Mr. Speaker, the reason why we must go forward today is for the very reason that our colleagues have been addressing themselves to our colleagues, if you will. We have a crisis, a dire crisis in Pakistan. There is no time for us to quarrel over what really are minimal differences, if you will. Right now, as we speak, 2½ million people are homeless. They are fleeing the conflicts in the Swat area that has been initiated by the Pakistani Government that is standing not for America, but is standing for the freedom of her people. And we must applaud these actions.

We must look to the leadership of the President, the leadership of the Secretary of State, who has a strong commitment to Pakistan, the policies of this new government. Our government is to recognize Pakistan as an ally. And so 1886 is a bill that recognizes comprehensively that we have an equal ally that is fighting against terrorism within their borders.

I have been to Peshawar, Islamabad, and any number of the sites visiting with leaders around the Nation. I have been to the schools that are trying to replace the madrasas. And in this legislation, we have, for example, a Pakistan development and prosperity fund.

Just 3 weeks ago, a hundred-plus members of the Pakistani community met in New York to talk about how they can provide social services to that nation. As we speak, there are medical doctors from the Pakistani-American community that are leaving their homes here in the United States to go to Pakistan to help these refugees.

So let us look at the big picture that this legislation provides. The prosperity fund, yes, there are conditionalities, but I would suggest that they are refrained from the issues that the distinguished Member in the other body spoke to, and we're going to work even further.

But if our colleagues appreciate the fact that there are dire conditions that the Pakistan military is fighting the terrorists, they will help us pass 1886. This bill refers, itself, to the nuclear materials and requires the protecting of those materials. Do we want to leave that willy-nilly?

This particular legislation also, in essence, helps to protect women and girls, to provide more resources for women and girls. It helps to deradicalize the youth. This legislation is a stopgap to the crisis and the emergency.

I ask my colleagues to read it. This bill should be passed.

I urge you to support H.R. 1886, The Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation

Enhancement Act. H.R. 1886 establishes a new, more positive framework for U.S.-Pakistan relations. The legislation establishes a set of principles that should govern the U.S.-Pakistan relationship, including the actions that the two countries should take to maintain a robust, relevant and lasting relationship. The bill is comprised of three titles.

The first title provides Economic, Social and Democratic Development Assistance for Pakistan; the second title provides Security Assistance for Pakistan; and the third title requires the President to develop a regional security strategy; provides for enhanced monitoring, evaluation, and auditing of U.S. assistance; requires a Presidential report on Pakistan, including an evaluation on Pakistan's progress in counterterrorism and an assessment of whether assistance provided to Pakistan is in any way facilitating the expansion of Pakistan's nuclear weapons program; and requires that all assistance to Pakistan be provided through a civilian government in Pakistan established by free and fair elections.

Pakistan is a critical ally of the United States. For too long, however, our relationship with Pakistan has been one of fits and starts, depending on events in the region and who happens to be in power in Pakistan. It is time for us the United States to forge a truly strategic partnership with Pakistan, one that goes beyond our mutual interest today in counterinsurgency and counterterrorism and speaks to the everyday needs of the average Pakistani.

H.R. 1886 accomplishes these objectives. The legislation would significantly expand economic, social and democracy assistance to help lay the foundation for a stronger, more stable Pakistan. In particular, the bill authorizes a Pakistan Democracy and Prosperity Fund, a permanent fund in the U.S. Treasury for which the United States, along with other interested nations, nongovernmental organizations and even private citizens, can contribute to the prosperous future of Pakistan. The fund also provides additional flexibility to the State Department in order to provide such assistance, thereby responding to the ever dynamic situation Pakistan faces with its on going efforts to counter a domestic insurgency and provide humanitarian care for its displaced people.

As much as we must focus on the internal conflicts in Pakistan, we must not forget the external issues affecting the region as a whole and the need for stabilization.

Over the years, U.S. assistance to Pakistan has fluctuate with political events, sending mixed messages and leading most Pakistanis to question both our intentions and our staying power. Today, many Pakistanis believe the United States will cut and run when it serves our purpose, a belief which undermines our longterm efforts to defeat extremists, foster democratic change, and support transparent and accountable institutions that promote security and stability in Pakistan.

However, the status quo is not working: many in the United States believe we are paying too much and getting too little—and most Pakistanis believe exactly the opposite. Without changing this baseline, there is little likelihood of drying up popular tolerance for anti-U.S. terrorist groups or persuading Pakistani leaders to devote the political capital necessary to deny such groups sanctuary and covert material support.

The bill helps bridge a sustainable U.S.-Pakistan partnership through an increased focus on public diplomacy and engagement. H.R. 1886 authorizes a new exchange program for Pakistani civil servants and military officers in order to foster greater respect for and understanding of the principle of civilian rule in Pakistan's military. By building bridges to Pakistan and its people, the legislation is intended to provide a new, more positive framework for U.S.-Pakistan relations. Finally, the bill authorizes an extensive increase in military assistance to help Pakistan wage an effective counterinsurgency campaign against those forces that threaten Pakistan's national security.

This legislation establishes a new, more positive framework for U.S.-Pakistan relations. The legislation establishes a set of principles that should govern the U.S.-Pakistan relationship, including the actions that the two countries should take to maintain a robust, relevant and lasting relationship.

RECONSTRUCTION OPPORTUNITY ZONES

It is important to note that the rule incorporated into this bill a modified version of H.R. 1318, Afghanistan-Pakistan Security and Prosperity Enhancement Act. These provisions create Reconstruction Opportunity Zones (ROZs) in Afghanistan and Pakistan, where non-trade-sensitive exports would be permitted to enter the U.S. duty-free.

From a broader foreign policy perspective, the ROZ initiative constitutes an affirmation of the importance of the United States attaches to Pakistan and Afghanistan via a long term effective economic program that is directly aimed at improving the lives of its people. ROZs work toward achieving counterinsurgency policy goals, as job creation in these areas would counter al-Qaeda and Taliban recruitment efforts by offering alternatives to joining the insurgency. Such job creation and will serve as positive reinforcement for young people on a path toward building a solid future in Pakistan where these young people would otherwise turn to extremism as their way of life.

Moreover, it should be noted that the AFL-CIO does not oppose ROZs, as these zones assist in achieving the delicate balance of helping Pakistan establish a better economy, while simultaneously respecting trade restrictions here in the United States. On the premise of a new friendship between the United States and Pakistan, we need to support H.R. 1886. The ROZ initiative open avenues for employment and job growth in Afghanistan and Pakistan, and its impact will help shut down paths that lead to terrorism, warlords and the drug trade. Additionally, I was a co-sponsor of the original ROZ bill and maintain its importance.

AMENDMENT LANGUAGE

I have worked tirelessly with Chairman BERMAN to include several key provisions in this important legislation. First, I am pleased that the Chairman has included language from my past amendments in the legislation which states that the United States recognizes the recent major efforts that Pakistan has taken in the SWAT area. Second, my language included in the former manager's amendment includes language on page 40 in section 206 which states that any limitations on the dispensation of military funds to Pakistan should be modified or reconsidered if Pakistan has made rapid compliance with the objectives contained in the section (i.e., those objectives that lead to cooperation with the United States). Additionally, the legislation includes important language on page 19 that funding for education must be used for the education of school girls between the ages of 10-20 and that the money should be used to make sure that these girls stay in school.

I have also worked closely on the Manager's Amendment to H.R. 1886, which includes important language that funding for rehabilitation programs is designed to deter military insurgency. It is imperative that United States security assistance for Pakistan should be used for the creation of militant rehabilitation programs designed to rehabilitate insurgents and to prevent youth from turning to militancy from the onset. Such militant rehabilitation programs shall be implemented by moderate Islamic clerics, in keeping with Islamic tradition. United States security assistance for Pakistan should further be used to create incentives for steering insurgents away from militancy by providing financial support and job assistance for those militants who effectively renounce their subscription to militancy. I would urge that my colleagues support the Manager's Amendment. I believe that it contains language that would be of benefit to the Pakistani people.

CODELS TO PAKISTAN

I have been to Pakistan many times. My belief in this country and its relationship with the United States drove me to co-chair the Pakistan Caucus. This year alone, I have participated in two Congressional Delegation Trips to Pakistan, and I am very passionate about diplomatic relations between our two countries.

Benazir Bhutto, shortly before her death, said that "The next few months are critical to Pakistan's future direction as a democratic state committed to promoting peace, fighting terrorism and working for social justice. Democracy is necessary to peace and to undermining the forces of terrorism." I had the pleasure of knowing the late Benazir Bhutto and losing her in death was truly a tragedy felt beyond Pakistan. She made this statement over two years ago, yet is relevant today more than ever.

On May 19, 2009, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton announced $110 million in emergency assistance for the South Asia nation of Pakistan, including aid for civilians fleeing a military offensive against Taliban militants in the northwest. The United Nations refugee agency issued a report stating that more than 1.4 million people in the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) have been registered as displaced since May 2, describing the flood as the largest and swiftest to take place anywhere in the world in recent years.

The newly-registered internally displaced persons (IDP) took the total number of those who have fled their homes in the SWAT valley and surrounding areas to 2 million.

I am hopeful that the $110 million in emergency assistance will get to the people on ground and will be of assistance to them. It is important that the people of Pakistan see that the aid is coming from America to give a face to this aid. It is essential to global security and the security of the United States.

The surge of IDPs followed the launch of a military offensive in late April. President Asif Ali Zardari acted after U.S. officials stepped up warnings that Islamabad's willingness to tolerate and negotiate peace deals with the militants was endangering both Pakistan and the wider region. The Taliban fighting spread to NWFP districts and SWAT.

President Obama's new approach to Pakistan is different than anything that has been tried before. America has expressed that it will support the democratically-elected government and it will have a clear and transparent relationship.

In conclusion, I urge you to support H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act, which seeks to and effectively establishes a new, more positive and enduring framework for U.S.-Pakistan relations.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Before yielding time to my distinguished friend from Florida, I would like to clarify that Senator KERRY was indeed referring to the bill as amended to the text we're considering today. And further, much reference has been made to the Armed Services Committee, as the gentleman knows from Florida, but the Armed Services minority did not sign off on the bill before us due to pending concerns.

And with that, I am proud to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER), the ranking member on the Armed Services Subcommittee on Terrorism and Unconventional Threats.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. I thank the ranking member, and I appreciate you bringing up the fact that our friends on the majority are, again, talking about the bipartisan efforts that have been made with the Armed Services Committee, all of the extensive negotiations that have taken place. I serve on the Armed Services Committee. I am the ranking member, as Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN just said. There has been absolutely no negotiation with any member of the minority side of the House Armed Services Committee.

You know, it sounds like a great thing to support when you look at the bill, at least the title of the bill, but when you start looking at it, reading it, listening to the people who it actually is going to affect, like General David Petraeus who I met at CENTCOM last week and had an opportunity to talk to him about these specific issues, he said it is going to tie their hands, not allow us to do what we need to do and the military needs to do to train and assist in this very important issue.

Nobody, I think, has any qualms or quarrels with the majority side saying this is something that needs to be done. The issue is a jurisdictional problem with regards to whether State or DOD has input or actually controls what goes on in this program.

Look, I've been to Pakistan and Afghanistan three times in the last year. I understand what's going on there. I know how hard the Pakistanis are fighting to control what's going on in their country. We need to do what we can do to help with the counterinsurgency problem. But it's my understanding that the President does not support this particular piece of legislation and, as has already been said on the floor today, that Senator KERRY does not support this particular piece of legislation.

So those are the facts. Others may not want to necessarily address those facts and say that they are, in fact, true, but they are. And I heard a Member on the floor of the House yesterday trying desperately to get Members to understand and believe that Foreign Service members, as a whole, are actually on the front lines.

Look, the State Department cannot compel any State Department employee to go into a combat zone. This is a DOD issue. This is a counterinsurgency issue. It needs to be in the basket, if you will, of the Department of Defense. The majority's tendency to use diplomacy for every single thing should not result in a career State Department bureaucrat running a military counterinsurgency operation. It just shouldn't be so.

Look, as I said, they can't legally compel their people to go into a combat zone, but what they do is they use money for programs to fly Muslim people from the United States of America to Sweden to talk about issues in regards to Islamic outreach, which I have serious concerns with that particular program, but that's the State Department and that's what they want to do. I think they probably would have thought that the diplomatic efforts that Pakistan made in the Swat Valley was the thing that we should have done. It was not something that should have been done, and we know the Taliban broke the truce real quickly after that was done.

But look, the Department of State should not be taking the lead in this vital issue. It should be the Department of Defense. And I think that, ultimately, Members of this body on both sides of the aisle understand that.

So I urge a defeat of this flawed particular piece of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN) may control the time of the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN).

There was no objection.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlelady from California (Ms. WATSON.)

Ms. WATSON. I rise today in support of H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act, called PEACE, of 2009.

Since President Barack Obama took the reins of our Nation, he has begun to lead us in a new era of foreign policy based on the theme: listen, learn, then lead.

This bill introduced by Chairman BERMAN is the beginning of this new era of American foreign policy which will give the President the tools he needs to bring peace and long-lasting stability to Pakistan. The PEACE Act authorizes the President to provide assistance for Pakistan to enhance economic development, human rights, cultural and educational programs, the judicial system, and democratic institutions in order to strengthen civilian rule and long-term stability.

This bill does not allow Pakistan to use any of this assistance to upgrade or buy new F-16s or upgrade its nuclear arsenal. The reporting requirements in the PEACE Act provide the necessary oversight provisions which require Pakistan's government and the Obama administration to inform Congress on the progress and uses of our assistance.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1886.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I reserve the balance of our time.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CONNOLLY).

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. I thank my colleague, Mr. Speaker, and I rise in support of H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance Cooperation Act, and I congratulate our chairman, Mr. BERMAN, for his leadership.

This bill is a national security bill. It authorizes military assistance to help Pakistan disrupt and defeat al Qaeda and insurgent elements, including the Taliban, and requires that the majority of such assistance be focused on critical counterinsurgency and counterterrorism efforts.

Additionally, the bill requires that all military assistance flow through the democratically elected Government of Pakistan.

The legislation includes accountability measures for military assistance, including a requirement that the Government of Pakistan demonstrate a sustained commitment to combating terrorism. The bill aligns Pakistan's defense goals with ours by conditioning military aid. Specifically, the bill provides $400 million a year in military aid on the condition that Pakistan cooperate in dismantling nuclear supply networks and fighting terrorist groups. The bill will not provide funding for Pakistan to build its forces on the eastern border with India, as the real threat lies on the western border. To this end, the bill would bar the use of foreign military financing to buy or upgrade F-16 fighter jets with the exception of money to finish a 2006 deal.

I understand the concerns about Pakistan's commitment to fighting terrorism. I myself have concerns about Pakistan's nuclear arsenal and its past history of proliferation. This is why, at my request, the report language accompanying this bill specifically mentions the A.Q. Khan proliferation network as a source of concern in the United States and that representatives of the United States must have access to him because they have not interviewed him.

Pakistan, Mr. Speaker, is a key partner in South Asian security. Clearly, recent events in the Swat Valley demonstrate that stability in the region is not just an American concern. We must move ahead with clear expectations and goals, as this bill enumerates, to ensure that U.S. aid is being used in the most effective manner possible. Ultimately, this will benefit both the Pakistani people and U.S. strategic interests. This bill, H.R. 1886, does that; and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, before yielding to my good friend from Texas, I would like to point out, as the previous speaker noted, this is supposed to be a national security bill, yet the majority tagged on a trade bill to it, and then, under the rule, attaches it to the State bill.

I am proud to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY), the ranking member on the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill due to the last-minute addition of the Pakistan Afghanistan Recovery Opportunity Zone bill.

While I commend Congressman VAN HOLLEN for his hard work and his strong commitment to this very important legislation, I am concerned the bill fails to encourage significant investment in the Afghan and Pakistan regions under the new trade program. And I say that as someone who believes that trade can be a powerful tool to help developing countries lift themselves up out of poverty. Unfortunately, I believe this bill will discourage economic development and investment because it includes some dangerous eligibility criteria that will drive away investment and require each firm, including U.S. firms, there to meet labor standards that could exceed U.S. law in such a way that will create a dangerous precedent that could be applied to our own free-trade agreements, making U.S. labor laws vulnerable to challenge from foreign countries.

And the scope of the eligible products in the bill, unfortunately, have been whittled down—I know there have been difficult negotiations to try and broaden that—and it imposes fees on certain Pakistan products in return for sales of others; again, sort of, I think, a trade-off that has been difficult to swallow.

I am concerned that this measure, despite its excellent intentions—and again, very hard work from Congressman VAN HOLLEN—will fall short of its objectives to bring economic stability to this very difficult region.

I would point out, too, we are doing a lot to open up America to foreign countries. We've had six votes to open up America to foreign sales, but no votes to open up other countries to what we sell. It's not enough to buy American; we need to sell American products throughout the world. And in this economic recession, we have three pending trade agreements that would allow us to sell $11 billion of American products around the world to create jobs here in the United States that are being held up, not brought to a vote on the floor. We need to get our priorities right. As we help lift countries up, let's lift American jobs up as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) reclaims his time from the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN).

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to the ranking member of the Terrorism Non-proliferation and Trade Subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee, a cosponsor of the legislation and another member of the congressional delegation that went to Pakistan last month. In fact, everybody who went to Pakistan with me is supporting this bill. I should have taken more people. But I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE).

Mr. ROYCE. I rise in support of this very important legislation, and I think there are a few points that we should keep in mind.

The first is that Pakistan is a tinderbox; its government is very weak, and social and economic trends are moving in the wrong direction and that is fostering extremism. The Pakistan Government has killed many militants over the last few weeks, but the insurgency remains potent. And, clearly, Pakistan is going to be troubled for some time.

Second, this region is the center of international terrorism. And most importantly, Pakistan has a growing nuclear arsenal. Now, we can either stay engaged and try to shape events, or go to the sidelines and see a bad situation become a possible disaster.

Third, to date, Pakistan has taken us for a ride. Since 9/11, we have provided Pakistan with some $12.3 billion. We spent billions before that. I've been to Pakistan a number of times; I have seen what has happened without conditions. I have also seen the need there. A school that I visited in the North-West Frontier has now been blown up, and madrasas now educate kids there in jihad. I have been to Peshawar. I've been to the regions where this militancy has to be confronted.

Little has improved without conditions, and there has been significant waste and corruption. So this legislation is the proposal we have with the best conditions. It best conditions that aid. It takes the position that while we must work with the Pakistani Government, our experience demands greater accountability from that government. No blank checks. That the Pakistan Government denounces this bill's conditions, frankly, should be a selling point.

I do, however, have one significant reservation. The trade provision that the Rules Committee majority added to this bill is sheer window dressing. As this bill goes to conference with the Senate, as the process continues, this trade provision must be liberalized. Increasing trade should be an important goal.

In short, the situation in Pakistan is dire, and with its nuclear arsenal, the stakes could not be any higher. We need all the accountability we can get. And that's why I support this bill.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am so proud to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP), the ranking member on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CAMP. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

I strongly oppose H.R. 1886, in particular, language inserted at the Rules Committee to create a new, but poorly designed, trade preference program for Afghanistan and Pakistan.

While I would support a well-designed program to create jobs and spur economic development, this legislation is deeply flawed. First, it brings virtually no economic benefit because the product mix is stingy—an economic fig leaf that should fool no one.

My second objection is even more fundamental. While the bill is light on commercial benefits, it is heavy on intrusive, impractical labor requirements that could exceed U.S. law. Now, I very much support improving labor conditions; but these new, unnecessarily onerous labor criteria would impede investment and won't improve labor conditions.

Specifically, this legislation requires the Secretary of Labor to designate any entity to conduct firm-level inspections in Afghanistan and Pakistan to ensure compliance with "core labor standards," even an NGO hostile to trade. This vague language subjects firms to arbitrary standards that could exceed U.S. law—I repeat, that could exceed U.S. law. Given the dire security situation there, having inspectors go from door to door, even cottage to cottage, to enforce such standards strains credibility.

Moreover, this standard exceeds the labor provisions in other preference programs and even our trade agreements negotiated under the bipartisan May 10 standard for FTAs both lauded by the Speaker and Chairman RANGEL. It could be viewed as a precedent to justify the inclusion of similar language, not only in new trade agreements, but perhaps even in efforts to revise existing ones, which would, of course, apply to us as well, leaving the United States vulnerable to challenges that our labor laws don't meet this standard.

I am also concerned about the pay-for. For every dollar of duty relief that reconstruction opportunity zone exports from these countries receive, other Pakistani and Afghan exports have to pay at least that amount in increased fees, making these countries potentially worse off than they are right now.

Lastly, I am disappointed that this is my first opportunity to explain my concerns. This bill was not even considered by the Ways and Means Committee, which, again, it's not about the committee but again this denies the American people their voice. This is not the return to regular order we were promised by the Speaker. And I fear this is not the last time this month I will be on the floor raising that concern.

The provision also subverts the prerogatives out of the House by turning an aid bill into a revenue measure, ripe for mischief when it gets to the other side of the Capitol.

Because of all of this, I strongly oppose the legislation in its current form. I urge my colleagues to vote against the measure.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the principal cosponsor of the legislation, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

Mr. KIRK. I thank the chairman.

I want to praise the chairman and his team for putting together a bipartisan bill regarding our assistance to Pakistan. This is a very critical region for the United States and assistance is authorized under this legislation, and necessary. But as was stated before, when Colin Powell called the President of Pakistan right after September 11, he offered a choice: you're either with us or against us. And President Musharraf picked well. Under that arrangement, we did provide $12 billion to Pakistan but largely without strings attached. And the Pakistani effort against the militants, especially in the frontier autonomous region, was initially aggressive but then petered out. The United States was providing $16 million a month to the Pakistani military but after 2005 was receiving little benefit.

Under the new government, that is, unquestionably, a democratic government, I think we have a more stable partner to deal with in the war on terror, specifically in what the Pentagon would call the "al Qaeda core." With this new government really representing the essence of the Pakistani middle class, we now take on their true aspirations in which the central issue for the long term is not nuclear competition with India, but how quickly Pakistan is falling behind India's rising economic growth.

In that view, then, a bunch of radicals ruining the economic and business climate of Pakistan is a mortal danger to the future income of Pakistanis. On that basis, a war on terror is solidly grounded in democracy, in the Pakistani middle class, and the joint interest to the United States. But this bill reflects what we have learned over the last 5 years, that strings should be attached, that benchmarks should be established, that we should have accountability in that very difficult part of the world.

I will also praise this bill because it is probably the only free trade bill this Congress will adopt, and it represents a true bipartisan will that will help add to the employment of Pakistan and stability of that country.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the vice Chair of the Subcommittee on Terrorism, Nuclear Nonproliferation, and International Trade of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, thank you very much.

This is really the most critical, the most important piece of legislation facing us right now. The situation in Pakistan is very tenuous; it is very critical. We have before us a very significant piece of legislation that has been expertly crafted. Yes, trade is a part of it because trade is important at this time to make sure that we are able to help sustain the economy of Pakistan at this very critical time.

Pakistan is in a fragile situation. Military aid is in here, yes, because Pakistan needs this. But we have the safeguards here because, let me just say, the other side mentioned something a little while back about the Department of Defense and their role. Let us go back for an example in Afghanistan.

In Afghanistan, we do not want another repeat of the very significant problem that the Department of Defense had in Afghanistan with losing—yes, losing—significant military equipment to the Taliban.

The U.S. taxpayers deserve better, and in this bill we are giving them better. We are giving the oversight. In essence, we are making sure that aid that we give to Pakistan is properly used, that oversight is in place, that benchmarks are in place. We're making sure that any entity that is being used, whether it's military or certainly their nuclear weapons, do not fall into terrorists' hands or into other hands. We've made sure, under the leadership of Ms. LEE, who's on this committee, with the chairman's manager's amendment, that we have safeguards in here to make sure that none of these funds are used to even expand their nuclear capacity.

This is an extraordinary bill at an extraordinary time. It is heavily bipartisan, and I commend the chairman on an excellent piece of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 7½ minutes remaining. The gentlewoman from Florida has 6½ minutes remaining.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as we have noted here on the floor, too often the relationship between the United States and Pakistan has been characterized by mutual frustration engendered by a growing trust gap. And while the leaderships of the two countries place a high value on our relationship, their publics and their legislatures have viewed each other with suspicion and depicted each other as unreliable allies. But with the advent of a new administration, both in Pakistan and in the United States, we're offered a window of opportunity to redefine, to recalibrate relations.

Both sides need to guard against unrealistic expectations but be prepared to engage in an honest dialogue; and therein lies the rub, Mr. Speaker. As a Pakistani civil society leader and a close confidant of the late Benazir Bhutto has said, "Conditioning aid turns on its head the very rationale for assistance to stabilize Pakistan and empower it to deal more effectively with security challenges. An approach that treats Pakistan from the paradigm of 'hired help' rather than 'valued ally' is deeply counterproductive. It only reinforces the transactional nature of ties that are so resented by Pakistanis."

Mr. Speaker, our overarching goal should and, indeed, must be—do no harm. Unfortunately, the bill before us could hamper, rather than help, vital U.S. security and strategic objectives regarding Pakistan and Afghanistan.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to a member of the committee, my friend from California, the gentlewoman BARBARA LEE.

Ms. LEE of California. Mr. Speaker, first let me thank the chairman for his very effective work on this bill and for your leadership and for really bringing this forward to the committee so that all of us could have an opportunity to weigh in, and talk about, and amend, and include many of the provisions that we believe allowed us to come to this floor today to support this bill.

I believe, like many believe, that addressing Pakistan, rather than an escalation of the war in Afghanistan, is a much more effective way to address terrorism and our national security. I'm greatly encouraged by the goals of this legislation, which aims to put United States "smart power" to work, which many of us have been talking about for many years. The smart power. This helps to reshape our relationship with Pakistan based on a long-term commitment to social, economic and political development. The legislation integrates key benchmarks and limitations absent in previous aid packages which resulted in really $10 billion in United States aid since 2001, yielding little or no results or progress on many fronts in Pakistan. So you can imagine why some of us initially were very skeptical of this.

This legislation also seeks to reshape the U.S.-Pakistan relationship by shifting unconditional United States military assistance away from this historical trend of exclusively unconditional military assistance. I want to make that point very clear. This is not unconditional. This is conditional. And it also provides a two-to-one ratio in terms of the development assistance, economic assistance, social and democratic priorities, which we all believe we should support.

Simply put, this bill really reflects the sentiments shared by many of my colleagues, that the national security of our Nation hinges upon much more than military might. Instead, it hinges upon the success of diplomatic and development efforts around the globe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentlewoman 30 additional seconds.

Ms. LEE of California. Let me just say that as a supporter of nonproliferation efforts all of my life, I am very pleased and want to thank Chairman BERMAN for working with myself and other members of the committee to address the concerns regarding the potential expansion of Pakistan's nuclear program. I wanted to make sure that the possible fungibility of these funds was not a factor. In President Obama's bold and brilliant speech in Cairo last week, he strongly reaffirmed America's commitment to seek a world in which no nation holds nuclear weapons. So we wanted to make sure that that was the case here with Pakistan in this bill and that we minimized any type of fungibility of funds.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on International Organizations, Human Rights and Oversight.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I rise in opposition to this effort to send billions of more dollars to Pakistan. I have reached my threshold with Pakistan. We have sent them billions upon billions of dollars, and we still have an anti-American sentiment all the way through that government. They were our friends during the Cold War. Yes, they sided with us against the Soviet Union. The Cold War is over. It is long over. And since that time, the leaders of Pakistan have allied themselves with the most radical elements of Islam who hate the United States; and the Pakistani officials and the ISI, their CIA, have been working in conjunction with these radical Islamicists in Saudi Arabia and elsewhere ever since. We should not be sending them billions and billions of more dollars. We should be seeking, instead, to start relying on relationships with India, Russia and other countries that will be more reliable allies. I'm sorry that I'm having to say that we should be writing off a country like this. Let's focus on Afghanistan and quit sending billions of dollars to Pakistanis.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Just remember, a decision at this point to give up on Pakistan, it is Pakistan that is providing sanctuary for the people who are fighting us in Afghanistan. It is Pakistan who has nuclear weapons.

I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. AL GREEN).

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I'm supporting this legislation because it addresses both war and peace. And if I may, I'd like to focus on the peace initiative because, truth be told, the great issue of our time is not whether a superpower can police the world. A superpower can police the world. The great issue of our time is whether a superpower can bring peace to the world.

This piece of legislation helps us not only with war but also with peace because it helps us with economic development. It helps us to give people the opportunity to take care of themselves and sustain themselves, but it also helps us with education. The wealth of a nation is the education of its people. It helps us to bring the peace and stability that will be needed when the war is over. War can help us to provide a certain degree of security, but it won't provide the salvation that we need to have the peace.

I support this bill because it helps us when the war is over to have the peace and stability that Pakistan will need. I thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great piece of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida has 3½ minutes remaining.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. At this point I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to Mr. HUNTER of California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, let me say this: I have served in Iraq two times as a United States Marine, and I served in Afghanistan once. When I was over there in 2007, I was fighting, and in October of 2007, word came across from here in the States that said several hundred State Department employees expressed their resentment over a policy that could force them to serve in Iraq or they might lose their jobs. They actually called going over to Iraq and Afghanistan a potential death sentence. So these are State Department employees, diplomats—the same ones we're asking to go to Pakistan and Afghanistan, which is arguably the most dangerous area right now in the entire world. We're asking them to go over, the exact same people who called going over to Iraq a potential death sentence.

I would equate this to sending diplomats to Katrina-destroyed New Orleans in 2005 instead of the National Guard. We're going to send diplomats to Louisiana. We aren't going to send the National Guard. We aren't going to send emergency services. We're going to send diplomats. So as opposed to giving General Petraeus, as the President asked for, funding to help out in Pakistan and Afghanistan, we're going to send diplomats so they can talk to the Taliban and they can talk to al Qaeda. They can talk to the mad men who cut off people's heads. That's what the State Department is going to do.

This is the wrong move. The Republicans have it right this time. Give the President full authority. Let him come up with a plan, and let General Petraeus implement that. The Republican substitute is the right way to go. We need to make sure that Pakistan is fighting for Pakistan and that Pakistan doesn't think it's only fighting for American dollars. That's what we need to do.

Once more, as a United States Marine that saw State Department ineptness and cowardice while I was in Afghanistan, it's almost personally insulting that we're going to pull the funding from General Petraeus and give it to those State Department cronies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida has 1½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from California has ¾ minutes remaining.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman who has made a significant contribution to this legislative effort, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Ms. MOORE).

Ms. MOORE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Chairman BERMAN for working with me so closely to include provisions in H.R. 1886 to ensure that the empowerment, protection and human rights of women are an important purpose for our aid to Pakistan and to help address the high rate of maternal mortality in Pakistan.

As Secretary of State Clinton noted earlier this year, the status of women and girls is a key indicator of whether or not progress is even possible in a society. We simply can't solve the global problems confronting us—from the worldwide financial crisis to the risk of climate change, chronic hunger, disease, poverty—when the energies and talents of hundreds of millions of people, half the world's population is left behind.

According to the World Health Organization, maternal mortality is an indicator of disparity and inequity between men and women and reflects a woman's so-called place in society and their ultimate access to social health, nutritional services and to economic opportunities. In this case, Pakistan's maternal mortality rate speaks of the great challenges facing Pakistani women.

Over 400 women die per 100,000 live births in Pakistan, and, for comparison, that is compared to 11 per 100,000 in the United States.

It is the aim of my amendment to make clear that the U.S. aid authorized in this bill addresses this challenge. We need to make it unmistakably clear, Mr. Speaker, that addressing that nation's high child and maternal mortality rates is a key part of our assistance to Pakistan. We know that these interventions will save these women's lives and ultimately save the nation.

Again, I thank the chairman for his support.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) has 1¼ minutes remaining and the right to close, and the gentleman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) has 1½ minutes remaining.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I feel like I am experiencing deja vu. The seemingly same arguments that opponents of General Petraeus and his Iraq surge strategy used just under 2 years ago about Iraqis and the Iraqi government and their commitment to fighting extremist groups, they are making an appearance today in this Chamber with respect to Pakistan.

U.S. commanders have just begun to assess the situation on the ground to determine the need to implement that new strategy, and some of the speakers today are already tying the U.S.' hands while prejudging the response of Pakistan. We should be focusing on success, on prevailing against al Qaeda, prevailing against the Taliban, not anticipating failure.

While the authors of this bill seek to empower our Pakistani partners to confront insurgency and militarism, I feel that this bill will actually inadvertently have a counterproductive impact by potentially making the Pakistani government appear subservient to the United States, as Senator KERRY suggested. This bill could weaken Pakistani democracy as well as could potentially fuel paranoia, wild conspiracy theories that help give rise to that country's visceral and deep-seated anti-American feelings.

So I urge my colleagues to look at this bill, examine carefully what we are doing to our military, what we are doing to this new administration, and come to the correct conclusion that they should oppose this bill.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, just a few points. There was reference here to the F-16s. There is nothing in this bill that prohibits the Pakistanis from deciding to buy more F-16s. Two years ago they signed a contract indicating that that is what they were going to do. What this legislation does is say other than some specific adjustments particularly to deal with utilizing the F-16s they already have, in the counterinsurgency, we are not going to give our taxpayer dollars for a weapons system, an airplane, whose counterinsurgency interests are far less important than other equipment or training we could be providing.

Secondly, Admiral Mullen came to see me about the problems of utilizing the traditional security assistance program for providing the kind of equipment that is needed for the counterinsurgency in Pakistan. As a result of the case he made, we have created and worked with the Armed Services Committee to create an entire fund that waives every provision of law in the foreign military financing program so that we can get this equipment and training to the Pakistanis.

Pakistan is an urgent problem, but doing it right, not just doing it carelessly, is the way to go. I urge that this bill be supported.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, thank you for affording me this opportunity to address the Rules Committee and explain my amendment to H.R. 1886, the "Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Act".

My amendment is a simple but important addition to this important legislation, which I believe can be supported by every member of this Committee.

My amendment would foster counterterrorism efforts in Pakistan with the creation of militant rehabilitation programs designed to rehabilitate insurgents and to prevent youth from turning to militancy from the onset. Financial support and job opportunities will be provided to graduates of the rehabilitation programs as incentives for steering insurgents away from militancy.

H.R. 1886 establishes a new, more positive framework for U.S.-Pakistan relations. The legislation establishes a set of principles that should govern the U.S.-Pakistan relationship, including the actions that the two countries should take to maintain a robust, relevant and lasting relationship. The bill is comprised of three titles.

The first Title provides Economic, Social and Democratic Development Assistance for Pakistan; the second Title provides Security Assistance for Pakistan; and the third Title requires the President to develop a regional security strategy; provides for enhanced monitoring, evaluation, and auditing of U.S. assistance; requires a Presidential report on Pakistan, including an evaluation on Pakistan's progress in counterterrorism and an assessment of whether assistance provided to Pakistan is in any way facilitating the expansion of Pakistan's nuclear weapons program; and requires that all assistance to Pakistan be provided through a civilian government in Pakistan established by free and fair elections.

I urge you to support my amendment.

Mr. DRIER. Mr. Speaker, this week we are considering a number of foreign policy bills that affect critically important issues. Yesterday we considered H.R. 2410, the State Department Reauthorization Act. Today we are considering two proposals, which have been joined together in one bill, H.R. 1886, to provide assistance to Pakistan. The first proposal provides funding to help Pakistan develop its institutions and provide economic development for its people, in order to help combat the growing terrorist threat that is within its borders and that fuels the conflict in Afghanistan. The second proposal also seeks to bolster development in Pakistan, as well as Afghanistan, by creating duty-free zones along their shared border to encourage new investment and provide access to the U.S. market.

These are all very worthy ideas. Foreign assistance, particularly capacity building, plays a critical role in bolstering our national security, when it is done right. By helping our partners in the developing world to strengthen the rule of law, build transparent and accountable institutions, and spur the kind of economic development that improves standards of living, we help to tear down the foundations of terrorism and tyranny and combat the radicalism that threatens the safety of all Americans.

Our efforts in Pakistan are particularly important, not only because of the implications for the war in Afghanistan, where our troops are in harm's way, but because it is a nuclear-armed state. The stakes couldn't be higher. If Pakistan's democratically elected government were to be taken over by the terrorists in their midst, the consequences would be almost unthinkable. Creating economic opportunity and real alternatives to terrorism in Pakistan and elsewhere in the developing world is a vital national security concern. Unfortunately, the bills that we are considering this week are fundamentally flawed. The State Department Reauthorization bill, rather than pursuing meaningful reform to make our foreign assistance more effective, simply expanded government spending and bureaucracy at an untenable rate. It also included a number of highly controversial provisions, yet the rule did not provide for debate or consideration of amendments on those issues. As a result, I could not support this bill.

The two proposals on Pakistan before us today are even more problematic. The first, while providing vital funding in a key region, ties the hands of our military and attempts to micromanage interagency efforts from 7000 miles away. This is a counterproductive and potentially fatal error to make. The second proposal, which proposes new duty-free zones for textile and household products, is counterproductive as well.

While the idea behind it is a very good one, the actual program proposed has three key flaws—it excludes the top products that are made in Pakistan, rendering the program ineffective; it imposes such restrictive and unworkable labor provisions that it undermines the proposed program and sets a very bad precedent for future trade preference bills; and finally, it imposes new tariffs on the very Pakistani businesses that we are trying to help, in order to pay for the elimination of tariffs in other categories of products. This bill would take with one hand while it attempts to appear to give with the other. This is not a workable proposal. It will not spur development in Pakistan, and could actually hurt those companies that are currently creating the only economic opportunity that exists in Pakistan. It would also set a very dangerous precedent for future attempts to spur development and poison our efforts to create opportunity elsewhere in the developing world.

All three foreign policy proposals before us this week represent nothing more than three very unfortunate missed opportunities. I am truly disappointed that we have not had the opportunity to get these bills right, as they deal with such critically important issues. I hope very much that in the future, we can have an open, bipartisan process that allows us to effectively and appropriately deal with the key national security issue of foreign assistance.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Afghanistan-Pakistan Security and Prosperity Enhancement Act. The legislation, originally introduced as H.R. 1318, was subsequently incorporated into H.R. 1886, to authorize Democratic, Economic and Social Development Assistance for Pakistan, introduced by Congressman BERMAN, the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This legislation is aimed at protecting our homeland and those of our allies in the fight against Al-Qa'ida and the Taliban in Afghanistan and Pakistan by providing tools for economic development.

We worked with the Bush Administration to craft the framework of this legislation. This initiative was subsequently embraced by President Obama who specifically incorporated it into his counterinsurgency strategy for Pakistan and Afghanistan. This bill authorizes the President of the United States to designate specific trade zones, known as Reconstruction Opportunity Zones (ROZs), in Afghanistan and in certain regions of Pakistan to create economic opportunities.

These ROZs will allow qualified businesses duty-free access into U.S. markets for designated products, thereby providing significant employment opportunities where few currently exist. A ROZ program could go a long way to bolster economic development in this critical region of the world where extremists have tried to exploit the lack of economic opportunities to gain recruits for their radical agenda.

Enhanced security efforts by the United States, as well as a strong foreign and military assistance program, are needed to disrupt and weaken Al-Qa'ida and the Taliban. These extremist groups exploit the poor socio-economic conditions, such as high unemployment, in the border areas, to gain adherents to their nefarious causes. With no meaningful alternatives, young men in particular are vulnerable to their entreaties.

This legislation was endorsed by the Washington Post in an editorial on March 22, 2009. Moreover, in a letter to the Speaker this week, Ambassador Richard Holbrooke, the State Department, Special Representative for Afghanistan and Pakistan, reiterated the Administration's support and noted that "ROZs are an important component of the President's comprehensive national security strategy in Afghanistan and Pakistan, and we need enactment of ROZ legislation as quickly as possible to help facilitate success."

I urge all Members of the House to support this valuable program and vote for this bill today. I ask unanimous consent to insert, into the RECORD, the speech of President Obama, the letter of Ambassador Holbrooke and the Washington Post editorial with my statement.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, June 10, 2009.

Hon. NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

DEAR MADAM SPEAKER: Thank you for giving me the opportunity on Monday to discuss legislation creating Reconstruction Opportunity Zones (ROZs) in Afghanistan and Pakistan, and to reiterate the Administration's support. As you know, the House version (H.R. 1318) of this bipartisan legislation is sponsored by Representative Chris Van Hollen. Allow me to reaffirm, in writing, the key points, in the hope they will be useful as you proceed.

First, let me emphasize that ROZs are a vital component of our policy toward Pakistan in a moment of great challenge, indeed crisis, for that critically important nation. Pakistan's stability and security are directly related to our own national security and the ROZ legislation addresses issues central to the very area in which, at present, there are well over 2 million internal refugees and in which the Taliban and al-Qaeda are operating.

Military power alone cannot bring peace to Afghanistan and Pakistan. ROZs are an important component of the President's comprehensive national security strategy in Afghanistan and Pakistan, and we need enactment of ROZ legislation as quickly as possible to help facilitate success. As the President put it earlier this year in calling for Congress to enact this bipartisan bill, ROZs will "develop the economy [in the border regions] and bring hope to places plagued by violence."

By spurring economic growth and job creation, ROZs will provide legitimate job opportunities in high-unemployment, high-poverty areas in Pakistan and Afghanistan where livelihood choices are extremely limited. We need ROZs now—economic opportunities must be expanded to quickly follow up military operations with economic development to prove to populations in critical targeted areas that there are benefits to defeating the militants. Simply put, ROZs are crucial to the "build" part of our "clear-hold-build" counterinsurgency efforts and will help us to assist the Governments of Pakistan and Afghanistan to create conditions on the ground that will help marginalize the insurgents.

ROZs will enhance our "whole of government" strategy and will be a highly visible example of U.S. commitment to the long-term prosperity of the Afghan and Pakistani peoples. On my trips to Pakistan and Afghanistan, I hear a constant refrain from all quarters in these societies about the importance of this legislation, including the signal its passage would send about the strength of the long-term relationships between our peoples.

Thank you again for your leadership. I am committed to working with you and other Congressional leaders to quickly enact Pakistan and Afghanistan ROZs into law.

Sincerely,

RICHARD C. HOLBROOKE,
Special Representative for Afghanistan and Pakistan.

PLOWSHARES FOR PEACE

As the Obama administration formulates its strategy for Pakistan and Afghanistan, pretty much everyone agrees that spurring the economy in both countries—creating jobs—is key to defusing militancy. The usual prescription is more foreign aid, which is sure to figure in any new plan. But what doesn't always get acknowledged in these discussions is that such aid often doesn't do much good. The United States wasted billions of dollars in Iraqi reconstruction aid, and given the dangerous environment—which discourages inspection and monitoring—you can expect a rerun in Afghanistan and Pakistan. A more effective way to boost both economies would be to allow them to export their products tariff-free into the United States. But that idea arouses the enmity of U.S. labor unions, which means that it's not going to get far in a Democratic Congress.

Enter Rep. Chris Van Hollen, Montgomery County Democrat and member of the House leadership, with a practical alternative. Mr. Van Hollen, with co-sponsors, has introduced legislation to create "reconstruction opportunity zones" within both countries. Certain products, including some (not all) textiles, produced within the zones would enjoy duty-free access to the U.S. market for 15 years. This would encourage investment by local businessmen, who best know the terrain, and create jobs. There's no better formula for discouraging Taliban recruitment.

It's not a magic formula, of course. The investment areas have to be drawn widely enough to make the prospect of investment realistic; if you limit them to the most intense battle zones, you're not going to see many jobs created. The bigger they are, though, the likelier the bill will arouse union opposition, so the politics are tricky. Mr. Van Hollen and his co-sponsors—including Reps. Sander M. Levin (D-Mich.), Peter Hoekstra (R-Mich.) and Mark Steven Kirk (R-Ill.)—have tried to find the sweet spot, and their bill also insists that any factories in the zones meet core international standards in their treatment of workers.

Maybe the strongest argument for the opportunity zones is that there is no down side; the worst that could possibly happen is they don't trigger much investment. But they would immediately provide a signal of U.S. commitment—the governments of both countries strongly support the idea—and they could have a substantial positive effect reasonably quickly, at almost no cost to the U.S. Treasury. Congress and the administration should get behind this idea.

OBAMA ANNOUNCES NEW AFGHANISTAN,
PAKISTAN STRATEGIES

President BARACK OBAMA. Good morning. Please be seated.

Before I begin today, let me acknowledge, first of all, Your Excellencies, all the ambassadors who are in attendance. I also want to acknowledge both the civilians and our military personnel that are about to be deployed to the region. And I am very grateful to all of you for your extraordinary work.

I want to acknowledge General David Petraeus, who's here, and has been doing an outstanding job at CENTCOM. We appreciate him. I want to thank Bruce Riedel. Bruce is down at the end here, who has worked extensively on our strategic review.

I want to acknowledge Carl Eikenberry, who's here, and is our ambassador designate to Afghanistan, and to my national security team. Thanks for their outstanding work.

Today, I'm announcing a comprehensive new strategy for Afghanistan Pakistan. And this marks the conclusion of careful policy review led by Bruce that I ordered as soon as I took office. My administration has heard from our military commanders as well as our diplomats. We consulted with the Afghan and Pakistani governments, with our partners, and our NATO allies and with other donors and international organizations. We've also worked closely with members of Congress here at home.

And now I'd like to speak clearly and candidly to the American people. The situation is increasingly perilous. It's been more than seven years since the Taliban was removed from power yet war rages on and insurgents control parts of Afghanistan and Pakistan. Attacks against our troops, our NATO allies, and the Afghanistan government has risen steadily.

And, most painfully, 2008 was the deadliest year of the war for American forces. Many people in the United States and many in partner country that have sacrificed so much have a simple question. What is our purpose in Afghanistan? Of so many years, they ask why do our men and women still fight and die there? They deserve a straightforward answer.

So let me be clear. Al Qaida and its allies, the terrorists who planned and supported the 9/11 attacks are in Pakistan and Afghanistan. Multiple intelligence estimates have warned that Al Qaida is actively planning attacks on the United States homeland from its safe haven in Pakistan. And if the Afghan government falls to the Taliban or allows Al Qaida to go unchallenged, that country will again be a base for terrorists who want to kill as many of our people as they possibly can.

The future of Afghanistan is inextricably linked to the future of its neighbor Pakistan. In the nearly eight years since 9/11, Al Qaida and its extremist allies have moved across the border to remote areas of the Pakistani frontier. This almost certainly includes Al Qaida's leadership, Osama bin Laden and Ayman al-Zawahiri. They have used this mountainous terrain as a safe haven to hide, to train terrorists, and communicate with followers, to plot attacks, and to send fighters to support the insurgency in Afghanistan.

For the American people, this border region has become the most dangerous place in the world. But this is not simply an American problem, far from it. It is, instead, international security challenge of the highest order.

Terrorist attacks in London, in Bali were tied to Al Qaida and its allies in Pakistan as were attacks in North Africa and the Middle East, in Islamabad and in Kabul. If there is a major attack on an Asian, European, or African city it, too, is likely to have ties to Al Qaida leadership in Pakistan.

The safety of people around the world is at stake. For the Afghan people, the return to Taliban rule would condemn their country to brutal governance, international isolation, a paralyzed economy, and the denial of basic human rights to the Afghan people, especially, women and girls.

A return in force of Al Qaida terrorists who would accompany the core Taliban leadership would cast Afghanistan under the shadow of perpetual violence.

Obama: As president, my greatest responsibility is to protect the American people. We are not in Afghanistan to control that country or to dictate its future. We are in Afghanistan to confront a common enemy that threatens the United States, our friends, and our allies and the people of Afghanistan and Pakistan who have suffered the most at the hands of violent extremists.

So I want the American people to understand that we have a clear and focused goal to disrupt, dismantle, and defeat Al Qaida in Pakistan and Afghanistan and to prevent their return to either country in the future. That's the goal that must be achieved. That is a cause that could not be more just.

And to the terrorists who oppose us, my message is the same. We will defeat you.

To achieve our goals, we need a stronger, smarter, and comprehensive strategy. To focus on the greatest threat to our people, America must no longer deny resources to Afghanistan because of the war in Iraq. To enhance the military, governance, and economic capacity of Afghanistan and Pakistan, we have to marshal international support. And to defeat an enemy that heeds no border or laws of war, we must recognize the fundamental connection between of future of Afghanistan and Pakistan which is why I've appointed Ambassador Richard Holbrooke, who is here, to serve as special representative from both countries and work closely with General Petraeus to integrate our civilian and military efforts.

Let me start by addressing the way forward in Pakistan. The United States has great respect for the Pakistani people. They have a rich history and have struggled against long odds to sustain their democracy. The people of Pakistan want the same things that we want. An end to terror, access to basic services, the opportunity to live their dreams and the security that can only come with the rule of law. The single greatest threat to that future comes from Al Qaida and their extremist allies. And that is why we must stand together.

The terrorist within Pakistan's border are not simply enemies of America or Afghanistan. They are a grave and urgent danger to the people of Pakistan. Al Qaida and other violent extremists have killed several thousand Pakistanis since 9/11. They've killed many Pakistani soldiers and police. They assassinated Benazir Bhutto. They've blown up buildings, derailed foreign investment, and threatened the stability of the state.

So make no mistake, Al Qaida and its extremist allies are a cancer that risks killing Pakistan from within.

It's important for the American people to understand that Pakistan needs our help in going after Al Qaida. This is no simple task. The tribal regions are vast, they are rugged, and they are often ungoverned. And that's why we must focus on military assistance on the tools, training, and support that Pakistan needs to root out the terrorists.

And after years of mixed results, we will not and cannot provide a blank check. Pakistan must demonstrate its commitment to rooting out Al Qaida and the violent extremists within its borders.

We will insist that action be taken, one way or another, when we have intelligence about high-level terrorist targets. The government's ability to destroy these safe havens is tied to its own strength and security. To help Pakistan weather the economic crisis, we must continue to work with the IMF, the World Bank, and other international partners.

To lessen tensions between two nuclear-armed nations that too often teeter on the edge of escalation and confrontation, we must pursue constructive diplomacy with both India and Pakistan. To avoid the mistakes of the past, we must make clear that our relationship with Pakistan is grounded in support for Pakistan's democratic institutions and the Pakistani people.

And to demonstrate through deeds as well as words a commitment that is enduring, we must stand for lasting opportunity.

Now a campaign against extremism will not succeed with bullets or bombs alone. Al Qaida offers the people of Pakistan nothing but destruction. We stand for something from the time.

So, today, I'm calling upon Congress to pass a bipartisan bill co-sponsored by John Kerry and Richard Lugar that authorizes $1.5 billion in direct support to the Pakistani people every year over the next five years, resources that will build schools, roads, and hospitals, and strengthen Pakistan's democracy.

I'm also calling on Congress to pass a bipartisan bill co-sponsored by Maria Cantwell and Chris Van Hollen and Peter Hoekstra that creates opportunity zones in the border regions to develop the economy and bring hope to places plagued with violence.

And we will ask our friends and allies to do their part, including, at the donors' conference in Tokyo next month.

Obama: I don't ask for this support lightly. These are challenging times. Resources are stretched. But the American people must understand that this is a down payment on our own future because the security of American and Pakistan is shared. Pakistan's government must be a stronger partner in destroying these safe havens, and we must isolate Al Qaida from the Pakistani people.

These steps in Pakistan are also indispensable to our efforts in Afghanistan which will see no end to violence if insurgents move freely back and forth across the border. Security demands a new sense of shared responsibility, and that's why we will launch a standing, trilateral dialogue among the United States, Afghanistan, and Pakistan.

Our nations will meet regularly with Secretaries Clinton and Secretary Gates leading our effort. Together, we must enhance intelligence sharing and military cooperation along the border while addressing issues of common concern like trade, energy, and economic development.

This is just one part of a comprehensive strategy to prevent Afghanistan from becoming the Al Qaida safe haven that it was before 9/11. To succeed, we and our friends and allies must reverse the Taliban's gains and promote a more capable and accountable Afghan government.

Our troops have fought bravely against a ruthless enemy. Our civilians have made great sacrifices. Our allies have born a heavy burden. Afghans have suffered and sacrificed for their future. But for six years, Afghanistan has been denied the resources that it demands because of the war in Iraq.

Now, we must make a commitment that can accomplish our goals. I've already ordered the deployment of 17,000 troops that have been requested by General McKiernan for many months. These soldiers and Marines will take the fight to the Taliban in the south and the east and give us a great capacity to partner with Afghan security forces and to go after insurgents along the border.

This push will also help provide security in advance of the important presidential elections in Afghanistan in August. At the same time, we will shift the emphasis of our mission to training and increasing the size of Afghan security forces so that they can eventually take the lead in securing their country.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act (H.R. 1886). I do commend the strong funding levels for development assistance, education, and health care contained in the legislation and if the bill consisted only of this type of humanitarian support I would gladly vote for it. I cannot, however, support authorizing over $1 billion per year in military aid to a nation that has already suffered under a military dictatorship and continues to experience daily violence.

The people of Pakistan do need our help to strengthen their democratic institutions, educate their citizens, and provide social and economic opportunity. What they do not need is an influx of guns, tanks, and other weapons that will lead to further destabilization and violence.

I urge all of my colleagues to stand for peace and vote against this legislation.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today we will vote on a historic piece of legislation that will refocus American foreign policy and forge a true partnership with Pakistan and its people. H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009, will triple U.S. economic assistance to Pakistan, with a focus on the rights of women and religious minorities, strengthening democratic institutions, and improving Pakistan's public education system.

I am especially proud to pass this bill because of its focus on public education. The Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act will help Pakistan develop a national curriculum for public, private and religious schools and will expand educational opportunities for women and girls. I recently read a very important book; Three Cups of Tea is an inspirational story about a journey to Pakistan and the feats of one of the most inspirational people of our generation: Greg Mortenson. Upon my visit to Afghanistan several months ago, I saw the truth in Mortenson's message: that the poverty and lack of opportunity in countries like Pakistan and Afghanistan can incite hatred against the United States and lead to acts of terrorism. That is why I am proud of my colleagues for realizing that sticks, alone, will not fight terrorism. We can also fight terrorism by building schools, buying books, and helping children—especially girls—increase life's prospects through education. I commend Chairman BERMAN for introducing this important bill and urge my colleagues to join me in passing it and helping bring peace, stability, and opportunity to Pakistan's people.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 1886. Though the bill takes steps in the right direction by providing badly needed assistance to Pakistan, it also includes a dangerous trade provision that undermines the otherwise benevolent parts of the bill. The bill grants duty free treatment for textiles and clothing produced in certain regions of Pakistan and Afghanistan called Reconstruction Opportunity Zones (ROZs).

With the existing instability in war-torn Afghanistan and the increasingly unstable conditions in ROZ designated areas of Pakistan, there is little reason to think that labor and environmental protections that are critical in any trade environment can be adequately enforced.

The United States has granted this sort of trade preference before. In 2006, The New York Times reported that U.S. trade preferences in the country of Jordan for textiles and apparel beginning in 1994, followed by a Free Trade Agreement in 2001, had brought about sweatshop conditions for a guest workforce imported from Bangladesh and China. Trade preferences will not benefit local populations in Afghanistan and Pakistan if an imported workforce is employed in factories producing duty-free goods.

This bill imposes a U.S. trade policy with a track record of undermining stability and economic security on nations for which the U.S. purports to provide stability and security. Our foreign policy should promote economic stability worldwide, thereby eliminating the true roots of terrorism: desperation. The bill calls on the Obama Administration to put forth a comprehensive security strategy that will eliminate U.S. concerns about terrorist threats and safe havens in Pakistan and the region. But it includes a trade provision that undermines stated U.S. foreign policy goals in Pakistan. As such, I must oppose H.R. 1886.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MS. ROS-LEHTINEN

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I have a substitute amendment at the desk.

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “United States-Pakistan Security and Stability Act”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Congress supports the following elements outlined in the President’s White Paper of the Interagency Policy Group’s Report on United States Policy Toward Afghanistan and Pakistan:

(A) The core goal of the United States must be to disrupt, dismantle, and defeat al Qaeda and its affiliated networks and their safe havens in Pakistan.

(B) The threat that al Qaeda poses to the United States and its allies in Pakistan—including the possibility of extremists obtaining fissile material—is all too real.

(C) The United States must overcome its trust deficit with Pakistan and demonstrate that it is a reliable, long-term partner.

(2) The Government of Pakistan is facing significant security and socio-economic challenges that set the conditions for greater radicalization and may threaten Pakistan’s viability. Such challenges include the following:

(A) Al Qaeda’s and other extremist groups’ campaign of violent attacks throughout Pakistan, including the Red Mosque incident, the assassination of Benazir Bhutto, and the bombing of the Marriott Hotel in Islamabad.

(B) Pakistan’s population growth at a rate of approximately 2 percent a year, with nearly half of its 172 million residents illiterate, under the age of 20, and living near or below the poverty line.

(3) Security and stability to Pakistan is further complicated given the prevalence of ungoverned spaces between Pakistan and Afghanistan in which state control has not been fully exercised given ethnic and tribal affiliations.

(4) The security and stability of Pakistan is vital to the national security of the United States, and the consequences of failure poses a grave threat to the security of the American people, the region, and United States allies.

(5) The objectives of United States policy toward Pakistan are to empower and enable Pakistan to—

(A) develop into a prosperous and democratic state that is at peace with itself and with its neighbors;

(B) actively confront, and deny safe haven to, al Qaeda, the Taliban, and other extremists;

(C) implement the economic, legal, and social reforms required to create an environment that discourages violent Islamic extremism; and

(D) maintain robust command and control over its nuclear weapons technology.

SEC. 3. COMPREHENSIVE INTERAGENCY STRATEGY AND IMPLEMENTATION PLAN FOR PAKISTAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 2009, the President shall develop and transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan for long-term security and stability in Pakistan which shall be composed of the elements specified in subsection (b).

(b) ELEMENTS.—The comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a) shall contain at least the following elements:

(1) A description of how United States assistance described in section 4 will be used to achieve the objectives of United States policy toward Pakistan.

(2) Progress toward the following:

(A) Assisting efforts to enhance civilian control and a stable constitutional government in Pakistan and promote bilateral and regional trade and economic growth.

(B) Developing and operationally enabling Pakistani security forces so they are capable of succeeding in sustained counter-insurgency and counter-terror operations.

(C) Shutting down Pakistani safe havens for extremists.

(D) Improving Pakistan’s capacity and capability to “hold” and “build” areas cleared of insurgents to prevent their return.

(E) Developing and strengthening mechanisms for Pakistan-Afghanistan cooperation.

(3) A financial plan and description of the resources, programming, and management of United States foreign assistance to Pakistan, including the criteria used to determine their prioritization.

(4) A complete description of both the evaluation process for reviewing and adjusting the strategy and implementation as necessary, and measures of effectiveness for the implementation of the strategy.

(c) INTELLIGENCE SUPPORT.—The President, after consultation with the Director of National Intelligence, shall provide intelligence support to the development of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a).

(d) UPDATES OF STRATEGY.—The President shall transmit in writing to the appropriate congressional committees any updates of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a), as necessary.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF ASSISTANCE FOR PAKISTAN.

(a) FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the President, for the purposes of providing assistance to Pakistan under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), $1,500,000,000 or such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2010 through 2013.

(b) PAKISTAN COUNTERINSURGENCY CAPABILITY FUND.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the President, for the purposes of building a more effective counterinsurgency capability in Pakistan’s security forces, up to $700,000,000 for the Pakistan Counterinsurgency Capability Fund, for fiscal year 2010.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Amounts authorized to be appropriated under this section or otherwise made available to carry out this Act shall be used to the maximum extent practicable as direct expenditures for programs, projects, and activities, subject to existing reporting and notification requirements.

SEC. 5. CONGRESSIONAL BRIEFING AND NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) BRIEFING.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the transmission of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by section 3, and quarterly thereafter through December 1, 2013, the President, acting through the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, shall brief the appropriate congressional committees on the status of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan.

(b) NOTIFICATION.—The President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees not later than 30 days prior to obligating any assistance described in section 4 as budgetary support to the Government of Pakistan or to any persons, agencies, instrumentalities, or elements of the Government of Pakistan and shall describe the purpose and conditions attached to any such budgetary support assistance. The President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees not later than 30 days prior to obligating any other type of assistance described in section 4.

SEC. 6. DEFINITION.

In this Act, the term “appropriate congressional committees” means—

(1) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate.

Amend the title so as to read: “A bill to require the President to develop a comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan for long-term security and stability in Pakistan, and for other purposes.”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 522, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) and a Member opposed each will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the substitute amendment reflects input from, and was drafted in coordination with, the ranking members of the Committees on Appropriations, on Armed Services, on Homeland Security and Intelligence. In so doing, this approach emulated to some degree the administration's inter-agency strategic review.

The substitute recognizes that of all the foreign policy challenges facing the United States, stabilizing and reforming Pakistan may be one of the most daunting. Given the enormous complexities and the ever-changing nature of the situation in Pakistan, we believe that it is critical at this stage that the administration retain the necessary flexibility to craft policies that offer the best chance of successfully partnering with the people of Pakistan, with the government of Pakistan, and with the military of Pakistan to defeat violent extremism.

At the same time, the substitute requires an ongoing policy dialogue between the administration and the Congress regarding U.S. policy toward Pakistan, as well as robust legislative oversight of our strategy, of our implementation plan, as well as allocation and expenditure of U.S. assistance.

The Republican substitute requires that not later than 30 days after the enactment of the Supplemental Appropriations Act for 2009, the President submit to Congress a comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan for U.S. efforts to eliminate safe havens and help toward the long-term security and stability in Pakistan.

Let me repeat that again, Mr. Speaker. Thirty days after enactment of the current supplemental under discussion, the President is required to produce a comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan. This is more timely than what is in the underlying bill, and it seeks to address immediate as well as evolving dynamics.

The Republican substitute relies on the President's leadership and his commitment in providing the strategy and implementation plan to the Congress, but does require that plan to include a description of how the U.S. assistance will be used in order to achieve our U.S. foreign policy objectives.

What does that include? Enhancing stable democratic governments, making sure that we have economic growth, developing Pakistani counterinsurgency capabilities, success in shutting down safe havens for extremists, improving the capacity and capability of Pakistan to hold and build areas cleared of insurgents to prevent their return, and developing and strengthening mechanisms for Pakistan-Afghanistan cooperation, for they cannot be separated.

The substitute also requires that the report include a detailed financial plan of the resources, of the programming and of the management of U.S. assistance to Pakistan and the criteria used to determine their need and value in advancing our U.S. objectives.

This substitute seeks to ensure that congressional oversight and notification keeps pace with changing conditions on the ground, and in turn, changes in strategy and their implementation.

The Republican substitute also fully funds the administration's request for the critically important new Pakistan counterinsurgency capability fund.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California, the author of her own legislation on security assistance and the question of the proliferation network in Pakistan.

Ms. HARMAN. I thank the chairman for yielding to me and I rise in strong opposition to this Republican substitute, and in strong support of the underlying bill, H.R. 1886, to provide long-term nonmilitary aid to a country in the crosshairs of the effort by the Taliban to expand its reach in South Asia.

H.R. 1886 will help persuade the Pakistani people that their future lies with a stable and moderate democratic government and not with an authoritarian, theocratic terrorist organization. But a key to doing this is important language in the bill ensuring access of U.S. investigators to persons suspected of engaging in nuclear proliferation. This issue is critical, this language must become law, and I disagree strongly with some in this House and in the other Chamber who say these requirements are overly restrictive and counterproductive.

Pakistan's history of nuclear weapons development has contributed to instability in South Asia and paved the way for A.Q. Khan's insidious and highly profitable proliferation network. Additional and substantial nonmilitary support provided by the U.S. must assure that the security threat to the U.S., which is represented by this network, is minimized.

For at least a decade, A.Q. Khan's illicit network was the most attractive shortcut for nations and rogue organizations interested in acquiring the materials and know-how to build a nuclear device. After illegally securing the capability for Pakistan, which made him a hero at home and a pariah abroad, Khan and his network sold it to Iran, Libya and North Korea. Despite billions of U.S. dollars in aid, former Pakistani President Musharraf pardoned Khan, and earlier this year the Islamabad High Court released him from house arrest.

H.R. 1886, but not the Republican substitute, declares that the U.S. will work with Pakistan to ensure our investigators access to suspected proliferators and to restrict proliferators from travel or other activity that could result in further proliferation. It also incorporates, as the chairman said, language from a bill introduced by several of us to require a presidential assessment and restrict military aid in the future.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentlewoman 30 additional seconds.

Ms. HARMAN. I thank the gentleman.

It will restrict military aid in the future unless Pakistan cooperates in efforts to dismantle its nuclear weapons supplier networks.

It is the right thing to do, and I thank the committee for doing it. The world cannot afford another Libya, Iran or North Korea, and we certainly don't want a new nuclear power called al Qaeda.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican substitute, as I was saying, also fully funds the administration's request for the critically important new Pakistan Counterinsurgency Capability Fund, PCCF. Forging an effective partnership with Pakistan's military and intelligence apparatus has not been a straightforward affair. Although the United States has enjoyed some success, our efforts have also been hampered by a series of exceptionally difficult problems.

One is a matter of a threat perception and divergent strategic priorities, with Pakistan almost obsessively focused on their traditional rival in India.

Another problem is the legacy of mistrust on both sides, a trust deficit, as I discussed earlier, that continues to greatly complicate our bilateral relations.

A third problem is a limited Pakistani ability to conduct modern counterinsurgency, and to some degree counterterrorism operations, against al Qaeda and their allies in the tribal areas. There is no question, for example, that Pakistan needs to fully cooperate with New Delhi in holding accountable all of those responsible for the brutal assault in Mumbai as well as work with the U.S. and others on critical nonproliferation concerns.

We do not disagree with the overarching goals and the strategic priorities that we want to achieve in relation to Pakistan. Our disagreement is that at this juncture we believe that the best way to achieve critical interests is to give the administration the scope to develop intensive, multiple approaches to rebuild, to strengthen relationships with Pakistan, and address threats common to both of our nations.

We believe the Republican substitute is a more workable basis than the underlying bill for being a partner with Pakistan at this critical time.

The substitute heeds the concerns raised by Secretary Gates and the Joint Chiefs Chairman, Admiral Mullen, who wrote about this underlying bill.

The Department is concerned about aspects of this bill, in particular, those provisions that impose conditions on the furnishing of military assistance that may undermine current administration authorities such as the Global Train and Equip authority. And furthermore, this will allow the Department to use the funds expeditiously and effectively without these purse strings, as evolving circumstance may warrant, in an effort to implement the President's strategy for the region most effectively.

And I think that this Republican substitute gets to what the Department of Defense wishes to do, what the Obama administration wants to achieve, what our democratic allies in Pakistan and here, our strong military in the U.S., wants to achieve; a robust, free and democratic Pakistan upon which we can build that level of trust again.

I hope our colleagues support our Republican substitute.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), very knowledgeable on issues affecting Pakistan and U.S.-Pakistan relations.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the underlying bill proposed by the International Relations Committee, and in opposition to the Republican substitute because, however you spin it, it's basically a continuation of the Republicans' blank check policy towards Pakistan. And what has that gotten us after 8 years of that policy?

Well, it's time to assess it. Twelve billion dollars of taxpayers' money has been spent, and we have nearly half a million Pakistani troops on the border with India, our ally, and one brigade fighting the Taliban and al Qaeda, our enemy. Their principal defense priority is F-16s, which is a combat aircraft. Our enemy doesn't have combat aircraft.

We don't want to be funding a nation to fight against another ally. We want them to fight with us against our enemy.

What this bill does is to enable the children of Pakistan to have a decent public education and not be forced to go to the madrasas where they learn violent extremism against India and against modernity. This enables the women of Pakistan, particularly the young girls, to grow up to be women of influence and power and consequence.

This enables Pakistan to develop economically, not to use its resources into a military posture against India, but to use its resources to become a full-fledged, first world nation.

Pakistan is our ally, and this bill will enable it to stand on its own two feet, not to be able to fight India, not to be able to engage in nuclear proliferation, but to help us fight against the forces of violent extremism.

Pakistan is a valued ally. This will give them the resources so that we can count on that ally to do the right thing.

And to continue the same blank check policy which has made matters worse rather than better, I think, is a terrible mistake.

I urge defeat of the amendment.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), the ranking member on the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for yielding the time.

You know, Pakistan and Afghanistan are very difficult parts of the world. As we develop the strategies, I think many of us have the same goals and objectives in mind, but we need to take a look at exactly what we're doing today.

I'm proud to support the Republican amendment to the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009. Interestingly, I believe that this substitute supports our current President's direction that he has outlined for Pakistan and Afghanistan. It supports President Obama's strategy to address the situation in Pakistan, to restore peace and stability to that region.

Maybe, once again, this is another foreign policy initiative where President Obama has decided that perhaps following some of the direction outlined under the Bush administration may not be a bad idea.

I'm one of many Republican ranking members to come forward today to express concern about the majority's bill and to urge support for the Republican substitute. The Democratic bill places too many restrictions on the ability of the President's advisors and the U.S. military to conduct diplomacy and military operations in the region.

In a letter to the Armed Services Committee, Secretary of Defense Gates and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mullen raised their concern about the majority's bill, noting that "The degree of conditionality and limitations on security assistance to Pakistan" in H.R. 1886 "severely constrains the flexibility necessary for the executive branch and the Department of Defense given the fluid and dynamic environment that exists in Pakistan."

But obviously, they're saying, our troops in Afghanistan and the military in Pakistan and our support of the military efforts in Pakistan require more flexibility than what this bill will allow.

From intelligence briefings, I understand how volatile the situation is in Pakistan. Just on Tuesday, there was a hotel bombing, 18 people killed. The Pakistan Army has been engaged in a battle in the Swat Valley against Taliban militants. Any legislation on Pakistan must give the administration both flexibility to react to the fast-paced developments and the opportunity to develop a plan on how it will implement its strategy for Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Instead of flexibility, this bill is full of restrictive and intrusive provisions that I'm not sure we'd even apply to the United States, where the Democrat majority is trying to dictate and micromanage the President's administration's Pakistan policy. Their bill even includes language to increase Pakistani teacher salaries. It goes into the detail of the level of assistance for student meals.

Wow. That doesn't sound like we're giving the Paks a whole lot of flexibility to even run their own country. This down-in-the-weeds language may represent a new low for congressional micromanagement, not to mention a distraction from the crucial issue of bringing peace and stability to the region.

We need to defeat al Qaeda and the Taliban in Pakistan. That is our goal. That is our mission. This Congress shouldn't be dictating to the Pakistanis teacher salaries and the level of assistance that it needs to provide students for meals in Pakistan.

Republicans have been unfairly criticized in the press as being the party of "no." Not only are the Republicans being the party of "yes" on this bill, we're also being more supportive of the Obama administration's Pakistan policy than the Democrat majority.

We support President Obama's efforts in the region. We want them to succeed. I believe the Republican amendment presents the best way Congress can ensure and move toward success in Pakistan and, at the same time, make sure that we stay united on foreign policy, because this amendment, this substitute supports the President's Pakistan strategy.

So let's stand with the President. Let's move forward. Let's make sure that we're united, Republicans and Democrats, House, Senate and the administration, in supporting this President's direction for Pakistan.

I ask my colleagues to support the Republican substitute.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) just spoke in behalf of the Republican substitute, but he's a major cosponsor of the Reconstruction Opportunity Zones. Unlike the bill in front of us, the Republican substitute does not contain the ROZs, the reconstruction zones. I'm wondering how the gentleman squares that with his position.

I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY), who has done remarkable work on the issue of how the $12 billion given to Pakistan over the past 7 years has been spent.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder, listening to this particular substitute, whether some people here, whether it's the administration or whether it's our friends on the other side of the aisle, have been sleepwalking through history. If you want to see a repeat of the last 8 years then, fine, let's get rid of all the accountability.

A billion and a half dollars now for the next 5 years is going to be given to the Pakistanis on the civil side of things. In the past, there's been tens of billions of dollars since their independence. We have maybe a structure that's supposed to be a school or a structure that's supposed to be a clinic standing somewhere but no teachers, no nurses, no doctors, no systems that actually work because there's been a total lack of accountability. This substitute amendment would continue that lack of accountability.

On the security side of things, we have a situation where we have $6.2 billion given in the coalition support funds which, essentially, were a blank check to General Musharraf and the military over there. What we got in return, when we finally started doing some oversight in January of 2007 and afterwards, was a determination that some 40 percent of that had vaporized, cannot be accounted for. It was supposed to be going for things that are counterinsurgency, weaponry that would help fight a common problem of extremists in that country, and disappeared somewhere else.

This particular bill that the substitute is trying to undermine would put in place the accountability provisions. They are flexible enough. They simply say that you have to fight those extremists that are mutual problems. You have to make sure you stop people from going over the border to create problems in Afghanistan. You have to cooperate on nuclear nonproliferation, reasonable things.

The American people have a right to expect that their Representatives are going to be accountable for the billions of dollars. We are supposed to be having a partnership and a mature relationship with the Pakistanis. Then let's get over that notion that we're going to offend their sensibilities so that they won't actually cooperate with us if we want to put some conditions to make sure that our mutual problems are addressed with the billions of dollars of American citizens' money.

We've had 8-plus years of not having accountability on funds to that country and others. We've had times since 2002 where we had totally no accountability. Let's stop sleepwalking. Let's get the problem resolved. Let's make sure we have accountability.

I say vote against the substitute; vote for the underlying bill.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 1 additional minute to the ranking member on the Intelligence Committee, Mr. HOEKSTRA.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I thank my colleague for yielding, but I felt I needed to respond as my name was brought up from my colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

You know, the ROZs in this rule process, regardless of the underlying bill, will be part of the final package that moves through. What happens with the Democrat base bill here is they undercut many of the things and put in a lot of restrictions that, as Congressman VAN HOLLEN and I tried to craft the bill together, we wanted to make sure that there was enough freedom for these programs to be successful. And the important thing here is you can vote for the substitute. The ROZs become part of the program when the substitute passes on final passage, after it replaces the underlying Democrat amendment.

So I thank you. I think I understand the rule, but to say that I was not supportive of the ROZs because I was supporting the substitute I don't believe is an accurate indication.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

The gentleman's point is, I know, inadvertently and unintentionally incorrect.

The Republican substitute replaces the entire bill and, therefore, were the Republican substitute to pass, the ROZs the gentleman has fought for would not be part of the bill that was sent to the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to a member of the committee, the delegate from American Samoa (Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA).

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. I thank the chairman for yielding me time to speak on this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous respect for the gentlewoman from Florida, my dear friend. But on her proposal for this substitute, however, I must respectfully disagree with her on this issue.

I rise in opposition to the substitute version. While like the underlying bill, the substitute provides $1.5 billion in nonmilitary assistance to Pakistan for fiscal year 2010, regrettably the substitute requires no oversight, no accountability, and no meaningful role for Congress to play.

Like my colleagues, I'm appreciative that Pakistan has provided some support for the U.S.-led anti-terror coalition, and I believe Pakistan should be commended for assisting the U.S. in its efforts to hunt down al Qaeda and Taliban insurgents and for allowing the U.S. military to use bases within its country.

However, I do not believe we should provide billions in aid to Pakistan without some sort of accountability. H.R. 1886 includes robust monitoring, evaluations, and auditing provisions to ensure that assistance is actually reaching the Pakistani people and that U.S. taxpayer dollars are being spent wisely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEINER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentleman an additional 10 seconds.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. I urge my colleagues to oppose the substitute.

Unfortunately, the previous Administration spent the past 8 years writing blank checks to Pakistan and turned a blind eye, while A.Q. Khan transferred nuclear technology to rogue nations and while General Musharraf failed to keep good on his promises to hold free, fair and transparent elections.

By contrast, this Administration is committed to making Pakistan a success while holding Pakistan accountable. H.R. 1886 as offered by Chairman BERMAN is the way forward to making sure U.S. security assistance is spent in a manner consistent with our national security objectives.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Republican substitute and to vote "yes" for H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Act of 2009.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield on the Republican substitute 2 minutes to the chairman of the Subcommittee of the Middle East and South Asia, the vice chairman of the committee, Mr. ACKERMAN.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Ros-Lehtinen substitute is not just a step back in policy; it's a step back in time. It attempts to reinstate the failed Bush-Cheney-Rumsfeld model for managing the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Under this Congress, it gives the President a massive blank check and then walks away from its responsibility as a co-equal branch of government.

The Ros-Lehtinen substitute strips out all policy from the bill and has no provisions to encourage Pakistan to change its behavior; it has no provisions to ensure U.S. dollars are being effectively accounted for; it has no provisions for keeping Congress involved in the process; and it has no guidance whatsoever for the President about how taxpayer dollars ought to be spent. This is not legislation; this is abdication.

Is Pakistan cooperating with the U.S. to dismantle nuclear supplier networks? Apparently it doesn't matter in the Republican substitute. Is Pakistan ending its support to extremist groups and closing terrorist camps in the Fatah? Judging by the Republican substitute, who cares? Is Pakistan working to prevent cross-border attacks on its neighbors and strengthening its counterterrorism laws? If the Republican substitute is any guide, in the words of Jackie Mason, "This is not my business."

We have tried the minority approach. It is completely devoid of policy. It encourages abuse. It doesn't work. But it does have one advantage: it allows Members of Congress to avoid any responsibility for the war in Afghanistan.

Mr. Speaker, it's too late to go back to "stratagery."

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes on the Republican substitute to the Chair of the Pakistan Caucus, the gentlewoman from Texas, SHEILA JACKSON-LEE.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I thank the distinguished chairman for yielding.

We cannot wait, and I just suggest to my colleagues that they would look quickly at these pictures where the Pakistan military is fighting terrorism, and these are the activities that are happening in that area. People are fleeing terrorism and the people that are in these camps are suffering. We cannot wait for this legislation.

I oppose the Republican substitute because I want not an isolation of Pakistan, I want a regional response, a comprehensive regional strategy, including the role of countries outside the region in supporting Pakistan's efforts to combat al Qaeda and the Taliban, a global effort. The Republican substitute has a one-on-one effort. We need a global effort.

Let me also suggest that there is important language in this legislation because if we suggest that the Pentagon is not favorable, the Pentagon has indicated that they are aware of the counterinsurgency efforts that the Pakistan military is engaging in and they're satisfied with the structure of this legislation that would help them continue to fight terrorism. We can work out some of the kinks, but are we going to wait while people are suffering?

This legislation also has a recognition that we are establishing a new relationship with Pakistan and the United States, a friendship relationship. We are acknowledging the recent efforts of the Pakistan military in Swat, and we're also suggesting that if there are changes in Pakistan, we will reconsider some of the requirements or some of the structures that we put in place.

I would also say to my colleagues that I hope the Republicans who are so interested in making sure the International Monetary Fund is funded like the President would like it to be and that they will join in that support because they're so strongly in support of Pakistan, which got money from it in the last year.

In addition, there are issues dealing with trade, but the AFL-CIO is supporting it because of the way the structure is. We have an effective balance of helping them establish a better economy but at the same time respecting our trade requirements over here in the United States. This is the way to address this issue. But I can't imagine that my colleagues want to leave Pakistan and the people of Pakistan in these dire conditions.

Pakistan Americans recognize we are establishing a new friendship, and on that new friendship we need to oppose the Republican substitute and support H.R. 1886.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield myself 1 minute.

We fully agree with the chairman that much of the prior investment in Pakistan has failed to yield all of the results that we hoped for and that it is appropriate to require the administration to develop scientific, specific, meaningful performance-based measures.

Where we differ, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not mandate that the executive branch follow a specific new congressionally mandated methodology, which may not even be technically correct, even before the new administration has had time to operationalize their new South Asia strategy.

Our substitute, therefore, requires that as part of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan mandated by the legislation that the administration put forth a robust and detailed financial plan, a description of the resources, of the programming, of the management of the United States foreign assistance to Pakistan, including the criteria used to determine this prioritization. We believe that this is the correct approach.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take up the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, our Republican substitute will allow for the development of specific, credible measures of effectiveness that are tightly linked to the President's strategy for the region and are therefore preferable to those that stem from the legislation. And I would like to just briefly address, and I don't have much time, some of the issues raised in favor of the underlying bill and against my substitute.

First, some of the speakers are seeking to fuel distrust between Pakistan and India, and they use the Congress' strong support for the world's largest democracy, India, to create the impression that U.S. assistance has been and would be used against India. That is counterproductive. It is not correct. It is dangerous and disingenuous.

I urge my colleagues to adopt the Republican substitute and reject the underlying bill.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will include in the RECORD a letter from the Premier Pakistani American organization, the Pakistani American Leadership Center, endorsing H.R. 1886.

Washington, DC, June 6, 2009.

Hon. HOWARD BERMAN,

Chair, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BERMAN: On behalf of the Pakistani American Leadership Center (PAL-C) and other team members listed below, I am writing to express our strong support for H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009. PAL-C was established in 2004 to mobilize the Pakistani-American community to be more conversant with the U.S. political process and to promote greater understanding of Pakistan by building lasting ties with the U.S.

H.R. 1886 reflects our deep commitment to developing a strong U.S.-Pakistan relationship and will be instrumental in strengthening Pakistan's democratic government, promoting economic and social development for Pakistan's citizens, and creating the foundation for a stronger, more stable Pakistan.

We are particularly pleased that H.R. 1886 accentuates investments in Pakistan's healthcare, education, and infrastructure and includes a requirement that all U.S. security assistance be provided through the elected civilian government. PAL-C also applauds the requirements for enhanced monitoring, evaluation and auditing of U.S. economic assistance. These aspects of the bill will assure the most impactful application of the funds, create the greatest long term leverage from the assistance package, and establish the needed transparency in distribution of money.

We thank you for your hard work and visionary leadership on this critical legislation and hope that its passage will initiate the beginning of a new, more positive and enduring era in U.S.-Pakistan relations. We also stand ready to continue doing our part as proud Pakistani Americans in offering U.S. congress special insights into Pakistan, based on our deep rooted perspective.

Sincerely,

PERVAIZ LODHIE.

Pervaiz Lodhie, Founder/President, LEDtronics; Salim Adaya, Chairperson, IDS Real Estate Group; Muhammad Adaya, IDS Real Estate Group; Najeeb Ghauri, Chairman/CEO, Netsol; Dr. Satter Abbasi, Prof. Clinical Medicine, UCLA; Jamal Khawaja, Director, JFK Import & Export; Dr. Salman Nagvi, COS, Kindred Hospital OC; Adnan

Khan, President, CIDP Inc.; Fiza Shah, Founder/CEO, DIL; Ghazala Khan, Principal, GK & Associates; Shezad Rokerya, Chairman, The Interlink Group; Taha Gaya, Exec. Dir., PAL-C; Jim Moody, Chairman AFHD/NCHD; Salman Ahmed, UN Goodwill Ambassador, Artist.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to strongly oppose the Republican substitute. I'm pleased to see that the substitute does support the President's request for $1.5 billion a year in nonmilitary assistance for Pakistan, the same amount as the underlying bill. But that's where the similarity ends.

With all due respect to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, this substitute amounts to nothing more than a blank check. It requires no real oversight, no serious accountability, no congressional role beyond getting briefings on what we could ask for without any new law.

Since 9/11, I repeat again, we have poured more than $12 billion into Pakistan, with very little to show for it. This substitute is simply a continuation of the same failed policy.

H.R. 1886, on the other hand, expresses our sense of priorities for democratic, economic, and social development assistance without tying the President's hands. Unlike the substitute, our bill provides robust monitoring and evaluation to ensure that the assistance is reaching the Pakistani people. Why would you support another $1.5 billion in economic assistance unless you knew it wasn't just going for ghost schools and to disappear into unspecified budget support? You need the monitoring and evaluation kinds of provisions that we haven't had in the past and that our bill provides and the Republican substitute doesn't.

The Republican substitute treats Pakistan in virtual isolation with a brief mention of the Afghan-Pakistan cooperation. H.R. 1886 requires a comprehensive regional strategy, including the role of countries outside the region in supporting Pakistan's efforts to combat al Qaeda and the Taliban. A global effort is required to make Pakistan a success, and the substitute's failure to recognize this salient fact is another serious flaw.

Read the bill. Please read the bill. Our accountability provisions are not rigid. They're not inflexible. We state very clearly simply that we expect Pakistan to make progress in their fight against the extremists and to sustain their commitment. If the President can't tell us that Pakistan is meeting with that very minimal standard, we should be asking ourselves much deeper questions about what we're really trying to achieve here. The onus is on our minority colleagues to explain why, given Pakistan's recent history, we should provide more weapons without making sure the equipment is being used properly.

In this context I find it curious that the substitute is totally inconsistent with the arguments that my friends made just yesterday during debate on the State Department authorization bill. Then all the repeated arguments were more accountability, we need stricter accountability for critical foreign policy priorities. Here we have the most critical foreign policy priority and in the Republican substitute the absence of any provisions regarding accountability, evaluation, auditing, or monitoring.

This substitute begs the question, why does the minority support total flexibility for President Obama in Pakistan but everywhere else in the foreign policy or domestic sphere, they try to constrain him? This is at the top of our list of national security challenges. Our approach is the better approach.

I urge defeat of the substitute.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Yes, I am. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Rogers of Michigan moves to recommit the bill H.R. 1886 to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

TITLE I—COMPREHENSIVE INTERAGENCY STRATEGY AND IMPLEMENTATION PLAN FOR LONG-TERM SECURITY AND STABILITY IN PAKISTAN

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “United States-Pakistan Security and Stability Act”.

SEC. 102. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Congress supports the following elements outlined in the President’s White Paper of the Interagency Policy Group’s Report on United States Policy Toward Afghanistan and Pakistan:

(A) The core goal of the United States must be to disrupt, dismantle, and defeat al Qaeda and its affiliated networks and their safe havens in Pakistan.

(B) The threat that al Qaeda poses to the United States and its allies in Pakistan—including the possibility of extremists obtaining fissile material—is all too real.

(C) The United States must overcome its trust deficit with Pakistan and demonstrate that it is a reliable, long-term partner.

(2) The Government of Pakistan is facing significant security and socio-economic challenges that set the conditions for greater radicalization and may threaten Pakistan’s viability. Such challenges include the following:

(A) Al Qaeda’s and other extremist groups’ campaign of violent attacks throughout Pakistan, including the Red Mosque incident, the assassination of Benazir Bhutto, and the bombing of the Marriott Hotel in Islamabad.

(B) Pakistan’s population growth at a rate of approximately 2 percent a year, with nearly half of its 172 million residents illiterate, under the age of 20, and living near or below the poverty line.

(3) Security and stability to Pakistan is further complicated given the prevalence of ungoverned spaces between Pakistan and Afghanistan in which state control has not been fully exercised given ethnic and tribal affiliations.

(4) The security and stability of Pakistan is vital to the national security of the United States, and the consequences of failure poses a grave threat to the security of the American people, the region, and United States allies.

(5) The objectives of United States policy toward Pakistan are to empower and enable Pakistan to—

(A) develop into a prosperous and democratic state that is at peace with itself and with its neighbors;

(B) actively confront, and deny safe haven to, al Qaeda, the Taliban, and other extremists;

(C) implement the economic, legal, and social reforms required to create an environment that discourages violent Islamic extremism; and

(D) maintain robust command and control over its nuclear weapons technology.

SEC. 103. COMPREHENSIVE INTERAGENCY STRATEGY AND IMPLEMENTATION PLAN FOR PAKISTAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 2009, the President shall develop and transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan for long-term security and stability in Pakistan which shall be composed of the elements specified in subsection (b).

(b) ELEMENTS.—The comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a) shall contain at least the following elements:

(1) A description of how United States assistance described in section 104 will be used to achieve the objectives of United States policy toward Pakistan.

(2) Progress toward the following:

(A) Assisting efforts to enhance civilian control and a stable constitutional government in Pakistan and promote bilateral and regional trade and economic growth.

(B) Developing and operationally enabling Pakistani security forces so they are capable of succeeding in sustained counter-insurgency and counter-terror operations.

(C) Shutting down Pakistani safe havens for extremists.

(D) Improving Pakistan’s capacity and capability to “hold” and “build” areas cleared of insurgents to prevent their return.

(E) Developing and strengthening mechanisms for Pakistan-Afghanistan cooperation.

(3) A financial plan and description of the resources, programming, and management of United States foreign assistance to Pakistan, including the criteria used to determine their prioritization.

(4) A complete description of both the evaluation process for reviewing and adjusting the strategy and implementation as necessary, and measures of effectiveness for the implementation of the strategy.

(c) INTELLIGENCE SUPPORT.—The President, in developing the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a), shall consult with the Director of National Intelligence.

(d) UPDATES OF STRATEGY.—The President shall transmit in writing to the appropriate congressional committees any updates of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a), as necessary.

SEC. 104. AUTHORIZATION OF ASSISTANCE FOR PAKISTAN.

(a) FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the President, for the purposes of providing assistance to Pakistan under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), $1,500,000,000 or such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2010 through 2013.

(b) PAKISTAN COUNTERINSURGENCY CAPABILITY FUND.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the President, for the purposes of building a more effective counterinsurgency capability in Pakistan’s security forces, up to $700,000,000 for the Pakistan Counterinsurgency Capability Fund, for fiscal year 2010.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Amounts authorized to be appropriated under this section or otherwise made available to carry out this title shall be used to the maximum extent practicable as direct expenditures for programs, projects, and activities, subject to existing reporting and notification requirements.

SEC. 105. CONGRESSIONAL BRIEFING AND NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) BRIEFING.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the transmission of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by section 103, and quarterly thereafter through December 1, 2013, the President, acting through the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, shall brief the appropriate congressional committees on the status of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan.

(b) NOTIFICATION.—The President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees not later than 30 days prior to obligating any assistance described in section 104 as budgetary support to the Government of Pakistan or to any persons, agencies, instrumentalities, or elements of the Government of Pakistan and shall describe the purpose and conditions attached to any such budgetary support assistance. The President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees not later than 30 days prior to obligating any other type of assistance described in section 104.

SEC. 106. DEFINITION.

In this title, the term “appropriate congressional committees” means—

(1) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate.

TITLE II—COMPREHENSIVE INTER-AGENCY STRATEGY AND IMPLEMENTATION PLAN FOR LONG-TERM SECURITY AND STABILITY IN AFGHANISTAN

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “United States-Afghanistan Security and Stability Act”.

SEC. 202. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Congress supports the following elements outlined in the President’s White Paper of the Interagency Policy Group’s Report on United States Policy Toward Afghanistan and Pakistan:

(A) The United States has a vital national security interest in addressing the current and potential security threats posed by extremists in Afghanistan and Pakistan.

(B) The United States homeland, Pakistan, Afghanistan, India, Europe, Australia, and United States allies in the Middle East remain targets of al Qaeda and other extremist groups.

(C) At the same time, the Taliban and related organizations seek to reestablish their old sanctuaries in Afghanistan.

(2) Afghanistan is a central front in the global struggle against al Qaeda and other affiliated networks. A stable Afghanistan that is free from al Qaeda, the Taliban, and extremist influence and ideology will require a patient, long-term, integrated political, military, and economic strategy that is adequately resourced to accomplish its objectives.

(3) Allowing Afghanistan to revert to its pre-September 11, 2001, status of control by al Qaeda and the Taliban is not an option for United States policy.

(4) Security and stability in Afghanistan is further complicated given the prevalence of ungoverned space between Afghanistan and Pakistan in which state control has not been fully exercised given ethnic and tribal affiliations.

(5) The United States will continue to demonstrate its long-term commitment to the people of Afghanistan by—

(A) sustained civilian assistance and providing United States commanders with the troops and resources needed to conduct counterinsurgency operations with the support of the Government and people of Afghanistan; and

(B) continuing to engage the Afghan people in ways that demonstrate United States commitment to promoting a legitimate and capable Afghan government.

(6) The objectives of United States policy toward Afghanistan are to empower and enable Afghanistan to—

(A) develop into secure and stable state with a government that exercises full control and authority over all the country; and

(B) develop increasingly reliable and capable Afghan security forces that can actively confront, and deny safe haven to al Qaeda, the Taliban, and other extremists and eventually lead the counterinsurgency and counterterrorism fight with reduced United States assistance.

SEC. 203. COMPREHENSIVE INTERAGENCY STRATEGY AND IMPLEMENTATION PLAN FOR AFGHANISTAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2009, the President shall develop and transmit to the appropriate congressional committees a comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan for long-term security and stability in Afghanistan which shall be composed of the elements specified in subsection (b).

(b) ELEMENTS.—The comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a) shall contain at least the following elements:

(1) A description of how United States assistance described in section 204 will be used to achieve the objectives of United States policy toward Afghanistan.

(2) Progress toward the following:

(A) Executing and resourcing an integrated civilian-military counterinsurgency strategy in Afghanistan.

(B) Disrupting terrorist networks in Afghanistan and Pakistan to degrade any ability such networks have to plan and launch international terrorist attacks.

(C) Resourcing and prioritizing civilian assistance in Afghanistan.

(D) Promoting a more capable, accountable, and effective government in Afghanistan that serves the Afghan people.

(E) Expanding the Afghan National Security Forces and developing self-reliant security forces that can lead the counterinsurgency and counterterrorism fight with reduced United States assistance.

(F) Supporting Afghanistan in disrupting and dismantling narco-traffickers and breaking the narcotics-insurgency nexus.

(G) Ensuring that nations and various international organizations that have pledged to provide multilateral and bilateral assistance to support efforts to rebuild Afghanistan fulfill their commitment.

(H) Developing and strengthening mechanisms for Afghanistan-Pakistan cooperation.

(3) A financial plan and description of the resources, programming, and management of United States foreign assistance to Afghanistan, including the criteria used to determine their prioritization.

(4) A complete description of both the evaluation process for reviewing and adjusting the strategy and implementation as necessary, and measures of effectiveness for the implementation of the strategy.

(c) INTELLIGENCE SUPPORT.—The President, in developing the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a), shall consult with the Director of National Intelligence.

(d) UPDATES OF STRATEGY.—The President shall transmit in writing to the appropriate congressional committees any updates of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by subsection (a), as necessary.

SEC. 204. AUTHORIZATION OF ASSISTANCE FOR AFGHANISTAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the President, for the purposes of providing assistance to Afghanistan under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), $2,800,000,000 or such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2010 through 2013.

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—Amounts authorized to be appropriated under this section or otherwise made available to carry out this title shall be used to the maximum extent practicable as direct expenditures for programs, projects, and activities, subject to existing reporting and notification requirements.

SEC. 205. CONGRESSIONAL BRIEFING AND NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) BRIEFING.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the transmission of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan required by section 203, and quarterly thereafter through December 1, 2013, the President, acting through the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, shall brief the appropriate congressional committees on the status of the comprehensive interagency strategy and implementation plan.

(b) NOTIFICATION.—The President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees not later than 30 days before obligating any assistance described in section 204 as budgetary support to the Government of Afghanistan or to any persons, agencies, instrumentalities, or elements of the Government of Afghanistan and shall describe the purpose and conditions attached to any such budgetary support assistance. The President shall notify the appropriate congressional committees not later than 30 days before obligating any other type of assistance described in section 204.

SEC. 206. DEFINITION.

In this title, the term “appropriate congressional committees” means—

(1) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate.

Mr. BERMAN (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ROGERS) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I commend my friend, Mr. BERMAN, for his efforts on this bill, as I do Congresswoman ROS-LEHTINEN on her efforts on what I think is the most pressing national security issue we face today, Pakistan. And when you look at the troubles that they face and what a unique country it is, they are a nuclear-armed sovereign nation that has expressed concern about its eastern neighbors, the Indians, and all of the effort, both diplomatic, economic, militarily, intelligence, that they apply to what they view as a problem sect.

And to the west of that country, even in their Constitution, they treat differently. They give it special autonomy: the Federally Administered Tribal Areas. And that’s the area that has caused Afghanistan and the United States untold misery, danger, something we ought to worry about.

And this bill in the most arrogant way says, You know what? We know better than you, Pakistan. We’re going to make you set up a teachers’ pay scale if you want our Federal money, if you want U.S. money to help us in the fight against terrorism that is ongoing today by people like Batula Masood, who are trying to kill Americans today and make further unstable the Pakistani Government, or Fazlullah, who has moved into the Swat area, the first time somebody from the tribal areas has taken this effort.

Fazlullah, for the first time, took some settled areas. It used to be a great area—as a matter of fact, a tourist area in Pakistan, the Swat Valley—and the military has had difficulty in trying to extract them from what is a settled area in Pakistan. That is real trouble.

Many of you have quoted “The 60 Miles from Islamabad.” That was the Swat Valley movement, and it was done by Fazlullah, 30-something years old, rabid Taliban leader, who was able to, in just a very short period of time, take over most of the police stations.

You have al Qaeda senior leadership moving freely with the Haqqani network supporting their abilities in the tribal areas of Pakistan. Batula Masood, as I said before, has been engaged in terrorist acts not only against us, but the Pakistanis.

Their government is at risk, their people are dying. This bill arrogantly says, listen, we want you to help us in terrorism, but let me tell you what’s important, your teacher pay scales. Those are important.

This is a sovereign nation. As a matter of fact, Senator KERRY—we don’t often agree with Senator KERRY—an interesting quote: “Well”—I won’t use all of his language—“we’re just doing their bidding. We’re their lackeys. We’re not in control. You guys (the Pakistani Government) are an American puppet, blah, blah, blah.” What he was saying is, don’t put all these arbitrary caveats on this bill.

Let’s support President Obama. He hasn’t been there that long. He wants to implement his policy. He says he needs flexibility. I agree with him. This is one of the most complicated, complex problems we will face when it comes to national security.

You even, in this bill—and I don’t think you’re thinking about what the implications are—through your labor agreements in this bill, inspectors are to publish reports listing the names and locations of every firm in the program. This is a nation beleaguered by terrorists. Why would you give them a list of targets in Pakistan published by the United States Government? It makes no sense whatsoever.

You often talked about the arrogance of the previous administration telling people how they ought to live and telling them how they ought to govern. This is the most intrusive, most arrogant approach to providing someone assistance that is actually helping us fight terrorism in the most difficult area I can find in the world today.

I am going to ask you to please take a look at this motion to recommit. It puts a little common sense back in it and says, you know what, we’ll get to the teacher pay scale and merit-based system that you would like to get to maybe another day, but today we are worried about the safety and security of our soldiers in Afghanistan who are under attack from Taliban leaders, headquartered the Shura Council in Quetta, Pakistan. We are worried about the Haqqani network, who is developing the logistical support that they need through arms and other things to help target our soldiers in Afghanistan. We are worried about Fazlullah’s efforts in his first settled areas of Pakistan. That ought to be our watch today.

We are getting ready to send thousands and thousands of fresh United States troops to this region. Our focus has to be national security; it has to be their security. It has to say, Pakistan, we are a partner, not your mother. We are not going to hold your hand in this. We are going to be your equal partner in your fight on terror. Thank you for your commitment.

We’re going to stand up for those folks.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BERMAN. I made a mistake earlier. I objected to the reading of the motion to recommit. I should have asked for a reading of the bill. As much as I admire the gentleman, the one thing that is clear to me from his comments is he didn’t read the bill.

We have absolutely no conditions or restrictions or efforts to earmark or tie up any of the economic assistance in this bill. Why you would say that is only because someone told you that. Because when you look at the bill, we have some principles, we have suggestions, we lay out things that need to be done to build democratic institutions in Pakistan, to build a school system.

We know that we are providing up to $12 billion, much of it in economic assistance for schools that have no teachers. We’re providing money for teachers who have no education and don’t know how to teach science and math. So we suggest in this bill some guidelines and tie no one’s hands. We don’t tie the Secretary’s hands; we don’t tie the Pakistanis’ hands.

Now, the state of play is that when we put together our Pakistan bill, we went to the minority and said, let’s work on a Pakistan/Afghanistan bill. They weren’t interested. The problem with the minority’s way to do a motion to recommit is the leadership meets in some office—they don’t bring in the Republicans from the committee—and they come up with a motion to recommit, let’s join Afghanistan with Pakistan. We’ve been trying to do that for 4 months in our committee, but the minority didn’t want to do it that way.

And by the way, we just had a little vote. We had a vote on a Republican substitute that, on security assistance, had no monitoring provisions, no auditing provisions, no evaluation provisions. This is in the context of $12 billion that’s been spent, a huge amount on reimbursements for which there are no receipts for money, that we cannot find what it went for. If you like what’s been going on there, you’re praising the right of Pakistan to do what it wants to do.

When Musharraf kept making appeasement agreements with different elements of the Taliban, was that a wise thing to be encouraging? I don’t think so. The only thing we provide any benchmarks on is the security assistance. And what we say there is, Mr. President, look at how that money is being spent and make a determination whether or not Pakistan has a commitment—that they are now, by the way, demonstrating—to combating the insurgency and fighting the terrorists, and whether they’re making progress. And are they cooperating in the efforts to dismantle the proliferation regime, and are they doing things to secure it? And, Mr. President, you make the determination and you make the decision.

We have worked with the leadership of the Armed Services Committee to make sure that the security assistance gets to the Pakistani military as quickly as possible, but not equipment that has nothing to do with the counterinsurgency. We want the equipment, the helicopters, the night-vision goggles, the training, the IMET programs to go as fast as they can. So in our bill, not in yours, but in our bill we waive all the traditions that now exist on traditional security assistance programs.

So this is a motion to recommit that includes an Afghan bill that says, continue as usual, where the lack of end-use monitoring has meant that we have been arming the Taliban because they steal the guns we provide and use them against our forces and the Afghan forces, and repeat in toto the Republican substitute we just rejected.

Let’s vote against it. We did it once; let’s do it again. Let’s try to reestablish some sense of bipartisan collaboration. These differences aren’t that great. We can work them out if the majority and the minority cooperate. I say, as the chairman of the committee with jurisdiction over these issues, I would love to put together a bipartisan approach. Maybe we can start working on that for the conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 332 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted “aye.”

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 332 I was detained in the Committee on Agriculture during a question and answer exchange with Secretary of Agriculture Vilsack and was not able to reach the floor before the vote was closed. Had I been present, I would have voted “aye.”

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 332 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted “aye.”

ANNOUNCING THE DEATH OF FORMER MEMBER
CARL PURSELL OF MICHIGAN

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, as dean of the Michigan Republican delegation, I have the sad duty to relay the news that our former colleague Carl Pursell from Michigan passed away this morning. He was the ranking member on the Labor-HHS appropriations subcommittee for many years. He retired in 1993.

I would yield to Mr. MCCOTTER who represents Plymouth, Michigan.

Mr. MCCOTTER. I thank the gentleman.

I grew up in Carl's district. We watched as he went from a Wayne County commissioner to a Michigan State Senator and then into this illustrious body. As a young person growing up getting interested in politics, Carl's example was an inspiration. It showed that a fine and decent gentleman could come from the small town of Plymouth, retain his Main Street truths, and do the people's business in this, the people's House.

The last several years have not been kind to Carl. He is in a far better place, and we are all diminished. Our best goes out to his family, and we would appreciate it if you keep him in your prayers.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for a moment of silence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members will rise for a moment of silence.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). There are less than 2 minutes remaining on this vote.

So the bill was passed.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 333, H.R. 1886 would provide an element of stability in the troubled Middle East, but its cost, in these economic times, is excessive. As a result, I determined a "present" vote to be appropriate. I was present on the House floor for all votes prior to and after this vote on final passage; and due to a malfunction in the voting process, I was shown as "Not Voting." This explanation is filed due to the unusual nature of the substance of the issue, and my position and rec- ordation of same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, H.R. 1886 is laid on the table.

