identify in the State plan the following individual participant employment performance indicators—

''(i) entry into employment;

''(ii) retention in employment; and

''(iii) increase in earnings.

''(3) LEVELS OF PERFORMANCE.—

''(A) ELIGIBLE AGENCY ADJUSTED LEVELS OF PERFORMANCE FOR CORE INDICATORS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—For each eligible agency submitting a State plan, there shall be established, in accordance with this subparagraph, levels of performance for each of the core indicators of performance described in paragraph (2)(A) for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs authorized under this title. The levels of performance established under this subparagraph shall, at a minimum—

''(I) be expressed in an objective, quantifiable, and measurable form; and

''(II) show the progress of the eligible agency toward continuously and significantly improving the agency's performance outcomes in an objective, quantifiable, and measurable form.

''(ii) IDENTIFICATION IN STATE PLAN.—Each eligible agency shall identify, in the State plan submitted under section 224, expected levels of performance for each of the core indicators of performance for the first 3 program years covered by the State plan.

''(iii) AGREEMENT ON ELIGIBLE AGENCY ADJUSTED LEVELS OF PERFORMANCE FOR FIRST 3 YEARS.—In order to ensure an optimal return on the investment of Federal funds in adult basic skills and family literacy education programs authorized under this title, the Secretary and each eligible agency shall reach agreement on levels of student proficiency for each of the core indicators of performance, for the first 3 program years covered by the State plan, taking into account the levels identified in the State plan under clause (ii) and the factors described in clause (iv). The levels agreed to under this clause shall be considered to be the eligible agency adjusted levels of performance for the eligible agency for such years and shall be incorporated into the State plan prior to the approval of such plan.

''(iv) FACTORS.—The agreement described in clause (iii) or (v) shall take into account—

''(I) how the levels involved compare with the eligible agency's adjusted levels of performance, taking into account factors including the characteristics of participants when the participants entered the program; and

''(II) the extent to which such levels promote continuous and significant improvement in performance on the student proficiency measures used by such eligible agency and ensure optimal return on the investment of Federal funds.

''(v) AGREEMENT ON ELIGIBLE AGENCY ADJUSTED LEVELS OF PERFORMANCE FOR SECOND 3 YEARS.—Prior to the fourth program year covered by the State plan, the Secretary and each eligible agency shall reach agreement on levels of student proficiency for each of the core indicators of performance for the fourth, fifth, and sixth program years covered by the State plan, taking into account the factors described in clause (iv). The levels agreed to under this clause shall be considered to be the eligible agency adjusted levels of performance for the eligible agency for such years and shall be incorporated into the State plan.

''(vi) REVISIONS.—If unanticipated circumstances arise in a State resulting in a significant change in the factors described in clause (iv)(I), the eligible agency may request that the eligible agency adjusted levels of performance agreed to under clause (iii) or (v) be revised.

''(B) LEVELS OF EMPLOYMENT PERFORMANCE.—The eligible agency shall identify, in the State plan, eligible agency levels of performance for each of the employment performance indicators described in paragraph (2)(B). Such levels shall be considered to be eligible agency adjusted levels of performance for purposes of this title.

''(c) REPORT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Each eligible agency that receives a grant under section 211(b) shall annually prepare and submit to the Secretary, the Governor, the State legislature, eligible providers, and the general public within the State, a report on the progress of the eligible agency in achieving eligible agency performance measures, including the following:

''(A) Information on the levels of performance achieved by the eligible agency with respect to the core indicators of performance and employment performance indicators.

''(B) The number and type of each eligible provider that receives funding under such grant.

''(2) INFORMATION DISSEMINATION.—The Secretary—

''(A) shall make the information contained in such reports available to the general public through publication and other appropriate methods;

''(B) shall disseminate State-by-State comparisons of the information; and

''(C) shall provide the appropriate committees of the Congress with copies of such reports.

''SEC. 213. INCENTIVE GRANTS FOR STATES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—From funds appropriated under section 211(a)(2), the Secretary may award grants to States for exemplary performance in carrying out programs under this title. Such awards shall be based on States meeting or exceeding the core indicators of performance established under section 212(b)(2)(A) and may be based on the performance of the State in serving populations, such as those described in section 224(b)(10), including the levels of service provided and the performance outcomes, and such other factors relating to the performance of the State under this title as the Secretary determines appropriate.

''(b) USE OF FUNDS.—The funds awarded to a State under this paragraph may be used to carry out any activities authorized under this title, including demonstrations and innovative programs for hard-to-serve populations.

''CHAPTER 2—STATE PROVISIONS

''SEC. 221. STATE ADMINISTRATION.

''Each eligible agency shall be responsible for the following activities under this title:

''(1) The development, submission, implementation, and monitoring of the State plan.

''(2) Consultation with other appropriate agencies, groups, and individuals that are involved in, or interested in, the development and implementation of activities assisted under this title.

''(3) Coordination and avoidance of duplication with other Federal and State education, training, corrections, public housing, and social service programs.

''SEC. 222. STATE DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS; MATCHING REQUIREMENT.

''(a) STATE DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—Each eligible agency receiving a grant under this title for a fiscal year—

''(1) shall use an amount not less than 82.5 percent of the grant funds to award grants and contracts under section 231 and to carry out section 225, of which not more than 10 percent of such amount shall be available to carry out section 225;

''(2) shall use not more than 12.5 percent of the grant funds to carry out State leadership activities under section 223; and

''(3) shall use not more than 5 percent of the grant funds, or $75,000, whichever is greater, for the administrative expenses of the eligible agency.

''(b) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to receive a grant from the Secretary under section

211(b), each eligible agency shall provide, for the costs to be incurred by the eligible agency in carrying out the adult basic skills and family literacy education programs for which the grant is awarded, a non-Federal contribution in an amount at least equal to—

''(A) in the case of an eligible agency serving an outlying area, 12 percent of the total amount of funds expended for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs in the outlying area, except that the Secretary may decrease the amount of funds required under this subparagraph for an eligible agency; and

''(B) in the case of an eligible agency serving a State, 25 percent of the total amount of funds expended for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs in the State.

''(2) NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION.—An eligible agency's non-Federal contribution required under paragraph (1) may be provided in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, and shall include only non-Federal funds that are used for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs in a manner that is consistent with the purpose of this title.

''SEC. 223. STATE LEADERSHIP ACTIVITIES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—Each eligible agency may use funds made available under section 222(a)(2) for any of the following adult basic skills and family literacy education programs:

''(1) The establishment or operation of professional development programs to improve the quality of instruction provided pursuant to local activities required under section 231(b), including instruction incorporating the essential components of reading instruction and instruction provided by volunteers or by personnel of a State or outlying area.

''(2) The provision of technical assistance to eligible providers of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs for development and dissemination of scientific research-based instructional practices in reading, writing, speaking, math, and English language acquisition programs.

''(3) The provision of assistance to eligible providers in developing, implementing, and reporting measurable progress in achieving the objectives of this title.

''(4) The provision of technology assistance, including staff training, to eligible providers of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs, including distance learning activities, to enable the eligible providers to improve the quality of such activities.

''(5) The development and implementation of technology applications or distance learning, including professional development to support the use of instructional technology.

''(6) Coordination with other public programs, including welfare-to-work, workforce development, and job training programs.

''(7) Coordination with existing support services, such as transportation, child care, and other assistance designed to increase rates of enrollment in, and successful completion of, adult basic skills and family literacy education programs, for adults enrolled in such activities.

''(8) The development and implementation of a system to assist in the transition from adult basic education to postsecondary education.

''(9) Activities to promote workplace literacy programs.

''(10) Activities to promote and complement local outreach initiatives described in section 242(7).

''(11) Other activities of statewide significance, including assisting eligible agencies in achieving progress in improving the skill levels of adults who participate in programs under this title.

''(b) COORDINATION.—In carrying out this section, eligible agencies shall coordinate where possible, and avoid duplicating efforts, in order to maximize the impact of the activities described in subsection (a).

''(c) STATE-IMPOSED REQUIREMENTS.—Whenever a State or outlying area implements any rule or policy relating to the administration or operation of a program authorized under this title that has the effect of imposing a requirement that is not imposed under Federal law (including any rule or policy based on a State or outlying area interpretation of a Federal statute, regulation, or guideline), the State or outlying area shall identify, to eligible providers, the rule or policy as being imposed by the State or outlying area.

''SEC. 224. STATE PLAN.

''(a) 6-YEAR PLANS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Each eligible agency desiring a grant under this title for any fiscal year shall submit to, or have on file with, the Secretary a 6-year State plan.

''(2) COMPREHENSIVE PLAN OR APPLICATION.—The eligible agency may submit the State plan as part of a comprehensive plan or application for Federal education assistance.

''(b) PLAN CONTENTS.—The eligible agency shall include in the State plan or any revisions to the State plan—

''(1) an objective assessment of the needs of individuals in the State or outlying area for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs, including individuals most in need or hardest to serve;

''(2) a description of the adult basic skills and family literacy education programs that will be carried out with funds received under this title;

''(3) a description of how the eligible agency will evaluate and measure annually the effectiveness and improvement of the adult basic skills and family literacy education programs based on the performance measures described in section 212 including—

''(A) how the eligible agency will evaluate and measure annually such effectiveness on a grant-by-grant basis; and

''(B) how the eligible agency—

''(i) will hold eligible providers accountable regarding the progress of such providers in improving the academic achievement of participants in adult education programs under this title and regarding the core indicators of performance described in section 212(b)(2)(A); and

''(ii) will use technical assistance, sanctions, and rewards (including allocation of grant funds based on performance and termination of grant funds based on nonperformance);

''(4) a description of the performance measures described in section 212 and how such performance measures have significantly improved adult basic skills and family literacy education programs in the State or outlying area;

''(5) an assurance that the eligible agency will, in addition to meeting all of the other requirements of this title, award not less than one grant under this title to an eligible provider that—

''(A) offers flexible schedules and necessary support services (such as child care and transportation) to enable individuals, including individuals with disabilities, or individuals with other special needs, to participate in adult basic skills and family literacy education programs; and

''(B) attempts to coordinate with support services that are not provided under this title prior to using funds for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs provided under this title for support services;

''(6) an assurance that the funds received under this title will not be expended for any purpose other than for activities under this title;

''(7) a description of how the eligible agency will fund local activities in accordance with the measurable goals described in section 231(d);

''(8) an assurance that the eligible agency will expend the funds under this title only in a manner consistent with fiscal requirements in section 241;

''(9) a description of the process that will be used for public participation and comment with respect to the State plan, which process—

''(A) shall include consultation with the State workforce investment board, the State board responsible for administering community or technical colleges, the Governor, the State educational agency, the State board or agency responsible for administering block grants for temporary assistance to needy families under title IV of the Social Security Act, the State council on disabilities, the State vocational rehabilitation agency, other State agencies that promote the improvement of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs, and direct providers of such programs; and

''(B) may include consultation with the State agency on higher education, institutions responsible for professional development of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs instructors, representatives of business and industry, refugee assistance programs, and faith-based organizations;

''(10) a description of the eligible agency's strategies for serving populations that include, at a minimum—

''(A) low-income individuals;

''(B) individuals with disabilities;

''(C) the unemployed;

''(D) the underemployed; and

''(E) individuals with multiple barriers to educational enhancement, including individuals with limited English proficiency;

''(11) a description of how the adult basic skills and family literacy education programs that will be carried out with any funds received under this title will be integrated with other adult education, career development, and employment and training activities in the State or outlying area served by the eligible agency;

''(12) a description of the steps the eligible agency will take to ensure direct and equitable access, as required in section 231(c)(1), including—

''(A) how the State will build the capacity of community-based and faith-based organizations to provide adult basic skills and family literacy education programs; and

''(B) how the State will increase the participation of business and industry in adult basic skills and family literacy education programs; and

''(13) a description of how the eligible agency will consult with any State agency responsible for postsecondary education to develop adult education that prepares students to enter postsecondary education without the need for remediation upon completion of secondary school equivalency programs.

''(c) PLAN REVISIONS.—When changes in conditions or other factors require substantial revisions to an approved State plan, the eligible agency shall submit the revisions of the State plan to the Secretary.

''(d) CONSULTATION.—The eligible agency shall—

''(1) submit the State plan, and any revisions to the State plan, to the Governor, the chief State school officer, or the State officer responsible for administering community or technical colleges, or outlying area for review and comment; and

''(2) ensure that any comments regarding the State plan by the Governor, the chief State school officer, or the State officer responsible for administering community or technical colleges, and any revision to the State plan, are submitted to the Secretary.

''(e) PLAN APPROVAL.—A State plan submitted to the Secretary shall be approved by the Secretary only if the plan is consistent with the specific provisions of this title.

''SEC. 225. PROGRAMS FOR CORRECTIONS EDUCATION AND OTHER INSTITUTIONALIZED INDIVIDUALS.

''(a) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—From funds made available under section 222(a)(1) for a fiscal year, each eligible agency shall carry out corrections education and education for other institutionalized individuals.

''(b) USES OF FUNDS.—The funds described in subsection (a) shall be used for the cost of educational programs for criminal offenders in correctional institutions and for other institutionalized individuals, including academic programs for—

''(1) basic skills education;

''(2) special education programs as determined by the eligible agency;

''(3) reading, writing, speaking, and math programs; and

''(4) secondary school credit or diploma programs or their recognized equivalent.

''(c) PRIORITY.—Each eligible agency that is using assistance provided under this section to carry out a program for criminal offenders within a correctional institution shall give priority to serving individuals who are likely to leave the correctional institution within 5 years of participation in the program.

''(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

''(1) CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTION.—The term 'correctional institution' means any—

''(A) prison;

''(B) jail;

''(C) reformatory;

''(D) work farm;

''(E) detention center; or

''(F) halfway house, community-based rehabilitation center, or any other similar institution designed for the confinement or rehabilitation of criminal offenders.

''(2) CRIMINAL OFFENDER.—The term 'criminal offender' means any individual who is charged with, or convicted of, any criminal offense.

''CHAPTER 3—LOCAL PROVISIONS

''SEC. 231. GRANTS AND CONTRACTS FOR ELIGIBLE PROVIDERS.

''(a) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—From grant funds made available under section 211(b), each eligible agency shall award multiyear grants or contracts, on a competitive basis, to eligible providers within the State or outlying area that meet the conditions and requirements of this title to enable the eligible providers to develop, implement, and improve adult basic skills and family literacy education programs within the State.

''(b) LOCAL ACTIVITIES.—The eligible agency shall require eligible providers receiving a grant or contract under subsection (a) to establish or operate one or more programs of instruction that provide services or instruction in one or more of the following categories:

''(1) Adult basic skills and family literacy education programs (including proficiency in reading, writing, speaking, and math).

''(2) Workplace literacy programs.

''(3) English language acquisition programs.

''(4) Family literacy education programs.

''(c) DIRECT AND EQUITABLE ACCESS; SAME PROCESS.—Each eligible agency receiving funds under this title shall ensure that—

''(1) all eligible providers have direct and equitable access to apply for grants or contracts under this section; and

''(2) the same grant or contract announcement process and application process is used for all eligible providers in the State or outlying area.

''(d) MEASURABLE GOALS.—The eligible agency shall require eligible providers receiving a grant or contract under subsection (a) to demonstrate—

''(1) the eligible provider's measurable goals for participant outcomes to be achieved annually on the core indicators of performance and employment performance indicators described in section 212(b)(2);

''(2) the past effectiveness of the eligible provider in improving the basic academic skills of adults and, for eligible providers receiving grants in the prior year, the success of the eligible provider receiving funding under this title in meeting or exceeding its performance goals in the prior year;

''(3) the commitment of the eligible provider to serve individuals in the community who are the most in need of basic academic skills instruction services, including individuals who are low-income or have minimal reading, writing, speaking, and math skills, or limited English proficiency;

''(4) the program—

''(A) is of sufficient intensity and duration for participants to achieve substantial learning gains; and

''(B) uses instructional practices that include the essential components of reading instruction;

''(5) educational practices are based on scientifically based research;

''(6) the activities of the eligible provider effectively employ advances in technology, as appropriate, including the use of computers;

''(7) the activities provide instruction in real-life contexts, when appropriate and scientifically based, to ensure that an individual has the skills needed to compete in the workplace and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship;

''(8) the activities are staffed by well-trained instructors, counselors, and administrators;

''(9) the activities are coordinated with other available resources in the community, such as through strong links with elementary schools and secondary schools, postsecondary educational institutions, one-stop centers, job training programs, community-based and faith-based organizations, and social service agencies;

''(10) the activities offer flexible schedules and support services (such as child care and transportation) that are necessary to enable individuals, including individuals with disabilities or other special needs, to attend and complete programs;

''(11) the activities include a high-quality information management system that has the capacity to report measurable participant outcomes and to monitor program performance against the performance measures established by the eligible agency;

''(12) the local communities have a demonstrated need for additional English language acquisition programs;

''(13) the capacity of the eligible provider to produce valid information on performance results, including enrollments and measurable participant outcomes;

''(14) adult basic skills and family literacy education programs offer rigorous reading, writing, speaking, and math content that are based on scientific research; and

''(15) applications of technology, and services to be provided by the eligible providers, are of sufficient intensity and duration to increase the amount and quality of learning and lead to measurable learning gains within specified time periods.

''(e) SPECIAL RULE.—Eligible providers may use grant funds under this title to serve children participating in family literacy programs assisted under this part, provided that other sources of funds available to provide similar services for such children are used first.

''SEC. 232. LOCAL APPLICATION.

''Each eligible provider desiring a grant or contract under this title shall submit an application to the eligible agency containing such information and assurances as the eligible agency may require, including—

''(1) a description of how funds awarded under this title will be spent consistent with the requirements of this title;

''(2) a description of any cooperative arrangements the eligible provider has with other agencies, institutions, or organizations for the delivery of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs; and

''(3) each of the demonstrations required by section 231(d).

''SEC. 233. LOCAL ADMINISTRATIVE COST LIMITS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (b), of the amount that is made available under this title to an eligible provider—

''(1) at least 95 percent shall be expended for carrying out adult basic skills and family literacy education programs; and

''(2) the remaining amount shall be used for planning, administration, personnel and professional development, development of measurable goals in reading, writing, speaking, and math, and interagency coordination.

''(b) SPECIAL RULE.—In cases where the cost limits described in subsection (a) are too restrictive to allow for adequate planning, administration, personnel development, and interagency coordination, the eligible provider may negotiate with the eligible agency in order to determine an adequate level of funds to be used for noninstructional purposes.

''CHAPTER 4—GENERAL PROVISIONS

''SEC. 241. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

''(a) SUPPLEMENT NOT SUPPLANT.—Funds made available for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs under this title shall supplement and not supplant other State or local public funds expended for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs.

''(b) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—

''(A) DETERMINATION.—An eligible agency may receive funds under this title for any fiscal year if the Secretary finds that the fiscal effort per student or the aggregate expenditures of such eligible agency for activities under this title, in the second preceding fiscal year, were not less than 90 percent of the fiscal effort per student or the aggregate expenditures of such eligible agency for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs, in the third preceding fiscal year.

''(B) PROPORTIONATE REDUCTION.—Subject to paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), for any fiscal year with respect to which the Secretary determines under subparagraph (A) that the fiscal effort or the aggregate expenditures of an eligible agency for the preceding program year were less than such effort or expenditures for the second preceding program year, the Secretary—

''(i) shall determine the percentage decreases in such effort or in such expenditures; and

''(ii) shall decrease the payment made under this title for such program year to the agency for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs by the lesser of such percentages.

''(2) COMPUTATION.—In computing the fiscal effort and aggregate expenditures under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall exclude capital expenditures and special one-time project costs.

''(3) DECREASE IN FEDERAL SUPPORT.—If the amount made available for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs under this title for a fiscal year is less than the amount made available for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs under this title for the preceding fiscal year, then the fiscal effort per student and the aggregate expenditures of an eligible agency required in order to avoid a reduction under paragraph (1)(B) shall be decreased by the same percentage as the percentage decrease in the amount so made available.

''(4) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the requirements of this subsection for not more than 1 fiscal year, if the Secretary determines that a waiver would be equitable due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances, such as a natural disaster or an unforeseen and precipitous decline in the financial resources of the State or outlying area of the eligible agency. If the Secretary grants a waiver under the preceding sentence for a fiscal year, the level of effort required under paragraph (1) shall not be reduced in the subsequent fiscal year because of the waiver.

''SEC. 242. NATIONAL LEADERSHIP ACTIVITIES.

''The Secretary shall establish and carry out a program of national leadership activities that may include the following:

''(1) Technical assistance, on request, including assistance—

''(A) on requests to volunteer community- and faith-based organizations, including but not limited to, improving their fiscal management, research-based instruction, and reporting requirements, and the development of measurable objectives to carry out the requirements of this title;

''(B) in developing valid, measurable, and reliable performance data, and using performance information for the improvement of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs;

''(C) on adult education professional development; and

''(D) in using distance learning and improving the application of technology in the classroom.

''(2) Providing for the conduct of research on national literacy basic skill acquisition levels among adults, including the number of adults functioning at different levels of reading proficiency.

''(3) Improving the coordination, efficiency, and effectiveness of adult education and workforce development services at the national, State, and local levels.

''(4) Determining how participation in adult basic skills and family literacy education programs prepares individuals for entry into and success in postsecondary education and employment, and in the case of prison-based services, the effect on recidivism.

''(5) Evaluating how different types of providers, including community and faith-based organizations or private for-profit agencies measurably improve the skills of participants in adult basic skills and family literacy education programs.

''(6) Identifying model integrated basic and workplace skills education programs, coordinated literacy and employment services, and effective strategies for serving adults with disabilities.

''(7) Supporting the development of an entity that would produce and distribute technology-based programs and materials for adult basic skills and family literacy education programs using an intercommunication system, as that term is defined in section 397 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 397), and expand the effective outreach and use of such programs and materials to adult education eligible providers.

''(8) Initiating other activities designed to improve the measurable quality and effectiveness of adult basic skills and family literacy education programs nationwide.''.

PART B—NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR LITERACY

SEC. 211. SHORT TITLE; PURPOSE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This part may be cited as the ''National Institute for Literacy Establishment Act''.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this part is to establish a National Institute for Literacy to provide national leadership in promoting reading research, reading instruction, and professional development in reading based on scientifically based research by—

(1) disseminating widely information on scientifically based reading research to improve academic achievement for children, youth, and adults;

(2) identifying and disseminating information about schools, local educational agencies, and State educational agencies that have effectively developed and implemented classroom reading programs that meet the requirements of subpart 1 of part B of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6361 et seq.), including those State educational agencies, local educational agencies, and schools that are identified as effective through the External Evaluation of Reading First under section 1205 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6365);

(3) serving as a national resource for information on reading instruction programs that contain the essential components of reading instruction as supported by scientifically based reading research, and that can lead to improved reading outcomes for children, youth, and adults;

(4) developing print and electronic materials that describe and model the application of scientifically based reading research;

(5) providing national and regional reading leadership for State and local personnel for the application and implementation of scientifically based reading research;

(6) coordinating efforts among Federal agencies, especially the Department of Labor, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, that provide reading programs, conduct research, and provide services to recipients of Federal financial assistance under titles I and III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the Head Start Act, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, and the Adult Basic Skills and Family Literacy Education Act, and each Bureau funded school (as defined in title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 2001 et seq.)); and

(7) informing the Congress, Federal departments and agencies, schools of education, and the public of successful local, State, and Federal program activities in reading instruction that are determined to be effective based on the findings of scientifically based reading research.

SEC. 212. ESTABLISHMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established the National Institute for Literacy. The Institute shall be administered, in accordance with this part, under the supervision and direction of a Director. There shall be an agreement between an Interagency Group (comprised of the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services) and the Institute on how the purposes of the Institute may be achieved effectively. Such agreement—

(1) shall be regularly reviewed, and modified as needed to remain current with any changes in the purposes of the Institute; and

(2) shall be updated no later than 1 year after the enactment of this part.

(b) DIRECTOR.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Interagency Group shall appoint a Director of the Institute, who has an understanding of, supports, and is familiar with scientifically based reading research, instruction, and professional development applicable to children, youth, and adults. If a vacancy in the position of the Director of the Institute occurs, the Interagency Group shall appoint an Interim Director until such time as a new Director can be appointed.

(2) PAY.—The Director of the Institute shall receive the rate of basic pay for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

(3) TERM.—The Director of the Institute shall be appointed for an initial term of 3 years and may serve not more than 1 additional term of 3 years.

SEC. 213. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Institute shall be responsible for administering the Institute. The Director of the Institute shall—

(1) provide leadership for the Institute, consistent with the purposes described in section 211(b);

(2) supervise all employees in the Institute;

(3) assign responsibility to carry out the duties of the Institute among officers ad employees, and offices of the Institute;

(4) prepare requests for appropriations for the Institute and submit those requests to the Interagency Group;

(5) oversee the expenditure of all funds allocated for the Institute to carry out the purposes under section 211(b); and

(6) ensure that the Institute's standards for research quality are consistent with those promulgated by the Institute for Education Sciences.

(b) OFFICES.—The Institute shall have separate offices from the Department of Education, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Health and Human Services, and shall have maximum flexibility in its operations to carry out the purposes of the Institute.

(c) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT.—The Secretary of Education shall provide administrative support for the Institute, including the administration of grants, contracts and cooperative agreements, personnel, legal counsel, and payroll.

SEC. 214. DUTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to provide leadership for the improvement and expansion of the system for delivery of scientifically based reading instructional practices, the Director of the Institute shall—

(1) establish a national electronic database of effective reading programs for children, youth, and adults that include the essential components of reading instruction, and disseminate such information to parents, teachers, State and Federal elected officials, and the public;

(2) develop print and electronic materials for professional development that provide applications of scientifically based reading research, and instructional practices in reading for children, youth, and adults;

(3) provide technical assistance to the Congress, school Boards, Federal agencies, State departments of education, adult education programs, local school districts, local public and private schools, and schools of education, on scientifically based reading instructional practices including diagnostic and assessment instruments and instructional materials;

(4) collaborate and support Federal research programs in reading instruction, including, where appropriate, those areas of study addressed by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, the Institute for Education Sciences, the National Science Foundation, the Department of Labor, and the National Research Council;

(5) coordinate with the Department of Education, the Department of Labor, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development on all programs that include improving reading instructional practices for children, youth, and adults, and teacher training in reading instructional practices;

(6) use and support the collection of the best possible information in carrying out this section, and where appropriate, including reviews of research on instruction using the criteria for quality identified by the Institute for Education Sciences;

(7) conduct reviews of research, including randomized field trials, on reading programs, and conduct reviews of Federal reading policies and reading program implementation using a board of visitors as described in subchapter 300 of the National Science Foundation Administrative Manual; and

(8) develop an Internet site that provides useful information to educators and the public on reading literacy that is consistent with the purposes described in section 211(b).

(b) GRANTS, CONTRACTS, AND COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—The Institute may award grants to, or enter into contracts or cooperative agreements with, individuals, public or private institutions, agencies, organizations, or other legal entities to carry out the activities of the Institute.

(c) RELATION TO OTHER LAWS.—The duties and powers of the Institute under this part are in addition to the duties and powers of the Institute under subparts 1, 2, and 3 of part B of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1201 et seq.) (commonly referred to as Reading First, Early Reading First, and the William F. Goodling Even Start Family Literacy Programs, respectively).

SEC. 215. LEADERSHIP IN SCIENTIFICALLY BASED READING INSTRUCTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Institute may award fellowships, with such stipends and allowances as necessary, to outstanding individuals who are pursuing careers in scientifically based research in reading instruction or pre-service or in-service training in reading instruction, including teaching children and adults to read.

(b) FELLOWSHIPS.—Fellowships awarded under this subsection shall be used, under the auspices of the Institute, to engage in research, education training, technical assistance, or other activities to advance the field of scientifically based reading instruction for children, youth, and adults, including the training of volunteers in such reading skills instruction.

(c) INTERNS AND VOLUNTEERS.—The Director of the Institute may award paid and unpaid internships to individuals seeking to assist the Institute in carrying out its mission. Notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31, United States Code, the Institute may accept and use voluntary and uncompensated services as the Institute deems necessary.

SEC. 216. NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR LITERACY ADVISORY BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a National Institute for Literacy Advisory Board, which shall consist of 10 individuals appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(2) COMPOSITION.—The Board shall be comprised of individuals who are not otherwise officers or employees of the Federal Government and who are knowledgeable about scientifically based reading instruction, and the findings of scientifically based reading research. The members of the Board may include—

(A) representatives from teacher training institutions where scientifically based reading instruction is a major component of preservice training;

(B) teachers who have been successful in teaching children to read proficiently;

(C) members of the business community who have developed successful employee reading instruction programs;

(D) volunteer tutors in reading who are using scientifically based reading instruction;

(E) reading researchers who have conducted scientifically based research; and

(F) other qualified individuals knowledgeable about scientifically based reading instruction, including adult education.

(b) DUTIES.—The Board shall—

(1) provide advice to the Director of the Institute to ensure that the purposes of the Institute under section 211 are carried out effectively; and

(2) approve the annual report to the Congress;

(c) FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT.—Except as otherwise provided in this part, the Board established by this section shall be subject to the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

(d) APPOINTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each member of the Board shall be appointed for a term of 3 years, except that the initial terms for members may be 1, 2, or 3 years in order to establish a rotation, in which ⅓ of the members are selected each year. Any such member may be appointed for not more than 2 consecutive terms.

(2) VACANCIES.—Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the member's predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term. A member may serve after the expiration of that member's term until a successor has taken office.

(e) QUORUM.—A majority of the members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may hold hearings. Any recommendation of the Board may be passed only by a majority of the Board members present.

(f) ELECTION OF OFFICERS.—The Chairperson and Vice Chairperson of the Board shall be elected by the members of the Board. The term of office of the Chairperson and Vice Chairperson shall be 2 years.

(g) MEETINGS.—The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairperson, or a majority of the members of the Board, but not less than quarterly.

SEC. 217. GIFTS, BEQUESTS, AND DEVISES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Institute may accept, administer, and use gifts or donations of services, money, or property, whether real or personal, tangible or intangible.

(b) RULES.—The Director of the Institute shall establish written rules setting forth the criteria to be used by the Institute in determining whether the acceptance of contributions of services, money, or property whether real or personal, tangible or intangible, would reflect unfavorably upon the ability of the Institute or any employee to carry out the responsibilities of the Institute or employee, or official duties, in a fair and objective manner, or would compromise the integrity or the appearance of the integrity of the Institute's programs or any official involved in those programs.

SEC. 218. MAILS.

The Board and the Institute may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

SEC. 219. APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN CIVIL SERVICE LAWS.

The Director of the Institute and the staff of the Institute may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of that title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that an individual so appointed may not receive pay in excess of the annual rate of basic pay payable for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

SEC. 220. EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.

The Institute may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 221. REPORT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Institute shall submit a biennial report to the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate. Each report submitted under this section shall include—

(1) a comprehensive and detailed description of the Institute's operations, activities, financial condition, and accomplishments in carrying out the purposes of the Institute as specified in section 211, for the period covered by the report; and

(2) a summary description of how the Institute will advance the purposes of the Institute for the next biennium.

(b) FIRST REPORT.—The Institute shall submit a report under this section not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this part.

SEC. 222. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this part—

(1) the term ''Board'' means the National Institute for Literacy Advisory Board;

(2) the term ''Institute'' means the National Institute for Literacy;

(3) the term ''Interagency Group'' means the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(4) the term ''literacy'' means the ability to read, write, and speak the English language with competence, knowledge, and comprehension; and

(5) the terms ''reading'', ''scientifically based reading research'', and ''essential components of reading instruction'' have the meanings given those terms in section 1208 of part B of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6368).

SEC. 223. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to administer and carry out this part $6,700,000 for fiscal year 2004 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 5 succeeding fiscal years.

SEC. 224. RESERVATION.

From amounts appropriated to the Institute, the Director of the Institute may use not more than 5 percent of such amounts for the administration of information dissemination under section 1207 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6367).

SEC. 225. AUTHORITY TO PUBLISH.

The Institute, including the Board, may prepare, publish, and present (including through oral presentations) such research-based information and research reports as needed to carry out the purposes and mission of the Institute.

PART C—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 241. TRANSITION.

The Secretary shall take such actions as the Secretary determines to be appropriate to provide for the orderly implementation of this title.

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO THE WAGNER-PEYSER ACT

SEC. 301. AMENDMENTS TO THE WAGNER-PEYSER ACT.

(1) by striking sections 1 through 13;

(2) in section 14 by inserting ''of Labor'' after ''Secretary''; and

(3) by amending section 15 to read as follows:

''SEC. 15. WORKFORCE AND LABOR MARKET INFORMATION SYSTEM.

''(a) SYSTEM CONTENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Labor, in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall oversee the development, maintenance, and continuous improvement of a nationwide workforce and labor market information system that includes—

''(A) statistical data from cooperative statistical survey and projection programs and data from administrative reporting systems that, taken together, enumerate, estimate, and project employment opportunities and conditions at national, State, and local levels in a timely manner, including statistics on—

''(i) employment and unemployment status of national, State, and local populations, including self-employed, part-time, and seasonal workers;

''(ii) industrial distribution of occupations, as well as current and projected employment opportunities, wages, benefits (where data is available), and skill trends by occupation and industry, with particular attention paid to State and local conditions;

''(iii) the incidence of, industrial and geographical location of, and number of workers displaced by, permanent layoffs and plant closings; and

''(iv) employment and earnings information maintained in a longitudinal manner to be used for research and program evaluation;

''(B) information on State and local employment opportunities, and other appropriate statistical data related to labor market dynamics, which—

''(i) shall be current and comprehensive;

''(ii) shall meet the needs identified through the consultations described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (e)(2); and

''(iii) shall meet the needs for the information identified in section 134(d);

''(C) technical standards (which the Secretary shall publish annually) for data and information described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) that, at a minimum, meet the criteria of chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code;

''(D) procedures to ensure compatibility and additivity of the data and information described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) from national, State, and local levels;

''(E) procedures to support standardization and aggregation of data from administrative reporting systems described in subparagraph (A) of employment-related programs;

''(F) analysis of data and information described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for uses such as—

''(i) national, State, and local policymaking;

''(ii) implementation of Federal policies (including allocation formulas);

''(iii) program planning and evaluation; and

''(iv) researching labor market dynamics;

''(G) wide dissemination of such data, information, and analysis in a user-friendly manner and voluntary technical standards for dissemination mechanisms; and

''(H) programs of—

''(i) training for effective data dissemination;

''(ii) research and demonstration; and

''(iii) programs and technical assistance.

''(2) INFORMATION TO BE CONFIDENTIAL.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—No officer or employee of the Federal Government or agent of the Federal Government may—

''(i) use any submission that is furnished for exclusively statistical purposes under the provisions of this section for any purpose other than the statistical purposes for which the submission is furnished;

''(ii) make any publication or media transmittal of the data contained in the submission described in clause (i) that permits information concerning individual subjects to be reasonably inferred by either direct or indirect means; or

''(iii) permit anyone other than a sworn officer, employee, or agent of any Federal department or agency, or a contractor (including an employee of a contractor) of such department or agency, to examine an individual submission described in clause (i);

without the consent of the individual, agency, or other person who is the subject of the submission or provides that submission.

''(B) IMMUNITY FROM LEGAL PROCESS.—Any submission (including any data derived from the submission) that is collected and retained by a Federal department or agency, or an officer, employee, agent, or contractor of such a department or agency, for exclusively statistical purposes under this section shall be immune from the legal process and shall not, without the consent of the individual, agency, or other person who is the subject of the submission or provides that submission, be admitted as evidence or used for any purpose in any action, suit, or other judicial or administrative proceeding.

''(C) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to provide immunity from the legal process for such submission (including any data derived from the submission) if the submission is in the possession of any person, agency, or entity other than the Federal Government or an officer, employee, agent, or contractor of the Federal Government, or if the submission is independently collected, retained, or produced for purposes other than the purposes of this Act.

''(b) SYSTEM RESPONSIBILITIES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The workforce and labor market information system described in subsection (a) shall be planned, administered, overseen, and evaluated through a cooperative governance structure involving the Federal Government and States.

''(2) DUTIES.—The Secretary, with respect to data collection, analysis, and dissemination of labor employment statistics for the system, shall carry out the following duties:

''(A) Assign responsibilities within the Department of Labor for elements of the workforce and labor market information system described in subsection (a) to ensure that all statistical and administrative data collected is consistent with appropriate Bureau of Labor Statistics standards and definitions.

''(B) Actively seek the cooperation of other Federal agencies to establish and maintain mechanisms for ensuring complementarity and nonduplication in the development and operation of statistical and administrative data collection activities.

''(C) Eliminate gaps and duplication in statistical undertakings, with the systemization of wage surveys as an early priority.

''(D) In collaboration with the Bureau of Labor Statistics and States, develop and maintain the elements of the workforce and labor market information system described in subsection (a), including the development of consistent procedures and definitions for use by the States in collecting the data and information described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (a)(1).

''(E) Establish procedures for the system to ensure that—

''(i) such data and information are timely;

''(ii) paperwork and reporting for the system are reduced to a minimum; and

''(iii) States and localities are fully involved in the development and continuous improvement of the system at all levels, including ensuring the provision, to such States and localities, of budget information necessary for carrying out their responsibilities under subsection (e).

''(c) NATIONAL ELECTRONIC TOOLS TO PROVIDE SERVICES.—The Secretary is authorized to assist in the development of national electronic tools that may be used to facilitate the delivery of core services described in section 134 and to provide workforce information to individuals through the one-stop delivery systems descried in section 121 and through other appropriate delivery systems.

''(d) COORDINATION WITH THE STATES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, working through the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Employment and Training Administration, shall regularly consult with representatives of State agencies carrying out workforce information activities regarding strategies for improving the workforce and labor market information system.

''(2) FORMAL CONSULTATIONS.—At least twice each year, the Secretary, working through the Bureau of Labor Statistics, shall conduct formal consultations regarding programs carried out by the Bureau of Labor Statistics with representatives of each of the 10 Federal regions of the Department of Labor, elected from the State directors affiliated with State agencies that perform the duties described in subsection (e)(2).

''(e) STATE RESPONSIBILITIES.—

''(1) DESIGNATION OF STATE AGENCY.—In order to receive Federal financial assistance under this section, the Governor of a State shall—

''(A) designate a single State agency to be responsible for the management of the portions of the workforce and labor market information system described in subsection (a) that comprise a statewide workforce and labor market information system and for the State's participation in the development of the annual plan; and

''(B) establish a process for the oversight of such system.

''(2) DUTIES.—In order to receive Federal financial assistance under this section, the State agency shall—

''(A) consult with State and local employers, participants, and local workforce investment boards about the labor market relevance of the data to be collected and disseminated through the statewide workforce and labor market information system;

''(B) consult with State educational agencies and local educational agencies concerning the provision of employment statistics in order to meet the needs of secondary school and postsecondary school students who seek such information;

''(C) collect and disseminate for the system, on behalf of the State and localities in the State, the information and data described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (a)(1);

''(D) maintain and continuously improve the statewide workforce and labor market information system in accordance with this section;

''(E) perform contract and grant responsibilities for data collection, analysis, and dissemination for such system;

''(F) conduct such other data collection, analysis, and dissemination activities as will ensure an effective statewide workforce and labor market information system;

''(G) actively seek the participation of other State and local agencies in data collection, analysis, and dissemination activities in order to ensure complementarity, compatibility, and usefulness of data;

''(H) participate in the development of the annual plan described in subsection (c); and

''(I) utilize the quarterly records described in section 136(f)(2) of the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 to assist the State and other States in measuring State progress on State performance measures.

''(3) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the ability of a State agency to conduct additional data collection, analysis, and dissemination activities with State funds or with Federal funds from sources other than this section.

''(f) NONDUPLICATION REQUIREMENT.—None of the functions and activities carried out pursuant to this section shall duplicate the functions and activities carried out under the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act (20 U.S.C. 2301 et seq.).

''(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2009.

''(h) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term 'local area' means the smallest geographical area for which data can be produced with statistical reliability.''.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

CLASS ACTION REFORM

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, we just concluded a vote and a very disappointing chapter in our effort to reform the way part of our legal system works in this country.

We have debated for the last several days how we might change the current system where people have been harmed by goods or services provided for their use by some company and did not get what they should have—they have been shortchanged or maybe even exposed to a dangerous product or harmed by it in some way—and how we might make sure they are made whole and that we have the opportunity to assemble that group of harmed people across States or across the country so they can have their day in court. We are looking for a way to make sure the companies that harmed those people are held accountable and know they are going to face a serious financial consequence if they do something untoward or just wrong with respect to their products or services which they provide.

Today we were not able to proceed to the bill and have the opportunity to offer amendments which are germane, pertinent to the bill, relevant to the bill, or those which maybe were not.

My colleague who is presiding has been here for a year and half or so. I know these are issues he has worked on a lot in those 18 months. This class action reform is probably an issue on which he has spent the most time.

As we leave here tonight with this business unfinished, I am deeply disappointed. We come to the end of a chapter, not the end of the book. We have to turn a page and figure out how to go forward.

Our system of justice is out of whack. It is out of balance. The tragedy of it all is we had a very good legislative product here to debate and fix. The system worked the way it was supposed to. We had hearings, I think as many as 10, on this issue and how to fix it. The committees of jurisdiction held hearings in the House and in the Senate. The committees of jurisdiction had a chance to actually debate and vote on the bills and to amend them. They had the opportunity to report those bills out. The House debated this on the floor. In the Senate, we had the opportunity. In the Senate, we fell one vote short of bringing the bill to the Senate floor last fall. We had the opportunity coming out of that disappointing vote to go back to make the bill even better and to bring a truly bipartisan bill to the floor of the Senate which would be supported by a Republican majority and with a good deal of Democratic support.

Given that 65 Members in the Senate were prepared to vote for it, to go home tonight not having had a chance to actually vote for amendments, relevant amendments and nonrelevant amendments, is very disappointing. I am not going to get into assigning blame. There is probably enough on both sides.

I said to the press in an earlier interview that this week in the Senate reminds me of maybe a new television reality show, a dysfunctional family. It is not pretty to watch or, frankly, to be a part of.

When I came here, I wanted to fix things and right wrongs. I know most of us came here with that in mind. This is a wrong that needs to be made right. We had a great opportunity in this bill to do that.

I leave here tonight bewildered, in a sense. One sure way to stymie a bill and stop progress on it this week was to bring the bill to the floor of the Senate in a way that closed off the opportunity for the minority to offer some reasonable number of nongermane amendments.

I have said so many times to our friends on the other side of the aisle, when you bring the bill to the Senate floor, think of it as a bottle of wine we are opening. We are popping the cork and letting it breathe for a while. Maybe set aside a week and give us a week to debate the bill itself, relevant amendments and a reasonable number of nongermane amendments.

If it becomes clear after several days or a week that our side is being dilatory, if it becomes clear our side is simply not interested in passing the bill, they are just playing games, those Democrats who support a bill will support an effort to close off debate and to force a final vote on the bill.

For the life of me, after saying repeatedly since January that the one way to kill the bill is to bring it to the Senate in a way that stymies debate and closes off amendments that might be nongermane, the very first thing out of the box presented was a cloture motion and a move to fill the amendment tree so our side is precluded from offering amendments, except for those that are germane, I don't understand it.

In the words of a colleague on our side who is opposed to the bill, the only way those who are opposed to the bill could have won was by bringing the bill to the Senate today, invoking cloture, and inflaming Democratic opposition to the bill, united Democratic opposition to the bill.

There are at least a dozen or more on this side who very much want to pass class action legislation this year. God knows I do, and I know people on both sides have worked to get us to this point. For the life of me, I do not understand why we could not open that bottle of wine, let it breathe for a while, debate the amendments, germane and nongermane. If it became clear we were wasting our time and people were playing games, we could have cut it off, but do not do it right out of the box.

I leave here bewildered and, frankly, more than a little bit disappointed. I say to those folks around the country who are as disappointed as I am, and others who support the bill, I am not one who gives up easily.

Some of my colleagues hear me talk about my four core values that we built an administration on when I was Governor of Delaware and which I brought with me and I try to use them here with my legislative initiatives.

One, figure out the right thing to do and do it. I am convinced changing this part of our legal system is the right thing to do.

The second core value is to commit to excellence in everything we do. By golly, I know we can do better than the status quo with respect to this aspect of our legal system.

My third core value is the Golden Rule: treat other people the way I want to be treated. When consumers are harmed, they ought to be compensated. When companies misbehave, they ought to have to pay damages. It is that simple. The way our system runs today is wrong. It is wrong for consumers and, frankly, it is wrong for companies, in many cases. It is a wrong that needs to be righted.

My fourth core value is don't give up. I am not one who ever gives up. I, for sure, am not going to give up.

While I go home disappointed, I will come back next week committed to do whatever we can this year to pass this bill and get it signed into law.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REFERRAL OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that Executive Calendar Nos. 697 and 698 be rereferred to the Finance Committee and referred to the Banking Committee. I further ask unanimous consent that when the nominations are reported by the Banking Committee, they be automatically discharged from the Finance Committee and placed on the Executive Calendar. Finally, I ask unanimous consent that this agreement be specific to these nominations only.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session for consideration of the following nominations on the Executive Calendar: Military nominations reported by the Armed Services Committee during today's session. I further ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and the Senate then resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed are as follows:

IN THE NAVY

The following named officer for reappointment as Chief of Naval Operations, United States Navy, for an additional term of two years, and appointment to the grade indicated while assigned to a position of importance and responsibility under title 10, U.S.C., sections 601 and 5033:

To be admiral

Adm. Vernon E. Clark

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The following named officer for appointment in the United States Marine Corps to the grade indicated while assigned to a position of importance and responsibility under title 10, U.S.C., section 601:

To be general

Lt. Gen. James E. Cartwright

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to legislative session.

GARRETT LEE SMITH MEMORIAL ACT

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 2634, introduced earlier today by Senators DODD, DEWINE, REED, SMITH, REID, DASCHLE, and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2634) to amend the Public Health Service Act to support planning, implementation, and evaluation of organized activities involving statewide youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies, to provide funds for campus mental and behavioral health service centers.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read the third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2634) was read the third time and passed, as follows:

S. 2634

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) More children and young adults die from suicide each year than from cancer, heart disease, AIDS, birth defects, stroke, and chronic lung disease combined.

(2) Over 4,000 children and young adults tragically take their lives every year, making suicide the third overall cause of death between the ages of 10 and 24. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention suicide is the third overall cause of death among college-age students.

(3) According to the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, children and young adults accounted for 15 percent of all suicides completed in 2000.

(4) From 1952 to 1995, the rate of suicide in children and young adults has tripled.

(5) From 1980 to 1997, the rate of suicide among young adults ages 15 to 19 increased 11 percent.

(6) From 1980 to 1997, the rate of suicide among children ages 10 to 14 increased 109 percent.

(7) According to the National Center of Health Statistics, suicide rates among Native Americans range from 1.5 to 3 times the national average for other groups, with young people ages 15 to 34 making up 64 percent of all suicides.

(8) Congress has recognized that youth suicide is a public health tragedy linked to underlying mental health problems and that youth suicide early intervention and prevention activities are national priorities.

(9) Youth suicide early intervention and prevention have been listed as urgent public health priorities by the President's New Freedom Commission in Mental Health (2002), the Institute of Medicine's Reducing Suicide: A National Imperative (2002), the National Strategy for Suicide Prevention: Goals and Objectives for Action (2001), and the Surgeon General's Call to Action To Prevent Suicide (1999).

(10) Many States have already developed comprehensive Statewide youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies that seek to provide effective early intervention and prevention services.

(11) In a recent report, a startling 85 percent of college counseling centers revealed an increase in the number of students they see with psychological problems. Furthermore, the American College Health Association found that 61 percent of college students reported feeling hopeless, 45 percent said they felt so depressed they could barely function, and 9 percent felt suicidal.

(12) There is clear evidence of an increased incidence of depression among college students. According to a survey described in the Chronicle of Higher Education (February 1, 2002), depression among freshmen has nearly doubled (from 8.2 percent to 16.3 percent). Without treatment, researchers recently noted that ''depressed adolescents are at risk for school failure, social isolation, promiscuity, self medication with drugs and alcohol, and suicide—now the third leading cause of death among 10–24 year olds.''.

(13) Researchers who conducted the study ''Changes in Counseling Center Client Problems Across 13 Years'' (1989–2001) at Kansas State University stated that ''students are experiencing more stress, more anxiety, more depression than they were a decade ago.'' (The Chronicle of Higher Education, February 14, 2003).

(14) According to the 2001 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, 20 percent of full-time undergraduate college students use illicit drugs.

(15) The 2001 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse also reported that 18.4 percent of adults aged 18 to 24 are dependent on or abusing illicit drugs or alcohol. In addition, the study found that ''serious mental illness is highly correlated with substance dependence or abuse. Among adults with serious mental illness in 2001, 20.3 percent were dependent on or abused alcohol or illicit drugs, while the rate among adults without serious mental illness was only 6.3 percent.''.

(16) A 2003 Gallagher's Survey of Counseling Center Directors found that 81 percent were concerned about the increasing number of students with more serious psychological problems, 67 percent reported a need for more psychiatric services, and 63 percent reported problems with growing demand for services without an appropriate increase in resources.

(17) The International Association of Counseling Services accreditation standards recommend 1 counselor per 1,000 to 1,500 students. According to the 2003 Gallagher's Survey of Counseling Center Directors, the ratio of counselors to students is as high as 1 counselor per 2,400 students at institutions of higher education with more than 15,000 students.

SEC. 3. AMENDMENT TO THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICES ACT.

(4) by adding at the end of part J (as added by paragraph (2) and amended by paragraph (3)), the following:

''SEC. 596A. YOUTH SUICIDE EARLY INTERVENTION AND PREVENTION STRATEGIES, TRAINING, AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

''(a) YOUTH SUICIDE EARLY INTERVENTION AND PREVENTION STRATEGIES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary acting through the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, shall award grants or cooperative agreements to eligible entities to—

''(A) develop and implement State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies in schools, educational institutions, juvenile justice systems, substance abuse programs, mental health programs, foster care systems, and other child and youth support organizations;

''(B) support public organizations and private nonprofit organizations actively involved in State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies and in the development and continuation of State-sponsored statewide youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies;

''(C) collect and analyze data on State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention services that can be used to monitor the effectiveness of such services and for research, technical assistance, and policy development; and

''(D) assist eligible entities, through State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies, in achieving targets for youth suicide reductions under title V of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 701 et seq.).

''(2) ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—

''(A) DEFINITION.—In this subsection, the term 'eligible entity' means—

''(i) a State;

''(ii) a public organization or private nonprofit organization designated by a State to develop or direct the State-sponsored statewide youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategy; and

''(iii) a Federally-recognized Indian tribe or tribal organization (as defined in the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act) or an urban Indian organization (as defined in the Indian Health Care Improvement Act) that is actively involved in the development and continuation of a tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategy.

''(B) PREFERENCE.—In awarding grants and cooperative agreements under this section, the Secretary shall give preference to States that have rates of youth suicide that significantly exceed the national average as determined by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

''(C) LIMITATION.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall ensure that each State is awarded only one grant or cooperative agreement under this section. For purposes of the preceding sentence, a State shall be considered to have been awarded a grant or cooperative agreement if the eligible entity involved is the State or an entity designated by the State under subparagraph (A)(ii). Nothing in this subparagraph shall be construed to apply to entities described in subparagraph (A)(iii).

''(3) PREFERENCE.—In providing assistance under a grant or cooperative agreement under this subsection, an eligible entity shall give preference to public organizations, private nonprofit organizations, political subdivisions, and tribal organizations actively involved with the State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategy that—

''(A) provide early intervention and assessment services, including screening programs, to youth who are at risk for mental or emotional disorders that may lead to a suicide attempt, and that are integrated with, school systems, educational institutions, juvenile justice systems, substance abuse programs, mental health programs, foster care systems, and other child and youth support organizations;

''(B) demonstrate collaboration among early intervention and prevention services or certify that entities will engage in future collaboration;

''(C) employ or include in their applications a commitment to evaluate youth suicide early intervention and prevention practices and strategies adapted to the local community;

''(D) provide timely referrals for appropriate community-based mental health care and treatment of youth who are at risk for suicide in child-serving settings and agencies;

''(E) provide immediate support and information resources to families of youth who are at risk for suicide;

''(F) offer access to services and care to youth with diverse linguistic and cultural backgrounds;

''(G) offer appropriate post-suicide intervention services, care, and information to families, friends, schools, educational institutions, juvenile justice systems, substance abuse programs, mental health programs, foster care systems, and other child and youth support organizations of youth who recently completed suicide;

''(H) offer continuous and up-to-date information and awareness campaigns that target parents, family members, child care professionals, community care providers, and the general public and highlight the risk factors associated with youth suicide and the lifesaving help and care available from early intervention and prevention services;

''(I) ensure that information and awareness campaigns on youth suicide risk factors, and early intervention and prevention services, use effective communication mechanisms that are targeted to and reach youth, families, schools, educational institutions, and youth organizations;

''(J) provide a timely response system to ensure that child-serving professionals and providers are properly trained in youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies and that child-serving professionals and providers involved in early intervention and prevention services are properly trained in effectively identifying youth who are at risk for suicide;

''(K) provide continuous training activities for child care professionals and community care providers on the latest youth suicide early intervention and prevention services practices and strategies;

''(L) conduct annual self-evaluations of outcomes and activities, including consulting with interested families and advocacy organizations; and

''(M) provide services in areas or regions with rates of youth suicide that exceed the national average as determined by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

''(4) REQUIREMENT FOR DIRECT SERVICES.—Not less than 85 percent of grant funds received under this subsection shall be used to provide direct services.

''(b) SUICIDE PREVENTION RESOURCE CENTER; TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

''(1) OPERATION OF CENTER.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration and in consultation with the National Strategy for Suicide Prevention Federal Steering Group, shall award a competitive grant or contract to a public or private nonprofit entity for the establishment of a Suicide Prevention Resource Center to carry out the activities described in paragraph (3).

''(2) APPLICATION.—To be eligible for a grant or contract under paragraph (1), an entity shall prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

''(3) AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—The Suicide Prevention Resource Center shall provide appropriate information, training, and technical assistance to States, political subdivisions of a State, Federally recognized Indian tribes, tribal organizations, public organizations, or private nonprofit organizations for—

''(A) the development or continuation of statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies;

''(B) ensuring the surveillance of youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies;

''(C) studying the costs and effectiveness of statewide youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies in order to provide information concerning relevant issues of importance to State, tribal, and national policymakers;

''(D) further identifying and understanding causes and associated risk factors for youth suicide;

''(E) analyzing the efficacy of new and existing youth suicide early intervention techniques and technology;

''(F) ensuring the surveillance of suicidal behaviors and nonfatal suicidal attempts;

''(G) studying the effectiveness of State-sponsored statewide and tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies on the overall wellness and health promotion strategies related to suicide attempts;

''(H) promoting the sharing of data regarding youth suicide with Federal agencies involved with youth suicide early intervention and prevention, and State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies for the purpose of identifying previously unknown mental health causes and associated risk-factors for suicide in youth; and

''(I) other activities determined appropriate by the Secretary.

''(5) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection, $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2005, $4,000,000 for fiscal year 2006, and $5,000,000 for fiscal year 2007.

''(c) COORDINATION AND COLLABORATION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall collaborate with the National Strategy for Suicide Prevention Federal Steering Group and other Federal agencies responsible for early intervention and prevention services relating to youth suicide.

''(2) CONSULTATION.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall consult with—

''(A) State and local agencies, including agencies responsible for early intervention and prevention services under title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), the State Children's Health Insurance Program under title XXI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397aa et seq.), programs funded by grants under title V of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 701 et seq.), and programs under part C of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1431 et seq.);

''(B) local and national organizations that serve youth at risk for suicide and their families;

''(C) relevant national medical and other health and education specialty organizations;

''(D) youth who are at risk for suicide, who have survived suicide attempts, or who are currently receiving care from early intervention services;

''(E) families and friends of youth who are at risk for suicide, who have survived suicide attempts, who are currently receiving care from early intervention and prevention services, or who have completed suicide;

''(F) qualified professionals who possess the specialized knowledge, skills, experience, and relevant attributes needed to serve youth at risk for suicide and their families; and

''(G) third-party payers, managed care organizations, and related commercial industries.

''(3) POLICY DEVELOPMENT.—The Secretary shall—

''(A) coordinate and collaborate on policy development at the Federal level with the National Strategy for Suicide Prevention Federal Steering Group; and

''(B) consult on policy development at the Federal level with the private sector, including consumer, medical, suicide prevention advocacy groups, and other health and education professional-based organizations, with respect to State-sponsored statewide or tribal youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies.

''(d) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION; RELIGIOUS ACCOMMODATION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to preempt any State law, including any State law that does not require the suicide early intervention for youth whose parents or legal guardians object to such early intervention based on the parents' or legal guardians' religious beliefs.

''(e) EVALUATIONS AND REPORT.—

''(1) EVALUATIONS BY ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Not later than 18 months after receiving a grant or cooperative agreement under subsection (a), an eligible entity shall submit to the Secretary the results of an evaluation to be conducted by the entity concerning the effectiveness of the activities carried out under the grant or agreement.

''(2) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report concerning the results of—

''(A) the evaluations conducted under paragraph (1); and

''(B) an evaluation conducted by the Secretary to analyze the effectiveness and efficacy of the activities conducted with grants, collaborations, and consultations under this section.

''(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $7,000,000 for fiscal year 2005, $16,000,000 for fiscal year 2006, $25,000,000 for fiscal year 2007, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2008 and 2009.

''SEC. 596B. MENTAL AND BEHAVIORAL HEALTH SERVICES ON CAMPUS.

''(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to increase access to, and enhance the range of, services for students with mental and behavioral health problems that can lead to school failure, such as depression, substance abuse, and suicide attempts, so as to ensure that college students have the support necessary to successfully complete their studies.

''(b) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—From funds appropriated under subsection (j), the Secretary shall award competitive grants to institutions of higher education to create or expand mental and behavioral health services to students at such institutions, to provide such services, and to develop best practices for the delivery of such services. Such grants shall, subject to the availability of such appropriations, be for a period of 3 years.

''(c) ELIGIBLE GRANT RECIPIENTS.—Any institution of higher education that seeks to provide, or provides, mental and behavioral health services to students is eligible to apply for a grant under this section. Services may be provided at—

''(1) college counseling centers;

''(2) college and university psychological service centers;

''(3) mental health centers;

''(4) psychology training clinics; and

''(5) institution of higher education supported, evidence-based, mental health and substance abuse screening programs.

''(d) APPLICATIONS.—Each institution of higher education seeking to obtain a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary. Each such application shall include—

''(1) a description of identified mental and behavioral health needs of students at the institution of higher education;

''(2) a description of currently available Federal, State, local, private, and institutional resources to address the needs described in paragraph (1) at the institution of higher education;

''(3) an outline of program objectives and anticipated program outcomes, including an explanation of how the treatment provider at the institution of higher education will coordinate activities under this section with existing programs and services;

''(4) the anticipated impact of funds provided under this section in improving the mental and behavioral health of students attending the institution of higher education;

''(5) outreach strategies, including ways in which the treatment provider at the institution of higher education proposes to reach students, promote access to services, and address the range of needs of students;

''(6) a proposed plan for reaching those students most in need of services;

''(7) a plan to evaluate program outcomes and assess the services provided with funds under this section;

''(8) financial information concerning the applicant to demonstrate compliance with subsection (h); and

''(9) such additional information as is required by the Secretary.

''(e) PEER REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, shall provide the applications submitted under this section to a peer review panel for evaluation. With respect to each application, the peer review panel shall recommend the application for funding or for disapproval.

''(f) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds provided by a grant under this section may be used for 1 or more of the following activities:

''(1) Prevention, screening, early intervention, assessment, treatment, management, and education of mental and behavioral health problems that can lead to school failure, such as depression, substance abuse, and suicide attempts by students enrolled at the institution of higher education.

''(2) Education of families to increase awareness of potential mental and behavioral health issues of students enrolled at the institution of higher education.

''(3) Hiring staff trained to identify and treat mental and behavioral health problems, including residents and interns such as those in psychological doctoral and post doctoral programs.

''(4) Evaluating and disseminating outcomes and best practices of mental and behavioral health services.

''(g) ADDITIONAL REQUIRED ELEMENTS.—Each institution of higher education that receives a grant under this section shall—

''(1) provide annual reports to the Secretary describing the use of funds, the program's objectives, and how the objectives were met, including a description of program outcomes;

''(2) perform such additional evaluations as the Secretary may require, which may include—

''(A) increases in range of services provided;

''(B) increases in the quality of services provided;

''(C) increases in access to services;

''(D) college continuation rates;

''(E) decreases in college dropout rates;

''(F) increases in college graduation rates; and

''(G) accepted and valid measurements and assessments of improved mental health functionality; and

''(3) coordinate such institution's program under this section with other related efforts on campus by entities concerned with the general mental and behavioral health needs of students.

''(B) 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given such term in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965; and

''(C) 'school' means an elementary or secondary school (as such terms are defined in section 901 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965).

''(3) PREVENTION.—The term 'prevention' means a strategy or approach that reduces the likelihood or risk of onset, or delays the onset, of adverse health problems.

''(4) YOUTH.—The term 'youth' means individuals who are between 6 and 24 years of age.''.

MEASURES READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 2629, S. 2630, S. 2631, S. 2632, and S. 2633

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I understand that five bills are at the desk. I ask unanimous consent that they be read for the first time en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will read the bills for the first time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2629) to amend the Medicare Prescription Drug, Improvement, and Modernization Act of 2003 to eliminate the coverage gap, to eliminate HMO subsidies, to repeal health savings accounts, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 2630) to amend title V, United States Code, to establish a national health program administered by the Office of Personnel Management to offer Federal employee health benefits plans to individuals who are not Federal employees, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 2631) to require the Federal Trade Commission to monitor and investigate gasoline prices under certain circumstances.

A bill (S. 2632) to establish a first responder and terrorism preparedness grant information hotline, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 2633) to amend the Federal Power Act to provide refunds for unjust and unreasonable charges on electric energy in the State of California.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now ask for their second reading and, in order to place the bills on the calendar under the provisions of rule XIV, I object to further proceeding on these matters en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be read the second time on the next legislative day.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S.J. RES. 40

Mr. FRIST. I understand there is a joint resolution at the desk that is due for a second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the joint resolution by title for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 40) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to marriage.

Mr. FRIST. I object to further proceedings on the measure at this time in order to place the joint resolution on the calendar under the provisions of rule XIV.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY, JULY 9, 2004

Mr. FRIST. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until 9:30 a.m., on Friday, July 9. I further ask that following the prayer and pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then begin a period for morning business with the first 4 hours equally divided between the two leaders or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, tomorrow the Senate will be in a period for morning business throughout the day. There will be no rollcall votes during tomorrow's session, but Senators are encouraged to come to the floor to speak on the constitutional amendment regarding marriage, which we hope to consider next week.

A few moments ago we failed to invoke cloture on a very important bill, the class action bill, that we have spent the majority of this week debating. As I said at the outset, I had hoped we would be able to address this important bill, consider all relevant amendments, with no time limit on those relevant amendments, so we could pass a bill that is very important to the American people, to the economy, and to the concepts of equity and fairness. We were unsuccessful, in spite of our very best attempt to consider all relevant amendments and take up a bill that 62 people in this body support.

The problem was that Members from both sides of the aisle insisted on offering or wanting to offer and debate very complicated but, most importantly, unrelated amendments at this time. We set up a procedural process by which we could consider individual relevant amendments, but a decision was made, and it played out in the cloture vote today, that we would not proceed on this important bill at this juncture because some people thought we would need to include a lot of nongermane amendments. There were a lot of nonrelevant amendments that appeared.

I am very hopeful, because I am a strong supporter of this bill as written, that we can come to some agreement given the fact there are a majority of people in this Senate who believe in this bill strongly, that we can come to some agreement in terms of time to consider this bill with relevant amendments debated so that we can serve the American people. That seems not to be now. Discussions hopefully will continue.

If we cannot do it in a reasonably short period of time and stay on relevant amendments, we just simply are not going to be able to do it in this session. We have somewhere around 30 legislative days remaining and we have a range of issues, some that were brought up on the floor today, issues such as homeland security and issues concerning the institution of marriage.

We have the Australia trade bill that hopefully we can consider very quickly in the near future. We have 13 appropriations bills, spending bills, that we must consider. There are 12 we need to consider in some way in the next several weeks. Then there are a number of judges who we must continue to move on. We have all of that in a period of about 30 days.

It means that as majority leader I need to insist on reasonable, disciplined, and regular order in the sense that when we go to a bill, we debate that bill, those issues, consider amendments that are relevant to that bill and not consider the broad range of issues that we naturally have as Senators. We have to have an orderly process. The orderly process led today, because of the insistence on these nongermane, nonrelevant amendments, to a point that we are not going to be able to consider class action reform now.

So I think what we will see predominately tomorrow is debate on a very important issue to the American people and to the values of the United States of America, and that is the issue of marriage. We will likely see debate on that tomorrow, and that debate will continue on the constitutional amendment Monday and Tuesday. I would think somewhere during the middle of next week, probably Wednesday, we will have a vote, the nature of which I will be talking to the Democratic leader over the course of tomorrow morning.

So we had a good debate this week. I am very disappointed in the fact that the other side of the aisle—for the most part it was the other side of the aisle—insisted on having other amendments. I am disappointed we were unable to fully address class action reform. Hopefully, we can come back to it at some point in the future.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 TOMORROW

Mr. FRIST. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 8:18 p.m., adjourned until Friday, July 9, 2004, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO RUTH LARABEE ON THE OCCASION OF HER RETIREMENT

HON. PAUL E. GILLMOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to pay special tribute to Mrs. Ruth Larabee, upon her retirement from her position as the Director of the Wood County Department of Job and Family Services in Bowling Green, Ohio.

Ruth Larabee grew up in the small community of Landeck, Ohio, in Allen County where the leadership skills which have served her well over the years were instilled at an early age. Ruth graduated from Notre Dame College in South Euclid, Ohio with majors in biology and physical science. Upon graduation, Ruth began her career of serving others by teaching Junior High School. When Ruth became a mother of six, she stopped teaching so that she could dedicate all her time and resources to raising her children.

Mr. Speaker, as Ruth's children grew; she accepted a position with the WSOS Head Start Administration. It was in this capacity that she embarked on a career of compassion, always wanting to assist those less fortunate.

Ruth accepted her current position as Director of the Wood County Department of Job and Family Services in 1987, where she has provided constant leadership. Drawing upon her past experiences, she has brought stability and calm to an agency which has seen tremendous change. Despite shifts in public policy brought on by welfare reform, demands for increased services for children and the growing needs of the unemployed, Ruth has continued to be a steadfast leader.

As Director of the Wood County Job and Family Services, Ruth has displayed great leadership by effectively communicating the mission at hand and adapting to the ever changing world around her. Through her drive and leadership, Ruth has worked tirelessly to better the life of abused children, people in need of public housing, the elderly, and those desperately seeking employment. Through her 17 years of distinguished service to the residents of Wood County, Ruth leaves behind the legacy of an Agency inspired by dedication and compassion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute to Mrs. Ruth Larabee. Our communities are served well by having such honorable and giving citizens, like Ruth, who care about their well being and stability. We wish Ruth and her family all the best as we pay tribute to one of Ohio's finest citizens.

HONORING THE BAY SPECIAL CARE HOSPITAL

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to honor the faculty and staff of Bay Special Care Hospital of Bay City, Michigan, for providing 10 years of superior medical care to patients requiring extended care management. On July 15, 2004, the hospital, along with the community, will commemorate this special occasion.

Bay Special Care Hospital, a McLaren health service, opened in 1994, and is the first of its kind in Northeastern Michigan. The mission of Bay Special Care is to provide extended care to patients with complex medical needs and require a 25-day or longer stay. The hospital is staffed with a team of highly skilled healthcare professionals, who have committed themselves to providing each patient with intensive personalized care.

Bay Special Care has consistently received high marks for its service from the Michigan Department of Consumer and Industry Services and most importantly from the patients they serve. I commend these men and women for their dedication to detail and commitment to sustaining life.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honor and a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to recognize this outstanding group of medical professionals. Many families have benefited from their care and services. The staff considers it their duty and privilege to protect and defend human dignity and the quality of life for their patients. I am grateful for Bay Special Care's commitment to go beyond the ordinary when providing healthcare services. I ask my colleagues in the 108th Congress to please join me in paying tribute to the Bay Special Care Hospital for 10 years of outstanding service to the community.

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT FOR H.R. 4768, VETERANS MEDICAL FACILITIES MANAGEMENT ACT OF 2004

HON. ROB SIMMONS

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing H.R. 4768, the Veterans Medical Facilities Management Act of 2004. This legislation will help address needs in the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to modernize health care facilities, make better use of VA's existing portfolio of properties and dispose of unneeded properties over the next several years.

In legislation I introduced last year that was included in Public Law (P.L.) 108–170, the Veterans Health Care, Capital Asset, and Business Improvement Act of 2003, a three-year program of delegated authorizations was established to allow the Secretary to update, improve, establish, restore or replace major VA health care facilities. Congress delegated authority to the Secretary to approve individual facility projects based on recommendations of an independent capital investments board and on criteria that places a premium on projects to protect patient safety and privacy; improve seismic protection; provide barrier-free accommodations; and improve VA patient care facilities in specialized areas of concern.

Many VA community based clinics operate in leased facilities. P.L. 108–170 did not provide the Secretary any new authority concerning execution of major medical facility leases. The Department has identified the need for authorization or renewal of major medical facility leases under title 38, United States Code, section 8104(a)(2) at a cost of approximately $24 million in fiscal year 2005. This legislation would authorize leases in the Department's recommended locations as follows:

Wilmington, North Carolina Outpatient Clinic	$1,320,000
Greenville, North Carolina Outpatient Clinic	1,220,000
Norfolk, Virginia Outpatient Clinic	1,250,000
Summerfield, Florida Marion County Outpatient Clinic	1,230,000
Knoxville, Tennessee Outpatient Clinic	850,000
Toledo, Ohio Outpatient Clinic	1,200,000
Crown Point, Indiana Outpatient Clinic	850,000
Fort Worth, Texas Tarrant County Outpatient Clinic	3,900,000
Plano, Texas Collin County Outpatient Clinic	3,300,000
San Antonio, Texas Northeast Central Bexar County Outpatient Clinic	1,400,000
Corpus Christi, Texas Outpatient Clinic	1,200,000
Harlington, Texas Outpatient Clinic	650,000
Denver, Colorado Health Administration Center ...	1,950,000
Oakland, California Outpatient Clinic	1,700,000
San Diego, California North County Outpatient Clinic	1,300,000
San Diego, California South County Outpatient Clinic	1,100,000

This bill would also provide that the Department may enter into a long-term lease of up to 75 years for land to construct a new medical facility on the Fitzsimons Campus of the University of Colorado, in Aurora, Colorado. It is anticipated that this new VA facility will be a significant shared facility with the University. The extended lease authority will enable all parties to the relationship to obtain a higher level of confidence in planning and constructing an important health care facility for veterans throughout the intermountain west.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation would facilitate the Secretary's authority to transfer unneeded real property currently in VA's portfolio and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary. The bill would require fair market value for any such transfers, except when transferred to a provider of homeless veterans services receiving a grant under section 2011 of title 38, United States Code.

This bill would also repeal the defunct Nursing Home Revolving Fund, in section 8116 of title 38, United States Code. It would establish a new fund to be known as the Capital Asset Fund, to help defray VA's cost of transferring real property, including demolition, environmental restoration, maintenance, repair, historic preservation and administrative expenses.

VA controls the fourth-largest inventory of owned, leased, and operated federal real property. It is estimated that more than half of VA's facilities are over 50 years old. Many date from the 19th century and many more were constructed in the late 1940s and early 1950s. A large number of properties are listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Given this rich array of heritage assets, H.R. 4768 would also allow the Secretary to enter into partnerships or agreements with public or private entities dedicated to historic preservation and to use resources from the Capital Asset Fund to facilitate the transfer, leasing or adaptive use of these properties. The bill requires a series of reports, beginning with a complete inventory of historic properties, followed up with an annual update of the status of each property for two subsequent reporting cycles.

The bill would require in the Department's annual budget submission inclusion of information on each proposed and completed transfer. The Department also would report to Congress the annual deposits and expenditures from the Fund.

This bill includes a provision to permit the construction of surface parking when incidental to an authorized major medical facility construction project. Also, the bill would provide the Secretary additional flexibility in using funds to develop advanced planning for major construction projects previously authorized by law.

VA major medical facility projects are already exempt under section 8166(a) of title 38, United States Code, from State and local laws relating to building codes, permits, and inspections unless the Secretary consents to participate in such state and local regulation. The bill would exempt VA from State and local land use (zoning) laws.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that my colleagues will agree with me that this is a bill worthy of their support. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this bill and help enact it as a high priority to assist the Department of Veterans Affairs with its capital asset needs.

RECOGNIZING THE LIFE AND LEGACY OF GLORIA ANZALDÚA

HON. HILDA L. SOLIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the life and legacy of Gloria Anzaldúa, an internationally renowned scholar and activist who recently passed away.

A highly talented and versatile writer, Gloria Anzaldúa is recognized for representing the finest in the Chicano/Latino literature. She skillfully expressed her thoughts and feelings in a variety of genres including poetry, essays, children's books, and narratives. She is best known for her 1987 hybrid collection of poetry and prose titled Borderlands/La Frontera: The New Mestiza. This volume was a best seller and was listed among the 100 Best Books of the Century by the Hungry Mind Review and Utne Reader. Her other published works include This Bridge Called My Back (1981), Making Face, Making Soul (1990), Prietita and the Ghost Woman (1995), and This Bridge We Call Home (2002).

Gloria Anzaldúa was celebrated by some of the most well respected publishing and educational institutions. Her awards include the Before Columbus Foundation American Book Award, Lambda Lesbian Small Book Press Award, National Endowment for the Arts Fiction Award, and the American Studies Association Achievement Award.

As one of the first openly lesbian Chicana authors, Anzaldúa played a major role in redefining contemporary Chicano/a and gay/lesbian identities through her written work. A pioneer in developing an inclusive feminist movement, she won the hearts of countless readers from all walks of life and inspired many to become activists in their communities.

Gloria Anzaldúa passed away on May 15, 2004, at the age of 61. Her mother, Amalia, her sister, Hilda, and two brothers, Urbano and Oscar, survive her. Although she will be greatly missed, our nation will always remember her illustrious professional career. Her powerful vision will be embraced and cherished by future generations of activists, readers, and leaders from all walks of life.

HONORING THE CHICAGO HISTORICAL SOCIETY ON THE FOURTH OF JULY

HON. RAHM EMANUEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, today it is my privilege to recognize the contributions of the Chicago Historical Society toward preserving our glorious heritage and the legacy of great Chicagoans, on the occasion of its 45th Annual 4th of July Celebration. America has come a long way since the Founding Fathers signed the Declaration of Independence, and I applaud the CHS for capturing the pivotal moments of this journey in its ''Documents of Freedom'' and ''Free to Vote'' exhibitions.

By consistently demonstrating its commitment to historical accuracy and preservation, the Chicago Historical Society has earned its place atop the pillar of Chicago's treasures. Its commitment to this cause makes it the perfect backdrop for a celebration of our nation's history on Independence Day.

We make the Fourth of July as the beginning of a revolution to secure those unalienable rights from tyranny, but the struggle began long before that date and would continue to be defended by Americans long afterward. Guided by courage, faith, respect for human dignity, and love of freedom, our forefathers fought valiantly to protect our ideals and liberties. In the two and a quarter centuries that have since passed, America has seen the highest peaks and preserved through some difficult times while the values that gave birth to our country have endured.

These values that we hold so dear are preserved for eternity here at the Chicago Historical Society. And as the Historical Society has earned its place as an integral element of Chicago's museum community, the 4th of July celebration has become ingrained in Lincoln Park's culture, and holds a permanent place on the community calendar. Men and women who grew up with their parents here on the 4th of July, now bring their children along with them. And so, these values and traditions will continue to be passed on to future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the leadership of Lonnie Bunch, Hill Hammock, and the other leaders of the Chicago Historical Society on another fantastic 4th of July celebration. I hope that the Historical Society will continue to enrich our lives and educate Chicagoans for many, many more years.

A TRIBUTE TO THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY ON ITS SESQUICENTENNIAL

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in support of H. Res. 703, a resolution offered by my colleague Representative JOHN PETERSON, congratulating my alma mater, The Pennsylvania State University, on 150 years of service and commending Pennsylvania's designation of the university as Pennsylvania's sole land-grant institution.

As a native Pennsylvanian, I was proud to attend Penn State and earn my undergraduate there in 1961. I also met someone there who would become the most important person in my life—a fellow Penn State student named Carolyn Stover who accepted my proposal to be my wife.

We have many fond memories of our time together at Penn State, strolling together past Old Main, and our dates to the Creamery, enjoying the best ice cream in the world—bar none.

Mr. Speaker, you may not know the tradition of the Creamery. It all started in 1892, when Penn State became the first American institution of higher education to establish collegiate-level instruction in ice cream manufacture, a program that has helped make the university an internationally recognized center for research in frozen confections.

Penn State without question has had an outstanding 150 years as one of the finest land grant institutions in the Nation. Its list of achievements is long and impressive. It was the first institution of higher education in the country to offer undergraduate degrees in industrial engineering, fuel science, and turf grass science. Its strong and varied undergraduate program draws students from across the country and the world.

Penn State's graduate programs also are impressive. It's supply chain/logistics, industrial/manufacturing engineering, materials engineering, nuclear engineering, agricultural engineering, higher education administration, administration/supervision, vocational/technical education, counseling services, ceramics, and rehabilitation counseling graduate programs rank among the Nation's top ten, according to U.S. News and World Report. Penn State's medical, law, and business graduate programs are also stellar.

It is important to note that one in every eight Pennsylvanians with a college degree, one in every 720 Americans, one in every 50 engineers, and one in very four meteorologists are alumni of Penn State.

Penn State is an institution that not only trains the mind, but the body as well. The Nittany Lions are known throughout the intercollegiate sports world for its outstanding teams. Penn State's football team is synonymous with gridiron excellence. Coach Joe Paterno is a football legend, and became the all-time leader in wins in college football in 2001. Penn State also fields quality teams in cross-country, women's volleyball, and gymnastics, just to name a 3 few. The Penn State athletic tradition is robust, and the university has garnered an impressive 56 national team championships in its history.

Penn State's scholar/athletes have impressive academic credentials: the university graduated 80 percent of its scholar/athletes from the entering class of 1996—1997 within six years, compared to a national average of 62 percent for scholar/athletes at all Division I NCAA institutions. Penn State maintains an emphasis on education and athletics that is to be envied.

Penn State's history is full of accomplishments and its future is full of promise. I will insert for the record a list of 50 ways Penn State has shaped the world. This is just a fraction of the ways the students, faculty, staff and all those associated with Penn State have helped to make our Nation and the world a better place.

The education I received at Penn State and the relationships I developed—the most important of which was meeting my future wife—helped shape my life and the public service path I pursued. Carolyn and I, both proud Penn State alumni, congratulate the university on its sesquicentennial, and look forward to celebrating Penn State's future accomplishments.

50 WAYS PENN STATE HAS SHAPED THE WORLD

Since its founding in 1855, Penn State and its people have been leaving their mark on the world. From the viewing of the first atom, to the leading roles played by alumni in Desert Storm, Penn Staters have had a profound impact on the world and are leaving a legacy of contribution.

1. American Literature—Fred Lewis Pattee, who joined the faculty in 1894, became the first in the Nation to hold the title of Professor of American Literature, a field then considered a minor subdiscipline of English literature. He helped make Penn State one of the earliest centers for American literature studies.

2. Animal Nutrition—In the early 1900s Professor Henry Armsby used a respiration calorimeter to try to determine the net energy value of food—that is, the portion of food energy that an animal used to produce milk or meat. His experiments attracted worldwide interest and helped to develop livestock feeds of higher nutritive value.

3. Architectural Engineering—Penn State offers America's oldest continuously accredited (since 1936) curriculum in this field. It introduced the curriculum in 1910 to provide ''liberal training in both the aesthetic and construction sides of architecture.''

4. Art Education—Penn State became an international center for art education when Austrian-born Viktor Lowenfeld joined the faculty in 1946. Lowenfeld was the most influential art educator of the 20th century and wrote the field's dominant book, Creative and Mental Growth, based on his pioneering work in psychology and the art of the visually impaired.

5. Artificial Insemination—Over a 30-year period beginning in 1946, dairy scientist John Almquist perfected commercially viable artificial insemination techniques for dairy cattle. His research has led to more than $600 million worth of increased food production and cost savings worldwide.

6. Artificial Organs—A heart-assist pump developed by medical and engineering faculty in 1976 to prolong the lives of cardiovascular patients was the first surgically implantable, seam-free, pulsatile blood pump to receive widespread clinical use. It led to the Penn State Heart, the only artificial heart approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

7. Astronauts—Four Penn Staters have flown in space: alumni Paul Weitz, Robert Cenker and Guion S. Bluford Jr. (the first African-American astronaut, who flew on the space shuttle Challenger in 1983), and Assistant Professor of Kinesiology James Pawelczyk.

8. Astronomy—Penn State, with the University of Texas, operates the Hobby-Eberly spectroscopic survey telescope, the largest instrument of its kind in the world, which measures individual wavelengths of light to reveal information about stars, galaxies, and other deep-space phenomena.

9. Atom First ''Seen''—In 1955, physics Professor Erwin Mueller became the first person to ''see'' an atom, using a field ion electron microscope of his own invention. The device was a landmark advance in scientific instrumentation that allowed a magnification of more than 2 million times.

10. Best-Selling Authors—Vance Packard (The Hidden Persuaders, The Status Seekers) earned his degree from Penn State in 1936. Jean Craighead George, a member of the class of 1941, authored the Newberry Award-winning children's book, Julie of the Wolves.

11. Cinema—Penn State alumnus Julius Epstein won an Oscar for his screenplay for the classic Humphrey Bogart film, ''Casablanca.'' Character actor Ed Binns, class of 1937, received critical praise for supporting roles in such box office favorites as ''Patton'' and ''Fail Safe.''

12. Commercial Television—Penn State alumni who have made their mark in television include Carmen Finestra, an executive producer and writer for the hit ABC-TV comedy ''Home Improvement,'' Jonathan Frakes (Commander Will Riker on the hit television series ''Star Trek: The Next Generation''), and writer and director Stanley Lathan (''Cagney and Lacey,'' ''Remington Steele'' and ''Sanford and Son'').

13. Correspondence Courses—In 1892, Penn State became the first American college or university to offer correspondence courses in agriculture, an initiative that was followed by national expansion of correspondence instruction in many technical fields.

14. Diesel Engineering—One of the world's first academic research programs in diesel engineering began at Penn State in 1923. Discoveries in such areas as supercharging and scavenging helped to bring about today's fuel-efficient and powerful engines.

15. Discovering Planets—Alexander Wolszczan, professor of astronomy and astrophysics, discovered the existence of three planets orbiting outside of our solar system—the first scientist to do so.

16. Driver Education—Amos Neyhart taught America's first classes for driver education teachers at Penn State in 1936, three years after he began the Nation's first driver education course at nearby State College High School.

17. Engineers Everywhere—One in 50 professionally licensed engineers in the U.S. is a Penn State graduate.

18. Environmentally Correct—Polymer scientist Bernard Gordon III developed a biodegradable plastic that, with the assistance of water, disappears in two years. Early tests indicate that molecular weight of the polymer reduces as water is added, and at 120 degrees to 140 degrees Fahrenheit, the material falls apart in three days.

19. Environmental Stress—The Noll Physiological Research Center, established in 1963, was the Nation's first academic research center dedicated to studying human tolerance to heat, cold and other environmental stresses, and served as the prototype for similar labs worldwide.

20. Family Doctors—Penn State's Milton S. Hershey Medical Center in 1967 became the Nation's first medical school to establish a department of family and community medicine on the same level as traditional medical specialities. It also introduced a residency in the field, thus foreshadowing a renewed emphasis Nationwide on family practitioners.

21. First AG Degrees—Penn State was the first American institution to confer baccalaureate degrees in agriculture, in 1861.

22. Geraniums—Penn State researchers developed the world's first commercially successful geranium grown from seed, the Nittany Lion Red.

23. Greek Leadership—With 56 fraternities and 29 sororities, Penn State has the largest number of Greek organizations of all colleges and universities in the country.

24. Heavy Water—Penn State physicist Ferdinand Brickwedde in 1931 produced the world's first measurable amount of deuterium, a hydrogen isotope needed to make ''heavy water''—an essential ingredient in basic atomic research.

25. Ice Cream—In 1892 Penn State offered America's first collegiate instruction in ice cream manufacture, followed soon after by a pioneering ''short course'' program that has helped to make the University an international center for research in frozen confections. Ice cream gurus Ben & Jerry got their start from a correspondence course in ice cream making from Penn State.

26. Industrial Engineering—The world's first baccalaureate curriculum in industrial engineering was introduced at Penn State in 1908.

27. Management Education—Established in 1915 as one of the nation's first continuing education programs for business and industry, Penn State's management education classes boosted Pennsylvania's economy by tailoring instruction to thousands of clients statewide in such fields as time management, employee motivation and leadership, and served as models for similar efforts nationally.

28. Materials Research—In 1960, Penn State established the nation's first interdisciplinary curriculum in solid state technology and in 1962, created one of the first interdisciplinary research laboratories, which has since won international acclaim in materials synthesis, electroceramics, diamond films and chemically bonded ceramics.

29. Mathematics—Mathematician Haskell Brooks Curry's research in the 1950s into the foundations of mathematics, especially his development of combinatory logic, later found significant application in computer science, particularly in the design of programming languages.

30. Meteorologists—One in every four meteorologists in the United States is a Penn State graduate.

31. Minority Enrollment—Among more than 100 colleges and universities in Pennsylvania, Penn State ranks second in the enrollment of African Americans and graduates more of these students than any other institution in the Commonwealth.

32. Mushroom Research—In the 1920s, Penn State became the first land-grant college to initiate a comprehensive mushroom research program. Researchers developed improved composts and production practices that were adopted by growers worldwide and also helped Pennsylvania retain its leadership as the No. 1 source of domestic mushrooms.

33. Music—Fred Waring, nationally beloved choral leader (''The man who taught America how to sing'') and founder of The Pennsylvanians, was a Penn Stater. So is Grammy Award-winning singer, songwriter and pianist Mike Reid (''Stranger in the House,'' ''Lost in the Fifties Tonight'').

34. Nobel Prize—Stanford University biochemist Paul Berg, a member of Penn State's class of 1948, won a Nobel Prize in 1980 for his study of the biochemistry of nucleic acids.

35. Nuclear Reactor—Penn State in 1955 became the first university to be issued a federal license to operate a nuclear reactor, which it continues to use for studies in the peaceful uses of atomic energy and the training of nuclear industry personnel.

36. Pacemaker—A surgeon and two engineers at Penn State perfected the world's first long-life, rechargeable heart pacemaker.

37. Penn Staters Everywhere—Penn State has more than 466,000 living alumni. One in every 720 Americans, and one in every 70 Pennsylvanians, is a graduate of Penn State.

38. Personality Tests—In 1931, psychologist Robert Bernreuter began refining his ''Bernreuter Personality Inventory,'' a pioneer multiphastic test of traits that became the standard by which other personality tests were measured and is still used worldwide for counseling and personnel selection.

39. Petroleum Research—In the 1920s, Penn State researchers began pioneering investigations that identified the components of crude oil, leading to significant improvements in the refining process and the development of today's widely used lubricants that can withstand extremes of heat and cold.

40. Playwrights—The hit Broadway play ''Give'em Hell, Harry,'' based on the life of President Harry Truman and authored by Penn State alumnus Samuel Gallu, was made into a critically acclaimed motion picture. So was Penn Stater John Pielmeier's ''Agnes of God,'' which received three Academy Award nominations.

41. Progesterone—Pioneer steroid chemist Russell Marker's work in synthesizing the hormone progesterone in the 1930s laid the foundation for the birth control pill and such medical applications as cortisones and various hormone and steroid therapies.

42. Public Television—The first national conference of educators and broadcasters was held at Penn State in 1952 and urged the Federal Communications Commission to set aside licenses for noncommercial use. The FCC responded favorably, thus providing the regulatory basis for today's system of public television stations.

43. Pure Food—Pennsylvania's and the Nation's pure food laws stem partly from the work of pioneer chemist William Frear, who in the early 1900s analyzed foods for government agencies and headed an expert committee whose recommendations shaped the landmark Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906.

44. R Values—This widely adopted standard of heat resistance, used to measure the insulating properties of such materials as fiberglass and window glass, was developed by Everett Shuman, who in the 1960s headed Penn State's Building Research Institute.

45. School Administrators— One out of every four senior school administrators in Pennsylvania is a graduate of Penn State.

46. Science, Technology, and Society—In 1969–70, Penn State established the Nation's first interdisciplinary program in science, technology and society. Its integrative courses addressing critical issues in these areas served as a model for similar programs at many other universities.

47. Telecommunications—Penn State alumnus Charles Krumreich invented the telephone jack. More than a billion of his patented Jack–11 square plastic plugs are used worldwide for telephones, modems, and fax machines.

48. Toymaker—Herman Fisher, co-founder and longtime chairman of the board of Fisher Price, one of the Nation's largest toymakers, graduated from Penn State in 1921.

49. Visionary Educator—Evan Pugh, Penn State's first president (1859–64), was among the first nationally recognized advocates of adding science, agriculture and engineering to traditional collegiate studies.

50. Weather Prediction—Meteorologist Hans Panofsky conducted fundamental work at Penn State (1952–82) that led to a new understanding of atmospheric turbulence, air pollution, ozone depletion and planetary atmospheres, and was among the first to apply computer analysis to weather prediction.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 25, I missed rollcall votes 321–325. Had I been present on this date, I would have voted ''no'' on rollcall votes Nos. 321–323 and ''aye'' on rollcall votes 324–325. On this date, I had committed to participating in an event in my congressional district that I was unable to miss.

DAILY INTERLAKE ARTICLE

HON. DENNIS R. REHBERG

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. REHBERG. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to submit this article from the Daily Interlake in Kalispell, Montana for the RECORD.

The Plum Creek Timber Company, Inc. is the second largest private timberland owner in the United States, including 1.3 million acres in my home state of Montana.

Last month, Plum Creek received the Patriot Award for contributing to national security through its personnel policies that support employee participation in the National Guard and Reserve.

On May 19, 2004, Brigadier General Randy Mosley of the Montana Army National Guard visited Plum Creek's Columbia Falls, Montana office and presented the award, on behalf of the Department of Defense, to Art Vail, Flathead Unit Manager; Tom Ray, General Manager of Resources; and Hank Ricklefs, Vice President of Manufactured Products.

Plum Creek Senior Forester, Don Sneck from the Flathead Unit submitted the nomination for the award but was unable to attend the ceremony because he is presently serving in Iraq. He has served in the guard for 20 years and today flies a helicopter air ambulance, evacuating injured soldiers from southern Iraq to Kuwait. This is Don's third deployment in the last two years.

I congratulate Plum Creek on receiving this prestigious award and thank Don for his hard work on behalf of Plum Creek, his home state of Montana and his country.

PLUM CREEK HONORED FOR SOLDIER SUPPORT

(By Candace Chase)

Brig. Gen. Randy Mosley of the Montana Army National Guard brought certificates and thanks Wednesday to Plum Creek Timber Co. in Columbia Falls.

The company and three of its executives received patriot awards for contributing to national security by supporting their employee citizen soldiers.

Don Sneck, an employee and deployed guardsman, submitted their nominations.

Mosley honored Henry Ricklefs, vice president of manufactured goods; Tom Ray, general manager of resources; and Art Vail, Flathead unit manager. They received certificates at a management meeting in the Plum Creek board room.

In remarks before the ceremony, Mosley said he couldn't over-emphasize the importance of an employer's support for deployed soldiers in Iraq.

''It's an environment fraught with danger and uncertainty,'' he said. ''We want to concentrate on what is in front of them.''

Sneck couldn't attend the ceremony he initiated because he still serves in Iraq. Mosley said Sneck flies a helicopter air ambulance, evacuating injured soldiers from southern Iraq to Kuwait.

''There is no better sight than an air ambulance coming in,'' Mosley said.

According to Mosley, Sneck has served in the guard for 20 years. His unit has deployed three times in the last two years.

When not called to active duty, Sneck works as a senior forester at Plum Creek Timber.

Another Plum Creek employee soldier did attend the patriot award ceremony. Staff Sgt. Tavia Syme of the 889th Quartermaster Co. has returned to her job after deploying in Iraq.

The reservist said she worked in water purification. Syme said she had a tough time adjusting to heels in her administrative assistant job after 14 months in combat boots.

Syme estimated that about 20 to 25 others perform double duty as Plum Creek employees and part-time soldiers.

She said she appreciated her company's support as expressed in regularly shipped care packages of goodies such as pretzels, jerky, hard candy and greeting cards. The company also sponsored a welcome-home brunch for Syme.

As part of the award ceremony, the general showed a video called ''A Soldier's Journey'' which documented the experiences of soldiers like Syme before and during recent deployments.

''These are all Montanans—all soldiers who deployed,'' Mosley said. ''Some are still deployed.''

The general said that the nation intentionally organized the armed services with dependence on the Reserves and Guard. Once viewed as a strategic reserve, Mosley said changing times now require citizen soldiers to deploy in seven days or less.

''All of a sudden you receive a phone call and your world is turned upside down,'' he said.

According to Mosley, the country has now deployed the largest force of reserves and guardsmen since World War II.

''This doesn't work without the support of their bosses,'' he said.

Mosley serves as assistant adjutant general for the Montana Army National Guard.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO DAVID DUNNAGAN

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to David Dunnagan and thank him for his work as Hospital Service Coordinator for the Disabled American Veterans Department of Colorado. His years of commitment and dedication as a public servant is certainly commendable and worthy of recognition before this body of Congress and this Nation today. Along with my fellow Americans, I am grateful for all that he has accomplished during his years of service.

As a Hospital Service Coordinator, David is stationed at the Grand Junction VA Medical Center, and works hard to ensure that the veterans and their dependents receive the benefits to which they are entitled. David's primary objective is to provide them with the best service possible.

David is a decorated combat veteran, who served in the U.S. Army for twelve years from 1966 to 1978, and retired from the National Guard in March 1997. He knows firsthand the struggles and conflicts that veterans and their families often face, and helps cut through the confusion that is often connected with seeking veterans benefits. His knowledge and expertise provides them with the comfort they need. They understand that he is working for them and securing their future.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that David has been an invaluable resource to the Disabled American Veterans Department of Colorado and it is my honor to recognize his service and dedication before this body of Congress and this Nation. I am grateful for the opportunity to work with devoted public servants like David Dunnagan. On behalf of the citizens that have benefited from the hard work and commitment he has given to the Disabled American Veterans Department of Colorado and constituents it serves, I extend my appreciation for his years of enthusiastic service.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ANN BOND

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to Ann Bond and thank her for her work as a Public Affairs Specialist with Bureau of Land Management (BLM). Her years of commitment and dedication as a public servant is certainly commendable and worthy of recognition before this body of Congress and this nation today. I, along with my fellow Americans, am grateful for all that she has accomplished during her years of service.

Ann came to the Federal agencies with a long history of dealing with the public and the media in southwestern Colorado. She has served as the Public Affairs Specialist for the San Juan National Forest since 1988, and assumed the joint responsibilities of the Bureau of Land Management Public Affairs Specialist for the San Juan Public Lands in 1995.

In her current role, Ann is the lead for all Forest Service and BLM public affairs and congressional activities, excluding fire related actions, affecting about 2.5 million acres of public land in southwestern Colorado. She excels at going beyond the minimal news release approach to public affairs by insisting on clear, candid communications with the media and the public, and by establishing an expectation for the public to be informed and to participate responsibly in land use decisions.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Ann Bond has been an invaluable resource to the Bureau of Land Management and it is my honor to recognize her service and dedication before this body of Congress and this nation. I am grateful for the opportunity to work with devoted public servants like Ann. On behalf of the citizens that have benefited from the hard work and commitment she has given to the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management and constituents they serve, I extend my appreciation for her years of enthusiastic service.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2005

SPEECH OF

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 23, 2004

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4548) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2005 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my gratitude to the men and women of the Intelligence Community for their service to our country. Indeed, hey are our nation's greatest intelligence asset.

I also rise to express my continued concern over the Intelligence Community's ability to attract and retain a quality workforce that reflects the ethnic and cultural diversity of the United States. Doing so is required to ensure the Intelligence Community is properly postured to meet the formidable global challenges of the future.

Data collected by the Intelligence Community demonstrates that the proportion of women and minorities in the Intelligence Community continues to be significantly lower than their representation in the general Federal government and private sector workforce. While some improvements have been made by individual agencies in select areas, one fact remains—Women and minorities remain underrepresented in core mission areas, management and senior ranks of the Intelligence Community. This is unlikely to change given the respective representation of women and minorities in student and career development programs, and feeder pools. Meaningful steps, including investment in untraditional initiatives, will be required to reverse this trend.

I commend outgoing Director of Central Intelligence George Tenet for taking the first in a series of needed steps—the convening of a panel of distinguished individuals with extensive Federal government and private sector experience. I look forward to reviewing the panel's findings and recommendations, and to working with the new Director of Central Intelligence and individual agency directors to ensure implementation of constructive programs to improve the Intelligence Community's ability to attract and retain a diverse, highly-skilled workforce.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO BILLY O. HIGHTOWER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to Billy Hightower and thank him for his work as Mesa County Veterans Service Officer with the Veteran's Affairs Department. His years of commitment and dedication as a public servant is certainly commendable and worthy of recognition before this body of Congress and this nation today. Along with my fellow Americans, I am grateful for all that he has accomplished during his years of service.

Billy bravely served in the U.S. Air Force as a jet mechanic in the Korean War, and later went on to teach psychology and sociology at both Grand Junction Central High School and Mesa State College. He became active in helping veterans when he began working with the Disabled American Veterans (DAV) organization serving as the 1976–1977 Colorado State Commander, the 1977–1978 National Senior Vice Commander and the 1978–1979 National Commander. During his tenure at the DAV, Billy worked on an outreach program for veterans called Project Forgotten Warrior that was adopted by the Veterans Affairs Department all across the country.

In 1979, Billy became a Health Systems Specialist with the Department of Veterans Affairs. Throughout his eighteen years with the Veterans Affairs Department his extraordinary talent and dedication led him to work with the Salt Lake City Regional Director, the Virginia Regional Office Director, and the Veterans Affairs Under Secretary for Health. He also served as a Grand Junction Organizational Development Specialist, and Patient Advocate before taking his current position as the Mesa County Veterans Service Officer.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Billy Hightower has been an invaluable resource to the Department of Veterans Affairs. It is my honor to recognize his service and dedication before this body of Congress and this nation. I am grateful for the opportunity to work with devoted public servants like Billy. On behalf of the citizens that have benefited from the hard work and commitment he has given to the Department of Veterans Affairs and the constituents it serves, I extend my appreciation for his years of enthusiastic service.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO LINDA KOILE

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Linda Koile of Oak Creek, Colorado, and to thank her for her service to her community. Linda is the town's new code enforcement officer, a position that requires great commitment and dedication to her community. Linda is a valuable member of her community and I am honored to recognize her commitment before this body of Congress and this nation today.

A resident of Oak Creek, Linda jumped at the opportunity to serve the citizens of her hometown when the job as the town's code enforcement officer became available. Linda was excited to fill the opening and ready to begin a new challenge. Accepting the job required Linda to teach herself a new occupation. Being a code enforcement officer requires extensive knowledge of the municipal codes and of law enforcement. Linda felt she could do a better job and better serve her town if she furthered her education. With that in mind, she financed her own training at the Colorado Mountain College Law Enforcement Academy. Upon graduation, Linda will join the Oak Creek Police Department as an official officer, both enforcing the town's municipal codes and assuming additional responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is appropriate to honor the hard work and selflessness of Linda Koile before this body of Congress and this nation. I am a former police officer, and I understand the challenges that law enforcement presents. Her work demonstrates how commitment and dedication from people like Linda can strengthen the community. I thank Linda for her work and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. CHARLES H. TAYLOR

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on July 6, 2004 on Rollcall Vote 327, I inadvertently cast a ''nay'' vote. It was my intention to vote ''aye'' on the resolution. I would ask that the record reflect my intention to vote ''aye'' on H. Con. Res. 257, expressing the sense of Congress that the President should posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Harry W. Colmery.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO REGINALD AND BEVERLY GRAHAM

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Reginald and Beverly Graham of Durango, Colorado, and their tireless dedication toward educating our youth. ''Reg'' and ''Bev,'' as they are affectionately known, have committed to Fort Lewis College as contributing members of the academic community for many years, and I think it is appropriate to highlight their efforts before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Reg and Bev have dedicated their lives to our youth's education. At Fort Lewis College, Reg taught as a professor in business and Bev taught as a specialist in learning and writing. In addition to her time teaching higher education, Bev also taught music at the elementary and middle levels. Fort Lewis College has always been important to Reg and Bev, and now that they are retired from teaching, it still remains special. Recently, in order to better Fort Lewis College, they donated to endow a chair in the business department. This provides one source of funding to staff educational positions in the business department.

Reg and Bev are committed to the community beyond the walls of the classroom. Jumping at an opportunity to take part in the public education and positively impact students prior to college, Reg chaired the committee for school improvement in the Durango School District. Reg's additional dedication to the community is apparent through his work as a member of Kiwanis and as a planner of Meals on Wheels for the First United Methodist Church. Bev is a member of Phi Delta Kappa and active in both the Methodist Church Choir and Durango Society.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to honor Reg and Bev Graham before this body of Congress and this nation today. Reg and Bev are establishing a legacy that reflects their commitment to excellence in education at Fort Lewis College. I praise Reg and Bev for their dedication to education as seen through their work as faculty members and their continued support of Fort Lewis College. I wish them the best in their future endeavors.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO CURTIS MUCKLOW

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise and pay tribute today to Curtis Mucklow of Steamboat Springs, Colorado for his work in the agricultural community. Curtis has dedicated his career to providing the educational resources necessary for successful cultivation of agriculture in his community, and it is my pleasure to recognize Curtis before this body of Congress and this nation.

Curtis's first involvement with agriculture was as a ranch hand in Clark, Colorado. From there he went on to receive his bachelors and masters degree in animal science, and began a career as an extension agent in Elbert County. As an extension agent, he works as an educational liaison to develop resources for the agricultural community and identify and implement solutions to agricultural problems. In 1989, he assumed the role of extension agent for Routt County, a job that would allow him to be a major influence on agriculture in Steamboat Springs and the surrounding area. During his tenure, he has achieved many successes. Significant achievements include creating the ''Guide to Rural Living,'' a source providing information about the business of farming, and creating a scholarship in Routt County for 4-H students.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to acknowledge the contributions of Curtis Mucklow before this body of Congress and this nation. He has worked hard to improve agriculture in Routt County. He is known for his passion for his job in addition to his knowledge. I thank Curtis for his work in the Steamboat Springs community and wish him luck in his future endeavors.

RECOGNIZING DR. ROBERT A. COOK ON HIS 50TH BIRTHDAY

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend and honor Dr. Robert A. Cook, Doctor of Veterinary Medicine, of Larchmont in the 18th Congressional District of New York. On Saturday, July 10, surrounded by friends and family, he will celebrate his 50th birthday.

Dr. Cook has long been committed to the practice of veterinary care. His passion for his work has led him on a constant search for new skills, and new ways to use those skills to enhance the well-being of animals and wildlife.

Dr. Cook's career is a testament to his commitment to both public service and personal fulfillment. He has blazed trails to improve his profession and expand its public mission. As the Chief Veterinarian, Director of Wildlife Health and then Vice President of Wildlife Health, of the Wildlife Conservation Society in the Bronx, New York, Dr. Cook has lead wildlife health care at Central Park, Queens, and Prospect Park Wildlife Centers, the Bronx Zoo, the New York Aquarium and the Wildlife Survival Center in St. Catherines Island, Georgia.

This work has spurred Dr. Cook to pioneer veterinary care for free-ranging wildlife, to forge invaluable expansions of the public's involvement and commitment to wildlife care, and to take the lessons learned in the great state of New York around the globe. From Bolivia to Bangkok, and from Tanzania to Thailand, Dr. Cook applied his unique skills and programs, and shared them with other parts of the world where they can be of help.

Dr. Cook's work as a veterinarian for the Wildlife Conservation Center is impressive in its own right, but I am staggered by the powerful example he has set with his commitment to the public mission of his organization and profession. Dr. Cook's expansive view of his own role has allowed the success of his work to be amplified far beyond the bounds of what we might expect from one person. It is a shining example to all of us that commitment to community and others can provide the truest and best rewards.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I would like to pay tribute to Dr. Robert A. Cook on the occasion of his 50th birthday, and I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating him for all that he has accomplished.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO KERRY KERRIGAN

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to rise to pay tribute to Kerry Kerrigan of Steamboat Springs, Colorado for her courage as a citizen and her dedication as a teacher. She is a valuable source of inspiration and strength in her community, and I am honored to recognize her accomplishments before this body of Congress and this nation today.

An athletic young woman, Kerry was a skier and a gymnast before her bone cancer diagnoses left her no option, but to amputate one of her legs. This slowed her down, but the setback would not prevent her from pursuing her yearning to educate our youth. She is currently a successful elementary school teacher that makes a difference in her student's lives.

In recognition of her excellent teaching record, she was a runner up for 2000 Colorado Teacher of the Year, one of five to receive the honor. Her passion for teaching compliments her courageous life. Recently she rescued a struggling young girl from Charlie's Hole rapids on the Yampa River. As an active leader in the community, she partakes in leadership roles in the Humble Ranch Education and Therapy Center and the Steamboat Marathon children's fun run. Kerry is still able to maintain an active lifestyle, and enjoys kayaking, swimming and mountain biking.

Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to share Kerry Kerrigan's good works with this body of Congress and this nation. Her record of achievements in the community is so consistent that nothing she does can surprise the people of the Yampa Valley. I recognize her extra effort and thank her for her deeds.

RANCHO DEL CHAPARRAL GIRL SCOUT CAMP CELEBRATES 35TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the 35th anniversary of the Girl Scouts of Chaparral Council's resident camp, Rancho del Chaparral, located on 1,200 acres of forest, river and meadow in the Jemez Mountains. ''A piece of blue sky and all there is beneath it'' is the theme for Rancho, as it is affectionately called.

On July 17, Girl Scouts from New Mexico and across the United States will reunite to mark this historic occasion, exemplifying the strong bond of friendship that young women gain through their Girl Scout experiences. Such relationships are vital for young women and foster an appreciation for helping others, whether it be in the community, at school, or at home. It is clear that these women have cherished the spirit of the Girl Scout tradition as they now gather 35 years later to renew their friendships.

Rancho is located on part of the San Diego Land Grant bestowed to Francisco Garcia de Noreigo in 1790 by the Governor of New Mexico. It was purchased in 1963 by funds raised through Girl Scout cookie sales.

Rancho replaced Camp Elza Seligman, which had served the girls of the council since the early 1940's. Camp Seligman, located near Ponderosa, was no longer adequate for the growing needs of the council. Parents and friends of Girl Scouts raised funds through a Capital Campaign in 1967, and Rancho was dedicated on July 13, 1969. It was designed by the architectural firm, George Wright Associates, and built by La Mesa Builders, Inc.

Today, Rancho's El Bosque continues to welcome Brownie, Junior, Cadette and Senior Girl Scout troops, along with their leaders, for an exciting camp experience. El Prado—with its Adirondacks, hogans and covered wagons—houses individual girls participating in a variety of outdoor activities.

Rancho develops girls strong in mind, body and spirit by creating a cooperative and supportive community that encourages self-reliance and self-discovery. Girls experience hiking, horseback riding, arts and crafts, campfires, star gazing, archery, canoeing, and much more. There are even programs for the entire family.

During the celebration, there will be a memorial dedication to Captain Tamara Long-Archuleta, a former Chaparral Girl Scout, who was tragically killed last year in Afghanistan. Tammy was the copilot of the helicopter that crashed while on a rescue mission, killing all six aboard. She was from Adelino, near Belen, and her life was a shining example of what being a Girl Scout is all about. Tammy was valedictorian of her class and a world karate champion. She graduated from the University of New Mexico with honors, and while there became involved with Air Force ROTC. She had wanted to become a fighter pilot, but instead decided to do rescue work.

Tammy left behind a 3-year-old son and planned to marry a fellow Air Force pilot. Sadly, she was two weeks away from returning home when the accident occurred.

Girl Scouts of Chaparral Council serves more than 6,800 girls and 2,500 adults in nine counties in New Mexico and five counties in southwestern Colorado. Chaparral Council is committed to helping girls, ages 5–17, develop values, social consciousness, self-esteem and skills for success in the future. I have met hundreds of Chaparral Girl Scouts over the years and am constantly reminded through these experiences, our younger generations are ready, willing, and able to assume their rightful role as tomorrow's leaders.

Mr. Speaker, Rancho del Chaparral will forever be a place where friendships flourished and lessons were learned about life and the importance of our natural resources. Most of all, these women were instilled with the Girl Scout tradition, something they have passed down to their children and grandchildren. Thousands of girls' lives have been touched and enriched through their experience with the Chaparral Council. I am pleased to commemorate the 35th anniversary of this very special place that has meant so much to so many.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ROBERT C. YOUNG

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise today to pay tribute to the life of Robert Charles Young of Grand Junction, Colorado. Robert, known affectionately as ''Bob'', leaves behind a legacy of hard work and dedication to his community and I am honored to remember his life before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Bob was a Colorado native, born and raised in Denver. Living in Denver, he went on to study accounting, a profession that would shape his career. In 1944, a possible business prospect moved Bob to Glenwood Springs. This began his career as the consummate businessman. Using his business savvy, Bob saw an opportunity to capitalize on his accounting expertise to service a market devoid of other accountants. Seeking to better serve his community, he accepted a position in public service when he was elected as the Justice of the Peace in Glenwood Springs, a position which later changed in title to municipal judge.

After retiring from his accounting firm Bob took time to relax and enjoy the simple things in life. He had a penchant to see the world and fulfilled it by traveling with his wife, Jeris. In 2002, he moved with his wife to Grand Junction, Colorado, a community where he had many friends. People will remember Bob most for his close personal relationships with his family and friends. He made it a point to meet everyday with friends over a cup of coffee at one of his favorite local restaurants.

Mr. Speaker, the communities of Grand Junction and Glenwood Springs will sorely miss Robert Charles Young. He will be remembered for his work in business as well as public service, but most of all, he will be remembered as a great friend. I wish to express my deepest sympathies to his family and friends.

THE TRANSPORTATION BILL

HON. NICK J. RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss the Transportation bill. As the remaining days until the August District Work Period tick down, it is looking more and more likely as though we are not going to get a bill finalized this year.

This is a sad state of affairs. The White House clearly does not want us to finalize this bill in an election year, and the House Republican Leadership just follows the orders of the Cheney-Bush Administration. We should complete the bill, and if the White House wants to veto it, it can go ahead; there are clearly enough Republican and Democrat votes to override a veto and get the Transportation bill finished. But by doing nothing, the House Republican leadership is siding with the White House, and it is preventing Congress from carrying out its Constitutional role as a co-equal branch of government.

To add insult to injury, the Washington Post reported on July 3, 2004, on page A9, that the White House has only spent $366 million of the $18.4 billion that it got Congress and the Republican Leadership to appropriate for Iraqi reconstruction. Why the Cheney-Bush White House won't now spend the money that it insisted it needed is anybody's guess. But this is money that could and should have gone to reinvestment in America rather than into Iraq in the first place. Instead, it lies unused and serving no purpose.

Under the Constitution, as my dear friend Senator BYRD has noted so many times, it is the responsibility of the Congress to decide how federal funds should be spent; it is not the White House's role. Yet, this White House has insisted on investing in Iraq rather than America, and it has gotten its way even if it doesn't know what it wants to do with the money.

States like my home state of West Virginia have been waiting for far too long now to see just what, if anything, they could expect to receive from the federal government in order to finance important highway and transit projects, to focus on congestion mitigation, and to provide good-paying jobs that are sorely needed in this uncertain job market.

Mr. Speaker, I have an editorial from a distinguished newspaper in my district, the Bluefield Daily Telegraph, which I would like to submit for the record to accompany my remarks. This insightful viewpoint from yesterday's paper demonstrates quite clearly the problems with which we are saddling the states due to Congressional inaction. The article reads as follows:

FUNDING SETBACK: HOUSE DELAYS HIGHWAY, STREETSCAPE WORK

Not only did the U.S. House's extension of the federal highway funding bill last week cause a slow down on financing new or continued construction on I–73/74 through the West Virginia coalfields area, it also causes problems for existing programs that rely on the bill.

One such project is the downtown Streetscape project in Bluefield.

The program is ready for Phase II, a refurbishing of Chicory Square between Bland and Federal streets.

The city earlier received funding for an extensive project in downtown that involved sidewalk replacement, new lighting and the installation of high-tech communications infrastructure. Phase I got underway in 2003.

City officials said the Coal Heritage Authority has three projects that can't be started until a new highway bill is approved.

Bluefield officials were hoping for a smooth transition between the first two phases of the downtown Streetscape project with the passage of a new six-year federal highway administration spending bill.

But, for the fourth time, the majority party in the House has decided to use its power to delay consideration and passage of the bill.

Needing even more funding, the King Coal Highway Association, which joins Tolsia Highway in the I–73/74 project through the southern coalfield counties from Huntington to Bluefield, is awaiting millions of dollars to carry through with work already planned on the $2 billion undertaking. They had hoped to be able to move forward with those projects this summer.

Most political observers think there will be no action on the new federal spending act until after the November presidential election. That means communities like Bluefield, Kimball, Mount Hope and all those anticipating construction jobs for I–73/74 have lost a year in financing.

Maybe voters should find out which Representatives are holding up the bill and remember them in November.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO TOM SHARP

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor the achievements of Tom Sharp of Steamboat Springs, Colorado. Tom has played an important role in the community as exemplified through his work as a businessman and a civic leader. It is my pleasure to recognize his efforts before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Tom grew up in a rural community in Monte Vista, Colorado. After law school, he tried city life when he worked as a clerk for a judge, but found living in the city unfulfilling. He soon moved to Steamboat Springs, finding the smaller community provided an environment more conducive to his lifestyle. Tom has since ascended forty of Colorado's 14,000 foot mountains locally named ''Fourteeners.'' He is also an avid skier.

Reaching the summit of mountains is thematic in Tom's life. He pursues challenges in his business and personal life, the same way he climbs the mountains. The goal is the top, and he will reach it. One of his most notable contributions to the community is his work in water law. Starting in 1977, he served on the board of directors for the Upper Yampa Water Conservancy District. Recently, he expanded his role in water rights statewide by assuming the Governor appointed position on the Colorado Water Conservation Board. Tom has never taken his civic responsibility lightly. He served on the local school board, the local county board for Habitat for Humanity, and other local boards for local businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize the work Tom Sharp has done for the community. It is under the leadership of people like Tom that a small town builds a strong cohesive community. His work is commendable and I wish him all the best in his future endeavors.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JACK SMITH

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 7, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and recognize the dedication of Jack Smith of Rifle, Colorado to our youth as a teacher and coach at Rifle High School over the past forty-five years. Jack has been instrumental in shaping the lives of student-athletes in his community. I am honored to recognize his accomplishments before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Born in Cotopaxi, Colorado, Jack graduated from Florence High School. He went on to serve this nation in the United States Marine Corps, and, following his military service, graduated from Western State College and went into teaching. He has amassed an impressive record of accomplishments in his time, as a teacher and a coach. He first began as a full time teacher and assistant basketball and football coach in 1960 at Rifle High School. Over his time spent coaching, Jack served as a head or assistant coach, coaching both boys and girls in five different sports. Now, he stays active in the education of our youth, serving as an assistant coach for the girl's basketball team.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to recognize Jack Smith for his work as a coach and a teacher at Rifle High School. Teachers and coaches play a very important role in developing our next generation's leaders. Jack's passion for coaching demonstrates a tremendous commitment to the future of our nation's youth. I thank Jack for his service to the community and wish him the best of luck in his future endeavors.

HONORING MANATAWNY MANOR

HON. JIM GERLACH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Manatawny Manor in recognition of 30 years of dedicated service to the senior citizens of Chester County, Pennsylvania.

On July 8, 1974, Manatawny Manor opened its doors to provide care for senior citizens in need. It was founded by two notable men: Thomas Natoli and Frank Genuardi. These men created Manatawny Manor with a vision of providing unsurpassed service to the senior citizens of Chester County. Originally, Manatawny Manor was a one-story structure with 99 beds and five nursing staff members. On its first night of operation, there was only one resident. Since then, the numbers of citizens that Manatawny Manor has cared for has greatly increased. In the past thirty years, Manatawny Manor has provided and cared for over 4,897 residents.

Just four years after Manatawny Manor opened, substantial improvements were made to the facility. In 1978, a 107 bed personal care unit opened and, in 1986, an adult day care facility was added. The day care facility made more services available to senior citizens and can accommodate up 28 clients.

Increased need for bed capacity in 1989 and 1996 led to renovation projects that expanded upon the original building, bringing the number of beds to 133. These additions and improvements were not focused solely on bed space, but also on improvements in the administrative offices, and the Rehabilitation Services Department.

In 1998, Manatawny Manor was purchased by the Lutheran Home at Topton, thus becoming a part of Lutheran Services Northeast. On January 1, 2000, through the affiliation of Lutheran Services Northeast and Tressler Lutheran Services, Manatawny Manor became a facility of the Diakon Lutheran Social Ministries. Diakon is a private, non-profit charitable organization of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America. Diakon Lutheran Social Ministries has sought to provide the very best in long-term care through continuing care retirement communities, assisted living services, special care for those with dementia or Alzheimer's disease, short and long-term care skilled nursing, and outpatient rehabilitation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me today in recognizing Manatawny Manor and Diakon Lutheran Social Ministries for 30 years of exceptional long term care and service to the people of Chester County, Pennsylvania.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO THOMAS PETERSON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the life and memory of Thomas Peterson of Durango, Colorado. Thomas passed away after a long fight with kidney disease at the age of fifty-nine. He proudly served our country and worked hard to maintain his own business. As his family and community mourn his passing, I think it is appropriate to recognize his life and legacy before this body of Congress and this nation.

At the ripe age of ten, Thomas first began his long career as a Durango businessman. Preparing him to takeover, Thomas's father started grooming him as a young employee in the family business, Peterson Office Supply. In 1971, his father passed away and Thomas assumed control of the family business. Leaving his business legacy behind, Thomas's presence as a business leader and longstanding staple of the Durango community will be sorely missed.

A proud citizen, Thomas served our country with honor for twenty-three years as a member of the National Guard. He retired from service in 1988 as a First Sergeant. In addition to his service, he spent thirty-years as a committed member of the Elks Lodge. As a leader in the community, Thomas was a trustee for the Elks Lodge.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to rise and recognize the life of Thomas Peterson today. The Durango community will remember Thomas for his big heart and willingness to give to others. As a loyal and trusting individual, he demonstrated the strengths of America's smaller communities. I would like to express my deepest regrets and extend my sympathy to the family and friends of Thomas Peterson.

A TRIBUTE TO STEVEN RUFFIN

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Steven Ruffin in recognition of his tireless efforts to strengthen the community through his work as a member of the New York City Police Department.

Steven Ruffin was born and raised in the Bedford Stuyvesant community in Brooklyn. He is the oldest of four children. His interests include jazz, Afro-centric art, sports and working with the community.

He was appointed to the New York City Police Department on January 21, 1985 and was assigned to the Neighborhood Stabilization Unit, where he performed foot patrol within the 73rd, 75th and the 81st precincts.

In January 1985, Officer Ruffin was assigned to the 79th precinct. He performed patrol duties there for ten years. Later, in 1995, he was assigned as the Explorer/Auxiliary Coordinator, making him responsible for the supervision of the Explorer and Auxiliary members.

For the past four years, Officer Ruffin's experience and expertise has resulted in improved community relations. He has accomplished this by developing a prosperous partnership between the community and the 79th precinct, which has been instrumental in closing the gap between the community and police. He encourages his fellow officers to become more involved and concerned with the neighborhood in the area they serve and protect.

Officer Ruffin has also successfully collaborated with local officials, neighborhood organizations, schools, and churches in Bedford Stuyvesant to strengthen the community. He has also played an active role in organizing youth programs, parades, demonstrations, rallies, and various events. For all of his contributions, Officer Ruffin has received numerous awards for his community service.

Mr. Speaker, Steven Ruffin has dedicated both his professional and personal life to strengthening the community. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

CHESTER GRAY

HON. STEPHANIE TUBBS JONES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Chester Gray of Cleveland, Ohio.

Chester Gray, born on April 1, 1912, in Cleveland, Ohio, was one of two sons born to Morgan J. Gray and Elandra Holt Gray. Morgan, a Pullman Porter, originally from London, Ontario, and Elandra, daughter of a Canadian Baptist minister, raised their sons in an ''upper poor'' but loving home. Throughout his life Chester valued advice he received from his mother, ''Be yourself, and be somebody.'' He also shared his parent's belief in the efficacy of education.

After graduating from Cleveland's East High School, Chester wanted to attend Fisk University, however his father advised him to stay home. A friend took him to meet the Jesuits, and soon he was riding the streetcar to the college at West 30th Street. So began his lifetime association with his alma mater John Carroll University. Chester enjoyed sharing memories about John Carroll where he was one part of the trio of young black men who were the first men of color to attend the University.

Chester, ''Chet'' had a life filled with many interests. As a youngster he ice skated with his buddies at the old Elysium or played sandlot football. At John Carroll he played the French Horn and was a member of the university's first marching band. ''Chet'' dreamed of attending medical school after earning his bachelor in Philosophy, however money was short so, he ventured in other directions: He worked at the Cedar Branch YMCA, volunteered at Karamu House, joined the National Youth Administration and before long arrived at the Ohio Bureau of Employment, a destination that was to direct his future as a prolific public servant and consummate community citizen.

Chester Gray was a brave man. In 1965 he was the lone Black man who was part of a three-man team of officials who traveled into the heart of Klu Klux Klan territory in Birmingham, Alabama. Their mission was to end job discrimination in the local steel mill. The officials endured insults, threats and possible physical harm, but they got their job done. They told the employers they'd have to follow minority guidelines mandated by the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Thus began a new era in employment.

Reflecting on his years and training at John Carroll University "Chet" gave evidence of his quick humor. Describing sitting through the daily Mass conducted in Latin he said, "There was an equality of ignorance. None of us knew what the hell was going on." He also noted that the skills he learned in critical thinking and understanding people were tolls that served him throughout his life.

Perhaps one of the most profound life lessons Chester carried away from John Carroll was "The bedrock of the Jesuit philosophy of doing good for others. Do the best you can for yourself, but also do something to make life better." He spent his life practicing the philosophy and had Ninety-Two glorious years of taking small and giant steps to make life better for his community.

LET THE WORK I'VE DONE SPEAK FOR ME

May the work I've done speak for me. When I'm resting in my grave, there is nothing that can be said. May the work I've done, speak for me. May the life I've lived speak for me. May the service I gave speak for me. When I've done the best I can, and my friends don't understand, may the service I gave speak for me. The works I've done seemed so small. Sometimes they seemed like nothing at all. But when I stand before my God. I want to hear Him say "Well Done." May the work I've done speak for me.

National Youth Administration, youth supervisor and state supervisor of recreation and community affairs

Chief of Minority Group Services, Ohio Bureau of Employment Service

American Red Cross, Military Welfare Branch

Deputy director of operations, Ohio Civil Rights Commission

Staff Director of Equal Employment Opportunity Program for Cleveland district contact management office of U.S. Air Force

Director, U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for Ohio

Elected to John Carroll University board of trustees

Consultant, Cleveland Board of Education

Interim executive director for Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority

Appointed to John Carroll University board of regents

Inspiration and Consultant for "Forever JCU", the first ever alumni of color event

Former Board member Fairhill Center for Aging

"Service is the rent we pay to be living. It is the very purpose of life and not something you do in your spare time"

—MARIAN WRIGHT EDELMAN.

Chester Gray was constantly described as "a gentleman", one of a vanishing breed of men who was elegant, articulate and cultured. But he was more, he was compassionate, a friend, a supporter and mentor. He had high standards and expectations. "Chet" or as he liked to refer to himself, "The Silver Fox", had a zest for living. Unaffected by the passage of time he was debonair, worldly, a man of great humor, twinkling eyes and a broad smile. He believed in finding positive solutions and believed in conciliation.

