This resolution, which I trust every Member of this House will vote for, says that we do not believe in trying to change the law by violence. We do not believe in domestic terrorism, defining "terrorism" as an attempt to change the law through murder and violence and mayhem. We believe in constitutional processes. And if every single one of us does not believe in that, then we have no moral superiority over the terrorists that we condemn around the world.

So I trust everyone will vote for this resolution to express our horror of what was done in this instance, to express our belief that social change, if necessary, will be brought about by peaceful democratic debate and by votes, not by bullets, and that this country stands for the evolution of law by debate and by consideration and by democratic means. I urge everyone to vote for this resolution.

Ms. LEE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 505.

Like the vast majority of people throughout our nation, I was appalled by the unconscionable act of violence that took the life of Dr. Tiller at his place of worship.

I offer my deepest and most sincere condolences to the family and many friends of Dr. Tiller. My thoughts and prayers are with them as they struggle with this tremendous loss.

Dr. Tiller was a medical pioneer who, for two decades, worked to provide the highest quality of care to his patients.

Despite encountering constant harassment and threats Dr. Tiller remained committed to providing abortion services and other reproductive care to women and their families.

Often times, Dr. Tiller provided these services to women during the most challenging and heart-wrenching of circumstances.

The shooting death of Dr. Tiller is an affront to all physicians who provide abortion and reproductive care to women; it's also an affront to a woman's right to choose.

Moreover his death was an affront to our nation's rich religious and democratic traditions.

No matter which side you may stand on in regards to protecting a woman's right to choose, we can and should all agree that violence has no place in our political discourse.

I thank my colleague Ms. SLAUGHTER for authoring this resolution, and I urge all my colleagues to vote in favor of its passage.

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 505, condemning the murder of Dr. George Tiller.

Dr. George Tiller was murdered in Wichita, Kansas, on May 31, 2009. Dr. Tiller was 67 years old, a father, a husband and a friend, and was killed in his place of worship, a place intended for peace and refuge that in a moment became a place for violence and murder.

As stated in H. Res. 505, in the past 10 years, 38 people in the United States have been killed in their place of worship with 30 more sustaining wounds in those same incidents. This violence is deplorable, and never an acceptable avenue for expressing opposing viewpoints.

I join the author of this bill, Congresswoman CAROLYN MALONEY, in offering my condolences to Dr. Tiller's family, and commit to the American principle that tolerance must always be superior to intolerance, and that violence is never an appropriate response to a difference in beliefs.

It's nearly impossible to find comfort after such a senseless and horrific act, and I extend my deepest condolences to the Tiller family and all those families whose lives he touched. Like many others, Dr. Tiller persevered through decades of threats and attacks, and I condemn anyone who takes action or makes statements to incite violence as an acceptable response.

Ms. HIRONO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 505, which condemns the tragic murder of Dr. George R. Tiller of Wichita, Kansas. I would like to thank the author of the bill, Congresswoman LOUISE SLAUGHTER and Judiciary Chairman JOHN CONYERS for their expeditious work in bringing this bill to the floor.

We mourn the loss of Dr. Tiller, a husband, father of four, and grandfather of ten. We also mourn the loss of a man who was a friend to women and young girls around the world, who he saw through their most desperate hours of need.

Dr. Tiller, born and raised in Wichita, was the son of a physician. In medical school, Dr. Tiller planned to become a dermatologist. After his father, mother, sister, and brother-in-law died in a 1970 plane crash, he returned to Kansas to close his father's family practice. His father's patients pleaded with him to return and take over the practice. Eventually, his clinic evolved from general family practice to focusing on reproductive services.

Acts of terror and intimidation were an all too common occurrence at his clinic. In 1986, Dr. Tiller's clinic, the Women's Health Care Services, was bombed. In 1991, it was blockaded for six weeks. In 1993, Dr. Tiller was shot in both arms while trying to enter the clinic. In May 2009, vandals cut wires to security cameras and made holes in the clinic roof.