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING SPEAKER TO ENTERTAIN MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULES ON TODAY

Mr. BERMAN (during consideration of H.R. 1886). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized on this legislative day to entertain motions that the House suspend the rules relating to House Resolution 529.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Ms. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1256. An act to protect the public health by providing the Food and Drug Administration with certain authority to regulate tobacco products, to amend title 5, United States Code, to make certain modifications in the Thrift Savings Plan, the Civil Service Retirement System, and the Federal Employees' Retirement System, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate passed a bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 407. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for an increase, effective December 1, 2009, in the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for the survivors of certain disabled veterans, to codify increases in the rates of such compensation that were effective as of December 1, 2008, and for other purposes.

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 848

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 848, the Performance Rights Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from the District of Columbia?

There was no objection.

CONDEMNING SHOOTING AT U.S.
HOLOCAUST MUSEUM

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 529) condemning the violent attack on the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10, 2009 and honoring the bravery and dedication of United States Holocaust Memorial Museum employees and security personnel.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 529

Whereas, on June 10, 2009, an armed assailant with ties to white supremacist organizations, a conviction for a violent crime and a history of anti-Semitic and racist activities opened fire at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum;

Whereas, the gunman was a convicted felon and obtained a firearm in violation of Federal law;

Whereas, security personnel at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, U.S. Park Police, and other emergency responders, responded quickly and valiantly to ensure the safety of museum visitors and staff and other bystanders;

Whereas, Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, who had worked at the Museum for six years, was fired upon by the gunman and later tragically succumbed to his wounds;

Whereas, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum was established by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, which was created by Congress in 1980 (Public Law 96-388) and mandated to create a permanent living memorial museum to the victims of the Holocaust;

Whereas, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum was dedicated on April 22, 1993 and has since welcomed nearly 30 million visitors, including more than 8 million school children and 85 heads of state;

Whereas, the primary mission of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum is "to advance and disseminate knowledge about this unprecedented tragedy; to preserve the memory of those who suffered; and to encourage its visitors to reflect upon the moral and spiritual questions raised by the events of the Holocaust as well as their own responsibilities as citizens of a democracy."

Whereas, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum serves as one of the world's leading authorities on the Holocaust;

Whereas, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, created to remind us of what happened and what could happen when hatred turns into violence, has tragically become a target itself;

Whereas, the attack at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum is a horrific reminder of the violence that can stem from anti-Semitism, racism, hatred, intolerance, and Holocaust denial;

Whereas, President Obama stated, "This outrageous act reminds us that we must remain vigilant against anti-Semitism and prejudice in all its forms. No American institution is more important to this effort than the Holocaust Museum, and no act of violence will diminish our determination to honor those who were lost by building a more peaceful and tolerant world": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) condemns the violent attack on the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10, 2009;

(2) honors the bravery and dedication of the employees and security personnel at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and rededicates itself to the safety and the security of the Museum and its visitors;

(3) offers its condolences to the family of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns who was killed in the line of duty;

(4) redoubles its commitment to advance the mission of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum to educate people about the Holocaust and fight against anti-Semitism, racism, hatred and intolerance; and

(5) urges the American people to join the Hour of Representatives in condemning this act of hateful violence and intolerance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution places this body on record as condemning yesterday's violent attack on the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, while also praising the bravery and sacrifice of those who defended against this attack. The resolution further recognizes the powerful and vital role that the memorial museum plays in the world and rededicates this Congress to assisting wherever possible in helping the museum to accomplish its mission of education and enlightenment.

First and foremost, let me join my colleagues in expressing our deep sadness and heartfelt condolences to the family and friends of Security Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns. It is our hope that, despite what must be nearly unbearable grief, those who loved Officer Johns are also filled with enormous pride at the service he rendered during his distinguished career and the sacrifice he has now made.

Everyone involved in the tragic events of yesterday proved something about themselves. Officer Johns, along with the security and other emergency personnel who responded, proved that training, dedication and bravery in the face of life-threatening events can save lives.

Officer Johns in particular reminds us that there are those among us who volunteer to stand watch over us, even knowing that they are risking their own lives.

The perpetrator of yesterday's attack proved something as well. His actions demonstrate that ignorance and hatred still exist and too often lead to violence. By his actions, this man demonstrated that the very evil which led to the Holocaust, the very evil he had sought in the past to deny, still exists and still must be resisted vigilantly.

And going forward, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum will prove something as well. There was a time when people with hatred in their hearts were powerful, a time when those who devalued others based on race or religion held in their hands the levers of power. Those days are over.

The museum has suffered a great loss, but the museum will continue in its important work. This attack has no power over the museum, its supporters or its mission.

Hatred can no longer beat back the forces of justice and equality. Whatever the dark aims of the attacker may have been, there is no question that he has failed, and those like him will always fail as long as organizations like the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum are standing.

I ask my colleagues to support this important resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join with Chairman RAHALL to support this resolution to condemn the tragic shooting at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum yesterday. Our prayers go out to the family of Security Officer Steven Tyrone Johns, an innocent victim of this outrage.

Mr. Speaker, that this violent act and needless death occurred at a memorial erected to peace and tolerance by reminding the world of the deaths and horrors of the Holocaust is, to me, simply unspeakable.

So, Mr. Speaker, I simply urge all of my colleagues to support this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to yield 2 minutes to the main sponsor of this resolution, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KLEIN).

Mr. KLEIN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 529, a bipartisan resolution that I authored with Mr. PENCE, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. SMITH and Mr. ENGEL, and I thank the Speaker for promptly bringing it to the floor today with the input and guidance from many other Members of this Chamber, as well as the bipartisan Congressional Task Force Against Anti-Semitism.

I rise today in great sorrow as this Nation mourns the loss of Officer Stephen T. Johns, who was killed in the line of duty yesterday at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum at the hands of a hateful white supremacist.

Today I offer condolences to the family of Officer Johns and condemn in the strongest possible way the vicious attack on the Holocaust Memorial Museum and all that it represents.

The museum is a place of reflection, an expression of the adage "never again." The museum seeks a world without racism, anti-Semitism, Holocaust denial and intolerance.

The target may have been the museum and Jews, but this vicious attack hurt all Americans. A hate crime in every sense, this attack violates all of us. Acts of hatred and violence cannot and will not be tolerated in our country. Today, the lessons of the Holocaust are more relevant than ever before. Officer Johns died protecting those values, and he is a hero to all of us.

Americans stand today together to redouble our commitment to advance the mission of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, to advance Holocaust education and fight against anti-Semitism, racism, hatred and intolerance in the United States and throughout the world. Only by standing together can we begin to heal and fight against future acts of hatred.

I thank both the Democrat and Republican leadership of the House, Mr. RAHALL and Mr. HASTINGS, for their support. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished Republican Caucus Chair, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 529, condemning the violent attack on the Holocaust Memorial Museum that occurred in shocking dimensions yesterday here in our Nation's Capital.

I want to single out my colleague in the majority, RON KLEIN of Florida, for his swift and thoughtful legislative work in bringing this resolution to the floor and for allowing me to coauthor this bipartisan resolution before the House today. It has been my distinct pleasure to serve together with Mr. KLEIN as the cochairman of the Bipartisan Congressional Task Force Against Anti-Semitism that was founded, I say with deep admiration, by the late Tom Lantos of California, who understood the importance of this body and this Nation speaking with one voice against the venom of anti-Semitism.

Today, we mourn the loss of Special Police Officer Steven Tyrone Johns, and I offer my personal condolences to his family. He lost his life while defending civilians, visitors and staff of the Holocaust Memorial Museum. Officer Johns died upon arrival at the George Washington Hospital after being shot by an assailant with strong ties to white supremacist organizations. Officer Johns died while bravely defending museum visitors from around the world, and I honor his service and courage and the sacrifice that he exemplified. He will be remembered.

We rise today to condemn the violent attacks of yesterday that ravaged Washington, D.C.'s, permanent living memorial to the victims of the Holocaust. For those who have visited, we know the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum serves as one of the world's leading authorities on the Holocaust. And let me say with no small measure of American pride, it has become an essential stop for every American visiting our Nation's Capital, with few exceptions.

It was dedicated on April 22, 1993, and has since welcomed nearly 30 million children, including 8 million school-children and 85 heads of state.

The museum's mission is simply this: to "advance and disseminate knowledge about this unprecedented tragedy; to preserve the memory of those who suffered; and to encourage its visitors to reflect upon the moral and spiritual questions raised by the events of the Holocaust as well as their own responsibilities as citizens of a democracy." Anyone who has wandered those solemn hallways knows that the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum accomplishes that mission.

This attack at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum is a horrific reminder of the violence that can stem from unchecked hatred, intolerance, anti-Semitism, as well as the denial of history that is often manifested in that sentiment.

Let me be clear. No act of violence will ever diminish our determination to honor those who lost their lives in the Holocaust, and neither will yesterday.

And as we condemn intolerance and racism in our Capital City, we should ponder today, Mr. Speaker, what anti-Semitic hatred and rage could mean on the international stage. I say with a heavy heart today, with the deepest respect for the families affected by yesterday's tragic events, we would do well, as a Nation, to reflect, if one man can walk in the Holocaust museum with a rifle, motivated by anti-Semitic rage and bring about violence and death, what could a nation, armed with the same anti-Semitic rage, do with a nuclear weapon?

The American people deserve to know that the same hatred that drove this one, lonely and deranged man to open fire at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, I believe, resides in the hearts of some of the most powerful leaders in an ancient nation of the world. And I am confident that when the time comes, this Congress, this government, this Nation, and our cherished ally, will do what is necessary to prevent a global manifestation of anti-Semitic violence.

The best way to honor the lives of victims of hatred is to stand in the path of those who would continue the violence. Let Officer Johns' sacrifice be an example for each of us in our personal lives, and an example for this Nation in the exercise of courage and determination in the defense of liberty on the world stage.

Let us stand in the path of hatred, come together as a Congress and a Nation.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlelady from the District of Columbia, in whose district this terrible attack occurred, ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the majority leader announced that he had not been able to muster enough votes to pass a civil rights bill, the District of Columbia Voting Rights Bill, which had a gun amendment which would wipe away the District's gun laws leaving us defenseless.

Yesterday, a brave young man, Stephen Tyrone Johns, a guard at the Holocaust Museum, one of our most popular museums because it is so moving, lost his life.

There are political considerations that keep us from moving directly against gun laws. I ask us to show that we are not defenseless to protect official Washington, not paralyzed when it comes to gun safety, by at least passing, but not allowing gun amendments to stop unrelated laws like the District of Columbia Voting Rights Act and opening the city to gun carnage of the kind we saw yesterday.

Let this be the last gun carnage of its kind. Let the District of Columbia Voting Rights Act pass this year.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT).

Mr. GOHMERT. Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the bringing of this resolution. This is a time when we should join our hearts and minds together in condemning the violent act that occurred at, of all places, the Holocaust museum, a place that I, with countless others, in my case, multiple occasions going to the museum, have been touched to tears to just try to get your mind around the inhumanity of man to man.

This is a Nation that was brought together as a Nation, fought hard, so that within this Nation we could have civility. And one of the Founding Fathers' favorite lines was often to quote Voltaire in saying, I disagree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

The criminal who invoked and created this violence in the Holocaust museum should be properly punished, and I am thankful that we have laws that will punish him. I wouldn't mind seeing a death penalty as a possibility in the case of such violence, but in this town that is, apparently, not an option. But violence of this nature within this country must not be tolerated.

But it also must not minimize the commitment, the love and devotion of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, who gave his life in doing his job in devotion to others and to this country and all it stands for.

So we thank Stephen Tyrone Johns. We thank his memory. We thank his family, and we will pray for their peace and healing during this very, very difficult time.

We condemn the attack, such a violent nature, encourage all to understand that in this Nation, in every State, in the District of Columbia, no matter how someone may disagree with someone else, provoking words are never a defense to violence. Violence must be condemned, no matter what someone deems to be the provocation in their own mind.

We must be and we must make this a Nation of civility. We can disagree. Disagreement is a good and healthy thing. When there's disagreement, it means we're not all useless. But we must never allow this kind of violence to go unaddressed.

So we pay tribute to the Johns family—our prayers will be with them—and condemn the violent attack at the Holocaust museum, of all places, and appreciate this resolution being brought forward.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, Officer Johns resided in the district of our next speaker, to whom I'm going to yield 2 minutes, the gentlelady from Maryland, Ms. DONNA EDWARDS.

Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 529.

Mr. Speaker, it's with great sadness that I rise today to honor the life and memory of Stephen Tyrone Johns, the security officer who courageously gave his life protecting the lives of others during yesterday's shooting at the Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Officer Johns' quick action and sacrifice may indeed have saved the lives of people at the Holocaust Memorial Museum yesterday and certainly enabled his fellow officers to secure the museum.

The armed assailant, who had connections with the white supremacist organizations and a long history of anti-Semitic and racist activities, walked into the Holocaust museum and opened fire, resulting in the tragic murder of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns. This was a murder based on hate and malice, and took the life of a good man.

A security officer for 6 years at the Holocaust Memorial Museum and resident of Temple Hills, Maryland, which is the district which I represent, Officer Johns was beloved by his family and friends. Colleagues called Officer Johns "Big John." He was known as a gentle giant, and remembered for his friendliness, soft-spoken nature and gentle demeanor.

This morning, I had the opportunity to speak to Officer Johns' mother and stepfather. The entire family is grieving this senseless loss. Above all, the family wanted America to know that Stephen was dedicated to his job and his family. His mother said he loved his job, and he took his duty at the Holocaust Memorial Museum very seriously, so seriously that he ended up paying the ultimate sacrifice.

As we join Officer Johns' family in struggling to find answers, the truth is that this was a senseless act and a senseless murder that has resulted in a great loss. Officer Johns' sacrifice is a stark reminder of the threat of hate and intolerance to our humanity.

I want the family of Officer Johns to know that I, along with my colleagues here in Congress, am grieving with them, and America is grieving with them.

In addition to his family and friends, Officer Johns leaves an 11-year-old son, Stephen Tyrone Johns, Jr., to mourn his loss. So it is with a heavy and sad heart that I offer my sincere condolences to the family of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns. He will always be remembered as a dedicated and beloved hero.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, could I inquire how much time is on both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from West Virginia has 12½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. My understanding is my friend from West Virginia has more requests for time than I do, and I'd be more than happy to yield him 9 of those 10 minutes to dispense with as he sees fit, with the understanding, if I do get some Members, I can reclaim some of that time. And I ask unanimous consent that he control that 9 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAHALL. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS).

I now yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Mrs. DAHLKEMPER).

Mrs. DAHLKEMPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today profoundly troubled and deeply saddened by yesterday's senseless acts of violence that occurred at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington.

My thoughts and prayers are with the family of Stephen T. Johns, the security officer whose life was taken in that tragic event. I am so grateful for his service and the service of all the security officers who work to keep us safe.

Yesterday's action was a shocking reminder of the progress we have yet to make against bigotry, ignorance and hate. The gunman's attack was not only against one man, but against an important idea of human dignity for all.

However, as a Nation, our resolve must remain strong, and our response must be very clear. There is no place for anti-Semitism and racism in the United States of America.

I urge my colleagues to join me in renewing our commitment to ending hatred and violence by supporting House Resolution 529.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlelady from California, Ms. BARBARA LEE.

Ms. LEE of California. Mr. Speaker, let me first say thank you to the gentleman from Florida for introducing this resolution, and I rise in strong support of it.

The Congressional Black Caucus extends our heartfelt condolences to the family of Officer Stephen Johns. He was an American hero. He was an African American. He was slain in this senseless act of violence at the Holocaust museum, which preserves the memory of a period in the world, a period borne of violence, of hatred, of death, a period that must not be forgotten.

The death of Officer Johns reminds us, however, that racism and anti-Semitism in all its ugly forms must be condemned and fought at every, every turn.

We extend to Mr. Johns' family our deepest sympathy as you mourn the loss of your loved one. He will be a hero in all of our minds who we will remember and who will remind us of the unfinished business of our country. We offer our condolences and our assistance to the family, should the family need us during this time of need.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlelady from California, Ms. SUSAN DAVIS.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in supporting this resolution.

The Holocaust museum offers more than an important education opportunity for so many people worldwide. It is a symbol of the need to continue our efforts to reduce intolerance, prejudice and hatred in the world.

It was over 15 years ago when I led a group of young people from San Diego to visit the newly opened museum, a group of high school students from all walks of life who were participating in a mentoring program. I was the executive director of that program and made it a point to put a visit to the Holocaust museum on our agenda.

It was such an emotional moment for many of these teenagers who until that day had never fully comprehended what the Holocaust meant.

So I want to add my voice in expressing heartfelt condolences to the family of museum guard Stephen Tyrone Johns. His courage and his sacrifice will not be forgotten in a place that we always say "Never again."

Also to be recognized and praised are the security guards who subdued the gunman and prevented a tragic incident from becoming even more tragic.

This incident hit me hard yesterday because I happened to be standing at the museum 2 days before the very time that this incident occurred, and it was so pleasing to see the people who were gathering there and who flock to it all the time.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HANK JOHNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, yesterday a despicable act occurred. By now everyone knows what it was and why it was; so I won't belabor that, other than to say that hatred is something that leads to violence. So we should all be looking deeply within our hearts to remove hatred and to try to value humanity.

Officer Stephen Johns leaves an 11-year-old son, whom I saw on TV yesterday, and I don't think he could cry, he was so overwhelmed, and then his mother and his grandmother were too distraught to talk. So they need our prayers, and I send out my condolences to the family.

It happened yesterday that a black man, doing his duty at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, was killed. Our communities have worked so diligently in the past. We have such strong bonds, and so we are there for each other.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DRIEHAUS).

Mr. DRIEHAUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to add my voice to this tragedy and to honor the family of Mr. Johns, who was tragically killed yesterday at the Holocaust museum.

When I come to the floor and when I think about this job and what we are trying to do, to send a message to our children across this country, it is a message of tolerance. It is a message of trying to wipe out hatred, trying to wipe out the hatred that exists against different races, different religions, different cultures. It is about learning to accept and appreciate the cultures.

The Holocaust museum stands as a tribute and helps us better understand the tragedies that occur when intolerance runs amok. I stand with my fellow colleagues and the people of this body in honor of Mr. Johns to say we believe in tolerance, we believe in acceptance, and we thank him and his family and we mourn with them.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Nevada, Ms. SHELLEY BERKLEY.

Ms. BERKLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank my colleagues Mr. WAXMAN and Mr. KLEIN for putting this resolution together.

Mr. Speaker, the shooting at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum is a sad reminder of how anti-Semitism, intolerance, and hatred can lead to senseless acts of violence and death.

My deepest condolences go out to the family of our security officials, Officer Johns, who was killed while defending the visitors and staff of the museum. His bravery and actions in the line of duty are to be commended and will long be remembered.

This disturbing attack on Washington's Holocaust Memorial Museum and the accompanying loss of life underscore the importance of teaching each new generation about the causes of the Holocaust and how we must work together to prevent the spread of intolerance and hatred based on religion, ethnicity, race, color, anything you choose. This shocking and horrific hate crime should be condemned by all Americans. We must speak with one voice that this is unacceptable and will not be tolerated in the United States of America.

This resolution is a worthy first step in this effort. I urge unanimous vote in favor of this resolution by my colleagues.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Ohio, MARY JO KILROY.

Ms. KILROY. Mr. Speaker, to the grieving family of Stephen Tyrone Johns, I offer my deepest sympathy. You are in our thoughts and prayers.

And to the men and women in blue, especially those serving here on Capitol Hill, I offer my condolences at the loss of your brother officer and recognize the courage and devotion to duty he displayed at the cost of his life. I know that our Nation's police forces stand ready each and every day to serve and to protect.

This particular outrage is all the more heinous because of the place of the crime, our National Holocaust Memorial Museum, and because its perpetrator had a repeated history of public expressions of racism and anti-Semitism.

It is long past time for us to come together as a Nation and put an end to racism, to put an end to anti-Semitism, to put an end to homophobia, and to eliminate hate crimes; to come together and say that hatred and intolerance should not be allowed, that we should be able to end this as a community and come together in a Nation that respects each other for the true gift of the individual that each of us is.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY).

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. I thank the gentleman for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday a terrible tragedy happened right here in Washington, D.C. It's sad when we see that there are people in this country that have so much hate in their hearts, and it's sad that this person went out to try to kill as many people as possible and being at the Holocaust museum.

Stephen Johns was there to protect the people in the museum, and he lost his life. He lost his life being a hero, by trying to save as many people there as possible.

Mr. Speaker, each and every day, there are killings; there is hatred that leads to these kinds of killings. It's got to stop. We can stop it here in Congress if the American people would actually put their voices a little bit higher and tell their Representatives the violence needs to stop. Violence on every level is totally wrong. Violence to innocent people is totally wrong. We need to do a better job in stopping the hate in this country.

I rise today in support of H. Res. 529, the resolution condemning the violent attack yesterday at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

My heart goes out to the victim's family. This innocent man was going about his workday and his life was taken in a despicable act of violence.

But Steven Johns' selflessness and heroism saved the lives of others who could have been caught up in the violence.

The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum serves as a powerful rebuke of the violence and hatred that resulted in the loss of millions of lives during World War II.

Yesterday's events then serve as a painful reminder of the importance of combating violence in any form.

The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum has educated millions of Americans about the horrors and hate crimes of the Holocaust.

Sadly, yesterday, the Holocaust Museum became known for another tragic hate crime.

Hate crimes and hate groups are on the rise in our Nation.

Hate groups have terrorized too many Americans.

This horrible act also serves as another example of the need to end gun violence in the United States.

We need to make sure that we do everything we can to prevent similar tragedies in the future.

The suspect in this terrible crime was a convicted felon and should never have been able to get his hands on a gun.

Too many of the wrong people have access to guns.

We are seeing more and more of these senseless crimes take place.

The rate of gun violence in this country is totally unacceptable.

There is something that we can do.

We can pass sensible gun laws in this Nation that will save lives.

We need to keep guns out of the hands of the people that can do the most harm with them such as convicted felons and the mentally ill.

We also need to close the gun show loophole, which allows people to buy guns without any background check at all.

And Congress should pass my bill, the No Fly No Buy Act, which prohibits people who are on the TSA's "No Fly List" as known or suspected terrorists from purchasing guns.

We can never prevent every gun death in this country, but we do have tools that can limit gun violence and would be effective now. I urge my colleagues to work together with me to make sure that we do everything we can to limit gun violence in this country.

Please support this resolution so that we can send a strong message that hate and violence will not be tolerated by this Congress.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, it's nearly a decade ago that in my district a hate-monger came with a gun and pointed it at young men and women, people, families who were leaving their synagogue at the beginning of the Sabbath. And when he wasn't able to kill anybody there, he drove down the street and saw an African American standing in front of his house with his children in Skokie, Illinois, and shot and killed Ricky Birdsong, a community leader and a beloved member of that community.

We've made some progress in extinguishing anti-Semitism and hatred. We have certainly worked toward it. And yet yesterday at the Holocaust museum, a place dedicated to remembering the lives of senselessly killed millions of people, another shooter was there.

But standing in his way was Officer Johns, Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, who died in defense of tolerance in our country, against intolerance in our country, and saved probably the lives of many, many people in doing so because that shooter was going on to kill others.

We owe him and his family a debt of gratitude and send condolences to those who loved him.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Speaker of the House, NANCY PELOSI.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank all of those who are involved, Mr. KLEIN of Florida and members of the House Anti-Semitism Caucus and others, certainly the chairman of the committee, Mr. RAHALL, and others for giving us an opportunity to speak on the floor to express our grief and our outrage over what happened yesterday.

When the news came to the Capitol of what had happened at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, we were shaken, shaken to the core that this could possibly happen.

The resolution today allows us to express some of the grief that we have and the strongest denunciation of the despicable hate crime perpetrated yesterday and to express our strong support for the work of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Some of us were there that rainy, rainy day when the Holocaust Memorial Museum was dedicated. Elie Wiesel spoke to us so profoundly about what it meant, not only in terms of memory and never forgetting what happened in the Holocaust, but what our responsibility is to the future. At the time the Bosnian crisis was happening. So while the Holocaust Memorial Museum is about something that happened in the past, it is a memorial and a reminder to us about ridding our societies of these kinds of attitudes.

So how ironic, how ironic that this person, this individual, would go into that museum with hate in his heart, a gun in his hand, and kill this beautiful man, Stephen Johns, who really gave his life. He guarded others with his life. And I would like to take a moment to pay special tribute to Stephen Johns, whose life was cruelly taken yesterday.

Stephen was known to his colleagues as "a soft-spoken, gentle giant." Stephen loved his hometown football team, the Redskins, and he loved to travel across the United States. Sad to say—well, it was a happy moment for him—but sad that it was such a short time ago he had married and moved to Temple Hills, Maryland, just 10 minutes away from his mother.

Stephen died in the line of duty, doing his job to protect those who came to the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. We honor him today. We honor his sacrifice and his service.

In the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, anyone who has visited there knows there is a flame that burns in remembrance to all who died in the Holocaust. It lights the room over a coffin of Earth gathered from the death camps, concentration camps, sites of mass execution and ghettos in Nazi-occupied Europe and from cemeteries of American and European soldiers who fought and died to defeat Nazi Germany.

Engraved above the flame, it says, from Deuteronomy 4:9: "Only guard yourself and guard your soul carefully, lest you forget the things your eyes saw, and lest these things depart your heart all the days of your life, and you shall make them known to your children, and your children's children."

Today we commit to telling our future generations the truth shared at the Holocaust museum. This heinous act was committed at the entrance to sacred ground to us, the Holocaust museum, as I described, where some of the Earth was gathered from. This is a severe blow to all of us who care about these issues, and I would include that to be everyone in the Congress of the United States and in our great country and those throughout the world who promise never to forget.

So we commit never to forget, and we commit to continue our work to build a world free of hatred.

Again, I thank our colleagues for giving us a time to publicly mourn this horrible, horrible event; to extend our condolences to the family of that brave guard and also to acknowledge, like Stephen Johns, our own Capitol Police and many others who make this area safer for people to visit from all over the world, who make it safer for us to do our jobs here, who make it safer for the press to cover us, who make it safer for our staffs to work, we express our deep gratitude to them. For us, the words Gibson and Chestnut are forever ablaze in our hearts—two of those committed to guard the Capitol whose lives were taken over 10 years ago. We will add to that list Stephen Johns and never forget the sacrifice he made and never forget our responsibility again to end the world of hatred.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to a valued member of our Committee on Natural Resources, the gentleman from American Samoa, Mr. ENI FALEOMAVAEGA.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. I want to thank Chairman RAHALL and our ranking member, DOC HASTINGS, and the members of the committee for bringing this important resolution to the floor. I also want to commend both gentlemen, Congressman KLEIN and Congressman PENCE, as co-Chairs of our Caucus on anti-Semitism. Of course, the memory of Tom Lantos evokes all of the understanding that we have and appreciation for this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, I want to personally express my deepest condolences and sympathies to the family and friends of Officer Johns, who was killed unexpectedly yesterday as a result of a shooting by a man who harbored so much hatred against members of our Jewish community.

Officer Johns, for some 6 years, served faithfully as a security officer there at the museum. He was doing his job. He made the ultimate sacrifice, and we are here to honor him and his life. He gave his life in order to save the lives of others.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that every person who visits our Nation's Capital makes it a point—a must—to visit the Holocaust Memorial Museum. This revered museum is a symbol of our Nation to the world that racism, bigotry, ignorance, and hatred have no place in our country. This museum reminds the world of the suffering of some 6 million Jews, and we should never forget that, if it happened to them, it could also happen to us.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. JESSE JACKSON.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Last night, Mr. Speaker, I tried to explain this horrific event to my daughter when she asked me why. I tried to tell her that African Americans fought for our country in World War II, and a Holocaust survivor once said and told the story of how survivors of the Holocaust knew they had been freed when African Americans showed up, knowing full well, because of their race, that they could not be Nazis even if some African Americans had to fight under a different flag.

African Americans and Jewish Americans banded together in many of our Nation's great campaigns for social justice. Martin Luther King, Jr., used to often quote Rabbi Abraham Heschel. Schwerner, Goodman, and Chaney—two Jews and a black killed for registering people to vote in Mississippi.

Stephen Tyrone Johns lost his life defending visitors at a Holocaust Museum in the hands of a white supremacist. As I believe President Lincoln would paraphrase: Their sacrifice as martyrs is far above our own ability to add or detract.

I would hope in this moment that we would recognize that the ties of human decency and dignity that bind us and the blood that unites us are stronger than the hatred and the demagoguery and the acts of violence that divide us. It is my sincere hope, Mr. Speaker, that we might find some shining moment in recognizing that we have more in common in working together than we do in fighting and in being apart.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California, Ms. JANE HARMAN.

Ms. HARMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, less than a mile from this Chamber, a hate crime occurred yesterday. It occurred in a place of remembrance—a sanctuary. That sanctuary, the Holocaust Museum, has meaning for everyone here. It has special meaning for me because my father was a refugee from that Holocaust, and most of his family was killed in it. One exhibit in the Holocaust Museum is a wall of shoes taken from innocent men, women and children before they were gassed to death. Who were they? What lives would they have led? Would their children have ended up serving here as I have?

In the memory of Officer Johns and 6 million innocent Jews, it is time, past time, to end hate.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. STEVE COHEN.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. JACKSON expressed much of what I've thought about as to the events of yesterday.

People who hate—and this assailant hated Jews and blacks in particular—hate all people and minorities.

With that in mind, I think it's important that people reflect and do something positive with their children and with themselves in the future as an antidote to the type of hate that we saw. That is to bring your children to the Holocaust Museum. Let them learn about the horrors of the Nazis and of the camps. Come to Memphis to the Civil Rights Museum and learn about civil rights. Go to Atlanta where Dr. King is buried, and learn about Dr. King and nonviolence. Take steps to learn about ways to make the world better.

It's unfortunate what happened yesterday. It's so awful at that site, but it is awful that it happened anywhere and that Mr. Johns did lose his life. We must appreciate all the guards who protect American order and liberty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SERRANO). The Chair will note that the gentleman from West Virginia has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. GARY PETERS.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, my district is the home of the first free-standing Holocaust Museum in the United States of America. For 25 years, it has stood as a reminder of the horrific consequences of extremism and hate.

Just a few months ago, the founder of that museum, Rabbi Charles Rosenzweig, passed away. Although he is gone, his life's work will educate future generations about the horrors of the Holocaust so that such senseless violence should never again be repeated. Last month, this body passed a resolution honoring his life and memory.

So it is with an especially heavy heart today that I come to the floor to urge the passage of Resolution 529, a resolution condemning the violent attack on the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10.

The Holocaust Museum exists as a place to reflect and to mourn murderous prejudice and hatred. Yet, yesterday, a senseless attack, motivated by the same prejudice and hatred, resulted in the tragic death of a security guard, Stephen T. Johns. It is a sad reminder that we must all remain vigilant in continuing the work of Rabbi Rosenzweig—to purge discrimination and hatred from this world.

I thank Congressman KLEIN for sponsoring this important resolution.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. SCHWARTZ).

Ms. SCHWARTZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to add my voice to all of those who have denounced the hatred and violence in condemning yesterday's tragic attack at the U.S. Holocaust Museum and to extend my thoughts and prayers to the family and friends of Officer Stephen Johns.

Racism, anti-Semitism and other forms of hatred are not new. Sadly, they continue to impact too many people here and around the world. As a child of a Holocaust survivor, I know all too well the destruction and suffering that hate can bring. This same kind of intolerance that my mother faced in Austria in the 1930s still feeds the actions of foreign terrorists and domestic hate groups.

The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum is more than a museum—it feels like a sacred space. It is a place that enables us to acknowledge and remember the horror that was the Holocaust—and it is a place for reflection on the horrific consequences that hate can bring and a reminder that we must remain ever-vigilant against hate's many manifestations. Yesterday's despicable act reinforces the need for the important work done by the Holocaust Museum.

We all have a role to play in combating bigotry and intolerance wherever it may be, and it is a sad reminder of the work we still have to do that yesterday's tragic crime occurred so soon after President Obama's historic trip and his strong rebuttal of those who deny the Holocaust.

So it is with a heavy heart that I join my colleagues in offering my sympathies to the family of Officer Johns, and that I commend the work—the wonderful work, the important work—of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, and that I pledge to do my part in never forgetting.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. KEITH ELLISON.

Mr. ELLISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to do two things: one, to offer condolences and thanks to the family of Officer Johns for his brave sacrifice and, also, to point out that Officer Johns dedicated his life to protecting the staff and visitors of an institution dedicated to remembering both the depths of human depravity and the heights of courage and bravery, as we must understand that the Holocaust Museum was not simply a place to remember loss, awful loss, but also courage in standing up to great adversity.

May we all celebrate the life of Officer Johns and of the 6 million Jews who were murdered and memorialized in the Holocaust Museum by going to the Holocaust Museum, by supporting that museum and by showing defiantly that we will not be cowards and that we will not be deterred from standing up for what is right.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California, Ms. DIANE WATSON.

Ms. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, lest we forget, we must constantly be vigilant that we have people in this country who still harbor hate. As we go looking around the world for those who would do mass carnage, we need to look right inside of ourselves and see what is happening among too many of our people.

Officer Johns was there. I understand he opened the door for the person who shot him, but he represented a minority, and the shooter went to a place where he could show his anger, his hate, his hostility. As long as these kinds of people allow this to grow within them, we are all at risk. As long as we let guns go unregistered and let them out there and in the hands of these people, each and every one of us is at risk.

So it is now the time not only to give our condolences to the family of Officer Johns, but to take a step in the right direction for the right policy that will keep this in our minds every day of our lives.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 529, condemning the violent attack on the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10, 2009, and honoring the bravery and dedication of United States Holocaust Memorial Museum employees and security personnel.

I express my deepest sympathy to the family, friends, and colleagues of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns who lost his life as he stood guard at the museum. Officer Johns was only 39 years old; and standing six feet, six inches tall, was known as a "gentle giant". He was lovingly called "Little Stephen" by his family and "Big John" by his colleagues. Officer Johns must always be remembered in our hearts and minds as a hero.

Mr. Speaker, hatred must not be tolerated, and acts of violence must be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York, Mr. ELIOT ENGEL.

Mr. ENGEL. I thank the gentleman, my friend from West Virginia, for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise, of course, in support of this resolution. We are all shocked and saddened about what happened yesterday. The Holocaust Memorial Museum is a museum dedicated to victims of genocide, and to have any kind of hatred perpetrated in that museum is an absolute disgrace. My heart goes out to Officer Johns and to Officer Johns' family in that he was doing what so many wonderful people do—protect the public and protect us. His life should not have been taken.

Mr. Speaker, hatred is a terrible thing. The person who did the shooting reportedly has a long history of hating Jews, of hating African Americans, of hating Catholics—of just about hating everybody. We need to do something about that. We need to teach our children that hatred isn't a part of mainstream anything and that people need to respect our fellow human beings.

I also want to say something about guns, because we really need to deal with the problem of guns in this country. I would like to know why the assassin who served in prison for 6 years as a felon and who was a known hatemonger was able to get ahold of a gun. This is a problem, and we need to deal with it.

So I thank my friend, and I rise in support of this resolution.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I would advise Mr. HASTINGS that I am prepared to close with one final speaker if he wishes to use the balance of his time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good resolution, and it is responsive to what happened yesterday at a place where something like this should never happen. So I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" for the resolution.

I yield back the balance of my time. Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the sponsor of this resolution and commend him for the quickness with which he has brought this to the floor, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KLEIN).

Mr. KLEIN of Florida. I thank the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from West Virginia for giving us the opportunity, as well as the Speaker, for allowing us to very promptly bring this to the attention of the House.

I thank the Members, the Democrat and Republican Members, who have all been here today, as well as the entire Chamber for reacting and acknowledging this horrific act. Again, we just acknowledge and extend our condolences to the family.

We rededicate ourselves to the necessity of teaching, of educating our public in the United States and around the world about what happens when racism and intolerance are allowed to fester from generation to generation, and we know that we will commit ourselves to continue that education process to the lessons of the Holocaust and the lessons of, unfortunately, what happened yesterday to make sure that it doesn't happen again.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I stand with so many of my colleagues today in condemnation of yesterday's appalling attack at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum and the tragic death of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, who was killed in the line of duty.

Bigotry, racism and intolerance must be condemned wherever they occur, but especially at a memorial to the Holocaust that challenges visitors to confront hatred and promote human dignity. The Holocaust Museum is a hollowed symbol of the cost of this type of hatred to all of humanity. The Museum teaches millions of people about the dangers of unchecked hatred. We do not need further examples of hate and prejudice within its walls—or anywhere else.

The events of yesterday serve as a reminder that the Museum, and all of us, have more work to do to confront hatred and intolerance in our society.

I urge all my colleagues to join me in voting for the resolution and also in expressing condolences to the family of Officer Johns.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened by the news of yesterday's shooting at the Holocaust Memorial Museum and express my condolences to the victim's family.

It is unfortunate that, even in today's world, there are still individuals who choose to deny the tragic events of the Holocaust. In the face of those who adhere to hatred, we must continue to stress the importance of knowledge over ignorance, with the hope that we can prevent future tragedies such as this.

And that is just what the Holocaust Museum strives to do. Each year, some 2 million people from around the world visit the museum where they are confronted with a record of the horrors of the Holocaust so that no one can deny its existence. The museum not only reminds us of the atrocities of the Holocaust, but it shows us what happens when hatred, intolerance, and ignorance are allowed to direct the actions of men. The museum calls each one of us to recognize the humanity in all people, regardless of our differences. Its role in educating visitors about the responsibilities each individual has and its efforts to promote tolerance, understanding, and acceptance continue to be needed.

I wish to express my condolences to the family, friends and coworkers of Stephen T. Johns. The outstanding courage demonstrated by Mr. Johns and all those who serve to protect citizens should not be taken for granted. My thoughts and prayers are with them.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise to pay tribute to Mr. Stephen T. Johns, an innocent man who lost his life while securing the countless people who stream into one of the national treasures in our capital city, the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

In the building that was erected to preserve the memory of the martyrs and heroes of the Holocaust, the ugly face of bigotry cast a dark shadow over the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10, 2009. The Museum is a place of stillness and personal reflection, and that calm was broken by a gunman who shattered that silence. People from around the country and the world come to that location to learn what the powerful phrase 'Never Again' really means. Visitors take that message to their home communities to serve as spokespeople against bigotry, racism and hatred. That message needs to resonate throughout this country even more so today.

Though this senseless and hateful act of violence is deplorable and has tainted the Museum's stance as a poignant reminder of the millions of innocent people who lost their lives in the Holocaust, it is my hope that the hate that continues to exist in our country will soon cease.

The heroic security officers who put themselves in harm's way to protect the lives of Museum staff and patrons should be commended. Their courageous actions within a building that is synonymous with remembrance and a monument to those millions who died victimized by irrational hatred, saved more lives from being lost to that very same hatred.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and all the members of this esteemed legislative body to join me in extending heartfelt condolences to the family of Mr. Stephen T. Johns. His life, service and ultimate sacrifice will not be forgotten. Our nation must remain vigilant in our effort to defend against bigotry and heinous attacks such as this. I appreciate this opportunity to pay tribute before the United States House of Representatives.

Ms. MARKEY of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel once said, "I swore never to be silent whenever and wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the victim. Silence encourages the tormentor, never the tormented." I rise today to do my part to prevent that silence. I rise today to condemn the horrific attack on the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and to extend my deepest thanks and sympathy to the family of Officer Stephen Johns and to all those at the Holocaust Museum. These men and women spend their days educating visitors from across the world about the tragic events of the Holocaust. The museum and its staff keep alive the memories of those lost and act as a reminder to our society's conscience of the devastating acts that humans are capable of. The events that occurred at the museum yesterday should only strengthen our resolve to combat anti-Semitism and the prejudices that still pervade our society. We must carry the memory of both the Holocaust and yesterday's events with us as we seek to form a more tolerant world. It is only in creating positive from the abhorrent that we can properly honor the lives of those who were lost.

Mr. POSEY. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in condemning yesterday's shooting at the National Holocaust Museum which claimed the life of museum security guard Stephen Tyrone Johns. My thoughts and prayers are with Mr. Johns' family and friends during this difficult time.

Mr. Johns' bravery and self-sacrifice saved lives—many innocent lives. His actions prevented this unthinkable attack from further harming the many families, including many young children, who were visiting the museum yesterday.

Mr. Johns' successfully defended our Nation's most prominent monument built to religious and ethnic tolerance from the worst kind of hate and delusion. Anti-Semitism and harming innocent civilians have no place in a civilized society. He will be remembered always as an American hero and his family should be proud of his sacrifice for others.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I pause today to honor the memory of Stephen Tyrone Johns of Temple Hills, Maryland, who died yesterday defending the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum against an anti-Semitic gunman.

Although the gunman appears to have been a hardened denier of the Holocaust, his crime only brings home the high value of that museum of remembrance, which preserves the historical memory of a people whose communities and institutions have so often been the target of terroristic violence.

That memory is preserved, in ways large and small, by the dedication of people like Officer Johns.

In the wake of yesterday's killing, Mark Blumenthal, an on-line editor, shared the story of his wife's visit to the Holocaust Museum:

"She arrived at the end of a busy workday, in a rush, just a few minutes before closing time. Unfortunately, given the late hour, they had run out of the candles usually provided in the Hall of Remembrance for visitors to light and leave in the niches of the outer walls.

Already feeling emotional . . . she broke down sobbing. A staffer nearby immediately came to her assistance, asking if she needed help. She explained, and the gentleman asked her to wait. He soon returned with a candle, explaining with a conspiratorial wink that he kept his own special supply for such emergencies."

In gestures as simple and kind as that, and acts as courageous as officer Johns's, we can find ways to carry on the duty of memory.

Yesterday's crime may have been intended to scare us away from the Holocaust Museum; may it fail.

May visitors return in force to bear witness to yesterday's loss and to the historical facts whose denial remains, in the words of President Obama, "baseless . . . ignorant, and . . . hateful."

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum was created as a sanctuary for tolerance and understanding. It was established by Congress to memorialize the millions of Jews and others who perished during the Holocaust and to educate people about the hatred and intolerance that led to their murders. Yesterday, it was tragically the victim of those same evil impulses.

Today we mourn the death of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns who was killed in the line of duty and extend our condolences to his family. He will be remembered not only as a protector of the staff and visitors who crossed his path, but also as a defender of the noble ideals the museum stands for.

What transpired yesterday is a horrific reminder of the violence that can stem from racism, anti-Semitism, and Holocaust denial. It was a hate crime in the truest sense—an attack fomented by hatred of Jews, African Americans, and all who seek to embrace diversity, tolerance and understanding.

The gunman who perpetrated this attack had a life-long obsession with his hateful views. We can and must do more to prevent future generations from falling victim to a life consumed by hate.

The most powerful response we can take is to reinforce the Museum's mission to educate and inspire people to fight prejudice in all its forms. With President Obama's recent visit to Buchenwald and the Pope's recent trip to Yad Vashem, we must emphasize the value of Holocaust education as a potent antidote to the vicious venom spread from Internet chat rooms and beyond.

Congress has been a partner of the U.S. Holocaust Museum from the very beginning. We will be forever committed to its safety and its success.

Mr. MARKEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with great sadness to address the horrible attack which took place yesterday afternoon at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum here in Washington. My thoughts and prayers are with the family of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, who was killed yesterday in the line of duty while heroically performing the job to which he had dedicated himself—protecting innocent people. The Museum is appropriately closed today in his honor, with flags flown at half mast in memory of this brave and selfless man.

We sometimes have a tendency to slip into a false sense of security and denial when we hear about violence and internecine strife around the world. "That won't happen here", we assure ourselves, "We have moved beyond that." But every so often we are painfully reminded that even in this country of freedom and opportunity there are those who would seek to do harm to their neighbors, deny the Holocaust and spew hateful and racist speech designed to divide us.

Of course, our Jewish friends, family, and neighbors were stunned by yesterday's shooting, as it took place in the very hallowed space that our country has dedicated in memoriam to one of the greatest crimes in history, the Holocaust. It is especially saddening that this sacred place, a monument devoted to peace and the prevention of bigotry and crimes against humanity, was defiled in such a tragic manner.

For many Jewish Americans, yesterday's attacks surely summoned up thoughts about other crimes against Jews throughout history, both here in the United States and elsewhere. Of course, we can never forget that Israel itself has faced intense and continuing security threats since its inception over 60 years ago. American Jews are an integral part of the fabric of American society, and irrational actions such as yesterday's attack should serve as an opportunity to bring the American family closer together.

The man who opened fire yesterday at the Holocaust Museum reportedly has been a longtime adherent to a twisted white supremacist ideology. The perverse logic that says the human race is divided and segmented between superior and inferior genetic groups not only runs contrary to our founding concept—"all men are created equal"—it is in fact a cancer upon our society. Ideologies that would place one group of us above others are an affront to the core values that our society was created to defend.

At this moment in our history, when we are confronted by incredible difficulties, we are also filled with hope. We recently witnessed the election to our highest office a man whom at the time of our nation's founding would not even have been permitted to cast a vote. We have seen increasing numbers of women and minorities serving at the highest levels of our government. These developments give us hope, even in the dark moments such as yesterday's murderous attack.

I also would like to note that students from my home state of Massachusetts were in the Holocaust Museum yesterday when the gunman opened fire. I commend the Museum staff and the school chaperones for quickly shepherding the students to safety, ensuring that none was injured in the attack. The fact that millions of schoolchildren visit the Museum and learn the truth about the Holocaust is a rebuke to those, like the deranged killer, who seek to deny that the Holocaust occurred.

As Reverend Martin Luther King taught us, "the arc of the moral universe is long but it bends toward justice." We will continue to work to move our nation inexorably in the direction of justice and equality, because those are the values which tie us together. Yesterday, an immoral and evil act took the life of a brave officer. As we express our sadness and respect for Officer Johns, we also remain undeterred in our efforts to achieve and put into practice our nation's highest ideals—that all men and women are created equal, with inalienable rights that no person can abridge.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I stand here today to express my heartfelt condolences to the family of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, who fell victim to yesterday's fatal shooting at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C. This tragic outburst of violence and hatred turned the Holocaust Memorial Museum, a "Monument of Sorrow" (reported in the Washington Post), into monumental sorrow as we mourn the senseless loss of a brave man who died because of the color of his skin. I sit on the Advisory Board of the Houston Holocaust Museum, and I understand that such a museum should be a dwelling of honor and respect, not a house of violence and hatred. It should be a place that mourns those who died in the horrific Holocaust, as well as a place that seeks to promote peace. This violent act can not be tolerated.

I would like to express my outrage at this racially-motivated killing, and my concern for Officer Johns' family, who is left to comprehend a void that will never again be filled. I would also like to express my concern to the patrons of the Holocaust Memorial Museum in our Nation's Capital, who were subject to baseless and tragic violence yesterday. Despite the strides the United States has made in the arena of Civil Rights, and the progress we continue to make with respect to tolerance, yesterday's hate crime indicates we have not come far enough. We always seek to protect speech, that is part of our American values, but we can not ignore and protect the violence that comes because Americans believe in the right of free speech.

Let this tragic loss be an alarm for the United States that we must do more to promote respect and understanding among the people of our diverse nation, rather than allow ignorance to manifest within our country. Let Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns' legacy be marked as a renewed commitment to fighting racism and bigotry. Let this time be one of new hope between the African-American, Jewish communities, and all communities, that together we shall weave a fabric of tolerance and peace, and that together we shall overcome hatred today. I urge passage of this important Resolution.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as Ranking Member of the Africa Subcommittee, I joined several colleagues at an important Foreign Affairs Committee meeting with Prime Minister Morgan Tsvangirai of Zimbabwe.

It was an extraordinary opportunity to discuss Zimbabwe's progress towards democracy and away from dictatorship, hyperinflation, and multiple health crises, including cholera—and obtain a fuller understanding of what additional steps the U.S. can take to help.

That meeting, however, occurred at precisely the same time the House considered H. Res. 529, a resolution condemning the June 10th violent attack on the Holocaust Memorial Museum—a despicable anti-Semitic act that killed Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns. As so eloquently articulated by many colleagues yesterday, I—we—salute officer Johns for his bravery and courage and extend our deepest condolences to his family.

I rise today to not only express my support for H. Res 529 but also to thank my friend and colleague Mr. Klein for introducing it and for including me as a co-sponsor.

Mr. Speaker, the Holocaust Memorial Museum is a noble and vitally necessary attempt to remember and honor the victims of the Holocaust. The memorial itself is a witness to truth and promotion of human dignity and tolerance.

Wednesday's attack on that museum by a crazed, hate-filled gunman is yet another chilling reminder that our society still harbors a dangerous collection of bigots and racists who hate Jews.

Unparalleled since the dark days of the Second World War, Jewish communities around the world are facing violent attacks against synagogues, Jewish cultural sites, cemeteries and individuals. Anti-Semitism is an ugly reality that won't go away by ignoring or wishing it away. It must be combated with resolve and tenacity.

The sad deeply troubling reality is that James von Brunn cannot be dismissed as an aberration, but is connected to a whole hate-promoting movement that results in violence against Jews in America and around the world on practically a daily basis.

The Anti-Defamation League recently issued its annual Audit of Anti-Semitic Incidents. While the ADL is to be congratulated for its careful research on an unpleasant but absolutely necessary subject, the ugly facts that the report documents make for painful reading.

In 2008, the ADL noted 1,352 reported incidents of vandalism, harassment, and physical assaults on Jewish people or Jewish-owned property nationwide.

Sadly and shamefully, my own state of New Jersey had more reported anti-Semitic incidents—238—than any other state.

But the attack on the Holocaust Memorial Museum, Mr. Speaker, is the most ominous aspect of this wave of evil. The Holocaust Memorial Museum is a unique institution. It is a memorial, a museum, a center of Holocaust scholarship, and a promoter of tolerance and preventer of genocide. It is a very powerful symbol of the solidarity of America with those murdered in the Holocaust, and with the Jewish people.

Mr. Speaker, at this critical moment we need government officials at all levels to denounce, without hesitation or delay, every anti-Semitic act wherever and whenever it occurs. No exceptions. At this moment, not to speak out enables the purveyors of hate. They never take a holiday or grow weary, nor should we.

Just as Mr. Brunn attacked the Holocaust Memorial Museum and murdered a courageous security officer tasked with its protection, Holocaust remembrance and tolerance education must dramatically expand, and we need to ensure that our respective laws punish those who hate and incite violence against Jews.

Finally, if we are to protect our children from the evil of anti-Semitism, we must reeducate ourselves and systematically educate our children. While that starts in our homes, the classroom must be the incubator of tolerance. It seems to me that only the most hardened racist can remain unmoved by Holocaust education and remembrance. Only the most crass, evil, and prejudiced among us can study the horrors of the Holocaust and not cry out: Never again!

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise today in support of House Resolution 529, condemning the violent attack on the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10, 2009 and honoring the bravery and dedication of United States Holocaust Memorial Museum employees and security personnel. I also rise to pay tribute to officer Stephen Johns.

A Maryland resident, Officer Johns was a devoted husband and father. He was a man who lived his life protecting other people, and worked every day to ensure the safety and security of the patrons of the National Holocaust Museum, a place devoted to the pursuit of peace and the end of intolerance. It was a responsibility Officer Johns took very seriously, and one he gave his life to uphold.

Moments like these are the most painful of reminders that when hate results in violence, it robs us of our family members, neighbors, and friends. It claims the best and bravest among us. Yesterday, in a place dedicated to ending such bigotry, a well-liked and thoughtful man was stolen from us.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in honoring the life of Stephen Johns and in renewing our vow to be united in our effort to extinguish the flames of bigotry and intolerance in this country and around the world once and for all.

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 529 and to express my outrage at the violent attack on the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum on June 10, 2009, along with my deepest sympathies to all of those who knew Stephen T. Johns, the brave and honorable security guard who tragically died in the attack.

Stephen T. Johns, 39, died tragically in the line of duty as he defended the Holocaust Memorial Museum from an attack by acknowledged white supremacist, racist and anti-Semite James von Brunn. He leaves behind his sister, his wife and his 11-year-old son.

It is tragic that, as this incident demonstrates all too vividly, racism and anti-Semitism are still alive in America. It is tragic whenever there is a revolting act of violence that takes the life of an innocent person. It is especially tragic that, in this situation, the forces of hate and violence were unleashed at this august institution that is dedicated to memorializing and preventing a recurrence of the Holocaust that appallingly took the lives of millions of innocent civilians.

Mr. Johns and all the rest of the security guards in the Holocaust Memorial Museum deserve our fullest commendation, as they acted heroically to prevent the museum's despicable attacker from enacting even more harm.

I condemn the shooting completely, fully and without reservation. This type of attack is totally unacceptable, as are the racist and anti-Semitic motivations underlying it. I thank my friend, Rep. KLEIN, for introducing this important resolution.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, when a crazed and racist gunman takes the life of an innocent museum guard there are no words to fully convey both our shock and sorrow. But disgust with this act of violence and great sympathy for the loved ones of Stephen Johns are nonetheless our nation's response to yesterday's senseless and ugly act of violence. While we cannot undo the despicable crime of a racist murderer, I want to express my deep condolences to the family and friends of Stephen Johns, the 39-year-old guard who gave his life in the line of duty at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum this past Wednesday.

The shots of an anti-Semitic gunman have tragically ended the life of Mr. Johns, but no gunman can silence the truth of history enshrined in the Holocaust Memorial Museum here in Washington, D.C. When Stephen Johns lost his life to the bullet of an anti-Semite on Wednesday he was joining the hallowed ranks of those before him who stood in the way of hatred and violence against Jews.

This nation will never tolerate the violence and hatred of anti-Semitism and we will preserve the memory of people like Stephen Johns who refused to give an inch to the forces of hatred. We must never allow the sort of racist misinformation and twisted, violent lies that apparently led a gunman down a violent path to gain credence here in America. I pray that this criminal is swiftly brought to justice for this senseless act.

Mr. Johns' fellow museum guards who prevented this tragedy from turning into an even deadlier event also deserve great praise. Their skill, bravery and professionalism no doubt saved lives during yesterday's shooting. My hope is that thanks to their bravery and the dedicated work of the many employees and volunteers at the Holocaust Museum that many millions of Americans will continue to be exposed to the story of the Holocaust. One gunman cannot stop the educational mission of this museum to ensure that acts of genocide like the Holocaust do not happen again.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 529 and with deep regret that this measure is necessary. I am saddened deeply by the tragic events that took place yesterday at the United States Holocaust Museum. Especially upsetting was the loss of Mr. Stephen Tyrone Johns, who loyally served and protected those visiting the Holocaust Museum for six years. Mr. Johns was known as a warm, friendly individual who was well-respected by his colleagues. My sincerest condolences and my most heartfelt prayers are with his family and friends, whose lives have been devastated so unfairly.

While yesterday's violence appears to have been the act of single individual, similar actions rooted in hatred and intolerance are not unknown to our society or our local communities. I am distressed by a recent report from the Anti-Defamation League, which indicated that my own state of New Jersey experiences the highest number of anti-Semitic incidents in the country. The persistence of these unacceptable acts throughout our nation indicates that the sinister notions of anti-Semitism, racism, and intolerance continue to plague our society. The Holocaust Museum stands as a testament to the tragedy and suffering that can occur when hatred goes unchallenged and turns to violence. It is also a place to reflect upon tremendous bravery and heroism. Yesterday's events, and the sacrifices made by Mr. Johns and his loved ones, are a profound reminder that we cannot be complacent.

We must remain vigilant against prejudice and work together to promote peace and tolerance in our hometowns, across the nation, and around the world.

Finally, I would note that yesterday's events bring to mind the stirring call to action by President Obama at the Holocaust Days of Remembrance Ceremony in April, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD in their entirety.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT AT THE HOLOCAUST DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE CEREMONY, UNITED STATES CAPITOL, WASHINGTON, DC.

The PRESIDENT. Thank you. Please be seated. Thank you very much. To Sara Bloomfield, for the wonderful introduction and the outstanding work she's doing; to Fred Zeidman; Joel Geiderman; Mr. Wiesel—thank you for your wisdom and your witness; Speaker Nancy Pelosi; Senator Dick Durbin; members of Congress; our good friend the Ambassador of Israel; members of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council; and most importantly, the survivors and rescuers and their families who are here today. It is a great honor for me to be here, and I'm grateful that I have the opportunity to address you briefly.

We gather today to mourn the loss of so many lives, and celebrate those who saved them; honor those who survived, and contemplate the obligations of the living.

It is the grimmest of ironies that one of the most savage, barbaric acts of evil in history began in one of the most modernized societies of its time, where so many markers of human progress became tools of human depravity: science that can heal used to kill; education that can enlighten used to rationalize away basic moral impulses; the bureaucracy that sustains modern life used as the machinery of mass death—a ruthless, chillingly efficient system where many were responsible for the killing, but few got actual blood on their hands.

While the uniqueness of the Holocaust in scope and in method is truly astounding, the Holocaust was driven by many of the same forces that have fueled atrocities throughout history: the scapegoating that leads to hatred and blinds us to our common humanity; the justifications that replace conscience and allow cruelty to spread; the willingness of those who are neither perpetrators nor victims to accept the assigned role of bystander, believing the lie that, good people are ever powerless or alone, the fiction that we do not have a choice.

But while we are here today to bear witness to the human capacity to destroy, we are also here to pay tribute to the human impulse to save. In the moral accounting of the Holocaust, as we reckon with numbers like 6 million, as we recall the horror of numbers etched into arms, we also factor in numbers like these: 7,200—the number of Danish Jews ferried to safety, many of whom later returned home to find the neighbors who rescued them had also faithfully tended their homes and businesses and belongings while they were gone.

We remember the number five—the five righteous men and women who join us today from Poland. We are awed by your acts of courage and conscience. And your presence today compels each of us to ask ourselves whether we would have done what you did. We can only hope that the answer is yes.

We also remember the number 5,000—the number of Jews rescued by the villagers of Le Chambon, France—one life saved for each of its 5,000 residents. Not a single Jew who came there was turned away, or turned in.

But it was not until decades later that the villagers spoke of what they had done—and even then, only reluctantly. The author of a book on the rescue found that those he interviewed were baffled by his interest. "How could you call us 'good'?" they said. "We were doing what had to be done."

That is the question of the righteous—those who would do extraordinary good at extraordinary risk not for affirmation or acclaim or to advance their own interests, but because it is what must be done. They remind us that no one is born a savior or a murderer—these are choices we each have the power to make. They teach us that no one can make us into bystanders without our consent, and that we are never truly alone—that if we have the courage to heed that "still, small voice" within us, we can form a minyan for righteousness that can span a village, even a nation.

Their legacy is our inheritance. And the question is, how do we honor and preserve it? How do we ensure that "never again" isn't an empty slogan, or merely an aspiration, but also a call to action?

I believe we start by doing what we are doing today—by bearing witness, by fighting the silence that is evil's greatest co-conspirator.

In the face of horrors that defy comprehension, the impulse to silence is understandable. My own great uncle returned from his service in World War II in a state of shock, saying little, alone with painful memories that would not leave his head. He went up into the attic, according to the stories that I've heard, and wouldn't come down for six months. He was one of the liberators—someone who at a very tender age had seen the unimaginable. And so some of the liberators who are here today honor us with their presence—all of whom we honor for their extraordinary service. My great uncle was part of the 89th Infantry Division—the first Americans to reach a Nazi concentration camp. And they liberated Ohrdruf, part of Buchenwald, where tens of thousands had perished.

The story goes that when the Americans marched in, they discovered the starving survivors and the piles of dead bodies. And General Eisenhower made a decision. He ordered Germans from the nearby town to tour the camp, so they could see what had been done in their name. And he ordered American troops to tour the camp, so they could see the evil they were fighting against. Then he invited congressmen and journalists to bear witness. And he ordered that photographs and films be made. Some of us have seen those same images, whether in the Holocaust Museum or when I visited Yad Vashem, and they never leave you. Eisenhower said that he wanted "to be in a position to give firsthand evidence of these things, if ever, in the future, there develops a tendency to charge these allegations merely to propaganda."

Eisenhower understood the danger of silence. He understood that if no one knew what had happened, that would be yet another atrocity—and it would be the perpetrators' ultimate triumph.

What Eisenhower did to record these crimes for history is what we are doing here today. That's what Elie Wiesel and the survivors we honor here do by fighting to make their memories part of our collective memory. That's what the Holocaust Museum does every day on our National Mall, the place where we display for the world our triumphs and failures and the lessons we've learned from our history. It's the very opposite of silence.

But we must also remember that bearing witness is not the end of our obligation—it's just the beginning. We know that evil has yet to run its course on Earth. We've seen it in this century in the mass graves and the ashes of villages burned to the ground, and children used as soldiers and rape used as a weapon of war. To this day, there are those who insist the Holocaust never happened; who perpetrate every form of intolerance—racism and anti-Semitism, homophobia, xenophobia, sexism, and more—hatred that degrades its victim and diminishes us all.

Today, and every day, we have an opportunity, as well as an obligation, to confront these scourges—to fight the impulse to turn the channel when we see images that disturb us, or wrap ourselves in the false comfort that others' sufferings are not our own. Instead we have the opportunity to make a habit of empathy; to recognize ourselves in each other; to commit ourselves to resisting injustice and intolerance and indifference in whatever forms they may take—whether confronting those who tell lies about history, or doing everything we can to prevent and end atrocities like those that took place in Rwanda, those taking place in Darfur. That is my commitment as President. I hope that is yours, as well.

It will not be easy. At times, fulfilling these obligations require self-reflection. But in the final analysis, I believe history gives us cause for hope rather than despair—the hope of a chosen people who have overcome oppression since the days of Exodus; of the nation of Israel rising from the destruction of the Holocaust; of the strong and enduring bonds between our nations.

It is the hope, too, of those who not only survived, but chose to live, teaching us the meaning of courage and resilience and dignity. I'm thinking today of a study conducted after the war that found that Holocaust survivors living in America actually had a higher birthrate than American Jews. What a stunning act of faith—to bring a child in a world that has shown you so much cruelty; to believe that no matter what you have endured, or how much you have lost, in the end, you have a duty to life.

We find cause for hope as well in Protestant and Catholic children attending school together in Northern Ireland; in Hutus and Tutsis living side by side, forgiving neighbors who have done the unforgivable; in a movement to save Darfur that has thousands of high school and college chapters in 25 countries, and brought 70,000 people to the Washington Mall—people of every age and faith and background and race united in common cause with suffering brothers and sisters halfway around the world.

Those numbers can be our future—our fellow citizens of the world showing us how to make the journey from oppression to survival, from witness to resistance, and ultimately to reconciliation. That is what we mean when we say “never again.”

So today, during this season when we celebrate liberation, resurrection, and the possibility of redemption, may each of us renew our resolve to do what must be done. And may we strive each day, both individually and as a nation, to be among the righteous. Thank you, God bless you, and God bless the United States of America.

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 529 and to condemn in the strongest possible terms the shooting yesterday at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, a just society has no place for acts of violence, and such acts deserve our strong condemnation. It is a terrible tragedy any time innocent people are terrorized or murdered, and we must always speak out against such senseless conduct.

Yet the shooting at the Holocaust Memorial Museum was uniquely horrific, and deserving of special repudiation, for it threatened an entire group of people. It was the entire Jewish community which was the target of the deranged shooter, Mr. James Wenneker von Brunn. This hateful man has long held vicious anti-Semitic and white supremacist views, and tragically yesterday he acted on this demented outlook.

It is all the more disgusting that Mr. von Brunn carried out his evil act at the Holocaust Memorial Museum. It is there that we honor the millions of Jews and other victims of the Nazi Holocaust. It is there that we educate thousands of people each day about this genocide, with the goal that it never be forgotten and never happen again. Committing an act of anti-Semitic violence at such a hallowed place is gross beyond words.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 529 rightfully condemns the vicious shooting that took place yesterday at the Holocaust Memorial Museum. It also urges the American people to join us in condemning this horrific event, offers the condolences of the House of Representatives to the family of Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns, and reaffirms our commitment to further the mission of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. I urge all Members to support it.

Mr. Speaker, let me close by thanking Representative RON KLEIN for sponsoring this resolution and repeating my emphatic denunciation of the horrific shooting. I also want to take this opportunity to offer both my personal condolences to the family of Officer Johns and my appreciation for his heroic actions and those of the other museum employees.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 529.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the yeas have it.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 413, nays 0, not voting 21, as follows:

Mr. HONDA and Ms. SPEIER changed their vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BACA. Madam Speaker, if I would have been here, I would have voted in support of Motion to go to Conference on H.R. 2346—Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2009, H.R. 1886—Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009, H.R. 1687 and H. Res. 529.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1256, FAMILY SMOKING PREVENTION AND TOBACCO CONTROL ACT

Mr. POLIS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 111-145) on the resolution (H. Res. 532) providing for consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill (H.R. 1256) to protect the public health by providing the Food and Drug Administration with certain authority to regulate tobacco products, to amend title 5, United States Code, to make certain modifications in the Thrift Savings Plan, the Civil Service Retirement System, and the Federal Employees' Retirement System, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

CONGRATULATING THE MOORESTOWN HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS LACROSSE TEAM

(Mr. ADLER of New Jersey asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ADLER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Burlington County residents, I rise today to congratulate the Moorestown High School girls' lacrosse team for winning their 10th straight New Jersey State Championship.

As a father of four boys, I understand the importance of having sports and extracurricular activities in a young person's life. It encourages teamwork, a sense of pride and accomplishment, and responsibility. The Moorestown High School girls lacrosse team embodies all those attributes.

Led by senior captains Karli Tobin and Alyssa Ogle, Moorestown High School beat Mountain Lakes High School 11-8. Junior Katrina Martinelli led the team in scoring with four goals and two assists, while Alyssa Ogle scored three goals, including the game winner.

Head coach Deanna Knobloch has been with the team for 18 years. Winning 10 straight championships is no easy task, and I applaud her and her assistants, KC Knobloch, Julie Catrambone, and Courtney Legath. This championship marks the 210th win over New Jersey opponents over a full 10 seasons.

Moorestown moves within one State title of tying the longest State championship winning streak. Again, congratulations to Moorestown High School girls lacrosse team, especially those seniors. I look forward to seeing you break that record.

Go Quakers.

INTRODUCTION OF REPEAL THE STIMULUS ACT

(Mr. TIAHRT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year the Obama administration told us the stimulus bill was the salvation to our economic woes. They predicted, if passed, unemployment would top out at 7 percent and claimed jobs would be created or saved immediately. It was passed, but yesterday's promises are in stark contrast to what we see today—unemployment is at 9.4 percent, and just this morning CNN reported that America saw $1.3 trillion of wealth vaporize in the first quarter of 2009.

Despite massive government spending, foreclosures continue, car dealerships are closing, layoffs continue, and the stock market and home values continue to decline. The government is borrowing money it does not have, inflating programs it does not need and making promises it cannot keep. Taxpayers don't understand why so much money is being wasted so quickly with nothing to show for it.

I understand. This week I offered a simple solution. Rescind unobligated money from the stimulus bill and save the taxpayers over $250 billion. That's money we won't have to borrow from the Chinese. Unfortunately, the amendment failed on a party-line vote.

Today I am introducing the Repeal the Stimulus Act of 2009, and I urge my colleagues to join with me to repeal the stimulus bill and the spending schemes of the current administration and cut back on the amount of money we have to borrow from China.

SUPPORTING LEGISLATION TO HELP AUTOMOBILE DEALERSHIPS STAY IN BUSINESS

(Mr. PAULSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PAULSEN. Mr. Speaker, the bankruptcy filings of both GM and Chrysler are threatening local auto dealers as both companies are able to bypass State franchise laws that are designed to protect small dealerships. Shutting the doors on these small businesses will mean more job losses at a time when we can ill afford them. It's incredible to many of us here in Congress that these decisions can be justified if it isn't saving a single job and is, in fact, eliminating jobs.

That's why I'm cosponsoring legislation that was introduced this week that would protect these jobs by restoring the franchise agreement between the auto dealerships and GM and Chrysler. Mr. Speaker, this would ensure that the dealers themselves, not the government or the big automakers that are controlled by the government, are able to decide the future of their operations. Let's pass this legislation and help local entrepreneurs keep the businesses they've worked so hard to build.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

SUPPORTING A SOLAR CARVE-OUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona (Ms. GIFFORDS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. GIFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, our Nation today is facing many great challenges, but there are three in particular that specifically I think are of great concern to the American people: Achieving energy independence, addressing climate change and stimulating our economy. These are all significant challenges, but they also present great opportunities. As we confront these issues, we have the chance to make our world stronger, safer and more prosperous.

One of the best ways to do this is by deploying renewable energy. Renewable energy sources, especially solar, our Nation's most abundant renewable energy source, offers a real solution to these challenges I just mentioned. Our solar resource is vast, it's domestic, and it's free. It is clean, and it generates electricity without greenhouse gas emissions. In addition, the solar power industry is growing and creating good-paying jobs. For all of these reasons, solar is important to America.

This is why I'm concerned about the way that solar power is treated in the energy and climate bill that recently emerged from the Energy and Commerce Committee. I commend Chairman WAXMAN and MARKEY and their committee colleagues for their persistence and skill in moving the legislation forward. However, I have to express my deep concern that this bill does not do nearly enough to promote solar power, one of the best solutions for our Nation's energy and climate challenges. The current Waxman-Markey legislation would establish a Federal renewable electricity standard, or RES, of 20 percent by 2020, and that's a good goal. The State of Arizona is 15 percent by 2025. However, the bill fails to establish a carve-out for any specific type of renewable like solar; and in my view, this constitutes an enormous missed opportunity. The primary reason to establish a RES is to create an assured level of demand for renewable electricity. This assured demand allows renewable technologies to increase production, learn by doing and bring their prices down. This allows them to become cost competitive with traditional energy sources. However, without carve-outs for different resources, the RES will fall short of its own potential. Instead of creating demand for all renewables, it's going to give preference to those that cost the least, and currently that is wind and biomass. Without assured demand, solar will miss out on an opportunity that the RES was designed to create. It will not grow as fast as it otherwise could, and it will not become as cost competitive as quickly as it needs to.

Now I have nothing against wind and biomass. But if we develop these resources at the expense of a more diverse portfolio, we will lose our opportunity to stimulate our domestic solar industry that can compete in a global marketplace. I understand the reluctance to pick technology winners and losers. In fact, I agree with that. But I'm not talking about picking a technology. I'm talking about picking a resource, and that is a big difference. It is impossible to imagine a future powered by renewables that does not include a significant amount of solar energy. We may not yet know what that best type of solar technology will ultimately be, but we do know and the rest of the world knows that we want it to come from the sun, and we want it to be solar. Therefore, it's in our national interest to ensure that the U.S. solar industry is the strongest in the world, and we should do so by continuing to promote and innovate. Solar power, yes, is in its infancy today; but we need to make sure that in the future it really drives America.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. And as we work towards implementing solar technology in our legislation, I just want to thank my colleagues for spending time to learn about this important resource.

To do that, we should establish an effective incentive in the form of a 20 percent solar carve-out within the RES.

A couple weeks ago, researchers at the University of Arizona in my hometown of Tucson were awarded a $15 million grant to create an Energy Frontier Research Center. They are working to develop ultrathin solar panels that use dyes to create electricity from sunlight. This project is tremendously exciting, but as we invest in these technologies, we must ensure we are creating a market to use them.

In the race to become the global solar leader, the clock is ticking and the competition is fierce. America does not have time to waste with poorly designed policies. This is why I call on my colleagues to support a solar carve-out within the RES. It is a proven mechanism to develop a truly diverse renewable portfolio that includes solar power.

STATE OF THE UNION'S FINANCES: A CITIZEN'S GUIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in the past couple of weeks, two of our colleagues, FRANK WOLF of Virginia, a Republican, and JIM COOPER of Tennessee, a Democrat, sent this booklet around to all of the Members. We get a lot of correspondence and a lot of books and leaflets; but I would just like to say to my colleagues tonight, I hope you read this. It doesn't take very long, but it's extremely important because it deals with not only today but with our future and our kids' future and our posterity. What it talks about is the debt that we have in this country and where we're going.

In the last 10 years, we've gone from $5.5 trillion in debt to over $11 trillion in debt, and the debt is escalating at a very rapid rate. In fact, right now the projected deficit in the future is up to $56 trillion. The reason for expected expenditures is for the programs that have been proposed and have been passed into law by this body and the other body. Right now explicit liabilities include publicly held debt, military and civilian pensions, and retiree health benefits, plus other things, that's $12.2 trillion; $1.3 trillion is for Federal insurance loan guarantees, leases and so forth; and then the big one, $42.9 trillion, is Medicare hospital insurance, which is $12.7 trillion; Medicare outpatient, $15.7 trillion; Medicare prescription drugs, $7.9 trillion; and Social Security, $6.6 trillion, for a total of $56.4 trillion. And that does not include what's going on today. We're going into debt right now at about $1 to $2 trillion a year, and it's going to continue like that because of the programs we're talking about.

Over the past few months since this new administration has taken office, we have seen proposed a socialized medicine approach to health, a national health care program. Lord only knows how much that's going to cost, but it's going to be in the billions and billions and probably the trillions of dollars. Much of that will be added to the national debt because we don't have that money. The auto industry—there's been bailouts of the auto industry, and it hasn't really worked. They still had to file chapter 11, and over $50 billion went to the auto industry.

The banking and financial institutions. There was a big bailout of those in the TARP bill, I believe it was. And then the energy bill that they're talking about, the cap-and-trade, is going to cost a tremendous amount of money to the taxpayers not only from the tax money we get here, but also what they are going to have to spend in their homes for higher electric bills and everything else in the future.

Let me just say, Mr. Speaker, this is something my colleagues really ought to read. It talks about our future, our kids' futures and our grandkids' futures. If we continue down the path we're on, there's no doubt in my mind that this country will go bankrupt, and we'll go the way of great civilizations that we have seen in the past, like Rome. There's just no question about it in my mind. Right now the debt that's held by China, Japan, England and other countries is out of sight. They don't want to buy our debt anymore because the value of the dollar has been plummeting because we're printing so much money. Right now we're talking about printing trillions of dollars more because they won't buy our debt, and we don't have that money. When that printing press gets out of control like it is right now, down the road we're going to see very high inflation, very high taxes and an economy that's unsustainable.

So I hope my colleagues will read this. The book is called State of the Union's Finances: A Citizen's Guide, put out by my good friends FRANK

WOLF and JIM COOPER, and it is from the Pete Peterson Foundation. It's on your desk. I hope all of you will read it.

ECONOMIC TROUBLES IN THE 17TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF OHIO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise today to speak about an issue that is important to our community in Northeast Ohio, specifically, the city of Warren and the city of Youngstown dealing with the auto task force and the bankruptcies that have been going on in the auto industry. The community that I come from has been adversely affected not just over the past few months or few years but really over the past 30 years. We've seen the loss of a tremendous amount of jobs. The home of Delphi, the original Delphi, the original Packard Electric, started many years ago by the Packard brothers; a General Motors plant in Lordstown; steel mills, all have been adversely affected over the past 30 years, but specifically over the past few months and few years, given the new problems in the auto industry.

And every day that we wake up, and we read The Warren Tribune or The Youngstown Vindicator, we've been getting bad news about layoffs—Severstal Steel goes idle, 1,000 jobs; General Motors plant takes off the third shift, takes off the second shift, few left on the first shift. Delphi went from 15,000 employees 20 or 30 years ago down to just a few today. A group that has also been adversely affected with maybe not as much attention as it should have been given are the Delphi salaried employees, who many have spent two-thirds of their careers working for Delphi, working under the General Motors umbrella; and helping with the engineering, the designing, the running of this company, have spent their lives, spent a lot of their time, missed a lot of baseball games, missed a lot of kids' events over the course of their careers, dedicating their lives to this company.

They are now finding themselves in a very difficult position as we go through this restructuring to where many of them have taken a buyout and were promised a supplemental to get them to Social Security, and now through the restructuring they may not only lose their pensions, but they are also going to lose their supplemental. They are also losing their health care. And this is a group of people that contributed to this company, contributed to this country, for many, many years, and deserve to be heard.

Our community that has suffered all of these blows can only stand so much.

And here are another 15,000 salaried workers across the country, but probably about 1,000 in our community, that have done the right thing, have paid their taxes, paid their property taxes to fund the schools and the libraries, supported the communities, did the right thing, and now are being extremely hurt by the situation.

So I, along with many others in the Ohio delegation, Senator BROWN and others, Representative BOCCIERI and Representative CHARLIE WILSON, MARCIA FUDGE, a lot of others, have been spending time trying to raise awareness and push the auto task force to consider these 15,000 people across this great country who have contributed in such a significant way to the auto industry, and we want to make sure that the auto task force recognizes that as these decisions are being made, some already are made, that they are made fairly and equitably; that these people who have served the company as significantly as others get the same kind of recognition, the same kind of support, and they are not asked to bear the brunt of the whole burden.

As the new GM tries to reinvent itself and get back up on its feet, it is important that they don't lose, and I think it is important for the auto task force to recognize this, Mr. Speaker, that they don't lose a core constituency of General Motors consumers. Former employees who have been loyal to the company, 15,000 of them, should not only be considered, but it is a basic tactic for marketing purposes. These are people who want to be loyal to General Motors, who want to be supportive of General Motors, and feel like they are being forced to bear a major brunt of this.

Again, I rise today because I have lived and worked here, and these are people who have coached me growing up and been involved in all of our lives and are such a critical component to our community. Many times I have risen on this House floor to talk about the workers and the unions and how the Amwells and the Youngstown Steel Doors and the UAW workers and the steelworkers have been hurt, but workers are workers, and these people deserve to be heard just as much as anyone else.

TOUGH LOVE FOR CALIFORNIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLINTOCK) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCLINTOCK. Mr. Speaker, the Governor of my home State of California has called for the Federal Government to underwrite as much as $15 billion of revenue anticipation notes that the State has to issue to avoid bankruptcy. I think that would be a colossal mistake. Such an act would not only put at risk billions of dollars that our country cannot afford, it would actually make California's fiscal condition worse.

Today, California faces a paradox. Despite record levels of spending and record levels of borrowing, it can no longer produce a decent road system or educate its kids or lock up its prisoners. Those who blame the recession for California's budget crisis profoundly misunderstand the nature of that crisis.

Even before California's revenue began to shrink, the State government was running a chronic $10 billion deficit and piling up unprecedented debt. The recession was merely the catalyst. The underlying cause is rampant mismanagement of the State's resources.

California spends about $43,000 to house a prisoner per year, while many States spend just half of that. California spends over $11,000 per pupil, but only a fraction of that ever reaches the classroom. California has one of the most expensive welfare systems in the country, and yet one of the worst records in moving people off of welfare.

That has never seemed to bother California's legislature or its Governor. They are like the shopkeeper who leased out too much space, ordered too much inventory, hired too many people and paid them too much. Every moment that shopkeeper covers his shortfalls with borrowing and bookkeeping tricks.

Ultimately he is going to reach a tipping point, where anything he does makes the situation worse. Borrowing costs are eating him alive and he is running out of credit. Raising prices causes his sales to decline and there is only so much discretionary spending that he can cut.

That is California's predicament in a nutshell. California's borrowing costs now exceed the budget of the entire University of California, and the reason for their loan guarantees is their credit is exhausted. They have just imposed the biggest tax increase by any State in American history, and it has actually reduced their revenues and made the budget gap wider.

Although there are many obsolete, duplicative or low-priority programs and expenditures that the State can and should abolish, there aren't enough of them to come anywhere close to closing California's deficit without directly impacting basic services.

Sadly, California has reached the terminal stage of a bureaucratic state, where government has become so large and so tangled that it can no longer perform even basic functions, a warning to all of us here in this House, I might add. Simply stated, there is now no substitute for a fundamental restructuring of the State's major service delivery systems and restoring the efficiencies that once produced a far higher level of service at far lower costs than what we see today.

Now, restoring that efficiency is going to require the Governor and the legislature to wrest control from the public employee unions, to dismantle the enormous bureaucracies that have grown up over the service delivery system, and to decentralize administration and decisionmaking, to contract out services that the private sector can provide more efficiently, to rescind the recent tax increases that are actually costing the State money, and to roll back the regulatory obstacles to productive enterprise.

These are the changes that cannot be implemented overnight and that will not begin to produce results for some time, and that brings us to the fine point of the matter. What Churchill called history's "chilling words" are about to be pronounced on California's failed leadership: Too late.

The Federal loan guarantee or bailout may be the only way to buy time for the restructuring of California's bureaucracies to take effect, but the discussion remains academic until and unless the State actually adopts the replacement structures, actually unburdens its shrinking productive sector and presents a credible plan to redeem the State's crushing debt and looming obligations. Without these actions, Federal intervention will only make California's problems worse by postponing reform, continuing unsustainable spending and piling up still more debt that the State cannot redeem.

In short, if California won't help itself, the Federal Government cannot and it should not and it must not.

OUR WONDERFUL HISTORY WITH PAKISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, let me acknowledge the very hard work that was accomplished by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, Chairman BERMAN and Subcommittee Chairman ACKERMAN, and say that we did the right thing today. By passing the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act, the American people have made a few more steps toward their own personal security, their own ensuring of the security of the homeland, and recognizing a long-standing relationship that has had, frankly, its hills and valleys.

Many of us don't know the history of other countries, and obviously we have our own wonderful history. But, interestingly enough, when Pakistan was founded by a person named Muhammad Ali Jinnah, it was founded on democratic principles, and we have had a longstanding 50-plus year relationship, although it has been uneven.

So today we have restored that relationship, and I hope Pakistani Americans and their own Embassy that is here representing Pakistan really realizes that we made a strong statement today for the respect and for the relationship of this nation.

We have in essence put together a document that would enhance significantly economic, social and democratic assistance for Pakistan. We have recognized the importance of public diplomacy and engagement. That is a reinvestment, a reordering of the relationship.

We have also recognized the importance of a regional process or coordination between Afghanistan, India and Bangladesh, recognizing that this area, South Asia, is an important part of our security and their security. We must recognize that the people of Pakistan love democracy. And, yes, what we have seen over the last couple of days really has given us pause.

Well, I want you to know that the Pakistan military under their Secretary of the army is doing something they don't usually do. Their structure has been that they have been monitoring or, if you will, watching the border. That has been their task. For the first time, they have accepted the responsibility of internally ridding their country of the terrorists, the ones who have taken over the Swat, who have undermined them, people whose faith may have drawn them to a particular situation where they thought the government wasn't functioning, so they allowed the Taliban and insurgents to take over.

And this is what we have, frankly, the devastation of 2.5 million people who are now moving from one place to the next. But the army is fighting the terrorists. And do you know what is more important? The people are standing up against the terrorists.

The legislation we have today will provide an investment through a prosperity fund. It will have certain criteria for Federal funding, for taxpayers' dollars to go to Pakistan. They must ensure that their nuclear materials are protected. They must make sure that they are fighting radicalism. And we can stop this kind of human devastation.

We know the international help that came to us during Hurricane Katrina. We know what we did with the tsunami. This is a terrorist tsunami. And I want to say that the Government, whether we agree or disagree with its strength, I believe they love democracy. These conditionalities that may be opposed will work their way through Congress. But if we didn't act today, we would continue to have the burials of so many people that are going on in this country, the kind of massive bombing that the terrorists think they can do to intimidate the people of Pakistan.

So, as a co-Chair of the Pakistan Caucus, I am grateful that we made a first step. I want the American people to know that your neighbors are Pakistani Americans. They are doctors, they are entrepreneurs, they are retailers. They love this country, and they want to help their country as well. I am glad we made this first step.

Let me move quickly to a domestic issue and put an explanation point on what we did right for Pakistan and say that I stand here today and support a restoration and bailout for automobile dealers. We missed the boat. We have dealerships who have gotten these ugly letters saying that even though you are a pillar of the community, you are in good financial shape, you can sell the cars, you must close.

Mr. Speaker, I stand against it, and I believe that as we move forward, we must have a carve-out for our automobile dealers who in fact can maintain their independence, who can sell cars. Whether or not it is by Fiat or whether or not it is someone else, Chrysler and GM cannot close by caveat, despite the bankruptcy structuring, the reordering, the reorganization under chapter 11. They cannot come and close hardworking automobile dealerships, and we as Americans and Members of Congress cannot forget them.

I will be looking forward to supporting legislation and writing legislation for automobile dealers carve-out and bailout.

RAMMING A DANGEROUS AND CONTROVERSIAL AGENDA THROUGH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. OLSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OLSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my growing alarm with the Democrat leadership's clear intention to use the conference report on the war supplemental appropriations bill to ram a dangerous and controversial agenda through this Congress.

It is now clear that Senate and House Democrats have decided to let their own political agenda subvert a bipartisan agreement on providing the men and women of our military with the support they need to continue the fight against terrorism in Iraq and Afghanistan.

I proudly supported the House version of this bill when it originally passed this Chamber. However, Democrats are now preparing to use the conference report, which cannot, cannot be amended, to add unrelated, politically motivated poison pills to the measure.

My Democrat colleagues are proposing to add up to $108 billion for the International Monetary Fund as part of the global bailout for foreign nations. Not only is this a bad idea on its own, I have yet to hear any explanation of how on Earth this will benefit our troops in Iraq and Afghanistan.

In fact, this money will have precisely the opposite effect. Iran, which the State Department has repeatedly certified as “the most active state sponsor of terrorism in the world,” would be eligible for these funds. Venezuela’s Hugo Chavez, who describes America as “the biggest menace on our planet” and supports narcoterrorists in neighboring nations, he, too, would be eligible for these funds.

The purpose of this bill is to make sure our Armed Forces have the men and material they need to defeat terrorists. That this bill would include funding that could benefit the sponsors of terrorism, it’s outrageous.

All of this being said, I’d welcome an honest, open debate and vote in this Chamber on the IMF funding, but my Democrat colleagues apparently would rather not risk a separate up-or-down vote. Therefore, they’ve resorted to playing games with funding for our troops by shoe-horning this measure in a war spending bill with no opportunity for debate here in the people’s House.

And it won’t end there. Unbelievably, reports are that Democrats are looking to include language to permit the transfer of terrorists being held in Guantanamo Bay to the United States, and they intend to require the immediate release of photographs of detained terrorists, likely, likely inflaming Islamists across the globe and further endangering our Armed Forces deployed overseas.

And again, I will happily debate these wrongheaded measures on the floor of this body any day of the week, but this attempt to ram these unacceptable provisions through the House without a debate or a vote is simply wrong. And I can’t think of a more demoralizing message to send to our fighting forces than that a majority of Congress is willing, for political expediency’s sake, to load down a war funding bill with unrelated, unpopular provisions.

When I served in the United States Navy, we feared the annual games politicians played with military funding. It made us angry to know that we were tasked with a mission, and then politicians played politics with the resources we needed to complete that mission.

Mr. Speaker, I did not come here to play that game. There is no honor in a vote that conditions the funding for our soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines and coastguardsmen on satisfying an unrelated political agenda. This Congress must not cheapen and degrade our military to simply move forward with political interests.

HONORING THE SERVICE OF MARINE CORPORAL JOE PIRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PAULSEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAULSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a truly great American, Marine Corporal Joe Piram of Eden Prairie, Minnesota. We literally owe our way of life to people like him.

It’s important for us to remember, Mr. Speaker, that every freedom we enjoy, every moment of safety and every dream we have for the future that we hold was purchased with the blood and sacrifice of our military families. We should not only be thankful for the reality of our quality of life, but for those who laid theirs down to make it possible.

We’re aware of the things that make our society run—electricity, gasoline, money, jobs, for example—but our society also runs on values, honesty, integrity, service and sacrifice. Our national progress can truly be measured by the quality of our spirit. Here again, our military families epitomize these essential American values. They’re role models for all of us to follow.

So with that introduction, I want to highlight the service of one of the thousands of brave men and women who do amazing things for the rest of us every day.

Joe Piram graduated from Eden Prairie High School in 2004. Joining the Marines had been something he wanted to do all of his life, and the passion was fueled by the tragedy of September 11, which played a key role in his decision.

We talk about the threat that al Qaeda represents to our world, and we deplore their savagery and their ruthlessness. Corporal Piram chose to go out and fight them over there so that we could be safe here. He’s now served two tours in Iraq and one in Afghanistan. His unit was called “The Lions of the Desert” because of the courage and the strength and heart with which they carried out their missions.

Near the end of his most recent tour, however, just about a year ago, he was injured by an IED. He suffered burns over almost 40 percent of his body. In the months since then, he’s put the same determination in his recovery that he put into his military service. With the strong support of his family and his own resilient spirit, he’s making great progress and doing well. As a matter of fact, when a reporter from the Eden Prairie newspaper called and spoke with him recently, he had just completed a 5K race at an event in Florida.

Joe’s recovery is going well, and he’s making ambitious plans for when he leaves the military. It’s no surprise that he’s looking for new ways to use his talents and his values to serve our country in law enforcement, and maybe running for political office.

We have a tremendous country here in the United States. We’re not perfect, but we’re still the envy of a large majority of people around the world.

Through all the generations of American history, people like Joe have quietly stepped forward to take on the Nation’s toughest jobs. They don’t do it for fame or for fortune. They simply do it because they love their country, and they translate that love into a sense of duty and service.

Corporal Joe Piram, I honor you and I thank you. We all thank you. We also appreciate your family who raised you, who supported you in your recovery and, in a very tangible way, has also served with you.

With you in mind, we here in Washington can try a little harder today to make this country worthy of the price you have paid to make it great.

IN MEMORY OF SERGEANT JEFFREY JORDAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this week the residents of a small town in Georgia’s 11th Congressional District are grieving together as they say goodbye to a native son who died while bravely serving his Nation in Afghanistan.

Sergeant Jeffrey W. Jordan was killed in action on June 4, 2009, near Kapisa, Afghanistan, of wounds suffered from an improvised explosive device and small arms fire.

Jeffrey was born and raised in Floyd County and, after high school, he settled in a very close-knit town of Cave Springs, Georgia, with his wife, Lacey, and his son, Tailor. Tragically, the Jordan family marked Tailor’s first birthday on the very same day his father gave his life in defense of our Nation.

Jeffrey is remembered as a loving husband, father, son, brother, grandson, friend and patriot whose sacrifice for our Nation will never be forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, Sergeant Jordan leaves behind his wife, Lacey Lambert Jordan, his son, Tailor Jordan; his parents, Mary Lou and Tracy Lorin Dowdy; his brothers, Robert Jordan and J.R. Thomason; a sister, Candice Dials; and his grandparents, C.W. and Barbara White, and Mrs. Delores Thomason and Mrs. Delane Ingram; also a great-grandmother, Mrs. Ruth Wilson, as well as so many aunts and uncles and nieces and nephews and in-laws. Tomorrow, I will join this group of Sergeant Jordan’s family, friends and supporters at his funeral to honor the life of this brave soldier.

Mr. Speaker, my prayers go out to his family, and my deepest gratitude goes out to Sergeant Jordan for his selfless sacrifice, yes, for our Nation.

I ask all Members, please join me in honoring the distinguished memory of Sergeant Jeffrey W. Jordan.

CLIMATE CHANGE HEARING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, as we speak here on the floor of the House right now, the House Agriculture Committee is holding a hearing on the legislation reported out of the Energy and Commerce Committee, the so-called cap-and-trade legislation. Many of us know it as cap-and-tax or a massive new energy tax on the American people.

The Agriculture Committee has wisely decided to hold a hearing on this complex legislation and, in fact, the Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary Vilsack, has been answering questions from Members on both sides of the aisle for the past 3½ hours, as Members are almost uniformly opposed to the legislation, regardless of their party status, and have expressed grave concerns about the impact that this will have on America's farmers and ranchers, that it will have on rural America and, indeed, the devastating impact that it will have on our economy and jobs and our standard of living as a whole. And I want to bring to the attention of the Members of the House some of the concerns that we have raised.

The impact that this legislation will have on our economy and our very lives is extensive, and we should make sure that not just the Energy and Commerce Committee, but every committee in the House fully vets this bill.

The cap-and-trade proposal is really an $846 billion national energy tax that will hit nearly every American. Moving into a cap-and-trade system will place the United States economy at a distinct competitive disadvantage because it would place significant additional costs on every American business, farmer, manufacturer, and American family.

This bill will raise electric bills across the country by hindering the development of traditional energy sources while also, ironically, limiting the development of renewable energy.

Coal provides the majority of electricity generation in our country, and this bill will effectively stop coal-fired power plants from being built in the United States at a time when one new coal-fired electric generating power plant a week is being built in India and China. They will use those coal-fired power plants to power the growth in their economy, taking jobs away from the United States and putting the same CO₂ gas into the atmosphere that we are passing this legislation to try to stop in this country. It makes no sense.

Nuclear power is the second largest source of electricity generation and the largest source of CO₂-free energy, and it is effectively ignored by this bill, notwithstanding the fact that it will reduce CO₂ gas emissions by a far greater measure than any of the other alternatives that are being discussed.

Also concerning to me is the one-size-fits-all renewable electric standard. This legislation assumes that all States have the exact same amount of renewable resources and can develop them and penalizes States when they cannot.

Furthermore, the legislation excludes far too many people who should be able to participate in the renewable energy market. I know I speak for members on both sides of our committee when I say that the biomass definition in this bill is inadequate. Woody biomass is a clean, sustainable form of energy that deserves encouragement from the Federal Government, not unneeded restrictions. Given the restrictions already placed on woody biomass by the Renewable Fuels Standard, we should not be repeating the same mistake in this legislation.

We must keep in mind that agriculture is an extensive energy-intensive industry, and this legislation will make the cost of energy even higher. It's estimated that the Waxman legislation will raise electricity rates 90 percent after adjusting for inflation, gas prices 74 percent, and natural gas prices 55 percent.

There is no doubt that this legislation will also raise the cost of fertilizer, chemical, and equipment which farmers use daily. This will cause serious economic harm for the American farmer. According to the Heritage Foundation, farm income is expected to drop because of this legislation by $8 billion in 2012, $25 billion in 2024, and over $50 billion in 2035. These are decreases of 28 percent, 60 percent and 94 percent, respectively. I do not know how we can expect American farmers to survive when we cut their farm income by 94 percent.

What I find even more frustrating is that the impetus for this legislation is to reduce carbon emissions, yet it does not recognize the role that agriculture and forestry can play in sequestering carbon.

The legislation does not specifically provide for agricultural or forestry offsets but rather leaves eligible offsets to the discretion of the Environmental Protection Agency. To add insult to injury, over 30 pages of this bill are devoted to developing international forestry offsets, including provisions to send American taxpayer money overseas to forest owners in developing countries while disregarding our own forest owners.

I urge my colleagues to look at this legislation closely and to soundly reject it.

Quite frankly, leaving these offsets at the discretion of the EPA makes me nervous. The EPA is not known to have the best working relationship with farmers and ranchers. USDA has a long record of working with farmers and ranchers, and they have the extensive expertise in agriculture and forestry that will make an agricultural offset program successful. This legislation needs to be amended to allow the USDA, not the EPA, to be in charge of administering agricultural offsets.

This legislation has far reaching consequences for every person, farmer, and business in the country. We cannot ignore that America's economy is intrinsically linked to the availability and affordability of energy. During this economic slow-down we should be adopting policies that seek to rebuild our economy and create more jobs; we need reliable and affordable energy supplies. Unfortunately, cap and trade legislation would only further cripple our economy. Instead of government mandates and bureaucracy we should focus on policies that support technological advances and consumer choices. The bottom line is that we need policies which encourage investment in environmentally sound, cost-effective practices without stifling innovation and setting our economy further back. The simple truth behind the Waxman energy plan is that it raises taxes, kills jobs and will lead to more government intrusion.

SPENDING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CARTER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to start first by apologizing to Mr. RYAN, whom I just wandered in here and inadvertently walked in front of while he was speaking. So before I start with my speech, I want to apologize to Mr. RYAN for that inappropriate thing I did.

I agree with President Obama when he said this about spending in May of 2008 while on the campaign trail in North Dakota: President Obama, the candidate at that time, said: "$9 trillion of debt, that's just bad. That's not fiscally conservative. And so we're going to have to change our policies. The first thing you do when you're in a hole is what?"

And the crowd reacted, "Stop digging."

Unfortunately, what President Obama said is not what he has done. In fact, not only did we not stop digging, we threw away our shovel and got a backhoe and started digging double time because in 2008, the debt was too high; but now President Obama has increased spending so much that we have broken historical records on spending.

We started off with the stimulus bill of $787 billion to stimulate the economy. It was promised that its big goal was to cap unemployment at 8 percent. We weren't going to go above 8 percent unemployment, and that's why we had to spend all that money. But, unfortunately, we are sitting here today with 9.4 percent unemployment and rising.

The debt that we have accumulated since the President has come into office has been unbelievable. The $8.5 trillion in 2009 will grow to $16 trillion in 2019. In only 5 months, President Obama and the Democratic majority have managed to spend and borrow more public debt than in the entire history of the United States. That's the past 233 years. So in less than 150 days, they have obligated this country in debt more than the past 233 years.

A couple of weeks ago, I was on the floor of the House talking about the proposed bailout of the automobile industry, which I still contend is an unconstitutional takeover of private industry, based upon the Youngstown case. The administration has recklessly used the taxpayers' money to basically put the administration in charge of General Motors, Chrysler, AIG, Citibank, and the list goes on and on and on.

I don't think the change the American people were looking for when we heard that change was coming was the change where the government took over the micro-management of industry. I really don't believe that was the change Americans were looking for, and yet that's the change we got.

Even worse, when these people who see where the government is going, where the Democrats are taking this country, they say, We'll give our money back. We don't need your bailout money. We want to give it back to you. And they are having trouble trying to give it back. The Obama administration won't take it.

So with all this accumulated debt and with all this spending that we have done, between now and probably the end of July, we are going to take up basically a government health care plan which is going to include another $1 trillion in entitlement health care spending at a time when all experts agree that Medicare, as we have it right now, has real problems and is going to eventually go broke because there are a whole lot more people taking out of the program than are paying into the program and it only gets worse as the baby boomers grow. So we are going to add to that $1 trillion and, don't worry, we'll figure it out. And, of course, we just heard about the energy tax that's coming our way.

You know the real money that we ought to be worrying about? It's not these folks we are bailing out. Who we ought to be worried about are those guys who have lost their jobs. That's the money we ought to be worried about, and that's what the folks back home are worried about.

THE PROGRESSIVE CAUCUS MESSAGE: ENERGY

nesota (Mr. ELLISON) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. ELLISON. Mr. Speaker, this is the Progressive Message. The Progressive Message is the Progressive Caucus' effort to come before the American people at least once a week for 60 minutes or so to talk about a progressive vision for America. Not a vision based on fear, not a vision based on a denial of science, not a vision based on division, not a vision based on scapegoating some minority group. But instead a vision that is inclusive, that says we all matter and we all count. A vision that says science is something we should rely on and have some faith in and some real confidence in because we understand that whether you come from a faith tradition or whether you don't, we have minds that we should use and it's human nature to discover and inquire and find out the facts.

A vision that says that, yes, we are entrusted with this Earth and we, as human beings, are responsible for it and that where we have gone astray, we should try to correct the situation for the sake of our children and all life on the planet.

A progressive vision where we come together every week and talk about things like civil rights, equal opportunity in the economy; where we talk about the struggle to end global warming, or at least try to slow it down; where we come and talk about progressive issues like peace, like demilitarizing our society, like promoting dialogue, diplomacy, and development, by trying to resolve war through dialogue and not through conflict and fighting. These are the themes that we come together with the Progressive Message every week.

This is the Progressive Caucus that brings this message. And we have a Web site, cpc.grijalva.house.gov. It's very important to stay in touch with this critical Web site because it is this Web site that we rely on to communicate with the community around the country.

Tonight with the Progressive Message, we are going to come and talk about our Nation's energy future. America has to embrace this idea that carbon emissions must be cut and must be cut drastically. It won't due just to act like there's no such thing as global warming and deny the science that proves that not only does it exist but it's caused by human behavior. We are here tonight to say it doesn't make sense to say that, look, we can't do anything about global warming because it might in some way hurt our reliance on coal because some people make a lot of money selling coal.

If coal and the use of coal is out of step with the needs of our environment, then we have to find alternative sources of energy in order to make it. If nuclear energy cannot be safely used and there's no way to store it, we should look for other ways and incentivize other ways in order to make energy.

The fact is by whipping out fear, hysteria around cap-and-trade and coming up with clever slogans, which I am not even going to repeat or dignify, the fact is that we are simply delaying the inevitable, which is the gradual acidification of our oceans; the acceleration of melting of our Arctic ice caps; of expansion of desert; of loss of species, of animals, and plants; of intensification of hurricanes and all these very serious problems. The scientists all agree. Only people who don't want to listen to science don't agree, and, yes, we have some of them here.

The fact is addressing carbon emissions, addressing global warming, is not going to hurt our economy. It's going to actually bring jobs. It's not going to hurt our farm economy. And it's certainly not going to be the devastating thing that some people on the other side of the aisle claim that it is. The fact is tonight I just want to talk to people who know that global warming and the acidification of our oceans is a very dangerous and serious problem for all the world and want to do something about it for a change, want to do something serious about it and are not willing to just let this Earth continue to heat up and the oceans continue to acidify and the species continue to die out and the ice in the northern and southern regions of our world continue to melt.

People who want to do something about it, we have a bill that's been marked up and it has been reported out of the Energy and Commerce Committee. We need to hear from you on this bill.

The fact is that right now we have been in Congress focusing on the health care bill. We have been focusing on marking up other important pieces of legislation. And I personally am not confident that we are focused enough on this energy bill. We're not focused enough on the cap-and-trade bill that's coming out. So we want to encourage people to respond and offer their views.

And I want to say this: those of you who yearn for change, who know that carbon emissions are killing our planet, I hope that you understand that your engagement in this process is very important. We need people to give us the feedback we need because there has been a bill reported out. It's not the law yet. It hasn't even been brought to the floor yet. But it is being shaped and crafted every day. And without the active engagement of good ideas coming forth, we will not get the bill that we need.

I want to give a lot of credit to the Members of Congress who have worked hard on the bill. Congressman WAXMAN and Congressman MARKEY have been doing a good job. But I dare say that the legislative process is engaged, involved, and that everybody has to have a say-so in this thing. And those two leaders in the area of carbon emissions have not denied that. In fact, they have welcomed it.

I just want to give a background on the bill that exists so far. It's called the American Clean Energy and Security Act, and it's referred to ACES. And this bill was reported out of the Energy and Commerce Committee on May 21, 2009, and it passed by a vote of 33 to 25. That's not a big margin. The legislation will create millions of new clean energy jobs, in my opinion and based on the facts, and it will enhance America's energy independence and protect the environment.

Another thing that the bill will do is it will signal to the world community that America is serious about cutting carbon emissions. America is leading the way in the world to cut carbon emissions. And, therefore, countries like India and China and other nations of the world that are big emitters, and we're the number one emitter, but there are others that emit a lot of carbon as well, they now have to bring their economy in line with the needs of our planet.

This bill does represent a new beginning for America's energy environmental future. By saying so, I don't mean to imply that it's a perfect bill or that it can't stand improvement—I'm asking you to help improve it right now—but it does represent a real stark departure from the past.