Chester had a Forty-Seven year long love affair with his beloved Frances, who preceded him in death. They were blessed with one son, Chester, Jr. a resident of Philadelphia, Pa. Chester lived life to the fullest: golfing, traveling, dancing, cooking, reading, writing, practicing Tai Chi, sharing time with his wonderful world of diverse friends. He was indeed a "Man for all Seasons". We will miss him, but remember him with love.

A PROCLAMATION RECOGNIZING AUBRIE WASICEK

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker:

Whereas, Aubrie Wasicek is an outstanding student and loving daughter; and

Whereas, Aubrie Wasicek has been acknowledged by Adams Elementary School for her outstanding academic achievements; and

Whereas, Aubrie Wasicek should be commended for her academic excellence, for her dedication to learning, and for her willingness to obtain and share the knowledge she has gained; and

Therefore, I join with the residents of the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in honoring and congratulating Aubrie Wasicek for her outstanding accomplishment.

MOURNING THE LOSS OF SGT. GERARDO MORENO

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my deep sorrow for the loss of a young soldier from my district, Sgt. Gerardo Moreno, 23, of Terrell, Texas. Gerardo, who was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division based in Fort Hood, Texas, died on April 6 in Ashula, Iraq, in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. He had been in Iraq since early January and was killed in a grenade attack.

Following graduation from Terrell High School in 1999, Gerardo enlisted in the Army. He was a dedicated soldier and upstanding citizen of Terrell, Texas. In a show of support for the fallen soldier, the residents of Terrell lined Moore Avenue on the morning of his funeral to pay their respects. He was laid to rest in Dallas/Fort Worth National Cemetery.

Gerardo was also a devoted family man. He is survived by his wife, Teresa Moreno of Terrell and their two children, Dominique and Marrisol Moreno. Mourning his death are also his mother, Sandra E. Iracheta, and her husband, Noe Iracheta; father, Gerardo Moreno; brother, Jose J. Moreno; stepsisters, Yara and Yadira Perez; grandmother, Rita Iracheta of Terrell; grandfather, Israel Iracheta of San Antonio, and other family members.

Mr. Speaker, Gerardo left Texas in defense of our Nation, and he returned to Texas a hero. He made the ultimate sacrifice for our Nation, and we are forever indebted to him and to our brave men and women who are serving in our armed forces. As we adjourn today in the House of Representatives, let us do so by joining with the good citizens of Terrell in honoring this American hero, Sgt. Gerardo Moreno, and extending our deepest condolences to his family and friends. May God bless them and bring them comfort in their time of sorrow.

CONGRATULATING INDUCTEES AND MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL JUNIOR HONOR SOCIETY OF BELL OAKS UPPER ELEMENTARY SCHOOL IN BELLMAWR, NEW JERSEY

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and recognize the newest inductees and two-year members of the National Junior Honor Society of Bell Oaks Upper Elementary School in Bellmawr, New Jersey. These students have earned this recognition due to their excellence both inside and outside the classroom, and they should be proud of their accomplishments.

The National Junior Honor Society was established in 1929, 8 years after the establishment of the National Honor Society. Both organizations were established to recognize outstanding students who demonstrate excellence in the areas of Scholarship, Leadership, Service, and Character. Students are expected to demonstrate proficiency not just in their classroom studies, but in school activities and community service as well. Each of the recent inductees and current members of the Bell Oaks National Junior Honor Society is to be commended for their dedication to knowledge and service.

On May 24 at 7 p.m. Bell Oaks Upper Elementary School inducted the following 7th Graders: Caitlin Concannon, Charles Dyer, David Funk, Breelynn Hammerle, Jake Huffner, John Ippolite, Maryam Jamil, Erica Lopez, Jacob McGranaghan, Stephen Miles, Joseph Newsham, Priyanka Patel, Charles Robinson, Mark Unger, Judith Wallen, Brett Walren, and Lidia Wilczynska. The 8th Graders inducted were Justin Borrelli, Bryan Cheeseman, Donovan Ortiz, Ashley Parker, Steven Sheehan, and Christopher Todd. The National Junior Honor Society Two Year Members are as follows: Michael Anthony, Hinnah Aslam, Lorin Barry, Joshua Bloomquist, Laura Buonpastore, Lauren Burmylo, Anthony DiLolle, Edward DiMattesa, Nicholas Fishman, Danielle Landis, Brittany Magnin, Michael Malason, Meghan Mitchell, Sean O'Donnell, Stephen Paul, Brittney Rehrig, Amanda Roop, Blair Rundsmom, Matthew Salvano, Jessie Sibiski, Thomas Teschko, and Britney Yocum.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me in congratulating each of these students on their dedication to scholarship and commitment to community service. Their enthusiasm for learning and helping others is admirable, and I am certain that they will continue to excel in these areas and remain leaders in their community.

TRIBUTE TO MS. DORCAS R. HARDY

HON. HENRY E. BROWN, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Ms. Dorcas R. Hardy, who, among her many noteworthy accomplishments, served as the Chairman of the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (VR&E) Task Force.

In May 2003, VA Secretary Anthony Principi established the Task Force to give the VR&E program ''an unvarnished, top-to-bottom independent examination, evaluation, and analysis.'' Chairman Hardy fulfilled the challenge with an extensive testimony before the House Veterans' Affairs Committee on the operations, findings, and recommendations to improve the VR&E program.

Included among the Task Force's 100-plus recommendations is a new, five-track employment process aimed at assisting veterans with finding and retaining employment. The report also includes recommendations focusing on four categories: programs, organizations, work processes, and integrating capacities. Ms. Hardy summarized the recommendations best by saying that they are necessary for the program ''to be effective in the 21st Century'' and they will help ''to communicate to veterans and partners that the purpose of the program is employment.'' Indeed, long-term sustained employment should be the goal of every vocational rehabilitation participant.

Ms. Hardy received her B.A. from Connecticut College, her M.B.A. from Pepperdine University, and completed the Executive Program in Health Policy and Financial Management at Harvard University.

Ms. Hardy is also the President of Dorcas R. Hardy & Associates, a government relations and public policy firm serving a diverse portfolio of clients in the health services, insurance, financial and associated industries. She has a distinguished record of public service culminating with her appointment in 1986 by the late President Ronald Reagan as the Commissioner of Social Security.

With Ms. Hardy's continued dedication to public service, America and her veterans benefit. For this, I pay her tribute.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO MAILE KELLER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize MaiLe Keller of Glenwood Springs, Colorado for her ability to overcome obstacles placed before her and excel in her endeavors. Diagnosed with a hearing impairment before the age of three, MaiLe has excelled as a student-athlete at Glenwood Springs High School.

This spirit of perseverance is thematic in her life. MaiLe has learned to communicate in different ways to overcome her hearing loss, including learning to read lips. Determined to receive an athletic letter at Glenwood Springs High School, MaiLe took up golf during her sophomore year. After many hours of practice with a swing coach, she found a love and appreciation for the game. As a testament to her dedication to the sport, success soon followed as MaiLe took second place at the Demon Invitational golf tournament.

Her hard work is not exclusive to golf; she is also a very dedicated student and has the grades to prove it. Her plans for the future include attending the University of Northern Colorado to study visual arts with the help of a scholarship from the Western Colorado Golf Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to recognize MaiLe Keller for her accomplishments on the green and in her life. She has overcome the obstacles that have been laid in her path, and I congratulate her on her success and wish her the best of luck in future endeavors.

A TRIBUTE TO ARCHBISHOP WILBERT S. McKINLEY

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Archbishop Wilbert S. McKinley in recognition of his spiritual leadership in the community.

Archbishop Wilbert S. McKinley is the senior pastor of The Elim International Fellowship.

The doors of the church were opened for ministry on July 26, 1964. As the founding pastor, Archbishop McKinley has served the church faithfully for forty years.

Archbishop McKinley has an overwhelming passion to introduce people, especially men, to the Church and the teachings of Jesus Christ. Archbishop McKinley believes that these teachings hold the key to every door. He is especially called to reach black men with the message of hope through Jesus Christ and with the necessity of embracing one's spiritual, national and racial identity.

Archbishop McKinley has been a gift to the Church. In addition to his pastoral duties, he is a leader who is committed to sharing his time and talent with others.

Mr. Speaker, Archbishop Wilbert S. McKinley has been a spiritual leader in his community for more than forty years. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

DANNY CAMERON

HON. STEPHANIE TUBBS JONES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Danny Cameron of Cleveland, Ohio.

I want to thank Mr. Cameron for all he has done during his 36-year career with National City Bank to give quality service to the citizens of the 11th Congressional District. As President of the National City Development Corporation he served our community for the past 22, assisting customers make their dreams a reality. For too long, many deserving people were denied an opportunity to build businesses and futures because of the lack of availability of a helping hand. Danny has used his position with the Development Corporation to say ''yes'' rather than ''no,'' to offer hope rather than despair to the people of Greater Cleveland. I thank him for making our community a better place.

I am very happy that he has reached this wonderful time, being young enough to retire and start a new life. I am sorry, however, that he and his wife, Dorothy, are leaving Cleveland for new beginnings in Georgia.

On behalf of the citizens of the 11th Congressional District, Ohio, I extend our gratitude to Danny Cameron for his many years of service, not only as a banker but also as an involved community citizen. He has brightened many lives. On a personal note, I also want to thank him for his years of friendship and support. He has always been there for me.

I wish Danny, Dottie and their family many years of health and happiness. May they fulfill many of their dreams and also find many new adventures. We'll miss you.

A PROCLAMATION RECOGNIZING WORKING WARDROBES

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker:

Whereas, Working Wardrobes is a dedicated and tireless organization worthy of merit and recognition; and

Whereas, Working Wardrobes has been acknowledged for its philanthropic service; and

Whereas, Working Wardrobes should be commended for its excellence in service and for its unwavering dedication to helping individuals obtain the necessary skills to obtain employment; and

Therefore, I join with the residents of the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in honoring and congratulating Working Wardrobes for its outstanding accomplishment.

CONGRATULATING THE ''TREASURES OF THE TEXAS COAST'' CHILDREN'S ART CONTEST 2004 WINNERS

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today to recognize Sammy Clegg, Chelsea Schneider and Daniel Sagrero as the 2004 winners of the Treasures of the Texas Coast Children's Art Contest.

As part of the Texas Adopt-A-Beach program, the ''Treasures of the Texas Coast'' art contest is open to Texas students grade K–6. Hosted annually by the Texas General Land Office, the core objectives of the contest are to encourage young artists while promoting the cause to keep Texas beaches clean. This year's winners, Chelsea Schneider and Daniel Sagrero of Lee Intermediate School in Gainsville, Texas, and Sammy Clegg of Rowlett Elementary School in Rowlett, Texas, masterfully demonstrated those objectives.

Each young artist beautifully displayed the concept of keeping Texas beaches clean by using an elaborate and colorful palette. The winning artwork was displayed in the Capitol Building in Austin, Texas, as well as compiled into a statewide calendar for all to see. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend congratulations to these outstanding students.

WAR WITH IRAQ

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address some dangerous and potentially harmful conjectures that have been made by some of our colleagues in Congress regarding the reasons for going to war with Iraq.

Our decision to go to war with Iraq and remove Saddam Hussein from power was the right decision. The record shows that at various times the defeated Iraqi regime of Saddam Hussein possessed biological and chemical weapons and desired to possess nuclear weapons. Failure to oust Saddam Hussein would have put the American people at a grave risk.

Some have questioned the quality of intelligence that U.S. policy makers received prior to the start of the war in Iraq. I agree that this is a matter of grave importance that requires a complete and full public evaluation. Any faulty intelligence on such grave matters is a serious problem. If we are relying on the same potentially faulty intelligence to protect the lives of our troops still serving in Iraq, or to consider military action elsewhere in the world, that is a dangerous risk to our security and a grave flaw in our foreign policy decision making processes. While these matters are investigated, however, it is crucial that we do not recklessly suggest alternate reasons that the war was pursued.

Some Members of Congress have made statements claiming that the true reason for this war was to move along the Administration's plan to secure a peaceful Israel. These statements are baseless, and quite divisive. While Israel, like the rest of the World, will surely benefit from a stable, democratic Iraq, this war was not entered into for Israel's benefit. Granted, a democratic force in the region will be welcome by the Israeli government, but a stable Iraq will be no means ensure an end to the dangers faced by our allies in Israel. Suggesting that the United States waged this war solely to advance its Middle East policies will only serve to increase the anti-Semitism that already permeates the area, and potentially increase the violence that the Israeli citizens have been forced to endure for years. It is true that, prior to the commencement of the War with Iraq, President Bush stated, ''A new regime in Iraq would serve as a dramatic and inspiring example of freedom for other nations in the region.'' I fully agree with this statement, and feel that it is important to recognize that the spread of freedom and democracy in the region is of great benefit to the entire world, not just Israel. The spread of democracy will directly lead to the spread of peace. There has not been one instance in modern history where a democratic government has gone to war with another democratic government—not one. Achieving such a peaceful existence is of monumental importance to the United States, Israel, and all other nations opposed to violence and terror tactics.

While I certainly do not expect each of my colleagues to agree with me on the question of whether or not we should have entered this war, I do urge all Members of Congress to think carefully about the potential effects that their statements may have, both on the war and on other subjects of a sensitive nature.

TRIBUTE TO DR. LAY KHIN KAY

HON. HENRY E. BROWN, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Lay Khin Kay, co-founder and chief medical director of QTC Medical Services, Inc., for dedicating the past 23 years of her career to the development of medical claims technology.

Dr. Kay's career began in Burma when she obtained her Doctor of Medicine degree from the prestigious Rangoon Institute of Medicine. She came to the United States to further her education and obtain certification as a Board Certified Internal and Occupational Specialist. Dr. Kay devoted years of service performing disability evaluations at the Social Security Administration where she identified a major disconnect between traditional medical evidence development and rating requirements. The medical evidence collected by an evaluating physician rarely met the expectations of ratings requirements; consequently, long delays and appealed cases increased.

In 1981, Dr. Kay co-founded QTC Medical Services to develop a rating-driven disability evaluation protocol, and worked to educate thousands of evaluating physicians. As technology progressed, Dr. Kay continued to develop new techniques to improve the evaluation process. She created QTC's Medical Knowledge Library, which serves as the main database for KMEP (Dr. Kay's Medical Evaluation Protocol), a web-based application designed to help physicians generate disability medical examination content. Instead of using a standardized physician examination guide, KMEP software produces claimant-specific, protocol-based, field-level evaluation worksheets. These worksheets ensure that each physician will completely and accurately address every medical issue of the claimant according to the corresponding disability program's standards.

In 1997, the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) awarded its first performance-based contract to QTC to conduct a pilot program that was established by Congress to perform compensation and pension examinations (C&P) for veterans filing disability claims through VA. QTC now performs about 50 percent of the VA's C&P exams through 10 of its regional offices. In 2003, the KMEP application aided the QTC examining physicians in the production of over 69,000 disability exam reports with near-perfect adequacy ratings.

Dr. Kay's efforts have given disabled veterans a simplified evaluation process, which eliminates the need for retraining, costs less money, and produces timelier quality reports. Thank you, Dr. Kay, for your innovative and cost-effective contributions to the veterans' claims disability process.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO MARTA AND CHARLIE PETERSON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today and to pay tribute to the service of Marta and Charlie Peterson to Mesa Verde National Park. Recently, after over thirty years of dedicated service to our nation park system, the couple announced their retirement. They leave behind a great legacy of dedication and commitment to our lands and I am honored to recognize their service before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Marta and Charlie joined the park service in 1969 on separate journeys. They met while working at adjacent parks in their first year and married soon after. Together they have worked in nine National Parks, acclimating to the changing conditions and terrain, finding happiness in each and every park. After seven years at Mesa Verde National Park, Charlie retires as the chief ranger and Marta retires as the administrative assistant to the park superintendent.

Charlie and Marta's dedication to our National Parks is evident through the numerous awards and recognition they have received over the years. Charlie received the Department of Interior's Medal of Valor and the park service's Harry Yount Award. The Medal of Valor was given for his role in saving his friend from drowning. Working as scuba divers cleaning drains to improve the flood conditions, his friend was pulled into the drain, only to be saved by Charlie. The Harry Yount award honors rangers considered by their peers to be the top rangers in the National Park Service.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize Marta and Charlie Peterson before this body of Congress and this nation today. They have provided years of dedicated service to our national parks. I thank them for their hard work and service, and wish them all the best and happiness in their future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO CLIFFORD BARNETT CROWLEY

HON. TERRY EVERETT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the memory of a distinguished citizen and friend to many in my Congressional District, Mr. Clifford Barnett Crowley, who passed away on July 6 of an extended illness at the age of 92.

Mr. Crowley was a native of Houston County, Alabama where he and his wife, Donnie Vernell Wilkinson, established a family farm. Crowley was well known for his ingenuity and keen ability to adjust to change in agriculture. This skill earned him state wide distinction as Alabama Peanut Farmer of the Year in 1969 and 1970.

Crowley was an active member of Pine Hill Free Will Baptist Church in Dothan, serving as a Sunday School teacher, deacon and trustee. He was also much beloved for his participation in a local musical group which entertained fellow seniors, family and friends.

I offer my condolences to Mr. Crowley's wife and extended family. We have lost a valued and much respected member of our community.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ANNE M. NORTHUP

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Chairman, on July 7, 2004, I inadvertently voted ''nay'' on an amendment to the fiscal year 2005 Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Appropriations bill (H.R. 4754). I respectfully request the RECORD reflect that I supported the Paul Amendment withholding funds from the United National Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and intended to vote ''aye'' on rollcall vote No. 333.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO LANCE CORPORAL MANUEL ADRIAN CENICEROS

HON. HILDA L. SOLIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Lance Corporal Manuel ''Manny'' Adrian Ceniceros, United States Marine Corps, a member of the Regimental Combat Team 1 Headquarters Company, 1st Marine Division, 1st Marine Expeditionary Force, Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Manuel Adrian Ceniceros was born on November 15, 1980. He was a good son to his mother Angela De La Cruz and a loving husband to his wife Elizabeth. He enjoyed life and lived it to the fullest. His hobbies included drawing and playing the trumpet. Manuel and Elizabeth dreamed of starting a family some day. They lived in East Los Angeles, just a few blocks from my office, before he was deployed.

Manuel epitomized what every man should be—a good son and loving husband, a caring friend and considerate neighbor, a good-hearted young man who enjoyed life and strived to ensure that others did as well.

For love of our country, and to protect its freedoms, Lance Corporal Manuel Adrian Ceniceros volunteered to participate in a convoy mission, not knowing that it would be his last unselfish act of honor and courage. On June 26, 2004, he was killed in an explosion in the Iraqi Province of Al Anbar. Manny was laid to rest on July 6 in Santa Ana, the city of his birth. He is survived by his wife Elizabeth and mother Angela de La Cruz.

A TRIBUTE TO ST. BLASÉ ''KC'' CHARLES

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of St. Blasé ''KC'' Charles in recognition of his significant cultural and economic development contributions to the community.

St. Blasé Charles, better known as KC, hails from the twin island Nation of Trinidad and Tobago in the Caribbean. He has been an entertainer for more than 30 years. Famous for his Caribbean-style rendition of the ''father of soul,'' Mr. James Brown, KC is also affectionately known as the ''Local James Brown'' throughout the entertainment circles in North America and members of his international fan club. Along with his own musical group, the International Band, KC has performed at major events and famous places including the West Indian Labor Day Parade in Brooklyn, the Harlem Day Parade, Manhattan's Annual Halloween Parade, the MGM and Sahara casino in Las Vegas, and the Royal Caribbean and Carnival cruises, just to name a few.

KC's summer concerts were launched in 1989 at his garage at East 87th Street in East Flatbush, Brooklyn where he held a huge block party on Memorial Day. In order to accommodate the growing crowd that came to the yearly event, in 1991, KC moved his Caribbean style street festival to Ditmas Avenue near his East 87th Street garage. The event covered ten blocks. The event continued at Ditmas Avenue until 1996, when KC took his show and a loyal following of thousands to its new home on Atlantic Avenue.

Spanning 10,000 square feet and a maximum occupancy of 4,300, the Hideaway is a spacious outdoor venue located at 2494 Atlantic, in an industrial section of Brooklyn. Since 1998, the Hideaway, which is owned and managed by KC, has been hosting its hallmark Summer Concert Series featuring today's leading soca, calypso, and reggae musical acts from around the Caribbean and here in the United States. Along with top performers, the Hideaway showcases some of the most popular Caribbean-American DJs. It is also equipped with a fully licensed bar, a professional sized stage, and an elevated VIP lounge where performing artist and special guests can view and enjoy the shows.

KC's Hideaway has become a major attraction for thousands of Caribbean music lovers from around the world who are drawn to Brooklyn, the Caribbean Capital of the United States, year after year to celebrate the West Indian Labor Day Carnival season, which begins in May. The venue stages around 66 shows a year and the number of concertgoers has steadily increased over the past three years. The concert grew from an audience of about 80,000 for the season in 1998, to approximately 165,000 for this season.

Mr. Speaker, St. Blasé ''KC'' Charles has developed and created a major cultural event in his community, which has brought thousands of people to Brooklyn each year to celebrate their Caribbean heritage. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES L. FLINN III

HON. ROBERT E. (BUD) CRAMER, JR.

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize James L. Flinn III upon his retirement after thirty-five years of outstanding civil service for the United States Army, the majority of which he served at Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville.

An Alabama native, Jim first entered the civil service in 1969 after receiving a Bachelor of Science Degree in Finance and Management from the University of Alabama. Through many challenging and diverse assignments, Jim has distinguished himself by his knowledge and ability to consistently lead others. He has been a constant and stabilizing presence at Redstone and has helped ensure Redstone's high level support of the warfighter.

Mr. Speaker, throughout Jim's remarkable career his hard work and dedication have been an inspiration for others and he has been recognized by his peers through numerous honors and awards. In 2003, he was awarded the Department of the Army Senior Executive Service Distinguished Presidential Rank Award, which is the highest honor a public sector employee can receive. In addition, in 1993 and 1998 he received the DA SES Meritorious Presidential Rank Award and most recently, he was awarded the 2004 National Defense Industrial Association Defense Management Award. Jim also serves on numerous boards and holds many leadership positions in North Alabama. Most recently, he was appointed by the Governor of Alabama to the Alabama Space Science Exhibit Commission, which overseas the U.S. Space and Rocket Center in Huntsville.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of North Alabama, I congratulate James L. Flinn on his thirty-five years of service to our country and wish him well in his retirement.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO PATRINE RICE

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I stand and recognize the selflessness of Patrine Rice of Grand Junction, Colorado. She has committed herself to the community, which is evident through her accomplished record as a volunteer. It is my pleasure to acknowledge Patrine's efforts to make her neighborhood stronger before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Patrine's career as a volunteer began when she moved to Grand Junction in 1986. Ever since, she has shelved books for six to eight hours per week at the Mesa County Public Library. Her work at the library is a natural extension of her years spent as a teacher of foreign language. Nearly eighty years old, self sufficiency would satisfy most at that distinguished age, but not Patrine. In addition to taking care of her yard and her garden, she finds time to dedicate herself to others. Through a program called ''Support Our Seniors,'' she drives other seniors requiring transportation to their destinations. In acknowledgement of her work as a volunteer in her area, she was recently honored with the ''Above and Beyond Award'' by the Mesa County Department of Human Services and the League of Women Voters.

Mr. Speaker, Patrine Rice's fondness for helping others contributes significantly to make Grand Junction a cohesive community. This spirit of volunteerism is a role model for others to follow. I thank Patrine for her civic pride and wish her the best in her future endeavors.

HONORING MOTHER THELMA MACK

HON. BENNIE G. THOMPSON

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize Thelma Mack, the epitome of a community mother, who spent her entire life being a stalemate and community pillar.

As an African-American woman of Indianola, Mississippi, born in April of 1934, Thelma endured the strife of segregated life in the South. During the Civil Rights era, Thelma exemplified her motherly role through housing and feeding passers-by committed to the equal rights mission.

Thelma Mack's most notable career work was in the area of childcare, where she started a daycare at her home. In August of 1968, Thelma became the Director of the Sunflower-Humphreys County Headstart, where she served for over 20 years.

Thelma Mack's faithful service and dedication to upholding the traditional family structure and values is the backbone of our communities. I applaud the life and legacy of Thelma Mack.

CHILD NUTRITION AND WIC REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2004

SPEECH OF

HON. JOHN A. BOEHNER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 2004

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, effective, fair vendor cost containment is critical to ensure that federal funds for the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) are managed appropriately. It is equally important that this objective be achieved with balance. WIC cost containment measures in S. 2507 should provide assurance that WIC-Only stores have prices that are consistent with traditional retail WIC vendors. It is the intent of Congress that the provisions of this bill be implemented in a fair and equitable manner. Cost containment measures contained in S. 2507 are not to be used to drive vendors out of the program.

Central to the vendor cost containment provisions is the authority to establish a series of vendor peer groups, each with its own competitive price criteria and allowable reimbursement levels. These vendor peer groups recognize that there are economic realities that cause pricing to vary among stores based on store size and geographic location. Large supermarket chains and box stores bypass wholesalers and purchase directly from manufacturers. Other stores, including some WIC-Only stores do not. Much more important, supermarket chains receive significant price discounts and concessions from manufacturers, such as allowances for product promotion, product shelf placement, etc. Independently owned stores, including independently owned chains and most WIC-Only stores, generally do not have the negotiating power to bargain for these benefits. As a result, independently owned stores may spend as much to purchase a product at wholesale as the retail price at a big chain. Because of this, vendor peer groups should allow for somewhat higher prices at small stores, relative to the larger supermarkets.

During implementation of vendor peer groups to achieve cost-containment, it is vital that transparent, objective criteria be used in defining peer group characteristics. It is expected that the criteria that have traditionally been used, the square footage of stores or the number of store registers, will continue to be used as appropriate. However, there is clear authority for adoption of other readily discernible, objective criteria that define appropriate peer group distinctions. WIC sales volume alone may not be an appropriate basis for defining peer groups since it accounts for only a portion of the sales of a given product and, in many situations, would be a poor indicator of factors that affect retail pricing decisions.

Special authority is provided for establishing competitive price criteria and allowable reimbursement levels for WIC-Only stores because those stores are insulated from marketplace price competition. It is not discriminatory to regulate them in a different manner. However, it would be inconsistent with the intent of Congress to use that unique regulatory treatment to apply a different standard to WIC-Only stores.

The objective of cost containment measures contained in S. 2507 is for WIC Program food costs to be the same regardless of whether program participants redeemed food instruments at a WIC-Only store or comparable market-based vendor. This neutrality objective is expressed by the dual statements in the bill: First, the bill provides for establishing and publishing competitive price criteria and allowable reimbursement levels that do not result in higher food costs in WIC-Only stores than in other authorized vendors. Second, the bill is clear that it is not to be construed to compel a State agency to achieve lower food costs in WIC-Only stores than in other authorized vendors. The objective is neutrality; for WIC-Only store costs to be at the same level as costs at comparable market-based vendors.

The language now before the House is different from the language reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, but the neutrality objective has been consistently pursued throughout this legislative process. Refinements in that language are intended to remove any question that the objective is cost neutrality.

S. 2507 includes language requiring that competitive price criteria and allowable reimbursement levels will ''not result in higher food costs if program participants redeem supplemental food vouchers'' at WIC-Only stores than other vendors. This language is a statement of the general cost neutrality objective previously explained. It is not to be construed to compel a rigid cost limitation test. Neither USDA nor individual states can know with absolute certainty or ongoing precision what food prices will be.

In the bill's system of vendor peer groups, provision is made for peer groups for WIC-Only stores. It does not necessarily require a single peer group for WIC-Only stores because not all WIC-Only stores are alike. WIC-Only store peer groups are to have their prices limited to the same levels as prices of comparable market-based stores. The legislation is not prescriptive in specifying characteristics that make stores ''comparable.'' However, as with the regulatory basis for defining peer groups, the basis for comparing peer groups must be objective and readily discernable. Absent compelling basis for a different approach, the same criteria as are used to distinguish between traditional vendor peer groups should be used to distinguish between peer groups in WIC-Only stores and to identify peer groups of comparable market-based stores.

Another provision that warrants close oversight is a prohibition on certain marketing practices for WIC-Only stores. The Department of Agriculture is charged with promulgation of a rule to prohibit WIC-Only stores from giving certain ''incentive items'' to WIC participants unless the vendor proves that the incentive items were obtained at no cost. The provision was adopted because of reports that some WIC-Only stores have given incentive items that are out of the bounds of traditional vendor marketing practices. It is the intent of this provision to halt such marketing practices and to ensure that the acquisition of incentive items does not increase WIC Program costs.

This provision is intended to prevent marketing practices that are wholly inconsistent with those that occur in traditional food retailing. It is not intended that this provision would be used to create a situation where WIC-Only stores are prohibited from employing the same marketing practices that traditional stores use to induce customers. The fact that this restriction applies only to WIC-Only stores must not be viewed as an intention to create marketing restrictions that afford traditional vendors a competitive advantage over WIC-Only stores. The Secretary has authority in its implementing rulemaking to require a State Agency to waive restrictions on marketing practices of WIC-Only stores where competing traditional vendors engage in those practices.

The bill makes clear that merchandise of nominal value and food are not to be prohibited. Likewise, this provision does not provide authority to restrict incentives other than free merchandise. Specifically, it does not authorize restriction of services provided to program participants that are attendant to the redemption of supplemental food vouchers, such as assistance in complying with WIC program rules as they select their purchases or assistance in getting the food to their transportation or home, even if traditional vendors do not provide such services. The provision only authorizes restriction of use of non-food merchandise in marketing practices; it does not authorize restriction of retail services. Therefore, the Department of Agriculture rulemaking is to prohibit merchandise gifts that are inconsistent with marketing practices of the traditional food retail trade, but not marketing practices that are employed by other authorized vendors.

Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues for including vendor provisions in S. 2507 that will provide for effective cost containment, particularly in WIC-Only stores that are generally insulated from marketplace price competition. This bill does a commendable job in providing fair and balanced regulation. WIC-Only stores have become very popular with WIC participants because of their convenience and service. That should continue.

INTRODUCING THE MMA TERRITORIAL EQUITY FOR LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS ACT OF 2004

HON. MADELEINE Z. BORDALLO

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will treat Medicare-eligible citizens of Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands the same as low-income citizens in the 50 States and the District of Columbia with respect to the Medicare prescription drug transitional assistance program and, beginning in 2006, premium and cost-sharing subsidies under the national Medicare prescription drug program. I am joined by Congresswoman DONNA M. CHRISTENSEN of the Virgin Islands, Congressman ENI F. H. FALEOMAVAEGA of American Samoa and Resident Commissioner ANÍBAL ACEVEDO-VILÁ of Puerto Rico as original co-sponsors of this legislation, which will provide health care equality to seniors in the insular areas with respect to the prescription drug benefit.

Currently, citizens of the insular areas contribute to the Medicare Trust Fund in the same manner as citizens in the 50 States and the District of Columbia. However, while the Medicare Modernization Act (MMA) created a transitional assistance program authorizing up to $600 in prescription drug subsidies for individual low-income Medicare beneficiaries in both 2004 and 2005, the territories receive only a small Federal block grant ($35 million in aggregate for both years to cover an estimated 450,000 Medicare beneficiaries) to help defray the costs of implementing local prescription drug plans through their respective public health departments. While exact data is not available, it is estimated that beneficiaries in the insular areas will receive significantly less relief than their counterparts in the 50 States and the District of Columbia. The MMA also does not include citizens in the territories for the purposes of the full national prescription drug plan authorized for Medicare beneficiaries beginning on January 1, 2006. Again, a separate Federal block grant is allotted to the territories in lieu of full participation.

Citizens of the insular areas face greater challenges to accessing adequate health care and prescription drug services than citizens in the States and the District of Columbia. Transportation costs and smaller economies of scale increase the cost of prescription drugs available in these areas. Furthermore, the insular areas are home to many different minority groups, many of which are genetically disposed to certain illnesses. For example, African American, Hispanic and Pacific Island Americans are all genetically disposed to diabetes, which is particularly prevalent among the age 40–and-over category. Therefore, access to prescription drugs will, in addition to increasing the quality of life among citizens of the insular areas, help resolve other health disparities such as prevention and treatment of genetically-disposed illnesses.

My legislation recognizes that health care inequalities exist with respect to the treatment of citizens in the insular areas. It further recognizes that, in the case of the new transitional assistance and prescription drug programs authorized under the MMA, citizens of the insular areas pay into the Medicare Trust Fund in the same manner as citizens in the 50 States and the District of Columbia and should, therefore, receive parity with respect to benefits. The current protocol for block granting prescription drug funding to the insular areas will ensure that health care disparities will continue to exist in these areas. The best solution with regard to fairness and parity is to allow citizens of the territories to participate directly in these Federal prescription drug assistance programs.

My bill would ensure parity with respect to the application of the MMA in the insular areas by eliminating the current prescription drug block grant formula in favor of including low-income Medicare beneficiaries in Federal prescription drug assistance programs. Support for this legislation will ensure that all Americans receive the benefits to which they are entitled under the MMA.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO MARTIEY MILLER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to recognize Martiey Miller for her outstanding dedication to her Grand Junction, Colorado community. Her effort as general manager at Cumulus Broadcasting in Grand Junction has done much to ensure the high quality of radio programming that characterizes the network. As Martiey moves on in her accomplished career, I believe it is appropriate to acknowledge her service to her community before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Martiey moved to Grand Junction nineteen years ago in order to be closer to family. She took a job as a receptionist at the local radio station and began her ascent through the ranks. Jumping at every opportunity, she took a position in sales, and then became the sales manager, before assuming the position of general manager at Cumulus Broadcasting in Grand Junction running KEKB and KOOL Radio. During her tenure at Cumulus Broadcasting she played an important role in turning a struggling company into a successful business.

For Martiey's efforts and successes at the station, she has been recognized nationally. In 1994, she was named the outstanding radio sales manager by the Radio Advertising Bureau. Two years later, she was honored as the Colorado's Broadcast Citizen of the Year by the Colorado Broadcasters.

Beyond her career, Martiey has been very active in the community. She previously held positions as the president of both the Kiwanis and Grand Junction Chamber of Commerce, as well as being a member of the JUCO committee and the Hilltop Board. Her most notable achievement in public service came as co-chair of the citizens' committee to pass a school bond issue and override the budget. Her efforts proved successful when the bond issue and budget override passed.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to recognize the success of Martiey Miller as a leader in the Grand Junction community. She is moving on to a new job in Minneapolis, but let it be known that she has left a great legacy of commitment and dedication to Grand Junction and the State of Colorado. I congratulate her on her new job and wish her continued success in her future endeavors.

A TRIBUTE TO GLENORE M. ANDERSON

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Glenore M. Anderson in recognition of her civic participation and business success.

Glenore is a living testimony to the power of hard work and effort. A banker by profession, it took Ms. Anderson eleven years to move up the corporate ladder to her current position as Vice President/Branch Manager of the Broadway and Driggs Street Office of HSBC Bank, one of the largest branches of HSBC Bank USA in Brooklyn, NY.

Born on the island of Trinidad and Tobago in the West Indies, Glenore immigrated to the United States in the summer of 1992. She moved here with her family after successfully completing her studies in her home country. A few short months after taking up residence in New York City, she was hired as a customer service representative with Marine Midland bank, which later became HSBC Bank USA. She quickly moved through the ranks and excelled as a sales representative, sales manager, OIC (officer in charge), and Vice President/Branch manager.

Glenore continues to exemplify this spirit of excellence in her current position as the Branch Manager. She continuously works toward motivating her staff of 16 by employing a ''hands on'' approach. In so doing, she demonstrates her abilities as a team player and team leader. She believes that it is important for her staff to see that she can do whatever task is required of them. Due to this type of cohesive effort and leadership skills, the operation of the branch has been very successful, which boasts assets totaling $105 million.

In addition to her expertise in banking, Glenore has also earned accolades for her efforts to strengthen the community. As such, she was honored with the Caribbean American Chamber of Commerce and Industry award for Women History makers of 2000; the Network Journal award for 40 Under Forty Achievers of 2001; and an award from the New Deeper Life Tabernacle in 2003.

During the month of February in 2001, 2002 and 2003, she brought this sense of community to the branch by hosting a celebration of Black History Month. The celebrations took the form of an art exhibit mounted in conjunction with Art Groupie.Com, which featured the works of four African/Caribbean American artists.

Married and the mother of one, Glenore receives strong support from her family and friends who believe whole-heartedly in her potential to reach the stars.

Mr. Speaker, Glenore M. Anderson has excelled in the business world while still finding time to contribute to her community. As such, she is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

WELCOMING KING MOHAMMED VI

HON. JOSEPH R. PITTS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. PAYNE and I welcome King Mohammed VI of Morocco to the United States and wish him well during his visit. We strongly urge His Majesty to uphold and implement his nation's agreements regarding the conflict over the Western Sahara. In addition, we urge His Majesty to uphold UN Security Council Resolution 1541 as a tribute to former Secretary of State James A. Baker III, who promoted international legality and justice while responding to the true long-term interests of both parties concerned in this conflict. His Majesty's support for the former U.N. Special Envoy Baker's Peace Plan would be the best contribution to peace and stability in the region. In addition, upholding the Peace Plan would demonstrate the effectiveness of the pursuit of national aspirations through nonviolence in the greater Middle East, a region that has been the target of much violence.

Mr. Speaker, last week, a number of Members sent a letter to President Bush requesting that during his meeting with the King, he strongly encourage His Majesty to implement the United Nations Settlement Plan in order to achieve a just, peaceful, and lasting resolution to the conflict over Western Sahara. The letter welcomed United Nations Security Council Resolution No. 1541 adopted April 29, 2004, which reaffirmed support for the Peace Plan for Self-Determination of the People of Western Sahara devised by UN Secretary General Kofi Annan's Special Envoy, James Baker, and shared deep regret over the departure of Mr. Baker and the circumstances that led to his resignation.

In addition, the letter welcomed the confidence-building measures taken by the Polisario Front which released a further 643 Moroccan POWs since July 2003; the number of POWs the Polisario has liberated since 1991 now totals 1,760. However, the Members of Congress expressed their regret that the Government of King Mohammed VI has not reciprocated in a commensurate way. The fact that the Sahrawis have opted for non-violence in the affirmation of their identity and have respected the terms of the cease-fire signed in 1991 between their representative and Morocco, is telling in terms of who is committed to settlement of the conflict.

Further, the letter expressed great concern that if the conflict between these two parties is left unresolved, it has the potential to disrupt peace and stability in the Maghreb region, thus threatening the interests of the United States. The Members expressed that the United States should use its unique influence in that region to press the Moroccan Government and the Polisario Front to agree to the Peace Plan and to implement it under the supervision of the United Nations. Although U.S. attention is primarily focused, as it should be, on Iraq and on the war against terrorism, the letter underscores the concern of the Members that the Western Sahara conflict needs to be addressed urgently and fairly to the benefit of the peoples of the region and in the interest of the United States. A peaceful, successful resolution of the conflict over Western Sahara will provide a signal to the Broader Middle East and North African region that in the 21st century there are successful alternatives to violence in the pursuit of national aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, we again extend our welcome to His Majesty and strongly urge him not to stand in the way of progress towards the peaceful resolution of the conflict over Western Sahara.

TRIBUTE TO THE WHITE HOUSE COMMISSION ON REMEMBRANCE AND THE ''SANDS OF REMEMBRANCE'' MEMORIAL AT NORMANDY BEACH

HON. PETE SESSIONS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the White House Commission on Remembrance and the Sands of Remembrance Memorial constructed this past Memorial Day at Normandy beach during the 60th anniversary of D-Day.

The White House Commission on Remembrance was established by Congress (PL 106–579) in 2000 and is an independent government agency honoring America's fallen, recognizing our men and women who have served our nation, and recognizing the veterans who have made the ultimate sacrifice as well as those who continue to serve our country.

The Commission also promotes the values of Memorial Day throughout the year.

In 2002, Carmella LaSpada, the Director of the White House Commission on Remembrance and sand sculptors John Gowdy (American), and Dale Murdock (Canadian) discussed an idea: to create, from the very sand on which blood was shed for freedom, a life-size and historically accurate sand sculpture on the Normandy Beach to commemorate the 60th Anniversary of D-Day. Thus, the ''Sands of Remembrance'' was born.

So from May 25 through May 29 a team of award-winning sand sculptors from the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom began an effort to create one of the most memorable and beautiful artistic memorials dedicated to one of the most heroic events in our history. To honor D-Day's fallen heroes in a symbolic and tangible way, this sand sculpture was an act of remembrance. This sculpted sand served as a touching and unique reminder of the sacrifices made for freedom to those who visited the memorial.

The team of award-winning sand sculptors created a 30 x 30 life-size sand sculpture of the D-Day landing commemorating the 60th Anniversary of that historic event. Dear Abby and Home Box Office (HBO) partnered with the White House Commission on Remembrance for the ''Sands of Remembrance'' memorial, initiated by the Commission.

Some of the reactions of those who witnessed the sculpture were:

''It brought tears to my eyes.''

''So inspiring.''

''It makes you feel gratitude.''

"It makes you think."
"Spectacular!"
"Superb!"
"Stupendous!"
"Awesome!"
"Astonishing!"
"Incredible!"
"I've never seen anything like it!"
"Magnificent."
"Marvelous."
"How could this have been done? It's unbelievable."
"What a tribute!"
"It's so personal and emotional."
"It touches the mind and the heart."
"No other commemoration for those who died has so much meaning."
"I feel the presence of those who died."

For the sculpture, fifty tons of sand from the five landing beaches: Gold, Juno, Omaha, Sword, and Utah, depicted soldiers landing on the Normandy Beaches.

For the first time in history sand sculptors John Gowdy and Matthew Deibert (United States); Mark Anderson and Edward Dudley (United Kingdom); and Dale Murdock (Canada) created a historically accurate sand sculpture. These sculptors worked for six days, putting in approximately 10 hours each day to create the sculpture. Throngs of thousands from many countries viewed the sculpture as they attended ceremonies marking the 60th Anniversary of D-Day. Of the international community of visitors that visited the "Sands of Remembrance", a Russian woman said emotionally, "It brought tears to my eyes."

The sand sculpture, located in Vierville-sur-Mer on Omaha Beach in Normandy, France, was dedicated on May 30 and remained on exhibit through June 8.

I want to thank the White House Commission on Remembrance, the sculptors who made the Sands of Remembrance a reality, and of course, the men and women who made freedom a reality on the shores of Normandy 60 years ago.

TRIBUTE TO EDWARD J. PHILBIN SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS CLINTON, MASSACHUSETTS

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, a little more than a week ago, Edward J. Philbin retired as Superintendent of Schools for the Town of Clinton, Massachusetts marking the end of an extraordinary thirty-five year career in public education. As a foreign language teacher, department chair, high school principal and administrator, Ed Philbin earned a well-deserved reputation for passionate and tireless devotion to the education and development of children and young people. On June 24, 2004, a reception attended by more than 200 of his colleagues, family members, former students and friends was held at the Clinton Town Hall to honor his lasting contributions to the communities of Clinton and Worcester. Due to votes scheduled here in the House of Representatives, I was unable to attend that reception to personally express my great respect, deep gratitude and best wishes to Ed Philbin for a happy and healthy retirement. However, I would like to submit for the record the remarks delivered at that tribute by his son Chris, a member of my congressional staff, which I think capture the essence of this remarkable man.

REMARKS BY CHRISTOPHER R. PHILBIN ON BEHALF OF THE PHILBIN FAMILY HONORING EDWARD J. PHILBIN ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT JUNE 24, 2004, FALLON MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM, CLINTON, MASSACHUSETTS

It has been alluded to earlier tonight, but I think it bears repeating. The only thing our Father has done longer and with more success than work in public education, is to be married to our Mother for nearly 36 years, his closest friend and most loyal supporter. So on behalf of our Mom, my brother Ed and his wife Lynn; my sister Cara, a high school English teacher in New Jersey, and her husband Tim who couldn't be here tonight; my brother Matthew and his longtime girlfriend Christie Mullin; and the rest of our family, we would like to thank all of you for being here to pay tribute to a guy that we happen to think very highly of. We are especially pleased that our Grandmother, Dorothy Philbin, is here tonight for this special occasion.

As many of you know, this retirement party was originally supposed to be a surprise because our Dad would have much preferred come June 30th to leave the keys on the desk with a kind note for Mr. Gaw and quietly slip out the side door. But that was not to be, and so when our Father found out about this party it required some persuasion from the gang of four that he affectionately refers to as the 'girls'—you all know them as Mary Neeley-Winkler, Marilyn Tierney, Maureen Weatherell and Christine Bonci—to convince him to allow this party to go forward. It was a closed-door meeting from which no minutes will be released but I'm guessing that when our Dad protested he was told something like "shut up, smile and be gracious!"

Our family would like to thank the four of them for the work they've put into planning and organizing this party and for being so good to our Dad these last five years; for putting a smile on his face; and for educating him on the finer points of KENO. We would especially like to thank Mary Neeley-Winkler who in addition to being our Dad's right hand these last several years has helped my brother and his wife find a house, plan my sister's wedding and given my brother Matt a part-time summer job. In short, we are all indebted to Mary and without saying much more, as far as we're concerned, you can't put a price on what Mary Neeley means to this family.

I'm not sure Matt and Cara will remember this, but Tripp certainly will. Growing up, one of the many summer rituals in our house was to accompany our Dad to the old high school in early August to help him unpack and date stamp the new foreign language text books for the upcoming school year. We would follow him down the long promenade into the school, past the trophy cases in the lobby, and down the hall to the second door on the left marked "STORAGE". At the time, that storage closet doubled as the chairman of the foreign language department's office and inside there were makeshift shelves filled with books toppling in on his desk with barely enough room to turn around. Our Dad would lead us out of his office into the language lab where we would fool around with the tape recorders and earphones for awhile before he put us to work unpacking the boxes of books. During the rather mundane process of unpacking the books, what quickly became apparent to us even at that early age, was the excitement and enthusiasm our Dad had for the coming school year. His passion was palpable. This is a man who clearly loved to teach.

It wasn't long after each school year started, that our parents would have scores of students parading through our house to videotape an installment of the long-running French Soap Opera or French Newscast that he had his students both script and act in as a way to learn the language. Each of us were granted a cameo appearance in those productions but I think Cara set the record by appearing in twelve consecutive editions of the French Soap Opera. When his students weren't shooting a movie in our house, they were there sampling foreign cuisine our Mother prepared for members of the International Club which our Dad founded or compiling photographs for the yearbook when he served as the faculty advisor to that activity. Our Dad never suffered from that notion that teachers had to keep their students at a safe distance; that you had to erect a firewall between what you did for work and what you did at home. He wanted to know all of his students and wanted his students to know him. Some of his students were actually granted the unique privilege of babysitting his children and many of them bear the physical and emotional scars to prove it. Others are still in therapy from the experience and were advised by their counselors not to come tonight.

When our Dad wasn't inviting students into our home, he was inviting them to travel around the world with him to London and Paris, to Quebec and to Rome, and he bears the physical and emotional scars from those trips. Our Dad sought to do more than just teach a language, he tried to introduce his students to another culture and he thought to do that best you often times had to go and meet those cultures where they are. His approach also included assigning his students novels by French authors and philosophers. In fact, he may be the only French teacher in the world who assigned Camus and Satre to high school students. In hindsight, I'm not sure that No Exit and The Stranger were the best choices for 16-year-old kids worried about finding a date for the prom. That may have been a little too much existential angst for them at that age but he assigned them nonetheless.

The one book that our Dad insisted every one of his students read and actually memorize parts of is his favorite book, the children's story, Le Petit Prince. Over the years, as I've grown to be friends with many of my Dad's former students, a number of them after inquiring about my Dad have spontaneously quoted a passage from that book to me: "Il faux exiger de chacun, ce que chacun peut donner," which loosely translated means "Ask of a person only that which they can give."

I think anyone who had our Dad as a student would agree that he certainly gave all of himself to teaching. He seemed to believe that just about anyone can instruct students on conjugating verbs or using the proper accent but it takes something extra, something special, to actually inspire them. He managed to do that—to inspire them—and perhaps the best evidence of that are the postcards and letters he continues to receive from former students that have traveled all around the world. A few have even become foreign language teachers which is something that I know gives him a tremendous amount of pride and satisfaction.

When the time came for our Dad to move from teaching into administration, I think we were all more than a little surprised because he never seemed to be inclined in that direction. Believe it or not, he is not an especially ambitious person. But, sometimes circumstances tap you on the shoulder and life pulls you in a certain direction. Or, to put it another way, the cream has a way of always rising to the top. As a principal, quadrant manager and superintendent, our Dad brought the same level of energy and passion he displayed in the classroom to the oftentimes dispassionate duties that those positions require. And, just as he used to bring his students into our home, he also brought the demands of those positions home with him. Particularly as a principal, I distinctly remember him being completely exasperated by his inability to help one child who was trapped in a terrible home situation. But he never gave up on that kid or any other for that matter. With an unrivaled work ethic he never stopped trying to find new and innovative ways to help children, improve the curriculum and expand and enrich the opportunities available to students. He resisted mediocrity at every turn and categorically rejected the suggestion that a student's academic success is based largely on socio-economic status or ethnicity. He rejected that idea because he knew otherwise. He had been a teacher and some of his best students were the children of immigrants and themselves first-generation Americans. The real difference, he would often tell us at the dinner table, is expectations. As a teacher and as an administrator he constantly tried to raise them and that, more than anything else will likely be remembered as the hallmark of his career.

I know it will not come as a surprise to any of you that in addition to being very dedicated to his job, our Dad has always been very devoted to his family. So much so, that we can scarcely remember a soccer game, a dance recital or an academic awards banquet, not mine by the way, where our Dad was not present. You could usually find him in the last row of the bleachers, or up against the wall in the back of the auditorium or along the fence at the soccer field but he was always there—a constant reassuring presence. Many years ago a friend of mine spotted my Dad at some event that one of my siblings was participating in and remarked to me without realizing how profound a statement he was making, '' Boy, your Dad is always where he is supposed to be.'' And, it struck me then as it does tonight as being so absolutely true. Our Dad is always where he is supposed to be.

Growing up, our Dad encouraged each of us to seek our own interests and he was content to let us find our way without trying to live his own life vicariously through us. He was always just one step behind, providing a nudge when needed, or sometimes a whisper and less frequently a bark but always right there. In fact, growing up there were two things we knew were important to our Dad without him ever having told us: (1) that we were expected to be educated; and (2) that we vote democrat. I think he thought that if we did the first, the second would follow naturally.

When the time came for us to apply to college, our parents made it abundantly clear that it was our job to get in to the best school we could and their obligation to pay for it. We would be expected to help but it was made plain to us that we would never be denied an opportunity based on the cost of tuition. For as far as we wanted to go, for as long as it took and whatever it took, they would be there to help us. And to that end, they did what many parents in this room have done. My Mom took a second job at the walk-in medical center in downtown Clinton and our Dad joined many of his fellow administrators, some of whom are here tonight, working nights and weekends as a security guard for the William Polack Security Agency, an elite, top-flight force of highly-trained professionals. Sometimes, our Dad even worked a third part-time job tutoring inmates at MCI-Shirley which was another job he loved.

You see, for our Dad, supporting education was not just a bumper sticker you slapped on the back of your car, or a slogan you repeated at PTA meetings. For him, education has been more than a career; it has been a way of life.

For all of our Dad's native intelligence and his worldly sophistication, he is really a very simple man with very simple tastes. He likes a cheap glass of wine and a good glass of scotch. He likes an all-you-can-eat buffet or any restaurant he has a coupon to. He likes a good long walk, preferably by the ocean. He likes short sermons at Mass. He likes 60 Minutes on Sunday nights. He likes a good book, the Boston Sunday Globe and anything Tom Farragher writes he believes is the best thing he has ever read. He also likes his so-called off-site construction meetings with Phil Bailey and pizza with Carol Ann Hamilton and Joan Strang. And, he likes family vacations or any other occasion, with the possible exception of tonight, that brings his children and grandchildren together.

In addition to these simple tastes, there are a handful of institutions that our Dad holds dear and the only one that rivals his affection for the Clinton Public Schools is his alma-matter, the University of Notre Dame, which he shares with both of his brothers, two of his four children, and his friend and former colleague Pat Burke.

About 12 years ago, my older brother came across a letter to the editor in the Notre Dame Student Newspaper, The Observer, which he shared with me. I saved it because it is as near-perfect description of our Dad that I have ever seen reduced to writing and if you'll indulge me a little bit longer, I'd like to read a portion of it for you now.

''A man is someone who cares passionately about things that need caring about. Someone who refuses to accept things that are wrong, even though accepting them would be easier. Someone who yells sometimes and fights sometimes and cries sometimes and is not afraid to do any of those things when he feels a need to. Someone who doesn't always win or even come close, but who know instinctively that trying is what counts. Someone Notre Dame is proud of.''

For fully thirty-five years, our Dad has tried and succeeded in making the students in his care and the schools systems in his charge the very best they could be. And so, by that standard, or any other for that matter, I think tonight it is fair to say:

Dad, the University of Notre Dame is proud of you. Your profession is proud of you. The Town of Clinton is proud of you. And, most especially, your children are, as we have always been, so very proud of you.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ROCKY FORD DAILY GAZETTE

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise today and pay tribute to the Rocky Ford Daily Gazette and its hard working staff in Rocky Ford, Colorado. The Daily Gazette has long been the source of local news for the community and year after year has demonstrated excellence in reporting. As they celebrate their one-hundredth Anniversary, let it be known that it is my pleasure to honor the Daily Gazette and their dedicated staff before this body of Congress and this nation today.

The paper was initially started in 1887 by Harry V. Alexander under the name of the Rocky Ford Enterprise. In 1904 the name was changed to the Rocky Ford Daily Gazette. Reaching its first centennial as the Daily Gazette demonstrates the staying power that results from the hard work and dedication the staff has shown. Fifty years ago, the Daily Gazette changed ownership when Ross and Anne Thompson purchased the town's newspaper, and it has remained in the family ever since. They have passed the responsibility of managing editor on to their son, J.R. Thompson.

As a result of their hard work and dedication serving the community, they have received several honors. Ross and Anne were awarded the 1979 honor of publisher of the year by the Colorado Press Association. In 1984, Anne won the Emma McKinney Award for her demonstration of distinguished service to the community. The Gazette now serves thousands of readers in two counties.

Mr. Speaker, the staff of the Rocky Ford Daily Gazette have committed to the betterment of their community by using the free press to inform their fellow citizens. The dissemination of information plays an important role in maintaining the tight knit society characteristic of our country's smaller towns. I congratulate the Gazette for one-hundred years of success and wish its staff all the best in their future endeavors.

HONORING PATRICIA MCCUNNIFF REGAN

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a notable Kansas City resident, Patricia McCunniff Regan, on her 79th birthday. Patty, as she is affectionately called by all who know her, has devoted her life to being a spirit of friendliness and benevolence wherever she goes. With her late husband, Bob, and friends and neighbors, she created ''Westports of the World,'' an assembly of Westport sister cities stretching across our great nation and the globe from New Zealand to Ireland. Global Westport residents have been meeting in a sister city since the assembly's inception. Westport in Kansas City hosted a pioneer meeting in 1985 and a worldwide convention in 1995.

Throughout her life, Patty has focused on creating positive change in the community around her by participating in campaigns and exercising her rights as a citizen. She assists those in need and is a model of exemplary public service. Patty and Bob worked for civil rights and fair housing in the 1960's while raising their children. As she approaches her eighth decade, Patty continues to make our community and country a better place.

Patty and Bob welcomed nine children into this world. Without doubt, their children and grandchildren are a tribute and a great source of pride. Despite e.g.. losing son Timothy at age seven in 1961 and husband Bob in 1986, Patty maintains her "joie de vivre." Terry Leager, Amy Schulz, Danny Regan, Becky Regan, Peggy Regan, Jenny Krizman, Patrick Regan, and Carol Braun are fortunate, indeed, as are their children. They exemplify the generosity of character and fun loving spirit of Patty and Bob.

Patty truly lives the axiom she taught her children—to think of others before oneself. She demonstrates selfless optimism and generosity through her community activities, by her service as a Eucharistic minister in the Guardian Angels parish, and in giving blood every eight weeks for most of her adult life. I have personally benefited from her loving generosity on numerous occasions in the more than quarter century we Irish lassies have depended upon each other. What would Christmas be without Regan cookies and luminarias created at their Roanoke abode?

Mr. Speaker, please join me in congratulating Patty Regan on her 79th birthday. I am grateful for her friendship and am honored to recognize her for a lifetime of giving back to her community. Westport is a better place for her being in it, as are all the lives she has touched in her 79 years of extraordinary good works.

A TRIBUTE TO ANTHONY JOSEPH

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Anthony Joseph in recognition of his entrepreneurial success in the marketing and communications field.

As a product of New York City public school system, Anthony parlayed his academic achievement and his experience as an All-City championship football player into a walk-on position on the Boston University squad. Anthony promoted campus parties and events to subsidize his tuition. After graduation, he quickly turned a temp job in The New York Times' finance department into a staff position in the paper's marketing department.

With just one experience as an employee with the New York Times, Anthony combined his knowledge of urban landscape with his marketing expertise to incorporate the fastest rising marketing/communication company in the urban field. Anthony laid the foundation for his urban success by moonlighting with Vital Marketing Group VMG while still at the Times. Through contacts at a major apparel and an advertising agency, Anthony was able to participate in business meetings where he was able to present strategies, which, over time, turned into contracts with Tommy Hilfiger, Hush Puppies, and Wolverine Boots.

Eventually, Anthony's growing client base necessitated his departure from the Times. He partnered with the African-American media company that established the billboard beachhead on Harlem's 125th Street, utilized by so many entertainment companies at the time. Together they formed VMG, with Anthony leading the charge. After merely four years of business, its roster counts big-timers such as the U.S. Army, Nike, Tommy Hilfiger, Coca Cola, Remy Martin, Foot Action, Posner Cosmetics and Universal Records to name a few. It has an income of over $7 million in annual revenue.

Vital Marketing's unusual methodology and its consistent success can be credited in great part to its founder and president, Anthony Joseph. The Queens-bred son of a Jamaican mother and Puerto Rican father, Anthony, understood the significance of culture early on as it related to marketing.

In May 2001, VMG was presented with the Black Enterprise Rising Star Award, in honor of the high revenues garnered by VMG's high profile clients. A year later, VMG offered further proof that they were on the assent when they turned a cold call and a year of conversation into a multimillion dollar contract with the U.S. Army via advertising giant Leo Burnett.

Mr. Speaker, Anthony Joseph has created a successful company through his own hard work and ingenuity. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO GRETCHEN SEHLER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today to pay tribute to Gretchen Sehler of Steamboat Springs, Colorado. As a ski instructor and an avid outdoorswoman, Gretchen has inspired the community to take full advantage of the outdoor recreation opportunities in her community. I would like to join my colleagues here today and recognize Gretchen before this body of Congress and this nation.

Gretchen first moved to Steamboat Springs to work as a ski instructor in 1983. Every winter she dedicates herself to teaching interested people the fundamentals of skiing and, in doing so, has had the opportunity to share her passion for the outdoors. When the ski slopes close for the year, her desire for outdoor recreation remains. In the past, she has spent time as a life guard at the Steamboat Springs Health and Recreation Center, but her current passion is mountain biking. Working for the Parks and Recreational Services Department, she has organized a series of eight mountain bike races involving over eight-hundred riders. Recently, Gretchen and two friends started Rocky Peak Productions and created a new twenty-four hour endurance mountain bike race in Steamboat Springs.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to recognize Gretchen Sehler and her commitment to improving the lifestyles of her fellow citizens. Outdoor recreation is very important in Colorado's communities and Gretchen's work exemplifies this spirit for recreation. I thank Gretchen for her work and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO MR. WALTER ALLEN III

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute and congratulate Mr. Walter Allen, III as the newly appointed director of the California Youth Authority by Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger. As the director, Mr. Allen oversees one of the largest youth corrections agencies in the nation, with over 4,000 wards, nine institutions, four camps, 16 parole offices and two regional parole offices.

Born and raised in Oakland, California, Mr. Allen earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Urban Planning from California Polytechnic University in Pomona. Following graduation, Mr. Allen began his long and dedicated career in law enforcement beginning as a Police Officer with the Chino Police Department and transitioning to a Special Agent for the California Department of Justice, Bureau of Narcotic Enforcement. Over the past 20 years, Mr. Allen has distinguished himself in every avenue of his career where he has earned special agent assignments and leadership appointments. Most recently, Mr. Allen served as the Assistant Chief for the California Department of Justice, Bureau of Narcotic Enforcement.

In 1997, Mr. Allen became active in local politics and was elected to serve on the city council for Covina, California, where he has actively participated as Mayor Pro Tem and Mayor. Currently, Mr. Allen serves as council member and continues to work towards maintaining a high quality of life for the citizens of Covina.

Throughout his life, Mr. Allen has demonstrated his commitment to public service through his career and political activism. He has proven to be an honorable citizen and has admirably embraced his civic duty to his country. I am proud to honor Mr. Allen's achievements and congratulate him on his new appointment.

THE TEACHER PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTES ACT

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Teacher Professional Development Institutes Act, legislation based on a unique and highly successful partnership between the New Haven Public School System and Yale University. Based on the model which has been operating at Yale for over 25 years, my proposal would establish eight new Teacher Professional Development Institutes throughout the country each year over the next five years.

Today, it is more important than ever for our nation's teachers to have access to the skills and resources they need to prepare our children for the future. Since 1978, the Institute has been providing area educators with the opportunity to strengthen themselves professionally through annual seminars in the humanities and sciences—by working with program participants to bring the curriculum and lessons of the seminars to the classroom.

In this bill, every Teacher Institute would consist of a partnership between an institution of higher education and the local public school system in which a significant proportion of the students come from low-income households. The program strengthens the present teacher workforce by giving participants the opportunity to gain more sophisticated content knowledge and a chance to develop curriculum units that can be directly applied in classrooms. For example, the Yale-New Haven program it is based on has offered several thirteen-session seminars each year, led by Yale faculty, on topics that teachers have selected to enhance their mastery of the specific subject area that they teach.

The result is that teachers have been found to gain confidence in their deeper understanding of the subject matter and enthusiastically deliver their new curriculum to the classroom—qualities that translate into higher expectations for their students and in turn, higher student achievement.

And student achievement is what this effort is about. By allowing teachers to determine the seminar subjects—by providing them the resources to develop curricula for their classroom and their students—this legislation lifts up our students by empowering teachers. With a K through 12 teacher shortage forecast in the near-future, those already teaching will do the majority of teaching in the classrooms in the very near future. As such, it is imperative that we invest in methods to strengthen our present teaching workforce.

Like the Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute before it, we believe this program can provide a model for communities around the country. And so, it is my distinct honor to introduce the Teacher Professional Development Institutes Act, and I look forward to its consideration in this body.

CONGRATULATING FOR THE LOVE OF THE LAKE

HON. JEB HENSARLING

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. HENSARLING. Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to congratulate a very special organization on a very special anniversary. On Saturday, July 10, 2004, White Rock Lake's ''For the Love of the Lake'' organization will mark the 100th consecutive month of shoreline spruce-ups that have helped keep the shores of White Rock Lake clean and the surrounding park looking beautiful.

For the Love of the Lake is a truly grassroots effort, made up of caring volunteers who are dedicated to improving White Rock Lake and the surrounding area. The organization is a shining example of conservation and volunteerism in action. For the Love of the Lake shows what good people can do when they come together to accomplish something for the betterment of their community.

My wife, Melissa, and our two young children enjoy White Rock Lake very much. The lake area is important, not just to those who live in the neighboring streets, but to all of the people that come to White Rock Lake to enjoy the beautiful landscape, water, trees and parks.

For the Love of the Lake volunteers understand that we have a duty to protect and preserve these wonderful natural resources for our children and future generations. Since its inception in 1995, thousands of people have given their time, effort and energy in a variety of ways to help keep White Rock Lake looking beautiful, from picking up litter, to painting murals and buildings at the park, to attending fund raising events, or helping with White Rock Marathons.

Over the years, For the Love of the Lake has been honored with countless awards and recognized by numerous organizations for their outstanding work. Dallas Observer magazine said, ''For the Love of the Lake is easily one of Dallas' best volunteer service organizations,'' and I could not agree more.

On behalf of all of the people in Dallas, especially those who live in neighborhoods near White Rock Lake, I would like to congratulate the For the Love of the Lake organization and volunteers on their tremendous accomplishment. I would also like to thank them for their continued and valuable service to our community.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO EDMUND CHELEWSKI

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a solemn heart that I rise today to recognize the life and passion of Edmund Chelewski of Rifle, Colorado. He will be remembered as a dedicated servant to our nation and an innovative farmer in his community. As his family and community mourn his passing, I would like to take this opportunity to remember the life of this exceptional man.

Edmund was born and raised in Saint Paul, Nebraska. During the Korean War he faithfully served in the United States Army as a member of H Company in the First Infantry Regiment. When he returned from the war he worked as a farmer in Nebraska and Colorado for over two decades. In 1948, he married Doris Price. He and his family moved to the town of Rifle in 1963. His innovativeness thrived in Rifle. He was the first to use an irrigation system on Silt Mesa and he developed farm equipment that he would later patent. One piece of farm equipment that he designed and patented was shared with the world at the 1965 World's Fair. He saw an opportunity in 1972 to get out of farming and open Chelewski Pipe & Supply, but still remained active in cultivating agriculture in his garden whenever he had the time. Edmund was active in the community as a supporter of Future Farmers of America and as a member of the Bookcliff Soil Conservation District.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute to the life of Edmund Chelewski. He will be remembered in his community for his creativity and inventiveness, his hard work as a farmer, and his commitment as a soldier. My heart goes out to his family and community during this difficult time of bereavement.

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS KLESTIL, PRESIDENT OF AUSTRIA

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, Thomas Klestil, President of the Republic of Austria, passed away just two days before he was to turn over the office of President to his elected successor. President Klestil was a man of distinction whom I knew, admired and considered a friend.

Thomas Klestil was born in Vienna in 1932, the youngest of five children of a tram driver. After completing a doctorate in economics and business in 1957, he entered the Austrian diplomatic service. Some 18 years of his diplomatic career of 35 years was spent in the United States, first as a junior diplomat in Washington and later as Consul General in Los Angeles, Ambassador to the United Nations in New York, and then as Ambassador to the United States here in Washington. I worked with him during the time he served as Ambassador in Washington. Following his election as President, I met with him in Vienna on more than one occasion.

Mr. Speaker, Thomas Klestil was elected to the office of President at a difficult time in Austria's post-World War II history. His predecessor as Austrian President was Kurt Waldheim, former Secretary General of the United Nations. Austria's international reputation was severely damaged by the disclosure that Waldheim had lied about his Nazi military service during World War II.

Klestil played an important role in helping to restore Austria's image, and in acknowledging and taking steps to remedy the ugly taint of Austria's Nazi past. He spoke out numerous times about Austria's complicity with the Nazi regime during World War II, and he expressed sympathy and regret for the victims of the Holocaust. During an official visit to Israel in 1994, he spoke before the Israeli Knesset and reaffirmed a statement made by Chancellor Franz Vranitzky in 1991 acknowledging the responsibility of Austrians in the Holocaust and admitting that Austrians were not only victims, but also active collaborators with Hitler's regime.

Mr. Speaker, although Klestil was elected President as the candidate of the Austrian People's Party, he clashed with the party leader Wolfgang Schossel. He was critical of Schossel's decision to form a coalition government with the far-right Freedom Party of Jorg Haider in 2000. Several months of international diplomatic sanctions against Austria resulted from the formation of that government. Though the role of Austrian President is largely ceremonial and representational, Klestil demonstrated his disapproval of the coalition government with the Freedom Party by publicly exhibiting stern disdain as he ceremonially swore the new government into office.

He later stated in an interview, ''The Freedom Party is not a Nazi party, but, unfortunately, the highest officials of this party continue to use a language which disqualifies them for every political office.''

President Klestil also played an important role in strengthening Austria's ties with the Central European states emerging from almost half a century of Soviet domination. In 1993, the year after his election, he began convening yearly meetings with the heads of state of these new democracies, which strengthened their ties with Austria and also helped the new governments to strengthen their commitment to democratic principles.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in expressing our most sincere condolences to the family of President Thomas Klestil and to the people of Austria on the death of this principled statesman, who has done so much to foster positive relations with the United States and to help his country and its people deal with their past.

COMMEMORATING COMPLETION OF PHASE ONE OF THE JOHN N. HARDEE AIRPORT EXPRESSWAY

HON. JOE WILSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I along with my colleague, Mr. BARRETT of South Carolina, would like to take this opportunity to commemorate the completion of Phase One of the John N. Hardee Airport Expressway. This will be announced to the people of South Carolina at a ribbon cutting ceremony on Monday, July 10. The completion of this 2.8 mile expressway will provide easy and direct access to the Columbia Metropolitan Airport.

This expressway, which widened Airport Road from Airport Boulevard in Cayce to Platt Springs Road in Springdale, will make a vast difference in the way South Carolinians and visitors commute to the airport. We are looking forward to the next and final phase of the project, which is currently under design and should begin construction in 2006. This will provide for a new four-lane road extending Airport Road to Interstate 26. Coupled with the success of the John N. Hardee Expressway, these two new roadways will reduce traffic and provide direct access to the growing Columbia Metropolitan Airport by passenger and cargo vehicles, removing some 25,000 vehicles each year from the local network surrounding the airport.

We would like to thank the people at the South Carolina Department of Transportation (SCDOT) for all of their hard work in completing this important project. Mrs. Elizabeth Mabry, Executive Director of SCDOT, and Mr. John Hardee, SCDOT Second District Commissioner for whom the expressway is named, thank you for your tireless dedication in getting this phase of the project completed. This expressway will be helpful to the people of the entire state of South Carolina, and for this you are appreciated.

HONORING THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF DR. BRENDAN GODFREY

HON. CIRO D. RODRIGUEZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Dr. Brendan Godfrey, a great scientist, leader, and friend. As the Deputy Director of the 311th Human Systems Wing at Brooks City-Base, formerly Brooks Air Force Base, since 1998, Dr. Godfrey has served the medical and human system needs of the Air Force and the San Antonio community.

Dr. Godfrey has proven his leadership skills and abilities, to the benefit of Brooks, the Air Force, and the San Antonio community. Dr. Godfrey has been a true partner in the transformation of Brooks from an Air Force base to the first city-base in the country. He has provided good counsel, creative ideas, and tremendous energy to make this first-ever transition a reality.

Brooks City-Base has greatly benefited from Dr. Godfrey's 30 years of scientific and managerial experience. He has successfully managed large staffs and budgets, and under Dr. Godfrey's direction, Brooks City-Base has increased its productivity and has forged unprecedented community partnerships that have benefited both Air Force warfighters and the local community.

Dr. Godfrey's accomplishments have distinguished him from his peers, and his colleagues have recognized his leadership skills by naming him the Director of the Air Force Office of Scientific Research. I am happy to congratulate him on this new assignment; however, I know Brooks City-Base and the San Antonio community will miss his valuable service. I am confident that he will continue to create innovations that will enable the Air Force to better serve its military members and our country.

It is a pleasure to recognize and thank Dr. Godfrey for his many contributions and public service. I ask the Members of the House of Representatives to join me in honoring this gentleman on his promotion as the new Director of the Air Force Office of Scientific Research and wish Dr. Brendan Godfrey and his family all the best.

SENATE—Friday, July 9, 2004

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Lord God Almighty, you have set Your glory above the heavens. Righteous and true are Your ways. You alone are the King of nations. Search our hearts and examine our motives so that we may walk in Your paths. Help us to put our mistakes and blunders behind us as we strive for Your ideal of sacrificial service. Remind us often of the price that was paid for our redemption.

Today, give our lawmakers the grace to glorify You. Bless them as they wrestle with the complicated issues of freedom. May their debates be characterized by candor and civility. In Your unfailing love, lead us all to paths of abundant liberty.

We pray this in Your Holy Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, today the Senate will be in a period of morning business throughout the day. The majority leader announced last night there will be no rollcall votes during today's session, but Senators are encouraged to come to the Senate floor to speak on the constitutional amendment regarding marriage, which has been slated for floor consideration early next week.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business with the first 4 hours equally divided between the two leaders or their designees.

As a Senator from Alaska, I ask I be notified if anyone makes a motion pertaining to any appropriations bill this morning.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION RELATING TO MARRIAGE

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I rise today to start what I hope will be constructive debate on my amendment, S.J. Res. 40, the marriage amendment, which states:

Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman.

Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

Before making my formal comments I would also like to express my sincere gratitude to my colleagues who have cosponsored this amendment. It has taken countless hours of study and discussion to get to this point and each of our cosponsors has shown courage and commitment to protecting marriage.

I would like to express my appreciation to the majority leader for his commitment and leadership. Without the support of Senate leadership, the public may never have had an opportunity to address this vitally important issue in a democratic body.

I also thank President Bush for his early commitment to the principles embodied in this amendment. Marriage, the union between a man and a woman, has been the foundation of every civilization in human history. The definition of marriage crosses all bounds of race, religion, culture, political party, ideology, and ethnicity. Marriage is embraced and intuitively understood to be what it is. Marriage is a union between a man and a woman.

As an expression of this cultural value, the definition of marriage is incorporated into the very fabric of civic policy. It is the root from which families, communities, and government are grown. Marriage is the one bond on which all other bonds are built.

This is not some controversial ideology being forced upon an unwilling populace by the Government. It is in fact the opposite. Marriage is the ideal held by the people and Government has long reflected this. The broadly embraced union of a woman and a man is understood to be the ideal union from which people live and children best blossom and thrive.

As we have heard in hours upon hours of testimony in various Senate committees over the last 2 years, marriage is a pretty good thing. A good marriage facilitates a more stable community, allows kids to grow up with fewer difficulties, increases the lifespan and quality of life of those involved, reduces the likelihood of incidences of chemical abuse and violent crime, and contributes to the overall health of the family. It is no wonder so many single adults long to be married, to raise kids, and to have families branching out in every direction.

Today there are numerous efforts to redefine marriage to be something that it isn't. When it comes to same-gender couples there is a problem of definition. Two women or two men simply do not meet the criteria for marriage as it has been defined for thousands of years. Marriage is, as it always has been, a union between a man and a woman. American society has come to recognize the stability and commitment of same-gender couples in a way unimaginable in many other countries. In some State's partnership laws and civil union statutes have been created—contractual bonds among same-gender couples—to symbolize and codify these relationships. Some cities and States have elected to express this legal recognition while others have not. Some employers extend benefits to same-gender partners while others do not. In virtually every town and city, America's tolerance and respect for diversity is second to none in the world. I believe that our democracy continually, systemically expresses these values.

Marriage, however, is what it is. It is a union between a man and a woman. Gays and lesbians are entitled to the same legal protections as any one else. Gays and lesbians have the right to live the way they want to. But they do not have the right to redefine marriage.

I believe the Framers of the Constitution felt that this would never be an issue, and if they had it would have been included in the U.S. Constitution. Like the vast majority of Americans it would have never occurred to me that the definition of marriage, or marriage itself, would be the source of controversy. A short time ago it would have been wholly inconceivable that this definition—this institution that is marriage—would be challenged, redefined, or attacked. But we are here today because it is.

Traditional marriage is under assault. I say assault because the move to redefine marriage is taking place not through democratic processes such as State legislatures or the Congress or ballot initiatives around the Nation. This assault is taking place in our courts and often in direct conflict with the will of the people, State statute, Federal statute, and even State constitutions.

Activists and lawyers have devised a strategy to use the courts to redefine marriage. This strategy is a clear effort to override public opinion and the long standing composition of traditional marriage and to force same-sex marriage on society.

Over the course of the last 10 years, traditional marriage laws have been challenged in courts across the Nation. Alaska, Arizona, California, Florida, Hawaii, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Vermont, Washington, and West Virginia have all seen traditional marriage challenged in court. Cases are pending today in 11 of those States. But this is not a strategy based on tilting at windmills. It is a strategy that has been employed with a good deal of success.

The first success in this legal strategy was in Vermont in 1999. The Vermont State Supreme Court ordered State legislators to either legalize same-sex marriage or create civil unions. The second, and to date the most widely covered success in the effort to destroy traditional marriage, came more recently in the State of Massachusetts where four judges forced the entire State to give full marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

This edict came despite the fact that the populace of Massachusetts opposed this redefinition of marriage and despite the fact that no law had ever been democratically passed to authorize such a radical shift in public policy. Proponents of same-sex marriage have shopped carefully for the right venues, exploited the legal system, and today stand ready to overturn any and all democratically crafted Federal or State statute that would stand between them and a new definition of humanity's oldest institution.

The question of process is very important in this debate—it is in fact the very heart of this debate. While recent court decisions handed down by activist judges may not respect the traditional definition of marriage, these decisions also highlight a lack of respect for the democratic process. No State legislature has passed legislation to redefine the institution of marriage. Not one.

Any redefinition of marriage has been driven entirely by the body of government that remains unaccountable and unelected—the courts.

Many colleagues do not feel we should be talking about marriage in the Senate. I say we must. Our government is a three-branch government. The Congress is the branch that represents the people most directly. We have a duty to, at the very least, discuss the state of marriage in America. If we do not take this up, if we do not overcome procedural hurdles and objections we abdicate our responsibility. We will allow the courts sole dominion on the state and future of marriage. This Senate, the world's most deliberative body, must provide a democratic response to the courts.

Legislatures across the country have joined Congress in recent years in affirming a 1996 law called the Defense of Marriage Act—DOMA. DOMA defines marriage at the Federal level as a union between a man and a woman and essentially prohibits one State from forcing its will on another on the question of marriage. This bipartisan legislation passed with the support of more than three-quarters of the House of Representatives and with the support of 85 Senators before being signed into law by then-President Bill Clinton. To date 38 States have enacted statutes defining marriage in some manner, and 4 States have passed State constitutional amendments defining marriage as a union of one man and one woman. These State DOMAs and constitutional amendments, combined with Federal DOMA, should have settled the question as to the democratic expression of the will of the American public. As I outlined before, these laws—these expressions of the public—have been ignored by the activist courts.

State court challenges in Massachusetts or Vermont or Maryland may seem well and good to those concerned with the rights of States to determine most matters, a position near and dear to my heart. These challenges, however, have spawned greater disrespect, even contempt, for the will of the other States than any of us could have predicted. It seems to me that there are long-term implications for both Federal DOMA and the rights of States to define unions through either state DOMA or the State constitutional amendment process. It is clear to me that we are headed to judicially mandated recognition of same-gender couples regardless of State or Federal Statute.

The same-sex marriage proponents achieved some success in Vermont and Massachusetts by forcing the hand of those States' legislatures.

The national effort to redefine marriage has also been buoyed by decisions made by the U.S. Supreme Court. In June 2003 the Court inferred that a right to same-sex marriage could be found in the U.S. Constitution in Lawrence v. Texas. A variety of experts, including Justice Scalia and Harvard Professor Lawrence Tribe, forecast that this decision points to the end of traditional marriage laws—including Federal and State DOMAs. The Massachusetts court relied heavily on the Lawrence decision to strike down the State's traditional marriage law in that Goodridge case. The court further specifically threatened and questioned the validity of DOMA and traditional marriage laws around the Nation.

When Goodridge took effect on May 17 of this year, same-sex couples became entitled to Massachusetts marriage licenses.

In anticipation of Goodridge, a handful of local officials in New York, California, and Oregon began issuing licenses to same sex couples in February and March. To date, through the combined efforts of lawless local officials and those licenses issued in Massachusetts, couples from at least 46 State shave received licenses in those jurisdictions and returned to their home States. These 46-plus States are State and Federal DOMA challenges just waiting to happen. A couple will file for recognition—sue for recognition—under the full faith and credit clause. What we know about the Lawrence decision, that all traditional marriage laws are unconstitutional, dooms those State DOMAs.

There is a case pending in Seattle today to force recognition of an Oregon marriage license. More of these cases are expected and we look forward to nothing less than a patchwork of marriage laws, crafted by judges and forced on to one State from another outside the democratic process, regardless of the will of the voters.

It is important to highlight what is going on in the State of Nebraska where an even more odious turn of events is unfolding. Nebraskans passed a State constitutional amendment, defining marriage as a union between a man and a woman, that passed with 70 percent of the vote. The ACLU and the Lambda Legal Foundation are now suing Nebraska in a Federal court to undo the will of the voters.

According to testimony in the Senate Judiciary Constitution Subcommittee, Nebraska Attorney General Jon Bruning, whose office moved to dismiss the case and was denied, the language in the court's order signals that Nebraska will very likely lose the case at trial. I find it chilling that the will of an entire State, expressed democratically, may be undone by a Federal judge in an unelected position and tenured for life.

So we find ourselves here today, seeking to debate an amendment to the United States Constitution that reads in its entirety as follows:

> Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman. Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

Our amendment defines marriage as it has been defined for thousands of years in hundreds of cultures around the world. This text further defines that any establishment or nonestablishment of civil unions or partnership laws be created democratically, by the States themselves, and not by courts.

I have said it time and time again and I say here today for the record, the amendment does not seek to prohibit in any way the lawful, democratic creation of civil unions. It does not prohibit private employers from offering benefits to same-gender partners. It denies no existing rights.

What our amendment does is to define and protect traditional marriage at an appropriate level, the highest possible level—the Constitution. Importantly, the consideration of this amendment in the Senate represents the discussion of marriage in America in a democratic body of elected officials. This is something too long denied this important topic.

I have heard from those who claim this amendment discriminates against people; that the very definition of marriage is somehow a tool for oppression.

To those who believe that our marriage protection amendment is discriminatory, I ask them this: Do you truly believe that marriage, the traditional and foundational union between a man and a woman, is discrimination? Is it discrimination to hold as ideal that a child should have both a mother and a father?

It is important to make clear that on the question of federalism and States' rights, I stand where I always have. While an indisputable definition of marriage will be a part of our Constitution, all other questions will be left to the states. Gregory Coleman, former Solicitor General of the State of Texas, testified before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution last September and made the following statement on this matter:

> Some have objected to a proposed constitutional amendment on federalism grounds. These concerns are misplaced. The relationship between the states and the Federal government is defined by the Constitution and, a fortiori, a constitutional amendment cannot violate principles of federalism and States' rights.
> A federal constitutional amendment is perhaps the most democratic of all processes—because it requires ratification by three-fourths of the states—and simply does not raise federalism concerns. The real danger to States' rights comes from the recognition of unenumerated constitutional rights in which the states have had no participation.

I share those sentiments and cannot express them any more clearly. We stand today at the commencement of the most democratic, most federalist process in all our government. Those around the country who have watched as activist courts have wildly disregarded these principles I say to you, watch the Senate; watch the House of Representatives, watch your elected officials and see where they stand on this most important debate.

This body and that on the other side of the Capitol represent the American people more fully and completely than any other and it is time we make this discussion truly national and truly democratic.

Those serving in the Congress understand that there is a great deal of emotion on both sides of this issue, and not every one of us will agree on this matter. It is my hope that we can agree that in matters concerning marriage, the most fundamental of all social institutions, this debate can not take place exclusively in the courts. The democratic process compels this Congress to discuss marriage and what is taking place—the judicial redefinition of marriage.

Marriage, the union between a man and a woman, has been the foundation of every civilization in human history. This definition of marriage crosses all bounds of race, religion, culture, political party, ideology, and ethnicity. It is not about politics or discrimination, it is about marriage and democracy. It is incumbent upon us to remember that and to move forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORNYN). The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I thank Senator ALLARD for his willingness to change and clarify the proposal he makes today so that it leaves open to the States the elbow room that is appropriate to define legal rights for nontraditional families, gays and lesbians, and others.

It is a fact that sociologists say marriage, as we have traditionally known and practiced it, is the ideal circumstance for the creation and rearing and nurturing of children. But it is a fact that not all children have the opportunity of a family with a mother and a father, though what marriage does as a legal institution is to say to children here and those yet unborn that there is a legal framework in which they can enjoy protection and have the society of a mother and a father.

It is clear as we wrestle with this sensitive issue, it is clear to the conscience of the American people that boys and girls need moms and dads. Not all get them, but the law has provided a framework for it. Those children who do not have it should also enjoy legal protections not unlike those that are enjoyed in the institution of marriage.

In all the time that I have been a U.S. Senator, I have been an advocate of gay rights. Yet throughout that time I also have believed it right to defend traditional marriage. I have tried hard to be clear, consistent, and careful about this issue and this debate. I know my position as being for gay rights but for traditional marriage is a disappointment to many of my gay and lesbian friends.

I also note for the record I get little credit from the right because I do advocate for many gay rights. Indeed, the other night on his radio program, Dr. James Dobson said to a national audience, which included many Oregonians, that I was not going to vote for traditional marriage. I wish he hadn't done that. I believe that is a form of bearing false witness because I have been clear and I have been consistent on this point. He may owe me no apology, but I wish he would make it clear to my constituents.

I make no apology for supporting many of the needs of gay and lesbian Americans. Issues of public safety, housing, employment, benefits: these are rights that we take for granted, rights which many of them have felt out of reach. So I have believed it is not just right to advocate for these things but it even be a part of my belief system to advocate for those who are oppressed and to show tolerance by helping those in need. Matthew Shephard comes to mind, and many others who have suffered hate crimes against them in the most vicious of fashion. I think our society is changing its heart on these issues in ways that Americans want to be tolerant, they want to be careful, they want to say to gays and lesbians that we love you, we include you, we care about you.

But in saying that, I think many feel intuitively to be careful on the issue of marriage. Marriage is a word. Words have meaning. Few words have more meaning to our culture and our future and our civilization than marriage because marriage ultimately is about more than just consenting adults. It is about the natural rearing and nurturing of children, preparing them for citizenship under the most ideal circumstances possible.

Senator ROBERT BYRD often comes to this Chamber, and I love it when he quotes Cicero, an ancient Roman Senator. So I quote Cicero this morning. Cicero said very long ago, ''The first bond of society is marriage.'' I believe Cicero was right. He was not a religious man, he was a secular man. He was a nonbeliever. But he also saw the incredible benefit to building up citizens of Rome through this first bond of society which was then and is still marriage.

I suppose I take this position, a nuanced position, to be sure, because I am somewhat of an old-fashioned idealist. However imperfectly practiced by the American people, marriage still is a perfect ideal. I think the American people deserve a debate on this that is civil, that is respectful, and that includes all Americans.

Some have come to this floor, and will in the coming days, to hold up the Constitution. Here is a copy of it. They will say this is a sacred document, a document that should not be amended. I will admit to the Presiding Officer it would be better that we not have to do this, to even resort to a constitutional amendment. But this is what Article V of the Bill of Rights says:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution. . . .

It goes on.

They would not have included this Article V in the Bill of Rights if it were not intended that this be a living document. But they intended the Constitution to be a living document, and the United States has amended this Constitution 27 times.

Were it not a living document, this document would have failed. Were it not subject to amendment, the most egregious kinds of actions would have been put in place that would have made us ashamed forever.

For example, perhaps the most dreadful decision ever rendered under this Constitution was that of Dred Scott. Roger B. Taney, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, held that African Americans were not human and were the subject of property and could be controlled as property like any other chattel. That is a decision that goes down in infamy, if ever there was one. It took a Civil War and then the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution, which before was silent on the issue of slavery, to ultimately overcome this insidious practice in parts of the United States.

Some say: Well, that is a sacred thing that was done. And I agree, it was. I believe the Constitution is both sacred and secular, but living and improving, and open to debate.

I mentioned the last time the Constitution was amended was in 1992. It is the twenty-seventh amendment. It reads:

No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives, shall take effect until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

That is the twenty-seventh amendment. It is about money. It is about salaries for Senators and Representatives. I suggest to you that may be appropriate to be in the Constitution because it went through the process, but there is nothing sacred about that.

So the question then becomes, Is it appropriate to put a definition of marriage into our Constitution? I would say, as a matter of preference, it is better not to put cultural issues in the Constitution, until you come to this question: Shall the Constitution be amended? And I tell everyone, the Constitution of the United States is about to be amended. The question is: By whom? Will it be done by a few liberal judges in Massachusetts, a lawless mayor in San Francisco, or clandestine county commissioners, or by the American people in a lawful, constitutional process, as laid out in our founding document?

You will hear lots of people beating on their chests and sounding very sanctimonious in this debate that: We should not do this or that. But the truth is, the Constitution is going to be amended. And I say: Include the American people.

Now, some also say: The issue of marriage has nothing to do with the Federal Government. Leave it to the States. My family has an interesting history in regard to leaving it to the States. My ancestors were, for the most part, Mormon pioneers who came from England in little boats, crossed the ocean, and walked across the country. They had a peculiar practice among them. It is found throughout the pages of the Bible, particularly in the Old Testament. They practiced a principle they called ''plural marriage.'' The marriages practiced by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

My great-grandfather David King Udall had two wives, one large, happy family. I am descended from the second. He came to America, helped found the State of Arizona, and spent time in prison because he violated a Federal law, the Edmunds-Tucker law from the 1870s, in which the Federal Government defined marriage as ''one man and one woman.'' He was a great man, a great pioneer, had great sons and daughters who helped the desert of the West blossom as a rose.

He has a large posterity. He sacrificed much for the principle of his faith. But he paid a price because the Federal Government, long ago, defined what marriage was. Ultimately, Grover Cleveland pardoned him, and he named one of his sons Grover Cleveland Udall.

Some people would say this is enacting discrimination into the Constitution. Well, my progenitors were discriminated against, I guess, but the truth is, our country through a lawful process in the 1860s and 1870s defined marriage at the Federal level.

Now what is happening? What is happening in our country is we have elected officials and unelected judges reinterpreting the Constitutions of their States and of our Nation to find in it rights that are not mentioned in it. This has happened a lot in recent years. I have concluded it is better that these things be resolved with the American people than without them.

The American people have a sense of fairness and tolerance and justice and right and wrong. What is happening is their views, their values, their beliefs, their respect for law is being trampled upon by a few liberal elites. That is not right.

In my own State of Oregon, in 1862, Oregon passed its law on marriage. Mr. President, 142 years have transpired, 142 years of Oregon law and practice and custom. But what happened recently? Four or five county commissioners in one of our counties ignored 142 years of law, ignored 1,000 years and more of human history, and, without notice, without a public meeting, changed the law. To me, this is deeply disappointing and terribly undemocratic. Before this happens again, I think it is appropriate, on an issue this central to our country, to our civilization, to the future, we involve ''we the people.'' The only way to do that is through a constitutional process.

Now, I wish this cup would pass from us. I do not like this. I love people. I believe in tolerance. But I believe in democracy. Many will tell you we should leave this alone. But if you leave this alone, you will leave it to others. And if you leave it to others, they will dictate to the American people what it has to be. The only recourse then available—when a Federal judge nullifies all State DOMA or constitutional provisions of the several States, finding an equal protection right to same-gender marriage—the only recourse then is through the constitutional process laid out by the fifth amendment in the Bill of Rights.

That is how you include the American people. I say public meetings, public notice, public debates, let people vote, let their elected representatives in the several States vote on it. If we are going to change it, let's change it with the American people, not at the American people. Unfortunately, that seems to be what many who will argue against this want to happen. They want to do this to us, not with us.

For the record, let me express to my gay and lesbian friends, I don't mean to disappoint you, but I can't be true to you if I am false to my basic beliefs. I believe that marriage, as we have known and practiced it in this country for hundreds of years now, is something that should be preserved. New structures can be created, new legal rights conferred, without taking down this word that represents an ideal—not about adults but including children. I mean to hurt no one's feelings in my position. I intend to be your champion on many issues in the future, if you want me. But on this one, I have to be able to get up in the morning and look in the mirror and be true to myself.

I have spoken what I believe to be true this morning. I believe marriage is more profoundly important than we might now recognize. Before we let a few tell the many what it is going to be, I think we ought to debate it, carefully consider it, because while we debate issues of war and peace and recession and prosperity, some will say there are so many more important things to discuss than this.

I say to you, there probably isn't a more important issue to discuss than the legal structure that binds men and women together for the creation and the rearing and nurturing of future generations of Americans. I make no apology for my vote for this process, for an amendment that defines marriage, because that is where it is headed, because the courts will compel it. And our legal structure gives American citizens an avenue to be included. So with my vote, I say include we the people.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUICIDE EPIDEMIC ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, yesterday on the Senate floor and this morning watching an interview on NBC's ''Today Show'' by my colleague from Oregon, Senator SMITH, there was a great deal of discussion about the issue of youth suicide. All of us in this Chamber, as part of the Senate family, have extended our hearts, thoughts, and prayers to the Smith family upon the loss of their son. It is devastating to lose a child. I lost a beautiful, wonderful daughter some while ago to heart disease.

Yesterday, as I listened to my colleague, Senator SMITH, describe the loss of his son and discuss the issue of suicide, I know that it adds a dimension to what is an almost unbearable burden of losing a child, to lose a child to suicide. So my thoughts and prayers have been with the Smith family, and I know, too, that what Senator SMITH has done in providing leadership for the legislation passed last evening is going to save lives.

We will not know their names, but there are going to be young people in this country whose lives are going to be saved because the grants and the resources that are going to be made available through the legislation passed by the Senate last night. I am glad to be an original cosponsor of this bill. It is going to give kids who are despondent and have despair and depression hope, opportunity, and counseling. So what the Senate did last night is going to save lives, and we owe a great debt of gratitude to Senator SMITH. I hope the lives that are saved in the years ahead in some way are a memorial to the late son of Senator SMITH and his family.

I had come to the floor some 2 months or so ago intending to speak about a young girl on the Spirit Lake Nation Indian Reservation in North Dakota. When I came to the floor, I saw my colleague was in the Chair at that point and I decided that I really did not want to describe the circumstances of her death because she had committed suicide. I knew the burden the Smith family had been dealing with surrounding the loss of their son. So I did not describe that young girl's death in any detail, but I would like to today in light of the speech that was delivered and in light of the action the Senate took last evening, which has given me some hope.

I will describe this young girl. This young girl was named Avis Littlewind. She died a few months ago now. She took her own life. She was 14 years of age. She lived on the Spirit Lake Nation Indian Reservation. She was a seventh grader at the Four Winds Middle School. I am told she enjoyed riding horses, playing basketball, grooming her animals, and listening to music. The day after she died, someone told me about the plight of this little girl. So I called the reservation and talked to the psychologist and the social worker involved. Since that time, I have gone to that reservation, I have sat around in a circle for an hour visiting with her classmates in the seventh grade, talked to the counselors, talked to the school administrators, talked to members of the tribal council about what is happening on our Indian reservations. Because, although I am speaking today about Avis Littlewind, there is an epidemic of suicides on Indian reservations. The legislation that Senator SMITH, Senator DODD, and others offered in the Senate last evening will help address this epidemic by making tribal governments also eligible for grant funding for suicide prevention.

Avis Littlewind died just recently by her own hand. Her sister took her life 2 years ago. Her father took his life in a self-inflicted bullet wound 12 years ago. But it is more than that. The tragedy of suicides is not just a problem on the Spirit Lake Indian reservation—Just in North Dakota, I have gone on the same mission to talk to people at the Standing Rock Sioux Reservation when there was an epidemic of threats of suicide by young people.

In this case with Avis Littlewind, there were a lot of warning signs. This little seventh grade girl missed 90 days of school up until April. She was lying in her bed day after day in a near fetal position.

Tragically, she had an appointment to see the IHS social worker later the same day that she took her life. She did not live long enough to make that appointment.

When I called the reservation to talk to leaders about these issues and then subsequently went there to visit with them, this is what I discovered: The reservation has one psychologist and one social worker. They did not have nearly the capability to follow up with these cases. They just could not cope. They did not have the capability to give somebody a ride to the clinic. They have to borrow a car, beg somebody to give someone a ride to some medical help.

It is interesting to me, and tragic as well, that the Federal Government is directly responsible for the health care of only two groups of people. We have a trust responsibility for the health care of American Indians. That is a trust responsibility. That is not optional, that is our responsibility. And we have a responsibility for the health care of Federal prisoners.

Do you know that on a per capita basis we spend almost twice as much for health care for Federal prisoners as we do for health care for American Indians? So little girls like Avis Littlewind are found dead by suicide, and we don't have the mental health services to reach out and help these kids. The mental health services are not available. Just call around and ask.

There are kids who, for their own reasons, are desperate, are depressed, are reaching out, and yet the services are not available to them. We must do much better than that.

Let me describe the circumstances on our Indian reservations in this country because on many of them it looks as if you are visiting a Third World country. Alcoholism, seven times—not double, triple, quadruple—but seven times the rate of the national average; tuberculosis, seven times the rate of the national average; suicide, double the national average in this country; homicide, double; diabetes, four times. On the Fort Berthold Reservation, the rate of diabetes is 12 times the national average. We have to do much better. We have a responsibility.

I never met this young girl, but I met her classmates and they told me about her. She, like a lot of kids, was a wonderful young woman, but she lived in a circle of poverty in a family in which two other family members had taken their lives. Her cousin, incidentally, 2 weeks after Avis Littlewind's death, threatened suicide and had to be hospitalized.

But it is not just this family. It is an epidemic on our Indian reservations with young people. We need resources to deal with it. That is why I was so pleased last evening to hear the speech given by Senator SMITH, a speech that was obviously very difficult for him to give on the Senate floor. Then that was followed by legislation enacted by this Senate that will begin the long road to do something about this problem, to save the lives of kids like Avis Littlewind. She may not long be remembered because she is just a statistic with respect to teen suicides on Indian reservations, but this young girl, I am sure, wanted the things that we want and that our children want—a good life, an opportunity. She wanted to have hope for the future. She is now lying in a grave, having taken her own life.

We bear some responsibility because the resources that were necessary, needed to help treat the depression that this young girl had, were simply not available. I met with the school administrators, the tribal council, all those folks. The fact is, it was clear to me no one took it upon themselves to reach out. If you have a young 14-year-old lying in bed for 90 days, not attending school, in desperate condition, something is wrong. Someone needs to intervene. Someone should have saved her life.

I am not blaming anybody today. I am just saying today there is hope. There was not before. Today there is hope. The Senate has taken action on a significant piece of legislation that I think will save lives. It is too late to save Avis Littlewind's life, but it will save other lives. Today I commend my colleague, Senator SMITH, whom I believe, through the pain and suffering that his family has experienced, has done something that will give others hope and offer life and opportunity to others.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. DOLE). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, let me add to the Senator's remarks. I listened to my dear friend, my partner, GORDON SMITH, yesterday on the Senate floor, and I was very impressed, having seen what he and his family have gone through and what others have gone through. It meant so much to have him lead the fight for this particular bill.

I certainly appreciated the remarks of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota. There is no question, this is a serious problem for young people throughout our country—again, especially for those who are Native Americans. I believe the bill, sponsored by my dear friend from Oregon, and of course a number of the rest of us, will go a long way toward helping to resolve and alleviate some of these problems.

I compliment all concerned for their sensitivity and their desire to do what we can to alleviate these problems and to help our children throughout our country.

My home state of Utah has one of the highest suicide rates in the country, in fact, suicide rates in Utah for those 15 to 19 years of age have increased close to 150 percent over the last 20 years. In response to these disturbing statistics, I authored legislation in 2000 to direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide grants to states and other entities in order to create programs to reduce suicide deaths among children and adolescents. This legislation was included in the Children's Health Act of 2000 which was signed into law by the President.

Again, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act and I credit its rapid passage through the Senate last night to one person—my dear friend, Senator GORDON SMITH.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION RELATING TO MARRIAGE

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I have been around here for 28 years. I have seen a lot of very important issues. I have seen a lot of phony arguments through the years. One of the phoniest arguments I have seen is, Why are you moving toward this constitutional amendment to preserve the traditional definition of marriage? We have so many other more important things to do. Why, we have the economy, we have the war—we can name thousands of things that are more important to some of the opponents of this measure than this particular measure. But I say I don't know of anything in our society or in our lives or in our country or in the world that is more important than preserving our traditional family definition.

I don't know of anything that is more important to children. I don't know of anything that is more important to morality. I don't know of anything that is more important to education. I don't know of anything that is more important to strengthen our country. I don't know of anything that is more important to the overall well-being of our citizens than the preservation of the traditional marriage definition that has been the rule for 5,000-plus years in this world; that is, marriage should be between a man and a woman.

Everybody in this body knows I have led the fight in three AIDS bills. I have been the primary sponsor of those bills along with Senator KENNEDY. Everybody knows that I have fought hard against hate crimes. One of the principal bills that lies before us is the Hatch-Smith-Kennedy-Feinstein bill against hate crimes, part of which are hate crimes against gay people. I do not believe in discrimination of any kind, and I do not believe that what some people have done to gay people in our society is relevant or right.

Some of it has been purely prejudicial. I don't believe that type of thinking should see the light of day.

But like my colleague from Oregon and others, I draw the line when it comes to traditional marriage and the definition of traditional marriage. So I rise in support of an amendment to our Constitution that would maintain the institution of marriage between a man and a woman, an institutional arrangement that is to this date supported by all of our State legislatures, every State legislature in the country. The bedrock of American success is the family, and it is traditional marriage that undergirds the American family.

The disintegration of the family in this country correlates to the many serious social problems, including crime and poverty. We are seeing soaring divorce rates. We are seeing soaring out-of-wedlock birth rates that have resulted in far too many fatherless families. Weakening the legal status of marriage at this point will only exacerbate these problems, and we simply must act to strengthen the family. It is one of the most important things that we can consider and that we should do.

To me, the question comes down to whether we amend the Constitution or we let the Supreme Court do it for us. I know which is the more democratic option, and that is for us, as elected officials, to amend the Constitution. Questions that are as fundamental as the family should simply not be left to the courts to decide. If we permit ourselves to be ruled by judges, we further erode the citizenly responsibility that is central to our republican form of government.

Many in this body, in the ivory tower, often fret that Americans do not take politics seriously enough. Perhaps that is because we, through our inaction, routinely suggest to the electorate that the most important questions facing us as a political community should be decided by a handful of Harvard-educated lawyers, rather than by the people themselves. A free citizenry should not accept such a goal, and should not accept such thin gruel.

Our hope for this amendment is that it will maintain the traditional right of American people to set marriage policy for themselves.

We do not take this proposal lightly. The Constitution has functioned to secure and extend the rights of citizens in this Nation, and it serves as a beacon of hope for the world. Aside from the Bill of Rights, it has rarely been amended, but when it is, we have done so to expand the rights of democratic self-government and to resecure the Constitution's original meaning.

That is precisely what we are intending here. Marriage policy has traditionally been set by the States. The States have made their opinion on this subject clear. They have overwhelmingly acted in recent years to preserve traditional marriage.

Still, absent an amendment, we should have no faith that the courts will uphold these State decisions. Believe me, there are other ways we would rather spend our time. We did not choose this schedule—the courts did. But as public representatives, bound by the oath to defend the Constitution, we will not hide from our obligations.

Our case is simple. Last fall, in its Goodridge v. Department of Public Health decision, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts declared same-sex marriage to be the policy of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Today, same-sex marriage couples live in 46 States, and activists are implementing a well-funded, multifaceted, and highly coordinated legal assault on traditional marriage.

Look at this. Not one legislature has voted to recognize same-sex unions. But in 1996, States with same-sex marriage couples, zero; in 2004, States with same-sex marriage couples, 46. That is what has happened as a result of this particular decision by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court.

The inescapable conclusion is that absent an amendment to the Constitution, same-sex marriage is coming whether you like it or not.

Regardless of what the people think, regardless of what elected representatives think, it is going to be imposed on America because of one 4-to-3 version of an activist Massachusetts Supreme Court.

The opponents of this amendment urge us to remain patient. Our actions are premature, they tell us. Those opposed to protecting traditional marriage keep moving the goal line, and to ignore this strategy is to guarantee defeat.

Marriage first became a national issue in 1996. Then, as now, a State court threatened to impose same-sex marriage on citizens of their own State, and in so doing they jeopardized the traditional marriage laws of the entire Nation.

Given this scenario, it would have been flatly irresponsible for us not to act. So when faced with the potential of the Supreme Court of Hawaii dictating marriage policy for all 50 States, we passed the Defense of Marriage Act, or DOMA.

Then, as now, our opponents accused us of playing election year politics—the same phony argument they are accusing us of today, or in this particular matter. The opposition insisted there was no need for DOMA, the Defense of Marriage Act. In fact, Senator JOHN KERRY argued, and others with him, that it was not necessary since no State has adopted same-sex marriage. That was their argument. Eight years later, a bare majority of JOHN KERRY's own State's supreme court has brought same-sex marriage to the State and to the citizens of Massachusetts.

What is his position now? Sounding much as he did 8 years ago, he said, and I quote:

> I oppose this election-year effort to amend the Constitution in an area that each State can adequately address, and I will vote against such an amendment if it comes to the Senate floor.

Keep in mind, the only thing that would permit each State to decide this issue on its own is DOMA, the Defense of Marriage Act. What was Senator KERRY's opinion on DOMA? I don't mean to just single him out; there are others on the other side who have taken the same position. What was their opinion on DOMA? Senator KERRY called it ''fundamentally unconstitutional.'' In fact, that was the opinion of much of the Democratic Party and our academic legal establishment at the time.

Let me refer you to this chart. But isn't DOMA unconstitutional? Senator KERRY said: You don't have to worry about it because we have the Defense of Marriage Act.

This is what he said on September 3, 1996:

> DOMA does violence to the spirit and letter of the Constitution.

Senator KENNEDY, our other distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, in his remarks on the Senate floor on September 10, 1996, said:

> Scholarly opinion is clear. DOMA is plainly unconstitutional.

Professor Laurence Tribe, Harvard Law School professor, in a letter submitted for the RECORD in Senate proceedings, said on June 6, 1996:

> My conclusion is unequivocal. Congress possess no power under any provision of the Constitution to legislate as it does in DOMA any such categorical exemption from the Full Faith and Credit Clause of article IV.

The ACLU, in a background briefing in February of 1996, says:

> DOMA is bad constitutional law . . . an unmistakable violation of the Constitution.

Think about that.

So let me get this straight. We do not need DOMA, was the argument because no State has actually pursued same-sex marriage.

That is what Senator KERRY said against DOMA when he argued against it back then. But now that Massachusetts has, we do not need an amendment because we fortunately have DOMA. How convenient. Except for the fact they are all arguing that DOMA is unconstitutional. It just doesn't seem to fit.

I have seen these ads on Senator KERRY flip-flopping. We all know that around here. That is what he does. But this is the grand flip-flop, one of the grandest of all times. A person's head starts to spin just trying to undo this logical mess.

But in the end, that is the point. They hope to confuse and to obfuscate and cast aspersions, and, by so doing, maybe succeed in lulling citizens into apathy on this subject.

Fortunately, this issue is actually rather simple for those who approach it with any sincerity. There are, in fact, only two questions that Senators must answer before voting on this amendment; that is, if the filibuster will be ended and we are able to proceed to the constitutional amendment and debate it.

The first thing is whether they support traditional marriage. Bulletproof majorities in this body do. No question about that. The American people do, as well.

The second is whether the majority's desire to protect traditional marriage can be guaranteed without a constitutional amendment.

The assertion this was a State issue, that the States can protect marriage, neglects the likelihood that the courts will overturn the well-considered opinion of citizens in every State. Skeptics and opponents of this constitutional amendment claim, sometimes relying on traditional Republican and conservative principles of federalism and limited government, that this is not the time nor the place for the National Government to act.

We must be clear. The States have already acted. Since marriage first became an issue in 1996, over 40 States—look at this—over 40 States have acted explicitly to shore up their traditional marriage laws—40 States. What a national consensus? States where legislatures have approved same-sex marriage, zero; not one State legislature, that is. The people's representatives, the ones who have to stand for reelection, not one State. States where legislators and citizens have recently acted to protect traditional marriage, 40 States.

But all of this legislation has been in danger by the Massachusetts court's actions this past fall and by recent decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court. The courts, in an elite legal culture out of touch with average Americans, have made this a national issue. It can no longer be adequately resolved by the States. More and more coordinated lawsuits are being filed every day, and the question of same-sex marriage will terminate in Federal courts at which point same-sex marriage will become the law of the land, in spite of the desires of the elected representatives throughout at least 40 States, and I believe other States would follow suit in time to preserve traditional marriage.

Let me say this slowly so it can sink in. Absent a constitutional amendment that protects the rights of the States to maintain their traditional understanding of marriage, the Supreme Court will decide this issue for them.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court commanded, in a fit of hubris, that the State must extend marriage to same-sex couples. Never mind that the Massachusetts Constitution created by the hand of John Adams himself clearly did not contemplate this conclusion. Never mind there is an obvious national basis for the States' traditional marriage laws and never mind the people in the Bay State were adamantly opposed to this judicial usurpation of policy development best left to legislative judgment. No, they went right ahead and issued a decision that certainly made them the toast of the town on the cocktail party and academic lecture circuit, but they put their personal self-satisfaction ahead of their judicial responsibilities. By doing so, they knowingly threatened the marriage laws in every State in our country.

The people of Massachusetts acted quickly to amend their constitution and overturn this egregious abuse of judicial authority. The problem is that amendment will not be ratified for at least 2 years—a fact, by the way, of which the Massachusetts Supreme Court was keenly aware. In the meantime, people will be married in Massachusetts and they will move to other States. What will become of these same-sex marriages? Will they be recognized? Will they be dissolved? Can these people get divorces in other States? Who will have custody of the children in the event of disillusion? Already, as a result of the lawless issuing of marriage licenses to same-sex couples by the mayor of San Francisco, same-sex marriage couples live in 46 States now. Together, these actions have stirred up a hornet's nest of litigation.

When allowed to choose, legislatures protect marriage rather than dismantle it; therefore, advocates of same-sex marriage resort to strategies involving the executive or judicial branches. In States such as California, Oregon, New York, and New Mexico, rogue local officials have simply defied their own State marriage laws and married thousands of same-sex couples. While saying that New York law does not allow same-sex marriages, State attorney general Elliot Spitzer will nonetheless recognize such marriages performed in other States. That is his opinion. These actions have an impact on the legal landscape for sure, but in most cases advocates turn to the courts to impose their preferred policies on fellow citizens. Their legal war against traditional marriage has at least five fronts.

Remember article IV of the Constitution, full faith and credit clause. Most authorities believe the Massachusetts Supreme Court will be binding on every other State in the Union, not that they will have to allow same-sex marriages themselves in defiance of traditional marriage beliefs, but they will have to recognize the marriages that are performed in Massachusetts that come to their States under the full faith and credit clause. Most constitutional authorities agree with that, and it is believed that the U.S. Supreme Court will uphold that and thus rule DOMA, or the Defense of Marriage Act, unconstitutional.

There are five legal fronts of attack on the Defense of Marriage Act or traditional marriage. First, as in Massachusetts, gay citizens who wish to marry allege that State laws protecting traditional marriage are violations of their own State constitutions. So far, there are 11 States facing these challenges to their marriage laws.

This week, the ACLU filed suit in Maryland arguing that the State's failure to recognize same-sex unions violates the State's constitution.

In California, even though more than 60 percent of the voters recently approved a statewide ballot initiative to maintain traditional marriage, the California Supreme Court is now considering the constitutionality of that democratic action.

In Nebraska, the ACLU has actually challenged a duly passed State constitutional amendment that defines marriage as being between a man and a woman. Similar challenges are pending in Florida, Indiana, Washington, and West Virginia, all of which have passed laws to secure traditional marriage just in the last 10 years as a result of this focused consideration of the subject by citizens of those States.

The legislatures in Delaware, Illinois, Michigan, North Carolina, and Vermont are considering actual amendments to protect traditional marriage. Montana, North Dakota, Ohio, and Oregon have signature-gathering campaigns underway. Amendments are already on the ballot in Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, and my own home State of Utah.

One would expect and hope that given this public concentration on the subject, a proper respect would be given to a popular resolution of this issue. We can be sure, though, that the legal advocates of same-sex marriage will not display any such reservations.

The second case against traditional marriage will emerge once two citizens legally married in Massachusetts move to Ohio, Louisiana, or some other State and seek to have their marriage recognized. It is simply implausible to deny that this scenario will unfold. Already a suit has been filed in Washington State requesting that Washington recognize same-sex marriages performed in Oregon under a now halted order issued by a rogue county chairman even though Washington law expressly precludes such unions.

The third and fourth cases also specifically involve challenges to the Defense of Marriage Act now passed by 40 States and I believe will ultimately be passed by all 50 States.

One of the standard crutches of those opposed to an amendment is that DOMA, the Defensive of Marriage Act, remains the law of the land. In the hearing before the Judiciary Committee several weeks ago, Senator DURBIN said that DOMA has ''never been challenged in court.'' This is simply untrue. DOMA has been challenged for violating the U.S. Constitution. It is being challenged right now.

The Defense of Marriage Act did two things. For the purposes of Federal benefits, such as Social Security, it reserved the definition of marriage to traditional unions, and, most importantly, it gave a blanket exception to the full faith and credit laws for marriage policy.

As it is now, the Constitution requires that, barring a rational public policy to the contrary, my marriage in Utah must be recognized in Virginia. DOMA ensures that States would not be compelled under the Constitution to recognize same-sex marriages performed in other States. The first prong of DOMA is being challenged in a Federal court. There is no doubt that a suit will eventually be filed challenging the constitutionality of DOMA's exception to the full faith and credit clause.

Fifth, State laws protecting traditional marriage will be challenged as violating the Federal Constitution. That the U.S. Constitution protects no such right will hardly be an obstacle to these suits. The death penalty is explicitly provided for in the fifth amendment, but that does not stop liberal interest groups from attempting to undo this through judicial action. They cannot get these matters through the elected representatives, so they always try to get these activist court judges to do their bidding for them and to enact legislation from the bench that they could never get through the elected representatives of the people. This is a perfect illustration.

The first amendment was obviously intended to guarantee political speech, but that does not stop the ACLU from getting nude dancing declared a constitutional right. Nothing in the Constitution guarantees a right to an abortion, but, through a creative analysis of the text, the Court was persuaded to create a right to privacy extended in recent years to include ''the right to define one's own concept of existence of the universe, and of the mystery of human life.''

These cases will inevitably wind up in Federal court. We cannot wash our hands of the implications of this issue's likely judicial resolution. As a Senator, my oath obligated me to protect the Constitution. That includes protecting it from corruption at the hands of the judiciary. These corruptions have become commonplace, and they are extremely difficult to undo once secured.

We have tried in the past, when constitutional meaning was violated in the moment-of-silence cases, in abortion rights cases, in religious liberty cases, in flag burning cases—all judicial activists' decisions—we attempted to undo these decisions and to restore the original Constitution. We have never been successful in succeeding along those lines. If this becomes the law of the land by judicial fiat of 4-to-3 verdict in the Massachusetts Supreme Court and because the full faith and credit clause will impose it on every other State in the Union, then we will have had the judges legislate for all of America against every State's law that we now must do away with traditional marriage or at least allow this new form of marriage.

Now, there is a constitutional responsibility, I would suggest to my colleagues in the Senate. In fact, once these decisions are in place, the very people who tell us to wait for the courts to decide abdicate their stewardship of the Constitution. It is a phony argument to say wait until the courts decide. I think it is all too clear that if we rely on that, we are going to have the courts tell Americans what they must believe on this matter, and that is in contradiction to all of the elected representatives' rights to determine these types of issues.

As an example, consider the response of some Democratic lawmakers to the Supreme Court's rulings on abortion. In a recent letter to Roman Catholic Cardinal Theodore McCarrick of Washington, DC, 48 Catholic Members of the House of Representatives explained that:

[W]e live in a nation of laws and the Supreme Court has declared that our Constitution provides women with a right to an abortion. Members who vote for legislation consistent with that mandate are not acting contrary to our positions as faithful members of the Catholic Church.

Now, regardless of the beliefs of the Catholic Church, or even the merits of the arguments for or against abortion, this is a monumentally irresponsible attitude. These legislators, charged with protecting the Constitution, argue that they must vote against legislation that curtails abortion because the Supreme Court obligates them to. In other words, the Constitution, apparently, is what the Supreme Court says it is to these people.

Well, I think the Supreme Court has gotten it wrong on a number of occasions. But on this particular issue, when the Supreme Court rules that DOMA is unconstitutional, that will be one of the most monumentally wrongful decisions in the history of this country.

Now, with all due respect, these arguments that these Members of the House raised on the issue of abortion are absurd. Abraham Lincoln, the founder of my political party, understood this. When Chief Justice Roger Taney handed down his infamous Dred Scott decision, Lincoln did not defer to the Court. He did not accept its decision as a proper interpretation of the Constitution. He rejected it root and branch, and explained that:

[T]he candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court . . . the people will have ceased to be their own rulers.

That was Lincoln speaking, and we ought to follow that type of logic and that type of reasoning, that type of truth. We cannot just sit by and let the courts rule our country. That is not their job. Their job is to interpret the laws that we make as people who have to stand for reelection. We passed a law that is now approved by 40 States, and I believe will be approved by the other 10 States given time.

Now, this popular constitutional responsibility is a bipartisan affair. When Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal was repeatedly stymied by the Supreme Court, he did not throw up his hands and explain that the Depression would have to continue because the Supreme Court did not allow him to regulate the economy. Of course, he did not. Rather, he continued to push his policies and explained to the American people why the Court's interpretation of the Constitution was wrong.

The Members of this body have a sacred trust as constitutional officials, and we must take seriously the results of our inaction. If we fail to pass an amendment, and we delegate our authority over this matter to the Supreme Court of the United States, the decision will come as no surprise. On this point, the Justices have made themselves amply clear. There is no reason to believe that State marriage laws protecting traditional marriage will be allowed to stand.

In the Lawrence decision handed down just last year, the Supreme Court announced its intentions by effectively overturning Bowers v. Hardwick. Bowers was hardly an antique. It was decided only in 1986, and it basically put the brakes on 20 years of judicially created privacy rights. That decision concluded that the States remained able to regulate certain sexual practices in order to protect the health, safety, and morals within its political community.

But in Lawrence the court reversed course. There, the Court concluded that:

Liberty presumes an autonomy of self that includes freedom of thought, belief, expression, and certain intimate conduct, and therefore, our laws and tradition afford constitutional protection to personal decisions relating to marriage, procreation, contraception, family relationships, child rearing, and education.

Now, according to the Court, in Lawrence, these are fundamental rights, and the States must, therefore, advance a compelling reason for any legislation that denies them. Unfortunately, in Romer v. Evans, the Court has previously held that any such legislation could only be based on an ''irrational animus'' toward homosexuals.

So what, then, of same-sex marriage, which denies to homosexuals the privilege of marrying? In his dissent in Lawrence, Justice Scalia understood that:

State laws against . . . same-sex marriage . . . are likewise sustainable only in light of Bowers' validation of laws based on moral choices. Every single one of these laws is called into question by today's decision; the Court makes no effort to cabin the scope of its decision to exclude them from its holding.

Those who favored the decision at the time said it did no such thing. Privately, however, they understood exactly what it meant. And the judges in the Goodridge case were quick studies. In the decision to rewrite the Massachusetts Constitution to compel same-sex marriage, the Goodridge court relied heavily on these rulings. Their conclusions that marriage is a fundamental right and that the decision to restrict that right is patently irrational were taken straight out of the U.S. Supreme Court playbook. Goodridge has shown us the way. DOMA, the Defense of Marriage Act, will not stand, and absent DOMA, the States will have to defend their marriage laws on their own. Their success, of course, is in serious doubt.

I do not subscribe to the conclusions of the courts. There is an obviously rational basis for legislation that protects traditional marriage. Only a discriminatory animus against people who hold any religious beliefs at all could lead someone to conclude otherwise. For a simple and compelling reason, traditional marriage has been a civilizational anchor for thousands of years. Society has an interest in the future generations created by men and women.

Decoupling procreation from marriage in order to make some people feel more accepted denies the very purpose of marriage itself. Marriages between men and women are the essential institutions to which future generations are produced and reared. Political communities are only as solid as their foundation, and these families and homes, the first schoolyards of citizenship, are essential for the future of republican government.

The fact that so many in the Democratic Party are openly opposed to same-sex marriage should undercut the conclusion that the desire to maintain traditional marriage is grounded simply in rank bigotry.

Let me refer to this chart again. These are leading Democrats who have spoken out on same-sex marriage. The first one is Senator KERRY:

I believe marriage is between a man and a woman. I oppose gay marriage and disagree with the Massachusetts Court's decision.

I don't think it could be any more clear.

Senator DASCHLE:

The word ''marriage'' means only a legal union between one man and one woman as a husband and wife.

How about Representative RICHARD GEPHARDT:

I do not support gay marriage.

Or how about Governor Bill Richardson of New Mexico:

I do believe that marriage is between a man and woman. So I oppose same-sex marriage.

Or how about former President Bill Clinton:

I have long opposed governmental recognition of same-gender marriages.

Or how about former Vice President Al Gore:

I favor protecting the institution of marriage as it has been understood between a man and a woman.

These are leading Democrats, who I personally respect in many ways, who have come out against this very dramatic change in traditional marriage that is occurring in our society today.

I have to say that I think JOHN KERRY was right in making that statement at the time. I think TOM DASCHLE was right. I think RICHARD GEPHARDT was right. I think Governor Bill Richardson was right. President Bill Clinton was right, and Vice President Al Gore was right when he said that. These Democrats are merely responding to a certain common sense articulated by the American people, and that common sense has expressed itself in legislative actions in nearly every State.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in order to defend itself against the accusation that it is determining constitutional meaning from their morning reading of the New York Times, has taken to defending only those rights supported by a developing national consensus. In this case, there is a developing national consensus on the issue of same-sex marriage, but it is developing in the other direction.

State after State has acted to protect this vital institution of traditional marriage. Still it would be a fool's wager to rely on the Supreme Court to affirm this consensus of all the people out there. When California acted through the superdemocratic process of a Statewide referendum to protect traditional marriage, that did not stop the liberal mayor of San Francisco from defying this law and instituting his own preferred policy preference instead. When it comes to a liberal agenda at odds with the beliefs of average Americans, legal impediments or even simple respect for these popular decisions do not long stand in the way.

It is important to mention another effect of abandoning our definition of marriage. We have vast numbers of institutions and individuals in our society who will be stigmatized and marginalized by courts trying to enforce a new moral norm. A group of notable legal scholars in Massachusetts, including Mary Ann Glendon, warned about the danger to religious institutions in this country in a recent legal opinion.

They said:

Precedent from our own history and that of other nations suggests that religious institutions could even be at risk of losing tax exempt status, academic accreditation, and media licenses, and could face charges of violating human rights codes or hate speech laws.

Is this the road we want to go down? Gays and lesbians have a right to live as they choose. I would be the first to say that. But I am sorry, they do not have the right to define marriage and to redefine it away from the concepts of traditional marriage that have been in existence for over 5,000 years. I have been a leader in advocating hate crimes legislation against gays and lesbians. I know prejudice remains against gay and lesbian citizens. I reject each and every substantiation of it. But this amendment is not about discrimination. It is not about prejudice. It is about safeguarding the best environment for our children.

African-American and Hispanic leaders, Catholics and Jews, Democrats and Republicans, people from every State, religion, and every walk of life support traditional marriage as the ideal for this very same reason. I do not doubt alternative families can lovingly raise children, but decades of study show children do best when raised by a father and a mother.

My own faith, which has been badly maligned through the years—and I have personally been badly maligned, even by some who should be allies—only yesterday or within this week had this to say. It was issued on July 7:

The First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints issued the follow statement today. This is a statement of principle in anticipation of the expected debate over same gender marriage. It is not an endorsement of any specific amendment.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints favors a constitutional amendment preserving marriage as the lawful union of a man and a woman.

I have no doubt my faith and so many others would prefer and recognize the need of a constitutional amendment to resolve this problem. It is the right way to do it. For us to ignore it means we are abandoning our responsibilities. Given the acknowledged importance of this institution, popular reservations about undoing it should be given the utmost importance. Same-sex marriage is an unproven experiment, though other nations have had some experience with it.

The Netherlands has recognized same-sex unions since 2001 and registered partnerships since 1998. Since those reforms began, there has been a marked decline in marriage culture. Just yesterday, in a letter published in a Dutch newspaper, a group of respected academics from the fields of social science, philosophy and law made a modest assertion. The decision to recognize same-sex marriage depended on the creation of a social and legal separation between the ideas of marriage and parenting. And in that time, there has been, in their words, a spectacular rise in the number of illegitimate births. These scholars do not argue that this rise is solely attributable to the decision to recognize same-sex partnerships. But the correlation is undeniable. They conclude that further research is needed to establish the relative importance of all the factors.