Dr. Tiller was murdered on Sunday, May 31, 2009. He was shot in his place of worship, the Reformation Lutheran Church. Dr. Tiller served as an usher and his wife, Jeanne, sang in the choir.

I would like to insert into the RECORD an article by Judith Warner that was published in her New York Times blog. One of Dr. Tiller's cases mentioned by Ms. Warner, that involving a 9 year-old girl who had been raped by her father, is particularly haunting.

This child was 18 weeks pregnant and her small body just would not be able to physically bear the burden of labor and delivery. There was no doctor or hospital in her rural, Southern town that would provide her with an abortion. She was referred to Dr. Tiller, the doctor of last resort. Dr. Tiller took her case for free. He kept her under his personal care for three days. The young girl and her sister stated that even in this difficult and heart-wrenching situation, he could not have been more wonderful in his care.

On Saturday, memorial services were held for Dr. Tiller. His family and friends remembered him for his generosity and his sense of humor. Let us also remember him for his courage.

Mahalo nui loa (thank you very much).

DR. TILLER'S IMPORTANT JOB

(By Judith Warner)

The 9-year-old girl had been raped by her father. She was 18 weeks pregnant. Carrying the baby to term, going through labor and delivery, would have ripped her small body apart.

There was no doctor in her rural Southern town to provide her with an abortion. No area hospital would even consider taking her case.

Susan Hill, the president of the National Women's Health Foundation, which operates reproductive health clinics in areas where abortion services are scarce or nonexistent, called Dr. George Tiller, the Wichita, Kan., ob-gyn who last Sunday was shot to death by an abortion foe in the entry foyer of his church.

She begged.

"I only asked him for a favor when it was a really desperate story, not a semi-desperate story," she told me this week. Tiller was known to abortion providers—and opponents—as the "doctor of last resort"—the one who took the patients no one else would touch.

"He took her for free," she said. "He kept her three days. He checked her himself every few hours. She and her sister came back to me and said he couldn't have been more wonderful. That's just the way he was."

Other patients of Dr. Tiller's shared their stories this week on a special "Kansas Stories" page hosted by the Web site "A Heart-breaking Choice."

One New York mother wrote of having been referred by an obstetrician to Tiller after learning, in her 27th week of pregnancy, that her soon-to-be son was "so very sick" that, once born, he'd have nothing more than "a brief life of respirators, dialysis, surgeries and pain." In-state doctors refused to perform an abortion.

"The day I drove up to the clinic in Wichita, Kansas, to undergo the procedure that would end the life of my precious son, I also walked into the nightmare of abortion politics. In this world, reality rarely gets through the rhetoric," wrote another mother, from Texas, of the shouts, graphic posters and protesters' video camera that greeted her when she came to see Tiller.

Our understanding of what late abortion is like has been almost entirely shaped in public discourse by the opponents of abortion rights. In recent years, discussions of the issue have been filled with the gory details of so-called partial-birth abortion; the grim miseries that drive some women and girls to end their pregnancies after the first trimester have somehow been elided.

"Late abortion is not a failure of contraception. It's for medical reasons," Eleanor Smeal, the president of the Feminist Majority Foundation, who has worked to defend abortion providers like Tiller against harassment and violence since the mid-1980s, told me this week. "We've made pregnancy a fairy tale where there are no fetal complications, there's no cancer, no terrible abuse of girls, no cases where to make a girl go all the way through a pregnancy is to destroy her. These are the realities of the story. That's what Dr. Tiller worked with—the realities."

There was a great deal of emotion in the air this week as the reality of Tiller's death set in. Much of it was mournful, some was celebratory, some was cynical and self-serving.

There were the requisite expressions of disapproval and disavowal by politicians from both sides of the abortion divide. And yet it seemed to me that even from pro-choice politicians, the response was muted. In death, as in life, no one wanted to embrace this man who had specialized in helping women who learned late in their pregnancies that their fetuses had gross abnormalities.