The bill requires electric utilities to meet 20 percent of their electricity demand through renewable energy sources and energy efficiency by the year 2020. It reduces carbon emissions from major U.S. sources by 17 percent by 2020. It reduces carbon emissions by 80 percent by 2050 compared to 2005 levels. Complementary measures in the legislation, such as investments and preventing tropical deforestation, will achieve a significant additional reduction in carbon emissions.

The bill invests in new clean-energy technologies and in energy efficiency, including energy efficiency and renewable energy that is to the tune of $90 billion in new investments by 2025. It invests $20 billion in electric and other advanced technology vehicles. It invests $20 billion in basic scientific research and development, and it protects consumers from high energy prices. According to estimates of the Environmental Protection Agency, the reductions in carbon pollution required by the legislation will cost American families less than the cost of a postal stamp per day.

The fact is I don't come before you today to say that this bill is wrapped up in a bow. I come to you, asking you to engage in the process that is going on in Congress right now, to be part of this debate, to be part of this dialogue, and to offer your views so that we can come up with the best product available.

I also come to you to say do not let the perfect be the enemy of the good. If we have a good bill here—and it is pretty good—even though it's not perfect, we want your support, and we want your ideas, but it's time to engage and to focus on this energy bill. It's coming. It's marked up in committee. It's in the Ag Committee now, and it's going to need American participation and input.

I want to let our fellow Americans know, who are committed to cleaning up our environment and to decreasing our dependence on harmful fossil fuels, that the Progressive Caucus is proud of the progress that the legislation has made so far. We don't believe that it's done—it's not close—but we're proud of the progress that has been made. We want everyone to know it's not finished and that your input is needed. There is much work to be done.

While we consider this particular legislation as a good start and as a foundation to build on, we are continuing to push for greater expansion in the creation of clean, renewable energy sources like wind and solar. We are continuing to push for the increased regulation of industries that pollute at taxpayer expense, and we are continuing to put America back to work by creating green-collar jobs that cannot be outsourced.

The general Progressive principles for energy legislation are going to be that we need a sharp departure from the past, that we need to move quickly to secure greater progress, that we need to protect individuals as well as communities, and it has got to be based on science and not on politics.

Now, I just want to say again that these are some of the basic ideas of what the bill will do. I'm going to talk about some of the mechanics of the bill in a moment, but I want to make it clear that the fact is that what we have had in the past simply will not work. We've got to have that change. In order to have that change, we've got to have a lot of public input, and this is the time to offer it.

I just want to take a few questions as we move on because a lot of people have responded to my plea that we should have a fully blown, strong conversation around America so that people can offer their views on this critically important topic. There was a question asked at Progressivecongress.org, and 4,887 people asked this question:

Why is EPA oversight of the coal industry being gutted?

Well, let me say that the reason those provisions regarding the EPA oversight of the coal industry are not strong enough is simply because we haven't heard from you enough. We need input on this point. We need you to talk about how you feel about this. We need oversight on everything, but we need your input on what we should be doing to have oversight on coal, and we need your input on how this bill needs to be changed to make sure that the coal industry is being properly monitored. This is a critical thing for you to talk about—I know—and I can tell you that coal-fired power plants are, in my view, a serious problem.

I think it's a basic minimum that they have the technology necessary to clean them up as much as possible. The fact is, even with the best technology we have so far, we still have coal releasing particulate matter into the air—lead, barium, cadmium, mercury emissions, and serious things like that—and into our water that make our fish polluted and inedible.

We've got to have oversight on coal, and I am here tonight to ask you to get engaged in this debate, to get involved in this conversation and to put your ideas up here. Why is the EPA oversight of the coal industry being gutted? You know what? It's because we're not engaging in this debate and are not shaping this debate. It's because we're not calling our Members of Congress and telling them what we want. So I ask you to do that. It's very important that we engage in this conversation. It's ongoing now.

I'll get to more questions in a moment, but let me just speak a little bit about what some of the key provisions of the bill will be. We've talked about one of the provisions that people are concerned about.

Key provisions of the bill include requiring electric utilities to meet 20 percent of their electricity demand through renewable energy sources and energy efficiency by 2020. Now, that is one of the provisions of the bill, and I thought I would make that point before I got to the next question, and 1,871 people asked this question:

Why is Congress refusing to support Obama in his call to get 25 percent of our electricity from renewables?

The bill marked up so far is 5 percent lower on the renewable energy standard than we need. I think 25 percent is a better number, and I hope that we get it, but without political force behind it, we won't. So call up your Congressman, and let him know how you feel about a 25 percent renewable energy standard.

I'll tell you this: Based on the history that we've had so far, I'm happy with the 20 percent renewable energy standard. A 20 percent renewable energy standard is better than the status quo, but it's still not good enough, and it's not as good as we can do. So I think it's very important that we hear from everybody about the importance of a 25 percent renewable energy standard. It's very important that we hear from people about why that 5 percent higher and more ambitious standard would be better than the 20 percent. I think it's obvious why it would be better than the 20 percent. It's 5 percent higher. Yet what does it give us? What does it bring us? What kind of assets and benefits do we get by pushing for that higher renewable energy standard?

At the end of the day, we need to hear from everybody on this point, and we need to hear from you. If we don't hear from you, we're all going to be poorer for it.

Another key provision of the bill is that it invests in new, clean-energy technologies in energy efficiency, including energy efficiency in renewable energy, carbon capture sequestration, electric, other advanced technology vehicles, and in basic scientific research. In this category of investment, we're talking about a significant investment. We're talking about over $190 million. This is a lot of money. The fact is, because the proceeds will be from the cap-and-trade system, this bill is PAYGO neutral. It's very important to bear that in mind as well. The bill will mandate new energy-saving standards for buildings, appliances and industry.

Addressing this issue of buildings is very important. A lot of people know, and more people need to know, that a tremendous amount of energy is lost through the roofs of our buildings. We need stronger building standards, and we need more energy-saving technology and incentives to get us there with this legislation. If you believe they're not sufficient, we need to hear from you right now. There was a question asked:

Are initiatives for future government buildings to be built green? If not, why not?

The answer is we do have initiatives for future government buildings to be built green. We also have other bills separate from this bill in Congress to incentivize the building of green homes, particularly in HUD homes. There is a bill winding its way through Congress now, and the author of that is ED PERLMUTTER from Colorado. I'm an author on that bill, and I'm happy to be. So that bill, called the GREEN Act, is a very good bill.

Another important part of the bill is to reduce carbon emissions from major U.S. sources by 17 percent by 2020 and by over 80 percent by 2050 compared to 2005 levels. Complementary measures in this legislation, such as investments in preventing tropical deforestation, will achieve significant additional reductions.

Now, again, this is another important piece of the puzzle. The United States needs to do its part. I hear many friends—well, people from the other side of the aisle—always say: Well, what about China and India? What about Europe? What about other places? The fact is, if America sets a marker down there that we are going to cut our carbon emissions, that sends a powerful signal; it enhances our ability to talk to our neighbors around the world and say they've got to cut theirs, too.

So I am very proud that America is leading and is trying to be out there in front and is doing the right thing and is not simply saying, We're not going to change our carbon emissions until other countries change theirs. To me, that's not the American attitude. The United States needs to take responsibility and help lead the way. So it's very important, and I'm very happy that the United States is taking its own responsibility to reduce carbon emissions by U.S. sources by 17 percent.

Let me talk about the renewable energy standard in the bill. The American Clean Energy and Security Act, ACES, as I said before, requires retail electric suppliers to meet a growing percentage of their load with electricity generated from renewable sources. The combined renewable electricity and electricity savings requirement begins at 6 percent in 2012. That's coming up. It gradually rises to 20 percent in 2020. At least three-quarters, 75 percent, of the requirement must be met by renewable energy except that, upon receiving a petition from the Governor, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission can reduce the renewable requirement to three-fifths, or 60 percent. In 2020, 15 percent of the electricity load in each State must be met with renewable electricity and 5 percent with electricity savings. Upon receiving a petition from the Governor, the renewable requirement can be reduced to 12 percent, and the electricity savings can be increased to 8 percent.

It is important to keep this in mind. This is sort of an essential part of this bill, the renewable energy standard that we've set forth. Can it be better? Yes, I think it can, but we need to hear from you to make it better. As I said, this bill is being marked up and is going through committee as we speak, and it will likely be on the floor before you know it, so please don't miss your opportunity to be a part of this conversation. It can't just be a Beltway conversation. It has to be a conversation that engages Americans from Minnesota—my own State—from California, Oklahoma, Texas, and from all over. We've got to hear from America. We've got to hear from America's progressive community on these issues.

Let me also talk about the importance of this bill. We talked about the investments in clean energy, and we talked about the money allocated for that. I did not mention yet that this bill will promote the deployment of smart-grid technology, and it will enhance transmission planning. This is an important part of the bill. This smart-grid technology and the promotion of the use of it will help cut carbon emissions. It will help in having a more reliable grid, and it will improve our energy usage, which is an important part of our bill.

I mentioned energy-efficiency measures, which include building standards. As to one of the questions we already had, which was regarding our initiatives for future government buildings to be built green, and if not, why not, the ACES bill establishes new standards for building efficiency, requiring new buildings to be 30 percent more efficient by 2012 and 50 percent more efficient by 2016. States are offered allowances that they can sell to support the adoption and enforcement of the new standards. The Department of Energy must enforce standards in States that do not incorporate building standards into their State building codes.

Also, we have appliance standards. ACES mandates new efficiency standards in lighting products, in commercial furnaces and in other appliances. We have vehicle standards. The ACES discussion draft has included provisions to harmonize Federal fuel economy standards with EPA carbon emission standards and California standards for light-duty vehicles. These provisions were dropped in the reported bill after the administration reached an agreement on light-duty fuel economy standards with automakers in California.

That's not all. There are other fuel-efficiency standards. We not only have to reduce emissions—and this bill tries to do that. Does it do it enough? Probably not. But guess what? We need your input and your advice.

The bill also has three primary programs for reducing dangerous carbon emissions that cause global warming: One, a cap on large domestic sources; two, a program to reduce tropical deforestation; and three, an offset program.

Let me talk a little bit about the carbon-capping emissions from large sources.

Starting in 2012, ACES establishes an annual tonnage limit on emissions of carbon and other global warming pollutants from large U.S. sources like electric, utilities, and oil refineries. Under these limits, carbon pollution from large sources must be reduced by 17 percent below 2005 levels by 2020; 83 percent below 2005 levels by 2050. This is an aggressive carbon-capping program, and I am proud that we've come this far. I think we can do better, but this is, I think, progress. If it's not enough progress, I think we need to hear from you.

So these are just a few of the features of the bill. The bill is being marked up. You can see it online. And we hope that people will continue to offer their views on what we should do.

Let me go to another question. So 3,455 people asked this question on progressivecongress.org, that's 3,455 on progressivecongress.org. What is being done to decrease our dependence on oil, such as wind, solar, and other clean energies?

Well, that's what the bill is supposed to do: decrease our dependence on oil and allow us to generate energy from wind, solar, and other clean energies. That's really the point of the bill, through the renewable energy standard, by capping carbon forces, by promoting efficiency and also conservation. That's what we're actually trying to do here.

The fact is there are a number of critics of the existing bill, and I want to address a few of them before I go on to some more questions.

One of the critiques we've heard, particularly from other folks on the other side of the aisle, is that a cap-and-trade bill is an energy tax. First, the plan is to repower America with clean energy jobs and efficient savings, not just drop a tax. As for capping global warming pollution, this plan is simple. It helps polluters pay and helps clean companies prosper so they can hire more workers.

When the folks on the other side of the aisle say that this bill will be a job killer, my only question to them is, Don't you believe in the ingenuity of the American people? You know, they said when we had auto efficiency standards that it would somehow kill jobs. Well, it didn't. They said that when we began to stop acid rain and use cap-and-trade for that purpose, that that would cause job losses. It didn't. The fact is is that innovation and ingenuity—when brainpower will solve this problem—and I think we should have a little faith in Americans to solve this problem.

And as I said a moment ago, it's the same solution we put successfully with acid rain in 1990 after which time electricity rates fell 10 percent and the U.S. economy added 16 million new jobs.

They're thinking inside the box and don't understand that we've got people who are thinking of new boxes to make. It's important to point out that the acid rain solution had bipartisan support and was signed by the first President Bush. Well, those days of bipartisanship I guess we would like to see come back a little bit more.

Another attack on the bill is won't this "energy tax" raise electricity rates. Even Obama said cap-and-trade will make energy prices "skyrocket."

Saving consumers money is not a tax. Saving businesses money is not a tax. Sending $400 billion dollars a year to other countries is a tax, and the fact is, it's a tax that Americans are tired of paying.

This plan, this ACES bill, even in its unfinished form, declares energy independence and puts America on the path to middle class recovery. The President spoke of transitioning to a clean-energy economy that will create jobs, make homes, buildings and vehicles more efficient, and protect consumers. In his inaugural address, remember he said we will harness the sun and the winds and the soil to fuel our cars and our factories, and I'm glad he's doing that.

Let me offer just a few numbers in terms of jobs. Clean-energy job provisions, the RES, or Renewable Electricity Standard, will create over 300,000 new jobs. The efficiency saving measures, which is the Energy Efficiency Resource Standard, will create over 222,000 jobs by the year 2020. Cutting waste, saving money. The Clean Energy Jobs provisions, RES standard alone, will result in nearly a hundred billion dollars in savings for consumers and businesses, which we can put in other things, which we can invest in other ways. And the efficiency measures alone will result in $170 billion in utility savings by 2020.

It's very important to understand that the fear and the scare tactics—people who don't want to take us into the future are always going to try to say what's going to cost money, this is going to go wrong, that's going to go wrong. That's the very essence of a conservative position. They don't want to try anything new. They would rather stay in the status quo than go forward into a better future. But the Progressive vision for our country is not that. The Progressive vision is to deal head-on with this problem, face the problems head-on and create a better situation for all Americans.

Let me just say that this bill, which has been criticized by folks on the other side of the aisle, really is, in many ways, a bill that, of course, is designed to scare some people, because the only solutions we've seen while the House was controlled by Republicans is tax breaks for oil companies who posted record profits, massive increases in greenhouse gas emissions, and erratic spikes in gas and energy prices.

We know that gas prices have been going up over the last several months, but don't you remember only a short while ago they were astronomical last summer, 4 bucks, stuff like that? Well, they're creeping up.

If we go green and really address the greenhouse gas emissions, what will happen is we will see a flattening of these kind of spikes in our energy prices. We will derive savings, and we will have alternative forms of energy and greater control over oil prices.

Marginal increases in renewable energy development. While the rest of the world engages and passes us on, we haven't seen real increases in renewable energy development, just tiny little incremental ones, and a greater dependence on foreign oil.

The fact is is that since 1973, America's dependence upon oil from outside of America has skyrocketed, has absolutely skyrocketed. And this period, much of which was between 1994 right on up to 2006, the House was controlled by Republicans, and for much of that time they had the House, the Senate, and the Presidency and did nothing about this problem; it just got worse. Now we are going to do something about it.

So tonight, we've spent some time talking about energy. The message tonight is twofold. One is that the American Clean Energy Security Act is being developed now. It's a sharp break from the past. It's better than what we have now. It improves the status quo. But Progressive voices have never been satisfied with just doing marginally better. Progressive voices have always said we've got to do way better, we've got to do as well as we can do, not just as well as what we might be able to scrape by with. So I invite people who have a vision for a clean energy future to step forward with their proposals.

The other point is that is not just limited to the bill. It's focused on the idea that this is an opportunity for basic civic engagement and real Democratic participation in our society. As we are now having multiple debates not only on health care but also on foreign assistance reforms, the State Department—as we're talking about appropriation bills, which are probably going to keep us really busy over the next 3 days, the fact is we will be addressing this ACES bill as well, and we cannot allow the advocates for a clean energy, green energy future to not be a part of this critical conversation.

So let me just go through a few more questions, and then we'll begin to wrap up for tonight. It's Thursday night and we're going to move on out, but let me just make sure that everybody who wrote in and addressed our Web site, as we asked them to do, gets their question answered.

What can we do to make it easier for homeowners to become self-sufficient with wind or solar power? We could support the provisions that are in the ACES bill, which address heavy polluters, give American entrepreneurs and innovators the tools they need to stay competitive, which increase production of cleaner renewable energy sources, which reduces our dependence on fossil fuels and creates millions of new jobs. And we can follow the new building standards and we can follow the new vehicle standards.

Why can't we create better tax incentives for business and consumers to use alternative energy? Well, 4,118 people asked this question, and I quite agree. We need to take a close look at the incentives for businesses and consumers to use alternative energy, and I think that we can do better than we're doing right now. And I invite you to engage in that conversation. Essentially, the answer is the politics of the situation have landed us where we are now, and if you want better, you have got to get involved in the debate.

Hawaii is looking for 100 percent clean energy in 10 years. Can every State be urged to push the limits? That question was asked by 728 people on progressivecongress. The fact is the States, much power in the States, great incentives in the States. Each State, all 50 of them, can get out there and set tough, renewable energy standards so that each State can do well. And let me tell you, a State can be a laboratory for the Nation. If States get out there and show that it can be done, that we really can have 100 percent clean energy in 10 years—like they will try to do in Hawaii—and say, Look, we did it. You can do it. Here's how we did it. We can make it happen.

So hats off to Hawaii for their ambitious goal. If you live in a State where you think renewable energy standards like this can be reached, we urge you to get out there and try to make it happen.

Why are we expanding highways when rail transportation would provide greener alternatives to commuters? I quite agree, and 2,799 people asked this question on progressivecongress. We appreciate you putting that question in.

As a person who's really into light-rail transit, bike paths—we're having this debate right now as we're talking about the transportation reauthorization bill. This is a bill that's only reauthorized every 6 years, and I think people should have community forums on this bill all over America. It's not just the ACES bill that can help us get into a greener future, but also the transportation bill and other bills that are coming up can help us get there.

This question, Why are we expanding highways when rail transportation will provide greener alternatives to the commuters? Great question. I agree that this is what we should be doing. I think that highways have been incentivized and given unfair advantage over rail transit, and I would like to see them compete on equal footing.

So let me say, don't be afraid of the future. The future is coming anyway. Those who stand up and say, Well, we can't have a bill that's going to help America get off fossil fuels and cut greenhouse gas emissions because it's nothing but a tax, understand that the folks who told you about tax-and-spend liberals and all of that—look, we've only had a President and a Democratic Congress for a few months. This stuff wasn't inherited. You want to talk about spenders and debt accumulators? Those guys sit on the other side of this Chamber.

The fact is, the progressive future this country needs is in the hands of the people who are going to help America get into a green, clean future.

This bill, this ACES bill that is being marked up right now, that has already gone through Energy and Commerce, that is in the Agriculture Committee now. This bill is undone and needs the input of all America, people who have a progressive vision for America, people who aren't afraid of the future, not people who cling to the status quo and what happened yesterday, but people who want something better for tomorrow and are willing and have the courage to try to get it.

That's the Progressive Message for tonight. I want to thank everybody for tuning in.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back.

HEALTHCARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MINNICK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, tonight, what we would like to talk about is a new and positive medical reform agenda as Congress prepares to debate health care in the United States.

I want to focus this discussion on what we should be for—a bipartisan and centrist agenda for the United States—and compare our country to plans in other countries to make sure that we take the best of all medical care around the world but don't replicate some of the problems that we see both here and abroad.

When we look at a comprehensive reform agenda that would receive widespread support both in the House of Representatives and the Senate, we basically unify around eight major themes.

First, we want to make sure that we guarantee that medical decisions are kept in the hands of patients and their doctors and not a new government bureaucracy.

Second, we want to lower the cost of insurance to make sure that the competitive advantage that the United States could enjoy would be realized, and that also individual costs for all American families are lowered.

We want to increase the number of Americans who have health insurance to make sure that more and more families have the peace of mind that they need to protect their family incomes, their health, and most importantly, their lives.

We want to allow Americans to keep the insurance they like because we know that over 80 percent of Americans—and especially voters—report that they are either satisfied or extremely satisfied with the health insurance plan they have.

And we want to make sure that we replicate the doctor's principle, that first we should do no harm. And in the Congress, on health care policy, we should follow that advice.

Fifth, we would like to improve quality and accountability and make sure that especially the cost of defensive medicine is reduced and that we know exactly what we are doing with regard to health care outcomes to make sure that we are maximizing the treatment and cures provided when a patient presents in a health care facility.

We want to increase personal responsibility, especially for many of the decisions Americans are making because we know that if they lose weight, quit smoking, and stop drinking, their health care will improve dramatically.

And, finally, we want to lower demand for more Federal borrowing at a time when the United States is already reporting that it will borrow $1.8 trillion this year. It is difficult to argue that we should turn every family's health care over to the Federal Government, an institution which is already, as the President says, "out of money."

When we look at health care across the world, we see that the percentage of patients who wait more than 2 months to see a specialist is not a dramatic issue in the United States, but this is front-page news in both Canada and the United Kingdom. According to the Commonwealth Fund International Health Policy Survey of Sicker Adults, they report that about 10 percent of Americans wait more than 2 months to see a specialist, but one-third of Britons do, and approaching half of Canadians wait a long time for health care.

We know that health care delayed is health care denied. And imagine—especially if the specialist that you need is an oncologist, someone who treats cancer—what a 42-week wait would be as compared to what we see in the United States.

Secondly, we know from asking Americans, What is the most important thing you would like to see in health care?, they say lowering the cost of their health insurance. Many in this body also say the number one priority is to expand health care coverage so that Americans who do not have health insurance can get it. I would say those two goals are very important, but the most important goal of health care is to determine whether you live or die, to make sure that, especially if you are facing health care challenges of the most severe degree, you have the greatest chance for you or a member of your family to survive. This is most clear in the case of cancer.

When you or I or a member of our family gets that terrible diagnosis from a doctor that you will be fighting cancer, the question is often asked, How much time do I have? Will I be able to survive? When we look at The Lancet, Britain's number one medical journal, they did a ground-breaking study of cancer survival rates across Europe, Canada, and the United States and found that you are more likely to survive in the United States than you are in especially European countries.

They looked at a number of different cancers. For example, prostate cancer: a 78 percent survival rate in Europe—which is fairly good—but a 99 percent survival rate if found in the United States. Bladder cancer: only 66 percent of Europeans survive bladder cancer, 81 percent of Americans. Breast cancer: 79 percent of Europeans will survive breast cancer, but 90 percent of Americans. And uterine cancer: 78 percent of Europeans will survive, but 82 percent of Americans.

Why is it that Americans are doing so much better against cancer than Europeans? Part of it is because in Canada and Europe advanced oncology medicines to fight cancer are restricted; and especially imagery to find cancer, either through x rays, MRIs or CAT scans, are much more available in the United States to find cancer, especially at its earlier stage, which means that Americans, bottom line, have a greater chance of surviving cancer than Europeans.

When we look at 5-year survival rates, overall the picture is also stark. Women fighting cancer have a 63 percent chance of surviving if they are treated in the United States. That survival rate drops to just 56 percent in Europe. For men, the difference is even starker. Sixty-six percent of American men will survive a cancer diagnosis, only 47 percent of European men.

Bottom line, once again we see, across both men and women, you are much more likely to survive cancer in the United States than in European countries. And much of the reason why is because in countries in which the government controls more of the health care sector, they restrict access to oncology medicine and to imagery. That means that cancer is found later and is fought with less aggressive drugs, meaning that Europeans will die at a higher rate than Americans.

When we look at high-tech medical procedures in Britain, Canada, and the United States, many people would say that health care costs are derived by too much access to high-tech medical care. But what we see here is that survival rates are higher in the United States, meaning high-tech is good. And the chance of your family member surviving improves when you have access to oncology medicine and MRIs.

We see the differences between Britain, Canada, and the United States most clearly here where Britain, who has had the longest record of socialized government-controlled medicine, has very low rates of providing dialysis care as opposed to the United States. In coronary bypass, we see even Canadian rates are much lower. And especially in coronary angioplasty, the United States far outdistances countries with socialized medicine, leading to higher survival rates and better outcomes for Americans over patients who face socialized medicine.

When we look at quality outcomes, this is another study showing the amount of time that you have to wait to see a specialist doctor. In this Commonwealth study, they rated the percentage of people that had to wait more than 4 weeks to see a specialist doctor. This is not a critical issue in the United States, but once again, front page news in the U.K. where we see the rate of patients that have to wait and, therefore, are denied care is three times the rate of the U.S. rate in Canada and in the United Kingdom as opposed to the U.S. And only Germany has a level somewhat equaling the U.S. record of getting you to see the specialist you need when you need to see it without a wait.

This is another chart which shows patients having very long waits. We see that in the United States, only 8 percent of Americans have to wait more than 4 months to see a key specialist, but 41 percent of people in Britain. Imagine getting a diagnosis of cancer, knowing that it is in your body, and being told that you had to wait more than 4 months before you could even see the specialist that you need to survive. This is why we are quite worried about the restrictions that would be caused and denial of care in a socialized system.

Remember also that since the U.S. Government is $1.8 trillion in debt just this year, if you give control of your health care to the government and the government is already out of money, how will it try to save money to rectify the deficit? If it's in control of your health care, it may do what the Canadians and Britons do, which is control your access to care.

I am very happy to be joined by my co-Chair of The Tuesday Group, Congressman DENT from Pennsylvania, who has been a leader on health care and has engaged in a number of these international comparisons.

Mr. DENT. Thank you, Congressman KIRK, for your leadership on health care. As you know, we have been working diligently to come up with some alternative ideas. And the chart that you have just identified in terms of cancer survivability rates as well as health care costs, I think really drives home the point that Americans all across this country understand: that we have a health care crisis, we particularly have a crisis in cost. And they understand, too, that depending on how we engage in health care reform could impact the care they receive.

Americans are concerned about medical breakthroughs, innovation, and quality. They're also concerned about the ability to get the care they need when they need it because they understand that if care is delayed, care is denied.

And you pointed out some interesting cancer survivability statistics from Canada. Interestingly enough, an anecdote: there is a member of Parliament in Canada, I believe she was a member of the Liberal Party. She is a great proponent of the Canadian health care system. And what happened is that she contracted breast cancer, and for whatever reason, she decided she needed her care in the United States. It created quite a controversy in Canada because it really spoke to the issue in Canada, which was that the Canadian system was good enough for all the Canadians, but not for this particular member of Parliament. And it spoke to the issue of two tiers of system, one for those who are in Canada, and those who, when they can't get the care that they need when they need it, they simply go south—because much of the Canadian population lives within 50 miles of the American border. So the second tier of Canadian health care can be provided across the border, and people pay top dollar.

So I think that's something that we have to talk about quite a bit as we engage in this discussion: that we understand that care delayed is care denied, that people understand that the costs are rising, and that we have to come up with solutions.

I am going to be, at some point tonight, talking about medical liability reform, why we need that. And that is a major cost driver. Defensive medicine costs have gone up significantly because of the tort system in the United States. We understand that there is just too much money being spent in the courtroom and not in the operating room. I think we all understand that.

We are also joined tonight by our friend and colleague from western Pennsylvania, TIM MURPHY, Dr. MURPHY, who has a background in psychology, and also has a great deal of interest on this issue.

At this time, I would be happy to yield to my friend and colleague from western Pennsylvania.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. I thank my friend from Pennsylvania and also thank Congressman KIRK of Illinois for putting together this important session tonight to talk about health care.

One of the concerns that comes up repeatedly when you talk about health care is the cost. And one of the things that happens, as Washington deals with it, is two approaches: one, they say health care is expensive, let's have the government pay for it, which means you raise taxes. And the other one they say, health care is expensive, let's deal with insurance issues, perhaps some tax credits, which means it's still taxes that pay for it. And I understand in both cases we are trying to lower health care cost, but neither one really gets to the root of that, and that is, dealing with some of the issues that have to do with improving the quality of health care to make it more affordable and accessible. So I would like to focus a little bit on some comments tonight that specifically address this issue of how we lower health care costs.

As part of the plan that Congressman KIRK and Congressman DENT have led here for our group in coming up with some cost savings in health care, one of them has to do with trying to make sure we are providing health care to those who are not able to afford it. We know that currently the government provides assistance for those who have a low income through Medicaid, for the elderly through Medicare, for veterans through the VA; but for those just above the level of Medicaid income, that's the group that we are really deeply concerned about because we want to make sure they get the care they need.

One thing that's also important then is to make sure they have a health care home. Those who have a doctor or a specialist they can go to when they have an illness are much more likely to have that illness treated in a timely manner to provide a cure for them. Care delayed, care denied. When we look at how Medicaid and Medicare operate, that it really sometimes takes an act of Congress to get something done, that's care delayed. Let me give you a couple of examples about how there are problems with that. Let's say you have a stroke and an ambulance takes you to a suburban hospital. Sometimes those hospitals do not have a neurologist. Many times they don't have a neurologist on staff 24/7 or a radiologist. So what happens? Wouldn't it be great—imagine a world whereby a neurologist, through telemedicine, for example, could connect up with the patient, looking at them on a video camera, the patient seeing the doctor. That doctor could be half a country away or could be 20 miles away, whatever it may be, doing the exam with the assistance of a nurse on site. Look at the signs, look at the way the patient responds, and be able to diagnose and offer, does that patient get one type of treatment, which is if there are blocked arteries in the brain leading to the stroke, or another type of treatment which might be hemorrhagic, that is, a burst artery. Each one critically different life-saving treatments. It could mean the difference between the patient who lives and dies. Also it could make a difference between the patient who has years and years of physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech therapy or one who has a shorter recovery time. Because when you have a stroke, time is brain. That would make sense if we imagined that, but Medicare doesn't cover that. Instead, it's going to take an act in Congress—I know our friend and colleague Lois Capps from California has been pushing a bill for a while to allow Medicare to do that. This is not a new idea, but we have to take an act of Congress to do this. Or how about this—if you are going to get something called home infusion therapy to provide an IV line, to provide some medical treatments to you, you could do that at home, in many cases, with insurance companies, but not necessarily with Medicare and Medicaid because they want you to go to hospital where you have to go all the way to the hospital, and your risk for problems could increase. It's also going to take an act of Congress to make it so that hospitals actually have to state what their infection and complication rates are. I always find it amazing, you can go online and you can find out, if you are shopping for a new car, everything about that car. You want to shop for clothes, you can go all over the place, checking out the quality reports, consumer reports, all those things on that. If you want to look up the records on a hospital, am I more likely to get sicker or better when I am there, you can't find out that information. As my friends know, for a number of years I put forth a bill to provide transparency in this area, whereby you could look up and find out the infection rate of a hospital. This is critically important because nosocomial infections, that is infections you pick up in a hospital or clinic, kill 100,000 people each year, cost $50 billion, and there are 2 million cases. Sadly, Senator BYRD, one of our colleagues in Congress, is right now suffering a staph infection; and many of our colleagues have had a family member who has faced the same problem. It would be nice to know, and the advantage of having that information out there is that you can look it up, and you could find out. Hospitals that have paid attention to this have actually reduced some of their infection rates to near zero. That's what we want to see, but it's going to take an act of Congress to change that.

Mr. KIRK. I think one of the key lessons that we want is, we want Americans to have health insurance as good as a Congressman, but we don't want them to have to call their Congressman to get good health care. One of the things that we've also seen is that the United States really stands out in a couple of areas that drive health care costs up. We have very little to no Federal lawsuit reform in the United States for health care, meaning that defensive medicine is the practice of the day in our country as opposed to other countries because doctors are so likely to be sued. Another is that, yes, Americans generally have a higher degree of obesity as compared to other countries. And so the Congress and the President, on a bipartisan basis I think, will have a lot of common ground in working and encouraging a reduction in weight by Americans because this will lower health care costs. One of our key experts on how lawsuits drive health care costs up is our colleague from Pennsylvania as well, Congressman DENT.

Mr. DENT. I thank the gentleman for yielding. In Pennsylvania, of course, we have been in a crisis state for some time with respect to medical liability. In fact, my colleague Tim Murphy remembers the great debates we had in Pennsylvania about the need for joint and several liability reform, to make sure that the award would be basically proportional to the degree of fault. We felt that that was something that was absolutely essential. Caps on non-economic damages, another area we were greatly in need of reform in Pennsylvania. Also the notion of a periodic payment as opposed to one big lump-sum award. One could pay those payments out over a period of time. Something that, again, was absolutely essential. In the city of Philadelphia, in particular, we had a very real crisis. In fact, at the time a group called Jury Verdict Research had done a number of studies about the jury awards and settlements coming out of the city of Philadelphia. The average jury award at that time was somewhere around $1 million. The rest of the State, on average, was a bit less than $500,000. In fact, it got so bad one year that there were more awards and payouts out of the city of Philadelphia than in the entire State of California; and the city of Philadelphia has a population of about 1.5 million people. So what we had to do was find ways to get cases out of the city of Philadelphia, out of those courts. So Congressman MURPHY and I actually passed legislation that would have essentially required the cases be heard in the county where the alleged malpractice incident occurred, and we supported it in Harrisburg. So that made complete and total sense. Consequently, we tried to pass it legislatively, but we ended up having the Supreme Court establish a rule to essentially provide that kind of a remedy. What happened is, we saw the number of cases heard in Philadelphia drop dramatically as a result of that. So that was just another example of the problems.

Also, we have many people in this country who must go to an emergency room for care. They go to the emergency room, and oftentimes emergency room physicians and staff are the subject of lawsuits. But those same physicians must provide care under Federal law, something called EMTALA; and essentially what that means is that they must provide care. So I think what we should do is provide medical liability relief to those emergency room physicians by treating them as Federal employees, not that they're going to be on the Federal payroll. But for tort purposes, in the Federal Tort Claims Act, they would be relieved from those types of lawsuits. Because we've had situations across this country where trauma rooms have been forced to close down. It's dramatic. We also had a situation where we met an obstetrician recently from one of the hospitals in the city of Philadelphia who actually said, The only reason why we deliver babies is to train our students. We lose money. There are many doctors who choose not to deliver babies these days because of liability. And in Philadelphia I know one hospital, I think it was Methodist Hospital, stopped delivering babies. One of the teaching institutions only delivers just so that they can train their residents. They lose money, and it's very costly to them. But they do it as a service and as a way of training physicians. But that's a very sad state of affairs when we can't deliver babies because of the high costs.

Mr. KIRK. I think the gentleman's point is well taken, especially in comparing two States and the average premium for health care in these two States. In New Jersey, the average premium totals over $6,000 per person, a State that has very little lawsuit reform; and a number of the other reforms that we are talking about in our reform bill that we will be outlining next Tuesday from the GOP centrists are not there in New Jersey. In California, a number of the successful reforms that we've put forward are there; and the average cost of our premium is just $1,885, meaning that if you back the kind of reforms that will be in the outline bill that we put forward next Tuesday, you can drop the cost of health care by thousands of dollars per patient.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. As an important part of this, we're trying to drive the point that the losses themselves do not guarantee quality. But it's quality that is very important. I believe you have a chart up there about some tests and procedures. I wonder if you could explain and comment on them a little bit.

Mr. KIRK. When we're looking at preventive care, which is so essential, in many countries with government-controlled systems, because these systems are generally out of money, as governments generally are, they have restricted access to preventive care. So particularly in a Pap smear and a mammogram, two essential procedures in finding cancer in women early, we see that 89 percent of American women will have had a Pap smear within the last 3 years, but only 77 percent of Britons. In a mammogram as well, American women are 86 percent, whereas women in the United Kingdom are 77 percent. All of these major industrialized powers, allies of the United States, have much lower access to care, even though they have government systems.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. That brings up an important point of how in the U.S. system we handle such things as dealing with breast cancer and cervical cancer. One of the sad stories in this country is, more often than is necessarily believed, the U.S. handles lumps, et cetera, by providing mastectomies to women. Other countries may not do that. In part, it may be that the tests come much lower, are much more difficult to get in other countries; but it also brings up the other point. We need to make sure that physicians are empowered to provide that ongoing primary care so they can monitor the patients, get the tests they need. Unfortunately we have a system that pays for quantity, not quality; that pays for defensive medicine, not really working on prevention.

Let me read you an important quote. This comes from the New Yorker magazine, an article entitled The Cost Conundrum by Atul Gawande. It's about Texas towns. It says that between 2001 and 2005, critically ill Medicare patients received almost 50 percent more specialist visits in McAllen, Texas, than in El Paso and were two-thirds more likely to see 10 or more specialists in a 6-month period. Why? It was a different approach to care and, that is, providing more care, providing more surgical procedures, et cetera, doing more tests that were not necessarily warranted. You have another area, like where the Mayo Clinic is up in Rochester, Minnesota, where that dominates the scene. They have fantastically high levels of all this technological capability and quality; but its Medicare spending is in the lowest 15 percent in the country, $6,000 per enrollee in 2006, which is $8,000 less than the figure from McAllen, Texas. I bring that up to say that in the U.S., it is a part of what you are describing that patients need access to these tests in a timely manner, number one; but number two, we also need to make sure the physicians and nurses and all medical specialists are getting the information they need to make sure the quality is what we're driving here. When you are dealing with just issues of insurance or just issues of defensive medicine, you are not necessarily driving quality. You are driving more tests.

Mr. KIRK. One of the other things that we've been concerned about is the increasing price of medical malpractice insurance in the United States. Especially if you look between 2000 and 2002 for obstetricians and gynecologists, for physicians, for internists in general, you've got an explosion in the cost of buying insurance. We do not have 30 percent more malpractice in America in just 2 years, but what we may have is a 30 percent greater chance of being sued in America, the most litigious society on earth. All of this drives health care costs up, as physicians have to cover the cost of malpractice insurance and, of course, over-prescribe tests and other procedures.

Mr. DENT. I would like to get in a few statistics about this. This is a very interesting and pertinent subject, this whole discussion of the cost of health care and why it's rising. Defensive medicine costs the U.S. as much as $126 billion per year. That was out of a 2003 HHS study. One-third of the orthopedists, obstetricians, trauma surgeons, emergency room doctors and plastic surgeons can expect to be sued in any given year. The data for 2006 shows 71 percent of the medical liability cases are dropped or dismissed. Only 1 percent of the cases result in a verdict.

Mr. KIRK. So 71 percent are dropped, but a payment is still made because it's a settlement, and that's going to drive up insurance rates anyway.

Mr. DENT. And the physicians and hospitals have to hire attorneys to defend themselves. So there's a lot of time, effort and money expended just to prepare and fight this battle, only to have it dropped. So there is still a cost incurred even though the case is dropped.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. Another issue with regard to this bill we've introduced has to do with allowing doctors to volunteer their services. And here is something that only the United States would mess up in our government. Community health centers, which provide great health care at home for people with lots of different services from primary medical care, dental, mental health, pediatric care, et cetera. But they are strapped for money. In many cases they have a 15 to 20 percent shortage of family physicians, OB/GYNs, et cetera. The doctors are covered under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The Federal Government handles their malpractice at a lower cost for them. But if a doctor wants to volunteer, they're not covered. Basically if a doctor says, I would like to give my time to work a couple days a month, offer my time on a volunteer basis, the clinic has to turn them away because they cannot afford the full price of their malpractice insurance. It is the opposite in a free clinic, where if a doctor is paid, they have to cover their own insurance. But if they volunteer, they are covered under the Federal Tort Claims Act.

We have a bill we've been trying to get in for a number of years to allow doctors to volunteer. The advantages people have at health care home, it is a much lower cost. It even reduces the cost for Medicaid patients to go there by some 30 percent, and it focuses on getting the doctor near the patient and the patient near the doctor and eliminating any incentive of defensive medicine, any incentive to do lots and lots of tests just to make up for the losses.

Mr. DENT. Before we get on to our next topic, I just want to mention one thing. What's the point of this whole discussion? I was talking about the rising costs. But in Philadelphia, premiums rose 221 percent for OB/GYNs in the city of Philadelphia. That is between 2000 and 2008. Premiums rose 149 percent for general surgeons in New Jersey. Premiums rose 348 percent for internists in Connecticut over that 2000–2008 period.

Mr. KIRK. But does it mean though that doctors in Connecticut were 300 percent worse 2 years later?

The point is, this drives up costs, not just in terms of the liability payments that the doctors and the hospitals must incur, and many physicians are now working in hospital-based practices in part because they can't afford liability insurance, so the hospital must pick up that bill and they are struggling to make these payments.

The point is, it raises costs not just for the doctors and the hospitals, but the tests that are going to be prescribed and administered and treatments perhaps proposed just to protect themselves. This will drive costs up. They are protecting themselves against lawsuits.

What is the other issue? Access to care is a consequence, that there will be less access, that doctors won't deliver babies in the city of Philadelphia. That means people don't have access to an OB. That is important. I think that is the point. It drives up costs and it limits access, and Americans want access to health care and need the care when they must get it.

Mr. KIRK. The bill that we are going to be putting forward by the centrists on Tuesday has a number of liability reform provisions authored by Congressman DENT, and community health center and volunteer liability provisions authored by Congressman MURPHY.

One of the things we talk about is access to care. A critical issue coming up is the uninsured. Now, the Census Bureau indicates that there are about 45.7 million, about 46 million people in the country who are lacking insurance. Of those, about 9.5 million are non-citizens, and the question we have to ask is, should we provide taxpayer-funded care to those people who are not legally present in the United States?

About 12 million of the currently uninsured are already eligible for public programs. Because of lifestyle or because of their choice, they haven't even signed up for the health care that the government already will provide them. About 7.3 million have higher incomes than most Americans. They make over $84,000 a year. And about 9 million are only temporarily uninsured.

As you can see here from an older chart showing 49 million uninsured, a large number of the uninsured were uninsured temporarily, only 5 months, and another 25 percent were uninsured for only 6 months, leaving about 53 percent of this cohort uninsured for a long time, a group we all agree should be addressed.

When you take 45.7 million people uninsured, remove the noncitizens, remove the people who haven't signed up for the government programs they have already been eligible for, remove people who have higher incomes than most Americans and should buy it anyway, and remove the temporarily uninsured, you get down to a number of only 7.8 million. But this might not be a big enough number for a government takeover.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will yield, one of the interesting demographics with respect to the uninsured population, I think we really need to focus on this like a laser beam. Over half, I believe, 55 percent of the people lacking coverage in America are under the age of 35. Many of them are insurable. Those college-age kids up to age 35, they tend to be more insurable than much of the rest of the population.

So I believe we do have some suggestions and proposals as a way to cover that population, get them into an affordable catastrophic coverage that they will need in the event that something dramatic happens in their life where they need that kind of coverage. I would like to talk about that a little later. But that is another statistic I don't think we talk enough about.

Also, there are a large number of people uninsured who are currently eligible for programs, whether they be Medicaid or the Children's Health Insurance Program.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield. As you know, many of those younger folks you are talking about consider themselves to be the invulnerables. They don't need insurance, they are never going to get sick. The problem becomes one that when they don't do that and they do get sick and they do end up in the emergency room, we pay for it. It is important that we remove any barriers and provide every encouragement and incentive for them to purchase that insurance that many times the employer does offer.

Mr. KIRK. I want to just point out, and I do want to go on to expanding health care insurance, we find for many small businesses they lack health insurance for their employees, and we ought to allow small businesses to join together. For example, the Libertyville Chamber of Commerce Association Health Plan is right now prohibited under Federal law. We should allow small businesses to band together to create large insurance pools on their own, because we know half of all Americans work for small businesses, and many don't have a plan through their employer, and that will be included in our legislation.

Mr. DENT. And that is a very important point. You know, there are so many people out there who need coverage, and there are so many things we can do to help. You just mentioned the idea of allowing employers to reach across State lines and realize greater discounts. That is critical.

But the other issue, too, to help the uninsured, we know that employers receive favorable tax treatment. They get a tax exclusion that is very beneficial to helping them provide health care coverage to their employees. That is a good thing. We want to protect that. There are about 165 million Americans that have health care through their employers in many respects, and what we should do is give the individual who lacks insurance, if his employer cannot provide it to them or if they are self-employed or on their own, give them the opportunity to buy health insurance and give the same kind of favorable tax treatment to the individual that we currently give to the business. That would do a lot to help cover particularly that younger population that is relatively healthy and insurable.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. In addition to that, it has to do with how they purchase it. The Federal Government recognizes that if we allow people of low income to pool together they can negotiate better prices. The VA does this all the time. They combine the purchasing power of the VA to purchase for veterans across the Nation. Yet we don't let individuals do that.

We don't let a small business that only has half a dozen employees or 20 or 50 employees to join other businesses of the same type, and that wall placed by insurance companies and by the government leads to higher costs. We ought to allow businesses to do the same thing the Federal Government does and use that as a mechanism to drive down costs substantially.

Mr. KIRK. One of the things that you have put forward, Congressman MURPHY, is the need for public health clinics, et cetera. I think that puts forward a critical point right now missing in the debate.

We know that of the uninsured, by this estimate 44.7 million, of the uninsured, currently 14.7 million are already eligible for public coverage.

Mr. DENT. That would be Medicaid and SCHIP.

Mr. KIRK. That is right, Medicaid, SCHIP and other State programs. But as we found in the State of Massachusetts, when a mandate that everyone has to buy health insurance is put forward, what they have generally found is that a technical and legal solution is not adequate.

They thought that by putting a health insurance signup machine at the entrance of every emergency room in the State they would register and collect the required number of people who hadn't yet signed up for the public assistance that they were eligible for.

What they found is, for a small percentage of the most difficult patients, either because of alcohol, drug abuse or law enforcement problems, these patients were not registering under similar names, not registering under similar addresses, and were failing to report for appointments and other preventive care, meaning for that very small percentage of Americans, we need to provide an open public clinic.

It is the much-more appropriate health delivery system than an insurance system, because for this small group of Americans we have different names, different addresses and different lifestyles, and yet we still want to provide care. But having a 100 percent insurance mandate didn't do it. You needed to do it through a public health clinic.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. And as you described, it brings the thought too that in addition to people having this hodgepodge of how disjointed a difficult system that does not allow individuals or employers to purchase insurance is, we oftentimes look upon other solutions and think, well, they are not purchasing it for other reasons, and we artificially keep those things high, and we keep a system that also incentivizes lots of tests, we incentivize a system that is really dysfunctional.

In that I bring to my colleagues' attention an article published by the New England Health Care Institute that said out of this $2.4 trillion health care system, this Nation wastes about $700 billion a year, and all these inefficiencies have to do with care delivery, even beyond that of what we are talking about here, with the tax, the incentives, the insurance and barriers we set up too.

Mr. KIRK. One of the things that we want to make sure is sometimes in this debate when you hear about the uninsured, you may have the impression that the Federal Government doesn't spend any money already providing health care to low-income and needy Americans.

As this chart, already somewhat outdated from 2004 shows, it is a total of almost $35 billion in assistance given to cover the uninsured. But one of the problems has been that some of the patients directly eligible for these government programs don't sign up.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman, Mr. KIRK from Illinois, pointed out an interesting point. He mentioned the Massachusetts health care experiment. What they did in Massachusetts, they had a universal mandate for coverage, but they did not do anything to deal with the cost issue.

So what happened in Massachusetts is while the numbers of those who were being provided coverage through the various programs in Massachusetts through the mandates, those costs rose, but the ability of the taxpayers to meet those rising costs, of course, was limited. So what does the government do? It restricts care, it denies treatment, it denies service, it rations care. That is sort of a microcosm in Massachusetts of what happens in perhaps some other Western European countries or perhaps even Canada.

I am not here to either praise or condemn those systems in Western Europe and the United Kingdom or in Canada or anywhere else. They are different systems. And people need to understand that what happens in those systems when the costs continue to rise for health care and there aren't the tax dollars to meet those costs, they deny care. I think we all know that people are concerned about cures and not treatments. They want to be treated like human beings and not numbers.

Unfortunately, that can happen in those systems where you have a single-payer system. You take a number, wait for your dialysis, wait for your hip replacement, if you can wait that long. If you are a Canadian, if you have the money, you come across the border and get the care you need when you need it. We need to have this very sober discussion.

Mr. KIRK. By the way, the gentleman points out Canada, a country that has basically a two-tier health care system, the Canadian health care system, and then when you are denied care, which is especially prevalent in any care needing advanced imagery or new oncology medicines to fight cancer, the relief valve is they come to the United States. Some Canadian doctors call it "Fargo-ing a patient," meaning when a patient is denied care or care is going to be tremendously delayed under the Canadian system, they will then refer that patient to Fargo, North Dakota, where they will immediately get care under the U.S. system.

The concern I have though is if we have the government take over health care, where will we be able to drive? Where will we be able to go? That is why in our legislation that we will be outlining on Tuesday, it includes the Medical Rights Act, and the Medical Rights Act says this: We guarantee the right of patients to carry out the decisions of their doctors without delay or denial of care by the government.

The legislation protects the right of each American to receive medical services as deemed appropriate by their doctor.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. Let me add to that. That is a great base to be moving from that what they do there does need to be these basic rights outlined, because we have a system that stands with huge barriers between doctor and patient and much of that barrier is the government.

The government through Medicare and Medicaid, for example, handles cost controls by delaying care, by denying care and by denying or diminishing payment. So physicians and hospitals that are paid, for example, 30 or 40 percent less for Medicare services, or saying you are not allowed to do these other tests, we are not going to pay for it, end up promoting a situation that is more based on quantity than quality, and that actually increases many costs and increases the chances for fraud and abuse. In Pennsylvania, there was news in the paper of just millions of dollars again of abuse in this system.

What is so important is if you have the patient and the doctor in charge of their care, you incentivize quality, you make sure the doctor has timely information through electronic medical records, et cetera. Those are important things which we are not doing yet as part of this.

But then you look at other clinics, you look at a Mayo Clinic, you look at the Geisinger Plan, you look at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center, ones that have really focused on. We are going to change the quality and delivery of care and focus on outcome—you actually see those costs go down. That is part of the focus we need to have.

With that, I yield back to my colleague.

Mr. KIRK. Let me just follow up. I want to talk about some of the solutions we are going to put forward, because what is lost sometimes in this debate is we agree with the President that we should lower costs. We agree with the President that we should expand health care. But we think we have a better way.

Many times in partisan debate people can say that we have no alternative. So we have spent about 90 percent of our time coming up with that alternative. We want to make sure that we guarantee the rights of each patient in the doctor-patient relationship so that you or a loved one in your family is allowed to carry out the decisions made by you and your doctor and not be interfered with by a government bureaucracy.

Also though we are focusing in our legislation coming up on lowering the cost of insurance through alliances, through equalizing the tax benefit for individuals so they get the same benefit that employers get when they buy health insurance, and obviously what we have talked about here, lawsuit reform.

Mr. DENT. That was the point I made a few moments earlier about equalizing the tax treatment. That is a point we are stating; that the 165 million Americans—I think that is about 60 percent of our population—has insurance through their employers, but those individuals who cannot afford insurance, and there are a lot of them out there, unfortunately, cannot afford their insurance, but they get no favorable tax treatment themselves. Their employer receives it, as they should, that treatment, but the employee, the worker or the self-employed individual should get that same favorable treatment.

That is a way to really help particularly the younger population, some of whom have some capacity to purchase insurance. They may be relatively healthy, but they choose not to purchase it. Some use the term “the invincibles.” Obviously they are not. But they need insurance, and we can help that population afford a reasonable, comprehensive plan.

And that’s one of the major parts of the reform that you and I have worked on. And I think we can do this in a bipartisan manner. I think there are plenty of people in this room, on both sides of the aisle, that would be willing to vote for this type of commonsense reform that’s going to help people get access to care and coverage.

Mr. KIRK. And here’s what we’ve been working on. We want to equalize the benefit so that if you buy your own insurance, you get the same tax benefit that an employer gets when it buys for employees.

But here’s what I’m concerned about. There are ideas building in strength now, in the Congress and downtown, that talk about cutting the tax benefit that employers get for providing health insurance to their employees.

One study by the Llewellyn Group says that if that tax break that employers get for providing care to their employees is cut, 100 million Americans will lose their health insurance. And so a health reform bill, ironically, will cut the number of Americans who have their own insurance from 170 million to 70 million.

Our bill, our positive alternative, goes in exactly the opposite direction. We’re enhancing employer-provided coverage and making sure that it’s more available.

But I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. That’s an astounding statistic from the Llewellyn Group. When you talk about 100 million Americans potentially losing their health care, where will they go to get it? That’s really the issue. So that employer exclusion, that favorable tax treatment is absolutely essential to making sure that many Americans are able to maintain their coverage. And that’s the first thing we have to protect in this whole discussion. We have to protect that first.

And some of the proposals that are floating around this capital, as you correctly pointed out, would either eliminate that exclusion or severely limit it as a way to finance whatever kind of program they’re advancing. And this is big money.

So I just wanted to share that with the American people, make sure they understand that that seems to be the primary funding mechanism that many are looking at to finance whatever kind of health care system would be proposed, whether it’s a government option or some other proposal, single-payer. That’s something to be concerned about.

Mr. KIRK. That’s what we worry about. They’re talking about maybe a $1 trillion cost of a government plan. And so the most obvious response with such a cost is a huge income tax increase, but we know most Americans oppose that.

Some, including Ezekiel Emanuel, one of the heads of the President’s advisory committee, has talked about a national sales tax on top of the other tax, but I think there’s significant opposition to that. So they’ve talked about cutting back on the tax benefit that employers get when they provide health care to their employees, but by this estimate, it could cost over 100 million Americans their health insurance.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. As that goes, when we look at the government running a plan that costs $1 trillion, that’s several hundred billion more than the Pentagon. And I’m not sure that people would say the Pentagon, for all the pride we have of all our soldiers, our sailors, our airmen and marines, I doubt that people would say that’s the model of economic efficiency.

Would they say that Social Security run by the Federal Government is the best investment system? Would they—I mean, pick a system that the Federal Government runs, and it’s hardly seen as the best. We know we have a lot of dedicated employees there, but oftentimes they are saddled and handcuffed by regulations.

We have a system that is still, after all these years, Medicaid, that has been around since the 1960s, so fraught with inefficiency that it invites waste, fraud and abuse. It has not been revamped.

An article that appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine a couple of weeks ago by Victor R. Fuchs was saying we’ve got to fix this system first; otherwise—and I go back to this article from the New Yorker. It says this: Providing health care is like building a house. The task requires experts, expensive equipment and materials, and a huge amount of coordination. Imagine that, instead of paying a contractor to pull a team together and keep them on track, you paid an electrician for every outlet he recommends, a plumber for every faucet and a carpenter for every cabinet. Would you be surprised if you got a house with 1,000 outlets, faucets and cabinets at three times the cost you expected, and the whole thing fell apart a couple of years later?

That’s where we are with our health care system. It must be focused on quality and on outcome. And I worry that if we have a government-run system and this bureaucracy created, it’s going to be a matter between you and your doctor and this Congress. To get anything done, it’s going to take an act of Congress or bureaucracy. That’s going to be such a huge cost on top that all the people will say, well, it’s going to be less involved with regard to administrative cost. I don’t see how that is possible, given the track record we have.

Mr. KIRK. If the gentleman will yield, we also not only see other examples of the government poorly running the bureaucracies that it already has taken over, but recently the government took over the largest bond dealer, Bear Stearns. The government has taken over the largest insurance company, the American International Group, and the government has taken over the largest car manufacturer, GM. And I don’t think that any of us would argue that the government is running it better in their current states.

Mr. DENT. And if the gentleman would yield, to follow up on that point you were just making about government ownership and autos and financial services and elsewhere, let’s talk a moment about health care. And there’s an idea being floated about called a government option, which needs to be, I think, fully understood and vetted before the public. But that government option many fear may become the only option for insurance because a government option coverage perhaps would be able to offer it at a much lower cost than any kind of a private sector insurance product. And the fear is that you would have a backdoor government takeover of our health system through this government option, a very real concern.

And again, I just don’t think that we should lose sight of the fact that if we—this turns into a backdoor, single-payer system or a government takeover of health care, what will soon follow will be rationed care, that is, waiting lines, delays, denials of care.

Mr. KIRK. I want to emphasize the point the gentleman raises. Not only, if we create a government health care program, will it compete and may be the lowest cost option because it has a taxpayer subsidy, but that taxpayer subsidy may be paid for by ending some of the tax break that employers have in providing health care to their employees.

Mr. DENT. 165 million Americans.

Mr. KIRK. Right. And so, employers seeing that they don’t get a tax break anymore for giving health care to their employees will simply cancel your health insurance program, and then the government will be your only option.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. As this goes, I mean, I believe the government does have a role in terms of providing regulations, standards of clinical excellence, and pushing companies toward this constantly. Provide the oversight that says, if you're going to be spending the taxpayers' money on Medicaid, Medicare and the VA, we want to see quality measures.

So, if the Federal Government's going to put up money for electronic medical records, to say we need to see you driving constantly towards interoperability, towards intelligence systems, towards integrated systems, towards ones that are highly interactive with the physician. If the Federal Government can play a role in pushing people towards higher quality, I worry if the Federal Government is the prime owner of this, will the Federal Government, itself, push things towards that, and that's where I have trouble reckoning that.

Mr. KIRK. I am going to keep this on the positive side because what we're doing is we're putting together a positive alternative. And one of the other reforms that we will be outlining is to dramatically expand the number of Americans who can have a health savings account, very much like an IRA, so that they can save, especially in their younger, more healthy years, in a tax deferred account that they will use to make up for their deductible expenses and their health insurance.

Over time, as with our IRAs, an account balance will build up. And then, if each of us reaches the age of Medicare, at 65, with a balance in that account, that account either can become part of our retirement plan or eventually a part of our estate to our children.

This is a much more flexible way of providing health care and, more importantly, it's owned by you, not by a government bureaucracy.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. Well said. And I think we should focus on solutions. We've talked a lot about the challenges and the problems and the costs, but it does come down to solutions. And I think to sum up what we've been talking about tonight in terms of our solutions, you, Congressman KIRK, have been a great leader on the Medical Rights Act. And to make sure that that sacred relationship between doctor and patient is not violated, we have to protect that principle, and that notion must be protected up front.

As we lower the cost of insurance, we've talked about some ideas about making sure that businesses can reach across State lines, they can reach across State lines, realize greater discounts so they can provide more affordable coverage to their employees. That's a cost issue.

Medical liability reform, and we've given some specific examples of things we can do on medical liability reform to help lower the cost of care. Absolutely critical.

We want the States to be innovative. We want them to be innovative. And many States, I believe 34 States, have high risk pools, some of which work reasonably well, and others are not very effective. And so how can we help States innovate, to provide ways to make sure people receive coverage, particularly that uninsured population I think we're all generally concerned about. That's that population that is chronically uninsured, and maybe it's about 10 million people. I don't have the statistics in front of me, but somewhere around 10 million people are chronically uninsured. They're not that under-35 population, but people who really need help and may have a preexisting condition that prevents them from getting picked up. Or a person, right now, let's face it, a lot of people are more—what they're afraid of more than losing their jobs is losing their health care coverage. And I think we have to make sure that we take care of that population, uninsured who have a preexisting condition. We need to help them, particularly if they're high risk. And that's where we can use the States, I think, to be very, very innovative.

And the other thing that we have to talk about too, and we don't talk enough about it, but I think people want to see medical breakthroughs in the United States. They want quality and they want innovation, and they don't want an average system.

And I've always been struck. I visited the country of Ecuador once with my family a few years ago, and I was struck. The tour guide was telling me about their national system, and then we drove by the hospitals. They're right next to each other, the public hospital and the private hospital, and you could tell which was which visually. The private hospital looked like a hotel, a very inviting place. The public hospital, unfortunately, looked like a building that was somewhat dilapidated. And that's what just frightened me, two tiers of care. Now, this is a Latin American country. Some might call it a third world country. But nevertheless, that's what I saw, and I would never want to see that happen in America.

Mr. KIRK. If the gentleman would yield. What you heard tonight is focusing on positive outcomes, making sure we reform health care, less defensive medicine, deploy health information technology, health individual savings accounts.

We have spent far less time criticizing the President and far more time outlining a new positive agenda. But to close tonight, I'd like to turn to Dr. MURPHY, who's been more in the health care system than all of us, to finish us out.

Mr. TIM MURPHY of Pennsylvania. When I look at this, I want Americans and all of us to imagine a system that's based upon cures and based upon outcome, a system where doctors are in charge of your health care, not insurance companies, not the government. And I know that both sides of the aisle are deeply concerned about this. It is not that one side or the other wants insurance companies or the government to win. We all want patients to win, Democrats and Republicans alike. But we must have a system that's focused upon this, not that creates incentives because we're paying people so low to do more and more tests, not to promote more and more medical procedures, but to really focus on this outcome. We can do this through these things we're doing, the patient and doctor in charge. Don't create more barriers. Make sure we have all the efficiency there for quality. We can do those things. Imagine what can happen. Imagine the possibilities. And let's just not throw it out and say it's too difficult; let the government run it.

With that, I yield back to my colleague, Congressman DENT.

Mr. DENT. Just in conclusion, I just think we want to say a few things. I think in our health care system we certainly want our system to be focused on prevention, not maintenance. We want cures, not treatments. The system should be about doctors, not lawyers. We want patients to be treated like they want to be treated, like human beings. They want to be treated like people and not some number, something abstract. They want to be treated like a human being.

And so, because at the end of the day, we all want our loved ones to be cared for. You don't want them to have to wait. You don't want to see your mother, like mine, who's 80 years old be told that she's contributed her whole life, relatively healthy, we don't want to tell her, I'm sorry, we're going to discard you now that you've reached a certain age. That's what we are concerned about.

So we're going to try to work, I think, in a bipartisan manner, try to work in a way that embraces a lot of ideas that we can all share. And short of a government takeover of our system, I think we can do that. We have the capacity to do it. The American people expect it of us, and I look forward to working with all my colleagues to come to that kind of result.

Mr. KIRK. I thank the gentleman, and we will be outlining a positive set of reforms that we think can attract tremendous bipartisan support this Tuesday, from the centrists.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, today, President Obama is in my home state of Wisconsin conducting a town hall meeting to promote his health care agenda.

I know that the residents of my home state will tell him that they are struggling to keep up with the rising cost of their health care premiums, while others are simply unable to afford health care coverage.

Many people in my state have lost their jobs and fear that they won't be able to afford their children's medication or that an unforeseen illness will bankrupt them.

Some individuals who have insurance are simply staying in a job they don't like because their next job may not offer health care insurance.

Others who are happy with their insurance worry that any drastic reform will force them into a system that will limit their choice of doctor or access to medical treatment.

I agree with the President that it is time to fix the health care system in the United States so that all Americans, all my constituents, have access to quality affordable health care coverage.

However, I strongly believe that any reform that we consider in the House must be based on a few important principles.

First, it must give everyone access to quality and affordable health care.

All individuals should have the freedom to choose the health plan that best meets their needs.

Second, any reform should ensure a patient centered system.

Patients in consultation with their doctors should be in control of their health care decisions and not government bureaucrats or insurance agents.

If your child or parent is sick, you should have access to timely tests and treatments and not subject to waiting lists or treatment decisions dependent on anyone other than you and your doctor.

Third, our health care system must emphasize prevention and wellness.

Chronic diseases account for 75 percent of our nation's medical costs. By implementing programs focused on preventing such things as smoking and obesity-related diseases, we will not only save lives, but reduce health care costs.

And lastly, any reform needs to focus on getting rid of the waste, fraud and abuse that plagues our current system. Approximately $60 billion is lost due to fraud in the Medicare program alone. We can't afford to multiply that number through a government takeover of our entire health care system.

Our health care system needs to prioritize efficiency, transparency, and results.

I look forward to working with Members of both parties to ensure that these principles guide any legislation we will consider in the future.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my Special Order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BRIGHT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. SCHWARTZ) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Ms. SCHWARTZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to begin what I hope will be a Special Order time with my colleagues. It's a little earlier than we thought, so we're going to see as they make their way to the floor. Hopefully they will be joining me.

But, as you know, there has been a great deal of discussion about health care reform. We just heard a Special Order now from my colleagues on the other side of the aisle talking about health care reform and some of their thoughts about it, and I think sometimes we focus very much on controversial issues and some of the difficult decisions we have to make as we move forward, and let me start with what we're trying to do on health care reform, on this.

What we want to talk about tonight is some of the very important work we want to do as we really meet the President's goals.

He has laid out to us the goals for health care reform, and they are really threefold. They are to make sure that we contain costs. The fact is that our businesses have said to us that the high cost of health coverage, providing health benefits for their employees, has gone up almost double digits every year. And what that really means is that we have doubled the cost of health care benefits to our companies in the last 10 years. That's unsustainable for our businesses, whether they are small businesses that are trying to be economically competitive in their communities or very large businesses that are really functioning on the global marketplace and really competing with companies that are in countries where health care is not an individual employer's responsibility and where costs are more controlled. So we know it's an economic competitive issue. There's no question about that.

We also know that it is an issue for government. I serve on the Budget Committee. The costs, and we talk about this, for Medicare is really unsustainable if we don't do a better job of containing costs and improving quality and improving outcomes for our seniors. We're going to talk more about that this evening.

But we also know that it's a huge problem for our families. We hear all the time from our constituents about families that have break in coverage and then suddenly find themselves faced with buying a family policy with a preexisting condition, someone in their family with a preexisting condition, and the cost of that policy, if they can find one, is too high for them to be able to afford.

Typically, I know in the Philadelphia area, a decent insurance policy costs anywhere from $12,000 to $15,000 a year.

Well, a family that's earning even $50,000, $60,000 a year, after paying their mortgage and paying their expenses and maybe trying to save something for their children to go to college and meeting all the taxes, local and State, really just don't have those kinds of dollars left for them to find $12,000 to buy a decent policy. So they're shut out, completely shut out, which is really a very significant problem when they want to go for health coverage. So we know cost is absolutely a major issue for our businesses, for our families, and for our government.

So what can we do about it? How can we actually ensure that we will contain costs and improve quality and also be able to extend coverage for the 47, almost 48, million Americans who do not have ongoing health insurance coverage? And the fact is we can do numbers of things, and we have been working hard on this to make sure that we create the kind of market reforms that will enable people to buy meaningful coverage that is affordable for them and that they will have the kind of coverage that will really matter.

We also know that we need to make some real changes in the delivery system. And, again, that's what we are hoping to focus on tonight. And what I mean by that, if for all of us who go to see doctors and nurses and spend time at all in a doctor's office either for ourselves or for our loved ones, we know, and our numbers bear this out, that, in fact, we tend to go to more specialists. We have very fragmented care. What we don't have is access to a primary care provider who knows us, who follows us, works with us when we get a serious disease, helps us know what it is that we need to be doing, helps us comply with recommendations, and really also helps us sort through if we need to see numbers of specialists.

So whether you are basically fairly healthy or have a major health care crisis or a chronic disease, we know that we cannot only get better quality care, help improve health status for all of us and each of us, but also contain costs.

And I'm happy to give you some of the numbers that we have in terms of some of the primary care shortages. We often talk about primary care physicians, but the fact is we also have a shortage of nurses, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, and so many of the health care providers that really should be there for us and want to be there for us but there is simply not enough of them.

The Council on Physician and Nurse Supply says the United States may lack as many as 200,000 needed physicians by 2020. So here we are saying that we want you to go see the primary care physician or nurse practitioner. We don't want to go to the emergency room. Look at the Massachusetts experience where they really worked very hard and effectively to extend coverage to the uninsured. What they found was people were still going to the emergency room because there simply were not enough primary care providers or clinics or community health centers in their communities for them to go to.

Let me go on with some other numbers, if I may. They estimate that there could be a shortage of 800,000 nurses by 2020; 46,000 of those physicians and nurses need to be primary care providers. The U.S. population rose 31 percent between 1980 and 2003, but the number of medical school graduates remained the same. So the population is growing. We're looking at a 30 percent growth in population, and the number of physicians is the same. And what is so interesting about that is I think for a long time we've heard we have enough physicians but they're just not in the right place. Well, I think we've gotten that a little bit wrong. There are simply not enough primary care practitioners, physicians, or other practitioners.

Interestingly, the number of medical students who are choosing primary care is steadily declining. Even amongst those who are specializing in internal medicine, I will say that in 1985, half of all internal medicine residents chose primary care; now only 20 percent do.

I was at a press conference this morning with Congresswoman KATHY CASTOR and Congressman JOHN SARBANES and a young woman who has just graduated from osteopathic school. And she talked about the statistics, and she said that most medical school graduates graduate with almost $200,000 in debt. Their first job as a resident, and still training actually, is usually paid about $40,000. So how do you train for another 3 or 4 years, make $40,000 a year, and pay $200,000? That's just medical school. You may have a course debt from college as well. So it is a major issue going forward to make sure that we have more primary care physicians.

Older Americans also are seeking primary care services twice as often as other age groups. So as the population is aging, and we know the baby boomers are coming, and we are talking about them, of course, in terms of Social Security, but the fact is we know that as we are aging and needing more health services, it is very, very important for us to have access to primary care providers.

Let me also talk about one of the reasons we need primary care providers, and that is all of us, but particularly those with chronic conditions. We think about needing health care when we get sick and have an episodic experience where we might need to go to the hospital and might need to see a physician, might even end up in the emergency room. But for many people, they have chronic conditions, and they need to have an ongoing relationship with health care providers so that they can get the kind of care they need, get the advice, get the right prescriptions, and then be able to work with their medical practitioners to be able to comply with that advice and to be able to make sure that they are healthy. And the number out there is that only 50 percent of Americans who do get health care comply with the recommended health care that they're told to comply with. So obviously we need some work here.

This is a shared responsibility. This is not only a responsibility of those who pay for health services and are reimbursed for health services and those providers but, of course, for patients as well.

So let me just say on chronic conditions, some of these numbers may surprise us. But the five most costly chronic conditions are cardiovascular disease, cancer, diabetes, asthma, and mental health disorders. Over 133 million Americans suffer from at least one of these chronic diseases, and over 75 percent of all Medicare expenditures can be attributed to patients with five or more chronic conditions. Just 10 years ago, these beneficiaries accounted for only 50 percent of the Medicare costs.

So something's wrong. We have to fix this problem. We have to make sure that people can hopefully prevent some of these chronic disease. We might be able to do that in a number of ways. I know there's a lot of discussion about wellness programs for prevention. We have seen some very good models. Particularly some of the larger employers, smaller employers, some of the insurance companies are really working hard to try to incentivize people to eat right, to exercise to be able to prevent some of these conditions and some of these conditions from worsening. But clearly we have a long way to go and we have much work to do to make sure we, again, help folks with chronic diseases be able to be healthier, to get better, to not have the disease get any worse. And, of course, in that process it will save them money and it will save all of us the high cost of taking care of patients.

Any of us who has ever visited a renal dialysis center knows that if we can do more to make sure that somebody who, for example, is diagnosed early as a diabetic follows the prescribed treatment, does try to eat right, exercise, really takes care of themselves, and gets good consistent health care and can prevent themselves from becoming more seriously ill and, of course, going into any kind of renal failure and needing renal dialysis is something that would save them many problems and would save us all a lot of the costs involved.

conditions cost American businesses nearly $1 trillion each year in lost productivity. We don't even think about the number of dollars that are lost as workers take time off for serious illnesses. About $125 billion of this is due to lost workdays, and the balance is due to diminished capacity while they are at work. So for businesses it's not only the cost of the insurance and the benefits, but it's also a cost when their own workers are not being able to really work at the full scale of their potential and their capacity.

So we know that we can do more. Economic conditions, the health benefits, really taking serious action to make sure that we have enough primary care providers, and that we do a much better job of coordinating care for those with chronic diseases will really have a dramatic impact on the health status of Americans and on the cost to all of us. And that's really what we want to do.

I think that we have heard some others talking earlier about the need to do medical research. We believe very strongly in that, and we have already made a very good commitment to doing that by putting $10 billion more into NIH. We did that in the Recovery and Reinvestment Act, and that was very significant. Of course, we want to see better treatments and we do want to see cures. That takes dollars for medical research and a real commitment to the science of biomedical research into some of the new products and devices. But it also takes prevention and it also takes better coordination of care.

Patients with chronic diseases need to have access to primary care providers. We talked a bit about that. We need to be able to make sure that they get good ongoing chronic disease management.

And I have introduced legislation. It's House bill 2350, and I have to say it's got enormous support here in the House, 100 cosponsors. I'm very proud of that. And many others are looking another it, and I have only introduced it just a couple of weeks ago. The idea of that legislation is to make sure that we preserve patient access to primary care. And one way to do that is to increase the number of primary care providers by increasing the number of residency program slots for primary care. We're going to hopefully do that. And for more nurse practitioners and more nurses in this country. That would be very helpful. But another concept, and I see another colleague of mine is going to join us, which is just great, but just to finish this thought, there's also reimbursement for a concept called "medical home." This isn't a place. This is a group of services. It's a commitment on behalf of the provider, the doctor, the nurse practitioner, the physician assistant to be able to provide a medical home so that you know you have ongoing care, particularly when you have a chronic disease. And we can talk more about that going forward.

But I want to thank my colleague for joining me. I see Congressman JASON ALTMIRE has joined us. He's also from Pennsylvania, from the other side of the State, from a community, Pittsburgh, which is known for its medical care, medical schools, and it has a lot of health care providers. But I bet and would imagine that Congressman ALTMIRE has some of the same experiences I do, that while we have great quality health care, it is also too often fragmented and is too often not accessible and too often not affordable for too many of our constituents.

So we're here tonight to talk about health care reform, particularly the commitment that we're making as we move forward on health care reform to expand and extend access to more Americans, to make it more affordable. It also means a commitment to fixing our delivery system, and that means a commitment to primary care.

I want to thank Congressman ALTMIRE for joining us, and I welcome his comments.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding. It's been a pleasure working with the gentlewoman as part of the New Democratic Coalition. We are the co-Chairs of that group.

The gentlewoman hit it right on the head, that we do have the best health care system anywhere in the world if you can afford to get it. If you have access, and there are millions of Americans that have insurance and they like it and they have access to the system, our medical innovation, as the gentlewoman said, our research, our technology far exceeds anything available anywhere else in the world. Our quality at the high end exceeds anything available anywhere else. It's why people come from all over the world to the United States to get their transplants, to get their heart taken care of, to get their high-end, high-tech care because we do it better than anybody else, and there is no question about that.

The problem is the costs are skyrocketing with our health care system. Every family, every business, every individual in this country is impacted by the cost of health care and not just with what you're paying directly for your health care costs—what your co-payment, your premium or your deductible is. The cost of everything that you buy in this country is higher because of health care costs. We use the example of an American-made car. $1,500 of the price of every car made in this country goes to health care costs—to the health care costs of the workers who are involved in putting that car together.

It's more than that. It's every level of the supply chain, every segment. If you think about the company that manufactures the good, the people who ship the good, the people who receive it and stock the shelves, and the people who sell it, at every level, there is a component of cost that is increased because of health care costs of the companies involved in that. This is at every level of the supply chain.

If you think about every segment of our lives, health care is a part of that. What we are trying to grapple with here in this Congress over the next few months is how to preserve what works in our current system, because we don't want to throw the baby out with the bath water. We don't want to lose the good things about our health care system, but we do want to address the things that don't work. So we think about the fact that we spend $2.5 trillion a year on health care in this country, far more than in any other country in the world.

Yet, with some things, we don't get mediocre results; we get bottom-of-the-pack results when compared with other countries—in life expectancy and in infant mortality. We're not in the middle of the pack. We're at the bottom of the pack. We can do better. We're not getting our moneys worth, especially when you consider the 50 million Americans who don't have any health insurance at all. Now, when they show up at the emergency rooms, they get covered; they get treated, but the bill gets passed to the millions of Americans who do have health care coverage. The reason you pay $10 for an aspirin at a hospital is due to the cost shift that takes place, making up for the difference of the people who can't afford their health care. There are tens of millions more who live in fear of losing their coverage. They are one accident, illness or job loss away from losing everything, and that, in the United States of America, is unacceptable.

So we have very high quality at the high end, but we have very high costs, way more than any other country. We have millions of Americans who have coverage and who appreciate their coverage and who like it, but we have tens of millions more who don't have coverage or who are underinsured.

So the challenge we have as a Congress is how to fix what doesn't work—what's broken—and how to preserve what does work. We've put forward a plan, and we're in the very beginning stages. There is a lot of negotiation that's going to go into this, both in the House and in the other body, to talk about how we can achieve that goal—but make no mistake. As the gentlewoman knows, we are not going to fail. We are going to pass a health care bill this year because the American people have demanded that we do that.

As I said, it affects everybody in this country. The cost increases that are double and triple the rate of inflation every single year are simply unsustainable. We are never going to get ourselves out of the budget crisis that we have over the long term, our annual budget deficit and our structural debt that we have, unless, as the President says, we bend that cost curve on health care. We have to bring costs more into line with the rate of general inflation.

I think, when some of our constituents hear some of those words, they really want to know—and I think that's one of the things that we're really interested in pursuing here. They want to know: Well, does it mean I'm going to get less health care? Does it mean I'm not going to get what I need? Does it mean I'm going to go to the emergency room, and they're going to turn me away?

The fact is we're trying to be smarter than that. We want to say no. What we're saying instead is that we want to make sure you get the right services when you need them. I'm sure you hear from constituents who find that they don't go to emergency rooms because there simply aren't doctors in their communities. I remember when I was growing up that there was a general practitioner down the street. We all went to him. I'll bet there's no general practitioner there anymore. I know, in parts of my own district, we've seen some hospital units close. We've seen doctors' offices close. It just isn't the way medicine is practiced right now.

The truth is, with reimbursement to insurance companies and with what we've done under Medicare, we've not created any incentive for doctors or nurse practitioners to go and open offices in small communities and provide those kinds of services. Instead, we've encouraged them to become specialists, to really do the fancy kinds of things. While we need them and while we want to make sure we have those specialized physicians there and available for us and while that has got to be covered, if we only cover that, if we only focus on that, we've really forgotten sort of the simple things, you know, which are:

How do you really talk to patients and make sure that they understand what they need to do? How do we actually make sure that we have a shared responsibility instead of a patient's saying: Oh, I'm sure I can just go and get a pill for that. Wouldn't we all love that, to be able to take a pill and we'd all be fine. It takes more personal responsibility, and it takes a patient-doctor relationship. That's often what's missing is that ongoing relationship with primary care providers—that's both physicians and nurse practitioners—and it's one of the things we want to address.

I'm sure that the gentleman has heard the concept of medical homes. Maybe you'll want to talk about that, about the idea of an ongoing relationship, about the fact that we're really interested in this health care form of creating a new opportunity to reimburse primary care practitioners for that kind of ongoing relationship with patients so that they know which specialists to see and so that they can help people sort through the many medications they take. I was just going to give you one number, which my staff gave me earlier, which I was really quite struck by.

It said that medical beneficiaries with 5 or more chronic conditions see an average of 13 different physicians per year and are prescribed an average of 50 different prescriptions.

That's a lot to sort through if you're not an expert. It really is. Think about actually having someone you can talk to and say: Wait a minute, do I really need to take these? Should I still be taking these? Shouldn't I? You know, who do I ask about this?

I'm sure you've heard some of these stories from your own constituents and probably from some of your own providers as well.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I have, and I thank the gentlewoman.

There is a lot to talk about just with this one concept, with this one component of health care. Part of the issue that we'll, I'm sure, get into is that of computerized medical records, of having an electronic health record that you carry with you everywhere so you avoid this situation that the gentlewoman described where you have, as a consumer, 50 different medications when you show up at a provider's somewhere that's out of your hometown.

If I go to San Diego and put my ATM card in the machine, I can pull up all of my financial records safely and securely. I never think about privacy. If on that same trip I end up in the emergency room, they don't have my medical history. They don't have my family's medical history. They don't have my allergies, my prescription drug regimen. They don't have any imaging that I might have had taken—x rays and so forth.

There is no reason that health care has to be the only industry in the country that hasn't gone to an interconnected/interoperable health information technology system, which is part of where the gentlewoman is going.

The other part—and this is a great point—is we have to begin to have our reimbursement system structured in a way that we incentivize the quality of care rather than the volume of care. We should not just talk about how often the patient goes to see a doctor and then reimburse based solely on that. We should be reimbursed based on: What is the appropriate setting for the patient? Where would the patient rather be? Where is the patient going to get the highest quality care?

We don't do that right now in our health care system. If you have a chronic disease, there are some cases—and certainly it would be on an individual basis and in conversation with your physician—where it shouldn't be determined based on reimbursement, based on money, as to what setting in which you're going to get that care. It should be: What is the best outcome likely based on the setting that you get? If home- and community-based care is the best setting, we shouldn't provide a financial disincentive to get it there. If that's the most appropriate, cost-effective setting and, most importantly, that's where the patient wants to be and that's where his family wants the patient to be, then, by all means, we should incentivize that setting. We're not doing that today.

Ms. SCHWARTZ. If the gentleman would yield, I appreciate very much your raising the issue of health information technology. You're absolutely right.

The health industry has been so slow to really be involved—to really use the computer, to use information technology—in a way that so many other industries have been. As any of us know who started out in our professional careers not using computers, I think we sometimes were slow or were anxious to do it. We were nervous about that.

I remember someone who worked for me a number of years ago who resisted it completely. She said: Don't be silly, I know exactly what I'm doing. I take notes. I do fine. We finally told her she had to use a computer. We just told her that we were doing it. Just a few months later, I remember the computer system went down, and she was like: Oh, my goodness. How can I function?

Well, you can imagine this in health care, which has been so paper-driven and so labor-intensive, the idea that physicians would have this at their fingertips even within their own city or even within their own medical practice sometimes. I was talking with a medical practitioner who said: Sometimes—I don't know—a patient could have been in my office, seeing another doctor the day before, and because the notes weren't transcribed yet, I don't know happened—or 3 days ago.

Another example: A patient who is just visiting Geisinger health system in Pennsylvania—a great model. The primary care physician has the ability to see the hospital records while patients are in the hospital. So they don't have to wait 3 weeks for specialists who saw them in the hospital to write them a summary, have it dictated and mailed to the primary care physician 3 weeks later or 4 weeks later.

It turns out those 3 or 4 weeks are incredibly important, after discharge, for the patient to be following the advice of the physician and knowing what to do. It's a very uncertain time. You need to be able to have contact with your primary care physician during that time, and the primary care physician needs to know firsthand what happened to you.

An electronic medical record is extremely important in helping a primary care physician provide the right care for you and prevent a re-admission, which is a huge cost for all of us. We've talked a lot about that in terms of infections, but there are a lot of reasons people get re-admitted to the hospital. If we can prevent that by the right kind of home care, as you pointed out, or by the right care and attention from a primary care physician, that is not only going to help that person stay healthier, but it is also going to help that person get the care he wants.

I know we talked about this, too, which is, in terms of improving quality, there are now critical protocols. We like to think that every one of our physicians knows exactly what to do for us. By and large, most of our physicians, fortunately, are pretty good. As for all of us, if you have to do five things for somebody when one comes to you because one has some particular health condition and you tend to do four of those five most of the time, you're probably pretty good. It turns out, if you actually do all five every time, your patients are going to be a whole lot better off for it.

So, you know, maybe we're not used to the fact that the doctor might actually look that up on the electronic medical record and have to check it off, but it turns out that it really makes a big difference when you really did remember to remind one to stop smoking and when you really did remember to tell a parent to put a child in a seatbelt. I mean all of those things may not seem so directly connected to what a physician was seeing one for, but it enables the physician to make sure one gets the care one needs: Remind them about mammograms. It's time. If a woman hasn't had a mammogram for 3 or 4 years, maybe it's time, not to mention making sure that they take the right medications and follow the right orders.

So electronic medical records are what—you're right—the new Dems have really championed, and we have, of course, a President who has championed it as well. We put in $19 billion in the Recovery and Reinvestment Act to really help push this forward in a much more ambitious way—the use of electronic medical records in our physicians' offices and in our hospitals and having them be secure, private and interoperable. It's absolutely key.

I don't know if you wanted to comment on that or on other issues related to primary care or on other things that we can do with the delivery system that really will help us be able to contain costs and to give better care to people.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I wanted to comment, following up on the gentlewoman's comment on quality of care and medical errors.

According to the Institute of Medicine, there are 100,000 people every year who lose their lives due to a preventable medical error. Needless to say, with each one of those individuals, there is a tragic component to their personal stories—to their families or certainly to their own losses of life. There is also a burden to the health care system of medical errors because there are hundreds of thousands more who, because of preventable medical errors, are injured. Their treatment costs more, and each one of those individuals, more importantly, has suffered a severe medical setback. Their families are impacted by that. Their lives may never be the same.

In the aggregate, when we talk about cost reduction, something as simple as preventing infection, as the gentlewoman talked about, or as simple as preventing medical errors through the use of information technology, these are things that are going to save billions of dollars for our health care system in the aggregate. More importantly, they're going to increase quality for every individual who enters our health care system and will prevent these medical errors.

So the gentlewoman is correct that, when you look at even that one segment of health care reform, you're talking about billions of dollars. You're talking about the quality component—impacting lives in a way that is exponential throughout the health care system, not just involving one person.

Ms. SCHWARTZ. I was going to mention something else, too, that I think that's a really important and good point is that one of the other points that we make that we're also trying to do in health care reform in terms of prevention and chronic disease management is that so many health policies that people buy, the up-front costs are really on them and so that preventative services—the screening, the early intervention, the simple doctor visits that can reduce the incidents of disease and keep you out of the hospital and keep you healthy—sometimes that's what you have to pay out of pocket for.

Some people say, Good. You should pay out of pocket. I think we have to understand what we're doing in health care reform is very much about a shared responsibility.

We were talking about providing some subsidies for lower-income working people. Everybody is going to have to pay into the system. We're going to keep the employer-based system. We're going to help those who really are at a lower income be able to pay on a sliding-scale basis for health insurance either in the private system or public option. But the fact is that we should be creating incentives to get early care: not wait too long, not wait until they're sick, not wait until they go to the emergency room. And that's what we're going to do as well.

So I did want to just finish up by saying that this health care reform effort that we are engaged in is complicated, but it's also very important. We want to make sure that, again, our businesses are able to continue to provide health coverage for their employees, that families can afford it if they're on their own, and small businesses or individuals can afford to pay for health care, and that government can continue to meet our obligations under Medicare for our seniors, something so important.

And we're only going to be able to do that if we do a better job of incentivizing, providing reimbursement, for delivery systems, medical providers, doctors and nurses, and all of the many health care practitioners that are so important to us. We have to make sure that they have the reimbursement, they have the tools to be able to provide the care in the right settings in the community to help us, have the information we need, have the right medical device to work with us to be healthier.

At the end of the day, our hope, I believe, is not only that we will extend coverage, not only that we will contain costs, not only that we will improve quality, but at the end of the day, Americans will be healthier. And if Americans are healthier, we will, in fact, contain costs and be able to afford to make sure that we have no child in America without health coverage, that we don't have families who are bankrupt as a result of health coverage, that we don't have families worrying every day because they have one family member with a chronic disease and they can't get insurance and that they can't act responsibly. That is certainly something that we want to do.

It's a goal that the President has set out. It's a goal that many of us have worked for years on. We're working hard right now to make it happen, and I look forward to standing on this floor to have the opportunity to vote for comprehensive health care reform that will contain costs, that will improve quality, that will help enable every American to have access to affordable, meaningful health coverage in this country.

I yield back the balance of my time.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TO HONOR THE 350TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INCORPORATION OF THE CITY OF NORWICH, CONNECTICUT

HON. JOE COURTNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. COURTNEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 350th anniversary of the incorporation of the city of Norwich, Connecticut. Founded in 1659 and known as the "Rose of Connecticut," Norwich will be celebrating its 350th birthday and rich history throughout the month of June.

During the American Revolution, Norwich supported the cause for independence by supplying soldiers, ships, and munitions. One of the most infamous figures of the Revolution, Benedict Arnold, was born in Norwich. Other well-known Colonial era individuals include Samuel Huntington, Christopher Leffingwell, and Daniel Lathrop. Today, Norwich is a thriving city and a center of commerce and manufacturing, with a wide range of municipal services, a modern industrial park, and a positive outlook for residential and business growth.

As part of the celebration, the city will be presenting several events with participants from across the globe. The city green will host various reenactments of history with period uniforms and equipment as they demonstrate lifestyles of days past. There will be historic talks, as well as tours of historical and present-day landmarks, historic homes, factories, gardens, places of worship, and other areas of preservation. Norwich will offer "museum days" with free access to all of the city museums, and will also sponsor a time capsule to be opened on the 400th anniversary of the city.

The 350th Commemorative Quilt, to be known as a historical work of art, will be on display. Additionally, city citizens will perform in "Rose on the River," a compilation of short plays written by local playwrights. Special musical performances will add to the festivities. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) will host a parade and festival to commemorate both Norwich's 350th and the NAACP's 100th anniversaries.

Madam Speaker, I am proud and pleased to honor the City of Norwich. Three hundred fifty years after incorporation, from its colonial origins through its modern evolution, Norwich represents the very best of Connecticut. I ask my colleagues to join with me and my constituents in honoring and celebrating Norwich's semiseptcentennial anniversary and welcome many more to come.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS FOR THE AFRICAN AMERICAN BONE MARROW AWARENESS MONTH ACT

HON. CAROLYN C. KILPATRICK

OF MICHIGAN

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan. Madam Speaker, as I rise today in support of the African American Bone Marrow Awareness Month Act, I am reminded of two things—the thousands of lives that bone marrow donations save each year, and the distance we have to travel to increase the participation of minorities, especially African Americans, in the National Marrow Donor Program. The African American Bone Marrow Awareness Month Act, by urging all Americans to initiate, organize and participate in programs to increase the collective consciousness of African Americans to become bone marrow donors.

Since the inception of the National Marrow Donor Program registry, over 24,000 people have received bone marrow transplants. African Americans make up only eight percent, or 450,000 of the more than six million people currently registered in the National Marrow Donor Program. Worse, African Americans have received a little more than four percent—one out of every 24—of these transplants. While it is possible for an African American patient to get a match for a bone marrow donor from any racial or ethnic group, the most likely match for a transplant is from another African American. All it takes is a single drop of blood to help determine a match.

Madam Speaker, this legislation will encourage all people, but particularly African Americans, to organize a bone marrow registration drive in their community. The collective work under this legislation will promote donor awareness and increase the number of African Americans registered with the National Marrow Donor Program throughout our nation. I urge all Members of Congress to begin the need for awareness, importance and value of bone marrow awareness, and urge its quick adoption by Congress.

MARKING THE 100TH BIRTHDAY OF MR. RUDOLF SMITH JUNE 12, 2009

HON. G. K. BUTTERFIELD

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Madam Speaker, on June 12, 2009 Nash County, North Carolina native and resident Mr. Rudolf Smith will be celebrating his 100th birthday. To mark this milestone, family and friends will be gathering for a party in his honor.

Mr. Smith was born on June 12, 1909, to sharecroppers, Mr. Willis Smith II and Mrs. Willie M. Smith on Joe Ellison's farm near Dortches in Nash County, North Carolina. He was kept home from school after the fourth grade because he was needed to work the crops.

Working six and a half days a week, Mr. Smith was barely tall enough to keep the plow in the field when he started farming.

Mr. Smith was married to Patty Alston in 1933. Together, they had six children.

Currently, he resides at Knight's Family Care Homes where he enjoys reminiscing about his past, walking, and eating anything he wants. He lives a healthy and fulfilled life.

Madam Speaker, I respectfully ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues join me in wishing Mr. Smith a very happy 100th birthday.

INTRODUCING LEGISLATION TO SUPPORT SMALL BUSINESSES IN SOUTHERN AND EASTERN KENTUCKY

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Madam Speaker, today I rise with my colleague and fellow Kentuckian, Congressman ED WHITFIELD, to raise awareness about an important issue impacting a number of small businesses in our region of the country.

Scenic Lake Cumberland has been the hub of economic development in our area of southern Kentucky for years. Some 4 million visitors stop by every year to take advantage of the lake's many attractions—world class bass fishing, relaxing atop a custom built houseboat, or boating with family and friends. These visitors pump over $70 million into our local economy, benefiting a wide array of businesses in the surrounding counties. However, with our nation's economy floundering and the Commonwealth's unemployment rate of nearly 10 percent hovering above the national average, the houseboat and marina industries surrounding Lake Cumberland are hemorrhaging—and so too are our people whose livelihoods rely on the lake as a lifeline.

While the overall economy is part of the problem, business conditions at Lake Cumberland have suffered an even greater share in large part due to a long delayed and deferred federal rehabilitation and construction project at Wolf Creek Dam. An unfortunate consequence of construction at the dam has been the necessity to temporarily lower the pool of the lake from the traditional level of 720 feet to 680 feet. This significant drawdown has had a substantial adverse impact on the ten local concessionaries leasing marina space from the Corps of Engineers. Many marinas have had to incur tremendous expenses to accommodate the lower pool, such as relocation and investments in additional infrastructure, and these unanticipated expenses have significantly disrupted their cash flow. The legislation we've introduced today ensures that the federal government fulfills its obligation to those concessionaries with which it has entered into leasing agreements and provides some relief for these unforeseeable expenses that have the potential to set back the economy of an entire region. These measures include suspending burdensome rental payments until it is safe to restore the lake level, as well as reimbursing marina operators for expenses directly tied to this continued draw-down. Finally, the bill makes whole the surrounding communities that rely heavily on these rental payments.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has been tasked and is hard at work with correcting structural issues with the dam to shore up the dam for future generations to enjoy, and Congress has diligently provided vital funds for the continuation of this project. I have no argument with this work or the funding. However, no relief has been made available to those who have tied their livelihoods to this lake and who, through no fault of their own, are enduring a government-induced hardship. The bill introduced today will correct this and provide some measure of relief to the hardworking small business owners scattered along beautiful Lake Cumberland.

TRIBUTE TO LT COL KENNETH BOW, USAR RET

HON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. CAMP. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to LT COL Kenneth Bow, USAR RET, in recognition of his 70th birthday this Saturday, June 13, 2009.

Kenneth Bow retired from the U.S. Army Reserves in 1993 with the rank of LT COL. He joined the ROTC at Michigan State in 1958. After graduation as an Electrical Engineer, he began his active duty as a Second Lieutenant at Aberdeen Proving Ground. Later, from 1963 to 1965, he was stationed in Stuttgart, Germany. After being honorably discharged, he immediately joined the 578th Research and Development Unit in the USAR in Midland, Michigan.

On active-duty training assignments over his army career, he served in many Mobilization Designee positions, mainly in the Ft. Belvoir Research Development and Engineer Center. His training projects were highly technical and engineering-oriented, such as standardization of controls across an electrical generator family and related self diagnosis; and the impact of chlorofluorocarbon, CFC, regulations on users. In addition, LT COL Bow co-chaired management of selected engineering and financial teams assembled to conceptualize the design of a state-of-the-art, $100 million automated logistical center/warehouse at Sharpe Army Depot in California.

In his more than twenty-eight years serving the USAR, LT COL Bow was highly decorated with the following awards: Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, USAR Achievement Medal with three Bronze Oak Leaves, National Defense Service Medal, and Armed Forces Reserve Medal with Hour-Glass Device.

In 1965, Kenneth Bow joined the Dow Chemical Company in Midland, Michigan, rising to the highest research professional rank of Research Scientist at the time of his retirement in 2007.

On behalf of the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, I am honored today to recognize LT COL Kenneth Bow in celebration of his 70th birthday. I hope the year to come will bring him health, happiness, and special times with family and friends. Birthdays are a time to reminisce over good memories and make new ones. I hope that his is special.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Speaker, on June 10, 2009, I was unavoidably detained and was not able to record my vote for rollcall No. 317. Had I been present I would have voted:

Rollcall No. 317—"yes"—Providing for consideration of H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement (PEACE) Act; and providing for consideration of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, FYs 2010 and 2011.

INTRODUCTION OF THE BREASTFEEDING PROMOTION ACT

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mrs. MALONEY. Madam Speaker, today I am reintroducing an important piece of legislation, the Breastfeeding Promotion Act with my colleagues Mrs. CAPPS, Mr. OLVER, Mr. FRANK, Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. MEEKS, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. SNYDER, Ms. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. MORAN.

Statistical surveys of families show that over 50 percent of mothers with children less than one year of age are in the labor force. Whereas women with infants and toddlers are a rapidly growing segment of the labor force today, arrangements must be made to allow a mother's expressing of milk if mother and child must separate.

The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends that mothers breastfeed exclusively for six months but continuing for at least the first year of a child's life. Research studies show that children who are not breastfed have higher rates of mortality, meningitis, some types of cancers, asthma and other respiratory illnesses, bacterial and viral infections, diarrhoeal diseases, ear infections, allergies, and obesity. There have also been numerous benefits to mothers shown, including improved bone mineralization, an earlier return to pre-pregnancy weight, and decreased risk of certain cancers.

Our bill will encourage and promote breastfeeding by removing common obstacles to breastfeeding and expressing milk in the workplace that many women face by: (1) amending the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to protect breastfeeding in the workplace, (2) providing tax incentives for businesses that establish private lactation areas in the workplace, (3) providing for a performance standard for breast pumps, (4) allowing breastfeeding equipment to be tax deductible for families, and (5) protecting the privacy of breastfeeding mothers.

We urge all of our colleagues to support this important legislation.

RECOGNIZING THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF WATKINS BROTHERS MEMORIAL CHAPEL

HON. EMANUEL CLEAVER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. CLEAVER. Madam Speaker, I proudly rise today in recognition of the 100th anniversary of Watkins Brothers Memorial Chapel, the oldest African-American owned business of Missouri's Fifth Congressional District, which I am honored to represent. The Watkins Brothers Memorial Chapel will celebrate its centennial milestone beginning this weekend on Saturday, June 13th, when they will have the first series of events dedicated to the great service this business has bestowed upon Missouri's Fifth Congressional District. I am privileged to have been asked to partake in these celebrations.

The Watkins Brothers Memorial Chapel has been an influential and unwavering force since founders John "J.T." and Theron "T.B." Watkins first opened the chapel's doors in spring of 1909. After John's premature death, Theron remained determined to carry on the business and the vision that he and his brother had worked so hard to make a reality. The Watkins Brothers Memorial Chapel has now seen five generations of Watkins run the family business. The chapel is known throughout the greater Kansas City metropolitan area for its excellent service and the high level of care and concern it affords both the families and the individuals involved.

The Watkins family has been highly influential in the arena of Kansas City politics. Since the beginning, Theron was very involved in neighborhood development; so much so that there is now an important housing project in Kansas City named in his honor. From 1941 to 1948, Theron sat on the Housing Authority Board of Commissioners. The story of Theron filling up one of his funeral cars with coal and delivering the coal to families in desperate need during the peak of the Great Depression signifies his deep commitment to those around him. His heightened awareness of the needs of others led him to encourage his son, Bruce Watkins, Sr., to pursue a career in service and politics.

Bruce Watkins, Sr. spent most of his adult life relentlessly pursuing the greater good through political service. He was one of the co-founders of Freedom Incorporated, an African-American political organization that worked to increase their community's influence by generating votes for candidates they felt would best empower African-Americans. Bruce Watkins, Sr. was also one of the first two African-Americans elected in 1963 to serve on Kansas City's City Council. In 1979, he became the first African-American councilperson to run for mayor of Kansas City. Though he lost, his progressive views of African-American leadership and political influence endured. His legacy lives on in the form of Bruce Watkins Drive, a 10.2 mile long stretch of highway that connects the southern, suburban part of Kansas City to its northern, urban counterpart.

Throughout the years, the Watkins family has remained active in the Kansas City community. Working alongside the CODA Jazz Fund, the Watkins family provides financial assistance for dignified funeral services to jazz musicians who have passed. Individual members of the family are involved in organizations ranging from the Mutual Musicians Fund to the Boys and Girls Club.

The Watkins family has remained true to their philosophy and goal "to serve humanity, persons of all faiths, under all circumstances, with dignity, respect, and understanding, with attention to he needs and desires of each family."

Considering their tremendous contribution to Missouri's Fifth Congressional District and surrounding areas, it is an honor and a privilege to recognize the Watkins Brothers Memorial Chapel and the Watkins family for their one hundred years of excellent service to the Kansas City area. Madam Speaker, please join me in celebrating and expressing our gratitude to this family and their incredible dedication to both their business and their community. The African-American community has long benefited from figures such as Theron Watkins, Bruce Watkins, Sr., and the many other members of the Watkins family. Due to their unyielding persistence, they helped change the reality of African-Americans' political power and influence. The Watkins family is one to revere and respect, and they truly are role models that the Missouri Fifth Congressional District is proud to call our own.

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. ANDREWS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Richard E. Murray, FACHE. He has played an integral role in New Jersey's First District through his administration of multiple health care systems. Mr. Murray has demonstrated a history of compassion throughout the community and for this he deserves great praise.

Mr. Murray has served as the President/Chief Executive Officer of Kennedy Memorial Health System since 1980. Kennedy Memorial Health System consists of three acute-care hospitals, multiple outpatient clinics and various wellness programs.

Mr. Murray's leadership has led to many advances within the Kennedy Memorial Health System. Since 1998, Kennedy Memorial Hospital has opened a free-standing outpatient Dialysis Center, a Sleep Center, a 10-bed Ronald McDonald House Pediatric Unit, a Cancer Center and Outpatient Medical Imaging Center, an Emergency Department, a Center for Wound Healing, a Neonatal Intensive Care Unit, a 40-bed Progressive Care Unit, a 12-bed Innovative Hospice Care Center, a Stroke Program, a Maternity Center, a PET/CT Center, a Family Health Services Center, a Maternal-Fetal Medicine Unit, a Surgical Unit, and an Intensive Care Unit.

Aside from the structural upgrades, Mr. Murray has overseen multiple projects that have improved the quality of care within the Kennedy Memorial Health System. These projects include the creation of an "Invensivist Program" to ensure the oversight of health care providers and patient safety, the purchase of the high-tech DaVinci Robot for use in minimally invasive surgical procedures, and the creation of programs for diabetes control and a smoke free environment at all facilities. Without the hard work and exceptional guidance provided by Mr. Murray, none of these things would have been possible.

Mr. Murray has received multiple awards commemorating his service to the South Jersey community. In 2005, he received the New Jersey Hospital Association's Distinguished Service Award, presented annually to an individual with more than 15 years of service in health care who "consistently demonstrates strength, integrity, professionalism and a relentless commitment to a hospital or health care system." In 2006, he was honored by March of Dimes for his positive influence and contribution to the community. In 2007, he was honored with the New Jersey Institute for Nursing EPIC Award, which honors exceptional individuals for their contributions to New Jersey communities and the advancement of health care for the profession of nursing.

Madam Speaker, Mr. Murray's service to New Jersey's First Congressional District should not go unrecognized. I want to personally thank Dick Murray for the exceptional guidance he has provided his staff, the community service he has provided to members of the community, and the lives that he has changed throughout New Jersey. I congratulate Mr. Murray and wish him the best of luck in the future.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize Winston Spencer Waters II, a senior at Elmont Memo-

IN HONOR OF J. NICHOLAS
COUNTER III UPON HIS RETIRE-MENT AS PRESIDENT OF THE
& TELEVISION PRODUCERS

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I rise to share some observations about the historic career of J. Nicholas ("Nick") Counter III upon his retirement from the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers, "AMPTP". AMPTP is the multi-employer bargaining agent for more than 350 production companies in their collective bargaining negotiations with more than 20 labor organizations. The production companies include the major motion picture studios and independent production companies. The labor organizations with whom AMPTP engages in collective bargaining include the Directors Guild of America, the Screen Actors Guild, the American Federation of Radio and Television Artists, the Writers Guild of America, East and West, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the American Federation of Musicians, and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, which is the umbrella union for all unions which represent those workers behind the camera—from costumers and make-up artists to art directors and animators. AMPTP negotiates 80 industry-wide collective bargaining agreements, covering some 250,000 industry workers in the United States and Canada.