Precisely! The jury is out on what the effects on children and society will be and only legislatures are institutionally-equipped to make these decisions. If nothing else, given the uncertainty of a radical change in a fundamental institution like marriage, popular representatives should be given deference on this issue. However, recent actions by courts prove that no such deference is being given.

This is why we need an amendment. Without an amendment to the Constitution, same-sex marriage will be imposed by judges on an American people who would not choose this institution for themselves.

Here is the language of the amendment. It contains two simple sentences:

Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman.

The second sentence:

Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

The amendment does nothing more than preserve perhaps the most fundamental relationship in society. The amendment does not violate the principles of Federalism and limited government.

Among other things the Constitution guaranteed to the people a right to govern themselves; in most instances, through their State governments. The Constitution protected traditional State prerogatives over subjects such as marriage and family policy. And should those be in danger, the Constitution guaranteed to the people a right to resecure these prerogatives through the amendment process. This is precisely the situation we face here.

The States have acted on this issue time and time again. They have rejected same-sex marriage. Yet we face legal advocates and a judicial system that care little for these judgments and that are ready and willing to substitute their own judgments for the common sense of the American citizenry.

In the end, the only argument against this amendment is that the Supreme Court is the sole institution that determines the meaning of our Constitution. I reject that conclusion. It grossly misstates the history of this Nation. The Alien and Sedition Acts were repealed through legislative actions, not through the courts.

The Civil War amendments that guaranteed citizenship and the right to vote to black citizens came through Congress and the state legislatures. The New Deal protected Americans in a time of need. The 1964 Civil Rights Act promoted the rights of racial minorities.

President Ronald Reagan readjusted the New Deal settlement, protecting the rights of small business owners and encouraging property ownership and innovation. And in recent years this body has acted to protect the rights of female victims of violence, the victims of hate crimes, and the rights of disabled citizens.

The popular branches of Government, not the courts, are the primary guarantors of our rights. As Senators, we are obligated to interpret the Constitution, and in this case we are not denying rights to same-sex couples, but protecting and extending the right of citizens to govern themselves and to determine marriage policy on their own, and to preserve traditional marriage.

To delay action on the marriage amendment now is like agreeing to repair a cracked dam only after it has burst and forever changed the landscape. We know what the legal situation is on this issue and we know what we have to do to repair it. A Constitutional amendment is the only viable alternative to protect this most foundational relationship in society. We must act, and we must act now.

We need to send a message to our children about marriage and traditional life and values. The American people must have a voice. The people, through their elected representatives—not judges—should decide the future of marriage.

Montana, Louisiana, West Virginia, Colorado, Washington, Maine, North Dakota, Ohio, New Hampshire, Nebraska, South Carolina, Arkansas, Alaska, Pennsylvania.

All of these states and many others have made independent determinations to protect same-sex marriage. Without an amendment to the Constitution, all that work will be for naught. They have made those independent determinations to protect traditional marriage, not same-sex marriage. I respectfully ask my colleagues to do the right thing here and to guarantee that the right to self-government on important issues such as this remains with the people rather than in the courts.

This is an important issue. Anybody who argues this issue isn't as important as anything that can possibly come before this body fails to recognize that traditional marriage and the rights of families and children are the most important elements of our societal function and we need to protect them. We need to do it now and not wait until 2 or 3 years from now when all this becomes mush and nothing will be able to be done, such as on other bills that have occurred through the years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Madam President, I understand we will be going back and forth. I wondered, because I have a time schedule, if I might ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Vermont speaks—might I ask how long he plans to speak?

Mr. LEAHY. I can't imagine I will speak much more than probably 10, 15 minutes at most.

Mr. BOND. Might I ask that I be recognized for 5 minutes and then the previous order, which was for the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Alabama to be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no such order in effect.

Mr. BOND. I ask unanimous consent to make such a request.

Mr. LEAHY. Following me.

Mr. BOND. Following the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

(The remarks of Mr. LEAHY pertaining to the introduction of S. 2636 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

FEDERAL BUDGET RESOLUTION

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, there is another important issue we have before the Senate. We don't yet have a Federal budget resolution, even though we were supposed to have done that this spring.

It is July. We have considered only one appropriations bill, and that has not been resolved with the House. We have not yet even considered the other 12 appropriations bills, including the Homeland Security appropriations bill. These are usually considered must-pass legislation, whether there is a Republican-controlled Congress or a Democratic-controlled Congress. Instead of passing these bills, however, we sit around not doing any work on the things that we absolutely need to do. We are working on political matters. The divisive constitutional amendment to federalize marriage is an example of that.

For 215 years, we have left it up to States to define marriage. All of a sudden, are we going to tell them they do not know what they are doing? Are we going to take over the marriage issue from the States and define it for them? Are we going to treat this as a matter of urgency, that we must proceed to immediately while setting aside homeland security and the budget?

Heck, the Senate Judiciary Committee, which held a few hearings on this issue, has not even considered the language of this Federal Marriage Amendment. We have not even voted on it in the Republican-controlled Judiciary Committee. The fact that the Committee has been bypassed, and the FMA brought immediately to the Senate floor, is an unmistakable sign that political expediency—and haste in the furtherance of political expediency—is why it is here.

Political expediency, whatever it takes, seems to be the leadership's guidepost, not the pressing needs of the country for homeland security funding or a budget. I am afraid that the paramount thing for the Republican leaders in this body at the moment are such divisive matters as federalizing marriage law by constitutional amendment. I remember the days when the Republican Party would say we are going to keep the Federal Government out of the doings of the States. Well, now we seem not only to politicize judicial nominations, making independent judges a wing of the Republican Party, but to politicize the Constitution itself.

I think it is wrong. I think it is corrosive to seek partisan advantage at the expense of the independent Federal judiciary or our national charter, the Constitution. Maybe we should have a corollary to the Thurmond rule, which is that in Presidential elections, after the Fourth of July we do not consider judicial nominations, except by unanimous consent. Maybe we should have something called the ''Durbin rule.''

The senior Senator from Illinois observed that we should prohibit consideration of constitutional amendments within 6 months of a Presidential election. I think he is right in pointing out that the Constitution is too important to be made a bulletin board for campaign sloganeering. Somehow we should find a way to restrain the impulse of some to politicize the Constitution. I think we have 50 or 60 proposed constitutional amendments before the Congress right now.

While we are doing this political posturing, let us talk about what we might have been doing. I will take one issue, homeland security. This week, we received further warnings from the Republican administration about impending terrorist attacks. So what are we doing in the Senate to respond to those attacks? Why, we are going to launch a debate over gay marriage.

The Homeland Security appropriations bill is stalled, but notwithstanding the warnings by the administration that there are impending terrorist attacks, first and foremost the Senate has to have a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage. We cannot take time to bring up the Homeland Security bill, something that will probably pass in a day and a half.

If the American people are uneasy about their security during the summer traveling season, that may be because of the conflicting signals they are receiving from the Government. At least this time it was Secretary Ridge and not the Attorney General who appeared on our Nation's television screens to warn of an impending al-Qaida attack. We may remember a few weeks ago, when the Attorney General made dire warnings the same day that Secretary Ridge, the Secretary of Homeland Security, told Americans to go out and have some fun this summer.

The American people must wonder what is going on. They must find it hard to believe what is going on in this Senate, how we are using our time now.

I believe Congress should get on with providing the funding needed to address our security vulnerabilities, even at the cost of forsaking some of the President's tax cuts or a fruitless debate on marriage.

We have heard the administration say we are in dire danger. We have given them everything they have wanted: the Homeland Security Department; we have gone deep into debt; we have actually threatened the Social Security fund by our huge deficits to give hundreds of billions of dollars on the fight against terrorism.

It appears we simply cannot meet our needs with the resources we have available. But what do we do? Do we address this in the Senate, the greatest deliberative body on Earth? Heck, no. We are going to talk about gay marriages.

Of course, the Republican Leadership has a history of not getting too concerned about the substance of homeland security issues. The issue of homeland security has been politicized from the start, and even the creation of the Department of Homeland Security is a case study on the political partisanship of my friends in the Republican Party. We may recall that at first they resisted strongly the idea of having a Department of Homeland Security especially the President himself.

Then we heard the partisan attacks from many Republicans on the 9/11 Commission, which the administration allowed to go forward in the first place only after great resistance.

I hope and pray we can return to a time as we used to do, and as it was when I came to the Senate, when security issues were not used for partisan effect or political benefit. Given the track record of this administration for secrecy, unilateralism, overreaching, and abject partisanship, however, I certainly understand why many question their assertions. An administration that can hide legal memoranda justifying torture and then, when forced to acknowledge them, disavow them, does not earn our trust. An administration that reports that terrorism had decreased last year and then, when questioned, had to admit that it was wrong and reissue the report has basic credibility problems.

So I wish we would turn away from these divisive legislative maneuvers and work together on the Nation's agenda. The senior member of the Senate, Senator BYRD, said it all better than I can. He spoke yesterday afternoon about the need to get about our business and the Nation's business. Senator BYRD offered wise counsel to the Republican leadership. I wish it had been listened to.

Roll Call reported earlier this week that this week's activities amount to a showdown prompted by the Republicans' desire for a wedge issue they can use with undecided voters in November. That is a shame and a sham. When we should be considering measures to strengthen homeland security, Republican partisans are focused on devising wedge issues for partisan political purposes. Well, that is wrong. I urge the Republican administration and the Republican leaders in the House and the Senate to come back to the work of Congress, not the work of political partisans. Let us complete our work for the American people.

The Senate does not have to be a battlefront for the Presidential campaign. There is plenty of time for that. In fact, I wonder if we are not setting ourselves up for people to say during the election season that the Republican-controlled Congress did not do the work of the people. Let us get on with doing it. One of the first things we can do is take the stalled Homeland Security appropriations bill and actually vote on it.

If the hundreds of billions of dollars we have spent so far have not made us safe, then let us debate that and find what will.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

Mr. BOND. Madam President, I am very pleased to announce that today, about 90 minutes ago, the report of the Select Committee on Intelligence on the pre-Iraq war has finally been released. We were bound not to talk about it until it was released at 10:30 today. Our staff has done an excellent job reviewing 15,000 documents and 200 witnesses, going back time and again to get the facts straight.

We came up with the unanimous conclusions that I think this body and our friends around the country, including the media, ought to pay attention to what is actually in that report. Some of my colleagues spent yesterday talking about the report and putting their spin on it.

I have been very distressed that the spin had nothing to do with the facts that are actually in the report. It is a lengthy report. For the benefit of my colleagues who have not been on the Intelligence Committee, let me tell you a couple of things that were in the report.

First, the intelligence used by the President, the Vice President, the chairman, and ranking member of the Intelligence Committee, the chairman and ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, along with the rest of us, was the intelligence given to them by the CIA. This was intelligence given to them through three administrations. On the basis of that, on the floor the statement was made on September 19, 2002:

> We begin with the common belief that Saddam Hussein is a tyrant and a threat to the peace and stability of the region. He has ignored the mandate of the United Nations and is building weapons of mass destruction and the means of delivering them.

Senator LEVIN stated that.

On October 10, 2002:

> There is unmistakable evidence that Saddam Hussein is working aggressively to develop nuclear weapons and will likely have nuclear weapons within the next 5 years. We also should remember we have always underestimated the progress Saddam has made in the development of weapons of mass destruction.

Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER stated that.

These were conclusions that came from the best intelligence we had available, that other intelligence agencies had available. Actually, if you look at it, Iraqi Survey Group leader David Kay, when he came back to the United States, said we know that Iraq was a far more dangerous place, even than we had learned from our intelligence because of other things that were going on that were not fully reported.

We identified problems in this report. There was no human intelligence, which you absolutely need. There was faulty analysis in sharing of information among the various agencies. Some analysts did not fully qualify the information that was not confirmed.

But despite the breathless headlines, despite the political charges that are being made on the other side of the aisle, no one was pressured to change judgments or reach specific judgments. In fact, the committee interviewed over 200 people, searching, searching, and searching for those who might be pressured.

Chairman ROBERTS asked repeatedly, publicly and in hearings, that anybody who had information on pressure to change conclusions, come forward. Nobody did. They chased rabbits all through every brush pile that could be imagined. Anybody who had an idea of pressure was challenged. Do you know what they found? There was tremendous pressure on the analysts because they had not put together the right information prior to 9/11. They felt pressure, but they all said it was pressure to get it right. They said it is the job of the intelligence community to respond to the most searching questions of the people, the policymakers who use it.

Let me cite three conclusions from the report, which I think are very important on intelligence. From page 284: conclusion 83:

> The committee did not find any evidence that administration officials attempted to coerce, influence, or pressure analysts to change their judgments related to Iraq's weapons of mass destruction capabilities.

The committee found no evidence that the Vice President's visits to the Central Intelligence Agency were attempts to pressure analysts, were perceived as intended to pressure analysts by those who participated in the briefings of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programs, or did pressure analysts to change their assessments.

On page 359, conclusion 102:

The committee found that none of the analysts or other people interviewed by the committee said they were pressured to change their conclusions related to Iraq's links to terrorism. After 9/11, analysts were under tremendous pressure to make correct assessments to avoid missing a credible threat and to avoid an intelligence failure.

These are the findings upon which we unanimously agreed. I think the Vice President and others who have been politically maligned are entitled to an apology.

Do you know what this all comes back to? This comes back to a plan that we learned about on November 6, 2003. I have in my mind a FOX News report on this memo from a Democratic staffer. Nobody has denied it. In fact, they are playing their plays out of that game book now.

It talks about:

No. 1: Pull the majority along as far as we can on issues that may lead to major new disclosures. . . .

No. 2: Assiduously prepare Democratic ''additional views'' to attach to any interim or final reports. . . .

No. 3: We will identify the most exaggerated claims and contrast them with the intelligence estimates that have since been declassified. Our additional views will also, among other things, castigate the majority for seeking to limit the scope of the inquiry.

That is exactly what the game plan is that they are following. When you look at the conclusion, the summary of that memo, it says:

Intelligence issues are clearly secondary to the public's concern regarding the insurgency in Iraq. Yet, we have an important role to play in revealing the misleading—if not flagrantly dishonest methods and motives—of senior administration officials who made the case for a unilateral, preemptive war. The approach outlined above seems to offer the best prospects for exposing the administration's dubious motives and methods.

I ask unanimous consent that be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOND. To sum it up, we are at war with terrorists. The terrorists were in Iraq. They had access to the weapons of mass destruction that Saddam Hussein had produced in the past and were willing to produce in the future. We have received increased briefings on recent threats in the United States. The greatest danger we fear is that Saddam Hussein, had we not taken him out, would be supplying those terrorists with chemical and biological weapons.

Our troops remain under fire, but some on this floor and some commentators I have heard seem to be more interested in politicizing the problems in the Intelligence Committee rather than getting at the root of the problem. I hope we can put these partisan charges aside because there is much work to do to improve the gathering, the analysis, and the dissemination of intelligence. For the good of this country, we need to put behind us this partisan effort to fingerpoint and make accusations that have been explicitly disabused and disavowed by this intelligence report.

I commend the staff of the Intelligence Committee. I thank the many thousands of dedicated people in the intelligence community who are doing their best, under difficult circumstances, to get information under systems that were not adequate for the needs at the time. We need to build a system where we get human intelligence, where we analyze it better, and where we share it among agencies that we have not done adequately in the past.

I thank my colleagues from Texas and Alabama for their courtesy.

EXHIBIT 1

RAW DATA: DEM MEMO ON IRAQ INTEL

[From FOX News, Nov. 6, 2003]

We have carefully reviewed our options under the rules and believe we have identified the best approach. Our plan is as follows:

(1) Pull the majority along as far as we can on issues that may lead to major new disclosures regarding improper or questionable conduct by administration officials. We are having some success in that regard. For example, in addition to the president's State of the Union speech, the chairman has agreed to look at the activities of the Office of the Secretary of Defense as well as Secretary Bolton's office at the State Department. The fact that the chairman supports our investigations into these offices and co-signs our requests for information is helpful and potentially crucial. We don't know what we will find but our prospects for getting the access we seek is far greater when we have the backing of the majority. (Note: we can verbally mention some of the intriguing leads we are pursuing.)

(2) Assiduously prepare Democratic ''additional views'' to attach to any interim or final reports the committee may release. Committee rules provide this opportunity and we intend to take full advantage of it. In that regard, we have already compiled all the public statements on Iraq made by senior administration officials. We will identify the most exaggerated claims and contrast them with the intelligence estimates that have since been declassified. Our additional views will also, among other things, castigate the majority for seeking to limit the scope of the inquiry. The Democrats will then be in a strong position to reopen the question of establishing an independent commission (i.e. the Corzine amendment).

(3) Prepare to launch an independent investigation when it becomes clear we have exhausted the opportunity to usefully collaborate with the majority. We can pull the trigger on an independent investigation at any time—but we can only do so once. The best time to do so will probably be next year either:

(A) After we have already released our additional views on an interim report—thereby providing as many as three opportunities to make our case to the public: (1) additional views on the interim report; (2) announcement of our independent investigation; and (3) additional views on the final investigation; or

(B) Once we identify solid leads the majority does not want to pursue. We could attract more coverage and have greater credibility in that context than one in which we simply launch an independent investigation based on principled but vague notions regarding the ''use'' of intelligence.

In the meantime, even without a specifically authorized independent investigation, we continue to act independently when we encounter foot-dragging on the part of the majority. For example, the FBI Niger investigation was done solely at the request of the vice chairman; we have independently submitted written questions to DoD; and we are preparing further independent requests for information.

SUMMARY

Intelligence issues are clearly secondary to the public's concern regarding the insurgency in Iraq. Yet, we have an important role to play in revealing the misleading—if not flagrantly dishonest methods and motives—of the senior administration officials who made the case for a unilateral, preemptive war. The approach outline above seems to offer the best prospect for exposing the administration's dubious motives and methods.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION RELATING TO MARRIAGE

Mr. CORNYN. First, Madam President, my remarks pertain to the issue of marriage. Of course, I have been here this morning while the distinguished Senator, the current occupant of the chair, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, comprehensively laid out the reasons why this is an important debate.

I have also heard Senator ALLARD from Colorado and Senator SMITH from Oregon speak about this issue. I would like to associate myself with each of those comments. But I want to explain briefly my own reasons why I believe this is such an important issue.

First, I would like to respond to the comments made by the ranking member, the Senator from Vermont, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee. This is something that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has already touched on, but I think it is so important. We keep hearing the same argument over and over again, so we really need to hit this issue hard.

But I think it is so important.

It is amazing to me to hear the Senator from Vermont and others say we have no time to talk about the issue of marriage and the American family because there are more important issues we ought to be debating. The truth is, while there have been Members on this side of the aisle talking about this issue all morning long, there has been virtually dead silence on the other side of the aisle.

Then we hear comments that are made about, well, this really isn't that important, and there are more important issues for us to talk about: homeland security, the budget, appropriations, and the like.

But I concur with the comments made this morning by the present occupant of the chair, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, that there is no issue more important in this country today than the American family and preserving the traditional institution of marriage as the most basic building block in our society, one created for children in their best interests.

You know this common theme, that this issue is not important; it is not one that has been demonstrated by the lack of presence on the Senate floor by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, or even the overt comments made about this not being an important issue. We have had numerous hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Subcommittee on the Constitution, which I am honored to chair, and other committees in the Senate. Essentially, we have been met with either overt hostility or, in many instances no-shows, where Senators have chosen to boycott a good-faith desire to have an honest discussion about this issue and the threat that has been posed to the traditional family.

I, for one, am shocked and amazed at the attitude. Unfortunately, it is the reality we confront today and which the American family confronts.

Of course, I have been concerned about this issue, as I think most Americans have been, for a long time. But I note that in January of 1999 when I served as Texas Attorney General, one of my responsibilities—it was one of the few attorney general offices that had this responsibility—was child support enforcement. It was my obligation, my duty, my privilege to enforce child support orders for about 1.2 million Texas children.

It is no secret to any of us that due to the growth of out-of-wedlock childbirths now—about one out of every three children born in America are born outside of marriage; unfortunately, a fact that we all bemoan but a real and present reality—that half of the marriages end in divorce; that the American family is in fragile condition.

That is one reason I was so concerned when on May 17, 2004, we saw an assault launched on the American family and the institution of marriage. But the truth is, we should have seen this coming. There were a few people who did, but most did not.

I worry that the American family will not be able to sustain itself against this continued attempt to marginalize the importance of traditional families and the importance of every child having a loving and supportive mother and father, which we all know as a matter of common sense, a matter of observation, and as a matter of social science is the optimal situation for a child to be raised and grow up in.

I would be the first to say that there are heroic parents—single parents and children living in other arrangements—that adults do a heroic job of raising children in other-than-traditional family households. I congratulate them, and we ought to do everything we can to support them in every way we can because we know the optimal is not always possible.

But that shouldn't cause us to shy away from or refuse to defend the importance of the traditional family unit as the optimal situation in which children are born and raised into productive adults and have a chance to live up to their God-given potential.

We know that, as a sad fact of social science, children who are raised in a less than optimal situation through no fault of their own are at higher risk, that they are at higher risk of a host of social ills. We hope and pray that they may overcome these higher risks. But we know, tragically, that too many cannot. We see the evidence of that with dropout students who fail to pursue their education because they simply drop out of school, children who become involved in drugs and other self-destructive activity, children engaged in premature sexual experimentation and pregnancy, and other problems that affect their ability to grow up as fully productive and contributing citizens.

So we should not shy away from this debate when it comes to talking about what is optimal, what is in the best interests of American children and American families.

I believe that fundamentally is what this debate is about.

Some people have asked me, Why is it that some seem to shy away from this debate? I will tell you this: I think part of the reason is that some people just prefer not to be called names or to have their motives cast in doubt. But I will tell you this: I believe with all my heart that the people of this country believe in two fundamental propositions in addition to others.

No. 1, the American people believe in the essential dignity and worth of every human being.

At the same time, I think the American people overwhelmingly believe in the importance of traditional marriage and the traditional family as the bedrock institution of our society and in the best interests of children. I don't think there is any conflict there. I think you can believe in both at the same time.

This is not about phobias. This is not about a desire to hurt anyone. This is a discussion—an important discussion that we ought to have and we are going to have about the institution of the American family and traditional marriage as the optimal situation.

I fail to see how any one of us can remain neutral or on the sidelines when this debate is going forward. Indeed, we did not choose to engage in this debate at this time on this amendment. There is a difference between launching an attack and acting in self-defense. The American people know the difference. But I believe we must answer the call to action now on behalf of the American family.

It was on May 17, 2004, when the Massachusetts Supreme Court declared traditional marriage—remember these words because these are important—''a stain that must be eradicated.''

The Supreme Court, four members, the majority of that court, called it invidious discrimination to limit marriage to persons of the opposite sex, what we call traditional marriage.

They said ''limiting traditional marriage between members of the opposite sex lacks any rational basis.''

As has already been noted and as we observed on cable television and the nightly news, this attack on the family and on traditional marriage that occurred in Massachusetts was joined by lawless officials in San Francisco and elsewhere around the country.

Soon the American people saw same-sex unions occurring on our television screens, in our newspapers, and reported on the radio.

Tragically, it is not the adults who pay the price for the marginalization of marriage as our most basic societal institution, it is our children who pay and pay and pay some more. Social science confirms what common sense and simple observation dictate: When the institution of marriage is marginalized, children are at higher risk, as I mentioned before. In short, they are at higher risk for the sort of consequences that will follow them for the rest of their lives.

When the Massachusetts Supreme Court, following the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court, which I will discuss briefly in a minute, launched into this radical social experiment in redefining the institution of marriage, we have some glimpse of what that experiment may yield by what social scientists have been able to evaluate in Europe and elsewhere. We have seen what happens when government pretends this problem does not exist until it is too late. We cannot afford to look back years from now and say we stood idly by while the American family was marginalized into irrelevance.

How did we get here? How in the world did the Massachusetts Supreme Court, on May 17, 2004, decide that traditional marriage was a stain that must be eradicated, represented invidious discrimination, and had no rational basis? They did not dream it up on their own. The origins of this language and this rationale for that decision came from the case of Lawrence v. Texas. I have excerpted a segment of Justice Kennedy's opinion for the majority of the Court because this is the germ, this is the seed out of which this concept has grown and which now, as I have stated, threatens to jeopardize the American family, further marginalizing the American family and, indeed, the traditional institution of marriage.

Relying on an earlier decision in Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey, the Court reaffirmed the substantive force of the liberty protected by the due process clause. For nonlawyers, they were relying on this earlier decision and said that they were reaffirming the basis of that decision here. The Court went on to say:

> The Casey decision again confirmed that our laws and traditions afford constitutional protection to personal decisions relating to marriage, procreation, contraception, family relationships, child rearing, and education.

In this following sentence, stated in the same place where they talked about the liberty interests that protect marriage, they conclude by saying:

> Persons in a homosexual relationship may seek autonomy for these purposes, just as heterosexual persons do.

As Justice Scalia noted in his dissent, it was this juxtaposition of marriage and this right of individual autonomy in one's relationships that extends not just to heterosexuals in marriage but also to homosexuals in their relationships that is the basis for the Court's decision here. Not surprisingly, that was the very case cited by the Massachusetts Supreme Court in the Goodridge case when they held that traditional marriage was a stain that must be eradicated, that it represents invidious discriminations to allow heterosexuals to enter into that relationship but not homosexuals, and said that limiting marriage to traditional marriage between persons of the opposite sex had no rational basis.

Of course, the American people have not had a chance to express their views on this issue. As was pointed out eloquently earlier, neither did the people of Massachusetts. As it turned out, when the people of Massachusetts had the chance to have their voice heard on this issue, they chose to overrule the decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court. The problem is in Massachusetts a constitutional amendment takes two consecutive sessions of the legislature, and they cannot amend the constitution until 2006 in that State. In the meantime, as we all know, since May 17, clerks have been ordered to issue licenses for same-sex marriages, and this pending constitutional amendment of 2006 is too late to effectively let the people's voice be heard and control this debate.

We have seen what some have called ''government by the judiciary.'' We believe in our fundamental constitutional documents. Our Constitution provides for government of the people, by the people, and for the people, not government of the judiciary, by the judiciary, and for the judiciary but government of the people, by the people, and for the people. When we see an overturning, in essence, of the Massachusetts Constitution, 224 years after it was written, by a radical redefinition of marriage by a majority on the Massachusetts Supreme Court, it amazes me some of our colleagues would expect us to stand on the sidelines, mute, and expect us to be mere spectators in what is perhaps one of the most important debates we could possibly be having in this body or anywhere else around this country, and that is the preservation of the American family and the preservation of traditional marriage as the most important stabilizing factor in our society in a relationship that is most important for the raising and nurturing of children.

Some have suggested that this is not a Federal issue, this is not something the U.S. Congress should have anything to do with. Some have said in good faith—I think naively so but in good faith—well, let Massachusetts deal with that; that does not affect us. As already has been pointed out, people have married in Massachusetts under Massachusetts law and moved to 46 different States. Indeed, there are a number of lawsuits—I think at last count roughly nine lawsuits, maybe more—where those persons, same-sex couples who married in Massachusetts, have moved to other States and filed lawsuits seeking to require those States to recognize the validity of those marriages even though the laws of those other States do not recognize same-sex marriage.

As was pointed out a little earlier, we should have seen this coming. It has been coming for quite some time. It really did not start with Lawrence v. Texas. Some of the most well-known legal scholars in the United States, such as Laurence Tribe, have been advocating this position all along. He concludes after Lawrence, as he did beforehand, that this was the death knell for traditional marriage in America. But he said, ''You'd have to be tone deaf not to get the message from Lawrence that anything that invites people to give same-sex couples less than full respect is constitutionally suspect.'' That is what left-leaning liberal legal scholars have been saying for some time and what the Supreme Court embraced in Lawrence and now we have seen carried to the next step, the logical conclusion, by the Goodridge court in Massachusetts.

But I guess what causes me such disappointment at the absence of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle and of their statements—those who have come to the floor and those who have shown up in committee—is saying this is not an important issue, that there are more important issues.

This is not a partisan issue. The reason I say that is because in 1996 the Congress passed—indeed, the Senate passed, by 85 votes—the Defense of Marriage Act which, as a matter of Federal law, defines marriage as the union of one man and one woman.

Now what I fear is our colleagues who oppose this amendment, who voted for the Defense of Marriage Act—they understand the Defense of Marriage Act is under threat and that a constitutional challenge will be made to the Defense of Marriage Act based on this Lawrence rationale. Indeed, that has already occurred in the States of Utah, Florida, and Nebraska, a Federal constitutional challenge that says: Your laws that limit marriage to traditional marriage, a marriage between one man and one woman, now violate the Constitution, using the very rationale I described earlier in Lawrence, agreeing, perhaps, with Professor Tribe. We are told this is not important, this is not worthy of debate, and there are other things that are more important. I disagree. I think the American people, when this finally begins to sink in, will disagree as well.

Some people have asked me: Why is it there is not a greater popular uprising and outcry about this issue? Well, I remember when we saw people getting married in San Francisco, same-sex couples there, and in Massachusetts, there was sort of a blip on the radar screen. Polls showed that the American people, once they realized what was going on, disapproved of what they saw. But, of course, we are all busy raising families and going to work, and this perhaps has not been something that has been sustained in their consciousness and their awareness. But, indeed, this is an important issue and one that is under attack.

Some have said, though: Why can't we let Massachusetts do its own thing? And why can't each State decide for itself what its policy will be? Well, we have seen, because of same-sex couples getting married in Massachusetts and moving to other States, that is not possible. Realistically that is not possible.

If you think about another aspect of what we call family law—let's say the law of adoption—if one State says you can adopt a child under certain circumstances, when that family moves to another State—when they move to Texas, Utah, or somewhere else—we recognize the validity of that adoption, of that family law decision.

What I believe is some of our colleagues, indeed some of the American people, are, No. 1, in shock at this radical transformation in our society's most basic institution. Secondly, after shock, people sometimes are in denial. They do not want to believe it. They do not want to think they are going to have to deal with it. And then, after a while, the reality begins to sink in that this is indeed something that needs to be addressed.

There are some who said: Well, if this is such a threat, why can't we wait until after the U.S. Supreme Court joins the Massachusetts Supreme Court in saying you cannot limit marriage to opposite-sex couples, based on this rationale and the logical conclusion of the language I have already described?

As you know, the U.S. Constitution has been amended 27 times. We have some history, some track record of how long it takes the process to go forward. It requires, of course, as you know, a two-thirds vote in the Congress. It requires ratification by three-quarters of the States. In other words, it takes a little time. Some amendments have been adopted and ratified in as short as 8 months, but typically they take a little bit longer.

So what people are saying—if they want us to wait until after the Federal courts declare traditional marriage unconstitutional, if they want us to wait until that time to raise this constitutional amendment—they are, I suggest to you, inviting the same sort of chaos we are seeing happening in Massachusetts. Because once same-sex marriages occur, if months and maybe years later the Constitution is amended to reinstate the status quo of traditional marriage, it may very well be too late.

So I will conclude, because I see the distinguished Senator from Alabama in the Chamber, who I know has been waiting to address this issue. This is an important issue. This is an issue that deserves serious debate by serious people. This is an issue that cannot be limited to one State. And this is an issue the American people deserve a right to be heard on through the amendment process.

I would say, in conclusion, there are some who say the U.S. Constitution is a sacred document and should not be amended. If the American people do not exercise their rights under Article V of the Constitution to amend the Constitution as they see fit—given that high bar, and given the deliberation that is required in order to meet that high standard—the only people who are going to amend the Constitution are judges—Federal, life-tenured judges who are accountable to no one.

I submit that is antidemocratic, it is contrary to the concept of self-government that is ensconced in our Constitution and was embraced by our Founding Fathers, and simply will not stand up under any close scrutiny. The whole concept that Federal judges ought to be the only ones to speak on what the laws are that govern us is antithetical to a constitution that guarantees government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Finally, I would say we have on this last chart a statement of intent by those who intend to pursue legal action across the country until they reach their ultimate goal:

> We will not stop until we have [same-sex] marriage nationwide.

This was stated by a spokesperson for Lambda Legal, which is an organization that supports much of this concerted legal action across the country in State and Federal courts, the logical conclusion of which is the judicial mandate of same-sex marriage.

I look forward to the additional debate and the words offered by my colleagues on this subject. I hope those who have a different view will have the courage to come here and tell the American people why it is they think the preservation of the American family and the preservation of traditional marriage is unimportant. I think we can have a pretty good debate. I hope they do not choose, instead, to stay in their offices or at home and hide from this issue. This is simply too important to the kind of country America is and the kind of country we will become.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, today the Senate has begun the formal debate on the constitutional amendment that does something very simple; that is, protect marriage. The question before us is fundamental: Should marriage remain the union between a husband and a wife? Marriage is the union between a man and a woman for the purpose of procreation, and has been, until this point, one of the great settled questions of human history and culture.

Yet our current legal system seems alarmingly out of step with this historical understanding of marriage. Over and against 5,000 years of recorded human experience and social development, the Massachusetts Supreme Court has thrown out the definition of marriage. Marriage is no longer to be understood as a covenant between a husband and wife in the interest of their future children but, rather, the consummation of romantic attraction between any two adults. And they, these judges, appointed lawyers to these positions, imposed this radical change over the strong objections of the people of Massachusetts, the Legislature of Massachusetts, and the Governor of Massachusetts.

Indeed, a number of local governments in California and Oregon and New York followed the lead of the Massachusetts court, offering marriage licenses in violation of State laws, in violation of State constitutions. Same-sex couples from 46 States applied for marriage licenses in these jurisdictions. There are pending lawsuits to overturn marriage laws in 11 other States. It has become clear that the issue is a national issue, and it requires a national solution, and thus this debate on the floor of the Senate.

Last year's Supreme Court decision in Lawrence v. Texas, combined with the Court's views of the constitutional clauses on full faith and credit, equal protection, and due process, have convinced legal scholars of all political persuasions that the existing Defense of Marriage Act will be struck down. Harvard law school professor Laurence Tribe said:

> You'd have to be tone deaf not to get the message from Lawrence that anything that invites people to give same-sex couples less than full respect is constitutionally suspect.

Yale law professor William Eskridge agreed that the Lawrence decision will add to the momentum for recognition of same-sex marriage.

The Harvard Law Review, last month, weighed in with its opinion: ''The time is ripe for a constitutional challenge to DOMA'' because the 1996 act ''violates equal protection principles.''

The truth is, the Constitution is about to be amended. The only question is whether it will be amended by the U.S. Congress, as the representative of the people, or by judicial fiat. Will activist judges amend the Constitution? Will they undo marriage as the union of a man and a woman? Or will the people amend the Constitution to preserve marriage?

I say the people should have a voice. On such a fundamental question, the only sure option is a constitutional amendment.

Some have argued marriage is already a weakened institution in America and expanding marriage to same-sex couples will strengthen it. It is true that marriage in this Nation today is not as strong as it should be. But I question whether changing the definition of marriage will help us strengthen the institution. We can look at what has happened in other countries.

Scholar Stanley Kurtz has found that 10 years of de facto same-sex marriage in Scandinavia has further weakened marriage. A majority of children in Sweden and Norway are today born to unmarried parents.

In the Netherlands, which adopted de facto same-sex marriage in 1997, the proportion of children born outside of marriage has tripled. This isn't surprising. When the laws of a nation teach the next generation that marriage no longer has anything important to do with bringing mothers and fathers together for their children's sake, how can we expect otherwise? Rather than making marriage stronger, it has made marriage optional for childbearing. And we know from social science and from common sense that children do best in stable two-parent households.

Conversely, children in broken and unstable homes suffer. They are more prone to delinquency, more prone to poorer grades, high-risk behaviors, a whole raft of negative social outcomes. Children need moms and dads. Marriage recognizes and addresses that need.

Yes, marriage is about love. But it is also crucially about pointing men and women to the kind of loving union that binds them together and to their children. Far from strengthening the family, separating marriage from childbearing and child rearing undermines the family and distorts what we teach our children about the meaning of adult commitment, responsibility, mutual loyalty.

As Governor Mitt Romney recently testified, the pressures to change have already begun. The Massachusetts Department of Health has begun to insist that even birth certificates must change. The lines for mother and father are being replaced by parent A and parent B. One wonders if parent A and parent B are even expected to be more than casually acquainted. So we can see that the implications of radically redefining marriage are far reaching. They are dramatic. They are not private. They are not measured.

As we proceed to debate this serious and intense issue, I urge all sides to accord one another respect. Let us agree at least on this one point, that the Harvard Law Review is wrong and irresponsible when it says that Americans who want to protect marriage are motivated by animus or bigotry. And Cheryl Jacques of the Human Rights Campaign is wrong when she described marriage amendment proponents as ''hate-filled people who will stop at nothing to achieve their discriminatory, offensive goals.''

Such allegations are neither fair nor true about the vast majority of decent, law-abiding Americans. Nor do they help us understand the issues before us. Americans of all races, creeds, and parties are coming together to protect marriage as the union of husband and wife. We do so with respect for those Americans who disagree. The debate over something as basic and fundamental as marriage may be passionate and intense, but it need not be ugly and divisive. Amending the Constitution is a serious matter. We do not consider this action lightly. It is a serious matter that has to be addressed with the utmost respect, time for debate, consideration, and deliberation. That is what we will see play out on the floor of the Senate over the course of today and Monday and Tuesday.

Too many important decisions have been made by unelected judges. Far from settling issues, such sweeping decisions have only fueled the controversy. The American people have a right to settle this question of what marriage will be in the United States. That can only be done through the mechanism our Founding Fathers gave us for settling questions of great national import. And that is the constitutional process. It is not autocratic but supremely democratic, consistent with the great principles of federalism. The Constitution can only be amended if two-thirds of both Houses of Congress agree and three-quarters of the States, and it will only happen if the great majority of the American people across this land agree. That is the democratic process.

Marriage is an issue that rightly belongs in the hands of the American people. If the people do not speak, then the courts become our masters by default.

Marriage and family are the bedrock of society. Before we embark on a vast untested social experiment for which children will bear the ultimate consequences, we need a thorough public debate. It is my hope that our debate in this body will add to the larger marriage debate already underway.

Marriage is worth the time, energy, and attention of this Senate and of all the American people. The model of the family bound by marriage to fulfill its attendant responsibilities, indeed, is a worthy ideal.

The matter before us is critical. The debate before us is essential. Let's hold it with civility and respect. Let the debate be spirited, let it be substantive, and let it be held now in this body, the Senate, for this and future generations of Americans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

PRIORITIES AND ABSENCES

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to talk for a few minutes about a subject different than the one we have been hearing about most of this morning.

I rise as a proud member of the Senate. I treasure every moment that I serve here. I look at my voting record of over 20 years and I am proud of that record. It is important; whatever we do here is important. So I rise today to raise a question about a disturbing television ad that President Bush is running against our colleague, Senator KERRY. The ad opens up with the President saying, ''I approve of this message.''

The President's commercial is called ''priorities.'' It criticizes Senator KERRY for missing votes here. The President's advertisement says that ''leadership means choosing priorities.'' I could not agree more because Senator KERRY has chosen the correct priorities, while President Bush has been absent from leadership—sometimes referred to as AWOL.

If you look at the priorities of these two men throughout their lives, you learn a lot about who was absent and who was a leader. Senator KERRY has never been absent, AWOL, from his responsibilities. The President, on the other hand, has been absent at times when it required leadership. During the Vietnam war, an era in which 58,000 American soldiers lost their lives, and many more than that were wounded, President Bush was AWOL from leadership, AWOL from serving our country. He was assigned to the Texas Air National Guard, but he was absent from mandatory physicals, so he was grounded from flying. He was absent from his duties. We will never know all of the facts about the President's National Guard service because, today, the New York Times revealed that his records have been destroyed ''by mistake.''

If you look at Senator KERRY's history, you see a totally different picture. You see a man who signed up not just to join the Navy, but to go to Vietnam to serve his country. Even though he disagreed with that policy, he served bravely and courageously in a leadership role. He commanded a swift boat and he led it bravely.

Last week, I had the opportunity to visit with Del Sandusky, one of Senator KERRY's crewmen in the Navy. He tells many moving stories about the bravery and leadership of Senator KERRY in Vietnam.

By the time he returned from Vietnam, Senator KERRY earned a Silver Star and a Bronze Star, which are high-standing awards for bravery and courage in serving his country; and three awards of the Purple Heart for his service in combat. In fact, a question has been raised about whether he deserved the third Purple Heart. I don't know what that means. Does it mean we want to measure the depth of the wound to see whether you pass a certain line, and the Purple Heart is one color or another? The military has a process, and they said he is entitled to three Purple Hearts. In my view, he is also entitled to the gratitude of this country for speaking up after he finished his service to talk about what might have gone wrong with the decisions in Vietnam. But he didn't ever relinquish or shirk his duties.

What about the President's service at this time? They won't reveal the specifics. The records were destroyed, as we now know, and we will never find out. In this current war, as our brave soldiers are battling insurgents in Iraq, the President has not been honest about the true cost of this war. I am talking about the human cost as well as in monetary terms.

The President has ordered that no cameras be allowed to film the flag-draped coffins of heroes returning from battle. In my view, that is disrespectful to these men and women who gave their lives for this country.

I went to a funeral at Arlington Cemetery, and I also went to the funeral service of President Reagan. Each funeral had a similarity. They had an honor guard of proud service people escorting the coffin, doing their duty to say this Nation is grateful to these people they considered heroes. One act that the honor guard is required to perform is the folding of the flag and to finally put it into a triangle that can be handed over to the family. I watched at Arlington Cemetery when, crease by crease, each pair of service people—soldiers, marines, sailors—turned their part of the flag over. Finally, they folded it into a triangle, and the head of the honor guard walked over to the mother of this man who died and handed it to her. You could see the pride and the tears in her eyes with her family as she received this tribute from her country for her son's life.

The President has ordered that no cameras be allowed to film the flag-draped coffins of heroes returning from battle. In my view, it is disrespectful. Other Presidents weren't afraid to show the American people images of the honor guard receiving their coffins. In fact, President Reagan stood on the tarmac and publicly and openly received the coffins of 241 marines killed by Iranian-backed terrorists in Beirut in 1983. President Clinton did the same for flag-draped coffins returning from Kosovo. But President Bush hasn't been there. He is AWOL from this solemn duty.

When it comes to domestic issues, the President is AWOL from leadership. He was absent from funding the No Child Left Behind program. He signed it into law with great fanfare. But when the cameras were shut off, his leadership stopped. The latest budget underfunds No Child Left Behind by $9.4 billion. The budget also proposes the elimination of 38 educational programs. That is absence from leadership.

When it comes to protecting the environment, the President is absent. He refuses to make polluters pay for Superfund cleanups. He has proposed an outrageous rule to allow powerplants to spew mercury into the air and water, which brings potential harm to our children and those who are on the way to being born.

In the fight to cure disease, the President is absent. We have great tools to cure diseases such as Alzheimer's and juvenile diabetes at our disposal, and that tool is the use of embryonic stem cells, but the President is refusing to allow such research to proceed for political reasons. That is an absence of leadership.

When it comes to our Nation's transportation needs, the President has been AWOL. He has threatened to veto the highway bill even though it enjoys overwhelming bipartisan support. That puts 1.7 million jobs at risk at a time when we need to create jobs.

Thirty-eight percent of our roads are in fair or poor condition and 28 percent of our bridges are structurally deficient. Traffic congestion costs Americans more than $69 billion annually in lost time and productivity and 5.7 billion gallons of fuel annually is wasted while motorists sit in traffic. This absence of leadership on transportation is harming American families across the country.

The President signed a Medicare drug bill into law and the law has turned into a confusing nightmare for our Nation's senior citizens, who are barely going to see little, if any, monetary benefit. That is an absence of leadership. Of course, the main benefit does not kick in until 2006, conveniently past the next election. He does not want the American public to really see what is in that Medicare bill.

On homeland security, the President talks tough, but is he really there? The President's budget would reduce funding for grants to local police, fire, and emergency medical personnel from $4.2 billion in 2004 to $3.5 billion in 2005, more than a 15-percent decrease. Would anyone suggest we have less to worry about from terrorists when we just heard the dismal review by the Secretary of Homeland Security? The President's proposal will also cut first responder training by 43 percent.

The lack of leadership is not just at the White House. Unfortunately, my Republican colleagues in the Congress almost always march in lockstep with the White House, even at the peril of their constituents. This blind allegiance to the White House is having devastating effects. We have seen our budget surplus turn into deficits as far as the eye can see.

In Iraq, we bought the White House line and ignored military leaders. Look at the case of GEN Eric Shinseki, who said we need 300,000 troops in Iraq to do the job. He was right, but he was fired for telling the truth. We have recently heard from one of the leading Army generals who said our forces are too thin, and as a result of that, it is fair to say we have seen terrible casualties—879 Americans killed in Iraq, over 5,000 injured. If we had listened to General Shinseki and other military experts rather than the White House, perhaps those numbers would be less.

When the President said to the Congress, do not let Medicare negotiate for drug prices, we should have said: Too bad. Prices are out of control. We see that in the newspapers regularly now. We need to do this. Instead, the Republican majority said, ''yes, sir,'' and followed the White House's orders, and drug prices keep soaring.

I say enough is enough. We are a coequal branch of the Government. Let us act like it. My Republican colleagues should stand up to the President when they think he is wrong.

Senator KERRY is on a noble mission to change the direction of this country for the better. In doing so, he is leading us down a path toward a stronger America, and I can think of no better reason to pursue that goal with every minute of time, with every ounce of effort, with every bit of intellect he can muster. We wish him good health and success, to lift our country out of the misery of worry about their children, their jobs, their parents, and their Nation. We wish Senator KERRY Godspeed and hardly think of him as being AWOL. His record disproves any notion of that.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ACTIVIST COURTS IN AMERICA

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, as we finish up today, I want to share a few thoughts on the problem we have with the activist courts redefining marriage.

Marriage has been defined by every legislature that has ever sat in the United States from every State, now 50 States, the same way, but now we have unelected judges altering and changing that fundamental institution.

It is not a little matter. It is a very big matter. It is a matter the American people have a right to be asked about. It is a matter the American people have a right to be engaged in. It is an institution that no one can dispute is central to American culture. Regarding the culture of any country in the world, the status of family and marriage is critical to that culture.

I had the privilege of chairing a committee that had a hearing on marriage. It was a remarkable thing. Barbara Dafoe Whitehead was one of the witnesses. She had written an article that was voted one of the most significant articles in a news magazine in the second half of the 20th century. The Presiding Officer, the Senator from Mississippi, served with Dan Quayle, the former Vice President and Senator of this body. The name of the article was, ''Dan Quayle Was Right.''

She has since continued to study the science of families. She told us when she originally did her report she was criticized by academics around the country, but in the 10 years since she wrote that article there is no dispute that children do so much better—every objective scientific test shows that—if they are in a traditional two-parent family. Indeed, the husband and wife do better. It is a healthy relationship that the State, the Government—without any doubt, it seems to me—has every right to want to affirm and nurture and encourage through legislation.

To me, there is no discrimination whatsoever in a State deciding they are going to give a special protection to the marriage relationship that produces children, who will eventually run our country when we are gone. Any nation, any country, and any State has an interest in producing children who will take over and lead their country in the future.

They also have an interest in how those children are raised. It is a big deal here. Some people in this body continually push for more State and Federal Government involvement in the raising of children. I will ask you this: If there are not families to raise those children, who will raise them? Who will do that responsibility? It will fall on the State. There will be a much less effective job done, at greater cost to the taxpayers. Who could dispute that? I think the State has a remarkable and deep interest in it.

Likewise, when you have a universal, unequivocal, unbroken, consistent decision by every State and virtually every nation, until the last few years, that a marriage should be between a man and a woman, I think anybody ought to be reluctant to up and change it; to come along and say, well, you know, everybody has been doing this for 2000 years, but we think we ought to try something different.

We should not do that. I mean, if you want to bring it up in the legislature of the State of Alabama or the State of Massachusetts and you want to debate it and have hearings on it and take evidence and then you decide you want to vote on it, maybe that is one thing. But what we have had in this circumstance is a situation in which the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, citing language from the U.S. Supreme Court, up and declared it violates the equal protection clause of their Constitution to treat same-sex unions differently from heterosexual unions.

Maybe that is an equal protection violation. Maybe we could say that is what the Constitution says. But nobody, since the founding of this country, has ever interpreted it that way. What happens if a court makes a mistake? What happens if a group of judges says: I don't like the way the legislature has been handling this marriage thing. I don't think they have been affirming same-sex couples' unions and they ought to do it. Why don't we rule that way? Why don't we do that?

Somebody says, How are you going to do it? They say, We will study the Constitution. Here, it says everyone should be given equal protection of the laws. So we can overrule the State legislatures and we will say treating those two unions differently violates the equal protection of the laws. We will declare it unconstitutional.

Where did that leave the people of Massachusetts? We are on the verge of it, if the U.S. Supreme Court does it, for the entire United States. Where does that leave the people?

I remember in the early 1980s, Hodding Carter, who used to work for President Jimmy Carter, was on ''Meet the Press'' or one of those shows he was on regularly and they were talking about judicial activism. He said the sad truth is we liberals have gotten to the point where we ask the court to do for us that which we can no longer win at the ballot box.

This cannot be won at the ballot box. It can only be imposed on the people of America through a judicial ruling under the guise of interpreting the Constitution. That is what activism is. It is judges allowing personal political views to infect their decision-making process, where they override the actions of the legislature.

I am sure some say they will pass a law and overturn the Supreme Court. You cannot do that. It is important for everybody in this body to understand that. If the Supreme Court of the United States declares the Constitution prohibits a differentiation between a traditional marriage and other unions, the Constitutions of Massachusetts, or Illinois, or Alabama, or Mississippi is ineffective. It is trumped by the U.S. Constitution.

If we in the Congress pass a piece of legislation, a DOMA-like piece of legislation—I am sure it has been referred to earlier—it will not be effective in the face of a declaration by the U.S. Supreme Court that it is a violation of the equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution to treat these unions differently. So it is a big deal for us.

We have one of the great institutions of our entire culture, for which there is virtually unanimous public support, virtually unanimous support among all the legislatures who have ever sat in the States of the United States of America, and it is in danger of being wiped out by the Federal courts.

I know Massachusetts has already so ruled on May 17. Less than 2 months ago they began to conduct same-sex marriages in Massachusetts. They say those unions have to be given the same, equal treatment as the other unions.

I would ask, what about two sisters who live together, care for one another, have been together 40, 50, 60 years? Are they treated as a marital relationship? Why don't we call that a marriage? Two brothers? A brother and sister? A mother and a daughter who live together many years without any kind of sexual activity? Why is this same-sex union given a preferential treatment over those unions?

When you get away from the classical definition of marriage, we get into big trouble about where those lines will stay. The reason a State has an interest in preserving marriage, traditional marriage, is because children are produced in that arrangement. Out of that arrangement a new generation is born, raised, nurtured, trained, and educated. We need to affirm that.

We had an African American who spoke to a group of us yesterday.

He was Secretary of State of Ohio and he talked about that and how deeply people felt about it and how important he thought it was.

Another African American was pastor of a 2,000-member church. He was a bishop. He was also a city councilman in Detroit. He talked about how hard they have worked to overcome the breakdown of marriage in America and strengthen marriage in America.

We ought to be passing laws that encourage marriage, not discourage it. We ought to be, as a policymaking body, involved in establishing policies that affirm that relationship. We know scientifically, we know intuitively, and we know morally that this is the better way.

I am not putting down single parents. I am not condemning people who have a different sexual orientation. I don't mean that in any way whatsoever. But the State, the government, has a right to define marriage in the classical term because that is where children are born, that is where they are nurtured, raised, and cared for. If the parents don't do it, I guess the State has to, which is what is happening in Europe.

Earlier today, one of the Senators may have mentioned a new letter that has come out of the Netherlands. Five scholars—social scientists and lawyers—have written a letter to warn that their actions in the Netherlands to affirm through legislation same-sex unions may well have contributed to the collapse, decline, and very rapid disorder of marriage in the Netherlands. We know that over 50 percent of the children in Norway, which a number of years ago created defacto same-sex marriage, are born out of wedlock. It is an incredible collapse of marriage in northern Europe—Norway, Sweden and Denmark have declined, and the Netherlands has shown a rapid decline. These social scientists warned other nations that are considering going in this direction, that are considering passing laws in this direction, that it would further weaken marriage and family.

We ought to pay heed to that. Why would we want to go down that way? We do not follow the European model of national defense. We have an extraordinary, modern, and effective national defense capability that the Europeans do not have. We do not follow the European model on taxing and spending. That is why our Nation is stronger, more economically dynamic, and is growing far faster than the European nations. They are not growing.

Their growth rate is down. Their population is aging. They are having fewer and fewer children. Their welfare rolls are growing. They have a workweek of 35 hours. We are supposed to find more people more jobs so more people can work. And their unemployment is about twice ours.

We don't follow their idea on the economy, thank goodness. The socialist model has not worked there and they are in a pell-mell race to secularize Europe. And we have not done that either. They don't allow a Muslim child to wear a scarf, or Christian child to wear a cross.

Why would we want to go that way? We should not go that way. We do not have to. We can make a choice to go a different way.

Some in this country, and I think some on our courts, seem to believe this is the wave of the future; that this is the enlightened Europe, and we ought to follow the enlightened Europe with a negative growth rate, I guess, and a rapid increase in secular relations in society. I don't think we need to go there.

There is an opportunity and a big moment. This is a big moment. It is an opportunity for this Senate to allow the people of the United States to speak on this issue, to say how they want the future of this country to be handled, for them to say who is in charge of this country. As Senator CORNYN from Texas said earlier, when an unelected judge makes a ruling in a political manner, like on the definition of marriage, it is an anti-democratic act. These are people, unelected, with lifetime appointments, not answerable to the public. If we vote wrong, you can remove us from office. That is the way the system works and the Founding Fathers all thought about it. That is what democracy is. But we have unelected people not having hearings, not having debate, not going out and having town hall meetings throughout their State, as I do and most Senators do, listening to the people, thinking about the issues, having a sensitivity of what is occurring in society. They are sitting up there in their robes rendering rulings to go to the heart of who we are as a people. I am concerned about it. I think we have every right to be concerned.

The substance of the matter is large. It is a very big deal. The dynamics of it are very crucial.

It is time for us as a people to utilize the power of the Constitution given us through our elected representatives to amend the Constitution. That is what it provides.

Frankly, when a judge redefines the Constitution's traditional meaning and makes it say something it does not, that judge has amended the Constitution contrary to the provisions in that document.

I remember back when I was U.S. attorney in Alabama. I had a parent come to me and show me the textbook in the classroom. It said how the Constitution is amended. The one way was the amendment process, as provided for in the Constitution. And they mentioned another way: Amended by ruling of the court. They are teaching children—the truth—which is courts, through their rulings, if they are not true and faithful to the document itself, amend the Constitution.

We ought not to allow that to occur.

I think this would be in no way extreme, in no way improper, and highly appropriate for this Senate to say let's let the American people decide about this fundamental institution of marriage, and let us tell the courts that we control life in this country, not them. They are not accountable.

Some say, well, this is all not going to happen; that you are not going to have the courts do this. It is not just not going to happen. It is not thinkable. Was it thinkable that the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in this country, the largest court of appeals in the United States, would rule that ''under God'' could not be in the Pledge of Allegiance? When it got to the Supreme Court of the United States, do you see what happened? They punted. They moved it out on procedural grounds and did not state clearly what their view of it is. A number of their rulings, frankly, would indicate that it is not appropriate.

The Supreme Court has a problem in a lot of issues. They are not perfect. People are not without flaw. Many of these decisions are made by just a slim majority. It is not nine votes that are needed out of nine; it is only five, a majority. Five judges can redefine marriage and do a lot of other definitions that can impact significantly this country if they don't show personal discipline and fidelity to the law.

Let me just say this: This is the whole basis of a debate in this body between our Members on the other side of the aisle and on this side of the aisle and President Bush over judges. It is over whether or not judges will show restraint, whether they will remain true to the document, and not use the opportunity to rule as an opportunity to impose their personal views on the American public. That is what this debate is about over judges. It is not Republicans this, and Democrats that, how many judges I confirmed here and how many judges you confirmed there. It is a deep, fundamental difference.

The liberal activist groups in this country cannot win at the ballot box. So they are determined to utilize court rulings like this to further their agendas that are contrary to the American people.

I make one point before I wrap up. We have the language from the U.S. Supreme Court, our Supreme Court. In Lawrence v. Texas, Justice Kennedy, writing for a six-person majority, says:

> In Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey, the court reaffirmed the substantive force of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.

When the Presiding Officer was in law school and was taught law, I am not sure he was told there was a substantive due process right to liberty. I don't think substantive due process is mentioned in the Constitution, but here we have ''liberty protected by the Due Process Clause. The Casey decision again confirmed that our laws and tradition afford constitutional protection to personal decisions relating to marriage, procreation, contraception, family relationships, child rearing, and education . . . ''

This case has to do with whether a State could prohibit sodomy, and they ruled they could not. It says in the case, Casey confirmed that our laws and our tradition afford constitutional protection. So we are defining the Constitution, this says. The Constitution says you have a right to ''protection to personal decisions relating to marriage, procreation, contraception,'' and more.

Then further it says:

> Persons in a homosexual relationship may seek autonomy for these purposes, just as heterosexual persons do.

Obviously referring back to marriage above.

That is a pretty good indication that the Supreme Court—in dicta, not a holding of the case but in language and logic—made a clear suggestion they were prepared to rule that heterosexual marriage could not exist without homosexual marriage.

Let's hear how one of the brilliant Justices of the Court, Justice Scalia, who believes the Court should show restraint, analyzed the impact of it. Justice Scalia said it does mean we must recognize same-sex marriages.

Justice Kennedy says in the decision, ''The present case . . . does not involve whether the government must give formal recognition to any relationship that homosexual persons seek to enter.'' But, the logic and language I read earlier indicated that.

Justice Scalia, who dissented from the case, said in his dissent, ''This case 'does not involve' the issue of homosexual marriage only if one entertains the belief that principle and logic have nothing to do with the decisions of this court.''

Justice Scalia is correct. If you read the logic of that Court decision, the language they used—dicta that it was—would indicate that is where they are heading, and six judges signed off on that language. It only takes five.

When a case comes up of this kind, we can say with certainty there is a likelihood, and many scholars believe a very high likelihood, that the Court would rule that traditional marriage is too restrictive, it has to be changed from the way the people have defined it. We do not have to accept that. We have every right to amend the Constitution. The laws in the Constitution provided for slavery—that was changed. The laws of the Constitution provide for free speech. It applies to every State. The right to keep and bear arms. All kinds of guarantees are in our Constitution. The American people can define what marriage is.

This amendment is narrowly drawn. It does not in any way threaten liberties. It does not take our money, it will not put us in jail, it will not do all these horrible things that sometimes you have to deal with in the law if you are not careful and the Constitution might get away from you. It is a narrowly drawn matter dealing with one issue, and that is marriage. We have every right to do that.

I am disappointed that some of the people I know, particularly on the other side of the aisle, are not going to vote for this constitutional amendment, and they are not even here to talk about the amendment. They don't want to talk about it. They say it is somehow wrong to discuss it during a time when we are leading up to an election. What is wrong with that? What is wrong with having a vote?

The reason it is coming up now is because a month and a half ago is when the marriages first started being conducted in Massachusetts, November was when the first ruling came out of there, and last year was Lawrence v. Texas.

This has been building. Law reviews by liberal law professors are pushing this issue all over the country. Lawsuits are being filed throughout the country.

The pressure is on to destroy the traditional definition of marriage. It is time and perfectly appropriate for us to deal with it. I hope we will. The American people need to be watching this vote, watching the issues that are debated. They need to ask themselves how much confidence they have in their representatives if they do not share their views on this important issue.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLARD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

NONGERMANE AND NONRELEVANT AMENDMENTS UNDER CLOTURE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, yesterday the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, my friend, the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH, just prior to the cloture vote on the class action bill, made a statement that I want to talk about briefly today.

He said Members can bring up nongermane or nonrelevant amendments after cloture is invoked. I am reading from page S7818 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where he said:

> Keep in mind that if we invoke cloture, that doesn't mean those who want to bring up extraneous, nongermane amendments or nonrelevant amendments can't do it. They can bring them up after cloture, but they are going to have to get a supermajority vote to win. That doesn't foreclose them.

That simply is not valid.

If cloture is invoked, you can bring up a nongermane amendment, but if anyone raises a point of order that your amendment is not germane, that amendment falls automatically. There is no such supermajority motion available like there is under the Budget Act. The amendment fails without a vote—fails or falls without a vote, however you want to term it. The only way you can get a vote is if you choose to appeal the Chair's ruling that your amendment is not germane. If you are successful, you will set a precedent that will permanently throw out the germaneness rule under cloture, and such an appeal of the Chair's ruling is a majority vote, not a supermajority vote.

So the fact remains: Nongermane and nonrelevant amendments are not in order once cloture is invoked, and there is no such supermajority motion available to make them in order.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I want to add to the statement I completed. In the situation Senator HATCH talked about and I commented on, you could the day before file a special motion and ask that the rules be set aside and that would take a two-thirds vote. So I guess that could be the supermajority he was talking about. It would be extremely difficult to do. You would have to file a notice the day before. I don't think that would likely happen. But I wanted to make sure the record was clear that I did not miss anything.

BURMA

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to commend the President for renewing import sanctions against the repressive military junta in Burma. The quick action of both Congress and the President on this matter underscores America's commitment to freedom and justice in that country.

Unfortunately, there have been no significant developments inside Burma since I last spoke on this issue several weeks ago. In 2006, Burma is expected to assume chairmanship of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, ASEAN; there could be no greater loss of face to ASEAN or the region.

I am pleased that some of our allies in the European Union, E.U. have taken a principled stand over Burma's participation in the upcoming Asia-Europe Meeting, ADEM. However, the United Nations must do more to restore democracy to the Burmese people.

We need a full court press on the junta, which must entail the downgrading of diplomatic relations with the illegitimate State Peace and Development Council, SPDC, by placing its senior representative in Washington on the next flight to Southeast Asia. We do not have a U.S. Ambassador in Rangoon; the junta should not have one here.

I ran into the SPDC's ''ambassador'' in Washington at a July 4th celebration at the State Department, and told Mr. Linn Myaing to free Burmese democracy leader DAW Aung San Suu Kyi.

I find it incredible that someone from such an odious regime would be invited to celebrate the independence of the freest country in the world. Someone is clearly asleep at the wheel over in Foggy Bottom.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

HONORING STAFF SGT. STEPHEN G. MARTIN

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I rise today with a heavy heart and deep sense of gratitude to honor the life of a brave young man from Warsaw, IN. Staff Sgt. Stephen G. Martin, 39 years old, died in the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, DC, after sustaining serious injuries at the hands of a suicide bomber, just outside a U.S. military compound in Mosul, Iraq. Stephen sacrificed his own life to save the lives of hundreds of fellow soldiers by causing the suicide bomber to ignite the bomb before entering the compound. One other soldier also lost his life in this selfless and heroic action.

Stephen spent his early childhood and junior high years in Columbia City, IN. He then moved to Pennsylvania and graduated from East Pennsboro High School in 1983. Stephen later joined the Army's 101st Airborne Division and worked to become a member of the Trenton, NJ Police Department, until he moved to Rhinelander, WI where he was a sergeant in the department. Just last year, Stephen joined the Army Reserve 330th Military Police Detachment. He was deployed to Iraq to help train local police forces. Stephen's sister, Susan Fenker, told the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette that Stephen told his family ''he was proud to help Iraqis build a free society and give hope to the next generation.'' With his entire life before him, Stephen chose to risk everything to fight for the values Americans hold close to our hearts, in a land halfway around the world.

Stephen was the twenty-ninth Hoosier soldier to be killed while serving his country in Operation Iraqi Freedom. This brave young soldier leaves behind his father, Jim; his mother, Carolyn; his wife, Kathy; his two daughters, Jessica and Brianna; his son, Seth; and stepdaughters Jackie, Jessica and Kaitlyn. May Stephen's children grow up knowing that their father gave his life so that young Iraqis will some day know the freedom they enjoy.

Today, I join Stephen's family, his friends and all Americans in mourning his death. While we struggle to bear our sorrow over his death, we can also take pride in the example he set, bravely fighting to make the world a safer place. It is his courage and strength of character that people will remember when they think of Stephen, a memory that will burn brightly during these continuing days of conflict and grief.

Stephen was known for his dedicated spirit and his love of country. When looking back on the life of his late friend and co-worker, Rhinelander Police Chief Glenn Parmeter told the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette, ''He was always a soldier striving to bring about a better life for everyone, whether as a Rhinelander police officer or a military policeman in Iraq.'' Today and always, Stephen will be remembered by family members, friends and fellow Hoosiers as a true American hero and we honor the sacrifice he made while dutifully serving his country.

As I search for words to do justice in honoring Stephen's sacrifice, I am reminded of President Lincoln's remarks as he addressed the families of the fallen soldiers in Gettysburg: ''We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.'' This statement is just as true today as it was nearly 150 years ago, as I am certain that the impact of Stephen's actions will live on far longer than any record of these words.

It is my sad duty to enter the name of Stephen G. Martin in the official record of the United States Senate for his service to this country and for his profound commitment to freedom, democracy and peace. When I think about this just cause in which we are engaged, and the unfortunate pain that comes with the loss of our heroes, I hope that families like Stephen's can find comfort in the words of the prophet Isaiah who said, ''He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces.''

May God grant strength and peace to those who mourn, and may God be with all of you, as I know He is with Stephen.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2003

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the need for hate crimes legislation. On May 1, 2003, Senator KENNEDY and I introduced the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, a bill that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

On October 14, 1992, Robert K. Woelfel, a transgendered individual, was shot twice by a shotgun blast. Harold Maas, the assailant, claimed to have been assaulted by an unidentified transgendered individual the year before and allegedly shot Woelfel in retribution for that crime.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

POLITICAL EXPEDIENCY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am struck by the way the Republican majority is managing the Senate. I have noted that we do not yet have a Federal budget resolution. It is July and we have as yet considered only one appropriations bill, and that one bill still has to be resolved with the House. We have yet even to consider the other 12 appropriations bills that are normally regarded as ''must pass'' legislation—that is unless Republicans intend to shut the Government down, again.

Instead, the Republican majority has apparently decided to devote the July work period to partisan political matters. We are reading press accounts about Republicans maneuvering to bring the divisive constitutional amendment to federalize marriage to this floor for debate. The Senate Judiciary Committee has held a few hearings on this issue but has yet to consider language of a proposed constitutional amendment. Bypassing the committee of jurisdiction to bring this or any constitutional amendment to the Senate floor is an unmistakable sign that political expediency and haste, in the furtherance of political expediency, are the guiding principles for the Republican majority in scheduling the Senate's time. Political expediency—whatever it takes—is their guidepost, not the pressing needs of the country to act on a budget or on the annual appropriations bills. Paramount to Republican leaders at the moment are such matters as the divisive, hot-button topic of federalizing marriage law, by constitutional amendment. Republican partisans seem intent on politicizing not only judicial nominations but also the Constitution itself during this election cycle.

Democrats fulfilled our commitment to the White House when we considered the 25th judicial nomination that was part of our arrangement this year. I read that Republicans will now insist on devoting a good portion of the Senate's remaining time to the most divisive and contentious of the President's judicial nominees. They are intent on following the advice of the Washington Times editorial page to, they believe, make Democrats look bad, when in fact it is the President who is seeking to make judicial confirmations a partisan political issue. Democrats have cooperated in confirming almost 200 judges already. That is more than the total confirmed in President Clinton's last term, the President's father's presidency or in President Reagan's first term. Federal judicial vacancies have been reduced to their lowest level in decades.

It is wrong and it is corrosive to seek partisan advantage at the expense of the independent Federal judiciary or our national charter, the Constitution. I wonder in Presidential election years whether we should not have a corollary to the ''Thurmond Rule'' on judicial nominations that we could call the ''Durbin Rule.'' The astute Senator from Illinois recently observed that we should prohibit consideration of constitutional amendments within 6 months of a Presidential election. He is right in pointing out that the Constitution is too important to be made a bulletin board for campaign sloganeering. We should find a way to restrain the impulse of some to politicize the Constitution.

This week the Republican leadership has stalled action for days on any legislation as it resists amendments to the class action legislation from both Democratic and Republican Senators. The Republican leadership's handling of this bill is a prescription for nonaction, not for legislative movement forward.

Just yesterday Roll Call published an insightful editorial lamenting what it called the ''Big Mess Ahead.'' I think we may already be stuck in that big mess. The editorial noted that ''July should be appropriations month in the Senate.'' I agree. This traditionally has been when we were focused on getting our work done and making sure the funding for the various functions of the Federal Government were appropriated by the Congress, in fulfilling Congress's responsibilities and its power of the purse. Not this year.

Roll Call observes that ''the second session of the 108th Congress is poised to accomplish nothing.'' The way things are going, under Republican leadership, this session will make the ''do-nothing'' Congress against which President Harry Truman ran seem like a legislative juggernaut by comparison.

I ask unanimous consent that the July 7, 2004, Roll Call editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Roll Call, July 7, 2004]

BIG MESS AHEAD

Here we go again. The Senate can't pass a budget resolution. Only one of the 13 appropriations bills has cleared both the House and Senate, July is a short legislative month, and everyone will be gone in August. You know what this means: a lame-duck session in November and a messy, pork-riddled omnibus spending bill.

And it's not just on the money front that the second session of the 108th Congress is poised to accomplish nothing. The House and Senate can't agree on an energy bill despite high gasoline prices, last year's Northeast blackout, repeated urging from the White House and constant reminders of America's over-dependence on risky Mideast oil. Bankruptcy-reform legislation is stymied. So is welfare-reform reauthorization. Maybe there will be a Transportation reauthorization bill, maybe not. Even the Defense reauthorization bill faces a tough conference.

Sure, the House and Senate have done a few must-do things. The United States is in a war, so both chambers have passed a Defense appropriations bill. And both have approved legislation repealing a $5 billion-a-year export subsidy after the World Trade Organization ruled against it and authorized imposition of punitive tariffs against U.S. products. Despite complaints from both parties about expanding budget deficits, however, the House's repeal measure contained $15 billion in new corporate tax breaks; the Senate added $17 billion.

As any House Member will tell you, the perennial locus of delay in Congress is ''The Other Body.'' And so it is this year. The House has passed four appropriations bills, and three more have cleared committee. In the Senate, it's one and one. July should be appropriations month in the Senate, but instead Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) has scheduled class-action tort reform—which had the 60 votes necessary for passage last November—and an anti-gay-marriage constitutional amendment designed mainly to embarrass Democrats before their national convention.

Republicans blame Democrats for Senate ''obstructionism,'' but the failure to pass a budget resolution—which would have made it easier to pass appropriations bills—is mainly an intra-GOP affair. Moderates want to impose a pay-as-you-go system to restrain spending. Conservatives, ironically enough, don't. The situation has the conservative Senate leadership so exercised that it's trying to acquire the means to threaten wayward moderates with the loss of committee chairmanships.

It's true that if Senate Republicans drop the seniority system and give leaders the power to make committee assignments and choose chairmen, they simply will be following the authoritarian patter of Senate Democrats and of both parties in the House. Still, the effect would be to smother centrism—what there is left of it—and enhance partisanship and polarization. That's a distinct Congressional pattern: When things are going badly, make them worse.

INTERROGATION AND TREATMENT OF FOREIGN PRISONERS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, a number of us remain concerned about the abuse of foreign prisoners, and about the guidance provided by the President's lawyers with regard to torture. Much has happened since June 17, 2004, when the Judiciary Committee defeated, on a party-line vote, a subpoena resolution for documents relating to the interrogation and treatment of detainees and June 23, when the Senate defeated an amendment to the Defense Authorization bill on a party-line vote that would have called upon the Attorney General to produce relevant documents to the Senate Judiciary Committee. Because of continued stonewalling by the administration, we remain largely in the dark.

Several Republican Senators have indicated that we should give the administration more time to respond to inquiries, although some of us had been asking for information for more than a year. The Republican administration continues its refusal to provide the documents that have been requested and refused even to provide an index of the documents being withheld.

The Department of Justice admitted in the July 1 letter that it had ''given specific advice concerning specific interrogation practices,'' but would not disclose such advice to members of this committee, who are duly elected representatives of the people of the United States, as well as members of the committee of oversight for the Department of Justice. USA Today reported on June 28, 2004, that the Justice Department issued a memo in August 2002 that ''specifically authorized the CIA to use 'waterboarding,'' ' an interrogation technique that is designed to make a prisoner believe he is suffocating. This memo is reportedly classified and has not been released. According to USA Today: ''Initially, the Office of Legal Counsel was assigned the task of approving specific interrogation techniques, but high-ranking Justice Department officials intercepted the CIA request, and the matter was handled by top officials in the deputy attorney general's office and Justice's criminal division.''

So while former administration officials grant press interviews and write opinion articles denying wrongdoing; while the White House and Justice Department hold closed briefings for the media to disavow the reasoning of this previously relied upon memoranda and to characterize what happened; Senators of the United States are denied basic information and access to the facts. The significance of such unilateralism and arrogance shown to the Congress and to its oversight committees cannot continue.

I have long said that somewhere in the upper reaches of this administration a process was set in motion that rolled forward until it produced this scandal. To put this scandal behind us, first we need to understand what happened. We cannot get to the bottom of this until there is a clear picture of what happened at the top. It is the responsibility of the Senate, including the Judiciary Committee, to investigate the facts, from genesis to final approval to implementation and abuse. The documents must be subject to public scrutiny, and we will continue to demand their release.

There is ample evidence that American officials, both military and CIA, have used extremely harsh interrogation techniques overseas, and that many prisoners have died in our custody. Administration officials admit that 37 foreign prisoners have died in captivity, and several of these cases are under investigation, some as homicides. On June 17, David Passaro, a CIA contractor, was indicted for assault for beating an Afghan detainee with a large flashlight. The prisoner, who had surrendered at the gates of a U.S. military base in Afghanistan, died in custody on June 21, 2003, just days before I received a letter from the Bush administration saying that our Government was in full compliance with the Torture Convention.

Some individuals who committed abusive acts are being punished, as they must be. But what of those who gave the orders, set the tone or looked the other way? What of the White House and Pentagon lawyers who tried to justify the use of torture in their legal arguments? The White House has now disavowed the analysis contained in the August 1, 2002, memo signed by Jay Bybee, then head of the Office of Legal Counsel. That memo, which was sent to the White House Counsel, argued that for acts to rise to the level of torture, they must go on for months or even years, or be so severe as to generate the type of pain that would result from organ failure or even death. The White House and DOJ now call that memo ''irrelevant'' and ''unnecessary'' and say that DOJ will spend weeks rewriting its analysis.

As we all know, on June 22, 2004, the White House released a few hundreds of pages of documents—a self-serving and highly selective subset of materials. The documents that were released raised more questions than they answered. Now, more than two weeks later, none of those issues have been resolved.

For example, the White House released a January 2002 memo signed by President Bush calling for the humane treatment of detainees. Did the President sign any orders or directives after January 2002? Did he sign any with regard to prisoners in Iraq?

Why did Secretary Rumsfeld issue and later rescind tough interrogation techniques? And how did these interrogation techniques come to be used in Iraq, where the administration maintains that it has followed the Geneva Conventions?

Where is the remaining 95 percent of material requested by members of the Senate Judiciary Committee? Why is the White House withholding relevant documents dated after April 2003?

I was gratified that the Senate on June 23 passed an amendment that I offered to the Defense authorization bill that will clarify U.S. policy with regard to the treatment of prisoners and increase transparency. But the stonewalling continues: The Pentagon opposes this amendment. I am hopeful that we will prevail in keeping this provision in the bill. Five Republican Senators supported the amendment against an attempt to table it. I thank each of them. I also want to commend the Senate for adopting, also as part of the Defense authorization bill, the Durbin amendment against torture, and I want to acknowledge an important step taken in the House on the same day. The House Appropriations Committee added language to the 2005 Justice Department spending bill that would prohibit any department official or contractor from providing legal advice that could support or justify use of torture.

As it completed its term, the Supreme Court issued its decisions in highly significant cases involving the legal status of so-called enemy combatants. The Court reaffirmed the judiciary's role as a check and a balance, as the Constitution intends, on power grabs by the executive branch. The Court ruled that the Bush administration's assertion that the President can hold suspects incommunicado, indefinitely and without charge, is as arrogant as are its legal arguments that the President can authorize torture. No President is above the law or the Constitution. The Court properly rejected the administration's plea to 'just trust us' and repudiated its assertion of unchecked power.

This Senate and in particular the Judiciary Committee continues to fall short in its oversight responsibilities. President Bush has said he wants the whole truth, but he and his administration instead have circled the wagons to forestall adequate oversight. The President must order all relevant agencies to release the memos from which these policies were devised. There needs to be a thorough, independent investigation of the actions of those involved, from the people who committed abuses, to the officials who set these policies in motion. Only when these actions are taken will we begin to heal the damage that has been done.

We need to get to the bottom of this scandal if we are to play our proper role in improving security for all Americans, both here at home and around the world.

THREAT TO ONLINE PRIVACY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to address a recent court decision that has exposed America's e-mails to snooping and invasive practices. The 2-to-1 decision by the First Circuit Court of Appeals in a case called United States v. Councilman has dealt a serious blow to online privacy. The majority—both, Republican-appointed judges—effectively concluded that it was permissible for an Internet Service Provider to comb through its customers' emails for corporate gain. If allowed to stand, this decision threatens to eviscerate Congress's careful efforts to ensure that privacy is protected in the modern information age.

The indictment in Councilman charged the defendant ISP with violating the Federal Wiretap Act by systematically intercepting, copying, and then reading its customers' incoming emails to learn about its competitors and gain a commercial advantage. This is precisely the type of behavior that Congress wanted to prohibit when it updated the Wiretap Act in 1986, as part of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA), to prohibit unauthorized interceptions of electronic communications. Congress's goal was to ensure that Americans enjoyed the same amount of privacy in their online communications as they did in the offline world. Just as eavesdroppers were not allowed to tap phones or plant ''bugs'' in order to listen in on our private conversations, we wanted to ensure that unauthorized eyes were not peering indiscriminately into our electronic communications.

ECPA was a careful, bipartisan and long-planned effort to protect electronic communications in two forms—from real-time monitoring or interception as they were being delivered, and from searches when they were stored in record systems. We recognized these as different functions and set rules for each based on the relevant privacy expectations and threats to privacy implicated by the different forms of surveillance.

The Councilman decision turned this distinction on its head. Functionally, the ISP in this case was intercepting emails as they were being delivered, yet the majority ruled that the relevant rules were those pertaining to stored communications, which do not apply to ISPs. The majority rejected the Government's argument that an intercept occurs—and the Wiretap Act applies—when an email is acquired contemporaneously with its transmission, regardless of whether the transmission may have been in electronic storage for milliseconds at the time of the acquisition. As the dissenting judge found, the Government's interpretation of the Wiretap Act is consistent with Congressional intent and with the realities of electronic communication systems. I agree, and urge the Justice Department to continue to press this position in the courts. The Department has been a powerful proponent of privacy rights in this case, and I commend its efforts.

I also will be taking a close look at possible changes to the law to ensure that there is no room to skirt the wiretap provisions and engage in the type of privacy violation at issue in the Councilman case. We have an obligation to ensure that our laws keep up with technology, and it may be that advances in communications warrant change. It is imperative that we continue to safeguard privacy adequately in our modern information age.

In a world where Americans are already inundated with targeted mass marketing and mailings, the Councilman decision opens the door to even more invasive activity. With this kind of precedent, ISPs need not offer free services in exchange for reduced online privacy. They could simply snoop in secret, and their unsuspecting customers would never know.

The Councilman decision also opens the door to Government over-reaching. For practical reasons, surveillance devices are often installed at the point of millisecond-long temporary storage prior to an e-mail's arrival at its final destination. To date, law enforcement agencies have treated this as what it is—an interception—and have sought appropriate wiretap approval. But this decision allows law enforcement agents to potentially skip the rigors of the wiretap laws, and perhaps could unleash unrestrained use of search programs like Carnivore. This outcome belies the realities of electronic communications in today's society, undercuts Congress' intent, and is inconsistent with the current approach to such communications in law enforcement practice.

The Councilman decision creates an instant and enormous gap in privacy protection for email communications, and we need to address it swiftly and responsibly. I urge my colleagues to make this a top priority as we finish up the session. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD four recent editorials and articles on this issue.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 2, 2004]

DERAIL E-MAIL SNOOPING

Imagine that your friendly local mail carrier, before delivering a letter for you, decides to steam it open and read its contents. An outrageous and illegal infringement on your privacy, obviously. But a Federal appeals court in Boston has just permitted an Internet service provider to engage in exactly this kind of snooping when the message is sent in cyberspace rather than by snail mail. This ruling is an unnecessarily cramped parsing of a law that Congress meant to guard, not eviscerate, the privacy of communications. The Justice Department, whose prosecution of the ISP executive was thrown out by the appeals court, should seek a review of the ruling. If that doesn't work—if the Federal wiretapping law has been outpaced by the technology it was supposed to regulate—Congress should quickly step in to fix the glitch.

The wiretapping law makes it a crime to intentionally intercept ''any wire, oral, or electronic communication.'' This language dates to 1986, when e-mail was at an embryonic stage but Congress, in an effort to account for and anticipate that and other technological changes, enacted the Electronic Communications Privacy Act.

The appeals court, however, ruled that opening and reading e-mails isn't covered by the wiretapping law because the messages weren't actually intercepted, as the law defines that term, but were, rather, in ''electronic storage'' and therefore covered by another, looser law. That finding stems from the peculiar nature of e-mail transmission, in which messages are briefly stored as they're transmitted from computer to computer. As the court itself acknowledged, that would leave little privacy for e-mail: ''It may well be that the protections of the Wiretap Act have been eviscerated as technology advances.''

In practical terms, the implications of the ruling are perhaps more troubling for the restraints it lifts on law enforcement than for the theoretical leeway it gives service providers to copy and read e-mails. The facts of the case were unusual: A small online company that sold out-of-print books and also provided free e-mail service wanted to peek at Amazon.com's sales strategy and copied all of Amazon's messages to the smaller company's customers. Mainstream ISPs have policies that eschew such spying, and the customer backlash that would ensure if they engaged in similar practices would probably deter them from doing so. But the ruling highlights the need for stringent privacy policies in which customers give clear—and informed—consent.

Of more concern, the case could make it far easier for law enforcement agents to engage in real-time monitoring of e-mail and similar traffic, like instant messaging, without complying with the strict rules applied to wiretaps. Under this reading of the law, agents would still need to show probable cause to obtain search warrants from a judge. But they wouldn't have to hew to the more exacting requirements of the wiretap law.

E-mail has become too ubiquitous, too central a facet of modern life, for this ruling to stand.

[From the New York Times, July 2, 2004]

INTERCEPTING E-MAIL

When you click on ''send'' to deliver that e-mail note to your lover, mother or boss, you realize that you are not communicating directly with that person. As you well know, you have stored the e-mail on the computer of your Internet service provider, which, as you also know, may read, copy and use the note for its own purposes before sending it on.

What, you didn't know all this? Sounds ludicrous? We would have thought so, too, but a Federal appeals court recently ruled that companies providing e-mail services could read clients' e-mail notes and use them as they wish. Part of its rationale was that none of this would shock you because you have never expected much online privacy.

Count us among the shocked. The decision, on a 2-to-1 vote by a panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit in Massachusetts, sets up a frightening precedent, one that must be reversed by the courts, if not the Congress. It's true that people are aware of some limits on online privacy, particularly in the workplace. But the notion that a company like America Online, essentially a common carrier, has the right to read private e-mail is ludicrous.

All major I.S.P.s, including AOL, say they have no interest in doing that and have privacy policies against it. The case before the First Circuit involved a small online bookseller, no longer in business, that also provided e-mail service. To learn about the competition, the company copied and reviewed all e-mail sent from Amazon.com to its e-mail users. One of its executives was indicted on an illegal-wiretapping charge.

Both the trial and appeals courts ruled that the Federal wiretap law, which makes it a crime to intercept any ''wire, oral or electronic communication,'' did not apply because there had been no actual interception. Technically speaking, the judges held, the bookseller had simply copied e-mail notes stored on its servers, and different laws apply to the protection of stored communications.

These laws were drafted before e-mail emerged as a form of mass communication, so there is some ambiguity in how to apply them. But as the dissenting judge on the appellate panel noted, his two colleagues interpreted the wiretap statute far too narrowly. What's more, their analysis was predicated on the bizarre notion that our e-mail notes are not in transit once we send them, but in storage with an intermediary. The same logic would suggest that the postal service can read your letters while they are in ''storage.''

Americans' right to privacy will be seriously eroded if e-mail is not protected by wiretap laws. The implications of this erosion extend beyond the commercial realm. The government will also find it easier to read your e-mail if it does not have to get a wiretap order to do so. Congress ought to update the law to make it clear that e-mail is entitled to the same protection as a phone call.

COURT CREATES SNOOPERS' HEAVEN

(By Kim Zetter)

It was a little court case, but its impact on e-mail users could be huge.

Last week a Federal appeals court in Massachusetts ruled that an e-mail provider did not break the law when he copied and read e-mail messages sent to customers through his server.

Upholding a lower-court decision that the provider did not violate the Wiretap Act, the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals set a precedent for e-mail service providers to legally read e-mail that passes through a network.

The court ruled (PDF) that because the provider copied and read the mail after it was in the company's computer system, the provider did not intercept the mail in transit and, therefore, did not violate the Wiretap Act.

It's a decision that could have far-reaching effects on the privacy of digital communications, including stored voicemail messages.

In 1998, Bradford C. Councilman was the vice president of Interloc, a company selling rare and out-of-print books that offered book-dealer customers e-mail accounts through its Web site. Unknown to those customers, Councilman had engineers write and install code on the company network that would copy any e-mail sent to customers from Amazon.com, a competitor in the rare-books field.

Although Councilman did not prevent customers from receiving their e-mail, he read thousands of copied messages to discover what books customers were seeking and gain a commercial advantage over Amazon. Interloc was later bought by Alibris, which was unaware that Councilman had installed the code on the system.

Councilman wasn't caught because customers complained about his actions; a tip about another, unrelated issue led authorities to discover what he had done.

But just what had Councilman done that was so bad?

Everyone knows that e-mail is an insecure form of communication. Like a postcard, unencrypted correspondence sent over the Internet is open to snooping by anyone.

Additionally, companies have the right to read their employees' e-mail, since the companies own the computer systems through which the correspondence passes, and employees send the mail on company time. And ISPs scan e-mail for viruses and spam all the time, before delivering the mail to the provider's customers.

But there is an expectation that service providers will access communications only with permission from customers, or when they need to do so to maintain their network. In fact, the Wiretap Act states that a provider shall not ''intercept, disclose, or use'' communication passing through its network ''except for mechanical or service quality control checks.''

In April, Google launched an e-mail program called Gmail that gives customers 1 GB of e-mail storage in exchange for letting Google's computers scan the content of incoming e-mails to seed them with related text ads. Gmail customers agree to let a computer read their e-mail.

In contrast, Councilman personally read customers' messages to undermine his competitors' business. He did no without customers' permission and with the knowledge that if his customers found out, his company would likely lose their business.

And yet the court found him innocent of violating the specific law under which authorities charged him.

The court ruled that because the mail was already on Councilman's computer network when he accessed it, he didn't intercept it in transit and therefore was not guilty under the Wiretap Act. The court said the mail was in storage at that point and, therefore, was governed under the Stored Communications Act.

In a similar case in 1991, the U.S. Secret Service seized three computers belonging to a company called Steve Jackson Games. The company, in addition to producing fantasy books and games, hosted an online bulletin board for gamers to communicate with one another. An employee of the company was under suspicion for activities conducted outside work, but the Secret Service confiscated his employer's computers as well. The Secret Service accessed, read and deleted 162 e-mail messages that were stored on the computers used for the bulletin board.

In a suit filed by the game company against the Secret Service, a federal district court found that while the Secret Service agents did not intercept the e-mail, and thus violate the Wiretap Act, they did violate the Stored Communications Act.

Pete Kennedy, the lawyer from the Texas-based firm that litigated the case, called the decision ''a solid first step toward recognizing that computer communications should be as well-protected as telephone communications.''

The Stored Communications Act, along with the Wiretap Act, is part of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act, which protects electronic, oral and wire communications.

But because Councilman was charged under the Wiretap Act and not the Stored Communications Act, the court had to rule in his favor. But even if prosecutors had wanted to charge him under the Stored Communications Act, they could not have done so, since service providers are exempted under the Act.

What this means is that before the Councilman case, ISPs that read their customers' mail without permission could only have been prosecuted under the Wiretap Act. But now the Councilman case eliminates that possibility as well.

The problem with interpreting e-mail on an ISP's server as stored communication is that it opens the possibility for e-mail even outside the ISP to be viewed as stored e-mail.

At many points during its path from sender to recipient, e-mail passes through a number of computer systems and routers that temporarily store it in RAM while the system determines the next point to send it on the delivery route. Under the court's definition, an ISP could access, copy and read the mail at any of these points. Anyone who is not exempt under the Stored Communications Act, however, could still be charged under that law, though penalties for violating this law are less severe than penalties for violating the Wiretap Act.

Last week's ruling means that e-mail has fewer protections than phone conversations and postal mail. Granting e-mail providers the ability to read e-mail is equivalent to granting postal workers the right to open and read any mail while it's at a post office for sorting, but not while it's in transit between post offices or being hand-delivered to a recipient's home or business.

The ruling also has repercussions for voicemail messages, as long as certain provisions in the Patriot Act remain law.

Before the Patriot Act, the legal definition of wire communication included voicemail messages. This meant that authorities had to obtain a wiretap order to access voicemail messages or face charges of illegal interception under the Wiretap Act. Under the Patriot Act, however, the definition of wire communication changed. Voicemail messages are now considered stored communication, like e-mail. As a result, law enforcement authorities need only a search warrant to access voicemail messages, a much easier process than obtaining a wiretap order.

The provision in the Patriot Act that changed this is set to sunset in December 2005, but if the current administration has its way, the law will be renewed.

The changes in the Patriot Act, combined with the decision in the Councilman case, also mean that a phone company could now access voicemail messages without customers' permission and not be charged with intercepting the messages under the Wiretap Act. They also would not be charged under the Stored Communications Act, since they are exempt from this statute.

If all of this is hard to follow, it's just as confusing to the people who make their living interpreting the law.

''This is one of the most complex and convoluted areas of the law that you will run across,'' said Lee Tien, senior staff attorney for the Electronic Frontier Foundation. ''The statutes themselves are not models of clarity. Even for the judges it's complicated, and then, on top of the statutes, you add the changing technology.''

In the end, in the absence of laws to preserve privacy, the best solution for e-mail users to protect their privacy is to use encryption. But until encryption for voicemail messages becomes common, you'll have to settle for talking in tongues.

YOU'VE GOT MAIL (AND COURT SAYS OTHERS CAN READ IT)

(By SAUL HANSELL)

When everything is working right, an e-mail message appears to zip instantenously from the sender to the recipient's inbox. But in reality, most messages make several momentary stops as they are processed by various computers en route to their destination.

Those short stops may make no difference to the users, but they make an enormous difference to the privacy that e-mail is accorded under federal law.

Last week a Federal appeals court in Boston ruled that federal wiretap laws do not apply to e-mail messages if they are stored, even for a millisecond, on the computers of the Internet providers that process them—meaning that it can be legal for the government or others to read such messages without a court order.

The ruling was a surprise to many people, because in 1986 Congress specifically amended the wiretap laws to incorporate new technologies like e-mail. Some argue that the ruling's implications could affect emerging applications like Internet-based phone calls and Gmail Google's new e-mail service, which shows advertising based on the content of a subscriber's e-mail messages.

''The court has eviscerated the protections that Congress established back in the 1980's,'' said Marc Rotenberg, the executive director of the Electronic Privacy Information Center, a civil liberties group.

But other experts argue that the Boston case will have little practical effect. The outcry, said Stuart Baker, a privacy lawyer with Steptoe & Johnson in Washington, is ''much ado about nothing.''

Mr. Baker pointed out that even under the broadest interpretation of the law, Congress made it easier for prosecutors and lawyers in civil cases to read other people's e-mail messages than to listen to their phone calls. The wiretap law—which requires prosecutors to prove their need for a wiretap and forbids civil litigants from ever using them—applies to e-mail messages only when they are in transit.

But in a 1986 law, Congress created a second category, called stored communication, for messages that had been delivered to recipients' inboxes but not yet read. That law, the Stored Communications Act, grants significant protection to e-mail messages, but does not go as far as the wiretap law: it lets prosecutors have access to stored messages with a search warrant, while imposing stricter requirements on parties in civil suits.

Interestingly, messages that have been read but remain on the Internet provider's computer system have very little protection. Prosecutors can typically gain access to an opened e-mail message with a simple subpoena rather than a search warrant. Similarly, lawyers in civil cases, including divorces, can subpoena opened e-mail messages.

The case in Boston involved an online bookseller, now called Alibris. In 1998, the company offered e-mail accounts to book dealers and, hoping to gain market advantage, secretly copied messages they received from Amazon.com. In 1999, Alibris and one employee pleaded guilty to criminal wiretapping charges.

But a supervisor, Bradford C. Councilman, fought the charges, saying he did not know about the scheme. He also moved to have the case dismissed on the ground that the wiretapping law did not apply. He argued that because the messages had been on the hard drive of Alibris's computer while they were being processed for delivery, they counted as stored communication. The wiretap law bans a company from monitoring the communications of its customers, except in a few cases. But it does not ban a company from reading customers' stored communications.

''Congress recognized that any time you store communication, there is an inherent loss of privacy,'' said Mr. Councilman's lawyer, Andrew Good of Good & Cormier in Boston.

In 2003, a Federal district court in Boston agreed with Mr. Councilman's interpretation of the wiretap law and dismissed the case. Last week, the First Circuit Court of Appeals, in a 2-to-1 decision, affirmed that decision.

Because most major Internet providers have explicit policies against reading their customers' e-mail messages, the ruling would seem to have little effect on most people.

But this year Google is testing a service called Gmail, which electronically scans the content of the e-mail messages its customers receive and then displays related ads. Privacy groups have argued that the service is intrusive, and some have claimed it violates wiretap laws. The Councilman decision, if it stands, could undercut that argument.

Federal prosecutors, who often argue that wiretap restrictions do not apply in government investigations, were in the somewhat surprising position of arguing that those same laws should apply to Mr. Councilman's conduct. A spokesman for the United States attorney's office in Boston said the department had not decided whether to appeal.

Mr. Baker said that another Federal appeals court ruling, in San Francisco, is already making it hard for prosecutors to retrieve e-mail that has been read and remains on an Internet provider's system.

In that case, Theofel v. Farey-Jones, a small Internet provider responded to a subpoena by giving a lawyer copies of 339 e-mail messages received by two of its customers.

The customers claimed the subpoena was so broad it violated the wiretap and stored communication laws. A district court agreed the subpoenas were too broad, but ruled they were within the law. The plaintiffs appealed, and the Justice Department filed a friend of the court brief arguing that the Stored Communications Act should not apply.

In February, the appeals court ruled that e-mail stored on the computer server of an Internet provider is indeed covered by the Stored Communications Act, even after it has been read. The court noted that the act refers both to messages before they are delivered and to backup copies kept by the Internet provider. ''An obvious purpose for storing a message on an I.S.P.'s server after delivery,'' the court wrote, ''is to provide a second copy of the message in the event that the user needs to download it again—if, for example, the message is accidentally erased from the user's own computer.''

Calling e-mail ''stored communication'' does not necessarily reduce privacy protections for most e-mail users. While the Councilman ruling would limit the applicability of wiretap laws to e-mail, it appears to apply to a very small number of potential cases. The Theofel decision, by contrast, by defining more e-mail as ''stored communications,'' is restricting access to e-mail in a wide range of cases in the Ninth Circuit, and could have a far greater effect on privacy of courts in the rest of the country follow that ruling.

IBM AND THE RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK

● Mrs. DOLE. Mr. President, when IBM joined the Research Triangle Park as its first major tenant in 1965, this company helped establish the Research Triangle Park as the premier technological, biotech, and economic development powerhouse for North Carolina.

Today I thank and congratulate IBM for its decades of support and investment in the Research Triangle Park and the surrounding communities in North Carolina. As the largest employer in the Triangle Park, IBM is an excellent example of corporate citizenship that provides dependable, high-paying jobs in both the area and worldwide.

With over 13,000 jobs in the Triangle Park alone, the largest concentration of IBM jobs worldwide, IBM uses the graduates and resources from the State's extensive college and university system. IBM invests in our State by helping to keep North Carolina talent at home.

Please join me and other North Carolina leaders in congatulating IBM on its commitment to build a better company for our region and wishing IBM and the Research Triangle Park ongoing success as they broaden their partnership with the people of my home State.●

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 3:02 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 4754. An act making appropriations for the Department of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and the second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 4754. An act making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bills were read the second time, and placed on the calendar:

S. 2629. A bill to amend the Medicare Prescription Drug, Improvement, and Modernization Act of 2003 to eliminate the coverage gap, to eliminate HMO subsidies, to repeal health savings accounts, and for other purposes.

S. 2630. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code to establish a national health program administered by the Office of Personnel Management to offer Federal employee health benefits plans to individuals who are not Federal employee, and for other purposes.

S. 2631. A bill to require the Federal Trade Commission to monitor and investigate gasoline prices under certain circumstances.

S. 2632. A bill to establish a first responder and terrorism preparedness grant information hotline, and for other purposes.

S. 2633. A bill to amend the Federal Power Act to provide refunds for unjust and unreasonable charges on electric energy in the State of California.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. ROBERTS, from the Select Committee on Intelligence:

Special Report entitled ''Report of the Select Committee on Intelligence on the U.S. Intelligence Community's Prewar Intelligence Assessments on Iraq'' (Rept. No. 108–301). Additional views filed.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred to as indicated:

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2636. A bill to criminalize Internet scams involving fraudulently obtaining personal information, commonly known as phishing; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRAHAM of South Carolina:

S. 2637. A bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to ensure the right of employees to a secret-ballot election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. COLEMAN, Mr. LEAHY, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. KOHL, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. DAYTON):

S. Res. 402. A resolution expressing the sense of the Senate with respect to the 50th anniversary of the food aid programs established under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954; considered and agreed to.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DODD, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. CHAFEE, Mrs. BOXER, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. REED, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. Con. Res. 122. A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the policy of the United States at the 56th Annual Meeting of the International Whaling Commission; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 1411

At the request of Mr. KERRY, the names of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. REED) were added as cosponsors of S. 1411, a bill to establish a National Housing Trust Fund in the Treasury of the United States to provide for the development of decent, safe, and affordable housing for low-income families, and for other purposes.

S. 1890

At the request of Mr. ENZI, the name of the Senator from Maryland (Ms. MIKULSKI) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1890, a bill to require the mandatory expensing of stock options granted to executive officers, and for other purposes.

S. 2313

At the request of Mr. GRAHAM of Florida, the name of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2313, a bill to amend the Help America Vote Act of 2002 to require a voter-verified permanent record or hardcopy under title III of such Act, and for other purposes.

S. 2338

At the request of Mr. BOND, the name of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2338, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for arthritis research and public health, and for other purposes.

S. 2340

At the request of Mr. BINGAMAN, the name of the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2340, a bill to reauthorize title II of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

S. 2412

At the request of Mr. BOND, the name of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DURBIN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2412, to expand Parents as Teachers programs and other programs of early childhood home visitation, and for other purposes.

S. 2526

At the request of Mr. BOND, the name of the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2526, a bill to reauthorize the Children's Hospitals Graduate Medical Education Program.

S. 2568

At the request of Mr. BIDEN, the names of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. CARPER) and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. FITZGERALD) were added as cosponsors of S. 2568, a bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of the tercentenary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, and for other purposes.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2636. A bill to criminalize Internet scams involving fraudulently obtaining personal information, commonly known as phishing; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill, the Anti-Phishing Act of 2004, that targets a large and growing class of crime that is spreading across the Internet.

Phishing is a rapidly growing class of identity theft scams on the Internet that is causing both short-term losses and long-term economic damage.

In the short-term, these scams defraud individuals and financial institutions. Some estimates place the cost of phishing at over two billion dollars just over the last 12 months.

In the long run, phishing undermines the Internet itself. By making consumers uncertain about the integrity of the Internet's complex addressing system, phishing threatens to make us all less likely to use the Internet for secure transactions. If you can't trust where you are on the web, you are less likely to use it for commerce and communications.

Phishing is spelled ''P-H-I-S-H-I-N-G.'' Those well-versed in popular culture may guess that it was named after the phenomenally popular Vermont band, Phish. But phishing over the Internet was in fact named from the sport of fishing, as an analogy for its technique of luring Internet prey with convincing email bait. The ''F'' is replaced by a ''P-H'' in keeping with a computer hacker tradition.

Phishing attacks usually start with emails that are, in Internet jargon, ''spoofed.'' That is, they are made to appear to be coming from some trusted financial institution or commercial entity. The spoofed email usually asks the victim to go to a website to confirm or renew private account information. These emails offer a link that appears to take the victim to the website of the trusted institution. In fact the link takes the victim to a sham website that is visually identical to that of the trusted institution, but is in fact run by the criminal. When the victim takes the bait and sends their account information, the criminal uses it—sometimes within minutes—to transfer the victim's funds or to make purchases. Phishers are the new con artists of cyberspace.

To give an idea of how easy it is to be fooled, we have reproduced some recent phishing charts, with the help of the Anti-Phishing Working Group. These are just two examples of a problem that affects countless companies. The website on the right is an actual website of MBNA, a well-established financial institution and credit card issuer. On the left is a recently discovered phishing site that mimicked the MBNA site.

As you can see, the two websites are practically identical. Both have the MBNA logo, and both have the same graphics, in the same layout. But if you end up going to the website on the left, when you enter your account information, you are giving it to an identity thief.

As another example, the next two websites both appear to be from eBay. Again, the one on the right is from the genuine website. The one on the left is a fake website that is controlled by a phisher. As you can see, if you end up at the website on the left, it would be next to impossible to know that you are not at the real eBay website. Informed Internet users can avoid this problem if they simply use their web browser to go to the website, instead of using a link sent to them in an email, but far too many people do not do this.

This is a growing problem. Phishing is on the rise. In recent months there has been an explosion of these types of attacks. As you can see from the next chart, these attacks are growing at an alarming rate. Roughly one million Americans already have been victims of phishing attacks.

And phishing attacks are increasingly sophisticated. Early phishing attacks were by novices, but there is evidence now that some attacks are backed by organized crime. And some attacks these days include spyware, which is software that is secretly installed on the victim's computer, which waits to capture account information when the victim even goes to legitimate websites.

Phishers also have become more sophisticated in how they cast their huge volumes of email bait on the Internet waters. Security experts recently discovered that vast networks of home computers are being hijacked by hackers using viruses, and then they are rented to phishers—all without the knowledge of the owners of these home computers.

Some phishers can be prosecuted under wire fraud or identity theft statutes, but often these prosecutions take place only after someone has been defrauded. Moreover, the mere threat of phishing attacks undermines everyone's confidence in the Internet. When people cannot trust that websites are what they appear to be, they will not use the Internet for their secure transactions. So traditional wire fraud and identity theft statutes are not sufficient to respond to phishing.

The Anti-Phishing Act of 2004 protects the integrity of the Internet in two ways. First, it criminalizes the bait. It makes it illegal to knowingly send out spoofed email that links to sham websites, with the intention of committing a crime. Second, it criminalizes the sham websites that are the true scene of the crime.

It makes it illegal to knowingly create or procure a website that purports to be a legitimate online business, with the intent of collecting information for some criminal purpose.

There are important First Amendment concerns to be protected. The Anti-Phishing Act protects parodies and political speech from being prosecuted as Phishing.

We have worked closely with various public interest organizations to ensure that the Anti-Phishing Act does not impinge on the important democratic role that the Internet plays.

To many Americans, phishing is a new word. It certainly is a new form of an old crime. It also is a serious crime, and we need to act aggressively to keep phishing from infecting the Internet and from eroding the public's trust in online commerce and communication. I look forward to working with others in the Senate in addressing this growing threat to the Internet, with effective and responsible action.

Again, this is called the Anti-Phishing Act. It targets a large and growing class of crime that is spreading across the Internet.

Phishing is a rapidly growing class of identity theft scams. It causes both short-term losses, but long-term economic problems. In the short-term, these scams defraud individuals and financial institutions.

To give some idea that this is not a minor matter, some estimates place the cost of phishing at over $2 billion over the last 12 months. You can imagine the outcry in this country if they said we had $2 billion worth of bank robberies in that same period of time. But it is not only the economic loss that undermines the Internet itself; it makes consumers uncertain about the integrity of the Internet's complex addressing system. It makes us all less apt to use it for commerce and communication, because if you cannot trust where you are on the Web, you are not going to use it for commerce or communication.

Incidentally, fishing is spelled P-H-I-S-H-I-N-G. Those who are well versed in popular culture might think it was named after the phenomenally popular Vermont band called Phish. But phishing over the Internet was named for the sport of fishing, as an analogy for its technique of luring Internet prey with a convincing e-mail bait. The ''F'' was replaced by ''PH'' in keeping with computer hacker tradition.

Phishing usually starts with e-mails that are, in Internet jargon, ''spoofed.''

They appear to come from some trusted commercial entity or financial institution. The spoofed e-mail asks the victim to go to a Web site and confirm their identity, in effect, their Social Security number, credit card numbers, and so on. What it does is, the victim thinks they are going to a trusted institution, perhaps one they have dealt with for years. Instead, it takes them to a sham Web site that is visually identical to that of the trusted institution, but it is run by a criminal. When the victim takes the bait, when they send their account information, of course, the criminal uses it. Sometimes they use it within minutes. They can transfer the victim's funds or make purchases. These phishers are new con artists of cyberspace.

I will give you an idea of how easy it is to do it. Here on this chart we have the genuine Web site. We actually had to mark them as ''genuine Web site'' and ''fake Web site'' because they look so identical. I am a heavy user of the Internet, and I could not tell them apart. On the other side, of course, is the fake Web site. They both have the MBNA logo. That is a trusted financial institution. They have the same graphic layout.

Suppose you were a customer of MBNA and they asked you to put your user name in, your password, and so on, and you go on there and they would continue to ask information. You would have given up your account number, whatever ID number you use, and it could be 20 minutes later, when you go on the right site and you want to withdraw some money or make a cash transfer, you may find it is all gone in that short time.

In fact, we also have a chart for eBay. I wasn't going to show it, but it is worthwhile, I think. We will show the two from eBay. Again, I have had them marked ''genuine Web site'' and ''fake Web site.'' Here is the genuine one. For those who use PayPal, it is increasingly used if you are using eBay. Anybody who has done that is well aware of PayPal. It is something you could be safe with, you know where your money is going, you know who is handling it, and you know you are going to get paid for something you might have sold.

Look what we have here. When you look at it, it is hard to tell the difference. Of course, the internal address is different. What do you do? You send money, you pay money, you are supposed to receive money. You are not going to do it. Somebody else is going to do it and they are going to walk off not only with your money but with your trust of the Internet.

That is why it is important that we do this, that we have some way of criminalizing this. We have in every one of our States businesses that thrive and survive because they can use the Internet. This is trying to stop them. Again, we must address this growing threat to Internet users.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 402—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE WITH RESPECT TO THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOOD AID PROGRAMS ESTABLISHED UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1954

Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. COLEMAN, Mr. LEAHY, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. KOHL, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. DAYTON) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 402

Whereas, in the aftermath of the Second World War, many countries did not have sufficient cash to buy the agricultural commodities needed to feed the people of those countries, especially in war-torn Europe and Asia;

Whereas, during the term of President Dwight David Eisenhower, it became apparent that the abundance of food available in the United States could be used as an instrument in building a durable peace after the Second World War;

Whereas a concessional credit program was established under title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (commonly known as ''P.L. 480'') (7 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), signed into law on July 10, 1954, to allow for sales of agricultural commodities from the United States to developing countries for dollars on generous credit terms or for local currencies, with proceeds to be used by participating governments or nongovernmental private entities to encourage economic development;

Whereas since the enactment of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, the title I program has facilitated sales of agricultural commodities from the United States, totaling an estimated $30,000,000,000 to nearly 100 countries;

Whereas the Food for Peace program was established under title II of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1721 et seq.), to provide humanitarian assistance to poor and hungry people in developing countries, based on legislation originally introduced by Senator Hubert Humphrey;

Whereas during the half-century since the establishment of the Food for Peace program, the United States Agency for International Development and the Department of Agriculture have worked together to provide 107,000,000 tons of food aid to developing countries, helping an estimated 3,400,000,000 people through 2003;

Whereas the government of the United States has depended on the commitment, skill, and experience of dozens of private voluntary organizations based in the United States, as well as the United Nations World Food Program, to carry out the Food for Peace program on the ground in developing countries; and

Whereas a number of countries that were early beneficiaries of both programs have emerged as democracies and strong commercial trading partners, including South Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Mexico, and Turkey, in part as a result of development projects and food distribution programs conducted using agricultural commodities from the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) on the 50th anniversary of the date of enactment of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.) on July 10, 1954, recognizes the United States Agency for International Development, the Department of Agriculture, and associated partners for—

(A) providing emergency food assistance to address famine or other extraordinary relief requirements;

(B) forging linkages between the abundance of food produced under the agricultural system of the United States and people in need of assistance throughout the world;

(C) undertaking activities to alleviate hunger;

(D) promoting economic, agricultural, educational, and community development in developing countries;

(E) identifying the private partners capable of carrying out the mission of the programs established under that Act;

(F) implementing procedures governing the use and evaluation of the programs and funds; and

(G) overseeing the use of taxpayers dollars to carry out the programs; and

(2) declares that July 10, 2004, is a day that recognizes—

(A) the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the concessional credit program and the Food for Peace program under the Agricultural Trade and Development Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.); and

(B) the accomplishments of the United States Agency for International Development, the Department of Agriculture, and associated private voluntary organization and nongovernmental organization partners in alleviating hunger and poverty, bolstering development, and restoring hope around the world.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 122—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING THE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES AT THE 56TH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE INTERNATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION

Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DODD, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. CHAFEE, Mrs. BOXER, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. REED, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. BIDEN, AND Mr. LIEBERMAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 122

Whereas whales have very low reproductive rates, making many whale populations extremely vulnerable to pressure from commercial whaling;

Whereas whales migrate throughout the world's oceans and international cooperation is required to successfully conserve and protect whale stocks;

Whereas in 1946 a significant number of the nations of the world adopted the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling, which established the International Whaling Commission to provide for the proper conservation of whale stocks;

Whereas in 2003 the Commission established a Conservation Committee, open to all members of the Commission, for the purpose of facilitating efficient and effective coordination and development of conservation recommendations and activities, which are fully consistent with the conservation objectives stated in the 1946 Convention;

Whereas the Commission adopted a moratorium on commercial whaling in 1982 in order to conserve and promote the recovery of whale stocks, many of which had been hunted to near extinction by the commercial whaling industry;

Whereas the Commission has designated the Indian Ocean and the ocean waters around Antarctica, as whale sanctuaries to further enhance the recovery of whale stocks;

Whereas many nations of the world have designated waters under their jurisdiction as whale sanctuaries where commercial whaling is prohibited, and additional regional whale sanctuaries have been proposed by nations that are members of the Commission;

Whereas two member nations currently have reservations to the Commission's moratorium on commercial whaling, and one member nation is currently conducting commercial whaling operations in spite of the moratorium and the protests of other nations;

Whereas the Commission has adopted several resolutions at recent meetings asking member nations to halt commercial whaling activities conducted under reservation to the moratorium and to refrain from issuing special permits for research involving the killing of whales;

Whereas one member nation of the Commission has taken a reservation to the Commission's Southern Ocean Sanctuary and also continues to conduct unnecessary lethal scientific whaling in the Southern Ocean and in the North Pacific Ocean;

Whereas one member nation of the Commission has taken a reservation to the Commission's Southern Ocean Sanctuary and also continues to conduct unnecessary lethal scientific whaling in the Southern Ocean and in the North Pacific Ocean;

Whereas whale meat and blubber is being sold commercially from whales killed pursuant to such unnecessary lethal scientific whaling, further undermining the moratorium on commercial whaling;

Whereas the Commission's Scientific Committee has repeatedly expressed serious concerns about the scientific need for such lethal research and recognizes the importance of demonstrating and expanding the use of non-lethal scientific research methods;

Whereas last year one member nation unsuccessfully sought an exemption allowing commercial whaling of up to 150 minke whales and 150 Bryde's whales, contrary to the moratorium and without review of the scientific committee, and continues to seek avenues to allow lethal takes of whales by vessels from specific communities in a manner that would undermine the moratorium on commercial whaling;

Whereas more than 8500 whales have been killed in lethal scientific whaling programs since the adoption of the commercial whaling moratorium and the lethal take of whales under scientific permits has increased both in quantity and species, with species now including minke, Bryde's, sei, and sperm whales; and

Whereas engaging in commercial whaling under reservation and lethal scientific whaling undermines the conservation program of the Commission: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) at the 56th Annual Meeting of the International Whaling Commission the United States should—

(A) remain firmly opposed to commercial whaling;

(B) support the purposes and functions of the Conservation Committee, which provides a system for ensuring good governance of the Commission's conservation activities;

(C) initiate and support efforts to ensure that all activities conducted under reservations to the Commission's moratorium or sanctuaries are ceased;

(D) oppose the unnecessary lethal taking of whales for scientific purposes, seek support for expanding the use of non-lethal research methods, and seek to end the sale of whale meat and blubber from whales killed for unnecessary lethal scientific research;

(E) seek the Commission's support for specific efforts by member nations to end trade in whale meat;

(F) support the permanent protection of whale populations through the establishment of whale sanctuaries in which commercial whaling is prohibited; and

(G) support efforts to expand data collection on whale populations, monitor and reduce whale bycatch and other incidental impacts, and otherwise expand whale conservation efforts; and

(2) the United States should make full use of all appropriate diplomatic mechanisms, relevant international laws and agreements, and other appropriate mechanisms to implement the goals set forth in paragraph (1).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

AMENDING THE E-GOVERNMENT ACT OF 2002

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 610, H.R. 1303.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1303) to amend the E-Government Act of 2002 with respect to rulemaking authority of the Judicial Conference.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 1303) was read the third time and passed.

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOOD AID PROGRAM

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. Res. 402, which was submitted earlier today by Senators HARKIN and COCHRAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 402) expressing the sense of the Senate with respect to the 50th anniversary of the Food Aid Program established under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, in recognition of the 50th anniversary of the Food for Peace and concessional credit programs established in the Agricultural Trade and Development Act of 1954 enacted on July 10, 1954, Senator COCHRAN and I are submitting a Senate Resolution to honor those programs' many achievements over the past half century.

The 83rd Congress, working with the Eisenhower administration, recognized that the productive capacity of the U.S. agricultural sector was outstripping the food and feed needs of our domestic economy and that citizens of many war-torn countries had need for our food but could not afford to pay for it. They saw that the abundance of food available in the United States could be utilized as an instrument in building a durable peace after the Second World War.

Through the past 50 years, the various programs established under the Agricultural Trade and Development Act of 1954, known as P.L. 480, have helped billions of people in developing countries. According to USDA estimates, the Title I program, which provides concessional credit to developing countries to purchase U.S. agricultural commodities, has enabled the sale of $30 billion worth of commodities to nearly 100 countries. In addition, the Food for Peace program, authorized under the provisions of Title II of the Act, has helped an estimated 3.4 billion people through 2003. These figures represent accomplishments we should be proud of.

Behind these figures lie many years of commitment and hard work by employees of the U.S. Agency for International Development, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and their partners in private voluntary organizations and intergovernmental organizations such as Catholic Relief Services, CARE, World Vision, and the UN's World Food Program. Their crucial efforts include delivering food and development projects on the ground in developing countries, assembling and shipping commodities from the United States under the program, and evaluating project requests and monitoring the programs in Washington, DC. The successful implementation of the programs also requires the cooperation of governments and non-governmental organizations in the developing countries in which the projects occur.

With such a record of achievement in the past half century, it is crucial that Members of Congress and the administration do all they can to make sure these programs remain vigorous over the next half century and beyond.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 402) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 402

Whereas, in the aftermath of the Second World War, many countries did not have sufficient cash to buy the agricultural commodities needed to feed the people of those countries, especially in war-torn Europe and Asia;

Whereas, during the term of President Dwight David Eisenhower, it became apparent that the abundance of food available in the United States could be used as an instrument in building a durable peace after the Second World War;

Whereas a concessional credit program was established under title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (commonly known as ''P.L. 480'') (7 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), signed into law on July 10, 1954, to allow for sales of agricultural commodities from the United States to developing countries for dollars on generous credit terms or for local currencies, with proceeds to be used by participating governments or nongovernmental private entities to encourage economic development;

Whereas since the enactment of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, the title I program has facilitated sales of agricultural commodities from the United States, totaling an estimated $30,000,000,000 to nearly 100 countries;

Whereas the Food for Peace program was established under title II of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1721 et seq.), to provide humanitarian assistance to poor and hungry people in developing countries, based on legislation originally introduced by Senator Hubert Humphrey;

Whereas during the half-century since the establishment of the Food for Peace program, the United States Agency for International Development and the Department of Agriculture have worked together to provide 107,000,000 tons of food aid to developing countries, helping an estimated 3,400,000,000 people through 2003;

Whereas the government of the United States has depended on the commitment, skill, and experience of dozens of private voluntary organizations based in the United States, as well as the United Nations World Food Program, to carry out the Food for Peace program on the ground in developing countries; and

Whereas a number of countries that were early beneficiaries of both programs have emerged as democracies and strong commercial trading partners, including South Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Mexico, and Turkey, in part as a result of development projects and food distribution programs conducted using agricultural commodities from the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) on the 50th anniversary of the date of enactment of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.) on July 10, 1954, recognizes the United States Agency for International Development, the Department of Agriculture, and associated partners for—

(A) providing emergency food assistance to address famine or other extraordinary relief requirements;

(B) forging linkages between the abundance of food produced under the agricultural system of the United States and people in need of assistance throughout the world;

(C) undertaking activities to alleviate hunger;

(D) promoting economic, agricultural, educational, and community development in developing countries;

(E) identifying the private partners capable of carrying out the mission of the programs established under that Act;

(F) implementing procedures governing the use and evaluation of the programs and funds; and

(G) overseeing the use of taxpayers dollars to carry out the programs; and

(2) declares that July 10, 2004, is a day that recognizes—

(A) the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the concessional credit program and the Food for Peace program under the Agricultural Trade and Development Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.); and

(B) the accomplishments of the United States Agency for International Development, the Department of Agriculture, and associated private voluntary organization and nongovernmental organization partners in alleviating hunger and poverty, bolstering development, and restoring hope around the world.

SUPPORTING THE GOALS OF NATIONAL MARINA DAY

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Commerce Committee be discharged from further consideration of S. Res. 361 and the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 361) supporting the goals of National Marina Day and urging marinas to continue providing environmentally friendly gateways to boating.

There being no objection, the Senate proceed to consider the resolution.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 361) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 361

Whereas the people of the United States highly value their recreational time and their ability to access the waterways of the United States, one of the Nation's greatest natural resources;

Whereas in 1928, the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers first used the word ''marina'' to describe a recreational boating facility;

Whereas the United States is home to more than 12,000 marinas that contribute substantially to local communities by providing safe and reliable gateways to boating;

Whereas the marinas of the United States serve as stewards of the environment and actively seek to protect the waterways that surround them for the enjoyment of this generation and generations to come;

Whereas the marinas of the United States provide communities and visitors with a place where friends and families, united by a passion for the water, can come together for recreation, rest, and relaxation; and

Whereas the Marina Operators Association of America has designated August 14, 2004, as ''National Marina Day'' to increase awareness among citizens, policymakers, and elected officials about the many contributions that marinas make to communities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) supports the goals of National Marina Day; and

(2) urges that the marinas of the United States continue to provide environmentally friendly gateways to boating for the people of the United States.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 2629, S. 2630, S. 2631, S. 2632, S. 2633

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I understand there are five bills due for a second reading. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk read the titles for a second time en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will read the bills for the second time.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2629) to amend the Medicare Prescription Drug, Improvement, and Modernization Act of 2003 to eliminate the coverage gap, to eliminate HMO subsidies, to repeal health savings accounts, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 2630) to amend title 5, United States Code, to establish a national health program administered by the Office of Personnel Management to offer Federal employee health benefits plans to individuals who are not Federal employees, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 2631) to require the Federal Trade Commission to monitor and investigate gasoline prices under certain circumstances.

A bill (S. 2632) to establish a first responder and terrorism preparedness grant information hotline, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 2633) to amend the Federal Power Act to provide refunds for unjust and unreasonable charges on electric energy in the State of California.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I object to further proceeding en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bills will be placed on the calendar.

FEDERAL MARRIAGE AMENDMENT—MOTION TO PROCEED

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now move to proceed to Calendar No. 620, S.J. Res. 40. I ask unanimous consent that the motion be set aside to recur on Monday, July 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Is this the matter——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Asking through the Chair a question to the majority leader, is this the matter we are going to be working on next week?

Mr. FRIST. It is.

Mr. REID. I have worked a lot this afternoon and this morning clearing with our Members the fact that it would not be necessary that we deal with cloture on the motion to proceed. We have cleared that. We would also be in a position to have no amendments on the constitutional amendment that we are going to debate next week. Whatever the majority believes to be a reasonable time to debate that, we will be in agreement with that and have a vote on the resolution. We are cleared on our side to do that.

We would hope, if the majority leader can get a clearance on that, we can move forward and have a definite time sometime next week for a vote on the resolution itself. We are ready to move forward on it.

Yesterday, we believed it was necessary that we have the leader file this cloture motion on the motion to proceed, but we will not need that now. We are ready to rock and roll on the debate of this issue.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, for the benefit of our colleagues, we are talking about the issue surrounding marriage and the constitutional amendment and procedurally how best to address the issue. We have had debate and discussion over the course of the day. Because of the late hour, I was not able to talk to the managers on our side and have the same discussions as the other side has had as far as the best way to address the issue procedurally. Because of the late hour, I have not been able to reach our managers of the bill, but over the course of the weekend we will do that.

For the benefit of our colleagues, we will substantively be debating the issue Monday and Tuesday. In all likelihood, we will have a vote on Wednesday through one of the two modes that have been mentioned, but we will make a final decision Monday morning after we have had the opportunity to talk to the managers on our side as well.

Mr. REID. I simply state again, procedurally we are not going to be in the way. We are ready to move forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. If I could ask one other question before the majority leader begins to speak, are we going to have any votes on Monday? I have gotten a number of requests through Senator DASCHLE.

Mr. FRIST. We will not be voting on Monday. We will have no rollcall votes in Monday's session.

Mr. REID. We are coming in to debate the issue?

Mr. FRIST. Let me go ahead and do the unanimous consent, and then I will make another statement that is unrelated.

Mr. REID. Certainly.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, JULY 12, 2004

Mr. FRIST. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, July 12. I further ask that following the prayer and pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 40; provided further that the time until 6 p.m. be equally divided between the chairman and ranking member or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE JOBS BILL

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, in a few moments, I am going to be making another statement before closing, but before doing that, I want to point out to our colleagues that over the course of today, there have been a number of meetings held between both sides of the aisle and leadership to keep moving along issues that are important to this body and to the American people. One of the bills that the assistant Democratic leader and myself and the Democratic leader and our leadership addressed earlier this morning is the jobs in manufacturing bill, the FSC/ETI bill, and the efforts that we are making to move toward conference. This bill has passed the Senate, it has passed the House of Representatives, and now we are doing our best to address how to get to conference. This is a time-sensitive matter because the tariffs on U.S. products are increasing.

Since we passed the Senate bill and the House bill, these tariffs, which started at 5 percent in March and reached 9 percent on July 1, continue to increase at 1 percent a month.

We spent 14 days debating the bill. We had 100 amendments, made real progress, and now it is important that we go to conference to fully address and resolve the differences between the House and the Senate bills. For the benefit of all of our colleagues, I wanted to let them know that we are in constant discussion about how best to get to conference.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I want to very briefly, before bringing us formally an end to this week, address an issue that sits on the back burner all too often. It is an issue that affects mankind globally in a very direct way, in a moral sense. It is the HIV/AIDS virus. I speak today because on Tuesday of this week, UNAIDS released a comprehensive report on the spread of global HIV/AIDS.

This little, tiny virus, which people knew nothing about 23 years ago, has killed over 23 million people. The sobering statistics that were released this week are grim. Last year, the number of newly infected victims reached an all-time high of 5 million. The number of people living with this little virus has gone up in nearly every region of the world. The numbers have increased. The UNAIDS chief told the Associated Press:

> The virus is running faster than all of us.