It seemed that no one wanted to be too closely associated with the muck and mire of what Tiller had to do in carrying out the risky and emotionally traumatic second- and third-trimester abortions that other doctors and hospitals refused to do. In news reports, there was a tendency to frame the "abortion doctor's" murder almost as a kind of combat death: a natural occupational hazard.

Yet Tiller—who went to work in a bulletproof vest, lived in a gated community and drove a bulletproof car—was a doctor, not a soldier. And it is precisely this kind of thinking—this viewing of his life and work through the lens of our most gruesome cultural warfare, this slippage and mixing up of medicine and politics—that left him largely unprotected at the time of his death.

Someone resembling Scott Roeder, the man charged in Dr. Tiller's murder, was seen on Saturday trying to pour glue into the lock on the back door of a Kansas City clinic. Before that, abortion providers around the country had been telling local law enforcement and the United States Justice Department that harassment at their clinics was on the rise, and they were scared. The Feminist Majority Foundation had been hearing all spring that the atmosphere outside clinics was heating up in the wake of the new pro-choice president's election. "We all lived through Clinton, the shootings in '93 and '94. We were concerned some of the extremists said they had to take the fight 'back to the streets,'" Smeal said.

There are legal protections in place that ought to keep abortion providers like Tiller safe. The Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances (FACE) Act, passed by Congress after the 1993 murder of Dr. David Gunn outside his Pensacola, Fla., women's health clinic and the attempted murder of Tiller that same year, prohibits property damage, acts or threats of force, and interference with and intimidation of anyone entering a reproductive health care facility.

When the federal law is backed by complementary state laws, and when local law enforcement officers apply those laws assiduously, serious violence greatly declines. When the law's not applied strenuously, when vandalism goes uninvestigated, when protesters are allowed to photograph or videotape patients arriving at women's health clinics, when death threats aren't followed up, more serious acts of physical violence follow. In fact, when intimidation occurs at a clinic, the reported rate of violence triples, the Feminist Majority Federation's 2008 National Clinic Violence Survey found.

"We really do need to arrest people who are trespassing. Arrest people who are gluing locks. Committing more minor violations of the law so criminal activity doesn't escalate, so these criminals don't feel emboldened," said Vicki Saporta, the president of the National Abortion Federation. "In places where the laws are enforced, you don't see violence escalate. Protesters generally go someplace where there's a more hospitable climate," she told me. But, she added, in a lot of communities, law enforcement views clinic violence as a political problem. "They don't view it for what it is: criminal activity outside of a commercial establishment," she said. "Law enforcement can't treat this as a political issue. It's a criminal issue."

We as a nation cannot continue to provide a hospitable environment for the likes of Roeder because the thought of what happens to fetuses in late abortions turns our stomachs. We have to accept that sometimes terrible things happen to young girls. We have to face the fact that sometimes desired pregnancies go tragically wrong. We have to weigh our repugnance for late abortion against the consequences for women and girls of being denied life-saving medical treatment.

Only a tiny handful of doctors in this country will, like Dr. Tiller, provide abortion services for girls or women who are advanced in their pregnancies. These doctors aren't well known to patients or even to other doctors, but they're closely monitored by anti-abortion groups, who know where they work, where they live and where they worship. Roeder may have been a lone gunman, but in the largest possible sense, he did not act alone. The location of Tiller's gated community was prominently featured on an easily-accessed Web site, along with a map of the streets surrounding his house. It was really only a matter of time before someone was unbalanced enough to take the bait.

Most Americans, I'm sure, do not believe that a 9-year-old should be forced to bear a child, or that a woman should have no choice but to risk her life to carry a pregnancy to term.

By averting our eyes from the ugliness and tragedy that accompany some pregnancies, we have allowed anti-abortion activists to define the dilemma of late abortion. We have allowed them to isolate and vilify doctors like Tiller.