Nick joined the AMPTP when it was established in 1982 as its first president and has served in that capacity for the past 27 years. During his tenure, he has successfully concluded 312 collective bargaining agreements with the major entertainment industry guilds and unions. Throughout the vast majority of Nick's tenure, the motion picture and television industry enjoyed unprecedented labor peace and stability. In addition, the industry has thrived with growth in employment and wages and consistently improved working conditions under Nick's leadership. He has presided over dramatic changes in the motion picture industry, from the growth of home entertainment to new media, and he has led producers at the bargaining table through these momentous transformations. Many in Hollywood say Nick has had the hardest job in Hollywood—to maintain unity among the producers and face off with some of the most professional and creative workers in any business.

He has been well-suited to the job. He learned about labor relations up close while working summers at a Colorado steel mill where his father spent his career. An amateur boxer and high school star football player, he graduated from the University of Colorado with a degree in electrical engineering and a record of accomplishment as half-back on the football team. Then he detoured to law school, graduating from Stanford University and made his home in Los Angeles.

Nick's accomplishments go beyond his role at the bargaining table. It is well known that motion picture industry jobs come with good benefits—health insurance and pensions. Nick has played a critical role in ensuring those benefits are secure. He serves as a trustee on fourteen guild and union health and pension funds. He is also a trustee on the Motion Picture and Television Fund, a past president and current member of the Board of Directors of the International Foundation of Employee Benefit Plans, and a past chair of the Entertainment Industry Foundation. And he has provided his experience and wisdom to many national groups examining health care issues that face our nation. He has also engaged on safety and environmental issues that affect the industry.

After such a distinguished career, Nick has earned his opportunity to live the next chapter. He will give up the all night bargaining sessions for more time with his family—his wife, Jackie; his son Nick IV; his daughter, Samantha, and her husband, Alex Kurtzman, and their son, Jack. As he embarks on this well-deserved retirement, I ask my colleagues to join me in expressing our appreciation for the work he has done and wishing him and his family well.

Mimi Gates' talent and dedication to public art, and I am privileged now to acknowledge her outstanding work and to thank her for her many years of exceptional service.

Mrs. Gates also has made considerable contributions to the arts in the classroom, and she has held leadership positions with several arts organizations. She served on the staff of the Yale University Art Gallery, where she currently is a member of the Governing Board, and is a fellow of the Yale Corporation. Mrs. Gates is also an adjunct faculty member in the Department of Art at the University of Washington, and she serves on the boards of directors of the Northwest African American Museum, the Greater Seattle YWCA, the Downtown Seattle Association, and Copper Canyon Press.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF CAREER GEAR

HON. JERROLD NADLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. NADLER of New York. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Career Gear. In June of 2009, Career Gear is celebrating its 10th Anniversary by hosting its Capital PerSuit Awards Dinner in New York, NY.

Career Gear, a grassroots 501(c)(3) non-profit organization, was founded in New York City in 1998 to promote the gainful employment and self-sufficiency of disadvantaged men who are actively seeking employment. The organization began with the goal of providing appropriate business clothing for those seeking jobs and has grown to provide services and resources that help clients retain employment and advance in the workplace.

Once employed, a client is encouraged to participate in an alumni program that is designed to provide peer support and networking opportunities to others in need. This program affects other non-employment issues like budgeting and financial management, emotional coping skills, as well as family and child support. All of these matters impact an individual's ability to remain employed.

Over the past 10 years, Career Gear has provided clients with assistance in starting a new chapter of their lives. The success over the past decade is evident by the fact that through the good work of Career Gear, 18,000 men have reentered the workforce with a renewed sense of confidence and have become self-sufficient members of their communities. It is for this attitude of empowerment that I rise today and commend Career Gear.

ON THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICAN HONDA MOTOR COMPANY

HON. JANE HARMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Ms. HARMAN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize American Honda Motor Company—whose North American headquarters is located in my Congressional District—on the occasion of its 50th anniversary. Established on June 11, 1959 in a small Los Angeles storefront, a handful of Honda associates began selling motorcycles. Fifty years later, American Honda has grown from a single office into a company with significant investments throughout the U.S. and is a leader in fuel economy, safety and environmental technology.

In the midst of the of 1973 oil crisis, Honda introduced the fuel-efficient Civic, marking its official entry into the U.S. market. Two years later, it began market research and new model development activities in America, which today encompass 13 facilities with the capability of complete product creation.

Fast forward to the 1990s, when Honda continued its environmental leadership through investment in advanced internal combustion engines and the introduction in 1999 of the first mass-produced hybrid vehicle in the U.S. On Earth Day of this year, Honda launched the 2010 Insight, a price competitive and exciting new hybrid design.

Starting with eight sales associates in 1959, Honda today employs nearly 28,000 direct employees whose jobs include design, development, manufacturing, sales and service of products ranging from automobiles, motorcycles, ATVs, personal watercraft, outboard marine engines, power equipment and an advanced light jet. Honda's flagship office in Torrance, California employs almost 2,400 people at its sprawling and energy efficient campus.

American Honda has 11 manufacturing plants in the U.S. with two more under construction, 13 research and development facilities, and regional sales, parts, service and finance offices across America. Honda buys parts and materials from 545 U.S. companies in 34 states with annual purchases exceeding $17.5 billion in 2008.

More than just a carmaker, Honda prides itself on community stewardship. Its U.S. charity arm provided over $1.8 million in grants last year—including $75,000 for a local firefighter program.

I offer my hearty congratulations to American Honda, which has established a half century of commitment to investing in this country, innovation and strong environmental leadership. May the next 50 years be just as productive.

RESOLUTION SUPPORTING A "NATIONAL HEREDITARY HEMORRHAGIC TELANGIECTASIA (HHT) MONTH"

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution that affects families across America. This resolution expresses support for the designation of a "National Hereditary Hemorrhagic Telangiectasia, HHT, Month" as well as other efforts to increase public awareness of the disease. Hereditary Hemorrhagic Telangiectasia (HHT) is complex genetic disorder of the blood vessels affecting approximately 70,000 Americans. It is characterized by malformations that occur in major organs, including the lungs, brain, and liver. If left untreated, it can lead to chronic health problems or even sudden death due to the rupture of blood vessels in major organs.

Unfortunately, due to a widespread lack of knowledge of the disorder, approximately 90 percent of Americans suffering from HHT currently remain undiagnosed. These people are at risk of sudden death or becoming disabled. However, tests exist for the early detection and diagnosis of HHT and certain treatments are available for those suffering from the disease. It is estimated that between 20 and 40 percent of deaths and disabilities resulting from HHT would have been preventable if the condition had been diagnosed.

This resolution aims to reduce future HHT-related deaths and disabilities. The HHT Foundation International's designation of a "National Hereditary Hemorrhagic Telangiectasia, HHT, Month" and other efforts to educate the public should increase public awareness of the disease, leading to more HHT testing and fewer instances of undiagnosed HHT. Additionally, support for further research will improve outcomes, reduce costs, and increase the quality of life for those living with HHT, while also searching for a cure for the disorder.

This important bill will decrease the suffering of families affected by this devastating disease. It is my goal to improve the quality of life of the approximately 70,000 Americans suffering from HHT. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution to make the public aware of this national health problem.

RECOGNIZING THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL CENTER FOR MISSING AND EXPLOITED CHILDREN

OF FLORIDA

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, on June 9, 2009, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children celebrated its 25th anniversary. I stand here today to express my gratitude to an organization that continues to help so many children all across this nation.

In 1984, President Ronald Regan established the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. Twenty-five years later, the center has a missing child recovery rate of 97 percent. Within my own district, the organization established The Adam Walsh Child Resource Center, having collected fingerprint data from over 50,000 children, providing help to victim parents, and creating victim prevention programs for south Florida—all steps towards making Florida and American families safer.

A price cannot be placed upon the safety of our children and it is essential that, as lawmakers, we continue to support those organizations who strive to great lengths to protect America's youth. As a Member of Congress, it is imperative that we do everything in our power to ensure the safety and protection of our children.

Madam Speaker, as national security threats continue to grow, threatening our freedom and livelihoods, we must recognize the domestic problems which threaten our society and always be vigilant of those who wish to cause harm to others. I applaud the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children whose efforts over the past twenty-five years have undoubtedly been at the forefront of keeping our children safer from abduction and sexual exploitation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE GOLF COURSE PRESERVATION AND MODERNIZATION ACT OF 2009

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Ms. NORTON. Madam Speaker, today, I introduce the Golf Course Preservation and Modernization Act to renovate and modernize the three National Park Service, NPS, golf courses in the District of Columbia. Several years of research, investigation and consulting on ways to improve these courses demonstrate this bill is necessary to turn around the deterioration of these unique and valuable federal assets. Langston Golf Course, Rock Creek Golf Course and East Potomac Golf Course are in desperate need of capital investment to maintain and preserve their historic features and to reverse decades of deterioration.

East Potomac Golf Course was built in 1920 and included three courses that accommodated all levels of play, with an 18-hole tournament level course and two 9-hole practice courses. East Potomac was initially segregated, with African Americans permitted to play only on Mondays. The course was desegregated in 1941 by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, following pressure from an African American women golfers club, the Wake Robin Golf Club. Rock Creek Golf Course opened in 1923 as a 9-hole golf course and an additional nine holes were added to make Rock Creek an 18-hole tournament level course in 1926. Langston Golf Course opened in 1939 as a segregated golf facility for African Americans and is listed in the National Register of Historic Places. Langston was the home course to the Royal Golf Club and the Wake Robin Golf Club, the nation's first clubs for African American men and women golfers respectively. Langston was named for John Mercer Langston, the first African American Congressman from Virginia elected in 1888. Originally a 9-hole course, Langston's expansion to an 18-hole course began in 1955, but was not completed until the mid 1980s.

The courses were built and have been administered by the NPS since the early 20th century for the enjoyment of the general public. However, despite their best efforts, NPS has had a constant struggle to maintain the courses. None has been modernized and all three courses have fallen into disrepair and lack the amenities necessary to serve the public today. As a result, they are underused considering their value to the public.

NPS was created by Congress to “. . . conserve the scenery and the natural and historical objects and the wild life therein, and to provide for the enjoyment of the same in such a manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.” (16 U.S.C. 1) However, NPS's own backlog of repairs, its chronic funding limitations, and the continuing use of concession contracts that are inappropriate for the unique capital investment required for golf courses militate against appropriate maintenance, historic preservation and the NPS mission “to leave them unimpaired for the public enjoyment.” This bill will restore the original intent of Congress, consistent with this important NPS mission.

The three courses together constitute an undervalued public asset that, if appropriately funded, could be renovated and modernized, facilitating affordable recreation, attracting significantly more golfers, and perhaps producing new revenue for the United States Treasury. Unlike other NPS facilities, golf courses require unique and continuing significant capital investment to keep them not only maintained but operational. As a result for nearly 100 years, the courses have had problems associated with upkeep and insufficient capital investment. Without a ready source for capital investment, apart from appropriations, NPS has continuously struggled to manage and maintain each of these courses since their inception. There is no prospect that the necessary federal funds for capital investment and improvement of golf will be available today or in the future. Moreover, the current fee to play at the golf courses, as established in the concessions contract process, must remain affordable and cannot generate sufficient revenue for NPS or the concessioners to keep the courses properly maintained, or to make the capital investment required for a golf course today. In fact, NPS owes millions of dollars to the concessioner of the golf courses for necessary improvements.

General Services Administration land and real estate professionals and other experts advise that the best option consistent with federal law and practices is to create a long-term ground lease that bundles all three of the courses into a single contract and then to request proposals that allow for response with ideas and alternatives for modernization and maintenance consistent with anticipated use and affordability. This bill requires that historic features of the courses be preserved and that two of the three courses remain affordable to the general public.

The confines of federal concession law inhibited NPS and the concessioner from making improvements to the courses because Federal concession laws are incompatible with golf course operations. Historically, the restrictions of NPS concessions law have been a direct cause of disrepair and capital disinvestment, reducing the quality of play and jeopardizing the historic preservation of the courses. However, the NPS joined two of the three golf courses together for the next seven years under a proposed concession contract that was issued on October 23, 2007. The contract requires only that the next concessioner be able to perform routine repair and maintenance consistent with NPS practice and the limits imposed by concession law. The contract does not and could not impose any requirement that capital improvements be made to the courses, usually guaranteeing that these courses will stay in the same poor condition until 2015. East Potomac was excluded from the proposed concession contract because its concession contract expires next year, not for any reason associated with maintaining and improving the courses for public use. This separates East Potomac, the only financially viable golf course, from Langston and Rock Creek, the two that need subsidy for their operations. The effect will leave Langston and Rock Creek worse off than they are today. Now the contract for East Potomac is expected to be put out this fall.

This bill would require the new lease for East Potomac to be set to expire on the same date as Langston and Rock Creek leases, binds the three courses into one contract and exempts these golf courses from concession law. This approach applies another vehicle commonly used by the federal government to allow for more creative solutions consistent with the NPS mission to preserve general public access and preserve the historic qualities of the courses. The single long-term ground lease for all three courses, designed outside of the constraints of concession law, provided by this bill would encourage private investment in these courses, improve the quality of the courses, ensure affordable play, and preserve their historic nature.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

TRIBUTE TO RAÚL H. CASTRO

HON. RAÚL M. GRIJALVA

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. GRIJALVA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize Raúl H. Castro, Arizona's first Hispanic Governor, who has devoted his life to ensuring democracy for all.

To review the lifelong commitments of Governor Castro is to describe the epitome of the American Dream.

Born in Mexico, he immigrated to a community near Douglas, AZ in his teenage years. The son of a copper miner and a midwife, he overcame great poverty and adversity as a young adult. He was always committed to his family and the need to do something great with his life. In high school he was a stellar athlete and student, which taught him discipline and earned him an athletic scholarship for college. In college, he was an undefeated boxer, winning mostly by knockout and earning the name the "Douglas Destroyer."

Governor Castro worked diligently through school, completing his first degree in higher education in 1939, the same year he became a United States citizen. He worked for the U.S. State Department as a Foreign Service officer in Agua Prieta, Sonora for a period of time, then applied and was accepted at the University of Arizona, where he earned his Juris Doctor degree.

He then practiced law in Tucson, AZ, became deputy Pima County Attorney and was elected Pima County Superior Court Judge. In his six years on the Superior Court bench, he gained a reputation of being fair and grew further respected in the community for his work and commitment to justice.

It wouldn't take long for the country to notice the young judge from Pima County. President Lyndon Johnson appointed Raúl as U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador in 1964, where he served until 1968. He then served as Ambassador to Bolivia from 1968–1969, and returned to Tucson to specialize in international law.

His work abroad became a benefit for the state of Arizona. He continued his commitment to his country by becoming active in Arizona Democratic Party politics, and ultimately won a spirited campaign for the governorship in 1974, becoming Arizona's first Hispanic governor.

Governor Castro wouldn't complete his term, President Jimmy Carter selected him to represent the United States again and serve as Ambassador to Argentina, where he served until 1980.

Governor Castro returned to Arizona and devoted more than two decades to practicing law. He has recently retired to Nogales, AZ where he remains involved in the community.

Governor Castro's story is one of inspiration for young and old alike. He has shown all aspects of the American Dream, to work hard, care about your community and success will follow. Arizona and this nation have been blessed by his commitment to democracy and justice.

Madam Speaker, I rise to honor Governor Castro and thank him for being a role model for so many of us.

HON. DEVIN NUNES

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. NUNES. Madam Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the life of G.A. Gindick—an inspirational community leader and philanthropist who touched the lives of all who knew her.

Madam Speaker, I had the honor of representing Mrs. Gindick in Congress. I witnessed her impact on the community of Visalia first-hand. She was a true booster—a financial supporter and active volunteer.

Mrs. Gindick's dedication to Visalia was full-time. She was a powerful advocate for local art and cultural institutions and was constantly engaged in the defense of Visalia's heritage and quality of life.

She was a tenacious woman; a woman it was hard to say no to; a woman who understood what community meant, and always strove to help those in need.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JIM McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 11, 2009

Mr. McDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, I would like to state for the record that I inadvertently voted against a bill which I had cosponsored and intended to support.

H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act, provides for a new framework for U.S. assistance to Pakistan in a relationship characterized by commitment. It is especially urgent that the United States and Pakistan pull together during these critical times in Pakistan. As co-

Chair of the India Caucus, I was pleased to see provisions that would focus American assistance to Pakistan on the threats it faces from various terrorist groups, instead of allowing for military aid that could inflame tensions with India. It is vital that our assistance demonstrates that we support the people of Pakistan and contributes to stability and the rule of law—this will be a help to all the people of the region.

I encourage the continued progress of H.R. 1886 through the remainder of the legislative process, and I regret losing the opportunity to demonstrate my support for the measure with my vote in the House.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. POE of Texas led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain up to five requests for 1-minute speeches on each side of the aisle.

FUNDING FOR STATE CRIMINAL ALIEN ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

(Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to protest the 25 percent cut proposed this week to the State Criminal Alien Assistance Program, otherwise known as SCAAP. SCAAP reimburses States and localities for the arrest, incarceration and transportation of undocumented immigrants who commit crimes in our communities. When State and local governments are forced to step in and do the Federal Government's job, it is only fair that they be reimbursed.

Last year, the Arizona Department of Corrections received $12.8 million from the Federal Government to house up to 5,600 criminal illegal immigrants in State prisons, only 10 percent of what Arizona spent to house illegal inmates that year. This cut is wrong, and as this legislation moves to the floor next week, I urge my colleagues to help me fight this cut.

If we are serious about immigration enforcement, we must restore SCAAP funding and reimburse Arizona for keeping criminal alien immigrants behind bars.

CONCERNS ABOUT CAP-AND-TRADE

(Mr. CHAFFETZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHAFFETZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise with deep concern about the so-called cap-and-trade. If the Democrats and President Obama get their way, we will have one of the single largest tax increases in the history of the United States imposed upon the American people at a time when we are struggling for jobs. We need to remember in this country that manufacturing is good. It is good.

Now the administration will tell you that rebates will come for those that are in the middle class, but the bill cuts off assistance for families making more than $42,000 or individuals making as little as $23,000. The Congressional Budget Office expects major increases in bureaucracy, adding some $800 million in administration costs annually for just the first 10 years.

Let us remember that the cap-and-trade is one of the largest tax increases in the history of the United States, this despite the President's promise that 95 percent of Americans would not see one dime in new taxes.

HELPING AMERICANS ACQUIRE AND RETAIN HEALTH INSURANCE

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, the House in the next few weeks is about to unveil a health reform plan that will seek to cover all Americans, reduce costs and basically improve the quality of our health care system. When I talk to my constituents, they tell me how it is increasingly difficult for them to find affordable health insurance either because their employer will not provide it or they go on the individual market, and it's simply too expensive. The current system is simply unsustainable. We want people to be able to keep their health insurance if they like it and if they can afford it, but we must provide alternatives for people that can't find health insurance or find it increasingly difficult to afford the health insurance that they want. I think this is a real priority for the American people, and it will be a priority for this Congress because we understand that the average American increasingly sees health insurance as an economic issue, something that's making it increasingly difficult for them to get through the day if they can't find an affordable plan. So I'm looking forward to this. I think it's going to be a major achievement for this Congress.

HEALTH CARE RATIONING COULD RESULT IN DEATH PENALTY IN THE UNITED KINGDOM

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, do we really want to nationalize health care and let it be run by the government? Well, here's what's going on in England with their nationalized system. Recently, a British medical ethics expert proclaimed that people who suffer from dementia have a patriotic duty to die. Baroness Warnock, the government medical adviser, says that "the care dementia requires is very expensive and drains the government resources for health care." This government decision-maker says that people will "soon be licensed to put others down if they are unable to look after themselves." She goes on, "If you're demented, you're wasting people's lives, your family's lives, and you're wasting government resources."

☐ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., ☐ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, when the government controls health care, it's expensive, inefficient and ultimately provides poor care. In Britain, it results in the government's rationing of services. The government picks winners and losers in the United Kingdom, and the government picks who lives and who dies. That doesn't seem to be a healthy solution for health care.

And that's just the way it is.

INTRODUCING THE RECIDIVISM REDUCTION ACT

(Mr. CARSON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CARSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced the Recidivism Reduction Act, a bill that will quickly restore Federal disability and health benefits to eligible individuals after they are released from incarceration.

As a former law enforcement officer, I have seen firsthand how critical these benefits can be to successful reentry into the community. Currently, however, these benefits are regularly suspended or terminated upon incarceration and take considerable time to be reinstated after an individual is released. Without the health coverage they so desperately need, many newly released individuals cannot fully focus on securing gainful employment and developing a supportive home life. My colleagues should rest assured that this legislation will not provide new benefits to recently released individuals. Rather, it ensures that individuals receive the timely benefits they need to begin breaking the cycle of recidivism.

Join me, please, in supporting the Recidivism Reduction Act.

MIRANDA RIGHTS ON THE BATTLEFIELD

(Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, "You have the right to remain silent. Anything you say may be used against you. You have the right to an attorney." Those are things that are said when arresting officers make an arrest in the United States. But now we understand that under the Obama administration, we now have something known as the concept of global justice in which we are now giving Miranda warnings to those that we have found on the battlefield whose only connection to the United States is that they wish to kill Americans.

Isn't that nonsensical? What are we going to do now? Are we going to train our enlisted men and women in the Armed Forces that when they're on the battlefield, instead of shooting, they should pull out their card with the Miranda warnings to make sure that if the person they're encountering is captured, they have to give them those rights? How about preserving the crime scene? This is nonsense.

RENEWABLE ENERGY WILL HELP THE ECONOMIC RECOVERY

(Mr. POLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the American Clean Energy and Security Act of 2009. I had the opportunity to visit a factory 2 weeks ago in my district. They're hiring 400 people to make solar panels. They're exporting some of those solar panels to China. When we talk about an economic recovery and getting our economy going, renewable energy is going to be one of the most important growth sectors to do that.

The American Clean Energy and Security Act will save families money. A new study shows that the average family will save $750 a year within 10 years on their power bills monthly and almost $4,000 over 20 years. The incentives and help that this bill puts in place to help families conserve energy and reduce their energy needs in their own home will not only improve our national security by ending our reliance on foreign oil, will not only address global warming and climate change but will also mean money back in the pockets of American families.

One of the most important things that we can do to recover from this recession and to grow good jobs for the middle class and for the American people is to ensure that we have continued growth in the renewable energy sector. This bill is critical. That is why hundreds of companies support this bill.

ATTACHING IRRELEVANT SPENDING TO THE IRAQ AND AFGHANISTAN SUPPLEMENTAL

(Mr. WITTMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WITTMAN. Mr. Speaker, the current debate over the Iraq and Afghanistan supplemental is a perfect example of what frustrates Americans about Washington. The folks in my district and across the country want Congress to pass a clean funding bill for the troops, plain and simple. They certainly don't want us playing politics with a bill to fund men and women currently in harm's way. Yet that is exactly what some in Congress are trying to do, using the oldest trick in the book by attaching billions of dollars in barely relevant spending to an emergency war funding bill. But it's not just the American people that we're frustrating with these political games.

How must Congress look in the eyes of those that we have sent to fight on our behalf? This body should not attempt to tie troop funding to controversial programs. Furthermore, we must refrain from the temptation to squander limited funds on objectives unrelated to the combat efforts in Afghanistan and Iraq. How do we claim to be responsible stewards of the taxpayers' money when Congress can't pass an emergency supplemental for our combat forces without loading it up like a Christmas tree?

NATIONAL ENERGY TAX

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, the Democrats' climate change "compromise" bill passed by the Energy and Commerce Committee is still a job killer that will hit every American with a national energy tax. This plan will have a devastating impact on the price at the pump and utility bills across the country. One estimate for a similar proposal found that families would pay more than $3,100 a year in extra energy costs.

Representative JOHN DINGELL said it best: "Nobody in this country realizes that cap-and-trade is a tax, and it's a great big one." Even the President admitted that his energy plan would cause energy prices to "necessarily skyrocket" and that the costs will be passed on to consumers. Various estimates suggest anywhere between 1.8 and 7 million American jobs could be lost. Manufacturing jobs will relocate to countries with less stringent environmental regulations like China and India, inflicting greater harm on American families and small businesses while doing even greater damage to the environment.

The American people know we can do better. Republicans also support a clean environment and have a comprehensive energy solution that lessens our dependence on foreign oil and leads us to a stronger economy.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina, Dr. FOXX. All time yielded during consideration of the rule is for debate only.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 532 provides for consideration of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule, House Resolution 532, and the underlying bill, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. I thank Chairman WAXMAN and my colleagues who serve on the Energy and Commerce Committee for their leadership in this bipartisan effort.

This legislation, which passed the House by a margin of more than three to one last July and again passed the House by a vote of 298-112 this past April will finally give the U.S. Food and Drug Administration the authority to regulate the advertising, marketing and manufacturing of tobacco products, and it will also allow them to take additional critical steps to protect the public health. Putting a stop to the tobacco industry from designing products that entice young people and developing programs to help adult smokers quit is the first step in prevention.

Tobacco is currently the number one cause of preventable death in America. It is responsible for about one in five deaths annually, or 443,000 deaths per year, according to the Centers for Disease Control. Smoking-related deaths account for more deaths than AIDS, alcohol, cocaine, heroin, homicide, suicide, motor vehicle crashes and fires combined. Approximately 8.6 million Americans also suffer from chronic illnesses that are related to smoking.

And yet every day, more than 3,500 youth try a cigarette for the first time and another 1,000 will become new, regular, daily smokers. One-third of these youth will eventually die prematurely as a result. America's youth face intense pressure every day from friends, fancy advertisements, and irresponsible adults to make bad decisions that will affect their long-term health and their families.

A 2006 study conducted by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration found that 90 percent of all adult smokers began while they were in their teens or earlier, and two-thirds of adult smokers became regular daily smokers before they reached the age of 19. A shocking number of American children are at least casual smokers before they can even drive a car.

As a cosponsor of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, I am strongly committed to seeing this figure drastically reduced, and this bill is an important step. Congress must work to help make our children's lives safer and their daily choices easier.

The history of low tar cigarettes illustrates the grave danger to public health caused by fooling consumers by making false and unsubstantiated claims that one kind of cigarette is substantially safer than another.

Millions of Americans switched to low tar cigarettes, believing they were reducing their risk of lung cancer. Many were convinced to switch instead of quit. It wasn't until decades later that we learned through the deaths of those smoking low tar cigarettes that low tar cigarettes were just as dangerous as full tar cigarettes.

Mr. Speaker, as you may recall during the last debate, I spoke of my fellow Coloradan, David Hughes, who as a teenager began smoking and then died last year at the age of 52. I had the chance to speak to his widow.

In 2002, after his first cancer diagnosis, throat cancer, he immediately quit smoking and became one of Colorado's fiercest anti-smoking advocates. His optimism and strength never went unnoticed as he volunteered for Smoke-Free Loveland. His mission was to prevent others from dying from cancer due to smoking, prevent others from making mistakes, prevent others from making the wrong choices that ultimately cost him his life.

David and so many others of our friends, our brothers, our sisters, our cousins, our relatives personify the humanity of tobacco addiction, and this is why we must ensure that protections are put in place and this bill is passed and sent to President Obama so that we can fulfill David's mission and honor the way that so many others have lived and died.

Under this legislation, by empowering the FDA to regulate tobacco products, we will not have to wait until the deaths of millions of more Americans to learn whether a so-called safer cigarette is really what it claims to be. The bottom line: we have an interest in making sure our constituents know the facts, all of them, before making potentially deadly choices.

America must also be made aware of the dramatic health risks associated with smokeless tobacco. Many still believe that chewing tobacco and snuff are safe alternatives to smoking cigarettes.

This bill will require warning labels that indicate that smokeless tobacco causes mouth and gum cancer, serious oral diseases and tooth loss.

A study by Brown University reveals that just a few weeks of chewing tobacco can develop leukoplakia of the cheeks and gums, which is the formation of leathery patches of diseased tissue on those parts of the mouth. The most shocking figure is that one in 20 of these cases of leukoplakia develop into oral cancer.

The American Dental Association, who strongly supports this legislation, calls tobacco use the number one cause of preventable disease in the United States. It should be a no-brainer to responsibly regulate such a dangerous product.

I also want to stress that the bill fully funds FDA tobacco activity through user fees on tobacco product manufacturers. All tobacco product-related FDA costs are allocated among the manufacturers of cigarettes, cigarette tobacco, and smokeless tobacco products that are sold in the United States based on the manufacturer's respective share of the United States market.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates if this bill is passed, we will reduce youth smoking by 11 percent over the next decade and adult smoking by 2 percent, a small step in the right direction; but there is much more work ahead of us.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague yielding time.

This bill is being brought to the floor by the majority in a manner that is closed again, adding to the record number of closed rules in this and the last Congress. Concurring in the Senate amendment blocks the minority from offering a motion to recommit. By choosing to operate in this way, the majority has cut off the minority from having any input into the legislative process and is simply not the way we should be operating in this country.

I would now like to yield such time as he may consume to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE), the dean of the North Carolina delegation.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlelady from North Carolina for the time. She and I share opposition to this proposal.

I rise in continued opposition, Mr. Speaker, to the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. During my tenure in the Congress, I have consistently opposed granting the Food and Drug Administration the authority to regulate tobacco. I do so based upon my philosophical beliefs and the ramifications this legislation would have upon my congressional district and my State.

It is my firm belief, Mr. Speaker, that allowing the FDA to regulate tobacco in any capacity would inevitably lead to FDA regulating the family farm. Of course, that is the potential. This could create uncertainty for family farmers at a time when they are already struggling during the current economic downturn.

I have spoken to tobacco farmers in my district, Mr. Speaker, and if this matter is enacted, they see the door ajar, and their fear is tobacco today, the family farm tomorrow. I don't think this is a knee-jerk reaction. I think it is realistic.

I also have concerns, Mr. Speaker, regarding the negative impact the measure would have upon tobacco manufacturers and their employees, retailers, and wholesalers. Previously this Congress has voted to implement a 62-cent tobacco tax increase to fund children's health insurance. Today we consider legislation that will create further hardship for the tobacco industry and consumers who use tobacco products.

I have said this countless times before, Mr. Speaker, but I will reiterate it today: we are talking about a product that is lawfully grown, lawfully manufactured, lawfully marketed, lawfully advertised and lawfully consumed.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1256 remains a misguided piece of legislation. It does not achieve the goals identified by the proponent of regulating tobacco content, marketing and advertising. Indeed, it will further exacerbate an already-stretched FDA, negatively impact manufacturers and farmers and create a strain on Federal revenues to the national Treasury.

In my State and in my district and in the district of the distinguished lady from North Carolina, H.R. 1256 will result in job losses to the beleaguered tobacco manufacturing and farming interests, and it will compromise an already overburdened FDA. I cannot in good conscience support this measure.

I again thank the gentlewoman from North Carolina.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN).

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Thank you for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and in strong support of H.R. 1256.

I want to take this opportunity to thank Chairman WAXMAN for his many years of hard work on this legislation. We would not be here today passing this landmark bill without his and Senator KENNEDY's unwavering commitment to have tobacco regulated and their leadership.

As a physician and Chair of the Congressional Black Caucus Health Brain Trust, as well as a parent and grandparent, I give my full support to the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

Today, tobacco is the leading cause of preventable death in this country. It accounts for nearly one in five deaths each year and kills more people than AIDS, fires, cocaine, heroin, alcohol, homicide, car accidents and suicide combined. It is a major public health issue and a key driver of the country's high health care costs.

This bill empowers States and communities to prevent aggressive tobacco marketing that has the greatest negative impact in the hardest hit communities and among our most vulnerable. It bans the additives used to manufacture flavored cigarettes which are marketed to children. And while it does not ban menthol immediately, it gives the FDA the authority to do so and sets up a commission to make a recommendation on this issue, so important to the African American community, within a year. Additionally, it speeds up the development of smoking cessation and nicotine replacement therapies, which are key to helping millions of Americans overcome nicotine addiction.

So this bill will help save millions of lives, and in doing so, it will also jumpstart and complement our efforts to improve health and save millions more lives through the broader health care reform bill that will also soon be on the President's desk.

I am pleased that we are taking this bold step necessary to finally address this issue in a comprehensive and thoughtful manner, a step that has not come easy nor one that has come without controversy, but a step nonetheless worth taking.

I urge passage of the rule and H.R. 1256.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, you know, in many cases, the titles of bills here since the Democrats have been in control have been backwards from what they do, but this bill I think does have a partially appropriate title. It is called the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

I think it is emblematic of the concern and the attempt by the majority party to control every aspect of our lives. Everything that we do in this country, they are trying to control. They think they have the answers to everything and that what they want us to do is what should be done. So the emphasis should be on control, because that is what they are trying to do, is control our lives.

We know that this legislation will have little impact on overall tobacco use. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that if this bill is enacted, smoking by adults would decline by only 2 percent after 10 years. This marginal reduction does not warrant this legislation's significant intrusion on free speech rights and expansion of government-run regulatory bureaucracy.

I strongly oppose this bill and this rule and urge my colleagues to vote against both of them.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER).

Mr. BUYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Herbert Hoover in the last century referred to the Volstead Act as a noble experiment. It was grounded on the sincere desire to rid society of the ills of alcohol. It was designed to improve health, cut crime and relieve taxpayers of a portion of the burden of subsidizing prisons. The problem is we know it as Prohibition. It failed to take into account human nature and the truism that things are apt to go wrong when government tinkers too much with personal choices.

We are about to repeat history. There will be speeches here on the floor, I just heard one, about how this bill is going to help children, how this bill is going to improve public health. Unfortunately, the Kennedy bill that has now just come from the Senate back to the House here is not going to be able to achieve the goals which it desires.

What I will do here this morning, and as I also manage the bill itself, is bring up some of the highlights and concerns. The first highlight and concern is that Members need to do their due diligence and read the legislation that is coming to the floor. Please. There is a herd mentality that is occurring right now whereby there is blind faith that is given to leadership, and people are just voting for things. They have no idea what is truly in the legislation.

So I'm going to highlight some of the great concerns, because we need to be a responsible legislative body. A responsible legislative body is one that doesn't kick or punt the tough questions to the Supreme Court, and that's exactly what we're doing.

I'm going to address the Supreme Court in the First Amendment and Fifth Amendment issues. I'm going to address the same "quit or die" strategies of abstinence that are being applied to smoking. I'll also address harm reduction that should have been incorporated, claimed to be incorporated but is not. I'll also mention how this bill further burdens the FDA and its core mission while, at the same time, the majority is talking about how the FDA cannot protect the American people with regard to tainted food and adulterated and counterfeit drugs. I also would like to mention how this bill actually locks the marketplace to prevent innovation and competition. We are truly on the wave of socialism in this country.

So, first let me refer to the First Amendment. The Kennedy bill directs the Secretary of HHS to promulgate an interim final rule that is identical to the FDA's 1996 rule which legal experts from across the political spectrum have stated would violate the First Amendment. While these expert views should carry great weight, even more dispositive of the fact that the United States Supreme Court has also weighed in on various provisions of the rule, finding them already unconstitutional—they've already ruled—yet we're going to go ahead and put them right back in legislation. Not very responsible.

So before Members get down here and start pounding their chests as though they're doing great things, this is irresponsible for this body.

In Lorillard Tobacco Company v. Reilly, the United States Supreme Court struck down a Massachusetts statute that was similar in many ways to the FDA's proposed rule. The statute banned outdoor ads within 1,000 feet of schools, parks and playgrounds, and also restricted point-of-sale advertising for tobacco products. The Court held that this regulation ran afoul of the tests established in the Central Hudson case, which defines the protection afforded commercial speech under the First Amendment, as it was not sufficiently narrowly tailored and would have disparate impacts from community to community.

The Court then noted that since the Massachusetts statute was based on the FDA's rule, the FDA rule would have similar unconstitutional effects on a nationwide basis. As Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the Court, "the uniformly broad sweep of the geographical limitation demonstrates a lack of tailoring."

Additionally, the proposed rule in the Kennedy bill would require ads to use only black text on white background. Again, the United States Supreme Court found a similar provision unconstitutional in Zauderer v. Office of Disciplinary Counsel. In that case, dealing with advertisers for legal services, the Court held that the use of colors and illustrations in ads are entitled to the same First Amendment protections given verbal commercial free speech.

Justice Byron White, in his opinion for the Court, wrote that pictures and illustrations and ads cannot be banned "simply on the strength of the general argument that the visual content of advertising may, under some circumstances, be deceptive or manipulative."

There are numerous other speech restrictions in this legislation that raise serious First Amendment issues and will create a swarm of lawsuits that will only divert us from trying to develop more effective approaches to tobacco use in the United States.

To put forward speech restrictions that a broad range of experts have stated is almost certain to be struck down would be highly counterproductive, and should not be done by this legislative body. Actually, there probably will be a record time between when this bill is signed into law and when lawsuits begin to be filed in Federal court.

Now, I referred in my opening to these "quit or die" strategies. The "quit or die" strategy, the reason I call it that is this is an abstinence approach to tobacco, meaning, you either quit or, if you continue to use the product, you die. That's their abstinence approach.

The previous speaker even talked about, well, this bill is going to promote nicotine therapies, and we're going to move people toward these nicotine therapies and they'll get a chance to quit.

Nicotine therapies work for less than 7 percent of the American smokers who use them to quit smoking. Each year, approximately 20 million smokers use nicotine replacement therapies in an attempt to quit smoking.

Now, think about this. You've got over 40 million smokers. Two million try to quit, and there's a 7 percent success rate. This bill locks in the 7 percent success rate and does not allow the marketplace to exercise innovation as a gateway of smokers to smokeless-type products in a harm reduction strategy to lower in a continuum of risk.

Seven percent? So individuals are going to come here to the floor and claim that a 7 percent success rate is wonderful; 7 percent success rate is failure. Failure. Why should we, as a body, embrace failure? We should not.

This legislation, the Kennedy legislation, locks down the marketplace. It locks it down. And it says whoever has what particular market share, that's it. That's where it's going to be.

With regard to introduction of new products, oh, no, no, no, no. We're going to create a 2-tier standard. You have to be able to show, with regard to that product, its impact upon the individual and then the population at large. In order to do that, that is a hurdle. It is called a "bridge too far." When you create a 2-tier standard that is a barrier, as an entry barrier of new products to the market, you lock down innovation. You secure competition in a present pattern, and then, with regard to these therapies, we're saying okay, this is cool, this is good. We're doing something great for public health. We're going to lock in a 7 percent success rate. Wow.

Now, Members are also going to come to the floor and say oh, this is really great. We're really going to be helping people quit smoking.

Are you kidding me?

You know what this bill does?

This bill increases the success rate, now, of quitting smoking by two-tenths of 1 percent. Two-tenths of 1 percent. You're proud of that? Two-tenths of 1 percent.

Now, let's talk about what is two-tenths of 1 percent? Well, let's go to our friends, one of our strongest allies in our transatlantic alliance, Great Britain. The Royal College of Physicians, also looking at this issue in their report, and they're looking also to solutions to the smoking epidemic, they write, in their review of other countries, it indicates that the best conventional tobacco control measures reducing smoking prevalence is between .5 and 1 percentage point per year. Whoa. Great Britain went out there and looked at all these other countries around the world and found that other countries that are taking aggressive measures are able to reduce smoking prevalence by .5 to 1 percentage points per year. And none of them have even taken into account what Mr. MCINTYRE and I presented to the floor for harm reduction strategies.

So, great. The rest of the world is at .5 and 1, and we're going to be at two-tenths of 1 percent, and you're going to claim that's success. We're doing great things to improve public health.

Are you kidding me? We are not. We're continuing failure. Failure. So don't come to the floor and act like someone is the champion here, because we're not. Two-tenths of 1 percent.

Mr. POLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUYER. I'll yield to help you with math.

Mr. POLIS. I'm asking you the source.

Mr. BUYER. It's two-tenths of 1 percent.

Mr. POLIS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BUYER. Two-tenths of 1 percent, 2 percent. You think that's great.

Mr. POLIS. I'd like to yield to ask your source.

Mr. BUYER. What?

Mr. POLIS. I'd like to ask your source.

Mr. BUYER. Sure. It's the Royal College of Physicians.

Mr. POLIS. That's from another country?

Mr. BUYER. Absolutely.

Mr. POLIS. Is the gentleman aware the Congressional Budget Office estimates it will reduce youth smoking by 11 percent over the next 10 years, and adult smoking by 2 percent? Those are our own estimates.

Mr. BUYER. The Royal College of Physicians, I'm indicating, with regard to the reduction of prevalence of smoking of .5 and 1 percentage point per year of places around the world. Two percent CRS? Yeah, this is CBO. I don't know where you're getting your facts. This is CBO. Last time I checked, CBO is in the United States, you think? Yeah. CBO is in the United States.

Now, let me also move to harm reduction strategies. Here's why I'm really upset. I'm upset because what we really should be doing, if we really had an interest in improving public health, we should be migrating populations, moving populations. And when you move populations, you also want to inform people with regard to choices and the risk associated with products. We do that every day in the types of automobiles which we buy, whether you're going to wear your seatbelt. I suppose, I don't know, if you want to wear a helmet—did you wear a helmet to work when you drove your car today? I guess that's a choice you could make. People make harm reduction choices every day. In the foods we eat, what we drink, whatever we consume, we make these decisions every day. But how come we don't apply harm reduction strategies to tobacco? We should.

So, in the marketplace right now, there are many types of products. Now, what is unique about what's happening here is that this legislation doesn't even touch that which is most harmful, which are cigars and pipes. Cigars and pipes, you can directly ingest these toxins and carcinogens in a far greater strength into the body, and it is more harmful. But that's not even touched in this legislation.

So let's just talk about what's touched. If you look at the continuum of risk and the choice of available products that are out there today, the most harmful, which would be under this bill, are the non-filtered cigarettes. That's why I put them at the 100 percent.

Next is if you actually put a filter on that cigarette. We're beginning to reduce the harm.

Then you've got tobacco-heated cigarettes. But we don't understand all the science about the tobacco-heated cigarettes.

Then you have an electronic cigarette, whereby it's a nicotine delivery device. Yet we know that when you don't ingest the smoke, that you have a less harmful product.

Then there are the U.S. smokeless products. Now we can reduce the risk by 90 percent and say to an individual that you can obtain your nicotine you want, but guess what? You can reduce the harm by 90 percent. But these are still all harmful products.

Then you can go to a Swedish snus, and now you can reduce almost 98 percent of the risk. The difference here is one is fermented, and the other is pasteurized.

Then you can go to dissolvable tobacco products that have no nitrosamines. And then you can go to almost a 99.5 percent reduction of the risk. So you can actually get your nicotine by either an orb or a strip you lay on your tongue, or you can have a stick that kind of looks like a toothpick and you can roll it and you can obtain your nicotine, and you can remove 99 percent of the health risk. Ninety-nine percent.

But this legislation is going to say no to these types of innovations. No; that somehow we're going to lock into that which is the most harmful, instead of permitting a migration.

Now, what we want is, as individuals migrate, and you've got then the therapeutics and medicinal types of nicotine, what you really want is them to quit. And when you migrate them, you migrate them to eventually quit smoking.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. FOXX. I yield the gentleman another 1 minute.

Mr. BUYER. What we have in the bill is abstinence. It mentions harm reduction, but because there is a two-tiered approach to the approval process for the introduction of new tobacco products, it is truly an entry barrier, so we've locked down the marketplace. When you lock down the marketplace, you do not improve public health in this country, and that is the greatest concern that I have here today.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded to address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, currently a head of lettuce receives more regulation than tobacco products. I would simply ask: Which is more dangerous to the American people? I would like to quote from The New York Times today, which endorsed, through an editorial, this bill, and it has been supported in the past as well.

"It has now been proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that cigarette makers have spent decades making false statements, suppressing evidence of harm, and manipulating the design of cigarettes to increase their addictiveness. Federal regulators should be able to stop many of these abuses—and we hope help prevent more Americans from losing their lives to smoking."

This bill is the first step.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GENE GREEN).

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Thank you, I thank my colleague from the Rules Committee for allowing me to speak for 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully disagree with my colleague and member of the Energy and Commerce Committee from Indiana. I rise in strong support of H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. I am an original cosponsor of the bill, and I am pleased that we will finally send this piece of legislation to the President. Again, I respectfully disagree with some of the statements earlier.

For many years, Congress has tried to address tobacco use and the impact it has on our country and on our people. Nearly 21 percent of Americans smoke cigarettes, which is actually a reduction over the past few years, but almost 23 percent of high school students are smokers—23 percent.

According to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, every day, 1,140 young adults start smoking. Over 1,000 young people start smoking. Every day that these young adults start smoking, they're entering a lifelong addiction. Therefore, the number of young adults who start smoking every day is tragic, especially when you consider that cigarette smoking is a leading cause of preventable death in our country. Once you're addicted to tobacco, it's with you for life and death. Most smokers start at 13, 14 or 15 years old.

The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act will give the Food and Drug Administration, the FDA, the authority to regulate tobacco for the first time. As was said earlier, we don't regulate tobacco now. We're finally giving the Food and Drug Administration the authority to regulate it.

This bill is fully paid for, and the FDA activity on tobacco will be fully funded through a user fee, not through the FDA's existing budget. These new funds will not take away or affect any of the FDA's current activities. This bill will also subject all new tobacco products to premarket review. It will give the Secretary of Health and Human Services the ability to restrict the sale, distribution and promotion of tobacco products. The Secretary will be able to establish tobacco product standards and require manufacturers to provide the Secretary with a list of harmful ingredients in tobacco products. We don't even know what we're smoking today. The bill will establish new labeling requirements to tobacco products.

I believe the bill is long overdue, and I am pleased that this bill has the support of tobacco manufacturers such as Philip Morris as well as public health groups like the American Cancer Society and the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids. The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act is a step in the right direction to address the issue of smoking in our country.

I ask Members of Congress: How many loved ones and constituents do you know who have died from lung cancer caused by smoking?

This bill can help those 13-, 14- and 15-year-olds, who are growing up now, not to become addicted to tobacco. I strongly support the bill, and I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out a couple of issues.

It seems to me that, if a head of lettuce has more rules than tobacco, then I think we should reduce the regulations on lettuce. I think we're going in the wrong direction in terms of this issue.

The other thing I would like to point out is something that my colleague from Indiana pointed out. This bill focuses totally on the issue of abstinence. It's interesting to me that I've been in so many debates where the majority party completely puts aside abstinence education when it comes to sex education in the schools. They say abstinence education has absolutely no benefit, and we know the research shows the opposite. Yet, on this issue, they'd like to go totally for abstinence education.

I would now like to yield 2 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER).

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to bring up two points.

During my presentation, the gentleman brought up the 11 percent issue. After I gave my remarks, I immediately went to the Congressional Budget Office. It was a very clever attempt, Mr. Speaker, of the Rules Committee to try to confuse the American people, so I'll read directly from the CBO report so the record is clear.

"Based on information from academic and other researchers, CBO estimates that H.R. 1256," which is the Waxman bill, which is not being heard here—it is the Kennedy bill which is being referred to here—"would result in a further reduction in the number of underage tobacco users of 11 percent by 2019."

Here is the other part, the rest of the story, that the Rules Committee did not share with the country.

"CBO also estimates that implementing H.R. 1256 would lead to a further decline in smoking by adults by about 2 percent after 10 years." Wow. Wow.

Now let me refer to the other. Too often, we should be careful about being cute here on the House floor. "Cute" means the reference with regard to lettuce, so I'll follow your logic. If you were to take that lettuce, dry it, roll it, and go ahead and smoke your lettuce, do you realize that you would end up with similar problems than if you were smoking tobacco? It's not the nicotine that kills. It's the smoke that kills. It's the inhalation of the smoke. That's what causes and is responsible for the pandemic of cancers, of heart disease, of respiratory disease, and of other factors. It's the smoke. So, as for the migration of people from smoke into smokeless and into other forms of therapies, if they want to obtain their nicotine, it's okay. Mr. WAXMAN, himself, would say, I do not want to outlaw tobacco.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the differences between smoking lettuce—and I have to admit that this is the first time I've heard of smoking lettuce—and smoking tobacco is that tobacco, because of its nicotine content, is highly addictive. Again, there is evidence, undisputable evidence, that companies have deliberately increased the levels of addictive nicotine within those products and that American lives have been lost as a result.

One of the other important aspects of this bill is ending the practice of many of these tobacco products which are targeted specifically to children—barring the sale of flavored tobacco products, such as fruit and cloves and chocolate, with names that entice children, like "Very Berry." This would ensure that those are properly regulated.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN).

Ms. HARMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise in support of this rule and of the bill, as amended, by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, as they say in the intelligence world, "this is a slam dunk." I have experienced the tragedy that afflicts many tobacco users and their families. Both of my parents were chain smokers. My father, a physician, quit when I was young, but our house reeked of secondhand smoke, and my mother continued to smoke until she could no longer hold a cigarette. After long illnesses, both parents died from lung cancer. It was a nightmare and one I would spare other families. As a grandmother of three, I hope my grandkids will never smoke.

Approximately 4,000 children try a cigarette for the first time each day. By the end of this week, thousands of Americans will have died from tobacco-related diseases, and thousands more will become new, regular users. We can take a big step forward in breaking this deadly cycle by giving the FDA the authority to regulate tobacco products. That's all this bill does, and it is long overdue.

The legislation we are voting on today is the product of a decades-long crusade by our colleague HENRY WAXMAN, by Senator EDWARD KENNEDY, by the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids, and by scores of public health groups. It is a big downpayment on health care reform.

Mr. Speaker, California alone spends over $9 billion annually treating tobacco-related diseases. This critical funding could be put towards our failing health care infrastructure and towards making health care more affordable for everyone. With its passage today, I hope this bill will become law promptly, and I hope that the CBO will find the way to score the savings that come from this and from other preventative health measures.

If we can do this, we can find a way to cut the cost of health care reform, of national health care reform, which is urgently needed this year. So, as I see it, this is a downpayment on health care reform, and it's a downpayment on the health of our children and of our grandchildren. This bill will save lives and scarce resources. This bill is a slam dunk. Vote "aye" on the rule and on the underlying legislation.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield briefly to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER), who has a very important point to make on this issue.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I would just say to my good friend from California that I am not an advocate of smoking at all. What I'm trying to do here on the floor is to help improve the public health of our Nation, and this is a bill that actually locks down the marketplace.

To the speaker, as to my reference to Ms. HARMAN, I want you to know that that is my sincere effort here. How do we improve public health?

Other nations around the world are all struggling, like we are, for good, sound public policy in how we regulate a legal product by adult users. There are restrictions with regard to access to children. Then, with regard to adult users, countries around the world are beginning to look at harm reduction and at applying those strategies to tobacco.

We had an opportunity to do that. It failed here on the floor, and I recognize that. It's probably something that's new. I welcome the opportunity to join with the gentlewoman from California, as we've worked really well together our entire time we've been here, and I would love to work with you on harm reduction strategies. I'll just read this from the American Association of Public Health Physicians. Since, Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee doesn't want me to cite the Royal College of Physicians, I'll cite an American institution.

The American Association of Public Health Physicians found, in practical terms, the enhancement of current policies based on the premise that all tobacco products are equally risky will yield only small and barely measurable reductions in tobacco-related illness and death. The addition of a harm reduction component, however—and that's why I want to work with Ms. HARMAN—could yield a 50 to 80 percent reduction in tobacco-related illness and death over the first 10 years and a likely reduction of up to 90 percent within 20 years.

That's why I'm so passionate about a harm reduction strategy. I embrace your personal story, and that's why I am so sincere about a harm reduction.

Ms. HARMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUYER. I would yield to the gentlewoman.

Ms. HARMAN. I appreciate what you've said, and I do appreciate long years of collaboration on very important issues, especially affecting the military, like sexual harassment and this wave of sexual assault and rape against women. I appreciate that very much.

On this issue, sure, let's work together on a harm reduction strategy. I think this bill, which I'm for and you're obviously against, goes only partway. There is a lot more to do, and a lot of people have terrible stories like mine, and I embrace the fact that you're against smoking. I surely hope that becomes a much more prevalent practice by our young kids. That's what my purpose here is. I never want anyone else to have the kind of tragedy that I had with parents who were addicted like mine.

Mr. BUYER. Reclaiming my time, I will embrace that, and probably what we need to do if the President signs this bill into law, I offer to work with the gentlewoman and we'll introduce a bill to incorporate harm reduction. I agreed earlier when I had spoken with Chairman WAXMAN, he recognizes that a pragmatic approach is truly incorporation of harm reduction with abstinence. And when we're talking about teenage sex or the use of tobacco, if we really, truly want a hand, four fingers and a thumb don't make a hand without a palm. So you have to use pragmatism along with new science.

And I will welcome the opportunity to work with the gentlewoman.

Mr. POLIS. I want to highlight that this legislation is supported by over 1,000 public health, faith, and other organizations, including the American Cancer Society Action Network, the American Heart Association, American Dental Association, and American Lung Association. I would also like to think that the recent dialogue between the Representative from California and the Representative from Indiana, that, of course, this bill is just a start.

With regard to many strategies that need to be used and employed to reduce youth smoking, certainly the banning of targeted marketing towards youth and tobacco products that clearly have names that affect youth, creating a regulatory structure for the first time around tobacco products, are constructive steps; and I would agree with the gentleman from Indiana not mutually inconclusive steps, mutually inconsistent steps with many other things that we need to do for the common goal that we share to reducing youth smoking.

Madam Speaker, I would like to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. QUIGLEY).

Mr. QUIGLEY. Madam Speaker, the tobacco industry has been feeding us a line. In addition to selling tobacco, the industry is now selling us a story. They would have us believe that this bill, which will allow the FDA to regulate their tobacco, will ruin their industry, shut down small farms, and hurt already-hurting farmers who just want to earn a living.

The truth is the tobacco industry has lied for decades about the addictive nature of tobacco. They have targeted our children as prime consumers of their deadly product, and they have produced and marketed a product that is the leading cause of preventable death in the United States, killing an estimated 438,000 people each year.

It is past time to empower the FDA to step up and stop the tobacco companies from continuing to make false claims about tobacco and start telling the truth. For too many years, the tobacco industry has sold us a line. They've attempted to tell us what they're selling, but in reality, the only thing they've been selling us is sickness and death.

Ms. FOXX. Madam Speaker, I want to say that Mr. BUYER has brought up again the issue that the Republicans have alternatives that are proven more effective. But those alternatives are not being properly considered by the majority party. Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Levin has noted that this legislation could be also viewed by foreign countries as a hostile trade action.

Many of the cloves and other flavored cigarettes that are banned under this bill are manufactured in foreign countries. However, this bill expressly permits production of menthol cigarettes. This could lead Indonesia or other foreign governments to file complaints at the World Trade Organization claiming discrimination against their products. Ultimately, retaliatory measures could be taken against American-made products which could lead to unnecessary trade disputes with a negative effect on economic growth.

As Mr. BUYER again pointed out earlier, most of us do not want to encourage smoking. But we oppose this bill on the basis that it is establishing a new Federal authority for the regulation of the tobacco industry in putting the FDA in charge of this. The tobacco industry should continue to be regulated at the State level. We should not expand the Federal Government to add another layer of bureaucracy to the already overburdened Food and Drug Administration and another layer of regulation to American consumers and lives. This is not the direction we need to go, but it is the direction, again, that the administration and the majority party want to go, that is, more and more control of the lives of Americans.

And with that, Madam Speaker, I yield back.

Mr. POLIS. Madam Speaker, this bill is not a hostile trade action. Every sovereign State, every country has the full ability to regulate public health issues. Tobacco is a killer: 443,000 deaths per year. Smoking-related deaths, as I mentioned earlier, are more than the deaths caused by AIDS, alcohol, cocaine, heroin, homicide, suicide, motor vehicle crashes, and fires combined. It is a matter of national sovereignty, a concept that I know the gentlewoman from North Carolina is also a strong supporter of, that countries have the ability, in fact a duty, to regulate public health issues.

Madam Speaker, this bill specifically achieves critical public health goals. This legislation would ensure that tobacco products are not advertised or sold to children. And as I mentioned, 90 percent of adult smokers start before the age of 19.

Addiction to tobacco begins almost universally in childhood and adolescence. Tobacco companies have long taken advantage of this vulnerability by promoting their products through cartoon advertisements, free, tobacco-themed merchandise that appeals to kids, and sponsorships of sports and entertainment events.

By reinstating the FDA's 1996 rule, we will be able to ban all outdoor tobacco advertising within 1,000 feet of schools and playgrounds. Again, common sense. We will ban free giveaways of any nontobacco items with the purchase of a tobacco product that appeals to children; we restrict vending machines and self-service displays to adult-only facilities; and require retailers to verify age for all over-the-counter sales and provide for Federal enforcement and penalties for retailers who sell to minors.

Barring the sale of certain flavored tobacco products, such as fruits and chocolate, will protect the health of children who are lured to smoking by these candy-like flavors with little, if any, impact on adult enjoyment of tobacco.

The opponents of this legislation often cite the American value of individual or personal responsibility. Certainly informed adults are responsible for making their own choices and dealing with the consequences, including the choice of whether to smoke. Where we differ is our treatment of the fact that 90 percent of the Americans who smoke began as teenagers between the ages of 12 and 17. Opponents ask kids to make grave, health-related choices with incomplete information and hold those kids responsible for childhood mistakes with their lives. When 80 percent of kids smoke the most heavily advertised brands, it's easy to infer the influence of advertising on children.

Big Tobacco claims they don't market to kids. Nevertheless, they do a remarkably and suspiciously good job of getting kids to use their products. This has to change.

This legislation will also require that tobacco products marketed as safer and claims to be safer are in fact demonstrated to be safer by scientific proof. No more will consumers be duped into believing there is such a thing as healthy cigarettes, light or low tar. By imposing scientifically backed, new labeling requirements for such products, this bill will ensure that tobacco consumers not only receive accurate information about what is in such products, but also are protected from poisonous substances that are injurious to health.

Madam Speaker, I would like to inquire as to how much time remains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. TAUSCHER). The gentleman has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. POLIS. Madam Speaker, I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CONNOLLY).

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. I thank my friend from Colorado.

I rise in support of the underlying legislation, and I thank my friend from Colorado for his passion on the subject.

We know that if we can deter teenage smoking, we can deter a lifetime of health risks and health costs.

I must confess, Madam Speaker, some concern about accepting the Senate provision here. There were other provisions in the House bill that I passionately supported that protect our Federal workforce, and I specifically refer to the provision allowing the counting of sick leave for retirement and allowing those who are under the Federal Employment Retirement Service to re-employ, pick up where they left off. These are important provisions, Madam Speaker, because the Federal workforce, as we look out to the future, is going to be challenged with a brain drain.

The baby boom generation is going to be retiring. As many as 40 percent of the current workforce will be retiring over the next decade. In order to attract talent for the future Federal workforce, we need more flexible work rules; we need to provide more amenities for that workforce. I was disappointed that the Senate, on an amendment by Mr. DEMINT of South Carolina, dropped those provisions from this bill that were carefully crafted from the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform here in the House, and I hope we can revisit those issues in the future.

But the underlying bill with respect to tobacco is a very important bill. And, again, I thank Mr. POLIS from Colorado for his leadership and passion to the subject.

Mr. POLIS. I would like to thank the gentleman from Virginia for bringing up another important issue that is no longer included in this bill, and hopefully he and other of our colleagues can work to ensure that we have a competitive workforce for our Federal Government.

Madam Speaker, tobacco is the deadliest product on the market today. It kills over 400,000 Americans every year.

Despite that grim statistic, tobacco companies have enjoyed a great deal of influence over public policy—indeed, a privileged state—avoiding the appropriate oversight of their dangerous business. By giving the Food and Drug Administration the authority to exercise their proper oversight duties, we strip Big Tobacco of their special privileges and power.

We owe consumers the same levels of protection with regard to tobacco use as we do with food and drink consumption, prescription and over-the-counter drugs, and even makeup and cosmetics. Why should tobacco, such an obviously harmful product, not be subject to the same scrutiny as a head of lettuce or mascara or a drink?

The FDA is more than capable of handling this new responsibility. We entrust the most sensitive regulation and oversight efforts already to the FDA: the regulation of what we put in our own bodies. We must give this agency the opportunity to succeed, providing the necessary resources to get the job done; and this bill does that.

By providing the Health and Human Services Secretary with the authority to regulate tobacco product standards and product testing based on scientific evidence, this legislation will promote and protect the Nation's public health. And as my friend and colleague and Representative from California, Ms. HARMAN, said, this is an important nexus in the health care debate in reducing costs and helping ensure that Americans are healthier.

For far too long we have not followed doctors' orders with regard to tobacco use. Science tells us a great deal about the causes of disease and the risks of certain behaviors. This legislation puts those scientific findings at the forefront of policymaking for the Department of Health and Human Services.

Mr. BUYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POLIS. Yes.

Mr. BUYER. I want to make sure the record is clear.

Earlier in your remarks you referred to the issue on spiking. Spiking was an allegation that was made in a newspaper article; the investigation had taken place. Former FDA Commissioner Kessler found that spiking allegations of nicotine were found to be false.

Mr. POLIS. Thank you for clarifying.

This bill also promotes public health by requiring the Health and Human Services Secretary to consider placing tobacco replacement product on a fast-track FDA approval process. If we want Americans to stop smoking, we must provide them with the help they need to kick the habit. Holding up these smoking cessation aids, in an age of bureaucratic red tape, is no longer an option. I believe that that's a concept that's consistent with the harm-reduction strategy that my colleague from Indiana had discussed earlier.

By creating a special category of small tobacco product manufacturers, the bill will ensure that small businesses have the assistance they need from the FDA to comply with the new regulations. Supported by over 1,000 health and faith-based groups from across the country, including the American Cancer Association, the American Heart Association, the American Lung Association, The Campaign for Tobacco Free Kids, and the American Dental Association. This bill also preserves States rights by not preempting State tobacco laws. It's extremely important to respect that many States, including my own home State of Colorado, already recognize the dangers of smoking and the role that regulation can play and have excellent laws on the books that keep cigarettes out of the hands of children and also regulates second-hand smoke.

I'm very proud to say that my home State of Colorado is recognized as a leader in tobacco control, as demonstrated by our leadership in enacting a comprehensive smoke-free law that includes casinos. Additionally, Colorado is working on enacting a youth-access policy statewide. A senator from my district, the State senator, introduced a bill last year that required ID checks for tobacco purchases and prohibited youths from possessing tobacco products.

I would like to highlight, in conclusion, a story of a hero in the cancer awareness movement from my district, a type of heroism that, unfortunately, is all too common.

Susan DeWitt was a typical soccer mom from Superior, Colorado. She made a DVD video about the struggles of her family during her 8-year battle with cancer that ultimately cost her her life. She had earlier worked as a reporter in Boulder County. She had been a light smoker in her teens and continued into her twenties, and she quit in 1992, in her early thirties.

She passed away at the age of 42 from lung cancer. She created "Through My Children's Eyes" as a legacy, and her family founded the Susan DeWitt Foundation to continue her work.

How many more Susan DeWitts must there be in this country? This plague has touched almost all American lives. How many of us have lost a friend or relative to lung cancer and to smoking?

This bill is a critical important first step in finally creating a regulatory structure to discourage young people from ever beginning to smoke and regulating the safety of tobacco products.

Madam Speaker, I urge a "yes" vote on the rule and the underlying bill.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FAMILY SMOKING PREVENTION AND TOBACCO CONTROL ACT

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 532, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1256) to protect the public health by providing the Food and Drug Administration with certain authority to regulate tobacco products, to amend title 5, United States Code, to make certain modifications in the Thrift Savings Plan, the Civil Service Retirement System, and the Federal Employees' Retirement System, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and I have a motion at the desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the Senate amendment.

The text of the Senate amendment is as follows:

Sec. 301. Labeling, recordkeeping, records inspection.

Sec. 302. Study and report.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The use of tobacco products by the Nation's children is a pediatric disease of considerable proportions that results in new generations of tobacco-dependent children and adults.

(2) A consensus exists within the scientific and medical communities that tobacco products are inherently dangerous and cause cancer, heart disease, and other serious adverse health effects.

(3) Nicotine is an addictive drug.

(4) Virtually all new users of tobacco products are under the minimum legal age to purchase such products.

(5) Tobacco advertising and marketing contribute significantly to the use of nicotine-containing tobacco products by adolescents.

(6) Because past efforts to restrict advertising and marketing of tobacco products have failed adequately to curb tobacco use by adolescents, comprehensive restrictions on the sale, promotion, and distribution of such products are needed.

(7) Federal and State governments have lacked the legal and regulatory authority and resources they need to address comprehensively the public health and societal problems caused by the use of tobacco products.

(8) Federal and State public health officials, the public health community, and the public at large recognize that the tobacco industry should be subject to ongoing oversight.

(9) Under article I, section 8 of the Constitution, the Congress is vested with the responsibility for regulating interstate commerce and commerce with Indian tribes.

(10) The sale, distribution, marketing, advertising, and use of tobacco products are activities in and substantially affecting interstate commerce because they are sold, marketed, advertised, and distributed in interstate commerce on a nationwide basis, and have a substantial effect on the Nation's economy.

(11) The sale, distribution, marketing, advertising, and use of such products substantially affect interstate commerce through the health care and other costs attributable to the use of tobacco products.

(12) It is in the public interest for Congress to enact legislation that provides the Food and Drug Administration with the authority to regulate tobacco products and the advertising and promotion of such products. The benefits to the American people from enacting such legislation would be significant in human and economic terms.

(13) Tobacco use is the foremost preventable cause of premature death in America. It causes over 400,000 deaths in the United States each year, and approximately 8,600,000 Americans have chronic illnesses related to smoking.

(14) Reducing the use of tobacco by minors by 50 percent would prevent well over 10,000,000 of today's children from becoming regular, daily smokers, saving over 3,000,000 of them from premature death due to tobacco-induced disease. Such a reduction in youth smoking would also result in approximately $75,000,000,000 in savings attributable to reduced health care costs.

(15) Advertising, marketing, and promotion of tobacco products have been especially directed to attract young persons to use tobacco products, and these efforts have resulted in increased use of such products by youth. Past efforts to oversee these activities have not been successful in adequately preventing such increased use.

(16) In 2005, the cigarette manufacturers spent more than $13,000,000,000 to attract new users, retain current users, increase current consumption, and generate favorable long-term attitudes toward smoking and tobacco use.

(17) Tobacco product advertising often misleadingly portrays the use of tobacco as socially acceptable and healthful to minors.

(18) Tobacco product advertising is regularly seen by persons under the age of 18, and persons under the age of 18 are regularly exposed to tobacco product promotional efforts.

(19) Through advertisements during and sponsorship of sporting events, tobacco has become strongly associated with sports and has become portrayed as an integral part of sports and the healthy lifestyle associated with rigorous sporting activity.

(20) Children are exposed to substantial and unavoidable tobacco advertising that leads to favorable beliefs about tobacco use, plays a role in leading young people to overestimate the prevalence of tobacco use, and increases the number of young people who begin to use tobacco.

(21) The use of tobacco products in motion pictures and other mass media glamorizes its use for young people and encourages them to use tobacco products.

(22) Tobacco advertising expands the size of the tobacco market by increasing consumption of tobacco products including tobacco use by young people.

(23) Children are more influenced by tobacco marketing than adults: more than 80 percent of youth smoke three heavily marketed brands, while only 54 percent of adults, 26 and older, smoke these same brands.

(24) Tobacco company documents indicate that young people are an important and often crucial segment of the tobacco market. Children, who tend to be more price sensitive than adults, are influenced by advertising and promotion practices that result in drastically reduced cigarette prices.

(25) Comprehensive advertising restrictions will have a positive effect on the smoking rates of young people.

(26) Restrictions on advertising are necessary to prevent unrestricted tobacco advertising from undermining legislation prohibiting access to young people and providing for education about tobacco use.

(27) International experience shows that advertising regulations that are stringent and comprehensive have a greater impact on overall tobacco use and young people's use than weaker or less comprehensive ones.

(28) Text only requirements, although not as stringent as a ban, will help reduce underage use of tobacco products while preserving the informational function of advertising.

(29) It is in the public interest for Congress to adopt legislation to address the public health crisis created by actions of the tobacco industry.

(30) The final regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in the August 28, 1996, issue of the Federal Register (61 Fed. Reg. 44615–44618) for inclusion as part 897 of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations, are consistent with the first amendment to the United States Constitution and with the standards set forth in the amendments made by this subtitle for the regulation of tobacco products by the Food and Drug Administration, and the restriction on the sale and distribution of, including access to and the advertising and promotion of, tobacco products contained in such regulations are substantially related to accomplishing the public health goals of this division.

(31) The regulations described in paragraph (30) will directly and materially advance the Federal Government's substantial interest in reducing the number of children and adolescents who use cigarettes and smokeless tobacco and in preventing the life-threatening health consequences associated with tobacco use. An overwhelming majority of Americans who use tobacco products begin using such products while they are minors and become addicted to the nicotine in those products before reaching the age of 18. Tobacco advertising and promotion play a crucial role in the decision of these minors to begin using tobacco products. Less restrictive and less comprehensive approaches have not and will not be effective in reducing the problems addressed by such regulations. The reasonable restrictions on the advertising and promotion of tobacco products contained in such regulations will lead to a significant decrease in the number of minors using and becoming addicted to those products.

(32) The regulations described in paragraph (30) impose no more extensive restrictions on communication by tobacco manufacturers and sellers than are necessary to reduce the number of children and adolescents who use cigarettes and smokeless tobacco and to prevent the life-threatening health consequences associated with tobacco use. Such regulations are narrowly tailored to restrict those advertising and promotional practices which are most likely to be seen or heard by youth and most likely to entice them into tobacco use, while affording tobacco manufacturers and sellers ample opportunity to convey information about their products to adult consumers.

(33) Tobacco dependence is a chronic disease, one that typically requires repeated interventions to achieve long-term or permanent abstinence.

(34) Because the only known safe alternative to smoking is cessation, interventions should target all smokers to help them quit completely.

(35) Tobacco products have been used to facilitate and finance criminal activities both domestically and internationally. Illicit trade of tobacco products has been linked to organized crime and terrorist groups.

(36) It is essential that the Food and Drug Administration review products sold or distributed for use to reduce risks or exposures associated with tobacco products and that it be empowered to review any advertising and labeling for such products. It is also essential that manufacturers, prior to marketing such products, be required to demonstrate that such products will meet a series of rigorous criteria, and will benefit the health of the population as a whole, taking into account both users of tobacco products and persons who do not currently use tobacco products.

(37) Unless tobacco products that purport to reduce the risks to the public of tobacco use actually reduce such risks, those products can cause substantial harm to the public health to the extent that the individuals, who would otherwise not consume tobacco products or would consume such products less, use tobacco products purporting to reduce risk. Those who use products sold or distributed as modified risk products that do not in fact reduce risk, rather than quitting or reducing their use of tobacco products, have a substantially increased likelihood of suffering disability and premature death. The costs to society of the widespread use of products sold or distributed as modified risk products that do not in fact reduce risk or that increase risk include thousands of unnecessary deaths and injuries and huge costs to our health care system.

(38) As the National Cancer Institute has found, many smokers mistakenly believe that "low tar" and "light" cigarettes cause fewer health problems than other cigarettes. As the National Cancer Institute has also found, mistaken beliefs about the health consequences of smoking "low tar" and "light" cigarettes can reduce the motivation to quit smoking entirely and thereby lead to disease and death.

(39) Recent studies have demonstrated that there has been no reduction in risk on a population-wide basis from "low tar" and "light" cigarettes, and such products may actually increase the risk of tobacco use.

(40) The dangers of products sold or distributed as modified risk tobacco products that do not in fact reduce risk are so high that there is a compelling governmental interest in ensuring that statements about modified risk tobacco products are complete, accurate, and relate to the overall disease risk of the product.

(41) As the Federal Trade Commission has found, consumers have misinterpreted advertisements in which one product is claimed to be less harmful than a comparable product, even in the presence of disclosures and advisories intended to provide clarification.

(42) Permitting manufacturers to make unsubstantiated statements concerning modified risk tobacco products, whether express or implied, even if accompanied by disclaimers would be detrimental to the public health.

(43) The only way to effectively protect the public health from the dangers of unsubstantiated modified risk tobacco products is to empower the Food and Drug Administration to require that products that tobacco manufacturers sold or distributed for risk reduction be reviewed in advance of marketing, and to require that the evidence relied on to support claims be fully verified.

(44) The Food and Drug Administration is a regulatory agency with the scientific expertise to identify harmful substances in products to which consumers are exposed, to design standards to limit exposure to those substances, to evaluate scientific studies supporting claims about the safety of products, and to evaluate the impact of labels, labeling, and advertising on consumer behavior in order to reduce the risk of harm and promote understanding of the impact of the product on health. In connection with its mandate to promote health and reduce the risk of harm, the Food and Drug Administration routinely makes decisions about whether and how products may be marketed in the United States.

(45) The Federal Trade Commission was created to protect consumers from unfair or deceptive acts or practices, and to regulate unfair methods of competition. Its focus is on those marketplace practices that deceive or mislead consumers, and those that give some competitors an unfair advantage. Its mission is to regulate activities in the marketplace. Neither the Federal Trade Commission nor any other Federal agency except the Food and Drug Administration possesses the scientific expertise needed to implement effectively all provisions of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

(46) If manufacturers state or imply in communications directed to consumers through the media or through a label, labeling, or advertising, that a tobacco product is approved or inspected by the Food and Drug Administration or complies with Food and Drug Administration standards, consumers are likely to be confused and misled. Depending upon the particular language used and its context, such a statement could result in consumers being misled into believing that the product is endorsed by the Food and Drug Administration for use or in consumers being misled about the harmfulness of the product because of such regulation, inspection, approval, or compliance.

(47) In August 2006 a United States district court judge found that the major United States cigarette companies continue to target and market to youth. USA v. Philip Morris, USA, Inc., et al. (Civil Action No. 99–2496 (GK), August 17, 2006).

(48) In August 2006 a United States district court judge found that the major United States cigarette companies dramatically increased their advertising and promotional spending in ways that encourage youth to start smoking subsequent to the signing of the Master Settlement Agreement in 1998. USA v. Philip Morris, USA, Inc., et al. (Civil Action No. 99–2496 (GK), August 17, 2006).

(49) In August 2006 a United States district court judge found that the major United States cigarette companies have designed their cigarettes to precisely control nicotine delivery levels and provide doses of nicotine sufficient to create and sustain addiction while also concealing much of their nicotine-related research. USA v. Philip Morris, USA, Inc., et al. (Civil Action No. 99-2496 (GK), August 17, 2006).

“(C) an accurate statement of the percentage of the tobacco used in the product that is domestically grown tobacco and the percentage that is foreign grown tobacco; and except that under subparagraph (B) reasonable variations shall be permitted, and exemptions as to small packages shall be established, by regulations prescribed by the Secretary;

“(3) if any word, statement, or other information required by or under authority of this chapter to appear on the label or labeling is not prominently placed thereon with such conspicuousness (as compared with other words, statements, or designs in the labeling) and in such terms as to render it likely to be read and understood by the ordinary individual under customary conditions of purchase and use;

“(4) if it has an established name, unless its label bears, to the exclusion of any other non-proprietary name, its established name prominently printed in type as required by the Secretary by regulation;

“(5) if the Secretary has issued regulations requiring that its labeling bear adequate directions for use, or adequate warnings against use by children, that are necessary for the protection of users unless its labeling conforms in all respects to such regulations;

“(6) if it was manufactured, prepared, propagated, compounded, or processed in an establishment not duly registered under section 905(b), 905(c), 905(d), or 905(h), if it was not included in a list required by section 905(i), if a notice or other information respecting it was not provided as required by such section or section 905(j), or if it does not bear such symbols from the uniform system for identification of tobacco products prescribed under section 905(e) as the Secretary by regulation requires;

“(7) if, in the case of any tobacco product distributed or offered for sale in any State—

“(A) its advertising is false or misleading in any particular; or

“(B) it is sold or distributed in violation of regulations prescribed under section 906(d);

“(8) unless, in the case of any tobacco product distributed or offered for sale in any State, the manufacturer, packer, or distributor thereof includes in all advertisements and other descriptive printed matter issued or caused to be issued by the manufacturer, packer, or distributor with respect to that tobacco product—

“(A) a true statement of the tobacco product's established name as described in paragraph (4), printed prominently; and

“(B) a brief statement of—

“(i) the uses of the tobacco product and relevant warnings, precautions, side effects, and contraindications; and

“(ii) in the case of specific tobacco products made subject to a finding by the Secretary after notice and opportunity for comment that such action is appropriate to protect the public health, a full description of the components of such tobacco product or the formula showing quantitatively each ingredient of such tobacco product to the extent required in regulations which shall be issued by the Secretary after an opportunity for a hearing;

“(9) if it is a tobacco product subject to a tobacco product standard established under section 907, unless it bears such labeling as may be prescribed in such tobacco product standard; or

“(10) if there was a failure or refusal—

“(A) to comply with any requirement prescribed under section 904 or 908; or “(B) to furnish any material or information required under section 909.

“(b) PRIOR APPROVAL OF LABEL STATEMENTS.—The Secretary may, by regulation, require prior approval of statements made on the label of a tobacco product to ensure that such statements do not violate the misbranding provisions of subsection (a) and that such statements comply with other provisions of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act (including the amendments made by such Act). No regulation issued under this subsection may require prior approval by the Secretary of the content of any advertisement, except for modified risk tobacco products as provided in section 911. No advertisement of a tobacco product published after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act shall, with respect to the language of label statements as prescribed under section 4 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act and section 3 of the Comprehensive Smokeless Tobacco Health Education Act of 1986 or the regulations issued under such sections, be subject to the provisions of sections 12 through 15 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

“SEC. 904. SUBMISSION OF HEALTH INFORMATION TO THE SECRETARY.

“(a) REQUIREMENT.—Each tobacco product manufacturer or importer, or agents thereof, shall submit to the Secretary the following information:

“(1) Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, a listing of all ingredients, including tobacco, substances, compounds, and additives that are, as of such date, added by the manufacturer to the tobacco, paper, filter, or other part of each tobacco product by brand and by quantity in each brand and subbrand.

“(2) A description of the content, delivery, and form of nicotine in each tobacco product measured in milligrams of nicotine in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary in accordance with section 4(e) of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act.

“(d) DATA LIST.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, and annually thereafter, the Secretary shall publish in a format that is understandable and not misleading to a lay person, and place on public display (in a manner determined by the Secretary) the list established under subsection (e).

“(1) MANUFACTURE, PREPARATION, COMPOUNDING, OR PROCESSING.—The term ‘manufacture, preparation, compounding, or processing’ shall include repackaging or otherwise changing the container, wrapper, or labeling of any tobacco product package in furtherance of the distribution of the tobacco product from the original place of manufacture to the person who makes final delivery or sale to the ultimate consumer or user.

“(2) NAME.—The term ‘name’ shall include in the case of a partnership the name of each partner and, in the case of a corporation, the name of each corporate officer and director, and the State of incorporation.

“(b) REGISTRATION BY OWNERS AND OPERATORS.—On or before December 31 of each year, every person who owns or operates any establishment in any State engaged in the manufacture, preparation, compounding, or processing of a tobacco product or tobacco products shall register with the Secretary the name, places of business, and all such establishments of that person. If enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act occurs in the second half of the calendar year, the Secretary shall designate a date no later than 6 months into the subsequent calendar year by which registration pursuant to this subsection shall occur.

“(c) REGISTRATION BY NEW OWNERS AND OPERATORS.—Every person upon first engaging in the manufacture, preparation, compounding, or “(g) BIENNIAL INSPECTION OF REGISTERED ESTABLISHMENTS.—Every establishment registered with the Secretary under this section shall be subject to inspection under section 704 or subsection (h), and every such establishment engaged in the manufacture, compounding, or processing of a tobacco product or tobacco products shall be so inspected by 1 or more officers or employees duly designated by the Secretary at least once in the 2-year period beginning with the date of registration of such establishment under this section and at least once in every successive 2-year period thereafter.

“(h) REGISTRATION BY FOREIGN ESTABLISHMENTS.—Any establishment within any foreign country engaged in the manufacture, preparation, compounding, or processing of a tobacco product or tobacco products, shall register under this section under regulations promulgated by the Secretary. Such regulations shall require such establishment to provide the information required by subsection (i) and shall include provisions for registration of any such establishment upon condition that adequate and effective means are available, by arrangement with the government of such foreign country or otherwise, to enable the Secretary to determine from time to time whether tobacco products manufactured, prepared, compounded, or processed in such establishment, if imported or offered for import into the United States, shall be refused admission on any of the grounds set forth in section 801(a).

“(i) REGISTRATION INFORMATION.—

“(1) PRODUCT LIST.—Every person who registers with the Secretary under subsection (b), (c), (d), or (h) shall, at the time of registration under any such subsection, file with the Secretary a list of all tobacco products which are being manufactured, prepared, compounded, or processed by that person for commercial distribution and which have not been included in any list of tobacco products filed by that person with the Secretary under this paragraph or paragraph (2) before such time of registration. Such list shall be prepared in such form and manner as the Secretary may prescribe and shall be accompanied by—

“(C) if the registrant filing a list has determined that a tobacco product contained in such list is not subject to a tobacco product standard established under section 907, a brief statement of the basis upon which the registrant made such determination if the Secretary requests such a statement with respect to that particular tobacco product.

“(2) CONSULTATION WITH RESPECT TO FORMS.—The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of the Treasury in developing the forms to be used for registration under this section to minimize the burden on those persons required to register with both the Secretary and the Tax and Trade Bureau of the Department of the Treasury.

“(3) BIENNIAL REPORT OF ANY CHANGE IN PRODUCT LIST.—Each person who registers with the Secretary under this section shall report to the Secretary once during the month of June of each year and once during the month of December of each year the following:

“(B) If since the date the registrant last made a report under this paragraph that person has discontinued the manufacture, preparation, compounding, or processing for commercial distribution of a tobacco product included in a list filed under subparagraph (A) or paragraph (1), notice of such discontinuance, the date of such discontinuance, and the identity of its established name.

“(C) If since the date the registrant reported under subparagraph (B) a notice of discontinuance that person has resumed the manufacture, preparation, compounding, or processing for commercial distribution of the tobacco product with respect to which such notice of discontinuance was reported, notice of such resumption, the date of such resumption, the identity of such tobacco product by established name, and other information required by paragraph (1), unless the registrant has previously reported such resumption to the Secretary under this subparagraph.

“(j) REPORT PRECEDING INTRODUCTION OF CERTAIN SUBSTANTIALLY EQUIVALENT PRODUCTS INTO INTERSTATE COMMERCE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each person who is required to register under this section and who proposes to begin the introduction or delivery for introduction into interstate commerce for commercial distribution of a tobacco product intended for human use that was not commercially marketed (other than for test marketing) in the United States as of February 15, 2007, shall, at least 90 days prior to making such introduction or delivery, report to the Secretary (in such form and manner as the Secretary shall prescribe)—

“(A) the basis for such person's determination that—

“(i) the tobacco product is substantially equivalent, within the meaning of section 910, to a tobacco product commercially marketed (other than for test marketing) in the United States as of February 15, 2007, or to a tobacco product that the Secretary has previously determined, pursuant to subsection (a)(3) of section 910, is substantially equivalent and that is in compliance with the requirements of this Act; or

“(ii) the tobacco product is modified within the meaning of paragraph (3), the modifications are to a product that is commercially marketed and in compliance with the requirements of this Act, and all of the modifications are covered by exemptions granted by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (3); and

“(3) EXEMPTIONS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may exempt from the requirements of this subsection relating to the demonstration that a tobacco product is substantially equivalent within the meaning of section 910, tobacco products that are modified by adding or deleting a tobacco additive, or increasing or decreasing the quantity of an existing tobacco additive, if the Secretary determines that—

“(i) such modification would be a minor modification of a tobacco product that can be sold under this Act;

“(ii) a report under this subsection is not necessary to ensure that permitting the tobacco product to be marketed would be appropriate for protection of the public health; and

“(iii) an exemption is otherwise appropriate.

“(B) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 15 months after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, the Secretary shall issue regulations to implement this paragraph.

“SEC. 906. GENERAL PROVISIONS RESPECTING CONTROL OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Any requirement established by or under section 902, 903, 905, or 909 applicable to a tobacco product shall apply to such tobacco product until the applicability of the requirement to the tobacco product has been changed by action taken under section 907, section 910, section 911, or subsection (d) of this section, and any requirement established by or under section 902, 903, 905, or 909 which is inconsistent with a requirement imposed on such tobacco product under section 907, section 910, section 911, or subsection (d) of this section shall not apply to such tobacco product.

“(b) INFORMATION ON PUBLIC ACCESS AND COMMENT.—Each notice of proposed rulemaking or other notification under section 907, 908, 909, 910, or 911 or under this section, any other notice which is published in the Federal Register with respect to any other action taken under any such section and which states the reasons for such action, and each publication of findings required to be made in connection with rulemaking under any such section shall set forth—

“(2) the period within which interested persons may present their comments on the notice or findings (including the need therefore) orally or in writing, which period shall be at least 60 days but may not exceed 90 days unless the time is extended by the Secretary by a notice published in the Federal Register stating good cause therefore.

“(c) LIMITED CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—Any information reported to or otherwise obtained by the Secretary or the Secretary's representative under section 903, 904, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, or 704, or under subsection (e) or (f) of this section, which is exempt from disclosure under subsection (a) of section 552 of title 5, United States Code, by reason of subsection (b)(4) of that section shall be considered confidential and shall not be disclosed, except that the information may be disclosed to other officers or employees concerned with carrying out this chapter, or when relevant in any proceeding under this chapter.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may by regulation require restrictions on the sale and distribution of a tobacco product, including restrictions on the access to, and the advertising and promotion of, the tobacco product, if the Secretary determines that such regulation would be appropriate for the protection of the public health. The Secretary may by regulation impose restrictions on the advertising and promotion of a tobacco product consistent with and to full extent permitted by the first amendment to the Constitution. The finding as to whether such regulation would be appropriate for the protection of the public health shall be determined with respect to the risks and benefits to the population as a whole, including users and nonusers of the tobacco product, and taking into account—

“(A) the increased or decreased likelihood that existing users of tobacco products will stop using such products; and

“(B) the increased or decreased likelihood that those who do not use tobacco products will start using such products.

No such regulation may require that the sale or distribution of a tobacco product be limited to the written or oral authorization of a practitioner licensed by law to prescribe medical products.

“(2) LABEL STATEMENTS.—The label of a tobacco product shall bear such appropriate statements of the restrictions required by a regulation under subsection (a) as the Secretary may in such regulation prescribe.

“(3) LIMITATIONS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—No restrictions under paragraph (1) may—

“(i) prohibit the sale of any tobacco product in face-to-face transactions by a specific category of retail outlets; or

“(ii) establish a minimum age of sale of tobacco products to any person older than 18 years of age.

“(B) MATCHBOOKS.—For purposes of any regulations issued by the Secretary, matchbooks of conventional size containing not more than 20 paper matches, and which are customarily given away for free with the purchase of tobacco products, shall be considered as adult-written publications which shall be permitted to contain advertising. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, if the Secretary finds that such treatment of matchbooks is not appropriate for the protection of the public health, the Secretary may determine by regulation that matchbooks shall not be considered adult-written publications.

“(4) REMOTE SALES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

“(i) within 18 months after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, promulgate regulations regarding the sale and distribution of tobacco products that occur through means other than a direct, face-to-face exchange between a retailer and a consumer in order to prevent the sale and distribution of tobacco products to individuals who have not attained the minimum age established by applicable law for the purchase of such products, including requirements for age verification; and

“(ii) within 2 years after such date of enactment, issue regulations to address the promotion and marketing of tobacco products that are sold or distributed through means other than a direct, face-to-face exchange between a retailer and a consumer in order to protect individuals who have not attained the minimum age established by applicable law for the purchase of such products.

“(B) RELATION TO OTHER AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this paragraph limits the authority of the Secretary to take additional actions under the other paragraphs of this subsection.

“(1) METHODS, FACILITIES, AND CONTROLS TO CONFORM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In applying manufacturing restrictions to tobacco, the Secretary shall, in accordance with subparagraph (B), prescribe regulations (which may differ based on the type of tobacco product involved) requiring that the methods used in, and the facilities and controls used for, the manufacture, preproduction design validation (including a process to assess the performance of a tobacco product), packing, and storage of a tobacco product conform to current good manufacturing practice, or hazard analysis and critical control point methodology, as prescribed in such regulations to assure that the public health is protected and that the tobacco product is in compliance with this chapter. Such regulations may provide for the testing of raw tobacco for pesticide chemical residues regardless of whether a tolerance for such chemical residues has been established.

“(B) REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall—

“(i) before promulgating any regulation under subparagraph (A), afford the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee an opportunity to submit recommendations with respect to the regulation proposed to be promulgated;

“(ii) before promulgating any regulation under subparagraph (A), afford opportunity for an oral hearing;

“(iii) provide the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee a reasonable time to make its recommendation with respect to proposed regulations under subparagraph (A);

“(iv) in establishing the effective date of a regulation promulgated under this subsection, take into account the differences in the manner in which the different types of tobacco products have historically been produced, the financial resources of the different tobacco product manufacturers, and the state of their existing manufacturing facilities, and shall provide for a reasonable period of time for such manufacturers to conform to good manufacturing practices; and

“(v) not require any small tobacco product manufacturer to comply with a regulation under subparagraph (A) for at least 4 years following the effective date established by the Secretary for such regulation.

“(2) EXEMPTIONS; VARIANCES.—

“(A) PETITION.—Any person subject to any requirement prescribed under paragraph (1) may petition the Secretary for a permanent or temporary exemption or variance from such requirement. Such a petition shall be submitted to the Secretary in such form and manner as the Secretary shall prescribe and shall—

“(i) in the case of a petition for an exemption from a requirement, set forth the basis for the petitioner's determination that compliance with the requirement is not required to assure that the tobacco product will be in compliance with this chapter;

“(ii) in the case of a petition for a variance from a requirement, set forth the methods proposed to be used in, and the facilities and controls proposed to be used for, the manufacture, packing, and storage of the tobacco product in lieu of the methods, facilities, and controls prescribed by the requirement; and “(iii) contain such other information as the Secretary shall prescribe.

“(B) REFERRAL TO THE TOBACCO PRODUCTS SCIENTIFIC ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The Secretary may refer to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee any petition submitted under subparagraph (A). The Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee shall report its recommendations to the Secretary with respect to a petition referred to it within 60 days after the date of the petition's referral. Within 60 days after—

“(i) the date the petition was submitted to the Secretary under subparagraph (A); or “(ii) the day after the petition was referred to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee, whichever occurs later, the Secretary shall by order either deny the petition or approve it.

“(C) APPROVAL.—The Secretary may approve—

“(i) a petition for an exemption for a tobacco product from a requirement if the Secretary determines that compliance with such requirement is not required to assure that the tobacco product will be in compliance with this chapter; and

“(ii) a petition for a variance for a tobacco product from a requirement if the Secretary determines that the methods to be used in, and the facilities and controls to be used for, the manufacture, packing, and storage of the tobacco product in lieu of the methods, facilities, and controls prescribed by the requirement are sufficient to assure that the tobacco product will be in compliance with this chapter.

“(D) CONDITIONS.—An order of the Secretary approving a petition for a variance shall prescribe such conditions respecting the methods used in, and the facilities and controls used for, the manufacture, packing, and storage of the tobacco product to be granted the variance under the petition as may be necessary to assure that the tobacco product will be in compliance with this chapter.

“(E) HEARING.—After the issuance of an order under subparagraph (B) respecting a petition, the petitioner shall have an opportunity for an informal hearing on such order.

“(3) COMPLIANCE.—Compliance with requirements under this subsection shall not be required before the end of the 3-year period following the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

“SEC. 907. TOBACCO PRODUCT STANDARDS.

“(1) SPECIAL RULES.—

“(A) SPECIAL RULE FOR CIGARETTES.—Beginning 3 months after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, a cigarette or any of its component parts (including the tobacco, filter, or paper) shall not contain, as a constituent (including a smoke constituent) or additive, an artificial or natural flavor (other than tobacco or menthol) or an herb or spice, including strawberry, grape, orange, clove, cinnamon, pineapple, vanilla, coconut, licorice, cocoa, chocolate, cherry, or coffee, that is a characterizing flavor of the tobacco product or tobacco smoke. Nothing in this subparagraph shall be construed to limit the Secretary's authority to take action under this section or other sections of this Act applicable to menthol or any artificial or natural flavor, herb, or spice not specified in this subparagraph.

“(B) ADDITIONAL SPECIAL RULE.—Beginning 2 years after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, a tobacco product manufacturer shall not use tobacco, including foreign grown tobacco, that contains a pesticide chemical residue that is at a level greater than is specified by any tolerance applicable under Federal law to domestically grown tobacco.

“(2) REVISION OF TOBACCO PRODUCT STANDARDS.—The Secretary may revise the tobacco product standards in paragraph (1) in accordance with subsection (c).

“(3) TOBACCO PRODUCT STANDARDS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may adopt tobacco product standards in addition to those in paragraph (1) if the Secretary finds that a tobacco product standard is appropriate for the protection of the public health.

“(B) DETERMINATIONS.—

“(i) CONSIDERATIONS.—In making a finding described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall consider scientific evidence concerning—

“(I) the risks and benefits to the population as a whole, including users and nonusers of tobacco products, of the proposed standard;

“(II) the increased or decreased likelihood that existing users of tobacco products will stop using such products; and “(III) the increased or decreased likelihood that those who do not use tobacco products will start using such products.

“(ii) ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATIONS.—In the event that the Secretary makes a determination, set forth in a proposed tobacco product standard in a proposed rule, that it is appropriate for the protection of public health to require the reduction or elimination of an additive, constituent (including a smoke constituent), or other component of a tobacco product because the Secretary has found that the additive, constituent, or other component is or may be harmful, any party objecting to the proposed standard on the ground that the proposed standard will not reduce or eliminate the risk of illness or injury may provide for the Secretary’s consideration scientific evidence that demonstrates that the proposed standard will not reduce or eliminate the risk of illness or injury.

“(4) CONTENT OF TOBACCO PRODUCT STANDARDS.—A tobacco product standard established under this section for a tobacco product—

“(A) shall include provisions that are appropriate for the protection of the public health, including provisions, where appropriate—

“(i) for nicotine yields of the product;

“(ii) for the reduction or elimination of other constituents, including smoke constituents, or harmful components of the product; or

“(iii) relating to any other requirement under subparagraph (B);

“(B) shall, where appropriate for the protection of the public health, include—

“(i) provisions respecting the construction, components, ingredients, additives, constituents, including smoke constituents, and properties of the tobacco product;

“(ii) provisions for the testing (on a sample basis or, if necessary, on an individual basis) of the tobacco product;

“(iii) provisions for the measurement of the tobacco product characteristics of the tobacco product;

“(iv) provisions requiring that the results of each or of certain of the tests of the tobacco product required to be made under clause (ii) show that the tobacco product is in conformity with the portions of the standard for which the test or tests were required; and

“(v) a provision requiring that the sale and distribution of the tobacco product be restricted but only to the extent that the sale and distribution of a tobacco product may be restricted under a regulation under section 906(d);

“(C) shall, where appropriate, require the use and prescribe the form and content of labeling for the proper use of the tobacco product; and

“(D) shall require tobacco products containing foreign-grown tobacco to meet the same standards applicable to tobacco products containing domestically grown tobacco.

“(5) PERIODIC REEVALUATION OF TOBACCO PRODUCT STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall provide for periodic evaluation of tobacco product standards established under this section to determine whether such standards should be changed to reflect new medical, scientific, or other technological data. The Secretary may provide for testing under paragraph (4)(B) by any person.

“(6) INVOLVEMENT OF OTHER AGENCIES; INFORMED PERSONS.—In carrying out duties under this section, the Secretary shall endeavor to—

“(A) use personnel, facilities, and other technical support available in other Federal agencies;

“(B) consult with other Federal agencies concerned with standard setting and other nationally or internationally recognized standard-setting entities; and

“(C) invite appropriate participation, through joint or other conferences, workshops, or other means, by informed persons representative of scientific, professional, industry, agricultural, or consumer organizations who in the Secretary’s judgment can make a significant contribution.

“(b) CONSIDERATIONS BY SECRETARY.—

“(1) TECHNICAL ACHIEVABILITY.—The Secretary shall consider information submitted in connection with a proposed standard regarding the technical achievability of compliance with such standard.

“(2) OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.—The Secretary shall consider all other information submitted in connection with a proposed standard, including information concerning the countervailing effects of the tobacco product standard on the health of adolescent tobacco users, adult tobacco users, or nontobacco users, such as the creation of a significant demand for contraband or other tobacco products that do not meet the requirements of this chapter and the significance of such demand.

“(c) PROPOSED STANDARDS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of proposed rulemaking for the establishment, amendment, or revocation of any tobacco product standard.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS OF NOTICE.—A notice of proposed rulemaking for the establishment or amendment of a tobacco product standard for a tobacco product shall—

“(A) set forth a finding with supporting justification that the tobacco product standard is appropriate for the protection of the public health;

“(B) invite interested persons to submit a draft or proposed tobacco product standard for consideration by the Secretary;

“(C) invite interested persons to submit comments on structuring the standard so that it does not advantage foreign-grown tobacco over domestically grown tobacco; and “(D) invite the Secretary of Agriculture to provide any information or analysis which the Secretary of Agriculture believes is relevant to the proposed tobacco product standard.

“(3) FINDING.—A notice of proposed rulemaking for the revocation of a tobacco product standard shall set forth a finding with supporting justification that the tobacco product standard is no longer appropriate for the protection of the public health.

“(4) COMMENT.—The Secretary shall provide for a comment period of not less than 60 days.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—After the expiration of the period for comment on a notice of proposed rulemaking published under subsection (c) respecting a tobacco product standard and after consideration of comments submitted under subsections (b) and (c) and any report from the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee, the Secretary shall—

“(A) if the Secretary determines that the standard would be appropriate for the protection of the public health, promulgate a regulation establishing a tobacco product standard and publish in the Federal Register findings on the matters referred to in subsection (c); or “(B) publish a notice terminating the proceeding for the development of the standard together with the reasons for such termination.

“(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—A regulation establishing a tobacco product standard shall set forth the date or dates upon which the standard shall take effect, but no such regulation may take effect before 1 year after the date of its publication unless the Secretary determines that an earlier effective date is necessary for the protection of the public health. Such date or dates shall be established so as to minimize, consistent with the public health, economic loss to, and disruption or dislocation of, domestic and international trade. In establishing such effective date or dates, the Secretary shall consider information submitted in connection with a proposed product standard by interested parties, including manufacturers and tobacco growers, regarding the technical achievability of compliance with the standard, and including information concerning the existence of patents that make it impossible to comply in the timeframe envisioned in the proposed standard. If the Secretary determines, based on the Secretary’s evaluation of submitted comments, that a product standard can be met only by manufacturers requiring substantial changes to the methods of farming the domestically grown tobacco used by the manufacturer, the effective date of that product standard shall be not less than 2 years after the date of publication of the final regulation establishing the standard.

“(3) LIMITATION ON POWER GRANTED TO THE FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION.—Because of the importance of a decision of the Secretary to issue a regulation—

“(A) banning all cigarettes, all smokeless tobacco products, all little cigars, all cigars other than little cigars, all pipe tobacco, or all roll-your-own tobacco products; or

“(B) requiring the reduction of nicotine yields of a tobacco product to zero, the Secretary is prohibited from taking such actions under this Act.

“(4) AMENDMENT; REVOCATION.—

“(A) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary, upon the Secretary’s own initiative or upon petition of an interested person, may by a regulation, promulgated in accordance with the requirements of subsection (c) and paragraph (2), amend or revoke a tobacco product standard.

“(B) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The Secretary may declare a proposed amendment of a tobacco product standard to be effective on and after its publication in the Federal Register and until the effective date of any final action taken on such amendment if the Secretary determines that making it so effective is in the public interest.

“(5) REFERRAL TO ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may refer a proposed regulation for the establishment, amendment, or revocation of a tobacco product standard to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee for a report and recommendation with respect to any matter involved in the proposed regulation which requires the exercise of scientific judgment.

“(B) INITIATION OF REFERRAL.—The Secretary may make a referral under this paragraph—

“(i) on the Secretary’s own initiative; or

“(ii) upon the request of an interested person that—

“(I) demonstrates good cause for the referral; and “(II) is made before the expiration of the period for submission of comments on the proposed regulation.

“(C) PROVISION OF DATA.—If a proposed regulation is referred under this paragraph to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee, the Secretary shall provide the Advisory Committee with the data and information on which such proposed regulation is based.

“(D) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION.—The Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee shall, within 60 days after the referral of a proposed regulation under this paragraph and after independent study of the data and information furnished to it by the Secretary and other data and information before it, submit to the Secretary a report and recommendation respecting such regulation, together with all underlying data and information and a statement of the reason or basis for the recommendation.

“(E) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary shall make a copy of each report and recommendation under subparagraph (D) publicly available.

“(e) MENTHOL CIGARETTES.—

“(1) REFERRAL; CONSIDERATIONS.—Immediately upon the establishment of the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee under section 917(a), the Secretary shall refer to the Committee for report and recommendation, under section 917(c)(4), the issue of the impact of the use of menthol in cigarettes on the public health, including such use among children, African-Americans, Hispanics, and other racial and ethnic minorities. In its review, the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee shall address the considerations listed in subsections (a)(3)(B)(i) and (b).

“(2) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION.—Not later than 1 year after its establishment, the Tobacco Product Scientific Advisory Committee shall submit to the Secretary the report and recommendations required pursuant to paragraph (1).

“(3) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit the Secretary’s authority to take action under this section or other sections of this Act applicable to menthol.

“(f) DISSOLVABLE TOBACCO PRODUCTS.—

“(1) REFERRAL; CONSIDERATIONS.—The Secretary shall refer to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee for report and recommendation, under section 917(c)(4), the issue of the nature and impact of the use of dissolvable tobacco products on the public health, including such use among children. In its review, the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee shall address the considerations listed in subsection (a)(3)(B)(i).

“(2) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION.—Not later than 2 years after its establishment, the Tobacco Product Scientific Advisory Committee shall submit to the Secretary the report and recommendations required pursuant to paragraph (1).

“SEC. 908. NOTIFICATION AND OTHER REMEDIES.

“(a) NOTIFICATION.—If the Secretary determines that—

“(1) a tobacco product which is introduced or delivered for introduction into interstate commerce for commercial distribution presents an unreasonable risk of substantial harm to the public health; and

“(2) notification under this subsection is necessary to eliminate the unreasonable risk of such harm and no more practicable means is available under the provisions of this chapter (other than this section) to eliminate such risk, the Secretary may issue such order as may be necessary to assure that adequate notification is provided in an appropriate form, by the persons and means best suited under the circumstances involved, to all persons who should properly receive such notification in order to eliminate such risk. The Secretary may order notification by any appropriate means, including public service announcements. Before issuing an order under this subsection, the Secretary shall consult with the persons who are to give notice under the order.