Every 14 seconds a child is orphaned by AIDS. According to the U.N. report:

> An estimated 15 million children under the age of 18 worldwide have lost one or both parents to AIDS.

In Swaziland and in Botswana, over a third of the population, one in three people, has the HIV virus. One-third of the country, if not treated, will end up dying from a terrible, a painful, and an entirely preventable disease.

One out of three people in Swaziland and Botswana, these are staggering numbers. It is hard to comprehend. When you hear the statistics, it is hard to relate them to real people on the ground. I have had the opportunity to do just that because each year I travel, not as a Senator but as a physician, to Africa. While I am there, I see the devastation in real people's eyes and lives, the destruction of the family, the destruction of the most productive fabric of society—dying, disappearing because of this little virus.

Every time I go to Africa—last year I was there in September—I am overwhelmed by the devastation this little vicious virus causes. To me, and I know to the distinguished Senator occupying the chair now, who also has spent his life studying disease and viruses and the like, it is remarkable because in 1983 we didn't know this thing existed. It probably didn't really exist as we know it today in the United States of America in 1983, when both I and probably the distinguished Senator in the chair were not that old. I was in my training at the time. To think that little virus is devastating the world in the way it has over a 21-year period is just unbelievable to me.

If you walk through a village in Africa, or parts of Africa, it becomes apparent what this virus is doing. You see older people and you see little kids running around. What you do not see is people from about 19 years of age to 28 or 30 years of age, or 35, right through that age. That whole layer of the population has been wiped out by this virus. That segment is also usually the most productive, strongest part of a society and it is just wiped out.

The young boys and girls you see running around, if you project that out, are left to fend for themselves. They might live with their grandparents or great-grandparents, but they generally don't have the sort of mentors which that age would otherwise be provided. Mature beyond their years, these little kids watch hopelessly as their parents die, as their uncles die, as their aunts die. When I say 35 percent of the population has HIV/AIDS, that is what it means when you are on the ground.

That is depressing. That is the depressing part. Despite that depressing picture, there is a lot of hope. If you look in countries such as Brazil and Thailand, there has been a real success in keeping those infection rates down. Uganda has achieved remarkable success.

President Museveni, from Uganda, was here a few weeks ago. I had the opportunity to speak with him about their success. They have used some innovative programs. They have really pioneered programs we know are successful.

The one we talk about the most and has become a model for much of the global effort is the ABC program, a program of A, abstinence; B, be faithful to your partner; and C, condom use if the A and B are ineffective. So the strategy of ABC was pioneered in Uganda. It took Presidential leadership there. President Museveni was the President who, in every speech, talked about HIV/AIDS, which really wasn't popular when he started, about 15 years ago, to do so.

The strategy incorporates both reducing the risk through the use of condoms with a strategy of risk avoidance through the message of limiting sexual partners.

It is totally preventable. The disease itself, this little virus and the contagiousness of the virus is totally preventable.

The comprehensive strategy is working. Uganda's HIV/AIDS infection rate has steadily declined. In 2001, the infection rate for 18- to 49-year-olds was 5 percent. In Kampala, which is a major urban center in Uganda, where HIV/AIDS once raged, aggressive intervention lowered it from 29 percent down to 8 percent.

I had the opportunity to operate at a wonderful hospital in Kampala about 2 years ago, 3 years ago. So to see that remarkable progress, cutting the infection rate from 30 down to 8 percent, has been remarkable.

The world community must respond. The world community is responding. The United States of America has stepped up to lead the battle. Last year, Congress passed and the President signed a global HIV/AIDS bill which projects out $15 billion over 5 years for the prevention and treatment of HIV/AIDS. At the end of the program's first year, over 200,000 people will be on treatment with 1.1 million people receiving care. In the past few months, the U.S. has released $865 million in HIV/AIDS funding to the 15 nations receiving those emergency funds.

This year, America will provide $2.4 billion to combat that HIV/AIDS virus, as well as tuberculosis and malaria, two other infectious diseases that cause about between 1 and 2 and 3 million deaths in addition, each year, respectively. Ultimately, America's efforts will prevent 7 million new infections. It will provide antiretroviral drugs for 2 million HIV-infected people. It will provide care for 10 million HIV-infected individuals with AIDS and AIDS orphans. This will bring hope to millions of people around the world. It is a lofty goal of a great and compassionate nation.

I have taken the opportunity to mention this today, on Friday, because much of that is from the report of last Tuesday.

Next week there will be some very significant meetings. Over 15,000 scientists and AIDS activists and advocates will gather in Thailand, in Bangkok, for the International AIDS Conference. They will look at prevention efforts. They will look at treatment efforts. They will look at real-life experience. They will look at what works and what does not work, so we can better address this global epidemic.

Americans can be proud of our commitment and compassion. The United States of America is the most generous nation in the world today in fighting HIV/AIDS and providing substantial resources for that prevention, care, and treatment for those infected with the virus.

We will spend about $2.4 billion on global AIDS this year and an estimated $2.8 billion next year. We have already provided over $1.1 billion to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria. That is approximately one-third of all the commitments to the fund. Our country, the United States of America, has provided about one-third of all the commitments to the fund and the rest of the world makes up the other two-thirds.

We can't do it alone. It is going to take participation of the recipient countries. They must do their part to promote effective prevention and treatment strategies. It takes demonstrated national leadership such as the leadership of President Museveni in Uganda. Our friends and our allies must continue to provide firm financial and moral support. Nations are contributing. We want to encourage them to contribute more, and that is reflected in the statistics from last week. But demand continues to outstrip or grow faster than supply. Other wealthy nations must increase their contributions. We cannot rely on the Global Fund alone to combat global HIV/AIDS. It takes sustained, focused efforts on the part of individual countries, rich and poor, to lift the shadow of HIV/AIDS. Our Congress, this body, and the President of the United States have shown tremendous leadership in the battle against HIV/AIDS.

It is my hope this week's U.N. report and next week's conference will not just be occasions for more talk but will be catalysts for greater action on the part of the world's leaders. History is going to judge whether the global community stood by and permitted one of the greatest destructions of human life in recorded history or stepped in and performed one of its most heroic rescues. America has chosen the latter. Let us hope the world will, too.

PROGRAM

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, let me remind my Senators one more time that on Monday, Senators are encouraged to come to the floor to speak on the constitutional amendment on marriage. I will be discussing with the Democratic leader a process for debate and consideration of that joint resolution. Given the amount of debate, I do not foresee a vote on Monday. Thus, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, there will be no rollcall votes during Monday's session.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY, JULY 12, 2004, AT 1 P.M.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 3:22 p.m., adjourned until Monday, July 12, 2004, at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, July 9, 2004

The House met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
July 9, 2004.

I hereby appoint the Honorable STEVEN C. LATOURETTE to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Father of Eternal Light, how shall we be measured in Your sight?

In a culture of achievement, we can carry over competitive attitudes to our relationship with You, O Lord, and to those we love or serve. But once we realize there is nothing we can do to make You love us more than You already do, we can be set free to simply love as You love, unconditionally, and serve others with abandonment. To give of ourselves in love and service is enough.

In a culture of success, the worst thing that can seem to happen is to fail, when all You ask of us, O Lord, is to do what is right, speak what is true, and give of ourselves in service of others without counting the cost.

Then the full measurement of ourselves will be not to impress others but to love others as You love and bring Your love to all we do in Your Holy Name.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCNULTY) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MCNULTY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 218. An act to amend title 18, United States Code, to exempt qualified current and former law enforcement officers from State laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed handguns.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed a bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2634. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to support the planning, implementation, and evaluation of organized activities involving statewide youth suicide early intervention and prevention strategies, to provide funds for campus mental and behavioral health service centers, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that pursuant to section 710, 2(A)(ii) of Public Law 105–277, the Chair, on behalf of the Majority Leader, appoints the following individual to serve as a member of the Parents Advisory Council on Youth Drug Abuse:

Laurens Tullock of Tennessee

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 105–18, the Chair, on behalf of the Democratic Leader announces the appointment, made during the adjournment, of the following individual, to serve as a member of the National Commission on the Cost of Higher Education.

Clara M. Cotton of Massachusetts.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announces that he will receive 5 one-minute speeches on each side.

RECOGNIZING T.J. PATTERSON

(Mr. NEUGEBAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of a good friend, T.J. Patterson, who this week ended 20 years of service on Lubbock's City Council. T.J. served on 10 city councils and under five different mayors.

I had the pleasure of serving with councilman T.J. Patterson, and what I learned in my 6 years in serving with T.J. is what most folks in Lubbock know, that he is a strong community leader and a tireless fighter for the values of the people he serves.

T.J. is a man of many firsts. After serving his country in Vietnam, T.J. became the first African American elected to the Lubbock City Council. He was also the first African American elected to be president of the Texas Municipal League. He founded the Texas Association of Black City Council Members and also the publication Southwest Digest.

During his 20 years of service, T.J. Patterson fought so hard for the things that matter to the citizens of Lubbock and Lubbock families: educating our kids and protecting Lubbock's youth from gangs and drugs.

The people in Lubbock and myself are grateful for T.J. Patterson's tireless service to his community.

200TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON

(Mrs. CHRISTENSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call attention to the 200th anniversary of the death of Alexander Hamilton, one of the Founding Fathers of the United States of America. Although everyone recognizes that he was a great American, it is not widely known that he was from St. Croix, my home.

Alexander Hamilton relocated to St. Croix from Nevis at the age of 9. There he developed the exceptional accounting, finance, and writing skills which later propelled his career. Many of Hamilton's later values and ideals were shaped by his experiences in St. Croix. A prime example was his opposition to slavery.

Best known as the first Secretary of the Treasury, Hamilton was a military man and a true statesman and public servant. Today in St. Croix where we walk where he lived and worked, we are celebrating his life. We celebrate too our invaluable contribution to the birth of this Nation and its early formative years.

On this anniversary of Hamilton's unfortunate death, let us remember him for his outstanding public service, his dedication to his country, and his contributions to our great history. However, when reflecting on his illustrious career, let us not forget that he is also a true Virgin Island son.

WE CONTINUE TO OVERSPEND

(Mr. SMITH of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, first I feel somewhat obligated to explain that my wife was not in town this week and I had to pick out my own tie.

As we approach more decisions on appropriations, this is the chart that I used on my Social Security presentation. I want to focus on the fact that 14 percent of total Federal spending is interest on the debt. That now amounts to about $300 billion a year. So let us be conscious of the fact of how much we are spending and overspending.

This year we are going to spend about $500 billion more than we are taking in. That is going to add to the debt. Interest rates are going up. We are putting a huge burden on our kids and our grandkids and future generations as this body and the Senate and the White House continue to overspend. Let us be frugal; let us realize that the imposition on our kids and grandkids is not fair and jepordizes their future.

THEY STOLE THE VOTE

(Mr. MCDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Congress voted to restore civil liberties yesterday, and then the Republican Party stole the election. Again.

In America, you get to vote once, but not in a Republican America. In Republican America, they vote again and again and again and again until the Republicans get the preordained outcome the administration decrees. That is what happened yesterday in this Chamber.

The House has gotten to the point where the U.N. will have to send election monitors to ensure the votes are not rigged in the elections on November 2.

The vote was rigged yesterday. Today, they can spy on your private lives. Today, they can see what you read, what you watch, and play with your mind about what you are thinking. Today, they say America is safer because everybody is afraid. America is only more vulnerable and less free.

Yesterday's vote was not about anything but controlling the American people's freedom to read and dissent. This administration wants to end dissent. They want no one to say anything about anything they do whether it is in a prison at Abu Ghraib or giving contracts to Halliburton or anything. That is what yesterday was about.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT FUNDING IS PRICELESS

(Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the cost of basic and applied research is priceless. Most Federal Government R&D is by the military with a current goal for basic research of 3 percent of the DOD budget.

The National Science Foundation supports nearly 50 percent of the nonmedical basic research at our colleges and universities, including the University of Maryland, which comprises only 4 percent of Federal R&D spending.

Federal Government military R&D spending peaked in 1962 and declined beginning in 1965 until President Reagan's first term, during which R&D rose and surpassed 1962 levels and peaked in 1987. It then declined in 1993.

Beginning in fiscal year 1996, bipartisan support in the Congress supported increases in R&D above administration requests. Beginning in 2000 the downward trend was reversed. President Bush's increases have been increased further with bipartisan support.

The United States spends a smaller percentage of our GDP on R&D than any other major industrial power. That is the exact equivalent of a farmer eating his seed corn. Tomorrow's innovations come from today's R&D. America will remain the world's premiere military and economic leader only if we increase our spending on R&D.

REPUBLICAN HOUSE LEADERSHIP CONTINUES TO ABUSE ITS POWER

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we saw another example of how the Republican House leadership continues to abuse its power. The gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) offered an amendment to an appropriations bill that would have blocked a controversial provision in the PATRIOT Act.

At the end of the 15 minutes of voting time, the Sanders amendment looked well on its way to victory with 20 Republicans voting with the majority of the Democrats. But the Republican leadership would not give the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) a victory and refused to gavel the vote. Despite the fact that no more Members were still waiting to vote, the Republican leadership left the vote open an additional 20 minutes. What were they doing during these 20 minutes? They were exerting intense strong-arm pressure on their own Republican colleagues who had the audacity to vote against the leadership.

The Republican leadership finally threatened enough Republicans to defeat the amendment. Yesterday's outrageous action was just another example of the Republican leadership's win-at-all-costs approach at running this House.

The gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) played by the rules yesterday. Unfortunately, the Republican leadership long ago threw the rules out the window in this House. I conclude with the words chanted by many of my Democratic colleagues during the 20 minute delay: shame, shame on the Republican leadership.

MIAMI IRRESPONSIBLE ON HOMELAND SECURITY FUNDING

(Mr. SHAW asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to protest the unfair allocation of urban area security funding by the city of Miami. Miami is unfairly withholding the essential funds that my district needs to improve antiterrorism measures.

The city of Miami wants to keep the lion's share of the urban area security funding and to buy a helicopter, a helicopter, when Broward is receiving an embarrassing 10 percent of the money and Palm Beach County is receiving zero dollars.

It is ridiculous for Miami to be buying a helicopter with tax dollars of hard-working Americans. That is just plain egregious. All Broward and Palm Beach counties want is a fair share of what we need to protect our citizens against a terrorist attack.

One month after the 9/11 attack, anthrax was used to kill Robert Stevens, a 63-year-old photo editor in Palm Beach. And it is well known that the 9/11 terrorists made south Florida their base of operation. How much more evidence do we need to prove that Broward and Palm Beach counties are at risk and that we need some Federal assistance to help us address these very real threats.

The city of Miami cannot be trusted to spend in money on behalf of the region. President Bush, Secretary Ridge, Attorney General Ashcroft, Governor Bush, on down to the American taxpayers ought to be livid at what is going on. I know I am and so are my constituents.

CORRUPTION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADERSHIP

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, yesterday a bipartisan majority in this House voted to change the PATRIOT Act so the government cannot wantonly snoop and peer in what people are reading in their public libraries and at their book stores. But that bipartisan majority was unable to be sustained because of the corruption of the Republican leadership in this House, because of the corruption of the rules of this House, and because of the corruption of the principles of this country by that Republican leadership.

What they could not stand was the fact that there was a majority that disagreed with the handful in the Republican leadership. So they nullified the vote. They nullified the principles of democracy; they nullified the principles of majority rule in the House of Representatives.

That very same day, thousands of families and schoolchildren came through the Capitol and they were told this is where democracy reigns. This is the beacon to the world. This is where freedom exists. But it does not exist on the floor of the House of Representatives because of the corruption of the leadership of the Republican Party.

Every time they believe the majority is going to win out here, a bipartisan coalition majority whether it is on minimum wage, whether it is on overtime, they prevent that vote from taking place. The people who are truly afraid of the majority in this country is the corrupt Republican leadership in this House.

HONORING WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY'S STEWARDSHIP OF NATIONAL REVIEW

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today the conservative movement in America stands on the shoulders of giants: men such as Edmund Burke, T.S. Elliot, F.A. Hayek, Whittaker Chambers, and William F. Buckley, Jr. Of all these theorists, no one has made a deeper and more profound impression on my life than William F. Buckley, Jr.

Since attending high school, I have read National Review, the magazine founded by Mr. Buckley in 1955. Through his stewardship of conservatism's flagship magazine, he was able to direct our visions and coherently communicate our positive philosophy. Indeed, Mr. Buckley defined the conservative movement as one that promotes a strong national defense to defeat communism and terrorism and for limited government, lower taxation, personal responsibility, individual freedom.

These principles are still the basis of conservatism today, and the National Review after nearly 50 years is still our guidebook.

Last week, Mr. Buckley turned over his ownership of National Review and ended a special era in American history. I ask all of my colleagues to join me in thanking William F. Buckley, Jr., for his service to the American political dialogue.

In conclusion, may God bless our troops and we will not forget September 11.

PUBLIC TRANSIT NEEDS MORE FUNDING FOR SECURITY

(Mrs. MALONEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, it does not hurt to remind Americans to be vigilant against terrorist attacks, but yesterday's infomercial from the Department of Homeland Security was similar to warnings in April and May that did not tell the American people what to do and glossed over serious gaps in the administration's effort to protect our rail and transit systems.

One-third of all terrorist attacks worldwide target transit systems, and public transit is the most frequent target. What happened in Madrid could easily happen in New York. And we know for sure that the al Qaeda had plans to attack Washington D.C.'s Metro system last year.

We know that public transit carries 16 times more passengers than the airlines, but the Federal Government provides 90 times more funding for airline security. Something is very wrong with this security funding formula, and yesterday's press conference did nothing to fix it.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HON. NANCY PELOSI, DEMOCRATIC LEADER

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable NANCY PELOSI, Democratic Leader:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER,
July 8, 2004.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to section 1501(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2004 (P.L. 108–136), I hereby appoint to the Veterans' Disability Benefits Commission Col. Larry G. Brown of Oregon and Mr. Joe Wynn of Washington, DC.

Best regards,

NANCY PELOSI.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2828, WATER SUPPLY, RELIABILITY, AND ENVIRONMENTAL IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 711 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 711

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 2828) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to implement water supply technology and infrastructure programs aimed at increasing and diversifying domestic water resources. The bill shall be considered as read for amendment. The amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Resources now printed in the bill shall be considered as adopted. All points of order against the bill, as amended, are waived. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, and on any further amendment thereto to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate on the bill, as amended, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources; (2) the further amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution, if offered by Representative Calvert of California or his designee, which shall be in order without intervention of any point of order, shall be considered as read, and shall be separately debatable for 20 minutes equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent; and (3) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 711 is a modified closed rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2828, the Water Supply Reliability and Environmental Improvement Act.

The rule provides 1 hour of debate in the House equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. The rule also waives all points of order against the bill, provides that the amendment recommended by the Committee on Resources now printed in the bill shall be considered as adopted and waives all points of order against the bill as amended.

The rule further provides for consideration of the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the Committee on Rules report and accompanying the resolution, if offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) or his designee. Said amendment shall be considered as read and shall be separately debated for 20 minutes equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent.

Finally, the rule waives all points of order against the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the report and provides one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2828 was introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and passed by the Committee on Resources on May 5, 2004, by a voice vote. The bill would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to implement badly needed water supply technology and infrastructure programs aimed at increasing and diversifying domestic water supplies.

As is the case in many parts of the West, considerable controversy has arisen over allocation of water from a vast network of rivers, marshes, wetlands, and open water known as the California Bay-Delta. This area covers 780,000 acres and supplies water to two-thirds of California's population and nearly 7 million acres of farm land through a series of pumps, canals, and dams operated by the Federal and State governments.

The competing demands for Bay-Delta water have stretched the resources capacity to provide reliable amounts of water to users and the ecosystem and cause conflicts among farmers, urban water contractors, and environmental groups.

The California Bay-Delta program, known as CALFED, was initiated in 1995 to resolve these water conflicts. Although a record of decision for the current CALFED program was issued in 2000, legislation to implement that program has yet to be enacted by Congress. H.R. 2828 establishes within the Office of the Secretary of the Interior an office of the Federal Water Resources Coordinator to be responsible for coordinating the activities of all Federal agencies involved in implementing the activities authorized under this act.

The bill directs the Secretary to undertake a competitive grant program to, one, investigate and identify opportunities for studying, planning, and designing water resource activities; and, two, construct demonstration and permanent facilities to further these purposes as well as other programs, projects and activities.

The bill also authorizes the Federal agencies to participate in the CALFED Bay-Delta program in accordance with the objectives and solution principles that will be set forth in the Record of Decision.

In addition, H.R. 2828 authorizes the Secretary to establish a program for the construction of rural water systems in the reclamation States in cooperation with other Federal agencies with rural water programs as well as non-Federal project entities.

Mr. Speaker, CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 2828 would cost $427 million over the 2005 to 2009 time period and $65 million after 2009. These amounts do not include the cost of constructing four new water storage projects authorized by this bill because construction would be begin after 2009.

CBO estimates that the Federal share of those additional construction costs could range from $200 million to $400 million over the 2010 to 2020 time period.

Enacting this bill would not affect direct spending or revenues. H.R. 2828 contains no intergovernmental or private sector mandates as defined by the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on the State, local, or tribal governments.

Mr. Speaker, those of us from western States in particular are acutely aware of the importance of providing adequate water supplies in ways that protect sensitive environmental resources. Indeed, this is among the most challenging areas of domestic policy that we have. I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and his colleagues on the Committee on Resources for tackling this difficult issue in a way that strikes a reasonable balance between economic development and environmental protection.

This bill is badly needed and long overdue. So accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support both the rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) for yielding me the customary 30 minutes so we can talk about H. Res. 711 which is providing for the consideration of H.R. 2828, the Water Supply, Reliability and Environmental Improvement Act. I was kind of hoping the gentleman might yield me 38 minutes instead of the customary 30 minutes; but then again, he is not in the chair so he is not able to do that today.

Mr. Speaker, what happened yesterday on this House floor was a disgrace. And the Republican leadership who run this House should be ashamed of themselves. The majority Members who allowed that to happen yesterday should also be ashamed of themselves.

The gentleman from Vermont along with several of his colleagues offered an amendment to strike a controversial provision of the PATRIOT Act. This provision allows authorities to demand library and Internet records of people who use our public libraries.

Three years ago, Mr. Speaker, I voted against the PATRIOT Act because it expanded the authority of the Attorney General and the FBI without requiring any corresponding accountability. And yesterday I voted for the Sanders amendment because it protects the American people and our public libraries and book stores from the overreaching arm of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, the Sanders amendment won. And this deliberative body, in this place where democracy is the standard, the Sanders amendment won. And after 15 minutes there were 213 people voting for the amendment, and only 206 voting against it. That is a clear victory. One does not need a Ph.D. in mathematics to figure out that the Sanders amendment won, fair and square.

Yet the House Republican leadership held the vote open for 23 more minutes for a total of 38 minutes so they could twist the arms of their rank and file to change their vote so they could rig this vote. After these 38 minutes were over and the vote was finally closed, the vote was tied 210 to 210.

The Republican leadership did what they do best, they hijacked the democratic process and they did it. And they did it because they could, and they did it because they could get away with it.

What happened yesterday on the House floor was unique in only one respect, Mr. Speaker, and that is it happened in broad daylight. Usually, this heavy-handedness happens late into the night or in the early morning hours so that nobody is watching, so that there is nobody in the press gallery who was watching, so that people at home are asleep. So what happened yesterday was unique only in that one respect.

Mr. Speaker, the actions of the Republican majority have diminished the people's House. They have made a mockery of democracy, and they have demonstrated a heavy-handedness that is becoming all too common here.

Yesterday, once again, the Republican majority demonstrated an incredible arrogance toward the American people. They demonstrated an incredible contempt for the Members of this House, Members of their own party who they intimidated into changing their votes.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, they are unqualified to run this people's House. They have made a laughing stock of this place. They have turned this House into a national embarrassment. This is unacceptable. This is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. And the American people need to know what is going on here. This is not a deliberative body anymore. This is not a place of democracy. This is not a place where people can debate ideas, where people then can vote, Members can vote and then the majority wins. This place is not being run the way it is supposed to be run. It is an absolute disgrace.

Mr. Speaker, this bill addresses an issue that affects the State of California—the distribution of water from north to south, and other related issues unique to California. However, I am concerned with many of the provisions in the bill and their potential to impact all of us. Specifically, I'm concerned about a seemingly technical provision in this bill that could have far-reaching effects on how water is used in California and how we conduct our business here in Congress.

Section 103(b)(5)(A) of this bill grants an ongoing, rolling authorization to the Federal Bureau of Reclamation to plan and build water projects in the California Bay-Delta area. In plain English, this means that Congress would be writing a blank check to the Department of Interior to build as many billion-dollar dams in central California as they want, even if these projects end up harming the environmentally sensitive areas we say we want to protect.

Mr. Speaker, the way our legislative process is supposed to work is that Congress writes the laws and sets the policies about how and where our tax dollars get spent. The job of the executive branch is to implement these laws through the various agencies of the Federal government.

This bill sets up a process that turns the legislative process on its head. It hands over the Congressional power to spend public funds to an unaccountable Federal agency. It tells officials in the Department of Interior they can spend billions of the taxpayers' dollars any way they want and then, only afterwards, check in with Congress. And if Congress doesn't act in 120 days, the Department can continue on its merry way, spending billions of dollars on dams and other water projects that may or may not accomplish the objectives of the CALFED water agreement.

Supporters of this provision claim there are precedents for their so-called "non-project-specific authorization" language, but their precedents involve only small projects and small dollar amounts.

In the case of the CALFED Water Project, the public policy stakes are just too high for Congress to hand over our decision-making responsibilities to a Federal agency. Congress has a constitutional responsibility to make these kinds of decisions, and we shouldn't shirk those responsibilities by passing the buck to a Federal agency. The way the CALFED project is managed over the next 30 years will have a profound effect on the 35 million water-drinking citizens of the State of California, the State's agricultural industry, and some of our country's most fragile and endangered ecosystems.

And what about our responsibility to be careful stewards of taxpayer dollars? I constantly hear fiscal conservatives on the other side of the aisle complain about the lack of budget discipline. Prior to the recess, these fiscal conservatives led a charge trying to slow down Federal spending, and make it harder for Congress to spend taxpayer dollars. But this bill basically gives the executive branch a blank check to spend on potentially costly projects like dams and canals.

I hope that some of those same members join me today in expressing concern about a policy that allows an agency to "Spend the money first, then check in with Congress later." That doesn't strike me as a policy that will help us get out of the deep budget deficit hole—a hole that has been deepened by President Bush and this Republican Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this provision is bad policy and this bill is poorly drafted. I will vote against this bill, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), the author of this legislation and one who has been a leader on this issue.

□ 0930

Mr. CALVERT. I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in favor of this rule. Certainly water is extremely important, not just to California but the entire west, and certainly to all of those who have been associated with the current CALFED program, ecosystem restoration activities appears to be somewhat haphazard. The measurable outcome has focused on dollars spent rather than increased numbers of fish and wildlife. This legislation proposes new congressional oversight and accountability, requiring Federal agencies to report on certain ecosystem restoration program goals and accomplishments. For example, landowners want to see accomplishments of land and water management plans and how new ecosystem restoration plans will fit into the big picture.

The manager's amendment to the bill will be reducing the Federal cost of implementation of this from over a billion dollars 4 years ago, and $890 million as introduced to a Federal authorization of $427 million.

This bill has bipartisan support. H.R. 2828 is the product of congressional deliberation and lengthy negotiations. That is why it was reported by the Committee on Resources with bipartisan support. Democrats and Republicans throughout the State of California support this bill because it is balanced in nature and it will be, as I mentioned, not just good for California but the entire West.

I urge the adoption of this rule.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I know that we are debating the rule on legislation that is being proposed this morning, but I have to say, I do not really know what the rules are anymore in the House of Representatives. I listened last night when the Sanders amendment came up and all that the majority were trying to do, the bipartisan majority, was to protect Americans' civil liberties. After the vote took place, all of a sudden the floor and the vote stays open for another 30 plus minutes, even though everyone had voted and there was not anyone left in the well to cast a vote. It is a total abuse of power by the Republican majority here on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Think about it. When you go to the polls and vote in a general election, in New Jersey the polls close at 8 o'clock. Then you count the votes. You do not have the opportunity to keep the voting machine open and have the people come back and say, well, I changed my mind because I heard about something new that somebody told me and now I want to change my vote, so let's keep it open.

How long is the vote going to be kept open here in the House of Representatives until the Republican majority get their will regardless of what the American people and their representatives want. Will we keep it open 30 minutes as it was yesterday on the Sanders amendment? Will we keep it open 3 hours as we did on the Medicare prescription drug bill which was a lousy bill and the majority, including a significant number of Republicans, were against it until they were cajoled in a 3-hour delay and promised all kinds of things and probably laws were violated to get Members on the Republican side to change their vote. What are the rules?

We act as if this is the House of Representatives that is based on rules. That is why we are having a debate on a rule today for a piece of legislation. But there are no rules. The majority abuses its power and does whatever it pleases. We never know at any given time when the vote is going to be over. I think if this continues, it is just going to be worse and worse for our system of government, the democratic system that we value and cherish here in the House of Representatives and across the country. All that everyone who voted for the Sanders amendment yesterday were trying to do was to protect civil liberties.

One may disagree, think that the PATRIOT Act is good or think it is bad, but when a majority on a bipartisan basis makes a decision that it should be amended and should be changed because they want to protect civil liberties, then that majority should be allowed to vote in a fair way. We do not keep the vote open as we go around and tell Members, well, maybe I am going to give you this or give you that if you change your vote on something that is so basic to American civil liberties. It is just not right. It is shameful.

I just want to join with my colleagues again, on both sides of the aisle, essentially last night who said shame, shame on the Republican majority for what they continue to do and this abuse of power. Something has got to be done so that we know what the rules are. I do not know what the rules are anymore around here and how this Republican leadership goes about deciding what the rules are.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as we discuss the rules, it is impossible for those of us on our side to proceed without talking about the degrading spectacle of yesterday. It is particularly ironic that the Republican leadership chose to use extremely undemocratic tactics because there was a fear that democracy might break out in the law. What you had was a bipartisan coalition which formed a majority of the House seeking to change a provision of the PATRIOT Act.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the gentleman is in violation of House rule XVII, which requires that a Member's remarks in debate shall be confined to the question under debate, and ask to be heard on my point of order.

Mr. Speaker, House rule XVII, pertaining to Decorum and Debate provides in part that when a Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, they shall on being recognized confine themselves to the question under debate.

To quote from section 948 of the House Rules and Manual:

''Debate on a special order providing for the consideration of a bill may range to the merits of the bill to be made in order, since the question of consideration of the bill is involved, but should not range to the merits of a measure not to be considered under that special order.''

Mr. Speaker, nothing in this rule or the bill it makes in order has anything to do with what occurred on the floor yesterday afternoon.

Therefore, I urge that the Chair uphold this point of order against this irrelevant debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I wish to be heard on the point of order and to contest it vigorously.

I understand the sensitivity of the author of the point of order to discussion of the events over which he presided yesterday, but we are talking about the rules of the House, and we were confronted with what we believed to have been a grievous abuse of the spirit of the rules of the House and we need some reassurance that we will not have a repetition of this as we go forward.

We are, after all, now debating whether or not we will have a previous question motion. If it were to fail, we would then be able to offer some amendments that might prevent that kind of abuse. So I believe a discussion of the abusive pattern of behavior of yesterday is directly relevant to a discussion about whether we ought to go forward with a rule with a previous question or whether or not we ought to be allowed to propose some amendments to this rule that will protect us against the abuse of power of yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair finds that the gentleman from Washington is correct, that the remarks during this debate should be confined to the special order of business before the House. The pending business before the House is not a discussion of the rules of the House generally. It is the rule that is pending before the House.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I appeal the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

MOTION TO TABLE OFFERED BY MR. HASTINGS OF WASHINGTON

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to table offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 197, nays 165, not voting 71, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). Two minutes remain in this vote.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. MCGOVERN (during the vote). Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I would like to ask the Speaker how long he is going to keep this roll call open.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules of the House provide for a minimum duration of 15 minutes.

The Chair would also advise the gentleman that at the moment, because this is the first vote of the day, the Chair is attempting to afford courtesy to Members. The Chair will continue to exercise its discretion and will let the Members know.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Speaker is offering this courtesy to Members in keeping the roll call open, but there will be no need to keep it open for too long because I assume the Speaker is aware that this time you are winning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has failed to state a parliamentary inquiry.

□ 1008

Messrs. CARDOZA, MILLER of North Carolina, DOGGETT, GORDON, STARK and FORD changed their vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

Ms. HARRIS, Mrs. MYRICK, and Messrs. GREEN of Wisconsin, BONNER, DEMINT, BALLENGER, BONILLA and HOBSON changed their vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So the motion to table the appeal of the ruling of the Chair was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). Before the last vote, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) was under recognition. The gentleman has 3½ minutes remaining of the 4 minutes yielded to him.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to avoid today the travesty which occurred on the House floor yesterday, I am going to urge my colleagues at the end of this debate on the rule to vote no on the previous question so that I will be able to offer an amendment that will state very simply that during consideration of H.R. 2828, a record vote by electronic device shall not be held open for the sole purpose of reversing the outcome of a vote.

So I will urge my colleagues to vote no on the previous question.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, it is now very clear we are talking here about whether or not we should keep open this rule to amendment, and the amendment that the gentleman from Massachusetts will offer will be to prevent keeping open the roll call for the purpose of manipulation.

Now, I was talking about that before, and I was told I was out of order. It is an interesting sequence. Yesterday, many of us thought we were changing a provision of the PATRIOT Act, which we find to be insufficiently cognizant of democratic values, and the majority then used what many of us believed to be very undemocratic procedures to prevent us from dealing with an undemocratic provision. And today, to complete the trifecta of disrespect for democracy, I was silenced when I tried to talk about, in an open forum, the undemocratic approach to yesterday's democracy.

Now, I know one of the things we are trying to do is to instruct the people of Iraq, to help the people of Iraq understand democracy. We want them to be open. We want them to fully engage debate, not to suppress dissension. And the only thing I can say is this, Mr. Speaker, and I know we are not supposed to address the television audience, so I address this to you.

I hope you will convey to any Iraqis who might be watching the proceedings of this House on television with regard to democracy, if they see what we are doing, please do not try this at home.

Now, let me explain why we are upset about the delay. It is not simply ''the delay.'' Delay is not bad. We will have a chance today to show, in fact, that we are prepared to delay things as well. The question is what happens during the delay.

The purpose of delaying a roll call, the reason the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) will offer this amendment, is to preserve the integrity of the House, because here is what happens. We have a roll call and Members vote, and Members will have, in some cases, said to their constituents, I support this position and I will vote that way.

Then the vote tally is taken, and when the vote tally is taken, it turns out that the Republican side has lost. Then the roll call is held open, and that is why we want to prevent the reoccurrence and why we will be offering this amendment if the previous question is defeated.

What happens then is this: The roll call is held open indefinitely so that Members who have told people in their districts they will vote one way can be pressured into voting another way. That is the purpose of holding the roll call open, to orchestrate a scheme by which the voters are misled; to orchestrate a scheme in which people can take a certain position, with the silent footnote that that position that they are taking will hold only so long as it does not prevail. But if it looks as if what they have told their constituents will prevail, they are prepared under the pressure from their leadership to abandon it.

So we are not simply talking about the convenience of the House, we are talking about the integrity of the democratic process, because the sole purpose of that sort of delay, we are not trying to accommodate people just so they can vote, this is a very particular form of delay. It is a ''DeLay-delay.'' And this kind of ''delay squared,'' carried out at the behest of the majority leader, is to allow Members of the Republican leadership to press members of the Republican Party who have voted one way to now abandoned that position lest the way they voted prevail. And the only reason for that, as I said, is to perpetuate misinformation. So let us not have this situation.

By the way, there is one other thing the voters ought to understand, Mr. Speaker. What we used to have in this Congress was individual Members voting, they consulted with their party leadership and then they voted.

What has become clear now, and it was clear in the Medicare prescription drug bill, it is clear with the PATRIOT Act, it is now clear the Republican leadership is not prepared to allow its Members to vote contrary to the Republican leadership position if it will prevail. Republicans are allowed by their leadership the freedom of their conscience, as long as it is not operative. But if, in fact, there is any danger that what they say they are for will, in fact, reach fruition, the rug is yanked out from under them and they have to change their position.

What it means is people should understand, come election, no matter who they think they are voting for, they are voting for the Republican leadership, because the Republican leadership is prepared to change the spirits of these rules, to hold roll calls open indefinitely, as long as it takes to pressure Republican Members who have voted one way, presumably having told people in their districts they will vote that way, to switch their votes.

The sole purpose of these open roll calls is to allow deception, to undermine democracy.

I hope that we vote down the previous question, that the gentleman's amendment is adopted, and that we restore the principle of intellectual honesty and integrity and democracy to this House.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the previous question in order to consider the McGovern amendment, and I do so because I think the question before this House really is under what set of rules are we operating?

We say we have the Jefferson book, and we bring it out here and it is a foot thick, of all the rules this place runs under. But the leadership on the other side operates on another set of rules called the King George II rules. Those rules have made it possible for the President of the United States to serve for 3½ years without using his veto pen on one single occasion.

The White House sends down the message to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) and says this is what I want, and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) says yes, sir, and comes out on the floor, and if it is not coming out that way, we switch from the House rules to the King George II rules.

Now, you might say yesterday was an anomaly. No, this is just a little blip in the curve. We all remember fast track. Fast track came out here and it got to a point where it had lost; and the word came from the White House, and, lo and behold, some arms were broken, there were bodies down here in the well, and suddenly we had four or five votes from the Carolinas and other places that suddenly changed that vote.

Then we came to Medicare and we see that this is a bill that came out here, and it lost, it was going to lose. And the message came from the White House, keep that vote open. They sent Mr. Thompson over from HHS, they sent everybody in sight over here to walk around on this floor to make sure that that vote came out under the King George II rules.

□ 1015

Yesterday, we have the President of the United States, we have the Attorney General going nationwide, trying to pump up people to believe that the PATRIOT Act is the best thing since sliced bread. But on a bipartisan basis on this floor, we turned it down. We said, we need to tighten it up. We opened it too much when it was passed some months ago. But the King George rules turned on and said no, no, you are not changing one word. You are not going to change one word. When we send something over there to you guys, you remember how the PATRIOT Act came to be. It was worked out in committee. It was a vote, bipartisan effort, it came out of the Committee on the Judiciary; it went to the Committee on Rules and the King George rules came into play: throw that in the wastebasket. Here is the bill that we will print tonight and tomorrow morning you will vote on. Very few of us knew the details of that bill. Having seen it in action, we now want to change some of it. That is the democratic process. But the King George rules are meant to shut down debate, to shut down dissent.

What would this body be if suddenly people from all over the country; in this legislative body, the first part of the Constitution, article I, says we are the ones who are supposed to decide the policy in this country. Yet, when we come to a decision, suddenly a phone call from the White House and bingo, it turns over. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) is not a free man. I do not think he is a bad guy. I think he is doing what he is told. This is a one-party government that is trying to stop dissent, and we need to resist that. We need to vote for the McGovern amendment.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the previous question so that we may consider and support the McGovern amendment.

What happened here yesterday was not an affront to the members of the minority. It was not even an affront to the 140 million people that we represent. It was an affront to the tradition of this institution that says that rules should reign over personal agendas.

We all come here believing passionately in the rightness of our cause, and we fight passionately for victory for our causes. But we have learned that when we lose that fight, the right result is to come back tomorrow and fight again. When you lose, Mr. Speaker, the right result is not to wait until you can win by manipulating the rules. That is just plain wrong. And it has become a malignant practice here in this House.

When we considered the Medicare legislation, probably the most important legislation this Congress will consider, the vote was held open for more than 3 hours because the majority lost the vote. And during those 3 hours, the majority took advantage of whatever leverage it had, and some of that leverage is now the subject of an investigation by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct. It took advantage of every piece of leverage it had to alter the outcome of the vote.

Yesterday, on a very significant vote regarding the civil liberties of the people of this country who go to a library or a bookstore, the majority lost the vote and was unwilling to settle for that response.

We have a tradition in this institution and in this country. You fight fiercely for the things in which you believe; but when you lose, you lose, and the remedy is to come back tomorrow and fight again. The remedy is not to bend and subvert the rules so that you do not lose.

Our party lost the majority in this House a decade ago because there was a perception that we had subverted some of those rules. You, my friends in the majority, are in danger not only of losing your majority, but you are in danger of jeopardizing something far more important, and that is a basic understanding in this country that we all play under the rules.

Do not sacrifice the integrity of this institution again for some short-term, hallow political victory.

Vote against the previous question and adopt the McGovern amendment.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise to oppose the previous question so that the McGovern amendment might be considered.

I want to join in the plea of the gentleman from New Jersey for civility and responsibility in this body. I could not think of a better document to bring to this floor than to refer my colleagues to the opening language of the Constitution where it states: ''We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.''

Tragically, yesterday, my good friends on the other side of the aisle, and I do call them good friends because I would hope that they would take an oath of office to do what is right for the American people, began to utilize their majority in the context of tyranny. They began to reemphasize the very reason why this Union was formed, and that is to eliminate persecution. What they did yesterday is they persecuted the issues of liberty, because they denied the majority vote the right to prevail.

We prevailed yesterday in a bipartisan vote. That vote established the conscience of this Congress as it relates to the protection of civil liberties. What better stand than to take a bipartisan stand on the question of protecting all of these people who are here, their civil liberties, so that when a mother takes a child to the library, or a father takes a child to the library, they do not have to be intimidated by the law enforcement offices of this Nation. What a tragedy that this side disallowed the posterity of liberty, the liberty that we are blessed with. How they ignored it yesterday by refusing to allow an amendment that would protect our liberties and to stand united for civil liberties in a bipartisan way. What a tragedy that reflected on this body in the worst of ways.

Might I say, even with the pronouncement yesterday by Secretary Ridge, which many of us wonder in its substance and its timing, and as a member of the Committee on Homeland Security, I do not take lightly the protection of this homeland, but I also hope that the executive does not take lightly the protection of our Constitution and our civil liberties.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me tell my colleagues what else yesterday reminded me of: the sad day in November 2000 when an election was lost, not by the people of the United States, because they voted in the majority for a candidate that would have assumed the Presidency of the United States, but it was because we lost votes that could not be found and, ultimately, a decision was made in the judiciary and not by the people of the United States of America.

Yesterday, the people voted and won but the majority denied that vote. I ask that we defeat and oppose the previous question so that the McGovern amendment can be heard, Mr. Speaker, so that the people can speak again on the floor of the House of the United States of America.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the McGovern amendment and in opposition to the pending motion to support the McGovern amendment.

Let us remind ourselves what the McGovern amendment says. If we defeat the previous question, we will be able to consider this amendment, and all the amendment says is that a record vote by electronic device shall not be held open for the sole purpose of reversing the outcome of a vote. Since the majority party here rigged the vote yesterday, rigged the vote for Medicare in November, they are afraid to vote on this amendment, because they want to have the ability to continue to rig the votes.

Let us understand what this really means. A Republican senior leadership aide is quoted in this morning's Congress Daily as saying, a senior GOP aide said, ''It was important to defeat the amendment. It is not normal to hold a vote open, but it is not that unusual either. It happens.''

In other words, whenever it is necessary to defeat the amendment or the vote, we will hold the vote open. What does that mean? It means that if you can hold the vote open for as long as necessary to twist arms for days, if necessary, then whoever holds the gavel can never lose the vote. It means it does not matter who the people elect and send here. It does not matter the convictions of people here. All that matters is who holds the gavel. Because if they can keep the vote open forever until the vote goes right, the majority party can never lose the votes. That means there is no democracy in the House.

So what we are discussing now is are we going to have democracy in the House, are we going to have a democratic form of government in this country. Because what the Republicans have done by showing a willingness to hold the vote open for 3 hours last November, for 38 minutes yesterday, for 2 days next week, who knows, is when a vote matters, they will not lose it no matter what the votes, because democracy does not matter.

For that alone, for destroying democracy in the House, for not being ashamed of it, this party ought to hang its head in shame and ought to surrender in November the right to govern this House until it learns how to be a party in a democracy again.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, early on after 9/11, it was said that this country was attacked by terrorists because the terrorists hated our freedom and hated our democracy.

What is it about our freedoms and our democracy that the Republican leadership does not like? What is it about the concept of majority rule that the Republican leadership does not like? What is it about the idea of a free and open debate that the Republican leadership does not like? What is it about the fact that if you can put together a bipartisan coalition to win a point, to win an amendment, to defeat a bill or to pass a bill, if it is not consistent with the Republican leadership, they get to then overturn it, they get to nullify the majority? They get to nullify the actions, as they did yesterday when the time came to end the vote; they nullified the actions of over half of the people in the country of the United States of America because their representatives voted to amend the PATRIOT Act. But that is not what the Republican leadership wanted, so they simply held the vote open until they could nullify the will of the majority in this country.

If the Republican leadership stays at it long enough, there will not be any freedoms. There will not be any democracy for the terrorists to hate, because the Republican leadership in this House is doing an incredible job of destroying the history of this House, the history of open debate, the history of the majority prevailing, while protecting the minority.

This Republican leadership, the White House, and so many people, say we have to go and deliver democracy to Iraq, to Iran, to Uzbekistan, Afghanistan, Pakistan. What about a little democracy on the floor of the House of Representatives of the United States of America? What about a little respect for democracy here? What about a little respect for the Rules of the House? What about a little respect for the rights of the majority to prevail on a vote? What about respect for the right of the minority to raise the point to offer an amendment? If you have a good amendment and they think you will prevail on the floor, you will get enough Republicans and Democrats to vote for that amendment, the Committee on Rules will not allow it in order.

If you sneak one by them and the majority surprises them and you win a vote on the floor of the House of Representatives, they take that vote away from you.

This is not what democracy is about. This is not what freedoms are about. This is not what people think they are dying for around the world. This is not what they pursue when they pursue the hope of America, they have seen that beacon of liberty, that Statue of Liberty. Do they really think that when they are all done, they get the dictatorship of the Republican majority to shut down democracy?

Would that be worth dying for? Would that be worth putting your life on the line for? Would that be worth to sacrifice when people take to streets all over the world so that they can become like America only to be tricked and find out that in America, in the House of Representatives, the Republican dictatorship has shut down that democracy, has shut down that freedom. And when the majority in this country through their representatives suggest that they want to make sure that their freedoms and their rights were protected in the PATRIOT Act, the dictatorship of the Republican majority said no. A majority vote on protecting the rights and the freedoms that are so fundamental to the heritage, to the culture, to the history, to the future of this country. A majority vote was nullified by the Republican dictatorship.

It is a sad, sad day for democracy in the House of Representatives, the people's House of the United States of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to inquire of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS), I will be closing on my side.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules will close on our side, so if the gentleman would like to close.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the sad reality is that there are no rules in this House of Representatives. Tradition and procedures of this House are routinely ignored. Members will be treated with disrespect, members even on the Republican side. This Republican leadership has diminished the people's House. It is shameful.

I appeal to Members on the Republican side to stand up to the bullying of their own leadership. This trampling of the rules and traditions of this House is not an isolated problem. It happens every day. And the only way it will stop is for good people to stand up and to say enough is enough.

I am urging Members to vote no on the previous question so I can offer an amendment which says simply that during the consideration of H.R. 2828, a record vote by electronic device shall not be held up for the sole purpose of reversing the outcome of a vote. That is all it says. How can you be against that?

I urge Members to vote no on the previous question. Vote yes on my amendment to stand up with us for what is right. We know what happened yesterday was wrong. Show some guts.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment be printed in the RECORD immediately prior to the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE) (during the vote). Members are advised there are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 1058

Mr. HEFLEY, Mr. VITTER and Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD changed their vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2828, WATER SUPPLY, RELIABILITY, AND ENVIRONMENTAL IMPROVEMENT ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) has 30 seconds remaining. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) has 23½ minutes remaining.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, if I could ask my colleague from Washington, does he have only one speaker to close?

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. I have one speaker left. So if the gentleman is prepared to close, I am.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time.

I want to urge my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the previous question so that I could bring up an amendment which simply says that during the consideration of H.R. 2828, a record vote by electronic device shall not be held open for the sole purpose of reversing the outcome of a vote.

Yesterday was a disgrace, and the only way it will never happen again is if some of my Republican colleagues stand up to the bully of their own leadership. Vote ''no'' on the previous question. Vote ''yes'' on the McGovern amendment. Show some guts.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the previous question and the rule. Rule XX, clause 2(a) makes it very clear there is a minimum, a minimum, a minimum of 15 minutes to be allowed on each recorded vote or quorum call. There has been a long-standing tradition in this great deliberative body of people having the opportunity to change their minds.

I am looking at my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK). He and I came together here in 1980. I served for 14 years as a member of the minority, and I will say that that long-standing tradition of Members, at the invitation of the leadership, to change their mind is something that has existed on both sides of the aisle for decades and decades and decades. That is why we have leaders.

That is why we have leaders, to provide that kind of very strong leadership to do just that.

Now, we know that there has been complete compliance with the rules, and we are here, we are here at this moment, Mr. Speaker, to pass a rule for a very important bipartisan piece of legislation. It is a bipartisan bill that has been in the works for a decade and a half, and I want to congratulate my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), who has been so diligent, diligent over the period of time we have been addressing this issue to bring about a final resolution which we are going to address today in a bipartisan way.

So with that sense of bipartisanship, I would like to close by congratulating our baseball team for the great victory they achieved.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the freedom to read, and Americans' right to read and purchase books without fear of Government monitoring. This freedom has been wiped out, it has been erased, it has been undone by the passage of the PATRIOT Act. Congress must repeal this unconstitutional provision. By yesterday's tampering with the important vote to give back freedoms, the majority leadership's abuse of power stepped in and forced their members to change their votes . . . to deny the majority vote the right to prevail.

The PATRIOT Act forces library users to self-censor their reading choices out of fear. Mr. Speaker, censorship is not what America is about. The existing law would make one believe that by reading a book, the 9/11 terrorists came into existence. The existing law would lead one to believe that books are the enemy. Let us not forget the book burnings in Germany. Books are only the enemy if we do not want our population to be educated.

The majority leadership has spoken. They have prevented a true bi-partisan decision to protect America's right to democracy.

The material previously referred to by Mr. MCGOVERN is as follows:

AMENDMENT TO H. RES. 711 OFFERED BY MR. MCGOVERN

At the end of the resolution add the following:

SEC. 2. During consideration of H.R. 2828, a record vote by electronic device shall not be held open for the sole purpose of reversing the outcome of a vote.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting, if ordered, on the question of agreeing to the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 216, noes 180, not voting 38, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY) (during the vote). Members are reminded to record their votes.

□ 1154

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

WATER SUPPLY, RELIABILITY, AND ENVIRONMENTAL IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 711, I call up the bill (H.R. 2828), to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to implement water supply technology and infrastructure programs aimed at increasing and diversifying domestic water resources, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 711, the bill is considered read for amendment.

The text of H.R. 2828 is as follows:

H.R. 2828

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Water Supply, Reliability, and Environmental Improvement Act''.

SEC. 2. TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act:

(1) BAY-DELTA SOLUTION AREA.—The term ''Bay-Delta solution area'' means the Bay-Delta watershed and the San Francisco Bay/Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta Estuary, California, and the areas in which diverted/exported water is used.

(2) BAY-DELTA WATERSHED.—The term ''Bay-Delta watershed'' means the Sacramento River-San Joaquin River Delta, and the rivers and watersheds that are tributary to that delta.

(3) CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM.—The term ''CALFED Bay-Delta Program'' means the programs, projects, complementary actions, and activities undertaken through coordinated planning, implementation, and assessment activities of the State and Federal agencies in a manner consistent with the Objectives and Solution Principles of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program as stated in the Record of Decision.

(4) CONGRESSIONAL AUTHORIZING COMMITTEES.—The term ''congressional authorizing committees'' means the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives.

(5) COMMISSIONER.—The term ''commissioner'' means the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation.

(6) ENVIRONMENTAL WATER ACCOUNT.—The term ''Environmental Water Account'' means the water account established by the Federal agencies and State agencies pursuant to the Record of Decision to reduce incidental take and provide a mechanism for recovery of species.

(7) FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The term ''Federal agencies'' means the Federal agencies that are signatories to Attachment 3 of the Record of Decision.

(8) GOVERNOR.—The term ''Governor'' means the Governor of the State of California.

(9) IMPLEMENTATION MEMORANDUM.—The term ''Implementation Memorandum'' means the Calfed Bay-Delta Program Implementation Memorandum of Understanding dated August 28, 2000, executed by the Federal agencies and the State agencies, as such record of decision may be adapted or modified by the Secretary in accordance with applicable law.

(10) RECLAMATION STATES.—The term ''Reclamation States'' means the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, and Texas.

(11) RECORD OF DECISION.—The term ''Record of Decision'' means the Federal programmatic Record of Decision dated August 28, 2000, issued by the Federal agencies and supported by the State.

(12) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(13) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of California.

(14) STATE AGENCIES.—The term ''State agencies'' means the California State agencies that are signatories to Attachment 3 of the Record of Decision.

(15) WATER RESOURCE AGENCIES.—The term ''Water resource agencies'' means the Federal agencies that are signatories to Attachment 3 of the Record of Decision.

(16) WATER SUPPLY.—The term ''water supply'' means a quantity of water that is developed or derived from—

(A) increased water yield;

(B) recycling existing sources;

(C) desalination of seawater or brackish water;

(D) surface or ground water storage;

(E) conservation; or

(F) other actions or water management tools that improve the availability and reliability of water supplies for beneficial uses in all water year types, including critically dry years.

(17) WATER YIELD.—The term ''water yield'' means a new quantity of water in storage that is reliably available in critically dry years for beneficial uses.

SEC. 4. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are as follows:

(1) To enhance and improve water supply, water yield, and water reliability coordinated through the Secretary, in cooperation, and consultation with Water Resource Agencies.

(2) To foster and promote the development of supplemental and new water supplies, coordinated through the Secretary, in consultation and coordination with the Water Resource Agencies, through water reuse and salinity management.

(3) To establish a competitive, performance-based program, coordinated through the Secretary, in consultation and coordination with the Water Resource Agencies, to provide financial incentives to entities to develop demonstration projects designed to treat seawater and brackish water, wastewater and impaired ground water.

(4) To establish an office, in any Reclamation State requesting such an office, for the use of all Federal and State agencies that will be involved in issuing permits and conducting environmental reviews for water supply, water supply capital improvement projects, levee maintenance, and delivery systems in any Reclamation State requesting such an office.

(5) To provide assistance to States, municipalities, other local governmental agencies (including soil and water conservation districts) and investor-owned utilities that provide municipal water supply service pursuant to State law in the design and construction of projects to desalinate seawater and put to beneficial use impaired ground water and brackish water.

(6) To implement and abide by the 4 primary objectives and solution principles set forth in the CALFED Bay-Delta Program. To authorize funding and coordinate sustained funding sources, through the Secretary, for the implementation of a comprehensive program to achieve increased water yield and water supply, improved water quality, and enhanced environmental benefits as well as improved water system reliability, water use efficiency, watershed management, water transfers, and levee protection.

(7) To implement other related provisions to improve water supply and yield.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR, COMPETITIVE GRANT PROGRAM

SEC. 101. GENERAL AUTHORITY.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF A WATER RESOURCES COORDINATION OFFICE.—There shall be established within the Office of the Secretary the Office of the Federal Water Resources Coordinator (referred to in this title as the ''Coordinator'') who shall be responsible for coordinating the Water Resource Agencies activities addressing water desalination (including sea and brackish water), impaired ground water, brine removal, and water reuse projects and activities authorized under this title.

(b) SECRETARIAL RESPONSIBILITY.—The Secretary, through the Coordinator, shall carry out the responsibilities, as specifically identified as a responsibility of the Coordinator under this title, and may not delegate these responsibilities to the Water Resource Agencies. The Coordinator at its sole option may use the services of the Water Resource Agencies on any project deemed necessary.

(c) ASSESSMENT OF EXISTING FEDERAL AUTHORITIES.—The Secretary, through the Coordinator and in consultation with the Water Resource agencies, shall develop and transmit to Congress no later than 60 days after enactment of this Act, an assessment report that identifies the following:

(1) A list of authorities, including mandatory and discretionary trust funds, other than those under this title, to undertake activities under section 102.

(2) A list of all Water Resource Agencies expenditures since fiscal year 1998 undertaken for projects and activities related to this title.

(3) A plan of Water Resource Agencies coordination to meet the criteria, and guidelines as determined under this title.

(4) A detailed/coordinated Water Resource Agencies budget review document, including outyears funding requirements.

(5) Recommendations for alternative financing mechanisms.

(d) ESTABLISHMENT OF GUIDELINES FOR ACTIVITIES UNDERTAKEN BY THE COORDINATOR.—

(1) RULES AND GUIDELINES.—In carrying out activities under this title the Secretary, acting through the Coordinator, in coordination with the Water Resource Agencies, shall issue rules and guidelines for the submission of selection, solicitation, and timelines of eligible projects and activities seeking grants assistance to analyze, plan, develop and construct, including but not limited to, the following:

(A) Sea and brackish water desalination projects, including analysis and technology development, reclamation of wastewater, and impaired ground and surface waters.

(B) Brine management and disposal, including analysis and technology development. Such analysis shall include, but not be limited to, the effects of concentrate disposal and possible mitigation measures.

(C) Water reuse, including, but not limited to, techniques for cleanup and treatment of ground water contamination, especially ground water basins that are the primary source of drinking water supplies.

(2) EQUITABLE SELECTION.—The Secretary shall ensure the rules and guidelines provide for the equitable selection, to the maximum extent practicable, of projects and distribution of grants among the eligible activities identified under this section.

(3) TIMEFRAME.—Such rules and guidelines shall be issued not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(e) AGENCY PARTICIPATION.—The Coordinator, in consultation with the Water Resource Agencies, shall—

(1) determine available and appropriate accounts, both mandatory and permanent, including Federal trust funds; and

(2) direct the Federal agency heads to spend authorized funds, if available within their agency, based on their proportional Federal interest.

SEC. 102. AUTHORITY TO STUDY, PLAN, DESIGN, AND CONSTRUCT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, through the Coordinator, in cooperation and consultation with the Water Resource Agencies, shall undertake a competitive grant program—

(1) to investigate and identify opportunities for the study, plan, and design of activities under this title; and

(2) to construct demonstration and permanent facilities, or the implementation of other programs and activities, to meet the criteria under this title.

(b) CONDITIONS.—No grant may be made under this title for the design and construction of any project until after—

(1) an appraisal investigation and a feasibility study (which may be performed, if applicable, by the non-Federal sponsor and submitted to the Secretary, through the Coordinator, for review) have been completed and approved by the Secretary, through the Coordinator;

(2) the Secretary, through the Coordinator, has determined that, if applicable, the non-Federal project sponsor has the financial resources available to fund the non-Federal share of the project's costs; and

(3) the Secretary, through the Coordinator, has approved, if applicable, a cost-sharing agreement with the non-Federal project sponsor that commits the non-Federal project sponsor to funding its share of the project's construction costs on an annual basis, and ongoing operations and maintenance.

SEC. 103. CRITERIA FOR GRANTS.

In making grants pursuant to this title, the Secretary, acting through the Coordinator shall give priority to those projects which meet at least one of the following criteria:

(1) The requirements of the Secretary, as applicable, and any applicable State requirements.

(2) Is agreed to by the Federal and non-Federal entities with authority and responsibility for the project.

(3) Increase water supply yield.

(4) Improve water use efficiency and water conservation.

(5) Reduce or stabilize demand on existing Federal and State water supply facilities.

(6) Improve water quality.

(7) Employ innovative approaches, including but not limited to, ground water recharge.

(8) Facilitate the transfer and adoption of technology.

(9) Employ regional solutions that increase the availability of locally and regionally developed water supplies.

(10) Remediate a contaminated ground water basin.

(11) Provide a secure source of new water supplies for national defense activities.

(12) Reduce the threat of a water supply disruption as a result of a natural disaster or acts of terrorism.

(13) Help Water Resource Agencies meet existing legal requirements, contractual water supply obligations, Indian trust responsibilities, water rights settlements, water quality control plans and department of health requirements, Federal and State environmental laws, the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, or other obligations.

(14) Promote and applies a regional or watershed approach to water resource management or cross-boundary issues, implements an integrated resources management approach, increases water management flexibility, or forms a partnership with other entities.

(15) Improve health and safety of the general public.

(16) Provide benefits outside the region in which the project occurs.

(17) Provide benefits to the agricultural community.

SEC. 104. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Secretary shall provide the Congress an annual report that includes the following:

(1) A list of projects, and project details, amount of past, current, and projected funding.

(2) Documentation of the accounts within the Water Resource Agencies funding.

(3) The benefits gained by projects, and to which beneficiaries and users, funded under this title.

(4) An assessment of how the project met each of the evaluation criteria under this title.

SEC. 105. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) ACTIVITIES AND PROJECTS UNDER THIS TITLE.—

(1) DETERMINATION OF WATER RESOURCES AGENCY PARTICIPATION.—If existing authorities are not available to carry out activities addressed under this title, the Coordinator, in consultation with the Water Resource agencies, shall make the determination of Federal participation and Federal agency cost share.

(2) FUNDING.—Subject to section 105(a)(1) and section 105(b), there are authorized to be appropriated—

(A) $50,000,000 for fiscal year 2004; and

(B) $100,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON GRANTS.—

(1) LOCATION OF PROJECT.—Grants carried out by the Secretary, through the Coordinator, may be carried out through the 50 States.

(2) PER STATE LIMIT.—Except as provided in under this section, of the amount available in a fiscal year for grants under this title, not more than 30 percent may be used for projects in a single State.

(c) COST SHARING.—Except as provided under this section, and notwithstanding any other provision of this title. Grants for projects receiving Federal assistance under this title shall not exceed the lesser of $50,000,000 (indexed annually for inflation) or 35 percent of the total cost of the project.

SEC. 106. LIMITATION ON ELIGIBILITY FOR FUNDING.

A project that receives funds under this Act shall be ineligible to receive Federal funds from any other source for the same purpose unless such funds are provided to ensure compliance with a Federal mandate.

TITLE II—CALIFORNIA WATER SECURITY AND ENVIRONMENTAL ENHANCEMENT ACT

SEC. 201. CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds as follows:

(1) The mission of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program is to develop and implement a long-term comprehensive plan that will increase water supply and yield, improve water management, and restore the ecological health of the Bay-Delta solution area.

(2) The CALFED Bay-Delta Program was developed as a joint Federal-State program to deal effectively with the multijurisdictional issues involved in managing the Bay-Delta Watershed.

(b) IN GENERAL.—

(1) AUTHORIZATION.—The Federal agencies, in consultation with State agencies, are authorized to participate in the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, in accordance with this title, and consistent with the Objectives and Solution Principles set forth in the Record of Decision.

(2) GOALS.—The goals of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program shall consist of components that include water supply and yield, ecosystem restoration, water supply reliability, conveyance, water use efficiency, water quality, water transfers, watersheds, Environmental Water Account, levee stability, and science.

(3) BALANCE.—CALFED Bay-Delta Program activities consisting of protecting water quality, including but not limited to, drinking water quality, restoring ecological health, improving water supply reliability, including additional water supply and water yield and conveyance, and protecting levees in the Bay-Delta watershed, shall progress in a balanced manner.

(c) ADMINISTRATION OF ACTIVITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies are authorized to carry out the activities described in this title, subject to the cost-share and other provisions of this title, if the activity—

(A) has been subject to environmental review and approval as required under applicable Federal and State law; and

(B) has been approved and certified by the Secretary to be consistent with the Objectives and Solution Principles of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program as stated in Record of Decision.

(2) MULTIPLE BENEFIT PROJECTS FAVORED.—The Secretary and Federal agencies are authorized to carry out the activities set forth in this title. In selecting projects and programs for increasing water yield and water supply, improving water quality, and enhancing environmental benefits, projects and programs with multiple benefits shall be emphasized.

(3) ELEMENTS REGULATED.—To the extent that CALFED Bay-Delta Program projects and elements are subject to regulation under section 404 of the Clean Water Act, the United States Army Corps of Engineers and the United States Environmental Protection Agency shall not consider, as alternatives to projects that are elements of the overall CALFED Bay-Delta Program, programs, projects, or actions beyond those described in the Record of Decision, nor shall they favor one CALFED Bay-Delta Program project or element over another.

(4) BALANCE.—The Secretary shall ensure that all elements of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program need to be completed and operated cooperatively to maintain the balanced progress in all CALFED Bay-Delta Program areas.

(d) PROGRAM ACTIVITIES.—

(1) WATER STORAGE.—Except as provided by section 207(b), the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $102,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) WATER STORAGE SUPPLY AND YIELD.—For purposes of implementing the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, the Secretary is authorized to undertake all necessary planning activities and feasibility studies required for the development of recommendations by the Secretary to Congress on the construction and implementation of specific water supply and yield, ground water management, and ground water storage projects and implementation of comprehensive water management planning. The requirements of section 9(a) of the Act of August 4, 1939 (43 U.S.C. 485h(a); 53 Stat. 1193) shall be deemed to be met through the performance of a feasibility study as authorized within this section as well as those feasibility studies authorized under the Consolidated Appropriations Resolution Fiscal Year 2003, Public Law 108–7, House Report 108–10, division D, title II, section 215.

(B) FEASIBILITY STUDIES.—All feasibility studies completed for storage projects as a result of this section shall include identification of project benefits and beneficiaries and a cost allocation plan consistent with the benefits to be received, for both governmental and non-governmental entities.

(C) DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTION.—If the Secretary determines a project to be feasible, and meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), the report shall be submitted to Congress. If Congress does not pass a disapproval resolution of the feasibility study during the first 120 days before Congress (not including days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) the project shall be authorized, subject to appropriations.

(D) WATER SUPPLY AND WATER YIELD STUDY.—(i) The Secretary, acting through the Bureau of Reclamation and in consultation with the State, shall conduct a study of available water supplies and water yield and existing demand and future needs for water—

(I) within the units of the Central Valley Project;

(II) within the area served by Central Valley Project agricultural water service contractors and municipal and industrial water service contractors; and

(III) within the Bay-Delta solution area.

(ii) RELATIONSHIP TO PRIOR STUDY.—The study under clause (i) shall incorporate and revise as necessary the study required by section 3408(j) of the Central Valley Project Improvement Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–575).

(E) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the congressional authorizing committees by not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title describing the following:

(i) Water yield and water supply improvements, if any, for Central Valley Project agricultural water service contractors and municipal and industrial water service contractors.

(ii) All water management actions or projects that would improve water yield or water supply and that, if taken or constructed, would balance available water supplies and existing demand for those contractors and other water users of the Bay-Delta watershed with due recognition of water right priorities and environmental needs.

(iii) The financial costs of the actions and projects described under clause (ii).

(iv) The beneficiaries of those actions and projects and an assessment of their willingness to pay the capital costs and operation and maintenance costs thereof.

(F) OTHER ACTIVITIES.—Studying, developing and implementing ground water management and ground water storage projects (not to exceed $50,000,000); and

(G) PLANNING.—Comprehensive water management planning (not to exceed $6,000,000).

(2) CONVEYANCE.—Except as provided by section 207(b), the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $77,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) South Delta Actions (not to exceed $45,000,000):

(i) South Delta Improvements Program for the following:

(I) To increase the State Water Project export limit to 8500 cfs, subject to subclause (VI).

(II) To install permanent, operable barriers in the south Delta. The Federal Agencies shall cooperate with the State to accelerate installation of the permanent, operable barriers in the south Delta, with the intent to complete that installation not later than the end of fiscal year 2006.

(III) To design and construct fish screens and intake facilities at Clifton Court Forebay and the Tracy Pumping Plant facilities.

(IV) To increase the State Water Project export to the maximum capability of 10,300 cfs.

(ii) Reduction of agricultural drainage in south Delta channels and other actions necessary to minimize impacts of such drainage on water quality, including but not limited to, design and construction of the relocation of drinking water intake facilities to delta water users. The Secretary shall coordinate actions for relocating intake facilities on a time schedule consistent with subclause (i)(II).

(iii) Design and construction of lower San Joaquin River floodway improvements.

(iv) Installation and operation of temporary barriers in the south Delta until fully operable barriers are constructed.

(v) Actions to protect navigation and local diversions not adequately protected by the temporary barriers.

(vi) Actions to increase pumping shall be accomplished in a manner consistent with California law protecting:

(I) deliveries to, costs of, and water suppliers and water users, including but not limited to, agricultural users, that have historically relied on water diverted from the Delta; and

(II) the quality of water for existing municipal, industrial, and agricultural uses.

(vi) Actions at Franks Tract to improve water quality in the Delta.

(B) North Delta Actions (not to exceed $12,000,000):

(i) Evaluation and implementation of improved operational procedures for the Delta Cross Channel to address fishery and water quality concerns.

(ii) Evaluation of a screened through-Delta facility on the Sacramento River.

(iii) Design and construction of lower Mokelumne River floodway improvements.

(C) Interties (not to exceed $10,000,000):

(i) Evaluation and construction of an intertie between the State Water Project and the Central Valley Project facilities at or near the City of Tracy.

(ii) Assessment of the connection of the Central Valley Project to the State Water Project's Clifton Court Forebay with a corresponding increase in the Forebay's screened intake.

(D) Evaluation and implementation of the San Luis Reservoir lowpoint improvement project (not to exceed $10,000,000).

(3) WATER USE EFFICIENCY.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $153,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Water conservation projects that provide water supply reliability, water quality, and ecosystem benefits to the Bay-Delta solution area (not to exceed $61,000,000).

(B) Technical assistance for urban and agricultural water conservation projects (not to exceed $5,000,000).

(C) Water recycling and desalination projects, including but not limited to projects identified in the Bay Area Water Recycling Plan and the Southern California Comprehensive Water Reclamation and Reuse Study (not to exceed $84,000,000), as follows:

(i) In providing financial assistance under this clause, the Secretary shall give priority consideration to projects that include regional solutions to benefit regional water supply and reliability needs.

(ii) The Secretary shall review any feasibility level studies for seawater desalination and regional brine line projects that have been completed, whether or not those studies were prepared with financial assistance from the Secretary.

(iii) The Secretary shall report to the Congress within 90 days after the completion of a feasibility study or the review of a feasibility study for the purposes of providing design and construction assistance for the construction of desalination and regional brine line projects.

(iv) The Federal share of the cost of any activity carried out with assistance under this clause may not exceed the lesser of 35 percent of the total cost of the activity or $50,000,000.

(D) Water measurement and transfer actions (not to exceed $1,500,000).

(E) Certification of implementation of best management practices for urban water conservation (not to exceed $1,500,000).

(4) WATER TRANSFERS.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $3,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Increasing the availability of existing facilities for water transfers.

(B) Lowering transaction costs through permit streamlining.

(C) Maintaining a water transfer information clearinghouse.

(5) ENVIRONMENTAL WATER ACCOUNT.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $75,000,000 may be expended for implementation of the Environmental Water Account.

(6) INTEGRATED REGIONAL WATER MANAGEMENT PLANS.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $95,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Establishing a competitive grants program to assist local and regional communities in California in developing and implementing integrated regional water management plans to carry out the Objectives and Solution Principles of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program as stated in the Record of Decision.

(B) Implementation of projects and programs in California that improve water supply reliability, water quality, ecosystem restoration, and flood protection, or meet other local and regional needs, that are consistent with, and make a significant contribution to, Stage 1 of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program.

(7) ECOSYSTEM RESTORATION.—(A) Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this title, no more than $100,000,000 may be expended for projects under this subsection.

(B) The Secretary is authorized to undertake the following projects under this paragraph:

(i) Restoration of habitat in the San Francisco Bay-Delta watershed, San Pablo Bay, and Suisun Bay and Marsh, including tidal wetlands and riparian habitat.

(ii) Fish screen and fish passage improvement projects.

(iii) Implementation of an invasive species program, including prevention, control, and eradication.

(iv) Development and integration of State and Federal agricultural programs that benefit wildlife into the Ecosystem Restoration Program.

(v) Financial and technical support for locally-based collaborative programs to restore habitat while addressing the concerns of local communities.

(vi) Water quality improvement projects to manage salinity, selenium, mercury, pesticides, trace metals, dissolved oxygen, turbidity, sediment, and other pollutants.

(vii) Land and water acquisitions to improve habitat and fish spawning and survival in the Bay-Delta watershed.

(viii) Integrated flood management and levee protection projects for improving ecosystem restoration.

(ix) Scientific evaluations and targeted research on program activities, including appropriate use of adaptive management concepts.

(x) Preparation of management plans for all properties acquired, and update current management plans, prior to the purchase or any contribution to the purchase of any interest in land for ecosystem.

(xi) Strategic planning and tracking of program performance using established protocols and/or bio-indicators.

(C) Project Initiation Report for each project, describing project purpose, objective, and cost, shall be transmitted to Congress following Secretarial certification, 30 days (not including days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) prior to implementing ecosystem restoration actions as described under this paragraph. Such reports shall be required for all ecosystem projects, (including comprehensive projects that are composed of several components and are to be completed by staged implementation) exceeding $20,000 in Federal funds. Annual ecosystem restoration project summary reports shall be submitted to Congress through the Secretary highlighting progress of the project implementation. The reports required to be submitted under this paragraph shall consider the following on each project:

(i) A description of ecological monitoring data to be collected for the restoration projects and how the data are to be integrated, streamlined, compatible, and designed to measure overall trends of ecosystem health in the Bay-Delta watershed.

(ii) Whether the restoration project has integrated monitoring plans and descriptions of protocols, or bio-indicators, to be used for gauging cost-effective performance of the project.

(iii) Whether the proposed project is a part of a larger, more comprehensive restoration project in a particular part of the solution area, and if so, how the proposed project contributes to the larger project.

(iv) A secretarial determination, or strategy, that utilizes existing Federal land, State land, or other land acquired for ecosystem restoration, with amounts provided by the United States or the State, to the extent that such lands are available within the CALFED solution area.

(v) A determination of the potential cumulative impacts, or induced damages of fee title, easement, and/or lease acquisition of land on local and regional economies, and adjacent land and landowners; and a description of how such impacts will be mitigated.

(vi) A description of actions that will be taken to mitigate any induced damages from the conversion of agriculture land including the degree to which wildlife and habitat values will increase due to the land conversion.

(D) Conditions, if applicable, for projects and activities under this paragraph are as follows:

(i) A requirement that before obligating or expending Federal funds to acquire land, the Secretary shall first determine that existing Federal land, State land, or other land acquired for ecosystem restoration with amounts provided by the United States or the State, to the extent such lands are available, is not available for that purpose. If no public land is available the Secretary, prior to any federal expenditure for private land acquisition, shall—

(I) make an accounting of all habitat types located on publicly owned land throughout the solution area;

(II) not convert prime farm land and unique farm land, to the maximum extent as practicable, as identified by local, State, or Federal land use inventories, including the Natural Resources Conservation Service;

(III) not conflict with existing zoning for agriculture use; and

(IV) not involve other changes in existing environment due to location and nature of converting farmland to non-farmland use.

(ii) A requirement that in determining whether to acquire private land for ecosystem restoration, the Secretary shall—

(I) conduct appropriate analysis, including cost valuation to assure that private land acquisitions prioritize easements and leases over acquisition by fee title unless easements and leases are unavailable or unsuitable for the stated purposes;

(II) consider the potential cumulative impacts on the local and regional economies of transferring the property into government ownership and—

(aa) describe the actions that will be taken, to the maximum extent practicable, to mitigate any induced damages; and

(bb) determine that the land acquired will add increasing value to the purposes of ecosystem restoration;

(III) mitigate any potential induced damage, to the maximum extent practicable, of any conversion of agriculture land for ecosystem restoration due to the implementation of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program; and

(IV) partner with landowners and local agencies to develop cooperating landowner commitments that are likely to meet coequal objectives of achieving local economic and social goals and implementing the ecosystem restoration goals.

(8) WATERSHEDS.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $50,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Building local capacity to assess and manage watersheds affecting the Bay-Delta solution area.

(B) Technical assistance for watershed assessments and management plans.

(C) Developing and implementing locally-based watershed conservation, maintenance, and restoration actions.

(9) WATER QUALITY.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $50,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Addressing drainage problems in the San Joaquin Valley to improve downstream water quality, including habitat restoration projects that reduce drainage and improve water quality, provided that—

(i) a plan is in place for monitoring downstream water quality improvements;

(ii) State and local agencies are consulted on the activities to be funded; and

(iii) this clause is not intended to create any right, benefit, or privilege.

(B) Implementing source control programs in the Bay-Delta watershed.

(C) Developing recommendations through technical panels and advisory council processes to meet the CALFED Bay-Delta Program goal of continuous improvement in water quality for all uses.

(D) Investing in treatment technology demonstration projects.

(E) Controlling runoff into the California aqueduct and other similar conveyances.

(F) Addressing water quality problems at the North Bay Aqueduct.

(G) Studying recirculation of export water to reduce salinity and improve dissolved oxygen in the San Joaquin River.

(H) Projects that may meet the Objectives and Solution Principles of the water quality component of CALFED Bay-Delta Program.

(I) Development of water quality exchanges and other programs to make high quality water available to urban areas.

(J) Development and implementation of a plan to meet all existing water quality standards for which the State and Federal water projects have responsibility.

(10) LEVEE STABILITY.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $70,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Assisting local reclamation districts in reconstructing Delta levees to a base level of protection not to exceed $20,000,000.

(B) Enhancing the stability of levees that have particular importance in the system through the Delta Levee Special Improvement Projects program not to exceed $20,000,000.

(C) Developing best management practices to control and reverse land subsidence on islands in the Bay-Delta watershed (not to exceed $1,000,000).

(D) Refining the Delta Emergency Management Plan (not to exceed $1,000,000).

(E) Developing a Delta Risk Management Strategy after assessing the consequences of failure levees in the Bay-Delta watershed from floods, seepage, subsidence, and earthquakes (not to exceed $500,000).

(F) Developing a strategy for reuse of dredged materials on islands in the Bay-Delta watershed (not to exceed $1,500,000).

(G) Evaluating and, where appropriate, rehabilitating the Suisun Marsh levees (not to exceed $6,000,000).

(H) Integrated flood management, ecosystem restoration, and levee protection projects, including design and construction of lower San Joaquin River and lower Mokelumne River floodway improvements and other projects under the Sacramento-San Joaquin Comprehensive Study (not to exceed $20,000,000).

(11) MONITORING AND ANALYSIS.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $50,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(A) Establishing and maintaining an independent technical board, technical panels, and standing boards to provide oversight and peer review of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program.

(B) Conducting expert evaluations and scientific assessments of all CALFED Bay-Delta Program elements.

(C) Coordinating existing monitoring and scientific research programs.

(D) Developing and implementing adaptive management experiments to test, refine, and improve technical understandings.

(E) Establishing performance measures and monitoring and valuating the performance of all CALFED Bay-Delta Program elements.

(F) Preparing an annual science report.

(12) PROGRAM MANAGEMENT, OVERSIGHT, AND COORDINATION.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $25,000,000 may be expended by the Secretary, in cooperation with the State, for the following:

(A) CALFED Bay-Delta Program-wide tracking of schedules, finances, and performance.

(B) Multi-agency oversight and coordination of CALFED Bay-Delta Program activities to ensure program balance and integration.

(C) Development of interagency cross-cut budgets and a comprehensive finance plan to allocate costs in accordance with the beneficiary pays provisions of the Record of Decision.

(D) Coordination of public outreach and involvement, including tribal, environmental justice, and public advisory activities under the Federal Advisory Committee Act.

(E) Development of annual reports.

(13) DIVERSIFICATION OF WATER SUPPLIES.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007 under this Act, no more than $30,000,000 may be expended to diversify sources of level 2 refuge supplies and modes of delivery to refuges and to acquire additional water for level 4 refuge supplies.

(e) AUTHORIZED ACTIONS.—The Secretary and the Federal agency heads are authorized to carry out the activities authorized by this title through the use of grants, loans, contracts, and cooperative agreements with Federal and non-Federal entities where the Secretary or Federal agency head determines that the grant, loan, contract, or cooperative agreement is likely to assist in implementing the authorized activity in an efficient, timely, and cost-effective manner.

SEC. 202. MANAGEMENT.

(a) COORDINATION.—In carrying out the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall coordinate, to the maximum extent practicable, their activities with the State agencies.

(b) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—In carrying out the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall cooperate with local and tribal governments and the public through a federally chartered advisory committee or other appropriate means, to seek input on program elements such as planning, design, technical assistance, and development of peer review science programs.

(c) OBJECTIVE REVIEW AND ANALYSIS.—In carrying out the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall seek to ensure, to the maximum extent practicable, that—

(1) all major aspects of implementing the CALFED Bay-Delta Program are subjected to credible and objective scientific review and economic analysis; and

(2) major decisions are based upon the best available scientific information.

(d) AGENCIES' DISCRETION.—This Act shall not affect the discretion of any of the Federal agencies or the State agencies or the authority granted to any of the Federal agencies or State agencies by any other Federal or State law.

(e) STATUS REPORTS.—The Secretary shall report, quarterly to the Congressional Committees, on the progress in achieving the water supply targets as described in Section 2.2.4 of the Record of Decision, the environmental water account requirements as described in Section 2.2.7, and the water quality targets as described in Section 2.2.9, and any pending actions that may affect the ability of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program to achieve those targets and requirements.

SEC. 203. IMPLEMENTATION SCHEDULE REPORT.

(a) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Governor, shall submit a report of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and December 15 of each year thereafter to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives that describes the status and projected implementation schedule of all components through fiscal year 2008 of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program. The Report shall contain the following:

(1) STATEMENT OF BALANCE.—The report shall identify the progress in each of the categories listed in paragraph (2). The Secretary, in cooperation with the Governor, shall prepare and certify a statement of whether the program is in balance taking into consideration the following:

(A) The status of all actions, including goals, schedules, and financing agreements and funding commitments.

(B) Progress on storage projects, including yield, conveyance improvements, levee improvements, water quality projects, and water use efficiency programs and reasons for any delays.

(C) Completion of key projects and milestones identified in the Ecosystem Restoration Program.

(D) Development and implementation of local programs for watershed conservation and restoration.

(E) Progress in improving water supply reliability and implementing the Environmental Water Account.

(F) Achievement of commitments under State and Federal endangered species laws.

(G) Implementation of a comprehensive science program.

(H) Progress toward acquisition of the State and Federal permits, including permits issued under section 404(a) of the Clean Water Act, for implementation of projects in all identified program areas.

(I) Progress in achieving benefits in all geographic regions covered by the CALFED Bay-Delta Program.

(J) Status of actions that compliment the Record of Decision.

(K) Status of mitigation measures addressed under section 201(d)(7).

(L) Revisions to funding commitments and CALFED Bay-Delta Program responsibilities.

(2) Accomplishments in the past fiscal year and year-to-date in achieving the objectives of—

(A) additional and improved water storage; including supply and yield;

(B) water quality;

(C) water use efficiency;

(D) ecosystem restoration;

(E) watershed management;

(F) levee system integrity;

(G) water transfers;

(H) water conveyance; and

(I) water supply reliability.

(3) REVISED SCHEDULE.—If the report and statement of balance under subsection (a) concludes that the CALFED Bay-Delta Program is not progressing in a balanced manner so that no certification of balanced implementation can be made, the Secretary, in consultation with the Governor, shall prepare a revised schedule to ensure that the CALFED Bay-Delta Program is likely to progress in a balanced manner consistent with the objectives and solution principles of the Record of Decision and in consideration of subsections (a) and (b) of this section. This revised schedule shall be subject to approval by the Secretary, in consultation by the Governor, and upon such approval shall be submitted to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

(b) CROSSCUT BUDGET AND AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) CROSSCUT BUDGET.—The President's Budget shall include the appropriate departmental and agency authorities, and request for the level of funding for each of the Federal agencies to carry out its responsibilities under the CALFED Bay-Delta Program. Such funds shall be requested for the Federal agency with authority and programmatic responsibility for the obligation of such funds. No later than 30 days after submission of the President's Budget to the Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall submit to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives an updated interagency budget crosscut report, as required under Public Law 108–7.

(2) FINANCIAL SUMMARY.—As part of the crosscut budget submission, a financial report certified by the Secretary, and the Office of Management and Budget, containing a detailed accounting of current year, budget year and all funds received and obligated by all Federal and State agencies responsible for implementing the CALFED Bay-Delta Program in the previous fiscal year, a budget for the proposed projects (including a description of the project, authorization level, and project status) to be carried out through fiscal year 2008 the Federal portion of funds authorized under this title, and a list of all projects to be undertaken in the upcoming fiscal year with the Federal portion of funds authorized under this title.

SEC. 204. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies $880,000,000 to pay the Federal share of programs and activities under this title for fiscal years 2004 through 2007, in accordance with the provisions of this title. The funds shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

SEC. 205. FEDERAL SHARE OF COSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Federal share of the cost of implementing of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program as set forth in the Record of Decision shall not exceed 33.3 percent.

(b) CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM BENEFICIARIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall ensure that all beneficiaries, including the environment, shall pay for benefits received from all projects or activities carried out under the CALFED Bay-Delta Program. This requirement shall not be limited to storage and conveyance projects and shall be implemented so as to encourage integrated resource planning.

SEC. 206. USE OF EXISTING AUTHORITIES AND FUNDS.

(a) GENERALLY.—The heads of the Federal agencies shall use the authority under the alternative Acts identified by the Secretary to carry out the purposes of this title. Funds available under the alternative Acts shall be used before other funds made available under this title for the same activities.

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—In addition to funds authorized and appropriated for section 201(d)(1) or section 201(d)(2), the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of the Federal agencies, may use money appropriated for any activity authorized under this title for any activity authorized under section 201(d)(1) or section 201(d)(2) if the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of the Federal agencies, determines that the funds appropriated for the other activity cannot be used for that other activity. This section shall be construed to apply to funds appropriated after the date of the enactment of this Act unless the Act appropriating the funds specifically and explicitly states that this section shall not apply to those funds.

(c) USE OF UNEXPENDED BUDGET AUTHORITY.—The Secretary is authorized to utilize all unexpended budget authority under this title for any activity authorized under section 201(d)(1) or section 201(d)(2).

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and annual thereafter, the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of the Federal agencies, shall transmit to Congress a report that describes the following:

(1) A list of all existing authorities, including the authorities listed in subsection (a), under which the Secretary or the heads of the Federal agencies may carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) A list funds authorized in the previous fiscal year for the authorities listed under paragraph (1).

(3) A list of the projects carried out with the funds listed in paragraph (2) and the amount of funds obligated and expended for each project.

SEC. 207. COMPLIANCE WITH STATE AND FEDERAL LAW.

Nothing in this Act—

(1) invalidates of preempts State water law or an interstate compact governing water;

(2) alters the rights of any State to any appropriated share of the waters of any body of surface or ground water, whether determined by past or future interstate compacts or final judicial allocations;

(3) preempts or modifies any State or Federal law or interstate compact governing water quality or disposal; or

(4) confers on any non-federal entity the ability to exercise any Federal right to the waters of any stream or to any ground water resource.

TITLE III—SALTON SEA

SEC. 301. FUNDING TO ADDRESS SALTON SEA.

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $300,000,000 for activities to address issues surrounding the Salton Sea.

TITLE IV—ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRALIZED REGULATORY OFFICE

SEC. 401. ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE.

The Secretary shall establish an office, in Sacramento California, and may establish other offices in the capitol of any Reclamation State requesting such an office, for projects within their State, for the use of all Federal agencies and State agencies that are likely to be involved in issuing permits and conducting environmental reviews for water supply, water supply capital improvement projects, levee maintenance, and delivery systems in California or any Reclamation State requesting such an office.

SEC. 402. ACCEPTANCE AND EXPENDITURE OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may accept and expend funds contributed by non-Federal public entities to expedite the consideration of permits and the conducting of environmental reviews for all projects described in section 401 and to offset the Federal costs of processing such permits and conducting such reviews. The Secretary shall allocate funds received under this section among Federal agencies in accordance with the costs such agencies incur in processing such permits and conducting such reviews. The allocated funds shall be for reimbursements of such costs.

(b) PROTECTION OF IMPARTIAL DECISIONMAKING.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary and the heads Federal agencies receiving funds under this section shall ensure that the use of the funds accepted under this section will not impact impartial decisionmaking with respect to the issuance of permits or conducting of environmental reviews, either substantively or procedurally, or diminish, modify, or otherwise affect the statutory or regulatory authorities of such agencies.

TITLE V—RURAL WATER SUPPLY PROGRAM

SEC. 501. RURAL WATER SUPPLY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to establish a program to plan, design, and construct rural water systems in coordination with other Federal agencies with rural water programs, and in cooperation with non-Federal project entities.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—Provisions to be included in the establishment of a rural water system shall include the following:

(1) Appraisal investigations.

(2) Feasibility studies.

(3) Environmental reports.

(4) Cost sharing responsibilities.

(5) Responsibility for operation and maintenance.

(6) Prohibition for funding for irrigation.

(c) CRITERIA.—The Secretary is authorized to develop criteria for determining which projects are eligible for participation in the program established under this section.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress the program developed under this section.

(e) RECLAMATION STATES.—The program established by this section shall be limited to Reclamation States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill is adopted.

The text of H.R. 2828, as amended, is as follows:

H.R. 2828

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Water Supply, Reliability, and Environmental Improvement Act''.

TITLE I—CALIFORNIA WATER SECURITY AND ENVIRONMENTAL ENHANCEMENT

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''California Water Security and Environmental Enhancement Act''.

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM.—The terms ''Calfed Bay-Delta Program'' and ''Program'' mean the programs, projects, complementary actions, and activities undertaken through coordinated planning, implementation, and assessment activities of the State and Federal Agencies in a manner consistent with the Record of Decision.

(2) ENVIRONMENTAL WATER ACCOUNT.—The term ''Environmental Water Account'' means the cooperative management program established pursuant to the Record of Decision to reduce incidental take and provide a mechanism for recovery of species.

(3) FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The term ''Federal agencies'' means the Federal agencies that are signatories to Attachment 3 of the Record of Decision.

(4) GOVERNOR.—The term ''Governor'' means the Governor of the State of California.

(5) RECLAMATION STATES.—The term ''Reclamation States'' means the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, and Texas.

(6) RECORD OF DECISION.—The term ''Record of Decision'' means the Calfed Bay-Delta Program Record of Decision, dated August 28, 2000.

(7) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(8) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of California.

(9) STATE AGENCIES.—The term ''State agencies'' means the California State agencies that are signatories to Attachment 3 of the Record of Decision.

(10) WATER YIELD.—The term ''water yield'' means a new quantity of water in storage that is reliably available in critically dry years for beneficial uses.

SEC. 103. BAY DELTA PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) RECORD OF DECISION AS GENERAL FRAMEWORK.—The Record of Decision is approved as a general framework for addressing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, including its components relating to water storage and water yield, ecosystem restoration, water supply reliability, conveyance, water use efficiency, water quality, water transfers, watersheds, the Environmental Water Account, levee stability, governance, and science.

(2) SPECIFIC ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies are authorized to undertake, fund, participate in, and otherwise carry out the activities described in the Record of Decision, subject to the provisions of this title, so that the activities of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program consisting of protecting drinking water quality, restoring ecological health, improving water supply reliability (including additional water storage and water yield and conveyance), and protecting Delta levees will progress in a balanced manner.

(b) AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies are authorized to carry out the activities described in paragraphs (2) through (5) in furtherance of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program as set forth in the Record of Decision, subject to the cost-share and other provisions of this title.

(2) MULTIPLE BENEFIT PROJECTS FAVORED.—In selecting projects and programs for increasing water yield and water supply, improving water quality, and enhancing environmental benefits, projects and programs with multiple benefits shall be emphasized.

(3) BALANCE.—The Secretary shall ensure that all elements of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program need to be completed and operated cooperatively to maintain the balanced progress in all Calfed Bay-Delta Program areas.

(4) EXISTING AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The Secretary of the Interior and the heads of the Federal agencies are authorized to carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (A) through (J) of paragraph (5), to the extent authorized under existing law.

(5) DESCRIPTION OF ACTIVITIES UNDER EXISTING AUTHORIZATIONS.—

(A) WATER STORAGE AND WATER YIELD.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) FEASIBILITY STUDIES AND RESOLUTION.—

(I) For purposes of implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Secretary is authorized to undertake all necessary planning activities and feasibility studies required for the development of recommendations by the Secretary to Congress on the construction and implementation of specific water supply and water yield, ground water management, and ground water storage projects and implementation of comprehensive water management planning.

(II) FEASIBILITY STUDIES REQUIREMENTS.—All feasibility studies completed for storage projects as a result of this section shall include identification of project benefits and beneficiaries and a cost allocation plan consistent with the benefits to be received, for both governmental and non-governmental entities.

(III) DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTION.—If the Secretary determines a project to be feasible, and meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), the report shall be submitted to Congress. If Congress does not pass a disapproval resolution of the feasibility study during the first 120 days before Congress (not including days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) the project shall be authorized, subject to appropriations.

(ii) WATER SUPPLY AND WATER YIELD STUDY.—The Secretary, acting through the Bureau of Reclamation and in consultation with the State, shall conduct a study of available water supplies and water yield and existing demand and future needs for water—

(I) within the units of the Central Valley Project;

(II) within the area served by Central Valley Project agricultural water service contractors and municipal and industrial water service contractors; and

(III) within the Bay-Delta solution area.

(iii) RELATIONSHIP TO PRIOR STUDY.—The study under clause (ii) shall incorporate and revise as necessary the study required by section 3408(j) of the Central Valley Project Improvement Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–575).

(iv) MANAGEMENT.—The Secretary shall conduct activities related to developing and implementing groundwater management and groundwater storage projects.

(v) COMPREHENSIVE WATER PLANNING.—The Secretary shall conduct activities related to comprehensive water management planning.

(vi) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the congressional authorizing committees by not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title describing the following:

(I) Water yield and water supply improvements, if any, for Central Valley Project agricultural water service contractors and municipal and industrial water service contractors.

(II) All water management actions or projects that would improve water yield or water supply and that, if taken or constructed, would balance available water supplies and existing demand for those contractors and other water users of the Bay-Delta watershed with due recognition of water right priorities and environmental needs.

(III) The financial costs of the actions and projects described under clause (II).

(IV) The beneficiaries of those actions and projects and an assessment of their willingness to pay the capital costs and operation and maintenance costs thereof.

(B) CONVEYANCE.—

(i) SOUTH DELTA ACTIONS.—In the case of the South Delta, activities under this clause consist of the following:

(I) The South Delta Improvement Program through actions to accomplish the following:

(aa) Increase the State Water Project export limit to 8,500 cfs.

(bb) Install permanent, operable barriers in the south Delta. The Federal Agencies shall cooperate with the State to accelerate installation of the permanent, operable barriers in the south Delta, with the intent to complete that installation not later than the end of fiscal year 2006.

(cc) Increase the State Water Project export to the maximum capability of 10,300 cfs.

(II) Reduction of agricultural drainage in south Delta channels, and other actions necessary to minimize the impact of drainage on drinking water quality.

(III) Design and construction of lower San Joaquin River floodway improvements.

(IV) Installation and operation of temporary barriers in the south Delta until fully operable barriers are constructed.

(V) Actions to protect navigation and local diversions not adequately protected by temporary barriers.

(VI) Actions to increase pumping shall be accomplished in a manner consistent with California law protecting—

(aa) deliveries to, costs of, and water suppliers and water users, including but not limited to, agricultural users, that have historically relied on water diverted for use in the Delta; and

(bb) the quality of water for existing municipal, industrial, and agricultural uses.

(ii) NORTH DELTA ACTIONS.—In the case of the North Delta, activities under this clause consist of—

(I) evaluation and implementation of improved operational procedures for the Delta Cross Channel to address fishery and water quality concerns;

(II) evaluation of a screened through-Delta facility on the Sacramento River; and

(III) evaluation of lower Mokelumne River floodway improvements.

(iii) INTERTIES.—Activities under this clause consist of—

(I) evaluation and construction of an intertie between the State Water Project California Aqueduct and the Central Valley Project Delta Mendota Canal, near the City of Tracy; and

(II) assessment of a connection of the Central Valley Project to the Clifton Court Forebay of the State Water Project, with a corresponding increase in the screened intake of the Forebay.

(iv) PROGRAM TO MEET STANDARDS.—Prior to increasing export limits from the Delta for the purposes of conveying water to south-of-Delta Central Valley Project contractors or increasing deliveries through an intertie, the Secretary shall, within one year of the date of enactment of this title, in consultation with the Governor, develop and implement a program to meet all existing water quality standards and objectives for which the CVP has responsibility. In developing and implementing the program the the Secretary shall include, to the maximum extent feasible, the following:

(I) A recirculation program to provide flow, reduce salinity concentrations in the San Joaquin River, and reduce the reliance on New Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality and fishery flow objectives through the use of excess capacity in export pumping and conveyance facilities.

(II) The implementation of mandatory source control programs and best drainage management practices to reduce discharges into the San Joaquin River of salt or other constituents from wildlife refuges that receive Central Valley Project water.

(III) The acquisition from willing sellers of water from streams tributary to the San Joaquin River or other sources to provide flow, dilute discharges from wildlife refuges, and to improve water quality in the San Joaquin River below the confluence of the Merced and San Joaquin rivers and to reduce the reliance on New Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality and fishery flow objectives.

(v) USE OF EXISTING FUNDING MECHANISMS.—In implementing the Program, the Secretary shall use money collected pursuant to section 3406(c)(1) of the Central Valley Project Improvement Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–575) to acquire from voluntary sellers water from streams tributary to the San Joaquin River or other sources for the purposes set forth in subclauses (I) through (III) of clause (iv).

(vi) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the authority and direction provided to the Secretary in clause (iv) is to provide greater flexibility in meeting the existing water quality standards and objectives for which the Central Valley Project has responsibility so as to reduce the demand on water from New Melones Reservoir used for that purpose and to allow the Secretary to meet with greater frequency the Secretary's obligations to Central Valley Project contractors from the New Melones Project.

(C) WATER USE EFFICIENCY.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) water conservation projects that provide water supply reliability, water quality, and ecosystem benefits to the Bay-Delta system;

(ii) technical assistance for urban and agricultural water conservation projects;

(iii) water recycling and desalination projects, including groundwater remediation projects and projects identified in the Bay Area Water Plan and the Southern California Comprehensive Water Reclamation and Reuse Study and other projects, giving priority to projects that include regional solutions to benefit regional water supply and reliability needs;

(I) The Secretary shall review any feasibility level studies for seawater desalination and regional brine line projects that have been completed, whether or not those studies were prepared with financial assistance from the Secretary.

(II) The Secretary shall report to the Congress not later than 90 days after the completion of a feasibility study or the review of a feasibility study. For the purposes of this Act, the Secretary is authorized to provide assistance for projects as set forth and pursuant to the existing requirements of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (Public Law 102–575; title 16) as amended, and Reclamation Recycling and Water Conservation Act of 1996 (Public Law 104–266).

(iv) water measurement and transfer actions;

(v) certification of implementation of best management practices for urban water conservation; and

(vi) projects identified in the Southern California Comprehensive Water Reclamation and Reuse Study, dated April 2001 and authorized by section 1606 of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (43 U.S.C. 390h–4); and the San Francisco Bay Area Regional Water Recycling Program described in the San Francisco Bay Area Regional Water Recycling Program Recycled Water Master Plan, dated December 1999 and authorized by section 1611 of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (43 U.S.C. 390h–9) are determined to be feasible.

(D) WATER TRANSFERS.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) increasing the availability of existing facilities for water transfers;

(ii) lowering transaction costs through regulatory coordination as provided in sections 301 through 302; and

(iii) maintaining a water transfer information clearinghouse.

(E) INTEGRATED REGIONAL WATER MANAGEMENT PLANS.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of assisting local and regional communities in the State in developing and implementing integrated regional water management plans to carry out projects and programs that improve water supply reliability, water quality, ecosystem restoration, and flood protection, or meet other local and regional needs, in a manner that is consistent with, and makes a significant contribution to, the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(F) ECOSYSTEM RESTORATION.—

(i) Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(I) implementation of large-scale restoration projects in San Francisco Bay and the Delta and its tributaries;

(II) restoration of habitat in the Delta, San Pablo Bay, and Suisun Bay and Marsh, including tidal wetland and riparian habitat;

(III) fish screen and fish passage improvement projects; including the Sacramento River Small Diversion Fish Screen Program;

(IV) implementation of an invasive species program, including prevention, control, and eradication;

(V) development and integration of Federal and State agricultural programs that benefit wildlife into the Ecosystem Restoration Program;

(VI) financial and technical support for locally-based collaborative programs to restore habitat while addressing the concerns of local communities;

(VII) water quality improvement projects to manage and reduce concentrations of salinity, selenium, mercury, pesticides, trace metals, dissolved oxygen, turbidity, sediment, and other pollutants;

(VIII) land and water acquisitions to improve habitat and fish spawning and survival in the Delta and its tributaries;

(IX) integrated flood management, ecosystem restoration, and levee protection projects;

(X) scientific evaluations and targeted research on Program activities;

(XI) strategic planning and tracking of Program performance; and

(XII) preparation of management plans for all properties acquired, and update current management plans, prior to the purchase or any contribution to the purchase of any interest in land for ecosystem.

(ii) A RESTORATION MANAGEMENT PLAN REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a restoration management plan report to Congress, 30 days (not including days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) prior to implementing ecosystem restoration actions as described under this paragraph. Such plan reports shall be required for all ecosystem projects, (including comprehensive projects that are composed of several components and are to be completed by staged implementation) exceeding $20,000 in Federal funds. The Restoration Management Plan required to be submitted under this paragraph, shall, at a minimum—

(I) be consistent with the goal of fish, wildlife, and habitat improvement;

(II) be consistent with all applicable Federal and State laws;

(III) describe the specific goals, objectives, and opportunities and implementation timeline of the proposed project. Describe to what extent the proposed project is a part of a larger, more comprehensive project in the Bay-Delta watershed;

(IV) describe the administration responsibilities of land and water areas and associated environmental resources, in the affected project area including an accounting of all habitat types. Cost-share arrangements with cooperating agencies should be included in the report;

(V) describe the resource data and ecological monitoring data to be collected for the restoration projects and how the data are to be integrated, streamlined, and designed to measure the effectiveness and overall trend of ecosystem health in the Bay-Delta watershed;

(VI) identify various combinations of land and water uses and resource management practices that are scientifically-based and meet the purposes of the project. Include a description of expected benefits of the restoration project relative to the cost of the project;

(VII) analyze and describe cumulative impacts of project implementation, including land acquisition, and the mitigation requirements, subject to conditions described in clause (iii)(I). Complete appropriate actions to satisfy requirements of NEPA, CEQA, and other environmental permitting clearance; and

(VIII) describe an integrated monitoring plan and measurable criteria, or bio-indicators, to be used for evaluating cost-effective performance of the project.

(iii) CONDITIONS.—Conditions, if applicable, for projects and activities under this paragraph, and which are to be described in the restoration management plan report, are as follows:

(I) a requirement that before obligating or expending Federal funds to acquire land, the Secretary shall first determine that existing Federal land, State land, or other land acquired for ecosystem restoration with amounts provided by the United States or the State, to the extent such lands are available within the Calfed solution area, is not available for that purpose. If no public land is available the Secretary, prior to any federal expenditure for private land acquisitions, shall—

(aa) not convert prime farm land and unique farm land, to the maximum extent as practicable, as identified by local, State, or Federal land use inventories, including the Natural Resources Conservation Service;

(bb) not conflict with existing zoning for agriculture use; and

(cc) not involve other changes in existing environment due to location and nature of converting farmland to non-farmland use.

(II) a requirement that in determining whether to acquire private land for ecosystem restoration, the Secretary shall—

(aa) conduct appropriate analysis, including cost valuation to assure that private land acquisitions prioritize easements and leases over acquisitions by fee title unless easements and leases are unavailable or unsuitable for the stated purposes;

(bb) consider and partner with landowners and local agencies to develop cooperating landowner commitments that are likely to meet coequal objectives of achieving local economic and social goals and implementing the ecosystem restoration goals; and

(cc) consider the potential cumulative impacts of fee title, easement, or lease acquisition on the local and regional economies and adjacent land and landowners, of transferring the property into government ownership, and—

(AA) describe the actions that will be taken, to the maximum extent practicable, to mitigate any induced damages; and

(BB) determine and describe the degree to which land acquired will add value to fish, wildlife, and habitat purposes.

(iv) ANNUAL ECOSYSTEM RESTORATION PROJECT SUMMARY REPORT.—The Secretary shall, by no later than December 31 of each year, submit to Congress an annual report on the use of financial assistance received under this title. The report shall highlight progress of project implementation, effectiveness, monitoring, and accomplishment. The report will identify and outline the need for amendments or revisions to the plan to improve the cost-effectiveness of project implementation.

(G) WATERSHEDS.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) building local capacity to assess and manage watersheds affecting the Calfed Bay-Delta system;

(ii) technical assistance for watershed assessments and management plans; and

(iii) developing and implementing locally-based watershed conservation, maintenance, and restoration actions.

(H) WATER QUALITY.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) addressing drainage problems in the San Joaquin Valley to improve downstream water quality (including habitat restoration projects that reduce drainage and improve water quality) if—

(I) a plan is in place for monitoring downstream water quality improvements;

(II) State and local agencies are consulted on the activities to be funded; and

(III) except that no right, benefit, or privilege is created as a result of this clause;

(ii) implementation of source control programs in the Delta and its tributaries;

(iii) developing recommendations through scientific panels and advisory council processes to meet the Calfed Bay-Delta Program goal of continuous improvement in Delta water quality for all uses;

(iv) investing in treatment technology demonstration projects;

(v) controlling runoff into the California aqueduct, the Delta-Mendota Canal, and other similar conveyances;

(vi) addressing water quality problems at the North Bay Aqueduct;

(vii) supporting and participating in the development of projects to enable San Francisco Area water districts and water entities in San Joaquin and Sacramento counties to work cooperatively to address their water quality and supply reliability issues, including—

(I) connections between aqueducts, water transfers, water conservation measures, institutional arrangements, and infrastructure improvements that encourage regional approaches; and

(II) investigations and studies of available capacity in a project to deliver water to the East Bay Municipal Utility District under its contract with the Bureau of Reclamation, dated July 20, 2001, in order to determine if such capacity can be used to meet the objectives of this clause;

(viii) development of water quality exchanges and other programs to make high quality water available for urban and other users;

(ix) development and implementation of a plan to meet all water quality standards for which the Federal and State water projects have responsibility;

(x) development of recommendations through technical panels and advisory council processes to meet the Calfed Bay-Delta Program goal of continuous improvement in water quality for all uses; and

(xi) projects that may meet the framework of the water quality component of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(I) SCIENCE.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) establishing and maintaining an independent science board, technical panels, and standing boards to provide oversight and peer review of the Program;

(ii) conducting expert evaluations and scientific assessments of all Program elements;

(iii) coordinating existing monitoring and scientific research programs;

(iv) developing and implementing adaptive management experiments to test, refine, and improve scientific understandings;

(v) establishing performance measures, and monitoring and evaluating the performance of all Program elements; and

(vi) preparing an annual science report.

(J) DIVERSIFICATION OF WATER SUPPLIES.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of actions to diversify sources of level 2 refuge supplies and modes of delivery to refuges.

(6) NEW AND EXPANDED AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies described in the Record of Decision are authorized to carry out the activities described in paragraph (7) during each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, in coordination with the Bay-Delta Authority.

(7) DESCRIPTION OF ACTIVITIES UNDER NEW AND EXPANDED AUTHORIZATIONS.—

(A) CONVEYANCE.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 110, not more than $184,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(i) Feasibility studies, evaluation, and implementation of the San Luis Reservoir lowpoint improvement project.

(ii) Feasibility studies and actions at Franks Tract to improve water quality in the Delta.

(iii) Feasibility studies and design of fish screen and intake facilities at Clifton Court Forebay and the Tracy Pumping Plant facilities.

(iv) Design and construction of the relocation of drinking water intake facilities to Delta water users. The Secretary shall coordinate actions for relocating intake facilities on a time schedule consistent with subparagraph (5)(B)(i)(I)(bb) or other actions necessary to offset the degradation of drinking water quality in the Delta due to the South Delta Improvement Program.

(v) In addition to the other authorizations granted to the Secretary by this title, the Secretary shall acquire water from willing sellers and undertake other actions designed to decrease releases from New Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality standards and flow objectives for which the Central Valley Project has responsibility in order to meet allocations to Central Valley Project contractors from the New Melones Project. Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under paragraph (7)(A), not more than $5,260,000 may be expended for this purpose.

(B) ENVIRONMENTAL WATER ACCOUNT.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 110, not more than $90,000,000 may be expended for implementation of the Environmental Water Account provided that such expenditures shall be considered a nonreimbursable Federal expenditure. In order to reduce the use of New Melones reservoir as a source of water to meet water quality standards, the Secretary may use the Environmental Water Account to purchase water to provide flow for fisheries, to improve water quality in the San Joaquin river and Delta.

(C) LEVEE STABILITY.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 110, not more than $90,000,000 may be expended for—

(i) reconstructing Delta levees to a base level of protection;

(ii) enhancing the stability of levees that have particular importance in the system through the Delta Levee Special Improvement Projects program;

(iii) developing best management practices to control and reverse land subsidence on Delta islands;

(iv) refining the Delta Emergency Plan;

(v) developing a Delta Risk Management Strategy after assessing the consequences of Delta levee failure from floods, seepage, subsidence, and earthquakes;

(vi) developing a strategy for reuse of dredged materials on Delta islands;

(vii) evaluating, and where appropriate, rehabilitating the Suisun Marsh levees; and

(viii) not more than $2,000,000 may be expended for integrated flood management, ecosystem restoration, and levee protection projects, including design and construction of lower San Joaquin River and lower Mokelumne River floodway improvements and other projects under the Sacramento-San Joaquin Comprehensive Study.

(D) PROGRAM MANAGEMENT, OVERSIGHT, AND COORDINATION.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 110, not more than $25,000,000 may be expended by the Secretary or the other heads of Federal agencies, either directly or through grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements with agencies of the State, for—

(i) program support;

(ii) program-wide tracking of schedules, finances, and performance;

(iii) multiagency oversight and coordination of Program activities to ensure Program balance and integration;

(iv) development of interagency cross-cut budgets and a comprehensive finance plan to allocate costs in accordance with the beneficiary pays provisions of the Record of Decision;

(v) coordination of public outreach and involvement, including tribal, environmental justice, and public advisory activities in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.); and

(vi) development of Annual Reports.

SEC. 104. MANAGEMENT.

(a) COORDINATION.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall coordinate their activities with the State agencies.

(b) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall cooperate with local and tribal governments and the public through an advisory committee established in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) and other appropriate means, to seek input on Program elements such as planning, design, technical assistance, and development of peer review science programs.

(c) SCIENCE.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall seek to ensure, to the maximum extent practicable, that—

(1) all major aspects of implementing the Program are subjected to credible and objective scientific review; and

(2) major decisions are based upon the best available scientific information.

(d) ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE.—The Federal agencies and State agencies, consistent with Executive Order 12898 (59 FR Fed. Reg. 7629), should continue to collaborate to—

(1) develop a comprehensive environmental justice workplan for the Calfed Bay-Delta Program; and

(2) fulfill the commitment to addressing environmental justice challenges referred to in the Calfed Bay-Delta Program Environmental Justice Workplan, dated December 13, 2000.

(e) LAND ACQUISITION.—Federal funds appropriated by Congress specifically for implementation of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program may be used to acquire fee title to land only where consistent with the Record of Decision and section 103(b)(5)(F)(iii).

(f) AGENCIES' DISCRETION.—This title shall not affect the discretion of any of the Federal agencies or the State agencies or the authority granted to any of the Federal agencies or State agencies by any other Federal or State law.

(g) STATUS REPORTS.—The Secretary shall report, quarterly to Congress, on the progress in achieving the water supply targets as described in Section 2.2.4 of the Record of Decision, the environmental water account requirements as described in Section 2.2.7, and the water quality targets as described in Section 2.2.9, and any pending actions that may affect the ability of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program to achieve those targets and requirements.

SEC. 105. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than February 15 of each year, the Secretary, in cooperation with the Governor, shall submit to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report that—

(A) describes the status of implementation of all components of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program;

(B) sets forth any written determination resulting from the review required under subsection (b); and

(C) includes any revised schedule prepared under subsection (b).

(2) CONTENTS.—The report required under paragraph (1) shall describe—

(A) the progress of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program in meeting the implementation schedule for the Program in a manner consistent with the Record of Decision;

(B) the status of implementation of all components of the Program;

(C) expenditures in the past fiscal year for implementing the Program;

(D) accomplishments during the past fiscal year in achieving the objectives of additional and improved—

(i) water storage, including water yield;

(ii) water quality;

(iii) water use efficiency;

(iv) ecosystem restoration;

(v) watershed management;

(vi) levee system integrity;

(vii) water transfers;

(viii) water conveyance; and

(ix) water supply reliability;

(E) program goals, current schedules, and relevant financing agreements;

(F) progress on—

(i) storage projects;

(ii) conveyance improvements;

(iii) levee improvements;

(iv) water quality projects; and

(v) water use efficiency programs;

(G) completion of key projects and milestones identified in the Ecosystem Restoration Program;

(H) development and implementation of local programs for watershed conservation and restoration;

(I) progress in improving water supply reliability and implementing the Environmental Water Account;

(J) achievement of commitments under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.) and endangered species law of the State;

(K) implementation of a comprehensive science program;

(L) progress toward acquisition of the Federal and State permits (including permits under section 404(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1344(a))) for implementation of projects in all identified Program areas;

(M) progress in achieving benefits in all geographic regions covered by the Program;

(N) legislative action on—

(i) water transfer;

(ii) groundwater management;

(iii) water use efficiency; and

(iv) governance issues;

(O) the status of complementary actions;

(P) the status of mitigation measures; and

(Q) revisions to funding commitments and Program responsibilities.

(b) ANNUAL REVIEW OF PROGRESS AND BALANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than November 15 of each year, the Secretary, in cooperation with the Governor, shall review progress in implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program based on—

(A) consistency with the Record of Decision; and

(B) balance in achieving the goals and objectives of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(2) REVISED SCHEDULE.—If, at the conclusion of each such annual review or if a timely annual review is not undertaken, the Secretary, or the Governor, determine in writing that either the Program implementation schedule has not been substantially adhered to, or that balanced progress in achieving the goals and objectives of the Program is not occurring, the Secretary, in coordination with the Governor and the Bay-Delta Public Advisory Committee, shall prepare a revised schedule to achieve balanced progress in all Calfed Bay-Delta Program elements consistent with the the Record of Decision.

(c) FEASIBILITY STUDIES.—Any feasibility studies completed as a result of this title shall include identification of project benefits and a cost allocation plan consistent with the beneficiaries pay provisions of the Record of Decision.

SEC. 106. CROSSCUT BUDGET.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The budget of the President shall include requests for the appropriate level of funding for each of the Federal agencies to carry out the responsibilities of the Federal agency under the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(b) REQUESTS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The funds shall be requested for the Federal agency with authority and programmatic responsibility for the obligation of the funds, in accordance with paragraphs (2) through (5) of section 103(b).

(c) REPORT.—At the time of submission of the budget of the President to Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in coordination with the Governor, shall submit to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives a financial report certified by the Secretary containing—

(1) an interagency budget crosscut report that—

(A) displays the budget proposed, including any interagency or intra-agency transfer, for each of the Federal agencies to carry out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program for the upcoming fiscal year, separately showing funding requested under both pre-existing authorities and under the new authorities granted by this title; and

(B) identifies all expenditures since 2000 by the Federal and State governments to achieve the objectives of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program;

(2) a detailed accounting of all funds received and obligated by all Federal agencies and State agencies responsible for implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program during the previous fiscal year;

(3) a budget for the proposed projects (including a description of the project, authorization level, and project status) to be carried out in the upcoming fiscal year with the Federal portion of funds for activities under section 103(b); and

(4) a listing of all projects to be undertaken in the upcoming fiscal year with the Federal portion of funds for activities under section 103(b).

SEC. 107. FEDERAL SHARE OF COSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Federal share of the cost of implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program for fiscal years 2005 through 2008 in the aggregate, as set forth in the Record of Decision, shall not exceed 33.3 percent.

(b) CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM BENEFICIARIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall ensure that all beneficiaries, including the environment, shall pay for benefits received from all projects or activities carried out under the Calfed Bay-Delta Program. This requirement shall not be limited to storage and conveyance projects and shall be implemented so as to encourage integrated resource planning.

SEC. 108. USE OF EXISTING AUTHORITIES AND FUNDS.

(a) GENERALLY.—The heads of the Federal agencies shall use the authority under existing authorities identified by the Secretary to carry out the purposes of this title.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and annual thereafter, the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of the Federal agencies, shall transmit to Congress a report that describes the following:

(1) A list of all existing authorities, including the authorities listed in subsection (a), under which the Secretary or the heads of the Federal agencies may carry out the purposes of this title.

(2) A list of funds authorized in the previous fiscal year for the authorities listed under paragraph (1).

(3) A list of the projects carried out with the funds listed in paragraph (2) and the amount of funds obligated and expended for each project.

SEC. 109. COMPLIANCE WITH STATE AND FEDERAL LAW.

Nothing in this title—

(1) invalidates or preempts State water law or an interstate compact governing water;

(2) alters the rights of any State to any appropriated share of the waters of any body of surface or ground water, whether determined by past or future interstate compacts or final judicial allocations;

(3) preempts or modifies any State or Federal law or interstate compact governing water quality or disposal; or

(4) confers on any non-federal entity the ability to exercise any Federal right to the waters of any stream or to any ground water resource.

SEC. 110. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies to pay the Federal share of the cost of carrying out the new and expanded authorities described in paragraphs (6) and (7) of section 103(b), $389,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, to remain available until expended.

TITLE II—ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRALIZED REGULATORY COORDINATION OFFICES

SEC. 201. ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICES.

For projects authorized by this Act and located within the State of California, the Secretary shall establish a centralized office in Sacramento, California, for the use of all Federal agencies and State agencies that are or will be involved in issuing permits and preparing environmental documentation for such projects. The Secretary may, at the request of the Governor of any Reclamation State, establish additional centralized offices for the use of all Federal agencies and State agencies that are or will be involved in issuing permits and preparing environmental documentation for projects authorized by this Act, or under any other authorized Act, and located within such States.

SEC. 202. ACCEPTANCE AND EXPENDITURE OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may accept and expend funds contributed by non-Federal public entities to coordinate the preparation and review of permit applications and the preparation of environmental documentation for all projects authorized by this Act, or any other authorized Act, and to offset the Federal costs of processing such permit applications and environmental documentation. The Secretary shall allocate funds received under this section among Federal agencies with responsibility for the project under consideration and shall reimburse those agencies in accordance with the costs such agencies incur in processing permit applications and preparing environmental documentation.

(b) PROTECTION OF IMPARTIAL DECISIONMAKING.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary and the heads of Federal agencies receiving funds under this section shall ensure that the use of the funds accepted under this section will not impact impartial decisionmaking with respect to the issuance of permits or preparation of environmental documentation, either substantively or procedurally, or diminish, modify, or otherwise affect the statutory or regulatory authorities of such agencies.

TITLE III—RURAL WATER SUPPLY PROGRAM

SEC. 301. RURAL WATER SUPPLY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of constructing rural water systems in coordination with other Federal agencies with rural water programs, and in cooperation with non-Federal project entities.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The study referred to in subsection (a) shall consider each of the following:

(1) Appraisal investigations.
(2) Feasibility studies.
(3) Environmental reports.
(4) Cost sharing responsibilities.
(5) Responsibility for operation and maintenance.

(c) CRITERIA.—As part of the study referred to in subsection (a), the Secretary shall develop criteria for determining which projects are eligible for participation in the study referred to under this section.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress the study developed under this section.

(e) RECLAMATION STATES.—The program established by this section shall be limited to Reclamation States.

TITLE IV—SALTON SEA STUDY PROGRAM

SEC. 401. SALTON SEA STUDY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of reclaiming the Salton Sea.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The study referred to in subsection (a) shall consider each of the following:

(1) Appraisal investigations.
(2) Feasibility studies.
(3) Environmental Reports.
(4) Cost sharing responsibilities.
(5) Responsibility for operation and maintenance.

(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress the study developed under this section no later than 1 year after the date of enactment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After 1 hour of debate on the bill, as amended, it shall be in order to consider the further amendment printed in the report, if offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) or his designee, which shall be considered read, and shall be debatable for 20 minutes, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent.

The gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) each will control 30 minutes of debate on the bill.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H. R. 2828.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, today's consideration of this bill is a giant step forward in resolving California's water supply problems.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO), the chairman of the full committee.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I am pleased today to support the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), on this historic legislation. For over 10 years we have been trying to move this process forward to develop a comprehensive water plan to benefit all of California, and this legislation does just that.

This legislation addresses the water needs of California by bringing adversaries together for the first time on many of these issues.

For over 30 years, sides have not resolved the Sacramento/San Joaquin Bay-Delta water quality issues. This legislation includes a historic agreement between these parties to once and for all improve water quality by addressing many concerns in the Delta and its tributaries.

By improving water quality, everybody benefits. Improved water quality in the Delta means better drinking water for our cities, better water for our farmers, and better water quality for our fish. This bill provides the Secretary with a variety of tools to address this very serious issue, including the purchase of water from voluntary sellers to meet water quality standards. It also gives direction for the implementation of an operational plan for the New Melones Reservoir that will rely on the best available science and coordinate releases to benefit both the fisheries and the water quality for municipal and agricultural users.

This bill increases California's water supply through water reclamation and recycling projects, water storage, better operation, and the coordination of Federal and State projects, and the development of water conservation projects that benefit all of California. With an ever-increasing demand for water in the State of California, there is a need to move all of the projects of every type forward quickly and efficiently, and this bill does that.

I again want to congratulate the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) on the great work that he did on this bill, and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) for working with her subcommittee chairman to make this work. I appreciate all that she put in to make this a good bill.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), the subcommittee chairman and the sponsor of H.R. 2828, for his tireless work to keep the CALFED authorization moving forward, and also the gentleman from California (Chairman POMBO) for his unwavering support.

As ranking member of the Subcommittee on Water and Power, I have had the privilege of working with the chairman on many water issues. His commitment to a fair and open legislative process is indeed very commendable.

The State of California needs a more reliable water supply; we can all agree on that. We now face, like many other States, severe restrictions specifically on the use of the Colorado River, and we must reduce our water use to meet the terms of the Colorado River Compact.

The gentleman from California (Chairman CALVERT) and others on our committee are well aware of my strong support for water recycling, desalinization, and groundwater cleanup projects. With H.R. 2828, the gentleman from California (Chairman CALVERT) has raised the importance of these projects to unprecedented levels. He deserves our combined thanks and our support for his commitment.

Efficient water use, water recycling, ground water treatment, new storage, and desalinization projects are all critically important if we in Southern California are to succeed in our effort to cut back our use of the Colorado River. With increased emphasis on using water more efficiently, we can increase our available water supply by more than half a million acre feet of water per year, and we can do it cheaply and quickly.

Mr. Speaker, by working together, we have taken a huge step forward towards authorizing the CALFED program. The gentlemen from California (Chairman POMBO) and (Chairman CALVERT) and their staffs have cooperated with us fully, and we have together made many improvements to this legislation. I look forward to continuing our progress on CALFED as we move this bill towards the White House. I urge all of my Democratic and Republican colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLITTLE).

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT). Putting this bill together has been very difficult and has taken a number of years. He and his staff and the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO) and his staff have done an outstanding job.

I remember when CALFED was first unleashed, and it was I think in 1996, and it was done in an appropriations bill. So, really, this is the first proper authorization that we have actually had, and it has been a long time in coming.

It has been mentioned that this bill brings balance between the ecological work that has been done, which has received almost all of the focus and all of the funding, and balance for water yield. Yield means water that is available in critically dry years, that is reliably available; and this bill emphasizes that and creates studies and commences processes that will produce what is needed to meet the growing needs of our State.

This bill also subjects to accountability everything that is going on in CALFED. These projects have been going on for nearly 10 years; and yet there has been very little accountability.

□ 1200

Now we will have the accountability that we need so that the Congress can assess what is working and what is not, and so that Congress can also assure that we are meeting all the objectives of CALFED, not just some.