We can no longer be complicit—through our muted disapproval or our complacency—in domestic terror.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, as millions of Americans are now aware, Dr. George Tiller was assassinated in his church on Sunday, May 31st, 2009 because of his political beliefs and profession. Dr. Tiller provided legal abortions, and his dedication to his profession, to the health and well-being of the women he cared for, cost him his life. I join President Obama, members of Congress, and millions of Americans in professing horror, shock, and sadness over this blatant act of terror. I hope that all Americans—regardless of their personal stances on the issue of abortion—will join in opposing those who would seek to control the actions of women and doctors through the use of violent intimidation.

Abortion doctors and women's clinics across this country which provide a range of women's health services including abortion face threats and violent acts every day. I sincerely hope that in the wake of this terrible event, the Department of Justice and law enforcement agencies across this country take future threats directed toward women's health providers seriously. Justice and the rule of law demand nothing less.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 505, condemning the murder of Dr. George Tiller.

On May 31, 2009, Dr. Tiller was gunned down while handing out church flyers to the congregation of the Reformation Lutheran Church in Wichita, Kansas. Dr. Tiller was murdered because he had provided comprehensive legal reproductive healthcare to women and their families.

For 20 years, Dr. Tiller lived under a constant threat of violence. His clinic was bombed in 1986 and he was shot in both arms in 1993. He received constant death threats. Despite feeling the need to wear body armor and travel with a guard dog, he continued to provide reproductive services to women, often in the most difficult and heartbreaking circumstances. Dr. Tiller once said that he provided these services because "Women and families are intellectually, emotionally, spiritually, and ethically competent to struggle with complex health issues—including abortion," he said, "and come to decisions that are appropriate for themselves." I could not agree more. Women must have the right to make their own reproductive choices.

Regardless of one's personal feelings about abortion, we all must stand vigilant against such abhorrent and vile acts of violence. To murder someone because of disagreement with his belief system is morally, ethically, and legally wrong. It is especially disturbing that this murder took place in a church. Assaulting, intimidating, and harassing doctors and clinic employees should not be tolerated.

Dr. Tiller's death is only one act of violence against those that perform abortion services. Pro-life extremists have engaged in more than 5,800 reported acts of violence against abortion providers since 1977, including bombings, arsons, death threats, kidnappings, and assaults, as well as more than 143,000 reported acts of disruption, including bomb threats and harassing calls. Eight abortion providers have been murdered in the United States, and another 17 have been the victims of attempted murder. It is past time that we condemn the violence and intimidation against clinics that provide legal services to women in need.

I hope and pray that the friends and family members of Dr. Tiller find solace and comfort as we deal together with this historic and heartbreaking episode.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 505, which condemns the tragic murder of Dr. George Tiller. The murder of Dr. Tiller is a form of domestic terrorism that we cannot tolerate in our country.

I firmly agree with President Obama that we can maintain our beliefs while agreeing to disagree. Dr. Tiller's medical practice in Kansas was operating legally, and we must abide by the rule of law.

Mr. Speaker, I have personal knowledge of the work of Dr. Tiller. In 2000, my Subcommittee Staff Director, Jason Steinbaum, and his wife, Miriam, were expecting a child. This was their first baby, and they were very excited about becoming new parents.

Through visit after visit to their doctor, they learned the pregnancy was proceeding well and all seemed normal. The sonograms were all as they should have been, until calamity struck. At 28 weeks the doctors discovered a horrible brain deformity. They said the baby would die in utero or shortly after birth.

I recall that Jason and Miriam went from doctor to doctor and hospital to hospital to try to find a way to save their baby boy, but all told them that there was no chance that he would live. At that point, after consulting with their clergy, their doctors, and their families, they decided to terminate the pregnancy to put an end to this tragedy in their lives.

At 28 weeks, however, extremely few physicians in the country would provide the medical care they needed. Dr. Tiller was recommended to them as the best physician to help them.

I recall that I could not believe they had to fly to Wichita, Kansas to get the medical care they required. As a member of Congress from New York, I have become accustomed to receiving the best health care in New York City and could not imagine that they would have to travel half way across the country because no such clinic existed nearby. Nevertheless, when they determined that there was no other place to which they could turn, Jason, Miriam, and their mothers flew to Kansas to Women's Health Care Services of Wichita and Dr. Tiller.