“(b) NO EXEMPTION FROM OTHER LIABILITY.—Compliance with an order issued under this section shall not relieve any person from liability under Federal or State law. In awarding damages for economic loss in an action brought for the enforcement of any such liability, the value to the plaintiff in such action of any remedy provided under such order shall be taken into account.

“(c) RECALL AUTHORITY.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary finds that there is a reasonable probability that a tobacco product contains a manufacturing or other defect not ordinarily contained in tobacco products on the market that would cause serious, adverse health consequences or death, the Secretary shall issue an order requiring the appropriate person (including the manufacturers, importers, distributors, or retailers of the tobacco product) to immediately cease distribution of such tobacco product. The order shall provide the person subject to the order with an opportunity for an informal hearing, to be held not later than 10 days after the date of the issuance of the order, on the actions required by the order and on whether the order should be amended to require a recall of such tobacco product. If, after providing an opportunity for such a hearing, the Secretary determines that inadequate grounds exist to support the actions required by the order, the Secretary shall vacate the order.

“(2) AMENDMENT OF ORDER TO REQUIRE RECALL.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If, after providing an opportunity for an informal hearing under paragraph (1), the Secretary determines that the order should be amended to include a recall of the tobacco product with respect to which the order was issued, the Secretary shall, except as provided in subparagraph (B), amend the order to require a recall. The Secretary shall specify a timetable in which the tobacco product recall will occur and shall require periodic reports to the Secretary describing the progress of the recall.

“(B) NOTICE.—An amended order under subparagraph (A)—

“(i) shall not include recall of a tobacco product from individuals; and “(ii) shall provide for notice to persons subject to the risks associated with the use of such tobacco product.

In providing the notice required by clause (ii), the Secretary may use the assistance of retailers and other persons who distributed such tobacco product. If a significant number of such persons cannot be identified, the Secretary shall notify such persons under section 705(b).

“(3) REMEDY NOT EXCLUSIVE.—The remedy provided by this subsection shall be in addition to remedies provided by subsection (a).

“SEC. 909. RECORDS AND REPORTS ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Every person who is a tobacco product manufacturer or importer of a tobacco product shall establish and maintain such records, make such reports, and provide such information, as the Secretary may by regulation reasonably require to assure that such tobacco product is not adulterated or misbranded and to otherwise protect public health. Regulations prescribed under the preceding sentence—

“(1) may require a tobacco product manufacturer or importer to report to the Secretary

whenever the manufacturer or importer receives or otherwise becomes aware of information that reasonably suggests that one of its marketed tobacco products may have caused or contributed to a serious unexpected adverse experience associated with the use of the product or any significant increase in the frequency of a serious, expected adverse product experience;

“(2) shall require reporting of other significant adverse tobacco product experiences as determined by the Secretary to be necessary to be reported;

“(3) shall not impose requirements unduly burdensome to a tobacco product manufacturer or importer, taking into account the cost of complying with such requirements and the need for the protection of the public health and the implementation of this chapter;

“(4) when prescribing the procedure for making requests for reports or information, shall require that each request made under such regulations for submission of a report or information to the Secretary state the reason or purpose for such request and identify to the fullest extent practicable such report or information;

“(5) when requiring submission of a report or information to the Secretary, shall state the reason or purpose for the submission of such report or information and identify to the fullest extent practicable such report or information; and

“(6) may not require that the identity of any patient or user be disclosed in records, reports, or information required under this subsection unless required for the medical welfare of an individual, to determine risks to public health of a tobacco product, or to verify a record, report, or information submitted under this chapter.

In prescribing regulations under this subsection, the Secretary shall have due regard for the professional ethics of the medical profession and the interests of patients. The prohibitions of paragraph (6) continue to apply to records, reports, and information concerning any individual who has been a patient, irrespective of whether or when he ceases to be a patient.

“(b) REPORTS OF REMOVALS AND CORRECTIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall by regulation require a tobacco product manufacturer or importer of a tobacco product to report promptly to the Secretary any corrective action taken or removal from the market of a tobacco product undertaken by such manufacturer or importer if the removal or correction was undertaken—

“(A) to reduce a risk to health posed by the tobacco product; or

“(B) to remedy a violation of this chapter caused by the tobacco product which may present a risk to health.

A tobacco product manufacturer or importer of a tobacco product who undertakes a corrective action or removal from the market of a tobacco product which is not required to be reported under this subsection shall keep a record of such correction or removal.

“(2) EXCEPTION.—No report of the corrective action or removal of a tobacco product may be required under paragraph (1) if a report of the corrective action or removal is required and has been submitted under subsection (a).

“SEC. 910. APPLICATION FOR REVIEW OF CERTAIN TOBACCO PRODUCTS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—

“(1) NEW TOBACCO PRODUCT DEFINED.—For purposes of this section the term ‘new tobacco product’ means—

“(A) any tobacco product (including those products in test markets) that was not commercially marketed in the United States as of February 15, 2007; or

“(B) any modification (including a change in design, any component, any part, or any constituent, including a smoke constituent, or in the content, delivery or form of nicotine, or any other additive or ingredient) of a tobacco product where the modified product was commercially marketed in the United States after February 15, 2007.

“(2) PREMARKET REVIEW REQUIRED.—

“(A) NEW PRODUCTS.—An order under subsection (c)(1)(A)(i) for a new tobacco product is required unless—

“(i) the manufacturer has submitted a report under section 905(j); and the Secretary has issued an order that the tobacco product—

“(I) is substantially equivalent to a tobacco product commercially marketed (other than for test marketing) in the United States as of February 15, 2007; and

“(II) is in compliance with the requirements of this Act; or “(ii) the tobacco product is exempt from the requirements of section 905(j) pursuant to a regulation issued under section 905(j)(3).

“(B) APPLICATION TO CERTAIN POST-FEBRUARY 15, 2007, PRODUCTS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a tobacco product—

“(i) that was first introduced or delivered for introduction into interstate commerce for commercial distribution in the United States after February 15, 2007, and prior to the date that is 21 months after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act; and

“(ii) for which a report was submitted under section 905(j) within such 21-month period, except that subparagraph (A) shall apply to the tobacco product if the Secretary issues an order that the tobacco product is not substantially equivalent.

“(3) SUBSTANTIALLY EQUIVALENT DEFINED.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In this section and section 905(j), the term ‘substantially equivalent’ or ‘substantial equivalence’ means, with respect to the tobacco product being compared to the predicate tobacco product, that the Secretary by order has found that the tobacco product—

“(i) has the same characteristics as the predicate tobacco product; or

“(ii) has different characteristics and the information submitted contains information, including clinical data if deemed necessary by the Secretary, that demonstrates that it is not appropriate to regulate the product under this section because the product does not raise different questions of public health.

“(B) CHARACTERISTICS.—In subparagraph (A), the term ‘characteristics’ means the materials, ingredients, design, composition, heating source, or other features of a tobacco product.

“(C) LIMITATION.—A tobacco product may not be found to be substantially equivalent to a predicate tobacco product that has been removed from the market at the initiative of the Secretary or that has been determined by a judicial order to be misbranded or adulterated.

“(4) HEALTH INFORMATION.—

“(A) SUMMARY.—As part of a submission under section 905(j) respecting a tobacco product, the person required to file a premarket notification under such section shall provide an adequate summary of any health information related to the tobacco product or state that such information will be made available upon request by any person.

“(B) REQUIRED INFORMATION.—Any summary under subparagraph (A) respecting a tobacco product shall contain detailed information regarding data concerning adverse health effects and shall be made available to the public by the Secretary within 30 days of the issuance of a determination that such tobacco product is substantially equivalent to another tobacco product.

“(1) CONTENTS.—An application under this section shall contain—

“(A) full reports of all information, published or known to, or which should reasonably be known to, the applicant, concerning investigations which have been made to show the health risks of such tobacco product and whether such tobacco product presents less risk than other tobacco products;

“(B) a full statement of the components, ingredients, additives, and properties, and of the principle or principles of operation, of such tobacco product;

“(C) a full description of the methods used in, and the facilities and controls used for, the manufacture, processing, and, when relevant, packing and installation of, such tobacco product;

“(D) an identifying reference to any tobacco product standard under section 907 which would be applicable to any aspect of such tobacco product, and either adequate information to show that such aspect of such tobacco product fully meets such tobacco product standard or adequate information to justify any deviation from such standard;

“(E) such samples of such tobacco product and of components thereof as the Secretary may reasonably require;

“(F) specimens of the labeling proposed to be used for such tobacco product; and “(G) such other information relevant to the subject matter of the application as the Secretary may require.

“(2) REFERRAL TO TOBACCO PRODUCTS SCIENTIFIC ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—Upon receipt of an application meeting the requirements set forth in paragraph (1), the Secretary—

“(A) may, on the Secretary’s own initiative; or

“(B) may, upon the request of an applicant, refer such application to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee for reference and for submission (within such period as the Secretary may establish) of a report and recommendation respecting the application, together with all underlying data and the reasons or basis for the recommendation.

“(c) ACTION ON APPLICATION.—

“(1) DEADLINE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—As promptly as possible, but in no event later than 180 days after the receipt of an application under subsection (b), the Secretary, after considering the report and recommendation submitted under subsection (b)(2), shall—

“(i) issue an order that the new product may be introduced or delivered for introduction into interstate commerce if the Secretary finds that none of the grounds specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection applies; or

“(ii) issue an order that the new product may not be introduced or delivered for introduction into interstate commerce if the Secretary finds (and sets forth the basis for such finding as part of or accompanying such denial) that 1 or more grounds for denial specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection apply.

“(B) RESTRICTIONS ON SALE AND DISTRIBUTION.—An order under subparagraph (A)(i) may require that the sale and distribution of the tobacco product be restricted but only to the extent that the sale and distribution of a tobacco product may be restricted under a regulation under section 906(d).

“(2) DENIAL OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall deny an application submitted under subsection (b) if, upon the basis of the information submitted to the Secretary as part of the application and any other information before the Secretary with respect to such tobacco product, the Secretary finds that—

“(A) there is a lack of a showing that permitting such tobacco product to be marketed would be appropriate for the protection of the public health;

“(B) the methods used in, or the facilities or controls used for, the manufacture, processing, or packing of such tobacco product do not conform to the requirements of section 906(e);

“(C) based on a fair evaluation of all material facts, the proposed labeling is false or misleading in any particular; or

“(D) such tobacco product is not shown to conform in all respects to a tobacco product standard in effect under section 907, and there is a lack of adequate information to justify the deviation from such standard.

“(3) DENIAL INFORMATION.—Any denial of an application shall, insofar as the Secretary determines to be practicable, be accompanied by a statement informing the applicant of the measures required to remove such application from deniable form (which measures may include further research by the applicant in accordance with 1 or more protocols prescribed by the Secretary).

“(4) BASIS FOR FINDING.—For purposes of this section, the finding as to whether the marketing of a tobacco product for which an application has been submitted is appropriate for the protection of the public health shall be determined with respect to the risks and benefits to the population as a whole, including users and nonusers of the tobacco product, and taking into account—

“(A) the increased or decreased likelihood that existing users of tobacco products will stop using such products; and

“(B) the increased or decreased likelihood that those who do not use tobacco products will start using such products.

“(5) BASIS FOR ACTION.—

“(A) INVESTIGATIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(A), whether permitting a tobacco product to be marketed would be appropriate for the protection of the public health shall, when appropriate, be determined on the basis of well-controlled investigations, which may include 1 or more clinical investigations by experts qualified by training and experience to evaluate the tobacco product.

“(B) OTHER EVIDENCE.—If the Secretary determines that there exists valid scientific evidence (other than evidence derived from investigations described in subparagraph (A)) which is sufficient to evaluate the tobacco product, the Secretary may authorize that the determination for purposes of paragraph (2)(A) be made on the basis of such evidence.

“(d) WITHDRAWAL AND TEMPORARY SUSPENSION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, upon obtaining, where appropriate, advice on scientific matters from the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee, and after due notice and opportunity for informal hearing for a tobacco product for which an order was issued under subsection (c)(1)(A)(i), issue an order withdrawing the order if the Secretary finds—

“(A) that the continued marketing of such tobacco product no longer is appropriate for the protection of the public health;

“(B) that the application contained or was accompanied by an untrue statement of a material fact;

“(C) that the applicant—

“(i) has failed to establish a system for maintaining records, or has repeatedly or deliberately failed to maintain records or to make reports, required by an applicable regulation under section 909;

“(ii) has refused to permit access to, or copying or verification of, such records as required by section 704; or

“(iii) has not complied with the requirements of section 905;

“(D) on the basis of new information before the Secretary with respect to such tobacco product, evaluated together with the evidence before the Secretary when the application was reviewed, that the methods used in, or the facilities and controls used for, the manufacture, processing, packing, or installation of such tobacco product do not conform with the requirements of section 906(e) and were not brought into conformity with such requirements within a reasonable time after receipt of written notice from the Secretary of nonconformity;

“(E) on the basis of new information before the Secretary, evaluated together with the evidence before the Secretary when the application was reviewed, that the labeling of such tobacco product, based on a fair evaluation of all material facts, is false or misleading in any particular and was not corrected within a reasonable time after receipt of written notice from the Secretary of such fact; or

“(F) on the basis of new information before the Secretary, evaluated together with the evidence before the Secretary when such order was issued, that such tobacco product is not shown to conform in all respects to a tobacco product standard which is in effect under section 907, compliance with which was a condition to the issuance of an order relating to the application, and that there is a lack of adequate information to justify the deviation from such standard.

“(2) APPEAL.—The holder of an application subject to an order issued under paragraph (1) withdrawing an order issued pursuant to subsection (c)(1)(A)(i) may, by petition filed on or before the 30th day after the date upon which such holder receives notice of such withdrawal, obtain review thereof in accordance with section 912.

“(3) TEMPORARY SUSPENSION.—If, after providing an opportunity for an informal hearing, the Secretary determines there is reasonable probability that the continuation of distribution of a tobacco product under an order would cause serious, adverse health consequences or death, that is greater than ordinarily caused by tobacco products on the market, the Secretary shall by order temporarily suspend the authority of the manufacturer to market the product. If the Secretary issues such an order, the Secretary shall proceed expeditiously under paragraph (1) to withdraw such application.

“(e) SERVICE OF ORDER.—An order issued by the Secretary under this section shall be served—

“(1) in person by any officer or employee of the department designated by the Secretary; or

“(2) by mailing the order by registered mail or certified mail addressed to the applicant at the applicant's last known address in the records of the Secretary.

“(f) RECORDS.—

“(1) ADDITIONAL INFORMATION.—In the case of any tobacco product for which an order issued pursuant to subsection (c)(1)(A)(i) for an application filed under subsection (b) is in effect, the applicant shall establish and maintain such records, and make such reports to the Secretary, as the Secretary may by regulation, or by order with respect to such application, prescribe on the basis of a finding that such records and reports are necessary in order to enable the Secretary to determine, or facilitate a determination of, whether there is or may be grounds for withdrawing or temporarily suspending such order.

“(2) ACCESS TO RECORDS.—Each person required under this section to maintain records, and each person in charge of custody thereof, shall, upon request of an officer or employee designated by the Secretary, permit such officer or employee at all reasonable times to have access to and copy and verify such records.

this chapter under such conditions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

“SEC. 911. MODIFIED RISK TOBACCO PRODUCTS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—No person may introduce or deliver for introduction into interstate commerce any modified risk tobacco product unless an order issued pursuant to subsection (g) is effective with respect to such product.

“(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) MODIFIED RISK TOBACCO PRODUCT.—The term ‘modified risk tobacco product’ means any tobacco product that is sold or distributed for use to reduce harm or the risk of tobacco-related disease associated with commercially marketed tobacco products.

“(2) SOLD OR DISTRIBUTED.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to a tobacco product, the term ‘sold or distributed for use to reduce harm or the risk of tobacco-related disease associated with commercially marketed tobacco products’ means a tobacco product—

“(i) the label, labeling, or advertising of which represents explicitly or implicitly that—

“(I) the tobacco product presents a lower risk of tobacco-related disease or is less harmful than one or more other commercially marketed tobacco products;

“(II) the tobacco product or its smoke contains a reduced level of a substance or presents a reduced exposure to a substance; or

“(III) the tobacco product or its smoke does not contain or is free of a substance;

“(ii) the label, labeling, or advertising of which uses the descriptors ‘light’, ‘mild’, or ‘low’ or similar descriptors; or

“(iii) the tobacco product manufacturer of which has taken any action directed to consumers through the media or otherwise, other than by means of the tobacco product's label, labeling, or advertising, after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, respecting the product that would be reasonably expected to result in consumers believing that the tobacco product or its smoke may present a lower risk of disease or is less harmful than one or more commercially marketed tobacco products, or presents a reduced exposure to, or does not contain or is free of, a substance or substances.

“(B) LIMITATION.—No tobacco product shall be considered to be ‘sold or distributed for use to reduce harm or the risk of tobacco-related disease associated with commercially marketed tobacco products’, except as described in subparagraph (A).

“(C) SMOKELESS TOBACCO PRODUCT.—No smokeless tobacco product shall be considered to be ‘sold or distributed for use to reduce harm or the risk of tobacco-related disease associated with commercially marketed tobacco products’ solely because its label, labeling, or advertising uses the following phrases to describe such product and its use: ‘smokeless tobacco’, ‘smokeless tobacco product’, ‘not consumed by smoking’, ‘does not produce smoke’, ‘smokefree’, ‘smoke-free’, ‘without smoke’, ‘no smoke’, or ‘not smoke’.

“(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of paragraph (2)(A)(ii) shall take effect 12 months after the date of enactment of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act for those products whose label, labeling, or advertising contains the terms described in such paragraph on such date of enactment. The effective date shall be with respect to the date of manufacture, provided that, in any case, beginning 30 days after such effective date, a manufacturer shall not introduce into the domestic commerce of the United States any product, irrespective of the date of manufacture, that is not in conformance with paragraph (2)(A)(ii).

“(c) TOBACCO DEPENDENCE PRODUCTS.—A product that is intended to be used for the treatment of tobacco dependence, including smoking cessation, is not a modified risk tobacco product under this section if it has been approved as a drug or device by the Food and Drug Administration and is subject to the requirements of chapter V.

“(d) FILING.—Any person may file with the Secretary an application for a modified risk tobacco product. Such application shall include—

“(1) a description of the proposed product and any proposed advertising and labeling;

“(2) the conditions for using the product;

“(3) the formulation of the product;

“(4) sample product labels and labeling;

“(5) all documents (including underlying scientific information) relating to research findings conducted, supported, or possessed by the tobacco product manufacturer relating to the effect of the product on tobacco-related diseases and health-related conditions, including information both favorable and unfavorable to the ability of the product to reduce risk or exposure and relating to human health;

“(6) data and information on how consumers actually use the tobacco product; and

“(7) such other information as the Secretary may require.

“(e) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary shall make the application described in subsection (d) publicly available (except matters in the application which are trade secrets or otherwise confidential, commercial information) and shall request comments by interested persons on the information contained in the application and on the label, labeling, and advertising accompanying such application.

“(f) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall refer to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee any application submitted under this section.

“(2) RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 60 days after the date an application is referred to the Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee under paragraph (1), the Advisory Committee shall report its recommendations on the application to the Secretary.

“(g) MARKETING.—

“(1) MODIFIED RISK PRODUCTS.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall, with respect to an application submitted under this section, issue an order that a modified risk product may be commercially marketed only if the Secretary determines that the applicant has demonstrated that such product, as it is actually used by consumers, will—

“(A) significantly reduce harm and the risk of tobacco-related disease to individual tobacco users; and

“(B) benefit the health of the population as a whole taking into account both users of tobacco products and persons who do not currently use tobacco products.

“(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN PRODUCTS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may issue an order that a tobacco product may be introduced or delivered for introduction into interstate commerce, pursuant to an application under this section, with respect to a tobacco product that may not be commercially marketed under paragraph (1) if the Secretary makes the findings required under this paragraph and determines that the applicant has demonstrated that—

“(i) such order would be appropriate to promote the public health;

“(ii) any aspect of the label, labeling, and advertising for such product that would cause the tobacco product to be a modified risk tobacco product under subsection (b) is limited to an explicit or implicit representation that such tobacco product or its smoke does not contain or is free of a substance or contains a reduced level of a substance, or presents a reduced exposure to a substance in tobacco smoke;

“(iii) scientific evidence is not available and, using the best available scientific methods, cannot be made available without conducting long-term epidemiological studies for an application to meet the standards set forth in paragraph (1); and

“(iv) the scientific evidence that is available without conducting long-term epidemiological studies demonstrates that a measurable and substantial reduction in morbidity or mortality among individual tobacco users is reasonably likely in subsequent studies.

“(B) ADDITIONAL FINDINGS REQUIRED.—To issue an order under subparagraph (A) the Secretary must also find that the applicant has demonstrated that—

“(i) the magnitude of the overall reductions in exposure to the substance or substances which are the subject of the application is substantial, such substance or substances are harmful, and the product as actually used exposes consumers to the specified reduced level of the substance or substances;

“(ii) the product as actually used by consumers will not expose them to higher levels of other harmful substances compared to the similar types of tobacco products then on the market unless such increases are minimal and the reasonably likely overall impact of use of the product remains a substantial and measurable reduction in overall morbidity and mortality among individual tobacco users;

“(iii) testing of actual consumer perception shows that, as the applicant proposes to label and market the product, consumers will not be misled into believing that the product—

“(I) is or has been demonstrated to be less harmful; or

“(II) presents or has been demonstrated to present less of a risk of disease than 1 or more other commercially marketed tobacco products; and

“(iv) issuance of an order with respect to the application is expected to benefit the health of the population as a whole taking into account both users of tobacco products and persons who do not currently use tobacco products.

“(C) CONDITIONS OF MARKETING.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Applications subject to an order under this paragraph shall be limited to a term of not more than 5 years, but may be renewed upon a finding by the Secretary that the requirements of this paragraph continue to be satisfied based on the filing of a new application.

“(ii) AGREEMENTS BY APPLICANT.—An order under this paragraph shall be conditioned on the applicant's agreement to conduct postmarket surveillance and studies and to submit to the Secretary the results of such surveillance and studies to determine the impact of the order on consumer perception, behavior, and health and to enable the Secretary to review the accuracy of the determinations upon which the order was based in accordance with a protocol approved by the Secretary.

“(iii) ANNUAL SUBMISSION.—The results of such postmarket surveillance and studies described in clause (ii) shall be submitted annually.

“(3) BASIS.—The determinations under paragraphs (1) and (2) shall be based on—

“(A) the scientific evidence submitted by the applicant; and “(B) scientific evidence and other information that is made available to the Secretary.

“(4) BENEFIT TO HEALTH OF INDIVIDUALS AND OF POPULATION AS A WHOLE.—In making the determinations under paragraphs (1) and (2), the Secretary shall take into account—

“(A) the relative health risks to individuals of the tobacco product that is the subject of the application;

“(B) the increased or decreased likelihood that existing users of tobacco products who would otherwise stop using such products will switch to the tobacco product that is the subject of the application;

“(C) the increased or decreased likelihood that persons who do not use tobacco products will start using the tobacco product that is the subject of the application;

“(D) the risks and benefits to persons from the use of the tobacco product that is the subject of the application as compared to the use of products for smoking cessation approved under chapter V to treat nicotine dependence; and “(E) comments, data, and information submitted by interested persons.

“(h) ADDITIONAL CONDITIONS FOR MARKETING.—

“(1) MODIFIED RISK PRODUCTS.—The Secretary shall require for the marketing of a product under this section that any advertising or labeling concerning modified risk products enable the public to comprehend the information concerning modified risk and to understand the relative significance of such information in the context of total health and in relation to all of the diseases and health-related conditions associated with the use of tobacco products.

“(2) COMPARATIVE CLAIMS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may require for the marketing of a product under this subsection that a claim comparing a tobacco product to 1 or more other commercially marketed tobacco products shall compare the tobacco product to a commercially marketed tobacco product that is representative of that type of tobacco product on the market (for example the average value of the top 3 brands of an established regular tobacco product).

“(B) QUANTITATIVE COMPARISONS.—The Secretary may also require, for purposes of subparagraph (A), that the percent (or fraction) of change and identity of the reference tobacco product and a quantitative comparison of the amount of the substance claimed to be reduced shall be stated in immediate proximity to the most prominent claim.

“(3) LABEL DISCLOSURE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may require the disclosure on the label of other substances in the tobacco product, or substances that may be produced by the consumption of that tobacco product, that may affect a disease or health-related condition or may increase the risk of other diseases or health-related conditions associated with the use of tobacco products.

“(B) CONDITIONS OF USE.—If the conditions of use of the tobacco product may affect the risk of the product to human health, the Secretary may require the labeling of conditions of use.

“(4) TIME.—An order issued under subsection (g)(1) shall be effective for a specified period of time.

“(5) ADVERTISING.—The Secretary may require, with respect to a product for which an applicant obtained an order under subsection (g)(1), that the product comply with requirements relating to advertising and promotion of the tobacco product.

“(i) POSTMARKET SURVEILLANCE AND STUDIES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall require, with respect to a product for which an applicant obtained an order under subsection (g)(1), that the applicant conduct postmarket surveillance and studies for such a tobacco product to determine the impact of the order issuance on consumer perception, behavior, and health, to enable the Secretary to review the accuracy of the determinations upon which the order was based, and to provide information that the Secretary determines is otherwise necessary regarding the use or health risks involving the tobacco product. The results of postmarket surveillance and studies shall be submitted to the Secretary on an annual basis.

“(2) SURVEILLANCE PROTOCOL.—Each applicant required to conduct a surveillance of a tobacco product under paragraph (1) shall, within 30 days after receiving notice that the applicant is required to conduct such surveillance, submit, for the approval of the Secretary, a protocol for the required surveillance. The Secretary, within 60 days of the receipt of such protocol, shall determine if the principal investigator proposed to be used in the surveillance has sufficient qualifications and experience to conduct such surveillance and if such protocol will result in collection of the data or other information designated by the Secretary as necessary to protect the public health.

“(j) WITHDRAWAL OF AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary, after an opportunity for an informal hearing, shall withdraw an order under subsection (g) if the Secretary determines that—

“(1) the applicant, based on new information, can no longer make the demonstrations required under subsection (g), or the Secretary can no longer make the determinations required under subsection (g);

“(2) the application failed to include material information or included any untrue statement of material fact;

“(3) any explicit or implicit representation that the product reduces risk or exposure is no longer valid, including if—

“(A) a tobacco product standard is established pursuant to section 907;

“(B) an action is taken that affects the risks presented by other commercially marketed tobacco products that were compared to the product that is the subject of the application; or

“(C) any postmarket surveillance or studies reveal that the order is no longer consistent with the protection of the public health;

“(4) the applicant failed to conduct or submit the postmarket surveillance and studies required under subsection (g)(2)(C)(ii) or subsection (i); or “(5) the applicant failed to meet a condition imposed under subsection (h).

“(k) CHAPTER IV OR V.—A product for which the Secretary has issued an order pursuant to subsection (g) shall not be subject to chapter IV or V.

“(2) ENFORCEMENT.—Any advertising that violates this chapter or a provision of the regulations referred to in section 102 of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, is an unfair or deceptive act or practice under section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act and shall be considered a violation of a rule promulgated under section 18 of that Act.

respects except the labels, packaging design, logo, trade dress, trademark, brand name, or any combination thereof, shall be considered as a single brand; and “(2) may require that tobacco product manufacturers, packagers, or importers make disclosures relating to the results of the testing of tar and nicotine through labels or advertising or other appropriate means, and make disclosures regarding the results of the testing of other constituents, including smoke constituents, ingredients, or additives, that the Secretary determines should be disclosed to the public to protect the public health and will not mislead consumers about the risk of tobacco-related disease.

“(c) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have the authority under this chapter to conduct or to require the testing, reporting, or disclosure of tobacco product constituents, including smoke constituents.

“(d) SMALL TOBACCO PRODUCT MANUFACTURERS.—

“(1) FIRST COMPLIANCE DATE.—The initial regulations promulgated under subsection (a) shall not impose requirements on small tobacco product manufacturers before the later of—

“(B) the initial date set by the Secretary for compliance with such regulations by manufacturers that are not small tobacco product manufacturers.

“(2) TESTING AND REPORTING INITIAL COMPLIANCE PERIOD.—

“(A) 4-YEAR PERIOD.—The initial regulations promulgated under subsection (a) shall give each small tobacco product manufacturer a 4-year period over which to conduct testing and reporting for all of its tobacco products. Subject to paragraph (1), the end of the first year of such 4-year period shall coincide with the initial date of compliance under this section set by the Secretary with respect to manufacturers that are not small tobacco product manufacturers or the end of the 2-year period following the final promulgation of such regulations, as described in paragraph (1)(A). A small tobacco product manufacturer shall be required—

“(i) to conduct such testing and reporting for 25 percent of its tobacco products during each year of such 4-year period; and

“(ii) to conduct such testing and reporting for its largest-selling tobacco products (as determined by the Secretary) before its other tobacco products, or in such other order of priority as determined by the Secretary.

“(B) CASE-BY-CASE DELAY.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the Secretary may, on a case-by-case basis, delay the date by which an individual small tobacco product manufacturer must conduct testing and reporting for its tobacco products under this section based upon a showing of undue hardship to such manufacturer. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the Secretary shall not extend the deadline for a small tobacco product manufacturer to conduct testing and reporting for all of its tobacco products beyond a total of 5 years after the initial date of compliance under this section set by the Secretary with respect to manufacturers that are not small tobacco product manufacturers.

“(3) SUBSEQUENT AND ADDITIONAL TESTING AND REPORTING.—The regulations promulgated under subsection (a) shall provide that, with respect to any subsequent or additional testing and reporting of tobacco products required under this section, such testing and reporting by a small tobacco product manufacturer shall be conducted in accordance with the timeframes described in paragraph (2)(A), except that, in the case of a new product, or if there has been a modification described in section 910(a)(1)(B) of any product of a small tobacco product manufacturer since the last testing and reporting required under this section, the Secretary shall require that any subsequent or additional testing and reporting be conducted in accordance with the same timeframe applicable to manufacturers that are not small tobacco product manufacturers.

“(4) JOINT LABORATORY TESTING SERVICES.—The Secretary shall allow any 2 or more small tobacco product manufacturers to join together to purchase laboratory testing services required by this section on a group basis in order to ensure that such manufacturers receive access to, and fair pricing of, such testing services.

“(B) the conditions described in paragraph (2) are met.

“(2) CONDITIONS.—Notwithstanding the requirements of this section, the Secretary may delay the date by which a small tobacco product manufacturer must be in compliance with the testing and reporting required by this section until such time as the testing is reported if, not later than 90 days before the deadline for reporting in accordance with this section, a small tobacco product manufacturer provides evidence to the Secretary demonstrating that—

“(A) the manufacturer has submitted the required products for testing to a laboratory and has done so sufficiently in advance of the deadline to create a reasonable expectation of completion by the deadline;

“(B) the products currently are awaiting testing by the laboratory; and

“(C) neither that laboratory nor any other laboratory is able to complete testing by the deadline at customary, nonexpedited testing fees.

“(3) EXTENSION.—The Secretary, taking into account the laboratory testing capacity that is available to tobacco product manufacturers, shall review and verify the evidence submitted by a small tobacco product manufacturer in accordance with paragraph (2). If the Secretary finds that the conditions described in such paragraph are met, the Secretary shall notify the small tobacco product manufacturer that the manufacturer shall not be considered to be in violation of the testing and reporting requirements of this section until the testing is reported or until 1 year after the reporting deadline has passed, whichever occurs sooner. If, however, the Secretary has not made a finding before the reporting deadline, the manufacturer shall not be considered to be in violation of such requirements until the Secretary finds that the conditions described in paragraph (2) have not been met, or until 1 year after the reporting deadline, whichever occurs sooner.

“(4) ADDITIONAL EXTENSION.—In addition to the time that may be provided under paragraph (3), the Secretary may provide further extensions of time, in increments of no more than 1 year, for required testing and reporting to occur if the Secretary determines, based on evidence properly and timely submitted by a small tobacco product manufacturer in accordance with paragraph (2), that a lack of available laboratory capacity prevents the manufacturer from completing the required testing during the period described in paragraph (3).

“(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in subsection (d) or (e) shall be construed to authorize the extension of any deadline, or to otherwise affect any timeframe, under any provision of this Act or the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act other than this section.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WAXMAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Waxman moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 532, the motion shall be debatable for 1 hour, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

It is hard to believe that we have finally reached this day. After more than a decade of effort and with countless delays and defeats along the way, at last we are about to enact truly historic legislation to protect the public health and to end the tobacco epidemic.

I am proud that we have made it to this point, but it has taken us far too long. It has been more than 45 years since the landmark Surgeon General report that found that cigarette smoking was responsible for a 70 percent increase in the mortality rate of smokers over nonsmokers and a 10 to 20 times greater risk of developing lung cancer. Forty-five years. That delay is a tragic testament to the power and influence of Big Tobacco in our country and on Congress. But that power is fading. Times have changed. Public opinion has changed. And the tobacco industry's ability to block essential public health legislation has come to an end.

Today is a day when strong and effective regulation finally is established as the crucial counterweight to the efforts and even deceptive practices of this industry. This is the day when Americans can begin to truly kick the habit with the full force of our laws marshaled to protect consumers, and especially our young people.

Many of us remember vividly the milestones that have led us to this moment. In 1994, tobacco executives stood up before my subcommittee and swore under oath that nicotine was not addictive. In 1996, the FDA tried to regulate tobacco products, but the Supreme Court told them they needed Congress to give them that specific legal authority. And now, 13 years later, here we are finally giving FDA that authority to regulate the leading preventable cause of death in America.

Regulating tobacco is the single most important thing that we can do right now to curb this deadly toll. And FDA is the only agency with the right combination of scientific expertise, regulatory experience, and public health mission to oversee these products effectively.

I am pleased that the Senate acted quickly and sent us back legislation nearly identical to what we passed 2 months ago with overwhelming support in this House. This legislation will direct FDA to end marketing and sales of tobacco to kids, to stop manufacturers from calling cigarettes "light" or "less dangerous" when they're not, and to require changes to what is in a cigarette, like toxic ingredients such as formaldehyde, benzene, radioactive elements, and other deadly chemicals.

Some have objected that this bill is too big a challenge for an already overburdened FDA. I disagree. It's clear to me that FDA's recent struggles are primarily a result of years of chronic underfunding and a failure of leadership in the last administration.

This history does not mean that FDA, with the strong and committed leadership it now has, cannot take on this critical role of protecting the country against the harm from cigarettes and other tobacco products. It simply means that when we give the agency this new responsibility, we must also give it the resources necessary to do the job and to do it well.

We have ensured that this will happen. The tobacco program will be fully funded through new user fees paid for by the industry. That money will go exclusively to the new tobacco center and will be enough for FDA to handle this task well. Furthermore, by setting up this system, we have ensured that the new tobacco program will have no impact on other vital programs at FDA. In fact, the agency's new commissioner, Dr. Margaret Hamburg, has expressed her enthusiastic support for the bill as a "major advance in protecting the public health."

In a recent letter to Senator KENNEDY about this legislation, Commissioner Hamburg made clear that FDA is eager to begin carrying out its new responsibilities under this law. President Obama has also praised this legislation as both historic and common sense, describing it as an integral part of his plan to protect America's children and reform our health care system. It's clear that this administration and FDA itself are more than ready to take this on, and we just need to give them the law that will allow them to begin.

In the bill, we have provided everything necessary to take this historic step: a comprehensive and flexible set of new authorities and full, certain funding. The final ingredient is the political will to do the right thing. For the first time in many years, we have finally got that, too.

The breadth of support for this bill is remarkable; it includes over 1,000 medical, public health, faith and community groups from AARP to the American Academy of Pediatrics, from the Southern Baptist Convention to the Islamic Society of North America. It is supported by the American Lung Association, the American Heart Association, the American Cancer Society, the groups that are best situated to understand the damage caused by tobacco and to recognize that a renewed FDA can and must take on this new authority.

The diversity of support for this bill shows just how critical it is to all Americans. Tobacco does not discriminate when it robs people of their health, their productivity, and their lives. That is why we must come together to rob tobacco of its influence over Americans.

Finally, I want to note that this bill reflects a number of changes made throughout the process to respond to specific concerns that we've heard. In committee consideration of this bill over the past 2 years, we made changes to ensure fairness and flexibility for convenience stores, tobacco growers, and small manufacturers. We worked with Republican colleagues to incorporate their suggestions. We worked with members of the Congressional Black Caucus to ensure that menthol cigarettes will be an early focus of attention by the agency, and that the agency has the authority to deal with these and other products.

I know that the Senate also has made changes to further strengthen the bill in response to input from both sides of the aisle. I want to thank my colleague, Representative TODD PLATTS, for his strong leadership on this legislation, as well as Representatives JOHN DINGELL and FRANK PALLONE for their diligent work in moving this bill forward over the years.

I also want to thank Representatives ED TOWNS, STEPHEN LYNCH and IKE SKELTON, all of whom were critical in getting us to this point. Each of these individuals made this possible and produced a great victory for public health.

Today is a tremendous day. I am proud to be part of this historic moment when Congress finally stands up to Big Tobacco and stands up for the health of all Americans. That is the task before us as we send this bill on to the President of the United States.

Madam Speaker, I wish to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to congratulate HENRY WAXMAN and Senator KENNEDY and others with regard to their tenacity and persistence over the years. What is unfortunate is that we were not able to incorporate harm reduction strategies. It is also unfortunate that we are continuing to place more burdens and responsibilities upon FDA.

What I had sought to do is to regulate tobacco. I do not smoke, I do not encourage anyone to smoke. The health risks associated with smoking, I believe people recognize them and are cognizant.

Tobacco is an adult product. It's legal. And we are faced with this question of moralism versus pragmatism. And you have to be careful when you go down this path in weighing the balance of moralism versus pragmatism. So what I had sought to do was choose the pragmatic side of the equation and to incorporate a harm reduction strategy with the abstinence approach in the Kennedy-Waxman legislation.

While the authors of the bill, Madam Speaker, would say, Well, STEVE, we have harm reduction in the bill. Well, it is mentioned in the bill, but there is a 2-tier standard in the bill that has been cleverly written in a manner to be an entry barrier to new innovative tobacco products. And that 2-tier standard is one that first must be achieved at the individual level, and then you must achieve this standard at the public at large. And the purpose is truly an entry barrier.

Now, if we wanted to work together and truly have a new scientific, pragmatic approach to improve the public health of our country, we would be doing both; we would be doing abstinence along with harm reduction. You see, that's exactly what HENRY WAXMAN and others in this body do when it comes to teenage sex. They say, okay, by this body, Democrats and Republicans enjoin, we have both; we promote abstinence while also we have policies that promote harm reduction in our efforts to lower sexually transmitted diseases.

With regard to HIV, there are needle-exchange programs while we also try to promote abstinence. But all of a sudden now, when it comes to tobacco, approaches that we take in other forms of public health, whether it's in sanitary issues or whether it's in teenage sex issues or in HIV issues, all of a sudden we don't want to apply it to tobacco. It is a curious thing for me that we don't want to apply harm reduction strategies to tobacco.

So I would say to my good friend, Mr. WAXMAN, I think where we are is that you can have your day in the light, you have earned it, but we are going to have to come back to the table because what we have done is we have locked down the marketplace. You have given a big checkmark to Phillip Morris and said that your market share is okay. And when you lock down the marketplace, and we then stifle innovation and we do not have competition in that marketplace, we truly don't have the ability, then, for these companies to track at-risk capital to make investments in a harm reduction strategy whereby we can migrate people down the continuum of risk.

So if this bill becomes law, we've got some real challenges in front of us. One of them is how do we stand up this new mission within FDA, an agency that is already very stressed and underresourced, and we're already going to be addressing issues in the committee regarding food safety and drug safety while we pile on more missions.

So I would say to my good friend that as soon as this bill is signed into law, a couple of things are going to happen. Number one, the lawyers will make a run to the Federal courts, and the Supreme Court will be back sitting in judgment over the provisions on advertising restrictions, not only potential unconstitutional provisions on the First Amendment with regard to the regulation of commercial speech, but also in the Fifth Amendment with regard to whether it's a constitutional taking or not.

So while that is going on, I will introduce legislation, I'll work with Ms. HARMAN, I'll work with others, I'll work with the chairman, on how we can best incorporate these harm-reduction strategies to truly improve public health.

Madam Speaker, I embrace the sincerity of Mr. WAXMAN and Mr. KENNEDY that they truly want to improve public health in the country, but this legislation, when we lock ourselves down to only what is presently available and that these nicotine replacement therapies only have a 7 percent success rate, I don't believe anyone here would endorse a 7 percent success rate as a good thing. It's failure. So we are going to have to go back to the drawing board here and figure out how we do a harm-reduction strategy to improve public health.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I want to inform my colleagues that there is a section in this bill that gives the FDA authority to develop harm-reduction strategies, and I think that's where it ought to be, in the hands of people who will follow the science in order to protect the public health.

Madam Speaker, I yield, at this time, 2 minutes to the chairman of our Health Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, who has been a staunch supporter of this legislation and has looked after all the health matters that come before the Congress, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. I want to thank Chairman WAXMAN for his tireless work on this tobacco legislation. Madam Speaker, today is long overdue, and he should be so proud of the fact that this is finally passing today and going to the President's desk.

As we pursue serious and historical health care reform, this legislation comes at the right time. Smoking kills. Smoking also is a major cause of cardiovascular disease, cancer, and a host of other illnesses. Almost half a million Americans die from their own cigarette smoking a year. And even more alarming, studies have estimated that more than 6 million children alive today will ultimately die from smoking.

In President Obama's call for health care reform, he cited the need to use our resources wisely and efficiently. Tobacco is a health care issue that taxes and burdens our health care system. The costs to private and public payers are over $96 billion annually. Regulating tobacco products is a win-win for our Nation's health and our need to be fiscally responsible in a time of economic hardship.

This bill will finally give the FDA the authority to regulate tobacco products, restrict tobacco marketing, especially the marketing techniques designed to entice and addict our children. They are vulnerable and impressionable, and the tobacco industry exploits that.

I was proud to be an original cosponsor of this bill in the House, and I'm even prouder to vote for this bill today because I know that it is long overdue.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds to respond to my good friend Mr. WAXMAN.

To say that harm-reduction strategies are best left to the FDA gives me great concern. If you truly believe that, then you should have never set a 2-tiered standard and built a paradigm in which they are to make judgments, if you truly believe that they're the ones who should have designed the strategies to improve public health. So I would be more than happy to work with the gentleman to repeal the 2-tiered standard if we're going to let them set the standard based on sound science to improve public health.

Madam Speaker, I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS).

Mr. PLATTS. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding time to me, especially given that we have different views on this piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. I appreciate the Senate's swift consideration of this bill. After many years of consideration, I'm pleased that this important public health legislation will finally be signed into law.

As one of the deadliest products on the market, tobacco must be subject to the same serious regulation and oversight that most other products consumed by Americans are subject to. This bill will help to ensure that Americans are fully aware of the harmful effects posed by tobacco products.

Most importantly, this legislation will ensure that tobacco products are not advertised to or sold to children. Addiction to tobacco begins almost universally in childhood and adolescence. Tobacco companies have long taken advantage of this vulnerability by promoting their products through such tactics as cartoon advertisements, free tobacco-themed merchandise that appeals to kids, and sponsorship of sporting and entertainment events. With health care costs spiraling out of control every year, the cost of treating these smokers later in life is fast becoming prohibitively expensive. Prohibiting advertising to children will go a long way in preventing young people in America from starting to smoke and will save billions of dollars and, most importantly, countless lives in the years to come.

It is important to emphasize that this bill does not ban tobacco products. Rather, H.R. 1256 allows the FDA to scientifically evaluate the health benefits and risks posed by ingredients in cigarettes and takes steps to reduce the harm caused by tobacco products. This legislation preserves an adult's choice to smoke and makes sure that tobacco products marketed as safe alternatives to cigarettes are, in fact, scientifically safer.

I am pleased to have worked with my colleague, the distinguished chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, HENRY WAXMAN, the gentleman from California, on this legislation. I commend him for his leadership on this issue as well as former Congressman Tom Davis.

I encourage a "yes" vote.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

It is nicotine that causes the consumption of tobacco. So I understand how truly, in my words, outraged then Chairman WAXMAN was and still is with regard to testimony that occurred years ago when he was the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health.

Now, if it is the nicotine from which adult users receive their satisfaction, the real issue is how do they gain access to nicotine in a manner that reduces their health risk? That's the issue. That's my passion.

I am not a smoker. I don't advocate for people to smoke. My charge and challenge is how do we improve public health in our country? And I don't want this abstinence-only approach. So if it's nicotine for which people want to gain access to and it's an adult product, then shouldn't we be trying to figure out methods or products where people can gain access to nicotine that is less harmful?

During the debate on the rule, Madam Speaker, I would share to my colleague, Chairman WAXMAN, an individual brought up a head of lettuce and said that there is more regulation on a head of lettuce than tobacco. And I guess it was an effort to be cute, but the real point here is what I shared, Madam Speaker, and to my friend Mr. WAXMAN, you could have smoked that lettuce and you would still end up with the same problems. You could cut the grass in your yard, dry it and roll it up in a cigarette and smoke it, and you're still going to have a lot of problems. It is the smoke that kills, not the nicotine. It's the smoke.

So when you look and you say, well, if the smoke is the killer because of the inhalation of the tobacco smoke, that's responsible for the pandemic of cancers, heart disease, respiratory disease, and these deadly results.

So I'm going back to this harm reduction. So despite decades of intense efforts to eradicate smoking, more than 40 million adults continue to smoke cigarettes, and they're likely to continue because we don't have this ability to migrate them to other products. It's extremely important, when we talk about a harm-reduction strategy, that not only is it the access to a particular product, it is the education of the people at large as to what type of products that they can avail themselves to that have less harmful health results. That should be our goal and that has been embraced.

The American Association of Public Health Physicians noted last year, Enhancement of current policies based on the premise that all tobacco products are equally risky will yield only small and barely measurable reductions in tobacco-related illness and death.

So in the public debate, there is sort of this presumption that all tobacco products are harmful. Well, all tobacco products have a degree of health hazards, but some are more harmful than others. So cigar and pipe are not subject to this legislation; yet they are the most harmful to the human body of all of the carcinogens that can be inhaled.

So how do we migrate people? And I think that's what is extremely important. And let's stop this premise that all tobacco products are equally risky; that Swedish snus, even though it's 98 percent less harmful than an unfiltered cigarette, should not be treated as though they're both just as harmful. They're not. If you're able to pasteurize and take away the nitrosamines, yet people can gain access to their nicotine, you know what? That ought to be something we should talk about. That ought to be something we should promote.

And the reason, Madam Speaker, that if we just turn this over to the FDA, like Chairman WAXMAN has just suggested, and let them come up with these strategies, it's not going to be able to get into the hands of the American people because of the 2-tiered standard that has been set in this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my esteemed colleague from the State of Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding, my good friend and colleague of 34 years ago. We entered Congress together.

I do not propose to read this entire document, but it is the report of the hearings, the committee report conducted by my predecessor in Congress, John Blatnik, in 1957 on false and misleading advertising among a number of products and the failure of the Federal Trade Commission to intervene on behalf of the public.

The leading testimony on false and misleading advertising on filter-tipped cigarettes was a statement of Dr. Kyler Hammond, Director of Statistical Research for the American Cancer Society: We found lung cancer death rates to be extremely low among non-smokers and high among heavy cigarette smokers; 2,665 excess deaths, and this was 1957, among smokers. The conclusion of Dr. Hammond: The sum total of scientific evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that cigarette smoking is a causative factor in the rapidly increasing incidence of human epidermoid carcinoma of the lung.

Fifty-two years ago and we still have people in this Chamber and in the other body saying it's not a problem.

The report of the committee goes on to say, Benzpyrene is one of the substances containing carcinogenic agents. A known cancer-producing agent has been found in the smoke from cigarette paper and an amount from the tobacco itself. This component is known as 3,4-benzpyrene.

The report of the committee concludes:

The cigarette manufacturers have deceived the American public through their advertising of filter-tip cigarettes. Ironically, while denying the alleged health hazards of cigarette smoking, the industry has, in its advertising, made these charges appear true. Filter gives you more of what a filter is for, clean smoking; snowy white; pure; miracle tip; 20,000 filter traps, gives you more of what you changed to a filter for.

The committee concludes:

The Federal Trade Commission has failed to approach the problem of false and misleading advertising.

They failed then, 52 years ago. They failed us today. It is way long past time, many millions of deaths later, for this Congress to act decisively in the public interest. And also as a tribute to my predecessor, John Blatnik, who led this charge 52 years ago and who was rewarded with dissolution of his subcommittee for having rung the bell on false and misleading advertising by the cigarette companies.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased at this time to yield to one of the people without whom this bill would not even be possible, and that is the Speaker of the House, NANCY PELOSI, who has been such a strong leader for advancing the public health.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from California is recognized for 1 minute.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his generous recognition and rise to say, as a mother and a grandmother, what an important day this is for America's children and to say thank you to Mr. DINGELL. Some of the giants of the Congress have worked to help the children of America. Mr. DINGELL, Mr. WAXMAN, and Mr. PALLONE on the committee. On the Senate side, this legislation passing also is a real tribute to the leadership of Senator TED KENNEDY. It's really a great day. It's momentous. It's historic. We can't say that all the time about the legislation that we pass here. It would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of what is happening here today.

Today we have an opportunity to protect public health and prevent disease; and today we have an opportunity to honor our responsibility to our children, to protect them from the harm that can come to them from the use of tobacco.

Madam Speaker, tobacco is the number one cause of preventable deaths in the United States. According to the Centers for Disease Control, it is responsible for about one in five, or 443,000, deaths annually. Again, I want to acknowledge the great work of Chairman WAXMAN, Chairman DINGELL and Chairman PALLONE. We passed this bill before Easter. Happily last night, yesterday, it passed the Senate so that we can now pass the bill and send it to the President's desk for his signature.

Mr. OBERSTAR, in his role on Transportation and understanding how we had to get smoking out of Transportation, spelled out for us what the study told us and how it has been 52 years since we should have taken action. There is so much support on the outside of the Congress as well. A thousand organizations, everyone from the American Cancer Society, which we would suspect, the Campaign For Tobacco-Free Kids, the AARP, and the Presbyterian Church, just to name a few. They believe that passing this bill will save lives.

Every day Americans benefit from the oversight of the FDA on foods that we eat and medicines we take. That's their jurisdiction. Yet despite the fact that tobacco is one of the deadliest products in America, the FDA has had no authority to regulate it. This is just not right, and today we can correct that wrong. Right now tobacco is exempt from standards that apply to a can of soda or a box of pasta. Tobacco makers are exempt from critical and basic consumer protections, such as ingredient disclosure, product testing and restrictions on marketing to children.

This legislation grants the FDA the authority to regulate tobacco products. It also requires detailed disclosure of tobacco product ingredients and restricts tobacco marketing and sales to young people, among other things. And this legislation does all of this in a fiscally responsible way, funding the FDA tobacco activity through a user fee on tobacco manufacturers.

Because of lost productivity and health care expenditures, cigarette smoking costs our Nation more than $193 billion a year, almost $200 billion a year. By reducing the number of smokers, not only will this legislation save lives and reduce chronic disease, it will also reduce health care costs.

Today, approximately 3,500 young people will try a cigarette for the first time and another 1,000 will become addicted and become new regular, daily smokers. One-third of those children will eventually die prematurely because of smoking. We must do all that we can to prevent premature death from smoking, and today we have that opportunity.

Madam Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to support the aptly named Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. I hope that the children of America will see a strong bipartisan vote. This legislation deserves it, and then we can send it on to the President to be signed into law hopefully no later than next week.

Again, Mr. DINGELL, as a mother and a grandmother, I'm deeply in your debt for what you're doing for America's children. Mr. WAXMAN, thank you so much for bringing this bill to the floor. We went into session in January. Before Easter this bill had passed the House. Thank you for your leadership. Mr. PALLONE was very much a part of it. Again, Mr. OBERSTAR, thank you for your leadership.

But let's just say about Senator KENNEDY, this has been part of his life's work. He's worked on this for a very long time, of itself, discretely, the tobacco and smoking issue and then, of course, just as with Mr. DINGELL, the larger health issue for America. Today in passing this legislation, enabling the FDA to regulate tobacco, we are taking a giant step forward in making America healthier. Thank you all for your leadership.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

It is with great disappointment that I hear the words of the Speaker because she is truly endorsing a 7 percent success rate as an acceptable level of success for those who are trying to quit smoking. Also, if we really wanted to try to help children, then she should have endorsed what I sought to do; that is, put tobacco on an equal plain as alcohol to make it illegal to possess. But we're not doing that today.

I also said that the States, with regard to the MSA, the Master Settlement Agreement, the States are not spending the money like they should. In the last 10 years, States have spent just 3.2 percent of their tobacco-generated revenue on prevention and cessation programs. In the current fiscal year, no State is funding tobacco prevention programs at levels recommended by the CDC. So I had offered an opportunity here to the body to strengthen and truly protect children, yet it was not adopted by this body. So be very careful about coming to the floor and saying we're doing it for the children when, in fact, the opportunity was there and you did not.

I now yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I don't think anybody can argue at all with the intentions of the proposal of this bill. There is no question that cigarettes are very harmful. The question for me here is the process, and I find the process here atrocious because it assumes that authoritarianism is right, proper and that it works and that volunteerism, education, self-reliance and depending on oneself to take care of oneself is a proper approach. We totally reject our free society and assume that if we just have tobacco police roaming the country, that all of a sudden bad habits are going to be cleared up. We're dealing with bad habits, and these are bad for health. But let me tell you, I can bring you a list here of dozens and dozens of bad habits that lead to death. As a matter of fact, one of the things that we ought to consider is, how many people die from our drug war? We have a drug war, and about 3,000 people die from the use of illegal drugs. So we have a drug war going on, and tens of thousands of people die.

It's so exasperating at times because we always have two proposals here, or we have two ways of solving problems or dealing with tobacco. For decades, what did we do? We subsidized tobacco, and now we want to prohibit tobacco. Why don't we just let the people decide. This whole idea of either having to subsidize something or prohibit something shows a shallowness that I think we ought to challenge.

One part of this bill that I find particularly bad, but it is pervasive in so much of what we do, about 100 years ago we took the First Amendment and freedom of speech and chopped it into two pieces. We have political speech. Of course we like that. We're in the business of politics. But we take commercial speech, and we put it over here, and we regulate the living daylights out of commercial speech. That's not a First Amendment. That's chopping freedom in half, and that just leads to more problems. But this will lead to prohibition, and it won't work. This will just give us a lot more trouble.

You say, Well, how will these problems be handled if we just permit people to advertise? Well, you are not allowed to commit fraud; you are not allowed to commit slander; you are not allowed to commit any libel or slander or fraud. So there are prohibitions. But this approach can't work. It is assumed that people are total idiots, that they won't respond to education, that we have to be the nanny state. We want to expand the war on drugs, which is a total failure.

And look at what happened to the prohibition of alcohol. You say, Well, no, this is not going to be a prohibition. It is going to be prohibition. This is a form of prohibition. When you have prohibition or even approach prohibition, what do you create? You create the black market. We will see the black market come. Already the taxes are opening up the doors of the black market.

All I ask for is people to reconsider, believe that freedom, self-reliance and individualism can solve these problems a lot better than a bunch of politicians, bureaucrats and tobacco police here from Washington, D.C.

Mr. BUYER. I yield myself 30 seconds.

I would say that the gentleman and I are not always in total agreement. The substitute that I brought to the floor actually sought to regulate tobacco, and I know you did not agree with my substitute. I believe in the regulation of tobacco. I sought to do that. I just don't believe it should be done in FDA. We tried to create a harm reduction center to do that. But I respect the gentleman's views.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased at this time to yield 3 minutes to the very distinguished chairman emeritus of the Energy and Commerce Committee, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), who has played an essential role in fighting against tobacco and getting us to this day today.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank my good friend and colleague, the chairman of the committee, Mr. WAXMAN; and I commend him for his leadership on this matter. I am also delighted that we have this bill on the floor today. I urge my colleagues to support the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. I would point out that we will be shortly following it up with legislation to protect Americans from dangerous foods and to give the Food and Drug Administration the authority and the money which it needs. That will be followed by additional legislation to address the question of pharmaceuticals.

I urge my colleagues to recognize that this not only does what needs doing, but it also gives to the Food and Drug Administration the authority and the money which it needs and the personnel which it needs to carry forward its mission as it goes about its business. I would point out, for too long we have starved them for authority, resources and personnel. It is time something be done about this. I am not going to give you an argument about this situation—that will be in my written extended remarks—but I want to tell my colleagues that the graveyards are full of people who occupy those places because they smoked and because we tried volunteerism.

Well, volunteerism filled the graveyards, and the constant attacks that have been made on the Food and Drug Administration and the deprivation of proper authority to carry forward its responsibilities and the personnel it needs have brought us to the situation where we have to do the kind of thing that we are saying.

So don't talk to me about volunteerism. Understand that it has failed calamitously and people are dying every day because they have smoked.

Having said that, I want to tell you a little story about when we passed the first legislation to begin to warn people about the dangers of tobacco that were found by the Surgeon General in his report to the United States and to the Congress.

A little guy came before the committee, and he testified before my dear friend John Moss and I, who were the major proponents of that particular legislation at that time. He said, Now, you don't know me, but I am a pathologist and an internal medicine man. That means that I can tell you why you are going to die, or I can tell you why you did die.

He said, I don't have a prepared statement here today, but I do have a number of exhibits I would like to present to the committee.

So he reached in his briefcase and he pulled out a human lung. He said, Now, this is a normal person's human lung. It had a certain life to it.

The next exhibit he pulled out was one of a fellow who had died of squamous cancer. He said, These are squamous cells. It looked like a bowl of caviar, a painful way to go.

He then showed us the lung of somebody who had died of emphysema. It was white. It lacked life. He said, This man literally strangled because he did not have the ability to derive the oxygen from the air.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WAXMAN. I yield an additional 1 minute.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman.

He pulled out another lung. He said, Now, this is the lung of a smoker. It was black, dirty and nasty, and you would not want to have it inside of you.

He said, Now, my message to the committee is very simple. If you smoke long enough, you are going to die of cancer of the lung or you are going to die of some other kind of ailment which is induced by your smoking, whether it is of the lung or whether it is of some other organ, including the mouth, the throat, or another part of the body as far away as the fingertips.

I just want my colleagues to understand, finally we are doing something. If a person wants to be silly enough to smoke, he can still do so; but he is going to get a warning, and the tobacco companies are going to have to provide proper, decent, honorable behavior, and they are going to have to do the things that warn the American people of this.

We have a responsible agency which this legislation will properly fund and finance. We will give them the authority and the personnel and the capabilities of doing what they need to do. We are going to follow it with other legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support this and support the other legislation when it comes.

I rise today in strong support of the Senate Amendment to H.R. 1256, "Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act".

The decision to vote in favor of today's bill is a very easy one. It was an easy one, because I am convinced that the "Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act" will go a long way in regulating the most unregulated consumer product on the market today. A product which:

Is the leading preventable cause of death in the United States;

Kills more than 400,000 Americans annually; and Accounts for more than $96 billion in health care costs every year.

Every day, approximately 3,500 kids will try a cigarette for the first time, and another 1,000 we become new, regular habituate smokers.

The legislation will restrict marketing and sales to youth; grant FDA authority to restrict tobacco marketing; require detailed disclosure of ingredients; and allow FDA to require changes to tobacco products to protect the public health.

I commend Chairman WAXMAN and my dear friend, Senator KENNEDY, for their persistent leadership on this legislation in the Congress. I am honored to have my name associated with the legislation and for the opportunity I had to work with them on this issue.

Madam Speaker, I know firsthand that the "Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act" is good piece of legislation. I had the distinct pleasure of shepherding it through the Energy and Commerce Committee last year. Today's legislation largely reflects the work we did then.

Madam Speaker, this legislation has been in the works for a long time. Nothing stands in our way to send it to the President's desk. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the "Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act"—the American people need it and they deserve it.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLINTOCK).

Mr. MCCLINTOCK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, many years ago, author and commentator Bruce Herschensohn made the point that for every pleasure in life, there is a corresponding risk. I think that is a universal truth: for every pleasure in life, there is a corresponding risk.

And he pointed out it is true that with enough taxes and laws and restrictions and regulations and penalties and lectures, government can produce a virtually risk-free society, but it will also be one of the most colorless, pleasureless, tedious, and miserable societies ever conceived by the mind of man.

I think that is the case. The health dangers of smoking are real and they are well-documented. We all agree on that. It is a very bad thing to do.

Our schools rightly make a concerted effort to inform every child of the health risks associated with tobacco products, and they do a good job of it.

Our government warns every adult of the risks associated with tobacco products, and they do a good job of it, too.

As a result, I don't believe there is a single individual in the United States today who doesn't well and fully comprehend the health dangers of tobacco. But once those warnings are issued, how much further should government go to make individual decisions for rational adults as they weigh the risks of smoking for themselves? Personally, I think they are making a very bad decision, but they probably think others are making bad decisions when they decide to go skiing or bungee jumping or sky diving or thousands of other pleasures that incur corresponding and calculated risks.

I would ask today, whatever happened to the notion of individual responsibility? And whatever happened to the notion, as Jefferson put it, of a wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, but shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement?

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY), a member of the Health Subcommittee.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. I do it with enormous gratitude to Chairman WAXMAN for working for years to get legislation of this sort that would improve public health by strengthening the regulation of tobacco products.

There are a lot of diseases that we don't have the cure for today. There are lots of resources put into medical research that hopefully will find a cure to cancer and to AIDS and other terrible diseases. But we do know how we can prevent over 435,000 tobacco-related deaths that occur each year, and that is by preventing smoking.

There are over 44 million smokers in the United States of America. In Illinois alone, 24.3 percent of adults and 29.2 percent of youth smoke tobacco. In Illinois, 16,000 people die from smoking-related illnesses and 29,000 adults and children die of secondhand smoke in Illinois. In addition, $3.2 billion is spent in direct medical expenditures related to smoking in Illinois. And every day 4,000 kids try their cigarette, and about half of them become addicted.

Finally, we have legislation giving the FDA the power and resources to regulate the tobacco industry and safeguard the public health and our children. It would lessen the cost of smoking-related medical illnesses and prevent adolescents and teens from smoking at a young age.

In Illinois, I want to congratulate Alexandra Slane, an elementary school student from Peoria, Illinois, who won the Tar Wars anti-smoking annual poster contest with her drawing of a light bulb shaped as a human head. She wrote the caption in the human-shaped light bulb warning America, "Be Bright, Don't Light."

Let's start by passing H.R. 1256.

Mr. WAXMAN. May I inquire how much time each side has.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 9½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Indiana has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. WAXMAN. We have no other requests for speakers and I would like to close the debate. We continue to reserve our time.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, there are a couple of issues that I would like to address that I mentioned in my opening. The last two issues that I will address are, one, on the constitutionality, and, secondly, is the FDA the right agency.

While we all agree that steps need to be taken to help lessen the use of tobacco products by underage youth, we must not do so in ways that clearly violate the First Amendment. Unfortunately, the bill in front of us I believe fails to meet that test.

The speech restrictions in this bill are clearly the most sweeping in the history of the United States for any legal product. Numerous top legal experts from every point of the political spectrum have looked at these provisions and declared that they will not meet First Amendment scrutiny.

During the debate on the rule, I questioned the responsibility of this body. I believe it is irresponsible for us to pass legislation that is prima facie unconstitutional.

What we are doing in this body is two things: we are taking the regs from the 1996 rule that the Supreme Court found unconstitutional and we are making them statutory, which means, attention to lawyers in America: you have an access and avenue right back to Federal Court immediately upon the President's signature of this legislation.

Also under the Constitution, private speech, private speech and the regulation of private speech among individuals, that is, companies, if individuals seek to restrict their speech between themselves or how they seek to communicate, they can do that in the private marketplace between themselves. Where the First Amendment comes in is when governments, States, municipalities or the Federal Government then step in and begin to regulate speech.

In this case, it is commercial speech, and that is what we are doing. When we take the MSA, the master settlement agreement, and also place these restrictions and then make them statutory, bang, we are right back to the Supreme Court. And I just find that very bothersome.

Larry Tribe, the noted constitutional expert and Harvard University law professor, commenting on the types of provisions in this legislation, stated, "Given the extensive regulation of tobacco manufacturing (for example, the creation of manufacturing standards, the regulation of cigarette ingredients, and so on) elsewhere in the proposed legislation, and the mandates for new and improved warnings, it would be difficult to defend the sweeping restrictions on advertising as being narrowly tailored to an important governmental interest. The paternalistic view that tobacco advertising must be restricted because consumers might find it pervasive is antithetical to the assumption on which the First Amendment is based."

Wow. Now you are going to find me quoting the American Civil Liberties Union. You may want to listen to this, because it is probably the first time I have ever cited the ACLU.

They also said in their testimony on identical language contained in this legislation, they stated if this type of legislation were to be passed, it would be "wholly unprecedented" and "will most likely fail to withstand constitutional challenge."

On the other side of the spectrum, the Washington Legal Foundation and Judge Bork also have called these proposals "patently unconstitutional." Numerous other legal scholars have taken similar positions.

Now, in our zeal here to restrict tobacco products, there have been these comments by some, Madam Speaker, to say we are doing it for the children. It is wonderful. We can say we are doing it for the children. What does the Court say about that?

The Supreme Court has already examined one of the provisions in the FDA proposal, and that is the 1,000 foot ban on outdoor adds, and has suggested it violates the First Amendment because it is not narrowly tailored.

The Supreme Court rejected the efforts of the Massachusetts Attorney General to "childproof" the flow of information in our society. Children deserve to be protected from inappropriate or harmful material, but the government may not use the guise of protecting children to impose sweeping restrictions on information intended for adults.

So we come to the floor and we say we are doing it for the children. Yet we are taking provisions which the Supreme Court has already found to be unconstitutional, i.e., commercial speech that is not merely tailored to a legitimate government interest.

In Bolger v. Youngs Drug Products Corporation, the court stated that efforts to restrict advertising cannot lower disclosure in society "to the level of the sandbox," and cited in the case Butler v. Michigan that "government may not reduce the adult population to reading only that which is fit for children."

So the type of drastic speech censorship that is contained in this legislation is almost certain to lead to challenges in the Federal courts, and I find that troubling and counterproductive.

Let me move to the FDA. This bill establishes a general standard that actions by FDA are in the best interest of public health, that they're the ones, that they can reasonably be likely to have measured scientific results.

What do we mean by results?

Substantial reductions in morbidity and mortality rates among smokers. That's what we seek to achieve.

So the great challenge that I have here is that, in the committee, we are now looking at legislation with regard to food safety and drug safety. The FDA is charged with approving medical products based on scientific evidence that benefits of the products outweigh the risks. Tobacco products are inherently risk products that cause disease when used as directed.

Now, we're going to turn to the FDA and say, we want you to regulate the tobacco product. So we take the gold standard of the FDA now, and apply it to tobacco, and now there is this inference that somehow the FDA has said that tobacco's a safe product. That is something we should not be doing. It's why I sought to create a separate agency, rather than the FDA, creating a mission that is counter to their present mission.

You see, if you use a cigarette and follow the instructions, and you do that every day, it will kill you. Now, think about that. It will kill you. We don't want the FDA to create some type of inference into society that somehow it's okay.

President Obama stated on March 14 of this year that 95 percent of America's 150,000 food processing plants and warehouses go uninspected each year. Wow. Each year, 74 million people in the United States are sickened by tainted food, and about 5,000 die, according to the CDC. That's on food alone.

Then, with regard to drugs, I look forward to working with Chairman WAXMAN, Madam Speaker, and with Mr. DINGELL, with regard to drug safety because right now we have 11 international mail facilities by the United States Government. You count the three private carriers that also have international mail facilities, and they are taking up to around 30,000 drug packages that are coming into our country by people who are going on to the Internet. Every time we do an inspection of those mail packages, we find that 80 percent of them are either counterfeit knockoffs or adulterated drugs. When, in fact, you do the math and you say, okay, wow, take that 14 times 30,000 times 365, then times 80 percent, we are looking at 96 million. Think about that. 96 million drug packages coming in. So what we're doing now is we're lumping this onto FDA, and FDA is a challenged, a very challenged agency.

I urge individuals to vote "no" on this legislation. There is a better way to regulate tobacco.

Mr. WAXMAN. So, Madam Speaker, it's come down to this, a musing that perhaps FDA is not the right agency; we ought to create a brand new one, but don't give them any power to do anything.

Or what we need is harm reduction, even though this legislation gives the FDA the ability to look for ways to reduce the harm from cigarette smoking.

But the best way, the best way is not to smoke. And the best way is to make sure that people don't start smoking. And if they do smoke, to give it up.

And then the next argument, it's not constitutional. And my colleague has cited the fact that he believes the Supreme Court, when they ruled on the issue of the regulations being proposed by the FDA, that they said that those were unconstitutional.

Well, the truth of the matter is the Supreme Court said FDA did not have the legal authority and that Congress had to vote to give them the legal authority to adopt those regulations. That is what we are about to do today.

I've been working on the issue of tobacco for over three decades, and in fact, I thought about this issue as I prepared a book that's going to be coming out on a lot of different issues in the next couple of weeks.

And I remember the hearings we had where the tobacco industry had so-called scientists argue there really wasn't any harm from cigarette smoking. It was just coincidental.

I remember well when the CEOs came before our committee, and that was a real turning point. And they took an oath to tell the truth, and they said, no harm from cigarette smoking; it's not connected to cancer; it's not connected to heart disease; it's not connected to all these other problems; it's only a coincidence. They said cigarette smoking was not addictive because nicotine is not addictive. They swore that under oath. They said they didn't manipulate the nicotine to make it even stronger and more addictive a product. And they said, with righteous indignation, they certainly wouldn't target kids to smoke.

Well, after that appearance in 1994, we pierced the veil that hung over the industry and started to find out what they were saying in their own corporate boardrooms and what their own scientists understood the case to be.

We later had a hearing where a scientist that worked for the tobacco industry told us he understood the harm. The industry wanted to know what harm it did, and they knew that, in fact, it caused a tremendous amount of death and disease in this country. They were looking at ways to patent new ways to raise the nicotine levels so they can keep people smoking, because they were very well aware of the fact that nicotine was addictive and they could, in fact, make sure that nicotine grabbed on to those smokers and kept them captive to that habit.

And the Joe Camel advertising campaign was marketed in France to see if it really got kids to be loyal to that brand. And in their boardroom they discussed how important it was to get kids to start smoking at 14 or 15 years of age because then they would be loyal to that brand, let alone addicted to the product.

We later found out how the tobacco industry spent millions and millions of dollars on a phony operation to say that they were studying whether the harm was there from cigarette smoking, and what they did was manipulated the media, deceived the American people, to argue the science wasn't really there to claim cigarettes was a problem. The science is still out.

By the way, we hear this about global warming today. Even though the overwhelming consensus was there from reputable scientists, they tried to make people believe, don't worry about it, you can continue to smoke; it's not going to do you harm.

And they tried so hard and successfully, for decades, to keep secret the fact that nonsmokers were harmed by simply being in the presence of smokers.

I remember the power of the tobacco industry that kept the Congress from acting, and it was by one vote that the House of Representatives decided to try and experiment to see if we could have airplane flights, commercial airplane flights of an hour or less, without any smoking permitted. And Members stood up on the floor of the House and said smokers would never tolerate such a thing.

Well, it was so widely popular that it's hard to find any airline in the world that allows smoking on airplane flights of whatever length it may be.

The public has come to understand this industry, and they know the dishonesty of this industry, and they know that the clout of this industry kept the government from acting for decades.

But people now don't realize how it was 30 years ago. Thirty years ago people who smoked felt they had the right to light up a cigarette, no matter where they were.

We've heard the argument that the Court may look at the constitutionality of any free speech matter that might relate to advisories about cigarette smoking.

Well, it's hard for me to believe that a Supreme Court that once said the Constitution does not mean that the freedom of speech allows people to yell "fire" in a crowded room would now come to the point where they'd say it would be unconstitutional to prohibit an industry from trying to get children to smoke a product that's illegal for them to buy in any State of the Union.

I think we are, today, at the last gasp of the tobacco industry's efforts to protect their profits at the expense of the health and lives of the American people and to get children to take up this habit. We're moving away from it fast in this country. The FDA will help us succeed in ending this tobacco epidemic.

My heart goes out to people around the world as American tobacco companies are telling people in other countries, be like Americans. If you're a woman, you can smoke—don't let your culture keep you from taking up this habit. As they tell children around the world, start smoking. You can be more like Americans who you so admire. You can be cool, and all the stuff that was blabbered out in the decades in the United States to get so many millions of people to smoke.

Madam Speaker, this bill, authored by Senator KENNEDY in the Senate and by myself in the House, has come a long way. It took us a long time to get here. But we're here now, and I urge my colleagues to vote for passage of this legislation.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Madam Speaker, this is a very important and historic day for the American people. I rise in strong support of the bipartisan Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, of which I am a proud original cosponsor. I want to thank and acknowledge the leadership of Chairman WAXMAN, Senator KENNEDY, and so many others who have fought the battles for so many years to see this day happen.

Granting the Food and Drug Administration the authority to regulate tobacco products is long overdue. The legislation is a critical step in protecting the health and well being of millions of Americans from the deadly effects of tobacco use. It is a shame that tobacco products were not regulated in this country. Though the FDA has the authority to regulate products that are not addictive, we always had this gap in their regulatory authority when it came to the very addictive products of nicotine and tobacco products.

For far too long, the tobacco companies have taken advantage of this loophole and have exploited it by marketing their deadly products to young people. Generation after generation, the tobacco companies knowingly targeted our kids through flavored cigarettes, manipulating the ingredients in their products, false advertising and other deceiving methods—all to ensure that their profit margins remained high. In fact, they had to do that. In order for these companies to continue to make their profits, they had to find ways to hook people on tobacco products.

I am very proud of the efforts Maryland has taken to curb the effects of tobacco use. It has increased the tobacco tax and youth smoking has declined. Maryland also passed a comprehensive smokefree indoor air law in 2007. I am also proud that the Congress took steps earlier this year to decrease tobacco use by increasing federal excise taxes on cigarettes as part of the reauthorization of the State Children's Health Insurance Program.

Let's make sure that future generations of young people do not get addicted to tobacco products. Addiction to tobacco products has had a huge cost to our society in terms of lives and money by killing over 400,000 Americans each year. This legislation will save lives and money. I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in putting an end to this deadly cycle and vote yes on this very important bill.

Ms. FOXX. Madam Speaker, this bill includes more than $5 billion in new tax increases on tobacco companies and gives sweeping control of the tobacco market to the FDA. Chairman DINGELL, discussing the salmonella outbreak last summer, was quoted in The Wall Street Journal as saying that "there's a total inability of the FDA to carry out its mission." This isn't the first Democrat to raise questions about the effectiveness of the FDA. It is therefore highly hypocritical of them to extend the agency's regulatory authority to a multi-billion dollar industry of which the FDA has no expertise.

This bill undermines the established purpose of the FDA. As FDA Commissioner Andrew von Eschenbach testified before the House Energy and Commerce Committee in October 2007, the FDA is an agency intended to promote and protect the public health. In the Commissioner's opinion, requiring the FDA to "approve" tobacco products as a result of this bill would dramatically change the agency's focus. Mr. von Eschenbach stated that "Associating any agency whose mission is to promote public health with the approval of inherently dangerous products would undermine its mission and likely have perverse incentive effects."

While establishing FDA authority to regulate tobacco products, this bill would also retain the FTC's federal authority to regulate tobacco advertising and circulation. It would provide only limited pre-emption of state laws, allowing more rigid state restrictions on tobacco advertising.

This bill imposes undue bureaucratic and logistical hardships on tobacco manufacturers by burying them under multiple layers of regulation. It is important to remember that the sale of tobacco is legal in the United States and is credited with hundreds of thousands of jobs across the country. We cannot afford to lose more American jobs especially when we are facing such economic challenges.

FDA regulation will have a devastating economic impact on small tobacco companies, their employees, associated businesses, and the largely rural communities which they support. Under this legislation they will not be able to comply with and afford what is sure to be a costly and complex regulatory regime.

There are some 350 small tobacco manufacturing companies throughout the United States. Together with their suppliers, vendors, distributors and tobacco growers, these companies employ thousands of people. Tobacco growing in particular has long been an important part of rural communities. As most of these companies are located in rural, economically depressed areas, the jobs, employee health and pension benefits and revenue they provide is critical to our local economies. While large tobacco companies can absorb the cost of FDA regulation, many of these smaller companies cannot. This legislation will force them to close their doors, leaving their employees jobless.

Ms. LEE of California. Madam Speaker; I rise in strong support of the Senate Amendments to H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

I want to thank Chairman WAXMAN and his staff, and Senator KENNEDY for their tireless work over the years to ensure that we could get to this moment.

The federal regulation of tobacco has been a long time coming. I'm pleased that today's action will complete consideration of this bill and send it on to the President to finally get it enacted into law.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, smoking is the leading cause of premature death in the United States. More than one in five Americans smoke, and according to the CDC's most recent report, in 2004 this included about 21 percent of adults and more than 22 percent of high school students.

Each year about 1 in 5 deaths, about 443,000 people, are a result of smoking or exposure to secondhand smoke. And for each person who dies from a smoking related disease about 20 more are living with a smoking attributable chronic illness—or about 8.6 million people.

In addition to the significant effects of smoking on the health of our constituents, the estimated costs of smoking-related medical expenses and loss of productivity exceed $167 billion annually.

Thankfully, in my state of California we have known the dangers of smoking for a long time, and we were one of the first states to move forward in banning indoor smoking in public places, including bars and restaurants. As a result our State has the second lowest prevalence level of smoking among both adults and youth, at 14.8 percent and 13.2 percent respectively.

It is long past time that we try to take a national approach to address the dangers of smoking.

I'm pleased that this bipartisan legislation will grant the Food and Drug Administration authority to regulate the advertising, marketing, and manufacturing of tobacco products. And I'm also pleased that it takes steps to ban flavor additives, including menthol, as well as further restricting marketing directed to our children.

But passage of this bill really is just the first step. We've also got to make sure that we follow through on the regulatory authority provided in this bill to help encourage smokers to quit, and to provide help to those who choose to do so.

However I'm pleased that we are finally taking this action today, and I'm convinced that it will help to improve public health and reduce costs to our health care system in the long run.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. McINTYRE. Madam Speaker, I rise today to express grave concerns about H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

This bill will grant the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) wide authority to dictate to manufacturers and growers dramatic changes in product design and leaf cultivation, a concern that has been raised repeatedly by the tobacco growers in my district. The last thing we want is government bureaucrats coming on the farm!

The tobacco industry contributes over $36 billion to the U.S. economy each year, employing over 19,000 individuals nationwide. In my home state of North Carolina, over 8,600 people are employed by the industry with a statewide economic impact of over $23.9 billion.

The manufacturing provisions and “FDA on the farm” provisions of this bill will put many companies and growers out of business. In this time of economic uncertainty, we can’t afford to lose more jobs!

In addition, the FDA is already overburdened with its food safety and drug approval mission. Placing another large regulatory burden on an already overwhelmed agency will further divert attention away from the FDA’s primary role of protecting our food supply and regulating prescription drugs.

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, today, I rise in support of H.R. 1256 because of the public health benefits this legislation will provide to the country.

I am deeply troubled, however, that the legislation we are voting on today does not include many provisions of great importance to Federal employees. These provisions were adopted unanimously by this chamber and were included in the tobacco legislation that was sent to the Senate.

The Oversight and Government Reform Committee worked closely with the sponsors of H.R. 1256 in crafting this legislation. The bill modernizes the Federal Employee Thrift Savings Plan, and these changes to the TSP provide the revenue that covers the cost of new tobacco prevention programs. As a matter of simple fairness, a portion of this revenue generated by Federal employees was devoted to simple fixes to the Federal retirement system that will make it more fair and efficient for Federal employees and management.

The House-passed legislation included provisions to eliminate inconsistency in how part-time service, breaks in service, and unused sick leave are considered in calculating retirement benefits. These provisions would help encourage highly-talented individuals to return to government service at a time when we need to be attracting such individuals to prepare for a wave of upcoming retirements, and would help that wave of retirements be more predictable and orderly.

Unfortunately, the Senate amendments to this bill left out these critical provisions. It is very disappointing, and unfair to Federal employees, that they are used to generate the revenue for these important changes, but that a portion of that revenue will not fund important reforms that will make the Federal personnel system more efficient. I will continue to work with my colleagues to ensure that these inequities and inefficiencies in the Federal retirement system are addressed.

Mr. WU. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, and ask my colleagues to agree to the Senate amendments.

The statistics being heard on this floor are handed out on this floor like candy. Because numbers are often passed off as nothing more than empty words, we fail to recognize what they mean—in this Speaker, I rise today in support case we are talking about people’s lives. It was Irving Selikoff, a medical researcher who co-discovered a cure for tuberculosis who said, “Statistics are real people with the tears wiped away.”

For instance, smoking-related diseases cause an estimated 440,000 American deaths each year. And a 2004 study by the CDC’s National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion found that cigarette smoke contains over 4,800 chemicals, 69 of which are known to cause cancer.

Ninety percent of adult smokers are addicted to tobacco before they reach the age of 18; 50 percent before the age of 14. Currently the average age of initiation to tobacco is 11.

Forty-eight million adults smoke in the U.S., which is 22.9 percent of the population overall, and 33 percent of youth currently smoke.

Those real people are our parents and children, our family and friends, who suffer the consequences of addiction to tobacco. I want my children to grow up healthy and to make healthy decisions. To help that happen, H.R. 1256 will put in place the proper authority for the Food and Drug Administration to establish regulations over tobacco products. We need the FDA to protect our population from the harmful effects of cigarettes and tobacco products by being able to provide sound, scientific regulations governing these products.

Even with all the warnings, and the money spent on education campaigns, kids are still picking up smoking at the alarming rate of 3,000 a day in the United States.

The health concerns that will face these children are costly, painful, and deadly.

But they are also ultimately preventable.

I am acutely concerned that tobacco companies have used Portland, Oregon, as a test market for new smokeless tobacco products. Products like snus, or other tobacco-based nicotine delivery products have been repeatedly tested in markets like Portland.

Many of these products look like candy and taste sweet. They are an addictive tobacco trap for children and should be either banned or heavily regulated away from kids.

I ask my colleagues to agree to the Senate amendments to H.R. 1256, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, and send this bill to the President’s desk for him to sign.

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I thank Chairman WAXMAN for his leadership on this important legislation—and on the whole range of public health issues before the Congress—and have talked extensively with him about the intention of the use of the term “small business tobacco manufacturing industry” as it concerns the Scientific Advisory Committee established in Section 917(b)(1).

H.R. 1256 provides for the establishment of a 12-member Tobacco Products Scientific Advisory Committee and stipulates that one of the members of the Committee shall be a “representative of the interests of the small business tobacco manufacturing industry” that may be filled on rotating, sequential basis by representatives of different “small business tobacco manufacturers.”

For the purpose of phrasing in compliance with certain requirements of this act Section 900(16) of the bill defines “small tobacco product manufacturers” as those having fewer than 350 employees. However, the bill does not define what constitutes a “small business tobacco manufacturer” as it relates to the SAC.

Chairman WAXMAN has assured me that I am correct in concluding that the term in section 917(b)(1) regarding membership on the Advisory Committee is different from—and need not be interpreted as the same as—the one used in proposed new section 900(16).

Additionally, Chairman WAXMAN has assured me that when section 917(b)(1) says that one member of the Scientific Advisory Committee must be a representative of the “small business tobacco manufacturing industry” that does NOT mean that the person must be a representative of a “small tobacco products manufacturer” as defined in section 900(16).

I appreciate the chair’s effort to ensure that small manufacturers have a seat at the table on the Scientific Advisory Committee. The passage of this important legislation is a victory for public health and our nation’s children. I have supported this bill in both this and the last Congress because I believe we must place a far greater emphasis on youth smoking prevention and the elimination of tobacco advertising aimed at children. The Food and Drug Administration is the logical agency to take on the new regulatory responsibilities, and Congress and the Obama Administration need to make sure they have adequate support to carry out this important job.

Mr. MCINTYRE. Madam Speaker, I rise to discuss a technical but important matter. H.R. 1256 would permit the use of brand names and logos on roll-your-own paper, as well as cigarettes and smokeless tobacco. The U.S. Congress has correctly recognized the necessity of allowing RYO manufacturers to put their brand names on the paper that is used to assemble RYO cigarettes. However, I am concerned that language only naming one component and not the other necessary components could lead to a prohibition on branding for tubes, rollers, injectors and filters. These are items that are used by individuals in their homes for purposes of making their own cigarettes, and not seen by others. They have none of the attributes which have caused the restriction of the use of logos on other items such as t-shirts.

For more than 100 years, these types of RYO making components have been marketed with company brand names and logos. This practice helps consumers easily identify which components and accessories to use and helps companies establish good-will with their customers. Yet, this practice will unnecessarily be forced to come to an end unless components other than RYO paper are included within the FDA’s final rule on product branding. The intent of this legislation dictates that the branding prohibition does to not apply to entities that do not meet the definition of a manufacturer or importer of cigarettes or smokeless tobacco. Any final rule promulgated by FDA should recognize that RYO papers and all necessary components are permitted branding authority.

Ms. MCCOLLUM. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act (H.R. 1256). Today is a historic day for the prevention of disease and promotion of public health in America. I commend Chairman WAXMAN, Chairman DINGELL, and Chairman PALLONE for their leadership in advancing this legislation.

Tobacco use is the single most preventable cause of death in the United States. More than 400,000 people die in the U. S. each year from tobacco use, including 5,600 Minnesotans. Another 8.6 million Americans are living with a serious illness caused by smoking. Unfortunately, the problem continues to grow. Every day, more than 3,500 young Americans try a cigarette for the first time. One third of these individuals will eventually die prematurely as a result of long-term tobacco use. Even those who do not choose to smoke tobacco are put in harms way—for every eight smokers who die from using tobacco, one non-smoker also loses their life.

The Food and Drug Administration, FDA, is charged with ensuring the safety of food and medicine sold in the United States, but lacks the authority to regulate one of the deadliest products in America—tobacco. This is a loophole American families cannot afford.

The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, of which I am an original cosponsor, would grant the FDA the authority to regulate the advertising, marketing, and manufacturing of tobacco products, particularly for young people. By prohibiting the colorful marketing of tobacco products to children, we can help prevent countless young Americans from becoming victims of deceptive advertising. This bill will also allow the Secretary of Health and Human Services to approve all label statements and to restrict the sale, promotion, and distribution of tobacco products for the protection of public health. This legislation will also accomplish all of these important goals in a fiscally responsible manner—funding for FDA tobacco activity will be provided through a user fee on tobacco manufacturers.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill to pass this bill and send it to the President to be signed into law. This is an important step to moving towards a healthier America.

Mr. WAXMAN. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 532, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 307, nays 97, not voting 30, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. CANTOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CANTOR. Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland, the majority leader, for the purpose of announcing next week's schedule.

Mr. HOYER. I thank my friend for yielding.

On Monday, Madam Speaker, the House will meet at 12:30 p.m. for morning-hour debate and 2 p.m. for legislative business, with votes postponed until 6:30 p.m.

On Tuesday, the Former Members Association will have their annual meeting on the floor at 8:30 a.m. The House will then meet at 10:30 a.m. for morning-hour debate and 12 p.m. for legislative business. On Wednesday and Thursday, the House will meet at 10 a.m. for legislative business. And on Friday, as is unusual, the House will meet at 9 a.m. for legislative business.

Madam Speaker, we will consider several bills under suspension of the rules. A complete list of suspension bills will be noted by the end of the day.

In addition, we will consider a conference report on H.R. 2346, the Supplemental Appropriations Act on the 2010 Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act and the 2010 Homeland Security Appropriations Act. And I yield back.

Mr. CANTOR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I would say to the gentleman that he has noticed two appropriations bills for next week: Commerce, Justice and Science; and the Homeland Security appropriations bills. Madam Speaker, I would ask the gentleman, does he expect the House, as is its custom, to consider these bills under an open rule? And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

It certainly would be our intent to proceed with an open rule on the consideration of the Commerce, Justice and State bill—I guess it's Science now. The intent, of course, as the gentleman knows based upon our discussions, is that we will finish all 12 appropriation bills individually between now and the 30th of July. This will give the Senate and the House the opportunity to agree on a conference report on the 12 appropriation bills and hopefully enact those bills and send them to the President prior to the onset of the fiscal year October 1. If we do that, of course, it will be unusual, and it is an ambitious schedule. But because of that, it will be necessary for us to consider these bills in an effective, but also efficient, fashion and stay within time constraints that will allow us to accomplish those 12 bills within that time frame. I am hopeful that as Mr. OBEY and Mr. LEWIS proceed and the subcommittee Chairs proceed, that we can agree on that occurring.

As the gentleman and I have discussed, we will see how the first bill goes, or the second or third, and hopefully they will go in that fashion. The only constraint that we want is to utilize the time so we can effect the objective of passing these bills by the August break so we will have time to finish them before the beginning of the fiscal year.

I would tell my friend that, in addition to that, there would be one, however, additional request that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has made—with which I strongly agree and that I think is fair to all the Members and to the committee Chairs and subcommittee Chairs—and that is that there will be a requirement for preprinting an amendment. There will be no selection in the CJS bill of amendments, but there will be a requirement that they be preprinted and included in the RECORD.

If, however, I want to assure the gentleman, there is some problem with the RECORD reflecting an amendment that has been prefiled but doesn't make it in the RECORD, we would proceed as if that had been included in the printed RECORD.

Mr. CANTOR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

As the gentleman knows, in 2005 this House did abide by a schedule such as the one that he proposes, and did so under an open rule on each bill.

I ask the gentleman if, given this preprinting requirement that we are proceeding under, if there is a need for a perfecting amendment that comes upon the adoption of an amendment, how is it that we will be necessarily guaranteeing Members' perfecting amendments the right to be heard? Will there be a UC granted for such a perfecting amendment? I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank my friend for yielding.

I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and it is his view—and I share that view, certainly—that in that instance granting a unanimous consent would be appropriate. Obviously, if the circumstances change and such an amendment were necessary, I think the gentleman will find that the chairman is inclined—and I believe the subcommittee chairman will be inclined—to give unanimous consent to achieve that objective.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman.

Madam Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that the Speaker of the House has announced a goal of considering the cap-and-trade bill on the floor prior to the July 4 recess. I would ask the majority leader, does he expect the Speaker's goal to be met? And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We certainly hope so. The Speaker and I have both indicated, with respect to the energy bill, which seeks to not only address the conservation of our energy and making us energy independent, but also seeks to address the global warming challenge that confronts our globe, to pass that legislation in a timely fashion. It passed out of committee, as the gentleman knows, the week when we left for the Memorial Day break, so it has been pending now for at least 3 weeks.

It is our hope that we can move forward on this as early, perhaps, as the last week in June, which would be immediately before the July 4 break.

Time and circumstances will dictate whether or not that is possible, but we certainly do hope to consider that in the near term.

In addition, as the gentleman undoubtedly knows, we also have under consideration the health care bill, which the President has made a very high priority and which we have made a very high priority. So that bill will also, we hope, be considered prior to the August break.

So those two bills are major pieces of legislation that we hope to consider, but I don't want to give an exact date on those because they are complicated pieces of legislation. We hope that we can reach agreement on—and we would like to reach agreement across the aisle as well—if not all facets, at least some facets of that bill. I'm sure your side has considerations that will help us perfect a bill. I think we will probably have some agreements, but, nevertheless, we hope to move forward together on both bills.

Mr. CANTOR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I would like to ask a followup of the majority leader, specifically for the benefit of the Members who serve on the Ways and Means and the Agriculture Committees. Will we anticipate that those two committees will have an opportunity to hear and mark up the cap-and-trade bill? And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have discussed this matter with the chairmen of both committees. Certainly they will have the opportunity. Whether they will avail themselves of that opportunity I can't say at this point in time. What I mean by that is that there are clearly concerns that both committees have and have been expressed. But whether or not they're going to actually go to a markup of the bill or try to perfect it in other ways on the floor or in working with the Energy and Commerce Committee I don't think has been decided by either committee at this point in time.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman.

Madam Speaker, I now would like to point out to the gentleman, as all of us know, that our troops in Iraq and Afghanistan have spent the last 29 days waiting for this Congress to authorize the funding that they need to execute their mission to maintain not only their own safety, but the safety of us here at home. We have heard reports since last night that the war funding bill and its provision and primary mission of funding the troops has now been somewhat eclipsed by provisions which have no relation to protecting and supporting our troops in the field. So I would ask the gentleman, could he confirm, number one, that $108 billion—scored at $5 billion by the Congressional Budget Office—whether that money for the IMF will be included in the troop funding bill? Number two, are the reports correct which have indicated that the provisions prohibiting the release of detainee photos has now been stripped from the measure that we will consider? And thirdly, could the gentleman confirm that the conference report coming to the House will now allow for the transfer of the Guantanamo detainees into the United States?

And I yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As the gentleman recalls, we had a relatively robust discussion about this last week.

Let me, first of all, say that the principle purpose of this bill was, is, and will be on Tuesday the funding of our troops in the field, providing them with the resources necessary to complete successfully or pursue successfully the task that we've given them and to provide for their safety and well-being to the possible extent we can. So that was the intent, it is the intent, and will remain the intent.

Now, let me make a suggestion that providing for some of the poorest nations in the world to be more successful economically will not only be beneficial to our country and to the international economy generally, but also to the safety of our troops, very frankly. It is, obviously, in deep poverty and frustration from which many of the terrorists that we have seen have been recruited. To the extent we provide for the economies of these small, troubled countries, we may well be a safer world, not only economically better off, but from a security standpoint better off. So we perceive the IMF as an integral part of a process of seeking security.

I might say that the IMF, as I quoted last week, very strongly supported by Ronald Reagan, very strongly supported by both President Bushes, but particularly President Bush the First, where they said investing in the IMF was an investment in the well-being of the international community and our own country.

As you indicate, the $108 billion scores at $5 billion because it's a loan guarantee; it's not a giveaway. We believe that the IMF is a very important part of it, and in answer to your question, the IMF will, in fact, be a part—as I think the gentleman probably knows—of the conference report that will be filed perhaps later tonight.

With respect to your second question regarding—well, I guess your third question because your first was about the security of the troops—the third question of Guantanamo, let me, first of all, read a letter, a paragraph of a letter dated June 11 to Mr. OBEY and Mr. INOUE, the Senate chairman of the Appropriations Committee, from President Obama.

He says, On May 13 I announced I would resist the release of additional detainee photos because I did not believe it would add any additional benefit to our understanding of what happened in the past and that the most direct consequences of releasing them would be to further inflame anti-American opinion and put our troops in greater danger. Earlier today the Second Circuit granted the government's motion that will stay the earlier court order to release the detainees' photos, and we will now move forward with a petition to the Supreme Court to appeal the case.

He goes on to say, I deeply appreciate all you have done to help with the effort to secure funding for the troops, and I assure you that I will continue to take every legal and administrative remedy available to me to ensure that the DOD detainee photographs are not released. Should a legislative solution prove necessary, I am committed to working with the Congress to enact legislation that achieves the objectives we share.

With respect, lastly, Mr. Whip, to the detainees, as you know, one detainee was, in fact, transferred to the United States, to New York, for the purposes of trial. That is not unusual. As the gentleman knows, many terrorists have been tried in the New York District Court in which this trial will occur. In addition to that, four Uyghurs have been ordered released by the court because the court concluded there was no proof of terrorist activity by the Uyghurs. They've been released to Bermuda.

One Iraqi detainee, Mr. Sadkhan, was returned to Iraq. One Chadian detainee was returned to Chad. And Mr. Ghailani, to whom I have referred to earlier, has been transferred to New York City, where there is a standing indictment against him. He'll be tried for his role in the 1998 attacks in Tanzania and Kenya in which the father and brother of one of my constituents, Edith Bartley, were killed, Julian and Jay Bartley. So I, for one, am pleased that this gentleman, and I use that term loosely, unfortunately, but this individual will be tried and brought to justice.

All four Biscoe conspirators have been found guilty and are serving out sentence in the U.S. supermax prison. It has been agreed under the language, as I understand it, that has been adopted that detainees would be brought to the United States for no other purpose than prosecution.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman.

And, Madam Speaker, I would respond by going back to the gentleman's original statement concerning the principal purpose of the war funding bill, and that he said, if I could paraphrase, the intent of the bill is to fund our troops. So I am at somewhat of a loss to understand why we have taken 29 days. We've already had one strong bipartisan vote in this House with nearly unanimity on our side of the aisle to provide the necessary funding for our troops, so I'm at somewhat of a loss to understand why the delay.

The gentleman speaks of the urgent need for us, as U.S. taxpayers, to fund a global bailout, and the gentleman said that there is indication that somehow if we address the issue of poverty that we will then be lessening the number of terrorists. I don't know, Madam Speaker, if all of us would agree with that or not. No question, reducing poverty is a laudable goal, but we are also in the business here in Washington of setting priorities. Priority one should be the funding of our troops and to secure this country and its citizens. And thank God we have our men and women in uniform there. They should be our priority in executing in terms of advocating for the safety and fighting for the security of this country.

So I am still, to use the gentleman's word from last week, confounded as to why it is we cannot have the IMF funding go through regular order in this House. As you know, reports have indicated that actions have been taken by this administration, especially Secretary Geithner, to cast a vote in favor of increasing access to money and credit for the member nations of the IMF. That is done without congressional approval. And we're talking here specifically about the special drawing rights of nations at the IMF. We have also found out that the nation of Iran will have the ability to access funding of over a billion dollars through this process. To me, that calls for congressional oversight and action. It doesn't warrant delaying this bill. It doesn't warrant putting on the backs of our troops the funding of nations, frankly, that are providing support for the destruction of our efforts and endangering our troops on the ground in Iraq and in the region.

So I have a question to the gentleman of why it is so important that we go ahead and fund a global bailout when the primary mission is to fund our troops.

And I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

The gentleman articulates a number of premises that I reject, I don't agree with. Nobody is putting anything on the back of the troops. The gentleman has been in this body for some period of time, and he knows that from time to time the other body adds amendments to bills and it is incumbent upon us to consider those amendments. As the gentleman knows, when we passed the bill through the House, it did not have the IMF funding in the bill. The Senate added it to the bill. It was a subject of the conference report. The President of the United States has asked for the IMF funding. We happen to agree with the President of the United States that the IMF funding is appropriate funding and does, in fact, as I will restate for the gentleman, we believe, add a security component to the troop funding that is the primary purpose of this bill.

Secondly, I reject your premise that somehow this money is going to go to people who are going to harm us. In fact, of course, as I told you last week, the last time Iran, which you mentioned, received money was when Ronald Reagan was President of the United States in 1984. There is no expectation, in my opinion, that Iran, while it may be eligible technically, is going to get any money, as it has not for the last quarter of a century.

I would reiterate what I said last week in quoting Ronald Reagan, no individual who wanted to give aid and comfort to the enemy. Very forthright in his confrontation of communism and despotism. He said, "I have an unbreakable commitment to increase funding for the IMF." As I cited to you, he said that on September 7, 1983. He went on to say, "The IMF is the linchpin of the international financial system."

The gentleman and his side of the aisle continue, in my opinion, to misrepresent what is intended by that funding. The President of the United States, whether it was Ronald Reagan, George Bush the First, George Bush the Second, or any other President, that goes to an international meeting with 19 of the other large industrial nations in the world and they sit down together and attempt to try to bring the global economy back to vibrancy and agree that, in part, what is needed is some assistance to the poorest nations in this world who are themselves being dragged down and, in the process, adversely affecting the global markets generally agree to make a substantial commitment of loan guarantees available. As the gentleman knows, the United States has about a 20 percent vote on this, and this is about a 20 percent contribution that the President has agreed to. The other 19 nations agreed to come up with 80 percent of these dollars. All of them agreed that this is in the best interest of restoring our global economy and, I suggest to you as well, stabilizing the security situation that confronts the international community.

President Bush said—and this is the last quote I'll give. You may be tired of hearing these quotes, but your side of the aisle has been making a great hue and cry as if IMF is some specious, dangerous pursuit. This is not a bailout. This is an assistance to people to try to grow back and be positive, contributing members of the international global marketplace.

George Bush said this: "The IMF and World Bank, given their central role in the world economy, are key to helping all of us through this situation by providing a combination of policy advice and financial assistance." George Bush said that on September 25, 1990, a time of economic stress internationally for the same reason that President Obama and the 19 other industrialized nations of the world agreed that this was an appropriate step to take.

I would hope the gentleman would urge his party to support this, consistent with the principles of Ronald Reagan and George Bush.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman. Madam Speaker, I think, as the gentleman knows, we are probably going to have to leave this topic and agree to disagree. It is very concerning, given the new times we are in, and, frankly, the facts and information have come forward about the special drawing rights about the fact and knowledge that we have at this point knowing U.S. taxpayer dollars will help facilitate countries like Iran, Venezuela, Burma, and others to access more money to do what it is that they think is in their interest and certainly not in the interest of the U.S.

But I would like to turn the gentleman's attention back to his statement about the intention of this bill and the primary purpose of the war funding bill, which, again, to loosely paraphrase, was to provide for troop safety and security, and that's the underlying purpose. The gentleman indicated that the President has already taken the same position that most of us, I believe, in this House have taken so far as these photos are concerned and the release of the photos of the detainees. So I am again at somewhat of a loss to understand why it is that even if the White House and the President himself have sided with what I think the majority of the American people feel as well as the Members of this House, why it is that we are doing the opposite in the text of the report that we will be voting on.

And I would say to the gentleman, Commander Ray Odierno, General Odierno, Commander of the Multi-national Forces in Iraq, someone that I'm sure the gentleman has had occasion to meet and I as well, who we know is a very respected and serious leader of our troops, he said just a few weeks ago, I strongly believe the release of these photos will endanger the lives of U.S. soldiers, airmen, marines, sailors, and civilians, as well as the lives of our Iraqi partners. Certain operating units are at particular risk of harm from release of the photos. And he went on to describe those particular risks that are specific.

The gentleman, I think, can agree with me it is not in the interest of securing the safety of our troops for us to remain silent or for us not to take congressional action ensuring that nothing occurs for us to possibly harm our troops in this bill. That is why I ask the gentleman again, how have we sat here and delayed consideration of the bill because now we had to ensure inclusion in the bill the stripping of the provision which provides the safety of our troops?

And I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Maybe one of the answers is we have less enthusiasm on this side of the aisle for interposing in cases that the court is considering. I was called back on a Sunday by your side of the aisle many years ago to do exactly that. It ended up having no effect.

There are a lot of people on my side of the aisle who believe that the objective that is being sought, which the President of the United States and, to this extent, General Odierno agrees with the Commander in Chief that these photos ought not to be released, as I pointed out to you in the paragraph that I read from the President's letter. In fact, the court has stayed the release of those pending a review by the Supreme Court of the United States. This matter is under consideration. There was general concern about obviating FOIA, the Freedom of Information Act, generally as opposed to specifically. But the President has made it very clear, the Commander in Chief, and obviously General Odierno agrees with the Commander in Chief on this issue, that he is going to take such steps as are necessary to ensure that these photos are not released, to the extent that he and General Odierno both agree that the release of those pictures may, in fact, have an adverse effect on the safety of our troops. So what I simply respond to the gentleman is that the President of the United States and General Odierno are both in an agreement and the President of the United States is taking action to effect that agreement.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman, Madam Speaker.