I also wish to draw attention to the limitation on the water use fees that are contained in the report accompanying this bill that provides that only direct beneficiaries of projects benefiting the Bay Delta region will be subject to the beneficiary pays provision. This means that upstream water users who participate in projects to improve the region are not subject to fees or taxes imposed on beneficiaries of the project. In addition, this legislation does not authorize the creation of a broad-based fee or tax for water users. Any fee or tax that is developed will be directly proportional to the benefit received from specific projects authorized by the program.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues and appreciate the cooperation we have had. I thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) for her work and her staff and commend everyone for finally being able to bring this great package together. Everyone who cares about water and the future in California should be supporting this bill.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, the CALFED process is an unprecedented undertaking and one that is crucial to the water security of all people in California, both northern and southern, urban and rural. That is why we need a balanced reauthorization bill that respects the hard work done over the past years by all CALFED stakeholders in the blueprint record of decision agreed upon in 2000.

I fear that H.R. 2828 does not achieve the delicate balance necessary because of the preauthorization of the dam projects that are controversial in their communities and among the stakeholders. So I would urge that H.R. 2828 be opposed and that the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) that would correct the preauthorization provision be supported.

However, I do want to give credit to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) and to all who have worked on this, because I am confident that once we get through this process in working with our Senators who have a parallel effort that avoids the flaw in this bill, that we will end up with a bill that all of us support. It is important that the CALFED process move forward.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, before I make a statement about this bill, I want to also thank the ranking member, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) for all her great work on this bill. She has spent many hours and days traveling across the State of California. I think we probably were in most congressional districts throughout California as this process took place. Certainly I thank her for her great work in this legislation.

This bill represents great progress in helping solve the water problems of the west by making California more self-reliant and carefully using its own water supply. We have come a long way over the last few years. The Subcommittee on Water and Power conducted three field hearings in California, a legislative hearing, two markups, and too many meetings to count to get where we are today.

Individually, many of the members of our committee have helped to shepherd often contentious quantification settlement agreements, for instance, that was delayed, but we finally came to a decisive conclusion. My friends in the upper-lower basin States should know that this bill today is another positive step in California weaning itself from historically overdrafting the Colorado River.

As we have found with the plumbing in California's water system, everything in the world of water is related to everything else. Thus, achievements like the quantification settlement agreement helped us conclude the carefully balanced agreement on CALFED that we have before us today. Water is not and should not be a partisan issue. I worked constructively with the Committee on Resources chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO), Senator FEINSTEIN, as I mentioned, the ranking Democratic member; the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO); the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY); the gentleman from California (Mr. CARDOZA); of course, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER); and the full committee ranking member, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL) and many, many more to make sure this bill before us is a consensus that I believe that it is.

I am proud to have many Democratic members of the Committee on Resources supporting this bill. The original intent of CALFED was to provide balance to a complex water delivery system, to ensure that everybody gets better together. That is what this bill does. H.R. 2828 simply and truly means that the environment, recreation, drinking water, agriculture and industries gets better together.

As our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO) said, This bill makes historic strides in water quality improvements in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Bay Delta. Improved water quality helps everyone across the board. We have also created new water supplies for southern California through my friend, the gentlewoman from California's (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) water recycling amendment, and we enhanced surface storage to improve water quality for families in our colleagues' district in the Bay area and beyond as evidenced by the support of such water districts as the Northern California Water District, Contra Costa Water District, Central Contra Water District and many others.

We have created a right to know provision by making Federal agencies report how they will spend the money. Congress and the American taxpayer deserve government accountability and this bill provides it.

Mr. Speaker, I will continue to work with my colleagues in the House and the Senate to bring ultimate resolution to this bipartisan effort. Our bill includes and supports a diverse approach to solving our water problems, including conservation, reclamation, desalinization, conjunctive use, ground water storage and, of course, surface storage options that have been carefully studied and negotiated down to the bare minimum.

We have made significant progress and we can see the light at the end of the tunnel. With today's vote, we will pass this bill and we will make that light shine even brighter. I urge support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY).

Mr. DOOLEY of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) for the terrific work they have done in crafting this legislation.

Obviously, one of the greatest challenges we face in California and, indeed, the entire west, is how do we provide adequate water for all of our needs, whether they be consumptive needs, as well as the environment. And this legislation is a step forward to providing greater certainty that in the future we will have the water resources that are needed for the expanding population. We will have the water resources that are needed for our agriculture sector as well as our industrial sector. Most importantly, it also ensures that we are going to provide the protection that our environment needs.

This legislation is clearly something that is going to meet the needs of all the citizens of California. And while there are some of our colleagues in California that do not think this is a perfect piece of legislation, I would agree with them that it might not be perfect but it would be foolhardy for us to not allow this legislation to move forward so that we could eventually see a compromise and a final consensus developed that will, in fact, contribute to the needs of California.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2828, the Water Supply, Reliability, and Environmental Improvement Act and commend the leadership of my subcommittee Chairman KEN CALVERT and Ranking Member GRACE NAPOLITANO for bringing this important legislation to its place on the floor today.

I also want to recognize the very significant role that the senior Senator from California has played in developing and moving a counterpart bill in the Senate on a parallel track, paving the way for a bill to become law later this year.

This bipartisan water bill has been long in the making. Federal authorization for funding the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, commonly referred to as CALFED, expired in 2000—the same year that a consortium of Federal and State agencies issued a Record of Decision (ROD) setting forth a 30-year plan for CALFED.

Since 2000, various versions of reauthorizing legislation have been under consideration by the Congress. Until today, however, none of the earlier versions was able to reach the House floor.

The fact that today we finally have a bipartisan CALFED bill on the House floor reflects the long and arduous process of seeking input, balancing interests and making compromises. Many, many stakeholders were consulted in the development of this bill, including representatives of agricultural, urban, environmental, fishery, and business interests. None of them are likely to say that this is the ''perfect'' bill from their individual perspectives. But the bill we now have before us represents a constructive effort to forge a thoughtful and balanced approach to the management of California's water supplies. It deserves our support today.

A sound bill when it was introduced last year, H.R. 2828 improved when it was marked up by the Resources Committee on May 5, and several provisions of Senator FEINSTEIN's bill were incorporated. Additional refinements to the legislative language have been included in today's managers' amendment, enhancing the prospects for an expeditious conference with the Senate and enactment this year.

Many in this body are aware of the legal conflicts and tensions that have evolved over the years on California water issues. The intent of this bill is to reduce those conflicts and tensions by providing guidance and authority for improving water supply reliability and water quality, while at the same time enhancing the environment. The bill recognizes the CALFED 2000 Record of Decision as the framework for implementing the program, and ensures that implementation moves ahead on a balanced basis.

There are many important provisions in the bill. I will comment on only a few of them.

For those of us in the Central Valley of California, this bill provides important assurances of improved conveyance of water supplies through the Delta. It authorizes evaluation and construction of much-needed new barriers and interties. It also recognizes the importance of improving drainage in south Delta channels to minimize impact on drinking water quality. It thus requires implementation of a program to meet water quality standards in the San Joaquin River and the Delta prior to increased pumping or deliveries.

The bill is designed to give the Secretary more flexibility in meeting water quality standards in the Delta while reducing the reliance on the New Melones Project for meeting water quality and fish flows standards. To help meet this goal, the Secretary is authorized to use a variety of tools, including the purchase of water from willing sellers on the tributaries of the San Joaquin River. The legislation further allows the Secretary to use the CVP Restoration Fund to help pay for these water purchases and other designated actions.

It is important to recognize that water purchases and the use of the Restoration Fund monies are merely tools that the Secretary may use to achieve a goal. They are not mandates that supercede existing water rights or water supply contracts or replace existing Restoration Fund priorities. The Program to Meet Standards created by H.R. 2828 does not give the Secretary any new authority to acquire or re-allocate water from anyone but willing sellers.

On another issue—that of cost allocation—the Committee report on H.R. 2828 makes clear that the costs of implementing the CALFED program are to be allocated in a way that relates directly to benefits to be received. This ''beneficiaries pay'' principle precludes the imposition of water-use fee, tax or surcharge that would force water agencies or individuals to pay for CALFED projects or programs from which they do not benefit. Nothing in this legislation provides the basis for the imposition of such a fee or tax.

Some critics of this bill are claiming that it cedes congressional authority over water storage projects. I wish to make it clear that such a claim is not true.

The bill does give the Secretary blanket authority under the framework of the CALFED program to undertake feasibility studies for water storage projects. Such an authorization makes sense, given the fact that a Record of Decision for the CALFED program has already been issued and the extensive Federal-State-stakeholder consultation process within CALFED itself provides for due deliberation of project proposals.

If as a result of a specific feasibility study, the Secretary determines that a particular project is indeed feasible, the Secretary cannot simply move ahead, but first must submit a report to Congress identifying project benefits and beneficiaries and a cost allocation plan. Congress then has 120 legislative days—not calendar days, but legislative days—to consider the report and recommendation, and pass a disapproval resolution if we disagree with the Secretary's recommendation. Such a disapproval resolution procedure, as we all know, is not an uncommon procedure for congressional oversight of proposed administration actions. In addition to the 120-day layover period, congressional approval through the enactment of appropriations for the project must occur. We all know this is no small step.

So the bill does delegate more authority to the Secretary at the beginning of the feasibility process, enabling proposals to be explored and developed on an expeditious basis, but still retains the ultimate congressional authority to stop any particular water storage project as well as to determine its appropriations, if any. This process is thus a bit streamlined from the existing procedures for water storage projects. However, it provides adequate safeguards for congressional prerogatives while enhancing the expeditious consideration of worthy project proposals.

Before closing, I wish to thank the staff of the Water and Power Subcommittee, on both sides of the aisle, for their hard work and cooperation in helping us arrive to this point today. Their openness and professionalism are deeply appreciated by me and my staff.

Mr. Speaker, passage of this legislation is long overdue. If we are to have any chance of CALFED being reauthorized in this session of Congress, we must pass this bill today and forward it to the Senate for its consideration. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and vote "aye."

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH).

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, in California, wine is for drinking and water is for fighting. The gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO) and the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) have done a Herculean job task of putting together all the interests in California in a water bill that is supported by just about every interest group out there, and that was an incredible task. That is why I am a proud co-sponsor and supporter of H.R. 2828.

The central valley of California comprises the largest agriculture producing county in the Nation, where over 250 of California's crops are grown. With its fertile soil and temperate climate, the valley produces 8 percent of the ag output of the United States on less than 1 percent of the Nation's total farmland. Valley farmers alone grow nearly half the fresh fruits and vegetables grown in the entire Nation.

The most fundamental challenge facing California's Central Valley is assuring adequate long term supplies of water to meet the demands of the agriculture, environmental and urban water needs. A dependable and affordable water supply is necessary to meet the long term needs of the State. The key to providing this water supply is adequate storage facilities to hold water in times of surplus for use during water shortages.

With H.R. 2828, California will have a more reliable and efficient water supply, and water throughout the west will be more stable because California will have the tools necessary to provide for its own water. Specifically, among other projects, H.R. 2828 allows for the continued storage studies in the Upper San Joaquin River and will provide critical water storage in the region that I represent.

The legislation also makes progress towards balance in CALFED Bay Delta program by underscoring the need for new surface storage facilities, as well as ensuring improved water quality and providing continued support for ecosystem restoration activities.

There are a few provisions which I would like to clarify in the RECORD if I may. The first of these pertains to CALFED fees. H.R. 2828 sanctions the principle of beneficiary pays, and I support this standard. This means exactly what it says. Those who benefit from a CALFED project or program should pay for what they receive. It also means that those who do not benefit from CALFED programs and projects should not have to pay for the fees.

The legislation does not authorize or impose water diversion fees, charges or taxes on CALFED beneficiaries and non-beneficiaries. Such charges go against the beneficiaries pay principle of this bill and the CALFED record of decision, and this is the clear intention of the House Committee on Resources when it reported H.R. 2828.

The second issue I would like to clarify is the new program to meet standards which was created to give added flexibility to the Secretary of the Interior to meet existing water quality standard in the Delta. For the record, I wanted to state that nothing in H.R. 2828 requires water users in the San Joaquin River and its tributaries to provide more water or more money than they are currently providing to meet existing water quality standards and fishery objectives. Nothing in the legislation authorizes the Secretary to make involuntary acquisitions of water from the central valley project contractors or water rights holders on the tributaries of the San Joaquin.

Finally, nothing in the bill gives the program to meet standards a higher priority to receive funding for the restoration fund than existing programs and projects supported by the fund.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to support the passage of H.R. 2828.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BACA).

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2828, the Water Supply Reliability and Environmental Improvement Act known as the CALFED, a historical giant step in improving the quantity and quality of water in California.

CALFED is a State and Federal partnership formed to increase water storage and improve water reliability. It is crucial to the future of the home of the State of California. Without clean water or enough water, there can be no development of jobs and housing, I state no development of jobs and housing. And without clean water, my children, my grandchildren or any child cannot enjoy normal, healthy lives.

I am proud to be a co-sponsor of this legislation. I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT). I commend the minority leader, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO). I am also proud that this legislation includes the environmental justice language that I promoted. This bill states that environmental justice a goal of CALFED, making sure that everyone, regardless of race or income deserves the same protections for environment and health hazards.

I recommend and I ask my colleagues to support this legislation. CALFED provides a means to respond to rapid population growths, especially in my area, in my district. California deserves to have a good quality of water and a good quantity of water. And it will help the State of California improve.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to again extend congratulations, as I did earlier, to my colleagues. I have lived in California since I was a freshman in college since 1971. I remember very vividly during the past 3 decades the constant struggle that has gone on between north and south over this issue of water, the battles over the Colorado River water. And this notion of coming to some kind of reconciliation on a partnership between the State of California and the Federal Government is something that many believed could never ever happen.

Because of the leadership of my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), working under the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO) as chairman of the Committee on Resources, and closely with the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO), and I have seen so many Californians involved in this debate here on the House floor. The gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLITTLE) was speaking earlier, and I saw the gentleman from California (Mr. NUNES) talking, and I know we have a couple of people in our delegation who are not on board.

But the fact of the matter is we have been able to, I believe, bring together an overwhelming majority of Democrats and Republicans from California to deal with this very important and pressing need.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, there are 35 million people in our State. And I know that there are a lot of people around here who are not as crazy about California as those of us who represent it, but the fact of the matter is, California, is the largest State in our union, and virtually everyone around the country has some kind of tie to California.

□ 1215

So it is important for us to, as a body and as a government, address this very important need; and so I thank, again, my friend, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO), who has worked so tirelessly. I was very honored to be at a water treatment facility that we have had as we worked together to deal with groundwater contamination in the area that the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) and I represent with the discovery of per chlorate, which has created very serious problems. We have come together in a bipartisan way to address water issues, and passage of this legislation is going to be a great testament to the bipartisanship of our delegation.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD).

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge also the great work of the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), the chairman, and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO), the ranking member, for their tireless efforts in bringing about a much-needed piece of legislation. These two leaders have done a yeoman's job for us in bringing H.R. 2828, and they have come to my district many times to hold hearings on this issue of water.

I would like to specifically thank the chairman and the ranking member for including the strong water use efficiency section in H.R. 2828. This section will meet my community's strong demand for water supply and reliability, not by taking more water from the Bay-Delta ecosystem, not taking more water from the Colorado River in our neighboring States, but from recycling and cleaning up Southern California's existing water supply and investing in sea water desalination projects.

H.R. 2828 specifically clarifies that in addition to recycling and desalination projects, groundwater cleanup projects for contaminants such as per chlorate, nitrates, and volatile organic compounds will qualify for CALFED program funding.

Continued Federal investment in desalination technology, such as the one in Long Beach, will verify and further develop energy savings and optimize the process so that it can be enlarged and duplicated throughout the United States.

The Long Beach Water Department's desalination pilot plant is on the cutting edge, and I am looking forward to seeing this technology fully developed.

Again, I support and commend these two for their outstanding work.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take my short time to address all those Members of the House of Representatives who are not from California. They do create a majority in this body after all.

We have a rather unique situation with the chairman of the full committee from California, the ranking member of the subcommittee from California, and the chairman of the subcommittee from California; but that is not what is important.

What is important for my colleagues not from California to understand is this is a State of more than 30 million people that has a significant impact on the economy of the United States and, frankly, the quality of life in the United States.

In the 1930s, the Federal Government began developing the water resources on the east side of California. Californians in the 1960s took the responsibility on themselves to build a multibillion dollar water project on the west side of California.

They have been discussing CALFED. The State and the Federal Government water projects have never been coordinated, and the resources of California have never been maximized for the benefit both of the environment and the economy and individuals.

Our colleague, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO), talked about the fact that as other States, Arizona and others in the area of the Colorado River, have gained population, California is using a source of water that we have relied on for a long time. This is the first time that we have not had a partisan fight; that we are not going to have a regional fight; and that California has come together to begin to solve the water problems of the largest State in the Union.

I would ask my colleagues, if they are not from California, witness the bipartisanship, witness finally in California the understanding that north and south need to work together, and please, give us a strong vote on this legislation which is important to California and important to the United States.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER).

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I regretfully rise in opposition to the bill as it currently is constructed; and as a Californian, I fully understand the urgent need to pass legislation to reauthorize CALFED; but if we fail to reauthorize this program, we will sacrifice millions of dollars scheduled to go to important water infrastructure projects. But in its current form, this legislation will jeopardize the delicate balance of water interests in California that we have worked so hard to achieve and make it more difficult for us to reauthorize CALFED.

Instead of codifying the Record of Decision that was agreed to in the CALFED process, this bill disrupts the balance that it created. This bill sets the dangerous precedent of authorizing large-scale projects before they have undergone comprehensive review and analysis. The preauthorization language is bad policy and bad politics.

The gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL), and I will offer a motion to recommit this bill that would strip the preauthorization language from the legislation. I urge my colleagues to support the motion so that we can pass a CALFED bill this year and get it signed by the President.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself what time I may consume for a short comment.

Congressional approval of water projects from planning through construction is not a new concept. The Corps of Engineers has authority through the Water Resources Development Act, WRDA, to implement projects following a favorable Chief's, or some people call it feasibility, report.

Through WRDA, Congress approves projects from planning through construction, subject to the conditions stated in a favorable Chief's report. Numerous examples of the corps' projects can be found in WRDA 1996, WRDA 1999, and WRDA 2000 which authorize construction following a favorable Chief's report.

In the last three WRDAs, over 50 projects were approved from planning through construction, with conditional authorization subject to a favorable Chief's report. New projects were conditionally authorized, and there were additional project modifications that were conditionally authorized.

WRDA projects conditionally authorized included the Bel Marin Keys Unit, California, well over $100 million; Kill Van Kull, New York and New Jersey navigation project, $325 million authorization to $750 million; the Savannah Harbor Expansion navigation project $230 million, and I can go on and on and on.

Are my colleagues saying we should replace the 120-day congressional authorization which is in the present bill with extensively used WRDA language that Congress has accepted and continues to support?

H.R. 2828 includes provisions that approve water recycling projects from planning through construction which was proposed by the Southern California Democrats. By the way, these four projects that are in this bill are in the Record of Decision which has been negotiated over the years, as all my friends know, and a very difficult negotiation, to bring this process of CALFED in a balanced manner forward.

So I would say to my colleagues, this is nothing new. People would like to see these projects built if, in fact, they are feasible; and all the environmental processes, NEPA, CEPA, Endangered Species Act, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, must be met to make sure that these projects are viable and feasible under the law.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me, and I want to commend her for her work on this legislation, also to the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) for all of his work on this legislation.

Regretfully, I must oppose this legislation because I think at the moment, as this is currently drafted, this legislation fails to address what is, I believe, a fatal defect. Not only do I think it will delay the consideration of this legislation for a successful passage through the Congress, I also believe that it has a very real possibility of throwing much of this legislation back into the court, something we are trying to avoid with the CALFED process, and that is, the preauthorization of future California water projects.

I appreciate what the gentleman said about WRDA; but I think if he takes a close look at WRDA he will find, in fact, it is a much different process than what we envision here. In fact, the language of this legislation says that virtually any water project or water supply or water yield can move into construction after a feasibility study. It does not say a favorable report, as it says in the WRDA or the Chief's. It simply says if you have the feasibility study, you can move on; and I think what, in fact, we will see is that those people who are critics of many of the projects that all of us support in this legislation will start to raise Cain at the local level about the process being rigged.

They will take this to the courts, take this to the bow, and we will go through a process that is just going to be unacceptable in terms of meeting the goals that the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) have for this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The Chair would inform the House that the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) has 11 minutes remaining. The gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) has 21 minutes remaining.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ).

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT).

I rise in support, full support and strong support, of H.R. 2828. I think maximizing the use of our limited water resources in California is an issue that is close to my Orange County district, and it is close to me.

In fact, the gentleman from California (Mr. GARY G. MILLER) and I are the sponsors of a bill, H.R. 1156, which would allow Orange County to complete its revolutionary Groundwater Replenishment System. That system would create a new water supply of 72,000 acre feet per year and serve 2.3 million residents of the north and central portion of Orange County.

The bill would increase the authorized Federal share for this project from $20 million to $80 million, and I would like to inquire if the Chairman continues to support this very important bill that, unfortunately, is not in this good CALFED bill, but which is very important to Orange County.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her support and inquiry.

As the gentlewoman knows, I strongly support recycling as a way to reduce Southern California's dependence on imported water and help drought-proof the region. That is why I supported H.R. 1156, a bill championed by our colleagues, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER), whose district includes the Groundwater Replenishment System, and the gentlewoman here today from the 47th district.

I am fully supportive of House passage of H.R. 1156, H.R. 2991, introduced by our colleague the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), and other recycling bills reported by the House Committee on Resources, but I know that it is up to the leadership on both sides of the aisle to determine which bills are debated on the House floor.

In the meantime, I will continue to strongly support H.R. 1156, and I thank the gentlewoman's support for H.R. 2828.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask the support of our colleagues for this bill on the floor today.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Southern California (Mr. FILNER).

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), the chairman, on an issue which I would hope to have seen more about in this bill, and that is the restoration of the Salton Sea.

As we know, an earlier version of the bill provided for a feasibility study and $300 million in restoration funds. We all know about the importance of the Salton Sea in our ecology and in our economy. It is critical for the Pacific flyway for migratory birds, as well as the Colorado River's delta, and is home to a variety of wildlife, including fish, birds, microbes, and wetlands species. The sea also provides many recreational opportunities such as camping, bird watching, fishing, boating, hiking, hunting, and off-roading.

If the sea were no longer able to support life, it would cause irreparable harm to Southern California's ecosystem and economy.

The Salton Sea lies mostly in my district in Southern California. It is the third largest saline lake in the nation, and the largest inland body of water west of the Rockies. The Sea is an important natural resource, one that is valued not only by residents of the area, but also by the many who come from around the country to enjoy its bounty.

The Salton Sea does not have an outlet to keep the water fresh, so as water evaporates from the saline lake, the salt left behind continues to concentrate. As the salinity of the Sea continues to rise, and the environmental quality continues to decline, it will no longer be able to support life and will begin to die. If that were to happen, it will cause irreparable harm to Southern California's ecosystem and economy.

The surrounding areas of the Coachella and Imperial Valleys rely on the Sea to support their agricultural and recreational economies. I share the concerns of many about what might occur if the elevation of the Sea drops, becomes too saline to support fish or birds, and further impairs air quality due to blowing sediment.

The Salton Sea is also an essential link in increasing and diversifying our domestic water resources, and therefore needs funding for restoration. A recently signed federal water transfer agreement between Southern California water agencies will reduce flows to the Salton Sea. While the water transfer will assist Southern California in staying within its Colorado River water allocation, inflows to the Sea may be reduced dramatically. With that diminished amount of inflow, the Salton Sea presents a particularly difficult challenge in protecting and restoring it, while at the same time reducing California's use of Colorado River water.

The gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) has been very supportive of the Salton Sea and has been involved in this issue for well over a decade.

I would like to inquire as to further support of the Salton Sea as part of the CALFED legislative process, and would ask for the gentleman to comment on that.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FILNER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his support of the Salton Sea. I would like to assure him that I and many of our Southern California colleagues, including the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. BONO) and certainly the gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER), continue to strongly support the restoration of the Salton Sea, and we will work with him and others in our delegation to continue these efforts.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman and look forward to that work and urge support of the bill.

□ 1230

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE).

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to enter into a very brief colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee; that being, does this bill change existing law as it relates to area of origin?

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, the answer to the gentleman's question is: No.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CARDOZA)

Mr. CARDOZA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support an issue that has been addressed in this House for nearly a decade yet has never made it quite this far before today. This is an enormous accomplishment and I applaud my colleagues, the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO), the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO), and our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), as well as our esteemed Senator from California, Senator FEINSTEIN, for overcoming numerous hurdles that have prevented this issue from passing in recent years.

This is an immense amount of work from both sides of the aisle and both Chambers that has gone into this measure; and, finally, we are poised to formalize our commitment to ensuring a safe, reliable water supply for California.

This proposal will greatly strengthen California's agricultural economy as well as address the needs of a fast-growing population, while at the same time maintaining our commitment to the environment. In fact, I believe this bill strongly enhances the environment and, in particular, the Delta of California.

This delicate balance, while difficult to achieve, is critical to the success of CALFED. In my mind, the true test of the value of the bill is whether it has achieved a level of compromise. While no one is completely satisfied with this measure, everyone's concerns were considered and addressed. This measure passes the test by leaps and bounds. This bill has brought together parties that in the past have had conflicts that have just torn the State apart. These stakeholders have worked diligently now for years to develop some creative opportunities for additional conveyance, while addressing some of the extremely tough water quality and water supply challenges in California.

Mr. Speaker, time is of the essence. If the Federal Government does not act now on this legislation, the future of CALFED and our agricultural economy and viability hangs in the balance. I believe that those of us who have pushed for additional surface storage are finally being heard. These projects are critical to California's future and must move forward now without pure obstructionists standing in the way.

This is a good bill for the environment, this is a good bill for the economy, and it is a good bill for California. I urge my colleagues to vote ''aye.''

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have been going through trying to get reauthorization for CALFED for a number of years and have been unable to because of the differences of opinions from many areas of needs. I think it is time that we move forward and begin to work on getting this CALFED passed, which has had a lot of give on the side that we have been working on, and for that, I thank the chairman.

We look forward to making sure that we continue to work on anything else that some of my colleagues might want on another venue, and I certainly would urge all my colleagues, Democrat and Republican, to vote for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to close, and I want to again thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) for her good work and her dedication on this legislation. She spent many hours and much of her time traveling through the State of California and throughout the western United States as we came to understand the issue of water.

There are very few subjects that bring out more emotion and passion than water, and certainly I have grown to understand the subject much better over the last number of years. I am looking forward to passing this bill today and moving ahead.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to oppose the bill offered by my good friend from California and Chairman of the Resources Subcommittee on Water and Power, Congressman KEN CALVERT.

Mr. Speaker, on balance, H.R. 2828 is not a good bill for rural Northern California. While it takes some positive steps forward to improve the administration of CALFED by instituting greater financial accountability and ecosystem reporting requirements, it still allows the implementation of an expensive, and ill-advised program that has not produced storage nor positive results for Northern California. The bill basically adopts and focuses on the CALFED Record of Decision (ROD) as a framework, which does not provide a comprehensive water solution for the State. CALFED has always been heavily weighted toward ecosystem restoration and increasing exports from the Delta. I don't see that changing sufficiently under this bill. New storage under CALFED has been only empty promises, and the language in H.R. 2828 doesn't ensure otherwise. The state should take a new direction that places a greater emphasis on water storage and constrains the ability of state and federal agencies to buy more land and water. In short, there is not much to be gained, but much to be lost under H.R. 2828 for our area. As such, I strongly oppose it.

I originally supported the CALFED program in concept. Recognizing the very serious water challenges facing our state, I shared the view held by many other Members of Congress from California that such a joint state-federal program could provide an opportunity for developing a framework to solve our water woes for the long-term. Unfortunately, rather than providing a realistic solution to allow the water interests in the state to ''get well together,'' as CALFED had originally promised, the program has become heavily weighted toward ecosystem restoration and focused on buying land and water to shift around already constrained water supplies, rather than on developing new water storage to meet our state's growing water needs. In addition, there has never been sufficient local control. Instead, federal agencies have been empowered to make important decisions about land and water resources impacting communities.

California faces a water deficit of potentially crisis proportions. The water supply in the state is already stretched to its practical limits. To put the current situation in perspective, recognize that the State Water Project was constructed when California's population was only 16 million people. Today it is over 34 million, and growing at a rate of roughly 600,000 new citizens a year. Yet California's water supply yield has increased by a mere 2 percent over the last 20 years. And the California Water Plan Update, Bulletin 160–98 from a few years ago indicates that existing supply shortages will get appreciably worse over the next 20 years as the state's population continues to increase. Water deficits are projected to reach approximately 2.4 million acre feet in an average water year and 6.2 million acre feet in drought years by the year 2020. If history is any guide, Californians are likely to face major drought conditions not unlike the 500-year drought that is currently plaguing the Colorado basin states some time in the near future. Yet despite this pending crisis, the central focus of the CALFED program has been a plethora of costly environmental projects and plans to increase ability of the State and Federal water projects to move more water to Southern California.

CALFED has failed to make the hard decisions necessary to meet this incredible challenge. While it publicly recognizes water shortfalls, the storage solutions it has proposed will not provide sufficient supply benefits. A new Sites Reservoir, raising Shasta Dam and augmenting Los Vaqueros could be essential pieces of our water puzzle, but my concern is they really won't inject significant additional water ''yield'' into the system. CALFED has taken solutions such as an Auburn Dam, a Yuba Dam, and other on-stream reservoirs off the table because of the environmental controversy they might cause, despite the fact that they present opportunities for new cost-effective water supplies, and provide other benefits like flood control, electricity generation and recreation.

Our current situation is so desperate, and the possible impacts to the economy and public safety of another sustained drought so horrific, that we're not in a position to take these options off the table because they're politically unpalatable. To the contrary, we should be vigorously pursuing them, setting deadlines and goals, streamlining environmental review requirements, and updating federal laws to ensure cost-effective, feasible projects will actually be built and provide water to communities and farmers. Yet, despite several years and millions of dollars of investments from the state and federal government, CALFED has only studied and restudied a limited number of small storage options, without moving the ball down the field. Meantime, our water needs continue to grow dramatically. Fundamentally, when the problem is too many people and not enough water, I believe the answer is to create additional water storage, not sacrifice some parts of the state, including California's thriving agriculture industry, so others can get better. Carving up and reallocating an already constrained water system will not allow everyone to ''get well together.''

The ''Water Supply, Reliability and Environmental Improvement Act'' takes some positive steps forward in some areas, and will institute some accountability into a program that desperately needs it. For example, CALFED has spent taxpayer dollars without Congress or the public knowing or understanding where those funds have gone, and what the benefits for the state have been. H.R. 2828's financial reporting requirements will help Congress better track those expenditures. In addition, the annual reporting requirements for ecosystem restoration provided for in the bill will help Congress better monitor those projects, including land and water purchases. The bill also clarifies that local fish screen projects are a legitimate and helpful way to help local farmers meet federal and state endangered species requirements. I believe each of these program changes represent positive steps forward.

That being said, I do not feel this bill goes far enough to fix a program that is fundamentally flawed and moving in the wrong direction. While its expedited ''preauthorization'' process for CALFED storage projects elevates storage as a principle and could set an important new precedent for future infrastructure development, it appears to authorize only those projects approved pursuant to the CALFED ROD. I have long argued that CALFED's storage proposals are woefully insufficient to address our state's water needs. According to some estimates, a small Shasta raise, a new Sites Reservoir and a project at Los Vaqueros—the CALFED ROD's storage projects—the approximate yield would be only about 300,000 acre feet—far short of addressing a water shortfall in the millions of acre feet.

The bill also does not require expedited consideration for these projects. We have seen time and again how CALFED has dithered and stalled in pursuing new storage. In my view, a responsible CALFED should set hard and fast deadlines and move storage forward on an aggressive schedule. Moreover, the federal environmental review process, as we have seen on forest health projects, can take years and cost millions of dollars, only to be obstructed in the end by radical environmentalists through appeals and court challenges. The bill does not recognize and address those hard realities. In my view, it doesn't do enough to streamline the environmental review process, or to address the obstacles that unbalanced environmental laws are likely to pose to their ultimate development.

There is nothing in the bill to prevent CALFED agencies from continuing to purchase land and water as proposed in the ROD. Indeed, the bill explicitly authorizes the purchase of land and water as an acceptable CALFED activity under existing authority. And while there are reporting requirements, the impetus is on Congress to specifically defund these agency-approved acquisitions, rather than on the agencies to ask Congress to specifically approve and justify them. Because of the community impacts and private property rights concerns of additional land and water acquisitions, it should be the other way around.

I am also concerned by proposals to place the burden of CALFED funding on the shoulders of Sacramento Valley water users, but I understand Chairman Calvert has attempted to address that issue. In accordance with language contained in the report accompanying H.R. 2828, the ''beneficiary pays'' principle specifically applies to direct beneficiaries of projects that improve the Delta. According to this principle, project participants in the CALFED solution area are not considered direct beneficiaries of the CALFED program. Therefore, Sacramento Valley water users who participate in projects to improve the Delta are not subject to any fees or taxes imposed on beneficiaries of the CALFED program.

In closing, something needs to be done—and soon—about the water situation in California. It is only getting worse with each passing day. Today's legislation takes some positive steps forward and I commend my colleagues for their efforts in this regard. However, I fear that the task at hand is so great that unless stronger and more aggressive changes are made to the CALFED program, the state will fail to meet today's and tomorrow's infrastructure challenges.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I oppose H.R. 2828, the California Water Bill because it preauthorizes wasteful projects.

It forces federal taxpayers to pick up more than a $1.5 billion tab for a California-only project. It would not prevent taxpayers from getting stuck with the cost for large water projects, and would open the Federal treasury to raids by disingenuous water users. H.R. 2828 would ''preauthorize'' major water projects. A ''yes'' vote on H.R. 2828 would mean Congress gives up its long-standing right to have a say over taxpayer funded projects. Why should the rest of the country pay for California's water problem? They have 35 million taxpayers to pay for it.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Water Supply, Reliability and Environmental Improvement Act, H.R. 2828, widely known as CALFED. The mission of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program is to develop and implement a long-term comprehensive plan that improves water management for beneficial uses of the Bay-Delta System. The San Francisco Bay/Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta Estuary, the Bay-Delta, is a region of critical importance to California, often described as the hub of the State's water supply system.

The authorization of the CALFED program has been a priority for California and its neighboring States for many years. And while the existing program has accomplished a great deal in managing our water supply and improving the ecosystem of the Bay-Delta, this bill provides the comprehensive Congressional accountability it has been lacking. H.R. 2828 provides the authority for Federal agencies to fully engage in a partnership with the State of California and the stakeholders of the CALFED program.

We have also long recognized the importance of improving management and coordination of existing water supply projects for meeting present and future water demands. Preserving and enhancing the ecosystem, while developing new sources of water for growing consumptive needs, and allocating existing supplies to meet changing demands, is a great challenge.

This challenge was met head on by the House Resources Committee under the leadership of Chairman RICHARD POMBO, and Subcommittee on Water and Power Chairman KEN CALVERT. I congratulate both of them for their extraordinary work in achieving this level of negotiation, compromise, and support. What is even more remarkable is that the work produced by Mr. CALVERT will be voted on today without any amendments offered to it on the House floor, with the exception of the substitute that he crafted. This is a testament to his tenacity in providing Californians with the best water plan possible.

I also know that Mr. CALVERT and this legislation have widespread support back home in California, beginning with Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger. One of his first acts as then Governor-Elect in late October, 2003, was to send a strong letter of support for CALFED legislation to Congress expressing his desire to see Mr. CALVERT's legislation succeed and making CALFED authorization a priority for the State.

H.R. 2828 will provide a long-term comprehensive plan to address challenges in the Bay-Delta region by balancing water resource management issues including supply, quality, and ecosystem restoration. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for the Water Supply, Reliability and Environmental Improvement Act.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that today the House is considering H.R. 2828, the Water Supply Reliability, and Environmental Improvement Act.

This bill reauthorizes the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, a Federal-State cooperative effort to manage water resources in California.

The purpose of the program is to increase the supply of available water for municipal, agricultural, and industrial use, and to engage in watershed restoration.

Water is a very precious resource, particularly in the West.

The supply of water is governed by State law. However, many Federal and State programs and projects also manage water resources and impact water supply.

Eighteen Federal and State agencies are partners in the CALFED program. Two of those agencies, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Army Corps of Engineers, fall under the jurisdiction of the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee.

EPA has some existing authorities that can help meet the goals of the CALFED program. The Corps also has many water resources development projects either under study or under construction in the Bay-Delta area, including the Sacramento/San Joaquin river basins comprehensive study.

This legislation does not authorize any EPA programs or Corps projects, even if a project is specifically mentioned in the August 28, 2000, programmatic record of decision that H.R. 2828 establishes as the general framework for addressing the CALFED program.

EPA and Corps activities in furtherance of the CALFED program must fall under existing authorities and nothing in this bill changes those authorities, or directs the USA of EPA or Corps funds.

Additional Corps projects in the Bay-Delta area may be authorized later, but those projects will go through the regular Corps of Engineers feasibility study process and regular authorization process in a water resources development act.

This does not mean that EPA and the Corps are not full participants in the CALFED program. In carrying out existing programs and projects, EPA and the Corps will coordinate their activities with all the Federal agencies participating in CALFED, and the State of California.

I congratulate Mr. CALVERT and Mr. POMBO for bringing this legislation to the House floor. It has been a long time coming and reflects a lot of hard work by many Members.

I urge all Members to support this bill.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). All time for general debate has expired.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. CALVERT

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. CALVERT:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Water Supply, Reliability, and Environmental Improvement Act''.

TITLE I—CALIFORNIA WATER SECURITY AND ENVIRONMENTAL ENHANCEMENT

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''California Water Security and Environmental Enhancement Act''.

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM.—The terms ''Calfed Bay-Delta Program'' and ''Program'' mean the programs, projects, complementary actions, and activities undertaken through coordinated planning, implementation, and assessment activities of the State and Federal Agencies in a manner consistent with the Record of Decision.

(2) CALIFORNIA BAY-DELTA AUTHORITY.—The terms ''California Bay-Delta Authority'' and ''Authority'' mean the California Bay-Delta Authority, as set forth in the California Bay-Delta Authority Act (Cal. Water Code 79400 et seq.).

(3) ENVIRONMENTAL WATER ACCOUNT.—The term ''Environmental Water Account'' means the cooperative management program established under the Record of Decision.

(4) FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The term ''Federal agencies'' means—

(A) the Department of the Interior, including—

(i) the Bureau of Reclamation;

(ii) the United States Fish and Wildlife Service:

(iii) the Bureau of Land Management; and

(iv) the United States Geological Survey;

(B) the Environmental Protection Agency;

(C) the Army Corps of Engineers;

(D) the Department of Commerce, including the National Marine Fisheries service (also known as ''NOAA Fisheries'');

(E) the Department of Agriculture, including—

(i) the Natural Resources Conservation Service;

(ii) the Forest Service; and

(F) the Western Area Power Administration.

(5) GOVERNOR.—The term ''Governor'' means the Governor of the State of California.

(6) RECORD OF DECISION.—The term ''Record of Decision'' means the Calfed Bay-Delta Program Record of Decision, dated August 28, 2000.

(7) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(8) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of California.

(9) STATE AGENCIES.—The term ''State agencies'' means the California State agencies that are signatories to Attachment 3 of the Record of Decision.

(10) WATER YIELD.—The term ''water yield'' means a new quantity of water in storage that is reliably available in critically dry years for beneficial uses.

SEC. 103. BAY DELTA PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) RECORD OF DECISION AS GENERAL FRAMEWORK.—The Record of Decision is approved as a general framework for addressing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, including its components relating to water storage and water yield, ecosystem restoration, water supply reliability, conveyance, water use efficiency, water quality, water transfers, watersheds, the Environmental Water Account, levee stability, governance, and science.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—In General.— The Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies are authorized to carry out the activities under this title consistent with—

(A) the Record of Decision; and

(B) the requirement that Program activities consisting of protecting drinking water quality, restoring ecological health, improving water supply reliability (including additional storage and conveyance) and water yield, and protecting Delta levees will progress in a balanced manner.

(b) AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies are authorized to carry out the activities described in paragraphs (2) through (5) in furtherance of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program as set forth in the Record of Decision, subject to the cost-share and other provisions of this title, if the activity has been:

(A) subject to environmental review and approval, as required under applicable Federal and State law; and

(B) approved and certified by the relevant Federal agency to be consistent with the Record of Decision and within the scope of the agency's authority under existing law.

(2) MULTIPLE BENEFIT PROJECTS FAVORED.—In selecting projects and programs for increasing water yield and water supply, improving water quality, and enhancing environmental benefits, projects and programs with multiple benefits shall be emphasized.

(3) BALANCE.—The Secretary shall ensure that all elements of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program need to be completed and operated cooperatively to maintain the balanced progress in all Calfed Bay-Delta Program areas.

(4) AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FEDERAL AGENCIES UNDER APPLICABLE LAW.—

(A) SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (A) through (J) of paragraph (5), to the extent authorized under the reclamation laws, the Central Valley Project Improvement Act (title XXXIV of Public Law 102–575; 106 Stat. 4706), the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act (16 U.S.C. 661 et seq.), the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.), and other applicable law.

(B) THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY.—The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency may carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (C), (E), (F), (G), (H), and (I) of paragraph (5), in furtherance of the Calfed Bay-Delta program, to the extent authorized under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.), the Safe Drinking Water Act (42 U.S.C. 300f et seq.), and other laws in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this title.

(C) THE SECRETARY OF THE ARMY.—The Secretary of the Army may carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (B), (F), (G), (H), and (I) of paragraph (5), in furtherance of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program, to the extent authorized under flood control, water resource development, and other laws in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this title.

(D) SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.—The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (B), (F), (G), and (I) of paragraph (5), to the extent authorized under the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act (16 U.S.C. 661 et seq.), the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.), and other applicable law.

(E) SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.—The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (C), (E), (F), (G), (H), and (I) of paragraph (5), to the extent authorized under title XII of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3801 et seq.), the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–171; 116 Stat. 134) (including amendments made by that Act), and other applicable law.

(5) DESCRIPTION OF ACTIVITIES UNDER EXISTING AUTHORIZATIONS.—

(A) WATER STORAGE AND WATER YIELD.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) FEASIBILITY STUDIES AND RESOLUTION.—

(I) For purposes of implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Secretary is authorized to undertake all necessary planning activities and feasibility studies required for the development of recommendations by the Secretary to Congress on the construction and implementation of specific water supply and water yield projects, and to conduct comprehensive water management planning.

(II) FEASIBILITY STUDIES REQUIREMENTS.—All feasibility studies completed for storage projects as a result of this section shall include identification of project benefits and beneficiaries and a cost allocation plan consistent with the benefits to be received, for both governmental and non-governmental entities.

(III) DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTION.—If the Secretary determines a project to be feasible, and meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), the report shall be submitted to Congress. If Congress does not pass a disapproval resolution of the feasibility study during the first 120 days before Congress (not including days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) the project shall be authorized, subject to appropriations.

(ii) WATER SUPPLY AND WATER YIELD STUDY.—The Secretary, acting through the Bureau of Reclamation and in consultation with the State, shall conduct a study of available water supplies and water yield and existing demand and future needs for water—

(I) within the units of the Central Valley Project;

(II) within the area served by Central Valley Project agricultural water service contractors and municipal and industrial water service contractors; and

(III) within the Bay-Delta solution area.

(iii) RELATIONSHIP TO PRIOR STUDY.—The study under clause (ii) shall incorporate and revise as necessary the study required by section 3408(j) of the Central Valley Project Improvement Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–575).

(iv) MANAGEMENT.—The Secretary shall conduct activities related to developing groundwater storage projects to the extent authorized under existing law.

(v) COMPREHENSIVE WATER PLANNING.—The Secretary shall conduct activities related to comprehensive water management planning to the extent authorized under existing law.

(vi) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the congressional authorizing committees by not later than 180 days after the State's completion of the updated Bulletin 160 describing the following:

(I) Water yield and water supply improvements, if any, for Central Valley Project agricultural water service contractors and municipal and industrial water service contractors, including those identified in Bulletin 160.

(II) All water management actions or projects, including those identified in Bulletin 160, that would improve water yield or water supply and that, if taken or constructed, would balance available water supplies and existing demand for those contractors and other water users of the Bay-Delta watershed with due recognition of water right priorities and environmental needs.

(III) The financial costs of the actions and projects described under clause (II).

(IV) The beneficiaries of those actions and projects and an assessment of their willingness to pay the capital costs and operation and maintenance costs thereof.

(B) CONVEYANCE.—

(i) SOUTH DELTA ACTIONS.—In the case of the South Delta, activities under this clause consist of the following:

(I) The South Delta Improvement Program through actions to accomplish the following:

(aa) Increase the State Water Project export limit to 8,500 cfs.

(bb) Install permanent, operable barriers in the south Delta. The Federal Agencies shall cooperate with the State to accelerate installation of the permanent, operable barriers in the south Delta, with the intent to complete that installation not later than the end of fiscal year 2007.

(cc) Increase the State Water Project export to the maximum capability of 10,300 cfs.

(II) Reduction of agricultural drainage in south Delta channels, and other actions necessary to minimize the impact of drainage on drinking water quality.

(III) Evaluation of lower San Joaquin River floodway improvements.

(IV) Installation and operation of temporary barriers in the south Delta until fully operable barriers are constructed.

(V) Actions to protect navigation and local diversions not adequately protected by temporary barriers.

(VI) Actions to increase pumping shall be accomplished in a manner consistent with applicable law California and Federal protecting—

(aa) deliveries to, costs of, and water supplies for in-delta water users, including in-delta agricultural users that have historically relied on water diverted for use in the Delta;

(bb) the quality of water for existing municipal, industrial, and agricultural uses;

(cc) water supplies for areas of origin, and

(dd) Delta dependent native fish species.

(ii) NORTH DELTA ACTIONS.—In the case of the North Delta, activities under this clause consist of—

(I) evaluation and implementation of improved operational procedures for the Delta Cross Channel to address fishery and water quality concerns;

(II) evaluation of a screened through-Delta facility on the Sacramento River; and

(III) evaluation of lower Mokelumne River floodway improvements.

(iii) INTERTIES.—Activities under this clause consist of—

(I) evaluation and construction of an intertie between the State Water Project California Aqueduct and the Central Valley Project Delta Mendota Canal, near the City of Tracy; and

(II) assessment of a connection of the Central Valley Project to the Clifton Court Forebay of the State Water Project, with a corresponding increase in the screened intake of the Forebay.

(iv) PROGRAM TO MEET STANDARDS.—Prior to increasing export limits from the Delta for the purposes of conveying water to south-of-Delta Central Valley Project contractors or increasing deliveries through an intertie, the Secretary shall, within one year of the date of enactment of this title, in consultation with the Governor, develop and initiate implementation of a program to meet all existing water quality standards and objectives for which the CVP has responsibility. In developing and implementing the program the Secretary shall include, to the maximum extent feasible, the following:

(I) A recirculation program to provide flow, reduce salinity concentrations in the San Joaquin River, and reduce the reliance on New Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality and fishery flow objectives through the use of excess capacity in export pumping and conveyance facilities.

(II) The Secretary shall develop and implement a best management practices plan to reduce the impact of the discharges from wildlife refuges that receive water from the federal government and discharge salt or other constituents into the San Joaquin River. Such plan shall be developed in coordination with interested parties in the San Joaquin Valley and the Delta. The Secretary shall also coordinate activities with other entities that discharge water into the San Joaquin River to reduce salinity concentrations discharged into the River, including the timing of discharges to optimize their assimilation.

(III) The acquisition from willing sellers of water from streams tributary to the San Joaquin River or other sources to provide flow, dilute discharges from wildlife refuges, and to improve water quality in the San Joaquin River below the confluence of the Merced and San Joaquin rivers and to reduce the reliance on New Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality and fishery flow objectives.

(IV) Use of existing funding mechanisms.—In implementing the Program, the Secretary may use money collected pursuant to Section 3407 of the Central Valley Project Improvement Act (Public Law 102–575; 106 Stat. 4727) to acquire from voluntary sellers water from streams tributary to the San Joaquin River or other sources for the purposes set forth in subclauses (I) through (III) of clause (iv).

(V) The purpose of the authority and direction provided to the Secretary in clause (iv) is to provide greater flexibility in meeting the existing water quality standards and objectives for which the Central Valley Project has responsibility so as to reduce the demand on water from New Melones Reservoir used for that purpose and to allow the Secretary to meet with greater frequency the Secretary's obligations to Central Valley Project contractors from the New Melones Project. The Secretary shall update the New Melones operating plan to consider, among other things, the actions outlined in this Act designed to reduce the reliance on new Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality and fishery flow objectives and to insure that operation of New Melones Reservoir is governed by the best available science.

(C) WATER USE EFFICIENCY.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) water conservation projects that provide water supply reliability, water quality,and ecosystem benefits to the Bay-Delta system;

(ii) technical assistance for urban and agricultural water conservation projects;

(iii) water recycling and desalination projects, including groundwater remediation projects and projects identified in the Bay Area Water Plan and the Southern California Comprehensive Water Reclamation and Reuse Study and other projects, giving priority to projects that include regional solutions to benefit regional water supply and reliability needs;

(I) The Secretary shall review any feasibility level studies for seawater desalination and regional brine line projects that have been completed, whether or not those studies were prepared with financial assistance from the Secretary.

(II) The Secretary shall report to the Congress not later than 90 days after the completion of a feasibility study or the review of a feasibility study. For the purposes of this Act, the Secretary is authorized to provide assistance for projects as set forth and pursuant to the existing requirements of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (Public Law 102–9575; title 16) as amended, and Reclamation Recycling and Water Conservation Act of 1996 (Public Law 104–266).

(iv) water measurement and transfer actions;

(v) implementation of best management practices for urban water conservation; and

(vi) projects identified in the Southern California Comprehensive Water Reclamation and Reuse Study, dated April 2001 and authorized by section 1606 of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (43 U.S.C. 390h–4); and the San Francisco Bay Area Regional Water Recycling Program described in the San Francisco Bay Area Regional Water Recycling Program Recycled Water Master Plan, dated December 1999 and authorized by section 1611 of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (43 U.S.C. 390h–9) are determined to be feasible.

(D) WATER TRANSFERS.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) increasing the availability of existing facilities for water transfers;

(ii) lowering transaction costs through regulatory coordination; and

(iii) maintaining a water transfer information clearinghouse.

(E) INTEGRATED REGIONAL WATER MANAGEMENT PLANS.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of assisting local and regional communities in the State in developing and implementing integrated regional water management plans to carry out projects and programs that improve water supply reliability, water quality, ecosystem restoration, and flood protection, or meet other local and regional needs, in a manner that is consistent with, and makes a significant contribution to, the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(F) ECOSYSTEM RESTORATION.—

(i) ACTIVITIES UNDER THIS SUBPARAGRAPH CONSIST OF—

(I) implementation of large-scale restoration projects in San Francisco Bay and the Delta and its tributaries;

(II) restoration of habitat in the Delta, San Pablo Bay, and Suisun Bay and Marsh, including tidal wetland and riparian habitat;

(III) fish screen and fish passage improvement projects; including the Sacramento River Small Diversion Fish Screen Program.

(IV) implementation of an invasive species program, including prevention, control, and eradication;

(V) development and integration of Federal and State agricultural programs that benefit wildlife into the Ecosystem Restoration Program;

(VI) financial and technical support for locally-based collaborative programs to restore habitat while addressing the concerns of local communities;

(VII) water quality improvement projects to manage and reduce concentrations of salinity, selenium, mercury, pesticides, trace metals, dissolved oxygen, turbidity, sediment, and other pollutants;

(VIII) land and water acquisitions to improve habitat and fish spawning and survival in the Delta and its tributaries;

(IX) integrated flood management, ecosystem restoration, and levee protection projects;

(X) scientific evaluations and targeted research on Program activities; and

(XI) strategic planning and tracking of Program performance.

(ii) ANNUAL ECOSYSTEM PROGRAM PLAN.—

(I) Prior to October 1 of each year, with respect to an ecosystem restoration action carried out by or for the Secretary, the Secretary shall submit an annual ecosystem program plan report to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The purpose of the report is to describe the projects and programs to implement the activities under this subsection in the following fiscal year, and to establish priorities for funding in subsequent years. For the ecosystem program, and each ecosystem project the report shall describe—

(aa) the goals and objectives

(bb) program accomplishments,

(cc) major activities,

(dd) the administration responsibilities of land and water areas and associated environmental resources, in the affected project area including an accounting of all habitat types. Cost-share arrangements with cooperating agencies should be included in the report, and

(ee) the resource data and ecological monitoring data to be collected for the restoration projects and how the data are to be integrated, streamlined, and designed to measure the effectiveness and overall trend of ecosystem health in the Bay-Delta watershed;

(ff) implementation schedules and budgets;

(gg) monitoring programs and performance measures; and

(hh) the status and effectiveness of minimizing and mitigating the impacts of the program on agricultural lands.

(ii) a description of expected benefits of the restoration program relative to the cost.

(II) For Federal projects and programs to be carried out by or for the Secretary not specifically identified in the annual program plans the Secretary, in coordination with the State, shall submit recommendations on proposed plans, no later than 45 days prior to approval, to the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, the House Resources Committee, and the public. The recommendations shall—

(aa) describe the project selection process, including the level of public involvement and independent science review;

(bb) describe the goals, objectives, and implementation schedule of the projects, and the extent to which the projects address regional and programmatic goals and priorities;

(cc) describe the monitoring plans and performance measures that will be used for evaluating the performance of the proposed projects;

(dd) identify any cost-sharing arrangements with cooperating entities; and

(ee) identify how the proposed projects will comply with all applicable Federal and State laws, including the National Environmental Policy Act.

(III) Projects involving acquisition of private lands shall be included in subsection (I) of the Annual Ecosystem Program Plan. Each project identified shall—

(aa) describe the process and timing of notification of interested members of the public and local governments;

(bb) minimize and mitigate impacts on agricultural lands;

(cc) include preliminary management plans for all properties to be acquired with Federal funds. Such preliminary management plans shall include an overview of existing conditions, the expected ecological benefits, preliminary cost estimates, and implementation schedules;

(dd) identify federal land acquisition in total, by a county by county basis; and,

(ee) provide a finding of consistency with all applicable State and Federal law.

(G) WATERSHEDS.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) building local capacity to assess and manage watersheds affecting the Calfed Bay-Delta system;

(ii) technical assistance for watershed assessments and management plans; and

(iii) developing and implementing locally-based watershed conservation, maintenance, and restoration actions.

(H) WATER QUALITY.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) addressing drainage problems in the San Joaquin Valley to improve downstream water quality (including habitat restoration projects that reduce drainage and improve water quality) if—

(I) a plan is in place for monitoring downstream water quality improvements;

(II) State and local agencies are consulted on the activities to be funded; and

(III) except that no right, benefit, or privilege is created as a result of this clause;

(ii) implementation of source control programs in the Delta and its tributaries;

(iii) developing recommendations through scientific panels and advisory council processes to meet the Calfed Bay-Delta Program goal of continuous improvement in Delta water quality for all uses;

(iv) investing in treatment technology demonstration projects;

(v) controlling runoff into the California aqueduct, the Delta-Mendota Canal, and other similar conveyances;

(vi) addressing water quality problems at the North Bay Aqueduct;

(vii) supporting and participating in the development of projects to enable San Francisco Area water districts and water entities in San Joaquin and Sacramento counties to work cooperatively to address their water quality and supply reliability issues, including—

(I) connections between aqueducts, water transfers, water conservation measures, institutional arrangements, and infrastructure improvements that encourage regional approaches; and

(II) investigations and studies of available capacity in a project to deliver water to the East Bay Municipal Utility District under its contract with the Bureau of Reclamation, dated July 20, 2001, in order to determine if such capacity can be used to meet the objectives of this clause;

(viii) development of water quality exchanges and other programs to make high quality water available for urban and other users;

(ix) development and implementation of a plan to meet all water quality standards for which the Federal and State water projects have responsibility;

(x) development of recommendations through technical panels and advisory council processes to meet the Calfed Bay-Delta Program goal of continuous improvement in water quality for all uses; and

(xi) projects that may meet the framework of the water quality component of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(I) SCIENCE.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of—

(i) supporting establishment and maintenance of an independent science board, technical panels, and standing boards to provide oversight and peer review of the Program;

(ii) conducting expert evaluations and scientific. assessments of all Program elements;

(iii) coordinating existing monitoring and scientific research programs;

(iv) developing and implementing adaptive management experiments to test, refine, and improve scientific understandings;

(v) establishing performance measures, and monitoring and evaluating the performance of all Program elements; and

(vi) preparing an annual science report.

(J) DIVERSIFICATION OF WATER SUPPLIES.—Activities under this subparagraph consist of actions to diversify sources of level 2 refuge supplies and modes of delivery to refuges while maintaining the diversity of level 4 supplies pursuant to Central Valley Project Improvement Act section 3406(d)(2), Public Law 102–575 (106 Stat. 4723).

(6) NEW AND EXPANDED AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FEDERAL AGENCIES.—

(A) SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to carry out the activities described in subparagraphs (A) , (B), (C) and (D) of paragraph (7) during each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, in coordination with the State of California.

(B) THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY AND THE SECRETARY OF THE ARMY.—The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Secretary of the Army may carry out activities described in subparagraph (D) of paragraph 7 during each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, in coordination with the State of California.

(C) THE SECRETARIES OF AGRICULTURE AND COMMERCE.—The Secretary of Commerce, and the Department of Agriculture, are authorized to carry out the activities described in paragraph (7)(D) during each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, in coordination with the State of California.

(7) DESCRIPTION OF ACTIVITIES UNDER NEW AND EXPANDED AUTHORIZATIONS.—

(A) CONVEYANCE.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 109, not more than $184,000,000 may be expended for the following:

(i) Feasibility studies, evaluation, and implementation of the San Luis Reservoir lowpoint improvement project and increased capacity of the intertie between the SWP California Aqueduct and the CVP Delta Mendota Canal, near the City of Tracy.

(ii) Feasibility studies and actions at Franks Tract to improve water quality in the Delta.

(iii) Feasibility studies and design of fish screen and intake facilities at Clifton Court Forebay and the Tracy Pumping Plant facilities.

(iv) Design and construction of the relocation of drinking water intake facilities to delta water users. The Secretary shall coordinate actions for relocating intake facilities on a time schedule consistent with subparagraph (5)(B)(i)(I)(bb) or other actions necessary to offset the degradation of drinking water quality in the Delta due to the South Delta Improvement Program.

(v) In addition to the other authorizations granted to the Secretary by this title, the Secretary shall acquire water from willing sellers and undertake other actions designed to decrease releases from New Melones Reservoir for meeting water quality standards and flow objectives for which the Central Valley Project has responsibility in order to meet allocations to Central Valley Project contractors from the New Melones Project. The authorization under this provision is solely meant to add flexibility for the Secretary to meet the Secretary's obligation to the Central Valley Project contractors from the New Melones Project by reducing demand for water dedicated to meeting water quality standards in the San Joaquin River. Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under paragraph (7)(A), not more than $15,260,000 may be expended for this purpose.

(B) ENVIRONMENTAL WATER ACCOUNT.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 109, not more than $90,000,000 may be expended for implementation of the Environmental Water Account; Provided That such expenditures shall be considered a nonreimbursable Federal expenditure.

(C) LEVEE STABILITY.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 109, not more than $90,000,000 may be expended for—

(i) reconstructing Delta levees to a base level of protection;

(ii) enhancing the stability of levees that have particular importance in the system through the Delta Levee Special Improvement Projects program;

(iii) developing best management practices to control and reverse land subsidence on Delta islands;

(iv) refining the Delta Emergency Management Plan;

(v) developing a Delta Risk Management Strategy after assessing the consequences of Delta levee failure from floods, seepage, subsidence, and earthquakes;

(vi) developing a strategy for reuse of dredged materials on Delta islands;

(vii) evaluating, and where appropriate, rehabilitating the Suisun Marsh levees; and

(D) PROGRAM MANAGEMENT, OVERSIGHT, AND COORDINATION.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 109, not more than $25,000,000 may be expended by the Secretary or the other heads of Federal agencies, either directly or through grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements with agencies of the State, for—

(i) program support;

(ii) program-wide tracking of schedules, finances, and performance;

(iii) multiagency oversight and coordination of Program activities to ensure Program balance and integration;

(iv) development of interagency cross-cut budgets and a comprehensive finance plan to allocate costs in accordance with the beneficiary pays provisions of the Record of Decision;

(v) coordination of public outreach and involvement, including tribal, environmental justice, and public advisory activities in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.); and

(vi) development of Annual Reports.

SEC. 104. MANAGEMENT.

(a) COORDINATION.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall coordinate their activities with the State agencies.

(b) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall cooperate with local and tribal governments and the public through an advisory committee established in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) and other appropriate means, to seek input on Program elements such as planning, design, technical assistance, and development of peer review science programs.

(c) SCIENCE.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Federal agencies shall seek to ensure, to the maximum extent practicable, that—

(1) all major aspects of implementing the Program are subjected to credible and objective scientific review; and

(2) major decisions are based upon the best available scientific information.

(d) ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE.—The Federal agencies and State agencies, consistent with Executive Order 12898 (59 FR Fed. Reg. 7629), should continue to collaborate to—

(1) develop a comprehensive environmental justice workplan for the Calfed Bay-Delta Program; and

(2) fulfill the commitment to addressing environmental justice challenges referred to in the Calfed Bay-Delta Program Environmental Justice Workplan, dated December 13, 2000.

(e) LAND ACQUISITION.—Federal funds appropriated by Congress specifically for implementation of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program may be used to acquire fee title to land only where consistent with the Record of Decision and section 103(b)(5)(F)(ii)(I)(jj).

(f) AGENCIES' DISCRETION.—This title shall not affect the discretion of any of the Federal agencies or the State agencies or the authority granted to any of the Federal agencies or State agencies by any other Federal or State law.

(g) NO NEW AUTHORITY.—The United States Environmental Protection Agency and the United States Army Corps of Engineers.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this title confers any new authority, except as provided under section 103(b)(7)(D) to the United States Environmental Protection Agency and the United States Army Corps of Engineers.

(2) COORDINATION.—In carrying out activities identified in the Record of Decision under authorities provided under other provisions of law, the United States Environmental Protection Agency and the United States army Corps of Engineers shall coordinate such activities with Federal agencies and State agencies.

(h) GOVERNANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program, the Secretary and the Federal agency heads may participate as nonvoting members of the California Bay-Delta Authority, as established in the California Bay-Delta Authority Act (Cal. Water Code 79400 et seq.), to the extent consistent with Federal law, for the full duration of the period the Authority continues to be authorized by State law.

SEC. 105. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than February 15 of each year, the Secretary, in cooperation with the Governor, shall submit to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report that—

(A) describes the status of implementation of all components of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program;

(B) sets forth any written determination resulting from the review required under subsection (b); and

(C) includes any revised schedule prepared under subsection (b).

(2) CONTENTS.—The report required under paragraph (1) shall describe—

(A) the progress of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program in meeting the implementation schedule for the Program in a manner consistent with the Record of Decision;

(B) the status of implementation of all components of the Program;

(C) expenditures in the past fiscal year for implementing the Program;

(D) accomplishments during the past fiscal year in achieving the objectives of additional and improved—

(i) water storage, including water yield;

(ii) water quality; including the progress in achieving the water supply targets as described in Section 2.2.4 of the Record of Decision, the environmental water account requirements as described in Section 2.2.7, and the water quality targets as described in Section 2.2.9, and any pending actions that may affect the ability of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program to achieve those targets and requirements.

(iii) water use efficiency;

(iv) ecosystem restoration;

(v) watershed management;

(vi) levee system integrity;

(vii) water transfers;

(viii) water conveyance; and

(ix) water supply reliability;

(E) program goals, current schedules, and relevant financing agreements;

(F) progress on—

(i) storage projects;

(ii) conveyance improvements;

(iii) levee improvements;

(iv) water quality projects; and

(v) water use efficiency programs;

(G) completion of key projects and milestones identified in the Ecosystem Restoration Program; including progress on project effectiveness, monitoring, and accomplishments;

(H) development and implementation of local programs for watershed conservation and restoration;

(I) progress in improving water supply reliability and implementing the Environmental Water Account;

(J) achievement of commitments under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.) and endangered species law of the State;

(K) implementation of a comprehensive science program;

(i) progress on project effectiveness;

(L) progress toward acquisition of the Federal and State permits (including permits under section 404(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1344(a))) for implementation of projects in all identified Program areas;

(M) progress in achieving benefits in all geographic regions covered by the Program;

(N) legislative action on—

(i) water transfer;

(ii) groundwater management;

(iii) water use efficiency; and

(iv) governance issues;

(O) the status of complementary actions;

(P) the status of mitigation measures;

(Q) revisions to funding commitments and Program responsibilities; and

(R) a list of all existing authorities, including the authorities listed in section 103(b)(4) provided by the relevant Federal agency, under which the Secretary or the heads of the Federal agencies may carry out the purposes of this title.''

(b) ANNUAL REVIEW OF PROGRESS AND BALANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than November 15 of each year, the Secretary, in cooperation with the Governor, shall review progress in implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program based on—

(A) consistency with the Record of Decision; and

(B) balance in achieving the goals and objectives of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(2) REVISED SCHEDULE.—If, at the conclusion of each such annual review or if a timely annual review is not undertaken, the Secretary, or the Governor, determine in writing that either the Program implementation schedule has not been substantially adhered to, or that balanced progress in achieving the goals and objectives of the Program is not occurring, the Secretary, in coordination with the Governor and the Bay-Delta Public Advisory Committee, shall prepare a revised schedule to achieve balanced progress in all Calfed Bay-Delta Program elements consistent with the Record of Decision.

(c) FEASIBILITY STUDIES.—Any feasibility studies completed as a result of this title shall include identification of project benefits and a cost allocation plan consistent with the beneficiaries pay provisions of the Record of Decision.

SEC. 106. CROSSCUT BUDGET.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President's budget shall include such requests as the President considers necessary and appropriate for the level of funding for each of the Federal agencies to carry out its responsibilities under the Calfed Bay-Delta Program.

(b) REQUESTS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The funds shall be requested for the Federal agency with authority and programmatic responsibility for the obligation of the funds, in accordance with paragraphs (2) through (5) of section 103(b).

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 30 days after the submission of the budget of the President to Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in coordination with the Governor, shall submit to the appropriate authorizing and appropriating committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives a financial report certified by the Secretary containing—

(1) an interagency budget crosscut report that—

(A) displays the budget proposed, including any interagency or intra-agency transfer, for each of the Federal agencies to carry out the Calfed Bay-Delta Program for the upcoming fiscal year, separately showing funding requested under both pre-existing authorities and under the new authorities granted by this title; and

(B) identifies all expenditures since 1998 by the Federal and State governments to achieve the objectives of the Calfed Bay-Delta Program;

(2) a detailed accounting of all funds received and obligated by all Federal agencies and State agencies responsible for implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program during the previous fiscal year;

(3) a budget for the proposed projects (including a description of the project, authorization level, and project status) to be carried out in the upcoming fiscal year with the Federal portion of funds for activities under section 103(b); and

(4) a listing of all projects to be undertaken in the upcoming fiscal year with the Federal portion of funds for activities under section 103(b).

SEC. 107. FEDERAL SHARE OF COSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Federal share of the cost of implementing the Calfed Bay-Delta Program for fiscal years 2005 through 2008 in the aggregate, as set forth in the Record of Decision, shall not exceed 33.3 percent.

(b) CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM BENEFICIARIES.—The Secretary shall ensure that all beneficiaries, including the environment, shall pay for benefits received from all projects or activities carried out under the Calfed Bay-Delta Program. This requirement shall not be limited to storage and conveyance projects and shall be implemented so as to encourage integrated resource planning.

SEC. 108. COMPLIANCE WITH STATE AND FEDERAL LAW.

Nothing in this title—

(1) invalidates or preempts State water law or an interstate compact governing water;

(2) alters the rights of any State to any appropriated share of the waters of any body of surface or ground water;

(3) preempts or modifies any State or Federal law or interstate compact governing water quality or disposal; or

(4) confers on any non-Federal entity the ability to exercise any Federal right to the waters of any stream or to any ground water resource;and,

(5) alters or modified any provision of existing Federal law, except as specifically provided in this title.

SEC. 109. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary and the heads of the Federal agencies to pay the Federal share of the cost of carrying out the new and expanded authorities described in paragraphs (6) and (7) of section 103(b), $389,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2005 through 2008, to remain available until expended.

TITLE II—SALTON SEA STUDY PROGRAM

SEC. 201. SALTON SEA STUDY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of reclaiming the Salton Sea.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The study referred to in subsection (a) shall consider each of the following:

(1) Appraisal investigations.

(2) Feasibility studies.

(3) Environmental Reports.

(4) Cost sharing responsibilities.

(5) Responsibility for operation and maintenance.

(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress the study developed under this section no later than 1 year after the date of enactment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 711, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) on his amendment.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have been working hard to improve this bill since its introduction. The amendment in the nature of a substitute is a bipartisan amendment that has been carefully crafted based on input from Senator FEINSTEIN and her staff, the administration, the State of California, and water groups. This amendment was not crafted in a vacuum, and I believe it addresses many concerns voiced over the last several weeks.

Reflecting the dynamic that differing regions of California represent, as opposed to the whole State, the amendment also includes necessary policy provisions:

Bay-Delta water quality protections: Bay-Delta water quality issues have not been adequately addressed in the past and they need to be fixed now. It is not fair that the constituents of the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO), or the constituents of the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), or the constituents of the gentleman from California (Mr. CARDOZA) should bear the highest water quality burdens because of circumstances outside their control.

These water quality provisions addressed in this bill are the results of discussions between water users throughout California, including in-Delta water uses. Most importantly, these provisions do not allow increased pumping unless water quality standards are met.

Water storage: Everyone wants to have more flexibility delivering water supplies throughout the State. Increased storage will give us more flexibility and improve water quality. In fact, my good friends in districts in the Bay area and beyond recently supported the Los Vaqueros expansion for these very purposes. My amendment provides that CALFED storage projects are subject to appropriate feasibility studies and if Congress does not act to disapprove them in 120 days, then construction is authorized.

Ensuring that adequate storage is part of a balanced CALFED is important here since CALFED expenditures so far have been imbalanced. This provision helps develop CALFED storage, and in no way undermines the regulatory process, including the Endangered Species Act, NEPA, SEQA, the Clean Water Act, and a number of other Federal acts and laws. Furthermore, these projects are still subject to appropriations.

Ecosystem restoration: The amendment has a ''right to know'' provision on how taxpayer dollars are being spent on ecosystem restoration. These provisions ask the Federal agencies to submit a management plan for CALFED-related ecosystem projects. These management plans would require a cost analysis, possible alternatives, disclosure of impacts, and required mitigation. All other projects, like storage projects, require much more detailed feasibility reports. We are only asking for a management plan that sits before Congress, which has no veto authority over such a management plan. This is nothing more than a good government plan that in no way hinders ecosystem restoration.

Mr. Speaker, there has never been a water bill that everybody likes. God knows I know that. But this is getting close. We have worked hard to resolve concerns and will continue to work with my colleagues and stakeholders on these issues. We cannot let the perfect be the enemy of the good. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) seek to control the time in opposition to the amendment?

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. No, I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does any Member seek to control time in opposition?

If not, without objection, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) may control the time reserved for opposition; and the gentlewoman is recognized for 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to thank my good friend, the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), for accommodating suggestions from minority staff and myself to improve this bill.

In particular, I am very pleased that the language that was inserted earlier in the week to allow the use of Central Valley Project Restoration Fund for the Environmental Water Account purchases has been deleted. This revision would make it clear that the CVP Restoration Fund cannot be used inappropriately.

I am very thankful and look forward to continuing to work on California's water projects, as well as other projects for the rest of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate on the amendment has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 711, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended, and on the further amendment in the nature of a substitute by the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT).

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT).

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. GEORGE MILLER OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. George Miller of California moves to recommit the bill H.R. 2828, to the Committee on Resources, with instructions to report the bill forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike Section 103(b)(5)(A)(i)(III).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to recommit, and every Member of the House who is concerned about runaway spending should join me in this vote.

The motion seeks to delete just one feature of this bill: The so-called ''preauthorization of future California water projects'' that ends a century of congressional review and design of massive, costly, and sometimes controversial water projects.

Passing this bill without deleting the so-called preauthorization provision grants a blank check to bureaucrats and Federal agencies to spend billions of dollars on dams, conveyance facilities, and other potentially controversial water projects in California without any further authorization by Congress.

This provision grants special privileges to California projects. They alone, not projects in Arizona, Colorado, or New Mexico, or anywhere else in the reclamation west, would be cleared for construction based upon a study done by the planners in the Department of the Interior. A study might reveal serious fiscal, legal, or environmental problems. But the project goes ahead anyway unless Congress passes a bill to stop it. If that bill is not brought to the floor of the House, the project goes forward.

So as projects in other States are forced to wait for bills to pass authorizing their construction, California moves to the front of the line, awaiting no authorization, freed from the scrutiny that will be imposed on projects in every other State. Those of you who have been here for a while know that water projects typically move in packages so that no State is left behind. Well, say goodbye to that process if this bill passes with the California preauthorization process, because many of the biggest, most expensive, most controversial projects will be off and running while you are still in the paddock.

Now, some may ask, why would I, as a Californian, raise this concern? Because I am a strong supporter of CALFED, I am a strong supporter of the record of decision, and I would like to support this legislation. But as the former chairman of both the Subcommittee on Water and Power and the full Committee on Resources, I know that a project that bypasses the authorization process is going to face withering opposition in the appropriations process and in the regulatory and judicial process and among the voters back at home, and that is why I offer this motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER).

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in strong support of the Miller-Tauscher motion to recommit.

As a member of California who represents a large part of the San Francisco Bay-Delta, I fully understand the importance of reauthorizing the CALFED program. Now more than ever, California needs the Federal Government to be an active financial partner in helping restore the delta's ecosystem and meeting our State's growing water needs.

However, the preauthorization language in this bill severely jeopardizes our ability to renew this critical State-Federal partnership. Not only is it bad economic and environmental policy, but insisting on preauthorization, knowing that the other body will reject it, is a failed strategy for reaching agreement this year. Passing this bill as it is currently drafted is a divisive step that fails to really help Californians.

Mr. Speaker, with less than 30 legislative days remaining in the 108th Congress, we must have a smart strategy to get a CALFED bill done for the people of California before we adjourn. I urge my colleagues to support this motion, which will simply remove one paragraph from the bill and immediately return it to the House for consideration.

Our constituents sent us here to make timely progress on water policies that will help them. Removing this objectionable roadblock provision will help us move forward. I urge my colleagues to support the motion to recommit.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I thank the gentlewoman for her comments, and say to the House that if this motion is passed, the bill would come back immediately to the House for its consideration and then it would move on to the Senate without this very controversial provision that has substantial Senate opposition and we can get on with passing this bill that the people have worked so terribly hard on and which our State needs.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO).

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

This is not about setting a precedent over the way legislation is done. As the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) has already pointed out, this is done very regularly in the process here.

□ 1245

My colleagues that offer this motion to recommit are not offering a motion to strip out everything that is authorized in this bill. They are only going after specifically the water storage projects. This is a bill that has been in the process, as has been said, many times for over 10 years of trying to come up with a compromise that everybody, Northern California, Southern California, east and west, everybody supported.

We were able to put together a compromise with the good work of the subcommittee chairman and ranking member, and now we have somebody coming to the floor trying to blow that up. It is the same thing that we fought through with all of the water problems in California. You always have somebody who thinks they did not get everything they wanted or that somebody else may be getting something, and they try to blow it up. That is exactly what is going on here.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the motion to recommit.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO), the ranking Democrat.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit on H.R. 2828. The passage of this motion would prevent a bipartisan measure from moving forward, and we have worked in good faith with the chairman and his staff to try to develop the California water bill. And I know, as has been said, we do not all get what we want. I know I did not get everything I needed and wanted.

The gentleman from California (Chairman CALVERT) has stripped numerous provisions that I objected to, including language relating to the Clean Water Act, the Beneficiary Pays, the role of the Record of Decision, and the role of the Interior Department in implementing the CALFED program.

I am sympathetic to the issue. However, I cannot support this motion to recommit at this time.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. CARDOZA).

Mr. CARDOZA. Mr. Speaker, I regretfully rise in opposition to this motion. H.R. 2828 has been negotiated in a bipartisan manner, and I have been pleased to be part of such a fair and open process. The gentleman from California (Chairman POMBO) and the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) have maintained a very open process, as both the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) and I can attest.

The majority has accepted several of the requests that were put forward by the Democratic committee members, including critical water quality and water recycling language, and have acted in good faith. To send this bill back to committee now would mean the likely end to CALFED this year. If we do not act today and send this bill to conference where ongoing conversations with Senator FEINSTEIN can resume, we will lose precious time and I fear lose our remaining window of opportunity to address the water crisis in California.

Because of the job-creation impact, the building trades unions mentioned in my previous Dear Colleague wholeheartedly support final passage of H.R. 2828.

I urge my Democratic colleagues to defeat this motion.

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

As my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), knows, negotiating water agreements is not easy; and we have had numerous conversations about the subject of water over the years. And certainly he has a long history in water in the State of California. As everyone knows who has been involved in water negotiations, they are difficult. There are conflicts all over the place. One of the concepts that we took when we went down this road was balance; and the Record of Decision that was a difficult Record of Decision to come to a conclusion, part of that was water storage on four projects. There were a lot more water projects that were being considered in that Record of Decision, but it was weaned down in difficult negotiations to really a limited amount of water storage.

Over $12 million has been spent to date on looking at the feasibility of these four projects. All of the environmental laws must be met, and that is considerable, before any of these projects could ever become feasible. And even then if in fact they are deemed feasible, you would have to go through the appropriation process.

As I would point out to my friends, the Auburn Dam is an authorized project. I doubt if it will ever get appropriations to build. Unless a project is feasible, unless it has the political support in order to build, it will not happen.

And so I would say this motion to recommit takes the balance out of the process that we put together, and I believe it would remove all support for this CALFED process to continue. So I would urge my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the motion to recommit and vote ''yes'' on final passage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote, if ordered, on the question of passage.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 139, nays 255, not voting 40, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY) (during the vote). Members are reminded to record their votes.

□ 1312

Mr. MORAN of Kansas and Mrs. CUBIN changed their vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

Ms. SLAUGHTER and Messrs. RYAN of Ohio, DAVIS of Illinois, STRICKLAND, RUSH, and ANDREWS changed their vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated against:

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, on July 9, 2004, I missed rollcall vote No. 354, the motion to recommit for H.R. 2828. I missed the vote due to a meeting I had with the President of the World Bank. Had I been present I would have voted ''no.''

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 3598, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 2004

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 706 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3598.

□ 1312

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3598) to establish an interagency committee to coordinate Federal manufacturing research and development efforts in manufacturing, strengthen existing programs to assist manufacturing innovation and education, and expand outreach programs for small and medium-sized manufacturers, and for other purposes, with Mr. TERRY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT).

□ 1315

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to be able to bring this bill before the House today, and I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), chairman of the Subcommittee on Environment, Standards, and Technology of the Committee on Science for his insight and persistence in introducing this bill and refining it to the point that it can be signed into law.

Let me tell you what this bill is all about. It is about my favorite four letter word; and do not get nervous, it is a four letter word that you can use in polite company and on the floor of the people's House. This is a jobs bill. The programs that we reauthorize and create in this bill will enable American manufacturers to create and retain good, high-paying jobs in the United States of America.

Other than ensuring national security, this Congress has no task more important than promoting job creation and retention; that is, ensuring economic security.

I can say this is a jobs bill without fear of contradiction. Most of the programs in this bill are not new experiments. We are reauthorizing programs that have a proven track record of saving and creating jobs. What is more important?

The Manufacturing Extension Partnership program, which I and others helped create back in the 1980s, has helped countless small manufacturers by giving them the knowledge they need to use the latest technology and manufacturing processes. A survey of just one-third of MEP customers found that they had created or saved more than 35,000 jobs, and that is just one-third of the customers, thanks to this program. And the MEP centers help more than 18,000 small companies each and every year.

I do not need to look any further than my own congressional district to see the good this program has done, and I am sure that is true of every Member of this House. To take just one evocative example from upstate New York, our local MEP center helped an olive oil manufacturer reorganize its factory floor in a way that enabled it to remain competitive in a highly competitive business and stay in business, preserving jobs. And MEP centers have greased the wheels of commerce all across this great Nation of ours.

This bill also reauthorizes the internal laboratories of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, or NIST, the Nation's oldest federal laboratory, a home to Nobel Laureates, and the Federal lab most focused on the problems of industry, including manufacturing.

I want to thank the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL) for the amendment that added the NIST authorization to this bill. I have to admit, as my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will no doubt point out, that Congress has underfunded these programs in recent years, over my objections, I would add. But this bill commits us to ensuring that the MEP programs and NIST's laboratories remain healthy so that they can help American manufacturers remain healthy.

I should add that the appropriators are already following through on the headway we are making in this bill. The Commerce appropriation we approved yesterday includes $106 million for MEP and a healthy increase for NIST laboratories. I congratulate the appropriators, and I congratulate my colleagues in the House for passing that bill just yesterday.

This bill, this jobs bill, will keep those programs on a healthy path in the future. The bill authorizes increases in the Manufacturing Extension Partnership so that in fiscal year 2008, MEP centers should be receiving 14 percent more than we hope they will receive next year, and that is more than a 200 percent jump from the $39 million in fiscal year 2004.

But this bill does more than just reauthorize old programs, although that alone would boost American manufacturing. The bill creates several new programs: A new grant program for the MEP centers, to help them design new ways to assist businesses; a new grant program to encourage businesses and universities to work together to solve industrial problems through applied research; and a new fellowship program to entice both graduate students and senior researchers into conducting research in the manufacturing sciences.

This is a good bill. It is a bill designed to help manufacturers, it is a bill designed to help small businesses. In short, this entire bill is based on a simple principle: You cannot get ahead by standing still. This bill will help our manufacturers get ahead by enabling them to take advantage of the latest research, the latest technology and the latest ideas about how to organize manufacturing, and all that will translate into jobs.

Now, we will be hearing an animated debate over the next hour or so on amendments to this bill. That debate should not obscure the fundamental bipartisan agreement on the importance of this measure. The gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) pointed out in the Committee on Rules how necessary and sound this bill is. The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL) pointed out on the floor in yesterday's debate how necessary and sound this bill is, while pointing, quite rightly, to his own significant contribution to it.

The issue we will be debating with some of the amendments is whether we should do even more with this bill. I say ''with this bill,'' because, of course, we should be doing more overall. There are programs in other agencies that help manufacturers. There are other steps unrelated to research that we can take and have taken to help manufacturers. But we should not weigh down this bill because we can do even more in other arenas.

Our manufacturers need the help this bill will provide, and they need it now. Let us move ahead with this portion of our jobs agenda, and then we can turn our attention to other matters.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3598 in its current form, which can be signed into law. And that is what we need, legislation that can be signed into law.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to talk about an unfortunate missed opportunity. We are debating H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act, a bill designed to help our manufacturing sector. In the end, I will vote for this bill, but it is a shell of what could have been accomplished had we worked together in a bipartisan fashion.

I think we can all agree that our manufacturing sector has been hard hit during the past 4 years. Exports had their largest drop in 50 years, more than 2.7 million manufacturing jobs have been lost, and the manufacturing recovery has been the slowest on record. Last month, we lost another 11,000 manufacturing jobs.

While H.R. 3598 is a small step in the right direction, it is hardly the comprehensive manufacturing bill that could have been produced by the Committee on Science or by this House. The bill does little beyond authorizing modest funding for the manufacturing extension partnership program, MEP. I strongly support the MEP, but should not be the only Federal program that assists and supports our manufacturing sector.

During the Committee on Science's markup, Democratic Members offered a series of amendments designed to strengthening the bill. Most of these amendments were defeated on a party-line vote. Our chairman reluctantly opposed the amendments, not on substantive grounds, but because of administration objections.

In fact, through a series of negotiations, in which the minority was not invited to participate, the White House whittled H.R. 3598, as introduced by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), down to the bare bones MEP authorization we see today.

The original bill presented by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) included the creation of an Undersecretary For Manufacturing and Technology. Now it is gone. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) originally included $514 million for the MEP program, which, after unilateral negotiations with the administration, was cut by $60 million. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) originally included $192 million in research activities related to manufacturing, which, after unilateral negotiations with the administration, was slashed to $55.6 million.

The bill before us today shows that this administration just does not get it. We would have liked to have offered several amendments to restore the cuts that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) made to his own bill at the behest of the administration. However, many of our amendments were not made in order by the Committee on Rules.

Today, I and some of my colleagues on the Committee on Science will be offering a few amendments that were actually made in order by the Committee on Rules. But let me give you an example of an amendment that was not made in order by the Committee on Rules.

First, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) to provide an authorization for the Advanced Technology Program, ATP. Yesterday, during the debate on the rule, the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) said that this amendment was not made in order because the Advanced Technology Program really is not a manufacturing-oriented program.

That is just not the case. Almost 40 percent of ATP funds currently support manufacturing projects. The rest of the ATP funds support the development of new technologies, technologies that will create the manufacturing industries of the future.

New chip technologies will result in new chip manufacturing factories and more jobs for Americans. The administration's own analysis for ATP shows that the benefits from just a few of the ATP projects reviewed to date are projected to exceed $17 billion. ATP supports our current manufacturing base and supports the development of our future manufacturing base.

So H.R. 3598 represents a bit of the pie, but not the whole pie. Some groups reluctantly support this bill, figuring that it is better to get something rather than nothing at all. While this may be true at times, it is not the right thing to do in this case.

Manufacturing is just too important to the economic health of our Nation. It is also often forgotten that the manufacturing multiplier effect creates 8 million additional jobs in other sectors. We need to do our best not only to maintain, but also to strengthening our manufacturing base, and to keep these high-paying jobs here at home.

Mr. Chairman, I will say that we have missed a great opportunity to support our manufacturing community and our constituents who work in the manufacturing fields. I hope that by passing our amendments to H.R. 3598 today, we can come together in a bipartisan way to strengthen this bill, to help our workers and our firms.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me just say that in the last 3½ years, we have lost 2.5 million jobs. Millions more Americans are concerned about losing their job. They deserve better than half a loaf. They deserve better than saying we will get to you later. They deserve better than to say we are afraid to do the right thing, because the administration does not like it.

We are an equal branch of the Federal Government. We need to stand up on our own legs today and demonstrate that, and do the right thing for our manufacturing sector in this Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Environment, Standards, and Technology.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act. The goal of my legislation is simple: It is to help small and medium-sized manufacturers better compete in the global marketplace. Why is this necessary? Because manufacturing is in trouble in the United States.

You have heard the figures of the over a million jobs lost in manufacturing in the past few years. At the same time, the funding has been cut for this particular program.

Like communities all over the United States, industries in my hometown of Grand Rapids, Michigan, face countless challenges. Globalization is rapidly changing the way business is done, and our small and medium-sized firms are particularly vulnerable to these changes.

□ 1330

Many are literally fighting for survival.

I asked them what I could do to help. In talking to manufacturers in my district, one thing was clear. They all said the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program was a tremendously important program in helping them remain competitive.

The MEP program has roughly 60 centers and 400 satellite offices throughout the country. These centers provide small manufacturers with tools and assistance to help increase productivity and efficiency.

As an example, the Michigan MEP regional office in Grand Rapids, known as the Right Place Program, helped the family-owned Wolverine Coil Spring Company to develop a more efficient packaging and auditing system that cut in half the wait time for delivery of finished products.

Unfortunately, Congress cut funding for the MEP program from $106 million in fiscal year 2003 to $39 million in 2004. This limited funding caused many centers to lay off people and cut back their services at a time when businesses needed them most.

Another major concern raised by my constituents was technological advances by other countries. For our firms to compete today and in the future, I was told we need more research and development into how to manufacture products better, faster, and cheaper. I also learned that we need to provide a way for manufacturers to learn quickly about the latest advances from the research community.

With these thoughts in mind, I developed H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology and Competitiveness Act. This bill specifically will establish an interagency committee and external advisory committee on manufacturing research and development to ensure that Federal agencies will coordinate their programs related to manufacturing R&D and target them on concerns that matter most to industry. It will also help industry improve manufacturing processes and technology by establishing a pilot grant program that would fund joint efforts by universities and industry to solve challenges in manufacturing technology. It would also train more students and senior researchers in the manufacturing sciences by establishing post-doctoral and senior research fellowships at the National Institute for Standards and Technology. In addition, it would authorize the MEP program at $110 million to ensure all centers remain open.

Let me just offer a comparison to show that this is certainly a perfectly acceptable amount of funding. If we compare it to the Agriculture Extension Service, which everyone agrees has worked very, very well for a very long time, to the extent that what is discovered in the lab one year is used out in the fields the next year, we find the Cooperative Extension Service of the Agriculture Department is funded at over $440 million per year, four times what we are suggesting for the MEP program. At the same time, in agriculture, we have just 1.5 percent of the American workforce. Manufacturing has approximately 14 percent of the workforce. Clearly, we need a program such as MEP so that we can do for manufacturing what for years we have done for agriculture.

The bill also provides new ways to help small and medium-sized manufacturers by establishing a competitive grant program for MEP centers. And it authorizes the laboratory programs at the National Institute for Standards and Technology, which provides critical research and standards for most of our industries.

This legislation has received widespread and bipartisan support. The National Association of Manufacturers, the U.S. Small Manufacturing Coalition, and the National Council for Advanced Manufacturing, just to name a few, all support this legislation. I have also worked with the administration to ensure the bill can be passed into law and will receive the President's signature.

Mr. Chairman, this is the key point I want everyone to understand: I wanted to develop legislation that would help our manufacturers and that could make it through the entire congressional and administrative process to become law. Our manufacturers need our help and support now. Some of my colleagues are going to offer amendments that would seriously jeopardize the bill from passing into law.

One such amendment will be offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON). His amendment would increase the authorization of MEP by an additional $90 million over the next 4 years and increase the amount the Federal Government contributes to the program from one-third to one-half. While well intentioned, this amendment will upset the delicate balance of support for full funding of the MEP program and could lead to some centers receiving less money. We are back on the right track with the fiscal year 2005 Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill which passed the House yesterday with $106 million included for MEP, and I do not want to jeopardize the commitments made to achieve this funding level.

I acknowledge the hard work of my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG) for their help on getting this appropriation.

As I said from the beginning, my goal was to develop and pass into law legislation that would help our small manufacturers better compete in the global marketplace, and H.R. 3598 does just that.

I want to conclude by thanking the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL), the ranking member of my subcommittee, and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON), the ranking member of the full committee, for their help and input throughout this process. I especially want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the esteemed chairman of the Committee on Science, who has done an outstanding job on that committee; and I thank him for his unwavering commitment to move this legislation through the Congress and be signed into law.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge everyone to support small and medium-sized manufacturers by supporting H.R. 3598.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Chairman, with 2.5 million manufacturing jobs lost in 3 years, including 40,000 in my State of Connecticut, many outsourced to other countries like China and Singapore, we all understand that steps must be taken to revive what is the very backbone of America's economy. Reauthorizing the valuable Manufacturing Extension Partnership, a critical program that supports high-risk, early-stage research and development, is certainly a part of that effort.

If we are going to help manufacturers become more productive and innovative, if we are going to boost sales and invest in modernization and employment, a strong reauthorization of the MEP program is critical.

But none of us are under any illusion that this program alone will revive the struggling sector; and, frankly, the other provisions in this bill are little more than a Band-Aid for an economic sector that is bleeding jobs. What our manufacturers need from this body is not window dressing; what they need is a bold vision, one that makes our Federal Tax Code work for, and not against, our manufacturers.

American companies should not have to resort to transferring jobs to countries where workers make less and have fewer benefits just to stay competitive. We should encourage good corporate citizenship and incentivize work done right here on our shores. We should ban the use of taxpayer dollars to outsource or take offshore work formerly done in the United States. We should get serious about making our trading partners live up to their obligations under the World Trade Organization, and we should reform our nonimmigrant visa programs that allow companies to displace American workers by bringing foreign workers in at lower wages, and we should prohibit companies that move their headquarters overseas to avoid paying American taxes from receiving any Federal contracts. That is what we should be doing to keep this country competitive, but we are not.

While I am glad the administration has finally agreed to support the MEP program at the levels that we supported 2 years ago, I believe we have missed a real opportunity to do something meaningful on behalf of all of our manufacturers, whether they be large or small. That is what the task of this body ought to be, rather than just putting off what we ought to do for manufacturers in this country.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), a real leader in the effort to protect domestic manufacturing.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong and enthusiastic support of this bill and congratulate the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), in the development of this legislation.

Indeed, small and medium-sized manufacturers are the unsung heroes of America's strong economy. All of our large multinational firms depend on the strong, vibrant, and productive domestic manufacturing sector. Their ability to compete in a global economy is tied to our home-grown, small and medium-sized manufacturing firms.

The Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act will reauthorize the MEP program, which is the most successful Federal program supporting manufacturing. When America was an agricultural economy, we built land grant universities explicitly to provide the knowledge base necessary to assure continuous product development, continuous improvements in quality, and continuous improvements in productivity in the agricultural sector. That partnership between government and the private sector is well developed in agriculture and is successful.

What this bill does is to broaden the partnership between manufacturing and government to assure the continual improvement of product and process to assure the competitiveness of manufacturing in a global economy.

Not only does this bill reauthorize the MEP program, the bill also ensures that all Federal programs dealing with manufacturing will coordinate their activities so we will get the most bang for the buck and the small manufacturer will be most able to take advantage of Federal support where appropriate. It will also fund a program that will improve collaboration with researchers and industry.

We need to foster stronger relationships between the research community and the business community to strengthen manufacturing in a period in which changes in technology, in process, and in management capability are occurring at a historic pace.

In my home State, the MEP program funds CONNSTEP, a public-private partnership that has created 1,300 jobs just in 2003. CONNSTEP provides a hand up for small manufacturers by giving them access to advances in technology and management techniques. Most importantly, it is a cost-effective partnership. For every one dollar in government investment, CONNSTEP creates $4 in tax revenue.

America's free market philosophy has allowed us to be leaders in the global economy. However, we can never forget that our competitors in Asia, Europe, and elsewhere have a long history of using the powers and resources of the state to bolster their companies.

Our companies, large and small, have demonstrated time and time again that they are the best because they are innovative and highly adaptable.

This bill, by my esteemed colleagues, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), modernize the public-private partnership that in our country strengthens our manufacturing sector, but does it in a way that respects their independence, their ingenuity, vitality, and responsibility to be competitive. This bill will help our companies live up to the lofty goals of our economy, and I urge its support.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA).

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed that the Committee on Science has missed a golden opportunity to fashion a meaningful bipartisan manufacturing bill. The bill we are debating does little, other than providing an authorization for the Manufacturing Extension Program.

As much as I appreciate the MEP, a program President Bush has repeatedly tried to shut down, by the way, pretending that authorizing this single program is the only worthwhile step that can be taken to help our manufacturing sector shows a lack of imagination and political will.

I do not have time to cover all of the good amendments that Democrats offered in the committee, but I would like to discuss my amendment to authorize funding for the Advanced Technology Program, which was not made in order for the floor.

During the debate on the rule for consideration of this bill, it was said that this amendment should not be allowed because this bill was only supposed to be about Federal programs that were dedicated to manufacturing. But according to its statute, ATP was created ''for the purpose of assisting United States businesses in creating and applying the generic technology and research results necessary to, one, commercialize significant new scientific discoveries and technologies rapidly; and, two, refine manufacturing technologies.''

Mr. Chairman, ATP does provide significant support for manufacturing. In 43 competitions held between 1990 and 2004, 39 percent of the awards involve either direct or indirect development of advanced manufacturing technologies. ATP does this by helping small businesses, small companies. Over 85 percent of all manufacturing technical awards go to small companies, and average employment growth of small company projects is over 180 percent.

In light of these facts, I tried to offer an amendment to authorize money for ATP at $169 million per year for fiscal years 2005 through 2008 and focus the funding on manufacturing projects.

□ 1345

I am not alone in my support for ATP. The Committee on Science's 2004 Views and Estimates on the budget supported funding ATP at the same level in my amendment.

In fact, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) both testified before the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State of the Committee on Appropriations that ATP is ''necessary to help provide the edge that U.S. manufacturers need to compete in the global economy.''

Many associations support this. Let me close by saying I am disappointed that we are missing this opportunity to deal comprehensively with the long-festering problems of the U.S. manufacturing base. Unfortunately, because the Bush administration told the committee Republicans in negotiations that did not involve committee Democrats, that the President would not sign the bill if it did anything bold. And today we will be approving a bill that is not all it can be.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Science for yielding me time, and I congratulate him and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for his work on this legislation in bringing it to the floor today.

It is absolutely critical that we pass this legislation and to provide some assistance back to our manufacturing sector. The administration in its report ''Manufacturing in America, A Comprehensive Strategy To Address the Challenges to U.S. Manufacturers,'' highlighted the need for investment and innovation through enhanced partnerships for the transfer of technology and support for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership Program, the MEP program.

The U.S. has an excellent research foundation from which to develop manufacturing technology, but this process and the people that do technology transfer, they need help.

Manufacturing in America faces stiff challenges. The challenges today come from the nature of the competition. It is now a global economy. Competitors across the world are responding quicker, faster and more effectively to the needs of their customers. We need to help provide our manufacturers with the tools to compete. One of those tools is technology and innovation. The MEP program is that type of a program.

In west Michigan, this has been a very, very successful program. In Michigan, the MEP program has worked with over 587 small and medium-sized manufacturing firms throughout the State. In their 13-year history, they have worked with 25 percent of all small and medium sized manufacturers in Michigan. This assistance increased and retained sales in amounts over $70 million in just 2002. This assistance also aided in the creation or retention of over 800 jobs that would not have otherwise occurred.

I know this bill does not solve all of the issues or do everything that this Congress would like to do, specifically an amendment that was proposed by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EMANUEL) which would have fully funded the Jobs for the 21 Century Initiative, a program initiated by the President.

I look forward to working with my colleague to pass that legislation and do it through the Committee on Labor which has jurisdiction over that legislation.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON).

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, let me thank our leaders on the committee and our esteemed ranking member of the full committee.

I rise today and speak in support of my colleagues and the gentleman from Tennessee's (Mr. GORDON) amendment to the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act of 2004.

The Gordon amendment provides a robust MEP program authorized for fiscal year 2005 to 2008; 10 percent above the fiscal year 2004 total; in fiscal year 2005, $116 million and 10 percent per year increases. This compares with approximately a 4 percent increase per year in the base bill. The amendment also adjusts the current one-third Federal cost-share for 6 years and older MEP centers to be as much as one-half in the fiscal year 2005 only.

Unfortunately, when this bill was marked up in committee, this amendment along with all of the amendments that were offered by the Democratic side were voted down. Not because of the merit but because apparently they said the White House had indicated that they would not sign the bill if they did not do it the way they wanted them to do it. But let me assure you that we have lost so many manufacturing jobs.

In Texas alone, we have lost 178,000 since 2001 and overall 8.2 million throughout the country. And you can look at there chart and see all the jobs lost. Every State has lost many jobs. This is the area which we are talking about, manufacturing. And this is also where we need to give attention most.

We are not going to get the manufacturing jobs back that have left this country but we do have to create more. Any country without a manufacturing base will never have a stable economy, and the only way we are going to get it is to do the research, involve the small companies involved.

Let me conclude by saying that when we have this many people, 8.2 million Americans without employment, which accounts for 5.6 percent and over 10 percent African Americans are jobless, we have to give attention to this manufacturing. I do not know what we are going to do instead of it, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are missing the boat when it comes to making sure that Americans will have jobs in the future.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to speak in support of my colleague's, Mr. GORDON'S amendment to the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act of 2004.

The Gordon amendment provides a robust MEP program authorization for FY 2005–2008 (10 percent above FY 2004 totals in FY 2005 ($116 million) and 10 percent per year increases for FY 2006–2008). This compares with an approximately 4 percent increase per year in the base bill. The amendment also adjusts the current one-third federal cost-share for 6-year and older MEP Centers to be as much as one-half in fiscal year 2005 only. Unfortunately, when this bill was marked up in the Committee, this amendment, along with the vast majority of amendments from the Democratic side of the committee voted down.

This language is a necessary addition to the manufacturing bill because it provides a decent level of MEP authorization—essentially a small increase in FY 2005 and $5 million per year more for FY 2006–2008.

This is certainly an improvement on the Bush administration's efforts to kill the program, but we can do better.

MEP's services continue to be under-utilized because of a lack of resources. A recent study by the National Association of Public Administrators found that small manufacturers are underserved by the MEP.

Given the tremendous leverage generated among small businesses by the program, its funding should be ramped up toward a doubling over the next 6–7 years.

In FY 2004, because of the Bush administration's budget proposal and the actions of the Republican Congress, the MEP program was only provided with one-third ($39 million) of the funding necessary to maintain the existing network of MEP Centers (full funding would be $106 million).

According to the Modernization Forum (the umbrella group of state MEP Centers), as of April, MEP Centers will have closed 58 regional offices and reduced staffing by 15 percent. If no additional funds are provided in FY 2005, 16 states may close their MEP Centers. Overall, the MEP Centers could reduce their staff by 50 percent and close half of their regional offices.

Another impact of the current funding shortfall is that Centers are focusing on larger manufacturers that can afford large dollar projects, raising rates beyond the reach of many small manufacturers, and serving few small manufacturers overall. This is a very important addition, especially at a time when over 8.2 million Americans are without employment, which accounts for 5.6 percent, and over 10% of African Americans are currently jobless.

Manufacturing had long been the engine that drove the American economy. Much of manufacturing is still in recession even as the rest of the economy moves forward.

As we debate this bill on the House floor today, I am hopeful that we can reach constructive consensus on many of the amendments being offered today.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART) who is a valued member of the committee and a leader in enhancing the domestic manufacturing sector's ability to compete in a global marketplace.

Ms. HART. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for those kind words and thank him for moving this legislation.

The Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act is extremely important not only nationally, but for our competitiveness in the world. Western Pennsylvania, where I am from, has a long history of manufacturing and I support the programs that help our manufacturers to remain competitive.

H.R. 3598 supports small and medium-sized manufacturers. It helps them to improve their manufacturing processes. It also helps to improve their technology by establishing a pilot program to fund collaborations between universities and industries, that is our employers, to solve problems in manufacturing technology that companies and universities have not been able to solve on their own.

This legislation also ensures that Federal agencies will coordinate their programs related to manufacturing R&D and target them towards the concerns that matter most to industry by establishing an interagency committee on manufacturing research and development and an advisory committee of representatives from outside the Federal Government.

We have a shortage in this country of scientists and engineers. This bill will help train more students and senior researchers in the manufacturing sciences by establishing post-doctoral and senior research fellowships at NIST. This will help us fill that gap.

One provision in particular that I have been working on with my colleagues to secure funding for is the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program. We will reauthorize and improve MEP by passing this bill. We will help manufacturers to improve their processes, reduce waste, and train workers to become more efficient. MEP receives a third of its funding from the Federal Government, a third from the States, and a third from fees charged to those small manufacturers who participate. There are 60 MEP centers and 400 satellite institutions throughout the Nation. These programs make it possible for even the smallest firms to tap into the expertise of knowledgeable manufacturing and business specialists.

Each center, such as Catalyst Connection Pittsburgh, works directly with the manufacturers to provide expertise and service tailored most to their critical needs.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman bringing up this bill. I understand it will help our manufacturers be globally competitive, that will help us maintain our manufacturing sector and have it grow in the future.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EMANUEL).

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) for yielding me time.

Since 2001 the country has lost 2.7 million manufacturing jobs. Now, I offered an amendment which was President Bush's 21st Century Job Initiative in an act of bipartisanship. Let me quote what he said on April 5 when he introduced his initiative. ''We are not training enough people to fill the jobs for the 21st century. There is a skills gap,'' the President says, ''and if we do not adjust quickly, if we do not use our community colleges, we are going to have a shortage of skilled workers in the decades to come.''

Now, when you were designing this bill, you did not include the President's initiative on the 21st Century for manufacturing jobs, so I offered it as an amendment. What does the Committee on Rules do? They knock it down and said, forget it.

I do not know how many times you are going to show disrespect to the President of the United States when he is trying to help with manufacturing jobs. He did not come up here and lobby for it, though. He did not send anybody here to lobby for his initiative, so I do not really so much think that you are showing disrespect because why should you include something the President does not care about? But it makes sense. Every budget he has proposed, he has tried to eliminate the manufacturing extension program, and we have resulted in 2.7 million jobs lost.

On top of that, when the President's economic advisor issued a report, he wanted to redefine flipping hamburgers as a manufacturing job. That is one way America can regain the manufacturing jobs we lost in America. Redefine them. No disrespect to the hamburger flippers in America, but I think there is something critically important about training workers using community colleges to, in fact, add and increase 100,000 workers, as the President of the United States said, in the high technology area of manufacturing. But this bill does not include it.

I still will support this bill because I do not believe in making the perfect the enemy of the good, or in this case, the good the enemy of the adequate. And that is all this bill will try to do, adequately tread water.

The fact is we have lost jobs over the last 3 years in manufacturing, 2.7 million of them, and the result has been because of basic attitude towards the manufacturing sector of benign neglect. The net result is Americans have lost their jobs, their health care, their retirement and their kids' college education because of it. I tried to offer the President's own initiative for the 21st century, and we will lose those jobs because we are not doing what we should be doing in a bipartisan fashion.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Research and the Committee on Science.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H.R. 3598, will ensure that the Federal agencies will coordinate their programs. That is important. It expands the effort to have more students be trained in the manufacturing science. That is important. It ups the authorization amount for the MEP program.

Yesterday we passed a bill that increased the appropriations for that program, the Manufacturing Extension Program. I will just urge every small and medium-sized manufacturer in this country, everyone that knows somebody that works in that kind of industry, to take advantage of this program.

Look, you are getting expert advice for one-third of what it is otherwise going to cost you as a manufacturer for expert advice. The State provides one-third, the feds under our program provides one-third, that leaves one-third for the participating manufacturers. Use the program.

If you know somebody that is in the manufacturing arena, tell them to go to the Web site. Type in MEP and NIST and let a search engine find it. If you want the details, it is www.MEP.NIST.gov/state-affairs. It is a good program. Use it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), a leader on the Committee on Science.

□ 1400

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I know full well the ranking member's commitment to job creation and knowing my good friend, the chairman, I also realize his commitment not only to the Committee on Science but also to creating opportunities for Americans; and I thank the ranking member and the subcommittee Chair, subcommittee ranking member also for their leadership.

But let me tell you why we are on the floor today as I support this legislation, obviously a bill that my good friend, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL), first introduced to the United States Congress, because we are bleeding manufacturing jobs. We are losing them, and we are losing the ability to produce.

There are many things that America is all about, including our wonderful democratic principles, our courage; but we are producers, we manufacture. And my friends, if you look at this, you will understand why we are at the bottom of the heap on job creation and producing; and I think that we need more than this legislation on the floor of the House today. We know in Texas alone we are number two in the worst job loss in America, but it continues across the Nation. East coast, west coast, Midwest, South, Northwest, all of these States, 2.5 million jobs that we have lost.

So, frankly, what I am arguing for today is that we realize that we need a more expansive commitment to creating jobs, the elimination, if you will, of outsourcing so we can create jobs, the idea that we are given to do things with our hands and minds so that we can produce. Agricultural production is one thing, but building things is another; and that is how we built great cities in the Midwest when we had steel factories producing steel and producing cars.

And so what I am asking for is that we do more than what this legislation says and that we enhance the creation of manufacturing jobs and that the President support and stand with us.

Let me also say we have all supported the MEPs. I am glad to hear my colleagues on the other side of the aisle support the MEPs. If you support MEP centers, then support the Jackson-Lee amendment which will preclude the closing of MEPs because under the present structure of the bill, all of our manufacturing partnership programs will be cancelled out because we will be recompeting.

I ask my colleagues to support my amendment ultimately, but also to work with us to better create manufacturing jobs.

I will support H.R. 3598, the Manufacturing Technology Bill, because it is basically inoffensive. This bill started as a bold initiative from my colleague from Colorado Mr. UDALL. I wish we could have kept it stronger, and done more to make jobs for our struggling manufacturing sector. However, I do commend my colleagues from the Science Committee, Mr. EHLERS, and Chairman BOEHLERT for their leadership in pushing for some relief and stimulus for our sagging manufacturing sector.

The United States economy lost 2.5 million manufacturing jobs between January 2001 and January 2004. Although there have been some recent signs of movement in the job markets, too many people are still struggling with unemployment or underemployment. Texas was the second hardest hit of all States—losing over 45,000 jobs between August 2001 and August 2002.

Science and technology are truly the keys that will open the economy and careers of the future. Not only can technology develop products of the future—it can also be used to make making those products more efficient and cost-effective. That makes our businesses more competitive in the world market as they take market share, demand rises, and jobs are created. A solid manufacturing base is the bedrock of any strong economy. America has one of the greatest, hardest-working workforces in the world. The entrepreneurial spirit is strong in America. Small Federal investments and seed monies can be catalytic, and unleash the enormous potential of our manufacturing sector.

I know budgets are tight, due to fiscal mismanagement and a violent and expensive foreign policy. But we should not quit making smart investments in the future of our economy. That would be "penny wise but a pound foolish." We should be investing, not only in traditional manufacturing jobs, but also in alternative energy sources like windmills and geothermal and solar panels and fuel cells. These are the fuels and jobs of the future. This bill seems to be being expedited to make the newspapers by election time. I think if we had all worked together, we could have made this a more powerful Act, and still could have shown the voters what the 108th Congress is capable of.

Regardless, there are some good provisions of this bill. H.R. 3598 would establish an Interagency Committee on Manufacturing Research and Development to coordinate Federal manufacturing R&D efforts, and an advisory committee to guide those efforts. The interagency committee would prepare a strategic plan for manufacturing R&D, produce a coordinated intergency budget, and write an annual report on the Federal programs involved in manufacturing R&D. The President may designate existing bodies to serve as the committees.

It will establish a 3-year cost-shared, collaborative manufacturing R&D pilot grant program at NIST. It will establish a post-doctoral and senior research fellowship program in manufacturing sciences at NIST.

H.R. 3598 will reauthorize the MEP program and create an additional competitive grant program from which MEP centers can obtain supplemental funding for manufacturing-related projects.

Finally, the bill will authorize funding for NIST's Scientific, Technical, and Research Services account, the Baldrige Quality Award program, and the Construction and Maintenance account. H.R. 3598 would also establish a standards education grant program at NIST and authorize funding for it at $773,000 in FY 2005, increasing to $844,000 in FY 2008.

I will be offering an amendment later that will make these efforts stronger by protecting one of the most effective tools in the Federal manufacturing toolbox—the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program—from a wasteful recompetition, aimed at scaling back this vital program.

I hope my colleagues will support it, and support the underlying bill.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I stand today, I guess, as a pig at a wedding here between those who want to fund the program that probably ought to be defunded and those who want to fund it more than it is being funded at current.

The President said that we ought to hold the line at about $35 million. The OMB analyzed the MEP and said, ''Ultimately firms should be willing to pay for the cost of services that contribute to profitability if they determine the services are worth it.''

That is what we as Republicans ought to stand for, and instead we are saying let us help them out some more. For those who do not believe this is corporate welfare, I would suggest that you do go to the Web site, which says MEP is a nationwide network of not-for-profit centers in over 400 locations nationwide whose sole purpose is to provide small and medium-sized manufacturers with the help they need to succeed.

Well, I would suggest that if a business is having trouble succeeding, it is probably because there is not a market for its good or services or its competitors are doing it better.

Now, is it our role as government to actually try to go in and help them out? I would say yes, but we ought to do it by little more of what the gentleman suggested was benign neglect. I think our small and medium-sized businesses out there are crying for a little benign neglect when it comes to government in terms of lesser taxes and less regulation. Let us give them more of what we have been over the past couple of years, which is lower taxes, less regulation, and let them compete on their own.

Now, I come from Arizona where we are long-suffering in terms of professional football. The Cardinals had fewer rushing touchdowns last year than they have in years past. What are we to do? Dispatch a government team or a bunch of experts to tell them how they can have more rushing touchdowns and compete a little more, put a little more fannies in the seats? I do not think we are going to do that, but reading this, I think, What is next? If we are going to do it for manufacturing, why not professional sports?

I would say it is time to back away. Government's role is to provide a conducive regulatory and tax environment and then please stay out of the way, particularly in times of human deficits, $400 billion deficit this year, and we are increasing spending on this program. I would urge a rejection of the bill.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, we have lost over 2.5 million jobs, manufacturing jobs, under this administration. Actually, we have lost 2.7 million jobs. I guess we should not be surprised, considering that the President's economic report suggested fixing the job-loss problem by reclassifying fast-food jobs as manufacturing jobs and by nominating the exporter of U.S. jobs, Anthony Raimondo, as the new manufacturing czar. And he just did that 4 months ago.

Obviously, this administration does not get it, and neither does the leadership in the House. Why else would Republicans bring up a bill that would increase tax breaks for multinational corporations that ship jobs abroad? And why else would the President's chief economist endorse outsourcing as a long-term benefit for jobless Americans?

Well, obviously I believe that we need to be doing a lot more to encourage an increase in the number of manufacturing jobs in our country, but I am glad that after ignoring the country's manufacturing crisis for the last 3 years, we are here today taking a small step forward to reauthorize the Manufacturing Extension Partnerships. I am just sorry that we are not doing more.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I have got to tell you I am disappointed with this bill, but I do have to also tell you I support it, because it does more for our manufacturing sector than the administration is doing now. As my colleague, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), mentioned, the essence of the bill is a version of legislation I introduced last year, the America Manufacturing Works Act; but unlike my bill, this bill does little more than provide an authorization for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership. We could have and should have done so much more, such as authorizing the widely supported ATP program, strengthening the MEP program, which we are discussing now, authorizing an independent study on outsourcing and bolstering our manufacturing workforce education, among many other things.

Still, though, reauthorizing MEP is critical. It is one of the most successful Federal-State partnerships in government; and at a time when our manufacturing base is threatened, it makes no sense to eliminate a program that helps small and mid-sized American manufacturers modernize in order to compete in the demanding global marketplace they face.

Whether for reasons of substance or politics, this administration has finally recognized that eliminating MEP is a bad idea. Now, of course we will not know how sincere they are until we see the proposed funding levels for fiscal year 2006. But today this House has an opportunity to save this important program.

The Chairman, my good friend from New York, mentioned the reauthorization of the funding for NIST core laboratory programs; and this is important because as he knows and we all know, NIST worked to set standards and put measurement activities together to directly support the U.S.'s manufacturing base.

I am troubled, and I know the chairman knows I am, that we have refused to include specific amounts for the construction funding at NIST's Boulder campus, and in the past he has indicated his support for construction funds; and I hope that as we move forward he and I can work together so that such language translates into something meaningful.

In conclusion, as I did say, I support this bill. I believe it is a modest and narrow effort to support this country's manufacturing base. We have much more work to do, but this is a first step; and I urge its passage today.

I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not have the privilege of being a member of this committee, so maybe I can be blunt, though, I have affection for the Chair and my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS). But when I look at these figures on the Manufacturing Extension Program (MEP), I think it is pretty clear what is happening here, and that is, we have an election-year conversion by the House majority to really cover a President who is still asleep at the switch on manufacturing.

We have lost, as has been said here, 2.7 million manufacturing jobs; but while this was happening, what did the House do and the Congress do last year? It cut the MEP by almost 63 percent, almost 63 percent. Now the majority comes back here and says let us restore the cut. That is the conversion.

As to where the President is, despite this mammoth loss of jobs, he proposed in 2003, $12.9 million essentially to phase out MEP. He repeats that in 2004, phase it out essentially. Then 2005, with all of this loss of manufacturing, the President's request is $39 million for MEP. That shows a lack of concern about what has been happening to manufacturing in my State and in this Nation.

Then the suggestion was, have an assistant Secretary for manufacturing. We said it was shuffling chairs. They did nothing to fill that shuffling of chairs for 6 months, and then they appoint somebody else who cannot be confirmed, and now they appoint somebody else and we are still waiting for confirmation.

No, this country needs leadership that is committed to manufacturing in the United States. I hope we will adopt the Gordon amendment. It would be a step forward.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the committee for trying to do something to change the way we address the manufacturing needs in this Nation. We have many challenges facing the manufacturing sector today. With this bill, it is a start; but I am really disappointed that the bill continues to take the business-as-usual approach.

This is not a time for business as usual. We have lost, as my colleagues can see, throughout this country about 2.8 million manufacturing jobs since President Bush took office. In Michigan, like Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Texas, North Carolina, we have lost manufacturing jobs under this administration.

This legislation is only a drop in the bucket as to what we need. It cannot be the President's business-as-usual when it comes to manufacturing jobs.

I urge this administration, and we have written to Secretary Evans, we have written to the President, we have urged them to change course and support real action now to help our U.S. manufacturers. The administration must change course and respond to the skyrocketing health care costs with a prescription drug card benefit that supports employer-provided coverage; address the employer/employee pension issues so that employers can contribute the appropriate amount to the pension funds, freeing up resources for investment, hiring, and wage increases; take action to level the international playing field on these so-called trade agreements we have. They are not fair, but they are certainly free and giving away our jobs.

We urge the President and this administration to support partnerships with the States, businesses and employees which promote research and development, future technologies and a trained workforce. Until we do this, as we Democrats have been advocating for some time, this bill will only be a drop in the bucket to support our U.S. manufacturing.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY), a valued member of the committee.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague on this side of the aisle and my teammate on the Republican congressional baseball team was just in the well, and I think he was speaking against this bill and making an analogy between professional sports teams. I think he mentioned the football team in Arizona and that if we are going to support the manufacturers, we might as well be for supporting professional sports. With all due respect to the gentleman from Arizona, I think the manufacturing sector in this country is a lot more important than any professional sports team.

H.R. 3598 supports small and medium-sized manufacturers by reauthorizing and improving the highly successful Manufacturing Extension Partnership program, MEP. This program helps businesses improve manufacturing processes, reduce waste, and train workers on how to use new equipment. MEP receives one-third of its funding from the Federal Government, one-third from the States, and one-third actually from fees charged to participating small businesses, small manufacturers.

□ 1415

There are 60 MEP centers and 400 satellite institutions throughout the country.

But, Mr. Chairman, let me talk briefly about Georgia. The Georgia Manufacturing Extension Partnership consists of 19 regional offices, four of which are in my district, the 11th District of Georgia, Carrollton, Cartersville, Newman, and Rome, Georgia. It is lead by the Economic Development Institute at my alma mata, the Georgia Institute of Technology, Georgia Tech.

The MEP program has a proven track record. It works directly with local manufacturers to help them improve manufacturing processes, train workers, improve business practices, and apply information technology to their companies. Solutions are offered through a combination of direct assistance from center staff and outside experts.

The Rome-Floyd Recycling Center, Mr. Chairman, is a perfect example. They were struggling, about to go under. But when the MEP program came and helped them and brought in engineers and showed them how to process that recycling and streamline that operation, they began making money and employing people right in my district.

In Georgia, during 2002, MEP assistance helped companies retain or create more than 1,300 jobs, invest more than $33 million, and cut $13 million in unnecessary costs and increase or retain $61 million in sales.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3598 and its authorization of returning funding levels for MEPs back to an effective level will greatly influence the retention and creation of manufacturing jobs throughout Georgia and the Nation. Let us support this good legislation on behalf of the distressed manufacturing sector.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MILLER), an active member of the Committee on Science.

Mr. MILLER of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for yielding me this time, and I agree that this is a bill with disappointingly modest ambitions, but one that we must support today.

Many Members have talked about manufacturing job losses in the country. In North Carolina, it is 150,000 manufacturing jobs in the last 3 years. It has cut into the backbone of the traditional basis of the North Carolina economy. There have been textile industry jobs, tobacco jobs, furniture jobs, the jobs that North Carolinians have depended on to support themselves and their families.

I have talked to a lot of workers who have lost their jobs. They are very realistic. They do not ask how are we are going to bring those jobs back. They know those jobs are gone forever. The employers have not simply cut a shift, they have closed the factory. It is padlocked and the equipment sold. The employees have either gone overseas or they are just flat out of business. Their question, instead, is where are the new jobs going to come from and what are we doing to bring new jobs here? And my answer is: We are not doing nearly enough. We are not doing nearly enough.

They know that service sector jobs will be no answer. We cannot prosper as a service economy. We cannot simply cut each other's hair or sell each other insurance or give each other golf lessons. We have to make things. The heart and soul of our economy is manufacturing. It is the basis upon which our economy exists. It is the basis of our prosperity and we are not doing nearly enough to protect it.

Let me tell you what the Manufacturing Extension Partnership has done in our State. In 2002, there was an independent Federal survey of the MEP program, which is called the Industrial Extension Service in North Carolina. As a result of the help, the service, the advice that the Industrial Extension Services gave to some 367 employers that year, they achieved $85.6 million in savings as a result of the efficiencies they were able to achieve. As a result of that, North Carolina was able to save 1,119 jobs and create 193 new ones.

Mr. Chairman, the Industrial Extension Service, the Manufacturing Extension Partnership, is something we should be doing better by, not cutting.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time to close, then. And let me just respond very quickly to a statement that the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) made in the well of the House earlier. And I think it was a very honest statement on his part about his feelings, and I think it reflects that of the administration and, really, of the majority of the Republicans over the last 3 years, and that is, let the strong survive and the weak will move aside, and that is the best thing we can do for our economy. Well, unfortunately, the strong are surviving, but they are surviving by or prospering by sending jobs offshore.

So let me say what MEP really is about, for the 99 percent of America who do not know what these initials stands for. Right now, small- and medium-sized manufacturing businesses cannot afford to have full-time experts, specialists, and technicians on their staff like the big guys can. So what MEP does, it is a State-based program that allows these small- and medium-sized manufacturers to combine their resources and go to the State and get some help on a project here, a project there, where they could not afford to have that full-time expert. It makes them more productive, it allows them to be more competitive internationally, it creates additional jobs, and it returns many, many, many more dollars to the Federal Government than is sent out.

Also, let me explain the leveraging that goes on here. The money that the Federal Government puts into the MEP program is matched by the State. And States that are hard-pressed now are glad to get whatever money they can. So the Federal Government puts up one-third, the State puts up one-third, and then the local manufacturer puts up one-third, because they think it is that important. Together, they are then able to pool their resources and have this additional expertise to make our country more productive.

That is what the MEP is all about, and that is why we want to see MEP not done away, as the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) honestly suggested, but it should be expanded to help our country be more productive.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and before I actually close, let me thank all of the staff who worked so hard on this over the past year: Olwen Huzley, Eric Webster, Amy Carroll, David Goldston on the committee staff; and Cameron Wilson on the staff of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), who, happily, could not be with us today because of the birth of Nolan Eric Wilson. We wish Nolan, Cameron and Laura Wilson our very best. Our staff finds many ways to contribute to the Nation's future.

And, Mr. Chairman, let me thank my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. We have worked in a bipartisan fashion to create a good bill. There are some differences over the level of funding, but I will say that we are on the same wavelength with respect to our admiration and affection for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership and we can proudly go forward with the committee's bill.

That is what this bill is all about. It is about jobs, it is about helping the manufacturing sector. And to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) I would point out, if manufacturing in America was subsidized to the extent that government subsidized professional sports is, they would be in heaven.

H.R. 3598 will help ensure that our Nation has good, high-paying, productive manufacturing jobs for years to come, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Chairman, America's manufacturing sector has been in crisis for the past 4 years with over 2.7 million quality jobs lost, including 80,000 in my home state of Wisconsin. Congress must act to stem this trend and invest in programs that help our Nation's manufacturers compete and grow in the global economy.

Throughout the Third Congressional District, I have been meeting with local business owners, workers, educators, and government officials to discuss economic challenges facing Wisconsin to determine what can be done to help Wisconsin businesses grow. As a member of the Congressional Manufacturing Task Force, I have focused on how the federal government can most effectively help small- and medium-sized manufacturers compete and grow. There are no easy answers to this problem, but through good investments and smart practices, the federal government can better assist American companies and help America keep its economic edge.

One of the most successful programs helping manufacturers throughout the Nation is the Manufacturing Extension Partnership (MEP) program within the Department of Commerce's National Institutes of Standards and Technology. Through a national network of manufacturing extension centers, MEP is designed to benefit domestic manufacturers by providing expertise and services tailored to their most critical needs. This includes assistance in process improvements, worker training, and information technology applications. In Wisconsin, MEP has served over 110 firms.

To strengthen this program, I support an amendment offered by Representative GORDON to increase the authorization limit for MEP and help states match funding so more businesses can benefit. With our manufacturing sector suffering, it is important that we build on the successes of the MEP program.