Jason has told me that the care they received at Dr. Tiller's clinic was extraordinary and that the people at the clinic treated them as well as they could imagine. The procedure was safe and humane, and at the end, they held their baby boy for a moment and said goodbye. Today, the baby is buried not far from their home in north Virginia.

So, as the House votes on this solemn resolution, I ask that my colleagues reflect for a moment on the fact that Dr. Tiller helped someone right here in our congressional community and that his murderer took someone who was there for one of us in a time of need. This is a terribly sad day, and I urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 505.

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the resolution Condemning the Murder of Dr. George Tiller (H. Res. 505) and with deepest sympathy for the loved ones of Dr. Tiller.

On May 31, 2009, an assassination took place in Kansas. A physician was murdered in an act of terrorism in his church. This act of anti-abortion vigilantism inspires fear and terror. The murdered doctor had previously been shot and the clinic in which he worked had been previously bombed.

This resolution, of which I am an original co-sponsor, expresses our sympathy for the family and loved ones of Dr. George Tiller and declares that violence should never be recourse for a difference in beliefs. In honor of the memory of Dr. Tiller we must work harder than ever to promote tolerance and non-violence.

Abortion in this nation is a legal health care procedure. I support a woman's right to make her own health care decisions and the work of health care providers to meet women's health care needs. What America witnessed with Dr. Tiller's death was a Taliban-like tactic to prevent abortions by murdering a doctor. It is terrorism and I urge the administration to extend protection to women's clinics all across our country.

I support comprehensive sex education, evidence-based science, full access to family planning and reproductive health care for all women, and counseling to ensure women of all ages have the best information to make good choices about when they decide to have children. This is how we reduce abortions. This is how we empower individuals to prevent the need for abortions.

Safe, comprehensive reproductive and family planning services should be accessible to all Americans and providers, because it is essential for the health and well-being of women and families. I will continue to work with President Obama in the 111th Congress to keep women's health as a priority.

My condolences go out to Dr. Tiller's family and loved ones. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution and join me in condemning the murder of Dr. Tiller.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 505, condemning the murder of Dr. George Tiller. Dr. Tiller was shot to death at his church on May 31, 2009. It is with great sorrow and a heavy heart that I extend my condolences to his friends and family.

A sixty-seven-year-old physician, a husband, a father of four, and a grandfather of ten, Dr. Tiller dedicated his life to providing family and community health care services in Wichita, Kansas. Dr. Tiller's murder leaves in its wake an unsettling sense of grief and sadness that continues to ripple its way through countless communities of patients, colleagues, friends and family members. To the legions of admirers who view the care that he provided as an essential option for the women most in need, he will be sorely missed.

Dr. Tiller was beloved for his professionalism, his compassion and sensitivity. He showed unwavering courage and commitment to his patients. Dr. Tiller deserves to be acknowledged for the service that he provided to his community. His senseless murder must be strongly condemned. A truly democratic society includes a thriving atmosphere of political debate and dialogue, regardless of the intensity of the debate. The use of violence and murder as a means to express dissent is not only undemocratic, but simply unacceptable.

I strongly support this important bill and urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H. Res. 505.

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 505.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

WITNESS SECURITY AND PROTECTION GRANT PROGRAM ACT OF 2009

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1741) to require the Attorney General to make competitive grants to eligible State, tribal, and local prosecutors to establish and maintain certain protection and witness assistance programs, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General shall make competitive grants to eligible State, tribal, and local governments to establish or maintain programs that provide protection or assistance to witnesses in court proceedings involving homicide, or involving a serious violent felony or serious drug offense as defined in section 3559(c)(2) of title 18, United States Code. The Attorney General shall ensure that, to the extent reasonable and practical, such grants are made to achieve an equitable geographical distribution of such programs throughout the United States.

SEC. 4. PRIORITY.

In making grants under section 2, the Attorney General shall give priority to applications submitted under section 5 involving programs in States with an average of not less than 100 murders per year during the most recent 5-year period, as calculated using the latest available crime statistics from the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

SEC. 5. APPLICATION.