I would simply point to the vote taken yesterday in the House on the motion to instruct conferees, 267 Members of this House support the inclusion of the language barring release of the photos. So I am at a loss to understand the thinking behind this action when we bring this report to the floor that strips that language.

Not only the majority, by far the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle said that they think that language is important. The American people do. It is counterintuitive to think at all that Congress should not take action to secure the safety of our troops and stop the release of those photos.

Lastly, Madam Speaker, I would just say to the gentleman, we have been somewhat dismayed again about the clouding of the issues and the underlying principle of this bill, which is to fund our troops and provide for their safety, and we've seen this process delayed over unrelated items. It is unfortunate. And I'm hopeful that our troops are not getting the wrong message, that somehow their safety, security and the funding of their efforts doesn't come first.

I would just lastly like to ask the gentleman: How is it that when we left the House and we had the broad bipartisan support of the provisions which fenced off the money so that we would not endanger the citizens and the communities of the targeted facilities that the detainees from Guantanamo would come to that we took that fencing off of the money to preclude the funding of shipping terrorists here, to now say that we're going to be safer, it is a better policy for us to try and achieve the rights and protect the rights of the terrorists at the potential expense of endangering U.S. citizens?

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOYER. As the gentleman knows, there's no money in here for transferring. The $80 million that was requested was not included in the House; was not included in the Senate; it's still not included. The bill prohibits current detainees from being released in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii or D.C., as the gentleman knows. It prohibits current detainees from being transferred to the current United States, Alaska, Hawaii or D.C., except to be prosecuted and only after Congress receives a plan detailing: risks involved and a plan for mitigating such risk; cost of the transfer; legal rationale and court demands; and a copy of the notification provided to the Governor of the receiving State 14 days before a transfer with a certification by the Attorney General that the individual poses little or no security risk.

In addition, the bill provides current detainees cannot be transferred or released to another country unless the President submits to Congress 15 days prior to such transfer: the name of the individual and the country the individual will be transferred to; an assessment of risks posed and actions taken to mitigate such risks; and the terms of the transfer agreement with the other country, including any financial assistance.

Lastly, it requires the President to submit a report to Congress describing the disposition of each current detainee before the facility can be closed.

But let me say in the final analysis, many Republicans, including the former Secretary of State, Colin Powell, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, adviser to a number of Republican Presidents, said on a news program almost a year ago now that he believed that Guantanamo ought to be closed; he believed it should have been closed yesterday when he was speaking. That was a year ago. The President of the United States has indicated he thinks Guantanamo ought to be closed. There is disagreement on that.

I understand that. But if it's going to be closed, a plan has to be effected for the purpose of dealing with those who are at Guantanamo, and the President is working on such a plan. The Congress in both bodies made a determination until we have such plan, we're not going to take action to facilitate that. That's what I think the conference agreement sets forth, and I think it sets forth protections that can give the American people a confidence level.

Let me say something additional to the gentleman. I'm older than the gentleman. When I was a child, approximately 4 or 5 years of age, I was living in Mexia, Texas. My father, born in Denmark, served in the U.S. Army. He was in his forties and wasn't sent overseas. He was the finance officer at a POW camp in Mexia, Texas. Mexia, Texas is a town of about 7,500 people—apparently then and now. I asked somebody about it just recently. There were 4,000 Nazi troops in a POW camp in Mexia, Texas. They were kept there. They were not necessarily terrorists. We need to take special precautions.

But in the pursuance of the policies enunciated by the President of the United States when he ran for office, when he was substantially elected by the American people, he told them exactly what he thought ought to be done. He is pursuing what he said to the American people he would do. He is doing it in my opinion in a thoughtful way that will protect the American public and will bring to justice those who have committed international crimes. I think that is something that we are trying to work through.

I want to reiterate. The gentleman has now mentioned so many times that we have allowed the funding of the troops to get caught up with other issues. Surely the gentleman, I know, does not mean, because he's been here long enough to know, that when the House and the Senate and the Presidency were in the hands of his party, the funding of the troops got tied up from time to time with other issues. That's the nature of the legislative process. But I'm hopeful that the gentleman, because he's so focused on getting this money to the troops quickly, will urge all of his colleagues on Tuesday to join with us in voting to fund the troops.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman and his plea for support in his bill, knowing good and well that this bill did not go out of this House without some support from Republicans that were necessary for its passage in its original form.

I would just say to the gentleman and thank him for his description of the POW camp in Texas. But here we are dealing with individuals who are not necessarily soldiers of war, they're enemy combatants, an entirely different set of circumstances that we have today.

Mr. HOYER. Will my friend yield on that question?

Mr. CANTOR. I will yield.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

He and I are probably two of the strongest supporters in this body. Those POWs were part of a regime that killed 6 million people. I remind him, and the gentleman doesn't need reminding of that, but these were not simply soldiers of a regime that was pursuing a war that you and I might view in a different way.

Mr. CANTOR. Reclaiming my time, I would just say to the gentleman, as he does know, there were applicable provisions at law which govern the treatment of soldiers at war and there is a much less definitive, more nebulous environment in which we are to look towards enemy combatants, which is my point. Because with the trial of enemy combatants on U.S. soil, we are confronting, as the gentleman knows, cases of first impression at every turn, and we are confronting uncertainty as to the disposition of these cases which brings up potential harm for U.S. citizens.

I would just go back to the gentleman's plea that he would like to see us support this bill. If the primary purpose is to maintain, promote the security and safety of our troops and provide them with funding, it is a reach for me to understand how allowing for a release of photos, how allowing for the transfer of enemy combatants—terrorists—to U.S. soil furthers that end.

So I would say in closing, Madam Speaker, if the gentleman is satisfied with deferring to the White House and deferring to this President on the very core purpose of securing this country at all levels and doesn't feel the Congress should take affirmative action, then I believe his support of this bill is well put. But it is certainly the opinion of many of us in this House as indicated by votes as late as yesterday that we can do better, that we can take action to secure our troops, get them the money they need and get rid of the unrelated items in this bill.

Mr. HOYER. I simply want to observe, as I pointed out in the five or six points I made, particularly that current detainees cannot be transferred or released to another country without notice to us, nor can they be released here in the United States without further action. So that the gentleman's premise is, I think, not correct, that this President has the authority to, or the intent to release people at this time in the United States before or after trial.

Having said that, I would say, the gentleman continues to talk about the add-ons, but I will tell the gentleman, as the gentleman knows, over 80 percent of this bill deals with the funding and security of our troops and the prosecution of the effort to defeat terrorism. Over 80 percent of this bill. It is in that context that I would hope the gentleman would see his way clear to urging his colleagues to join with us in passing this needed legislation.

Mr. CANTOR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for his suggestion and counsel, and I yield back the balance of my time.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JUNE 15, 2009

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning-hour debate, and further, when the House adjourns on that day, it adjourn to meet at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday June 16, 2009, for morning-hour debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. KILROY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Ms. Wanda Evans, one of his secretaries.

COMMENDING SOUTH ORANGETOWN SCHOOLS SUPERINTENDENT KEN MITCHELL

(Mr. ENGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ENGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise today to commend South Orangetown Schools Superintendent Ken Mitchell in Rockland County in my district for his quick reaction and his bravery as he singlehandedly prevented what could have been a terrible tragedy in South Orangetown Middle School.

According to reports, a man came into the school, stormed past security and demanded at gunpoint that Mr. Mitchell make changes to a letter on swine flu. He certainly picked the wrong person to threaten when he took on Mr. Mitchell, a former hockey player and coach. The 55-year-old superintendent was able to tackle him and disarm him before police were able to break into the locked office to apprehend the suspect.

Thankfully, no one was hurt.

Why someone would enter a school with a gun is something I will never understand. It's disturbing to even fathom what could lead someone to choose to do that. However, it is heartening to realize that someone like Ken Mitchell is standing in their way.

The dedication shown by Mr. Mitchell to the children should be an example to all. Our Nation has witnessed too many deaths of our children in their schools. The people of the South Orangetown school system and the community as a whole owe him a huge debt of gratitude.

Hero is an overused word in today's world, but I can think of fewer situations which more warrant that word than protecting children in their classrooms. Ken Mitchell is truly a hero.

VIETNAM MUST RESPECT THE RULE OF LAW

(Mr. CAO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CAO. Madam Speaker, although we live in the 21st century, many people today are still deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law by governments that lack the rule of law. One such government is the Socialist Republic of Vietnam.

About 10 years ago, the Vietnamese Ministry of Labor, War Invalids, and Social Affairs directly oversaw and operated two state-owned labor companies that were involved in the largest human trafficking case ever prosecuted by the U.S. Department of Justice. The case thoroughly documented the exploitation and abusive conditions faced by more than 230 workers at the Daewoosa factory in American Samoa. These victims were beaten, starved, sexually harassed and threatened with deportation. The High Court of American Samoa subsequently found these state-owned labor agencies liable for the atrocities and made them pay $3.5 million to the victims. Almost 10 years after the ruling, Vietnam still refuses to acknowledge its part in these atrocities and pay.

Madam Speaker, I ask that the U.S. Congress demand that the Vietnamese government pay the damages and respect the rule of law.

CONTINUING BONUSES FOR BANKERS

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Madam Speaker, since January, the American people have endured another loss of $1.33 trillion of their wealth, having already faced the worst drop in wealth since 1951 in the prior quarter. Yet despite being at the root of our economy's tailspin, Wall Street continues to issue huge bonuses.

For example, Merrill Lynch has issued $4 billion in bonuses to the very bankers and financiers who created this mess that are now nested over at the Bank of America. This is yet another sign that America needs to rein in the false money wizards and reward those who create real wealth in our society, starting with hardworking Americans.

So let me ask the question, when will Wall Street's profits translate into a better life for everyone else? With wealth declining and unemployment rising, America should not be hollowed out by Wall Street. Rather, Wall Street's business should translate into a better way of life for the American Republic. We have wandered far from that mark.

AMERICANS' NET WORTH SHRINKS $1.33 TRILLION IN 1Q

(By Jeannine Aversa)

WASHINGTON.—American households lost $1.33 trillion of their wealth in the first three months of the year as the recession took a bite out of stock portfolios and dragged down home prices.

The Federal Reserve reported Thursday that household net worth fell to $50.38 trillion in the January-March quarter, the lowest level since the third quarter of 2004. The first-quarter figure marked a decline of 2.6 percent, or $1.33 trillion, from the final quarter of 2008.

Net worth represents total assets such as homes and checking accounts, minus liabilities like mortgages and credit card debt.

The damage to wealth in the first quarter came from the sinking stock market. The value of Americans' stock holdings dropped 5.8 percent from the final quarter of last year.

The stock market began to rally from 12-year lows in early March after Citigroup Inc. reported it was profitable in the first two months of the year. Since peaking in October 2007, it had been the worst bear market since the aftermath of the crash of 1929.

Another hit came from falling house prices. The value of household real-estate holdings fell 2.4 percent, according to the Fed report.

Collectively, homeowners had only 41.4 percent equity in their homes in the first quarter. That was down from 42.9 percent in the fourth quarter and was the lowest on records dating to 1945.

The Case-Shiller national home price index, a closely watched barometer, last month estimated that house prices dropped 7.5 percent during the first quarter. Prices have fallen 32.2 percent since peaking in the second quarter of 2006.

The latest snapshot of Americans' balance sheets was contained in the Fed's quarterly report called the flow of funds.

Despite the drop, the speed at which net worth shrunk slowed at the start of the year. During the recession's deepest point in the October-December period, Americans' net worth fell a record 8.6 percent, according to revised figures. That was the largest drop on records dating to 1951.

With wealth declining and unemployment rising, there are questions about how consumers—the lifeblood of the economy—will behave in the coming months.

If they continue to spend, even at a subdued pace, the recession likely will end this year as predicted by Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke and other economists. However, if consumers hunker down and cut spending again, that could delay any recovery. In the final quarter of last year, Americans slashed spending at an annualized rate of 4.3 percent, the most in 28 years.

Still, there was some encouraging news on consumer spending Thursday.

Retail sales rose 0.5 percent in May, following two straight monthly declines, the Commerce Department reported. Meanwhile, the number of newly laid-off workers filing for unemployment benefits fell last week by 24,000 to 601,000, the lowest level since late January.

DON'T GIVE TERRORISTS CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Madam Speaker, "You have the right to remain silent. Anything you say can and will be used against you in a court of law. You have the right to an attorney present during questioning. If you cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for you."

American citizens are read these rights when they are taken into police custody. But the Obama administration has decided to give these rights to suspected terrorists overseas.

Why would the Obama administration give terrorists the same rights as American citizens? Members of al Qaeda and the other terrorist groups should be treated as what they are, America's enemies engaged in a war against the United States.

Giving terrorists constitutional rights is like giving a burglar the key to your house.

CONCERNS WITH A GOVERNMENT-RUN HEALTH CARE PLAN

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Madam Speaker, Republicans are committed to health care reform, and we have and will continue to offer positive solutions to achieve accessible, affordable health care for all Americans. Unfortunately, as Democrats sat behind closed doors to develop their plan, it appears they have failed to answer some troubling concerns about what seems quite likely to be an unwarranted government takeover of the health care system.

So in the spirit of honest debate, I ask my Democrat colleagues how they expect to pay for a government insurance plan without raising taxes or driving up the national debt. How will a government-run health plan not lead to the same rationing of care that we have seen in other countries? How will a government-run health plan protect the doctor-patient relationship, when Washington will now be empowered to pick and choose what procedures and treatments are, in their opinion, cost beneficial?

Before we turn congressional offices into waiting rooms, I hope my Democrat colleagues will answer these questions.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th and the Global War on Terrorism.

NO NEW TAXES, NO NEW SPENDING, NO NEW DEBT

(Mr. CULBERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CULBERSON. Madam Speaker, I just finished speaking to the Bunker Hill and Wilchester Elementary School students, and I want to bring to the attention of the people here in the audience and out there the cover of the new Economist magazine which expresses beautifully the terrible, terrible burden that this Congress, this liberal majority, is passing on to our kids.

Now, there was debt run up under the previous administration. I as a member of the fiscally conservative minority voted against $2.3 trillion worth of new spending under the previous administration. I already voted against $1.6 trillion in this administration. And no matter who you are, fiscal conservative or liberal, each one of us needs to remember as parents, as husbands, as responsible citizens, that we cannot pass on a burden of debt to our kids.

On every vote on every issue, we need to remember that our children are inheriting the biggest debt and the biggest deficit in our Nation's history. As bad as the deficit was under Mr. Bush, the Economist points out it will quadruple this year and stay over $1 trillion a year out into the future.

Madam Speaker, on every vote on every issue, this Congress needs to cut spending. No new taxes, no new spending, and no new debt.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

THE WAR FOR THE BORDER CONTINUES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, the out-of-control violence along our border is made up of more complex elements than most people realize. The criminal cartels controlling our southern border are a lot more powerful than we are led to believe. They are international organized crime cartels that make money off the weaknesses of others. They traffic drugs, money, weapons and human beings across our southern border. They leave death, doom, and destruction in their wake.

Make no mistake about it, there is corruption on both sides of the border that facilitates the lawlessness that is taking place there. Just last month the former sheriff of Starr County, Texas,

Rey Guerra, pled guilty to Federal narcotics charges. He admitted to facilitating intelligence that helped Mexican drug traffickers invade the United States and evade counternarcotics efforts. That included trying to find out the identity of confidential informants.

Madam Speaker, he needs to be locked up forever for his betrayal of this country and law enforcement. But he is just one of a growing number of recruits from both sides of the border that are facilitating this avalanche of corruption and anarchy along the southern frontier.

The Mexican criminal cartels have added a layer of intelligence that better resembles foreign recruitment of spies during the Cold War than a traditional criminal enterprise. The huge amounts of money paid to these officials allow these criminals to traffic people and drugs into our land.

There is a huge difference in the size and scope of these international criminal activities and the typical domestic law enforcement agencies and their duties. As more and more of the violence spills over into Texas and other border States, there is an urgent need to get this lawlessness under control.

The cost of this culture of crime is hammering border States. The FBI is stretched too thin, they don't have the manpower to address this cross-border corruption, and they are fighting domestic Federal crime and jihadists.

Right now we are asking local sheriffs in border States to do double duty, as if they are agents of Interpol. Our domestic police forces should be freed up to do what they do best, fight crime in their counties and their communities.

Our Drug Enforcement Agency is doing a noble effort to control these international criminal cartels that more and more resemble an army at the border than the Cosa Nostra, but the FBI has not been given enough American resources. The Border Patrol is overrun, outmanned, and outgunned.

Our government has limited their rules of engagement. Their standard operating procedure is nonconfrontational. Heavily armed bad guys come through with their contraband of drugs and humans, and yet little is done when they confront our Border Patrol. These cartels are made up of a hybrid of many of the worst elements of organized crime. They include terrorist cells, international espionage agencies, and a foreign military.

But why are we acting as if we can no longer defend our borders and citizens from this lawlessness? It is the philosophy of some that we should wave the white flag of surrender and lessen, not strengthen, our border security. This is absolute nonsense. The Mexican organized criminal cartels are sophisticated, and they are deadly. Maybe it is time to put the United States military on the border. There is no higher duty for the American military than to protect the borders of its own Nation from international criminal invasion.

It is interesting, Madam Speaker. We use our military thousands of miles away to fight the drug war in Afghanistan, but we won't use them at home. Why not? There is no answer from the administration.

We should rotate deployments of our military to the southern border. Our brave men and women are routinely deployed for desert training. Why not concentrate these deployments on the border? This frees up our domestic law enforcement to do the job they should be doing, which is rooting out corruption on our side of the border.

Madam Speaker, I have flown with the National Guard along the Texas-Mexico border. They do a tremendous job working with the Border Patrol and the DEA. But a handful of helicopters is not enough to secure the border. The Air National Guard needs more equipment, more money and more troops to capture the outlaw cartel gangs. The U.S. gave Mexico $1.5 billion to fight the cartels. That money should have been given to our border protectors, not the culture of corruption on the Mexican side of the border.

A lot of attention has been rightly focused on our southern border over the past few years. We have increased the boots on the ground, installed some cameras and erected some barriers and fences and sensors. The efforts have not sealed the border, however.

As the violence gets worse in Mexico, we must get a border strategy in place now before it erupts into a level of widespread violence and more corruption that engulfs our own citizens.

It is not going away, Madam Speaker. The drug cartels are in it for the long haul because of their lust for money. There is a war against drugs going on on the border, even though we are told now that we should not, because of political correctness, use that term.

The first duty of government is to protect the people. The government needs to focus on border protection. Meanwhile, the border war continues.

And that's just the way it is.

ENDING MILITARY OPERATIONS IN IRAQ AND AFGHANISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Speaker, the supplemental appropriations bill to continue our military operations in Iraq and in Afghanistan will soon return to the House for another vote. I voted against it in the first place, and I am going to vote against it again. I cannot support it because it will prolong our military involvement in Iraq and it will increase our military buildup in Afghanistan.

I would gladly vote to fund the safe withdrawal of our troops and contractors out of Iraq. But the supplemental gives me a feeling of deja vu. Haven't we been there before, voting to include billions of dollars for the occupation of Iraq?

Congress has voted to increase funding for Iraq many times, even though the American people want the occupation to end, and it seems the Iraqi people want us out of their country as well.

The supplemental also calls for sending more troops to a foreign land, this time Afghanistan, with no exit strategy. Talk about repeating past mistakes. Talk about deja vu. Afghanistan feels exactly the same as Iraq did to me.

President Obama has said that a campaign against extremism will not succeed with bullets and bombs alone. He is absolutely correct about that. But the money in the supplemental is overwhelmingly devoted to military operations. It includes very little for the economic development, humanitarian aid, and diplomatic efforts that we really need to stop extremists in Afghanistan and in Pakistan.

The ratio is 90-10, 90 percent to the Department of Defense, 10 percent to the smart alternatives. I believe the supplemental also violates the spirit of President Obama's historic speech in Cairo where he offered the Muslim world the hand of friendship. In that speech he said that we must leave Iraq to the Iraqis. But the supplemental will only delay the return of sovereignty to the Iraqi people.

And then there is the little matter of the recession, Madam Speaker. When the American people are feeling such great pain and need so much help right here at home, we can't afford to squander another $100 billion on foreign military adventures that will not make our country safe.

Instead of approving the supplemental bill, the House should be urging the administration to fundamentally change our mission in Iraq, and our mission in Afghanistan. We can do this in several ways.

First, we should support the bill offered by JIM MCGOVERN of Massachusetts, which calls upon the administration to submit an exit strategy for Afghanistan.

Second, I urge my colleagues to consider the plan that I have offered in House Resolution 363. It's called the Smart Security Platform For the 21st Century. Smart Security attacks the root causes of violence by fighting poverty and giving people hope for a better future. It controls the spread of nuclear and conventional weapons of mass destruction, and it strengthens our national security by reducing our dependence on foreign oil.

And finally, we should insist that at least 80 percent of all future funding for Afghanistan be devoted to the Smart Security I just described. Right now, the supplemental, as I told you, devotes more than 90 percent of its dollars to purely military efforts, efforts that are getting us nowhere.

Madam Speaker, we must not repeat the mistakes of the past. We've got to stop writing more blank checks for open-ended occupations. This is what the American people want, and Congress must listen.

HONORING WILLIAM C. "DUB" McCARTY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HENSARLING) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HENSARLING. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of William C. "Dub" McCarty, and recognize his commitment and service to his community, the State of Texas and to our great Nation.

Dub, a resident of Athens, Texas, passed away last month. He was a loving husband of 58 years to JoAnn. He was a proud father to daughters Cynthia and Mary Lou. He was a devoted grandfather of Cole, Kyle, and Michelle, and great grandfather of Kristen, Preston, and Daniel. And finally, Madam Speaker, he was my dear friend.

Dub was born in 1929 in Scurry County, Texas, and graduated from Lamesa High School. After graduation, Dub proudly, proudly defended our Nation during the Korean war by serving in the United States Army.

When his service ended, Dub began what became a legacy of leadership in our free enterprise system and service to his community.

Dub returned to Lamesa to work and eventually own his own clothing business. He gave back to his small West Texas community by shaping the lives of younger men as an Order of DeMolay Dad and as a longtime Boy Scout leader in Lamesa.

Dub then moved to my hometown of Dallas, Texas, where he began a long career in corporate group insurance management. After that though, he set his sights eastward to the pine trees and lakes of East Texas, and began a fire and casualty insurance business in Henderson County.

As a business owner, he helped countless members of his community achieve their American dream, and he took great pride in his community. His record of service today is still unmatched in East Texas. He served as the Cedar Creek Chamber of Commerce president. He helped establish the Cedar Creek Library. He was a charter member of the library's board of directors, and he and his wife, JoAnn, worked tirelessly to support and grow that library. He led the Cedar Creek Kiwanis Club and was Division 26 lieutenant governor for over two years.

He served as secretary treasurer of the Athens Kiwanis Club. He took a leadership in their annual pancake breakfast. He was an active member of the Athens Rotary Club. And, Madam Speaker, the list of community service goes on and on.

Now, we all know across America that the Rotary motto is "service above self." Dub lived those words every day of his life. He led by example, and his example represents the best of the American character.

Madam Speaker, Dub was not indifferent to the direction of his State and Nation either. He cared passionately about faith and family and free enterprise and freedom, and he chose to put his principles into action by serving as chairman of the Henderson County Republican party for 8 years. That's where I first met Dub McCarty, this kind, giving, caring individual. He was always upbeat. He always had a smile on his face and he always knew that if we worked together, that America's best days would lay ahead of her. He made a difference.

As the congressman for the Fifth District of Texas, I'm honored and, frankly, humbled to recognize my good friend, Dub McCarty. On behalf of all the constituents of the Fifth District of Texas, and a grateful Nation, I would like to extend our heartfelt condolences and prayers to JoAnn and the family.

Dub will be greatly missed, but I take solace in knowing that his contributions will live on, and that the people who had their lives touched by Dub McCarty will never forget.

Madam Speaker, I am one of those people.

Godspeed to Dub McCarty. He has left us, but he has gone on to now hear those words in a different place, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

DENOUNCING THE MURDEROUS ATTACK ON THE HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, yesterday, as ranking member of the Africa Subcommittee, I joined several colleagues at an important Foreign Affairs Committee meeting with Prime Minister Morgan Tsvangirai of Zimbabwe. It was an extraordinary opportunity to discuss Zimbabwe's progress towards democracy and away from dictatorship, its problems with hyperinflation, and multiple health crises, including cholera, and to obtain a fuller understanding of what additional steps the United States can take right now to help.

That meeting, however, occurred at precisely the same time that the House considered H. Res. 529, a resolution condemning the June 10th violent attack on the Holocaust Memorial Museum, a despicable anti-Semitic act that killed Officer Stephen Tyrone Johns. And as so eloquently articulated by so many of my colleagues yesterday during that debate, we salute Officer Johns for his bravery and his courage, and extend our deepest condolences to his family.

I rise today not only to express my support for H. Res. 529, but also to thank my good friend and colleague, Mr. KLEIN, for introducing it and for including me as a cosponsor.

Madam Speaker, the Holocaust Memorial Museum is a noble and vitally necessary attempt to remember and honor the victims of the Holocaust. The memorial itself is a witness to truth and the promotion of human dignity and tolerance.

Wednesday's attack on that museum by a crazed, hate-filled gunman is yet another chilling reminder that our society still harbors a dangerous collection of bigots and racists who hate Jews.

Unparalleled since the dark days of the Second World War, Jewish communities around the world are today facing violent attacks against synagogues, Jewish cultural sites, cemeteries and individuals. Anti-Semitism is an ugly reality that won't go away by ignoring it or by wishing it away. It must be combated with resolve and tenacity, and it must be defeated.

The sad and deeply troubling reality is that James von Brunn cannot be dismissed as an aberration, but is connected to a whole hate-promoting movement that results in violence against Jews in America and around the world on practically a daily basis.

The Anti-Defamation League recently issued its annual audit of anti-Semitic incidents. While the ADL is to be congratulated for its careful research on an unpleasant but absolutely necessary subject, the ugly facts that the report documents makes for painful reading.

In 2008, the ADL noted 1,352 reported incidents of vandalism, harassment, and physical assaults on Jewish people or Jewish-owned property nationwide. Sadly, and shamefully, my own State of New Jersey had more reported anti-Semitic incidents, 238, than any other State in the Union.

The attack on the Holocaust Museum is the most ominous aspect of this evil wave that we have seen worldwide and in our own country. The Holocaust Museum is a unique institution. It is a memorial, a museum, a center of Holocaust scholarship, and a promoter of tolerance and preventer of genocide. It is a very powerful symbol of the solidarity of America with those murdered in the Holocaust, and with the Jewish people as well.

Madam Speaker, at this critical moment, we need government officials at all levels to denounce, without hesitation or delay, every anti-Semitic act, wherever and whenever it occurs, no exceptions. At this moment, not to speak out enables the purveyors of hate. They never take a holiday. They never grow weary, nor should we.

Just as Mr. Brunn attacked the Holocaust Memorial Museum and murdered a courageous security officer tasked with its protection, Holocaust remembrance and tolerance education must dramatically expand, and we need to ensure that our respective laws punish those who hate and incite violence against Jews.

Finally, if we are to protect our children from the evil of anti-Semitism, we must re-educate ourselves and systematically educate our children. While that starts at our homes, the classroom must be the incubator of tolerance as well. It seems to me that only the most hardened racist can remain unmoved by Holocaust education and remembrance. Only the most crass, evil and prejudiced among us can study the horrors of the Holocaust and not cry out: Never again!

CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO THE ACTIONS AND POLICIES OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF BELARUS AND OTHER PERSONS THAT UNDERMINE DEMOCRATIC PROCESSES OR INSTITUTIONS IN BELARUS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 111-47)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register for publication the enclosed notice stating that the national emergency and related measures blocking the property of certain persons undermining democratic processes or institutions in Belarus are to continue in effect beyond June 16, 2009.

Despite some positive developments during the past year, including the release of internationally recognized political prisoners, the actions and policies of certain members of the Government of Belarus and other persons that have undermined democratic processes or institutions, committed human rights abuses related to political repression, and engaged in public corruption pose a continuing unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States. For these reasons, I have determined that it is necessary to continue the national emergency and related measures blocking the property of certain persons undermining democratic processes or institutions in Belarus.

BARACK OBAMA,
THE WHITE HOUSE, June 12, 2009.

COUNCIL ON AMERICAN-ISLAMIC RELATIONS—CAIR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Speaker, as ranking member on the Commerce, Justice, Science Appropriation Subcommittee, which last week considered the fiscal year 2010 appropriations bill, I have a keen interest in and oversight responsibility for a host of counterterrorism and related initiatives.

The bill which is expected to come before the full House next week includes $7.7 billion to support the work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the FBI, whose top priorities include protecting and defending the United States against terrorism and foreign intelligence threats.

The FBI was intimately involved in a 15-year investigation, which culminated last fall in the Holy Land Foundation and five of its former organizers being found guilty of illegally funneling more than $12 million to the terrorist group Hamas.

A Department of Justice press release issued May 27, 2009, reported, "U.S. District Judge Jorge A. Solis sentenced the Holy Land Foundation for Relief and Development and five of its leaders following their convictions by a Federal jury in November 2008 on charges of providing material support to Hamas, a designated foreign terrorist organization." The sentences range from 15 years to 65 years in prison.

According to the Department of Justice, "From its inception, the Holy Land Foundation existed to support Hamas. The government's case included testimony that, in the early 1990s, Hamas' parent organization, the Muslim Brotherhood, planned to establish a network of organizations in the U.S. to spread a militant Islamist message and raise money for Hamas. The defendants sent Holy Land Foundation-raised funds to Hamas-controlled zakat committees and charitable societies West Bank and Gaza."

Among the unindicted conspirators in the case is an organization which, over the last several years, has been granted access to the highest levels of the U.S. Government—an organization which is routinely elevated in the press as a voice of mainstream Muslim Americans. This organization is the Council on American-Islamic Relations, or CAIR.

Tawfik Hamid, according to his bio, is an "Islamist thinker and reformer and onetime Islamist extremist from Egypt. He was a member of a terrorist Islamic organization, Jemaah Islamiyah, with Dr. Ayman al-Zawahiri, who became later the second in command of al Qaeda.

On May 25 of 2007, in a Wall Street Journal op-ed, Hamid wrote the following, "In America, perhaps the most conspicuous organization to persistently accuse opponents of Islamophobia is the Council of [sic] American Islamic Relations." The observations of Mr. Tawfik, himself a Muslim, are particularly relevant in light of recent news reports.

On January 30, 2009, Fox News reported that the FBI was "severing its once close ties with the Nation's largest Muslim advocacy group, the Council on American-Islamic Relations, amid mounting evidence that it has links to a support network for Hamas."

Given that Hamas is on the current list of U.S.-designated foreign terrorist organizations, this was obviously a serious claim and one which, if true, would rightly inform a shift in FBI policy. However, the Fox News piece left me with some unanswered questions, questions which, given the seriousness of the report, necessitated further inquiry. Such questions of the executive branch are a common congressional practice and, in fact, are the responsibility of the legislative branch of government and are the intended purpose of our system of checks and balances.

For 6 years, from 2001-2006, I served as chairman of the appropriations subcommittee which has oversight of the FBI. This year, I resumed a leadership role as the lead Republican on the subcommittee.

According to the Congressional Research Service, "Congressional oversight refers to the review, monitoring and supervision of Federal agencies, programs, activities, and policy implementation. It is an integral part of the American system of checks and balances."

A young Woodrow Wilson, before becoming President, put it this way. He said, "Quite as important as legislation is vigilant oversight of administration."

Needless to say, I take very seriously the responsibility of congressional oversight, especially in matters with potential national security implications. In this spirit of oversight, I wrote to the FBI on February 2, seeking additional information and clarification regarding the Bureau's decision about its relationship with CAIR.

For the RECORD, I submit a copy of the letter.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 2, 2009.

Mr. MICHAEL J. HEIMBACH,
Assistant Director, Counter Terrorism Division, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington DC.

DEAR MR. HEIMBACH: I write regarding the bureau's position on meeting with the Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR). Over the weekend I saw a FOX News report (enclosed) that the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has cut off ties with CAIR "amid mounting evidence that it has links to a support network for Hamas." Given that Hamas is on the current list of U.S. designated foreign terrorist organizations, this is obviously a serious claim, one which would rightly inform a shift in FBI policy.

In response to this report, I request answers to the following questions:

Has the FBI severed ties with CAIR? If so, how is the FBI planning to formally notify Members of Congress and other government officials of this decision?

If FBI policy has changed with regard to CAIR, is there any indication that this decision is being revisited by the new administration? If so, what new evidence would justify a change in course?

Is CAIR's national office still in contact with the FBI?

The report quotes Assistant Director John Miller from the FBI Office of Public Affairs as saying: "The FBI has had to limit its formal contact with CAIR field offices until certain issues are addressed by CAIR's national headquarters." What specifically are the "certain issues" which you have raised with CAIR? Is there still informal contact with any field offices? If so, what is the distinction between formal and informal and why is there a distinction between field offices?

To your knowledge, does CAIR receive financial contributions from foreign sources? If so, which ones and how much?

I look forward to your timely response, and to working with you in the days ahead in my new role as ranking member of the House Commerce-Justice-Science Appropriations subcommittee.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

FRANK R. WOLF,
Member of Congress.

The Fox News piece, which prompted my initial interest, quoted the assistant director of the Office of Public Affairs at the Bureau as saying, "The FBI has had to limit its formal contact with CAIR field offices until certain issues are addressed by CAIR's national headquarters."

I found this statement to be vague. While perhaps sufficient from a public affairs vantage, I believed it to be an insufficient explanation for Members of Congress, none of whom, to my knowledge, had been informed of this policy shift, and it was just that—a policy shift.

The FOX piece noted later that the FBI has "long been close to CAIR. The agency has previously invited CAIR to give training sessions for agents and used it as a liaison with the American Muslim community."

I was one of several Members of Congress, both Democrat and Republican, who wrote the Bureau in the days following this report. Some, such as Republican Senator JON KYL of Arizona and Democratic Senator CHUCK SCHUMER of New York, voiced their support for the Bureau's decision, which was a step further than my initial letter; but they, too, desired to "understand the situation more fully" as Senators KYL and SCHUMER wrote.

When I received a response from the FBI on March 9, only 1 of the 10 questions I posed was answered, which prompted me to send a second letter restating the original questions and pressing the FBI for a timely and detailed response.

I submit a copy of that letter for the RECORD.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, March 9, 2009.

Mr. MICHAEL J. HEIMBACH,
Assistant Director, Counter Terrorism Division, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington DC.

DEAR MR. HEIMBACH: I was deeply disappointed with the FBI's response—hand-delivered to my office last Friday—to my letter of February 2 inquiring about the Bureau's position on meeting with the Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR). It took the Bureau more than a month to respond, and the letter I received provides only a partial answer to one of the 10 questions I posed.

In 1998 I authored the legislation that created the National Commission on Terrorism. Regrettably its recommendations were not implemented until after the attacks on 9/11. I take seriously the responsibility of congressional oversight, especially in matters with potential national security implications. For six years I served as chairman of the appropriations subcommittee with jurisdiction over the FBI and count myself among the Bureau's strongest supporters. Having resumed a leadership role this year as ranking member on the Commerce-Justice-Science Appropriations subcommittee, it is important to me that the FBI provide timely and detailed responses. And so again, I request answers to the following straightforward questions:

Has the FBI severed ties with CAIR? If so, how is the FBI planning to formally notify Members of Congress and other government officials of this decision?

If FBI policy has changed with regard to CAIR, is there any indication that this decision is being revisited by the new administration? If so, what new evidence would justify a change in course?

Is CAIR's national office still in contact with the FBI?

The FOX News report I referenced in my original letter quotes Assistant Director John Miller from the FBI Office of Public Affairs as saying: "The FBI has had to limit its formal contact with CAIR field offices until certain issues are addressed by CAIR's national headquarters." What specifically are the "certain issues" which you have raised with CAIR? Is there still informal contact with any field offices? If so, what is the distinction between formal and informal and why is there a distinction between field offices?

To your knowledge, does CAIR receive financial contributions from foreign sources? If so, which ones and how much?

I would like these questions fully answered by this Friday, March 13, and by someone who works on counter-terrorism, rather than a public affairs officer. Other members of Congress, both House and Senate, have expressed interest in and additional information about the Bureau's position as it relates to CAIR. I would think the Bureau would be embarrassed to send the insufficient response I received.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

FRANK R. WOLF,
Member of Congress.

Days after my second letter, CAIR launched a public attack against me, claiming in a March 12 press release that I "abused" my "office" by "seeking to pressure the FBI to produce negative information" about the organization.

Those assertions are patently untrue and would not even warrant a response were they not symptomatic of what I believe to be a larger pattern of intimidation undertaken by CAIR—intimidation which is of great consequence given the national security matters at stake.

As my letters to the FBI indicate, I was seeking to better understand the Bureau's position and access information about what led to this decision. It is a conclusion which—and I agree with my Senate colleagues—is absolutely appropriate based on reports I have read for years but which, again, marks a change in course for the Bureau and, as such, deserved further explanation.

It is noteworthy that, on April 28, following my initial unsatisfactory reply from the Bureau, Senator KYL received a more substantive response from the FBI to his letter. In the letter to Senator KYL, the Bureau was more detailed in explaining and in validating the original news report regarding its relationship with CAIR.

The letter reads, "As you know, CAIR was named as an unindicted co-conspirator of the Holy Land Foundation for Relief and Development in the United States v. Holy Land Foundation, et al.

"During that trial, evidence was introduced that demonstrated a relationship among CAIR, individual CAIR founders, including its current president emeritus and its executive director, and the Palestinian committee. Evidence was also introduced that demonstrated a relationship between the Palestinian committee and Hamas, which was designated a terrorist organization in 1995. In light of that evidence, the FBI suspended all formal contacts between CAIR and the FBI.

"The FBI's decision to suspend formal contacts was not intended to reflect a wholesale judgment of the organization and its entire membership. Nevertheless, until we can resolve whether there continues to be a connection between CAIR or its executives and Hamas, the FBI does not view CAIR as an appropriate liaison partner."

I submit a copy of the Bureau's response to Senator KYL for the RECORD.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Washington, DC, April 28, 2009.

Hon. JON KYL,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KYL: This responds to your letter to Director Mueller dated February 24, 2009, regarding your interest in reports that the FBI has severed its liaison relationship with the Council on Islamic Relations (CAIR). I apologize for the delay in responding to your inquiry. For your information an identical letter has been sent to Senator Schumer and to Senator Coburn, M.D.

As you know, CAIR was named as an unindicted co-conspirator of the Holy Land Foundation for Relief and Development in United States v. Holy Land Foundation et al. (Cr. No. 3:04-240-P (N.D.TX.)). During that trial, evidence was introduced that demonstrated a relationship among CAIR, individual CAIR founders (including its current President Emeritus and its Executive Director) and the Palestine Committee. Evidence was also introduced that demonstrated a relationship between the Palestine Committee and HAMAS, which was designated as a terrorist organization in 1995. In light of that evidence, the FBI suspended all formal contacts between CAIR and the FBI.

The FBI's decision to suspend formal contacts was not intended to reflect a wholesale judgment of the organization and its entire membership. Nevertheless, until we can resolve whether there continues to be a connection between CAIR or its executives and HAMAS, the FBI does not view CAIR as an appropriate liaison partner. It is important to note, however, that although the FBI has suspended all formal outreach activities with CAIR at this time, CAIR, its officers, and members have been encouraged to report any hate crime, violation of federal civil rights or suspicious activity to the FBI.

The FBI made its own decision vis-a-vis outreach activities with this particular group. Any questions regarding broader executive branch outreach activities would be better answered by the Administration.

Please do not hesitate to contact my office if we may be of additional assistance.

Sincerely yours,

RICHARD C. POWERS,
Assistant Director, Office of Congressional Affairs.

SUBJECT: VISIT BY COUNCIL ON AMERICAN ISLAMIC RELATIONS (CAIR) TO UAE

1.(U) On May 21, the Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR) paid a courtesy call on the Ambassador to discuss the organization's issues, outreach strategies, and its visit to the CAE. The UAE press has reported that Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid al-

Maktoum, Deputy Ruler of Dubai and UAE Minister of Finance and Industry, "has endorsed a proposal to build a property in the U.S. to serve as an endowment for CAIR." DCM, PAO and MEPI Regional Director also participated in the meeting.

2.(U) The group expressed ideas about countering negative stereotypes about Muslims in the U.S. ("Islamophobia") and addressing anti-Americanism in the Middle East. They mentioned previous meetings with State Department officials, U/S Karen Hughes and A/S David Welch, their attendance at the Secretary's Iftar, and spoke of a possible meeting with President Bush in the future.

3.(U) Mr. Don Myers, representing Washington, D.C. public relations firm Hill & Knowlton, provided a short demonstration of a PR campaign designed to support CAIR's overall organizational objectives defined as: 1) political empowerment of Muslims, 2) grassroots effort by CAIR to improve community relations with non-Muslims, 3) launching of an effective, long-term (5 year) advertising/outreach campaign to counter negative stereotypes about Muslims.

4.(U) Members of the CAIR delegation included: Hon. Larry Shaw, Senator (North Carolina General Assembly); Hon. Paul Findley, Former U.S. Representative; Don Myers, Washington, D.C. public relations firm Hill & Knowlton; Nihad Awad, CAIR Executive Director and Co-Founder; Cary (Ibrahim) Hooper, CAIR Communication Director and Co-Founder; Dr. Parvez Ahmed, CAIR Board Chairman; and Dr. Nabil Sadoun, CAIR Board Member.

5.(U) CAIR delegation also paid a call earlier in the day on Sheikh Sultan bin Muhammad al-Qassimi, Ruler of Sharjah, which was covered in the press.

6.(U) Sheikh Ali al-Hashemi, UAE Presidential Adviser on Islamic affairs, is hosting a reception at his house this evening, May 22, in honor of the CAIR group; Ambassador and Poloff to attend. Al-Hashemi also thanked the Ambassador for receiving the CAIR delegation.

7.(SBU) Comment: CAIR Executive Director Nihad Awad told us that while they were pleased with the results of the meeting with Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid, they had no concrete information on the size of the endowment or when it might be forthcoming. Awad also mentioned that the Bin Hamoodah Group, a $500 million/year trading company, founded by three Emirati brothers and representing Halliburton, IBM, FMC Corporation and General Motors, is CAIR's main benefactor in the UAE. One newly-rich stock trader, Talal Khoori (UAE national of Iranian origin), is believed to have donated one million dollars to CAIR.

SUBJECT: VISIT BY COUNCIL ON AMERICAN ISLAMIC RELATIONS (CAIR) TO SAUDI ARABIA
REF: ABU DHABI 2127

1.(U) Following up on a similar visit to the UAE in May (reftel), a delegation from the U.S.-based Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR) visited the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (KSA) in June. On June 22 the group paid a courtesy call on the Embassy to discuss the organization's issues and outreach strategies. In the Ambassador's absence, DCM received the group, along with the PA Counselor and Poloff (notetaker).

2.(SBU) Prior to coming to Riyadh, the CAIR group visited Mecca and Jeddah. Although they apparently were not received at the highest levels of the SAG, the group assured the Embassy that "King Abdullah knows CAIR very well" and receives regular updates on the group's projects. After recalling the success of their visit to the UAE in May, the group predicted that they would be back in the region by fall to visit Kuwait and Qatar. The group also mentioned that they had been well-received in Washington by senior State Department officials, including Secretary Rice and Undersecretary Hughes.

3.(U) The core delegation consisted of CAIR Board Chairman Dr. Parvez Ahmed, Executive Director Nihad Awad, and Communications Director Cary (Ibrahim) Hooper. Accompanying them were former U.S. Representative Paul Findley and Don Myers, a former DoD official now with Hill and Knowlton public relations.

4.(U) During their hour-long meeting in the Embassy, the group presented various projects that CAIR is working on to counter negative stereotypes about Muslims in the U.S. ("Islamophobia"), linking their work to concern over growing anti-Americanism in the Middle East. One of the current CAIR projects they discussed was the presentation of "accurate books about Islam" to schools and libraries in the U.S.

5.(SBU) Mr. Don Myers, representing Hill and Knowlton, gave a short demonstration of a CAIR-funded media campaign to support CAIR's overall information outreach effort. According to Myers, this private campaign will emphasize both grassroots outreach to improve American non-Muslim understanding of Muslims and the encouragement of political engagement by American Muslims. The multi-year broadcast and print campaign is to be entitled "Let the Conversation Begin" and is aimed at countering negative stereotypes about Muslims within the broad American public.

6.(SBU) One admitted reason for the group's current visit to the KSA was to solicit $50 million in governmental and non-governmental contributions. PA Counselor noted that private outreach activities can provide valuable support to USG efforts to build mutual understanding overseas but cautioned that USG Public Diplomacy (PD) funds cannot be used or associated with efforts to target American audiences. The delegation was interested to hear of the Embassy's PD exchange and activities within the KSA and offered to help support them in any appropriate way. The group did not share, however, any details of their success or lack thereof in fundraising within the KSA.

AMERICAN MUSLIMS COMMEND FBI FOR REJECTION OF CAIR

Thirty years have passed since the Iranian revolution and 29 years since the first Islamist murder in the U.S.—that of 'Ali Akbar Tabataba'i in a Washington, D.C., suburb. More than seven years ago, America received a wake-up call, on September 11, 2001, about radical Islam. However straightforwardly evil these events, they left U.S. authorities mostly baffled by extremism among American Muslims.

One disturbing example of this confusion has involved the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR).

Almost from CAIR'S founding in 1994, the FBI has worked with the organization, which successfully presented itself as the "Muslim NAACP," letting CAIR train bureau personnel and serve as a liaison to the American Muslim community. CAIR concentrated on terror-related law enforcement such as sensitivity in investigating extremist suspects and allegations of profiling.

Now, at last, the FBI-CAIR relationship has changed.

In a letter dated March 9, 2009, FBI Assistant Director John Miller wrote to U.S. Rep. Frank R. Wolf (R-Va) confirming that the bureau has "suspended any formal engagement with Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR) field offices around the country." He explained that this adjustment "comes in part as a result of evidence gathered through FBI investigation and presented in connection with the Holy Land Foundation trial. CAIR was listed as an undicted co-conspirator in that case."

Miller referred to the Holy Land Foundation, or HLF, having been convicted of terror financing in November 2008.

CAIR and its allies in the "Wahhabi lobby" reacted aggressively to the FBI's decision to distance itself from CAIR. Ten extremist Muslim groups announced on March 17, 2009, that they are "considering suspending outreach relations with the FBI" based on vague claims that "American mosques and Muslim groups have been targeted." CAIR's supporters included American Muslims for Palestine, the Islamic Circle of North America, and the Muslim Students Association, as well as the leading pro-Iranian Muslim element in America, the Islamic Educational Center of Orange County, Ca.

We, the undersigned American Muslims, have long known the true character of CAIR and its allies. Therefore:

We observe that they denounce "terrorism" in general terms but not the specific actions of Islamist groups like Hamas or Hezbollah. They denounce violence but not the ideologies behind it.

We observe their commitment to radical aims, their attempts to chill free speech by calling critics of radical Islam "Islamophobes," and their false, ugly accusations against moderate American Muslims who disagree with their agenda.

We reject any claim that CAIR and its supporters are legitimate civil liberties advocates or appropriate partners between the U.S. government and American Muslims.

We congratulate the FBI for adopting a firmer attitude toward CAIR, as a defense of Americans of all faiths from the menace of radical Islam, including Muslims of all backgrounds—Sunni, Shia, Sufi, secular, etc.

We call on the U.S. Department of Justice to affirm and continue this decision.

We call on the entire United States government to follow suit in rejecting relations with the Council on American-Islamic Relations.

I plan to take the remainder of my time to explore many of these same concerns and talk about why everything I've read, studied and observed has led me to believe that the Bureau's decision is not only defensible but advisable and that it ought to, in fact, inform the actions of other public officials, policymakers and the press, many of whom consistently—and I would argue mistakenly—look to CAIR to speak for mainstream Muslim Americans.

Zhudi Jasser, himself a Muslim and president of the Islamic Forum for Democracy, makes a critical distinction between "Islam" and "Islamism." "Islam" is, of course, a faith which has an estimated worldwide following of over 1 billion people. "Islamism," however, according to Mr. Jasser, is "a coercive governmental and political construct that seeks to impose shar'ia—Islam jurisprudence—upon society."

In 2007, in the publication Family Security Matters, Jasser wrote that CAIR uses "the protection of religion when the facts are not on their side. They use the discourse of politics when they want to push forth their Islamist agenda with the presumption of speaking for all Muslims. They will delve into the political only on their own terms in both foreign and domestic policy, but when they are on the receiving end of political criticism, they run for cover under the guise of victimization." A dispassionate look at CAIR's public posture shows that Mr. Jasser's observations ring true.

In 1998, I authored the legislation that created the National Commission on Terrorism. That same year, in CAIR's own words from a press release, it "asked Muslims to contact leaders of a House-Senate conference committee and urge them to amend or eliminate new legislation that would create a National Commission on Terrorism." This was a misguided lobbying effort at best. Fortunately, it was unsuccessful, and the bipartisan commission was authorized to conduct its work.

A Congressional Research Service report described the main finding of the commission this way: "It calls on the U.S. Government to prepare more actively to prevent and deal with a future mass casualty, catastrophic terrorist attack." Regrettably, the commission's recommendations, sent to Congress in June 2000, were generally ignored until after the attacks of September 11, 2001, when 3,000 people were killed, including 30 from my congressional district.

Following the commission's public report, CAIR's executive director, Nihad Awad, said in a June 4 press release, "The fight against terrorism is one that should be undertaken, but that struggle should not be based on stereotypes, false assumptions or the political agendas of foreign governments. If the past is any indication, all or most of these new provisions will be used to target Muslims in this country and worldwide. It is American Muslim groups whose fund-raising will be restricted. It is Muslim students who will be monitored."

Indeed, the FBI has restricted the fund-raising of some Muslim groups, but only when those organizations have been found to be a cover for terrorist financing, as was true most notably with the Holy Land Foundation.

When the Holy Land Foundation was shuttered 3 months after 9/11, CAIR warned in a December 4, 2001, press release that this was an "unjust and counterproductive move that can only damage America's credibility with Muslims in this country and around the world and could create the impression that there has been a shift from a war on terrorism to an attack on Islam." This purported "attack on Islam" proved to be baseless in the face of the Holy Land Foundation verdicts.

A November 25, 2008, Department of Justice press release following the initial verdicts in the foundation case quotes Patrick Rowan, Assistant Attorney General for National Security. He says, "For many years, the Holy Land Foundation used the guise of charity to raise and funnel millions of dollars to the infrastructure of the Hamas terrorist organization. This prosecution demonstrates our resolve to ensure that humanitarian relief efforts are not used as a mechanism to disguise and enable support for terrorist groups."

As I noted earlier, CAIR was named as an undicted coconspirator in the Holy Land Foundation case, which makes its cautionary word about the "injustice" of closing the "charity" suspect.

In a Federal court filing from December 2007, Federal prosecutors described CAIR as "having conspired with other affiliates of the Muslim Brotherhood to support terrorists." The government also stated "proof that the conspirators used deception to conceal from the American public their connections to terrorists was introduced" in the Holy Land Foundation trial.

In a footnote, government prosecutors pointed out: "From its founding by Muslim Brotherhood leaders, CAIR conspired with other affiliates of the Muslim Brotherhood to support terrorists."

Further, according to Senate testimony, CAIR received a $5,000 donation for the Holy Land Foundation. Initially, in written testimony submitted September 10, 2003, to the Senate Subcommittee on Terrorism, Technology and Homeland Security, CAIR denied that this was the case. Specifically, Mr. Awad said claims to the contrary were “an outright lie. Our organization did not receive any seed money from the” Holy Land Foundation. But when confronted with the IRS form on which the Holy Land Foundation disclosed the contribution, Mr. Awad changed his position in supplemental testimony submitted to the subcommittee saying that the amount in question was a donation like any other.

CAIR ultimately filed an amicus brief seeking removal from the list of unindicted coconspirators in the Holy Land Foundation case. In September of 2007, prosecutors made several arguments in favor of maintaining CAIR status, saying: “CAIR has been identified by the government at trial as a participant in an ongoing and ultimately unlawful conspiracy to support a designated terrorist organization, a conspiracy from which CAIR never withdrew.”

The Holy Land Foundation trial revealed more about CAIR than simply its ties to that particular entity. Rather, the trial brought to light, in the public square, the genesis of the organization. According to an October 14, 2008, Dallas Morning News story: “Testimony has suggested that CAIR’s founder Omar Ahmad and its current executive director, Nihad Awad, participated in a 1993 meeting of purported Hamas sympathizers. Some Holy Land defendants attended the Philadelphia meeting, bugged by the FBI.”

A day later, the Dallas Morning News reported that FBI special agent Lara Burns testified during the Holy Land Foundation case that CAIR “was formed in the aftermath of a 1993 meeting by Palestinian activists in America who brainstormed ways to spread pro-Hamas messages here without attracting too much attention.”

A Department of Justice press release issued on November 24, 2008, when the Holy Land Foundation verdicts came down: “The government case included testimony that in the early 1990s, Hamas’ parent organization, the Muslim Brotherhood, planned to establish a network of organizations in the U.S. to spread a militant Islamist message and to raise money for Hamas. . . . HLF became the chief fundraising arm for the Palestine Committee in the U.S. created by the Muslim Brotherhood to support Hamas. According to a wiretap of a 1993 Palestine Committee meeting in Philadelphia, former Holy Land Foundation President and CEO Shukri Abu Baker spoke about playing down Hamas’ ties in order to keep raising money in the U.S. Another wiretapped phone call included Abdulrahman Odeh, Holy Land Foundation’s New Jersey representative, referring to a suicide bombing as ‘a beautiful operation.’”

According to a National Review article in the pre-CAIR days, both Nihad

Awad and Omar Ahmad were top officers in the Islamic Association for Palestine. Former FBI counterterrorism chief Oliver “Buck” Revell called Awad’s former employer, the Islamic Association for Palestine, “a front organization for Hamas that engages in propaganda for Islamic militants.”

A September 24, 2001, L.A. Times story described the connection between the Islamic Association of Palestine and the Holy Land Foundation this way: “The IAP and the Holy Land were founded and funded by Mousa abu Marzook. . . . He’s also the political leader of the terrorist group Hamas.”

Andrew McCarthy, a formal Federal prosecutor who led the 1995 prosecution against Sheik Omar Abdel Rahman, the “blind sheik” who was found guilty of planning the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, in a National Review article notes that there are “several persons connected to CAIR who have been convicted of Federal felonies including terrorism.”

McCarthy includes in the group Ghassan Elashi, one of the founding members of CAIR’s Dallas-area chapter, and also co-founder and former chairman of the Holy Land Foundation. According to July 9, 2007, Dallas Morning News report, Elashi was sentenced to “nearly 7 years in prison for doing business with a terrorist and violating export laws.” In a 1994 forum discussion videotaped at Barry University, CAIR’s Mr. Awad said, “I’m in support of the Hamas movement.” CAIR has subsequently sought to discredit his video on his Web site by saying this quote was in response to a specific question and that Hamas was only designated a “foreign terrorist organization,” in January 1995 and did not commit its first wave of suicide bombings until late 1994 after Mr. Awad made the comment. It is noteworthy that Hamas’ 1988 covenant describes itself as “one of the wings in the Muslim Brotherhood in Palestine” and says that “the day of judgment will not come about until Muslims fight Jews and kill them.”

CAIR’s defense and Mr. Awad’s quote based simply on chronology is wanting in light of Hamas’ founding principles which clearly embrace violence. As the Washington Post’s Richard Cohen wrote in April of 2009: “Read the Hamas charter. It is not some uplifting cry of a downtrodden people seeking its freedom but a repellant anti-Semitic screed.”

CAIR’s mission statement focuses on protecting the civil rights of Muslims in America and on improving Islam’s image. But CAIR’s action under the umbrella of civil rights raises troubling questions.

In November 2006, US Airways removed six imams from a flight following passenger reports of unusual behavior. An Investor’s Business Daily piece described the imams’ action this way: “At the gate before boarding, they angrily cursed the U.S. Then they bowed to Mecca and prayed ‘very loud’ shouting ‘Allah Allah, Allah’ according to the gate agent and another witness. On the plane, they didn’t take their assigned seats and instead fanned out to the front, the middle, and the rear of the plane. . . . Some ran back and forth speaking to each other in Arabic. Adding to suspicions, most of them asked for seatbelt extensions even though they didn’t need them—or even use them.”

“Following the incident, the imams and CAIR filed a lawsuit against US Airways, the Minneapolis-St. Paul Metropolitan Airports Commission and ‘John Doe’ passengers,” meaning the passengers on the plane.

Omar Mohammedi, the New York attorney who represented the imams, was a former president for the board of directors for CAIR, New York. The suit charged that the John Doe passengers “may have made false reports against plaintiffs solely with the intent to discriminate against them on the basis of their race, religion, ethnicity and national origin.”

CAIR subsequently called on the Department of Justice to investigate violations of civil liberties for the six religious leaders taken off the plane.

The then-president of the Becket Fund for Religious Liberty, a Washington, DC public interest-based law firm protecting the free expression of all religious traditions, wrote the following letter to CAIR regarding suit against the John Doe passengers:

“This is a first for us. We have never opposed someone else’s claim for religious discrimination but this tactic of threatening suit against ordinary citizens is so far beyond the traditions of civil rights litigation in the United States that we must oppose it to defend the good name of religious liberty itself.”

It is noteworthy that the Becket Fund has successfully argued cases for Muslims including securing a place for Muslim public school students in Texas to pray. In March of 2007, the Arizona Republic called the suit against ordinary citizens “intimidation by lawsuit.” On April 9, 2007, the San Francisco Chronicle reported that CAIR’s Ibrahim Hooper had a notably different take: “It is wrongheaded for observers to be suspicious of innocent behavior. Praying or asking for a seatbelt extension—simply because a Muslim ‘That Muslim is wearing a tie,’ Hooper scoffed. ‘He can take it off and strangle someone.’”

The U.S. Department of Transportation conducted an investigation following the passenger complaints and found that US Airways did not discriminate against the six imams when it removed them. In a letter to CAIR’s acting legal director, the assistant general counsel for Aviation Enforcement and Proceedings wrote the following: "We find the decision to remove the imams from the aircraft was based on information available to the captain at the time and was reasonable . . . it appears that the captain decided to remove the imams because of security concerns as a result of the sum of the imams' actual and perceived behavior, not their race or ethnicity. The fact that the captain's concerns were not borne out in hindsight does not make the action that he took discriminatory."

CAIR's approach in this case was not simply an inconvenience. Rather, it had potential security implications as well. Airports nationwide implore travelers to report suspicious activities. Signs on major highways, bridges and tunnels throughout America do the same. New York Metropolitan Transit Authority introduced an ad campaign which has been adopted by municipalities around the country as part of their own anti-terrorism campaign. The ad features the following admonition: if you see something, say something.

But CAIR would have had Americans thinking, If you see something, think twice before you say something, lest you get mired in a lawsuit. USA Today editorialized in the days following the imams' suit and said: "This legal tactic seems designed to intimidate passengers willing to do exactly what authorities have requested—say something about suspicious activity." The paper went on to report that "the imams want to know the names of an elderly couple who turned around to watch and then made cell phone calls presumably to authorities."

In a response to the incident at the Minneapolis Airport, Congressman PETER KING, the ranking member on the House Homeland Security Committee, and Congressman Steve Pearce first moved to provide immunity to those on public transportation who report suspicious activity through a recommitment motion to the Rail and Public Transportation Security Act of 2007, which the House overwhelmingly passed in March 2007 by a vote of 304-121.

Later in the 110th Congress, despite CAIR's public lobbying effort, Mr. KING and Senator JOE LIEBERMAN were successful in adding a section to the 9/11 Commission Implementation Act, Public Law 11053, which provides legal immunity to individuals who report terrorists or suspicious activity which they see on trains or planes to law enforcement.

In what has become a familiar refrain, Nihad Awad, on FOX News, March 31, 2007, said that PETER KING's legislative efforts were encouraging Islamophobia. In fact, the bill language had the potential to encourage other John Does who encounter suspicious activity to report it to authorities.

CAIR's funding is also a source of interest. Apart from the financial link with Holy Land Foundation, there is much that is unclear as to whether and to what degree CAIR is receiving contributions from foreign governments. In a March 2007 interview with the Chicago Tribune, Ahmed Rehab, CAIR-Chicago's executive director, said, "Neither CAIR chapters nor the national office solicits or accepts money from any foreign government."

A January 2007 open letter on CAIR's Web site says they are "proud to receive support of every individual, whether Muslim, Christian, Jewish, or of another faith background, who supports the mission of promoting justice and mutual understanding as long as they are not an official of any foreign government and there are no strings attached to the request."

Yet in a sensitive, but unclassified, May 2006 State Department cable which was brought to my attention, U.S. embassy staff in Abu Dhabi cabled that the UAE press was reporting that "Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid al-Maktoum, deputy ruler of Dubai and UAE Minister of Finance and Industry has endorsed a proposal to build a property in the U.S. to serve as an endowment for CAIR."

In another sensitive, but unclassified, June 2006 State Department cable, U.S. Embassy staff in Saudi Arabia reported the following after meeting with a CAIR delegation. The cable said, "One admitted reason for the group's current visit to the KSA (Kingdom of Saudi Arabia) was to solicit $50 million in governmental and nongovernmental contributions." I submit both cables for the RECORD.

According to the June 2006 cable, "The core delegation consisted of CAIR Board Chairman Dr. Pareh Ahmed, Executive Director Nihad Awad, and Communications Director Cary (Ibrahim) Hooper." On an MSNBC talk show with Tucker Carlson in September 2006, just 3 months after the trip, Ibrahim Hooper claimed, "To my knowledge, we don't take money from the Government of Saudi Arabia."

I want to make it clear that it is important to understand that American Muslims, like all Americans, are entitled to organize, advocate, and engage in the political process; such are the makings of a vibrant democracy. They have taken advantage of the opportunity America provides for every background. They are teachers, doctors, policemen, they are mothers and fathers and neighbors.

I am reminded of a young Pakistani American who is Muslim that I had the privilege of meeting during one of my visits to Walter Reed Hospital. I met him when he was in the midst of his physical therapy, therapy that was necessary because he had lost both legs while in combat in Iraq. Despite his tremendous sacrifice, he was committed to the hard work of rehabilitation, in part because he hoped to go back to Iraq. He was a patriot of the sort that ought to give us pause and ought to make us proud.

I want to be absolutely clear that concerns I have with CAIR are specific to the organization and not to the Muslim faith. Even a passing glance at my record in Congress should put any thought to the contrary to rest.

In Sudan, Chechnya, China, Bosnia, and Kosovo, I have spoken out in defense of people of the Muslim faith. I have been to Sudan five times, including leading the first congressional delegation to Darfur, where nearly all the victims of the genocide are Muslim.

I was the only Member of Congress to visit Chechnya during the fighting in 1995. When I returned, I condemned the violence against the Chechen people, most of whom were Muslim, and called for a cease-fire.

I was one of the only Members to visit Muslim men in a Serb-run prisoner of war camp in Bosnia, where I saw evidence of a modern-day Holocaust taking place. And very early on, I began speaking out against the ethnic cleansing and the culture of genocide against the Bosnian people. I spoke out in favor of lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia so that the Muslim Bosnian Government could defend itself. I have visited Kosovo five times, and I voted and spoke out on the floor to approve the bombing campaign to stop the Serbian atrocities against Muslims in Kosovo.

I was one of the first Members to raise concerns about the persecution of Muslims in China, and continue to speak out when few others do.

Further, I was the author of the International Religious Freedom Act which created the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom as well as the International Religious Freedom Office at the State Department. Central to the act was the assertion that "freedom of religious beliefs and practices is a universal human right and fundamental freedom." The legislation, and ultimately the offices it created, strengthens the United States' advocacy on behalf of individuals persecuted in foreign countries on account of religion, which, of course, includes persecuted Muslims.

America is an imperfect Nation, but a great Nation, a "shining city on a hill" as described by our Founders, a beacon of hope for persecuted and oppressed people. For centuries, the "huddled masses" depicted in the iconic poem at the base of the Statue of Liberty have arrived on these shores seeking a better life for themselves and their families.

My grandparents immigrated to America from Germany. My father served in World War II. Part of the reason he did so was that he felt a need to show that his loyalty was to America.

Even though my grandparents were both native German speakers, when World War I broke out, my grandmother decided from that day forward only English would be spoken in their home.

I share this bit of personal history to illustrate that I am sensitive to the challenges facing new immigrants, especially during times of war. There have been instances in our Nation's history, especially when our country has been under attack, where the civil liberties of certain groups of people have been violated because other people were afraid. This is inexcusable. But this is the exception, not the rule.

Our experiment in self-governance has been marked by an unwavering commitment to basic freedoms for all people, among them the right to worship according to the dictates of your conscience. Many American Muslims left countries where such freedom is unimaginable; however, in a pluralistic society like ours, these principles are paramount. To silence or otherwise repress people of faith is inimical to the American way. In a public discourse, to accuse someone of religious bigotry or intolerance is a sure way to stifle debate.

On October 4, 2008, the editorial page editor of The Columbus Dispatch spoke to CAIR's bent toward accusation as a means of muzzling debate. They said, "For many years, CAIR has waged a campaign to intimidate and silence anyone who raises alarms about the dangers of Islamic extremism. CAIR's rationale is that discussions of Islamic extremism lead to animosity not just toward those who twist Islam into a justification for terrorism, but toward all who practice Islam.

"CAIR's concern is understandable, but its response is unreasonable." They went on to say, "The group acts properly when it hammers home the point that only a small number of Muslims support religiously motivated violence, and that targeting law-abiding Muslims is wrong. Where CAIR errs is in labeling anyone who discusses Islamic terrorism a bigot and hater, an Islamophobe, to use CAIR's favorite slur." Ironically, some of CAIR's most pointed attacks have in fact been aimed at other Muslims who dare to have differing views.

In a 2006 Philadelphia Inquirer piece, CAIR's Hooper is quoted as saying Zuhdi Jasser, President of the American Islamic Forum for Democracy, who has been critical of CAIR, was "providing others with an opportunity to advance an agenda that is hostile to the American Muslim community."

Given CAIR's genesis, its associations with known terrorist entities and individuals, and its tactics—namely, attempting to discredit anyone who dares to speak out against its organization—their cries of victimization and accusations of religious bigotry appear disingenuous.

And given the dangerous world in which we live today, any attempt to literally silence honest discourse about the nature of the threats facing our country is intolerable and must be addressed.

I stand today with other elected officials who have raised questions about CAIR. Senator SCHUMER describes CAIR as an organization "which we know has ties to terrorism." Democratic Senator DICK DURBIN has said that CAIR is "unusual in its extreme rhetoric and its association with groups that are suspect."

Democratic Senator BARBARA BOXER withdrew an award she gave to an official at a local CAIR chapter because she "had concerns about statements by some CAIR officials and about claims of financial links to terrorism." And other Senators, including Republicans JON KYL and TOM COBURN, have voiced support for the FBI's actions in severing ties with CAIR.

I stand today with counterterrorism experts, including Steven Pomerantz, the FBI's former chief of counterterrorism, who has stated, "CAIR, its leaders, and its activities effectively give aid to international terrorist groups."

And perhaps most importantly, I stand with thousands of American Muslims for whom CAIR does not speak. In June, 2007, the Washington Times published a report which analyzed CAIR's tax documents and found that CAIR's membership has declined by 90 percent since 9/11. Zuhdi Jasser of the American Islamic Forum for Democracy was quoted in the article as saying, "This is the untold story in the myth that CAIR represents the American Muslim population. They only represent their membership and donors."

In 1999, the Islamic Supreme Council of America, ISCA, issued an open letter to all Muslims after Shaykh Kabbani, Chairman of the ISCA, spoke at a State Department open forum on Islamic extremism and subsequently came under public attack by several organizations, including CAIR. In the open letter, ISCA says the organizations attacking Kabbani, among them CAIR, "have not quoted a single statement of Shaykh Kabbani in full or in context. Moreover, the statements were augmented with emotionally charged words like 'promoted and generalized an allegation,' 'outrageous statements,' and 'Islamophobic,' thereby thwarting his original intention and message." The letter goes on to say, "In their action alerts, CAIR has a chronic tendency to negatively juxtapose Islam and Americans."

Consider, too, the words of Dr. Hedieh Mirahmadi, then general secretary of the Islamic Supreme Council of America, quoted in a 1999 ISCA press release following this same incident. She remarked, "The carefully orchestrated and calculated plot to intimidate Shaykh Kabbani into retracting his statements only goes to prove the unwillingness to tolerate differences of opinion and belief, as well as the extent to which they would go to silence the voice of opposition."

Or consider the testimony of Zeyno Baran, a prominent Turkish American scholar who is presently a senior fellow at the Hudson Institute. In July of 2008, speaking before the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, she stated that she believed CAIR "was created by the Muslim Brotherhood to influence the U.S. Government, Congress, and NGOs, along with academic and media groups" and lamented that, "despite being founded by leading Islamists, CAIR has successfully portrayed itself as a mainstream Muslim organization over the past 15 years and has been treated as such by many U.S. Government officials."

Or most recently, an April 2009 advertisement in Weekly Standard authored by "American Muslims," applauded the FBI for rejecting CAIR. The signatories included representatives of six different organizations, and I submit a copy of the ad for the RECORD. The signatories wrote, "We observe that they (CAIR) denounce 'terrorism' in general terms, but not the specific actions of Islamic groups like Hamas or Hezbollah. They denounce violence, but not the ideologies behind it." Further, the group acknowledged CAIR's "attempts to chill free speech by calling critics of radical Islam 'Islamophobes.'"

Finally, I would like to close my speech by recognizing the men and women of the FBI and the hard work they do every day to keep this country safe, and to restate the FBI's own words, "Until we can resolve whether there continues to be a connection between CAIR or its executives and Hamas, the FBI does not view CAIR as an appropriate liaison partner."

I completely agree.

SUBJECT: VISIT BY COUNCIL ON AMERICAN ISLAMIC RELATIONS (CAIR) TO UAE

1.(U) On May 21, the Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR) paid a courtesy call on the Ambassador to discuss the organization's issues, outreach strategies, and its visit to the UAE. The UAE press has reported that Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid al-Maktoum, Deputy Ruler of Dubai and UAE Minister of Finance and Industry, "has endorsed a proposal to build a property in the U.S. to serve as an endowment for CAIR." DCM, PAO and MEPI Regional Director also participated in the meeting.

2.(U) The group expressed ideas about countering negative stereotypes about Muslims in the U.S. (“Islamophobia”) and addressing anti-Americanism in the Middle East. They mentioned previous meetings with State Department officials, U/S Karen Hughes and A/S David Welch, their attendance at the Secretary’s Iftar, and spoke of a possible meeting with President Bush in the future.

3.(U) Mr. Don Myers, representing Washington, D.C. public relations firm Hill & Knowlton, provided a short demonstration of a PR campaign designed to support CAIR’s overall organizational objectives defined as: 1) political empowerment of Muslims, 2) grassroots effort by CAIR to improve community relations with non-Muslims, 3) launching of an effective, long-term (5 year) advertising/outreach campaign to counter negative stereotypes about Muslims.

4.(U) Members of the CAIR delegation included: Hon. Larry Shaw, Senator (North Carolina General Assembly); Hon. Paul Findley, Former U.S. Representative; Don Myers, Washington, D.C. public relations firm Hill & Knowlton; Nihad Awad, CAIR Executive Director and Co-Founder; Cary (Ibrahim) Hooper, CAIR Communication Director and Co-Founder; Dr. Parvez Ahmed, CAIR Board Chairman; and Dr. Nabil Sadoun, CAIR Board Member.

5.(U) CAIR delegation also paid a call earlier in the day on Sheikh Sultan bin Muhammad al-Qassimi, Ruler of Sharjah, which was covered in the press.

6.(U) Sheikh Ali al-Hashemi, UAE Presidential Adviser on Islamic affairs, is hosting a reception at his house this evening, May 22, in honor of the CAIR group; Ambassador and PoOff to attend. Al-Hashemi also thanked the Ambassador for receiving the CAIR delegation.

7.(SBU) Comment: CAIR Executive Director Nihad Awad told us that while they were pleased with the results of the meeting with Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid, they had no concrete information on the size of the endowment or when it might be forthcoming. Awad also mentioned that the Bin Hamoodah Group, a $500 million/year trading company, founded by three Emirati brothers and representing Haliburton, IBM, FMC Corporation and General Motors, is CAIR’s main benefactor in the UAE. One newly-rich stock trader, Talal Khoori (UAE national of Iranian origin), is believed to have donated one million dollars to CAIR.

 SUBJECT: VISIT BY COUNCIL ON AMERICAN ISLAMIC RELATIONS
 (CAIR) TO SAUDI ARABIA
 REF: ABU DHABI 2127

1.(U) Following up on a similar visit to the UAE in May (reftel), a delegation from the U.S.-based Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR) visited the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (KSA) in June. On June 22 the group paid a courtesy call on the Embassy to discuss the organization’s issues and outreach strategies. In the Ambassador’s absence, DCM received the group, along with the PA Counselor and Poloff (notetaker).

2.(SBU) Prior to coming to Riyadh, the CAIR group visited Mecca and Jeddah. Although they apparently were not received at the highest levels of the SAG, the group assured the Embassy that “King Abdullah knows CAIR very well” and receives regular updates on the group’s projects. After recalling the success of their visit to the UAE in May, the group predicted that they would be back in the region by fall to visit Kuwait and Qatar. The group also mentioned that they had been well-received in Washington by senior State Department officials, including Secretary Rice and Undersecretary Hughes.

3.(U) The core delegation consisted of CAIR Board Chairman Dr. Parvez Ahmed, Executive Director Nihad Awad, and Communications Director Cary (Ibrahim) Hooper. Accompanying them were former U.S. Representative Paul Findley and Don Myers, a former DoD official now with Hill and Knowlton public relations.

4.(U) During their hour-long meeting in the Embassy, the group presented various projects that CAIR is working on to counter negative stereotypes about Muslims in the U.S. (“Islamophobia”), linking their work to concern over growing anti-Americanism in the Middle East. One of the current CAIR projects they discussed was the presentation of “accurate books about Islam” to schools and libraries in the U.S.

5.(SBU) Mr. Don Myers, representing Hill and Knowlton, gave a short demonstration of a CAIR-funded media campaign to support CAIR’s overall information outreach effort. According to Myers, this private campaign will emphasize both grassroots outreach to improve American non-Muslim understanding of Muslims and the encouragement of political engagement by American Muslims. The multi-year broadcast and print campaign is to be entitled “Let the Conversation Begin” and is aimed at countering negative stereotypes about Muslims within the broad American public.

6.(SBU) One admitted reason for the group’s current visit to the KSA was to solicit $50 million in governmental and non-governmental contributions. PA Counselor noted that private outreach activities can provide valuable support to USG efforts to build mutual understanding overseas but cautioned that USG Public Diplomacy (PD) funds cannot be used or associated with efforts to target American audiences. The delegation was interested to hear of the Embassy’s PD exchange and activities within the KSA and offered to help support them in any appropriate way. The group did not share, however, any details of their success or lack thereof in fundraising within the KSA.

AIG BONUSES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATOURETTE) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. LATOURETTE. Madam Speaker, we have been coming to the floor for about 4 months now in an attempt to get to the bottom of one or two mysteries. I had hoped to be able to come to the floor today to indicate that one of those mysteries had been solved or that we were closer to its resolution.

The Speaker will recall that earlier this year the United States Congress passed a stimulus bill that was requested by the new President of the United States, about $789 billion. And whether you agreed with that legislation or not, during its path through the legislative process there was great concern—and continues to be great concern; I heard one of my colleagues give a Special Order this afternoon about the bonuses, the millions of dollars of bonuses that are being paid to executives on Wall Street, executives who work for companies who, in some instances, have led to the mess we find ourselves in financially.

When the stimulus bill was being crafted over in the other body, the United States Senate, two Senators—one Republican and one Democrat, the Republican is OLYMPIA SNOWE of Maine, the Democrat is RON WYDEN of Oregon—they crafted language that would have put strings on, would have said maybe when things aren’t going so good and we’re giving billions of dollars of taxpayer money to these Wall Street firms, maybe we should have some conditions under which the bonuses are paid and how they’re paid and how much they can get. But then a funny thing happened. The House passed its version, the Senate passed its version. Madam Speaker, you know that when we have bills that pass each Chamber and there are some differences in them, we have to appoint a conference committee, and they meet and work out the differences and then send back to us a conference report.

Somehow, somewhere in that conference committee, the language that was put in by Senator SNOWE and Senator WYDEN was taken out of the bill and about 40 words that are located on the easel to my left were inserted into the bill. And, Madam Speaker, as you read that language, not only were there no longer any strings on those bonuses, but this paragraph specifically protected any bonus that was given to any official, including the ones that became controversial a little later, AIG, and said any bonus that was agreed to before February 11, and February 11 was the day that the stimulus bill was passed, so anything agreed to before that day was protected. Then about a week later, the news came out that AIG, the insurance company that’s received billions of dollars of taxpayers’ money, was going to pay its executives $173 million in bonuses.

And you should have heard the hue and cry around this place, Madam Speaker. Everybody was shocked. The President of the United States was shocked. Members of Congress were shocked. Members of the United States Senate were shocked. People at the Department of Treasury were shocked.

Well, they shouldn’t have been shocked because, after this language was inserted, the bill came back to both the House and the Senate. Every Republican voted against it; every Democrat, save 11, voted for the stimulus bill that included this paragraph that protected the $173 million in bonuses.

We have been coming to the floor for the last several months to try to find out, because nobody's fessing up. Nobody has said, Hey, you know what? I took out the first language and I put in this language, and maybe you could tell us why. But nobody will do that. Everybody wants this issue to go away. And as a matter of fact, people were so shocked that their reaction, the majority's reaction, was to come up with really a stupid bill, and that was to tax these bonuses, rather than going back and doing the right thing and taking out their mistake, to tax these bonuses at 90 percent.

And I will tell you why I call that a stupid bill, Madam Speaker. I call it a stupid bill because the person who got the biggest bonus at AIG got $6.4 million. I think it was a man. So if you're really mad at that guy, why just take away 90 percent of his bonus? Why don't you take away 100 percent of his bonus? So that stupid piece of legislation, and, thankfully, President Obama didn't think much of it and neither did the Senate, but the legislation over here still would have left that guy at AIG with $640,000. Well, Madam Speaker, in my district in northeastern Ohio, it would take 16 years for somebody making $40,000 a year to make $640,000. So again, rather than correcting the mistake, they came up with—it wasn't even a fig leaf, it was a fig tree to pretend that they were really mad about the bonuses that they authorized with their vote.

So we, myself and other Members, Mr. McCOTTER from Michigan, have been coming to the floor. And I grew up playing a game called Clue, a very wonderful game to play around the kitchen table with your kids. Hasbro, I think, is the manufacturer of it. And so with apologies to Hasbro, we came up with "Clue," because if you play Clue, and, Madam Speaker, I don't know if you're a Clue player or not, but the way Clue works is you start with a murder has been committed. In this case, it wasn't a murder. It was pretty bad, but it wasn't a murder. You start with what happened, and what happened is that somebody put in a bill in the middle of the night language that protected these bonuses that everybody became shocked about. So that's the crime in this particular instance. So you have to find out who did it. You have to find out where it happened in Clue, and you have to find out where the weapon is.

Now, the great news is that we know what the weapon is. It wasn't a gun or the lead pipe or the rope or any of that stuff. It was a pen. Somebody took a pen, took out the language that would have prohibited the bonuses, and then took the pen and wrote this paragraph into the bill.

So we got a third of the way there and I was feeling pretty good about it. And in our subsequent discussions here on the floor, we've pretty much narrowed it down. Here you have the Banking Committee, the Speaker's office, the conference room. And pretty clearly, it either happened in the Speaker's office or in the conference room. We get that from published reports, the shuttle diplomacy. I wish I could tell you that there was a Republican suspect in this, but there weren't any Republicans permitted into the conference room. So we believe, and I think for the purpose of this exercise we're going to say, that it happened in the conference room.

The missing piece and where I really thought we were getting close was who did it. Let's finish Clue, that it was Colonel Mustard with a pen in the conference room. And around this board we have the people that we believe, we know, were in the room and were capable of making this insertion. Madam Speaker, I know you know who they are. But just sort of running around the board here, down here CHARLIE RANGEL, the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. Here, a former colleague of ours, Rahm Emanuel, who is President Obama's Chief of Staff. Up here is Mr. Orszag, the OMB Director, the fellow that's the bean counter down at the White House. Over here is Senator DODD from Connecticut, who is the chairman of the Banking Committee over in the Senate. In the upper corner is Ms. PELOSI, the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Mr. HARRY REID, the distinguished majority leader over in the United States Senate. So we have narrowed it down to one of these folks.

And the question mark down there, and this is really a disappointment to me, sadly, some are just saying that it was some staffer that put the thing in. So the question mark is this staffer who apparently has the power to change law and make law. And it may have been a staffer who was using the pen, but clearly a staffer had to be directed by somebody to do that.

We thought originally that Senator DODD, the chairman of the Banking Committee, might be the person we should focus in on. He's made some public statements, but the public statements now have gone back and forth. His office says that they put it into the bill at the request of the Treasury. The Treasury says that they put it in at the request of Senator DODD.

So here's what we did. Being the sleuths that we're attempting to be, we went out and filed a bill that basically would have required these folks to hand over some documents and fess up and tell us why they did it. It went to the Financial Services Committee here in the House. And to his credit, one of the heroes of this Clue game is Congressman BARNEY FRANK of Massachusetts, who chairs the Financial Services Committee. He called up the resolution, and that committee voted for it 64-0. So I'm feeling pretty good about it now. I think that we're actually going to get someplace. But, sadly, the way that this place works is that when legislation is reported out of the committee, it doesn't come here to the floor for discussion or debate unless it is scheduled by the distinguished majority leader of this body, Mr. HOYER of Maryland. And even though that event occurred a couple of months ago, Mr. HOYER has apparently determined that we are too busy here in the House of Representatives to deal with this issue. And we're going to talk a little bit about how busy we've been in a couple of minutes. But we've had a setback.

So Chairman FRANK, again, deserves credit because, even though the majority leader won't bring this bill to the floor so we can figure it out with documents, Chairman FRANK said to the Treasury, Look, just sit down with the people that are interested in finding out the truth here and hand things over.

So we had some conversations, and, sadly, I have to report to the House, Madam Speaker, that we've had a setback. And while I wanted very much to come and be able to solve this game so we could get on to something else, but there was a meeting, a conversation, on June 3 between representatives of the Financial Services Committee and a fellow by the name of Damon Munchus, M-u-n-c-h-u-s, who is the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs. He indicated at this meeting where we were talking about it, and I was promised a letter talking about who did this, he indicated in that conversation that the Treasury thought that that meeting was to talk about policy options and had nothing to do with this particular issue. And he then stated that if the true goal of the meeting was to reconstruct conversations between Treasury and Senator DODD and his staff regarding this bonus provision and how they got into the stimulus bill—and I would say duh. I mean, what have we been trying to do here for the last 3 months?—that on the advice of counsel, the Treasury Department would be unable to provide any documents about those conversations.

So, again, it becomes kind of important that we have the majority leader schedule this resolution so we can get the documents so we can figure it out and we can move on to something else.

And I see my friend from Michigan is here, and I yield to Mr. McCOTTER of Michigan.

Mr. McCOTTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding through the Chair.

Just two quick inquiries of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. First,

I was wondering if you considered the response from Mr. Munchus to be indicative of the most transparent administration in history. And, secondly, I would like to commend you for putting the question mark signifying the poor staffer who will be blamed if we continue this, unless, of course, someone confesses or the media actually looks into the matter, because I remember growing up and I watched reruns of Star Trek. Whenever the captain and Bones or Spock would get on that transporter platform, there would always be somebody you didn't recognize, and you knew they weren't coming back. So when I see that question mark, I just think of the poor staffer that, at the direction of someone else, actually utilized the pen, because if this inquiry continues, as it will, you know that he may not be coming back.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank the gentleman. And the answer to the first part of your question is clearly this is not indicative of transparency.

Look, all we want to do is move on and find out why somebody felt it necessary in a dark room in the dark of night to put in language that protected these $173 million worth of bonuses and why they did it. They may have a great explanation. I doubt it, but they may have a great explanation. We just want them to come forward and tell us "I did it" and why they did it.

So I can't report, Madam Speaker, that we have solved this particular episode of Clue. And, sadly, we have another mystery that has sort of reared its ugly head here on Capitol Hill.

Mr. McCOTTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding through the Chair.

Let's also put out that we have, in fact, understood from the White House, in fairness to them, that the President has taken responsibility for the AIG bonus. He said so, which I think is only appropriate since he signed the bill that executed it into law. But what we are really looking for is that shadowy figure between the President of the United States, who may or may not have known the bonus was in the bill, and the poor staffer that may have been directed to do this. So we want to point out that we are trying to be fair. We have not determined whether the President even knew the AIG bonus was in the stimulus bill, which was rushed in a crisis atmosphere upon a deadline that he set, and the staffer who may potentially receive all the culpability unfairly.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank the gentleman for that.

And I would go a step further. I am certain that President Obama did not know that this had been inserted into the stimulus bill because he appeared on television after the bonuses were given and said he was shocked that these bonuses have been given, and people in his administration said they were going to do everything within their power to get this money back. So I agree with you 100 percent. The President did not know, to the best of my knowledge, that this was occurring. And even our colleagues in the House, Mr. McCOTTER, the Democrats who voted for the stimulus bill, except for 11 of them, I don't think they knew it either.

I'm not just trying to be a nitpicker. I will tell you that one of the problems is you may remember that stimulus bill that spent $789 billion of our constituents' money. It was about a thousand pages long. So it was like the phone book of New York City. And as that bill was coming to the floor that week, one of our colleagues on the Republican side made a motion and came up with this novel idea about how about if we have 48 hours, 2 days, to read the thousand pages, and here's another novel idea, what if we put it on the Internet so that our constituents, who are paying $789 billion, they have 2 days to sort of digest it and call their Representatives and express their views? That was Tuesday. The problem is the bill was taking a little longer than people anticipated. The President had promised that he was going to sign it by President's Day, so the bill was filed Thursday at midnight.

Now, I've apologized to my constituents for not being up Thursday at midnight to immediately begin reading the thousand pages. But when we arrived at work the next day, on Friday, we were told, You're not going to have 48 hours to read the bill; you're going to have 90 minutes to read the bill that spends $789 billion, and good luck to you. Now, I have been here 15 years, and I would suggest to you when you legislate that way, silly things happen. And I think a lot of our friends on the Democratic side of the aisle who voted for the stimulus bill that protected those bonuses didn't know it either, in fairness.

But that's why it's important, I think, to protect the integrity of the House and both Republicans, Democrats, the President of the United States—who did it and why did they do it. Just tell us and then we'll be done.

But we've come to, sadly, a second mystery and this one is more catastrophic when it comes to the lives of people in this country. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the auto industry is in big trouble, and we are now faced with the bankruptcies of Chrysler and General Motors, Chrysler going first.

In the days leading up to the filing of the bankruptcy for Chrysler, there were a number of events occurring that I want to describe. On April 30 at 11:30, the White House orchestrated a conference call with Members of Congress, Governors, Senators, anybody that was interested in what was going on with Chrysler, and in that conference call they indicated, This is a great day, we're saving 30,000 jobs and everything's going to be okay. I mean, there's going to be some pain but everything's going to be okay.

At noon that day, the President of the United States took to the airwaves and made the announcement that the bankruptcy was the way we were going to go. Over here on the far easel are President Obama's exact words: No one should be confused about what a bankruptcy process means. It will not disrupt the lives of the people who work at Chrysler or live in the communities that depend on it.

And then at 1 o'clock, after the President had his press event, there was a second conference call with Robert Nardelli, who was the chief executive officer at Chrysler, with again the same group of Governors, Members, that were interested in it, and the first question on that conference call came from Governor Granholm, the Democratic Governor of the State of Michigan where my friend Mr. McCOTTER is from. She was concerned, because the President's announcement said 30,000 jobs had been saved. And while everybody was celebrating that fact, we all knew that there are more than 30,000 people that work for Chrysler in the United States of America.

Governor Granholm said, Well, listen, we congratulate you, we congratulate the President, I think this is really good news, but I hope that the President wasn't speaking in code. The President said that 30,000 jobs had been saved and we know that the number is about 39,000. So was he, you know, sort of just giving good news and we'll find out about the bad news later? Or have really all of the jobs been saved? And will there, in fact, be no plant closures?

Well, in response to that, Mr. Nardelli indicated that, Oh, no, no, no, no, the President was just using a round number. We don't expect plant closures and we don't expect any difficulties.

Now Governor Granholm did what I did. I don't know what my friend the gentleman from Michigan did but I issued a press release praising the administration, praising the auto task force and saying this is wonderful news, because I in fact had—I used to have—a Chrysler stamping plant in my district in a place called Twinsburg, Ohio. So I sent out a notice saying this is really good news. Well, sadly, that afternoon, and it's kind of a famous picture now, but this guy with a cart is taking all these banker boxes into the bankruptcy court up in New York. In that filing and clearly they weren't written between the President's announcement at noon and 3 o'clock when they were filed, located in there is an affidavit from a guy named Robert Manzo, who is one of Chrysler's consultants, and in there they identify eight plants that are going to be shuttered and 9,000 people, mostly United Auto Worker members, that are going to be out of jobs.

Now imagine, if you go with the scenario that I just indicated, that there were some people that were a little surprised. There are two more observations I want to make about that. We serve with a Member by the name of GWEN MOORE who is a Democrat from Wisconsin—Milwaukee. During the course of that phone call, she specifically said, Hey, you know what, I have this auto plant in Kenosha, Wisconsin, a Chrysler plant in Kenosha, Wisconsin. I just want to ask you, under this plan, are we going to be okay?

And Mr. Nardelli went on and waxed on about how important the Kenosha plant was and the 800 people that work there, and, yeah, you need to rest easy, it's going to be okay.

Well, sadly, after the bankruptcy documents were filed, Kenosha, Wisconsin's engine plant was on the list of closures. Again, I think Representative MOORE had some questions, as did the Governor of Wisconsin, saying, Well, what are you talking about? You told us you weren't going to close Kenosha.

Not to be outdone, Mr. Nardelli sent a letter of apology. He said, I want to begin by expressing my apologies. He goes on to say that in response to Congresswoman MOORE's question about Kenosha, I mistakenly conveyed the status of the Kenosha plant with Trenton, Michigan. Trenton, Michigan, doesn't sound like Kenosha, Wisconsin to me. It's not only not a sound-alike, they're in different States for crying out loud.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to put Mr. Nardelli's letter of May 7 into the RECORD.

CHRYSLER LLC,
Auburn Hills, MI, May 7, 2009.

Hon. Governor JIM DOYLE,
East State Capitol,
Madison, WI.

DEAR GOVERNOR DOYLE: I want to start by expressing my sincere apologies about the confusion surrounding comments I made on a conference call with you and other elected officials about the Kenosha Engine Plant on April 30, 2009.

In response to a question from Congresswoman Moore regarding the future of the Kenosha Plant, I mistakenly conveyed the status of the Phoenix investment in Trenton, MI. The facts I described were accurate for Trenton and not Kenosha, WI. I recognize this has added further confusion to an already difficult situation.

I would like to take this opportunity to clarify the Phoenix Engine Program production status.

In 2006, DaimlerChrysler started a program for a new V6 engine family. Based on industry volumes and forecasted demand, the initial planning volumes were 1.76 million units. In order to achieve this level of production, a site selection process was initiated that included four new locations in Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin and Mexico.

Before site selection was finalized, the engine volume planned for the combined company was reduced when the common engine program with Daimler was redefined as a Chrysler only engine. This reduced the number of production sites to three.

These three sites would have the capability of producing 1.3 million V6 engines. Early in 2007, for a variety of reasons, the Corporation was required to reduce its capital investments in all programs which required a new production strategy for the Phoenix engine. Therefore, Chrysler decided to reduce the number of greenfield plant locations to two. In May and June of 2007 the Company chose those two sites and announced the greenfield investments of $730 million in Trenton and $570 million in Saltillo and broke ground on the construction of the facilities. The greenfield decisions were based on the adjacency of the proposed plants to the point-of-use assembly locations.

In February of 2007, Chrysler notified the State of Wisconsin and Kenosha officials that a greenfield site was no longer viable, but rather that a retool of the existing Kenosha Engine Plant was under consideration. The Kenosha retooling plan resulted in necessary capital savings; however, it required the Kenosha site to continue to produce its current engines through 2013.

In late 2007 and 2008, deterioration in industry volume resulted in a drop of the 1.3 million unit demand to 880,000. This reduction in volume and the need for Kenosha to produce its current engines resulted in the company deciding to defer the retooling strategy.

Chrysler kept Kenosha Area Business Alliance updated on the status of the retool through 2008. As the market began to collapse through late 2008 and 2009, a decision was made to idle the Kenosha Engine Plant in December of 2010. This and other restructuring actions were included in the Chrysler LLC February 17, 2009 Viability Plan submission to the United States Treasury and the President's Auto Task Force. The specific plant actions, including Kenosha Engine Plant, were not made public because it would have been presumptuous to assume that the plan was going to be approved and inappropriate to communicate prior to thorough discussion with the United Auto Workers union.

On April 3, 2009, Chrysler officials met with the Kenosha Task Force and reiterated the need to defer the Phoenix Program. Upon emergence from Chapter 11, plans are to continue to produce the current engine families through December of 2010 at the Kenosha Engine Plant in order to support our current products. The Trenton Engine site has been completely facilitated and will launch when we exit from Chapter 11. The Saltillo Engine site has also been facilitated and is scheduled to launch mid-to-late 2010.

We would have hoped to have been able to convey this information to you and the community in a more timely fashion, but circumstances simply did not afford us an opportunity to do so. It is expected that virtually all employees associated with Kenosha and the other closures announced in our Chapter 11 filings will be offered employment with the new company.

While the company continues to address difficult market conditions, we expect that the Chrysler Fiat alliance will ultimately provide customers and dealers a broader competitive line of fuel-efficient vehicles and technology, and will result in the preservation of more than 30,000 jobs in the United States along with thousands of employees at dealers and suppliers.

Again, please accept my sincere apologies for the confusion. We will continue to work with the people of Kenosha to ensure an orderly transition.

Sincerely,

BOB NARDELL,
Chairman and CEO.

Then the other thing that occurred is, you may remember, Mr. Speaker, that the UAW, the United Auto Workers, were asked by Chrysler to enter into a new contract—a contract that gave up benefits, gave up wages, gave up off days. But they were told that if they supported this new contract, that was going to lead to a new, vibrant Chrysler where their jobs would be secure. And so they voted on April 28. All the Chrysler workers went to the polls on April 28 to say whether or not they approved or disapproved this new contract. I don't know all of the election results, but I do know in my little community of Twinsburg, Ohio that has 1,200, or did have 1,200 UAW members, 88 percent of their members voted for it, voted to give up benefits, give up wages, as long as it helped the company that they worked for survive.

So they voted for it, the thing passed, and then the next day they find out that they're out of a job. Mr. Doug Rice, who's the president of UAW Local 122 which covers Twinsburg, indicated that, his quote was, "I don't know if I was told the whole truth on everything. I don't feel like I was. It would be a shame if this was something that was known for some time. If they kept this back from people, that's wrong. That's wrong."

He was then asked, What do you think would have happened if you had known that you were going to be out of a job by approving this contract? He said, "Needless to say, people ain't going to vote to eliminate their jobs."

And I think that's right. I don't think any of these 9,000 people who worked at the eight plants would have said, hey, let's approve this new contract and vote ourselves out of a job.

I would like to put Mr. Rice's quotes from the Cleveland Plain Dealer on May 1 into the RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

"I don't know if I was told the whole truth on everything," said Doug Rice, president of United Auto Workers Local 122. "I don't feel like I was. It would be a shame if this was something that was known for some time. If they kept this back from people, that's wrong. That's wrong."—PD May 1

Host: Would that vote have been the same had you had the information you have now?

"No. Needless to say, people ain't going to vote to eliminate their jobs," said Doug Rice, President of UAW Local 122 in Twinsburg—WCPN (Public Radio, Sound of Ideas), May 5, 2009

And then the mayor of Twinsburg, Ohio, and, Mr. Speaker, if you haven't been to Twinsburg, I will tell you, you may want to come this summer, or any summer. Twinsburg is famous for its Twins Festival and twins from cradle to very elderly twins show up. Last year I think we had 4,000 sets of twins. If you think you're seeing double, you will see double in Twinsburg during their Twins Festival.

Their mayor wrote to Mr. Bloom, Ron Bloom, who is on the President's automobile task force and basically said, What happened? She was on the call, she heard that everything was going to be okay and now all of a sudden she finds that a Chrysler plant that provides 13 percent of her city's tax base is going to be closed and 1,200 people are going to be out of work.

Basically she said, Look, I watched the President. I was on these telephone calls. What happened?

Mr. Bloom, in a letter dated May 6, writes back that what the President's comments were meant to convey, they meant to convey the message that the bankruptcy of Chrysler had in no way changed these plans.

I would like to put this into the RECORD as well.

MAY 6, 2009.

DEAR MAYOR PROCOP: Thank you for the note. Hopefully I can clarify the situation at hand regarding the Twinsburg Plant. On February 17th, Chrysler developed a viability plan which proposed several plant closures, including a closure of the Twinsburg Stamping Plant. The decision to close the Twinsburg Plant was not in any way driven or influenced by the U.S. Government. It was identified based on an assessment by Chrysler's management of what was necessary to reduce Chrysler's manufacturing capacity in the face of extremely poor market conditions.

While the original 2/17 plan submitted by Chrysler was not deemed viable by the Task Force, the more recently proposed Fiat/Chrysler alliance plan has been approved. This plan included the same plant closure schedule as the one originally proposed by Chrysler, and the President's comments were meant to convey the message that the bankruptcy of Chrysler had in no way changed these plans.

We realize how unfortunate this situation is, especially for the citizens of Twinsburg whose livelihoods are tied so directly to the Chrysler plant. The current economic environment has forced many communities to make sacrifices that seem unequal and unfair, and the Task Force is working actively to mitigate the impacts of these sacrifices. During his viability determination on March 30, the President announced Dr. Ed Montgomery, former Deputy Labor Secretary as Director of Recovery for Auto Communities. Since his announcement Ed has been going into communities and hearing people's concerns and he has been assembling an inter-agency effort to support communities and workers and promote new job-creating initiatives.

Ed's role is to work with the communities that have been negatively affected, my role is to work with Chrysler and GM in their efforts to restructure, so that we can once again see a strong and competitive domestic auto industry.

Sincerely,

RON BLOOM.

What these plans are that they're talking about is, both car companies, Chrysler and GM, filed viability plans with the task force in February. February 17, I believe. They were both rejected. But somewhere in conversations between the auto task force and Chrysler, it was indicated that there were going to have to be some plant closures. But nobody told anybody. There was no public document, no public discussion, no notification to the United Auto Workers—at least at the local level—that plants were going to be closed. That was the response from Mr. Bloom.

I yield to the gentleman for his thoughts.

Mr. MCCOTTER. I appreciate that recap of exactly what happened. And now subsequent to these events which have had such a devastating effect upon my community, Michigan, the entire Midwest and America's manufacturing base, we hear the administration and the task force saying that they did not determine which plants would be closed. They did not determine which dealerships would be closed. That is a factually true statement. But by omission they do not add that they determined how many plants would be closed and how many jobs would be lost and how many dealerships would be closed. Because when they rejected those viability reports, they said they did not go deeply enough quickly enough to provide viability to Chrysler or a path forward for General Motors.

Put in terms of the human cost, that means more people had to lose their jobs, more plants had to close, more dealers had to be culled from the franchise ranks.

So I would hope that in the future with the task force, again that the most transparent administration in United States history by its own profession would be honest with the American people as to where the decision for these lost jobs came from, not merely which ones faced the ax.

Mr. LaTOURETTE. I thank the gentleman.

That leads to the next point. Because Mr. Bloom from the President's task force testified yesterday, or the day before, in the United States Senate. But first let me finish this point.

Going back to the plant closures, what is now on that far easel, that's a paragraph that was in the UAW contract that people were asked to approve, and it specifically was bargained for by the people in my district in Twinsburg. This paragraph certainly doesn't tell them that their plant's going to close the next day, but it indicates that Chrysler's going to bring more work to the stamping plant.

So when my folks went to vote, they voted not thinking they were going to be out of work, they thought that more work was going to be coming via the agreement with Chrysler.

What the gentleman is now referring to is in addition to the 9,000 people put out of work and the eight Chrysler plants and, on top of that, I think it's 14 General Motors plants, we have now been told. For some reason in this bankruptcy, somebody has come up with a brainy idea that you can have better car companies if you don't have any auto dealers. And so the initial request in the bankruptcy was that Chrysler close 789 car dealerships in its network. We now know that General Motors is going to close about 2,600 of theirs. According to the National Automobile Dealers Association, about 60 people work at every car dealership. If you take the combined closings of car dealerships at Chrysler and General Motors, it's north of 200,000 people are going to be thrown out of work that work at these dealerships.

What my friend Mr. MCCOTTER was referring to is that when you question the administration, and again not the President. I want to be crystal clear about this. When President Obama said on April 30, this statement, that nobody's going to be negatively impacted, no communities are going to be negatively impacted, I believe he meant it and I believe he believed it to be so.

I don't think, however, that his automobile task force has served him well. By that I mean, Mr. Bloom testified yesterday, or the day before, in the United States Senate and Senator HUTCHISON of the State of Texas said, Hey, I don't understand a couple of things. First of all, it's a strange business model that you can sell more stuff with less stores. I never learned that in Econ 101 or anywhere else while I was in school.

But we don't think that car dealers cost the car companies any money.

But this issue has come up. Who said that all these car dealers costing 200,000 people to lose their jobs needed to be closed? And the gentleman's point is this: When Chrysler and GM submitted their studies about how they wanted to proceed, they had a plan, an orderly closeout of dealerships and consolidations, and they were told they weren't aggressive enough.

Specifically, Mr. Bloom testified over in the Senate that when they rejected the plans, he said, I think we said that General Motors is burdened by excess capacity. We said that their plant footprint, the manufacturing plants, has excess capacity, their dealer network has excess capacity, and the white and blue collar people that work there need to be downsized, and we told General Motors and Chrysler when we rejected their February 17 plan, you need to go back and you need to take a more aggressive approach. And, yes, that included dealers, but it included plants and a white collar head count.

So, it is parsing of words to say, and I have never said and I don't think my friend from Michigan has ever said, that Mr. Bloom said you have to close the dealership in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. They didn't do that. But they did determine the parameters and they did indicate that you had to get down to a certain size, which then led to and will lead to 200,000 people being out of work.

I yield to my friend.