In addition, I support the amendment offered by Representative JACKSON-LEE to halt a misguided proposal by the Administration to ''recompete'' MEP centers. Recompetition of MEP centers could destroy the effective national system of centers established over the past 14 years. This could result in fewer projects initiated and consumes valuable resources that could be used to help American businesses.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that we step up and help manufacturers in real, measurable ways. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to continue to invest in small- and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to strongly support this legislation. The Delaware Manufacturing Extension Partnership (DEMEP) has been part of the national MEP program since 1994 and in 1999 it entered into a partnership with the Delaware Chamber of Commerce, the Delaware State Technical and Community College, and the Delaware Economic Development Office.

The Federal funding they receive through the national MEP program has helped them to develop the resources to be able to reach the small and medium-sized manufacturers in their delivery area.

Delaware MEP has 3 locations in Delaware and is currently assisting 1,100 Delaware manufacturers. Delaware MEP is showing a greater than 8 to 1 impact in terms of economic impact per every Federal dollar spent. The manufacturing sector in Delaware is dealing with the same burdens that are affecting all U.S. manufacturers—among them are the rising costs of labor, health care, energy, and regulatory costs. These obstacles contributed to the October 2003 statistics shared by the Delaware Department of Labor that measured 3,900 manufacturing jobs lost in the last 12 months. The Delaware MEP exists to strengthen local manufacturers by assisting them in dealing with these issues.

This year marks the 10th anniversary of the Delaware MEP, a strong Federal, State, and industry partnership. For 10 years, they have successfully strengthened competitiveness, improved productivity, and increased profits for Delaware manufacturers by guiding them in the implementation of best practices.

Programs such as Lean Manufacturing and Quality Management Systems have helped companies record significant improvements in productivity and profitability. ILC Dover, Inc., a manufacturer of protective equipment and engineered inflatables for NASA shuttle astronauts and other industrial customers, reported production improvements gains of 41 percent in 6 months from use of the Lean Manufacturing program.

Many other Delaware manufacturers have increased their productivity and decreased waste, thanks to this program. Allied Precision Inc., a Newark-based manufacturer of precision components for the aerospace, automotive, and military industries, risked losing a major client unless they adopted international standards of quality. They turned to the Delaware MEP quality management program for assistance to meet those standards and were able to gain international registration for meeting those standards and are now competing for and being awarded foreign contracts.

The Delaware MEP will continue to access its many local, regional and national resources to bring innovative programs to Delaware manufacturers to serve their competitive needs and help companies compete and prosper.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will be a key driver in supporting the Delaware and the U.S. manufacturing sectors and help them create jobs to further strengthen our economy. Support this legislation.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed that the Science Committee has missed a golden opportunity to fashion a meaningful, bipartisan manufacturing bill. The bill we are debating does little other than providing an authorization for the Manufacturing Extension Program (MEP). As much as I appreciate MEP, a program President Bush has repeatedly tried to shut down by the way, pretending that authorizing this single program is the only worthwhile step that can be taken to help our manufacturing sector shows a lack of imagination and political will.

I don't have time to cover all of the good amendments that Democrats offered in Committee, but I would like to discuss my amendment to authorize funding for the Advanced Technology Program (ATP), which was not made in order for floor consideration. During debate on the Rule for consideration of this bill, it was said that this amendment should not have been allowed because this bill was only supposed to be about Federal programs that were dedicated to manufacturing. But according to its statute, ATP was created ''for the purpose of assisting United States businesses in creating and applying the generic technology and research results necessary to

(1) commercialize significant new scientific discoveries and technologies rapidly and (2) refine manufacturing technologies. And ATP does provide significant support for manufacturing. In 43 competitions held between 1990 and 2004, 39 percent of the awards involve either direct or indirect developments of advanced manufacturing technologies. ATP does this by helping small companies—over 85 percent of all manufacturing technical awards go to small companies, and average employment growth of small company projects is over 180 percent.

In light of these facts, I tried to offer an amendment to authorize funding for ATP at $169 million per year for fiscal years 2005 through 2008, and focus the funding on manufacturing projects. I am not alone in my support for ATP—the Science Committee's 2004 Views and Estimates on the Budget supported funding ATP at the level in my amendment. In fact, Chairman BOEHLERT and Chairman EHLERS both testified before the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations subcommittee that ATP is "necessary to help provide the edge that U.S. manufacturers need to compete in the global economy." Many outside groups have expressed support for ATP, including the Electronics Industries Alliance, the International Economic Development Council, ASTRA (The Alliance for Science and Technology Research in America), the Council on Competitiveness, the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) and its Coalition for the Future of Manufacturing.

One of the members of the Majority on the Rules Committee said that we should be taking guidance from the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) as we consider this bill. Well, I did, and they said we need to fund ATP. But apparently the Rules Committee wasn't listening to NAM when they prevented me from offering my amendment.

I am going to support the underlying bill, because it is not objectionable. But I am disappointed that we are missing this opportunity to deal comprehensively with the long-festering problems of the U.S. manufacturing base.

Outside experts have told us that the future of American manufacturing lies in our ability to promote risk taking. We should be doing a little risk taking ourselves here today and investing in the innovation that will be needed to preserve the future of American manufacturing. Unfortunately, because the Bush Administration told the committee Republicans in negotiations that did not involve committee Democrats that the President would not sign the bill if it did anything bold, today we will be approving a bill that is not all that it could be.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time for general debate has expired. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule, and shall be considered read.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 3598

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act of 2004''.

SEC. 2. INTERAGENCY COMMITTEE AND ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) INTERAGENCY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The President shall establish or designate an interagency committee on manufacturing research and development, which shall include representatives from the Office of Science and Technology Policy, the National Institute of Standards and Technology, the Science and Technology Directorate of the Department of Homeland Security, the National Science Foundation, the Department of Energy, and any other agency that the President may designate. The Interagency Committee shall be chaired by the Under Secretary of Commerce for Technology.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Interagency Committee shall be responsible for the planning and coordination of Federal efforts in manufacturing research and development through—

(A) establishing goals and priorities for manufacturing research and development, including the strengthening of United States manufacturing through the support and coordination of Federal manufacturing research, development, technology transfer, standards, and technical training;

(B) developing, within 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and updating every 3 years for delivery with the President's annual budget request to Congress, a strategic plan, to be transmitted to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, for manufacturing research and development that includes an analysis of the research, development, technology transfer, standards, technical training, and integration needs of the manufacturing sector important to ensuring and maintaining United States competitiveness;

(C) proposing an annual coordinated interagency budget for manufacturing research and development to the Office of Management and Budget; and

(D) developing and transmitting to Congress an annual report on the Federal programs involved in manufacturing research, development, technical training, standards, and integration, their funding levels, and their impacts on United States manufacturing competitiveness, including the identification and analysis of the manufacturing research and development problems that require additional attention, and recommendations of how Federal programs should address those problems.

(3) RECOMMENDATIONS AND VIEWS.—In carrying out its functions under paragraph (2), the Interagency Committee shall consider the recommendations of the Advisory Committee and the views of academic, State, industry, and other entities involved in manufacturing research and development.

(b) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall establish or designate an advisory committee to provide advice and information to the Interagency Committee.

(2) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Advisory Committee shall assist the Interagency Committee by providing it with recommendations on—

(A) the goals and priorities for manufacturing research and development;

(B) the strategic plan, including proposals on how to strengthen research and development to help manufacturing; and

(C) other issues it considers appropriate.

(3) REPORT.—The Advisory Committee shall provide an annual report to the Interagency Committee and the Congress that shall assess—

(A) the progress made in implementing the strategic plan and challenges to this progress;

(B) the effectiveness of activities under the strategic plan in improving United States manufacturing competitiveness;

(C) the need to revise the goals and priorities established by the Interagency Committee; and

(D) new and emerging problems and opportunities affecting the manufacturing research community, research infrastructure, and the measurement and statistical analysis of manufacturing that may need to be considered by the Interagency Committee.

(4) FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT APPLICATION.—Section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the Advisory Committee.

SEC. 3. COLLABORATIVE MANUFACTURING RESEARCH PILOT GRANTS.

The National Institute of Standards and Technology Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating the first section 32 as section 34 and moving it to the end of the Act; and

(2) by inserting before the section moved by paragraph (1) the following new section:

''SEC. 33. COLLABORATIVE MANUFACTURING RESEARCH PILOT GRANTS.

''(a) AUTHORITY.—

''(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director shall establish a pilot program of awards to partnerships among participants described in paragraph (2) for the purposes described in paragraph (3). Awards shall be made on a peer-reviewed, competitive basis.

''(2) PARTICIPANTS.—Such partnerships shall include at least—

''(A) 1 manufacturing industry partner; and

''(B) 1 nonindustry partner.

''(3) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the program under this section is to foster cost-shared collaborations among firms, educational institutions, research institutions, State agencies, and nonprofit organizations to encourage the development of innovative, multidisciplinary manufacturing technologies. Partnerships receiving awards under this section shall conduct applied research to develop new manufacturing processes, techniques, or materials that would contribute to improved performance, productivity, and competitiveness of United States manufacturing, and build lasting alliances among collaborators.

''(b) PROGRAM CONTRIBUTION.—Awards under this section shall provide for not more than one-third of the costs of a partnership. Not more than an additional one-third of such costs may be obtained directly or indirectly from other Federal sources.

''(c) APPLICATIONS.—Applications for awards under this section shall be submitted in such manner, at such time, and containing such information as the Director shall require. Such applications shall describe at a minimum—

''(1) how each partner will participate in developing and carrying out the research agenda of the partnership;

''(2) the research that the grant would fund; and

''(3) how the research to be funded with the award would contribute to improved performance, productivity, and competitiveness of the United States manufacturing industry.

''(d) SELECTION CRITERIA.—In selecting applications for awards under this section, the Director shall consider at a minimum—

''(1) the degree to which projects will have a broad impact on manufacturing;

''(2) the novelty and scientific and technical merit of the proposed projects; and

''(3) the demonstrated capabilities of the applicants to successfully carry out the proposed research.

''(e) DISTRIBUTION.—In selecting applications under this section the Director shall ensure, to the extent practicable, a distribution of overall awards among a variety of manufacturing industry sectors and a range of firm sizes.

''(f) DURATION.—In carrying out this section, the Director shall run a single pilot competition to solicit and make awards. Each award shall be for a 3-year period.''.

SEC. 4. MANUFACTURING FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM.

Section 18 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278g–1) is amended—

(1) by inserting ''(a) IN GENERAL.—'' before ''The Director is authorized''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(b) MANUFACTURING FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM.—

''(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—To promote the development of a robust research community working at the leading edge of manufacturing sciences, the Director shall establish a program to award—

''(A) postdoctoral research fellowships at the Institute for research activities related to manufacturing sciences; and

''(B) senior research fellowships to established researchers in industry or at institutions of higher education who wish to pursue studies related to the manufacturing sciences at the Institute.

''(2) APPLICATIONS.—To be eligible for an award under this subsection, an individual shall submit an application to the Director at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Director may require.

''(3) STIPEND LEVELS.—Under this section, the Director shall provide stipends for postdoctoral research fellowships at a level consistent with the National Institute of Standards and Technology Postdoctoral Research Fellowship Program, and senior research fellowships at levels consistent with support for a faculty member in a sabbatical position.''.

SEC. 5. MANUFACTURING EXTENSION.

(a) MANUFACTURING CENTER EVALUATION.—Section 25(c)(5) of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(c)(5)) is amended by inserting ''A Center that has not received a positive evaluation by the evaluation panel shall be notified by the panel of the deficiencies in its performance and may be placed on probation for one year, after which time the panel may reevaluate the Center. If the Center has not addressed the deficiencies identified by the panel, or shown a significant improvement in its performance, the Director may conduct a new competition to select an operator for the Center or may close the Center.'' after ''sixth year at declining levels.''.

(b) MANUFACTURING EXTENSION CENTER COMPETITIVE GRANT PROGRAM.—Section 25 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(e) COMPETITIVE GRANT PROGRAM.—

''(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director shall establish, within the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program under this section and section 26 of this Act, a program of competitive awards among participants described in paragraph (2) for the purposes described in paragraph (3).

''(2) PARTICIPANTS.—Participants receiving awards under this subsection shall be the Centers, or a consortium of such Centers.

''(3) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the program under this subsection is to develop projects to solve new or emerging manufacturing problems as determined by the Director, in consultation with the Director of the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program, the Manufacturing Extension Partnership National Advisory Board, and small and medium-sized manufacturers. One or more themes for the competition may be identified, which may vary from year to year, depending on the needs of manufacturers and the success of previous competitions. These themes shall be related to projects associated with manufacturing extension activities, including supply chain integration and quality management, or extend beyond these traditional areas.

''(4) APPLICATIONS.—Applications for awards under this subsection shall be submitted in such manner, at such time, and containing such information as the Director shall require, in consultation with the Manufacturing Extension Partnership National Advisory Board.

''(5) SELECTION.—Awards under this subsection shall be peer reviewed and competitively awarded. The Director shall select proposals to receive awards—

''(A) that utilize innovative or collaborative approaches to solving the problem described in the competition;

''(B) that will improve the competitiveness of industries in the region in which the Center or Centers are located; and

''(C) that will contribute to the long-term economic stability of that region.

''(6) PROGRAM CONTRIBUTION.—Recipients of awards under this subsection shall not be required to provide a matching contribution.''.

SEC. 6. SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL RESEARCH AND SERVICES.

(a) LABORATORY ACTIVITIES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for the scientific and technical research and services laboratory activities of the National Institute of Standards and Technology—

(1) $425,688,000 for fiscal year 2005, of which—

(A) $55,777,000 shall be for Electronics and Electrical Engineering;

(B) $29,584,000 shall be for Manufacturing Engineering;

(C) $50,142,000 shall be for Chemical Science and Technology;

(D) $42,240,000 shall be for Physics;

(E) $62,724,000 shall be for Material Science and Engineering;

(F) $23,594,000 shall be for Building and Fire Research;

(G) $60,660,000 shall be for Computer Science and Applied Mathematics, of which $2,800,000 shall be for activities in support of the Help America Vote Act of 2002;

(H) $17,445,000 shall be for Technical Assistance; and

(I) $78,102,000 shall be for Research Support Activities;

(2) $446,951,000 for fiscal year 2006;

(3) $469,299,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

(4) $492,764,000 for fiscal year 2008.

(b) MALCOLM BALDRIGE NATIONAL QUALITY AWARD PROGRAM.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award program under section 17 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3711a)—

(1) $5,400,000 for fiscal year 2005;

(2) $5,535,000 for fiscal year 2006;

(3) $5,674,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

(4) $5,815,000 for fiscal year 2008.

(c) CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for construction and maintenance of facilities of the National Institute of Standards and Technology such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008.

SEC. 7. STANDARDS EDUCATION PROGRAM.

(a) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—(1) As part of the Teacher Science and Technology Enhancement Institute Program, the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology shall carry out a Standards Education program to award grants to institutions of higher education to support efforts by such institutions to develop curricula on the role of standards in the fields of engineering, business, science, and economics. The curricula should address topics such as—

(A) development of technical standards;

(B) demonstrating conformity to standards;

(C) intellectual property and antitrust issues;

(D) standardization as a key element of business strategy;

(E) survey of organizations that develop standards;

(F) the standards life cycle;

(G) case studies in effective standardization;

(H) managing standardization activities; and

(I) managing organizations that develop standards.

(2) Grants shall be awarded under this section on a competitive, merit-reviewed basis and shall require cost-sharing from non-Federal sources.

(b) SELECTION PROCESS.—(1) An institution of higher education seeking funding under this section shall submit an application to the Director at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Director may require. The application shall include at a minimum—

(A) a description of the content and schedule for adoption of the proposed curricula in the courses of study offered by the applicant; and

(B) a description of the source and amount of cost-sharing to be provided.

(2) In evaluating the applications submitted under paragraph (1) the Director shall consider, at a minimum—

(A) the level of commitment demonstrated by the applicant in carrying out and sustaining lasting curricula changes in accordance with subsection (a)(1); and

(B) the amount of cost-sharing provided.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for the Teacher Science and Technology Enhancement Institute program of the National Institute of Standards and Technology—

(1) $773,000 for fiscal year 2005;

(2) $796,000 for fiscal year 2006;

(3) $820,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

(4) $844,000 for fiscal year 2008.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) MANUFACTURING EXTENSION PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce, or other appropriate Federal agencies, for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program under sections 25 and 26 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k and 278l)—

(1) $110,000,000 for fiscal year 2005, of which not more than $4,000,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e));

(2) $115,000,000 for fiscal year 2006, of which not more than $4,100,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e));

(3) $120,000,000 for fiscal year 2007, of which not more than $4,200,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e)); and

(4) $125,000,000 for fiscal year 2008, of which not more than $4,300,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e)).

In any fiscal year for which appropriations are $106,000,000 or greater, none of the funds appropriated pursuant to this subsection shall be used for a general recompetition of Centers established under section 25 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k).

(b) COLLABORATIVE MANUFACTURING RESEARCH PILOT GRANTS PROGRAM.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for the Collaborative Manufacturing Research Pilot Grants program under section 33 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act—

(1) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2005;

(2) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2006; and

(3) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2007.

(c) FELLOWSHIPS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce for Manufacturing Fellowships at the National Institute of Standards and Technology under section 18(b) of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act, as added by section 4 of this Act—

(1) $1,500,000 for fiscal year 2005;

(2) $1,750,000 for fiscal year 2006;

(3) $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

(4) $2,250,000 for fiscal year 2008.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. No amendment to the committee amendment is in order excepted those printed in House Report 108–589. Each amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in House report 108–589.

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 1 offered by Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas:

In section 8(a), strike ''In any fiscal year for which appropriations are $106,000,000 or greater, none'' and insert ''None''.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 706, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I want to thank again the ranking member for his leadership as well as the chairman. In many instances, we have come to this floor in a bipartisan manner.

Let me say to my colleagues that I frankly believe most of my argument has already been made by the Members on the floor. If I might cite my good friend, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY), he said MEPs have a proven track record. They have helped save 1,300 jobs and they have helped reinstate or boost up some $61 million.

If we look at a map, we will see that MEPs, that is centers that help create manufacturing jobs, are spread throughout the Nation. I hold up for you four or five pages of MEP centers around the Nation. This must mean that they are important to us. But, unfortunately, this legislation suggests something other than that. Because what this legislation asks these centers to do is to recompete.

Now, in terms of productivity, that means we are wasting time on paperwork when it has already been established that these are efficient, effective centers that help create American jobs. All centers have already successfully competed for funding. Furthermore, according to an existing Public Law and NIST regulations, they are reviewed for performance every 2 years. The administration now wants to make all centers, regardless of past performance, reapply and recompete for funding. This is redundant and it is a waste of time.

Ask any small business whether or not they want to have a center in their locale stop work for 45 to 60 days to fool around with what they already do, which is a competitive, accurate and very detailed review every 2 years, while that small business's doors are being closed.

The administration wants to use recompetition to lock the program in to last year's low funding. What that mean, my colleagues? According to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) it means those with a proven track record, those that have already proven to be effective, and those centers, according to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON), whose excellent assistance is very much valued, it means we are targeting them for closing. This will just continue the downward trend of the loss of manufacturing jobs.

As I said, under current law, the centers are reviewed every 2 years. They are located all over the Nation. And, in fact, rescissions in 4 of the past 5 years have lowered the amount of money we have appropriated. So what is in the bill does not work. My good friend, the chairman, has put in $106 million and says we do not have to recompete. Well, my colleagues, we have no guarantee it will be $106 million, and, before we know it, we will be closing these centers all over the country.

Let me cite for a moment what happened in Texas with the Texas Manufacturing Extension Center. Following a tour of Garrett's manufacturing facility, that is a place in Texas, we found out that they had problems. Imagine, if you will, with the work of the Texas Manufacturing Assistance Center, we put that Garrett Company right back on its feet, and I am delighted to report that they have increased their production between 2001 and 2003 and they reduced their required floor space by 33 percent. They are producing jobs, making things with their hands and their minds. That is what these centers help us do.

I offer this amendment because it strikes this recompetition, because recompetition, my colleagues, means closing down these centers and losing manufacturing jobs.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON), the distinguished ranking member.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Jackson-Lee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I know our chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), strongly supports the MEP program, but he also knows that this administration does not. In the last 3 years, they have tried to close down the MEP program. The Jackson-Lee amendment simply stops the administration from doing administratively what they have not been able to do legislatively.

I ask my colleagues to support this amendment and to keep a strong MEP program.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time, and I thank the distinguished ranking member.

Let me just say that I am prepared to support this legislation. As I indicated, it is a partnership between the bill offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL), which would have flourished more, but we recognize and respect what has been attempted here. I wish we could work in a bipartisan way on this, but I am not going to stand by, and I do not think any Member should stand by, and as our ranking member said, do a back-door closing of these centers which are valuable in creating jobs.

Mr. Chairman, every one of us can cite examples of the value of this program. And I just want to remind my colleagues that if they allow this engagement in recompetition, they will be engaged in a shutdown of centers in their communities. But, more importantly, they are going to shut them down for 60 days while small businesses and manufacturing companies need them.

We can adhere to a system that works, the 2-year review, and I will cite the gentleman from Georgia once again. This program has a proven track record and we do not need to have a recompetition. I ask for support of the Jackson-Lee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment will ensure that already-tight funding of the vital Manufacturing Extension Partnership (MEP) program is not wasted on an unnecessary "re-competition" process. MEP has proven itself to be one of the most sound investments we have made in our manufacturing sector.

In all of our districts, there are many small businesses that have gone to MEP centers, and taken advantage of the federal seed monies, and state/local partnerships—to make their businesses more productive and competitive—ultimately making more jobs for our constituents. Members of the House and Senate, from both sides of the aisle, have realized that cutting funding of the MEP programs last year was not smart considering our still-struggling manufacturing sector. I am pleased to hear that there are plans to reinstate the MEP with full funding; however, it seems that the Administration is trying to lock us in to the inappropriately low funding-levels.

The U.S. Department of Commerce CFO sent a letter to Chairman JUDD GREGG of the Senate Appropriations Committee in May of this year, explaining that the Administration plans to force all MEP centers—regardless of how well they are performing—to re-compete for funding to make it easier to scale back the number of MEP centers. However, MEP grants are already awarded on a highly-competitive basis, and ongoing funding is already subject to continual review.

Currently, P.L. 100–418 (passed on August 23, 1988) requires each Center to be evaluated during the third and sixth years and every two years thereafter by a panel of experts. Moreover, Section 290.8 (Reviews of Centers), Part 290, Title 15 of the Code of Federal Regulations mandates the conduct of periodic year reviews of Centers by a Merit Review Panel.

NIST has established specific guidelines, ''The MEP Periodic Panel Reviews: Purpose and Overview.'' The purpose of this NIST review is to: 1) Ensure Program Accountability, 2) Promote Continuous Improvement; and 3) Contribute to Intra-MEP System Knowledge Sharing. The guidelines go as far to state, ''The results of the review process should provide NIST MEP with information needed to help with the decision as to whether to continue Federal funding for the reviewed Center.'' In the case of a negative review, there may be another Follow-up Review that would be in addition to any regularly scheduled Panel or Annual Review.

Given the rigor of the current review process, I'm not certain what this section is trying to fix. This Committee has held no hearings on the MEP Center review process, nor has any Member brought this issue up with the administration representatives during any hearings we have had. I would note that as recently as our budget hearing which included Phil Bond, Undersecretary for Technology, who has responsibility for MEP, not one Member questioned Undersecretary Bond about the MEP review process or perceived problems with it.

Re-competition fixes a problem that doesn't exist. It seems that it is simply enabling the long-term goal of the Administration to scale back this program, and ultimately to zero-it-out. When our economy is struggling to get back on track, and so many American workers remain either unemployed or underemployed, this is the wrong time to cut a program so valuable for stimulating productivity in our small businesses and industries.

The Department of Commerce's recent suggestion that all centers throughout the country face re-competition will destroy an effective national infrastructure that has taken 14 years to build and will reduce services to manufacturers.

Officials from the MEP center in Texas have explained that having to re-compete will cause them to halt services for 45–60 days so that their small over-burdened staff can evaluate needs and complete applications. If we start to tinker with this successful program, manufacturers and MEP Centers will be reluctant to initiate projects for fear that Centers may not exist to complete projects. This break in productivity will waste taxpayer dollars and serve no one.

MEP is widely recognized for its effectiveness and efficiency. It has been recognized by the National Academy of Public Administration, was a finalist for Harvard University's Innovations in American Government award, and fared well in OMB's PART analysis.

The people of Texas have seen the benefits of the MEP program. Just one example is Garrett Metal Detectors of Garland, Texas, manufacturers of security and hobby metal detectors. There was tremendous demand for metal detectors after the 9/11 attacks, but their small business couldn't compete in the world market. So, they came to the Texas Manufacturing Assistance Center (TMAC). Following a tour of Garrett's manufacturing facilities, TMAC identified major improvement strategies for the Company's production assembly. The Garrett/TMAC team significantly improved product flow and implemented Lean Manufacturing techniques. Overall production increased 35% between 2001 and 2003, as they reduced required floor space by 33%. This extra efficiency enabled them to become a leader in the field and to increase their work force by one-third. And we are all safer for it—all for a very small initial federal investment of less than $17,000.

In the Science Committee mark-up, I offered an amendment that would have blocked the use of appropriated funds for a general re-competition of MEP Centers. It seemed that Chairman BOEHLERT agreed with the sentiment, but he modified my amendment by blocking re-competition as long as funding is at least $106 million. He argued that appropriators are planning on funding MEP at $106 million, implying that his amendment would thus prevent a wasteful and unnecessary re-competition for 2005. However, if across-the-board cuts are applied again this year as predicted—even if only 0.1 or 0.2%—funding will fall below $106 million and could trigger a re-competition that no one in Congress seems to be arguing for. Besides, putting in any re-competition cut-off line, or trigger, is a mistake. When funding is low, it makes even less sense to waste money and resources on re-competition.

Most of our MEP centers are performing admirably, making small businesses more competitive and creating jobs, with small federal investments. Those that are not are already subject to review and de-funding. Let's not waste taxpayer dollars hampering this important program. I hope you will support this amendment.

□ 1430

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment was defeated in committee because, quite frankly, it is not a particularly good idea.

This amendment sounds great on the surface. It says let us not let the administration have a competition in which all of the MEP centers compete against each other to see who stays in business. Such a general competition sounds like a hostile act which should be prevented. If there is enough money to fund all of the centers, as we hope there will be, then a recompetition would be a hostile act. But what if Congress fails to appropriate sufficient funding for all of the centers. How is any administration supposed to decide which centers should continue?

It makes no sense at all to prevent a recompetition if there is not enough money for all of the centers to function effectively.

If the gentlewoman's amendment passed and funding became low, the administration would simply have to reduce funding to any center which would prevent all of them from doing their jobs well. That simply makes no sense.

In committee, we thought what the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) might be trying to do was to prevent successful centers from being closed even when funding was adequate, so we added language to the bill that says the administration cannot recompete the centers if funding is at or above $106 million, what everyone considers the minimum necessary to keep all of the existing centers operating well, and the level that the House approved in the Commerce appropriation bill within the past 24 hours. So they have the message. We sent it, they received it. They acted favorably on it.

So this bill already protects the centers from any hostile recompetition if funding is sufficient to fund all of them. The bill will prevent any spurious efforts to close centers, so I am truly baffled about what the gentlewoman is trying to accomplish here.

The way to avoid a recompetition is to provide full funding which this bill authorizes. But if we fail to provide the promised funding, all this amendment would do is force all of the centers to function less efficiently because none would have enough money to do their job. This amendment creates problems without solving any. I urge its defeat.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) will be postponed.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 2 printed in House Report 108–589.

AMENDMENT NO. 2 OFFERED BY MR. LARSON OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 2 offered by Mr. LARSON of Connecticut:

In section 2(a)(1), strike ''Commerce for Technology'' and insert ''Commerce for Manufacturing and Technology''.

Redesignate section 8 as section 9.

After section 7, insert the following new section:

SEC. 8. MANUFACTURING AND TECHNOLOGY ADMINISTRATION.

Section 5 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3704) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 5. MANUFACTURING AND TECHNOLOGY ADMINISTRATION.

''(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Department of Commerce a Manufacturing and Technology Administration, which shall operate in accordance with the provisions, findings, and purposes of this Act. The Manufacturing and Technology Administration shall include—

''(1) the National Institute of Standards and Technology;

''(2) the National Technical Information Service; and

''(3) a policy analysis office, which shall be known as the Office of Manufacturing and Technology Policy.

''(b) UNDER SECRETARY AND ASSISTANT SECRETARIES.—The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the extent provided for in appropriations Acts—

''(1) an Under Secretary of Commerce for Manufacturing and Technology, who shall be compensated at the rate provided for level III of the Executive Schedule in section 5314 of title 5, United States Code;

''(2) an Assistant Secretary of Manufacturing who shall serve as a policy analyst for the Under Secretary; and

''(3) an Assistant Secretary of Technology who shall serve as a policy analyst for the Under Secretary.

''(c) DUTIES.—The Secretary, through the Under Secretary, as appropriate, shall—

''(1) manage the Manufacturing and Technology Administration and supervise its agencies, programs, and activities;

''(2) conduct manufacturing and technology policy analyses to improve United States industrial productivity, manufacturing capabilities, and innovation, and cooperate with United States industry to improve its productivity, manufacturing capabilities, and ability to compete successfully in an international marketplace;

''(3) identify manufacturing and technological needs, problems, and opportunities within and across industrial sectors, that, if addressed, could make significant contributions to the economy of the United States;

''(4) assess whether the capital, technical, and other resources being allocated to domestic industrial sectors which are likely to generate new technologies are adequate to meet private and social demands for goods and services and to promote productivity and economic growth;

''(5) propose and support studies and policy experiments, in cooperation with other Federal agencies, to determine the effectiveness of measures for improving United States manufacturing capabilities and productivity;

''(6) provide that cooperative efforts to stimulate industrial competitiveness and innovation be undertaken between the Under Secretary and other officials in the Department of Commerce responsible for such areas as trade and economic assistance;

''(7) encourage and assist the creation of centers and other joint initiatives by State or local governments, regional organizations, private businesses, institutions of higher education, nonprofit organizations, or Federal laboratories to encourage technology transfer, to encourage innovation, and to promote an appropriate climate for investment in technology-related industries;

''(8) propose and encourage cooperative research involving appropriate Federal entities, State or local governments, regional organizations, colleges or universities, nonprofit organizations, or private industry to promote the common use of resources, to improve training programs and curricula, to stimulate interest in manufacturing and technology careers, and to encourage the effective dissemination of manufacturing and technology skills within the wider community;

''(9) serve as a focal point for discussions among United States companies on topics of interest to industry and labor, including discussions regarding manufacturing, competitiveness, and emerging technologies;

''(10) consider government measures with the potential of advancing United States technological innovation and exploiting innovations of foreign origin and publish the results of studies and policy experiments; and

''(11) assist in the implementation of the Metric Conversion Act of 1975 (15 U.S.C. 205a et seq.).''.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 706, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON).

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to join in thanking both the ranking member and the distinguished chairs for the hard work which has been put forward on this bill. I just think we need an administration worthy of their ideas.

As we look at this particular bill, I want to go into the genesis of this thought. As the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) has pointed out in his opening remarks, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) initially included this in his approach to the administration. It is strongly needed.

At a Chamber of Commerce meeting in my district between the communities of Bristol, Berlin and Southington, they talked at great length. In fact, if I closed my eyes, I was astonished, it seemed like I was at an AFL–CIO meeting, and yet they were talking about the concerns that small manufacturers have today and the need to have a strong voice within the Department of Commerce.

They wondered out loud how is it in this great country of ours we can have a Department of Agriculture and not have a department of manufacturing, and not have at least an under secretary who is going to speak out on their behalf. Candidly, they would say to me after the meeting, when we first saw labor being outsourced, when we first saw what was happening to labor, we kind of looked the other way, never thinking we would be next. Now we know it is happening to us, and now we need to have a strong voice in Congress and the administration.

The gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) said before he hoped what we could achieve is something in the area of benign neglect. Would it be it was just benign neglect. What we have in this case is outright negligence on the part of Congress by not dealing with these issues; and if I dare say, plain indifference on the part of this administration to the problems that individuals are facing.

It is because of that indifference, indifference to the labor force, indifference to the small manufacturers, indifference to the working people and the hard work which has been put forth on behalf of these individuals and the loss of jobs in this country that we put forward this amendment.

This amendment simply states very clearly to create an under secretary within the Department of Commerce so we can refocus once begin the great energies and harness the great engine of industry here in this country. In doing so, we did so within existing resources. We did so knowing that we did not want to have another assistant to the assistant to the assistant and mix that with service sector industries. We wanted what the manufacturers wanted, an under secretary who would focus on the area of technology.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a real need for a manufacturing czar. The administration has said it much, but one would never know it from the underlying bill. They have created a position not of real authority and substance, but rather a marginal position in the trade agency, and this administration has shown its hand by doing this.

The National Coalition For Advanced Manufacturing has said this position should focus solely on manufacturing. It should be an under secretary position within the Department of Commerce. Instead, the administration has named an assistant secretary for manufacturing and services within the International Trade Administration, an agency that does not have the range of expertise to address the issues before our manufacturers. As if to prove they are not serious about this position, the administration proposes no funding to support it.

Mr. Chairman, what we should be doing is creating a manufacturing and technology administration that provides a comprehensive approach, and sends a signal that Congress takes this crisis seriously.

Mr. Chairman, 8.2 million workers are unemployed in this country right now. They face rising health care costs, rising college tuition, and rising gas prices. What could possibly be more important than revitalizing one of the backbones of our economy? Nothing, Mr. Chairman. Support the Larson amendments.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I would just close by saying that this accounts for more than 17 percent of our Nation's GDP, it provides for 71 percent of our exports, and funds 67 percent of our Nation's R&D investments. That is what we are talking about when we are addressing this issue of manufacturing. Roosevelt said it best about this administration, ''They are frozen in the ice of their own indifference,'' indifference towards working people and indifference towards the small manufacturers of this country.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have not provided a built-in cheering and applause section, but I believe my ideas are probably worth more applause.

What the gentleman proposes is not a bad idea. I had proposed this myself some time ago, and not only in this department but also in the Energy Department I have worked on a similar proposal. The administration at the same time has advanced a proposal to reduce the number of under secretaries and does not support the development of new under secretaries.

But what the administration did in response to our request to create this under secretary for manufacturing in the Department of Commerce, the administration heeded these calls and it created a new assistant secretary for manufacturing and took other steps to create a focus on manufacturing in the department, such as creating a manufacturers' council which met just 2 weeks ago. They had their initial meeting. I was present at that meeting, and I was impressed with the quality of the appointees, and I am delighted that the President and the administration took these steps.

So I think it is really time to declare victory and go home on this issue because we basically got what we asked for. If instead the Larson amendment were adopted at this point, and if it passed through the Senate and were signed into law, it would force the administration to reorganize yet again. I think that would be counterproductive at that point. I am quite willing to live with the assistant secretary for a time and make sure it works out. If it does not work out, in a few years, we will resurrect the under secretary proposal.

In addition, I object to the reorganization the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON) has proposed. I do not think it is the best way to proceed because it would add to the bureaucracy that sits on top of NIST, the National Institute of Standards and Technology, when in fact, our goal should be to get NIST out from under the burden of overmanagement. We would like it to have as much of its own funding as possible, as much latitude as possible, and control its own destiny through its own management structure. So I certainly object to that provision in the Larson amendment regardless of the rest of it.

I could go on regarding several other points, but I know there are many people anxious to have this debate ended soon and have the opportunity to go home and be with their families for the weekend. Let me close by saying I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON) will be postponed.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 3 printed in House Report 108–589.

AMENDMENT NO. 3 OFFERED BY MR. PETERSON OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No 3 offered by Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania:

Page 10, line 21, strike ''subsection'' and insert ''subsections''.

Page 12, after line 17, insert the following: ''(f) AUDITS.—A center that receives assistance under this section shall submit annual audits to the Secretary in accordance with Office of Management and Budget Circular A–133 and shall make such audits available to the public on request.''.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 706, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON).

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to first thank the members of this committee, the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) for their good work at not only reauthorizing this program, but restrengthening this program. I think it is vital at this time that we do that; but I think also if programs are going to serve us well, it is important that they are accountable, that they are accountable to the public they serve.

Currently in law, they have to have audited budgets that go back to the State and Federal agency that fund them. But I have had the unfortunate situation of having one of these agencies who, when members of the community or the press asked for a copy of their audited budget, they were told that they were a 501(c)(3) not for profit and they were private. This was private business.

Mr. Chairman, when programs are funded with Federal dollars, with State tax dollars, they are public programs. In my view, accountability can be obtained from Federal and State oversight, but real accountability comes when the people they service and press and interested citizens locally have the ability to look and evaluate their records.

My amendment simply says, it clarifies and ensures these audits are available to OMB, but they are also available to the public and press upon request. I think that is important in making sure that these programs are efficient, that they are well-run, and they are on the right priorities, that they are serving the right part of the manufacturing community, and that our other economic development agencies have the ability to work closely with them and ensure that we get the biggest bang for the buck.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) for working with us on this amendment. The amendment very sensibly codifies existing procedures to ensure just what the gentleman wants to do. Taxpayer money is not wasted. We accept the amendment.

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much and congratulate him for his good work.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time in opposition, although I do not oppose this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in the spirit of bipartisanship, I want to accept this modest amendment to a modest bill that makes a modest improvement.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON).

The amendment was agreed to.

□ 1445

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). It is now in order to consider amendment No. 4 printed in House Report 108–589.

AMENDMENT NO. 4 OFFERED BY MR. GORDON

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Chairman pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 4 offered by Mr. GORDON:

Redesignate section 8 as section 9.

After section 7, insert the following new section:

SEC. 8. MANUFACTURING EXTENSION CENTERS.

(a) MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY CENTER COST SHARING.—Section 25(c)(5) of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(c)(5)) is amended by inserting '', except that for each of fiscal years 2005 through 2008 such funding may be as much as a one half of such costs'' after ''Center under the program''.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Commerce, or other appropriate Federal agencies, for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program under sections 25 and 26 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k and 2781)—

(1) $120,600,000 for fiscal year 2005, of which not more than $4,000,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e));

(2) $132,400,000 for fiscal year 2006, of which not more than $4,100,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e));

(3) $145,300,000 for fiscal year 2007, of which not more than $4,200,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e)); and

(4) $159,500,000 for fiscal year 2008, of which not more than $4,300,000 shall be for the competitive grant program under section 25(e) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 278k(e)).

In any fiscal year for which appropriations are $106,000,000 or greater, none of the funds appropriated pursuant to this subsection shall be used for a general recompetition of Centers established under section 25 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k).

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 706, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON).

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very straightforward amendment. My amendment increases funding for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program by 10 percent a year, starting in fiscal year 2005, continuing through fiscal year 2008. In addition, it provides the administration with greater flexibility in determining the Federal cost-share of the MEP centers.

This is a much-needed amendment. Last year through the combined actions of the administration and this Congress, MEP was essentially gutted with a two-thirds funding cut. While I am pleased that the Commerce appropriations bill passed on the floor yesterday provided MEP with $106 million, we can and should do better for MEP both this year and the future.

From 2000 to 2003, the MEP was held level at about $105 million. These numbers are down from the $127 million in fiscal year 1999. Over this period there has been no adjustment for inflation during a time when, in the face of fierce international competition, small manufacturers are closing at a record pace across our country.

Study after study has shown that small manufacturers are underserved by MEP. There just is not enough funding for MEP to reach out to help all the small manufacturers who need their assistance. My amendment would correct this situation.

I would also like to point out that H.R. 3598 as introduced by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) late last year contained significantly more funding for MEP, $60 million more than what is on the floor today. I think the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) got it right the first time before he began negotiating with the administration and moved backwards.

My amendment also allows for flexibility in the Federal cost-sharing for MEP. Currently the Federal cost-share can be no more than one third of the center's total cost. This amendment would allow the Federal cost-share to be up to one half of the center's total cost. The size of the cost-share will be determined by the administration. The National Association of Public Administrators at the administration's request recently completed a 2-year study of the MEP. One of the recommendations was to allow more flexibility in the Federal cost-sharing. My amendment does just that.

The Modernization Forum, the umbrella group representing MEP centers, has said that my amendment would benefit the MEP centers. However, they are under the impression that the acceptance of this amendment would jeopardize passage of the bill.

Do we really believe the President would veto this bill because of a provision which simply endorses a small increase in MEP funding? I would remind my colleagues that this House frequently adopts bills or amendments that the White House opposes. That is why we have separation of powers in our Constitution, so that we can reach judgments independent of those mandated by the White House. Just yesterday the House passed the Manzullo amendment, allocating more needed funding for the Small Business Administration by a margin of 281 to 137. And I remind the Members that the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and 13 of the 24 House Committee on Science Republicans voted ''yes.'' The majority of the House which supported the Manzullo amendment did not seem to be concerned about endangering the passage of the bill.

The argument that my amendment would doom this bill is a red herring. The real reason that the majority opposes this amendment is pretty obvious. The administration is unwilling to admit that it has systematically tried to ruin the MEP program, and it refuses to support realistic levels of funding that the MEP needs to support our Nation's small manufacturers.

I am asking the Members today to do the right thing and vote ''yes'' on an amendment that sends a strong signal that this treatment must stop and that puts the MEP on the right track.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON), my good friend. I would say that, in an ideal world, this would be a good amendment. I would define an ideal world as one in which money was unlimited. In short, it is a world very different from the one in which we live.

This amendment would add $88 million in additional spending to the bill. That is just not realistic in this budget environment. And quite rightly, the administration is not going to support a bill that adds that much more money. So what this amendment would do is kill the bill. If we truly want to help manufacturers, we need to defeat this amendment. And let me emphasize once again that this bill already contains a significant increase for the MEP program, an increase of more than 200 percent from current levels. So this is hardly a parsimonious bill. The additional money the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) is proposing would be nice, but it is not critical to the success of the MEP program. The money that is already in the bill is critical, a 200 percent increase; and we should be doing what we can to ensure that this bill becomes law.

In addition to adding money, the gentleman from Tennessee's (Mr. GORDON) amendment would increase the Federal share of the MEP centers' budgets. I know that the MEP centers have not had the best year, but I do not think that increasing the share from the Federal Government is necessarily a good idea. Let me remind my colleagues that the original version of the MEP centers was that they would not receive any money after their 6th year.

The current MEP formula involves a true partnership between the Federal Government, the States, and the MEP's clients. That is a good partnership that ensures that MEPs are truly providing valiant services. I do not think we should tinker with a successful formula.

So I urge defeat of this amendment. The base bill already provides the money the MEP centers need most through a formula that ensures that the centers will continue to be responsive to their States and, most importantly, to the customers that they are trying to help. This amendment would sink the bill, a pretty high price to pay for an amendment that does not provide anything that is necessary and that tinkers with a recipe that has led to MEP's success, and I urge its defeat.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in strong support of the Gordon amendment that would increase funding for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program.

The MEP program has successfully helped small manufacturers to modernize and stay competitive in the global marketplace. I do not believe that the administration would veto a whole bill based upon the fine amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON).

For example, I know that MEP has directly helped a number of companies in my district including Jacquart Fabric Products with 100 workers in Ironwood and Horner Flooring Company, which employs 100 people in Dollar Bay, Michigan.

At a time when millions of manufacturing jobs are being lost, we need to fully fund the Manufacturing Extension Partnership, not continually undercutting this valuable program which the administration insists on doing every year.

The program is currently authorized at $106 million, but the President only asked for a mere $39 million in fiscal year 2005. $39 million for MEP will cost the U.S. tens of thousands more manufacturing jobs. This is not what we need in this country.

These programs help small manufacturers with everything from plant modernization to employee training. Also, if the majority is really serious about helping manufacturers, it would fund MEP in this bill at the necessary authorization level instead of flat-funding it.

The gentleman from Tennessee's (Mr. GORDON) amendment, however, recognizes the need for additional resources and calls for $129 million in fiscal year 2005 followed by a 10 percent yearly increase through fiscal 2008. This is not a time to shortchange American manufacturers when they need it most. Support the Gordon amendment.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I must rise in opposition to the amendment being offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

There are two reasons. First of all, it increases the MEP authorization by a considerable amount above the levels that are likely to succeed in the House and the Senate and through the administration; and we simply cannot, given the budget situation this year, increase the level that much and have any expectation that the appropriations will match that.

Furthermore, the second reason is that the Gordon amendment will increase the Federal share of money for the centers; and given the shortage of money that we have this year, we want to maximize the use of the funds that we do have available and certainly do not want to add to the Federal burden, particularly because there might be some danger that the States will simply say, well, if the Federal Government has more money to give, we are going to reduce our share because, as we know, every State of this Union is facing severe financial difficulties. We certainly do not want to try to change the formula, first of all, because we do not have the money to do it and pay more and, secondly, because of the fear that the States may use this as an opportunity to reduce their share.

So I oppose the Gordon amendment; and perhaps when better times come and we have a better budget situation, it will be entirely appropriate to increase the authorization levels and also the funding levels, and it would be my dream that that happens. But it is not going to happen this year or next fiscal year, and I doubt very much it will happen during the lifetime of this authorization.

So I urge the defeat of the Gordon amendment, and I urge all my colleagues to support our efforts to defeat it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN).

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time for this opportunity on this phenomenal amendment.

I come from the great State of Ohio that has been getting blistered as far as losing manufacturing jobs, and I think this amendment should not be 10 percent. This amendment should be 100 percent. This bill should be doubled and tripled. These are investments that we need to make in this country. We need to invest in the manufacturing sector of this country. And I think we have done a real disservice over the past few years in this Chamber with the political rhetoric that makes it sound like the government does not do anything well, that government investment does not work, and that the government needs to get out and let the free market work.

But when we look at the history of this country, when we look at Eli Whitney, when we look at Samuel Morris, when we look at RCA, and when we look at the Wright Brothers, all of these began with the Federal Government stepping in and making an investment. We are good at this. We are good at this. And we need to keep going.

And we are not playing in a free market. When we have to compete with China with no labor laws, no environmental laws, no human rights, how can we compete? China is doing programs like this. Taiwan is doing programs like this. Japan, Europe. The United States is trying to establish a rules-based system, and every other country is playing to win, and it is time the United States Government plays to win.

And I am sick and tired of hearing how we do not have any money in this Congress. We do not have money because we are giving billions away in tax cuts and we are losing the manufacturing war, and we need to start making these investments.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG).

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) for sitting in the chair, and I also want to thank the gentleman from Michigan for being so involved in this whole process.

Mr. Chairman, as a strong supporter of MEP, I have come to the floor to urge a vote against this amendment. I am for MEP, but I am against this amendment.

Let me tell the Members why. I am against it because funding MEP at $106 million, which is the level of funding the program has provided in H.R. 4754, the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act for fiscal year 2005, is exactly what we want. Just yesterday the House of the Representatives passed the CJS by an overwhelming margin, 397 to 18. The $106 million level is the point at which all MEP centers will continue to provide their valuable service to our Nation's manufacturers.

Additionally, the bill before us today already authorizes significantly increased funding for the MEP program. In fact, the legislation already increases MEP funding by more than 200 percent compared to the current fiscal year 2004 level.

□ 1500

Furthermore, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) would allow the Federal-State-private network match to increase from one-third to one-half. An increase to a one-half match would jeopardize the MEP network and increase its vulnerability.

The one-third match has been in place for many years, and centers have long known that they cannot rely exclusively on Federal funds. This one-third match from the Federal Government, State governments and the private sector, is critical to maintaining the balanced program well into future.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Gordon amendment, and urge my colleagues to vote no.

In closing, let me again commend the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for his leadership in bringing this to the floor. He has been an outstanding champion on this bill and a great example.

I urge a no vote on the Gordon amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to my friends on the other side of the aisle, including the chairman, and they seem to be confused, particularly when they speak in opposition to amendments offered by Democrats that, by and large and overall, do nothing but strengthen the MEPs and make them stronger.

Just a few minutes ago, we, in a collegial and respective manner, accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) because that too would strengthen MEPs.

Let us put the facts on the table. The Gordon amendment is necessary. It keeps the MEPs, the Manufacturing Extension Partnership centers, from closing across the Nation, frankly.

Do you know that what is done by the administration is that the 200 percent increase is on $39 million? My friends who are on the floor talking about how great the MEPs are, when you vote against the Gordon amendment, if you do that, you are voting to close that. If you vote against the Larson Amendment or the Jackson-Lee amendment, you are voting to close these things down.

Is it not interesting that we would suggest that the amendment that I offered did not make any sense? Well, I tell you, if we cut the NIH by $1 million next year, would it make any sense for us to recompete every medical research lab in the country? No, it would not.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON) gives full funding where it should be. He acknowledges the fact in a reasonable and responsible manner that we need to increase by a modest $5 million per year for FY 2006 and 2008, and this is an improvement on the Bush administration's effort to kill the program. But, of course, we can do better, and he goes on to provide extra incentives for this program.

I simply ask my colleagues to support the Gordon amendment and all the Democratic amendments, because that means you are for keeping the MEP centers and building manufacturing jobs.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST).

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, the issue here is not about the manufacturing extension program, the issue is about the dollars. When we talk about the issue of dollars, we talk about the practicality of the limited resources in the Federal Government that are distributed over a wide range of areas.

All of us collectively agree that the Manufacturing Extension Program is fundamental, it is good, so our argument is, let us make sure that we get this bill passed. It is $470 million over 4 years, a 200 percent increase.

It will increase the ability for production, for efficiency in energy costs, for marketing strategies, for new technologies. It will dramatically increase the base of the manufacturing sector in this country by pulling together the collective ingenuity of partnerships from the Federal Government, one is one-third, the State government, which is one-third, and fees, which is one-third.

So I urge my colleagues, let us vote to ensure that we have a program that is reality, and not have a program in hopes of having a program, but in fact does not actually pass.

So I reluctantly urge my colleagues to vote against the Democratic amendments and vote for the base bill.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, let me just say without a doubt my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman EHLERS) and the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) support the MEP program. They have been champions for the MEP program. Probably we would not have the program right now if it had not been for their help and leadership, so I do clearly acknowledge that.

But it is simply not a credible argument to say that they must oppose this amendment because this $60 million increase, which is pretty much in line with what the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) originally proposed, would bring down this bill because the administration thinks it is too much, when yesterday they both, as well as many other Members sitting here in the Chamber, Republican Members, voted for almost a $80 million increase, against the administration's wishes, in a much-needed Small Business Administration program. So it is just not a credible argument.

We most all agree that the MEP is a good program. Let us try to fund it at least in a way that it can be efficient. As we mentioned earlier, for every $1 that the Federal Government puts in, it is matched by $1 more from the State and $1 additional from the private sector. That is good leverage, that is good business, and it is also a vote for the American worker.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to thank my colleague the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG) for coming to the floor to indicate his support for this bill, and especially to thank him for his hard work on the Committee on Appropriations in getting the $106 million funding for this year.

I also want to join in thanking the staff, Eric Webster, Olwen Huxley and David Goldston, who have worked so hard on this bill, as well as my staff member, Cameron Wilson. They have done yeoman work, and I deeply appreciate it.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, just let me say that this bill will prevent centers from closing. This bill will prevent centers from closing, without any amendments. I urge defeat of the Gordon amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORDON).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, this vote on Amendment No. 4 by Mr. GORDON will be followed by 5 minute votes on amendments on which further proceedings were postponed in the following order: Amendment No. 1 by Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas, Amendment No. 2 by Mr. LARSON of Connecticut.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 170, noes 192, not voting 71, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN PRO TEMPORE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON) (during the vote). Members are advised 2 minutes remain in this vote.

□ 1530

Messrs. TURNER of Ohio, TIAHRT and NETHERCUTT changed their vote from ''aye'' to ''no.''

Messrs. HONDA and DEFAZIO changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 355, had I been present, I would have voted ''aye.''

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the noes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

The Clerk redesignated the amendment.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN PRO TEMPORE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (during the vote). Members are advised that there are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 1542

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated against:

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 357, had I been present, I would have voted "no."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there any further amendments?

The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PETRI) having assumed the chair, Mr. SIMPSON, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3598) to establish an interagency committee to coordinate Federal manufacturing research and development efforts in manufacturing, strengthen existing programs to assist manufacturing innovation and education, and expand outreach programs for small and medium-sized manufacturers, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 706, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. COSTELLO

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. I am, Mr. Speaker, in its present form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Costello moves to recommit the bill H.R. 3598 to the Committee on Science with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

Redesignate section 8 as section 9, and insert after section 7 the following new section:

SEC. 8. MANUFACTURING AND PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT STUDY.

(a) STUDY.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Under Secretary of Commerce for Technology shall enter into a contract with the RAND Corporation, or a similar organization, for a study, as relates to the manufacturing sector including manufacturing research and technology, assessing—

(1) the nature and number of United States manufacturing and professional jobs moving outside the United States;

(2) the nature and number of jobs that have been moved outside the United States to support exports to the United States market;

(3) reemployment prospects for United States workers displaced by United States manufacturing and professional jobs moving outside the United States;

(4) the number of nonimmigrant alien H–1B and L–1 visas that have been issued, and what jobs they are being used for;

(5) the nature and number of jobs created in the United States by foreign investment in the United States;

(6) the nature and number of jobs moved outside the United States that are supported by Federal contractors and subcontractors; and

(7) the effects that the movement of United States manufacturing and professional jobs outside the United States is having on student career choices.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Under Secretary of Commerce for Technology shall transmit to the Congress a report on the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 4 months after the transmittal of the report under subsection (b), the Under Secretary of Commerce for Technology shall transmit to the Congress policy recommendations based on the findings of the study conducted under subsection (a).

Mr. COSTELLO (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COSTELLO) and a Member opposed each will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COSTELLO).

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, my motion to recommit would send this legislation back to the Committee on Science with instructions to immediately report the bill back to the House with a provision requiring the Department of Commerce to complete an independent study on the short and long term effects of the outsourcing of jobs from the United States to other countries.

Mr. Speaker, since the year 2000 the United States has lost 2.7 million manufacturing jobs, of which 500,000 jobs were in high tech industries such as telecommunications and electronics. Since the year 2000, almost 650,000 jobs have disappeared in high tech service industries. In 48 of the 50 States, jobs in high-paying industries have been replaced with lower paying jobs.

A survey taken in March of this year of 216 CFOs found that 27 percent of those CFOs plan to send more jobs offshore this year. The Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post, Business Week and others have recently published articles that point to the fact that we lack sufficient and accurate data and information in order to determine the short- and long-term effects of offshoring. There are some in the Bush administration who have said that offshoring is a good thing and it is good for the U.S. economy.

□ 1545

Others say that it is bad for our country. My motion would require an independent study to provide exactly the information and data that we now lack to lay out a plan to address this critical problem.

I offered this amendment in the Committee on Science at our markup. Unfortunately, it was voted down on a party-line vote. I was told at the time that the majority had a problem with jurisdiction issues, that other committees may, in fact, claim jurisdiction. I went to the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules refused to allow a vote on my amendment.

My amendment would simply require an independent study of the outsourcing problem which is a problem for each congressional district in every State in the United States. This administration and future administrations, this Congress and future Congresses, and the American people deserve the facts about outsourcing so we can prepare to deal with the problems both short and long term.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, the ranking member of the Committee on Science.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, am I correct in saying that all the gentleman is asking for in his motion is that the administration conduct an independent study to gather data on offshoring of jobs and then to make some policy recommendations to the Congress on how we can jointly address this growing problem?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GORDON. If the gentleman would continue to yield, is it true that if this motion is adopted, there would be no delay because the House could immediately reconsider the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Again, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, so a ''yes'' vote on the gentleman's motion is a vote to consider an independent study of offshoring and a ''no'' vote against the gentleman's motion is to reject a study by the Commerce Department on offshoring and recommendations for correcting the problem?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion. This motion sounds good on the surface, but it is both misguided and unnecessary.

I have to say I am a little bit surprised to see my colleagues on the other side of the aisle get so excited over a study.

Outsourcing, they say correctly, is a major problem and their solution, a study. They are going to accuse us of foot dragging, not doing enough to keep and create jobs here at home, and as an alternative, they offer a study?

We have a bill before us that takes real, proven, practical and immediate steps to help American manufacturers. Is the other side arguing that the one thing it lacks is a study? That is political nonsense.

It is even worse, really, because if my colleagues across the aisle had done their homework, they would have discovered that the House has already approved a study on outsourcing and even has provided money for it and is part of a bill that will not get held up over other issues. We did not do this so long ago that they might have forgotten. The House approved the bill just yesterday.

The Commerce appropriation bill includes $2 million for the National Academy of Public Administration, an independent, nongovernment body, to conduct a study. That is important. The entire House is already on record in not only supporting an independent study of offshoring but actually funding it. So we back up our words with deeds.

Let us not encumber this bill with an unnecessary and duplicative study. Let us pass the bill and take real steps to help American manufacturers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETRI). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 and 9 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on the motion to recommit will be followed by a 5-minute vote, if ordered, on passage of the bill and on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 171, noes 193, not voting 69, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETRI) (during the vote). There are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 1608

Mrs. EMERSON and Mr. DUNCAN changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I missed rollcall No. 358, because of an interview on a network. If I had been present I would have voted ''aye.''

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained on rollcall vote Nos. 355–358. If I were present, I would have voted: "Yes" on rollcall vote No. 355 (the Gordon Amendment); "yes" on rollcall vote No. 356 (the Jackson-Lee Amendment); "yes" on rollcall vote No. 357 (the Larson Amendment); "yes" on rollcall vote No. 358 (the Motion to Recommit).

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, personal reasons will prevent me from being present for legislative business scheduled after 2 p.m. today, Friday, July 9, 2004. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on the amendment offered by Mr. GORDON (rollcall No. 355); "yes" on the amendment offered by Ms. JACKSON-LEE (rollcall No. 356); "aye" on the amendment offered by Mr. LARSON (rollcall No. 357); "aye" on the motion to recommit the bill H.R. 3598 (rollcall No. 358).

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, due to a family commitment, I was not present in the Chamber on Friday, July 9, to cast my votes on rollcalls 355 through 358. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on each measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, the pending business is the question of the Speaker's approval of the Journal of the last day's proceedings.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 3889

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 3889.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I take this time, as much as may be required, to inquire of the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), chairman of the Committee on Rules, of the schedule for next week.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding to me, and as we have just observed, we have completed our business for the day and for the week.

The House will convene on Monday at 12:30 for morning hour and 2 p.m. for legislative business. We plan to consider several measures under suspension of the rules. A final list of those bills will be sent to Members' offices by the end of this day. Any votes called for on those measures will be rolled until 6:30 p.m.

Members should be aware we also plan to consider the rule for the fiscal year 2005 agriculture appropriation bill, as well as H.R. 4755, the fiscal 2005 Legislative Branch appropriation bill on Monday.

On Tuesday, and the balance of the week, we expect to consider additional legislation under suspension of the rules. We plan to complete consideration of the agriculture appropriation bill, as well as consider additional bills under a rule:

S. 15, the Project Bioshield Act; H.R. 4759, the U.S.-Australia Free Trade Agreement; and the fiscal year 2005 foreign operations appropriation bill.

Finally, and I know this will be pleasant news to all of our colleagues after a long Friday, we would like Members to know that a week from today, on Friday, July 16, we do not expect any votes on the floor.

And I would be happy to accept any questions that my friend from Maryland, the distinguished minority whip, might like to proffer.

Mr. HOYER. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the information and appreciate his being open to additional questions.

To clarify the schedule for the appropriation bills the gentleman has listed for next week, does the gentleman anticipate on Monday that we will complete the Legislative Branch bill?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, yes, the Legislative Branch appropriation bill, we hope. Then, as I say, we will be bringing up the rule on the agriculture appropriation bill. And I doubt that that will be completed at that time. It will go over.

Mr. HOYER. So on Tuesday the gentleman expects we will complete the Ag bill?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, yes, the agriculture appropriation bill will be our work primarily on Tuesday.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman have a feel for when we will consider the Foreign Ops appropriation bill?

Mr. DREIER. Probably on Thursday of next week we would most likely consider the Foreign Ops bill.

Mr. HOYER. Will we consider the BioShield bill on that day as well?

Mr. DREIER. No, our plan is to, on Wednesday, deal with both the BioShield Act as well as the U.S.-Australia Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. Now, on the Australia Free Trade Agreement, or any other trade bill, what day does the gentleman anticipate we will be considering the Australia Free Trade bill?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, as I said, along with the BioShield Act on Wednesday we also anticipate considering the U.S.-Australia Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. HOYER. All right. I thank the gentleman. On the appropriation bills that we will consider, will they be considered under the usual rule? I understand perhaps the legislative rule may be a restrictive rule.

And I yield to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DREIER. Yes, if the gentleman will continue to yield, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, we have already addressed the issue of the rule for the legislative branch appropriation bill, and that is in fact a structured rule. It is our intention on the other measures that are before us to consider them under the standard open amendment process, just as we have this week on the appropriation issues that we have addressed.

Mr. HOYER. I thank my friend for the information.

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. HOYER. In closing, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to get deeply into this, but can we anticipate votes on any of these? And if we can anticipate votes on them, will they be in the approximate range of 15 to 20 to 25 minutes? Or does the gentleman have any idea what our plan is?

Mr. DREIER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I would simply say that it is our intention, as is always the case, to have the majority comply with rule XX, clause 2(a), which states that all votes should be held within a minimum of 15 minutes. And then, if my friend would further yield, I would say it is also quite possible that some Members, either still coming to the chamber or who are in the Chamber, who might either have not voted if they are coming to the Chamber or if they are here, may want to consider changing their votes.

As has often been the case, as I said in my closing remarks on the rule today, when I served in the minority, during those wonderful 14 years that my friend was in the majority before 1994, and also since we have been in the majority, we have clearly done that.

So I thank my friend for yielding, and it is our intention to simply comply with clause 2(a), rule XX, when it comes to dealing with votes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that explanation, I suppose is the kindest adjective to apply. I appreciate the gentleman's observation. I will say that the gentleman treats gingerly the changing of opinions. That is, obviously, as the gentleman noted in his closing argument, the subject of debate and also subject to discussion that goes on on this floor, which is clearly appropriate.

But I will tell the gentleman that his party believed that the keeping of the votes open for an extended period of time, i.e. in excess of 20 minutes, was corrupt, and the Vice President said it was corrupt. The Vice President said it undermines civility. The Vice President, when he then had my job, minority whip, said that it was undemocratic.

The gentleman has indicated that we did, in fact, from time to time, keep the vote open for longer than 20 minutes. The gentleman is absolutely accurate. But we did not claim it was undemocratic, undermining civility or corrupt. It was the gentleman's side that claimed that.

Mr. DREIER. If the gentleman would yield.

Mr. HOYER. In just one second.

Mr. Speaker, I suppose, then, the question becomes, in the context of situational ethics, has something changed that has brought about this recognition of it as a lack of corruption, lack of undermining the democratic process, and a lack of undermining civility? And I yield to my friend.

Mr. DREIER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding, and I think he raises a very good point.

I have said on a number of occasions that the year I was born was the last time that my party was elected to serve in the majority here in the House of Representatives, until we won our majority in 1994. In fact, the gentleman referenced the now Vice President of the United States, the former minority whip, Mr. CHENEY. And Mr. CHENEY never served as a member of the majority here in the House of Representatives.

I have admitted that there are a number of things that we have learned, with not a single Member having served in the majority once we emerged to that status following the election of 1994. So it is true we understand that leadership does entail making tough decisions, and, occasionally, as I said in my closing remarks on the rule earlier today, involve extending an invitation to Members to deliberate and, in fact, on occasion, change their mind. That is part of the democratic process.

□ 1615

So I will admit that the process which we observed on numerous occasions when the gentleman's party was in the majority is something which did provide an opportunity for us to learn from.

One thing I will say, when we look at the issue of slowing up a process or creating challenges, I think about the other body which as we all know has this very unique ability to allow one Member to hold up an entire process and delay the opportunity to move forward on a number of issues, including confirmations. So I think we, having a 38-minute vote here, it is not unprecedented. I will say we did in fact see the democratic process work.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, was the Vice President, acting as the minority whip, wrong when he said this was a corrupt practice?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, what I will say is there was no one in the minority at that time who had the experience that many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have had up to that point in 1994 when we won the majority.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I heard the assertion of the lack of experience in the majority, but my question was: Was the Vice President wrong?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to characterize rightness or wrongness. What I am saying is when we on this side of the aisle have extended the invitation to Members to consider changing a vote, we saw that done many times on the other side of the aisle. I can only speak for myself, but I am a Member who has learned that process is a very important part of the legislative process itself, and the process of democratic governance.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say very seriously I have served along with the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) for over 2 decades in this institution. I care a great deal about this institution, and the attacks made on this institution for the 14 years that I was in the majority and the assertions that were made and the characterization which I did not fully express on the floor that the minority whip made of Mr. Wright, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the names or the epithets that were used against him, there has never been an apology for that, notwithstanding this new information and new perspective that the Republican Party has gained now that they are in the majority and perhaps see the necessity to take actions that at some point in time they thought were corrupt, undemocratic, and undermining of civility.

We are not going to resolve this, but I will state that the gentleman and I have had discussions about comments the gentleman made about open rules, about amendments, about motions to recommit, about time for debate, about time for consideration prior to the Committee on Rules meeting and reporting out bills, and that perspective, as has been noted in our discussions in the Committee on Rules, has somewhat changed.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, I am happy that in that litany of issues raised, the gentleman raised the issue of motions to recommit.

As the gentleman knows very well, when we were in the minority, we were often denied motions to recommit. Yet when we won the majority in 1994, because of the expertise that so many of us had had serving in the minority for so many years, we made a determination at that time that we would change the rules to in fact provide the minority with at least one bite at the apple, meaning an opportunity to vote on that motion to recommit; and in most instances, not every, I will acknowledge, but in most instances, two opportunities for the minority to have a chance to modify and change a piece of legislation by providing a substitute at the end of a bill itself.

I will acknowledge when it came to the issue of the amendment process itself, we are here Friday afternoon having gone through a long and drawn out appropriations process, which we are in the midst of right now, most of these bills are being considered under an open amendment process. We have a very narrow majority in the House. When the gentleman's party was in the majority, they had a 70-vote margin. We have a responsibility to move our agenda, so we have often done it under a structured amendment process. But at the end of the day, we still have provided something that did not exist when we were in the minority, that being the right to offer a recommittal motion.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, prolonging this will not be very educational for Members or others who might be interested, but I will observe that oftentimes the offering of a motion to recommit without the provision for the waivers that are given to the majority in terms of the germaneness of those motions to recommit with instructions essentially precludes the minority party from offering the alternative which they believe is the best alternative.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield on that point, I would just remind the gentleman when we were debating an issue which is very important to this institution, that is the continuity of Congress, we had a recommittal motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. And as the gentleman knows, that was accepted on this side as we were moving ahead with that very important quest to try to bring about a bipartisan solution to the challenge of dealing with a potential catastrophe to this institution.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman, is that the same bill on which the committee refused to have a hearing on that very critically important issue, the alternative offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD)?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, the last Congress did hold a hearing on that legislation, and when the request was made to deal with the proposals of the constitutional amendment, they were not even offered by Members of the Committee on the Judiciary when they did proceed with the markup in that committee.

Mr. HOYER. My question was for this year. There was no hearing, am I correct?

Mr. DREIER. The gentleman is correct, although I recall testifying on this issue before the Committee on House Administration this year as we dealt with this issue.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his observations.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JULY 12, 2004

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning hour debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

REPUBLICANS WIN COVETED ROLL CALL TROPHY

(Mr. OXLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce the results of the 43rd Annual Roll Call Baseball Game for Charity between the Democrats and Republicans. While the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) is still on the floor, I want to thank him for his warm hospitality in his district at the Prince George's County Stadium and his graciousness, despite losing. And I particularly want to thank all of the players and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. SABO), the Democrat manager, for being such great sportsmen. We are pleased for one more year to possess this coveted Roll Call trophy, which is all one word, coveted Roll Call trophy. I am glad to have it here on the floor, and I will have it protected in my office for the next year. The score was 14–7.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OXLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. SABO), the manager of the Democratic team, is not on the floor, but I know he would want me to congratulate you. As painful as defeat is, we graciously acknowledge that the second inning was devastating in which you scored 9, 10, 11 runs. It is going up, 10 runs, I guess. And it would be not as gracious to observe that other than that second inning, the game was pretty good. But I congratulate the gentleman on behalf of the somewhat gracious losers.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. The final score was 14–7. I thank the sponsors of this event. There were over 5,000 people, the largest crowd at the event ever, and it will produce over $100,000 for the Adult Literacy Council and Boys and Girls Clubs of the Washington area. They are always very worthy recipients.

Thanks to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. SABO), half of the budget of the Adult Literacy Council will be provided from the proceeds of this game. We are very pleased about that. I notice the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON), one of the announcers for the game, he and former member Martin Russo. We thank them for their fine work. And finally, I want to thank Hall of Famer Lou Brock, who was brought here by the auspices of the Baseball Hall of Fame, as well as Major League Baseball. He was very gracious, threw out the first ball, threw a strike, signed autographs for the kids, and had pictures taken. To Lou Brock and his wife, thank you for making the 43rd annual baseball game one to remember.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN THE ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 2828, WATER SUPPLY, RELIABILITY, AND ENVIRONMENTAL IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 2828, the Clerk be authorized to make technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the action of the House just taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GINGREY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

WE NEED A DIFFERENT ECONOMIC POLICY

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, Vice President CHENEY was in Cleveland this week trying to explain the President's economic policy to a State which has lost one-sixth of its manufacturing jobs since President Bush and Vice President CHENEY took office, a State that has lost almost 200,000 jobs overall, a State that has lost 195 jobs every single day of the Bush administration.

His answer to Ohio's economic problems is more tax cuts for the wealthiest people in the State hoping those tax cuts will trickle-down and create jobs. That clearly has not worked. And his other answer is more trade agreements like NAFTA and other trade agreements which have hemorrhaged jobs and shipped jobs overseas.

Clearly we need a new direction. The Bush economic policies are not working in the industrial Midwest. They are not working in small-town Ohio; they are not working in the big cities. We need a different economic policy. The Bush program simply is not working.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

□ 1630

CONGRATULATING ALCEE HASTINGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GINGREY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise with a great deal of pride to announce to the Members of the House the election of our colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), as president of the Organization on Security and Cooperation in Europe's Parliamentary Assembly.

That assembly, Mr. Speaker, is an assembly of 55 signatory states to the Helsinki Final Act. Those 55 nations were represented by over 300 parliamentarians at their annual meeting in Edinburgh, Scotland, this past week.

Earlier today, Edinburgh time, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) received on the first ballot over 55 percent of the votes. This is a historic occasion. He is the first American ever elected president of the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly. Not only that, he is the first minority to be elected president of the Organization on Security and Cooperation in Europe and, based upon the information I have, I believe the first and only African American to ever be elected president of one of the interparliamentary assemblies, combining Europe and the United States.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), a distinguished member of our body, has served on the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe since 2001 and has been vice president of the OSCE for the past 2 years. He also has gained important experience in international affairs as a member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) is now serving his seventh term in the Congress of the United States.

I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT) and the bipartisan delegation. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) serves in this body and is a Democrat; but he ran as an American, and he was supported by the American delegation, Republicans and Democrats. And I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) for his leadership of our delegation, the chairman of the Organization of Security and Cooperation in Europe Commission here in the Congress.

The gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT), in his letter supporting the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), said, ''Never one to retreat from a challenge, Alcee Hastings possesses an instinctive ability to identify solutions and build common ground for their implementation.''

It was that ability, that quality, that determination that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) had which led to his overwhelming election. Gert Weisskirchen, in Germantown, who withdrew in favor of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) this week, said to the Palm Beach Post that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) represents the best of the United States. Now, Mr. Weisskirchen and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) have served together for almost a decade in the organization's parliamentary assembly, so his observations are well founded and based upon his experience.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) will bring credit to our country, credit to our Congress, and credit to the Parliamentary Assembly. I will tell my colleagues that the United States has the privilege next year in July on our July 4 break of hosting the 55 nations that make up the Parliamentary Assembly. I know that all of us look forward to welcoming our colleagues from throughout Europe and Canada, the signatory states, with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) as the president of that organization to our Capitol city and showing them American hospitality, while at the same time cementing a relationship with our allies and raising very significant and important issues to international security, peace, and economic well-being.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this time to honor our colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), on this historic election as president of the Parliamentary Assembly of the OSCE.

EXCHANGE OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

OUTRAGEOUS RULING BY THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a dark day in the history of international law. Today, the International Court of Justice, at the request of the United Nations General Assembly, ruled, ''The construction of the wall being built by Israel, the occupying power in the occupied Palestinian territory, including in and around east Jerusalem and its associated regime, is contrary to international law.''

With this extraordinarily biased decision, the International Court of Justice has become an international disgrace. This outrageous ruling confirms what many of us have feared, that opponents of Israel have overtaken the judicial process at the U.N.'s highest judicial court and have begun to use it for political aims on the world stage.

Mr. Speaker, the referral of this issue itself was biased and prejudged Israel. The referral actually used contestable political language such as ''occupied Palestinian territory'' and referred to the Israeli security fence repeatedly as a wall. It is as if the court simply did a cut and paste of those terms and issued them in their ruling today, completely failing in their multipage ruling to talk about context, namely years of brutal terrorism at the hands of Palestinian extremists against Israeli civilians.

Mr. Speaker, it is crucial today that we make a pair of points that the International Court of Justice completely ignored. Number one, Israel's security fence prevents terrorism; and, number two, the ICJ had no authority to hear this case.

These two points, Mr. Speaker, are actually reflected in a resolution that I authored along with the gentlewoman from Nevada (Ms. BERKLEY) that has garnered nearly 163 co-sponsors, Republicans and Democrats alike. The Pence-Berkley resolution resolves, in effect, that Congress supports the construction by Israel of a security fence to prevent Palestinian terrorist attacks; and, number two, that Congress condemns the decision by the UN General Assembly to request the Court of Justice to act.

Mr. Speaker, I rise humbly today to say Congress would do well in the coming days to act with all expeditious speed on this legislation, on this resolution, and make a statement that America stands with Israel.

I authored this resolution after my wife, Karen, and I toured Israel in January of this year. Seen in this photograph, we are standing with Israeli defense forces along the side of a chain-linked fence, which the International Court of Justice today repeatedly described as a wall. A chain-linked fence that nevertheless has proven to be an effective tool in thwarting terrorist attacks.

In the north of Israel, where a section of the fence has been completed, there has not been a single suicide attack in more than 8 months. Before the first stage of the fence became operational in July of 2003, the average number of attacks was 8.6 per month. In the past 11 months, that figure has dropped dramatically to only 3.2 attacks per month.

In the 2 hours that we toured the security fence this day in January in Israel, the security officials traveling with us received in my presence three separate calls on their radios about attempted terrorist incursions. In 2 hours, three separate terrorist incursions. These incursions, while they do not succeed but on an intermittent basis, the reality is that the attempts are a daily reality for Israelis. The truth is the Israeli Security Fence has prevented terrorism, and that was a fact completely lost on the International Court of Justice.

Also lost is that under international norms, the Israeli Supreme Court, just like if it was the United States Supreme Court and not the court in the Hague, has sole jurisdiction over this matter. In fact, the Israeli Supreme Court is an independent judiciary of a sovereign and democratic nation. Its rulings on the Israeli Security Fence has struck a fair balance between the rights of Israelis to live free from suicide bombings and the right of Palestinians to their economic well-being, and there is no legal basis for the court in the Hague to usurp its authority.

So I rise today, Mr. Speaker, to urge this Congress to act on House Concurrent Resolution 371 that the gentlewoman from Nevada (Ms. BERKLEY) and I introduced and enjoys 163 cosponsors and to act deliberately. Or if not on our resolution, that in the next several days to rise with one voice, Democrats and Republicans alike, to condemn this unjust decision by the International Court of Justice.

I also challenge my colleagues, as we think about funding issues and resources that will be spent in the direction of the United Nations, that we seriously reconsider any effort to direct U.S. taxpayer dollars to this international court, if I may say, of injustice.

Like so many million Americans I pray for the peace of Jerusalem and I stand with Israel, believing as those same millions do that He will bless those who bless her, He will curse those who curse her.

Let the voice of the American people be heard. Let us condemn this unjust and disgraceful decision by the International Court of Justice.

EXCHANGE OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the Special Order time of the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GINGREY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

THE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it has been a bad week in Washington. Adding to their laundry list of legislative arm twisting, House Republicans yesterday once again bent democracy to fit their needs by holding a traditional 15-minute vote open for 38 minutes until they were able to change the outcome of the vote to their favor.

It was not an isolated incident of arrogant disregard for the political process by Republican leadership in this Congress. It was an example yesterday of the ''modern-day'' Republican and their win-at-all-cost style of governance. Never before when the Democrats were in control or when Newt Gingrich was Speaker of the House, never before has this House of Representatives operated in such secrecy.

At 2:54 a.m. on a Friday in March, 2003, the House cut veterans' benefits by three votes. At 2:39 a.m. on a Friday in April, the House slashed education and health care by five votes. At 1:56 a.m. on a Friday in May, the House passed the tax cut bill, weighted especially towards millionaires, by a handful of votes. At 2:33 a.m. on a Friday in June, the House passed the Medicare privatization bill by one vote. At 12:57 a.m. on a Friday in June, the House eviscerated Head Start by one vote. And then, after returning from summer recess, at 12:12 a.m. on a Friday in October, the House voted $87 billion for Iraq. Always in the middle of the night, always after the press had passed their deadlines, always after the American people had turned off the news and gone to bed.

What did the public see? At best, Americans read a small story with a brief explanation of the bill and the vote count in the Saturday newspaper. And people here, the Republican leadership, knows that Saturday is the least read newspaper of the week.

What did the public miss? They did not see the House votes, which normally take 15, 17, sometimes 20 minutes, they did not see them dragging on for as long as one hour as members of the Republican leadership trolled for enough votes to cobble together a Republican victory. They did not see GOP leaders stalking the floor for whoever was not in line. They did not see the gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT); they did not see the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), majority leader; they did not see the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT), majority whip coerce enough Republican Members, arm-twisting them, berating them sometimes, threatening them sometimes, offering them things sometimes. They did not see them switching their votes to produce the desired results. In other words, they did not see the subversion of democracy.

Then in November they did it again. The most sweeping changes in Medicare in its 38-year history were forced through the House at 5:55 on a Saturday morning. The debate started at midnight. The roll call began at 3 o'clock late Friday night/early Saturday morning. Most of us voted with this plastic card that we were given within the 20 minutes allotted. Normally the Speaker would have gaveled the vote. The vote would be completed. But not this time because the bill was losing.

By 4 a.m., the bill had been defeated, 216 to 218. Still the Speaker refused to gavel the vote closed. Then the assault began. The gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT); the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY); the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT); the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the Committee on Ways and Means chairman; and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the Committee on Energy and Commerce chairman, all searched the House floor for Republican Members to bully.

I watched them surround the gentleman from Cincinnati, Ohio (Mr. CHABOT), trying first a carrot, then a stick. He believes what he does. He remained defiant. He showed his integrity. Next they aimed at the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH), retiring congressman, and these are his words as I tell this story, whose son is running to succeed him. They promised support if he changed his vote to ''yes.'' They promised $100,000 for his son's campaign. They said if he refused, they threatened his son's future.

□ 1645

He stood his ground, again showing integrity and courage.

Many of the two dozen Republicans who voted against the bill had fled the floor. One Republican headed into the Democratic cloakroom. I saw her there about 5:30.

By 4:30, the browbeating had moved into the Republican cloakroom, out of sight of the C–SPAN cameras and out of sight of the insomniac public. Republican leaders woke President Bush, a White House aide passed a cell phone from one recalcitrant Republican Member to another.

At 5:55, two hours and 55 minutes after the roll call had begun, twice as long, twice as long, as any roll call had ever taken in this House of Representatives, two western Republicans emerged from the cloakroom. They walked down this aisle, ashen and cowed, to the front of the Chamber. They picked up cards on this table, they picked up a green card, they surrendered their card to the Clerk, the Speaker gaveled the vote closed, and Medicare privatization passed.

You can do a lot in the middle of the night, under the cover of darkness.

That is what the Republicans did again this week. You wonder how they are going to violate democracy in the weeks ahead as we preach democracy in Iraq and around the world.

ECONOMIC POLICIES OF CURRENT ADMINISTRATION WORKING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, each month the Joint Economic Committee has the opportunity to receive job growth data from the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics. This month, the JEC was pleased to receive good news; fortunately, good news of two kinds: First, many good paying jobs are being created in large numbers in the U.S. economy; and, second, job growth continues at a rapid rate.

The June payroll employment increases pushed the total employment gains since August to 1.5 million jobs. According to the new data released a week ago by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, job growth continues today as the payroll employment increased by 112,000 jobs in June.

During the past few days, however, some have contended that most of the recent employment gains are in low wage jobs. Quite the contrary is true. Occupations that are relatively well paid accounted for over 70 percent of the net increases in employment between June of 2003 and June of 2004.

Although this does not mean that all of the jobs that were created in these categories were high-paying, most of them were. The jobs in these occupational categories are generally highly paid. It does indicate that most of the recent employment gains have not been disproportionately in low-wage occupations, as some in this House have claimed.

Specifically, according to the statistics from the Bureau of Labor Statistics Household Survey, between June 2003 and June 2004, 71.4 percent of the net increase in employment was in three relatively well-paid occupational categories: Management, professional and related occupations, that category comprised 23.1 percent of the job gains; construction and extraction occupations, that is, mining occupations, accounted for 36.1 percent; and installation, maintenance and repair occupations accounted for 12.2 percent.

The earnings in these occupational categories are higher than the median and much higher than the earnings of the typical low-income worker. Most of the workers in well-paid occupations have earnings in the middle range or higher.

These employment figures indicate that most of the new jobs are not at low wage levels, but at higher levels of earnings. We have been hearing assertions about ''hamburger flippers,'' jobs dominating employment for about 20 years now. Those stories have not come true. It just is not happening. We are not about to become a Nation of hamburger flippers.

The data shows that most of the recent employment gains have been in relatively well paid occupations. This is good news for the American worker and is good news for the American family. It means that the low-paying job problem that accompanied the economic downturn which began in the last half of 2000, during the Clinton administration, has been rectified.

It further means that the economic policies of the current administration are working to bring pocketbook issues into a positive state.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER IN AMERICAN POLITICS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, knowledge is power. That is the hope for America right now. That is the hope, that the American people will see what is happening in the people's House at the direction of the White House.

Democracy was subverted in a brazen manner here, and it is because of the administration that has a policy that States' ignorance is a virtue.

The President of the United States proudly says, ''I don't read newspapers. I don't read books, except for children's books when there is a photo-op possibility. I only take information that is pre-chewed by my staff and brought in to me and given to me.'' We will talk more about that later.

But the fact is the reason they want the PATRIOT Act is because as a part of this ''ignorance is a virtue'' policy, we have got to keep the American people ignorant. How can you do that? Keep them out of the libraries. We do not want them going into the libraries and reading books and finding out things that the President does not even know. What will happen if the people know more than the President?

So, the PATRIOT Act says, give the CIA and the FBI the ability to come into the library and see what you, the American people, are reading. What is going on here?

Now, this body came out here and took that power away. But it was suppressed. Democracy was suppressed in this body. After we restored the basic freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, we took away the people's right to read whatever they want without having the government snooping over their shoulder.

Democracy was censored after the American people's representatives had spoken loudly and clearly through their elected representatives, Democrats and Republicans. This was not just Democrats. The people told us to restore some of the basic freedoms and the civil liberties subverted by the PATRIOT Act. We did it out here on this floor.

But King George III did not want that. He wanted a different outcome. Democracy was subverted in a brazen display of raw political arrogance ordered by the administration and executed by the Republicans. America has never been so divided.

The Republican America is a place where the polls stay open until the Republicans win. Now, you have all voted in an election. You go to the polls and they close at 8 o'clock. You cannot come at 8:10 and say, ''Hey, I want to vote.'' They are closed. It is over. You only can vote until then.

The Republican America is a place where the voice of the people is drowned out by the iron will of this administration. They did it right here on the floor. The Republican America is a place where fear is useful and greed is very, very good.

The Republican America is a place where democracy is endangered by an administration unwilling to accept the will of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, knowledge is power. The administration preordained the war in Iraq. They decided they were going to war. They manufactured reasons and they remanufactured responses as knowledge of the President's war choices began to reach the American people and turned out to be false.

The Senate Intelligence Committee has just put out a report which is just the tip of the iceberg. They say the CIA gave bad information to the President. Remember, the President does not read anything himself. He does not read the newspapers, he does not read books. He lets people he trusts come in and tell him what has happened.

So, the CIA is at fault for why we are in Iraq. There is no other answer. Our President could not be at fault, because he took the word of people he trusted.

Now, the CIA is not without fault, but they are not solely to blame. What about the trips that Vice President CHENEY made out to Langley to the CIA headquarters, and twisted arms and said, ''Can't you find some reason here why we can go into Iraq?'' He did it five times, so that when the information came from the CIA to the President, who did not know anything else, he took what Mr. CHENEY squeezed out of the CIA. The process behind the intelligence was tainted. What did the administration know? What did they ignore, mischaracterize or discount, because it did not fit their agenda?

The checks and balances of this government were broken down by an administration that had a blank check from the Congress: ''Go out and do anything you want on the war on terror.'' So they had the blank check in their pocket.

Then they had to have a clear intent for why they should invade Iraq, so they had to go to the CIA: ''Give us a reason. Come on, give us a reason. There has got to be a reason. Come on.''

The CIA is not without fault, but they are far from alone in leading us to war in Iraq. The administration will happily make them a scapegoat. Put it all on them and send them out in the wilderness. Blame George Tenet, blame all the analysts, public servants, all the public officials. Nothing at the White House. ''We are blameless,'' they say.

I ask every American to compare what the administration will do in the next few days. On this weekend they are going to spin that idea all weekend. ''We are blameless. We are blameless. The CIA is to blame.''

Just compare that with what John Kennedy did after the Bay of Pigs. President Kennedy accepted responsibility. He had the CIA telling him things. He listened to them and he allowed it to happen, and he said ''The buck stops at my desk. I made the decision. I was wrong.''

Now, does anybody in this country believe that the President will admit that any mistakes have occurred in Iraq because of his decision making? Will this administration tell the American people that they should be held accountable for a needless war in Iraq?

Can you imagine the President coming on television and saying, ''Well, we made some mistakes and I shouldn't have taken us into Iraq. The 1,000 people who have died were for naught.''

John Kennedy accepted the blame. Will this President do that? The buck stops at the White House with this bunch for only 116 more days.

WE MUST PROTECT OUR BORDER COMMUNITIES FROM DIRTY AIR AND UNFAIR SANCTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, we all know that pollution knows no boundaries. As much as we wish they could, the Border Patrol is not able to stop air pollution from coming over our international borders.

Right now, communities on our international border are being bombarded with pollutants from our neighboring countries. It is making air quality along the border even worse and leaves those communities with no recourse.

I introduced a bill, H.R. 4774, to provide Federal assistance to combat air pollution at the border, to ensure that our communities are not unfairly penalized.

Imperial County in my Southern California district, which takes up much of the U.S. Mexico border in the State, is severely impacted by air pollution because it sits in the middle of an air basin that straddles the international border with Mexico.

Mexico simply does not have the same strict air quality standards as does the United States. Imperial County has not met national and State air quality standards as a result, so any air pollution created in the international air basin has serious consequences for the health of my community's citizens.

I have deep concerns about a recent Federal Court ruling regarding the air quality of Imperial County and the subsequent actions on the part of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Imperial County has demonstrated to EPA that the county would have only moderate pollution were it not for serious air pollution from Mexicali, Mexico. EPA agreed. However, outside groups took EPA to court and they ruled in turn that Imperial County's air pollution should indeed be classified as serious.

This is a devastating ruling for Imperial County. Unemployment averages 20 to 30 percent. The ability to attract new employment opportunities will be greatly hindered. Economic development will be halted. Agricultural activities will not be able to begin.

□ 1700

The chaos and expense to Imperial County will not address the real cause of nonattainment: cross-border pollutants.

Imperial County has an asthma rate that is off the charts, the worst in the State, probably the worst in the Nation. Asthma-related hospitalization rates are five to six times greater than the overall rate in California. This statistic is a statistic that I and many others in our community are fighting to change, but we cannot change it if we are not pushed to work with our neighbor to the south.

For that reason, I introduced the bill H.R. 4774, the FAIR Air Act, fair meaning the Foreign Air Impact Regulation, which will compel the United States at the Federal level to work more closely with our neighbors in trying to reduce air pollution. This bill says that if pollution from another country causes nonattainment of pollution regulations, EPA and the Secretary of State should work together to lower it; do not put it on the backs of the farmers and the working people in Imperial County.

My bill would direct the Secretary of State to negotiate with his or her counterparts in the foreign country to develop a plan to improve air quality. It requires EPA to deliver a report to Congress that lays out the agreed-upon binational steps with binational funding to back it up, those steps to improve the air quality in the region; and directs the EPA to take action to help the region implement the plan; and, finally, delays EPA's authority to move border air quality regions to a higher pollution nonattainment status until the previous items have been completed.

We simply cannot put this international problem on the backs of those who simply happen to live along the border. There truly needs to be a binational cooperative solution. We live in the same air shed, and we are interested in good neighborly relations.

I am fighting to help our binational communities come into compliance with air quality standards with help from both sets of governments. It is only with cooperation and working together to achieve a common goal that we can indeed reduce air pollution and keep the children in Imperial County from suffering from asthma.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4774, the FAIR Air Act, will help to achieve that purpose. I urge my colleagues to support that bill.

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE RULES AGAINST ISRAEL'S RIGHT TO PROTECT ITSELF

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GINGREY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, today the so-called International Court of Justice, which I think would be better named the ''International Court of Injustice,'' ruled against Israel putting up a security fence, which she put up in order to protect her people against suicide bombers.

No condemnation from the ''International Court of Injustice'' about suicide bombers and the killing of innocent civilians and the terror campaign that has been waged against Israel by the Palestinians for the past 3 years. No talk about the children, the schoolchildren who have been blown up as they go to school on buses, or the pregnant women that have been killed because of Palestinian terror. But only, once again, a ruling condemning the State of Israel.

I do not think that any Nation, having the need to protect its citizens, would act any differently than the State of Israel in putting up this fence to keep suicide bombers out. It is hypocrisy for the International Court of Justice, it is hypocrisy for the United Nations, the hypocrisy of these countries that would have one standard for the State of Israel and one standard for every other country.

Other nations have fences, yet we hear no condemnation towards those countries from the International Court of Justice. India, Saudi Arabia, Turkey all have fences to deal with insurgencies or terrorism, but yet the very countries that condemn Israel for the same thing, we hear nary a peep from them about other countries.

The International Court of Justice should not have even heard this case. But, again, of course, they have one separate standard for the State of Israel and one separate standard for every other country.

Today's decision by the International Court of Justice is in itself a travesty of justice. The Israeli security barrier is not only protecting innocent Israeli civilians from terrorism; it is allowing Palestinians to achieve a greater degree of normalcy as Israeli checkpoints have been removed and terrorists are less able to pass through Palestinian communities.

The Prime Minister of Israel's disengagement plan endorsed by our country, the European Union, the United Nations, and Russia was based in large part on steps by Israel to achieve greater security, including the establishment of this temporary security fence. As soon as Palestinian terrorism ends, there will no longer be a need for this antiterrorism barrier. The ruling of the ICJ sets back the Middle East peace process by undermining the disengagement plan and the road map.

The Israeli Supreme Court recently ruled that the security barrier is a legitimate and legal tool to prevent terror, but that there must be a balance between security and the impact on Palestinian communities. I cannot comprehend why an international tribunal has taken up and now reached a decision on a case which had already been competently handled by a national court.

Now, this decision is merely advisory. I call upon the members of the United Nations General Assembly to correct this mistake by not taking up a resolution to implement the recommendations of the International Court of Justice. If they do, the United Nations will once again show that it is not functioning the way it was intended; that instead of being an impartial group, it is leaning heavily on one side, and as Abba Eban, the late Foreign Minister of Israel, used to say, you could have a resolution at the United Nations saying that the Earth is flat, and if it were put forward by an Arab country, it would automatically get 70 or more votes.

The fence that Israel has put up is a fence that any nation would put up to defend its people and keep terrorism away. Just as we in the United States are doing everything possible to prevent another terrorist attack on our country, Israel has every right to do the same thing to prevent terrorist attacks on its country. Terrorism is a terrible tool that some think can be used as a negotiating tool. We must stomp out this scourge of terrorism wherever it rears its ugly head.

I commend Israel for the security barrier, and I condemn the ''International Court of Injustice'' for once again showing that they are nothing more than a travesty of justice.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PAYING TRIBUTE TO RUSTY CALDWELL

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to rise before this body of Congress and this Nation to pay tribute to Rusty Caldwell for his admirable service to his country and dedication to his Colorado community. Rusty is a true American hero and patriot, and a beloved friend and colleague to many in his community. In his years spent in the armed forces, Rusty embodied the ideals of integrity and courage that we, as Americans, have come to expect from our military personnel. He has led an amazing life and I believe it is appropriate to recognize this exceptional man, and his many contributions to his community, state and country.

Rusty began his career of service after high school. In 1943, he went off to fight in World War II, and was assigned to the destroyer escort USS Weaver. His missions consisted of going ashore with Marine units and directing naval artillery on to the beaches. Throughout the war, Rusty went ashore nine times, and was hit by enemy fire twice, earning him two purple hearts. He saw action in most of the infamous engagements in the South Pacific including, Tarawa, Kwajelein, Eniwetok, Yap, Palau, Iwo Jima and Leyte Gulf.

After the war he came home and married Eva Dean, and earned a degree in vocational agricultural education from Oklahoma State. This tranquility didn't last long however, and in 1950 he was called for service once again, this time in the Korean War. This time Rusty was trained as a forerunner of today's special forces units and Navy Seals. His mission was to track down and capture enemy commanders. Rusty survived frostbite, mine explosions, rifle shots, and a knife wound while he was in Korea and earned him five more purple hearts.

After Korea, he spent 31 years as an agricultural teacher in Oklahoma and Iowa before moving to Parachute, Colorado in 1993. He is active in his community, singing in a community chorus, traveling, and participating in his Veterans of Foreign Wars post.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Rusty Caldwell has a strong commitment to his country. His efforts to strengthen and secure his Nation and the world are truly remarkable. It is my privilege to recognize the accomplishments and service of Rusty before this body of Congress and this Nation. I sincerely thank him for his service and wish him the best in his future endeavors.

A TRIBUTE TO YEON HWAN PARK

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the educational and athletic achievements of Master Yeon Hwan Park.

Master Park is an 8th dan (degree) black belt, and coach of the USA Olympic National and Pan American Tae Kwon Do teams. He is the world's premier authority on Tae Kwan Do and his knowledge is without parallel in this martial arts discipline. Master Park has been featured in the New York Times, Newsday and has graced the covers of virtually every martial arts publication. Master Park is renowned for having translated his fighting ability into teaching ingenuity, something few successful competitors have been able to do. He brought his techniques and the austere conditions of his native Korean training halls to the African nation of Lesotho. He trained their secret service and special police agents for 2 years. He, also, trained and led their Tae Kwon Do team to the Seoul Olympics. The women's team took first place and the men's team finished second.

Master Park has established himself as a great teacher and an outstanding community leader. He has done much to bring Tae Kwon Do to national prominence. Presently, he is President of the NY State Tae Kwon Do Association. And, he has served the United States as an Olympic coach and as a coach at the Pan American Games. Though Mr. Park has been busy in the sport that he loves, he has not forgotten the welfare of the community. He promotes the fundraising programs for the March of Dimes, The American Cancer Society, the American Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and many other organizations. He has also served as the president of the Korea American Association of Long Island and is a current member of the Nassau County Youth Board.

Mr. Park graduated from Korea University with honors in history. He studied at the United States Olympic Academy XII at Penn State University. He has published many books including ''Tae Kwon Do for Children'' and ''Tae Kwon Do DINOSAURS''. He has been honored by Nassau County, the United States Olympic Committee, Korea University, and the World Tae Kwon Do Federation, and many others.

He and Sunwoo (also known as Connie) were married in 1982 and they have two sons, Edward and Elliot, and one daughter, Nina.

Mr. Speaker, Master Yeon Hwan Park's worldwide contributions to the sport of Tae Kwon Do and his New York community make him more than worthy of receiving our recognition today.

HONORING THE LINCOLN PARK ZOO

HON. RAHM EMANUEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my best wishes to everyone associated with Chicago's Lincoln Park Zoo on the occasion of its Swing! 2004 Zoo Ball. I would especially like to commend the Women's Board of Lincoln Park Zoo for starting what has become the zoo's largest fundraiser.

The Zoo Ball is always one of the highlights of Chicago's social scene, and this year's event promises to be no exception. Transforming the Zoo into a 1940's supper club complete with big bands and classic cocktails, the 2004 Zoo Ball will be an event not to be missed.

Chicago is proud to be home to one of the finest and oldest zoos in the Nation, serving the community since 1868. With over 3 million visitors every year, the Lincoln Park Zoo is consistently one of the top cultural and entertainment attractions in the city. Located within the beautiful confines of Lincoln Park, the Zoo is not only an attraction within our community, it is also an integral part of our community. The Lincoln Park Zoo is truly a unique cultural institution because it remains free to all its visitors, ensuring that everyone has the opportunity to learn about and appreciate the wonders of nature that exist in our world.

The Lincoln Park Zoo has earned a reputation as a world-class institution committed to conservation, science, and education. With state-of-the-art facilities such as the newly opened Regenstein Center for African Apes, the Zoo continues to provide the finest facilities for its inhabitants. With four times the size of the old building, the new building allows gorillas and chimpanzees to move freely from inside to outside facilities, and gives visitors an even fuller understanding of the lives of these immense creatures. The facility also serves as a research, training and education center that will enable conservationists and scientists from around the globe to study apes.

As with all great institutions, a lot of effort goes into maintaining excellence. The Lincoln Park Zoo is fortunate for the leadership provided by its president, Kevin Bell, and the dedication given by Jay Proops and other members of the Board of Directors. And I would like to particularly thank the Gala's Event Chairs, Josephine E. Heindel and Myra Reilly, and the President of the Women's Board of Lincoln Park Zoo, Debra Clamage.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to honor the hard work and dedication of the staff and friends of the Lincoln Park Zoo on the occasion of its Zoo Ball, and I thank everyone in attendance for ensuring that this jewel of Chicago continues to shine.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I missed rollcall vote No. 347. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes."

REMEMBERING SERGEANT BRIAN M. WOOD

HON. JUANITA MILLENDER-McDONALD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, this morning I rise to honor and pay tribute to one of my constituents who recently died serving his Nation in Iraq.

Sergeant Brian M. Wood was killed when his military vehicle pulled off the road and hit a mine while he was on patrol. Sergeant Wood was only 21 years old.

Brian Wood was assigned to the Army's 9th Engineer Battalion, 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 1st Infantry Division, which is based in Schweinfurt, Germany.

Mr. Speaker, Brian Wood sent an e-mail to his family less than 24 hours before his death and reported that he felt he was making a difference in the lives of the Iraqi people by locating and disarming land mines.

Mr. Speaker, Brian's family reports that he was a young man with tremendous personality and a great sense of humor.

I would like to extend my condolences to the family and friends of Sergeant Brian Wood, and my thoughts and prayers are with his family during this difficult time. Brian's honorable service to his country will be long remembered.

TRIBUTE TO THE WOLNIAK BROTHERS

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a group of extraordinary individuals, the Wolniak brothers of Syracuse, New York. There are five brothers in all, Joseph, Michael, Nicholas, Andrew and Steven. The family migrated from the Ukraine in the early 20th century led by Matthew Wolniak, father of 10. What makes the brother's account so astonishing is the courage and dedication displayed during a time of great peril, World War II.

Joseph Wolniak served in the Illinois National Guard as a Private First Class. Michael Wolniak served five years as Staff Sergeant in the Army Air Corps with the 65th Fgt. Sq. and 57th Fgt. Gp. Nicholas Wolniak served for over five years as a Private First Class in the 33rd Division, 130 Infantry, 1st Company. Andrew Wolniak served five years as a Private First Class in the 33rd Infantry Regimental Combat Team, E Company, 2nd Battalion. And Steven Wolniak served several years as Corporal in the 125 AACS Sq.

The Wolniak brothers' were active in a variety of theaters ranging from India, New Guinea, the Philippines, the invasion of Japan, to the jungles of Burma. Needless to say, having five members of a family involved in wartime operations creates an atmosphere of stress and tension. Faced with these overwhelming set of circumstances, the Wolniak brothers knew freedom and democracy come at a cost and require sacrifice. Keeping this in mind, the brothers served their country with dignity and honor.

The most enjoyable part of this anecdote was the safe return of all five brothers from the European and Asian theatres. This phenomenon was almost unparalleled as the United States casualties exceeded 400,000 with the majority of American's experiencing a loss of a loved one.

I am proud to state that the Wolniak's are part of our Central New York community, as four of the brothers still reside in the Syracuse area. Nick, Mike, and Steve can still be seen at a local McDonald's for an early morning gathering while Andy remains in his DeWitt home.

Mr. Speaker, I say to those listening today, America owes a great debt to the Wolniak brothers and all who served during World War II. Had it not been for the valor and devotion of the Allied Powers, both Europe and America would be a very different place today.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM SHAFFER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to William Shaffer and thank him for his work as the Congressional Services Representative with the General Services Administration. His years of commitment and dedication as a public servant is certainly commendable and worthy of recognition before this body of Congress and this Nation today. Along with my fellow Americans, I am grateful for all that he has accomplished during his years of service.

William was born in Pennsylvania and served in the U.S. Air Force in Denver, Colorado, before going on to earn a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Northern Colorado in 1973. He began his federal career with the Veterans Administration hospital in Hot Springs, South Dakota as a Recreation Therapist. After pursuing further training with the Veterans Affairs Personnel Administration Training Program, he worked as a Personnel Specialist in Maryland, Utah, Wyoming, Kentucky and finally Denver, Colorado.

In 1991, William moved to the General Services Administration as the Personnel Liaison at the Denver Federal Center, and later for the entire Rocky Mountain region. He was responsible for the Region's Congressional Support Program working to provide support services to ninety-six U.S. House of Representatives district offices and U.S. Senators State offices in Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, North Dakota, and South Dakota. These support services included procurement of office furniture, equipment and supplies, maintenance and rehabilitation; property disposal; storage and relocation. William is also an ordained Pastor with the Presbyterian Church. In his spare time, he enjoys playing softball and volunteers at a Denver intercity food pantry.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that William Shaffer has been an invaluable resource to the General Services Administration and it is my honor to recognize his service and dedication before this body of Congress and this nation. I am grateful for the opportunity to work with devoted public servants like William Shaffer. On behalf of the citizens that have benefited from the hard work and commitment he has given to the General Services Administration and the constituents it serves, I extend my appreciation for his years of enthusiastic service.

A TRIBUTE TO REVEREND GUN HA SONG

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Reverend Gun Ha Song in recognition of his business accomplishments and spiritual leadership in the community.

Reverend Song came to the United States in 1979. He founded the Good Pickin' store in 1982 and he continues to manage it successfully today. Reverend Song is the president of the Korean Association of Brooklyn.

Reverend Song's passion is his faith. He leads his congregation in Brooklyn. In preparation of his pastoral duties, Reverend Song has studied extensively, earning advanced degrees in the area of religious thought. He has earned a Masters Degree of S.B.E. Christian Education. He received an additional Masters Degree from Chongshin Theological Seminary. Finally, Reverend Song also holds a Doctor of Christian Education from Cumberland University.

Mr. Speaker, Reverend Gun Ha Song came to this country about 25 years ago and has made several contributions to this country through his entrepreneurial spirit and spiritual leadership. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

HONORING THE IRISH AMERICAN HERITAGE CENTER

HON. RAHM EMANUEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to recognize the contributions of Chicago's Irish American Heritage Center toward preserving the glorious heritage and culture of Chicago's Irish community, on the occasion of its Annual Irish Fest.

The Irish American Heritage Center continues to be an integral part of the Irish Community in Chicago. The Annual Irish American Heritage Festival on July 9th, 10th, and 11th will showcase many of the great traditions and talents of Ireland. The festival will feature traditional Irish dancing, numerous musical acts, and the great Irish food we all love.

The Irish American Heritage Center has consistently demonstrated its commitment to keeping the Irish heritage alive and thriving in Chicago. Its museum, library, and festivals all contribute to the success of the organization, and I applaud those who work and volunteer their time to continue this important mission.

But, the Irish American Heritage Center festival is much more than good food and entertainment. It is a chance to remember and honor all of the hard work and accomplishments made by the Irish Community. It is through this awareness by which younger generations can pass on the traditions and values of Ireland.

The museum was officially opened by the President of Ireland, Mrs. Mary Robinson, on October 13, 1991. Museum acquisitions include: a magnificent collection of Belleek Parian China; a historic chair commissioned by the Irish Fellowship Club of Chicago on the occasion of the visit of U.S. President William Howard Taft on St. Patrick's Day 1910; and the first organ from St. Patrick's Church in St. Charles, Illinois.

The Irish American Heritage Centers Library houses many special collections, including a facsimile edition of the world's most famous illuminated manuscript, The Book of Kells, which has been described as the ''work of angels, not of men.''

Mr. Speaker, I am honored on behalf of the Fifth District, and indeed all of Chicago, to call attention to all of the meaningful work occurring at the Irish American Heritage Center at the time of its Irish American Heritage Festival. I wish the Center continued success and a fantastic Irish fest.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise proudly today to congratulate the city of Lakewood for being named Sports Illustrated magazine's ''Sportstown'' for the State of California. This prestigious award recognizes the city in California with the best community sports programs. And since California is Sports Illustrated's No. 1 State, that means Lakewood is the number one sports town in the entire country. Sports and outdoor living are part of the fabric of life in this wonderful city, which I represent, in the 39th District of California.

Every year, Mr. Speaker, more than 13,000 Lakewood citizens participate in sports leagues or volunteer as coaches or referees. Kids of all ages in Lakewood play sports in one of the many city-sponsored leagues. The city's leagues are free of charge so all kids in the city can participate, and learn the values of teamwork and sportsmanship while they are having fun and making friends. The grownups in Lakewood also join in adult basketball, softball, tennis and volleyball leagues.

And if you live in Lakewood and sports leagues aren't your cup of tea you can go to one of the 10 public parks, two public swimming pools, or two public Community Centers and get some exercise or just have a good time.

This prestigious award recognizing Lakewood's community sports programs comes during the same year that Lakewood is celebrating its 50th anniversary.

So, to the people of the City of Lakewood I say, ''Congratulations for being the best sports city in America, and Happy 50th Anniversary!''

REMEMBERING SECOND LIEUTENANT ANDRE D. TYSON

HON. JUANITA MILLENDER-McDONALD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to pay tribute to a young man from my district who was killed in action serving in the Iraqi conflict.

Second Lieutenant Andre D. Tyson was charged with patrolling and gathering intelligence on insurgents in the farmlands in Balad. He died, at 33, when enemy forces ambushed his ground patrol.

Called to active duty last fall, Second Lieutenant Tyson was assigned to the 579th Engineer Battalion, Army National Guard, which is based in Petaluma, California.

Mr. Speaker, Andre Tyson told a reporter 10 days before his death, that local people were hospitable to the soldiers, giving them tea and bread that he described as being ''almost like homemade tortillas.'' His cousin said, ''All of his e-mails spoke positively about his experiences in Iraq.''

Mr. Speaker, Andre's family said he was a man that commanded respect and his peers looked up to him.

It is important to honor and pay tribute to all of the brave men and women across the Nation who have given their lives in defense of the freedoms we enjoy every single day, and all leave behind families who miss their sons and daughters. Too many of our young people have their lives cut way too short, but their sacrifice will be long remembered.

I would like to extend my condolences to the family and friends of Second Lieutenant Andre D. Tyson, and my thoughts and prayers are with his family during this difficult time.

TRIBUTE TO BRISTOL-MYERS SQUIBB COMPANY

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to the Bristol-Myers Squibb Company's Syracuse, New York facility, which will receive the 2004 Presidential Green Chemistry Challenge Award in the alternative synthetic pathways category presented by the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Bristol-Myers Squibb earned this great honor through the development of an environmentally friendly synthesis for the cancer drug Taxol®. The EPA's Presidential Green Chemistry Challenge Program has been promoting pollution prevention through voluntary partnership with the chemical community since 1996. The annual awards recognize outstanding accomplishments in the development of chemical technologies that incorporate the principles of green chemistry into chemical design, manufacture, and use. To date winning technologies have eliminated over 460 million pounds of chemical and solvent pollutants, saved over 440 million gallons of water, and eliminated over 170 million pounds of atmospheric carbon dioxide emissions.

I express my congratulations to the men and women of the Bristol-Myers Squibb Company in Syracuse for receiving such an outstanding honor. Bristol-Myers Squibb has truly shown itself to be a leader in environmental technology innovation.

TRIBUTE TO BERTRAND SEIDMAN

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who spent his entire life devoted to helping working men and women and their families. Bertrand Seidman a constituent of my district and legend in the labor movement, recently passed away after a lifetime of advocating for working people in the United States.

After earning his Master's degree in economics from the University of Wisconsin at Madison, Mr. Seidman began his stellar career at the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington, DC. In 1944, he started performing his service as a conscientious objector clearing a path for the Blue Ridge Parkway. During this time he began educating his fellow workers in industrial relations and later led a year-long strike after the government stopped paying conscientious objectors while still having them work.

In 1948 he began his distinguished career with the AFL–CIO as an economist in their research department and later served as the European representative for the AFL–CIO. He continued his service to the nation as a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations' International Labor Organization from 1958 to 1976 and then from 1987 to 1988.

It was after this service that Bert Seidman was appointed to become head of the AFL–CIO's Social Security department. He worked there for twenty four years and ensured that the labor movement would continue to focus on social welfare issues. He was especially interested in health care, pensions and occupational health for all. Mr. Seidman was also active in making sure that Social Security would not be privatized and that all Americans would have health insurance, regardless of their economic status.

Our nation lost an activist when Bert Seidman passed away on June 24th. He will always be remembered for his role in our nation's labor movement. Bert wanted to make sure that when people worked their whole lives, they would be taken care of in their retirement, and if they were ill or injured, they would have ample health care to help their recovery. Most importantly, he was for the most basic right, equality. I am grateful for his vision, his dedication and the many years of service he gave to our nation. May his memory and the ideals he fought so hard to protect be preserved so future generations of working people are assured of basic rights and protections in a vastly changing workplace.

A NATIONAL MEMORIAL FOR EDMUND S. MUSKIE

HON. MICHAEL H. MICHAUD

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing two bills to designate the Edmund S. Muskie Memorial, located in Rumford, Maine, as a national monument. Surely, the incredible accomplishments of this distinguished American deserve national recognition.

Edmund S. Muskie was born March 28, 1914, in Rumford, Maine, the second of six children and the son and grandson of Polish immigrants. Ed Muskie attended public schools in Rumford, graduated as valedictorian of his high school and with cum laude honors from Bates College. After Cornell University Law School, he began practicing law in Waterville. In 1942, he enlisted in the U.S. Navy and served as a Lieutenant in both the Atlantic and Pacific theaters.

Ed Muskie began his political career in the Maine House of Representatives, where he served from 1946–1951. Later he went on to be twice elected as Governor of Maine and then to the United States Senate, where he served for twenty-one years. During his tenure in the Senate, Ed Muskie served on the Foreign Relations, Governmental Affairs, and Environmental and Public Works committees, and was the founder and first chair of the Senate Committee on the Budget.

Joining Democratic Presidential nominee Hubert H. Humphrey, Ed Muskie ran for Vice President on the Democratic ticket in 1968, and then made his own bid for the Presidential nomination in 1972. After retiring from the Senate in 1980, he was made Secretary of State by President Carter, practiced law in Washington, D.C., and was named to President Reagan's Special Review Board to investigate the Iran-Contra affair.

Few people served this nation as long, or as honorably, as Edmund Muskie. His dedication to public service was obvious and his commitment to environmental issues ahead of his time.

I have introduced a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a special resources study to determine the suitability and feasibility of designating the memorial to Edmund S. Muskie located in Rumford, Maine, as a unit of the National Park System. I have also introduced a bill to then officially designate the memorial as a national memorial. I am hopeful that these bills can be considered and passed soon so that we can have a fitting, national tribute to Edmund Muskie.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, July 6, Wednesday, July 7, and during the morning of Thursday, July 8, I was unavoidably detained due to official international election monitoring efforts I took part in and was not present for rollcall votes on those days.

Had I been present I would have voted the following:

Rollcall 326, recognizing the 25th anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the Republic of the Marshall Islands, I would have voted ''yea'';

Rollcall 327, expressing the sense of Congress that the President should posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Harry W. Colmery, I would have voted, ''yea'';

Rollcall 328, on the Manzullo amendment, which would provide $79.1 million for the Small Business 7(a) loan program to finance more than $13 billion in small business, I would have voted ''yea'';

Rollcall 329, on the Flake amendment, which would prohibit the use of funds to implement the Commerce Department's new restrictions on gift parcels to Cuba and the amount of personal baggage allowed for travelers to Cuba, I would have voted ''yea'';

Rollcall 330, on the Weiner amendment, which would increase COPS funding by $107 million and offsets that funding by cutting funding for the Census, I would have voted ''no'';

Rollcall 331, on the Hefley amendment eliminating funding ($174 million) for the re-engineered design process for the 2010 short-form only Census, I would have voted ''no'';

Rollcall 332, on the Kucinich amendment, expanding the membership of the President's ''Manufacturing Council'' to include representatives from unions and the steel industry, I would have voted ''yea'';

Rollcall 333, on the Paul amendment prohibiting funds to pay expenses for any U.S. contribution to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, I would have voted ''no'';

Rollcall 334, on the Farr amendment prohibiting funds from being used to prevent states from implementing state laws authorizing the use of medical marijuana I would have voted ''yea'';

Rollcall 335, on the Paul amendment prohibiting funds from being used to pay any U.S. contribution to the United Nations or any affiliated agency of the United Nations, I would have voted, ''no'';

Rollcall 336, on the rule providing for consideration of Legislative Branch Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2004, 1 would have voted, ''no'';

Rollcall 337, on the rule providing for consideration of the Manufacturing Technology Competitiveness Act of 2003 I would have voted, ''no''; and

Rollcall 338, on the National Windstorm Impact Reduction Act of 2004, I would have voted, ''yea.''

PAYING TRIBUTE TO CAROL SEALE

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise to recognize the life and passing of Carol Mae ''Peppy'' Seale of Durango, Colorado. As one of the founders of women's athletics at Fort Lewis College, she was dedicated to the nation's youth and committed to establishing greater opportunities for the nation's female youth population. She will forever be remembered as a pillar of her community, and as her family and community mourn her passing, I believe it appropriate to pay tribute to this exceptional woman before the body of Congress and this nation.

Peppy first moved to Durango in 1969 after she received her teaching degree from Carroll College and her master's degree from the University of Northern Colorado. She then went into coaching women's athletics at Fort Lewis College. She committed herself to the volleyball team for fourteen seasons, acting as the coach for the squad as well as providing all the transportation for the team to and from competitions. During her tenure as the head volleyball coach, she led the team to 148 wins. In addition, she spent time coaching other sports, including the basketball, softball, skiing and tennis teams. Outside work, Peppy had a love for the farm she lived on and the animals that inhabited it.

In recognition of her dedication to athletes and her success as a coach, Fort Lewis has inducted her into the Fort Lewis Athletic Hall of Fame. For her work advancing the cause of women in women's athletics she was named by the Women's Resource Center as an Extraordinary Woman of the Community.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to celebrate the life and achievements of Carol Mae Seale before this body of Congress and this nation today. She played an important role in founding athletic programs for women at Fort Lewis College, and was a valuable asset to the Fort Lewis community. My thoughts go out to Peppy's loved ones in this difficult time of bereavement.

A TRIBUTE TO SHARON DEVONISH-LEID

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Sharon Devonish-Leid in recognition of her dedication to strengthening the community.

Sharon is a Community Relations Specialist for the Brooklyn District Attorney's Office in the Community Relations Bureau. In this capacity, she serves as the link between the community, the police, and the DA's office. Ms. Devonish-Leid is responsible for four police precincts (93rd, 69th, 73rd, and 75th), and two police service areas (1 and 2).

In this capacity, she has developed the Young People's Law program in the Community Relations Bureau. This program is an offspring of the People's Law School program, which District Attorney Hynes developed to educate adults about the criminal justice system. She is also responsible for developing the East New York College and Career Fair at Maxwell High School. Additionally, she has implemented other informational fairs and conferences that bring important information to our communities.

Sharon has always had a passion for the field of law. In fact, she earned her Bachelor of Science degree in Criminal Justice, with merit, from John Jay College of Criminal Justice. Even as an undergraduate, she participated in community programs that helped others. These experiences helped her develop her interest and skills in community relations.

Prior to joining the Community Relations Bureau, she worked as a senior paralegal in various bureaus in the District Attorney's office. She worked as a legal secretary in the Eastern District office of the United States Attorney General.

Sharon's biggest love is working with our community's young people as she is always willing to volunteer her knowledge and experience to help others. Remarkably, she plans to serve as an example to our students by continuing her education in law school.

Mr. Speaker, Sharon Devonish-Leid has been a shining star in the community by bringing residents and law enforcement together. As such, she is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today, and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this, truly remarkable person.

HONORING JERRY PRETE

HON. RAHM EMANUEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with the Elderly Housing Development & Operations Corporation and the people of Chicago in honoring the late Jerry Prete with the dedication of the ''Appreciation Garden'' at North Park Village in Illinois. A man who committed himself to helping his fellow citizens, Jerry Prete lived life to its fullest. His family, friends and the seniors of the Chicago area are testament to the quality of his character, honor and integrity.

Jerry Prete achieved his success through hard work and determination. He dedicated his life to public service and the people of Chicago. An active member of the Christian Family Movement since 1950, he assisted in developing leadership training and motivation for them until the 1970s. In the 1960s, the Chicago Senior Senate was formed and expanded into 400 chapters with Jerry's leadership.

In this quest, Jerry united with the National Council of Senior Citizens to submit a proposal to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for the funding of subsidized living at North Park Village. Today, the Prete, Senate, and North Park Village Apartments are considered some of the finest senior citizen apartment buildings in the Nation.

Jerry made a lifelong commitment towards helping seniors gain access to affordable housing—eventually assisting the implementation of about 30 multiple dwelling units around the United States. He was a champion of many causes for seniors including the expansion of Social Security and Medicare benefits, lowering the cost of prescription drugs, lowering taxes, and working toward the creation of the Circuit Breaker program.

Aside from working to help seniors, Jerry was a passionate advocate for the religious community. From the mid-1950s until 1995, Jerry and his wife Anne operated the Alverno Bookstore, which they established to meet the needs of the local Christian community.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the Elderly Housing Development & Operations Corporation and the seniors of North Park Village in honoring Jerry Prete. Today, numerous Chicagoans have reaped the benefits of one man's heroic dream. May God bless the Prete family and the memory of a man who was truly loved by his friends, his community and his family.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF MR. BILL THURSTON OF VALLEJO, CALIFORNIA

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to call to my colleagues' attention the recent passing of a good friend, an outstanding educator and public servant, and a wonderful husband, Bill Thurston of Vallejo, California in my congressional district.

I urge my colleagues to read the article that follows below about Mr. Thurston's life, his passion, and his significant contributions to the city of Vallejo and the greater Solano County community. Bill was a longtime history and political science instructor at Solano Community College and a member of its board of trustees. He served on the county and state Democratic Central Committees for 22 years, and served eight years on the Democratic National Committee.

He was a friend and supporter to my father for his work in the state legislature and he was a mentor to me about the education of children and the needs of our community.

To Bill's wife of over 25 years, Rosemary Thurston, and to all of Bill's family I offer my sincere condolences at this time. For the many of us who were lucky enough to know Bill and to call him our friend, our lives are richer for it and we will always carry a place for him in our hearts. May he rest in peace.

[From the Vallejo Times Herald, July 7, 2004]

LONGTIME VALLEJO EDUCATOR AND ACTIVIST DIES AT 74

(By Robert McCockran)

Bill Thurston, a longtime history teacher, state Democratic Committee leader and Solano Community College trustee died Tuesday. He was 74.

A family member said Thurston, 74, was having shortness of breath (about, 10:25 a.m.) and had to be rushed to (Kaiser Permanente Medical Center) and collapsed in the hospital.''

Another family member said Thurston's wife, Rosemary, was distraught and unable to talk about her husband's death.

''We can say that he's gone and we can say that he didn't suffer,'' the family friend said, adding that a memorial service will be arranged.

For 20 years, Thurston taught political science and history at Solano Community College.

''I feel very sad, very sad,'' said Pam Keith, a fellow trustee. ''He was just a very special person to me and I'm going to miss him very, very much.''

''There will be a lot of people turn out for this guy, whatever the situation is. He's got 500 children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, (and) great-great-great-grandchildren, And he's touched so many lives over the years, one way or another. People that you don't even know about,'' Keith said.

Another fellow board member, Willie McKnight, called Thurston ''a great educator'' and noted that they were fraternity brothers, having joined Alpha Phi Alpha in 1979.

McKnight said Thurston loved music, although he didn't play any instrument and, he often spoke at his church. ''He always was willing to speak and was always trying to uplift our black boys and girls.''

Pelton Stewart, executive director of the Continentals of Omega Boys and Girls Club, said when he first came to Vallejo Thurston took him under his wing and ''told me some pitfalls to avoid politically in our little city.''

''He was a real long time dedicated supporter of the Boys and Girls Club. He and his wife were always at our banquets, always supporting. He was just a great man,'' Stewart said.

''He gave a lot back to the Vallejo community. He was very proud of his African ancestry and helped with the African American library in Oakland and very proud of the education system here in Solano County.''

Thurston was born Jan. 15, 1930 in Logtown, Mississippi. As a young child, he once recalled watching police wake a sleeping African-American man at a train station. They kicked him, then shot him in cold blood, Thurston told an interviewer.

Thurston's family moved to California in 1944, and at age 17, he joined the military. He served in Korea, Germany, the Philippines and Okinawa before leaving the service in 1964.

Thurston earned an AA degree at Solano Community College and a BA at California

State University at Hayward. In 1972, he began teaching at Solano Community College.

''I never taught a class without dealing with reality,'' he once told a reporter.

''In all the U.S. history classes I taught, I always included segments on the failures of Reconstruction after the Civil War and on the struggles of women. I taught the bad things and the good.''

In January 1985, Thurston was elected vice-chairman of the California Democratic Party.

He served on the county and state Democratic Central committees for 22 years, retiring in 1994. He also served eight years on the Democratic National Committee.

In May 1988, Thurston was a delegate for presidential nominee Michael Dukakis.

But Thurston was not so partisan that he ignored weaknesses of his fellow Democrats. He once referred to Oakland Mayor and former California governor Jerry Brown as a ''flake'' and said he was not overly impressed with former President Bill Clinton.

Frank Jackson, former president of the Vallejo Chapter NAACP, said of Thurston: ''We go way back. Bill and I were real close friends.''

Jackson said he served with Thurston on an affirmative action committee at Solano Community College.

''The thing I liked about Bill, he was fair and equitable. When something wasn't right, he'd say 'this isn't right' or 'this is the thing that we're doing,''' Jackson said of his fellow NAACP member.

''Any time I would call on him and ask him to do anything he was always willing to help out. And, anytime anybody called me about anything political, I would tell them to call Bill Thurston,'' Jackson said.

Mel Jordan, an architect for the Vallejo City Unified School District who designed Jesse Bethel High School, said he was very close to Thurston.

''Basically, Bill Thurston is almost like a second father to me. In other words, a mentor. He really assisted me in a lot of decision-making types of things for my own personal life,'' Jordan said.

''He's extremely going to be a loss to me, but he's passed on so much wisdom. It's almost like passing on the torch because we connected so much over the years,'' Jordan said. Former Vallejo mayor Terry Curtola said he'd known Thurston most of his adult life.

''Always was an adviser to me in my political career. Just what I like to call a good old boy Vallejoan. He was always supporting everything that went on. Always had the best of Vallejo at heart. Just a good man,'' Curtola said.