Mr. McCOTTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Again, it cannot be emphasized enough that while we talk about jobs and numbers, and we have talked about the jobs that the United Auto Workers will lose, I can attest to you that throughout this bankruptcy process the people of my community, the people of Michigan, the people at Chrysler and the people at GM thought that we had a chance to avoid a bankruptcy, that that was the hope we were given.

We were given it by the first Bush administration, which initially granted the bridge loan to the autos. Early on in the process, we were told that the auto industry would not be walked away from. Early on in the process we started to get signals, however, that the bankruptcy might become a more and more likely option.

Yet we were never told, as reports are starting to come out, that early on the administration's Auto Task Force had made the decision that bankruptcy would be the best option. And as we watched Chrysler and as we now watch GM, two of the big three domestic auto makers in bankruptcy, we see that clearly that best option was pursued and promoted.

But, again, as the gentleman from Ohio points out, these are figures. These are facts. Throughout this process there was a cruel uncertainty that affected the people of my district, that affected the people of Michigan and throughout the manufacturing sector. No one knew when the bell would toll for them.

So as the process continued, especially if you talk about the United Auto Workers who ratified the agreement, as you got closer to the point of Chrysler going into bankruptcy, when you signed that agreement without any indication that you were going to lose your job and that you might actually be a part of Fiat and Chrysler going forward, to learn in the blink of an eye that all that hope was gone, after you had done everything you could, after your union president and their team had done everything they could to save as many jobs as they possibly could, to lose it all at that point is exceedingly cruel.

I have talked to them. They feel this in my district. I have talked to auto dealers who, after a lifetime of work in the industry, of being pillars of their community, in the blink of an eye have lost everything that they have worked for, who have talked on the phone in tears or in person been on the verge of tears about what happened to them and why they cannot get an answer.

So through the Chair to the gentleman from Ohio, we see a pattern emerging. Again, I absolutely agree with the gentleman from Ohio. I believe that the President had no idea his administration had put the AIG bonuses in the stimulus bill. I truly believe the President of the United States had absolutely no idea about what would follow the consequences of the Chrysler and GM bankruptcies in terms of the human cost to the working people of America.

But what I cannot figure out is that if that is the case, if we are correct in our assessment, why the President of the United States, A, does not want to find out who in his administration put him in that position, and more importantly who put the people of the auto companies and the workers in that position, or the taxpayers of America in that position, and then as the most transparent administration in American history does not want to tell the American people who those actors were. It would seem to me that would serve the country well and it would serve our President well.

I yield back.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank the gentleman. And just to continue talking about the dealers and the 200,000 people, and you know what? It is more than 200,000 people, because I assume most of them have families, husbands, wives, children, grandchildren, whatever the case may be.

The other interesting thing about car dealers, at least in my part of the world in Ohio, if you go to one of your children's Little League games or soccer games, you always see that it is a car dealer that has sponsored the team. The car dealer sponsors the chamber of commerce. The car dealer gives to charity. The car dealer does the food drive. So you are talking about not only displacing 200,000 people; you are talking about ripping the heart out of a number of communities.

You could understand it if these dealerships were somehow a drain on Chrysler and GM. But on June 3, Amy Brown, who is a lawyer for the affected Chrysler dealers, had the opportunity to cross-examine the aforementioned Mr. Nardelli, who was the chief executive officer of Chrysler, and was asked why it was necessary to eliminate the franchises when neither the government nor Fiat, the group that is buying Chrysler out of bankruptcy, asked for it to happen.

Mr. Nardelli said the 789 dealers represent a host of expenses. But then he was asked to quantify how much those things cost the automaker, and Mr. Nardelli said he couldn't, and he wasn't sure if his company had ever determined those exact costs.

At a hearing last week up in bankruptcy court they had a number of dealers in, and there are a number of dealers here on Capitol Hill testifying in front of the Energy and Commerce Committee. But just three quotes from car dealers who testified up in New York in the bankruptcy court.

Leo Jerome, who owns a car dealership in Lansing: "I just want my day in court and give me a fair hearing. After

I had a 10-month supply of cars, they gave me three weeks to sell them all. I think the White House Mafia is trying to run this thing through."

Tony Manicotti, who has a car dealership in Sterling Heights, Michigan, said, "They've ripped our heart and soul out. It's been part of me since I was a child. It's hard to believe what the government has done. They are supposed to save employment—not create unemployment."

And an Orleans Dodge Chrysler Jeep dealer, Mike Comiskey, who was responding to a question by the bankruptcy judge, Judge Gonzalez, his dealership had been ruined by Hurricane Katrina but he reopened it 5 months later. During the course of Hurricane Katrina, he provided fleet vehicles to police departments and fire stations in every parish of Louisiana that was affected by the hurricane, and also provided vehicles for the State of Louisiana and the City of New Orleans.

Mr. Comiskey says, "I will probably end up living out of my car as a result of this set of decisions."

Now, it brings me to I think where the gentleman was going, and that is the Clue travel edition: Who is this task force and who made the decision to close eight Chrysler plants without telling the workers that it was going to happen, throwing 9,000 people out of work? Who made the decision to be more aggressive and throw 200,000 people out of work that work for auto dealers?

Now, before I talk about the Auto Task Force qualifications and where we are going to go with the game of Clue, I have to tell you I have mentioned Mr. Manzo, who is the Chrysler restructuring expert, and you may recall, Mr. Speaker, there was some discussion about bondholders. God forbid someone could take some of their money and invest it in a company in this country and be told that they were secured creditors.

The secured creditors at Chrysler had invested money. And you know what? They have since been characterized as "unpatriotic" or "not wanting to go with the flow."

But the one group that was most prominent in this is the Indiana State Teachers Pension Fund. So the Indiana State Teachers Pension Fund thought that buying Chrysler stock was a good investment and they couldn't lose, because as bondholders they were first in line should something like a bad bankruptcy happen. Well, we have rewritten the 200 years of bankruptcy law, and it doesn't matter if you are a secured creditor or not.

But Mr. Manzo called Matthew Feldman, who is an attorney for the President's Auto Task Force, on the day before this announcement was made, and he basically said, Hey, I think I have a way that we can avoid the bankruptcy of Chrysler and restructure some of this debt and work with the bondholders.

Sadly, this is from an email submitted in the bankruptcy court up in New York. Mr. Feldman's first response by email, not real grownup, it says: "I'm not now talking to you. You went where you shouldn't."

Well, Mr. Manzo apologizes in a subsequent email, and it comes back, "It's over. The President doesn't negotiate second rounds. We have given and lent billions of dollars so your team could manage this properly. And now you're telling me to bend over to a terrorist like Lauria?" Mr. Lauria is the lawyer that represents the Indiana teachers' pension fund. "That's BS."

Of course, the next day we have the bankruptcy.

But you say, you know, maybe this task force of the President's, which I believe is not serving the President well, is made up of people who are really knowledgeable in business, in the car industry, in the car dealership industry, and so we should probably defer, because I don't happen to be any of those things. So maybe we should defer to their judgment in this matter.

The gentleman has a thought he would like to share?

Mr. MCCOTTER. Yes. Through the Speaker to the gentleman from Ohio, first I caution you that if you continue to quote Mr. Feldman, you may get a PG-13 rating for your Special Order.

But I would also like to point out that many of us in Detroit had grave concerns when the membership of the Auto Task Force was announced because of the absence of an understanding of the auto industry and manufacturing, and, to be quite honest with you, the absence of some of the Members owning cars.

I yield back.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank the gentleman, and that is where we were going to go next. There was a hearing here on Capitol Hill about 3 weeks ago in the Judiciary Committee and the witnesses were asked by a colleague of ours who joined us the last time we did this, Mr. JORDAN of Ohio, Do any of these individuals on the Auto Task Force have any expertise in how car manufacturing or car dealership businesses operate? The witness indicated the answer is none; they have no experience. He went on to say that The Wall Street Journal actually did a survey of the members of the Auto Task Force and discovered that a substantial portion of them don't even own cars.

Now, I want to be fair, because I think that witness was talking without all of the facts. But there is an article that appeared in the Detroit News, close to the gentleman's home, on February 23, and that is not quite right. Of the 10 senior policy aides who work on the President's task force, two own American cars and the rest either own no cars or they own cars manufactured in other countries, foreign cars.

Does the gentleman have a thought on that?

Mr. MCCOTTER. Yes. I would just like to go back to the quotes from the emails, because it is very important that we catch one of the underlying sub-texts to this entire situation.

We were told that it was the investors that forced Chrysler into bankruptcy due to their obstinacy and greed. And yet from the emails we see here, this is precisely one of those investors who is seeking to come to an agreement with the Auto Task Force to preclude that bankruptcy.

I relate this back to what the gentleman showed us from the UAW, who had gone through a very grueling, excruciating process to find an agreement with the Auto Task Force. And yet when Chrysler went into bankruptcy, which was clearly the intent not to do everything possible to avoid, people started to pit the investors and the auto workers against each other.

I would submit to all that it was the process of the Auto Task Force, its arbitrary nature and its lack of accountability that pitted workers and investors against each other in a race to beat the inevitable bankruptcy which would occur.

I think that is one of the crucial things that needs to be pointed out, and I think it also bears repeating, why the individual, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KUCINICH, as well as yourself and other Members of this body, sent a letter to the administration saying we wanted the Auto Task Force to revert back to an advisory capacity. Because many of us remember the 1970s when a congressionally led assistance of the Chrysler Motor Corporation brought the stakeholders together in an equitable process and resulted not only in the survival of the company, but Lee Iacocca presenting a check with interest for those loans to President Ronald Reagan.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank the gentleman very much. Mr. Speaker, could I inquire as to how much time is left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 14 minutes.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I want to finish Clue the travel edition and get to something I talked about at the beginning of the hour. But just to finish it, again, the game of Clue, manufactured by Hasbro, we know that the weapon, in this case, not the pen, but the ax, an ax has been used to get about 210,000 people, make them unemployed in this country. And again, we have the same rooms. It happened in one of these rooms. And around the board, down there is Mr. Nardelli, the former chief executive officer of Chrysler, Larry Summers, senior adviser on the economy to the President, President Obama, of course. Over here is Ron Bloom, who I've talked about. Here is Mr. Geithner, who is the Secretary of the Treasury, and here is former President Bush. So this group forms our new Clue travel edition. And as we move forward, I think, again, it is important that the American public know who made the call to force these car companies into bankruptcy; who made the call to lie to 9,000 auto workers at 8 plants across the country, and who made the call that, even though they don't cost anybody any money, that we have to close all these dealerships and put people out of work.

And I keep hearing, and the gentleman has heard it too, that this task force doesn't want to run the day-to-day operations of Chrysler and GM. But sadly, for them, there is an article that appeared on May 11 out of Detroit that indicated that Chrysler wanted to spend $134 million in advertising during the period of its bankruptcy, and this unelected task force told them they couldn't spend any money on advertising. Now, they finally relented and said okay, you can spend half of it. But for a bunch of folks that are claiming they don't want to run the car company, they've now set up the situation where they didn't want them to advertise and they didn't want them to have as many stores as they used to have to sell their cars. Again, that's a strange, strange business model.

So we will be back, Mr. Speaker, as we move forward during the course of these discussions, to try and figure out who did it and what room it happened in and why they did it.

I want to move now to the observation that I made at the beginning of the hour. At the beginning of the hour I talked about the AIG bonuses and the fact that legislation that was approved in a bipartisan fashion, 64-0, has not been brought to the House floor by the distinguished majority leader for discussion and debate. And we keep hearing how busy we are here, and we heard that last year. And my colleagues will remember last year, when gasoline was going through the roof and our phones were ringing off the hook and people said, Hey, can you give us a national energy policy, for crying out loud? We're dying. We can't afford to put gas in our car and drive to work. We were told as well that we were too busy. And I get that. This is the most deliberative body in the world. We have a lot of important work to do. And if the majority truly feels we were too busy to deal with the national energy policy, I would have taken them at their word. But sadly, here is a chart, and then we'll go to the second chart.

When the new majority became the majority, we Republicans did such a bang-up job that the voters threw us out and they installed the Democrats as the majority party beginning on January 29 of 2007. At the time the retail price of gas in the country was $2.22. And on that day the most important thing that they could come up with to debate on the floor was to commend the University of California Santa Barbara soccer team. I like soccer. I congratulate them. And gas isn't so bad—$2.22.

It goes up to $2.84, and the most important thing that the majority can schedule to be on the floor is to declare October National Passport Month. A lot of my constituents didn't know what National Passport Month, what month it occurred in. Now they know.

Gas goes up to $3.03 a gallon. We're not debating the price of gas or a national energy policy. We're commending the Houston Dynamo soccer team.

Now, those of us in public life are told that you don't get elected unless you get the soccer moms. So I guess, you know, while gas is going up to $3.03, we've got the soccer moms; we're all squared away.

Gas goes up to $3.77. The most important thing the majority can put on the floor is declaring National Train Day.

It's getting serious—$3.84. A lot of people are calling me saying, Hey, what are you doing? We passed Great Cats and Rare Canids Day. And I have to tell you, I didn't even know what a rare canid was, but I Googled it, and it's a dog. So when my constituents were paying $3.84 cents a gallon, we were doing cats and dogs here in the United States Congress.

It goes over $4, and you think, man, we're going to get to the bottom of it now. But the majority determined that the most important thing we could do on that day was declare the International 2008—a lot of my constituents didn't know this either—2008 was the International Year of Sanitation.

Gas crested at $4.14 a gallon in my part of the world on June 17 of 2008. Surely we're going to talk about energy; surely we're going to talk about gas. No, we were too busy. We had to pass the Monkey Safety Act on that particular day.

So we thought maybe folks had learned as a result of that because, clearly, when gas has gone up to that price, the Monkey Safety Act isn't the foremost thing on my constituents' minds.

So we come to this year. And this year, as we've talked about during this hour, there are a lot of people at Chrysler losing their jobs. So at the beginning of this Congress, January, 4,000 people at Chrysler are losing their jobs. And you'd think that we'd have a discussion here. I would think. But we're too busy because on that day we needed to honor the life of Claiborne Pell, who was a former Senator. He deserves to be honored. But why are we taking floor time to do that when 4,000 people are out of work just at Chrysler.

It goes up to 9,500. The most important thing that we can do on that day is to support the goals and ideals of national teen dating, an issue that we're all concerned about certainly, but now we have 9,500 Chrysler workers out of work.

It goes up to just shy of 10,000 and, son of a gun, we have to, we've got time to come back, this year, and pass the Monkey Safety Act again. And I want to be clear. I don't want anyone to read my words in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and think that I want monkeys who aren't safe. I want safe monkeys. But when you've got 10,000 people out of work at Chrysler, maybe we could do something other than save monkeys.

And son of a gun, and now you're up to 13,000 people, and I guess the Senate didn't pass the cat and dog legislation, so we have to consider that again.

Sixteen thousand people are out of work; the most important thing they can schedule on the floor is honoring Arnold Palmer. I like Arnold Palmer, Latrobe, Pennsylvania, great golfer, deserves to be honored. But how about dealing with the people that are losing their jobs and their livelihoods at Chrysler, General Motors, and the people at the auto dealers?

And then it sort of peaks with the announcement, 18,365 people, just at Chrysler, out of work. And again, all we can do is National Train Day.

Now, I want to be fair to the majority because we do do other stuff here. And I don't want anybody to believe that all we do is monkeys and cats and dogs. Just since the beginning of this year, when Chrysler and General Motors are going belly up and bankrupt, we have also named, and I have to add to this list because we did a couple this week, we've named post offices. And so these 16 post offices, we took an hour of debate here in the House of Representatives, 16 hours, to make sure that—and if anybody, Mr. Speaker, who happens to see this list, they live in these towns, they should feel assured that they can now go in and buy those 44 cent stamps because the United States Congress has named their post office.

And again, it's an important part of what we do here, honoring people who deserve to be honored. But 16 hours, when we could have been talking about Chrysler, when we could have been talking about General Motors, when we could have been talking about the dealers, instead we were naming post offices. And I don't think that the country is better off for that enterprise.

But then again, to be fair, let's say that you're in the majority and that you didn't see this coming and that perhaps, you know, you didn't recognize it was going to be as serious as it was.

We came back last week and went back into session last week. Surely, over the Memorial Day recess, people got an earful from their constituents, saying, What are you going to do about these car companies? What are you going to do about the dealerships? Yet, when we came back last week, you know, maybe we weren't quite ready. Maybe we hadn't formalized how to get at the problem. We passed bills directing fish stocking in the lakes of Washington; we recognized the 75th anniversary of the Great Smoky Mountains; and we shifted from soccer to basketball, and we honored the University of Tennessee Women's Basketball Team.

Then you say, okay, that was the first week back. Everybody is a little sleepy. We haven't quite gotten up to speed with our legislative agenda. This week, rather than dealing with Chrysler, rather than asking some questions of the unelected task force appointed by the President and that doesn't own cars, we recognized that this was National Physical Education and Sport Week.

Also, I didn't know this, but maybe my colleagues know this—and I apologize for being ignorant. June 10 is National Pipeline Safety Day, and we spent an hour of time here on the floor making sure that everybody understood that June 10 is National Pipeline Safety Day.

Mr. Speaker, this is a big problem. I mean we have a double delegation here. The Congress has punted to the President. The President has punted to this task force of people who don't own American cars, the majority of them, or they don't own any cars, and they have no experience in the car business. They are making decisions that affect hundreds of thousands of Americans.

Mr. MCCOTTER talked about the letter that we sent to the President. Thirty-six of us sent a letter to the President, saying, Mr. President, please pull these people back. Let's have a dialogue. Let's bring the best and the brightest.

You know, Mr. MCCOTTER talked about Chrysler. We made $35 million on the Chrysler deal in 1979. The only problem was nobody expected it, and Congress didn't know how to spend the money. Now, people need to rest easy. We figured it out, but nobody knew how to spend that money. Let's talk about it, and let's do this the right way. Let's not have this unelected group of people who have no experience run roughshod over the American worker.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MCCOTTER. May I inquire as to how much time is available?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MASSA). There are 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I give you 30 seconds.

Mr. MCCOTTER. Thank you for the 30 seconds.

I just want to point out that, while all of this has been lighthearted, this is very important. We have twice seen the President unaware of what his own administration has done. We hear calls for alacritous action. We hear people saying that we must rush to do health care, that we must rush to do climate change legislation. Let us never forget that government haste makes taxpayer waste. Due deliberateness and prudence are always the best course of action in legislative affairs. We should do a lot more of it here.

I yield back.

Mr. LATOURETTE. I thank the gentleman. I thank the Chair.

I yield back.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2346) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2009, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate amendment to the text deleted the entire House bill after the enacting clause and inserted the Senate bill, as amended. This conference agreement includes a revised bill.

Report language included by the House in the report accompanying H.R. 2346 (H. Rept. 111-105) and included by the Senate in the report accompanying S. 1054 (S. Rept. 111-20) should be complied with unless specifically addressed in this statement of the managers. The statement of the managers, while repeating some report language for emphasis, is not intended to negate the language referred to above unless expressly provided herein.

MILITARY PERSONNEL SHORTFALL

The conference agreement includes an additional $2,810,222,000 for identified shortfalls resulting from unbudgeted additional end strength, which were a result of better-than-projected recruiting and retention levels; recent rate increases in Basic Pay, Retired Pay Accrual, Basic Allowance for Housing, and Basic Allowance for Subsistence; and unanticipated programmatic adjustments such as increased clothing and education costs.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

The conference agreement recommends $32,547,114,000 for operation and maintenance.

The recommendations for each operation and maintenance account are shown below:

PAKISTAN COUNTERINSURGENCY FUND

The conferees support the Administration's efforts to increase the counterinsurgency capability of the Pakistani security forces. The conferees believe that international military operations against al-Qaeda and the Taliban in Afghanistan cannot succeed without a strong counterinsurgency effort by security forces in Pakistan. However, the conferees are concerned about providing the Department of Defense with the authority and funding to conduct an assistance program which would traditionally fall under the purview of the Department of State. The conferees believe the Pakistan Counterinsurgency Fund (PCF) should reside within the Department of State but understand the near term needs of the Pakistan Security Forces and the lack of capacity within the State Department warrant an exception to traditional lines of authority. Therefore, the conferees support the Administration's request for this fund under the Department of Defense, but direct the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State to jointly develop a plan for transitioning the PCF from the Department of Defense to the Department of State by fiscal year 2010 and to be fully executed by the Department of State by fiscal year 2011. The plan should identify the resources, personnel, and authorities required to facilitate the transfer to the State Department, as well as goals and objectives for the successful completion of this program. In addition, the Secretary of Defense is directed to follow the same reporting requirements that Congress has required for the Afghanistan and Iraq Security Forces Funds as outlined in section 317 of this Act.

The conferees believe civil-military operations are a key component of successful counterinsurgency efforts. However, the conferees do not support the creation of a Commander's Emergency Response Program (CERP) or similar program for Pakistan, and have neither authorized nor provided funding for such a program anywhere in this Act. The conference agreement has made available $2,000,000 from the Pakistan Counterinsurgency Fund to provide humanitarian assistance to the people of Pakistan only as part of civil-military training exercises carried out with Pakistan's security forces through this fund. Finally, the conferees direct the Department to work with the Government of Pakistan to establish a funding mechanism beginning in fiscal year 2010, using Pakistani funds, which can be applied to humanitarian needs in support of counterinsurgency operations conducted inside of Pakistan.

FAMILY ADVOCACY PROGRAM

The conference agreement provides $708,842,000 for family advocacy programs to provide counseling and family assistance including child psychologists, and other intervention efforts which is $94,000,000 above the request in order to enhance the activities of the Family Advocacy Program and provide for children and families managing the difficult challenges of military service. The funding is provided for, but not limited to, child care, counseling, spouse certification and licensure, and Joint Family Assistance Centers. Funding is also available for the Warrior Family Community Partnership to provide assistance to all soldiers and families.

COMBAT UNIFORMS

The conferees understand that soldiers deployed to Afghanistan have serious concerns about the current combat uniform which they indicate provides ineffective camouflage given the environment in Afghanistan. Accordingly, the conferees direct that within funding made available the Department of Defense take immediate action to provide combat uniforms to personnel deployed to Afghanistan with a camouflage pattern that is suited to the environment of Afghanistan. The conferees further direct the Secretary of the Army to provide a report on the program plans and budgetary adjustments necessary to provide appropriate uniforms to deployed and deploying troops to Afghanistan. The report shall be submitted to the congressional defense committees by the end of fiscal year 2009.

PROCUREMENT

The conference agreement recommends $25,846,718,000 for procurement.

STRYKER VEHICLES

The conference agreement supports continuation of the Stryker vehicle program which has demonstrated excellent performance in combat operations in the Central Command area of operations. The conference agreement provides $200,000,000 above the budget request to procure additional Stryker vehicles. Funds may be used to procure additional medical evacuation vehicles, engineer squad vehicles and other Stryker variants, based on Army needs, and to sustain continued production. As part of the Department of Defense Quadrennial Defense Review, the Army is undertaking a major analysis of its tracked and tactical wheeled vehicle needs. This review will set the course for the future force and help establish the specific vehicle requirements. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to provide a report to the congressional defense committees, no later than September 30, 2009 with the plan to sustain Stryker vehicle production and the details on which vehicles (variant and quantity) will be procured with the provided funding.

RAPID EQUIPPING FORCE

The conference agreement provides $309,000,000 for the Army Rapid Equipping Force (REF), including $99,000,000 for Counter Sniper and Soldier Wearable Acoustic Targeting Sniper Systems. This amount should satisfy numerous emergency requests from forward deployed and forward deploying units. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to provide an acquisition objective and basis of issue plan for both vehicular and soldier wearable sniper detection equipment within 60 days after enactment of this Act. If shortfalls still exist, the Army is expected to reprogram the necessary funds to accommodate the shortfalls.

WEAPONS ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

The budget request included $32,461,000 for various force protection items and weapons upgrades in Procurement, Marine Corps. The conferees note that the Congress previously provided $23,000,000 in this procurement line for a requirement that was subsequently not validated and directs the Marine Corps to apply those funds toward the requirements in the fiscal year 2009 supplemental request for weapons enhancements.

COMBAT OPERATIONS CENTERS

The conferees understand that subsequent to the budget submission, an Urgent Universal Needs Statement for additional Combat Operations Centers for Marine units in support of operations in Afghanistan was validated. The conference agreement provides $53,200,000 in Procurement, Marine Corps to fully satisfy this requirement.

EXPLOSIVE ORDNANCE DISPOSAL SYSTEMS

The budget request includes $35,000,000 for a U.S. Central Command Urgent Universal Needs Statement for a Standoff Suicide Bomber Detection System in Procurement, Marine Corps. The conferees have been informed that the Urgent Universal Needs Statement was suspended following the budget submission and therefore provide no funds for this effort.

PHYSICAL SECURITY EQUIPMENT

The budget request includes $112,200,000 in Procurement, Marine Corps for physical security requirements that were previously funded. The conferees deny the redundant funds.

F-22 AIRCRAFT

The Air Force has informed the Congress that funding in the amount of $45,000,000 is required for the F-22 Raptor program to avoid a work stoppage in material processing and fabrication activities during fiscal year 2009. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to use $45,000,000 from within the funds provided to ensure that work proceeds on schedule. None of the funds provided in this Act shall be used to finance activities to shut-down the F-22A production line. Funds may be used to explore options to develop an export variant of the F-22A.

NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE EQUIPMENT

The National Guard and Reserve components traditionally receive less than a proportionate share of funding to resource their equipment needs. As a result, the conferees recommend funding of $500,000,000 for the National Guard and Reserve forces. Of that amount, $300,000,000 is for the Army National Guard; $50,000,000 for the Air National Guard; $75,000,000 for the U.S. Army Reserve; $25,000,000 for the Navy Reserve; $25,000,000 for the Marine Corps Reserve; and $25,000,000 for the Air Force Reserve to meet urgent equipment needs that may arise this fiscal year. This funding will allow the National Guard and Reserve components to procure high priority equipment that may be used by these units for both their combat missions and their missions in support of State governors.

MINE RESISTANT AMBUSH PROTECTED VEHICLE FUND

The conferees recommend $4,543,000,000 for the Mine Resistant Ambush Protected Vehicle Fund, an increase of $1,850,000,000 above the request and direct that the additional funds shall be for the procurement and fielding of Mine Resistant Ambush Protected All Terrain Vehicles (M-ATV) only. M-ATVs are urgently needed to protect servicemembers against improvised explosive devices and other threats in Afghanistan. These new, lightweight MRAPs operate better than current vehicles in the close urban environments and challenging terrain of Afghanistan. The conferees expect that the Joint Program Office will move rapidly to field these critical force protection assets to the Warfighter.

RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION

The conference agreement recommends $833,499,000 for research, development, test and evaluation.

KINETIC ENERGY INTERCEPTOR

The conferees understand a stop work order on the Kinetic Energy Interceptor (KEI) was issued May 11, 2009. However, the KEI program had a booster flight test scheduled in Fall 2009 that could provide an important understanding of the technology risk for any future interceptor development. The conferees further understand that the KEI program has already produced valuable technical accomplishments. The conferees strongly encourage the Missile Defense Agency to execute this test, within funds that have been made available for KEI, to gain significant technical knowledge for this program.

REVOLVING AND MANAGEMENT FUNDS

DEFENSE WORKING CAPITAL FUNDS

The conference agreement recommends $861,726,000 for the Defense Working Capital Fund accounts. This supports funding of $443,200,000 for the Defense Working Capital Fund, Army, to re-stock spare and repair parts essential to the operational readiness of the Army; $15,000,000 for the Defense Working Capital Fund, Air Force, for the transportation of Fallen Heroes from the theater of operations; and $403,526,000 for the Defense Working Capital Fund, Defense-Wide, for contingency operations costs for the Defense Information Systems Agency and the Defense Logistics Agency.

TRAUMATIC BRAIN INJURY AND PSYCHOLOGICAL HEALTH RESEARCH

The conference agreement provides $75,000,000 for Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI) and Psychological Health peer-reviewed and/or competitively awarded research, development, test and evaluation efforts. The funding provided is to be allocated as recommended in the House Report 111-105 to validate emergent approaches and technologies and to accelerate on-going programs for early diagnosis, assessment and treatment of TBI and Psychological Health, including spinal cord injury, and complementary and alternative medicine.

ORTHOPEDIC RESEARCH

The conference agreement provides $51,000,000 for orthopedic and other trauma research, treatment and rehabilitation including regenerative medicine. This funding will continue and expand the existing orthopedic trauma research program, amputee rehabilitation and reset research, and restoration of function. Serious limb trauma, vascular injuries, major limb tissue damage, and blood flow disruption contribute heavily to United States military casualties in Iraq and Afghanistan. The Department of Defense estimates indicate that nearly two thirds of injuries sustained in combat in Iraq and Afghanistan are musculoskeletal. Extremity injuries are the most prevalent injury, and amputations following battlefield injury now occur at twice the rate as in past wars. Understanding how to treat and facilitate rapid recovery from orthopedic injuries should be one of the top priorities for the Military Health System.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

DEPARTMENT-WIDE PROGRAMS

WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

The conference agreement includes $50,000,000 as requested for wildfire suppression and emergency rehabilitation activities of the Department of the Interior, available only if other available funds will be exhausted imminently. If it enhances the efficiency or effectiveness of Federal wildland fire suppression activities, the Secretary of the Interior may transfer any of these funds to the Secretary of Agriculture for similar activities. The Committee notes that although wildfire suppression projections are challenging this early in the season, models and experience indicate that it is highly likely that existing available funds will not be sufficient if another fire season like the past three occurs.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

FOREST SERVICE

If it enhances the efficiency or effectiveness of Federal wildland fire suppression activities, the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer not more than $50,000,000 of these funds to the Secretary of the Interior for similar activities. The Committee notes that although wildfire suppression projections are challenging this early in the season, models and experience indicate that it is highly likely that existing available funds will not be sufficient if another fire season like the past three occurs.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—THIS TITLE

Sec. 701. The conference agreement includes a technical correction as proposed by the Senate that amends Public Law 111-8 concerning training of staff at the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry. The House had no similar provision.

The conference agreement does not include a provision proposed by the Senate that exempts youth conservation employment programs in the Department of the Interior and the Forest Service from Section 1606 of division A, title XVI of Public Law 111-5. The conferees have been assured by the Department of the Interior officials that they have legal authorities to conduct youth projects under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act with appropriate entities, such as the Youth Conservation Corps and Public Lands Corps.

TITLE VIII

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

ADMINISTRATION FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES REFUGEE AND ENTRANT ASSISTANCE

The conference agreement includes $82,000,000 for refugee and entrant assistance, as proposed by the Senate. The House proposed these funds within the Department of Defense, including transfer authority to other Federal agencies. The conferees intend that these funds be used for the care and custody of unaccompanied alien children, to allow the Office of Refugee Resettlement to implement the provisions of Public Law 110-457, the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (TVPRA) of 2008. The conferees direct the Department of Health and Human Services, in conjunction with the Department of Homeland Security, to provide a briefing to the Committees on Appropriations no later than July 3, 2009 on the increased costs in fiscal year 2010 associated with implementing the TVPRA.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

PUBLIC HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES EMERGENCY FUND

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

The conference agreement includes $1,850,000,000 for pandemic influenza preparedness and response as proposed by the House. The Senate proposed $1,500,000,000 in the Executive Office of the President. Funding is available until expended, as proposed by the House, rather than until September 30, 2010 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement concurs in the House recommendation and does not specify amounts within this appropriation for Federal government agencies outside of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). The Senate recommended a number of transfers to other Federal agencies.

The conferees recognize the high level of uncertainty associated with the current H1N1 influenza virus strain and other circulating flu viruses and the urgent need to provide increased resources to Federal, State, and local agencies on the frontlines of responding to disease outbreaks. Lessons learned from past influenza pandemics indicate that influenza can strike a community, affect many individuals, and then return with a vengeance to strike the community months later.

HHS has nearly exhausted all prior appropriated influenza pandemic funds to respond to the current H1N1 influenza outbreak. Supplemental funding is needed to continue to address this current outbreak, but also to prepare for the potential of future outbreaks, increased severity of the virus, or for a new flu strain to emerge. As such, this funding may be used for an array of pandemic influenza preparedness and response activities, including the development and purchase of vaccines, antiviral drugs, medical supplies and personal protective equipment, diagnostic and vaccine delivery equipment, for upgrading State and local public health capacity, and domestic and international surveillance. Additionally, funding may be used to support the activities for which prior funding was provided, but has been diverted to address the current outbreak.

As proposed by the House, the conference agreement includes bill language that permits the Secretary of HHS to transfer funding to other Federal agencies to be used to prepare for and respond to an influenza pandemic. Funds may also be transferred to the Covered Countermeasure Process Fund for the purpose of administering compensation claims for individuals who may experience adverse reactions caused by the administration or use of a covered countermeasure, such as vaccines and antiviral drugs. Such transfers shall be made in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB). Not later than 15 days prior to transferring any funds, the Secretary must notify the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the planned uses of the funds. The Senate did not propose similar language. Additionally, the conferees direct the Secretary to consult with the Director of OMB when making funding allocations within HHS.

Within the total, the conference agreement includes no less than $200,000,000 for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) as proposed by the House. The Senate did not include a similar provision. CDC is the lead Federal agency involved with detecting, preparing for, and responding to infectious disease outbreaks. Funding will be used for such activities as U.S. and global disease detection and surveillance, laboratory capacity and research, diagnostic capabilities, risk communication, rapid response, distribution of medical supplies and treatments from the Strategic National Stockpile, guidance development, and assistance to State and local governments.

Also within the total, the conference agreement includes no less than $350,000,000 for upgrading State and local capacity as proposed by the House. The Senate did not include a similar provision. State and local public health systems have been challenged by the economic downturn. These funds will be used to support State and local public health and emergency response infrastructure, such as workforce, laboratory capacity, public communications, and community mitigation guidance and planning.

As proposed by the House, the conferees request that the Secretary of HHS, together with the Director of CDC, examine HHS' response to the early stages of the H1N1 outbreak in Mexico and the laboratory confirmation process to ascertain whether improvements are needed in its current disease detection policies and procedures. HHS should submit a report to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate no later than 90 days after the enactment of this Act. The Senate did not request a similar report.

As proposed by the House, the conferees direct the Secretary of HHS to provide monthly reports to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate updating the status of actions taken and funds obligated in this and previous appropriations Acts for pandemic influenza preparedness and response activities. These reports should be provided no later than 15 days after the end of each month. Further, the Secretary shall include appropriations provided in this Act when preparing the semi-annual report to Congress on influenza pandemic preparedness spending. The Senate did not propose similar language.

Contingent emergency appropriation

The conference agreement includes an additional $5,800,000,000 as a contingent emergency appropriation to provide Federal, State, and local public health and emergency response agencies with resources to effectively respond should an escalation of the H1N1 virus or another emergent influenza virus require a national vaccination program. On June 2, 2009, the President submitted a request for $2,000,000,000 in contingent funds, plus authority to transfer and redirect Recovery Act and other prior appropriations for this purpose. The conferees agree that additional, substantial, and flexible resources should be provided to respond to this emerging situation; however, the conferees believe they should be provided in a more efficient manner.

Moreover, to ensure that these resources are used for urgent needs, with oversight and accountability, this funding is available for obligation only if the President provides written notice to Congress that emergency funds are required to address critical needs related to emerging influenza viruses. Funds may be transferred to other appropriation accounts of the Department of Health and Human Services and other Federal agencies in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. Further, none of the funds provided through this contingent emergency appropriation shall be made available for obligation until 15 days following the submittal of detailed obligation plans to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Such plans shall identify the amounts and the activities for which funds are specified by the President, shall be prepared by HHS or any other Federal agency receiving funds, and shall be coordinated with the Executive Office of the President.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—THIS TITLE

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

Sec. 801. The conference agreement includes a provision as proposed by the Senate to provide the Department of Labor expanded transfer authority for administrative funding appropriated in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. The House bill did not include a similar provision.

Sec. 802. The conference agreement includes a provision as proposed by the House to make a technical correction to the fiscal year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act to permit the higher foster care children adoption incentive payments to States authorized by the Fostering Connections to Success and Increasing Adoptions Act of 2008 (Public Law 110-351). The Senate bill did not include a similar provision.

Sec. 803. The conference agreement includes bill language, not in either House or Senate bills, to enable the Department of Education to expedite the awarding of American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) funding available for the Centers for Independent Living program and allow multiple year awards. The conferees expect that this authority will help the Department begin to make ARRA awards under this program in the current fiscal year and request monthly reports to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate on actions taken to make all awards under this program.

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

Sec. 804. The conference agreement includes a provision that permits the Secretary of Education to transfer up to $10,260,000 to the Career, Technical, and Adult Education account for carrying out Adult Education State Grants from amounts that would otherwise lapse at the end of fiscal year 2009, with notification to the Committees on Appropriations. The Senate proposed language authorizing a transfer of up to $17,678,270 for this purpose, while the House bill did not include similar language.

TITLE IX

Legislative Branch
U.S. CAPITOL POLICE
GENERAL EXPENSES

The agreement includes $71,606,000 for the acquisition and installation of a new radio system for the U.S. Capitol Police as proposed by both the House and the Senate. This is the same amount as the supplemental request. The Government Accountability Office will support the Capitol Police in the execution of this critical project and have been requested by the House and Senate Appropriations Committees to provide regular updates of progress in meeting critical system deadlines and performance standards.

The agreement accepts the Senate structure of the appropriations language which deletes a proviso included in the House bill and the supplemental request that would have placed $6,500,000 of this amount in a contingency reserve.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The agreement includes $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for the Congressional Budget Office. These funds remain available until September 30, 2010. The funding provides increased resources to expedite CBO's evaluation and scoring of major legislation expected to be considered during the remainder of fiscal year 2009 and will accelerate staffing increases proposed in the fiscal year 2010 budget request. These funds were not in the supplemental request or the House bill.

SEC. 901—GENERAL PROVISION

The agreement does not include a general provision proposed by the Senate related to Committee funding. The House included no similar language.

TITLE X

The conferees also recommend a rescission of $143,242,000 from a prior year appropriation due to the cancellation of military construction projects in Iraq. The agreement includes a provision as proposed by the Senate to require a prefinancing statement for each project in Afghanistan be submitted to NATO before funds can be obligated or expended. GENERAL PROVISIONS—THIS TITLE

Section 1201 removes a limitation that prevents the State of North Dakota from spending more than $10,000,000 of highway funding from the emergency relief program in any given year on the repair and strengthening of the roads surrounding Devils Lake, as proposed by the Senate. The House did not include a similar provision.

Section 1202 allows transit agencies to use up to 10 percent of the formula grants provided in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) for operating expenses. The conferees modified the original Senate language to clarify that 10 percent of the funds provided in ARRA for intercity bus service shall also be available to cover operating expenses which is consistent with existing law. The House did not include a similar provision.

Section 1203 includes a provision proposed by the Senate which replaces the $50,000,000 allocation provided in Public Law 110-329 with an $80,000,000 allocation, and designates this funding for tenant-based Section 8 funding for all areas affected by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. The House did not include a similar provision.

Section 1204 clarifies that eligible recipients for the funds provided in ARRA for gap financing include owners of affordable housing tax credits under section 1400N of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, known as “disaster credits” or “Go Zone” credits, as well as owners of projects that receive low income housing tax credits under section 42(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as proposed by the Senate. The House did not include a similar provision.

Section 1205 includes a new provision which clarifies prevailing wage requirements for housing funds provided in ARRA.

TITLE XIII—CONSUMER ASSISTANCE TO RECYCLE AND SAVE ACT

The conference agreement includes a new title providing $1 billion for vouchers of $3,500 or $4,500 to be applied toward the purchase or lease of a new fuel efficient automobile or truck from July 1–November 1, 2009. To qualify for a voucher under this authority the vehicle turned in must be scrapped, and the purchased vehicle must achieve greater fuel efficiency than the vehicle to be turned in.

TITLE XIV—OTHER MATTERS INTERNATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY PROGRAMS UNITED STATES QUOTA, INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The conference agreement provides for an increase in the United States quota in the International Monetary Fund (the Fund), as requested, of approximately 5 billion in Special Drawing Rights (SDRs), valued at approximately $8,000,000,000, in order to maintain its current voting share and veto power within the organization, as proposed by the Senate.

LOANS TO INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The conference agreement provides for loans to the Fund, as requested, of the dollar equivalent of up to 75 billion SDRs. This will enable the United States to increase its share of the New Arrangements to Borrow, which establishes a set of credit lines extended to the Fund, from approximately $10,000,000,000 (6.6 billion SDRs) to the equivalent of $100,000,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—INTERNATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

SEC. 1401. The conference agreement includes a provision, as requested, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct the United States Executive Director of the Fund to consent to amendments to the New Arrangements to Borrow and to make loans, in an amount not to exceed the dollar equivalent of 75 billion SDRs, in addition to amounts previously authorized, as proposed by the Senate.

SEC. 1402. The conference agreement includes a provision, as requested, authorizing the United States Governor of the Fund to agree to and accept amendments to the Articles of Agreement of the Fund as proposed in resolutions approved by the Fund’s Board on April 28, 2008 and May 5, 2008. The provision further authorizes the United States Governor of the Fund, as requested, to consent to an increase in the United States quota in the Fund equivalent to 43,973,100,000 SDRs. The provision also authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, as requested, to instruct the United States Executive Director of the Fund to agree to the sale of 12,965,649 ounces of the Fund’s gold. Since the Fund relies primarily on income from lending operations to finance lending activities and expenses, the sale of gold will finance an endowment, the return on which will finance a portion of its administrative expenses. The conferees direct the Secretary of Treasury to seek to ensure that the Fund provides support to low-income countries by making available Fund resources of not less than $4,000,000,000 and that such resources should be provided as loans with substantial concessionality and debt service payment relief and/or grants, as proposed by the Senate.

SEC. 1403. The conference agreement requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the United States Executive Director of the World Bank and the Executive Board of the Fund, to submit a report detailing the steps taken to coordinate the activities of the World Bank and the Fund to avoid the duplication of missions, and steps taken by the Department of the Treasury and the Fund to increase the oversight and accountability of Fund activities. The conference agreement requires the United States Executive Director of the Fund to use the voice and vote of the United States to oppose any loan, project, agreement, or other activity that imposes budget constraints, and to promote social spending in the country. All provisions were proposed by the Senate.

SEC. 1404. The conference agreement includes a provision that amends the International Financial Institutions Act to require the United States Executive Director at each of the International Financial Institutions (as defined in section 1701(c)(2) of this Act) to use the voice and vote of the United States to oppose the provision of loans or other use of the funds of the respective institution to any country the government of which as repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—THIS ACT

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

OVERSEAS DEPLOYMENTS AND EMERGENCY DESIGNATIONS

Sec. 14102. The conference agreement includes a global designation, as proposed by the House, providing that each amount in titles I, II, IV, V, VII, VIII, IX, XII, XIII, XIV, and VI, except amounts under the heading “Coast Guard Operating Expenses”, is designated as necessary to meet emergency needs pursuant to sections 403(a) and 423(b) of S. Con. Res. 13 (111th Congress), the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2010. The agreement also includes a global designation, as proposed by the House, providing that all other amounts in the bill, except certain amounts rescinded in section 309 of the conference report, are designated as being for overseas deployment and other activities pursuant to sections 401(c)(4) and 423(a) of S. Con. Res. 13 (111th Congress). The Senate included emergency and overseas deployment designations on an account-by-account basis.

RESTRICTIONS AND REQUIREMENTS REGARDING THE TRANSFER AND RELEASE OF GUANTANAMO BAY DETAINEES

Sec. 14103. The conference agreement includes language prohibiting current detainees from being released in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii or D.C. The agreement also prohibits current detainees from being transferred to the U.S., except to be prosecuted, and only 45 days after Congress receives a plan detailing the risks involved and a plan for mitigating such risk; cost of the transfer; legal rationale and court demands; and a copy of the notification provided to the Governor of the receiving state (or the Mayor of the District of Columbia) 14 days before a transfer with a certification by the Attorney General that the individual poses little or no security risk.

Under the conference agreement, current detainees cannot be transferred or released to another country unless the President submits to Congress 15 days prior to such transfer: (a) the name of the individual and the country to which the individual will be transferred; (b) an assessment of risks posed and actions taken to mitigate such risks; and (c) the terms of the transfer agreement with the other country, including any financial assistance. Finally, the agreement includes language requiring the President to submit a report to Congress describing the disposition of each current detainee before the facility can be closed.

The conference agreement deletes the language included in title II of the Senate amendment that prohibited the use of funds appropriated or made available by this or any prior Act to transfer, release or incarcerate Guantanamo detainees to or within the U.S.

The conference agreement also deletes a provision proposed by the House that required the President to submit to Congress by October 1, 2009 a comprehensive plan on the proposed disposition of the Guantanamo Bay detention facilities.

Funding for natural disasters includes, but is not limited to, wildland fires, flooding in the Upper Midwest and Pacific Northwest, for ice storms, for Katrina hurricane recovery and subsequent storms, including Hurricanes Ike and Gustav in the gulf coast region, and for other needs. EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE IN RECOGNITION OF
DR. EDISON O. JACKSON

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS-

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Dr. Edison O. Jackson, the President of Medgar Evers College of the City University of New York and a foremost leader in higher education who is now retiring after twenty years with the College.

Dr. Jackson was born in Heathsville, Virginia. He received a Bachelor of Science degree in Zoology, a Master of Arts degree in Counseling from Howard University, a Master of Divinity degree from New York Theological Seminary, and a Doctorate in Education from Rutgers University with an emphasis on the philosophy, function, role, and administration of urban educational institutions.

After an impressive twenty years in higher education, Dr. Jackson was welcomed to Medgar Evers College as its 5th President. He quickly formulated and implemented a new vision for the College's future, spearheading the creation of the Freshman Year Program, increasing student retention, creating three new academic schools, and restoring the institution's senior college status in 1994.

To increase the enrollment and academic success of African American males, Dr. Jackson established the nationally recognized Male Development and Empowerment Center to groom and guide men through their higher education career and to prepare them for the workforce. Consequently, Medgar Evers has increased its enrollment of African American men by 13 percent.

Dr. Jackson has served and/or holds membership in a number of prominent civic, educational, and community organizations. He has also written on issues of concern to educators regarding minority students, including student retention and the role of spiritual leadership in higher education.

Dr. Jackson has been honored for his decades of service and achievements from scores of elected officials, educational institutions, and community organizations.

Madam Speaker, I would like to recognize Dr. Edison O. Jackson, a visionary leader and an inspiration to all of New York.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Dr. Edison O. Jackson.

CENTRAL DAVIDSON—THREE TIMES A CHAMPION

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. COBLE. Madam Speaker, a softball team at a high school in our congressional district proved this year that even when you lose your key player for a large part of the season, when the whole team pulls together, greatness can still be achieved. Despite losing 2008 News & Record All-Area Player of the Year Chelsea Leonard to a knee injury on November 25, 2008, the Central Davidson High School softball team came together and finished its 21-7 season with a championship title. "We've been through some tough times this year," Coach Gene Poindexter told The Dispatch. "Got knocked down a couple times. Got black eyes a couple of times. We just kept fighting, and we worked hard to get back in the playoffs; I can't say enough about all these freshmen, sophomores and juniors. They're a great bunch of kids who worked their tails off." On behalf of the citizens of the Sixth District of North Carolina, we wish to congratulate the Spartans for winning their third consecutive 2A state softball championship.

The Spartans defeated Richlands by a score of 1-0 on Saturday, June 6, 2009. Freshman extraordinaire Carley Tysinger ripped a 1-0 pitch into left for a single to drive in the biggest run of the season and the only run of the title game. And that one-run lead was all that was needed with senior Chelsea Leonard on the mound. Leonard returned in time for the postseason and was named tournament MVP. Leonard threw a one-hitter with 19 strikeouts against Richlands in the title game.

The championship season was a team effort led by seniors Kelsey Rountree and Chelsea Leonard, juniors Haley Hanes, Laura Fritts, Haley Thore, Nicole Perry, and Mindi Morris, sophomores Kara Lohr, Whitney Lohr, Jazmine Charles, Emma Comer, and Megan Yountz, and freshmen Charity McGath, Carley Tysinger, Allie Stovall, and Lauren Bryant.

Also assisting the team during this season were assistant coaches Jim Welborn, Bryan Starnes, Greg Leonard, Sterling Charles, Mike Pickett, Jordan Stogner, Jodi Duncan, the voice of the Spartans, announcer Stuart Joontz, scorekeeper Mitzi Tysinger and last but not least, manager Xavier "Sabby" Rosales.

Again, on behalf of the Sixth District, we would like to congratulate Principal Emily Lipe, Athletic Director and Head Coach Gene Poindexter, and everyone affiliated with the Spartans. Congratulations to Central Davidson on a spectacular season and for winning its third consecutive 2A state softball championship.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL J. WOOTTEN

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an exceptional man. On Wednesday, June 10th, the federal government and, in particular, the General Services Administration lost an exemplary public servant, a genuine and trusted friend, and a devoted husband and father. On that day Michael J. Wootten, lost his courageous battle with cancer. Mike was the epitome of a fine public servant. He was accurate, detailed, inquisitive, and thorough in his work. He left our federal government and federal workforce the richer for his service.

He began his legal career as a law clerk, serving the office of the 5th district solicitor, Richland County, South Carolina. When he arrived in Washington D.C., Mike served as Majority Staff Counsel to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate. As full Committee staff counsel, Mike was responsible for issues of Administrative Law and Procedures, Courts, and Juvenile Justice.

Mike then moved on to the Department of Justice, where he spent three years in the Civil Division as Assistant Director of the Office of Policy and Legislation and Special Assistant to the Assistant Attorney General. One of Mike's accomplishments as Special Counsel was assisting in the confirmation of Justice Anthony Kennedy to the U.S. Supreme Court. Before departing Justice to join GSA, Mike served briefly as the Acting General Counsel for the President's Commission on Privatization.

Upon his arrival at the General Services Administration, Mike quickly became the "go to" lawyer for advice and counsel on real property law and legislative matters involving the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. For almost 20 years Mike served in the Office of the General Counsel. In addition, he served as counsel to the Office of Congressional Affairs, the Public Buildings Service, the Office of Government-wide Policy, and the Office of the Chief Financial Officer. In 2009, Mike was appointed to the Senior Executive Service. His list of opinions was endless, and his advice was sought after and followed.

Mike was justifiably proud of his legal contributions to GSA. However, his pride in his legal career was always exceeded by his pride in his family, his loving wife Shereen and his two outstanding sons, Mitchell and Corey. As a parent and husband, he was immensely proud of their accomplishments, their community involvement, and their love for each other. Mike made and maintained legions of friendships. His friends, who will cherish his memory and joyful spirit, will join me today with honor and great sadness to pay tribute to Michael J. Wootten.

RECOGNIZING THE UNITED STATES BORDER PATROL'S 85TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GABRIELLE GIFFORDS

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Ms. GIFFORDS. Madam Speaker, I would like to recognize the brave men and women of the United States Border Patrol on the occasion of their agency's 85th anniversary.

The Border Patrol is the first line of defense for our nation. When it was established in the early part of the last century, its only posts were in Detroit, Michigan, and El Paso, Texas. The first agents were issued a badge and a revolver but they had to provide their own horses and saddles. Fortunately, the federal government paid for the feed.

Since its founding in 1924, the Border Patrol has grown and become a modern agency in every way. While some Border Patrol agents still ride horses, they all now use technology that their predecessors could not have imagined. Their tools and strategies have changed over time but their original mission remains the same. Each day they put on their uniforms and go out to protect and defend our borders.

Representing the 8th Congressional District in Southeastern Arizona, I have had the privilege of witnessing first-hand the Border Patrol's important work. It has been a highlight of my time in Congress to meet the men and women of the Tucson Sector of the Border Patrol who serve in one of the most challenging regions in our country. While the Tucson Sector represents only 13 percent of our border with Mexico, it accounts for close to 50 percent of the Border Patrol's apprehensions and drug seizures.

Under the exceptional leadership of Tucson Sector Chief Patrol Agent Robert Gilbert, great progress has been achieved in making our border more secure. Chief Gilbert has assembled an outstanding top management team including Deputy Chief Patrol Agent Robert Boatwright and Division Chiefs John Fitzpatrick and Jeanne Ray-Condon. In addition to implementing effective new strategies to deal with the high volume of drug and human smuggling, they have been responsive to my inquiries on behalf of constituents and they have reached out to establish partnerships with local residents, ranchers and business owners.

The daily work of the Border Patrol is conducted by a force of hard working agents who carry out their duty with honor and distinction in some of the most rugged territory in the nation. I am proud of the relationship we have established with the Executive Board of the National Border Patrol Council, Local 2544, which represents the agents who work in the Tucson Sector. The agents on the ground are capably represented by Edward Tuffly, Local 2544 President, and the members of his Executive Board, Richard Martinez, Arturo Del Cueto, David Hull and Kurt Kelley. They keep me apprised of the needs and concerns of their members so that I can better fight for the resources that they must have to safely and effectively do their jobs.

My 9,000-square mile district includes 114 miles of international border. The Border Patrol's Tucson Sector is ground zero for the trafficking of humans and drugs into our country. Each day, the agents stationed here confront extraordinary risks to keep us safe. They face armed smugglers, harsh desert terrain and weather extremes. Each day, they illustrate what it means to be dedicated to duty and to country. Border Patrol agents serve us with patriotism and commitment and, as a nation, we owe them a tremendous debt of gratitude.

On behalf of the people of Arizona's 8th Congressional District, I extend my deepest appreciation to the men and women of the Tucson Sector of the Border Patrol and to their colleagues who work all across our borders.

COMMEMORATING REAR ADMIRAL BENNETT S. "BUD" SPARKS, U.S.C.G.

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of Rear Admiral Bennett "Bud" Sparks, who passed away May 22 after a lifetime of service to our country in the Coast Guard. Admiral Sparks' dedication to our country and his devotion to his family and his community deserve the highest commendation.

Admiral Sparks was born on October 10, 1925, and enlisted in the Coast Guard Reserve in 1942. His service spanned the globe and he saw action in the Atlantic, Pacific and European theaters of operations while flying as a combat aircrewman on both antisubmarine and air-sea rescue missions. After the War, he transferred to the active Coast Guard, where he received a field promotion to ensign in 1957 after having served in all enlisted ranks through chief petty officer.

He later flew mapping missions over Alaska from 1946 to 1957 for the Coast Guard and as a civilian. In 1966 he took up his first of nine consecutive commands over 23 years. During this time, he served as commanding officer of four Coast Guard Units, three Coast Guard Groups and two U.S. Navy Maritime Defense Zone Sectors. He attained flag rank in 1985, and received his second star in 1987.

Throughout his career, Admiral Sparks received numerous decorations for his service. Among them are the Navy Distinguished Public Service medal, two Coast Guard Distinguished Public Service medals, the Legion of Merit, Meritorious Service medal, two Coast Guard commendation medals, the Coast Guard Achievement medal, the Arctic Service medal and, of course, his Coast Guard Combat Air Crew Wings.

Admiral Sparks was also a dedicated advocate for other reserve officers, fellow veterans and his community. He has served as both president of the Reserve Officer's Association of the United States—the first Coast Guard officer to hold this position—and as Chief of the U.S. Delegation to the Inter-Allied Confederation of Reserve Officers at NATO headquarters in Brussels, Belgium. He also chaired the California Veterans Board, where he worked tirelessly to ensure and enhance the rights and benefits of California Veterans, and was active on the board of the North Bay Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association of Northern California and Nevada.

However, perhaps the most enduring legacy of Admiral Sparks will be as the devoted husband of his wife Betty and as a loving father and grandfather. He is survived by four of his children; Bennett Jr., James, John and Julieann, his sister Doris, as well as his 11 grandchildren, 22 great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild.

Madam Speaker, it is fitting at this time that we honor the life, service and memory of Admiral Sparks. His dedication to his country, his family and community are a testament to a great man who will long be remembered by those who knew him. We are lucky to have had him as a neighbor, a friend and an inspiration.

SOUTHWESTERN RANDOLPH—
CLOSE TO PERFECTION

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. COBLE. Madam Speaker, perfection is difficult to achieve in life—and perhaps even more so in sports—so it is noteworthy when any team comes so close to that achievement. A high school softball team in our congressional district came within one win of a perfect season. Even with that one loss, the team captured a state championship. On behalf of the citizens of the Sixth District of North Carolina, we wish to congratulate the softball team of Southwestern Randolph High School for winning the North Carolina 3A state championship. This is the second 3A title in three years the Cougars have won.

The team was led by Head Coach Steve Taylor who was able to bring the team together and make them believe they were capable of anything. As a result, the Cougars finished the season with an impressive 30-1 record that was capped with a 5-2 win over Asheville T.C. Roberson High School on June 6, 2009.

The championship season was a team effort led by seniors Anna Maness, Holly Berry, and Brittany Jones, juniors Erin Billups, Olivia Hickman, Cheryl Coley, and Hanna Hughes, sophomores Cynthia Hayes, Julia Callicutt, Sydney Hyden, Kelsey Hoover, Victoria Hunt, and Sloan King, and freshmen Dee Chriscoe, Paige Parrish, Brooke Hayes, Kaylee King, and Hayleigh Clapp.

Also assisting the team during this outstanding 30-1 season were assistant coaches Bobby Berry, Robert Hayes, Wendal Seawell, and Angela Hoover.

Again, on behalf of the Sixth District, we would like to congratulate Principal Dr. Chris Vecchione, Athletic Director Randy Key, Head Coach Steve Taylor, and all who contributed to this outstanding season. Congratulations to Southwestern Randolph High School on a spectacular season and for winning the North Carolina 3A state championship.

A TRIBUTE IN REMEMBRANCE OF
DR. DANIEL C. UDOJI

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS-

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Dr. Daniel C. Udoji, a self-employed medical provider in Brooklyn.

Dr. Udoji was born in Egbu-Owerri, Eastern Nigeria to Chief Benjamin and Mrs. Dorothy Udoji and lived there until 1954. Dr. Udoji left Nigeria for London in 1957 for further education at University College Ibadan and graduated with a M.B./B.S. in 1964.

During the Nigerian-Biafra Civil War, from 1967 to 1970, Dr. Udoji provided medical and surgical services to refugees and displaced persons. After his commendable medical assistance during the Nigerian-Biafra Civil War, Dr. Udoji proceeded to the United Kingdom for postgraduate Medical Studies at Postgraduate Medical School in Scotland and University Hospital of Wales in Wales. After completion of his studies, Dr. Udoji travelled to the United States to complete his residency at V.A. Hospital and Downstate Medical Center and at Long Island Jewish Medical Center & Queens Hospital.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Dr. Daniel C. Udoji.

CONGRATULATING RALPH CROSBY FOR BEING NAMED BOSS OF THE YEAR

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. BONNER. Madam Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I rise today to honor Ralph Crosby for being named "Boss of the Year" for 2009 by the Top-Side Aviation Club. The "Boss of the Year" is one of the club's most prestigious honors, and Ralph is most deserving of this award in recognition of his tireless efforts on behalf of EADS North America. He is one of those rare, one-in-a-million type of individuals whom, I am fortunate to know and call my friend.

Throughout his entire life, Ralph's work ethic, his love of family, country, and God have all contributed to his success and to receiving this prestigious award.

A native of Greenville, South Carolina, Ralph was appointed to West Point by Senator Strom Thurmond. He graduated first in his class in engineering and was in the top 2 percent of his overall class. He went on to earn two Master's degrees, one from the acclaimed JFK School of Government at Harvard University, where he graduated with a perfect 4.0, and the other, where he achieved the highest academic mark ever recorded at the time from the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva.

After graduating from West Point, Ralph had a distinguished military career where he was selected as Officer of the Year of the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment and served tours in Germany, Vietnam and the United States. During his last military assignment, he served as the military staff assistant to Vice President Walter Mondale.

In 1981, Ralph resigned his commission as major in the U.S. Army and joined Northrop Grumman where he enjoyed a 21-year career and rapidly rose up the company ladder. He was among the youngest vice presidents ever appointed in the company's 60 year history, and he ran the B-2 program—arguably one of the most important assets in our nation's strategic arsenal.

On September 1, 2002, Ralph assumed leadership of EADS North America, one of the world's largest aerospace and defense companies. As chairman and chief executive officer, he has been directly responsible for the company's activities—and substantial growth—in the United States over the last seven years.

He established a significant aerospace presence in neighboring Mississippi where EADS North America produces the Light Utility Helicopter for the U.S. Army. All have been delivered on schedule and under budget. EADS has become a major employer across the United States supporting more than 190,000 jobs in 17 states and contributing over $9 billion to the U.S. economy annually.

Alabama—and certainly the city of Mobile—has developed a close relationship with Ralph and EADS over the past several years. Under Ralph's leadership, EADS selected Brookley Air Field in Mobile as the home for its U.S. production facility for the next-generation aerial refueling tanker. EADS also partnered with Northrop Grumman to launch a joint bid to provide America's warfighters with the very best equipment, technology, and training to do their jobs and complete their missions.

In recognition of his impressive career and many accomplishments, Ralph was Aviation Week and Space Technology magazine's runner-up for Person of the Year last year.

Madam Speaker, I would like to offer my personal congratulations to Ralph Crosby for being named the Boss of the Year for 2009 and, in so doing, recognize him for his many outstanding accomplishments.

I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating a dedicated professional and friend. I know his family—his wife, Mary Grace; their children, Ralph and Laura Grace; and their beautiful grandchildren—as well as his many friends and colleagues join me in praising his accomplishments and extending thanks for his many efforts over the years.

HON. PHIL GINGREY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

HIGH POTENCY MARIJUANA SENSITIZING ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2009

HON. MARK STEVEN KIRK

OF ILLINOIS

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. KIRK. Madam Speaker, popular culture often romanticizes casual marijuana use, and those who warn that marijuana is a "gateway drug" that can lead to use of other, harder drugs are ridiculed as being out of the mainstream. The reality is that marijuana today is vastly different than the marijuana that was prevalent in the '60s. According to the National Drug Intelligence Center, the average THC content of seized marijuana was less than 4 percent in the early 1990s. By 2007 that level rose to nearly 10 percent.

Local police in my district are now reporting a new threat from "Kush," street slang for a strain of highly potent marijuana with a THC content of at least 20 percent. The rise of Kush mirrors the increasing trend of high-THC marijuana, which has become more accessible with the rise of hydroponics. Drug growers are able to strictly control light, temperature and humidity and can cross-breed to maximize THC content. According to the Drug Enforcement Administration, Kush has been known to sell for as high as $600 per ounce—creating the same profit potential as crack cocaine.

Today I am introducing legislation to bring federal penalties for trafficking high-potency marijuana in line with penalties for cocaine, heroin, and hashish, all of which have similar retail prices on the street. The gangs and cartels trafficking Kush are the same trafficking cocaine and heroin, and the profits they realize represent an equal danger to the public. In my view, the penalties for trafficking this dangerous drug should also be equalized.

IN HONOR OF ELLEN PSENICKA

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I rise today in honor and recognition of Ellen Psenicka, whose forty-year tenure as reporter, editor and publisher of the award-winning Neighborhood News, continues to enlighten, entertain and unite Cleveland's southeast community every Wednesday, highlighting current events along our city streets—from the neighborhoods of Slavic Village, to the streets of Garfield Heights, to the steps of Cleveland City Hall.

Ellen grew up in Sandusky, Ohio and went on to attend Ohio University, where she earned a Bachelor's degree in Journalism. Shortly following graduation, in June, 1969, Ellen was hired as a reporter by Jim Psenicka, publisher of the Neighborhood News. A few years later, Jim and Ellen were married, and they worked in dedication to each other, to the newspaper and to the community until Jim's passing in 2001. At that time, Ellen accepted the torch of leadership passed to her by Jim, and she continues to carry on his legacy of excellence in journalism, and his commitment to the Greater Cleveland Community.

Ellen's spirit of volunteerism and focus on the betterment of the community is evident throughout Southeast Cleveland and its suburbs. Her kind and humble nature draws people to her, and she has garnered the admiration and respect of everyone she knows. She is a longtime member of the Garfield Heights Historical Society and serves as a board member for Cleveland Central Catholic High School. She is currently serving her second term as President of the Kiwanis of Southeast Cleveland. As a member and leader in Kiwanis, Ellen has been instrumental in leading several fundraising efforts aimed at local student scholarship awards, and recently, a fundraiser and recognition dinner honoring Dr. Javier Lopez which raised greatly-needed funds for his medical missions to Central America. Ellen has always reached out with a generous heart wherever and whenever needed. Her efforts in volunteerism also include her tireless dedication in her efforts to save St. Michael's hospital.

Madam Speaker and colleagues, please join me in honor and recognition of Ellen Psenicka, as she celebrates her 40th Anniversary with the Neighborhood News. The Neighborhood News is read by tens of thousands of people weekly, and continues to inform and unite us all. Ellen's commitment to bringing us the news of the neighborhood and her generosity as a community leader and volunteer serves to brighten and strengthen our entire community.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF ANTHONY APPELWHITE

HON. GERALD E. CONNOLLY

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Anthony Applewhite of Boy Scout Troop 1577 on being promoted to the rank of Eagle Scout. Fewer than 2% of all scouts have mastered the skills necessary to achieve this honor. Anthony's achievement of this rank is even more extraordinary because, at the age of just 13, he is one of the youngest Eagle Scouts ever in the 100 year history of Boy Scouts of America.

For his Eagle Scout Service Project, Anthony designed, planned and managed the construction of a picnic area at The Kings Chapel in Clifton, Va. This picnic area was completed efficiently and now is enjoyed by community members as well as the children who attend the The Kings Chapel pre-school. This is just a recent example of Anthony's scouting achievements. Anthony also was recognized for his leadership and service in his Boy Scout Troop with membership in the Order of the Arrow, the National Honor Society of Scouting.

In addition to his success within the Boy Scouts, Anthony is an Honor Roll Student at Rocky Run Middle School. He excels in science, math and technology and would like to attend the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Anthony plans a dual career of game designer and neurosurgeon where he can utilize many of his impressive abilities. Anthony's scholastic abilities were highlighted when he captained his Odyssey of the Mind teams for the creative problem solving competitions. He also enjoys travel soccer as well as the violin.

Anthony has set many short- and long-term goals for himself ranging from continuing his involvement in the Scouts where he hopes to be selected to attend the 2010 National Jamboree and the 2012 World Jamboree to a career in the medical and technological fields.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Anthony on being one of the youngest Eagle Scouts in scouting history and in wishing him the very best in what promises to be a very bright future. I would also like to ask my colleagues to join me in expressing our thanks to Anthony's family, friends and troop leaders for the support that they have given Anthony which has allowed and encouraged his development as a fine young citizen.

BIPARTISAN CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION TO NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSEMBLY MEETINGS

HON. JOHN S. TANNER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. TANNER. Madam Speaker, during the period May 22–31, 2009, I led a bipartisan House delegation to NATO Parliamentary Assembly (NATO PA) meetings in Oslo, Norway and to additional bi-lateral meetings in Helsinki, Finland and Stockholm, Sweden. The co-chair of the NATO PA delegation is the Hon. JOHN SHIMKUS. The delegation also included Representatives JO ANN EMERSON, DENNIS MOORE, JOHN BOOZMAN, MIKE ROSS, DAVID SCOTT, KENDRICK MEEK, JEFF MILLER, BEN CHANDLER, MIKE TURNER and staff. The NATO PA delegation had a highly successful trip in which a wide range of political, economic and security issues on NATO's agenda, as well as issues involving the U.S.–Finland and U.S.–Sweden bi-lateral relationships, were examined. Accompanying the delegation on the visits to Finland and Sweden was Mr. David Hobbs, Secretary General of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, who provided invaluable assistance with respect to Finland and Sweden's participation in the NATO PA and issues related to their cooperation with NATO in numerous Alliance operations.

The NATO Parliamentary Assembly consists of parliamentarians from all 28 NATO member states. The NATO PA provides a unique forum for elected officials to analyze and debate issues that the NATO leadership discusses in Brussels. In addition to the 28 member parliaments, parliamentarians from countries such as Russia, Georgia, Afghanistan, and others also participate in the sessions as associate states or observers. Through these sessions, delegates have the opportunity to learn firsthand the views and concerns that other countries have over the key security issues of the day. An invaluable aspect of the meetings is the chance to meet and come to know members of parliaments who play important roles in their own countries in shaping the security agenda that their governments pursue at NATO. These contacts can endure through a career, and can provide an invaluable private avenue for insights into each ally's particular views on an issue.

In early April, NATO celebrated its 60th anniversary at a summit in Strasbourg, France and Kehl, Germany. The key issues on the agenda of the Alliance included the broader issue of the future of NATO and more specific issues including relations with Russia, energy security, missile defense, the conflict in Afghanistan, and emerging challenges such as piracy and cyber security. Each of these issues was also on the NATO PA agenda in Oslo and many were vigorously debated by the parliamentarians. Relations with Russia and the new strategy towards Afghanistan and Pakistan were two of the issues that dominated the session. Many members of the Alliance questioned whether Russia has begun to implement an increasingly assertive security policy including efforts to intimidate neighboring states, through the threat of force. There was also concern expressed that Russia would continue to use its energy supplies as a political lever to influence European policy. It was clear from our meetings that not only the United States and NATO, but the European Union as well, are concerned about Moscow's posture on a variety of issues. And, while there were differences of opinion over how to structure future relations between NATO and Russia and the NATO PA and the Russian delegates to the Assembly, most felt that dialogue between NATO, the NATO PA, and Russia was important and should continue. Many delegates welcomed the U.S. commitment to a new, constructive relationship with Moscow and expressed hope that through those promising relations, Russia's attitude toward NATO could become more positive. On Afghanistan, there was continued support for the ISAF mission among the allies and a willingness to provide the additional civilian and financial support necessary for the reconstruction effort there. However, we did detect an undercurrent of concern among some allies that through the commitment of 21,000 additional U.S. troops to Afghanistan and the replacement of U.S./ISAF Commander, General McKiernan, the process of the "Americanization" of the war was underway and that NATO could be pushed aside by the United States. Our delegation was clear that this is not the case and that NATO's role in Afghanistan continues to be a critical one that needs to be carried out in an effective and efficient manner.

Before the opening sessions of the Assembly's plenary the U.S. delegation received a detailed briefing from the new U.S. Ambassador to NATO, Ivo Daalder, who had been in his new role for four days. He prepared us for the nuances involved in some of the issues that would be debated during the NATO PA sessions, particularly regarding Russia and NATO's on-going role in Afghanistan. In addition to the briefing by Ambassador Daalder, we also had the opportunity to meet with the new Deputy Chief of Mission to NATO, Mr.

John Heffern who represented the United States at the joint NATO PA/North Atlantic Council (NAC) session at the conclusion of the plenary. Another highlight was a private meeting our delegation held with NATO Secretary General Jaap de Hoop Scheffer who was attending his last NATO Parliamentary Assembly session as Secretary General. He gave an overview of the most critical challenges confronting the alliance and thanked the U.S. delegation for its continued support for NATO. Later he addressed the NATO PA's plenary session. The Foreign Minister of Norway, Jens Stoltenberg also addressed the plenary and spoke about the continued importance of the Alliance and the need for a clear direction for NATO's future. The Assembly also received a mixed report on current conditions in Afghanistan from Mr. Kai Eide, the head of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan. Mr. Eide stressed the need for a sustained commitment of assistance from the international community. We also heard comments from the Speakers of the Albanian and Croatian Parliaments on their nation's status as the newest members of the Alliance.

Over two days of the NATO PA session, intense meetings of the Assembly's committees took place. There are five NATO PA committees. In each, parliamentarians presented reports on issues before the Alliance. The reports were debated by all members of the committee who often made counter-arguments or suggestions for amending a report. Members of the U.S. delegation were present and active in each committee meeting.

The Political Committee heard two very interesting presentations. One on the future relevancy of NATO by Jonas Gahr Store, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Norway. A second presentation on Iran generated some interesting questions and debate. The Committee received presentations on three reports, one from our colleague, MIKE ROSS who was a rapporteur for a report on possible transatlantic cooperation on Pakistan. Mr. ROSS's presentation was well received by the Committee. Other reports debated included "Resetting Relations with Russia" that featured several interesting comments from the Russian delegates, and "NATO's relationship with Georgia" that included a discussion on the recent Russia-Georgia conflict. There were still differences of opinion on who actually was responsible for starting the war in Georgia and how to deal with Georgia's aspirations for eventual membership in NATO.

The Committee on the Civil Dimension of Security is currently chaired by our colleague, JO ANN EMERSON. The Committee heard three interesting presentations. One covered civil-military relations in Afghanistan and another attempted to discuss how NATO could best communicate the importance of the Alliance and its missions to the general populations of the alliance members. There was also a very interesting presentation on the food-security nexus by Josette Sheeran, Executive Director of the United Nations World Food Program. The Committee then debated a report on the growing threat of piracy to regional and global security. Our colleague, DAVID SCOTT, who had recently visited Somalia, offered several comments on the relationship between the unstable political and economic situation in Somalia and the growing use of Somalia as a base for pirate activity. A report on the current political situation in Moldova was also presented.

The Defense and Security Committee heard two reports on NATO's ongoing operations in Afghanistan, including a report by NATO's senior civilian representative in Afghanistan, Ambassador Fernando Gentilini. The Committee also received a report on the need for NATO to reinforce its mission of territorial defense. Our colleague JOHN SHIMKUS countered the idea that Afghanistan was becoming an "American" war by pointing out that the United States' new Afghanistan/Pakistan strategy, which does include additional U.S. military forces, was developed in part with European input.

The Economics and Security Committee debated three reports, including one on food prices and their implications for security and another on energy production in Central Asia and its potential contribution to transatlantic energy security. The Committee also had a long discussion on a third report that addressed the global financial crisis and its impact on member nations. In that discussion, a number of members suggested that it would be useful to explore how the financial crisis was impinging on national defense budgets in allied countries. The Committee also heard presentations on the security aspects of food-related crises, global energy market trends, and managing defense budgets in times of global recession.

Finally, the Science and Technology Committee heard three reports, including one particularly interesting report on climate change and its relationship to national security. Another addressed the current efforts being used to combat the spread of weapons of mass destruction. A third report provided a look at the resurgence of nuclear power as a source of clean energy.

On Tuesday, the final day of the plenary, the general assembly had the extraordinary opportunity to hear a presentation from the NATO Secretary General in his last address to the Assembly and to participate in a formal meeting with the North Atlantic Council (NAC) in which the Ambassadors to NATO of all 28 Alliance members answered questions from the delegates.

Madam Speaker, as you know, the NATO PA Plenary session also happened to be held over our own Memorial Day. For the members of the U.S. delegation, the highlight of our visit to Oslo was the opportunity to honor the men and women of our armed forces who made the ultimate sacrifice on behalf of their country. As it happened, a U.S. Navy warship was able to make a port call in Oslo that served as the venue for a Memorial Day observance. For that, I wish to thank Admiral Charles Leidig, Commander Ed Recavarren, Assistant U.S. Naval Attache in Oslo, the ship's Captain, Michael Feyedelem and the entire ship's crew for welcoming us aboard for the memorial service. I also wish to thank U.S. Ambassador to Norway, Benson Whitney, for hosting the reception for our delegation, the ship's crew, the Mayor of Oslo, and other dignitaries to share this special moment with us. The members of our delegation were also able to visit with sailors and marines whose stateside homes included many of the states represented by Members of our delegation.

In sum, Madam Speaker, the spring session of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly in Oslo was a success and as President of the Assembly, I took pride in the deliberations and participation of the delegates from all 28 member nations and our associate and observer members. For Members of the House or Senate interested in reading the Committee reports or presentations mentioned in this statement, they are all available on the NPA web site at www.nato-pa.int. I also want to take this opportunity to again thank U.S. Ambassador Whitney, our control officer, Auden McKernan, and all of the fine men and women of our embassy in Oslo for the wonderful job they did assisting the delegation.

Following the NATO PA plenary, the U.S. delegation traveled to Bergen, Norway. Norway was celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Norwegian submarine fleet and a U.S. submarine had visited Bergen as part of that celebration. The U.S. delegation was given a tour of the submarine and an informal briefing on the cooperation between the Norwegian and U.S. navies. The delegation would like to thank Commander Ed Recavarren, Scott Sommers, our Bergen control officer and U.S. Defense Attache in Oslo, Captain Russell Smith, for their assistance in making this visit a successful one.

After departing Norway, the delegation flew to Helsinki, Finland for bi-lateral meetings with government and parliamentary representatives. On Wednesday, after a country team briefing given by our Charge in Helsinki, Thaddeus Plosser, our Control Officer, Scott Brandon and other staff, we were hosted for a roundtable discussion by the Chairmen of the Committees of Foreign Affairs and Defense. Other committee members participated, including Johannes Koskinen, the Deputy Speaker of the Finnish Parliament and head of Finland's delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly. The discussions covered a number of issues including Finland's carefully managed relationship with Russia. Finland and Russia share an 800 mile border, fought two wars, and experience close to 8 million border crossings each year. Russia is Finland's largest trading partner and primary energy supplier, including 100% of Finland's natural gas supplies. The Finns seem surprisingly at ease with their "complex and unpredictable" neighbor and do not see a "Georgia-type" threat from Russia.

The Finns pursue their security interests through the EU, Nordic defense cooperation with Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, and through close cooperation with NATO. While there is growing support among some in the government for possible future NATO membership, the majority of the general public is not yet in favor of such a decision. Finland has been active in Afghanistan (currently 100 troops, soon to reach 200), and participates in the Swedish-led Provincial Reconstruction Team (PRT) in northern Afghanistan. Other issues discussed included the current global economic and financial crisis which has hit Finland, climate change, and cooperation on issues involving the "high north" and the arc-ing the Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA), the principle policy advisor to the Prime Minister, the Deputy Director of the Political Department in the MFA, the head of the office for North American affairs at the MFA, and the Deputy Director at the Ministry of Defense. Again, a wide range of issues including Russia, NATO, and the economy were discussed.

On May 28, our delegation traveled to Stockholm, Sweden for bi-lateral meetings. The visit to Sweden was also important as the Swedes will take over the rotating presidency of the European Union on July 1, 2009. We were met by U.S. Charge, Robert Silverman and control officer, Jonas Wechsler who briefed the delegation on relations between Sweden and the United States. That evening we were warmly welcomed at a reception at the Ambassador's residence that included guests from the government of Sweden, the Parliament, and others. Lively discussions followed on the new U.S. administration and its views on transatlantic relations, the differences between the European and U.S. views of the world, the future role of NATO, relations with Russia, and the conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The next day, the delegation met with Sten Tolgfors, the Minister of Defense for Sweden. The Minister briefed us on Sweden's global outlook, their participation with NATO in the Balkans and Afghanistan (they have 290 troops and lead a PRT in the north), Russia, and the reforms they have instituted within the defense establishment, including the decision to pursue an all-volunteer professional military (they, like the Finns, have a conscript military). Sweden, like Finland, does entertain the possibility of future NATO membership but the Minister told the delegation that currently the parliament is split on the idea and so it is not on the government's current agenda. The delegation then proceeded to a working lunch hosted by Ms. Karin Enstrom, head of the Swedish delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Assembly and attended by other parliamentarians. The discussion was lively and covered the entire spectrum of U.S.-Swedish relations. Following lunch, the delegation met with State Secretary Frank Belfrage from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Discussions centered on Russia, Afghanistan, and Sweden's upcoming presidency of the European Union. One of Sweden's priorities will be climate change and preparing the EU's positions for the Copenhagen Conference on climate change that will be held in December. The Secretary expressed his hope that the United States and EU will work closely together on this issue and to help forge a consensus on the follow-on efforts to the Kyoto Climate agreement.

Madam Speaker, the NATO Parliamentary Assembly provides a unique opportunity for Members of Congress to engage in serious discussions on critical issues with our colleagues from other NATO member states, associate and observer states. I believe our delegation, and thus this Congress, benefits greatly from the information we exchange and the personalities we meet during these meetings. I look forward to our next NATO PA session in November in Edinburgh, Scotland.

In conclusion, I would like to again acknowledge the hard work and dedication of our Embassy staffs in Oslo, Helsinki, and Stockholm, and the men and women of the U.S. Navy vessels we visited while in Norway. I especially want to thank our entire military escort group from the United States Air Force, including the pilots. Our diplomatic corps and military personnel provide a quiet but invaluable service in ensuring our safety and this group of diplomats, servicemen and women was no exception. I thank them for their hard work and their dedication to duty.

HONORING SISTER FRANCINE
LAGOCKI, PRINCIPAL OF SAINT
RICHARD SCHOOL

HON. DANIEL LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. LIPINSKI. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Sister Francine Lagocki, Principal of Saint Richard School in recognition of her career of devoted service. Sister Lagocki's retirement at the end of the 2009 school year will mark the end of nearly seven decades of selfless service to our nation's youth. Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Sister Lagocki's outstanding commitment to educational excellence. Sister Lagocki embodies the positive influence that teachers and school administrators can be on students every day across this great country.

In Sister Lagocki's accomplished career as an educator, she served as a classroom teacher in three parish schools before becoming assistant principal at Good Council High School. Sister Lagocki then served as principal of St. Mary School and St. Roman School in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, before returning to Illinois to serve as Principal for St. Wenceslas in Chicago, and then finally St. Richard School on the Southwest Side.

St. Richard School is a Catholic school that serves the parish community and is both an expression of and a witness to the faith of its people. Believing that a child's development best occurs within the framework of a positive and structured environment, St. Richard School offers innovative and high quality educational programs. The aim of these programs is to challenge each student while teaching basic skills, within a Christian atmosphere where mutual respect, order, and values are high priorities.

It is my honor to recognize Sister Francine Lagocki, who served as an example of one of the best in K-8 school leadership and helped foster a greater understanding of the principal's key role in meeting the challenging responsibility of educating children.

ENERGY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Ms. LEE of California. Madam Speaker, I would first like to thank Rep. ELLISON for holding this special order tonight as Congress works to break away from business-as-usual with regards to our nation's energy future.

I would also like to thank the Chairs of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, Representatives WOOLSEY and GRIJALVA, for your leadership and your tireless efforts to promote proper stewardship of our communities by protecting the environment.

It is so important that we continue to call for action on these issues surrounding global warming and the continued degradation of our environment that is perpetuated by our dependence on fossil fuels.

As I have said time and time again—there is no denying the interconnection between our stewardship of the environment and the state of the economy, public health, and our communities.

The drastic acceleration of greenhouse gas emissions has often been concentrated in low-income and minority communities, putting these vulnerable populations on the "front lines" of the fight against environmental degradation and global climate change.

Simply put, climate change has, and will continue to exacerbate the problem of poverty and inequality, and none of us can afford to take this lightly.

The health of our community and our neighbors affects all of us.

Let me take a moment to reflect upon the urgent need to finally put a price on carbon emissions and make polluters pay for the pollution they produce.

As a member of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, I look forward to working with my colleagues here in Congress to pass responsible and comprehensive climate legislation that will establish a price for carbon emissions and spur the development of clean, renewable energy and the deployment of much-needed energy efficient technologies.

Legislation which sets us on the path toward energy independence and a new, low-carbon economy will help to maintain the United States position as a leader in innovation while at the same time creating hundreds of thousands of good paying green jobs.

The biggest misconception out there today regarding our environment is that the public isn't engaged, or willing to transition to a sustainable, environmentally-friendly economy.

In reality, the shift to a low-carbon economy represents an economic opportunity for individuals across this country.

One of the most exciting and inclusive solutions to the many issues facing environmental health is the possibility afforded to us by promoting Green Jobs Training and the growth of the Green Economy in America.

To that end, I have reintroduced legislation entitled the Metro Economies Green Act, or MEGA, H.R. 330, which establishes grant programs to encourage energy-efficient economic development and green job training and creation.

This legislation would also create a national institute to serve as a clearinghouse for best practices information in order to facilitate the successful expansion of the green jobs movement on a national scale.

As the Representative of California's 9th Congressional District, I would also like to take a moment to recognize the role that California's East Bay is playing at the forefront of the Green Jobs and Green Industry movement.

We have a number of innovative initiatives in my district in particular, including the East Bay Green Corridor Initiative, the Oakland Green Jobs Corps, the Joint Bio Energy Institute, the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, and the Energy Biosciences Institute at Berkeley.

I recently visited the site of the Oakland Green Jobs Corps with Special Advisor to President Obama on Energy and Climate Change, Carol Browner, in order to show her a truly groundbreaking example of green-collar workforce development already up and running in Oakland, CA.

The Oakland Green Job Corps is a partnership of community organizations, trade unions, private companies, and the City of Oakland. It provides Oakland residents with the necessary training, support, and work experience to independently pursue careers in the new energy economy.

The fact is, "Green" has already become the fifth largest industry in the nation—80 percent of venture capital investments in 2008 were in the clean energy and energy efficiency sector.

Between 1998 and 2007, job growth in the clean-energy economy outperformed total job growth in 38 states and the District of Columbia, and we are just beginning to tap into our nation's clean energy potential.

Passing comprehensive clean energy and climate legislation, especially one which includes a robust Renewable Energy Standard, is essential to delivering cleaner energy and good-paying jobs to communities across the nation.

A strong Renewable Energy Standard will spur innovation and the expansion of economic opportunities surrounding the green movement.

The current draft of the American Clean Energy and Security Act sets America on a path to meet 20 percent of our electricity demand through renewable energy sources and energy efficiency by 2020.

This is an important start, but I am also confident we can do more.

It is the time to think big, not small, and I urge my colleagues to consider strengthening this standard so that we might take full advantage of the enormous renewable energy potential across this country.

This is only one of many important priorities we must address in order to ensure no communities are left behind in the transition to a low-carbon economy.

There is no doubt in my mind that a greener future will lead to a more prosperous future for our communities, the Nation, and the world.

I urge my colleagues to act swiftly to move America beyond its dependency on oil, address the climate crisis, and help protect America's natural resources for our children's future.

RECOGNIZING MORGAN ARANDA

HON. MIKE QUIGLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. QUIGLEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Morgan Aranda, a student of Newberry Academy in Chicago. She has come to Washington, D.C. this week to compete in the 2009 National History Day Contest at the University of Maryland.

National History Day was started in 1974 with the intent of improving the historical literacy and research skills of junior high and high school aged children. Despite its name, National History Day has a variety of programs year-round, including its week-long national contest in which Morgan is a chosen participant. With the guidance and support of countless parents, teachers and friends, 500,000 students are able to participate in National History Day events annually. As Morgan and her fellow young historians would likely agree, the National History Day's motto, "it's not just a day, it's an experience," rings true.

Morgan has been selected to represent Illinois for her junior individual performance entitled "Alexander Polikoff and the Fight for Fair Housing." Her work is the culmination of many hours of research and multiple public performances. Morgan's dedication, discipline and talent are undeniable.

I'm honored to recognize Morgan and her achievements as a young historian. What she has accomplished already in her life are the beginnings of a bright and successful future and I wish her the best of luck at the competition and onward.

HONORING FRED CORUM

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. DUNCAN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor a gentleman who has left an impact on every county in Congressional District and touched the lives of everyone in East Tennessee, whether they may know it or not.

Fred Corum exemplifies the concept of government and community service. As the Director of the Tennessee Department of Transportation's Region One, Fred has devoted a long career to the safety and quality-of-life of east Tennesseans.

Fred is celebrating his much earned retirement today with a gift back to the people he served: the completion of SmartFix40. This project is the most expensive in state history, reconfiguring Interstate 40 as it crosses through downtown Knoxville. SmartFix40 is not a venture he took lightly.

This massive project required the closure of Interstate 40—a main east to west coast corridor—for fourteen months. The night before the closure, Fred says he could not sleep, and there were plenty more sleepless nights to come. We can only hope that all government servants devote such care and commitment to their work.

Every project Fred has overseen is a true testament to his character, and there was no one more qualified than him to lead the SmartFix40 project. Fred has been on the job with the Tennessee Department of Transportation since 1954, a career that has spanned 53 years and 10 Governors.

As an entry-level worker in 1954, Fred planted stakes in the ground to mark the route of future roads for $150 a month. Eventually, he was promoted to maintenance supervisor for a large portion of my Congressional District, back in a time when there was a lot more snow to deal with. As his career spanned the 1980s, Fred witnessed the advent of the age of conservation, navigating water pollution issues, wildlife preservation, and erosion.

Governor Lamar Alexander appointed Fred the Director of Region One in 1985, and although he thought his job would be up at the end of the Governor's term, he was kept in the position through three more administrations.

Today, decades after he drove his first stake into the ground, Fred is on hand for the reopening of Interstate 40 and the completion of SmartFix40. He goes out at the top of his game, leaving for all East Tennesseans a reconfigured, aesthetically pleasing, and modern stretch of highway.

Fred's ascent through the ranks of the Tennessee Department of Transportation to Director of Region One is an example to all who enter government service. His wife, Loretta, their two sons, four grandchildren, and great-grandson have reason to be very proud.

Madam Speaker, in closing, I would like to call the remarkable service of Fred Corum to the attention of my colleagues and other readers of the RECORD, and wish Fred a very happy retirement.

Mr. LUETKEMEYER. Madam Speaker, I would like to state for the record my position on the following vote I missed due to being delayed at a committee hearing.

TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF LADISLAO "TANNY" BACA

HON. JOE BACA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. BACA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to ask Congress to pay special tribute to the life of a loving husband and grandfather, my brother, Ladislao "Tanny" Baca, of Barstow, CA. Tanny passed away June 6, 2009, at the age of 69 after complications with a brave life-long battle with diabetes.

Born in Las Nuetras, New Mexico January 8, 1940, Tanny made an impressionable impact on all he came in contact with. Tanny was widely admired by family, friends and colleagues. He was hard-working, dedicated, committed, disciplined, loving, supporting. Even though his bark was worse than his bite, he was a kind and loving brother, husband, father and grandfather.

For 16 years he worked as a Switch Man and Local Engineer for the Santa Fe Railroad in Barstow, CA. He worked and retired after 19 years as a Local Engineer at the Marine Base in Yermo, CA. Tanny also honorably served 16 years with the National Guard.

He is remembered by most as a generous man who always had time to share with others. His giving spirit will be missed by his community. He loved his brothers and sisters especially Florenio, Morris, Raymond, Lupe and Theresa. He enjoyed spending time loving us all. He was everything you would want in a brother, son, husband, and grandfather. Tanny enjoyed spending time in his garage. He and his brothers, Florenio and Morris would love to hang out and just enjoy their time there. Tanny also spent time in his garage helping teenagers, seniors and others with limited resources work on their cars. He was less worried about being paid and always happy to help those in need. He was that kind of man. Even though he was Lupe Napier's little brother, he would help take care of her. He was always willing to give her a hand with her car, and moving whatever she needed, he was always there to help her.

On behalf of my brother I would like to share a message from him to his children, Toby, Nick, and Liz. "Even though we were separated, in my heart I never stopped loving and caring for you." To all his children, he loved you all very much.

I would also like to share a few memories from his wife and several of his children.

The thing I remember most is when we went to Las Vegas to get married and the judge said, "Do you take this man Ladislao Baca as your husband?" and I said, "What?" because I only knew him as Tanny. Later we all laughed about it because we thought it was funny and the judge thought that she wants to marry this man and she does not even know his name. Edwina Baca, Wife.

Dad no matter what, you were always there for us, through good and bad times, we always will respect and love you, and you will be in our hearts forever. Liz Pullen, Toby and Nick Connolly, Daughter and Sons.

My dad was a caring and loving man. He never let anyone be without what they needed and his garage was always open for anyone. He and his friends would sit out there for hours talking. He will surely be missed. Angel Baca, Daughter.

Dad, you are the best and you will always be in my heart. You were always there for me. You touched many lives. I will always remember when you were by my side when I really needed you. Eloisa Madero, Daughter.

Memories I have of my dad growing up are going to work with him everyday as a child and riding the trains with him. Another good memory was all the bar-be-que we had and how he always had enough food to feed all the family and the whole neighborhood and still had plenty of leftovers. Lisa Baca, Daughter.

The things I remember most about my dad is when he took me hunting and he lost me and he did not want me to tell my mom because then I would never be able to go with Dad again. I also remember the time I dug a hole on the side of the house and filled it with water and was playing in the mud. Oh man, did I ever get in trouble. Tim Baca, Son.

I remember most about my dad is when my mom went out of town and dad tried to cook us spaghetti and he just threw everything in a pot all together and said it was just like our mom's and it tasted nothing like how mom made it. Penny Gray, Daughter.

He will be remembered by his grandchildren as someone who was always able to bring a smile to their face and share a lot of love and time with them.

He was an active outdoorsman who enjoyed fishing and hunting various game; including deer, antelope, and bear. When he wasn't enjoying the great outdoors he could be found enjoying Spanish music and dining at his favorite restaurant, "Del Taco".

He also loved to get his family together through his cooking. Barbequing was his way of having family reunions to enjoy barbequed cow and pig. He enjoyed bringing us together; he was always about family.

Tanny was a devoted Catholic and attended St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Barstow with his wife Edwina.

From Las Nuetras, New Mexico to Barstow, California, Tanny's life was dedicated to family, friends, and his community. His memory lives on in our thoughts and prayers. We say "goodbye. God bless you, we love you, and we will miss you".

Tanny is survived by his wife, Edwina Baca; his children, Angel Baca, Eloisa Madero, Penny Gray, Tim Baca, Lisa Baca, Nick Connolly, Toby Connolly, and Liz Pullen; brothers and sisters, Florenio Baca, Lupe Napier, Morris Baca, Raymond Baca, Joe Baca and Theresa Perea; his grandchildren and by a large extended family who share in the loss.

The thoughts and prayers of my wife Barbara and children, Councilman Joe Baca, Jr., Jeremy, Natalie and Jennifer and I are with the family at this time.

CELEBRATING THE 234TH
ANNIVERSARY OF THE U.S. ARMY

HON. GERALD E. CONNOLLY

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. Madam Speaker, I rise today to call attention to an upcoming anniversary that is significant to our national security and history. This Sunday, June 14th, members of the Active Duty Army, Army Reserve, and Army National Guard will celebrate the United States Army's 234th birthday.

The celebrations began this morning with the annual Department of the Army cake-cutting ceremony at the Pentagon. There is also an Army Birthday Ball and events for children, such as book readings. Celebrations like this will take place at garrisons and communities around the world.

One of these communities is Virginia's Fort Belvoir, where the Army is building a National Museum of the United States Army supported by the Army Historical Foundation. For too long the United States Army has been our only service that does not have a comprehensive place where its proud heritage can be shared with the American public. The National Museum of the United States Army will serve this purpose.

More than 30 million men and women, including many members of Congress, have served in the oldest and largest of our armed forces. Since the founding of the Continental Army of the United States in 1775, the selfless service and personal sacrifices of our Soldiers has been woven into the fabric and culture of this great country. I encourage my colleagues to take June 14th, 2009—the occasion of the Army's 234th birthday, to let our Soldiers know that they have our thanks and our appreciation and that a great Army deserves a great National Museum.

IN HONOR OF THE LIFE'S WORK OF CHUCK MACK

HON. JACKIE SPEIER-

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Ms. SPEIER. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the outstanding contributions of retiring Teamsters Union Western Region Vice President Chuck Mack.

Mr. Mack began his work with the Teamsters in 1962, loading and driving trucks in Oakland, California. Just a few years later, he was elected business agent of Teamsters Local 70 and was re-elected with the largest number of votes in the Local's history. So began his 43-year career of dedicated service as one of the top leaders in the international Teamsters Union. Mr. Mack was elected Secretary-Treasurer of Local 70 in 1972, President of Joint Council 7 in 1982 and, finally, Western Region Vice President in 1998—all positions he held until his retirement this year.

As the Western Region Vice President, Chuck was a champion for millions of American workers, even as he maintained a personal commitment to local laborers and the unions who represent them in my District and in California. Following his retirement, he will continue his commitment to the Teamsters, taking up leadership of the Western Conference Teamster Pension Trust.

Madam Speaker, I have known and worked with Chuck Mack for as long as I have been in public service and I know that he is much more than just a union leader. In addition to his tireless fight for the welfare of workers, Chuck maintained a fierce commitment to environmental and economic justice. An early booster of the Los Angeles Clean Trucks Program, Mr. Mack led the fight for sustainable and accountable transportation, keeping our communities safe and healthy for generations to come.

But no leader, however capable, acts alone. Chuck's family, including his wonderful wife Marlene, his four daughters—Tammy, Kelly, Kerry and Shannon, and Chuck's eight grandchildren, who loaned their husband, dad and grandfather to the cause of working men and women everywhere, must be recognized as well. Chuck Mack's life-long dedication to the health, livelihood and safety of workers around our country and across the globe is something his family will look back on for generations with pride and admiration. The same can be said of his vast extended family, those fortunate enough to be in the Brotherhood—and Sisterhood—of Teamsters.

CELEBRATING 100 YEARS OF AMERICAN BOY SCOUTS

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise today in tribute to our nation's youngest and littlest public servants—in stature, perhaps, but certainly not in heart—the Boy Scouts of America. For a century, these young boys and their counselors have been on the front lines, safeguarding and protecting America and her values: democracy, tolerance, compassion, and generosity, just to name a few. Heralded as the largest youth scouting organization, the Boy Scouts has inspired and motivated a cadre of young men to love this country, to work—tirelessly and humbly—without ingratitude, and to give of themselves to their communities and to the downtrodden. The organization has left its mark, a mark that runs a full century deep into the annals of this country's history, touching the lives of generations of boys and of those they have helped.

Next February 8, the Boy Scouts will celebrate its centennial anniversary, honoring its inception in February of 1910 by a Chicago publisher, William Boyce. Since that day, 111 million men have joined the ranks of the Scouts, committing to 12 hours of community service every year. America benefits from 30 million hours every year due to the toil of these youngsters. That means more hands at our airports, and ports, and schools, and hospitals. It means greater numbers of servers at a soup kitchen, of planters at a forestation drive, of readers at a local school. It means America is that much stronger, that much safer, and that much more prosperous because of the sacrifice of a dedicated few. They have earned our gratitude and deepest respect.

The adult volunteers who these kids look up to deserve unique and emphatic praise themselves. Youngsters are eager to have role models—and in some quarters of our country, there are not many to choose from. Men and women willing to dedicate the time and care to lead these kids at a time of overwhelming change and insecurity are heroes and heroines. They have, no doubt, saved lives, and there can be no greater gift than setting right a life heading wayward.

May we speak with one voice today in salute to these boys, many of whom are now men raising sons and grandsons of their own, and mark February 8, 2010 as the day for recognition of the Boy Scouts.

HONORING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF
DR. ESTEBAN FERNANDEZ

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I would like to honor one of South Florida's most distinguished residents, Dr. Esteban Fernandez. Through his extreme devotion to the field of publishing and his intense belief in the Christian faith, Dr. Fernandez has facilitated the diffusion of Christian ideas between differing languages and cultures, and dedicated himself to knowledge.

Dr. Fernandez holds a doctorate in Philosophy with an emphasis in leadership and organization. He also holds a degree of licentiate in Theology awarded by the Faculty of Theological and Religious Studies of Casa Sobre La Roca. In addition, Dr. Fernandez has been awarded an honorary Doctorate of Sacred Literature from Logos Christian College and an honorary Doctorate of Christian Counseling by Rhema University.

His tenure at Editorial Vida saw into fruition the Spanish language version of several important Christian texts, the most notable of which is La Biblia Nueva Version Internacional. Dr. Fernandez also organized the translation and publication of Rick Warren's A Purpose Driven Life.

He was also recognized as one of the ten best executives for his leadership at Editorial Vida in 2007. The great success that Dr. Esteban Fernandez has achieved is a result of his passionate devotion to his field and faith and I am truly grateful to call him a friend.

HONORING LIEUTENANT JOHN
FINN ON HIS 100TH BIRTHDAY

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. HUNTER. Madam Speaker, it is with great honor I rise today to pay tribute to United States Navy veteran Lieutenant John Finn on his 100th birthday. Lt. Finn is the oldest living Medal of Honor recipient and the last living Medal of Honor recipient from the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. His actions in combat and life reflect bravery and courage of the highest level and I am proud to bring recognition to his accomplishments.

John Finn was born in Los Angeles, California on July 23, 1909, and at the age of 17, with the permission of his mother, he enlisted in the United States Navy. His Navy career started aboard American gunboats patrolling the rivers of Inland China, and in 1940 he was assigned to the Naval Air Station at Kaneohe Bay in Oahu. On December 7, 1941 came the infamous attack on Pearl Harbor, and it was this event that presented Lt. Finn with an opportunity to display his extraordinary valor.

As the first attack on the harbor began, Lt. Finn managed to secure and man a .50-caliber machine gun mounted on an instruction stand on a completely exposed section of a parking ramp under intense enemy fire. Lt. Finn, with no regard for his own safety, vigorously fired upon Japanese aircraft with success. Although he was hit many times by enemy strafing fire, Lt. Finn refused to leave his post until the attack ended. It was only under a direct order that he left for the hospital to treat his 21 shrapnel and bullet wounds. However, after receiving medical attention, and despite a great deal of pain and difficulty moving, he returned to repair and rearm returning planes.

John Finn served through the rest of World War II with great distinction and retired from the United States Navy in 1956. He and wife Alice retired to their ranch in Southern California where he continues to live today.

In addition to the Medal of Honor, Finn holds the Purple Heart, Navy Unit Commendation, Good Conduct with 2 bars, Yangtze Service Medal, American Defense, American Campaign, Pacific Campaign, and the World War II Victory Medal.

Madam Speaker, John Finn has never seen himself as a hero, but that's what he is; as his Medal of Honor inscription reads, John Finn truly went above and beyond the call of duty. It was his tenacity and zeal that embodied the American resolve that set the tone for the rest of the war. Men and women like John Finn are responsible for the success of our Armed Forces. To John Finn, we are forever grateful for your heroism and service. You are truly a great American hero.

HAPPY 234TH BIRTHDAY, U.S.
ARMY

HON. CAROLYN C. KILPATRICK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the 234th birthday of the United States Army. As the oldest branch of the U.S. military, the United States Army has established the tradition of duty, honor and country that has been the standard of excellence, not only in the military but also in private industry.

Two hundred and thirty-four years ago, the United States Army was established to defend our Nation. From the Revolutionary War to our current challenges, Global War on Terror, our soldiers remain Army Strong with a deep commitment to our core values and beliefs. This 234th birthday commemorates America's Army—soldiers, families and civilians—who are achieving a level of excellence that is truly Army Strong both here and abroad. Their willingness to sacrifice to build a better future for others and to preserve our way of life is without a doubt, the strength of our Nation.

Additionally, in recognition of their commitment to service and willingness to make great sacrifices on behalf of our Nation, the Secretary of the Army established 2009 as Year of the Non Commissioned Officer, NCO.

Since 1775, the Army has set apart its NCOs from other enlisted Soldiers by distinctive insignia of grade.

With more than 200 years of service, the U.S. Army's Noncommissioned Officer Corps has distinguished itself as the world's most accomplished group of military professionals. Historical and daily accounts of life as an NCO are exemplified by acts of courage and a dedication and a willingness to do whatever it takes to complete the mission. NCOs have been celebrated for decorated service in military events ranging from Valley Forge to Gettysburg, to charges on Omaha Beach and battles along the Ho Chi Minh Trail, to current conflicts in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Today I wish to celebrate the strength of our Nation and the strength of our Army by saluting our Non Commissioned Officer Corps and the Army's soldiers, families and civilians by wishing them a happy 234th Birthday!

CONGRATULATING CHIEF GEORGE
CARPENTER OF WILMETTE POLICE DEPARTMENT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. KIRK. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Wilmette Police Chief George Carpenter, one of the finest public servants in my congressional district. Next month, Chief Carpenter will retire after 35 years of service to the people of Wilmette, serving as Chief of Police for the last 18 years.

The police chiefs of the 10th District work closely together to address their shared concerns. I've had the good fortune to work with them and their departments to help combat gangs, drugs and weapons that make their way into the suburbs, and the respect that Chief Carpenter has among his peers is testament to what kind of a leader he is.

As chief, he spearheaded education reforms in the Wilmette Police Department and leaves a legacy of forward-thinking, well-trained officers who will continue to serve the Village. He steadily increased recruitment of women, minorities, and those with foreign-language ability to diversify and bring new skills to law enforcement. These policies have resulted in increased approval ratings of the performance of the Wilmette Police Department, reflecting a high level of public trust.

He helped form task forces to counteract the growing sophistication of criminals in our area which created a more united regional police force. His dedication to quality and service has been a great example for other communities in the 10th District. This is particularly crucial as Illinois now has the most gang members per capita in the nation. I know we are better prepared to meet this emerging threat because of Chief Carpenter's service.

On behalf of the people of the 10th Congressional District, I thank Wilmette Police Chief George Carpenter for his outstanding public service and wish him the best in his future endeavors. Our community is safer and stronger because of his leadership.

THE MIRANDA WARNING

HON. SCOTT GARRETT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, there are forty-four words that anyone who has ever watched a police show is no doubt familiar with:

"You have the right to remain silent. Anything you say can and will be used against you in a court of law. You have the right to an attorney present during questioning. If you cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for you."

The Miranda Warning, which reminds suspects in police custody of their rights under the Constitution, has become a staple of our criminal justice system, and is a vanguard of Fifth Amendment protection. This warning, however, was never meant to be applied to terrorists captured on the battlefield who are endangering American interests and American lives.

Recently, my colleague from Michigan, Mr. ROGERS, returned from Afghanistan, where he learned that the FBI may be reading Miranda rights to suspected terrorists at U.S. military detention facilities. If this report is true, it is deeply troubling and a variety of questions come to mind.

First, if FBI agents are granting enemy combatants a right to silence and counsel, how then are operatives expected to accomplish their goal of obtaining actionable intelligence in the field? Second, how many detainees have been read the Miranda Warning? Third, on what date was this policy established? Fourth, what are the factors which influence the FBI's decision about when to grant Miranda rights?

For obvious reasons, a suspect who has availed himself of silence and counsel is far less likely to surrender valuable intelligence that can help us in winning the war on terror. While we have an obligation to treat captured combatants in a way that respects their human dignity, we are under no obligation to consider them U.S. citizens. It is dangerous to provide detainees with the same protections enjoyed by Americans. Furthermore, it is unwise to grant detainees the rights enshrined in the very Constitution they seek to destroy.

We must recognize that there is a difference between police powers and war powers. The capture, interrogation, and trial of terror suspects in Afghanistan and Iraq clearly fall into the latter category. FBI involvement in this process can only lead to captured combatants being held, tried, and imprisoned in U.S. civilian facilities, thereby making our prison system an enclave for al-Qaeda operatives.

One of the primary objectives of American operatives in the Middle East is to anticipate and prevent future attacks against U.S. soldiers and U.S. cities. Treating terror suspects as rank-and-file street criminals is a dangerous policy with grave implications for our domestic security and foreign interests.

President Obama has repeatedly stated that he would govern his administration with transparency. However the ranking member on the House intelligence subcommittee learned of a serious FBI policy shift almost by accident.

In waging this war, the White House must be accountable to this body—the people's elected representatives. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for bringing this issue to the House's attention, and I join him in calling on the Department of Defense to disclose the timeline and justification for this policy shift.

REGARDING PRESIDENT OBAMA'S ADDRESS TO THE MUSLIM AND ARAB WORLDS FROM CAIRO, EGYPT

HON. DAN BOREN

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 12, 2009

Mr. BOREN. Madam Speaker, President Obama made some very important points in his address last week in Cairo, Egypt. It is important that he spoke directly to the Muslim and Arab worlds and stated as fact that 6 million Jews were killed in the Holocaust. The President should be applauded for making clear that threatening Israel is wrong and that anti-Semitism, which remains prevalent in the Arab media, is ignorant, hateful and wrong.

Unfortunately, the President's speech left an impression that Israel was founded in response to anti-Semitism and the Holocaust. While these reasons were necessary for the creation of an Israeli state, a Jewish bond to the land of Israel is deeply rooted in history.

Many in the Muslim and Arab worlds deny that a Jewish connection to the land of Israel and Jerusalem exists. For example, at the Camp David meetings conducted by President Clinton, Yasser Arafat denied that the Jewish Temple was located in Jerusalem. However, a Jewish connection to Jerusalem and to the land of Israel reaches far back into ancient history and precedes the Holocaust. This bond is not 60 years old; it is more than 3,000 years old, pre-dating Islam and even Christianity.

President Obama is to be congratulated for reaching out to the Muslim and Arab worlds. As we do so, it is imperative that we stand with Israel. Only then will we achieve peace and stability in this troubled region of the world.

SENATE—Monday, June 15, 2009

The Senate met at 1:45 p.m. and was called to order by the Honorable MARK R. WARNER, a Senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Creator and upholder of our lives, we can't escape from Your presence or control, nor do we desire to do so. We stand in awe of Your power, mercy, and majesty. Our thoughts of Your goodness banish our fears. Today give to the Members of the Senate a high sense of the common purpose that unites them. Deliver them from that stubborn pride that imputes to itself infallibility and that pits partisanship against national interest. Father of all, guide our lawmakers through discussion, debate, and confrontation to the solutions so desperately needed in our land. We pray in Your great Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable MARK R. WARNER led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The assistant clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 15, 2009.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable MARK R. WARNER, a Senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. WARNER thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following leader remarks, the Senate will be in a period for the transaction of morning business for Senators to speak for up to 10 minutes each. There will be no roll-call votes today. Tomorrow Senators should expect a cloture vote on the motion to proceed to the Travel Promotion Act. That will be prior to our weekly caucus luncheons.

This week, we are going to do the best we can to complete the Travel Promotion Act and the supplemental bill. We should be able to do that and, hopefully, get some nominations done. Next week, we have other things we need to do, including the Homeland Security appropriations bill. I spoke with the Republican leader on a number of occasions on that issue. To get to it next week, we need a consent agreement because the House will not act on it until probably Wednesday of next week or something like that. It does not give us enough time, and we need to start earlier. We will work on that and see what we can come up with.

We have announced before that the 5 weeks after we get back from the Fourth of July recess will be very busy with a lot of work. The HELP Committee and the Finance Committee are going to have their bills reported out of their committees before we leave a week from Friday so we can start working on the health care legislation in the Senate.

The next work period will be very heavy, although we have—I cannot complain—we have been able to complete a tremendous amount of legislation. I was told over the weekend the work we have been able to do to this point is as much as any President has ever accomplished and Congress has accomplished with the President during the first 5 months of a legislative session but for the first time of Roosevelt.

We passed some major legislation. We should all feel good about that. But there is so much more to do. We have to roll up our sleeves and work even harder with health care and energy not far down the road.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WEBB). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

SENIOR NAVIGATION AND PLANNING ACT OF 2009

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about legislation to help seniors navigate through a complicated and often overwhelming health care delivery system. Because of the fragmented nature of our health care system, we often fail to provide patients, their families, and caregivers with the necessary tools, information, and support to both age well and with dignity in the setting of their preference, oftentimes their homes.

I believe if we provide patients with better information about advanced care planning in noncrisis situations, they will make decisions for themselves and their families that result in better care and a better quality of life.

Today I am introducing the Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009 to help seniors and their families navigate through a complex system and to help them make informed medical decisions. My legislation would provide access to an advanced illness care management benefit, a benefit that does not exist currently in our health care delivery system.

My legislation, as well, would increase the awareness of advanced care planning through a national education campaign and clearinghouse. It would also reduce legal hurdles to the enforcement of advanced directives. It would create incentives for hospitals and physicians to get accredited and certified in palliative care. It would increase compliance with medical orders and discharge instructions. Too often a patient may leave a hospital, not do the appropriate actions afterwards, and not follow the discharge information, which can result in the patient being readmitted to the hospital or ending up with their health care provider not having the appropriate followup. We have to make sure we put an end to that.

My legislation would also educate entities, including faith-based organizations, on advanced care planning issues. Oftentimes an individual or family, when dealing with end-of-life issues, will turn not only to their medical provider but oftentimes to their priest or rabbi or minister. We want to make sure folks in the faith-based community understand the challenges and opportunities people have with advanced care planning.

My legislation, as well, would increase coordination and integration between the Medicare and Medicaid Programs. Too often these programs that both deal with seniors, their health care issues, and aging issues do not cooperate or collaborate.

Collectively, these initiatives will create a more accessible environment for seniors to receive the care they need when they need it, and in the setting they prefer.

Let me be clear, this legislation does not deny or withhold services. However, it does recognize that overall health reform should include a thoughtful process that informs patients, their families, and caregivers on how to navigate and think through difficult decisions about when and how to pursue treatments at the end of life.

By enacting these reforms, we will begin to develop a culture in which all of us will have the ability to age well, with dignity, and, again, in the setting of our choosing.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD letters of support from the following organizations: the AARP, the Alzheimer's Foundation, the Duke University Divinity School, the Institute on Care at the End of Life, the National Hospice and Palliative Care Organization, UnitedHealth Group, and Aetna.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL HOSPICE AND PALLIATIVE CARE ORGANIZATION,
June 12, 2009.

Senator MARK WARNER,
*Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

Dear SENATOR WARNER: On behalf of hospice programs across the nation, their professionals, volunteers and most importantly, the patients and families they serve, the National Hospice and Palliative Care Organization is writing to express our support for your Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009. This health reform legislation will strengthen the quality of end-of-life care, and make it more cost-efficient through enhanced resources to allow more informed choices and prevent unnecessary and costly medical procedures.

Research has shown that individuals who have discussions about end-of-life care have less invasive medical treatments, and a higher quality of life. We are pleased that your bill enhances access to additional resources for end-of-life care planning, including: a new transitional benefit delivered by hospice teams for patients with advanced illnesses, an expanded use of advance directives, and increased public awareness of the importance of end-of-life planning. These tools implemented nationwide could help reduce Medicare spending by $15 billion over 10 years.

Your legislation will ensure that patients and families are able to navigate the journey at the end of life with the necessary information and support that will bring dignity, quality care, and hope when they are most needed. For more than 30 years, hospices have been providing high-quality care to people at one of life's most challenging times—and research has shown hospice saves Medicare more than $2 billion every year. This legislation uses the knowledge and expertise of the hospice and palliative care community in a valuable way.

The Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009 will give patients and their families coping with life-limiting illnesses the kind of information and services they need. The National Hospice and Palliative Care Organization strongly endorses your bill, and appreciates your support of strengthening high-quality and compassionate end-of-life care for the 1.4 million Americans who choose hospice each year.

Sincerely,
J. DONALD SCHUMACHER, PSYD,
President/CEO.

Re The Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: In my career as a pain and palliative care physician, I have become convinced that innovative models of care that can leverage both community desire and community assets for engagement in the care of the ill and dying—including the involvement and assets of faith communities—are urgently needed.

Almost all patients and families experience illness within their community and receive episodic acute care in the hospital. Meeting the needs of patients requires an approach that raises public awareness, provides training and resources to family members and loved ones, and connects the resources of the hospital environment with care resources in the community. Faith communities are logically and historically positioned to be a locus of effective care for the ill and the dying and are a relatively untapped resource to meet the health care needs in the community.

The Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009 provides the groundwork that can spark such innovative models and has tremendous potential to improve care for the rapidly growing numbers of individuals with advanced illness or who are at the near end of life. I applaud this effort and offer you my wholehearted support for its passage.

Sincerely,
RICHARD PAYNE, M.D.,
Professor of Medicine and Divinity.

ALZHEIMER'S FOUNDATION OF AMERICA,
June 9, 2009.

Hon. MARK R. WARNER,
*U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: The Alzheimer's Foundation of America (AFA) is pleased to endorse the Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009. On behalf of AFA and its members, thank you for your leadership in introducing this important legislation.

AFA was formed in February 2002 "to provide optimal care and services to individuals confronting dementia, and to their caregivers and families—through member organizations dedicated to improving quality of life." Today, the Alzheimer's Foundation of America's membership consists of more than 1,200 member organizations that provide hands-on programs and services from coast to coast, including grassroots nonprofit organizations, healthcare facilities, government agencies, public safety departments, and long-term care communities.

Dignity, respect, and quality of life are the treatment goals for individuals in the end stage of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias; as well as support, training and respite for family caregivers. The Senior Navigation and Planning Act would greatly help those with dementia and their families by establishing a new transitional care benefit through hospice for Medicare and/or Medicaid beneficiaries with a life expectancy of 18 months or less. Valuable services provided under this new benefit would include: palliative care consultation services; care planning services; counseling of individual and family members; discussions regarding the availability of supportive services including information on advanced directives and other end-of-life planning tools; encouragement of patient-centered care; family conference services; respite services up to 16 hours per month; and caregiver training provided at the caregivers' home focused on providing effective personal and technical care.

For the millions of Americans with Alzheimer's disease or a related dementia, advance directive planning services are essential. To address this challenge, the Senior Navigation and Planning Act would create a national awareness campaign of advance directive planning. It would also establish a toll-free telephone line and clearinghouse that the public and health care professionals may access to find out about state-specific information regarding advance directives and end-of-life planning decisions.

This legislation will allow eligible beneficiaries and their family caregivers to receive the information they need about advance directive and other end-of-life planning tools directly from their physicians. In addition, hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, home health agencies, and hospice programs will be required to provide the opportunity to discuss the general course of treatment expected, the likely impact on the length of life and function, and the procedures they should use to secure help if an unexpected situation arises. Such services will not only help improve quality of life, but will also help to reduce the stigma and fear of facing end-of-life issues in general.

The Senior Navigation and Planning Act would further protect the rights of individuals by requiring providers to honor written medical orders as a condition of payment. The bill would also provide incentives for hospice and palliative care accreditation and certification by providing bonus payments for those facilities with programs in place and a payment cut for facilities that do not have an accredited palliative program in place by 2020.

Beneficiaries with Alzheimer's disease and related dementias place heavy demands on the health care system. Because of the unique nature of their disease, individuals with cognitive impairment must rely on family caregivers and others to identify and obtain the right mix of services and supports to maintain their health and to live in the community as long as possible. This legislation would take the much-needed step of creating an Office of Medicare/Medicaid Integration to align program policies. The Office would simplify dual eligible access to Medicare and Medicaid program benefits and services; improve care continuity and ensure safe and effective care transitions; eliminate cost shifting between programs and among related care providers; eliminate regulatory conflicts; and improve total cost and quality.

Faith-based organizations often play a key role in end-of-life decision-making and planning for those with terminal illnesses. The Senior Navigation and Planning Act would empower the Secretary to create web-based materials as well as to establish end-of-life home-based service, training and education grants specifically for faith-based organizations. For individuals with end stage Alzheimer's disease and related dementias and their family caregivers in particular, faith-based services, training and support can make a world of difference in an otherwise isolating situation.

AFA is the face of care for individuals and their families who are affected by Alzheimer's disease and related dementias. We are proud to support the Senior Navigation and Planning Act and we look forward to working with you to advance this important legislation. If you have any further questions, please feel free to contact me, or have your staff contact Sue Peschin, AFA vice president of public policy.

Sincerely,

ERIC J. HALL,
President and Chief Executive Officer.

UNITEDHEALTH GROUP,
PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, NW.,
Washington DC, June 11, 2009.

Hon. MARK WARNER,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: I am writing to express UnitedHealth Group's strong support for your legislation, the Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009, which better equips seniors with the necessary tools, information and support needed to make informed medical decisions and ensure they receive the highest quality care.

Your legislation will fundamentally transform the way terminally ill patients and their families navigate the difficult decisions encountered at the end-of-life. We understand that when the elderly and their families are provided with relevant information and resources about care options such as hospice, palliative care, and the use of advanced directives, they are able to make more informed and personally appropriate decisions. By combining the best practices found in the public and private sectors, this legislation will go a long way in ensuring that patients facing the end-of-life are provided—through shared decision making with their physicians and caregivers—the most appropriate and sensitive care. UnitedHealth Group strongly supports patient-centered care, support services and planning tools for those with advanced illnesses. We applaud your focus on this important issue within the health reform debate.

UnitedHealth Group has a strong commitment to patient-centered end-of-life care, as demonstrated by the following programs and options that we offer to both Medicare beneficiaries and commercially-insured people:

Evercare Hospice and Palliative Care which operates in ten states and serves more than 1,200 people a day for their end-of-life needs.

The Advanced Illness Care Model which is offered through our Medicare Advantage and Special Needs Plans. This model provides coordinated care for patients with advanced illnesses and supports education for patients and their families regarding their clinical condition and the management of quality of life treatment issues in the last twelve months of life.

The Evercare Institutional Special Needs Plans (SNPs), which are specialized health plans that deploy nurse practitioners in nursing homes to assist in coordination of care and other planning services.

The UnitedHealth Care Hospice benefit which is an industry leader in the comprehensiveness of its plan offerings.

As a result of this accumulated experience, we understand that providing access to early and comprehensive hospice and palliative care services results in an increase in the quality of life for patients and reduction in futile and duplicative clinical interventions.

In conclusion, we are especially encouraged that your bill:

Creates a transitional care benefit to increase access to palliative care;

Establishes a national education campaign and clearinghouse providing advanced care planning resources;

Assures portability of advanced directives across states;

Creates incentives for hospitals and physicians to get accredited and certified in hospice and palliative care; and Increases integration and coordination between the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

Thank you for your strong leadership in the U.S. Senate on this issue of critical importance to the entire health care system. We look forward to working with you to advance the Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009 and on other areas to strengthen our health care system.

Sincerely,

REED V. TUCKSON, MD,
*Executive Vice President and

FARMINGTON AVENUE,
Hartford, CT, June 15, 2009.

Hon. MARK R. WARNER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: Aetna is pleased to support the Senior Navigation and Planning Act of 2009. This legislation will strengthen the quality of counseling, support services, and care management for patients and families coping with life-limiting illnesses. We commend you for your leadership on these critical issues.

Aetna, itself, has been a leader in advocating for compassionate care in the face of life-threatening illness. In April 2004, Aetna announced a comprehensive program of case management support and expanded benefits to help Aetna members and their families cope more effectively with the complex medical and emotional issues associated with the end of life. In an innovative move, Aetna provided coverage for hospice benefits while allowing members to continue with curative care, and to do so with a life expectancy of twelve months instead of the six months Medicare allows. Aetna also pioneered a comprehensive program of case management provided by nurses trained in advance illness and in coordinating care in a manner that respects ethnic and cultural traditions.

Member reaction to Aetna's Compassionate Care Program has been gratifying. Ninety-six percent of participants' caregivers said they believed the member's needs for pain management and symptom relief were met in the final months of life. Sixty-three percent of program members accessed hospice, a significant increase over traditional Medicare.

In the pursuit of curative care, we too often fail to engage patients and loved ones in discussions of additional options for dealing with advanced illness and to support them in their choices. This legislation will help change that by facilitating the ability of patients and families to make informed decisions at times of stress and vulnerability. Aetna supports this legislation, and hopes to collaborate in the realization of its goals. We look forward to working with you and your Congressional colleagues to advance the quality of health care for all Americans.

Sincerely,

LONNY REISMAN, MD,
Chief Medical Officer.
RANDALL KRAKAUER, MD,
Head of Medicare Medical Management.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JUDGE SOTOMAYOR HEARINGS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, it was less than 3 weeks ago that the President announced his intentions to nominate Judge Sonia Sotomayor to the Supreme Court. In announcing her nomination, the White House made much of the fact that the judge had the lengthiest judicial record in recent memory. Last week, in a departure from past practice, the Democratic leadership of the Judiciary Committee unilaterally scheduled her hearing without even notifying the ranking member. Because of this unwise and unfair approach, Judge Sotomayor's hearing will begin just 3 weeks from today. As I understand it, her questionnaire is still incomplete. Among other deficiencies, she has not provided materials from 17 cases she handled as a prosecutor, nor has she provided materials from any appellate cases she handled, and she has not provided materials from over 100 speeches she has given.

During the Roberts and Alito hearings, our Democratic friends repeatedly told us it was more important to do it right than to do it quick. Now that there is a Democratic President, it appears the attitude is to just do it. They want the shortest confirmation process in recent memory for a nominee with the longest judicial record in recent memory. There is clearly a double standard at play here—one that undermines our ability to fulfill one of the Senate's most important and solemn responsibilities.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as the national discussion over health care intensifies, one thing is already clear: Both Republicans and Democrats agree health care is in serious need of reform. The only thing that remains to be seen is what kind of reform we will deliver. Americans are increasingly worried about what they are hearing from Washington.

Americans want lower costs, and they want the freedom to choose their own doctors and their own care. What they do not want is a Washington takeover of health care along the lines of what we have already seen with banks, insurance companies, and the auto industry. Americans don't want a government-run system that puts bureaucrats between patients and doctors. They certainly don't want the kind of government boards that exist in places such as New Zealand and Great Britain that deny, delay, and ration treatments that are currently available to Americans.

Americans want change, but they do not want changes that will make existing programs worse. That is exactly what a government-run system would do.

Unfortunately, the notion of a government-run plan has been gaining steam. Over the past couple weeks, one Democratic leader after another has insisted that it be included as a part of any reform. The reaction to this should tell us something.

Among those who have begun to mobilize in opposition to America's plans are America's doctors who warn it would limit access to care and could lead to nearly 70 percent of Americans being kicked off the health plans they currently have.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which represents about 3 million businesses in this country, has warned that the creation of a government plan would lead to a government-run health care system. The CEO of the renowned Mayo Clinic warned that some of the best providers could go out of business. The National Federation of Independent Businesses, one of the Nation's leading associations of small businesses, has also expressed its concerns about a government-run plan.

Americans don't want the kind of government-run system that some in Washington have proposed. They do not want politicians to use the real problems we have in our health care system as an excuse to tear down the whole thing, take away everything that is good about it, and replace it with something worse. They want practical solutions to specific problems, and that is what the rest of us are proposing.

Here are some commonsense proposals: We all agree health care in this country is too expensive. Americans don't think basic procedures should break the bank, and American families shouldn't have to worry about going bankrupt if a family member becomes ill.

But government-run health care will only make matters worse. If our experience with Medicare shows us anything, it is that the government health plans are not—I repeat are not—cost effective.

Over the weekend, the administration proposed making cuts to Medicare as a way of defraying the cost of a new government plan. That is exactly the wrong approach. America's seniors expect Congress to stabilize Medicare so it continues to serve their needs, not drain its resources to pay for another, even bigger government plan. Changes to Medicare should be used to make Medicare solvent for seniors today and for those who are paying into it and who will rely on the system tomorrow, not to build a brandnew government plan on top of one that is already on an unsustainable course. If we want to cut costs and rein in debt, then extending a Medicare-like system to everyone in America is exactly the wrong prescription. We need to make Medicare itself solvent and find ways to improve the current health care system.

One way to do that is to implement reforms that we know will save money. We could start with illness prevention programs that encourage people to quit smoking and to control their weight. It is no mystery that smoking and obesity are leading causes of the kinds of chronic diseases that are driving up health care costs. And finding ways to reduce these illnesses would also reduce costs. We should allow employers to create incentives for workers to adopt healthier lifestyles.

We should also encourage the same kind of robust competition in the health insurance market that has worked so well in the Medicare prescription drug benefit, Part D. We can enact long-overdue reforms to our Nation's medical liability laws. For too long, the threat of frivolous lawsuits has caused insurance premiums for doctors to skyrocket. Doctors then pass these higher costs on to patients, driving up the cost of care. Well, most people think health care dollars ought to be spent on health care, not insurance premiums. Yet doctors all across America are not only passing along the costs of higher and higher premiums, they are also ordering expensive and unnecessary tests and procedures to protect themselves against lawsuits.

One study suggests that roughly 9 out of 10 U.S. doctors in high-risk specialties practice some form of defensive medicine such as this—and the cost to patients is massive. Some doctors simply shut their practices or discontinue services as a result of these pressures. Patients such as Rashelle Perryman of Crittenden County Hospital are the ones who lose out. Rashelle's first two babies were born in Crittenden County Hospital, about 10 minutes from her home. But her third child had to be delivered about 40 miles away because rising malpractice rates caused doctors at Crittenden County Hospital to stop delivering babies altogether.

This isn't an isolated problem, and it is not just obstetricians. According to a report by the Kentucky Institute of Medicine, Kentucky is nearly 2,300 doctors short of the national average—a shortage that could be reduced, in part, by reforming medical malpractice laws.

Comprehensive health care reforms are long overdue—reforms that lower cost and increase access to care. But a government-run plan isn't the way to do it. There are other solutions that address our problems without undermining our strengths.

Over the past few weeks, I have warned about the dangers of government-run health care by pointing to the problems this kind of government-run system has created in places such as Britain, Canada, and New Zealand. These countries are living proof that when the government is in charge, health care is denied, delayed, and rationed. As I have noted, the main culprits in every case are the government boards that decide what procedures and medicines patients can and cannot have.

I have discussed how Britain's government board has denied care to cancer patients because the treatments were too expensive. In one case, bureaucrats in Britain refused to prescribe cancer drugs that were proven to extend the lives of patients because they cost too much. The government board explained it this way:

Although these treatments are clinically effective, regrettably the cost . . . is such that they are not a cost effective use of . . . resources.

I have also discussed how the government-run health care system in Canada routinely delays care. Today, the average wait for a hip replacement at one hospital in Kingston, Ontario, is about 196 days. Knee replacement surgery at the same hospital takes an average of 340 days. The American people don't want to be told they have to wait 6 months for a hip replacement or a year for a knee replacement, but that is what could very well happen in a government-run health care system.

Finally, I have discussed how New Zealand's government board has rationed care by deciding which new hospital medicines are cost effective. In one case, government bureaucrats in that country denied patients access to a drug that was proven to be effective in fighting breast cancer because they thought it was too expensive. As one cancer doctor in the country put it:

New Zealand is a good tourist destination, but options for cancer treatment are not so attractive there right now.

Americans want health care reform, but they don't want the kind of reform that denies, delays, and rations care, such as the government-run systems in New Zealand, Britain, and Canada. They don't want to be forced into a government plan that replaces the freedoms and choices they now enjoy with bureaucratic hassles, hours spent on hold, and politicians in Washington telling them how much care and what kind of care they can have. They want health care decisions left to doctors and patients, not remote bureaucrats. But if some in Washington get their way and enact a government takeover of health care, that is exactly what Americans can expect.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. KYL pertaining to the introduction of S. 1259 are printed in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COMMENDING THE LOTHSPREICH BROTHERS

• Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to honor a North Dakota family filled with heroes. Even in a State where sacrifice is more than a slogan and service is a way of life, the Lothspeich family stands out. When their nation needed them, every single one of the nine Lothspeich brothers rose to answer the call to duty.

Today we recognize the service of the three brothers who are still with us, and honor the memory of those who are not. In times of crisis, it is our best and bravest that step forward, risking it all, to come to the defense of our Nation. The honorable service of each of these nine brothers epitomizes the story of our Nation's veterans.

Eugene was a machine gunner in Italy in the Second World War, where he was awarded the Purple Heart. Harold served in the Philippines, where he earned two battle stars. Edward served in the Pacific with the Navy, Donald served in Germany at the peak of the Cold War, Gerald worked with the atomic bomb program here in the U.S. Lyle was a rifle instructor helping to train the next generation of our Nation's servicemembers, and Spike served in the Air Force Medical Service Corps in Japan.

From World War II through the Korean conflict and the Cold War, for 15 years running, at least one of these nine men could be found in uniform, serving their country in the Army, in the Navy, and in the Air Force. It is truly a remarkable story. We owe a deep debt of gratitude to them and to all of our veterans.

Years ago our forefathers founded this country with a vision of freedom for all. It was that vision that inspired the Lothspeich brothers to leave Park River, ND, to travel to Italy, Germany, Japan and the Philippines in defense of this great land. We honor them, and we honor all of our brave veterans and all of those who serve our country in uniform today. Without selfless service by those like the Lothspeichs, we simply would not have the freedoms we hold most dear.●

CONGRATULATING RICKEY HENDERSON

• Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Rickey Henderson on his induction into the National Baseball Hall of Fame on July 26, 2009. During a remarkable 25-year career, Rickey Henderson's keen batting eye and unique combination of speed and power earned him the recognition as one of the greatest leadoff hitters in the game's long and storied history.

Born on Christmas day in 1958, Rickey Henderson and his family moved to Oakland, CA, when he was 2 years old. He was a standout athlete at Oakland Technical High School, where he excelled at basketball, baseball and football. Though his exploits on the gridiron as an All-American running back earned him dozens of scholarship offers, Rickey chose to pursue a professional baseball career and follow his dream to don the green and gold of his hometown Oakland Athletics.

Rickey Henderson made his Major League debut on June 24, 1979. Over the course of the next 25 seasons, he would compile one of the most impressive resumes in baseball history. In a game which defines greatness by statistics, Rickey Henderson's name can be found at or near the top of some of the more hallowed records in baseball history. The 10-time All Star retired as the all-time leader in career walks and holds the career records for runs scored and stolen bases as well as the single-season stolen base record. The 8 stolen bases that he amassed during his Most Valuable Player performance in the 1989 American League Championship Series remains the record for most stolen bases in a single postseason series. A year after spearheading the Oakland A's 1989 World Series title, Rickey was named the American League Most Valuable Player in 1990.

Rickey Henderson's induction into the National Baseball Hall of Fame will see him join Joe Morgan and Frank Robinson as a legend of the game who honed his skills and love for America's pastime during his formative years in Oakland. During three separate stints with his hometown team, Rickey established a bond with generations of loyal Oakland A's fans that remains as strong today as when Rickey stole 130 bases in 1982. Speaking after his election into the Hall of Fame, he said that, "in my eyes, I wanted to see the fans in Oakland enjoy the game as much as I enjoyed it . . . playing in front of friends and family there gave me a little bit more of a boost. It helped me out in my career, and I was proud to go out there and represent the Oakland area." Judging from his achievements on the field and his devotion to the fans, it is clear to see why Rickey Henderson is one of the most beloved sports figures in the bay area and a worthy exemplar of the rich history of major league baseball in Oakland.

As his teammates and fans would attest, Rickey Henderson is a deserving inductee into the National Baseball Hall of Fame. Throughout his career in baseball, Rickey has consistently achieved excellence on the field and conducted himself with integrity and character off the field.

I congratulate Rickey Henderson on his induction in the National Baseball Hall of Fame, and wish him continued success in his future endeavors.●

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SISTER CITY RELATIONSHIP

• Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, today I would like to recognize the 50th anniversary of the sister city relationship between the city and county of Honolulu and the city of Hiroshima.

Mr. President, 1959 was an eventful and significant year in history. Not only was Hawaii admitted into the Union as the 50th State, but on May 19, 1959, the city and county of Honolulu Council passed a resolution inviting the city of Hiroshima into a sister city agreement. Established by former U.S. President Dwight Eisenhower, the "People to People" program was to promote peace and mutual understanding between citizens of different countries. Many of Hawaii's residents were of Japanese ancestry or were originally from Hiroshima. With this in mind, the Honolulu Council thought a relationship between Honolulu and Hiroshima would be a fitting one, brought together through similarities and a resonance of cultural familiarity. This "sister city" agreement holds special significance for me and my family, as I was born in Honolulu and my maternal grandparents were from the Hiroshima Prefecture.

Fifty years later, this relationship, as well as the overall United States—Japan relationship, has formed into an enduring partnership of nations. This valued alliance has matured through the years, and it is my privilege to serve as honorary chairman of the 50th anniversary committee for the sister city relationship. I ask my colleagues to join me in recognition of this momentous occasion.●

REPORT ON THE CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY THAT WAS ORIGINALLY DECLARED IN EXECUTIVE ORDER 13405 OF JUNE 16, 2006, WITH RESPECT TO BELARUS, AS RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE ON JUNE 12, 2009—PM 23

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register for publication the enclosed notice stating that the national emergency and related measures blocking the property of certain persons undermining democratic processes or institutions in Belarus are to continue in effect beyond June 16, 2009.

Despite some positive developments during the past year, including the release of internationally recognized political prisoners, the actions and policies of certain members of the Government of Belarus and other persons that have undermined democratic processes or institutions, committed human rights abuses related to political repression, and engaged in public corruption pose a continuing unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States. For these reasons, I have determined that it is necessary to continue the national emergency and related measures blocking the property of certain persons undermining democratic processes or institutions in Belarus.

BARACK OBAMA.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 12, 2009.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 1:53 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mrs. Cole, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1687. An act to designate the federally occupied building located at McKinley Avenue and Third Street, SW., Canton, Ohio, as the "Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse".

The message also announced that the House has agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1256) to protect the public health by providing the Food and Drug Administration with certain authority to regulate tobacco products, to amend title 5, United States Code, to make certain modifications in the Thrift Savings Plan, the Civil Service Retirement System, and the Federal Employees' Retirement System, and for other purposes.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. KYL (for himself, Mr. McCONNELL, Mr. ROBERTS, and Mr. CRAPO):

S. 1259. A bill to protect all patients by prohibiting the use of data obtained from comparative effectiveness research to deny coverage of items or services under Federal health care programs and to ensure that comparative effectiveness research accounts for advancements in personalized medicine and differences in patient treatment response; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I wish to talk about a bill Senator McCONNELL and I introduced today. I think a companion bill will also be introduced by some of the leadership in the House of Representatives. The number of the bill is S. 1259, and this bill is called the PATIENTS Act—"patient" as in doctor-patient. The idea is to focus on health care as it relates to patients.

Health care reform should be patient centered. Nothing should come between the physician and the patient. We are concerned there is something being done that we need to stop because it could, in fact, insert government bureaucracies between the patient and the physician. What has happened is that in the stimulus bill, the Congress appropriated $1.1 billion for something called comparative effectiveness research. Comparative effectiveness research has been used for years by physicians and hospitals. Medical schools do research, and they determine what kinds of treatments are best. For example, if you have two different drugs for the same condition, they will do testing to see which one seems to work the best. It is called clinical trials. They do clinical research, and physicians and hospitals frequently use that research as recommended for the best way to treat a particular condition. It is not mandatory. Obviously, what is good for most patients may not be good for all patients. So it is not something that is obviously forced upon people, but it provides good information. The problem is that too many people now who are proposing health care reform want to use comparative effectiveness research to end up rationing care, to have a Federal entity or even a State entity, or I should say a private entity, use that research in ways that would end up rationing care, to say some care is just too expensive for you to have, and since the government is paying for it, the government is not going to give it to you.

What our bill would do is make it clear that comparative effectiveness research cannot be used to deny coverage of either a health care service or treatment by the Secretary of HHS. And we say the Secretary of Health and Human Services because all of the various entities that might do that in the Federal Government are part of HHS. So we simply prohibit the Secretary of HHS from using this comparative effectiveness research to deny health care service or treatment. You would think that would be uncontroversial, and I am hoping at the end of the day that it is not controversial. Nobody wants their health care rationed by somebody here in Washington, DC.

It would also require that comparative effectiveness research account for differences in the preference of patients and their treatment response to personalized medicine on something called genomics.

Genomics is the breakdown of the genes in the body into all of the different elements which make us unique as individuals. What genomics research focuses on is, what exactly is it in your gene composition, the human genome, that might be different from someone else's that means that a personalized treatment would work for you whereas it might not work for someone else. They are actually finding that they can tailor specific drugs to treat specific genes in such a way that, if they know your human composition, they can find a way to treat your condition—say, a cancer—potentially slightly differently than they would treat someone else's cancer, whether it is in the dosage of the medicine or in the specific kind of medicine or however it might be—the point being that not everyone is the same. In fact, we are all different, we are all unique, and one of the things medicine must recognize is our uniqueness as individuals and not get into the habit of saying that there is a sort of a size that fits all here, and we are going to say that if doctors will treat everyone with this particular medical device or drug or treatment, then we will pay for it, but we are not going to pay for it if they do anything else. That would not be good medicine. That inserts the government between the doctor and the patient. So we say that can't be done using this comparative effectiveness research.

By the way, the bill also makes clear that nothing prohibits the FDA Commissioner from responding to drug safety concerns under his authority. Obviously, if a drug is not safe, the FDA needs to say the drug is not safe and the Federal Government is not going to pay for it. That is obvious.

But the point is that this comparative effectiveness research should not be used by the government to deny or delay or to ration care. The reason for it is, obviously, we all want to be in charge of our own health care with our doctor. We want the choice. If a doctor says: We think you need this kind of treatment and we can get coverage for that from our insurance, we want to be able to get that care. If we cannot, we want to try to find insurance that will provide that kind of coverage for us. At least at a minimum, we want to be able to pay for the treatment, if nothing else. What we do not want is for the Federal Government to say that it does not matter if you want to pay for it, it does not matter if you are covered, you cannot get it because the Federal Government says so.

This is especially important if we have a government-run insurance company, which is what many on the other side of the aisle are talking about.

The President has said he wants a so-called public option so there will be a government insurance company that will be a place where everybody could go for coverage if they don't have it. I happen to think there are better ways of getting everybody covered. To the extent we have some people who need help in getting coverage, the government can provide that help without changing the kind of coverage all the rest of us have. Surveys show, by about two to one, Americans believe we should help people get insurance who don't have it. But by the same rough numbers, everybody says: However, you don't need to affect my coverage in order to do that. In other words, I have insurance. I like it. I want to keep it. I don't want to change. I don't want to have to pay through my insurance or through having care rationed in order to make sure somebody else gets care. The bottom line is, we all want that sacred doctor-patient relationship maintained.

One might ask: Why would we be worried that this comparative effectiveness research might be used to ration care? Is there anything in the legislation that suggests this is going to happen? As it turns out, in both the bill that came from the HELP Committee and the legislation that will be drafted in the Finance Committee, there are organizations that are going to do this research that could, in fact, ration care. In the HELP Committee bill, there is a specific provision that a government entity is going to be created to conduct this research and nothing whatsoever prohibits that entity from denying care based upon the application of rationing. The same is true under the plan talked about in the Finance Committee. There a private entity is organized, but there is nothing that would prevent the Federal Government from rationing the care that is researched by the private entity.

The HELP Committee creates what it calls the agency for health care research and quality in the Department of Health and Human Services. In the Finance Committee, it is a private research entity. But in neither case is the Federal Government prohibited from using this comparative effectiveness research in rationing care.

In addition, the HELP Committee bill establishes a medical advisory council. The medical advisory council is specifically given very broad authority to make recommendations on health benefits coverage; in other words, what is covered by the Federal Government. Obviously, when the Federal Government sets rules, insurance companies frequently apply those same kind of rules. We don't want the government, rather than patients and doctors, making decisions about how much health care or what health care one would have.

Another point I have tried to make to colleagues is, if they think the Federal Government isn't considering this, think about what some people have said in the Federal Government about allocating treatment based upon cost. No less than the Acting Director of the National Institutes of Health, Raynard Kington, announced that the NIH could use this stimulus money, money in the so-called stimulus bill that pays for comparative effectiveness research, to ration care just as is done in other countries. The NIH released a list of research topics and called for the inclusion of rigorous cost effectiveness analysis because "cost effectiveness research will provide accurate and objective information to guide future policies that support the allocation of health resources for the treatment of acute and chronic diseases." "Allocation of resources" is a euphemism for rationing of health care. Similar statements have been made by Larry Summers. Frankly, the President himself has talked about this, not in those specific terms, but in a recent interview with the New York Times he said:

What I think government can do effectively is to be an honest broker in assessing and evaluating treatment options.

If the government is going to be a broker in treatment options, that also is a euphemism for deciding what it is going to pay for and what it will not. In other words, what one can and cannot get.

When a former Senator and at one point candidate for HHS Secretary talked about this, he acknowledged in a book he wrote that doctors and patients might resent any encroachment on their ability to use certain treatments, but he called for the same kind of body in his book that would, in effect, allocate treatments based upon this kind of cost research.

There are many others who have spoken about it as well. We know from experience that this hasn't worked out so well in countries that have tried it such as Great Britain and Canada. In fact, I will quote one other individual who has talked about this, a professor at the Harvard Business School. Regina Herzlinger said that the comparative effectiveness research in the stimulus bill could easily morph into what she called "an instrument of health care rationing by the federal government."

There are comparisons to what is being done in Great Britain and other European countries and Canada; ironically, at a time when those countries are actually turning away from the federal monopoly or the national monopoly because of the fact that it has resulted in rationing of care that the citizens of those countries don't like.

A former head of the American Medical Association, which has endorsed the legislation Senator McCONNELL and I are introducing, said in an op-ed in the Chicago Tribune today, talking about the British agency, for which, ironically, the acronym is NICE:

For example, the agency that makes these decisions in the United Kingdom determined that we are all worth $22,750 or six months of life or $125 a day. I'm sorry. But $125 is the cost of a nice date with my wife, not the value of my life.

What he is talking about is something called quality adjusted life years which is the British definition of the value they are going to place on a life for the purpose of comparing the cost done by this cost effectiveness research to see whether the cost of the treatment outweighs the value of the life. Think about that. Let me quote from the NICE Web site. It stands for National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence, NICE. Here is what it says on Great Britain's Web site:

With the rapid advances in modern medicine, most people accept that no publicly funded health care system, including the NHS, can possibly pay for any new medical treatment that becomes available.

If the Federal Government has a monopoly, it probably doesn't have enough money to pay for every treatment that becomes available. It goes on to say:

The enormous costs involved mean that choices have to be made.

That is why they ration care in Great Britain. It goes on:

The QALY [quality-adjusted life year] method helps us measure these factors so we can compare different treatments for the same and different conditions.

It is an idea of how much extra months or years of life of reasonable quality a person might gain as a result of the treatment.

Each drug is considered on a case-by-case basis. Generally, however, if a treatment costs more than 20,000 to 30,000 pounds per [quality-adjusted life year], then it would not be considered cost effective.

And they don't give it to you.

We have many examples of people in Great Britain who are denied care because the government has decided that the cost of the treatment is more than the quality-adjusted life year. This is adjusted for age so that the older you get, even though the treatment may cost less, you are less likely to get it because of your age. Think about that for a moment. If something costs $20,000 in the United States and you are 65 years of age and they decide that they can't afford to pay for it, is that what the United States of America is all about? Is that what our government should be telling us? Should the government have the right to say: Based on this research we have done, you can't have that treatment?

If you believe that can't happen in the United States, I think it can. It has happened in Great Britain and Canada. Our legislation says it can't. So what is the harm in adopting our legislation? That is the question I will be asking of anyone who says it is not necessary.

I want to put the question: Then what harm does it do to say that this research can't be used by the Federal Government to deny or delay treatment? I hope my colleagues will appreciate that health care is the most important thing to all of us for our families. Whatever else we may think needs to be done to reform health care, the one thing we can all agree on is, it should not result in rationing of health care for Americans. Our legislation is one step in that process. It doesn't preclude rationing of health care in other ways. But at least it says comparative effectiveness research cannot be used in order to ration care. I hope our colleagues will view this legislation as an important step we can take.

Let me give a couple examples I said I would provide. There is a fellow by the name of Rocky Fernandez, a kidney cancer patient in Britain. He was given 2 months to live when the cancer spread to his lungs. His doctor wanted to prescribe a drug called Sutent, a new drug for advanced kidney cancer, but the government said no. He and thousands of other cancer patients protested the government's decision. This is what you would have to do, I gather. The government ultimately reversed its decision and, fortunately, he was able to begin taking the drug. The British health authorities knew this wasn't the end, that as more costly life extending drugs would become available, patients would demand access to the drugs and the government would be faced with increasingly difficult decisions. So faced with a finite pot of resources, the British health authorities decided that expensive drugs like Sutent would only be approved under specific conditions: They must extend life by 3 months, and they must be used for illnesses that affect fewer than 7,000 patients a year.

Is that what we want in the United States? Before you could get a drug that would give you better quality of life or extend your life, the government is going to run through tests like this. And if it doesn't meet the test, you don't get the drug? This is the danger of a government-run system. In effect, bureaucrats in the government become health care cops. We don't want that in America.

In the reform legislation that we end up acting on, I hope we can all agree that one of the things we can do to prevent this rationing is to at least say we will do no harm. We will not allow this comparative effectiveness research to be used by the Federal Government to deny our care.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the op-ed from the Chicago Tribune by Dr. Palmisano from which I quoted earlier.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, June 15, 2009]

REFORM MEASURES SHOULD NOT WEAKEN OUR HEALTH CARE

(By Donald J. Palmisano)

Over the past several decades, our nation has built the finest health-care system in the world. From birth to death we value and care for life. Surgeons can perform life-saving heart surgery on a child that is still in utero. Expert trauma doctors can save the life of a mother who was badly hurt in a car crash. And end-of-life specialists can provide compassionate palliative care to seniors to ensure their last days are spent in comfort.

This didn't all just magically happen. But it could all magically go away.

Swirling around us is a great debate that will decide the future of medical care in America. There are those who desire a single-payer system, although the "single payer" would be the 100 million Americans who pay taxes. It would leave the government in charge of our medical choices. But since single-payer advocates know the majority of Americans oppose such a system, they have decided to advance an alternative—known as the public option.

Either approach would seriously weaken the health-care system we enjoy today. The public option would cost $1.2 trillion to $1.8 trillion to set up. Is that something our nation can afford, especially considering the latest estimates that Medicare is going to be bankrupt in 10 years?

Is it the goal of some individuals to eventually wipe out all private insurance plans and house all health care under the umbrella of the federal government? These types of government-controlled systems already exist in other countries, and all have stories of patients who had to wait months to see specialists. It's common to hear of patients who were not allowed to get the treatment their doctor prescribed because a bureaucratic decision was made on the value of their life. For example, the agency that makes these decisions in the United Kingdom determined that we are all worth $22,750 for six months of life—or $125 a day. I'm sorry, but $125 is the cost of a nice date with my wife, not the value of life.

The American Medical Association, representing more than 250,000 physicians, and an organization I once led, recently came out in opposition to the proposed public plan, saying that it "threatens to restrict patient choice" and that it "would likely lead to an explosion of costs that would need to be absorbed by taxpayers."

That position comes from studying government-controlled health care elsewhere. During my year as president of the AMA, I was able to visit and see firsthand the success and failures of other health-care systems. I recall meeting with the chairman of the British Medical Association in June 2003, when he characterized his nation's single-payer health-care system as "the stifling of innovation by excessive, intrusive audit . . . the shackling of doctors by prescribing guidelines, referral guidelines and protocols . . . the suffocation of professional responsibility by target-setting and production line values that leave little room for the professional judgment of individual doctors or the needs of individual patients."

And what else will happen when the government asserts its control over health care? Medical creativity, discovery and innovation—the same creativity and discovery and innovation that we have relied on for generations—will dry up. Today, millions of Americans rely on statins to reduce their risk of heart attack. The new da Vinci surgical system is already revolutionizing the way surgery is performed in operating rooms across the country. And wounded veterans are being fitted with next-generation prosthetic limbs so they can walk again.

Only in America.

We must find ways to expand access to affordable health care to the uninsured. America can solve the current problems with a system that expands insurance coverage through tax credits, consumer choice and market enhancements. However, in the process of expanding care, we cannot create a weaker system for the 80 percent of Americans who are happy with their coverage. It would be a serious mistake to have a government-controlled micromanaged medical system that would result in diminished quality of care, long waiting lines for doctors' visits and surgical care, a lack of access to emerging technologies and the virtual end to new and hopeful medical discovery. Health care shouldn't be dictated to us by a faceless bureaucrat in Washington.

A lot is at stake as the nation engages in the health-care debate. Will we have a system that puts the patient in control with the doctor as trusted adviser, or a government-run system that ultimately rations care and stifles innovation and self-determination? I hope it's the former.

Mr. KYL. We have actually seen the danger in using this kind of research for rationing of care in another context. When we created Medicare Part D, which provides drugs to seniors, we saw the danger of rationing of drugs, and so we specifically provided, in the Medicare Modernization Act, an explicit provision that says you can't use cost-effective analysis to allocate the drugs. It is prohibited there. What we should do is take that same policy and apply it to the rest of our health care, to seniors who are on Medicare and to the rest of the population, to the extent the Federal Government will be able to dictate its care. We have not provided that same protection for any other care, and that is what our legislation, the PATIENTS Act, would do.

The final thing I wish to discuss is the notion that we can have a government-run insurance plan and that somehow that will be healthy for Americans. Stop and think, a government-run option or government option would be the Federal Government making decisions about care. So while you may decide it is a lot cheaper because the Federal Government can subsidize the insurance plan, the government will actually be deciding what kind of coverage you get. This is one of the areas we are concerned about in using this comparative effectiveness research. Because clearly the so-called public option, in order to keep costs down, could end up rationing care. That is OK if it is merely an option and people figured out, wait a minute, even though it is cheaper, I don't want this. But what Lewin and Associates, a health care consulting group, says is that unfortunately, because private employers are likely to dump their employees into the government-run system, about two-thirds of the people who have insurance today, 119 million people, would end up with the government-run plan rather than the private insurance they have today. When the President says, if you like your insurance coverage, you get to keep it, I hope what he means is that we won't do anything in our legislation to make that more difficult.

But if, in fact, the predictions of consulting groups such as Lewin come true, what will happen is, employers, faced with the situation where it is much cheaper for them to insure their employees through this government-run plan, will take 119 million people and transfer them from private insurance to government insurance. At that point, you do not have any option. So the government-run plan is not like it is an option for you, unless you want to change jobs to an employer that is willing to maintain the coverage. And those are going to be few and far between. The same thing is true with the individual health care market.

The bottom line is, when people say to you: Well, if you like your coverage, you are going to be able to keep it, that is not true. Incidentally, under the bill that is being written by the Finance Committee, that is explicitly not true either. That is why we are concerned about this. Because even though you may like the insurance you have today and say: The Federal Government can't tell me what care I can get, it will not be too much longer before that may not be true. You will have the government insurance, and it will tell you what care it can give you.

When we talk about the fact that we are eager for health reform, what we are talking about is allowing people to keep their current coverage; allowing them to take their coverage with them; that is to say, it is portable when you leave one job and you go to another job, to make sure you cannot be denied care because you have a preexisting condition; and if you need financial help in getting insurance, to find a way to provide that financial help.

We believe those are better solutions to making sure everyone is insured than providing a public option. It is a little like the government taking over General Motors. The only difference is, it is one thing if the people who are now running General Motors make a mistake. It is usually not going to be a life-or-death situation. But it is a whole new ball game if the government is deciding you cannot get a particular drug or a particular kind of surgery that your doctor says you need.

The bottom line is, Washington-run health care has significant dangers in it—more than if you are going to run the insurance companies or the car companies or the banks. When you have a Medical Advisory Council, as the HELP Committee legislation provides, or a National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence—NICE—as in Great Britain, it is anything but nice when your health care is denied to you.

What we are trying to prevent by this legislation, for the final time, is a situation where the government is in a position to tell you that you cannot have a certain drug or treatment or device your doctor has said you need because they use this comparative effectiveness research to say: Well, in your case, you are not going to live much longer anyway. It is not cost effective for us to buy that for you.

That is not the American way. As I said, it is ironic countries such as Canada and Great Britain are actually beginning to now provide private alternatives because they know they cannot take care of all their citizens, and they know there is a revolt going on in their countries about people who are not getting the care they need. So the safety valve for that is to provide an option for the private sector to actually provide for this coverage.

Why would we want to replicate their basic mistake in so-called health care reform? There are easier, less costly, and less harmful ways to do that than the legislation that is being proposed that would allow comparative effectiveness research to ration your care.

I hope my colleagues will take a look at our legislation, S. 1259. If they would like to cosponsor it, we would love to have support because when this issue gets to the floor, we will want our colleagues to weigh in and send a very strong message that comparative effectiveness research is great but it is not good if it is used to deny care or to ration care to the American people. That we have to put an absolute stop to right now, and our legislation would do that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1261. A bill to repeal title II of the REAL ID Act of 2005 and amend title II of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 to better protect the security, confidentiality, and integrity of personally identifiable information collected by States when issuing driver’s licenses and identification documents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today I am, along with Senators VOINOVICH, LEAHY, TESTER, BAUCUS, and CARPER, introducing the Providing for Additional Security in States’ Identification Act of 2009, or the PASS ID Act.

This bill represents a pragmatic approach to resolving many of the most troubling aspects of the REAL ID Act, which has been in place for the past 4 years. REAL ID was intended to implement the 9/11 Commission’s recommendation for enhancing the security of drivers’ licenses. I support the 9/11 Commission’s recommendation, but I have been a long-time opponent of the existing REAL ID Act due to the tremendous financial burden it imposes on States and the serious privacy risks it creates.

Initially, DHS estimated the cost of implementing REAL ID to be $23 billion, of which $14 billion would be borne by the States. In the final regulations, DHS’s overall cost estimate decreased to $10 billion, $4 billion of which States would have to pay. Many States are facing serious budget shortfalls and simply cannot afford this cost.

Additionally, REAL ID calls for all States to store copies of individuals’ documents such as birth certificates and their photographs in databases and to provide all other State Departments of Motor Vehicles with access to that information. REAL ID does not require any privacy protection of these State databases, which would contain massive amounts of personal information. These databases could provide one-stop shopping for identity thieves and the backbone for a national identification database.

Because of these problems, the Department of Homeland Security has been forced to provide a series of extensions for compliance. All 50 States plus the District of Columbia and the territories were granted extensions until December 31, 2009. DHS may automatically grant States further extensions to May 11, 2011, if they meet certain benchmarks for compliance. Under the final regulations, complete implementation is required by December 1, 2017. Even under this drawn out timeline, it is unclear if many States will comply. Several States, including Hawaii, have passed resolutions expressing their opposition to REAL ID. Eleven States have outright rejected REAL ID, putting millions of Americans at risk of not being able to enter Federal facilities or board commercial airplanes next year if they do not meet DHS benchmarks. Americans’ personal information could also be compromised if REAL ID were to fully take effect in its current form. This simply cannot be allowed to happen.

Because of my grave concerns with the REAL ID program, during the last Congress, I along with several of my colleagues introduced the Identity Security Enhancement Act, which would have repealed the REAL ID Act and replaced it with a negotiated rulemaking process that would have enhanced the security of State driver’s licenses while also providing for strong privacy protections. Unfortunately, this bill did not advance, and we are now closer than ever to forcing states to ensure compliance with REAL ID.

I along with my colleagues, the Department of Homeland Security, privacy and civil liberties groups, and the National Governors Association and National Council of State Legislators—representing a broad range of views on REAL ID—have been working together to develop a bill that will address the onerous problems with REAL ID in a practical manner that can win bipartisan support. I believe that the bill we are introducing represents a pragmatic alternative to REAL ID, which will save States considerable money and address the most troubling aspects of the REAL ID Act.

The PASS ID Act does exactly what the 9/11 Commission recommended: it sets strong security standards for the issuance of identification cards and driver’s licenses. What it does not do is go far beyond that recommendation by requiring the collection of Americans’ personal information and storing it in a centralized repository accessible by any State government. This legislation starts with repealing the existing flawed REAL ID Act, and replaces it with a modification of the original act that peels away the most troubling aspects that add high costs without real security benefits, and implements strong new protections to protect the privacy rights of individuals.

Perhaps the most important improvement in the PASS ID Act is the removal of the mandate that States share all of their driver’s license data with each of the other States. This provision created a clear risk to the privacy of all Americans’ personal information and posed a great risk for identity theft and fraud. Moreover, it was this provision that raised the specter of a national database of all Americans’ personal information. The PASS ID Act instead will allow States to continue to maintain their own individual databases with more stringent security requirements.

In addition, the PASS ID Act includes all of the privacy protections called for in my previous bill, the Identity Security Enhancement Act. The bill calls on the States to put procedures in place to protect information that is stored or transmitted in an electronic format. The bill also for the first time protects any machine readable data stored on identification cards and driver’s licenses themselves. In particular, Social Security numbers, which are not allowed to be printed on the face of a license, would no longer be allowed to be stored in the machine readable zone, MRZ, of a license either.

Because of the ability of licenses to hold more and more electronic information, it is also important to institute important new protections for the use of the data stored on licenses. A new industry is growing up surrounding the collection and sale of data stored in MRZs for marketing purposes. Often people are not informed that their personal information is being collected and might be tracked with their purchases or sold to third parties. This bill would allow scanning of licenses to support law enforcement purposes but not for other purposes. For example, a store would be able to scan a driver's license to double check that the patron is old enough to buy alcohol, but it would not be allowed to sell the information on the card to marketers. This is an important step forward to ensure that privacy and security protections keep pace with technology, while still ensuring that the MRZ can be used for its intended purposes.

The other change that I want to point out is the clarification of Americans' right to travel on commercial aircraft and to enter Federal buildings. The current law restricts these rights by requiring a REAL ID to board commercial aircraft and to enter Federal buildings. This bill recognizes the importance of secure identification to increase the safety and security of commercial air travel and a narrower range of Federal buildings. Compliant State identification will remain the preferred method to board an aircraft, but the PASS ID Act will clarify that people cannot be denied boarding solely because they lack secure identification. The Transportation Security Administration will resolve any security concerns with people lacking a PASS ID the same way they resolve other security issues—with additional screening or other inquiries as needed. Additionally, PASS ID would narrow the secure identification requirement from all Federal buildings to only Federal facilities containing mission functions critical to homeland security, national security, or defense.

This bill does not address all of my concerns with REAL ID. Some others will be disappointed that it does not address all of their concerns. However, the reality that we face is that in less than a year, States will be required to comply with a law on the books that simply is overly burdensome and unworkable. I believe that the legislation introduced today is the best bill that can garner broad bipartisan support. It represents a strong step toward fixing the most serious shortfalls in the REAL ID Act and would introduce long-overdue, important new protections. We cannot let the perfect be the enemy of the good, especially when we are working to address a seriously flawed law already on the books.

I urge my colleagues to talk to your Governors and other State government officials, your constituents, and to privacy experts to understand just how much this legislation does to improve existing law. By taking the time to work with all stakeholders, I think that we have achieved a solution that leaves us much better off than we are today.

As always, my goal remains to ensure the privacy rights of all Americans, and I will continue to work closely with the Department of Homeland Security to ensure that privacy rights are protected fully during the implementation of PASS ID.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Ms. CANTWELL:

S. 1262. A bill to amend title VII of the Public Health Service Act and titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide additional resources for primary care services, to create new payment models for services under Medicare, to expand provision of non-institutionally-based long-term services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Medical Efficiency and Delivery Improvement of Care Act, MEDIC, a bill which provides common-sense solutions to many of the most critical problems besetting our health care system. As we embark on reforming health care in America, we are faced with restructuring a system as complex as it is important—a system which includes not only doctors and patients but medical schools, nursing homes, hospitals and community health centers. While every piece of the health care puzzle requires individual attention, one common thread connects them all: the need for improved efficiency among providers though increased access to primary care physicians. They are the ones who can provide coordinated care for patients, leading to better quality and a more efficient system. That is why I am introducing this bill as a vehicle for proposals which increase the efficiency and coordination across the health care spectrum to improve health and save money.

In my State of Washington doctors and hospitals provide some of the a highest quality and most cost-efficient care in the nation. However, instead of rewarding our State for reining in unnecessary costs and improving the health of patients, the current system actually penalizes them. Under the current fee-for-service structure we have today, health care providers are rewarded for maximizing the number of services they provide rather than focusing primarily on health outcomes. This provides a financial disincentive to efficient care because such efficiencies actually result in decreased payments. My bill addresses this issue by linking physician payments to the quality of care they provide, not the amount of services they perform. At the same time, the bill recognizes the need to allow for the differences in the cost of doing business across different regions. The resulting policy creates a fair payment system that increases the overall quality of care while resulting in a savings of $55 billion a year off the Medicare rolls.

The backbone of our health care system is comprised of the men and women who devote their lives to the practice of medicine. While our nation's physician workforce is the best in the world, current policies have left our primary care network woefully lacking, leaving many families—especially those in rural areas—without access to basic care. As few as 2 percent of medical students opt for careers in family medicine and general surgery primarily due to the low pay associated with such specialties. Therefore, a fundamental goal of reform must be expanding the primary care workforce. My legislation includes provisions which provide financial incentives for medical students and teaching hospitals—such as interest-free loans and scholarships for students going into primary care, and increased funding for small and rural hospitals to improve their primary care residency programs. The bill also calls for increasing payments to primary care physicians currently in practice. These policies will result in an improved primary care infrastructure throughout the nation, providing for quality primary care today and well into the future.

Finally, we cannot address health care reform without addressing the needs the individuals who require it the most: those in long-term care. For many older Americans and people with disabilities, long-term care is not a luxury but a necessity, a required service needed to maintain their overall quality of life. Traditionally this care has been provided in institutions such as nursing homes, which can cost upwards of $70,000 a year. While some people require the around-the-clock care provided in nursing homes, many of those in need of long-term care would be better off remaining in their homes where they can continue to be active members of the community. Home- and community-based services provide people the care they need in non-institutional settings, which, in addition to saving a significant amount of money, allows for the freedom and independence to which people are accustomed. This legislation contains several provisions which provide States with the resources they need to move away from institutional long-term care and towards home- and community-based services, such as increasing Federal Medicaid dollars to transition to home- and community-based services, and providing incentives to create consolidated information centers so consumers and their families can make well-informed decisions about long-term care options. If we gave just 5 percent of those who go into nursing homes the ability to receive care in their own homes and communities, the Federal Government would see a net savings of more than $10 billion over 5 years. This significant savings can be achieved while simultaneously providing better care; a truly win-win situation.

In introducing this bill I am reminding my colleagues that reforming health care need not be a zero-sum game. We can achieve our goals of improving the health care workforce, stabilizing the physician payment structure, improving access to needed care and decreasing the financial and emotional burdens associated with long-term care while simultaneously providing significant savings throughout the health care system. I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Senate to ensure these critical reforms are enacted.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1262

TITLE II—PRIMARY CARE PROVISIONS

SEC. 2001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Preserving Patient Access to Primary Care Act of 2009”.

SEC. 2002. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Approximately 21 percent of physicians who were board certified in general internal medicine during the early 1990s have left internal medicine, compared to a 5 percent departure rate for those who were certified in subspecialties of internal medicine.

(2) The number of United States medical graduates going into family medicine has fallen by more than 50 percent from 1997 to 2005.

(3) In 2007, only 88 percent of the available medicine residency positions were filled and only 42 percent of those were filled by United States medical school graduates.

(4) In 2006, only 24 percent of third-year internal medicine resident intended to pursue careers in general internal medicine, down from 54 percent in 1998.

(5) Primary care physicians serve as the point of first contact for most patients and are able to coordinate the care of the whole person, reducing unnecessary care and duplicative testing.

(6) Primary care physicians and primary care providers practicing preventive care, including screening for illness and treating diseases, can help prevent complications that result in more costly care.

(7) Patients with primary care physicians or primary care providers have lower health care expenditures and primary care is correlated with better health status, lower overall mortality, and longer life expectancy.

(8) Higher proportions of primary care physicians are associated with significantly reduced utilization.

(9) The United States has a higher ratio of specialists to primary care physicians than other industrialized nations and the population of the United States is growing faster than the expected rate of growth in the supply of primary care physicians.

(10) The number of Americans age 65 and older, those eligible for Medicare and who use far more ambulatory care visits per person as those under age 65, is expected to double from 2000 to 2030.

(11) A decrease in Federal spending to carry out programs authorized by title VII of the Public Health Service Act threatens the viability of one of the programs used to solve the problem of inadequate access to primary care.

(12) The National Health Service Corps program has a proven record of supplying physicians to underserved areas, and has played an important role in expanding access for underserved populations in rural and inner city communities.

(13) Individuals in many geographic areas, especially rural areas, lack adequate access to high quality preventive, primary health care, contributing to significant health disparities that impair America's public health and economic productivity.

(14) About 20 percent of the population of the United States resides in primary medical care Health Professional Shortage Areas.

SEC. 2326. DISTRIBUTION OF ADDITIONAL RESIDENCY POSITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1886(h) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(h)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4)(F)(i), by striking “paragraph (7)” and inserting “paragraphs (7) and (8)”;

(2) in paragraph (4)(H)(i), by striking “paragraph (7)” and inserting “paragraphs (7) and (8)”;

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(8) DISTRIBUTION OF ADDITIONAL RESIDENCY POSITIONS.—

“(A) ADDITIONAL RESIDENCY POSITIONS.—

“(i) REDUCTION IN LIMIT BASED ON UNUSED POSITIONS.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall reduce the otherwise applicable resident limit for a hospital that the Secretary determines had residency positions that were unused for all 5 of the most recent cost reporting periods ending prior to the date of enactment of this paragraph by an amount that is equal to the number of such unused residency positions.

“(II) EXCEPTION FOR RURAL HOSPITALS AND CERTAIN OTHER HOSPITALS.—This subparagraph shall not apply to a hospital—

“(aa) located in a rural area (as defined in subsection (d)(2)(D)(ii));

“(bb) that has participated in a voluntary reduction plan under paragraph (6); or

“(cc) that has participated in a demonstration project approved as of October 31, 2003, under the authority of section 402 of Public Law 90-248.

“(i) NUMBER AVAILABLE FOR DISTRIBUTION.—The number of additional residency positions available for distribution under subparagraph (B) shall be an amount that the Secretary determines would result in a 15 percent increase in the aggregate number of full-time equivalent residents in approved medical training programs (as determined based on the most recent cost reports available at the time of distribution). One-third of such number shall only be available for distribution to hospitals described in subclause (I) of subparagraph (B)(ii) under such subparagraph.

“(B) DISTRIBUTION.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall increase the otherwise applicable resident limit for each qualifying hospital that submits an application under this subparagraph by such number as the Secretary may approve for portions of cost reporting periods occurring on or after the date of enactment of this paragraph. The aggregate number of increases in the otherwise applicable resident limit under this subparagraph shall be equal to the number of additional residency positions available for distribution under subparagraph (A)(ii).

“(ii) DISTRIBUTION TO HOSPITALS ALREADY OPERATING OVER RESIDENT LIMIT.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subclause (II), in the case of a hospital in which the reference resident level of the hospital (as defined in clause (ii)) is greater than the otherwise applicable resident limit, the increase in the otherwise applicable resident limit under this subparagraph shall be an amount equal to the product of the total number of additional residency positions available for distribution under subparagraph (A)(ii) and the quotient of—

“(aa) the number of resident positions by which the reference resident level of the hospital exceeds the otherwise applicable resident limit for the hospital; and hospitals with respect to which an application is approved under this subparagraph exceeds the otherwise applicable resident limit for such hospitals.

“(II) REQUIREMENTS.—A hospital described in subclause (I)—

“(aa) is not eligible for an increase in the otherwise applicable resident limit under this subparagraph unless the amount by which the reference resident level of the hospital exceeds the otherwise applicable resident limit is not less than 10 and the hospital trains at least 25 percent of the full-time equivalent residents of the hospital in primary care and general surgery (as of the date of enactment of this paragraph); and

“(bb) shall continue to train at least 25 percent of the full-time equivalent residents of the hospital in primary care and general surgery for the 10-year period beginning on such date.

In the case where the Secretary determines that a hospital no longer meets the requirement of item (bb), the Secretary may reduce the otherwise applicable resident limit of the hospital by the amount by which such limit was increased under this clause.

“(III) CLARIFICATION REGARDING ELIGIBILITY FOR OTHER ADDITIONAL RESIDENCY POSITIONS.—Nothing in this clause shall be construed as preventing a hospital described in subclause (I) from applying for additional residency positions under this paragraph that are not reserved for distribution under this clause.

“(iii) REFERENCE RESIDENT LEVEL.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in subclause (II), the reference resident level specified in this clause for a hospital is the resident level for the most recent cost reporting period of the hospital ending on or before the date of enactment of this paragraph, for which a cost report has been settled (or, if not, submitted (subject to audit)), as determined by the Secretary.

“(II) USE OF MOST RECENT ACCOUNTING PERIOD TO RECOGNIZE EXPANSION OF EXISTING PROGRAM OR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW PROGRAM.—If a hospital submits a timely request to increase its resident level due to an expansion of an existing residency training program or the establishment of a new residency training program that is not reflected on the most recent cost report that has been settled (or, if not, submitted (subject to audit)), after audit and subject to the discretion of the Secretary, the reference resident level for such hospital is the resident level for the cost reporting period that includes the additional residents attributable to such expansion or establishment, as determined by the Secretary.

“(C) CONSIDERATIONS IN REDISTRIBUTION.—In determining for which hospitals the increase in the otherwise applicable resident limit is provided under subparagraph (B) (other than an increase under subparagraph (B)(ii)), the Secretary shall take into account the demonstrated likelihood of the hospital filling the positions within the first 3 cost reporting periods beginning on or after July 1, 2010, made available under this paragraph, as determined by the Secretary.

“(D) PRIORITY FOR CERTAIN AREAS.—In determining for which hospitals the increase in the otherwise applicable resident limit is provided under subparagraph (B) (other than an increase under subparagraph (B)(ii)), the Secretary shall distribute the increase to hospitals based on the following criteria:

“(i) The Secretary shall give preference to hospitals that submit applications for new primary care and general surgery residency positions. In the case of any increase based on such preference, a hospital shall ensure that—

“(I) the position made available as a result of such increase remains a primary care or general surgery residency position for not less than 10 years after the date on which the position is filled; and

“(II) the total number of primary care and general surgery residency positions in the hospital (determined based on the number of such positions as of the date of such increase, including any position added as a result of such increase) is not decreased during such 10-year period.

In the case where the Secretary determines that a hospital no longer meets the requirement of subclause (II), the Secretary may reduce the otherwise applicable resident limit of the hospital by the amount by which such limit was increased under this paragraph.

“(ii) The Secretary shall give preference to hospitals that emphasizes training in community health centers and other community-based clinical settings.

“(iii) The Secretary shall give preference to hospitals in States that have more medical students than residency positions available (including a greater preference for those States with smaller resident-to-medical-student ratios). In determining the number of medical students in a State for purposes of the preceding sentence, the Secretary shall include planned students at medical schools which have provisional accreditation by the Liaison Committee on Medical Education or the American Osteopathic Association.

“(iv) The Secretary shall give preference to hospitals in States that have low resident-to-population ratios (including a greater preference for those States with lower resident-to-population ratios).

“(E) LIMITATION.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), in no case may a hospital (other than a hospital described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I), subject to the limitation under subparagraph (B)(ii)(III)) apply for more than 50 full-time equivalent additional residency positions under this paragraph.

“(ii) INCREASE IN NUMBER OF ADDITIONAL POSITIONS AVAILABLE FOR DISTRIBUTION.—The Secretary shall increase the number of full-time equivalent additional residency positions a hospital may apply for under this paragraph if the Secretary determines that the number of additional residency positions available for distribution under subparagraph (A)(ii) exceeds the number of such applications approved.

“(F) APPLICATION OF PER RESIDENT AMOUNTS FOR PRIMARY CARE AND NONPRIMARY CARE.—With respect to additional residency positions in a hospital attributable to the increase provided under this paragraph, the approved FTE resident amounts are deemed to be equal to the hospital per resident amounts for primary care and nonprimary care computed under paragraph (2)(D) for that hospital.

“(G) DISTRIBUTION.—The Secretary shall distribute the increase to hospitals under this paragraph not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this paragraph.”.

TITLE III—MEDICARE PAYMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 3001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Medicare Payment Improvement Act of 2009”.

SEC. 3002. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The health care delivery system must be realigned to provide better clinical outcomes, safety, and patient satisfaction at lower cost. This should be a common goal for all health care professionals, hospitals, and other groups. Today’s reimbursement system pays the most to those who perform the most services, and therefore can provide disincentives to efficient and high-quality providers.

(2) The regional inequities in Medicare reimbursement penalize areas that have cost-effective health care delivery systems and reward those States that have high utilization rates and provide inefficient care.

(3) According to the Dartmouth Health Atlas, over the past 10 years, a number of studies have explored the relationship between higher spending and the quality and outcomes of care. The findings are remarkably consistent, concluding that higher spending does not result in better quality of care.

(4) New payment models should be developed to move away from paying for quantity and instead paying for improving health and truly rewarding effective and efficient care.

SEC. 3003. VALUE INDEX UNDER THE MEDICARE PHYSICIAN FEE SCHEDULE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1848(e)(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-4 (e)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(6) VALUE INDEX.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall determine a value index for each fee schedule area. The value index shall be the ratio of the quality component under subparagraph (B) to the cost component under subparagraph (C) for that fee schedule area.

“(B) QUALITY COMPONENT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The quality component shall be based on a composite score that reflects quality measures available on a State or fee schedule area basis. The measures shall reflect health outcomes and health status for the Medicare population, patient safety, and patient satisfaction. The Secretary shall use the best data available, after consultation with the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality and with private entities that compile quality data.

“(ii) ADVISORY GROUP.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of the Medicare Payment Improvement Act of 2009, the Secretary shall establish a group of experts and stakeholders to make consensus recommendations to the Secretary regarding development of the quality component. The membership of the advisory group shall at least reflect providers, purchasers, health plans, researchers, relevant Federal agencies, and individuals with technical expertise on health care quality.

“(II) DUTIES.—In the development of recommendations with respect to the quality component, the group established under subclause (I) shall consider at least the following areas:

“(aa) High cost procedures as determined by data under this title.

“(cc) The continuity, management, and coordination of health care and care transitions, including episodes of care, for patients across the continuum of providers, health care settings, and health plans.

“(dd) Patient, caregiver, and authorized representative experience, quality and relevance of information provided to patients, caregivers, and authorized representatives, and use of information by patients, caregivers, and authorized representatives to inform decision making.

“(ee) The safety, effectiveness, and timeliness of care.

“(ff) The appropriate use of health care resources and services.

“(gg) Other items determined appropriate by the Secretary.

“(iii) REQUIREMENT.—In establishing the quality component under this subparagraph, the Secretary shall—

“(I) take into account the recommendations of the group established under clause (ii)(I); and “(II) provide for an open and transparent process for the activities conducted pursuant to the convening of such group with respect to the development of the quality component.

“(iv) ESTABLISHMENT.—The quality component for each fee schedule area shall be the ratio of the quality score for such area to the national average quality score.

“(v) QUALITY BASELINE.—If the quality component for a fee schedule area does not rank in the top 25th percentile as compared to the national average (as determined by the Secretary) and the amount of reimbursement for services under this section is greater than the amount of reimbursement for such services that would have applied under this section if the amendments made by section 2 of the Medicare Payment Improvement Act of 2009 had not been enacted, this section shall be applied as if such amendments had not been enacted.

“(vi) APPLICATION.—In the case of a fee schedule area that is less than an entire State, if available quality data is not sufficient to measure quality at the sub-State level, the quality component for a sub-State fee schedule area shall be the quality component for the entire State.

“(C) COST COMPONENT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The cost component shall be total annual per beneficiary Medicare expenditures under part A and this part for the fee schedule area. The Secretary may use total per beneficiary expenditures under such parts in the last two years of life as an alternative measure if the Secretary determines that such measure better takes into account severity differences among fee schedule areas.

“(ii) ESTABLISHMENT.—The cost component for a fee schedule area shall be the ratio of the cost per beneficiary for such area to the national average cost per beneficiary.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1848 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-4) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1)(C), by striking “geographic” and inserting “geographic and value”; and

By Mr. UDALL, of Colorado (for himself and Mr. BENNET):

S. 1264. A bill to require the Secretary of the Interior to assess the irrigation infrastructure of the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project in the State of Colorado and provide grants to, and enter into cooperative agreements with, the Southern Ute Indian Tribe to assess, repair, rehabilitate, or reconstruct existing infrastructure, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. President, today I rise to discuss a bill that I introduced, which seeks to rehabilitate an important irrigation and flood control system that is vital to serving the agricultural and flood protection needs in Southwestern Colorado.

More than 100 years ago, both Indian and non-Indian communities utilized the water from the Los Pinos or Pine River to irrigate areas of Southwest Colorado. As the population and local agriculture grew, so did the need for more advanced infrastructure. In 1936, the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project was authorized by Congress in the Department of Interior Appropriation Act, and in 1937 the project grew the system’s capacity to provide water for over 63,000 acres of land. The development of this project provided much needed protection for crops and communities from spring floods and summer drought.

Today, similar forces of population growth and a steady demand for irrigated water are exacerbated by aging and deteriorating infrastructure, creating a need for a stronger system. The Government Accountability Office has found the deterioration of key project facilities to be severe. As deferred maintenance and upkeep mount, there is a growing threat to water conservation efforts, a reliable water supply, growth in agricultural production, economic sustainability, a safe community, and, equally important, the preservation of culture and livelihood of the Southern Ute Indian Tribe. Though the Southern Ute Tribe and others who live along the Pine River understand the hazards presented by aging infrastructure, more needs to be done to comprehend the full extent of these hazards.

Tribal members, who would like to bring idle lands back into agricultural production and continue as good stewards of the land, cannot be sure if much-needed water will get to their lands as a result of failed structures, overdue maintenance, and inadequate funding. Now, the estimated costs to rehabilitate the system far exceed the ability of water users to pay for improvements while managing profitable operations.

The Pine River Indian Irrigation Project Act of 2009 would fix decades of neglect and inadequate funding for the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project. This legislation would direct the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Commissioner of Reclamation, to fully assess the needs of the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project. It would also grant the authority to the Secretary of the Interior to provide grants to, and enter into cooperative agreements with the Southern Ute Indian Tribe of Colorado to assess and repair infrastructure so that it more suitably meets user needs. The funding that would be provided in this bill is an essential step toward assuring that both Indians and non-Indians have access to the water they need, when they need it. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to move this bill toward passage.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1264

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Pine River Indian Irrigation Project Act of 2009”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS; PURPOSE.

- (a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—
 - (1) drought, population increases, and environmental needs are exacerbating water supply issues across the western United States, including on the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in southwestern Colorado;
 - (2)(A) a report of the Government Accountability Office dated 2006 identified significant issues with the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project, including the issue that, at the time of the study, the Bureau of Indian Affairs estimated that total deferred maintenance costs for the Project exceeded $20,000,000; and
 - (B) other estimates have placed those costs at more than $60,000,000;
 - (3) the report of the Government Accountability Office demonstrates that key facilities of the Project are severely deteriorated;
 - (4) operations and maintenance fees are not sufficient to address the condition of the Project, even though the Bureau of Indian Affairs has sought to double those fees, from $8.50 to $17, in recent years;
 - (5) the report of the Government Accountability Office also notes that a prior study done by the Bureau of Reclamation determined that water users could not afford to pay operations and maintenance fees of $8.50 and operate a profitable farming operation;
 - (6) the benefits of rehabilitating and repairing the irrigation infrastructure of the Project include—
 - (A) water conservation;
 - (B) extending available water supply;
 - (C) increased agricultural production;

(D) economic benefits;
 (E) safer facilities; and
 (F) the preservation of the culture of the Southern Ute Indian Tribe;

(7) while, as of the date of enactment of this Act, the Project is managed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Southern Ute Indian Tribe also receives water from facilities owned or operated by the Bureau of Reclamation; and

(8) rehabilitation and repair of the infrastructure of the Project by the Bureau of Reclamation would improve—

(A) overall water management; and
 (B) the ability of the Southern Ute Indian Tribe and the Bureau of Reclamation to address potential water conflicts.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to require the Secretary of the Interior—

(1) to assess the condition of infrastructure of the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project;

(2) to establish priorities for the rehabilitation of irrigation infrastructure within the Project according to specified criteria; and

(3) to implement rehabilitation activities for the irrigation infrastructure of the Project.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) PROJECT.—The term “Project” means the Pine River Indian Irrigation Project.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary” means the Secretary of the Interior.

would provide an opportunity to conserve water;

(d) COST SHARING REQUIREMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Federal share of the total cost of carrying out an activity using assistance under subsection (a) shall be not more than 75 percent.

(b) STATE WATER LAW.—Nothing in this Act preempts or affects—

(1) any provision of water law of the State; or

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, June 15, 2009

The House met at 12:30 p.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 15, 2009.

I hereby appoint the Honorable DONNA F. EDWARDS to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MORNING-HOUR DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 6, 2009, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning-hour debate.

The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to 30 minutes and each Member, other than the majority and minority leaders and the minority whip, limited to 5 minutes.

THE ECONOMY AND ENERGY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN) for 5 minutes.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Madam Speaker, among the most important issues facing us today are the twin issues of the economy and energy. And unfortunately, in this body and across the other Chamber, we often discuss those two issues separately, as if they had no connection with one another; and yet they have a very, very important link with one another.

When the economy is down, it has an impact on the energy, and when energy prices go up or when energy prices go down, it has an immediate impact on the economy. The strange thing is that as we look at an energy policy that's going to be presented to us by way of a bill from the majority shortly, there appears to be a lack of appreciation for changes in energy policy and their impact on our economy. There seems to be some sort of question as to whether or not we ought to exercise our responsibilities to utilize those energy sources that are most abundant in these United States.

Coal appears to be one of those things that we're going to wrap up, close up, put on the shelf, not allow ourselves to use it. Rather than a real effort for clean coal energy, there appears to be an effort to try and demonize coal and not allow it to be utilized. That makes about as much sense as Saudi Arabia making an announcement tomorrow that they're going to close off all of their production of petroleum. Why do I say it makes about as much sense? Because we are the Saudi Arabia of coal.

Similarly, with tar sands, shale oil, those sorts of things that we have in abundance in North America, we appear to be saying we ought not to take a look at those.

Similarly, we have abundant sources of petroleum offshore: offshore my State of California, offshore some of our other States in this Union. And yet we have a policy which basically says we ought not to utilize American technology, which has been utilized around the world, to safely extract petroleum.

If you look at my State in California, you go to Santa Barbara, you will see historically there have been leaks from the bottom of the ocean there because of the pressure, because of the petroleum that lies under the ocean floor. We can actually take some of that pressure off by drilling and producing there.

Lastly, I would say someone would have to be a hermit somewhere, stuck in a cave, not to understand that we have a terrible economic problem in California, a terrible problem with our budget, terrible deficits. And one of the ways that we could achieve some sort of stability with our budget in California, our State budget, would be to allow offshore drilling and take those royalties that would come to the State as a result of having that offshore drilling, bringing those moneys into the State Treasury.

We would do two things. We would help increase the security of this Nation with respect to energy on the one hand because this would be U.S. energy production; and secondly, we would have royalties going to the State of California in the billions of dollars, helping take off some of the pressure that we have currently as to which services we're going to cut. Classroom size is going up in the State of California. There are the suggestions that a lot of services will be cut, some severely, and yet we continue to turn a blind eye to the possibility of environmentally safe extraction of petroleum products offshore.

As one who basically was born just a stone's throw from the ocean, who lived the first half of my life—actually, more than that—the first 42 years as a resident of Long Beach, California, as someone who enjoys the beauty of my home State and the beauty of the coastline, I also understand that American technology, American ingenuity, American creativity that's applied elsewhere in the world can be applied here in the United States to produce energy.

Why will we have an energy policy brought forward on this floor that ignores some of the most abundant sources of energy for this Nation makes no sense to me. Surely I support the alternative sources of energy, wind and solar; the traditional ones of hydroelectric, thermal power. But we cannot forget the abundance of natural resources we have in this country.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m. today.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CARNAHAN) at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer: As people of faith, we often pray to You, Lord God Almighty, out of a sense of need.

Aware of our personal limitations physically and emotionally, each of us cries out in frustration to You as our refuge and as healer. Prayer helps us, whether we are leaders or just ordinary Americans, to live our lives with greater integrity and meet our daily responsibilities.

Sometimes we are more conscious of our common needs. It is then prayer helps us identify with one another, feel compassion toward others in need and pray for them. We all desire peace of heart, health, and wisdom, as well as prudence, to make the right decisions needed each day whether we are in public service or work in the private sector.

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

In all cases, through prayer, Lord, You help us to see ourselves more honestly and suspend judgment of others so we can work together and more freely give You the glory.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Ms. FOXX led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

HEALTH CARE

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, the health care debate has begun in Washington and across the country. Unfortunately, the plan Democrats have in store for the American people will do little to improve our health care situation. In fact, it will make the problem worse.

When Democrats talk about health care reform, what they really mean is a government takeover of health care. With few details available, some reports suggest the plan for this government takeover will cost upwards of $1.2 trillion. As Robert Samuelson noted in today's Washington Post, all of this new Federal spending still will not fix the "crux of our health care dilemma."

The American people deserve a plan that makes health care more affordable and accessible to all and that allows those who like their current health care coverage to keep it.

While Democrats support raising taxes and rationing care, Republicans support health care reform that controls spending and that ensures patients and doctors make health care decisions, not a bunch of bureaucrats in Washington.

RECOGNIZING THIS WEEK AS HIGH-PERFORMANCE BUILDING WEEK

(Mr. CARNAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, last week, the House passed House Resolution 492, recognizing this week as High-

Performance Building Week. The resolution aims to provide greater public awareness about the benefits of high-performance buildings, and it works to increase education about the impact buildings have on our environment.

Each year, our homes, offices, schools, and other buildings consume 70 percent of our electricity, 60 percent of all raw materials, and they emit 40 percent of all CO₂ emissions in the U.S. By designing and building high-performance buildings, we reduce energy consumption and our carbon footprint. We save both water and raw materials. We save demolition and construction debris from going into landfills. Most importantly, high-performance building construction creates good-paying jobs that give workers the valuable skills they need to excel in a clean energy economy.

It is my hope that Members will use this week to highlight the importance that buildings have on our environment and for Congress to continue to support future research, development and the deployment of high-performance building technologies.

EMPOWER PATIENTS, NOT GOVERNMENT

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, President Obama and his Democrat allies in Congress have said that they want those who currently like their health care plans to keep them. Then they publicly endorse a government-run health care insurance plan that would crowd out and eliminate the private insurance plans millions of Americans currently enjoy. They cannot have it both ways.

The Democrat big government proposals claim to increase access and affordability by letting government determine what will and will not be paid for. As the only game in town, a government insurance plan would be the sole provider and decider of the quality of health care available. Conversely, Republicans have long argued that health care reform should focus on expanding access so more Americans can afford a higher quality of care.

We should be focused on empowering more individuals and families to afford the level of care they want. If Congress chooses to empower the government and itself in crafting a new government-run insurance plan, it will directly undermine the doctor-patient relationship that is the foundation of quality American health care.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism.

HONORING THE SERVICE OF FAYETTEVILLE SUPERINTENDENT, MR. BOBBY NEW

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Bobby New, who has devoted his life to the education of our youth. Mr. New is retiring from 35 years of public education, 13 of which were as the superintendent of the Fayetteville School District.

During his time as superintendent, he provided the school district with the ideas and the innovation required for a growing area, including updating the grading structure and increasing technology throughout the district.

We are blessed to have educational professionals like Mr. New. I commend him for his service as a superintendent of the Fayetteville Public Schools, for his passion in educating our youth and for his commitment to improving our schools. I wish him success in his future endeavors.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Mr. New, an educator and friend whose continued devotion to the Third District of Arkansas has not gone unnoticed and will never be forgotten.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CUELLAR). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote on the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote incurs objection under clause 6 of rule XX.

Record votes on postponed questions will be taken after 6:30 p.m. today.

PROVIDING ADDITIONAL AUTHORITIES TO SPECIAL INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR AFGHANISTAN RECONSTRUCTION

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 615) to provide additional personnel authorities for the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction.

“(I) paragraph (2) of that subsection (relating to periods of appointments) shall not apply; and “(II) no period of appointment may exceed the date on which the Office of the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction terminates under subsection (o).”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from American Samoa (Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILLIRAKIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from American Samoa.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from American Samoa?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Senate bill 615, legislation that provides critical personnel authority for the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan, known as SIGAR.

Since 2001, the United States has devoted $32 billion in humanitarian and reconstruction assistance to Afghanistan. In an effort to combat waste, fraud and abuse with regard to the expenditure of these funds, Congress created the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction, commonly known as SIGAR, in the National Defense Authorization Act of 2008.

That legislation empowers SIGAR to conduct audits, inspections, and investigations of all U.S. assistance programs in Afghanistan. Congress intended that SIGAR would exercise its authority swiftly. It came into existence in July of 2008 with an authorization to hire 18 auditors, 13 inspectors and 3 investigators; but from the beginning, SIGAR has been hindered by certain limitations contained in standard Federal Government personnel authorities and by the difficulty of attracting qualified candidates to work in the difficult security environment of Afghanistan. A year after its creation, SIGAR has conducted only one independent audit and has only hired nine auditors, five inspectors and three investigators.

This resolution would help resolve this problem by granting SIGAR a special hiring authority under 5 U.S.C., section 3161. Section 3161 would allow SIGAR a more flexible, excepted service authority and would empower the office to select, appoint, and employ the necessary staff to fulfill its duties. In particular, section 3161 would grant return rights to Federal employees, provide interagency detail authority and permit the setting of pay rates above the caps established by GS-15, step 10, under which SIGAR is currently required to operate.

This has proven to be a vital asset for SIGAR's counterpart in Iraq, SIGIR, which has long relied upon this enhanced hiring authority to attract its dedicated core of professional staff.

After conducting an in-depth review, the Department of Defense and the Office of Personnel Management have concluded that the proposed legislation is necessary to allow SIGAR to meet its responsibilities.

□ 1415

This bill represents a vital step in allowing SIGAR to fulfill its critical duties of the oversight of U.S. assistance programs in Afghanistan. I support the bill and urge my colleagues to support it as well.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BILLIRAKIS. I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation. The United States has committed over $30 billion in assistance to Afghanistan since 2001, and with the President's stated intention to increase the size and scope of our efforts, it is necessary that we provide all of our inspectors general operating in Afghanistan the authorities and resources necessary to mitigate fraud, waste, and abuse in these programs. However, the Office of the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction, or SIGAR, currently lacks such authorities and resources.

Despite its establishment nearly 1 year ago, SIGAR officials have reportedly had difficulty hiring individuals for this unique and challenging assignment, and the staffing shortfall has contributed to the lack of an independent audit or investigation by the office thus far.

This legislation would amend the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 2008 to provide to SIGAR personnel authorities similar to those given to the Special Inspector General for Iraq Reconstruction. The legislation would expedite the standard hiring process for civil service provisions by permitting SIGAR to use employment authorities granted to heads of temporary organizations. Such authorities allow organizations to hire staff for limited terms, notwithstanding the requirements normally applicable to civil service positions.

This legislation is intended to help the SIGAR quickly hire experienced, well-qualified employees to conduct necessary oversight of reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan. Employees hired under this new authority could serve until the termination of the SIGAR office.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this legislation which gives the SIGAR additional hiring authorities to facilitate his ability to quickly hire experienced, well-qualified employees to fill critical positions.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank my good friend, the gentleman from Florida, for his comments in support of this legislation. And I do also want to thank the gentlelady, the good Senator from Maine, Senator COLLINS, for her authorship to this bill. Thirty-two billion dollars is no pennies certainly to be given some sense of responsibility in knowing where the American taxpayers' money has gone in terms of the appropriations and the funding that we've given to Afghanistan and as well as to any other country, for that matter.

So again, I really commend the gentlelady, the good Senator from Maine, Senator COLLINS, for her authorship of this bill, and I thank my good friend from Florida also in helping us manage this bill on the floor.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for your leadership in bringing this legislation to the floor today. I want to also thank Senator COLLINS for introducing this legislation in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here today to support Amending the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2008 to authorize the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction (SIGAR) to exercise certain employment and employment-related authorities currently permitted for the heads of temporary organizations established by law or executive order.

As a member of the Homeland Security Committee, and Co-Chair of the US-Afghan Caucus, I am deeply concerned about this matter and want to ensure that the Inspector General's staffing needs are fulfilled in order for him to successfully carry out the responsibilities of his position. In order to be successful in Afghanistan and defeat the insurgents, we must make sure that we have a fully staffed SIGAR who is able to complete the duties of his position in a timely and accurate manner. The security of our troops and the success of our mission in Afghanistan depends upon it.

Since 2001, the U.S. has provided approximately $32 billion in humanitarian and reconstruction assistance to Afghanistan. In addition, the international community has provided a further $25.3 billion for the rebuilding of Afghanistan. Since its inception in 2001, the SIGAR's mission has been to enhance oversight of programs for the reconstruction of Afghanistan by conducting independent and objective audits, inspections, and investigations on the use of taxpayer dollars and related funds by keeping the Congress, as well as the Secretaries of State and Defense, currently informed of reconstruction progress and weaknesses.

Amending this defense bill reflects our commitment to support the men and women who fight to secure not only our citizen's freedom but the freedom of others. This bill will provide the necessary resources to protect the American people and our national interests at home and abroad. With this extended personnel authority, the SIGAR has now become a formidable and compelling instrument to make oversight of reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan a reality.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. I yield back my time.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. I yield my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from American Samoa (Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 615.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPRESSING CONDOLENCES TO ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 430) expressing condolences to the citizens of Italy and support for the Government of Italy in the aftermath of the devastating earthquake that struck the Abruzzo region of central Italy, as amended.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from American Samoa.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material in the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from American Samoa?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution which expresses condolences to the citizens and the Government of Italy in the aftermath of the devastating earthquake in the Abruzzo region.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my good friend and my colleague, Mr. PAS-

CRELL from the great State of New Jersey, for introducing this important resolution that allows the House to add its voice to the international outpouring of sympathy for the Italian people in the wake of this natural disaster.

On April 6, the Abruzzo region of central Italy was struck by a 6.3 magnitude on the Richter scale earthquake. Nearly 300 people were killed while tens of thousands were left homeless. In addition to the terrible loss of life and livelihood, the earthquake damaged nearly 15,000 buildings, including hundreds of churches, castles, and heritage sites.

The U.S. Embassy in Rome immediately provided $50,000 in emergency relief funding while President Obama expressed his condolences and offered additional American assistance. Italian Prime Minister Berlusconi, the host of the next G-8 meeting, has relocated the July summit to the town of L'Aquila that was at the center of the devastation. As he explained, "The G-8 in L'Aquila represents the message of hope for the entire region struck by the earthquake."

It is appropriate that the House pauses today, Mr. Speaker, as Prime Minister Berlusconi is in Washington, DC, to express its deepest condolences to the families killed and injured in the earthquake. We also reaffirm the deep ties shared between our people and two countries. I strongly support this resolution, and I urge all of my colleagues to do likewise.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I rise today in support of this resolution which expresses our condolences and sympathy for the people of Italy following the terrible loss of life which occurred in the central Abruzzo region last April which was struck by a powerful earthquake. Tragically, the 6.3 magnitude earthquake, which struck in the early morning of April 6, killed over 250 people. Tens of thousands more were left homeless as their family properties were destroyed. Over 15,000 buildings rich in culture and history were obliterated in just moments by the powerful shocks.

I note that despite the danger from the strong aftershocks after the earthquake, heroic Italian rescue workers nevertheless entered the unstable buildings at risk to themselves and pulled hundreds of survivors to safety.

Mr. Speaker, when we think of Italy, our first thoughts are of the beauty, the history, the culture, and especially the warmth and kindness of its people. As a Nation, America also has a tremendous affinity for Italy since our country has been greatly enriched by those Italian immigrants who came to our shores, became part of our American Nation, and contributed so much to our culture and economic prosperity. And so in the wake of that immense disaster, Americans mourned in sympathy with the people in Italy over their tremendous loss and committed to stand with them as they work to rebuild and recover.

I'm pleased to support this resolution which expresses our deepest condolences to the Italian people and note that with the support of American citizens, humanitarian organizations are continuing to provide assistance in the rebuilding of those cities that were affected by the earthquake. I urge my colleagues to support passage of this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, how much time do we have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 18½ minutes.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. At this time, I yield all of the time that he may want to consume to my good friend and colleague and the author of this legislation, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL).

Mr. PASCRELL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, just a short while ago I returned from Afghanistan. The fifth largest contingency in NATO is from Italy, so we have many reminders through history and specifically now of what our relationship is between the United States and Italy. So we rise to support this resolution, H. Res. 430, expressing our deepest sympathies to the citizens of Italy.

This earthquake was devastating, Mr. Speaker. It ruined a large part of the Abruzzo part of Italy. The magnitude of this earthquake is understood by many Americans. The university town of L'Aquila, along with 26 other surrounding cities, towns, and villages, suffered massive destruction. You already have heard of how many people were killed; 15,000 buildings destroyed. They were historic. They were cultural landmarks. Seventy thousand people were displaced. So we extend our deepest sympathies. The homes and churches can be rebuilt, but we can never replace loved ones.

Despite the aftershocks that continued to devastate the region for days after, rescue workers demonstrated true heroism by pulling over 100 survivors from the wreckage. Their efforts, along with those of humanitarian aid organizations around the globe who continue to work tirelessly to return people to their homes and rebuild the region, deserve commendation. After traveling to Italy earlier this year, I can attest to the resiliency and the strength of the Italian people. And I remind us again of the 2,350 troops that fight alongside our brave men and women in Afghanistan.

It is trying times like these that allow us to recognize the deep and binding ties between our nations, the United States of America and Italy. This tragedy only brings our two nations closer together.

I would like to take this opportunity to sincerely thank the many organizations in the United States, including the National Italian American Foundation, NIAF, who are continuously working to raise funds to aid the rebuilding efforts in Abruzzo. The Italian American community's support and solidarity with the nation of Italy has only increased in the aftermath of this natural disaster.

I also want to commend the Italian Ambassador, Giovanni Castellaneta, for his leadership and commitment to the Italian American community.

I urge my colleagues to join me in passing this resolution to offer our sincere condolences to the nation of Italy for its tremendous loss as well as pledge our continued support to the Italian Government. I will do so also this afternoon when I greet President Berlusconi.

The G-8 summit is being held July 8, 9, and 10, and that has been moved to L'Aquila in the Abruzzo region to redirect funding to that region to help with the general reconstruction. Canada, France, Germany, Japan, Russia, the United Kingdom, the United States, of course, and our President, President Obama, will be there with our Italian friends.

I urge the passage of this legislation. I want to thank the chairman and the Speaker. I want to thank the ranking member for all of your courtesies. This is something we need to get involved in, to commend American organizations for reaching out to our brothers and sisters.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, today the Congress expresses its deepest condolences for those who suffered because of the earthquake in Abruzzo in April, and the Congress expresses its strongest support for Italy as it rebuilds from this crisis.

Soon after this disaster struck, I called Prime Minister Berlusconi on behalf of my colleagues in the Congress to express our deepest condolences to the families and loved ones of those lost. President Obama and other leaders from around the world have offered assistance to those affected. Prime Minister Berlusconi and the Italian government have the steadfast support of the American people as they help the people of Abruzzo rebuild.

As someone who can trace my family's roots back to Venice, Genoa, Campobasso, Sicily, and Abruzzo, I am personally committed to ensuring that the United States provides all possible assistance.

In 1980, I had the opportunity to visit Southern Italy in the aftermath of another earthquake as part of a U.S. delegation. I saw firsthand the courage of the Italian people in the face of a similar tragedy. The world saw Italy emerge from this crisis stronger than before.

America is a land discovered by an Italian, named for an Italian, and built by millions of Italian Americans.

The bond between the United States and Italy is uniquely strong because of the vital role daughters and sons of Italy have played in the United States from its discovery to today.

Today, we mourn those lost in Abruzzo and those struggling to rebuild their lives. And today, as in times of both crisis and calm, we stand beside each other as allies and friends.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 430, "Expressing condolences to the citizens of Italy and support for the Government of Italy in the aftermath of the devastating earthquake that struck the Abruzzo region of central Italy," which was introduced by my distinguished colleague Representative PASCRELL. This legislation is important to ensure that we remember those who lost their lives in this tragic natural disaster.

On April 6, 2009, an earthquake with a magnitude of 6.3 shook central Italy, causing serious damage in the mountainous Abruzzo region east of Rome. This is the worst earthquake in Italy since a 6.9-magnitude earthquake struck Eboli, south of Naples, in 1980, killing more than 2,700 people.

The earthquake caused damage to between 3,000 and 11,000 buildings, the majority of which are in the medieval city of L'Aquila and the surrounding villages. 297 people were killed by the earthquake, 20 of which were children, and approximately 1,000 people were injured. 66,000 people were made homeless. Nearly 11,700 rescue workers provided emergency relief.

Texas is no stranger to the effects of a natural disaster. In 2008, Hurricane Ike, which was the third most destructive hurricane to ever make landfall in the United States, caused the deaths of 37 people while dozens are still missing. In Houston, eight deaths have been blamed on Hurricane Ike.

Texas sustained major damage due to Hurricane Ike: an estimated 100,000 homes were flooded; many trees were uprooted; bus stop shelters were mangled; Houston's theater district was flooded; flights in and out of Houston's two major airports were suspended; most of Houston's roads were clogged for nearly two weeks; and many residents remained without power for several weeks after the hurricane. As the representative from Houston, I can truly sympathize with the Italian people and express my sincere sympathy to every life that was touched by this tragedy.

Additionally, this legislation mourns the loss of life and expresses condolences to the families of those killed and injured in the earthquake that struck the Abruzzo region of Italy. It also applauds the response of Italian rescue workers, recognizes the deep ties between the United States and Italy and expresses continued solidarity with the people of Italy during this time of crisis.

Furthermore, this legislation supports President Obama's offer of U.S. assistance to Italy in response to this event and expresses gratitude to the people of the United States who have supported those humanitarian aid agencies working to assist the people of Italy in this time of need. The U.S. Embassy in Rome has provided $50,000 in emergency relief funding and President Obama has pledged to devote resources to preserving the region's cultural and artistic heritage. Additionally, as part of the U.S. effort to support the Italian people, the U.S. Department of State and the National Italian American Foundation (NIAF) formed a public-private partnership to respond to the educational needs of the University of L'Aquila, and will strive to help the students and other human resource needs. The students are key to the future of the region, and the University is the economic lifeblood of the city of L'Aquila. It is therefore vital to help this sector recover in this time of need.

The Abruzzo earthquake is a tragedy that has affected lives all over the world, the least we can do as a Congress, and as a nation, is to recognize those involved in this tragedy and those who are helping Italy to rebuild. We cannot withhold this honor from those victims that perished in the tragedy. As honored Members of Congress, we have the opportunity to ensure that proper recognition is given to those involved in the earthquake.

I firmly believe that we must pass this legislation in order to demonstrate our support of those people who lost their lives and those people who lost their loved ones, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. TIBERI. Mr. Speaker, as co-chair of the Italian-American delegation it is my pleasure to offer my support of H. Res. 430—Expressing condolences to the citizens of Italy and support for the Government of Italy in the aftermath of the devastating earthquake that struck the Abruzzo region of central Italy.

As the son of Italian immigrants from Abruzzo, I am pleased my colleagues agreed that we should stand behind Italians as they begin the process of rebuilding areas damaged by the earthquake. H. Res. 430 serves to reaffirm the deep ties between the United States and Italy, and show the Italian people our nation's support in their time of need.

I hope the reconstruction efforts will be completed quickly so the region's cultural and artistic heritage will be restored, while homes, businesses, and schools can be rebuilt. Abruzzo is truly a beautiful region and I look forward to its revival.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I also yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from American Samoa (Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 430, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.