''I think what I like the most about Bill more than anything, he covered all the diversities of our whole community. You could never pinpoint him. He was just a man that I always went to for advice. Even when I didn't go to him for advice, he'd call and give it to me anyway.'' Curtola said.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW UNITED STATES GLOBAL HIV PREVENTION STRATEGY TO ADDRESS THE NEEDS OF WOMEN AND GIRLS ACT OF 2004

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about an urgent need in regards to our Global HIV/AIDS Initiative—the need to address the disproportionately growing effect of HIV/AIDS upon women and girls.

Today there are an estimated 40 million people infected with HIV/AIDS throughout the world.

For a number of reasons, women and girls are biologically, socially, and economically more vulnerable to HIV infection than men, and today they represent more than half of all individuals who are infected with HIV worldwide.

In sub-Saharan Africa the story is even worse, as women and girls make up 60 percent of those infected with HIV/AIDS.

Today we are undoubtedly facing a dramatic feminization of the global pandemic.

Why are women more vulnerable?

In many cases, women still have inadequate information about how HIV is transmitted, how it can be prevented, and how it can be treated.

Cultural and social norms in many developing countries, and in some cases even here in the United States, prevent frank and open discussion about sex and HIV/AIDS.

But perhaps worst of all, women are most vulnerable because of the continuing legal, social, and economic inequalities that contribute to, and are the result of persistent and culturally ingrained gender discrimination throughout the world.

This gender discrimination is responsible for devaluing the rights of women to attend school, earn an independent living, control their own bodies and choose their own sexual partners, retain control over their own property, and speak their minds.

And with the loss of each such right, women become more vulnerable to HIV infection.

Studies show that without an education, women are at a much higher risk of acquiring HIV/AIDS.

Without an independent source of income, women are forced to rely on men for food, clothing, shelter, etc., thus perpetuating an unequal power balance in their relationships.

Without being able to control their own bodies and choose their sexual partners, women are frequently treated as commodities to be bought or sold, without rights under the law.

This perpetuates a culture that accepts rape and violence against women as something that is commonplace, and without punishment.

And women who have no right to refuse the sexual advances of men cannot control the circumstances of their sexual encounters and are unable to insist on abstinence, faithfulness on behalf of their partners, or the use of condoms.

Without the ability to own or inherit property, women are in constant danger of being kicked out of their own homes, and losing control of their families most basic productive resources.

Ultimately, women who fear the consequences of speaking openly are powerless to advocate for any of these rights and are consigned to accept a second class status in their societies.

In the context of our moral tradition and our common humanity, that is just plain wrong.

But when it comes to combating HIV/AIDS, for women it can be deadly.

Working jointly with my colleagues in Congress and the Administration, last year we established the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief to treat 2 million people, prevent 7 million new infections, and care for 10 million individuals.

But Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we do not aggressively target the needs of women, and work to eliminate the factors that contribute to the increased vulnerability of women to HIV, we will never reach our targets.

That is why today, along with 54 of my colleagues, I am introducing a bill entitled the New United States Global HIV Prevention Strategy to Address Women and Girls Act of 2004.

By recognizing the inadequacy of our current HIV Prevention efforts, which focus on the ''ABC'' approach of Abstinence, Being faithful, or using a Condom, my bill would seek to revise our current HIV Prevention strategy to place an emphasis on the needs of women and girls.

In doing so, my bill would require the President to develop a comprehensive, integrated, and culturally appropriate HIV prevention strategy for each of the countries receiving assistance to combat HIV/AIDS that includes:

Increasing access to female condoms—including training to ensure effective and consistent use. Accelerating the de-stigmatization of HIV/AIDS—as women are generally at a disadvantage in combating stigma. Empowering women and girls to avoid cross-generational sex and reduce the incidence of child-marriage. Reducing violence against women. Supporting the development of micro-enterprise programs and other such efforts to assist women in developing and retaining independent economic means. Promoting positive male behavior toward women and girls. Supporting expanded educational opportunities for women and girls. Protecting the property and inheritance rights of women. Coordinating HIV prevention services with existing health care services—including mother to child transmission programs—and family planning and reproductive health services. Promoting gender equality by supporting the development of civil society organizations focused on the needs of women, and by encouraging the creation and effective enforcement of legal frameworks that guarantee women equal rights and equal protection under the law.

At the same time, my bill would also seek to balance funding for our HIV prevention initiatives by stripping out misguided language in last year's Global AIDS bill that guaranteed that 33% of our prevention funds would go towards abstinence only programs.

Instituting a blanket requirement for abstinence spending in our global prevention programs sends the message that religious ideology coming out of Washington DC is driving our global HIV/AIDS programs rather than sound science and the reality of the situation on the ground.

Our policy should be to provide flexibility in our global HIV prevention strategies to support a variety of culturally appropriate prevention initiatives based on need and the specific HIV infection trends and gaps of each country.

In the best interests of improving the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, and achieving our goal of preventing 7 million new infections, I believe that we must make this change.

And we must also make this change because we owe it to all the women who are left vulnerable and powerless because of social, political, legal, and economic inequalities that allow HIV to fester and spread.

If we do not address these underlying issues in a comprehensive manner, then I fear that our efforts to prevent the disease from spreading will only be in vain.

I invite all my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation, and I urge the International Relations Committee to move swiftly to take it up.

HONORING THE MEMORY OF THE HON. JOHN HAWKINS

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, Jefferson County, Alabama, and indeed the entire state recently lost a dear friend, and I rise today to honor him and pay tribute to his memory.

Representative John Hawkins was a devoted family man who spent over 28 years in public service, serving from 1959 until 1965 in the Alabama House of Representatives, and from 1966 until 1974 in the Alabama State Senate. Following a period of sixteen years out of the public spotlight, he again answered the call to service and began a new period in the state house in 1990. He was continuing to represent House District 47 in the state capital when he became ill earlier this year.

Throughout his professional career, he was dedicated to bringing better opportunities to all the residents of Hoover, Vestavia Hills, and Jefferson County in Alabama, and was a tireless advocate for his constituency. Representative Hawkins sponsored countless bills during his career in the legislature, but is perhaps best known for his championing the cause of automobile safety. In 1991, he was instrumental in the passage of Alabama's first state law that requires drivers and front-seat passengers to use safety belts. Eight years later, he helped to push through an amendment that gives police officers the authority to stop vehicle operators for violations of the seatbelt law alone.

Representative Hawkins was also a strong proponent of projects designed to benefit the residents of his district. Throughout his career, he emphasized providing funding for such projects as library additions, a reading initiative for area schools, drug testing for student athletes, and a multitude of highway projects. In fact, his efforts at securing transportation funding for his district led the citizens of Hoover, Alabama, to request that four miles of Alabama 150 be named after him because of his assistance in ensuring the widening of that highway.

Representative Hawkins, a graduate of Marion Military Institute in Marion, Alabama, and the University of Alabama, was a distinguished veteran of World War II. He was retired from Alabama Power Company after a long tenure as a special projects manager.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering a dedicated public servant and long-time advocate for Jefferson County, Alabama. Representative Hawkins will be deeply missed by his family—his wife, Betty Hawkins, and his sons, John Hawkins, III, Bill Hawkins, and Davis Hawkins—as well as the countless friends he leaves behind. Our thoughts and prayers are with them all at this difficult time.

HONORING THE MEMORY OF MR. RALPH R. WILCOX, SR.

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, Mobile County, Alabama, and indeed the entire First Congressional District recently lost a dear friend, and I rise today to honor him and pay tribute to his memory.

Ralph Wilcox, Sr., was a devoted family man and dedicated community servant throughout his entire life. He was retired following a long career with the Kimberly Clark Corporation, and in 1982 assumed a position on the board of directors of the Mobile County Water, Sewer and Fire Protection Authority. As a part of this organization, Mr. Wilcox and his fellow board members were responsible for oversight of one of the largest public utility and fire protection organizations in the State of Alabama, consisting of over 400 miles of water lines in Mobile County.

A lifelong resident of Theodore, Alabama, Mr. Wilcox was also actively involved in the life of his community, participating in several area youth organizations. He served on the council for the Boy Scouts of America and was an active member of the board of the Theodore Athletic Association. In 1980, he was inducted as member of the Mobile Youth Baseball Hall of Fame, and was nominated by the Tillman's Corner Chamber of Commerce as its Citizen of the Year.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering a dedicated community servant and long-time advocate for Mobile County, Alabama. Ralph Wilcox, Sr., will be deeply missed by his family—his wife, Margaret Floyd Wilcox, his daughters, Stephanie Van Cleave and Margie Wilcox, his son, Ralph "Hoppy" Wilcox, Jr., his sister, Lucy Clark, seven grandchildren, and one great-grandchild—as well as the countless friends he leaves behind. Our thoughts and prayers are with them all at this difficult time.

ESOP PROMOTION AND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2004

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to promote employee ownership through employee stock ownership plans (ESOPs). Most of our colleagues are familiar with these plans, but are they aware that the most common form of providing stock ownership to non-managerial employees today is through ESOPs?

During my service in the House, Congress has expanded employee ownership in America. I have worked to expand ownership through ESOPs by introducing, cosponsoring and advocating legislation. Many new provisions of ESOP law first surfaced in legislation I introduced in 1990, 1991, 1993, and 1995. Through the years, I have worked to build bipartisan support for ESOPs in Congress.

Let me say to my colleagues that ESOPs are not just special arrangements for the top executives in a company. ESOPs are broad-based stock ownership plans that, over the past 30 veers. have created significant wealth for employees. In many instances, they have been the innovators in participatory management practices that respect the individual while maximizing the performance of the company.

Studies demonstrate that the overwhelming majority of employee-owned companies are more successful and treat their employees better than non-employee-owned companies. For example, in the most comprehensive study of ESOP companies ever done, over 1100 ESOP companies were matched against their counterparts for an eleven-year period. The ESOP companies had a survivability rate 15 percent greater than the non-ESOP companies, had annual sales 2.4 percent greater on average, and provided more retirement benefits than their counterparts. In another study, Washington State's Economic Development Office found in 1997 and 1998 that ESOP companies in Washington State, when compared with non-employee-owned companies, paid higher wages, had better retirement, and had twice the retirement income for employees.

Despite all this favorable data, I cannot say that ESOP companies are always successful. But, I will say that they are usually high-performing companies that share with employees the wealth they help create and bring a real ownership culture into the workplace.

Overall, we have good ESOP laws on the books through our tax code and the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, which is overseen by the Department of Labor. My legislation does not unravel existing law, nor does it overreach with new, costly tax incentives for ESOP creation. Rather, my bill is a modest step toward aiding the creation of employee ownership through ESOPs and helping existing ESOP companies maximize their ownership structure.

Primarily, the ESOP Promotion and Improvement Act of 2004 would make minor changes in tax law to treat S-corps the same as C-corps in the ESOP arena, which would help foster ESOP creation. My legislation would also extend to ESOPs some of the popular features accorded to retirement programs such as 401K's. Following is a brief explanation of my legislation:

First, I will clarify what was really an oversight in the drafting of the 1997 law encouraging S corporations to sponsor ESOPs. The 1997 law prevented S corporations from taking a tax deduction for dividends ('distributions on current earnings'). Since S corporations do not pay a corporate level tax, it is reasonable not to give a corporate level tax deduction. However, under current law, distributions from current earnings on ESOP stock paid to employees of S-corps are subject to a 10 percent penalty tax because the payments are treated as if they were early withdrawals from plan contributions to the ESOP. Clearly, Congress never intended for S corporations to have their dividends on ESOP stock treated more harshly than C corporation dividends paid on ESOP stock.

To address this problem, my legislation does away with the unfair 10 percent penalty and makes it clear that, as in C corporations, dividends paid by an S corporation on ESOP stock can be deducted if the deduction is used to pay the debt incurred to acquire the stock for the employees through the ESOP.

Next, my legislation permits the owners of S corporation stock to sell that stock to an ESOP and, under tight rules, to defer the gain on that sale if the following conditions are met. First, the ESOP must hold at least 30 percent of the outstanding stock of the S corporation. Second, the seller must reinvest his or her proceeds in American companies. This treatment has been permitted for owners of C stock of a private company since 1984, and it has been a boon to ESOP creation. In fact, surveys by the ESOP Association show that 70 to 75 percent of the ESOP companies in America were created by exiting shareholders of private companies using this 1984 law. I believe that if this provision, Code Section 1042, is expanded to include S corporations, there will be many more S corporation ESOPs.

I believe we also need to clarify a 1989 law that the IRS has stretched too far. Under an IRS regulation interpreting the corporate Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT), C corporation dividends that are paid on ESOP stock are calculated as part of a company's adjusted current earnings, which is used in calculating the corporate AMT. Three taxpayers have taken cases all the way to the Court of Appeals saying the IRS went beyond the reach of the law in this interpretation. However, the Courts have rejected these claims, stating that the IRS has wide discretion in promulgating regulations. We should reaffirm our commitment to ESOP creation and clarify that Congress never intended to make an ESOP benefit a tax liability by overturning these IRS rulings.

Finally, my bill contains two technical amendments clearing up some unfair and out of date elements of the 1984 IRC 1042 provision. My bill clarifies who can participate in a 1042 ESOP, and it permits the proceeds from a 1042 sale to be invested in mutual funds of U.S. stock, versus requiring direct stock purchases. In addition, my bill brings parity to ESOPs with other defined contribution plans by permitting ESOP participants to withdraw money from the ESOP under limited circumstances to pay for a first-time home or college tuition.

With these few provisions, my legislation will do much to advance the cause of employee ownership, making ESOPs more effective and fostering the creation of many more ESOP companies. I thank the House and my colleagues for their time, and I ask that they consider joining me by cosponsoring this legislation.

SECTION-BY-SECTION EXPLANATION OF ESOP PROMOTION AND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2004

Makes six amendments to the Internal Revenue Code to improve the operation of existing ESOPs for both the plan sponsor and the employee participants, and in some instances make the creation of a new ESOP easier and more attractive.

Section 1. Clarifies that the 1996 and 1997 laws permitting S corporations to sponsor employee ownership through ESOPs allows S corporation distributions on current earnings (referred to as dividends in C corporations) on ESOP shares to be utilized in the same way as dividends under a 1984 law and 1986 law applying to dividends in a C corporation. Specifically, this section would permit the distributions from current earnings by an S corporation on ESOP stock to be passed through to employees without the 10 percent early withdrawal tax currently imposed on the employees. It would also permit distributions on current earnings on ESOP stock to be used to pay the ESOP acquisition debt. Regular income tax will still be due and, in keeping with current law, the S corporation would not be permitted a tax deduction for the distributions from current earnings on ESOP stock. (The distributions from current earnings are not to be confused with regular contributions to the ESOP by the S corporation which would still continue to be subject to early withdrawal penalties if withdrawn by an employee before death, termination, disability, or retirement.)

Section 2. Permits the seller of stock to an S corporation ESOP to utilize the current law ESOP tax deferral rollover tax benefit (IRC 1042), under the same restrictions applied to sellers to C corporation ESOPs. In general, to take advantage of IRC 1042, the ESOP most hold at least 30 percent of the corporation's highest class of stock at close of transaction, and the seller must reinvest the proceeds of the sale into the equities of operating U.S. corporations. If these conditions and others are met, the seller may defer the capital gains tax on his or her proceeds until he or she disposes of the qualified replacement property acquired with the sale proceeds. Furthermore, the benefit is applicable only to sales of non-publicly traded stock.

Section 3. Reverses a series of federal court decisions that have upheld a 1989 regulation by the Internal Revenue Service that includes tax deductions taken for dividends paid on ESOP stock when calculating a C-corp's AMT liability. This IRS regulation imposes the corporate AMT under an interpretation of IRC Section 56 that deductible ESOP dividends are included under the preference item known as ACE, or adjusted current earnings. Despite reasoned challenges to the IRS regulation by three taxpayers, courts have upheld the IRS regulations.

Section 4. Makes two minor changes to IRC Section 1042 (first enacted in 1984). The changes would make this ESOP tax benefit more reasonable, particularly due to developments since its enactment. Specifically, this section permits the proceeds from a 1042 sale to be reinvested in mutual funds that are invested in U.S. equities, and provides that an owner of 25 percent or more of one class of non-voting stock will not be automatically prohibited from participating in an ESOP with 1042 securities, and aggregates the 25 percent owner restriction on participation in a 1042 ESOP to all of the outstanding shares of the corporation, not just one class of shares.

Section 5. Permits early withdrawals from ESOPs (as with other ERISA plans) for purposes of a first time home purchase or payment of college tuition, with various restrictions, including that the withdrawal may not be more than 10 percent of an account balance, and the individual has had to participate five years in the ESOP.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO SCOTT TUCKER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today to recognize Scott Tucker of Golden, Colorado. Recently, Scott announced his retirement from his position as the executive director of the Urban Drainage and Flood Control District. As he moves on to future challenges, I would like to acknowledge his dedication and commitment to better his community before this body of Congress and this nation.

Scott has committed his career to addressing and solving problems pertaining to water resources in urban communities. After receiving a bachelor's and master's degree in civil engineering, Scott began his career in water resources. He first came to work in Colorado in 1970 for the Urban Water Resources Research Program. Two years later he joined the Urban Drainage and Flood Control District, where he is now the Executive Director. As Executive Director, he oversaw programs involving master planning, design and construction, maintenance, floodplain management, and projects involving the South Platte River. He retires from Urban Drainage and Flood Control District after thirty-two years of service.

In addition to his work in water resources, he is an active member of his community. As an avid skier, he is involved in the National Ski Patrol System, where he holds the leadership position of Treasurer. Additionally, he participates in competitive bicycle racing and is a member of the Bicycle Racing Association.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to honor the accomplishments and service of Scott Tucker. Scott has dedicated his career to dealing with an issue many people take for granted, water as a resource. His leadership at the Urban Drainage and Flood Control District will be greatly missed, and I wish Scott all the best in his future endeavors.

A TRIBUTE TO REGINA KIM

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor Regina Kim in recognition of her assistance to victims of domestic violence and abuse.

For the past 16 years Regina Kim has reached out to thousands of helpless, desperate, and battered women. As the Executive Director of the Korean Family Counseling and Research Center, Regina assists women victims of domestic violence, physical and mental harassment, and substance abuse with her compassion and dedication. Through counseling and a 24–hour hotline, crisis intervention services, victim advocacy and public education, the Center's mission of helping women and girls taking charge of their lives is put in practice every day. Regina's round-the-clock dedication to those in need is both inspiring and heartwarming.

The Korean Family Counseling and Research Center was the only counseling center for New York's Korean community when it was founded 31 years ago. Today, the rapid growth in Korean immigration to our city has increased the important role of the center.

By providing hope and encouragement to countless women and their families, Regina has won admiration from her colleagues, the local community, as well as people in Korea. In 1992, she was presented the Social Services Recognition Award by the Korean government for her contribution to the Korean-American community. She has also been honored by the City of New York with an award for Distinguished Leadership in the field of Social Services and an award for Exemplary Leadership, Commitment, and Advocacy on Behalf of all New Yorkers.

Regina was educated at the Chong-gu College in Dae-gu, Korea and at the St. Stephens Outreach Network (Social Welfare). She is an active member of The Advisory Council on Democratic and Peaceful Unification and the Civil Air Patrol. This organization also presented her with an award for Distinguished Social Services.

Mr. Speaker, Regina Kim has helped thousands of women who have been victims of domestic violence and abuse. As such, she is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

SPEECH OF

HON. RUBÉN HINOJOSA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to the Tancredo amendment.

Earlier this summer, I came to the floor to oppose a similar amendment, and I felt obligated, as an American, to come to the floor today to oppose this misguided one.

Community policing has been successful in our diverse neighborhoods because police have proactively convinced immigrants that they should come forward and talk to local police. Mr. Tancredo's amendments would instill additional fear in immigrants, already under attack from certain political forces despite our Nation's history of welcoming them.

The Tancredo amendment is a veiled attempt to paint immigrants as terrorists and security threats. These immigrants contribute to our economy. They harvest our food, work in our factories and only want to realize the American dream for themselves and their families.

I quoted it the last time I came to the floor, and I will quote it as often as necessary to make my point.

As is inscribed on the Statue of Liberty, we need to remember here in Congress the generous invitation that the United States has always extended to the world: "Bring me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses, yearning to be free, the wretched refuse of your teaming shores. Send these, the homeless tempest tossed to me. I lift my lamp beside the Golden Door."

I fully understand that we need a responsible immigration policy that enhances and ensures our national security. However, the Tancredo amendment is divisive and will, in fact, reduce our security. I strongly encourage my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

TRIBUTE TO PAUL MENDRICK

HON. DIANA DeGETTE

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the notable accomplishments of Paul Mendrick. This remarkable gentleman merits both our recognition and esteem as his impressive record of leadership and invaluable service have improved the lives of countless people.

Paul Mendrick has devoted much of his time, skill and energy to making our State and our community a better place. Born to Joseph and Alice Mendrick in Pueblo, Colorado on October 23, 1948, he graduated from Pueblo South High School and attended classes at Southern Colorado State College. Paul enlisted in the United States Navy in 1970 and served as Yeoman to the Chaplin aboard ship until 1972.

Paul has been a labor leader, political activist and has remained in the vanguard of those dedicated to economic and social justice. During his distinguished career with the United States Postal Service, Paul served in various capacities with the Denver Metro Area Local of the American Postal Workers Union (APWU). He served as President from 1976 to 1992 and again from 1995 until his retirement in 2003. Under Paul's leadership, the Denver local became one of the most progressive locals, and he worked diligently to ensure that Postal Workers were represented fairly and their voices were heard in the United States Congress.

Those who know Paul know that fairness for the working people matters. He is well known for being forthright and a skilled leader not only within the APWU, but in the Labor Movement. For Paul, solidarity has meaning. In 1980, when the Air Traffic Controllers (PATCO) were on strike, Paul and other labor activists opted to travel to the APWU National Convention in Miami, Florida, by motor home rather than cross picket lines to travel by air. As a board member of the Denver Postal Credit Union, Paul was instrumental in lobbying Congress against a proposed tax levy on credit unions which still stands today. In 1986, he was among the delegates selected by the AFL–CIO to travel to South America to be part of a grassroots movement to build a worldwide Labor movement.

Paul has also dedicated his life to his family and recently became a grandfather. But for all of life's demanding pressures, Paul has found the time to give back to the community, and he has supported numerous charitable causes. He has spent endless hours working on behalf of the Special Olympics in Colorado and for Muscular Dystrophy. The APWU in Denver has always been a yearly participant in the March of Dimes Walk and, under Paul's leadership, the APWU has continually raised money to feed the homeless and take care of those less fortunate.

It comes as no surprise that Paul was recently elected Secretary-Treasurer of the Colorado AFL–CIO and continues to lobby for worker rights and a decent workplace. He has dedicated his life to working people and has brought both respect and dignity to the Labor Movement. He has used his inestimable skills and talents to advance the public good and the well-being of all our people.

Please join me in commending Paul Mendrick, a distinguished citizen. It is the strong leadership he exhibits on a daily basis that continually enhances our lives and builds a better future for all Americans.

IN HONOR OF GEORGE W. DAVIS

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of George W. Davis, a longtime member of the Watsonville community, who passed away June 7th, 2004 at the age of 83. George is survived by his wife of 60 years, Mildred Davis, his daughter, his sister, and numerous nieces and nephews.

George served in the Navy as a blimp pilot in 1941 during World War II. He transferred to the Watsonville airport following the war, starting his own construction business in 1948. Throughout the next decades, George built more than 100 area schools, including facilities at Cabrillo College, University of California at Santa Cruz, Aptos High School, Salesian Sisters and Moreland Notre Dame School. He also built numerous churches and other public buildings, including the Watsonville Youth Center. George's dedication to the youth of our community is outstanding, a commitment that we will cherish always. His accomplishments have shaped the Central Coast into the strong community it has become today.

Mr. Speaker, I am immensely grateful for the tremendous gift George gave to our community. His legacy will be cherished for countless generations. I would like to extend my condolences to his family and friends.

HONORING JERRY WHYATT MONDESIRE

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the accomplishments of journalist, former Congressional staffer, Pennsylvania State NAACP Vice President, Philadelphia NAACP President, and activist Jerry Whyatt Mondesire. Mr. Mondesire has consistently proven himself to be a proponent of civil rights and an agent of social activism here in the United States and around the world.

Mr. Mondesire's career as a journalist began in college, where he discovered that each of his school's four student newspapers intentionally overlooked the concerns and affairs of the school's African-American student minority. In response to this negligence, and to address the diverse needs of the student body, he helped found an Afrocentric magazine. Within a year, Mondesire took control of one of the campus' weekly papers and set up a fully integrated staff.

Mr. Mondesire's post-collegiate journalistic career was further marked by the activism that had so deeply characterized his years in college. After a decade in mainstream journalism, he concluded that the ''glass ceiling'' that denied African-Americans to work and excel to their full potential was present in that field. He left his editorial position at a major Philadelphia newspaper in order to become Chief of Staff for the Majority Whip of the U.S. Congress; there he was able to utilize his talents to combat both foreign and domestic social inequities. After spending 12 years in the most prestigious Congressional staff position, he rekindled his passion, revitalized his journalistic career and sought to address the issue of the journalistic glass ceiling by helping start The Philadelphia Sunday Sun.

In the past twelve years, Jerry Mondesire has become the host of a radio public affairs program on WDAS FM, the host of a cable television program called ''Freedomquest'', President of the Philadelphia National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Vice President of the Pennsylvania state NAACP. This gentleman is clearly an example of social activism at its best.

It is a privilege to recognize someone whose ambition, motivation, and desire for social equality are an inspiration to all Americans. I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Mr. Mondesire for his lifetime of activism, journalistic integrity, and perseverance.

COMMERCIALIZATION OF GOVERNMENT RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT (HEALTHY IT ECOSYSTEM)

HON. TIM HOLDEN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. HOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the Government's vital role in developing a healthy and growing information technology sector.

A variety of national and international studies indicate that the broad-based deployment of information technology can have a substantial impact on our nation's economic productivity and growth as well as the educational and social success of our citizens. Accordingly, it is our task to ensure that the Government formulates policies that foster the continued development of the IT sector while also providing for citizens' access to technology and opportunity for economic advancement.

Among the most important ways that the Government can assure the robustness of our information technology sector and broad deployment of technology are by continuing to fund IT research and development and by adhering to technology-neutral policies that support market-based innovation, including by enabling firms to capitalize on the intellectual property they add to government-funded technologies. Private firms are generally willing to commercialize publicly funded research only if they can protect the intellectual property they contribute to the development process in a manner that allows them to secure a return on their investment. Thus, for example, it is vital that the government licenses software developed with public research funds under terms that enable private resources to develop such software into commercially viable products.

Over the years, U.S. businesses and industry have proven extremely adept at developing successful new products from cutting-edge technologies. Many of the private sector's most successful products and technologies have been developed in no small part due to sound public policy that fosters innovation. This is especially true in the information technology sector. With the support of the Federal Government—both through funding and through technology-neutral policies that promote commercialization—we can ensure that the information technology sector remains robust and continues to innovate for the benefit of our economy and the health and welfare of our citizens.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO MILES STOTTS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise and pay tribute to Miles Stotts of Pitkin County, Colorado. Recently, Miles announced his retirement from his position as Director of Natural Resources for Pitkin County. As he moves on in his career to undertake new challenges, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize his accomplishments before this body of Congress and this nation.

In 1996, Miles came to Pitkin County, when he accepted a position as Manager of Construction overseeing the remaking of the county's landfill. Upon successfully creating one of the most ecological landfills in the state, he took a job as the county's Director of Natural Resources. This job required managing a wide variety of responsibilities for the county. During his tenure, he has been responsible for accrediting restaurants, preventing the spread of the West Nile virus, and monitoring septic systems, water quality and wildlife. One of his most significant achievements was overseeing the successful passage of the Wildlife Protection Ordinance, a mandate for bearproof garbage cans.

Mr. Speaker, Miles Stotts has shown his commitment to the citizens of Pitkin County in his care for the environment. Miles leaves behind a legacy for his work as the Director of Natural Resources, and his oversight and leadership in developing the county's new landfill. Thanks for all your hard work Miles, and I wish you the best in your future endeavors.

A TRIBUTE TO KEITH ALEXANDER GLASCOE

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Keith Alexander Glascoe.

This weekend a street in New York City will be dedicated and named in honor of Keith Alexander Glascoe. This is a fitting tribute to an honorable man.

In his life, he traveled down many streets and by-ways. The message of his life was to always keep moving down the road and to never be sidetracked by any obstacles.

As we know, he played football from the time he was a child. He had the rare ability to be both a team player and an outstanding individual player. He not only contributed to several championships on his high school and college teams, he also had the rare opportunity to try out for the New York Jets and played professional football in Italy.

As a testament to his ability to move between many arenas, this athlete was also an actor. And I think that the fact that he was able to accumulate so many acting credits in such a short period of time, not only speaks to his talent, but also his perseverance. Few people have this kind of uncommon versatility coupled with determination. But Keith was not only a determined person, he was a concerned person. He wanted to make things better for others.

So this athlete and actor, added public servant to his list of credits. This is why he worked at New York City's Child Welfare Agency and this is why he went to work for the New York City Fire Department.

And this is exactly the right street to name in honor of Keith because it is situated between Adam Clayton Powell, Jr Boulevard and Malcolm X Boulevard. Keith's street belongs between these two streets that are named after two African-American men who devoted themselves to improving the lives of ordinary people.

Keith Glascoe was the kind of man who saw a problem and wanted to find a solution. He was the kind of man who saw a need and sought to fill it. He was the kind of man who helped others. And gave his life in the process of doing so. That is why it is fitting that we name this street after this great public servant.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CLINICAL RESEARCH ACT OF 2004

HON. DAVE WELDON

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. DOYLE to introduce the "Clinical Research Act of 2004." This bill will address many of the problems confronting our Academic Health Centers as they attempt to leverage the enormous biomedical research gains made in the past century.

Breakthroughs in basic biomedical sciences, including human genomics, biomedical engineering, molecular biology, and immunology, over the past five decades have provided an unprecedented supply of information for improving human health. As a member of the Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee I am proud to say that the remarkable strides that have been made in basic science would not have occurred without the support of Congress and the general public. While we realize that research may not produce results overnight, we, as stewards of the taxpayers' dollar have every right to expect that the fruits of that research will result in better treatments for patients. This requires a clinical research infrastructure capable of translating, in a systemic and rational way, the fruits of basic research into improved patient care.

I, along with many of my colleagues in the Congress and the public in general, have become increasingly concerned that we have been too slow in getting improved patient therapies and interventions from the enormous investment we have made in basic research. Many in this Congress have expressed concern about the apparent disconnect between the promise of basic science and the delivery of better health care for the citizens of this country. Without strong Academic Health Centers capable of conducting clinical research the promise of improving the health of the American people will continue to elude us.

Unfortunately, the clinical research environment in the Academic Health Centers is encumbered by rising costs, inadequate funding, mounting regulatory burdens, fragmented infrastructure, incompatible databases, and a shortage of both qualified investigators and willing study participants.

This bill, through its clinical research support grants, infrastructure grants, and partnerships in clinical research grants will provide our Nation's Academic Health Centers with the resources they need and the opportunity to meet the public's expectations. This bill is specifically aimed at improving the translation of this new medical science knowledge to directly benefit those suffering from a wide array of diseases that impact all too many lives.

If we are going to fully benefit from the enormous investment of taxpayer dollars in biomedical research it is important that we move this legislation forward.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 4787

HON. MIKE ROGERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, over the years, the safety of vehicles and passengers in a funeral procession have been of significant concern to both funeral directors and law enforcement officials. Various means have been utilized to alert the public to a funeral procession and to protect its integrity. However, these methods are haphazard, lack uniformity and rely on local and state rules and regulations, if any, for enforcement. With the advent of private vehicles with daytime running lights as a standard feature, increased traffic congestion in urban areas, road rage and an increase in the number and variety of law enforcement and emergency vehicles, funeral processions have become more and more vulnerable to accidents and other hazardous conditions. Furthermore, with this increased risk comes increased liability exposure for the funeral home and funeral director resulting in increased financial strain. Therefore, the use of Mobile Infrared Transmitters by authorized personnel only as well as increased use of law enforcement personnel as funeral procession escorts would go a long way in addressing this very real problem. My bill would protect the authorized user and impose penalties and jail time for an unauthorized user or seller.

HONORING THE MEMORY OF MRS. VICTORIA SOTO CANDELARIA

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great admiration that I rise today to honor the memory of Mrs. Victoria Soto Candelaria for her lifelong contributions to her community. Victoria passed away unexpectedly on July 4, 2004. Victoria was a pioneer educator who touched the lives of numerous students, both in and out of the classroom. She was also a union leader, activist, and community advocate, and her numerous accomplishments are worthy of the highest commendation.

After earning a bachelor's degree from Indiana University and a master's degree from Purdue University, Victoria devoted twenty-nine years to the School City of East Chicago teaching English and Spanish. In 1987, she was elected President of the East Chicago, Indiana Federation of Teachers, Local 511, a position she held until 2001. Additionally, Victoria was President of the Indiana Teachers Federation from 1997 until 2003. As well as being dearly loved and respected by her family and community, Victoria was known for her passionate belief in helping to educate the working people in her community.

Victoria strongly believed in the importance of community involvement as well as political activism. She served as secretary of the Northwest Indiana Federation of Labor and as Vice President of the Indiana AFL–CIO. She also served on the Board of Directors for the Lake County Integrated Services Delivery and for the Lake Area United Way. Victoria was a trustee for Ivy Tech State College and for the Indiana Federation of Teachers. In the political arena, she was a member of the Indiana Governor's Roundtable on Education and a member of the Governor's Commission for Hispanic and Latino Affairs. She was a three time National Education Policy advisor to President Clinton, a delegate to the Indiana Democratic Convention, and a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1992 and 1996. Victoria received invitations to the presidential inaugurations in 1993 and 1997. She was also honored with the Sagamore of the Wabash in 1997.

While her work in the educational and political fields placed extraordinary demands on her time, Victoria always found time to spend with her most important interest, her family. By providing unwavering guidance to her children, she instilled in them the morals and fortitude that have molded her children into successful adults who are raising families of their own. She is survived by her loving husband of 42 years, Isabelino, three sons and one daughter, eight grandchildren, and a host of other relatives.

Mr. Speaker, Victoria Soto Candelaria dedicated her life to educating the nation's youth and serving as a leader and role model for all Americans. Because of her lifetime work and achievements, Mrs. Candelaria has been lauded as a tireless, passionate, and visionary advocate of the people. I respectfully ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues join me in remembering Mrs. Candelaria and her outstanding contributions to Indiana's First Congressional District. She will be admirably remembered and truly missed.

PROVIDING SUPPORT FOR PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

HON. CHARLES W. "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express support for one of government's most important contributions to the economic welfare of this nation: providing support for public and private sector research and development.

U.S. businesses and industry have proven extremely adept at developing successful new products from cutting-edge technologies. Many of the technologies that underlie these products and spur economic growth were originally developed with federal support.

The extent to which publicly funded research stimulates further innovation depends in large part on whether it is disseminated under terms that attract the private investment needed to commercialize the research. Private firms, however, are generally willing to commercialize publicly funded research only if they can protect the intellectual property they contribute to this process in a manner that allows them to secure a return on their investment.

The importance of intellectual property rights in driving new research and its commercialization is illustrated by this Nation's own experience in funding university R&D activities. In the 1970s, too little federally funded research was being commercialized as a result of tight restrictions on licensing, varying patent protections among federal agencies, and the lack of exclusive manufacturing rights. Indeed, in 1980 only five percent of U.S. government-owned patents resulted in new or improved products.

In response to this problem, the U.S. Congress in 1980 passed the Bayh-Dole Act, which established a uniform government patent policy and allowed universities and other nonprofits to retain title to federally-funded inventions and to work with private-sector companies in bringing them to market.

By any measure, the Bayh-Dole Act has been remarkably successful and today the federal government provides a majority of all university research funding. According to the last survey on the impact of the Bayh-Dole Act conducted by the U.S. Association of University Technology Managers, in 2000 alone this research spawned 347 new products, 13,032 invention disclosures, 6,375 U.S. patent applications, 3,764 U.S. patents issued from previous applications, 4,362 new licenses, and the creation of 454 new companies. Moreover, universities received $1.26 billion in licensing revenue from these activities. Much of this money in turn is reinvested in further research and development.

Technological innovation and government support for it are central not only to the Nation's economy, but also to the health and vitality of our citizens. With the continued support of the Federal Government—both through funding and through licensing policies that promote commercialization such as those embodied in the Bayh-Dole Act—we can continue to ensure that technology is developed and made available to the private sector in a manner that spawns further innovation, for the benefit of our economy and the health and welfare of our citizens.

SAN DIEGO WATER STORAGE AND EFFICIENCY ACT OF 2004

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, my San Diego Congressional District suffers from the same problem that exists throughout all of the West—a diminishing supply of usable water. As populations increase, and resources are evermore stretched between agriculture, municipal, and environmental uses, we must be smarter with our current water use. To address this problem, San Diego has had great success. In recent months, we completed a landmark deal with our Imperial County neighbors that will provide up to 200,000 acre feet of new water per year for our growing city. San Diego County has embarked on a remarkable regional seawater desalination program to tap the nearby Pacific Ocean. Water efficiency efforts spearheaded by the San Diego County Water Authority have resulted in our ability to rely on the same amount of water we used in the year 1990—even though our population has swelled by nearly 20 percent. This is great progress, but we have more to do.

For this reason, today I am proud to introduce the San Diego Water Storage and Efficiency Act of 2004. The legislation helps the Sweetwater Authority, which administers much of the water supply in my district, make maximum use of the water they manage by enabling them to more fully use their existing reservoirs.

In 1993, the Army Corps of Engineers determined that one of the top methods to ensure greater water reliability in San Diego County was to connect three isolated reservoirs—the San Vicente, which receives raw, imported water, and the Loveland and El Capitan Reservoirs, which receive only local runoff and are rarely full. By connecting the three, we can ensure that the ability to use available water storage is maximized. This legislation authorizes a $3 million federal feasibility study of the reservoir intertie project.

I look forward to working with House Resources Committee Chairman POMBO, as well as Water and Power Subcommittee Chairman CALVERT, both stalwart advocates for our State's water needs, in advancing this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will promote conservation and increase the reliability of our regional water supply, and I urge my colleagues' thoughtful consideration of the San Diego Water Storage and Efficiency Act.

FREEDOM FOR MIGDALIA HERNÁNDEZ ENAMORADO

HON. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about Migdalia Hernández Enamorado, a prisoner of conscience in totalitarian Cuba.

Mrs. Hernández Enamorado is a wife, a mother of three and a peaceful pro-democracy activist. Because she believes that a free and democratic Cuba is the best hope for her young children and every citizen trapped in totalitarian Cuba, she has worked to liberate Cuba from the tyrannical regime.

As a result of the tyrant's brutal March 2003 crackdown on peaceful pro-democracy activists, Mrs. Hernández Enamorado, along with her husband Rafael Benitez Chui, went to a police unit in Guantanamo, Cuba, and protested the arrests of Manuel Ubals and Juan Carlos Herrera Acosta. Unfortunately, the tyrant's thugs arrested the married couple while they peacefully protested the abhorrent crackdown on their fellow advocates for freedom and human rights in totalitarian Cuba.

On September 18, 2003, after being held in the inhuman gulag for 7 months, Mrs. Hernández Enamorado was ''sentenced'' to 2 years in the despotic gulag for the supposed crime of ''contempt.'' In the same sham trial, her husband was sentenced to 4 years. Let me be very clear, Mrs. Hernández Enamorado's three children are living without their parents because these noble pro-democracy activists believe in freedom.

According to a report from Guantanamo by Ada Kaly Márquez Abascal, Mrs. Hernández Enamorado is being abused by prison guards, suffering from high blood pressure, and ailing from a myriad of physical maladies caused by the deplorable conditions in the totalitarian gulag. It is also reported that she is only allowed to see her children for 5 minutes a week and some weeks she is not even allowed that brief visit.

Mr. Speaker, it is unconscionable that Mrs. Hernández Enamorado is languishing in the totalitarian gulag because of her belief in freedom. It is categorically unacceptable that her three daughters are growing up without their parents, and unable to even visit their mother for more than 5 minutes, simply because Mrs. Hernández Enamorado wants them to be raised in liberty instead of repression. My Colleagues, we must demand the immediate release of Migdalia Hernández Enamorado, her husband Rafael Benitez Chui, and every prisoner of conscience suffering under the terrorist regime in Havana.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO GARY WERMERS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise to pay tribute to Gary Wermers of Pueblo, Colorado. As a science teacher at Heaton Middle School, he has shown commitment toward educating our youth. Gary is a valuable member of his community, and I am honored to join my colleagues in recognizing Gary's tremendous work before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Gary teaches science to seventh grade students at Heaton Middle School in Pueblo. His value in teaching goes well beyond his ability to convey the subject matter in the curriculum as he strives to stress moral and civilized behavior of his students. For his efforts and accomplishments in the classroom, he was recently awarded the 2004 Teacher of the Year Award from the Wal-Mart Corporation. In addition to his time teaching in classrooms, he attempts to connect with students as a mentor in activities where students find interest. He coaches the boys' basketball team, and sponsors the student council and the Fellowship of Christian Hawks.

Mr. Speaker, Gary Wermers has clearly been an outstanding influence on our youth. The community benefits from him as an excellent educator, but it is the individual students who benefit the most from his personal and lasting style of teaching. I thank Gary for his important work in his community, and wish him all the best in his future endeavors.

HIGH PERFORMANCE COMPUTING

HON. GIL GUTKNECHT

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, high performance computing has become very important to the competitiveness of this country. Supercomputers help us solve some of the most critical scientific, business, and homeland security problems in this nation. I would like to highlight what the citizens in my district working at IBM are doing to advance high performance computing.

I recently visited the Rochester, MN facility of IBM in my district. There I learned about IBM's newest supercomputer, Blue Gene/L.

Blue Gene is an IBM project to build a new family of supercomputers optimized for bandwidth, scalability, and the ability to handle large amounts of data while consuming a fraction of the power and floor space required by today's fastest systems. IBMers in my district are exploring how to harness Blue Gene's massive computing power to model the folding of human proteins. This technique is expected to give medical researchers better understanding of diseases and potential cures.

Two prototypes of IBM's Blue Gene/L now rank #4 and #8 on the latest list of the Top 500 fastest supercomputers. When Blue Gene/L is finished, it is expected to rank #1 on the Top 500 list next year, overtaking the Japan's Earth Simulator.

The citizens of my district and IBM take their commitment to innovation, competitiveness, and the advancement of high performance computing in this nation very seriously. The most advanced supercomputing skills in the world are right here in the United States—and in my district. With the leadership of IBM and the Minnesotans it employs, the innovative advances keeping our county competitive will remain firmly rooted in the U.S.

NATIONAL INNOVATION INITIATIVE

HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. Speaker, America's ability to innovate will determine our citizens' standards of living and competitiveness in the 21st century. I would like to highlight what leaders in my district, IBM and Georgia Tech, are doing to ensure that America remains the most innovative country in the world.

Sam Palmisano, the CEO of IBM, and Wayne Clough, the President of Georgia Tech, launched a National Innovation Initiative last fall through the Council on Competitiveness. They have pulled together hundreds of the nation's top minds from industry, academia, and government to develop a national agenda that will be released in December of this year. An interim report will be issued soon.

These leaders understand that innovation relies on much more than science and technology funding, although that remains important. Innovation is putting new ideas into action to better our lives—a blend of invention, insight and entrepreneurism that launches new growth industries and creates high-value jobs. Innovation can be a new product, process—or increasingly in our economy—a service.

Our future relies on whether we establish an ecosystem of smart policies that recognize how innovation is changing in our global, open and connected economy. The National Innovation Initiative will sharpen our understanding of contemporary innovation and recommend bold action on many fronts to ensure that America has the talent, infrastructure, and investment to succeed.

I salute IBM and Georgia Tech for their leadership; look forward to reviewing the National Innovation Agenda; and pledge to be a partner in keeping the United States at the forefront of innovation.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. XAVIER BECERRA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, July 6, 2004, I was unable to cast my floor vote on rollcall Nos. 326 and 327. The votes I missed include rollcall vote 326 on the Motion to Suspend the Rules and Agree, as amended, to H. Con. Res. 410, Recognizing the 25th Anniversary of the Adoption of the Constitution of the Republic of the Marshall Islands; and rollcall vote 327 on the Motion to Suspend the Rules and Agree to H. Con. Res. 257, Expressing the sense of Congress that the President should posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Harry W. Colmery.

Had I been present for the votes, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall votes 326 and 327.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

ADAM G. KINSER POST OFFICE BUILDING

HON. DOUG OSE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, a national hero, a loving son and brother, a dedicated student, athlete, and a proud father to-be. These are just a few of the phrases that can be used to describe Adam Kinser of Rio Vista, CA. Although no list of descriptions can ever fully do justice to understanding the bravery and compassion of a young man who gave his life for his country at the age of 21.

Adam Gareth Kinser was born in 1983 in Valencia, CA and grew up in Rio Vista with his parents and four younger siblings from the time he was five. There was nothing typical about Adam, who from a young age was a standout, not only among his peers and teammates, but to his teachers and family as well. Adam was a hard-working student, even serving as a teaching assistant in some classes.

Bill Fulk, a former teacher of Adam's, praised the young man as the "best the United States had to offer" He was a role model to other students, demonstrating a positive attitude, kind heart and willingness to help. He was an outstanding varsity athlete, running track, playing basketball, and was the starting quarterback for 3 years. His strong leadership and commitment didn't end at school or on the field though, he was also a mentor and protector to his younger siblings, one of whom recalls that Adam "was always protecting me even when I didn't want it."

Perhaps it was not a surprise that Adam also wanted to serve and protect his country, when he joined the Army Reserve during his senior year of high school. Adam was in boot camp at Fort Bragg, NC, when the terrorists attacked the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001, and was sent to Afghanistan in July 2003.

Adam returned home during Christmas, where his wife, Tiffany, surprised him with an ultrasound of their soon-to-be-born son. He was ecstatic and could not wait to be a father, counting down the days until he would be reunited with his wife and new baby. This did not stop Adam from taking pride in the job he was doing for his country and in the bonds that he treasured with his fellow soldiers.

Adam returned to Afghanistan after Christmas, serving in the Army Reserve's 304th Psychological Operations Company. However, on January 29, 2004, Adam and eight other soldiers were working near a weapons cache near Ghanzi, 60 miles southwest of Kabul, when an explosion took place that claimed his life and those of his fellow soldiers.

Adam's death has sent Rio Vista into a period of mourning and loss for the young man that many of them knew and loved so well, and had watched mature into a brave leader. The community of Rio Vista remembers him fondly, and will surely miss him, not least of all his family and newborn son.

Adam was the first Rio Vistan to give his life in wartime since the Korean War. As Rio Vista Mayor Marcie Coglianese said, "he is the embodiment of all our values." In order to ensure that the memory and name of this young man, father, and soldier, lives on, the least we can do is to re-name the post office in his home town, as an honor for the town, family and country that produced such a great man.

HONORING THE LIFE OF U.S. MARINE RODERICKA ANTWAN YOUMANS

HON. JOE WILSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this week South Carolina learned the sad news that a U.S. Marine, Private Rodericka Antwan Youmans from Allendale, S.C., was killed by terrorists while serving in Iraq.

Pvt. Youmans will be remembered for making the ultimate sacrifice to protect American families in the War on Terror. The thoughts and prayers of the entire Wilson family are with his friends and family.

I ask all of my colleagues to join me in expressing our deepest sympathies to Pvt. Youman's two children, fiancé, brother and parents.

I request that the following article from The State be added to the RECORD.

[From The State, July 8, 2004]

ALLENDALE MARINE DIES IN IRAQ

(By Chuck Crumbo)

A bomb attack by Iraqi insurgents has killed a 22-year-old Marine from Allendale, the man's family said Wednesday.

Pvt. Rodericka Antwan Youmans was one of four Marines who died Tuesday near Fallujah in Iraq's Al-Anbar province, said his father, Johnny Youmans.

The elder Youmans said Marine Corps officials notified him of his son's death Tuesday.

"I was coming home, and I saw a government truck in front of the house. I knew it was nothing good," said Youmans, a 29-year military veteran.

The Marines had not released by late Wednesday the name of Pvt. Youmans as one of the fallen Leathernecks. The Marines said only that the troops were conducting security operations in the province.

Three Marines died Monday in a similar incident in An-Anbar.

Twenty-one other members of the armed services with ties to South Carolina have died in the Iraq war. He is the second casualty from Allendale County.

Marine casualty officers notified the family of his son's death about 4:30 p.m. Tuesday, Youmans said.

The Marines first broke the news to Youmans' wife, Amanderlene. As he approached the house, his 17-year-old daughter, Sholanda, came out and told him Rodericka was dead, Johnny Youmans said.

Johnny Youmans, a staff sergeant in 163rd Support Battalion of the S.C. Army National Guard, has been on active duty for 1½ years. He is serving on a security detail at Seymour-Johnson Air Force Base, N.C.

Youmans said his son called home last week to say he was doing fine and that "he loved all of us."

On Monday, Rodericka Youmans called his 20-year-old fiancee, Stephanie Cuthbertson of Allendale.

They were planning to marry in September when his unit was scheduled to return to Camp LeJeune, Cuthbertson said.

"I loved everything about him. His sense of humor and the way he treated me. He was very sweet and very giving," she said.

Rodericka Youmans, a graduate of Allendale-Fairfax High School, joined the Marines about a year ago and went through boot camp at Parris Island, Youmans said.

"He was almost 21 when he joined. He couldn't find a job and when he did, he'd get laid off because the economy was so bad. He had two kids (ages 4 and 1) and needed to support them."

Rodericka quickly fell in love with the Marines and wanted to make a career out of the military, Youmans said.

"He liked the respect that he received. It changed his whole life. He wanted to do the right thing."

Other survivors include his children, A-Miyah, 4, and Mekhi, 1; and a brother, Johnny Youmans Jr., 24.

Cave Funeral Service is in charge of arrangements.

CONGRATULATING THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY ON ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. TIM HOLDEN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. HOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Pennsylvania State University on its 150th year serving the citizens of Pennsylvania and beyond. As the Commonwealth's only land grant institution, Penn State has played a vital role over the years in promoting agricultural and scientific research, workforce development, education, as well as many other initiatives; fulfilling the mission that Congress laid out in The Morrill Act of 1862.

Since its founding in 1854, Penn State has proven to be a leading institution of higher learning. The most recent U.S. News and World Report survey of graduate schools ranks a number of programs at Penn State among the nation's top ten, encompassing a wide array of subjects ranging from nuclear engineering to vocational/technical education.

Penn State has also continued to be a leader in Pennsylvania's largest industry: Agriculture. The University has a long history of innovations in this field, beginning in 1861 when it was the first American institution to confer baccalaureate degrees in agriculture. Today, Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences continues to lead the way in agricultural research and promotion through such programs as the Penn State Cooperative Extension, a number of international exchange programs, and the Penn State Agricultural Council. As a member of the House Agriculture Committee, I have seen first hand the exceptional work that College of Agricultural Sciences does and the services it provides to Pennsylvania's farmers.

Penn State University is also nationally recognized for the exceptional research and patient care provided at the College of Medicine, located in my Congressional District in Hershey, PA. This includes the recent partnership with the National Naval Medical Center to conduct cancer research. This joint venture will lead to important new advances in discovery, early detection, evaluation, treatment and prevention of cancer that will benefit both the military and civilian population. The Penn State College of Medicine has demonstrated great benefits to the local community as well as the state in general. According to a recent study, the College of Medicine has generated nearly $35 million in state tax revenue and created more than 13,500 jobs both directly and indirectly. In a state that has recently experienced a lack of new and competitive jobs, the value of this cannot be overstated.

Mr. Speaker, over its 150-year history, the Pennsylvania State University has proven to be an invaluable asset not only to Pennsylvania, but also to the entire nation as well. I'm extremely proud to have three Penn State Campuses located within my Congressional district. I ask my colleagues in the United States House of Representatives to join me in congratulating the Pennsylvania State University as we celebrate its 150th Anniversary.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO FRANCISCO CARMONA

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to Francisco Carmona and thank him for his work as Customer Service manager with the Seattle Washington Passport Agency. His years of commitment and dedication as a public servant is certainly commendable and worthy of recognition before this body of Congress and this nation today. Along with my fellow Americans, I am grateful for all that he has accomplished during his years of service.

Francisco attended the University of Washington. In 1986, he joined the State Department in Washington DC, where he assisted in researching routine and intricate passport cases. Francisco became an expert at complex citizenship law as a result of his research. In 1996, he transferred to the Seattle Washington Passport Agency and became the Customer Service manager. Francisco has been instrumental in assisting constituents with obtaining passports in life or death emergencies, complex citizenship cases, and expedited passports for last minute travelers. Francisco has been known to stay late, come in on the weekends and go the extra mile to help the constituents he is serving. He is highly regarded by his peers and superiors.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Francisco Carmona has been an invaluable resource to the Seattle Washington Passport Agency. It is my honor to recognize his service and dedication before this body of Congress and this nation. I am grateful for the opportunity to work with devoted public servants like Francisco. On behalf of the citizens that have benefited from the hard work and commitment he has given to the Seattle Passport Agency and the State Department and the constituents they serve, I extend my appreciation for his years of enthusiastic service.

HONORING DR. BLAINE SAYRE

HON. WM. LACY CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. Blaine Sayre for being awarded the ''Local Hero in Community Pediatrics Award'' from the American Academy of Pediatrics. This award recognizes Dr. Sayre for being a leader through action and advocacy for children in the St. Louis community.

Dr. Sayre is highly committed to improving the health of children. As Medical Director of Health Care for Kids, Dr. Sayre maintains evening and weekend hours to provide accessible, high quality health care services to medically underserved and uninsured inner city children. He also serves as the Medical Director for Healthy Kids Express, which places two large medical vans near inner city schools and community locations to care for kids.

Mr. Speaker, his steadfast commitment and his passionate devotion have earned him the privilege of being honored today before Congress. His sincere dedication to the health of children in the St. Louis community makes him worthy of our recognition and I urge my colleagues to join me in commending Dr. Blaine Sayre.

HONORING THE MARYLAND SHOCK TRAUMA CENTER

HON. C.A. DUTCH RUPPERSBERGER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. RUPPERSBERGER. Mr. Speaker, it is truly my honor to stand and recognize the men and women of the Maryland Emergency Medical Services System and the R. Adams Cowley Shock Trauma Center at the University of Maryland Medical Center in Baltimore. After a near-fatal car crash in 1975, I was airlifted to the Shock Trauma Center where a team of dedicated physicians and nurses saved my life. It was a turning point for me and I am grateful.

The Maryland EMS system was the first of its kind in the Nation and the Shock Trauma Center stands as the ''core element'' of that system. In the late 1950's, long before we watched heroic doctors save lives on television's ER, Dr. Cowley of Maryland envisioned a medical facility dedicated to the mission of saving lives during that first critical ''golden hour.'' What began as a 2-bed unit has grown to become a 102-bed dedicated trauma hospital that treats approximately 7,000 severely injured patients each year.

Dr. Cowley's vision has since become the national model for a fully integrated statewide EMS and trauma system. The Maryland Shock Trauma Center's survival rate is 98 percent. This survival rate is the product of Maryland Shock Trauma's faculty and staff, as well as, its pioneering techniques. Its state-of-the-art facilities and equipment attracts some of the best medical talent in the Nation. Through fellowships and other programs, the center will only continue to set the standard. However, Shock Trauma's success also rests on the efforts of the pre-hospital providers, both career and volunteer, the Maryland State Police Medevac system, the regional trauma centers throughout Maryland and the foresight and leadership of the Maryland Institute for Emergency Medical Services Systems (MIEMSS).

Proud, though I am of these accomplishments, don't just take my word on this. Recently the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) conducted an assessment of Maryland's EMS and Trauma system. The Maryland EMS system was compared to predetermined ''gold standards'' and is recognized as positioned ''to offer national leadership in promoting the continued development and improvement of other state systems''. The report goes on to say that the system's acheivements ''have much to offer in terms of promoting improved emergency care throughout the United States''. This is a well-deserved and hard-won honor to so many dedicated and devoted emergency care professionals in the State of Maryland. Dr. Cowley's vision has become a reality that has exceeded everyone's expectations thanks to the unceasing efforts of pre-hospital providers, doctors and nurses and administrators, along with the unfailing support of Maryland's elected officials and its citizens.

I am grateful for the Maryland EMS and Trauma system, and particularly the Maryland Shock Trauma Center—for my family and the families of so many thousands of other survivors. I am honored to stand here today and recognize this amazing trauma system.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. LUIS V. GUTIERREZ

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent for votes in this Chamber on July 6, 2004. I would like the RECORD to show that, had I been present, I would have voted ''yea'' on rollcall votes 326 and 327.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2005

SPEECH OF

HON. RON KIND

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4754) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2005, and for other purposes:

Mr. KIND. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank Chairman WOLF and Ranking Member SERRANO for all their hard work in putting the Commerce-State-Justice and Related Agencies Appropriations bill together. This legislation, while never perfect, includes important funding for programs helping our local economies grow, and keeping our communities safe.

I particularly commend the Appropriations Committee for providing $106 million for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership (MEP) program within the Department of Commerce's National Institutes of Standards and Technology. Through a national network of manufacturing extension centers. MEP is designed to benefit domestic manufacturers by providing expertise and services tailored to their most critical needs. This includes assistance in process improvements, worker training, and information technology applications. In Wisconsin, MEP has served over 110 firms. Unfortunately, the Bush Administration has repeatedly cut funding for MEP; the President's budget request has consistently cut funding for MEP, proposing an 83 percent reduction in FY04 and a 60 percent reduction in FY05.

In western Wisconsin, the Northwest Manufacturing Outreach Center (NWMOC), one of two MEP Centers in Wisconsin, has provided assistance to more than 900 companies over the past 10 years. Frank Borg, Joe Benkowski, and their team at NWMOC travel throughout northern Wisconsin helping companies ensure businesses are able to compete and grow in the global marketplace. Restoring funding to $106 million is critical to MEP's success in Wisconsin and throughout the Nation.

I also want to thank the Committee for restoring funding for State and local law enforcement activities which the President's budget proposed slashing by over 80 percent. The legislation restores funding for the Byrne Justice Assistance Grants and Bryne Discretionary Grants. In addition, the legislation rejects drastic cuts proposed by the President for the COPS program. In western Wisconsin, and throughout the Nation, the COPS program is more important than ever. As many rural law enforcement offices are being called up for service in the National Guard and military Reserves, the COPS program provides resources necessary to help communities meet law enforcement challenges.

In addition, the legislation provides $60 million to help fight methamphetamine production and distribution. Methamphetamine abuse has been increasing in rural Wisconsin, and we must continue to help fight against this dangerous drug.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us provides many important resources for our local communities, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

TRIBUTE TO TONY NAPOLET

HON. TIM RYAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Tony Napolet. Coach Napolet was recently recognized as Man of the Year by The Mahoning Valley Italian-American Sports Hall of Fame. Born on July 4, 1938 in Warren, Ohio, Mr. Napolet has long been an active leader in our community.

His service and leadership in the community began with his football career at St. Mary's High School in Warren, where in his senior year he led his team as captain. Mr. Napolet went on to play football while attending Marquette University where he received his undergraduate degree in Education, beginning a career dedicated to teaching both in and out of the classroom. He started his football coaching career at Marquette while studying at Marquette Law School. Returning to Ohio in 1961, Coach Nap taught at Harry B. Turner Junior High School while coaching the football, basketball and track teams. His amazing coaching skills and extraordinary dedication to the sport led to his first head football coaching assignment at JFK High School in 1970. Coach Napolet went on to coach at a number of different schools over the years, including a position at St. Mary's Middle School, which he describes as one of the most rewarding experiences he has had in athletics.

In 1990, Coach Napolet returned as head football coach at JFK High School. Thanks to his impressive leadership, his first year back resulted in the Kennedy Eagles winning the State Championship. During the sixteen years as the Eagles' head coach, Mr. Napolet has had seven playoff appearances and has won 124 out of 180 games.

It is also with great honor that I recognize the members of Coach Napolet's family: his three children: Harold, Mario, and Natalie; and his grandchildren: Aarika Marie, Anthony Mauro, Mario Anthony and Olivia Rose. I am pleased to know Coach Napolet and to consider him a friend. He is well known for his community work at St. Mary's Church and his constant involvement in many church affiliated projects.

His longstanding support of local baseball, basketball, and football teams has allowed the community's youth to participate actively in sports. Mr. Napolet is a proud descendant of Italian-Americans, and on behalf of the people of the 17th Congressional District, I want to thank Mr. Napolet for his outstanding commitment to our youth, education, and community. Mr. Napolet stands as an inspiration for all of us.

RECOGNIZING THE JOHNS HOPKINS HOSPITAL FOR ITS 14TH CONSECUTIVE YEAR IN TOPPING U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT'S RANKING OF AMERICA'S HOSPITALS

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise the 14th consecutive year that the Johns Hopkins Hospital has topped U.S. News & World Report's assessments of American hospitals. This distinction places them in the company of well-respected hospitals such as the Mayo Clinic and Massachusetts General Hospital.

Located in my district in Baltimore, Maryland, Johns Hopkins Hospital ranks in the top ten for 16 out of the 17 specialty categories including: #1 in Gynecology, Otolaryngology and Urology; #2 in Geriatrics, Kidney Disease, Neurology/Neurosurgery, Ophthalmology and Rheumatology; #3 in Cancer, Digestive Disorders, Hormonal Disorders, Pediatrics, Psychiatry and Respiratory Disorders; and #4 in Heart/Heart Surgery and Orthopedics.

Time and time again Johns Hopkins has been noted as one of the country's best hospitals, boasting some of the world's most renowned surgeons, notably my friend, Dr. Ben Carson—so it is no surprise that Hopkins has once again received this great distinction.

Though these rankings bode well for the institution, the true recipients of these accolades are the doctors, nurses and staff. These people commit their time and energy to the work of the Hospital and the patients, and it is their professional excellence, like the 2003 Nobel Prize in Chemistry (won by Peter Age), for the first triple-swap kidney transplant and other similar distinctions, that encouraged this collective recognition of Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Mr. Speaker, this recognition represents Johns Hopkins Hospital's commendable strides to improve development and to encourage the most conducive working environments. In 2003, the Hospital increased its infrastructure development as they moved scientists into a $140 million research building-the new front door to the School of Medicine-and broke ground on a second Cancer Research Building. Also, construction commenced on infrastructure for two patient care towers at The Johns Hopkins Hospital and at the Howard County General Hospital to open larger inpatient operating rooms, while the suburban outpatient facilities continue to expand.

In addition to this development, Hopkins Hospital has continually supported excellence in global education and healthcare—evident in the Hospital's 2003 opening of its first overseas division in Singapore where twelve full-time faculty members will lead training and research on diseases endemic to Southeast Asia.

Consistent with its desire to curb pandemic crisis abroad, Hopkins Medical has taken an active stance against the spread of disease and infection at home with their fight against bioterrorism. On the national front, with major federal grants, Hopkins' teams will apply lessons learned on-site to enhance safety in 55 Michigan hospital intensive care units and to develop nationwide hospital plans.

It is a wonderful moment when the nation recognizes the outstanding achievements of an institution that helps so many people here in America and abroad. However, my pride is not based on this recognition alone. Instead, it is based on the knowledge that my constituents and fellow citizens achieved this honor through their constant and estimable work. Work, which was dedicated not with the desire to receive an award, but with the intent to make a genuine difference.

HONORING MR. DALE FREESE FOR HIS 30 YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE CITY OF WESTLAND

HON. THADDEUS G. McCOTTER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 9, 2004

Mr. MCCOTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of Mr. Dale Freese and his 30 years of service to the City of Westland.

After serving honorably in Vietnam as an Air Force Staff Sergeant, Dale was approached by his family asking him to take over Norman's Market, a grocery market owned by his father, Norman Freese. Immediately after taking over, Dale expanded the store and improved the shopping environment, thus increasing sales. But Dale also used the store for the purpose of philanthropy, giving many organizations the use of his store for fund-raising purposes, including the March of Dimes and the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Dale has also given his own time for many worthy causes. In particular, he has provided his own resources to homeless shelters and has helped improve the job skills of local students through his participation in the Garden City High School co-op program. Above all, his generosity and civic activism have made him an important member of Westland.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my sincere appreciation to Dale Freese for all he has done and his fine example of how local business can make a difference in the community.

TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN DOUG BEREUTER

SPEECH OF

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 8, 2004

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, during my entire 24 years in Congress, it has been my great pleasure to serve with my good friend and colleague from Nebraska, Congressman DOUG BEREUTER. As DOUG is serving his last term in the House before assuming the Presidency of the Asia Foundation, I would like to take a few moments to share my thoughts on such an exceptional Member of Congress.

For the past 26 years in Congress, DOUG has been a highly respected expert on American foreign policy, and has developed an immense network of national and international leaders who seek out his views on the global issues facing us today. For the more than two decades that we have served together on the International Relations Committee, DOUG has been rewarded with increasingly important leadership roles. He served as Ranking Minority Member when I was serving as Chair of the Subcommittee on International Security, International Organizations and Human Rights in the early 1990s. A few years later, I served as Ranking Minority Member of the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific when DOUG served as Chair.

DOUG played a critical role in the key foreign policy debates in the International Relations Committee, always fighting for the responsible, internationalist position on important global issues. Colleagues on the Committee relied upon DOUG because they knew he had done his homework, paid attention to the details, and consulted with the world's leading experts before pursuing an initiative. DOUG has always been, and will continue to be, an invaluable resource for other Members of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, DOUG's influence on American foreign policy, however, far transcends his important role in the International Relations Committee. Since 1986, DOUG has served as a member of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, which is the inter-parliamentary organization of legislators from the member countries of the NATO Alliance as well as Association NATO Members. Just two years ago, DOUG was elected President of that important body—a measure of the high respect world leaders have for him. In that capacity he has played an important role in the NATO enlargement process. He personally visited every new member state and worked to assist these countries make the transition. In this position, DOUG has brought credit, not only to himself, but to all of us who serve in the United States Congress.

DOUG has also worked tirelessly to involve other Members of Congress in the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. He lobbied other NATO parliamentarians to ensure that at least three other U.S. Members were able to hold leadership roles in that body. CODELs to these meetings always included some 10–15 Members who were well prepared and involved, thanks in part to DOUG's personal involvement and encouragement.

DOUG has also been exceptionally loyal to his staff, many of whom have worked with him for decades. This is a tribute to his kindness, consideration and respect of others. And as a result, DOUG has maintained one of the most effective and well connected staffs on Capitol Hill.

DOUG and Louise will be greatly missed here in Washington, but we are pleased to learn that he will be residing in the Bay Area and leading an exceptionally-important institution, the Asia Foundation. We hope to continue our friendship and working relationship as he embarks on this new venture. Annette and I both wish him and Louise well.

SENATE—Monday, July 12, 2004

The Senate met at 1 p.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O Lord God, the Almighty and the all wise, how unreachable are Your judgments and Your ways past finding out. You are the source of all joy and the one who orders the morning. Let Your truth govern our words, dwell in our thoughts, purify our dealings, occupy and redeem our time.

Lord, bless our Senators with strength sufficient for today's challenges and illuminate their paths with Your light. May they walk in the way of integrity and sacrifice. Help them to give You their anxieties as they incline their hearts toward unity. Teach us all to cheerfully do Your will, so we may not fear the power of any adversaries. We pray this in Your powerful Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting Republican leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, today the Senate will resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 40, the Federal marriage amendment. Discussions continue as to how best to proceed to the consideration of this constitutional amendment. While those negotiations continue, Senators are encouraged to come to the floor to speak on the amendment.

Friday, a number of Members came to the floor to talk on this issue, and we expect to resume the robust debate today. There will be no rollcall votes during today's session.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting Democratic leader is recognized.

VOTING

Mr. REID. Mr. President, through the Presiding Officer to the acting leader, as we announced on Friday, we, the minority, would be willing to move to the resolution without a vote on a motion to proceed. We are willing to do that and set a time whenever the leader desires on Wednesday to vote on the resolution. Of course, that is with the understanding there would be no amendments to the resolution. We think that would be a fair way to approach this very important issue. There would be whatever time the leader wants. If he wanted to vote on Thursday, that would be fine. Whatever time is deemed necessary to the majority leader, we would be willing to abide by that. It would avoid a lot of the extraneous issues. It allows us to proceed without any procedural impediments and move right to the resolution.

We want to make sure there is no misunderstanding, that it is very simple. We are willing to move at any time convenient to the majority to a vote on the resolution itself, of course, with no amendments.

FEDERAL MARRIAGE AMENDMENT—MOTION TO PROCEED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 40, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A motion to proceed to consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 40, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to marriage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 6 p.m. shall be equally divided between the chairman and ranking member or their designees.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Nevada, I appreciate his offer. I suggest we continue to work together to see if we can come up with a plan on how to proceed. It would be optimal to have a vote, a substantive vote.

As the Senator from Nevada may not be aware, there are different opinions on how to best address this issue. There are a couple of other proposals that have been floated out there that Members on our side would like to vote on by way of amendment to the underlying legislation.

This is an important piece of legislation. It is a piece of legislation on first impression here to the Senate and, given the importance of this legislation, it begs a full debate and the opportunity for different points of view to be expressed through the amendment process. While I appreciate the chance for an up-or-down vote on the Allard text, I do know of many Members who have different ideas and would like to see those ideas be reflected by way of amendment.

At this point, we are not capable of agreeing to that but we would be anxious to work with the Senator to see if there is some construct we can put together to allow this issue to be fully debated for those who have different points of view with respect to how to deal with this very important issue of protecting traditional marriage, that they have their opportunity to express their language, their preferable constitutional amendment as opposed to the one the Senator from Colorado has put forth.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have not spoken to anyone, but it appears from the body language I pick up and what I believe I hear my friend from Pennsylvania saying, they do not like the measure now before the body and they want to change it.

That is the problem we have when we report legislation directly to the floor without the necessary hearings. As to this matter that is now before the Senate, it is my understanding we have not had hearings before the Judiciary Committee where they should have gone on. The Senate Chamber is not the place to do what committees are there to do.

If there is some mistake or some other amendment that the Senators would rather have on the majority side, I suggest they take this back to the Judiciary Committee, have a full hearing, and decide really what they do want. It goes without saying it will not wind up being very pleasant if, in fact, we ever got to the resolution itself and this amendment were open to the amendment process. Everyone knows if that happens, this amendment would be bogged down with Christmas-tree-like ornaments called amendments.

We thought when we arrived and worked with our Members—Friday morning I personally called probably a dozen telling them what our plan was, not to have a procedural bottleneck to this legislation—that we would move immediately to that. That was not really what some wanted to do. Some wanted an up-or-down vote on the motion to proceed. We were able to show them it was better for the system that we move directly to the resolution.

We also thought we have so many things to do. Just last week we had a closed evidentiary presentation on what is going on around the world and in our country with homeland security. There are things we need to do in that regard. Last week the distinguished Presiding Officer was here where my friend, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, now stands trying to work something out so that we could move forward on the Appropriations Subcommittee on Homeland Security bill. That is something we should work on. We have all the appropriations bills to do. There is so much this body needs to do and we were trying to open up as much time in the remaining time we have left in this short legislative session before the August break, before the two national conventions, to provide more time on the Senate floor.

The leader told me last week one of the things he was considering is going to the Australian Free Trade Agreement. Some Members feel very strongly about that. I know the committee has had hearings on this issue. I have spoken to Senator HATCH on more than one occasion.

My only point is that we should not be amending this resolution on the Senate floor.

It is my feeling the best way to move to this is to move immediately to the resolution itself, do not have a motion to proceed which, if cloture is attempted on the motion to proceed, I do not think we will ever get to the resolution, and that is not fair. People in the State of Nevada feel strongly about it, as in the State of Pennsylvania, the State of Colorado, and the State of Alaska, one way or the other.

We should have the opportunity to vote up or down on this resolution, not on some procedural issue. But it appears to me that is where we are headed. We are headed as we are doing on so many other issues. Class action: I was not a supporter of the class action legislation, but for the class action legislation there was a 5-foot jumpshot to make that legislation succeed. I have to say, the majority did not miss the jumpshot; they did not even bother to take the 5-foot jumpshot. They walked away from that legislation.

I think the same thing has happened on a number of other issues. It appears to me what the majority wants is the issue, not a resolution of the issue. And now, if we are going to have to vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed, the majority can walk out and say: See what those Democrats did. They wouldn't even let us vote on the resolution.

I will tell everyone within the sound of my voice, we will allow a vote on the resolution. We want to go immediately to the resolution that is now before the Senate. I believe it is two sentences long, so it should not take a lot of thought as to what the resolution contains. I would say, with the great minds we have on the Republican side—and I do not say that in any way to castigate anyone; I believe we have people with great legislative experience in the majority, and this issue has been around for a long time—why in the world would they bring something before the Senate they do not want?

So I hope we can avoid procedural pitfalls and move directly at a time convenient.

I also say this: Senator KERRY and Senator EDWARDS would like to vote on the resolution. But if we cannot set a time certain, set a time uncertain, and they may or may not make it. We do want a time certain within a respectable period of time, but I hope this is not being done, so they are being prevented from voting on it. As you know, we had an important issue here a couple weeks ago where we set a time certain, we thought we had a time certain, and, as a result of our misunderstanding, Senator KERRY wasted a whole day here and was not able to vote.

So for whatever reason the majority appears not to want us to vote on the resolution itself, I hope that can be resolved. We want to get along. We want to allow as much time as possible on other issues, so there can be adequate debate on other legislation other than this matter.

What is going to happen if we proceed down this road, I would assume, is if the majority leader decides to file a cloture motion on the motion to proceed tonight, we will vote on it Wednesday, and that will be the end of this debate. That would be too bad, because I think people should vote on the resolution itself and not be able to hide under some procedural vote.

Maybe there are those on the other side who would rather not vote on the amendment itself. I think if we had a good, straight, up-or-down vote on the resolution, I would be surprised if we did not get 8 to 12 Republican Senators voting against the resolution now before this body. That may be another part of what the leadership is doing in this instance, saying simply: We are not going to allow the embarrassment to take place where this resolution gets 40 or 42 votes, when 67 are needed.

There are many who have said—and we have heard speeches on the floor—why are we doing this? Why are we voting on something that is doomed to failure? It will not pass. The constitutional amendment will not pass the Senate. In fact, as I said, if we had an up-or-down vote, maybe 42 votes would be in favor of it. That is 25 short of enough to meet the constitutional muster.

So for whatever reason, for whatever plan the majority has, we want a vote on the resolution. However, if the majority decides to bring this resolution to the floor, and it is amendable, I do not think the motion to proceed will prevail. I cannot speak for every Senator over here, but I can speak for a few of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I appreciate the willingness of the Democratic whip to agree to having substantive votes because I think it is important to have a substantive vote. As someone who is a cosponsor of the amendment, I will assure you, I have no desire to have anything but an up-or-down vote on the amendments that have been talked about over here on this side of the aisle.

The point I would simply want to make to the Senator from Nevada is, No. 1, this issue has had many hearings. There have been seven hearings in congressional committees, four in the Judiciary Committee, ranging from one that was on September 4 of last year, one on March 3 of this year, one on March 23 of this year, and one on May 13. The first three were in the Judiciary Committee. The Subcommittee on Science, Technology and Space had one on May 13. The Finance Committee had one on May 5. The HELP Committee had one on April 28. And recently, the Judiciary Committee again had one on June 22. So there have been seven hearings.

This issue has been studied. As a result of the study, there are predominantly two different tracks people would like to take here. You have many who are supporting Senator ALLARD's approach. There is another approach many Members on our side would like to take. All we are suggesting is that at least those two ideas be given the opportunity to be voted on.

I do not think we are going to look for a whole long list of amendments. My guess is we would be content with one amendment to provide a little different option for Members on both sides of the aisle to look at, and maybe both sides of the aisle to be supportive of. This may be a situation where we have options available that can attract bipartisan support. Obviously, Senator ALLARD's amendment has bipartisan support; Senator MILLER is on that amendment.

It sort of bothers me a little bit when I hear the comment made—and it has been made over and over, not only here on the floor but by many pundits—about we have more important things to do. I cannot think of anything more important to America than family and marriage. I cannot think of anything more important than the basic social building block of our country, and that is what marriage is, that is what the family is. And it is in jeopardy. It is in serious, real jeopardy as a result of what the courts are doing—certainly in Massachusetts and potentially around the country—what mayors are doing, what county executives are doing, and others who are unlawfully acting. But in the case of Massachusetts, under the color of law, at least, or maybe lawfully, if you concede that, they are reinterpreting the Constitution to change the definition of marriage.

Now, to me, that is a very serious issue. I cannot think of a more important issue to come before the Senate than to say: What should the future of our culture look like? I think we need to do that in a way that is thoughtful and that is open to different ideas on how to address this issue, because one person, as well meaning as he may be—and I strongly support his amendment—he has one idea, a group of us have an idea. But there are other ideas out there that should be considered when this very important issue is debated. Why? So we can find the sweet spot, we can find what can build the greatest consensus in the Senate to do something to protect an institution which is at the core of who we are as a culture.

While I would say, yes, as we say around here, we try to keep the trains running on time and passing appropriations bills, I think the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who happens to be the Presiding Officer at this time, will tell you we are not ready to pass all the appropriations bills at this point, that we are still waiting for the House to act and to do things to put us in position to deal with that. There are important issues at hand, but I cannot think of anything more important than this issue.

So I say to the Senator from Nevada, I would hope he would constructively engage in negotiation with us so we can have a full and fair debate, so we can have different alternatives so the Senate can work its will and hopefully try to find some language that will accommodate a supermajority of Members. I haven't heard any Member come down here and debate the substance of this issue. I suspect I will not hear any Member of the Senate come down here in the next 48 hours or longer and say that marriage should be something other than one man and one woman. There may be, but so far I have not heard that in the Senate.

Most who are opposing the constitutional amendment do so for a variety of reasons but not because they don't support the definition of traditional marriage. If that is the case, I would think we would want to work hard to try to find some way in which to protect this institution. Everybody admits, even those who are not for this constitutional amendment that has been proposed, that traditional marriage is under assault in the courts. Some would suggest this is an issue we just should not deal with. Some would suggest this is too heavyhanded a way.

Let's bring some people together. Let's bring the debate together. Let's see if we can find the language that would address this issue and stop what I believe is the death knell of our society, which is the ultimate breakdown of the traditional family and the meaning of that to future generations of children.

I know the sponsor of the amendment is here. I will yield the floor to allow him to speak. If the Senator from Nevada has a comment, I would be happy to yield.

Mr. REID. The Senator is giving up the floor?

Mr. SANTORUM. I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I will be very brief because I know the Senator from Colorado has worked hard on this issue. I always thought we were going to vote on one constitutional amendment. It appears now—we haven't seen the request and I acknowledge neither has the Senator from Pennsylvania but I know the staff is working on a unanimous consent request to present to us—we will be voting on two constitutional amendments. That wasn't what I think any of us contemplated.

We will be happy to review in detail any of the proposals that the majority has. We always try to be as fair as we can. I hope we can do that sooner rather than later. We will respond as quickly as we can to the good-faith efforts of the majority, and we will respond in as good faith as we can to their offer.

I appreciate the comments of my friend from Pennsylvania. He and I disagree on a number of issues, not as many as some would think. I understand how seriously he feels about this issue. His heartfelt concern is something that is shared by many people in this body, both Democrats and Republicans. It is an important issue. Therefore, I think we should move to the resolution before the Senate and have an up-or-down vote on it as quickly as possible.

Let me say to the Senator from Colorado, who has spent so much time on this issue, I recognize his deep concern. I apologize to him because he has been here since we started.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I wish to briefly respond. First, I thank the majority leader and the minority leader for working on this issue. I think we can get it worked out as to how we should proceed on the floor. This is an important issue this country faces in how we are going to deal with marriage. It has not been an issue hastily brought to the floor of the Senate. There have been hearings for at least almost 10 months now on this very issue.

We have had four hearings in the Judiciary Committee and the other three scattered throughout other committees, talking about the impact on children and what has happened from a socioeconomic change in countries—for example, Scandinavian countries that have recognized same-sex marriage for some time, how that has deteriorated and the fact there are so many children today born out of wedlock in those countries, whereas before that societal change happened where we define marriage, babies born out of wedlock was not such a high number. In fact, in the Scandinavian countries now, we have a greater incidence of babies born out of wedlock than are born in wedlock.

We have countries, such as the Netherlands, just more recently accepting the idea of same-sex marriage which have been recognized prior to that as countries that valued the traditional institution of marriage and actually had a very low divorce rate and very low rate as far as children born out of wedlock. But when we look at the Netherlands now, we see, with the demeaning of the value of marriage, that there are more and more children being born out of wedlock. That is a disturbing trend to many of us.

When you go to put together language that goes in the Constitution, it is with a lot of consideration and you have to spend a lot of time visiting with a lot of constitutional scholars. I have done that. This has been debated among our Federal colleagues. There are people who have different views, as with any constitutional amendment that has ever been brought to the Senate or before the Congress. There are always different views on that. I can't recall a constitutional amendment that ever came before the Congress when there was not some debate on it.

When you are asking to bring it to the floor, you have to expect there are going to be some differences of views. The preponderance has been that those provisions we have in this particular amendment that I have put together and introduced is the right balance because we define marriage as a union between a man and a woman. I don't think there is any doubt about that language. It is very straightforward.

We have a second sentence in the amendment that says there is a limited role for the courts. In other words, the courts shall not go ahead and define marriage other than what we have defined here. But we recognize there is a definite role for the States. We allow States to move ahead, through the democrat process, and to deal with issues such as civil unions and domestic partnerships and the benefits that may accrue with those types of classifications through the legal system.

This has been carefully thought out. We have individuals over here who have sort of the Federalist philosophy. I have sort of a Federalist philosophy.

I don't want to see the Government messing around in State affairs, so we have kept that at a very minimum. All we do is define marriage at the Federal level. Then we say it is up to the States now to decide how they want to deal with civil unions and domestic partnerships. We needed to do that in order to limit the power of the courts.

This is a constitutional amendment. It deserves a lot of thought and debate. I am very pleased to have a number of cosponsors. The hearings have gone very well. I do wish that in our hearings we had had more participation from the Democrats. In fact, I can recall a number of hearings where nobody showed up from the other side. There were two hearings held where there was a lot of participation from the other side, but at the other five hearings there wasn't any participation at all. So this is an opportunity for people to participate.

Anytime you talk about some kind of rule that you are going to put forward in the Senate where you limit debate, limit people's ability to participate, it is always going to be somewhat controversial. I don't think the assistant minority leader should be particularly alarmed at the fact we are having some discussions about how we should move forward. The last time I looked, I think there were some four bills that have been blocked from becoming major bills—such as the energy bill, for example—from coming to the floor of the Senate because of a filibuster. We have a number, I think about four bills or so that have passed the Senate and are not allowed to go anywhere because the other side has not appointed conferees. We have had the obstruction going on with the judges.

That is well known. I don't need to go over that, what has been debated. We spent a couple of all-nighters in the Senate talking about the obstruction of the judges and how it is important that we fill those positions.

My hope is we can move forward and come up with a reasonable rule, where everybody feels comfortable. That is what we are trying to do on this side. The two meetings that had such good participation were both in the Judiciary Committee. At the first one we had, I and a number of other individuals had an opportunity to testify in front of the committee. Another was with Governor Romney from Massachusetts who came forth to testify. He pointed out to the committee the complications they have had in their State as a result of this debate, how it needs to be clarified, and that he came down in support of defining marriage as being between a man and a woman.

There were a lot of implications that I think came out of his testimony and needed to be debated and brought out. I hope we will be able to have an opportunity—in fact, if nobody does it, I plan on putting his testimony in the RECORD. I thought it was very good testimony.

So here we are, and we have before us now, after the initiation of the debate last Friday, this amendment that talks about marriage. Again, I want to make clear that everybody understands the language. It says:

> Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman.

The second sentence is:

> Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

That language came about after a lot of deliberation, which included staff and members of the Judiciary Committee. Even though it wasn't voted formally out of the committee, there has been a considerable amount of debate and a lot of scholarly thought about it, and constitutional experts have been approached as far as what would be the best language.

I think we need to move forward with the debate. I am looking forward to hearing from the other side on this important issue. So far, we have had red herring arguments and them wanting to talk about something else other than this amendment and the issues it brings up. I hope we can now settle down and get a good debate from the other side about why they don't think marriage ought to be defined as a union between a man and woman, or why they don't think this is a good amendment. So far we have heard argument on procedure and that doesn't get to the meat of the debate.

I urge my colleagues on the other side to step forward. Let's hear their views and have this debate on this most important amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I was not here on Friday, so I did not get a chance to hear a lot of the debate going on. I commend my colleagues. I read some of their statements. I thank them for the high level of debate that has taken place so far.

Whether it was Senator SMITH's comments, or Senator CORNYN's comments, or Senator ALLARD's, and others, they are trying to bring to the debate two fundamental points, which are that every person in America, every person in this world, has worth and dignity and we should respect them, irrespective of the choices they make in their lives. That is an important concept that I hope we do not stray from in this debate; that this is not a debate about questioning the value or worth of an individual or the dignity of an individual or the rights of an individual. What this is about is the fundamental importance to our society of preserving, protecting, and promoting marriage as a union between one man and one woman.

So I hope we can engage in a debate where we can keep both things in mind, because sometimes it is thought that if you are for traditional marriage, somehow you are against somebody. That is not how I see it. I think traditional marriage is good for everyone. It results in a healthier society, more stable children.

I am going to refer throughout the course of my remarks over the next couple of days to a paper that was presented at Emory University on May 14, 2003, which I think is one of the best studies I have seen in looking at this issue of marriage. One of the reasons I think it is so good is, No. 1, it responds to all of the allegations or charges made against those who support traditional marriage. It is authored by two people, one of whom is gay. So you are hearing arguments from someone who you would think normally would agree that traditional marriage should be redefined; in fact, he argues in this paper, quite effectively and forcefully, that traditional marriage is important to be maintained—not because he thinks it discriminates against him, but because it is important for our culture and society.

I want to read a few things from the summary of that report just to give people a sense of why this is such an important issue to be debated. In this country, we tend to take marriage for granted, thinking that somehow or another it will just happen, that people will get together and marry and will have children, whether we have an institution called marriage or whether that institution of marriage is redefined to include a whole host of other different relationships that really won't affect the basic traditional marriage. In other words, some might say, how will my relationship affect me? How will that affect your marriage?

Well, let me address that because I think this summary does a pretty good job in doing this. The name of the article is ''Marriage Ala Mode; Answering Advocates of Gay Marriage,'' by Professor Katherine Young and Paul Nathanson.

The summary begins:

> There's nothing wrong with homosexuality. One of us, in fact, is gay. We oppose gay marriage, not gay relationships.

They go on to say:

> Most people assume that heterosexuality is a given of nature and thus not vulnerable to cultural change, that nothing will ever discourage straight people from getting together and starting families. But we argue—and this is important—that heterosexual bonding must indeed be deliberately fostered by a distinctive and supportive culture.
> Because heterosexual bonding is directly related to both reproduction and survival, and because it involves much more than copulation, all human societies have actively fostered it. . . .This is done through culture: rules, customs, laws, symbols, rituals, incentives, rewards, and other public mechanisms. So deeply embedded are these, however, that few people are consciously aware of them.

Much of what is accomplished in animals by nature (''biology,'' ''genetics,'' or ''instinct'') must be accomplished in humans by culture (all other aspects of human existence, including marriage). If culture were removed, the result wouldn't be a functioning organism whether human or nonhuman. Apart from any other handicap would be the inability to reproduce successfully. Why? Because mating (sexual intercourse), which really is largely governed by a biological drive, isn't synonymous with the complex behaviors required by family life within a larger human society.

What are they saying? Will heterosexuals continue to copulate, have sexual relations? Sure. Will they build families. Nobody is suggesting that if we get rid of the definition of traditional marriage, there is going to be a explosion of nontraditional marriage. That is not what they are saying or what I am saying. I suggest that in those countries that have, in fact, adopted whether it is same-sex marriages or civil unions, they have not seen a traumatic growth in the number of same-sex unions or same-sex marriages. In fact, there have been very few of them in the countries that have adopted those laws.

But what has happened? There is a gradual and systematic decline in heterosexual marriages, not heterosexual unions. People will continue to hook up. In fact, that is what occurs more and more in cultures, even in this country, where marriage is not held up as something that is important. We see it around us. There are cultures and subcultures in America where marriage is seen to be an older, passe convention.

What happens is there is actually more sexual activity, certainly among multiple partners and, what? Breakdown of the family, children being born out of wedlock, and communities and cultures in decay. That is what I see on the horizon for America.

It is not the reaffirmation of marriage by including more people in it but the degradation of marriage because it becomes simply a social convention without meaning. One may say: What is the big deal? What is the problem if that happens? The problem, if we look at communities in America where marriage has broken down, we see communities that are not functioning very well. We see children who are the most at risk in our society because moms and dads are not around the home to provide for them. So we have community breakdown, we have family breakdown, and we have government intervention trying to repair this situation.

There have been huge government expenditures over the last 40, 50 years trying to repair what is broken as a result of the family not being there to raise these children.

I was a student at Penn State many years ago. I always like to get back to my college campus. A few years ago, I went to speak to a group of students, the editorial board of the Daily Collegian. The Daily Collegian is the college paper. I am not sure that in the 14 years I have been in public life they have ever said anything positive about me. Nevertheless, I went to meet with them.

We had a very animated discussion, as one tends to have on college campuses with young people with vibrant ideas and a zeal for ideology. We were disagreeing on everything, not surprising. I do not know how it came up—I have been digging my memory banks and I cannot remember exactly how it came up—but I asked the question, What do you see as the biggest problem facing America? One young man in the back raised his hand and said: The breakdown of the traditional family. The breakdown of the family.

I thought immediately when he said that, first, he must not have been engaged in the discussion for the previous half hour, and I thought he would be laughed at and ridiculed by others around the table. What I found was unanimous agreement. One after another of these young folks, who would not be considered traditionalists or conservatives, went on about how the breakdown of the family is sort of at the root of the instability or insecurity they are feeling in their lives and that the culture is experiencing at this time. They talked about divorce. They talked about how marriage was not what it used to be.

In fact, there was a survey done where they asked kids in the 1970s whether divorce should be harder to get, and about 50 percent of the kids said, yes, divorce should be harder to get.

They asked a similar group of kids 25 years later, in the late 1990s, whether divorce should be harder to get, and 75 percent of the kids now say divorce should be harder to get. Why? Because they realize the impact of the breakdown of marriage and family.

One of the criticisms we hear from those who oppose this constitutional amendment is: Marriage is already in very bad shape. Divorce rates are high. Marriage does not work already in America. This is no big deal. You cannot really hurt marriage.

I make the opposite point. I think it is obvious. They are right, marriage is already in tough shape. Many commentaries have said heterosexuals have messed up marriage as bad as they can in this country and in other countries around the world.

I make the claim that further deluding and debilitating marriage is not the answer because we know of the dire consequences that a breakdown in marriage results in with respect to children.

I make the opposite argument: Yes, I would argue divorce laws should be tougher. I agreed with Louisiana when they put in covenant marriages. I believe the no-fault divorce laws in the 1970s changed the essence of marriage, which is about a man and a woman entering into a selfless relationship, a union on which they would further give of themselves in the creation of new human life and nurturing that life. It was a selfless act, giving of oneself, giving up things to each other. That is how successful marriages work, and that is how successful marriages nurture successful children.

With no-fault divorce and with the culture that came along with it, we have marriage being about adults, not about children. It is no longer about forming a union for the raising of children in the next generation. It is about: Am I happy in my marriage? Am I being fulfilled? It is less selfless and a little bit more selfish.

So if we look at this next generation of marriage, what is that? Is it about the selfless or is it about the selfish definition? Is it about children? Certainly a change in the definition of traditional marriage to include people of the same sex is not about children, it is about adults. That further takes us away from the central principal purpose of marriage, which is the bonding of a man and a woman for the purpose of creating a union by which children for the next generation are born. So we continue to get further away from the ideal, and when we do that, children suffer and cultures die.

I repeat, I do not know why people come here and insist that somehow this is not important; that somehow this discussion does not rise to the level of a constitutional amendment. That is another real funny one. I am sure that was discussed on Friday. The Presiding Officer gave an absolutely brilliant opening statement on Friday, and I commend him for his wonderful statement. I know he knows what the last constitutional amendment was.

I have heard two complaints about constitutional amendments: This issue is not important enough to rise to a constitutional amendment. That is No. 1. This is not important enough. No. 2, this limits rights, and no other constitutional amendments have limited rights.

The last constitutional amendment, the 27th amendment to the Constitution, limited pay raises for Members of Congress. So let's throw out the limiting rights. My rights have been limited as a result of the 27th amendment. As a Member of Congress, we cannot pass a pay raise and accept it midterm. Constitutional amendments have been used to limit rights.

No. 2, this does not rise to a level of importance. I do not think in the grand scheme of things whether Members of the House and Senate can receive a pay raise during their term is one of the great pressing issues that face our culture and our country. So the idea that the Constitution is not used for issues that are not of great weight and do not limit rights is ridiculous.

The second point is, I do not believe this limits rights. What this does is promote a public good. It does not limit rights. It simply promotes a public good, and it is the union of a man and a woman for the purpose of forming that union and providing for the next generation.

I suggest this constitutional amendment is necessary and is important enough to be debated today. Again, I hope we can come up with some agreement that will allow the different points of view as to how we solve this problem, and maybe some other points of view from the other side of the aisle as to how we solve this problem.

To get to the bottom line of this debate, the bottom line is children need mothers and fathers, and society should be all about that. Society should be all about creating the best possible chance for children to have a mother and a father. Unless the State endorses that, unless our laws enforce that, then I think it is fairly obvious that our culture will not, and that left to our own devices, as these authors say, we will simply not have these unions.

In fact, if we look at other countries, Stanley Kurtz has done some research in countries around the world where this has occurred. In his article, ''Decline in Marriage in Scandinavia and the Netherlands,'' he talks about the reduction in the rate of marriage among heterosexuals. He talks about the increase in the number of children born out of wedlock as a result of the institution of a different definition of marriage. So we see in other countries that when marriage is changed, it is devalued. It does not become special. It does not become unique. It is not reinforced by society as something as the ideal. As a result, people do not engage it.

For example, the countries of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway have either marriage or civil unions for same-sex couples. Sixty percent of first-born children in those countries are now born out of wedlock. Now, that is equivalent to some of the poorest neighborhoods in our society. Remember, I talked earlier about how the breakdown of marriage has affected the poorest communities in our society and our culture, and in many of those cultures marriage is not accepted, and as a result the Government has to come in and bail out those communities because there are no unions, there are no families, there is no support network for these children? In middle-class and upper middle-class, socialistic, equality-driven Scandinavia, where there are no ghettos of poverty that we see in America, 60 percent of first-born children in these countries are born out of wedlock. Why? Because marriage is not important. It has no meaning. So people simply do not get married.

There is a long laundry list which I will get into in more detail. I am trying to make a general overview of some of the arguments, but I will be getting into more detail throughout the next couple of days.

Marriage is about children. Marriage is about the glue that holds the basic foundational societal unit together, and that is the family. When we change the composition of that glue, we weaken the bonds of marriage and then we weaken the American family.

Why a constitutional amendment? I think the Senator from Colorado said it, and I know others have, too, that if we really believed we could solve this problem short of a constitutional amendment, let me assure everyone I would not be on the floor of the Senate today arguing this issue. This is hard. It is hard to come to the Senate floor and argue for any constitutional amendment. It is doubly hard to actually pass one because 67 votes are needed in the Senate, plus three-quarters of the States. If we could come up with a legislative solution that would solve the problem that I see of runaway courts, I would be very anxious to find it. We tried back in 1996 with the Defense of Marriage Act, but just about every legal scholar who has come around has said the Defense of Marriage Act will not stand, from the left to the right, and I will get into that in further discussion.

I see the Senator from California is in the Chamber, so I am not going to spend much more time, but the idea that we could pass a statute to constrain the courts from reinterpreting the Constitution I believe is folly. We cannot. The only way for us to have the American people define what marriage is, instead of State courts defining what marriage is, is through the constitutional amendment process.

Some will get up and say, let us leave it to the States, let the States fight this, like Massachusetts is doing, let the States fight this battle. What we are seeing in Massachusetts is the States cannot fight this battle. Ultimately, if one looks at the Lawrence v. Texas decision and the full faith and credit clause, there is no question in my mind that the States will be powerless to defend themselves against these runaway judges.

In essence, the Constitution will be amended. It will either be amended by a group of State judges who will grab from the language of the Constitution a right for anybody to be married to anybody else or the American people through the process that was established in our Constitution, which is a very difficult process.

As a citizen, it is rather upsetting to look at the Constitution as a document and say, well, to create new rights under the Constitution we have to have two-thirds of the Senate, two-thirds of the House and three-quarters of the State legislatures, or four judges in Massachusetts. I looked through the Constitution many times and I never saw that four-judges-in-Massachusetts clause, but that is what goes on. We either do it that way or go through this complex process that is very hard. Why? Because constitutional rights are big deals. It is an important thing. We should not create new rights in our Constitution without a very deliberative, thoughtful process, and the American public should be engaged in that process. That is what we are about today. We are about engaging the American people in the thoughtful process of determining what marriage should be in America.

I would argue that those who oppose this process are saying one thing: Let the courts do the work that I do not have the courage to stand up and fight for myself. Let's be clear about that. Let the courts do the work that I do not have the courage to articulate for myself. Oh, we will all get up and say we are for traditional marriage and we like traditional marriage. If my colleagues are for traditional marriage, there is one way to make sure it is maintained. They can say, I do not like this idea or I do not like that idea, but there is one way to make sure, if they are really for traditional marriage, if they really believe this is an important building block of our society, if they really believe marriage is about the union of one man and one woman for the purpose of the future of our culture, there is one guaranteed sure-fire way to make sure that is maintained, and that is through a constitutional amendment.

Now, my colleagues can argue until the cows come home that they do not like this way of doing that, and that is fine, and that there are other alternatives to pursue, but if they really care about preserving one man and one woman in a union called marriage, there is one sure-fire way to do it, and that is to vote for a constitutional amendment that does it. Any other excuse is simply that—an excuse to let someone else do their dirty work.

I do not hear any of my colleagues who say this is not the way to amend the Constitution writing letters to the litigants in Massachusetts and 11 other States who are suing to change the marriage laws in those States to allow for a redefinition of marriage. Where is the outrage? Where are they writing saying, oh, we do not think that is the way it should be changed, either. We do not hear them criticizing those who want to change traditional marriage and saying do not do this, do not file these lawsuits, do not seek to have these marriages recognized. We hear nothing. We just hear, we will just let someone else handle this.

All it takes for this change in marriage in America is for well-meaning, good people to moderately, deliberately, simply do nothing—just sit back, claim their virtue, claim their belief in one man and one woman in marriage, and allow someone else to change it, and then come and say, well, it is too late, or we cannot take marriage away; these people are already married. How can we take that right away?

If my colleagues believe in their heart, for the betterment of America, that marriage must be maintained for the good of the American family as a union between a man and a woman, there is only one choice, and that is to vote yes. Anything short of that is a hollow act, is a smokescreen, to the American people and to their constituents. My colleagues cannot claim to be for something and then vote against it and let someone else do the exact opposite of what they say they want, and that is what the courts will do. So I plead with my colleagues, who I believe have every good intention, to search their souls and to think about the consequences for America.

Because other speakers have arrived, I will yield the floor in a minute. I know people come with good intentions and I know people do not want to be seen as intolerant, and they do not want to be seen as hateful or mean spirited or being against anybody.

It is not easy, standing up against this popular culture in which we live. But think about the future of America. Think about the future of America without the institution of marriage because that is what we are debating. It is not a matter of redefining marriage. It is simply that marriage will be a social convention which will have no meaning and therefore we will be without it.

Think about the future of children in America, where we say they do not deserve a mother and a father and that we are not going to give them the legal force to encourage it and hold it up as the right thing to do.

Look in the faces of those children and say: You just were not important enough for us to stand against what is very unpopular in the culture of today. I daresay, this debate, this vote, this issue will be read in history books in America—I hope in America—years from now as that turning point. I hope my colleagues are on the right side of history.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH). The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I wish to make an argument directly contrary to the arguments just presented by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not consider myself an expert on marriage. I have been married for a long time. I have one daughter, three stepdaughters, and five grandchildren. I celebrate marriage. I understand the difficulties in working to keep it together. But I believe this is a waste of time.

The votes are not present to submit this amendment to the States. The timing is just a few months before an election, and family law has always been relegated to the States. This essentially would be the first departure from that.

My argument today is based on my understanding of the law. My understanding of what is happening in the States indicates to me that the States are well able to handle the issue of marriage on their own. The tenth amendment of the U.S. Constitution clearly states:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Marriage is not once mentioned in the Constitution. Most authorities believe it to be a power reserved to the States.

As early as 1890, that is 114 years ago, in In Re Burrus, the United States Supreme Court, in a child custody dispute, stated:

> The whole subject of the domestic relations of husband and wife, parent and child, belongs to the laws of the states, and not to the laws of the United States.

Later, in a 1979 Supreme Court decision, Hisquierdo v. Hisquierdo, the Court stated in dicta:

> Insofar as marriage is within temporal control, the States lay on the guiding hand.

Furthermore, the courts have long held that no State can be forced to recognize a marriage that offends a deeply held public policy of that State. States, as a result, have frequently and constitutionally refused to recognize marriages from other States that differ from their public policy. Polygamous marriages, for example, even if sanctioned by another State, have consistently been rejected. Marriages between immediate family members have also been rejected by States, even if those marriages are accepted in other parts of the country. In no case that I know of has the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution been used to require a State to recognize a type of marriage that would violate its own strong public policy. So States have been on their own with respect to family law, including marriage.

Even as we consider the Federal Marriage Amendment, we see that the States are taking their right and powers as they relate to family law and marriage very seriously. Thirty-three States have passed their own Defense of Marriage Acts, banning same-sex marriages, and five have passed ballot initiatives banning same-sex marriages.

My own State, California, passed a Defense of Marriage Act in the year 2000. Proposition 22 was ratified by an overwhelming majority of Californians, 61 percent. The California Family Code now states that:

> Only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California.

That is the law of my State. That policy statement trumps all local and other law.

Earlier this year, the mayor of my city, Gavin Newsom, of San Francisco, decided this law was unconstitutional and ordered the county clerk to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples. These actions did not go unnoticed, and the California State Supreme Court subsequently enjoined the county clerk from issuing any further marriage licenses, and the county complied. Oral arguments were heard on the cases on May 25, and the State Supreme Court will issue its decision within 90 days.

However, I want to make clear, crystal clear, that the Court is not deciding on the constitutionality of Proposition 22, which said that marriage shall be between a man and a woman. Rather, the Court issued orders to show cause in Lewis v. Alfaro and Lockyer v. City and County of San Francisco, limited to the following issue: Were the officials of the city and county of San Francisco exceeding or acting outside the scope of their authority in refusing to enforce the provisions of Family Code sections 300, 301, 308.5, and 355 in the absence of a judicial determination that those statutory provisions are unconstitutional? In other words, acting in defiance of the statewide referendum?

The orders to show cause are specifically limited to this legal question, and they do not include the substantive constitutional challenge to the California marriage statutes themselves. The marriage statute, therefore, is not in jeopardy of being overturned.

When we look around, we see that California is not the only State where people are speaking out about same-sex marriage. In fact, a lively debate is taking place throughout the country.

On July 6, the Washington Times ran an article entitled, ''Marriage Gets a Boost in Michigan.'' The article notes that the supporters of traditional marriage in Michigan recently turned in approximately 475,000 signatures to put a State constitutional amendment before the voters this November. An organizer of the effort was quoted to say:

> The people responded. . . . They're tired of politicians and activist judges making changes without having a voice. This gives them a voice.

The article goes on to say:

> Michigan's achievement marks a four-for-four victory for those who want marriage amendments on the November ballot.

Montana, Oregon and Arkansas will place similar measures on their ballots this November. Mr. President, your own State will have one on the ballot. North Dakota and Ohio are collecting signatures necessary for ballot measures.

As you can see, the States have taken up the just powers accorded to them by the Constitution of the United States and are responding to this issue, and that is as it should be.

The Family Research Council reported in a press release on July 9:

[A]n unprecedented nine States already have State constitutional amendments on the ballot this fall and that number is expected to increase to at least 14 States. Thirty-eight States have previously gone on record stating marriage is between one man and one woman. The people are making their voices heard in their States but unfortunately that is not enough.

Yet in the words of the Family Research Council, these actions by States are ''unprecedented'' and show that a process is, indeed, taking place throughout the country and that the people are active participants. Through that process, the people do have a voice and they are being heard. I believe interference from Washington in this political process is premature, unnecessary, and not in the context of the Constitution of the United States.

In light of this, it appears that proponents of the Federal Marriage Amendment disregard the debate occurring in the States and point only to Massachusetts and the fact that marriage licenses are being issued legally to same-sex couples there. They argue that the same-sex marriages in Massachusetts, the first State to allow such marriages, are what is driving the need to enshrine in the Constitution language that marriage is between a man and a woman. I disagree.

Even in Massachusetts, the State legislature has begun work on a State constitutional amendment to bar same-sex marriages but allow civil unions. This amendment is certainly not guaranteed to pass, but it is clear that the people of Massachusetts are dealing themselves with the issue as was intended and, again, it would seem without the need of assistance from Washington.

Because several dozen States have already passed a prohibition on same-sex marriage, it seems clear that in those States an argument could be made that strong public policy would lead to a refusal to recognize out-of-State same-sex marriages.

So it is not a problem demanding an immediate solution. There is a process taking place in the States throughout the country as was envisioned by the Constitution. For us to act now is not only premature but it isn't going to work because the votes are not here.

So why are we doing this? Why are we doing this when we have only passed one appropriations bill? Why are we doing this when last week we just had a briefing on the impact of terrorism on this Nation and we haven't passed a Homeland Security bill? Why are we doing this when the Constitution has reserved family law to the States and when States by the dozens have already taken up the issue and passed, either by legislature or by vote of the people, marriage amendments? Why are we doing this?

The only answer I can come up with is because this is political. It is to drive a division into the voters of America, into the people of America, one more wedge issue at a very difficult time to be used politically in elections. Everybody in this body knows they are nowhere close to 67 votes. If there were a motion to proceed, there might not even be enough votes for a motion to proceed.

Why are we doing this? Why are we stirring up the Nation? I probably have 53,000 pieces of mail on this subject alone. People do not understand that the Constitution relegates family law to the States, and has relegated the issue of adoption, marriages, and everything having to do with family law to the States.

My daughter happens to be the supervising judge of the family court in San Francisco. You can talk to any judge and see just that. The States have responded. It is not as if the States have ignored those issues. More than 36 States—more than three dozen States—have passed legislation, and 8 are moving shortly.

For the life of me, I don't understand what honest motive there is in putting this in front of this body to philosophically debate marriage on a constitutional amendment that is not going to happen, and which is enormously divisive in all of our communities.

I hope my colleagues will exercise prudence and tread carefully with our Constitution. I don't think we want to put out an amendment—I don't think we can, but let us say with some change and there were 67 votes, as the Senator from Pennsylvania correctly said, it then has to go to a vote of three-quarters of the State legislatures. When three-quarters of the States have already taken action, why would they ratify this? I think it is a useless exercise.

I have been on the Judiciary Committee long enough now to be able to take an issue and see if it is properly before us. I don't believe a constitutional amendment reserving the right of marriage to a man and a woman is properly before us because I believe that is an area clearly relegated to the States, and the States are exercising that right.

Thank you very much. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have been watching this debate and there hasn't been much from the other side, but I commend the distinguished Senator from California for at least coming to the floor and expressing her viewpoints on this. As you know, she is a very important member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and I enjoy working with her. I also understand her arguments that the States ought to decide these issues. But more preferably interpreted, if she likes the status quo that means the State courts must decide these issues and not the people of the States or the State legislatures. Frankly, I agree that the States should be able to decide these types of issues. The powers should not be taken away from them and given to the courts.

In fact, 40 States have decided this issue in the Defense of Marriage Act, called DOMA. You would think that would be enough. I believe the other 10 States will adopt the Defense of Marriage Act over time which provides a marriage should be between a man and a woman.

If my colleagues believe that the States ought to decide these matters, then they have to acknowledge that the 40 States which have should trump the 4-to-3 decision by an activist Massachusetts Supreme Court.

The debate over marriage boils down to two fundamental questions: Should our goal be to keep marriage limited to a man and a woman? And, if so, is amending the U.S. Constitution necessary to accomplish that goal?

The answer to both questions is yes.

The first question, whether we should keep marriage between a man and a woman, can be examined in several ways. First, we can look at different kinds of polls. In the last few months, polls by reputable news organizations such as CBS News, FOX News/Opinion Dynamics, Newsweek, Time/CNN show that by at least 2 to 1 Americans would not redefine marriage. Not only is this polling overwhelming, but it exists in the face of a barrage by the liberal media urging a different answer to this question. These polls tell something about the opinions of individual Americans, again, that flies in the face of having four justices in Massachusetts decide under the full faith and credit clause to impose this upon everybody in America rather than have the people in America or the people within the individual States decide these matters. These polls tell something about the opinions of individual Americans.

Another kind of poll examines what the elected representatives of the American people do on their behalf. Two years ago, the Supreme Court repeated its long-held guidance that ''the clearest and most reliable objective evidence of contemporary values is the legislation enacted by the country's legislatures.'' That evidence confirms the same conclusion: The American people oppose redefining traditional marriage.

In 1996, Congress overwhelmingly passed the Defense of Marriage Act. As I mentioned, 40 States have adopted it and President Clinton, a Democratic President, signed it into law. As its name implies, this legislation was intended to defend what marriage has always been, a union between a man and a woman.

Since 1996, the citizens and legislatures in nearly every State in the Union have taken one or more steps to further protect traditional marriage. Again this year, citizens in several more States have collected hundreds of thousands of signatures to put before voters State constitutional protection for traditional marriage.

Speaking of signatures, last Friday, some of my colleagues received nearly 1.5 million petitions from Americans to protect traditional marriage and more are on the way.

This issue is not going to go away. Whether traditional marriage should remain what it always has been, the goal most Americans support, requires amending the U.S. Constitution. If the answer is yes, no one should be able to get away with professing support for traditional marriage but refusing to do what is necessary to make it real. Some have indeed tried to have it both ways, saying they want to keep marriage between a man and a woman but refusing to take any real steps to do so.

Last Friday, for example, I pointed out how Senator KERRY, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, has publicly said marriage should be between a man and a woman, yet voted against the Defense of Marriage Act which would allow that to occur. I pointed out he said there is no reason to vote for the Defense of Marriage Act because the States have enacted contrary to it. His own State, since then, has.

Does that mean he would vote for a new Defense of Marriage Act or does it mean that he would vote for the only thing that can possibly change the situation, and that is a constitutional amendment? He has indicated he will not.

Members cannot have it both ways. Members cannot vote against DOMA, argue it is unconstitutional, and now say that a constitutional amendment is not necessary because DOMA won't protect us. This is exactly what the junior Senator from Massachusetts is doing.

Look at this chart, ''But isn't DOMA unconstitutional?''

Senator KERRY said in the Advocate, September 3, 1996:

DOMA does violence to the spirit and letter of the Constitution.

In other words, it is unconstitutional, he said in 1996.

The distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, in his remarks on the floor of the Senate September 10, 1996, said:

Scholarly opinion is clear: [DOMA] is plainly constitutional.

Professor Laurence Tribe of Harvard Law School, a heralded liberal professor, for whom I personally have high regard and consider a friend, in a letter submitted to the record of Senate proceedings on June 6, 1996, said:

My conclusion is unequivocal: Congress possesses no power under any provision of the Constitution to legislate—

As it does in DOMA—

any such categorical exemption for the Full Faith and Credit Clause of Article IV.

And the ACLU, in February of 1997, said:

DOMA is bad constitutional law . . . An unmistakable violation of the Constitution.

These are leading liberals who do not think DOMA or the Defense of Marriage Act was constitutional, yet today argue against the only way to resolve this matter. Oddly enough, most all of them are saying the States ought to decide these matters.

I agree. If we pass a constitutional amendment, it will be up to the States whether or not that constitutional amendment will be ratified, and three-quarters of the States will have to ratify it in order for it to be ratified. I might add, that means the people themselves will have to be very much involved in it throughout the country, unlike having four judges in Massachusetts decide this issue for all of America. Once they decided that Massachusetts law, then under article IV of the Constitution, the full faith and credit clause, every State in the Union must recognize those Massachusetts marriages, which would upset the domestic relation laws of 49 other States.

Let's face it, one of the reasons so many of my friends across the aisle will argue strenuously this week that the time is not ripe for consideration of this issue on the Senate floor, or that the Senate has much more important things to do, is because they wish to avoid getting crosswise with the tens of millions of Americans who support traditional marriage. It is more than tens of millions, it is hundreds of millions of Americans who support traditional marriage. Yet, also, they do not want to offend their many supporters who wish to allow these novel, non-traditional, same-gender marriages.

I cannot blame them for feeling that way, but sometimes you have to make decisions in this body that make sense and that are right, that are moral decisions. There is nothing more important than marriage and traditional family marriage at that. Sustaining traditional marriage is absolutely critical to our country. I don't care how important economics or any other issue is, this is one of the most important issues in the minds of most Americans, and it should be because our moral climate depends on what we do here.

For my friends on the other side, their politically expedient solution is this: As quietly as possible, vote against the marriage amendment today and leave it up to the court to reinterpret the Constitution tomorrow. That sounds pretty good. Why don't we just leave it up to the courts? We have had a lot of 5-to-4 decisions in the Supreme Court. This was a 4-to-3 decision in a State supreme court that will bind all of America. That is what they want. They want the courts to do that which they could never get through the elected representatives of the people as evidenced by both the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who is running for President and his Vice Presidential nominee who is from North Carolina, who is also running. They both believe traditional marriage ought to be maintained, but they do not believe we should do anything about it if it is not. I hope we can change their minds.

The real question is whether protecting traditional marriage requires amending the Constitution. As Senator SMITH, the distinguished Senator from Oregon, said in the Senate last Friday, it would be better if the answer were no. Polls suggest that many Americans would prefer their elected representatives be able to legislate in this area. That, indeed, is the way it was traditionally done.

In polling, as in life, however, the devil is in the details. A CBS News/New York Times poll in March asked whether laws should be determined by the ''Federal Government or by each State government.'' This sounds as if the choice is between the Federal or State legislatures. That, however, is not the choice and never has been. The choice today is between the judiciary and the legislature. But the polls never asked about that. In other words, polls are polls are polls, depending on how the question is raised.

The fact is, the judiciary is deciding for all of America, and an obscure supreme court in Massachusetts, at that is deciding this issue for all of America. So the States really do not have a chance to decide this issue on their own because if the supreme court of the State of Massachusetts, if that ruling is continuously upheld, and it appears it will be, even by the Supreme Court under the Lawrence case, then every State in the Union is going to be bound by those marriages.

Another poll taken at the same time—this one by ABC News and the Washington Post—asked whether Americans would support amending the U.S. Constitution ''or should each state make its own laws''—another false choice. Activist judges are rapidly making it impossible for States to make their own laws regarding marriage, making a constitutional amendment the only option, if we want to preserve traditional marriage.

The polls never ask about that. These highly misleading polls make one wonder whether the liberal media outlets conducting them have some kind of agenda here. No. I know that is being skeptical, but I think almost anybody with brains would conclude they do have an objective here.

Does protecting traditional marriage require amending the U.S. Constitution? The best prescription depends on an accurate diagnosis. Simply put, when an issue such as this one that traditionally was decided by State legislatures is redefined by judges in constitutional terms, the only effective option is amending the Constitution.

The judiciary has been flexing its cultural muscles for decades, imposing its own values upon the American people, supposedly in the name of the Constitution. There can be no doubt that traditional marriage is in the path of what Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, in 1992, called the judiciary's ''social engineering bulldozer.''

That same year, the Supreme Court invented a constitutional right to define ''one's own concept of existence, of meaning, of the universe, and of the mystery of human life.''

Four years later, the Court said resistance to making public policies more favorable to homosexuals ''seems inexplicable by anything but animus.''

Last year, the Court combined these ideas to take away from State legislatures the ability to prohibit certain kinds of sexual practices. The Lawrence v. Texas case in 2003: these are some quotes directly out of that case. Justice Antonin Scalia, who dissented in that case, said:

Today's opinion dismantles the structure of constitutional law that has permitted a distinction to be made between heterosexual and homosexual unions, insofar as formal recognition in marriage is concerned . . .

If moral disapprobation of homosexual conduct is ''no legitimate state interest'' for purposes of proscribing that conduct. . . . what justification could there possibly be for denying the benefits of marriage to homosexual couples exercising ''[t]he liberty protected by the Constitution?''

I might add, also in the Lawrence case, Justice Kennedy argued that:

The present case . . . does not involve whether the government must give formal recognition to any relationship that homosexual persons seek to enter.

Justice Scalia understood, however, that

This case ''does not involve'' the issue of homosexual marriage, only if one entertains the belief that principle and logic have nothing to do with the decisions of this Court.

Justice Scalia said the Lawrence decision:

''leaves on pretty shaky grounds state laws limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples.''

If that is so, and he is right—and he certainly has been proven right so far—then the argument of the distinguished Senator from California really does not hold any water because the States are going to be overruled, 40 of them at least, and I believe all 50 in the end. If we do not do something about it, they are going to be overruled in their desire to keep traditional marriage alive.

Now, Evan Wolfson, the director of Freedom to Marry, said this:

But when [Scalia's] right, he's right. We stand today on the threshold of winning the freedom to marry.

Finally, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts applied all of this by inventing a constitutional right to same-sex marriage. That was not a legislature. That was not the people speaking. In fact, it was not even a unanimous court speaking. It was a 4-to-3 decision by four of the most liberal State justices in the country versus three very liberal justices in the country. It was a hard-fought decision. It was hardly the will of the people being met.

It is almost ludicrous to come here and say the will of the people should be met here. If that is true, then we ought to give them that chance with a constitutional amendment which will be submitted to the will of the people out there. Everybody in America who can vote will have a right to vote for or against this constitutional amendment. We ought to at least give them that chance.

Well, as I say, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts applied all this by inventing a constitutional right to same-sex marriage. Step by step, by recasting these cultural questions in constitutional terms, the courts took them away from the American people and their elected representatives.

Now, that flies in the face of what we have heard from those on the other side of this issue: Let the States take care of this. Give me a break. Four liberal justices versus three liberal justices have said this is going to be applied to all of America, because it applies as law in Massachusetts, and under the full faith and credit clause that law must be recognized in every State in the Union.

Well, these were not a bunch of random, coincidental legal events. These falling dominoes were part of the very same strategy that today is targeting State and Federal laws protecting traditional marriage.

Last Friday, I outlined the five current fronts in the legal war to redefine marriage. There may be more on the way. Politically driven lawyers are nothing if not creative. This is why nearly all legal analysts and scholars, either grudgingly or enthusiastically, conclude that the ability of legislatures to make real decisions in this area may already be a thing of the past. In other words, the people's right—the people's right—to make real decisions in this area may be a thing of the past. Why not just let these four liberal justices against three liberal justices make this decision for everybody?

This is why a constitutional amendment to preserve traditional marriage is the only effective solution, and why this is not premature. It might have been premature if the Supreme Court's ''cultural bulldozer'' were still idling. It might have been premature if the Supreme Court had not embraced the insulting and false conclusion that traditional views on certain cultural questions are nothing but irrational animus. It might have been premature if the Supreme Court had not created a constitutional right to sexual autonomy. It might have been premature were there not already dozens of lawsuits challenging laws protecting both State and Federal laws protecting traditional marriage.

But these things have already happened, and more aggressive legal assaults are coming. The judiciary's ''cultural bulldozer'' is in gear, on the move, and has already done too much damage. If anything, we are behind the curve, not ahead of it.

Some call this election year politics. Well, I suppose any measure considered by a political institution can be called politics. Yes, this is an election year. This is merely a cliche substituting for an argument. Those who use it perhaps have no real argument, and so they use this cliche to imply that we would not be trying to defend traditional marriage if this were 2003 or 2005. Simply saying that demonstrates how absurd that argument is.

Supporters of traditional marriage, that is to say, the large majority of the American people—that is the people out there in the States who they are calling upon to make these decisions but are having it taken away from them by a four-liberal-justice to three-liberal-justice decision in Massachusetts—have not dictated the timetable here. The minority who want to redefine marriage have done that. They brought the lawsuits that took these issues from the American people.

Since the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts had used the State constitution to redefine marriage, amending the State constitution is the only way to protect it. Yet the court gave the legislatures just 6 months to do what it knew in Massachusetts takes 3 years to do under their constitutional form of government. This issue is already out of the people's hands.

As Senator SMITH said on this floor last week, words have meaning. Activists, with the help of judges, are seeking to change the meaning of the word ''marriage'' to further their political agenda. The proponents of the marriage amendment are saying: Stop. We want to retain the word ''marriage'' to its real meaning of a male and female union, and it is inescapable that amending the U.S. Constitution is the only way to accomplish that goal.

Think about it. I don't have any desire to discriminate against anybody, let alone homosexuals in our society or gay people. I know the distinguished Senator from Oregon feels exactly the way I do about it. I have been the author of the three AIDS bills along with Senator KENNEDY. We fought those through here on this floor against what were overwhelming odds at the time and passed them overwhelmingly because of the arguments we made. It is no secret that along with Senators SMITH, FEINSTEIN, KENNEDY, and others, I am the author of a hate crimes statute that I believe would do justice in our society while still preserving capital punishment. But it is a long way from where we have been.

There is no question that I do not believe in discriminating against gays. But like my friends on this side who have always argued, particularly my friend from Oregon, I draw the line, as do he and others, when it comes to traditional marriage. I believe it is the basic fabric of our country. Traditional marriage means children. It means raising children born to that marriage. I believe gay people ought to be able to do whatever they believe they should in the privacy of their own homes, but I don't think they should have the right to redefine traditional marriage.

We have had traditional marriage in this world for over 5,000 years. This is not some itty-bitty, inconsequential, off-the-subject debate. This is one of the most important debates in history. Because if we don't stand up for traditional marriage at a time when a lot of things seem to be falling apart, we are going to reap the whirlwind.

This is an age where any child can bring up pornography on the Internet. At one time if you clicked on Harry Potter, you would get pornography geared to those children. We all know that. Click on almost any children's book or subject or title or person mentioned in a children's book and you get pornography for children. I don't need to go through all the other ills of our society to let everybody know that we are living in a world where there is a lot of filth, a lot of degradation. We have to stand up against it. We have to protect the traditions that do make sense in our society, and traditional marriage is at the top of the list.

We might differ on some other matters, but it is difficult for me to see how anybody could differ on traditional marriage, even though I know my gay friends do. Does that justify the laws in some, if not all, States that prohibit a gay partner from being able to go into an intensive care unit and care for his or her gay partner? That doesn't justify that. I think that is terrible, that our laws do not take care of that. Does it mean a gay person can't benefit from the laws of estates and trusts? I believe under current laws they can, but if they can't, we ought to correct those laws. Does it mean they can't buy insurance for their gay partner? We ought to make it possible that they can. You could go through various things where there are inequities, but we don't solve those inequities by changing a 5,000-plus-year definition of traditional marriage. We should solve those problems, and I am willing to work on these problems with my liberal counterparts on the other side and conservatives as well, I am willing to work and try to resolve the problems. But I simply draw the line when it comes to traditional marriage.

Gay people have a right to be free, to not be discriminated against. They have a right to live in their relationships within the privacy of their own homes, just like others who have different approaches toward life. But that doesn't give them or anybody else the right to define traditional marriage.

I come from a culture where at one time polygamy was a religious belief and was practiced by a small percentage of people in my faith. My great-grandfather was one of the great colonists, one of the great pioneers of the West. Jeremiah Hatch had 3 wives and 30 children. Those were the days when they lived this principle because they believed it to be a spiritual principle. They believed it was important to bring as many children into the world as they could, among other things. They believed it was a spiritual principle of the faith. But when Reynolds v. Simms came down, the Supreme Court case not allowing plural marriage, basically my faith did away with plural marriage. I have to say no one would argue that it should ever come back. Just to make the point, I would never argue that it should come back. I have been offended by some people indicating that there might be some argument for it.

What is important here is that all we are asking in this amendment is, sentence one:

> Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman.

That is 5,000 years of practice throughout the world.

And the second sentence says:

> Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

That does not say you cannot have civil unions because if a State determines that is what they should do, then the State can determine that. If you want to leave it up to the States, this is the way to do it. Not only would 38 States have to ratify this amendment—and I believe all 50 would—but they would also have the right, if they so choose, to resolve these problems I have been mentioning here that are problems for gay people that ought to be resolved.

The important thing is that if we are going to leave it up to the people, this is the way to do it. It is the only way to do it. Otherwise we are leaving it up to four liberal justices in Massachusetts versus three liberal justices in Massachusetts who didn't agree with them and who basically opted for traditional marriage or at least who seemed to opt for traditional marriage.

There is a vast movement beginning in America in every State legislature to amend their constitutions to prohibit or should I say to reaffirm the respective State's belief in traditional marriage. Assuming that most States will do this—and I believe most will—would those State constitutions be upheld under the Lawrence case or under any future cases? There is a real question whether that may be the case.

The best way to allow the people to decide this is to have a constitutional amendment so that they really have a say in what goes on. I can live with whatever the people decide to do. But doing it this way, by allowing a 4-to-3 vote in Massachusetts to bind every State in the Union to Massachusetts marriages through the full faith and credit clause, seems to me to be something that flies in the face of 5,000 years of traditional marriage and family life.

I notice the distinguished Senator from Kentucky here.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I thank the chairman for yielding. I rise to discuss probably the most important issue this body or I have ever debated on the floor of the Senate since I have been a member, 6 years.

Our Nation faces a potential disaster. I hope my colleagues in the Senate realize we have a responsibility to affirm the ideal of marriage and protect one of the most basic building blocks of our society: the family.

The first thing we have to understand is that Government did not create marriage or the union between man and woman. It is something much more fundamental than legislation or laws. Marriage is older than the Constitution of the United States. It is older than America. Marriage exists in every known human society, bringing men and women together to create and to provide for the next generation of society, and it is not the right of any government anywhere to undermine or destroy it. It is a shame that some of my colleagues in the Senate do not recognize the pressing need before us to safeguard a cultural institution that has served human beings so well for thousands of generations. We must act before it is too late.

In America today, we are facing a depressing situation, where unelected officials are attempting, because of their own arrogance, to redefine marriage. I do not know the reason why these judges believe they are so wise and how they cannot see the dangerous consequences of their actions. But they now threaten our way of life. It is up to us to act to ensure that the American people have the opportunity to decide what is right for the society in which they live.

Marriage matters to our society. Mothers and fathers both matter to children. Only a man and a woman have the ability to create children. It is the law of nature. No matter how much some might not like it or want to change it or push for technology to replace it, this law is irrefutable. It is upon this law that so much of our society and our cultural institutions are based—families, communities, work, schools.

When the families suffer, when they are undermined, we all suffer. We know that weak families lead to more poverty, welfare dependence, child abuse, substance abuse, illness, educational failure, and even criminal behavior. Failing to protect marriage will send the message to the next generation that we do not care about them and that we have thrown away a cultural institution that has served human beings throughout recorded history.

Traditional marriage has been central to the understanding of family in Western culture from the very beginning, and the central reason for marriage has been for the rearing of children. Children have the best chance to succeed when they are reared in stable, traditional families. A loving family provides the foundation children need to succeed, and strong families with a man and a woman bonded together for life always have been and always will be the key to such families.

Eight years ago, Congress tried to protect marriage by passing the Defense of Marriage Act, which defined marriage as the legal union between one man and one woman as husband and wife. As a member at that time of the U.S. House of Representatives, I was proud to support that legislation. But since then, activist judges and some local officials have aggressively tried to circumvent the law and the will of the people in redefining marriage. These extremists have devised a clever strategy to override public opinion and force a redefinition of marriage on the Nation through the court system. Because they knew they could not make their case through elected legislatures, they decided to work through unaccountable officials in hand-picked areas of this country.

The liberals' effort started in Vermont when the State supreme court ordered the State legislature to legalize same-sex marriages or create same-sex civil unions. Then they moved to Massachusetts, where the supreme court forced the State to give full marriage licenses to same-sex couples. This happened even though the citizens of Massachusetts opposed the effort and no law had been passed to authorize it. Nevertheless, in Massachusetts, same-sex marriages became a reality.

The activists will not stop trying to impose their extreme views on all of the rest of us, and they have now plotted a State-by-State strategy to increase the number of judicial decisions redefining marriage without—I say without—the voice of the people being heard.

Under our Constitution, States are required to give full faith and credit to the laws of other States. While the Federal Defense of Marriage Act was once thought to be enough protection for States that did not want to allow same-sex marriages, it now is very clear that the liberals who have no respect for the law are pushing a strategy to completely undermine the Defense of Marriage Act. Now the only recourse left to those of us who want to follow the law and to defend our cultural institutions is to amend the U.S. Constitution.

I wish this were not the case. But States are profoundly threatened by these activist court decisions, and we have been backed into a corner. In the meantime, couples from all over the country have traveled to those States with same-sex marriages to receive their licenses and plan to return to their home States.

At least 42 States have statutes that define marriage as a union of a man and a woman, but because of the acts of a few extremists, all of these laws are threatened. In fact, at least 10 States currently face court challenges to their marriage laws, and 9 States, including my own, Kentucky, expect to have a constitutional amendment on the ballot this fall in efforts to protect traditional marriage. So we are facing a situation where our Constitution and our laws are going to be amended one way or the other—by the people's representatives or by unelected judges.

Those of us who defend traditional marriage were not looking for this struggle, but it has been forced upon us, and I feel we must do what we can to prevail. We believe there is little else left more important to our Nation and to our future. When a small handful of unelected activists take it upon themselves to rewrite laws and to try to overturn cultural institutions we have always relied upon, then we must use every tool at our disposal to defend what we believe is right.

I do not take amending the Constitution of the United States lightly. None of us in this body does. However, the only way to prevent this social misjudgment from being made by the courts is to allow the people to speak on the issue through a constitutional amendment process. It is the most democratic, grassroots, political mechanism available left to let the people speak. The people are the ones who live under the law. They should be able to decide if they want to make such a fundamental and drastic change.

I hear from constituents of the Commonwealth of Kentucky every day asking me, begging me, to support the Federal marriage amendment so they can be heard. In fact, I hear more about this than probably any other issue since I was elected to office. It is that important to that many people. And because it is such a critical issue—traditional marriage—any attempt to change something so fundamental should be ultimately left to all of the people and not a select few to decide.

We must act, and we must act now. I urge my colleagues to let the voice of the people be heard and act to save marriage. Please support this constitutional amendment to define what marriage is. It is the most important action we can take in this Senate.

I urge support, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, today I rise in support of S. J. Res. 40, the Federal marriage amendment to the U.S. Constitution. I do so with conviction that this course is the right one, but with considerable frustration that we have come to this point as a nation. This constitutional amendment, in my view, should not be necessary.

The core definition of Western civilization's most stable and important social institution, traditional marriage, should not be jeopardized by litigation and court decisions. Activist trial lawyers should not be filing lawsuits asking courts to change the basic rules of marriage for all society. Judges should not be denouncing traditional marriages as a stain on the Constitution that must be washed away. But that is where we are: Confronting a coordinated, well-funded, and persistent campaign in the courts to undermine marriage.

After careful study, I have come to the conclusion that the only way to protect traditional marriage from these undemocratic forces is to pursue a constitutional amendment that protects traditional marriage. Only through such a constitutional amendment process will the American people genuinely have the opportunity to speak out and guarantee that traditional marriage is protected.

I wish to spend a few moments explaining why I think this issue is so important.

In short, traditional marriage—marriage as the union between a man and a woman—exists, first and foremost, as the best environment for the protection and nurturing of children. Traditional families are where we hope the children will be born and raised, and where we expect them to receive their values. And we hope these things for a good reason.

As one social scientist who testified before the Finance Committee earlier this year said, children on average experience the highest levels of overall well-being in the context of healthy marital relationships.

This testimony is consistent with an overwhelming body of social science testimony received by the Finance, Health, Judiciary, and Commerce Committees earlier this year. If we want our Nation's children to do well, we need to do what we can to ensure they grow up with mothers and fathers. So we need to protect the place where mothers and fathers properly unite—marriage.

I believe traditional marriage is an institution worth saving, and I believe we send a very important message to our children when we stand up for the institution of marriage. We tell them that marriage matters; that traditional family life is a thing to be honored, valued, and protected. We tell them marriage is the best environment for raising children, and we tell them every child deserves a mother and a father. We point them to the ideal and that the radical redefinition of marriage through the court threatens this ideal.

We cannot strip marriage of its core—that it be the union of a man and woman—and expect the institution to survive, as we have come to know it.

It is because I feel so strongly about preserving and even encouraging a healthy marriage culture that I have been so disturbed by the legal developments our Nation has witnessed over the past 10 years. We are on the Senate floor discussing an amendment to the Constitution because activist lawyers persist in filing lawsuits to force States to redefine marriage to include same-sex couples. These activists are dodging the will of the American people who overwhelmingly oppose a redefinition of marriage and instead have been asking judges to rewrite the marriage laws.

More than a year ago, I asked the staff of the Republican Policy Committee, which I am privileged to chair, to analyze the court campaign of these activists and to speculate on their prospects for success. We concluded at that time the Massachusetts high court would likely find traditional marriage unconstitutional, and that a number of lawsuits attacking marriage would begin to expand dramatically.

While some quarreled with those predictions, unfortunately they have proven to be 100 percent correct. I wish to summarize briefly these legal developments that brought us to the point we are.

There is in this country a collection of activist lawyers who genuinely and sincerely believe marriage should be redesigned so couples of the same sex could marry. Groups such as the ACLU, Lambda Legal, and Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders, GLAD, and others have frankly explained their strategy. Their goal is to use the courts to force the entire Nation to adopt same-sex marriage. They understand they cannot do it through the democratic process convincing people of the wisdom of their position, but must rather succeed in convincing judges to overturn our long-time understanding of the meaning of marriage.

They saw their first great victory in Vermont in 1999. In response to a suit by the ACLU and other activist groups, the Vermont State Supreme Court ordered the legislature to recognize same-sex marriage or to create some form of civil union that was exactly like marriage.

Vermont citizens at the time opposed both same-sex marriages and civil unions, but the court mandate was clear: Legislators must create same-sex marriage or some form of same-sex civil union or the court would do it for them. The legislators chose civil unions in the face of the court's dictate, but it can hardly be said that they acted in accordance with the democratic process. No, this was ruled by lawsuit, not by legislation.

These activist lawyers who had succeeded in Vermont quickly turned to new States, this time aiming for a complete transformation of the marriage laws. It is true that homosexual couples had gained all the rights and benefits available under Vermont law as married couples. The same-sex marriage activists did not just want rights and benefits, they wanted to redefine marriage itself to change the cultural norms that have characterized this institution of man and woman for ages.

These groups acted carefully. They put most of their efforts into a new lawsuit in Massachusetts. The people of Massachusetts opposed same-sex marriage, and their legislators would never change the law to allow it. But the activists were not interested in a democratic solution. They knew they could not convince many millions of citizens to undermine traditional marriage, so they decided to focus on just four people, the majority of the supreme court of the State. They did what too many Americans do nowadays, they filed a lawsuit. The result was a resounding defeat for traditional marriage and the people of Massachusetts who continue to oppose same-sex marriage in their State.

In November 2003, a 4-to-3 majority of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled in Goodridge v. Massachusetts Department of Health that the State constitution required the State to recognize same-sex marriages.

Of course, the State constitution said no such thing. It contained the same basic equal protection and due process clauses that exist in most State constitutions and in our U.S. Constitution. These clauses had never been understood to require the rewriting of marriage itself, but that is what the four judges determined.

As breathtaking as this decision was, even more stunning was the disdain that these four judges showed for traditional marriage and its supporters. The court wrote that there was ''no rational reason'' to preserve traditional marriage laws; that support for traditional marriage was rooted in little more than ''persistent prejudices'' and that the several-thousand-year-old institution of marriage was little more than ''an evolving paradigm'' that could be redrafted and rewritten by the courts whenever they desired.

One judge even scoffed at what he called the ''mantra of tradition.'' In a followup opinion reaffirming and expanding the earlier decision a few months later, the same four justices even said that the marriage laws of Massachusetts were ''a stain on the Constitution,'' and that the stain must be eradicated by the court.

Incredibly, the court even suggested that it would be better to abolish civil marriage altogether than preserve it in its traditional form.

On May 17 of this year, the Goodridge decision took effect, and the State began issuing same-sex marriage licenses in Massachusetts. Many same-sex couples from other States traveled to Massachusetts and then returned back to their own States.

While the Massachusetts Legislature has given preliminary approval to a State constitutional amendment to return marriage to its traditional meaning, it will be more than 2 years before the citizens can even vote on that amendment. In the meantime, for hundreds of people who have traveled to Massachusetts from all over the country, same-sex marriage is a reality.

So what happens next? Is it realistic to believe that same-sex marriage can be isolated to Massachusetts? Will the activist lawyers who brought that suit continue to press their claims on behalf of these ''couples'' who return to their States of residence? The answer is clear. The activist groups already are seeking to bypass the legislative process and impose their agenda through courts in other States.

There are now more than 35 lawsuits pending in 11 States across our Nation in which States' marriage laws have been challenged as unconstitutional, States such as California, Florida, Indiana, Maryland, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, Washington, and West Virginia. Many of these lawsuits are brought by the same lawyers who filed suits in Vermont and Massachusetts, activists from the ACLU, LAMBDA Legal, and GLAD in particular. In fact, the lawsuit in Maryland was filed only last week by the same legal team at the ACLU that is managing lawsuits in New Jersey and elsewhere. Many more lawsuits surely will follow.

As I said, the activist court strategy is no secret. The ACLU, LAMBDA Legal, a group calling itself Freedom to Marry, are very open about their hopes of imposing same-sex marriage through the courts.

Let us look at some of the lawsuits we can expect. First, these activists will file more suits challenging State marriage laws the same way they did in Massachusetts and are doing in 11 other States today.

Second, there will be lawsuits seeking to strike down the Defense of Marriage Act so that same-sex couples can get access to Federal benefits such as tax filing status, Social Security benefits from same-sex partners, and many of the other benefits or rights that the Federal Government grants to married spouses.

Already, for example, there is a lawsuit pending in Florida that directly claims that DOMA is unconstitutional.

Third, these activists will file lawsuits trying to force other States to recognize same-sex marriages in Massachusetts and any other place where they can convince judges to change the marriage laws against the people's will. Such a lawsuit currently is pending in Washington State, where a same-sex couple received a marriage license in Oregon and now insists that Washington must recognize that marriage, despite clear State law to the contrary.

Finally, there will be many other lawsuits that cannot be anticipated that will happen as same-sex married couples move from State to State, as many Americans nowadays do. These couples will try to get divorced when marriages fail. They will try to execute and enforce wills when one of them dies. They will have all kinds of run-of-the-mill business disputes as happens in other situations, and courts will struggle to figure out how to treat their legal relationships when these disputes arise.

Those struggles will take on a constitutional dimension. For example, two women who received a marriage license in Canada later decided to declare bankruptcy in Washington State. They filed their petition jointly as though they were married. Because all bankruptcies are filed in Federal court pursuant to Federal law, the Defense of Marriage Act is implicated. The bankruptcy trustee has objected to their joint petition, citing DOMA's provision that for the purposes of all Federal law, marriage is the union of a man and a woman.

The bankruptcy petitioners now argue that DOMA itself is unconstitutional and that the bankruptcy court must recognize the Canadian same-sex marriage. Thus, a simple bankruptcy petition has taken on constitutional dimensions. Cases such as this will proliferate, some filed by activists and some filed by citizens just trying to live their lives, as appears to be the case in the bankruptcy petition in Washington State.

The result will be tremendous confusion in the courts throughout the Nation, as some States recognize same-sex marriage for some purposes while other States recognize them only for other purposes.

As these lawsuits progress, it will be the courts, not the people, that make the decisions on whether same-sex marriage will spread throughout the entire Nation.

In the not too distant future, the legal activists who are managing this attack on traditional marriage laws will decide that they are ready for the big case, a case before the U.S. Supreme Court. After wreaking havoc on traditional marriage throughout the Nation, these activists will tell the Supreme Court that the confusion in the States demands a national solution. They will argue, not unpersuasively, that we are one Nation, that we cannot long function with such fundamentally inconsistent understandings of marriage.

When that day comes, when the U.S. Supreme Court is presented with the opportunity to rule traditional marriage laws unconstitutional, it is very possible that the Court will side not with the oft-surveyed views of the American people but rather will find a constitutional reason to say the people have been wrong all this time.

Legal and cultural confusion cannot long endure on this question. When a case reaches the Supreme Court, it most likely will craft a national solution. What the same-sex marriage activists expect and hope for is exactly the result that concerns me. Once the Court has spoken, while there surely will be great public outcry if contrary to public opinion, our history shows it is very difficult to change a Supreme Court decision by constitutional amendment.

The only way the American people will ever have a voice in this matter is if Congress sends to the States for ratification a constitutional amendment defining and protecting traditional marriage. Federal DOMA, which has already been challenged, could easily be struck down by the courts. Marriage laws in the States likely will be struck down just as happened in Massachusetts. No Federal law, no Federal regulation, no State law, no State constitutional amendment, can prevent this from happening. The only solution is an amendment to the Constitution and the only question is when to start the process. The more time that elapses with conflicting State law and same-sex couples seeking to have their marriages recognized in different States, the more our society will be conflicted and the more lawyers and judges will be making the decisions.

The constitutional process is the most democratic, the most grassroots, the most respectful process available for the establishment of national policy. A constitutional amendment requires the support of two-thirds of both Houses of Congress. Then it requires the support of the legislatures of three-fourths of the States of the Union. Then, and only then, can the amendment become effective.

This is, as it should be, a very high hurdle. But it is a high hurdle that guarantees that the American people have a full and complete opportunity to speak to the issue, that they can express their views to their Senators, to their Congressmen, and to their State legislators. It takes time, but in the end, as opposed to court decisions, if a constitutional amendment passes, we know that the American people want it.

Look at the proposed constitutional amendment that is before us and examine what it will do. It is on the chart directly behind me. The first sentence reads:

> Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman.

The sentence is straightforward. It provides a common definition of marriage throughout the United States, one man and one woman. It guarantees that the central definition of marriage is preserved throughout our country. It protects the American people who overwhelmingly believe traditional marriage should survive against those who would undermine it. We are one nation. While we have a wide variation in many thousands of laws among different jurisdictions, for the central, core issues in the way we organize our society, we have common views and common laws.

That is why, as a nation, we denied one State admission into the Union until it outlawed polygamy. We recognized that marriage was only between one man and one woman, and we would not even let that State enter the Union if it did not agree with that basic, core value.

This first sentence just reaffirms what has long been our national policy and ensures that no court can say otherwise.

Now, turning to the second sentence, it reads.

> Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

This sentence simply ensures that only the people or their elected representatives, not judges, can decide whether to allow marriage or its legal incidents can be conferred on people. This would prevent what happened in Vermont. The State supreme court hijacked the democratic process and coerced the legislature to create same-sex civil unions. The people didn't want it but the court decreed it. The second sentence of this amendment would prevent that kind of result.

The reason to add the second sentence, thus, would be to ensure no court would be able to construe the State or Federal constitution to require the creation of same-sex marriage or any institution or arrangement containing the incidents or benefits that derive from marriage itself. In other words, courts will not be able to create a right to civil unions based on the equal protection or due process clauses of the Constitution. They will not be able to twist the constitutional language, in other words, to serve these narrow policy goals.

However, the marriage amendment in no way bars or bans these kinds of special civil union or domestic partnership arrangements, as long as they are enacted through the legislative process. The marriage amendment preserves our current State organized regime by protecting the rights of citizens to act in their State legislatures to provide whatever benefits to same-sex couples that they should choose. Those benefits could be narrow, granting special inheritance rights, for example, or they could be broad, a full civil union law, for example.

In another example the legislatures of California and New Jersey have recently created arrangements they call domestic partnerships, that grant many of the benefits of marriage to same-sex couples.

Let me say again, the legislatures of those States passed those laws. Benefits were granted through the democratic process. Nothing in the marriage amendment prevents the citizens of a State from acting through their regular legislative process to grant benefits to same-sex couples in that State. So if a State wanted to create marriage-like ''civil unions,'' it could still do so. A legislature's only constraint is it could not create same-sex marriage.

Before I close, I would like to say a few words to address a concern about the amendment that I have heard expressed by some of my Senate colleagues. Some claim the question of same-sex marriage can be handled effectively on a State-by-State basis. Some, including people I respect very much, have told me if Massachusetts wants to have same-sex marriage, it should be able to do so and that Arizonans should not care. They argue that because our States tend to manage most family law matters, there is no reason to place this issue in the U.S. Constitution. They think of the issue as a thing of the distant future, something that we need not bother with. ''Let Massachusetts worry it,'' in effect.

I respect those who make this argument, but I strongly disagree with the notion that Congress can punt on the protection of marriage. The problem, it seems to me, with this line of thinking is that it assumes—in perfectly good faith, I am sure—a world that simply does not exist. The citizens of each State are not being permitted to decide this question. We should all sympathize with the citizens of Massachusetts who have been forced to see marriage in their State redefined and undermined, without the vote of the legislature or the citizens of that State.

Massachusetts is only the beginning. We see from the 35-plus lawsuits in 11 different States that the activists will continue to campaign in the courts. The lawyers who are championing this cause are not going to permit a State-by-State democratic solution. States rights implies not the courts but the people making the decisions.

The most prominent leader of the same-sex marriage movement, Evan Wolfson, who helped file the lawsuits in Vermont and Massachusetts and elsewhere, has candidly made the point. He scoffs at those who think the Nation can tolerate fundamentally different conceptions of marriage on a State-by-State basis. He understands that it is all or nothing. As he says on his Web site:

> America is one country, not 50 separate kingdoms. If you're married you're married.

In other words, people move around so much in this Nation that we cannot long endure a scenario in which some marriages disappear at the State line. The legal, social, and cultural complications are simply too great. The question of whether traditional marriage is to survive must ultimately be decided for the entire Nation.

In conclusion, the question is, Who decides? Will it be judges, scattered across the land and ultimately over in the Supreme Court? Or will it be the American people, through the constitutional amendment process? This is not some idle question of political theory. The process determines the result. If courts make the decision, they will redefine marriage for every State. If the people can decide, I have confidence they will stand up for marriage.

So, in conclusion, I call on my colleagues not to stand in the way of the people's right to speak. Let the American people make the ultimate decision as to whether we will jettison thousands of years of history and reinvent marriage or whether we will stand by the institution that we all rely upon so much for the future of our children.

I will say it again. This question cannot and will not ever be decided on a State-by-State basis. Either we will preserve traditional marriage in this Nation or we will see it redefined everywhere. The vote we will have in this Chamber is the first step, and I hope my colleagues will join me in making the right one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator from Arizona yield for a question?

Mr. KYL. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SANTORUM. The last point my colleague made is one that is very important. A lot of people in the Senate, and even some across the country, have suggested that the Defense of Marriage Act will stand.

There is a lot of legal opinion. The Senator from Utah spoke about how the Defense of Marriage Act probably will not stand. But your point is, even if the Defense of Marriage Act stands, the Defense of Marriage Act only protects States from other States forcing their laws on us.

Your point is even if that State can resist that, you lose anyway. Can you explain that? I think that is a very important point. The Defense of Marriage Act really doesn't save marriage.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is exactly correct. I would like to argue that the Defense of Marriage Act is constitutional, but I share the same concerns that have been expressed by others, that the Court will find it unconstitutional. But in either result, this challenge will continue in the State courts. We have the precedent of Massachusetts, and a very clear strategy that the lawyers on the other side have outlined. They have not tried to hide their intentions. They have been very forthright about their intentions of getting State courts to declare State laws and the State constitutions to require same-sex marriage, just as they did in the State of Massachusetts. These 35 lawsuits in 11 different States—at least some of them—will argue this precise point. It is quite possible that on the same basis that the Massachusetts Supreme Court decided that its due process and equal protection language required the recognition of same-sex marriages, that identical language or almost identical language in all of the State constitutions—identical also, by the way, to the Federal Constitution—would require that other States like Massachusetts recognize same-sex marriage. So it won't matter that DOMA says that one State doesn't have to recognize the marriages of another if State by State the courts decide that in those respective States the law requires or the Constitution requires otherwise.

Mr. SANTORUM. The potential exists if DOMA is maintained and protected that you could have—let us just say some of the more liberal State courts that we have out there, whether it is Massachusetts, New Jersey, California, New York, big States—most of these are actually fairly large States that we are talking about—if marriage were defined in those States and let us say not in Pennsylvania, Arizona, Utah, or Alabama, what would be the result? How would America function? What would marriage be in America? What would be the environment in which we would be living? It is a very interesting question we are now faced with just in Massachusetts, but we have sort of seen one isolated little case that is still in question. But as an accepted matter that there are now in many States potentially couples who are married who are not traditional couples, what would be the impact on our society?

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, there is one area I agree with the proponents of same-sex marriage on, and that is, the country is going to go one way or the other. You cannot survive a situation in which some States recognize certain benefits, other States recognize other benefits, other States don't recognize any, others recognize same-sex marriages, others, civil unions, and so forth. He makes the point that it has to ultimately be all or nothing. I don't see how on that point he is wrong because people in this country move around.

I cited the case of the bankruptcy petition filed by the Canadian couple, but it could have just as easily been a married couple in Oregon and moving to Washington. The fact is disputes will arise all over the country in courts of States that didn't necessarily confront the question but will have to confront some element of it. When two people present themselves as having been lawfully married in another State and they have some dispute between them, the court of my State, for example, isn't going to be able to avoid the issue and will have to decide one way or other.

We are going to end up, I fear, in the situation in which a definition of marriage has many different meanings all across the country. Something as fundamental as that—as I said, the one thing I agree with the proponents of same-sex marriage on—cannot stand. You have to either define it one way or the other for our society to function—just to function. It becomes a question of, A, what that definition should be—and that is why I have a disagreement with those folks—and, B, who makes the decision.

My primary point is that the people of the country should be making the decision, not just a few lawyers and judges. The best way for people to have a voice in this is by the constitutional process in which they are directly and indirectly involved through the Senate, through the House, and through their own State legislatures.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. KYL. I would be happy to yield. I actually give up the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arizona. He is one of the Senate's finest legal scholars. He has argued a number of cases before the Supreme Court, I believe three or more. He won all of those cases. There is not one lawyer in a thousand in America who has argued a case before the Supreme Court, much less three.

I would like to just ask one simple fundamental question, if the Senator could explain it to our colleagues and to the people of this country. If the Supreme Court found, as they indicated that they may in the case of Lawrence v. Texas, that marriage under the Due Process or Equal Protection clauses of the Constitution has to include same-sex marriages rather than just the traditional marriage form, will that not wipe out all of the constitutional amendments that are being passed in the States of America and all the statutes in America and the Defense of Marriage Act that we passed in this Congress?

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is also an extraordinarily fine lawyer in his own right. Of course, the answer is yes. Once the Supreme Court has spoken, and there is language in this Lawrence case that suggests to many that the Court would be inclined to rule in that fashion, then the Court has just enunciated the supreme law of the land and no State constitutional provision or Federal law in any way could attempt to override that. That would be the law of the land.

Mr. SESSIONS. If California passed it with 90 percent of the vote, or 60 percent, as I believe they did pass a statute by ballot initiative, no matter what the people voted, it would be trumped and wiped out by the ruling.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is correct. The Federal Constitution trumps State constitutions. Even if the people of a State amend their own State constitution, were the Supreme Court to declare that same-sex marriages are required by the equal protection or the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution, that would be the supreme law of the land, overriding any other Federal law, State law, or State constitution.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. President, I would like to share a few thoughts this afternoon. I thank him for his insight into the complexity and the confusion that will result if we don't have a national standard as we have always had on marriage.

I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his courage and compassion and understanding of the importance of family.

I thank the President for his eloquent remarks last Friday on this important matter.

I thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH, for his brilliance and for the comprehensive statements he made today and Friday concerning the need for and the custom and the legality of a constitutional amendment on this question.

People say, Why do we need to do it now?

I was in a hearing and one of the individuals said, Well, the State of Massachusetts may pass a constitutional amendment, and that would sort of, he indicated, solve the problem. I asked him, if it is all right for the people of Massachusetts or Michigan or Alabama or Utah to pass a constitutional amendment that defines marriage, what is wrong with the people of the United States and the Federal system passing a constitutional amendment to deal with marriage?

All of the people who seem to be questioning and suggesting we should not go forward with this kind of amendment are doing so on the basis that State constitutions are being amended. But as we heard from Senator KYL, a State constitution will not solve the matter if the Supreme Court acts as they have indicated they will. I believe it is perfectly appropriate for the people of the United States to consider whether they would want to amend our Constitution.

Some say that marriage is just not important, that this is not a matter we ought to spend any time on, and why now. They say, you are just bringing this up because there is an election ongoing. Let me say that it was just last year that the Supreme Court ruled in Lawrence. It was less than a year ago when Massachusetts ruled in their case that made so much of an impact, and the result of the Massachusetts case was just brought into effect May 17 of this year.

What started this debate was not people who believe in family as we have always known it. They didn't start this debate. They didn't start the discussion, the debate and legal activism, that attempts to change a fundamental American institution. It was the courts that did so activist lawyers and activist judges.

It would indeed be unthinkable to most people that we would ever need to discuss a constitutional amendment to defend marriage. Unfortunately, the integrity of the legal system is being eroded as political agendas are being implemented more and more through rulings of the courts. That, let me say, fundamentally goes to the heart of the American democracy.

Democracy in this country rests power with the people. But lifetime-appointed judges usurp this power—and it does not even take all nine on the Supreme Court, or all seven on the Massachusetts Supreme Court. In fact, it was four out of the seven judges on the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, unaccountable to the public, who issued an opinion and cannot be held to account.

If we vote on issues the American people do not affirm, do not approve of and object to, we can be removed from office. That is the way the system works.

We must not allow this power to go to the courts. In fact, that is precisely the issue that has driven the debate ever since President Bush has been in office, even going back to President Reagan: What do you want out of judges on the courts of America? Do we want judges who impose agendas to do what they think is right under the circumstances? Or do you want judges who follow the law—Judges who care about the law and are respectful of it and indeed respectful of the people of the United States of America who, through their elected representatives, they believe should be setting social policy in this country.

That is the challenge we are facing. That is the second important part of this debate. The first is marriage is an institution of tremendous importance and the rulings we have seen in courts today will undoubtedly erode the validity, impact, and power of that institution that has helped raise healthy generations of Americans year after year. That is one aspect.

The other aspect is the power of unelected judges. That power is frightening. We have seen a number of opinions from the Supreme Court of the United States that cause concern. We saw the Supreme Court avoid ruling recently on the Pledge of Allegiance case that challenged the ''under God'' language in the Pledge. They could have ruled on that and nailed that issue down. I suspect it suggests the Court is undecided about that. Certainly a number of their opinions have given a basis for the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals to strike down the Pledge of Allegiance.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in my view, is seriously drifting from its principles. We have had members of that court, more than one, start talking about European law as they analyze legal matters. They have forgotten the American Constitution is a contract between the American people and their Government. It empowers our Government to carry on certain powers and not to do others and retain to the democratic process other actions.

This amendment will have a twofold impact. No. 1, it will protect the integrity of marriage, a critical institution to our culture; No. 2, it will indicate to our courts that the American people are not incapable of defending their liberties when they are under attack by courts. They seem to think this issue will be stirred up for a number of months and then it will settle down and people will go away; that is the way it is going to be, do not worry about it. There will be editorials and church people will carry a sign and someone will sign a petition, but we have lifetime appointments and we are like philosopher kings. We can see the long term and what is good for America. We have decided this is the right thing for America to do. We will take the heat for a few months or a year or two and it will go away, we will be affirmed, and we will affirm our view and stand by it and that will be the end of that. These small-minded citizens will go away.

I am afraid there is an arrogance in some of these opinions that goes that far. It disturbs me.

One of the dissenting justices in the State of Massachusetts, I suppose the most liberal State in the country, certainly the most liberal judiciary, stated that the Goodridge v. Massachusetts decision ''exceeds the bounds of judicial restraint,'' and he went on to note this decision ''replaces the intent of the legislature with that of the court.''

In other words, that is precisely what they did. The judges on the court, four of the seven, got it in their minds how marriage ought to be defined in America and they went back and took the equal protection clause of the state constitution, very similar to the U.S. Constitution, and the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court interpreted that clause to effect a policy change that the founders and the drafters of that constitution certainly never thought possible many years before when that equal protection clause was passed.

I suggest, without doubt, it replaced the intent of a legislature, a body in Massachusetts that is accountable to the public, with the intent of the court. That is what activism is. That is what Senator HATCH so eloquently talked about for many years in the committee he chairs. When judges impose their personal or political views, liberal or conservative, through the redefinition of the meaning of language in the Constitution, they are activist judges. We need to deal with that.

I will take a moment to go over something that has been discussed before, the Lawrence v. Texas case in 2003. Some say the Supreme Court is not going to say we have to recognize same-sex marriages along with traditional marriage. Read that opinion. Senator HATCH pointed it out.

This is the language of the Court:

> In Planned Parenthood in Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, the court reaffirmed the substantive force of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.

That is broad language, trust me. I don't know what that means, but it is not good.

I repeat: ''reaffirmed the substantive force of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.''

And continuing:

> The Casey decision again confirmed that our laws and tradition afford constitutional protection to personal decisions relating to marriage, procreation, contraception, family relationships, child rearing, and education . . .

And they went on to state:

> Persons in a homosexual relationship may seek autonomy for these purposes, just as heterosexual persons do.

So, persons ''in homosexual relationship may seek'' the same protections for these purposes, the purposes above, which includes marriage.

Justice Kennedy, who wrote the opinion for the majority in Lawrence, made clear that the holding of the case did not involve formal recognition of same-sex marriage because the holding of the case had to do with sodomy laws in Texas. It didn't have anything to do with marriage. It does not involve whether the Government must give formal recognition to any relationship that ''homosexual persons seek to enter.'' He suggests it was not about marriage.

The Court did not issue a decision about marriage—that is correct. Justice Scalia is also correct in responding, saying ''this case 'does not involve' the issue of homosexual marriage only if one entertains the belief that principle and logic have nothing to do with the decisions of this court.''

In other words, the logic of the case is so compelling and powerful that if properly applied to the next case that comes before the Court, it will hold that homosexual marriage must be recognized in the same way.

That is why we are here. No one, in my view—not one Member of this body—would be able to say that marriage, as we have traditionally known it in America, is not in jeopardy as a result of this opinion. Everybody knows the Supreme Court of the United States is on the verge or may be on the verge of ruling like the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court did.

So marriage in America under the U.S. Supreme Court is in jeopardy. Marriage as we know it is in jeopardy by the Supreme Court. So what is wrong with this body simply allowing the American people, through their elected representatives, to pass a constitutional amendment on something as important as marriage? It is not unimportant. I reject the idea that this institution which is so valuable to our culture is not important and not worth debate in this body. They are the same ones who say: Oh, look, States are passing constitutional amendments. We don't need to pass one. But if States can pass a constitutional amendment, what is wrong with the Federal Government passing one?

And talk about confusion, as Senator KYL said, let's say the Supreme Court rules consistent with Massachusetts. How long will it take for a constitutional amendment to be passed? In the meantime, what will happen to the marriages and all the arrangements that will be accruing around the country legally? Are they all going to be upset?

So if we are concerned about the power of the courts—I know Senator

HATCH is because they are reaching beyond the traditional role of a court through activist decisions—and if we are concerned about marriage, why don't we move on this amendment? Why don't we send it forward to the people of the United States so they can consider it? Somebody said: Well, I don't like every word that is in this constitutional amendment. Maybe I could support it, but I would like it to be a little different. Well, if we move this amendment forward on the floor so it can be considered by this body, then people can offer amendments to change it. We will debate and talk about how to better word the amendment if it needs to be changed. I feel comfortable with the way it is, but I am willing to debate and talk about any changes.

I believe this body can make a difference. I believe we need to speak on this issue for several reasons. One is because we need to send a message to the courts that we control the culture of this country, we control how intimate relationships like marriage ought to be defined; that is, we the people, and not unelected, lifetime-appointed judges.

I have another chart to show; a lot of liberal lawyers in the country also agree with what I have been saying. Laurence Tribe, from Harvard Law School, last fall, right after the decision in Lawrence or about the time this decision was rendered, said:

You'd have to be tone deaf not to get the message from Lawrence that anything that invites people to give same-sex couples less than full respect is constitutionally suspect.

So again, isn't that affirmation of what I have said, that the Supreme Court is on the verge or may yet step forward with a Massachusetts-type ruling?

There is another quote I think is interesting. In Justice Scalia's dissent, he said the Lawrence decision:

leaves on pretty shaky grounds state laws limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples.

''Pretty shaky grounds.''

Evan Wolfson, director of the Freedom to Marry group that favors the Massachusetts ruling, said:

But when [Scalia's] right, he's right. We stand today on the threshold of winning the freedom to marry.

He is talking about the U.S. Supreme Court.

I believe this Senate needs to consider the matter of marriage in America. We need to think seriously about it. We need to consider whether the social science evidence I have discussed and others have discussed earlier indicate these rulings will further undermine marriage in America, thereby endangering our culture, as it inevitably will. And we need to consider the reach of Federal judges which continues to expand beyond their legitimate role.

This amendment provides an opportunity for the people to speak on both those questions. I think it is important for us. I urge my colleagues to think clearly about it. This is not harmful or negative or targeted to anybody. It is an amendment that will focus on affirming traditional marriage, family, and children, which is what a State has a right to be interested in: the institution that nurtures, raises, and educates the next generation who will lead our country. Those are important issues. I hope we will move forward with the debate, we will allow this issue to come before the Senate, we will debate it and debate the language of the amendment—and if we improve it, so be it—and then pass it and send it out to the people of America.

I thank the Presiding Officer and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUNUNU). Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that the time be divided equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORNYN. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak for such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I want to speak for a few minutes about the social impact of the marginalization of the American family and traditional marriage over the past years. First, I want to address specifically some of the questions that have been raised both here in this Chamber and in the media and by others who have asked two main questions that seem to be coming back time and time again. One is, why can't we leave this to the States? Secondly, there are those who ask, why now? Why do we need a Federal constitutional amendment now before the U.S. Supreme Court strikes down traditional marriage laws? And then I would like to address more of the social consequences of what we are seeing.

First, the idea of leaving this decision to the States, while an appealing concept in theory, as a practical matter is impossible. Indeed, as I and others on this floor have said so on many occasions in talking about this issue, it has been decisions out of the U.S. Supreme Court interpreting the Federal Constitution and creating a broad right of personal autonomy that have, even addressing the marriage context and relationships between people of the same sex as well as traditional couples and the institution of marriage, it is that broad rationale that has now been bootstrapped by the Massachusetts Supreme Court in the Goodrich case to create this right, this right that did not exist in 1780 when John Adams wrote the Massachusetts Constitution, but all of a sudden was discovered some 224 years later by the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

Of course, the Massachusetts Supreme Court was not the one who dreamed up this right. We have to give credit where credit is due. And that is to the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Griswold v. Connecticut, in the Roemer case out of Colorado, and then in the Lawrence v. Texas case last summer.

It would be nice if we could say, for those of us who do believe in the primary authority of the States in all matters except insofar as the Constitution mandates that it is a Federal Government responsibility, I would at first blush find it appealing to be able to leave such matters and others to the States. But we know as a practical matter that that is impossible; first, because of the likelihood that the current challenges to State marriage laws under the Federal Constitution may succeed under the framework, under the roadmap that has been laid out by the U.S. Supreme Court in Lawrence v. Texas. And those challenges currently exist in Utah, Florida, and Nebraska. So no matter what State laws exist, obviously the Federal Constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court, has supremacy. That is what the supremacy clause is all about.

So while it may be appealing to say that we would like to leave this matter up to the States, the very real and present risk is that a Federal court, interpreting the Federal Constitution, will strike down all State marriage laws that stand in the way of same-sex marriages under the rationale used by the U.S. Supreme Court in Lawrence, as embraced by the Massachusetts Supreme Court in interpreting their State constitution in the Goodridge case.

But there is also another practical consideration, and that is on May 17, when the Massachusetts Supreme Court called traditional marriage a ''stain that must be eradicated,'' terming it ''invidious discrimination'' and without rational basis, when they embraced this revolutionary and radical notion, redefining the traditional institution of marriage after these many years, they didn't just affect the rights of people within the confines of the State of Massachusetts.

What happened, of course, is that couples came to Massachusetts from other States and took advantage of the laws of Massachusetts—at least insofar as interpreted by the Massachusetts Supreme Court—and said they wanted to be married and then move back to the States where they live. Indeed, we know that happened. Same-sex couples have come to Massachusetts and married and returned to their States in 46 different States.

So to suggest that what happens in Massachusetts stays in Massachusetts is wrong, as a practical matter. But the problem is, of course, that now we know there are a handful—I think at last count perhaps 9 or 10—of challenges to State laws restricting marriage or protecting traditional marriage by those who were married in Massachusetts—same-sex couples—who then moved back to their home State and filed a lawsuit in their State courts seeking to force their State to recognize the validity of that same-sex marriage.

As I and others have talked about on numerous occasions, the fact is, this is part of a national litigation strategy by those who would seek to overturn traditional marriage between a man and a woman. And we are not playing offense on this issue; we are playing defense in trying to defend traditional marriage against this national litigation strategy.

So those are just two reasons it is putting your head in the sand to say that this is a matter that is just limited to one State. As a practical matter, we saw on television in San Francisco where one mayor and local officials, in violation of California law, invited people to come there and get married. Now, of course, that issue is balled up in litigation pending before the California Supreme Court. So this is not a local issue confined to the States, nor is it a matter that can be handled, practically or legally or otherwise, by individual States, no matter how hard they might try.

The other question that has been raised is, Why now? The U.S. Supreme Court has not ruled traditional marriage to be unconstitutional and required same-sex marriages a national constitutional matter—not yet. Although it is clear in the hearings that we had in the Senate Judiciary Committee that using the tools that the U.S. Supreme Court provided in these cases that I have already discussed, clearly there is a path mapped out, and the logical conclusion of the rationale used in those decisions is to strike down traditional marriage as we know it.

But the question is, Why now? Some said, well, this may happen—I was talking to one of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle at about noon. He said: Well, this may happen in 3, 4, or 5 years, but it is not an imminent threat right now. So why in the world would we seek to amend the Constitution at this time?

Well, I point, by way of practical example, to what is happening in Massachusetts today. The decision to embrace this radical redefinition of marriage on May 17 was not put to a vote of the people of Massachusetts; it was an edict from the supreme court of that State. But once we saw that the elected representatives of the people of Massachusetts decided to meet and discuss this issue, well, we have seen that they have chosen to reject the decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and to protect traditional marriage. The problem is, in Massachusetts, their law requires two successive sessions of the Massachusetts Legislature to meet and agree on the constitutional amendment before it can be passed by the people, effectively meaning that there is no constitutional amendment in that State possible until 2006.

In the meantime, what are the people to do? Well, the people of that State and their elected representatives are watching this progression of same-sex marriages because the Supreme Court of Massachusetts demanded it and ordered it. Even though it is going to ultimately be overruled by the people, in the meantime you are going to have a couple of years in which couples—same-sex couples—are going to seek to be married and be officially married under the laws of Massachusetts, only to have it then prohibited in 2006 going forward.

Well, I would think that people who ask why now would see that as an example of why it is important to do it here and now—before the Federal courts in this country adopt the reasoning of that Massachusetts case.

We know the U.S. Constitution has been amended 27 times. We know it is reserved for special cases, and the burden on someone who would seek to amend the Constitution is very high—a two-thirds vote of the Congress and three-quarters of the States having to vote to ratify. And that is appropriately so. But it is, as we have discussed, the only way that we the people can have a vote and can have a voice on this important issue, especially once the Federal courts, under the guise of interpreting the Federal Constitution, were to hold otherwise.

We know just from the history of those 27 amendments that, on average, they have taken about 8 years. I could be wrong on that figure, and I will doublecheck that, but it has taken roughly 8 years to ratify an amendment to the Constitution, on average. So we know if, in fact, a Federal court today were to hold that traditional marriage violated the Constitution, then the American people were to decide, through their elected representatives, to pass a constitutional amendment, we may find ourselves in effectively the same box that the people of Massachusetts find themselves in now, where in that case you have effectively a 2-year period in which same-sex couples are getting married under the auspices of the decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, and to effectively not be able to undo this example of a very aggressive judicial activism. So the same situation would apply under the Federal Constitution because of the amount of time it usually takes to get a Federal constitutional amendment to pass.

So those are two questions that I wanted to address specifically. But I must also say, Mr. President, that I have been profoundly disappointed at the silence that has been basically the only response we have heard from our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. I truly believe that they would prefer that this issue would just go away and that it not draw too much attention because they know if the American people get energized on this issue, they will agree with those of us who believe that traditional marriage and families are worthy of protection by virtue of this constitutional amendment.

They are hoping that nobody pays very much attention, that it will sort of slide by, and that they will not feel the negative repercussions of their objection to this important amendment and the protection of traditional family and traditional marriage through this process.

I wish rather than just not saying very much at all or anything, they would come to the floor and actually debate the issue. If they think they have a strong case, if they think that reason and justice and logic are on their side, I say let's talk about it.

This is sometimes called the world's greatest deliberative body, but it is hard to have very much deliberation, it is hard to have very much debate if the opponents to this amendment simply boycott the debate and hope the issue passes without many people paying much attention, and they are able, as I said, to avoid the wrath of the people for failing to take what steps we find it within our means and ability to take to protect traditional marriage.

Last March, I chaired a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution regarding the decision I mentioned a moment ago, the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lawrence v. Texas. The Goodridge decision had not actually been handed down last September when we first had that hearing. But in the interim, between that time and this, of course, in March and then May, we had the Goodridge decision handed down which has resulted in an explosion of litigation across America.

During those hearings, both in September and then later on—we actually had a total of three hearings in the Subcommittee on the Constitution—we had some thought-provoking testimony. But at the hearing in March, I was personally moved by the sentiments of Pastor Daniel de Leon of the Templo Calvario Church in California and the testimony of Rev. Richard Richardson of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in Boston whom we were honored to have in attendance.

Both testified they would rather be at home working with the members of their congregations rather than having to come to Washington to testify why it is important to defend traditional marriage. But it is because of the work they do, because they see the results in the decline of marriage and traditional families in their communities every day, that they believe traditional marriage is so important and worth defending.

Some say we are not likely to win this vote that, as I understand, could happen on Wednesday. Regardless of the outcome of this amendment at this time, I believe it is important we have a national discussion on the importance of marriage and a discussion that is based on facts.

We have heard a lot of people talk about the benefit of marriage for adults. We have heard some discussion about hospital visiting rights and inheritance rights, even though many of these issues could be solved simply by a matter of contract between the parties involved. We have learned that people who want to can actually enter into arrangements that will achieve the results they want short of marriage by signing a few simple documents.

We have even heard some discussion about government benefits, even though with these benefits come burdens, and the actual financial ramifications of these benefits are a matter for debate.

Yet I have heard little conversation about what I believe to be the most important issue that is related to what we are discussing, and that is the benefits of marriage for children. It is easy for some people to step back and say this issue does not affect them, but the facts, the social science research that we see from other countries demonstrates otherwise.

This research shows us that this issue affects everyone but particularly children. None of us can, if we are going to claim to be in good faith about this debate, ignore these facts and these examples, nor should we, I believe, be neutral or merely stand on the sidelines.

Scandinavia, as we have heard before, has treated same-sex households as marriage for more than a decade. This practice was instituted in Denmark in 1989, in Norway in 1993, and in Sweden in 1994. The direct reaction to these decisions was relatively small. Few people, it seems, were actually interested in the new arrangements, in the new rights they achieved to marry a person of the same sex, and to this day the number of participating households is rather low.

But the greatest effect was not upon those who sought this new institution but on the society at large. Sad to say, there has been an enormous rise of family dissolution and out-of-wedlock childbirth. Today, about 15 years after Denmark created this new institution, a majority of children in Scandinavia are born out of wedlock, including more than 50 percent in Norway and 55 percent of the children in Sweden, and in Denmark, a full 60 percent of first-born children have unmarried parents.

In Scandinavia, as a whole, traditional marriage is now an institution entirely separated from the idea of child rearing or childbearing, and it is an incidental union, no longer an important one, much less a unique one.

Scandinavia is not alone. In the Netherlands, during the mid-1990s, the rate of out-of-wedlock childbirth began to shoot up by an astonishingly high rate of 2 percentage points a year, a rate matched by no other country in Europe.

By 2003, the out-of-wedlock birthrate had nearly doubled to 31 percent of all Dutch births. It is no coincidence that these were the years when the social debate over legalizing same-sex marriage was the loudest in the Netherlands.

During Holland's drive for same-sex marriage, advocates in Parliament and elsewhere openly scorned the idea that marriage ought to be defined by its childbearing and child rearing character. Of course, there is always a risk that if you spend a decade telling people that marriage is not about family and it is not about children they might just start believing you. But that is apparently what happened in the Netherlands. The Dutch people simply stopped getting married, even when they had children. When it is no big deal, marriage becomes just another choice on a menu of relationship options, and the children pay the price.

Respected British demographer Kathleen Kiernan drew on the Scandinavian case to form a four-stage model by which to gauge a country's movement toward Swedish levels of out-of-wedlock births.

She said in stage 1 the vast majority of the population produces children without marriage, such as in Italy. In the second stage, cohabitation is tolerated as a testing period before marriage, and it is generally a childless phase, such as we currently have in America. In stage 3, cohabitation becomes increasingly acceptable, and parenting is no longer automatically associated with marriage. While Norway was once at this stage, recent demographic and legal changes have pushed it into stage 4, along with Sweden and Denmark.

In the fourth stage, marriage and cohabitation become practically indistinguishable, with many children, even most children, born and raised outside of traditional marriage.

According to Kiernan, once a country has reached a stage, return to an earlier phase is very unlikely.

As you can see, Mr. President, the dissolution of marriage is passed on to children, to the next generation, and the devaluation of marriage as an important institution continues.

In America, the results could be even more significant than in Scandinavia or the Netherlands because, after all, we already have a significant problem of out-of-wedlock childbirth in our own country. When the example of traditional marriage is removed, when cohabitation and marriage are equally respected and when childbearing is no longer something that ought to ideally come in the context of traditional marriage, I fear the problem of single-parent households will only worsen.

We have a wealth of social science research from hundreds of sources over the course of decades which consistently reflects both the positive ramifications for children of a stable, traditional marriage and the negative effects of family breakup, including divorce and out-of-wedlock childbirth. Marriage provides the basis for the family, which remains the strongest and most important social unit.

As we have heard, countless statistics and research attest to the fact that when marriage becomes less important because it is expanded beyond its traditional definition to include other arrangements, that untoward consequences such as greater out-of-wedlock childbirths occur. People simply regard marriage as less significant and certainly, by definition, no longer unique.

Let me be clear. There are literally thousands, tens of thousands, probably hundreds of thousands, of single parents in this country who do a heroic job of raising their children in single-parent households. Nothing I have suggested is meant at all to disparage the great work they do. It is only to point out what social science and common experience would tell us is true, and that is, if possible, the optimal condition to raise any child, in terms of the family in which they are raised, is a family that is intact and where they have a loving father and a loving mother.

We recognize there are circumstances where that is not possible for a variety of circumstances for every child, but that should not deter us from seeking the optimal situation for every child if it is, in fact, possible.

Here in America we made the decision we ought to particularly encourage and support those who marry and have children. This, of course, is not a partisan issue. That is one reason why I am so disappointed by the silence with which we are met on the other side of the aisle, talking about this important issue. In fact, it was one of the most distinguished Democratic Members of this body, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, who argued more than a decade ago that we must stop ''the breakup of family inevitably'' as best we can. He said:

> The principle social objective of American National Government at every level . . . should be to see that children are born into intact families and that they remain so.

We don't raise our neighbors' children as our own, but we do help all the children in every community every time we affirm and reinforce the importance of traditional marriage, through our speech, by our actions, in our culture, and by our laws. It is a position reinforced through our laws and our practices, and I believe it is right. Government should not be neutral, nor should it pretend to be neutral when it comes to children and families.

Most Americans take for granted that traditional definitions of family and marriage as we know them will always exist but that, as we have seen, is a mistake. We see in Scandinavia and the Netherlands why that assumption would be a mistake. Now we see that same development occurring in one of our States and being spread through litigation throughout the country.

The American people are not persuaded that this radical redefinition of marriage is needed or that it is a good thing. When given the opportunity to express themselves, they have always supported traditional marriage clearly and forthrightly.

I, for one, believe that a national discussion of this issue is a good thing. Those of us on the side of traditional marriage must not flinch and we should not back down and we should not allow people to paint our motivations as hateful or hurtful because, indeed, they are not.

We recognize two simple propositions simultaneously in this country. One is the essential dignity and worth of every human being. But, second and at the same time, we recognize that we see enormous benefits to our children, to society, and to all of us by preserving the traditional institution of marriage. We are merely seeking to defend the fundamental bedrock of our society, the wellspring of families and the welfare of children. That is what we are for. We, who have the responsibility of serving in elective office, have the duty to act to protect marriage as a social good, not to ignore this issue until it is too late.

Some believe traditional marriage itself is about discrimination, that all traditional marriage laws are unconstitutional and therefore must be abolished by the courts. They align themselves with four justices in Massachusetts who contend the traditional institution of marriage is ''rooted in persistent prejudices'' and ''invidious discrimination'' and not in the best interests of children.

These activists, out of the mainstream as they are, accuse others of writing discrimination into the Constitution. Yet they are the ones who are willing to write the American people out of our constitutional democracy.

Now that the threat to traditional marriage is a Federal threat, a Federal constitutional amendment is the only way to preserve traditional marriage laws nationwide before it is too late. We need stable marriages and stable families. The institution of marriage is just too important to leave to lawyers and lawsuits and to chance.

Unless and until the American people are persuaded otherwise, we have a duty as their representatives to defend the laws they have passed, indeed the laws that we have passed, such as the Defense of Marriage Act in 1996, and not let extremists in the courts or outside them reshape society according to their own whim. We can be confident in the fact that a constitutional amendment is the most representative process we have in American law.

There is no possible response to this judicial activism, to this rewriting of the Constitution by judicial fiat, but an amendment. Give the States a voice. Give the people a voice. They deserve no less on such an important issue.

I suggest the burden of proof is on those who seek to experiment with traditional marriage, an institution that has sustained society for countless generations. The experimenters must present their case to us, that the radical new social unit they propose is good for the community, is good for families, and most of all good for children. Thus far, the laboratory where this experiment has already been run, in Scandinavia and the Netherlands, has given us nothing but disastrous results.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the majority's time has expired. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Texas for his leadership on this issue and for his comments. To have a former State attorney general of the State of Texas and a former member of the Texas Supreme Court speak on this subject as an enlightened judge and as an authority, in my opinion, on the Constitution, is a very important part of this process. So I look forward to hearing more of his thoughts on this subject as he has talked about the case law, the legal precedents, and what is at stake with this amendment.

I know others have done it, but let me take a moment to read the amendment we are proposing to the Constitution, because there has been a lot of discussion about what we should do. I have seen a number of different amendments or language being proposed, many of them a couple of paragraphs, quite long or complicated. This one is very simple, direct, right to the point and I think does what needs to be done. Some people would say it does not go far enough, but I think this is the careful way the Constitution should be amended.

> Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman.
> Neither this Constitution, nor the constitution of any State, shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.

It is quite simple and direct. Will it lead to some court consideration in the future? Surely. But what has caused this problem is the aggressive actions of the activist courts to take decisions in Massachusetts and in other places that have left us no alternative. So I rise today in strong support of S.J. Res. 40, the Federal marriage amendment. It would amend the Constitution to provide specific protection for the institution of traditional marriage. I am an original cosponsor of this measure because I believe marriage should only consist of a union between a man and a woman.

Traditional marriage has existed as a fundamental building block of our society for thousands of years, and we have learned that it provides the best and most stable environment for nurturing the children who become America's and the world's next generations. Now we see the courts have been moving in this area on what I consider a radical quest to sweep away the traditional definition of marriage, one man and one woman, by allowing same-sex couples to marry.

This undemocratic activism by the courts can only be stopped, the future stability of our society protected, and this whole area clarified, by the safeguard of a constitutional amendment. Some Senators have argued that while they support traditional marriage, they do not believe a constitutional amendment is necessary or proper at this time. They maintain the Defense of Marriage Act, passed in 1996, is sufficient to protect traditional marriage by allowing individual States to bar the recognition of same-sex marriages that may be allowed in other States. Unfortunately, I am convinced they are incorrect.

When the Supreme Court of Massachusetts directed the Massachusetts legislature to authorize same-sex marriages, the inadequacy of the Defense of Marriage Act, DOMA, as it is commonly referred to, was exposed. Approximately three-fourths of the States have laws protecting traditional marriage, indicating the democratically enshrined views of the residents of those respective States. But activist courts in many of those States could unfortunately overturn these laws by forcing that State to authorize same-sex marriage or to recognize same-sex marriages performed in other States. Additionally, now that the State of Massachusetts has endorsed same-sex marriages, the legal system in every other State will be impacted when couples of the same sex are married in Massachusetts but go to other States to seek divorces or probate wills, even if that particular State chooses not to recognize such marriage. This development could obviously create, and is beginning to create, legal chaos in the country.

Furthermore, sadly, it is only a matter of time before the Defense of Marriage Act is overturned by unelected Federal judges who ''find'' rights in the U.S. Constitution which simply are not there, such as the U.S. Supreme Court did in the Lawrence v. Texas case. Therefore, a constitutional amendment protecting marriage is the only way to adequately guarantee the sanctity of this fundamental institution.

Those who oppose the amendment say the U.S. Constitution should only be amended on rare occasions and for crucial reasons, if at all. I agree, and I think this is a rare situation and a critical one. I have been disappointed occasionally over the years that we have not been able to succeed in amending the Constitution. A few years ago we lost in the Senate by one vote to have a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget. A few years after that, we actually had balanced budgets and a number of Senators said, see, we do not need it. Well, here we are again.

By the way, there would have been an exception for national emergencies or national security requirements that we are now dealing with.

When we look at the Constitution, wonderful document that it is, the original Constitution turned out not to be perfect. We had the articles of the Constitution and we went through Article V, Article VI, Article VII, and stopped, and then we had the 10 amendments that are referred to as the Bill of Rights. So there were 10 amendments that were soon added, and in the last century alone we added 12 amendments. Most people would say some of those amendments are not exactly earth-shattering amendments. The 27th, being the last one, is one that took almost the entirety of this country's history to get through the process to actually be ratified, but it had to do with the compensation of the services of Senators and Representatives. I will bet if we asked the American people to list the 10 things they think the Constitution should perhaps be amended for, that would not be one of the top 10.

It is a sacred document. It is one we should defend and protect. We take an oath to it. We do not take an oath to the people. We take an oath to protect and defend the Constitution, and I think we should do that.

There are occasions when we should consider the process. They should be in areas that are critical and they should be rare. We have not had a serious debate on a constitutional amendment now for about 6 or 8 years. A constitutional amendment dealing with marriage being between one man and one woman seems to me to be an issue that is important enough for us to have a debate on amending the Constitution.

There are those who say it should not be amended lightly. I certainly agree with that. But our Founding Fathers made sure it would not be done often and that it would not be done lightly. The process for ratification of an amendment is a very difficult and lengthy one. Under the Constitution, within Article V itself, it says it requires a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress to approve a constitutional amendment and three-fourths of the State legislatures must ratify the amendment for it to become a part of the Constitution.

There is one other very difficult procedure in the Constitution in which a convention process can be conducted to get an amendment approved. I know how difficult that is, too, because some years ago I actually joined in a bipartisan effort to try to go through the State legislatures to take advantage of this part of the Constitution to have a convention that would lead to a balanced budget requirement in the Constitution. My own State legislature took that action, as well as several other States, but it soon fizzled out and I do not believe that process has been used in the history of our country. So this is not an issue we should take lightly. It is rare, it is exceptional, and it is one that will take a lot of thought and debate before we get through the process.

Some people say, well, what about federalism? What about the rights of the States? That is what we are talking about.

If we do not deal with this issue that may arise from the full faith and credit clause, some States such as, say, Alabama or Oklahoma are going to have a real problem in dealing with what the courts have directed in the State of Massachusetts.

Full faith and credit says we have to respect each other's laws. But I do think we need clarity in this very critical area. I think the Constitution deserves to be amended when it deals with something so traditional and which is such a vital part of our country and our future.

Marriage is our most basic social institution, and its traditional definition as the union of a man and a woman is intended to be the best environment for rearing children. There is a reason that we have a ''traditional'' definition of marriage: God's design and the resulting evidence of science and common sense clearly demonstrates that the union of a man and a woman is the best, most secure and nurturing atmosphere in which to bring up children.

This does not mean that single parents, foster parents, and others cannot do heroic jobs of raising children—because many children are being raised by these heroes. However, marriage is meant to affirm the ideal model in which to bring up the next generation. Mothers and fathers both matter, and both make critical contributions in the lives of children. A man and a woman united in marriage can uniquely provide the many different attributes that children need as they are reared to become our next generation, and both make important contributions.

I am going to yield the floor at this point, since I am about to lose my voice talking about this subject, but I think this is an issue whose time has come. I commend the leader and Senator SANTORUM for making sure this issue is debated in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator SANTORUM be recognized for so much time as he may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be able to speak for such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I congratulate both the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas for their excellent comments and for adding to this debate.

I think one of the main facts we tend to overlook in this institution is the importance of the debate—the importance of engaging in a subject matter and having a colleague focus on an issue and having the American public focus on an issue.

I think in a very short period of time the issue of marriage actually has come to the fore in America—to actually start to think about what marriage is. What is the purpose of marriage? What is it all about, and how does it fit into American culture?

I told the story when the Massachusetts decision was first handed down about being questioned by college students. As the Presiding Officer knows, we are constantly bombarded by high school and college students who come down and visit with us. It is a wonderful thing when you get a chance to stay in touch with what the young mind is thinking and the popular culture they are influenced by.

Once Goodridge was handed down, I would get the question, How do you feel about changing the definition of marriage? I would enter into a discussion. I came up with the idea of asking those young people, before I answered that question, What is the purpose of marriage? Absolutely without fail, for about a 2-month period of time, as I would do that almost on a daily basis when we were in session because the issue was a hot issue at the time, I would get three or four hands going up. The answer would be to affirm the love between two people. That was the answer.

I would ask several other folks, generally speaking, some sort of variation on that theme. There would usually be some young man—usually a young man, occasionally a young lady, in the back, always in the back—who would put his hand up and sheeplishly say something like procreation and rearing of children.

I have to tell you that for a several-month period of time, when that young man or young lady would raise their hand and would say that, the majority of the kids in the group would laugh, which somewhat startled me. Then, of course, I would say I agree with that man in the back or that young lady in the back about the principal purpose of marriage. Yet to many of our young people that was not something which was considered. The only thing that was considered was about them in a sense. Consider yourself. Why do you want to be married? Well, to make me happy, to join me with someone I love. That is what marriage is about. It is about me.

I would suspect, if you went back and talked to your grandmother or great-grandmother, and you asked what the purpose of marriage is, they would probably give you a very different answer. Thankfully, I am getting a different answer now when I ask that question. More and more people are saying what that sheepish young boy or young girl would say in the back, and there are fewer and fewer laughs when they say it is about children.

I can only give as a reason for that the fact that we have had this debate as to what marriage means and the importance of it to our society. It is like the oxygen we breathe. We breathe it and we know it is there. It is essential to life, but we sort of take for granted that it is just going to be there. That is our bodily function because it is just going to be there. The body politic, the body, the social body, that culture that is in America sort of takes marriage for granted. When we see places where marriage maybe has been taken too much for granted or simply been pushed aside as something that isn't necessary, we see how culture and society suffer greatly.

One of the things I wanted to do in the little time I have here—and I think the Senator from Kansas is here, and I know he wants to speak—is talk about what the purpose of marriage is. Why is this issue so central? We tend to talk about what the need for this amendment is and get sort of wrapped up in the procedure.

I think one of the great blessings of the Senate is an opportunity to debate, educate, and to think through things.

I earlier quoted a study by professors Young and Nathan. I will go through a little bit more of this article. But they lay out in a paragraph of the study the purpose, if you will, the reason for marriage, and why society must encourage it.

As I mentioned in my earlier comments, if society doesn't encourage marriage and fidelity between a man and a woman, the natural inclination is certainly—as I think we have seen in many subcultures in America—not to be faithful, not to be responsible fathers, not to be involved with a woman for a long-term commitment. This is something which, if not nurtured by culture, could cause us to evolve very quickly into a rather self-absorbed, self-centered culture, with men being the principal stirrer of that lethal cocktail in America.

But to quote professors Young and Nathan:

> The culture of marriage must encourage at least five things. A, the bonding between men and women that ensures their cooperation for the common good; B, the birth and rearing of children, at least to the extent necessary for preserving and fostering society in a culturally approved way; C, bonding between men and children so that men are likely to become active participants in family life; D, some healthy form of masculine identity which is based on the need for at least one distinctive, necessary and publicly valued contribution to society and is especially important today because the other two cross-cultural definitions of manhood, provider and protector, are no longer distinctive now that women have entered the public realm; and E, the transformation of adolescence into sexually responsible adults so young men and women are ready for marriage and the beginning of a new cycle.

So why do we support marriage? Why do we hold up marriage as a special institution to which we give prestige and esteem, that we support with cultural and social norms, to which we give legal preferences, legal protection? Why do we do this as a culture? Why has every culture in the history of man provided the same kind of nurturing and support for husbands, for men and women to become husbands and wives and fathers and mothers?

We do this for the reasons that are laid out here—at least for these reasons laid out here. Some of them are really interesting, if you dig into them as to how, without this kind of nurturing, we can see very clearly how our society would be harmed.

I haven't heard anybody get up and argue that marriage between a man and a woman is bad. I haven't heard anybody get up and suggest that we should change the definition of ''traditional.'' In fact, I haven't heard anybody here, nor do I expect to hear anyone here, advocate for the States to change the definition of traditional marriage.

One wonders if there is unanimity of opinion as to what marriage is. And I suspect, although I would be happy to hear people come forward and disagree with these elements that I have just laid forth—but if there is agreement as to what marriage is and the purpose and the benefits of society for marriage, why are we so reticent in doing what we know for sure will protect that institution?

Again, Members can make the arguments up and down that there are other ways we can protect marriage: The States can do it, the State courts can do it, the legislatures can do it, the DOMA statute, or the House, which is looking at some sort of limitation of jurisdiction. We can look at a whole variety of different things and say this could work, this might work, this may happen, but ultimately we know for sure one thing will work. A constitutional amendment defining marriage will, without question, work.

We have to ask ourselves, if marriage is this institution so critical to the future of our society, it is so foundational for our children and for men and women to build these bonds for the common good—and after the Senator from Kansas speaks, I will go through chart after chart of the benefits children gain from being in a married family—if we accept that social good, then why is there not overwhelming support for something most people even 10 years ago would have said: This is common sense. Of course marriage is between men and women. We do not have to put that into the Constitution. Everyone agrees with that.

Yes, everyone agrees, but Members will stand up in the Senate and say: We all agree with that, but it does not belong in the Constitution. Marriage is not important enough. Families are not important enough to be protected by our Constitution, to be protected from rogue judges who say things like marriage is a stain on our laws that must be eradicated.

I believe ultimately we will protect marriage. Let's start now. Let's come together and make some commonsense decisions about protecting the institution that is so valuable to this country, that we know is a public good. We can do that starting this week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak on the proposed marriage amendment for up to 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SESSIONS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I rise to speak on this proposed amendment, constitutional amendment to protect marriage. I am an original cosponsor. I support the Allard amendment. He has done an absolutely fabulous job of bringing this forward. I will articulate those reasons for my colleagues and for others.

This is a critical battle. We are at a critical stage in the culture of the United States. What happens on this particular issue will have a profound impact on the future of the United States of America. It is that which we are actually debating today.

I have no doubt it is imperative we act now by means of a constitutional amendment to protect marriage. As some of my distinguished colleagues have already pointed out, this action has been made necessary not by election year politics but by the reckless actions of a judiciary bent on radical social experimentation.

Let there be no mistake, the stakes in this battle of the future of our culture are enormous. This attempt by the judiciary to radically redefine marriage is both a grave threat to our central social institution and a serious affront to the democratic rule in our Nation.

On our reaction to this threat hinges the future of marriage and our future as a self-governing people. Both are at stake. Most Americans believe homosexuals have a right to live as they choose. They do not believe a small group of activists or a tiny judicial elite have a right to redefine marriage and impose a radical social experiment on our entire society.

Let us be clear, this is not a battle over civil rights; it is a battle over whether marriage will be emptied of its meaning in contradiction to the will of the people and their duly elected representatives. We are a democracy, not a people ruled by a judicial dictator. In order to reach a predetermined outcome with regard to marriage, judges such as the five judges responsible for the Goodridge decision in Massachusetts are disregarding thousands of years of custom and experience, the laws of every society, and the beliefs of every major religious tradition. Unless action is taken by Congress to protect marriage by means of a constitutional amendment, the marriage laws of 50 States will be at the mercy of Federal judges, and marriage itself will be redefined out of all recognition.

The Defense of Marriage Act passed by Congress in 1996 is not enough. Without a constitutional amendment, Federal judges will likely rule DOMA, the Defense of Marriage Act, unconstitutional under the doctrine of full faith and credit, and marriages recognized in one State will be required to be recognized in all.

As several of my distinguished colleagues have noted, challenges to DOMA are already making their way through the courts. This radical attempt to redefine marriage also highlights the need to rein in an increasingly reckless judiciary. When activist judges show no regard for legal intent or precedent, using their positions to achieve policy goals, they must be resolutely opposed. In fundamentally altering the definition of marriage and changing duly approved marriage laws, these judges show contempt for the democratic process itself.

The choice is clear: Either we amend the Constitution and protect the rights of the people to self-determination in this process or the Constitution will be amended, in effect, by the edict of judges.

The time has come to act. If we continue to let activist judges determine the fate of marriage, the battle may be lost and we could lose the institution of marriage. Marriage can be lost.

It is important to take a step back from the heat of this controversy in order to understand why defending the institution of marriage is so important to the Nation's future. America's political system is framed around a particular understanding of human freedom, an understanding of freedom not as mere license but as something that must be guided and governed by a fundamental internal moral code. In keeping with human nature, the direction is toward both the individual good and the common good.

Our great experiment and freedom as a nation has not been without its difficult moments of trial when we have struggled with our very identity as a people as we attempted to resolve the tensions inherent in the responsible exercise of freedom. The attempts to grapple with the evils of slavery in the 19th century and civil rights struggles of the 20th century are primary examples.

In the long view of history, it seems likely we will look back at the social changes identified with the decline of marriage and the family, which began to make cultural inroads in the 1960s, and conclude that this vast cultural experiment has been a very harmful one, particularly harmful on children. That experiment, of course, continues today, but there are indications America is beginning to reevaluate that experiment, to assess where it is heading, and whether, as a people, we need to correct course.

A vitally important part of this assessment is to study the social science data regarding what happens when sexuality and children are taken outside of the context of marriage and what happens when marriage declines as an institution as a result of a culture in which divorced or out-of-wedlock births, cohabitation, and single parenthood have become a social norm.

One of the central questions before our society right now is whether this course is desirable and, if not, what can be done to avert it. Particularly important is what the social science evidence has to tell about how children have been affected by the weakening of the institution of marriage over the last 40 years. It is incumbent upon those who deal with public policy issues to investigate this trend and its consequences on society.

A very wise man who served in this body for a number of years, the late Democratic Senator from New York, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, was a great cultural commentator. He once wrote this:

> [T]he central conservative truth is that it is culture, not politics, that determines the success of a society. The central liberal truth is that politics can change a culture and save it from itself.

I think we see both truths in action in this debate.

Senator Moynihan also wrote:

> [T]he principal objective of American government at every level should be to see that children are born into intact families and that they remain so.

The ''principal objective,'' according to the late-Senator Moynihan.

I have no doubt about what the outcome of this debate over an amendment to protect marriage would be if more of us in the public policy arena adhered to this principle, because seeing to it ''that children are born into intact families and that they remain so'' is, in a nutshell, what this whole debate is all about. And the only way to achieve that laudable aim is to protect the traditional meaning of marriage as the union between one man and one woman and prevent rogue judges from defining marriage out of existence.

The costs to our society, should Federal judges force the States to recognize the legal equivalence of same-sex unions, would be significant—even disastrous—when measured in terms of the effects on our central social institution, the family.

Marriage is at the center of the family, and the family is the basis of society itself. The Government's interest in the marriage bond, and the reason it treats heterosexual unions in a manner unlike all other relationships, is closely related to the welfare of children. Government registers and endorses marriage between a man and a woman in order to ensure a stable environment for the raising and nurturing of children. Social science on this matter is conclusive: Children need both a mom and a dad.

Study after study shows children do best in a home with a married, biological mother and father, and the Government has a special responsibility to safeguard the needs of children. The social costs of not doing so are tremendous. Child Trends, a mainstream child welfare organization, has noted:

[R]esearch clearly demonstrates that family structure matters for children, and the family structure that helps the most is a family headed by two biological parents in a low-conflict marriage. Children in single-parent families, children born to unmarried mothers, and children in stepfamilies or cohabitating relationships face higher risks of poor outcomes. . . . There is thus value for children in promoting strong, stable marriages between biological parents.

Giving public sanction to homosexual ''marriage'' would violate this Government responsibility to safeguard the needs of children by placing individual adult desires above the best interests of children. There is no reliable social science data demonstrating that children raised by same-sex couples do as well as children raised by married, heterosexual parents. Redefining marriage is certain to harm children and the broader social good if that redefinition weakens Government's legitimate goal of encouraging men and women who intend on having children to get married.

If the experience of the last 40 years tells us anything, it is that the consequences of weakening the institution of marriage are tragic for society at large. While it has become fashionable to champion a wide variety of ''alternative family forms,'' it is abundantly clear that children are much less likely to thrive in the absence of their biological father. Children who grow up without their fathers are two to three times more likely to fail in school, and two to three times more likely to suffer from an emotional or behavioral problem. They can achieve, but it is a much more difficult route.

I have a series of charts to share with my colleagues to make this point.

Developmental problems are less common in two-parent families. To show where this goes, they are five times more likely to be poor. Nearly 80 percent of all children suffering long-term poverty come from broken or never-married families—80 percent of all children suffering long-term poverty.

I want to show this chart to my colleagues. Eighty percent of children suffering long-term poverty come from broken or never-married families.

The crisis of child poverty in this country is, in large degree, a crisis of marriage. The percentage of children in intact families living in poverty is very small compared to those in families where the father is not present.

I want to show another chart to my colleagues: Percentage of children in poverty in 2000. You can see across the chart, for children in never-married families, 67 percent of the children are in poverty. If you go down on the chart to those children in families where the parents are in their first marriage, where the parents stay in that union, less than 12 percent of the children are in poverty.

Marriage has the effect of lifting families and children out of poverty. After the birth of a child out of wedlock, only 17 percent of poverty-level income mothers and children remain poor if the mother marries the child's father. More than half of those mothers and children remain poor if the mother remains single.

That is shown on this chart. If the mother remains single, over half remain below the poverty level. If she gets married, less than 17 percent remain below the poverty level.

Divorce, on the other hand, impoverishes families and children. It has been estimated that the average income of families with children declines by 42 percent after divorce.

This is the impact of divorce on the income of families with children. As this chart shows, you can see, after divorce, the income level of that average family declines 42 percent. Divorce is a key contributor and creator of child poverty.

Children who grow up fatherless are also at a much increased risk of serious child abuse. A child whose mother cohabits with a man who is not the child's father is 33 times more likely to suffer abuse than a child living with both biological parents in an intact marriage—33 times more likely to suffer child abuse.

You can see the child abuse levels in families: with married biological parents, comparative rates of abuse, 1 percent; biological mother cohabiting, 33 percent. Indeed, one of the most dangerous environments for a child today is in a home with a mother cohabiting with someone to whom she is not married. It is an incredibly dangerous situation overall—not for everybody and not in all circumstances, but the numbers just go up dramatically.

Married mothers are also half as likely to be victims of domestic violence than mothers who have never been married. As teenagers, fatherless children are more likely to commit crime, engage in early and promiscuous sexual activity, and to commit suicide.

It is clear that both children and society as a whole pay an enormous price in fatherless homes.

The American people realize this. A Gallup poll from several years ago showed almost 80 percent of the public agrees with the proposition that ''the most significant family or social problem facing America is the physical absence of the father from the home.''

It is a problem that requires urgent attention in our country. Nearly 25 million children today reside in a home where the father is absent. Half of these children have never stepped foot in their father's home. Less than half of all teenagers currently live with their married biological mothers and fathers.

That is what this chart shows us. Less than half of all teenagers live with their married biological mothers and fathers.

This year, approximately 1 million children will endure the divorce of their parents and an additional 1.2 million will be born out of wedlock. Altogether, the proportion of children entering broken homes has more than quadrupled since 1950.

You can see this chart goes from 1950 up until about the year 2000. This shows children born out of wedlock, children born in previous years whose parents are divorced, and you can see that trend line and what that has done in America since 1950.

This is a crisis for both our children and our country, the fact that so many children are growing up without fathers. It has been exacerbated by the decline of the institution of marriage. According to the Census Bureau, the number of cohabiting couples has increased from a half million to almost 5 million in the last 30 years. The number of households with neither marriage nor children present has gone from 7 million in 1960 to just under 41 million in 2000.

All this is not to say that good children cannot be raised in other family settings. They can. Many healthy children are raised in difficult circumstances. Many single parents struggle heroically and successfully to raise good children. Still, social science is clear, the best place for a child is with a mom and a dad. Both are needed.

Traditional marriage is a social good because it dramatically reduces the social costs associated with dysfunctional behavior. Supporting and strengthening marriage significantly diminishes public expenditure on welfare, raises government revenues, and produces a more engaged, responsible citizenry.

There is a real question about the future of societies that do not uphold traditional marriage. Once a society loses sight of the central importance of marriage in raising children, the institution can go into a tailspin. If marriage begins to be viewed as the way two adults make known their love for each other, there is no reason to marry before children are born rather than after. And if it is immaterial whether a couple should be married before the birth of a child, then why should they marry at all?

In Europe, many parents have stopped marrying altogether because they no longer view marriage as having anything to do with parenthood or children. The legalization of same-sex marriage has been instrumental in working this change in perspective, leading most to think of marriage as simply the expression of mutual affection between two consenting adults. As a result, couples are marrying later and later after children are born, or simply foregoing marriage altogether. Rates of parental cohabitation have skyrocketed, and family dissolution has become endemic.

The experience of other nations demonstrates that the imposition of same-sex ''marriage'' and civil unions leads to a weakening of marriage. As scholar Stanley Kurtz has shown, in Scandinavia, the system of marriage-like same-sex registered partnerships established in the late 1980s has contributed significantly to the ongoing decline of marriage in that region. In The Netherlands, same-sex marriage has increased the cultural separation of marriage from parenthood, resulting in a soaring out-of-wedlock birthrate. Kurtz warns that same-sex ''marriage'' could widen the separation between marriage and parenthood here in the United States, and perhaps undo the progress we have made in arresting the once seemingly inexorable trend towards higher rates of illegitimacy among some communities in the United States.

And Stanley Kurtz is not alone in pointing to the negative effects these developments have had on marriage in The Netherlands.

I think it is important to go into this point at some length, because we have a case study of what can happen to the institution of marriage when it is redefined to include same-sex relationships. We have a case study. We know what happens when you redefine it. It has happened in The Netherlands.

In a letter released just last Thursday addressed to ''parliaments around the world debating the issue of same-sex marriage,'' a group of Dutch scholars raised concerns about gay marriage's negative effects on the institution of marriage in The Netherlands. In a letter published in the July 8 edition of a Dutch paper, five Dutch academics suggested that ''there are good reasons to believe the decline in Dutch marriage may be connected to the successful public campaign for the opening of marriage to same-sex couples in The Netherlands.''

The letter's signatories came from several academic disciplines, including the social sciences, philosophy, and law. The scholars caution against attributing all of the recent decline of Dutch marriage to the adoption of same-sex marriage, but they did say, ''There are undoubtedly other factors which have contributed to the decline of the institution of marriage in our country. Further scientific research is needed to establish the relative importance of all these factors.'' However, they conclude, ''At the same time, we wish to note that enough evidence of marital decline already exists to raise serious concerns about the wisdom of the efforts to deconstruct marriage in its traditional form.''

In recent years, they note, there is statistical evidence of Dutch marital decline, including ''a spectacular rise in the number of illegitimate births.'' By creating a social and legal separation between the ideas of marriage and parenting, these scholars warn, same-sex marriage may make young people in The Netherlands feel less obligated to marry before having children.

The publication of the letter of warning in this Dutch paper was accompanied by a front page news story and an interview with two of the signatories. In the interview, Dutch law professor M. van Mourik said that ''the reputation of marriage as an institution [in Holland] is in serious decline.'' According to Mourik, the Dutch need to have a national debate on how to restore traditional marriage. The decision to legalize gay marriage, said Mourik, should certainly never have happened. ''In my view that has been an important contributing factor to the decline in the reputation of marriage.''

One of the letters' other signatories, Dr. Joost van Loon, is a Dutch citizen who heads a research unit on culture and communication at Britain's Nottingham Trent University. Van Loon has done comparative studies of family life and sexual attitudes in The Netherlands and Britain, and is also acquainted with research on American marriage. Van Loon believes that gay marriage has contributed to a decline in the reputation of Dutch marriage. He says, it's ''difficult to imagine'' that the Dutch campaign for gay marriage did not have ''serious social consequences,'' said Van Loon, citing ''an intensive media campaign based on the claim that marriage and parenthood are unrelated.''

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter and background documentation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DUTCH SCHOLARS ON SSM

[New statement. Here it is in Dutch. What follows is an unofficial English translation]

At a time when parliaments around the world are debating the issue of same-sex marriage, as Dutch scholars we would like to draw attention to the state of marriage in The Netherlands. The undersigned represent various academic disciplines in which marriage is an object of study. Through this letter, we would like to express our concerns over recent trends in marriage and family life in our country.

Until the late 1980's, marriage was a flourishing institution in The Netherlands. The number of marriages was high, the number of divorces was relatively low compared to other Western countries, the number of illegitimate births also low. It seems, however, that legal and social experiments in the 1990's have had an adverse effect on the reputation of man's most important institution.

Over the past fifteen years, the number of marriages has declined substantially, both in absolute and in relative terms. In 1990, 95,000 marriages were solemnized (6.4 marriages per 1,000 inhabitants); by 2003, this number had dropped to 82,000 (5.1 marriages per 1,000 inhabitants). This same period also witnessed a spectacular rise in the number of illegitimate births—in 1989 one in ten children were born out of wedlock (11 percent), by 2003 that number had risen to almost one in three (31 percent). The number of never-married people grew by more than 850,000, from 6.46 million in 1990 to 7.32 million in 2003. It seems the Dutch increasingly regard marriage as no longer relevant to their own lives or that of their offspring. We fear that this will have serious consequences, especially for the children. There is a broad base of social and legal research which shows that marriage is the best structure for the successful raising of children. A child that grows up out of wedlock has a greater chance of experiencing problems in its psychological development, health, school performance, even the quality of future relationships.

The question is, of course, what are the root causes of this decay of marriage in our country. In light of the intense debate elsewhere about the pros and cons of legalising gay marriage it must be observed that there is as yet no definitive scientific evidence to suggest the long campaign for the legalisation of same-sex marriage contributed to these harmful trends. However, there are good reasons to believe the decline in Dutch marriage may be connected to the successful public campaign for the opening of marriage to same-sex couples in The Netherlands. After all, supporters of same-sex marriage argued forcefully in favour of the (legal and social) separation of marriage from parenting. In parliament, advocates and opponents alike agreed that same-sex marriage would pave the way to greater acceptance of alternative forms of cohabitation.

In our judgment, it is difficult to imagine that a lengthy, highly visible, and ultimately successful campaign to persuade Dutch citizens that marriage is not connected to parenthood and that marriage and cohabitation are equally valid 'lifestyle choices' has not had serious social consequences. There are undoubtedly other factors which have contributed to the decline of the institution of marriage in our country. Further scientific research is needed to establish the relative importance of all these factors. At the same time, we wish to note that enough evidence of martial decline already exists to raise serious concerns about the wisdom of the efforts to deconstruct marriage in its traditional form.

Of more immediate importance than the debate about causality is the question what we in our country can do in order to reverse this harmful development. We call upon politicians, academics and opinion leaders to academics and opinion leaders to acknowledge the fact that marriage in The Netherlands is now an endangered institution and that the many children born out of wedlock are likely to suffer the consequences of that development. A national debate about how we might strengthen marriage is now clearly in order.

STATEMENT OF NICHOLAS ZILL, PH.D., VICE PRESIDENT AND DIRECTOR, CHILD AND FAMILY STUDY AREA, WESTAT, INC., ROCKVILLE, MD

TWO-PARENT FAMILY GOOD FOR CHILDREN

''On average, the presence of two married parents is associated with more favorable outcomes for children both through, and independent of, added income. Children who live in a household with only one parent are substantially more likely to have family incomes below the poverty line, and to have more difficulty in their lives than are children who live in a household with two married parents.'' (quoting annual report published by the Federal Interagency Forum on Child and Family Statistics, 2003)

''[T]he research evidence clearly shows that indicators of children's achievement and social behavior are more favorable in two parent biological families than in two-parent step, adoptive, or foster families.''

FACTS ON TODAY'S CHILDREN

Nearly 25% of U.S. children under the age of 18 are living with only their mothers, typically as a result of marital separation or divorce or birth outside of marriage. (U.S. Census Bureau)

5% of U.S. children are living with only their fathers. (U.S. Census Bureau)

4% of U.S. children are living with neither parent. (U.S. Census Bureau)

10% to 15% of U.S. children are living in a stepfamily situation, with their mother and a stepfather or their father and a stepmother. (U.S. Census Bureau)

69% of U.S. children are living with two married parents, but only 55% of U.S. children are living with two married biological parents. (U.S. Census Bureau)

About 1 in 3 children born in the U.S. today is born to unmarried parents—''many of whom will never get married to each other.''

STATEMENT OF PATRICK F. FAGAN, WILLIAM H.G. FITZGERALD FELLOW IN FAMILY AND CULTURE ISSUES, HERITAGE FOUNDATION

IMPACT OF FAMILY BREAKDOWN

60% of U.S. children born in 2000 entered a broken family: 33% born out of wedlock and 27% suffering the divorce of their parents. In contrast, only 12% of U.S. children born in 1950 entered a broken family: 4% born out of wedlock and 8% suffering the divorce of their parents. (CDC/NCHS Series Report)

''The children of parents who reject each other suffer: in deep emotional pain, ill health, depression, anxiety, even shortened life span; more drop out of school, less go to college, they earn less income, they develop more addictions to drugs and alcohol, and they engage in increased violence or suffer it within their homes.''

U.S. children from intact families that worship God frequently have an average GPA of 2.94, while children from fragmented families that worship little or not at all have an average GPA of 2.48. Children from intact families that worship little or not at all have an average GPA of 2.75. Children from fragmented families that worship frequently have an average GPA of 2.72. (National Longitudinal Survey of Adolescent Health).

Mr. BROWNBACK. We have studied this question thoroughly. I and a number of my distinguished colleagues have held extensive hearings on the importance of protecting and strengthening the institution of marriage. Traditional marriage is a boon to society in a variety of ways, and government has a vital interest in encouraging and providing the conditions to maintain as many traditional marriages as possible. Marriage has economic benefits not only for the spouses but for the economy at large. Even in advanced industrial societies such as ours, economists tell us that the uncounted but real value of home activities such as child care, senior care, home carpentry, and food preparation is still almost as large as the ''official'' economy. Not least of the reasons heterosexual marriage is a positive social good is the fact that, in the married state, adults of both sexes are vastly healthier, happier, safer, wealthier and longer lived.

It is ironic, then, that the very governments that stand to benefit in so many ways from intact, traditional unions have, in recent years, seemed determined to follow policies that have the effect of weakening marriage.

If the movement for civil unions and same-sex marriage succeeds, we may well be dealing a fatal blow to an already-vulnerable institution. It is possible to lose the institution of marriage in America. And that is precisely the hidden agenda of many in this cultural battle: To do away with the traditional definition of the family entirely. An influential organization of lawyers and judges, the American Law Institute, has already recommended sweeping changes in family law that would equalize marriage and cohabitation, extending rights and benefits now reserved for married couples to cohabiting domestic partners, both heterosexual and homosexual.

Once the process of ''defining marriage down'' begins, it is but a short step to the dissolution of marriage as a vital institution altogether.

It is incumbent on this Senate to protect the institution of marriage from this vast social experiment to redefine it out of existence. I urge my colleagues to vote for this constitutional amendment and to do so now.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

DEATH OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS IN IRAQ

Mr. REID. Mr. President, over 11,212 constitutional amendments have been offered in Congress since the Bill of Rights was ratified. As I said here this morning, I certainly understand the depth of feeling of the Senators who have spoken on this issue. I watched the Presiding Officer speak this morning. I watched the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Kansas. I have tried to follow the debate very closely. I know the intensity of their feelings on this matter.

I would like to change direction a little bit and get back to some of other topics that are also important. One of the issues I wanted to talk about is what is going on in Iraq. Over the weekend, I don't know how many soldiers were killed in Iraq. It was more than 10, probably 12.

In today's paper, the Washington Post, on page A11, there is a very short story: ''Insurgents Kill Three U.S. Troops in Northern Iraq.'' But if you read more closely, this very short story talks about the death of not three but seven American soldiers.

This has become so routine, the death of our military in Iraq, that we bury it someplace in the back of the newspapers.

This is a large newspaper, the Washington Post. I would not be surprised if most papers in the country don't even have a story on it—seven soldiers killed. Between the publication of this yesterday morning and today, seven soldiers were killed, all with families.

Today, in America, there are people who are still crying and will cry for weeks and will never forget the deaths of their loved ones—sons, husbands, neighbors.

Mr. President, in addition to the depth of the feeling we have on this constitutional amendment now before the body, let's understand that we have a war going on in Iraq, and our men and women are being killed on a daily basis in significant numbers. I hope we will understand that when we have seven soldiers killed in Iraq, it should be more than a headline on page A–11 of the newspaper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I know the majority leader is expected on the floor of the Senate shortly to file cloture on the resolution currently pending. I must say I am baffled by the decisions and actions taken by the majority on occasions such as this. I am baffled because when I left on Friday, I had made a proposal to the majority leader that we were prepared for an up-or-down vote on this resolution, with 2 days of debate, and we would move on, preferably, hopefully, to homeland security. I left with the understanding that would be the order.

I find now, for reasons that are still unclear to me, it is the majority that is unwilling to accept that unanimous consent request. We have no objections on our side, none. We could go to that resolution under unanimous consent, with no amendments, with an up-or-down vote. I have told several of our colleagues that would be the order, having had the conversation I did with Senator FRIST. So it is an amazing position to be in to come back today and realize that it is the majority that cannot produce the unanimous consent request that would allow us the vote we expected we would have on Friday. Of course, this is on top of the unanimous consent vote we were expecting to have last week with regard to amendments and an ultimate final passage on class action. So we will have wasted a couple of weeks once again. I don't know how many weeks we have wasted this year. I am going to go back and try to find out how many weeks have been totally devoid of any legislative accomplishments.

In spite of the fact that we have agreed, I hear all these charges of obstructionism. The obstructionism oftentimes is on the other side. They cannot get their act together. That is clearly the case here. No one should be misled. No one should misunderstand why we are having to deal with a cloture motion on the motion to proceed, because our Republican friends don't have one version, they have now several versions they would like to bring to the Senate floor to have voted on because they cannot agree on one version. That is the truth.

It is all the more ironic and troubling because this is legislation that ought to go through the committee, if any should go through. We are treating this as a sense-of-the-Senate resolution. We are amending the U.S. Constitution, and we are bringing language to the floor of the Senate that hasn't had the benefit of consideration in committee, hasn't had the hearings, hasn't had the vote. We are treating it as just another old amendment.

This is an amendment that will be added to a document that is precious, that we treasure, that we ought to have respect for. Frankly, to be in a situation like we are in now, to be forced into a debate under these circumstances, is just wrong.

I intend to make a unanimous consent request. I will wait until the majority leader comes to the Senate floor to do so, but I will then ask unanimous consent that we have an arrangement like I thought we were scheduled to agree to last Friday; that is, we take up this resolution, we have a good debate, we have a vote, and then we move on. Under these circumstances, we could be at this for weeks, if not months, given all of the other pressing issues we must face. We have yet to deal with appropriations bills. We have just been briefed about the serious threat our country is facing—arguably as great a threat as any we have seen since 9/11—and we have yet to pass a homeland security bill. We have yet to pass the railroad security bill. We have yet to pass legislation to deal with our porous borders, our ports, our railroad tunnels. We have yet to find ways in which to help first responders. But somehow we can add amendment after amendment on gay marriage.

Mr. President, this is a matter that Lynne Cheney had right this weekend. The wife of the Vice President said this ought to be left to the States. The wife of the Vice President was right. We ought to listen to her advice and let the States continue to make these decisions, and we ought to get on with the business of the Senate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I know the majority leader is coming to the Senate floor, and I know the Democratic leader has kindly waited until he has arrived to make his unanimous consent request.

In the couple of minutes that remain until he gets here, I would like to offer my own response, not on behalf of anybody else other than this one Senator from Texas. I, frankly, don't think it is a waste of time to talk about the institution of the American family, traditional marriage, which is my strong belief. I don't think the American people feel it is a waste of time. We have a lot of important issues to discuss. I certainly think this deserves to be at the top of the list, although there are certainly many important issues.

Mr. REID. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. CORNYN. As soon as I get through, I will be glad to.

One of the concerns I personally have about the unanimous consent request that will be proffered is it would not allow for any amendments to be made. I just point out to the distinguished Democratic leader my own concern that, as he pointed out, this has not actually been voted out by the Judiciary Committee, but it has been through a number of committee hearings, three of which I have chaired, and I believe there have been at least two others chaired on this important issue by the Judiciary Committee and others.

I am concerned with the offer that we have an up-or-down vote on this matter on Wednesday, without the opportunity for anyone to offer amendments. That is a concern I have shared with the majority leader and others. Indeed, it was just last week on the class action bill, where the majority leader offered that piece of legislation but filled the amendment tree so there was no opportunity for our friends on the other side to offer an amendment, they objected mightily because no amendments were allowed. So I remind my colleagues that if it is a concern that you cannot offer amendments on a piece of ordinary legislation, it is doubly a matter of concern—at least it is to me, and I speak for myself—where there would be no opportunity to offer amendments on this legislation.

Finally, it is my understanding that a cloture motion is being circulated. So we are not talking about weeks and months of debate on this issue; I think we are talking about a matter of days. I believe we ought to have a full and fair debate and let everybody have a chance to be heard.

So far, we have not heard very much from our colleagues on the other side of the aisle on this issue. There have been some who, like the Democratic leader, have said we ought to leave it to the States. I and others have tried to articulate why that is not possible. I wish it was possible.

Mr. REID. Will my friend yield now for a question?

Mr. CORNYN. I will be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, there is no one who disagrees this matter should not be debated, but the Senator from Texas has indicated there should be a full and complete debate. We have agreed to debate it for however long he wants. Our suggestion is 2 days. Does the Senator think the debate should be more than 2 days? If not, for how many days does he think it should be?

Mr. CORNYN. I think 2 days of good, strong debate would not be a bad idea, but I would not want to, at least up front, totally preclude the possibility of offering any amendments, and that may, indeed, necessitate longer debate, depending on what happens during the course of the give-and-take on the floor.

Mr. REID. Again, through the Chair to my distinguished colleague from Texas, he also understands one of the ways we get bogged down on issues—on some occasions, not always—is by unlimited amendments. The Senator from Texas will recall in the matter dealing with class action, there was no desire on our behalf, that is, the minority, to have unlimited amendments. We indicated we would have a limited number of amendments.

On this constitutional amendment, the Senator understands if the majority offers an amendment, we have people on our side who are champing at the bit to offer amendments. Does the Senator understand that?

Mr. CORNYN. I was not aware, Mr. President, that our colleagues on the other side of the aisle had any interest in offering any amendments or really debating this subject very much, for that matter, given their absence on the floor today. I was not aware of any amendments that might be offered by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. I think that is not a bad idea myself.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, again I say through the Chair to my distinguished colleague, he also understands, under the rules in the Senate, it would be very easy to delay this process for at least a couple weeks. As the Senator knows, we have all kinds of legislation to do, some of which was laid out by the distinguished Democratic leader.

We believe—I am speaking for myself—it would be in the interest of the Senate if we could dispose of this amendment that was brought to the Senate floor at an early date and, the time we would want to debate it, of course, would be up to the majority leader. We are willing to debate it for whatever time the Senator believes appropriate. Two days is certainly appropriate.

I would also say to my distinguished colleague, we had people speak on the amendment today on this side. I spoke this morning before the Senator from Texas arrived. I know Senator FEINSTEIN has spoken, and there are others who certainly will speak at some time.

The fact there has been more Republicans than Democrats speaking on the amendment today does not take away from the serious view we have of this most important legislation.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I appreciate the questions and the opportunity the Democratic whip has given to respond, but that has not changed my view that it is not a good idea for this body, on something as serious as a constitutional amendment, to have one on the Senate floor, but then enter into a unanimous consent agreement that no amendments be considered. I agree time is precious, especially with the short time that remains for legislative action, but I do think on something as fundamental as the American family and preservation of traditional marriage that a little bit of time—certainly a couple of days, maybe even a week I would be willing to do if it was necessary to actually get some action to address this important issue. I would personally want to take longer. Here I defer to the discussions between the distinguished Democratic leader and the majority leader.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will respond. As I understand it, Senator FRIST is not planning to come to the floor in the immediate time period, but I will just say, as the distinguished Senator from Texas knows, a constitutional debate is a different kind of debate on the Senate floor. This is not any other bill. The debate, of course, last week had to do with whether we could use the so-called class action bill as a vehicle to raise other issues that are of great importance to us in statutory form. This is a constitutional amendment, amending the Constitution of the United States, therefore leaving open other amendments relating to the Constitution.

Somebody could offer an amendment eliminating the first amendment, modifying the first amendment, and all it takes is 51 votes. Somebody could offer an amendment—as I understand it, Senator HOLLINGS is thinking very seriously about offering an amendment limiting campaign spending. That is actually one amendment that I have supported in the past. That takes 51 votes.

Anyone who thinks that whatever amendments would be offered would be simply relevant to marriage I think would be faced with a rude awakening that this could open up the whole Constitution to a series of amendments, and maybe a good discussion about some of these other issues may be warranted. Again, it is a question of time.

It is a question of thoughtful consideration about whether we want to amend the Constitution in ways outside of marriage for which there have not been hearings. I am told there was one hearing on this particular text, but most of the hearings that have been held have been held on the general issue of amending the Constitution and defining marriage.

There is no argument, in my view, among many of us, most of us, about whether a marriage ought to be between a man and a woman. It ought to. The real question is whether or not we ought to amend the U.S. Constitution, and then if we open it up to amendment, whether we ought to amendment it in other ways as well, including campaign finance reform, maybe victims' rights, maybe limitations on the first amendment. Others have suggested an amendment on flag burning. There are a lot of amendments out there. In fact, I am told in the 108th Congress, just last week I was informed that 67 constitutional amendments have been proposed in this Congress, in the 108th Congress. I am quite sure, of course, that not all of them were offered in the Senate.

I can just imagine the array of ideas presented by our colleagues regarding amending the U.S. Constitution. As I say, it takes 51 votes. Ultimately, of course, it takes 67 votes to pass whatever package has been approved. But that is what we get ourselves into. We need to think very carefully. We all say we would support and defend the Constitution each time we are sworn in as a U.S. Senator—support and defend the Constitution. Some of us see this as supporting and defending the Constitution in its most important way. So we do not take lightly these challenges, these situations.

I will say again, I think it is regrettable we have not been able to reach a unanimous consent agreement on how to proceed. We are actually going to vote on a motion to proceed without knowing what proceeding means because we do not have any way of knowing how many different ideas for amending the Constitution will be offered.

As the Senator from Nevada noted, we could be on this for a long time.

I will wait to proffer this request, and if I am not here, I know the distinguished assistant Democratic leader will offer this consent request, but we will be prepared to offer it at the appropriate time.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FITZGERALD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, over the course of Friday, through the weekend and through today, we have been discussing the process for consideration of the marriage amendment. We have had a good discussion, good debate in the Senate both Friday and today in talking about the substance of the underlying amendment.

There has been frustration expressed on the other side of the aisle that we had not agreed to their unanimous consent agreement. This started discussions within the last week of a proposal that had been made to have debate and then a vote on the one amendment. I appreciate both sides of the aisle talking, trying to bring this to appropriate closure.

As majority leader, as I told the assistant Democratic leader at the end of last week, I thought it was very important to consult the rest of my colleagues beginning Friday afternoon. We had the discussion Friday and into today. After consultation with my colleagues, I found there is great interest in offering one amendment which is literally a one-sentence amendment. The Democratic leader has made statements in the Senate and made mention that the overall process could take a long period of time. I disagree. I don't think this needs to be a long, arduous process.

From this side of the aisle, we have offered an agreement that allows for two votes, one on the Allard amendment and then a one-sentence amendment. We are giving the other side of the aisle both of those amendments. This does not have to be a difficult process. It does not have to be as difficult as portrayed by the other side. We can be done with the whole process by 1 o'clock on Wednesday. That would be the plan. I don't think this is an inordinate amount of time to spend on such an important issue to the American people.

I find a lot of the comments that have been made interesting because we have had our share of difficulties in moving as expeditiously on any piece of legislation recently, and now we have a proposed agreement by the other side of the aisle for a very quick vote. There seems to be, from their standpoint, this disbelief that we might have an amendment.

There are many important issues to be considered by the Senate. I wish we did not have as much delay so we could schedule them in a timely way. This particular matter on marriage is a very important matter. We can handle this constitutional amendment in a very responsible, judicious, and civil way. That is certainly my intent.

We have offered a unanimous consent agreement to do this. I am awaiting an answer from the other side of the aisle.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the problem with what has transpired over the weekend is Senator DASCHLE and I spent Friday until somewhat late in the afternoon calling Democrat Senators to see if they would be willing to go forward on gay marriage without offering any amendments. There really was a kickback from a number of the Senators saying they had amendments to offer. We were able to contact Senators and convince them it was the best thing for the Senate to go directly to a vote on the amendment. This was reported in the Senate.

We simply are unable to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, the distinguished majority leader, because if you offer an amendment, we offer an amendment, it would just go on forever.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the motion to proceed to S.J. Resolution 40 be agreed to, that no amendments or motions be in order to the joint resolution, and that the Senate vote on passage of the joint resolution at 12 noon on Wednesday, July 14.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, as I mentioned in my comments a few moments ago, from our side of the aisle there is a wish to offer one other amendment. Again, it is an amendment we presented to the other side of the aisle.

I, as majority leader, do not want to cut off that discussion, that debate, because this obviously is a very important consideration dealing with marriage.

That being the case, I would ask the assistant Democratic leader to modify his unanimous consent request with the following:

I ask unanimous consent that the motion to proceed be agreed to; provided further that the only amendments in order to the resolution be a first-degree amendment offered by Senator ALLARD and a first-degree amendment to be offered by Senator SMITH; provided further that no other amendments or motions be in order to the joint resolution, and that all debate time on the resolution and amendments be equally divided between the chairman and ranking member or their designees; provided further that at 12 noon, on Wednesday, July 14, the Senate proceed to a vote on the Allard amendment, to be followed by a vote on the Smith amendment, to be followed by third reading and a vote on passage of S.J. Res. 40, again, as amended, if amended, with no other intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so amend his request?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, here is the quandary in which we find ourselves. If amendments are offered to a constitutional amendment on the floor, it only takes a simple majority of the Senate to amend the resolution that is on the floor.

So let's assume that someone offers an amendment dealing with flag burning, even though it takes 67 votes to pass a constitutional amendment dealing with flag burning, by a simple majority that could be attached to S.J. Res. 40. Or let's assume that in addition to that, someone offers an amendment on victims' rights. Again, it would take 67 votes to pass a constitutional amendment. But in this instance, it would take 51.

So we would have this gay marriage amendment strapped with not only the gay marriage amendment—in whatever fashion we find that with the amendments suggested by the distinguished majority leader—but it would also have a flag burning amendment attached to it. It would have a victims' rights amendment attached to it. And Senator HOLLINGS, as we all know, wants to offer an amendment dealing with campaign finance reform. So it just will not work.

I know how hard the distinguished majority leader is trying to work something out, but I think he is going down the wrong road. What we should do is get rid of this amendment. And I do not say that in any derogatory fashion. I say ''get rid of'' so we can go to other matters; we can go to something that we need to work on Wednesday afternoon.

In a colloquy I had with the distinguished Senator from Texas, Mr. CORNYN, former attorney general of the great State of Texas, he said: We need sufficient time to discuss this amendment. I said: Two days? That is what we have agreed to. If you want 3 days, we will do that.

So we are trying to be reasonable. I know how strongly people feel about this issue, but we cannot accept a modification. Therefore, Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not modify his request.

Does the majority leader object?

Mr. FRIST. Reserving the right to object, and I plan to object, Mr. President, but just to clarify, our unanimous consent request is just two amendments and not opening it up to other amendments like a flag burning amendment, victims' rights, or other amendments.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand that.

Mr. FRIST. So our intent is to very much keep it very controlled in the consideration of amendments. With that being the case, having heard the objection to the modification, I object to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk to the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to Calendar No. 620, S.J. Res. 40, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to marriage.

Bill Frist, Orrin Hatch, Jim Talent, Wayne Allard, Mike Crapo, Mitch McConnell, Jeff Sessions, Larry E. Craig, John Cornyn, Craig Thomas, Jim Inhofe, Richard Shelby, Conrad Burns, Sam Brownback, George Allen, R. F. Bennett, Elizabeth Dole.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if I could be heard very briefly. I know the time is late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we on this side are disappointed with the objection that the distinguished majority leader made to our request. But I would like to add that upon the disposition of this matter, the marriage amendment, we are prepared to proceed to the consideration of the Homeland Security appropriations bill, not under the restrictions that were suggested by the distinguished Senator from Alaska, but we are willing to work with the majority on coming up with some way to proceed to that most important legislation. We would hope the majority would consider going to that, if not next, soon thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of the assistant Democratic leader. Since last week, we have been in discussion, and we are working closely with Senator STEVENS, the distinguished chairman, and others in terms of an appropriate arrangement to proceed to homeland security.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the live quorum as required under rule XXII be waived; provided further that notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXII this vote occur at 12 noon on Wednesday, July 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period of morning business, with Senators speaking for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report prepared by the Congressional Budget Office under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32, the First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for 1986.

This report shows the effects of congressional action on the 2004 budget through June 25, 2004—the last day that the Senate was in session before the recent recess. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the 2004 Concurrent Resolution on the Budget, H. Con. Res. 95, as adjusted.

The estimates show that current level spending is above the budget resolution by $8.6 billion in budget authority and by $28 million in outlays in 2004. Current level for revenues is $3.1 billion above the budget resolution in 2004.

Since my last report dated April 20, 2004, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed the following acts which changed budget authority, outlays, or revenues for 2004: the Surface Transportation Extension Act of 2004, Part II—P.L. 108–224; the TANF and Related Programs Continuation Act of 2004—P.L. 108–262; the Surface Transportation Extension Act of 2004, Part III—P.L. 108–263; the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 2004—P.L. 108–265; and, an act approving the renewal of import restrictions contained in the Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act of 2003—P.L. 108–272. In addition, the Congress has cleared for the President's signature H.R. 4103, the African Growth and Opportunity Acceleration Act of 2004.

I ask unanimous consent that the budget scorekeeping report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 12, 2004.

Hon. DON NICKLES,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The enclosed tables show the effects of Congressional action on the 2004 budget and are current through June 25, 2004 (the last day that the Senate was in session before the recent recess). This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of H. Con. Res. 95, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2004, as adjusted.

Since my last letter, dated April 19, 2004, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed the following acts, which changed budget authority, outlays or revenues for 2004:

The Surface Transportation Extension Act of 2004, Part II (Public Law 108–224);

The TANF and Related Programs Continuation Act of 2004 (Public Law 108–262);

The Surface Transportation Extension Act of 2004, Part III (Public Law 108–263);

The Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 2004 (Public Law 108–265); and

An act approving the renewal of import restrictions contained in the Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act of 2003 (P.L. 108–272).

In addition the Congress has cleared for the President's signature H.R. 4103, the AGOA Acceleration Act of 2004.

The effects of these actions are detailed in Table 2.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS HOLTZ-EAKIN,
Director.

Enclosures.

TRIBUTE TO RONALD R. MAZIK

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, today I want to take a few minutes to remember Ronald R. Mazik and pay tribute to the many contributions he has made to his community, to his profession, and to this country.

Ron played many roles and achieved much in his lifetime. As an athlete, engineer and businessman, he excelled in a wide array of endeavors. Of his many achievements, one is particularly deserving of mention: as a pioneer in the field of telehealth.

Ron conceptualized and initiated innovations in the use of video and advanced communication systems, which are revolutionizing the way health services are provided to people with exceptional needs. His seminal work in interactive video promises to improve both the accessibility and quality of supports to those with developmental, mental and physical challenges, and brings us closer to our dream of insuring that all citizens lead a full and healthy life. The intellect and energy that Ron applied toward that goal must be regarded as an olympic performance.

Of Ron's contributions to the field of telehealth and to society, those close to him knew that he most valued his role as a father to his sons, Ron and Ken. With his many accomplishments, he unfailingly looked to his sons as his greatest source of pride and of joy.

It is an honor to recognize Ronald R. Mazik for his contributions to all of our lives.

RETIREMENT OF JAMES E. MCMULLEN

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I rise to honor James E. McMullen, Deputy Assistant Secretary, Budget and Strategic Planning of the Department of Labor on the occasion of his retirement. In his capacity as Deputy Assistant Secretary, Mr. McMullen was responsible for the Department's management and implementation of the Government Performance and Results Act, GPRA, and provided senior departmental staff with recommendations, guidance, and assistance in making decisions and selecting appropriate alternatives to meet short- and long-range budget goals. Mr. McMullen was also responsible for the development of policies, systems, and procedures for the Department's budget of $60 billion, and was charged with planning, directing, and coordinating the formulation and presentation of the Department's budget submissions to the Office of Management and Budget and to Congress.

Mr. McMullen has served as Associate Deputy Secretary of Labor. In that position he assisted the Deputy Secretary in the Development of positions on major policy issues and provided policy guidance and program direction to Assistant Secretaries.

Mr. McMullen previously served as the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Administration and Management. In that position, he was responsible for the day-to-day management of the Department's budget, human resources, information technology, administrative services, grant and contract policy, civil rights, and safety and health.

Mr. McMullen served as the Department of Labor's Budget Director for several years. He joined the Department's Office of Budget in August 1980 and held several positions of increasing responsibility. Mr. McMullen came to the Department of Labor as a Presidential management intern. During his internship, he worked for the House Appropriations Committee and the Office of Management and Budget, as well as several locations within the Department.

In April 2004 he received the Philip Arnow Award, which is the highest honor given to a career employee in the Department of Labor. In 1999 he received the Meritorious Executive Rank Award, and he has received special recognition from the William A. Jump Memorial Foundation for his outstanding achievements in public service.

I have been either chairman or ranking member of the Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee since January 1989, working in partnership with Senator TOM HARKIN. For all these years, Jim McMullen has been a fixture at our budget hearings, and has provided outstanding assistance to our committee. His will be hard shoes to fill, and he will be missed. We wish him well in his future endeavors, and thank him for his dedication to duty, hard work, and professionalism that set such a high standard for others to follow in public service.

AMERICAN LEGION PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT COMMANDER ROBERT D. ''BOB'' SHALALA

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I recognize an American patriot whose commitment and dedication to the cause of our veterans has been long established. From 1960 to 1964, Bob Shalala served on active duty in the United States Navy aboard the U.S.S. Galveston, the U.S.S. Wright and the U.S.S. Fred T. Berry. Before his active duty ended, he served as the aide to the Commanding Officer of a naval air squadron and was also selected to join the Navy's Blue Jacket Choir, which entertained audiences around the country. Returning to Pennsylvania, he started his illustrious 40-year career as a Philadelphia police officer and twice was selected as Police Officer of the Year.

His remarkable career in the American Legion of Pennsylvania began with the Legion's Philadelphia Police Post. In the next 37 years, Bob gave new meaning to the word ''leadership'' as he served in every position from the Post level to District Commander to Sectional Commander to the top position—Department Commander. In between, he managed to chair a host of different committees and served as the Pennsylvania American Legion top membership recruiter for 2 years while placing second nationally in the Legion's membership effort.

Not surprisingly, Bob Shalala's goal as Department Commander over the past year has been to improve and promote membership. The American Legion in the State of Pennsylvania is the largest in the country and the position of Department Commander is a formidable one. From peers and members comes that Bob accepted the challenge of leadership and has set a high standard for his successors to emulate. An excellent spokesman, Bob Shalala departs his position as Department Commander in July 2004 with the gratitude of the Department's 240,000 members for a job performed exceedingly well. As the mantle of leadership passes to a new Department Commander, I express my gratitude to Bob Shalala for serving Pennsylvania veterans with such alacrity and dedication. He has faced the churning sea and completed his mission. In nautical terms that Navy men will understand, I raise high the flag hoist signaling Bravo Zulu—well done.

PENNSYLVANIA AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY PRESIDENT ANN CONEYBEER

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today, I honor the many women who serve our veterans through their tireless efforts and membership in auxiliaries of such organizations as the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion to name a few. These women, the wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of veterans give tirelessly of their time to provide needed assistance and funding to veterans and their families in the communities.

In particular, I cite Ann Coneybeer—the outgoing President of the Pennsylvania American Legion Auxiliary. In July 2004, Ann will complete her tour of duty in this elected position.

Ann had four brothers who served in World War II thus making her eligible for membership in the Legion. For the past 41 years she has been a very active member where she has served as Unit President, Western Vice President and Department Vice President. In between Ann held a number of chairmanships at the State level including Leadership, Americanism, Constitution and By-Laws, Finance, Membership, Parliamentarian, Poppy and Veterans Affairs & Rehab and Children and Youth. Serving as Chairman is often a thankless job, but Ann fulfilled these responsibilities with dedication, energy and persistence.

As Ann Coneybeer departs office, I extend to her my thanks and the thanks of Pennsylvania veterans and their families for her many years of service, for her leadership and, most of all, for her belief in the cause of our Nation's veterans and our Nation's principles. She is truly a great American and it is a privilege that I honor her today.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2003

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the need for hate crimes legislation. On May 1, 2003, Senator KENNEDY and I introduced the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, a bill that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

On February 10, 2000, in Bay Shore, NY, Javier Morales was charged with allegedly assaulting a man he believed was gay.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.●

RETIREMENT OF DR. TALLEY

● Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to acknowledge the work of a wonderfully talented individual, whose leadership has helped the University of South Dakota Medical School grow, and advance an excellent reputation within the national health care community during his 17-year tenure as dean. At the age of 68, Dr. Robert Talley retires from his role as dean to become the University of South Dakota's interim director for internal medicine residency in Sioux Falls, where he will continue to teach and guide our South Dakota medical community.

Dr. Talley graduated from the University of Michigan in 1958 and from the University of Chicago Medical School in 1962. He went on to Yale New Haven Hospital where he pursued an internship and residency. He then completed cardiology and clinical pharmacology fellowships at Grady Memorial Hospital in 1969.

Dr. Talley's career took him to various positions in San Antonio, with the University of Texas Medical School and Veterans Administration Hospital from 1969 through 1975. He became the chairman of the USD Department of Internal Medicine in 1975, and was promoted to dean in 1987. Dr. Talley was a founding member of the Medical Service Plan, the predecessor of University Physicians.

While Dr. Talley served as dean, the medical school received full accreditation during each review. Dr. Talley developed a model of medical student clinical education, which is considered cutting edge in the United States, and helped to form unique partnerships with the South Dakota Health Science Research Foundation and the Wegner Health Science Information Center. In the past 5 years, funded research in the basic biomedical sciences division alone grew 189 percent, resulting in great part from Dr. Talley's reorganization of the basic biomedical sciences division at the university. Dr. Talley provided outstanding leadership in medical education and is responsible for significant innovation in USD's approach to the education of South Dakota's health care providers.

At the national level, Talley is a member of the Liaison Committee on Medical Education, which accredits 125 undergraduate medical education programs in the United States. He served as chair of the American Medical Association Section on Medical Schools and chair of the Internal Medicine Committee, National Board of Medical Examiners. Most recently, the American College of Physicians—American Society of Internal Medicine bestowed a Mastership rank on Dr. Talley in recognition of his distinguished contributions to internal medicine.

Dr. Talley could have devoted his talents to private practice. But instead he chose to be an educator—he chose to use his skills in a manner that would enable him to reach a wide circle of individuals and which has had profoundly important public policy consequences.

He knows his students by name and utilizes the wide range of his students' abilities to enhance classroom discussion. His approach to teaching enriches health education on multiple levels that will prepare students for real-life situations in working with patients. Dr. Talley's impact on the University of South Dakota, its students and faculty, and on the entire State will be felt for generations to come.●

TRIBUTE TO KENT A. SMITH

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, as a Member of the Senate who has worked in the area of medical research and health care, I draw the attention of the Congress—and Nation—to the retirement of a truly outstanding civil servant: Kent A. Smith. For the past quarter century, Mr. Smith, as deputy director, has managed the day-to-day operation of the National Library of Medicine, a part of the National Institutes of Health, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The National Library of Medicine is the largest medical library in the world, and it serves as the indispensable hub of national and international scientific medical communication.

The administrative and managerial astuteness of Mr. Smith has converted the vision of the Library's directors, Donald A.B. Lindberg, M.D., and his predecessor, Martin M. Cummings, M.D., into outstanding operational programs. There are many examples. One of the great success stories at the Library and the National Institutes of Health in the last decade is the National Center for Biotechnology Information. This institution, which serves as the collector and disseminator of molecular sequence data resulting from the Human Genome Program, is absolutely indispensable to the conduct of 21st century biomedical science. Its various web services are used almost a billion times each year by people around the globe. Mr. Smith provided invaluable support to members of the House and Senate, and their staff, in developing the legislation that created the center.

He has also been closely associated with the amazingly successful entry of the National Library of Medicine into the world of web-based consumer health information relied on by millions of Americans. His skill at managing people and budgets has allowed the Library to move beyond its traditional emphasis on serving exclusively scientists and health professionals. Today, such heavily used consumer information services as MedlinePlus, ClinicalTrials.gov, NIHSeniorHealth.gov, and the Household Products Database are testimony to his success in administering such a diverse institution as the Library now is.

Kent Smith, trained in mathematics, economics, and management, is known to medical librarians around the world. In our country he has had close ties to the 5,000 member institutions of the National Network of Libraries of Medicine, and he has championed their cause in many venues. His leadership and tireless efforts have had great impact on the development of federal information policies that ensure broad public access to an expanding universe of electronic government health information resources.

He is also known for his strong leadership of national and international organizations in the information field. He has served as President of the National Federation of Abstracting and Indexing Services, President of the International Council of Scientific and Technical Information, Chair of the Policy Group of the Federal Library and Information Center Committee, Vice President of the UNESCO General Information Program, and Chairman of CENDI, a group of federal scientific and technical information and technology managers.

I am aware that there are many farsighted and dedicated managers serving the people of the United States. It is a pleasure for me to honor one with whom I am personally acquainted and who, on the occasion of his retirement, richly deserves our thanks for a job well done.●

IOWA AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY UNITS

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to recognize the activities of two American Legion Auxiliary Units in Iowa, the Walter T. Enneberg 358 Auxiliary Unit in St. Ansgar, IA, and Auxiliary Unit 278 in Osage, IA. I thank them for their contributions to their communities. I ask unanimous consent that a newspaper article detailing the activities of the St. Ansgar unit and a summary of the activities of the Osage Unit be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[April 17, 2004]

AMERICAN LEGION UNIT #358 REVIEW

The American Legion Unit #358 of St. Ansgar, meets on the second Tuesday of each month. The evening starts with a potluck supper with the members of the Legion, followed by our business meeting. We presently have 106 paid up members.

The hostesses for each month send personal care kits to the Mental Health Institute at Independence, the Iowa Veteran's Home at Marshalltown, the Iowa Training School at Eldora, the USVA Hospital at Knoxville, or the Mitchell County Care Facility at Osage.

We have been busy with many pleasant and worthwhile activities this year, including:

Sponsoring a high school junior at Girl's State and having her present a report at one of our meetings.

Sponsoring two blood drives with the Blood Center of Iowa.

Conducting a Poppy Day in St. Ansgar.

Sponsoring a Fluff and Pillow cleaning as a fund raiser.

Presenting apples to the St. Ansgar School administrators, teachers, support staff and school board members during American Education Week.

Providing a special article for our local newspaper during American Education Week featuring a picture and short interview with each teacher of our school district.

Presenting each of the residents of Mitchell County Care Facility with a personal, specially selected Christmas gift. This year the cost of this special project was about $250.

Awarding a $200 scholarship to a second year college student—some years we have given more than one scholarship.

Assisting with food and decorations for the annual Birthday Ball sponsored by the St. Ansgar American Legion and sharing the cost of this lovely evening.

Giving special contributions on Flag Day to support our special projects. This replaces the bake sale and coffee hour that we use to sponsor.

Marching in the Memorial Day parade..

Entering a patriotic float in the parade on June 21st to celebrate 150th anniversary of the founding of St. Ansgar.

Presenting a special program on July 3 at the Good Samaritan Center in St. Ansgar about the history of our flag. Legion members conducted the 13 folds of the flag for the residents.

Taking paper back books to the Veterans Home in Marshalltown.

Paying one half of the cost of food for the annual Legion/Auxiliary membership dinner in November.

Contributing $25 toward the cost of cases of microwave popcorn sent by Alamo Scouts to our troops in Iraq.

Sharing the cost with the Legion for a new flag for the St. Ansgar Senior Citizens Center.

Providing walkers, wheel chairs and other medical equipment as needed by anyone in the community.

Contributing $100 toward the project headed by Ruth Loney to provide stockings from Fox River Mills for our servicemen and women.

Contributing $100 toward President Rozena MaVey's project for a lighted flag at the entrance of the Veteran's Home in Marshalltown.

Sending coupons to service families in Germany.

Osage Unit 278 held their annual Bake Sale Luncheon on April 16th at the American Legion Post home in Osage. Each year the proceeds of this event are used to award $250.00 scholarships to worthy graduating seniors of Osage High School.

This year's event was highly successful and the Unit will be awarding five (5) scholarships of $250.00 each to seniors chosen through the application and interview process. Awards will be presented at the Osage High School Awards Assembly the week of April 20th.

Osage Auxiliary Unit 278 takes pride in performing many acts of service to the community, state and nation. Our greatest endeavor is to support our veterans and our troops in this current war which has placed many of our young men and women in the military in harm's way.●

HONORING THE CITY OF LENNOX

● Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish to honor and publicly recognize the 125th anniversary of the founding of the town of Lennox, SD. The town of Lennox has a proud past and a promising future. In 1879, the Milwaukee Railroad established a branch where the town stands today.

The town of Lennox was named after B.G. Lennox, private secretary to S.S. Merrill, a railroad executive. By 1880, 90 people lived in Lennox, and the town has experienced steady growth since then. The 2000 census listed Lennox as having a population of just over 2,000 people.

Lennox is governed by a seven-person city council. There are numerous projects and major developments underway in Lennox. Currently, the city is upgrading its water system, with two new water towers and a new well to ensure that the city has plenty of water. The Lennox Commercial Club has many of the town's businesses as members and meets monthly to sponsor promotions and encourage business growth. An active senior center, the Good Samaritan Center, the Hilda's Heritage Home all provide support for seniors.

Small towns like Lennox are the backbone of rural States such as South Dakota. A growing community built by good neighbors and a strong foundation is a great place to raise a family. The town has been celebrating throughout the year and is continuing through July with events at the high school, community church and a sauerkraut/polka party on the town's main street. This sort of wholesome, small town celebration is a great example of rural South Dakota's commitment to good values and local history. It is with great honor that I share this great community with my colleagues.●

RECOGNIZING GREG CANNELL OF AMERICAN FALLS, IDAHO

● Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I rise to recognize Mr. Greg Cannell of American Falls, ID, for his heroic actions in saving the life of a rural mail carrier. Last December, Greg selflessly and fearlessly jumped into near-freezing waters to save a mail carrier who had skidded off a winding mountain road and into the nearby river.