To be eligible for a grant under section 2, a State, tribal, or local government shall submit to the Office of Justice Programs an application in such form and manner, at such time, and accompanied by such information as the Attorney General specifies.

SEC. 6. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

SEC. 7. BEST PRACTICES.

(a) REPORT.—Each recipient of a grant under section 2 shall submit to the Attorney General a report, in such form and manner and containing such information as specified by the Attorney General, that evaluates each program established or maintained pursuant to such grant, including policies and procedures under the program.

(4) any other services related to witness protection or assistance that are determined by the Attorney General to be necessary.

(c) DISSEMINATION TO STATES.—Not later than 1 year after the development of best practice models under subsection (b), the Attorney General shall disseminate to States and other relevant entities such models.

(d) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that States and other relevant entities should use the best practice models developed and disseminated in accordance with this Act to evaluate, improve, and develop witness protection or witness assistance as appropriate.

(e) CLARIFICATION.—Nothing in this Act requires the dissemination of any information if the Attorney General determines such information is law enforcement sensitive and should only be disclosed within the law enforcement community or that such information poses a threat to national security.

SEC. 8. REPORT TO CONGRESS.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act $30,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2010 through 2014.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from California (Mr. ISSA) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Witness Security and Protection Act of 2009 authorizes the Attorney General to award grants to States and local prosecutors for establishing and improving short-term witness protection programs for witnesses that are involved in a State or local trial involving a homicide, a serious violent felony, or a serious drug offense.

Witness intimidation reduces the likelihood that citizens will be willing to perform their civic duty in the criminal justice system, often depriving police and prosecutors of critical evidence. More broadly, it also undermines public confidence that the criminal justice system can adequately protect its citizens.

And there is no better example that demonstrates the need for this legislation than the tragedy that befell the Dawson family in the autumn of 2002 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Angela Dawson had repeatedly contacted the police about drug dealing in her neighborhood. In retaliation, Darrell Brooks, a neighborhood dealer, firebombed the Dawson home not once but twice before killing Angela; her husband, Carnell; and all five of their children.

This heinous violence perpetrated against the Dawson family was the impetus for this legislation, and I commend Congressman CUMMINGS for his tireless pursuit of this legislation over multiple Congresses. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1741, the Witness Security and Protection Grant Program Act of 2009. Witness testimony is a critical component of our criminal justice system. Even with sophisticated DNA and other forensic evidence, there is no substitute for an eyewitness testimony.

However, engaging the cooperation of witnesses is frequently a daunting obstacle in many criminal prosecutions. Many witnesses fail to come forward or refuse to testify out of fear of retribution by the defendants or pressure by the community.

It is no surprise that violent criminals will unleash their brutality on witnesses whose testimony could result in years or decades in prison. It is also no surprise that violent gangs and drug organizations are the source of much of this brutality. The Justice Department's National Gang Center reports that "gang members so frequently engage in witness intimidation that it is considered part of normal gang behavioral dynamics." State and local law enforcement officials and prosecutors are in a constant struggle to counteract witness intimidation and to convince witnesses to cooperate. It's vital that we assist in this.

At the Federal level, the U.S. Marshals Service is charged with witness protection and has operated the Witness Security Program since 1970. Under the program, more than 7,500 witnesses and over 9,500 family members have been protected, relocated, or given new identities. Most States and local governments cannot offer that level of protection. Many cannot afford to offer even basic protection services, for instance, during a trial in which the proceedings in a small town might be all too evident to gangs in the area.

H.R. 1741, the Witness Security and Protection Grant Program Act, directs the Attorney General to award grants to State and local governments to establish and maintain witness protection programs.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that this not only is a well-worthwhile program whose time has come, but, in fact, it could be a real cost-saving to the taxpayers from the Federal level. Federal prosecution tends to be more expensive. In the case of gang, drug, and other activities, there is almost always a dual nexus: one in which the State or local courts can try the gang members, one in which the Federal Government can find Federal statutes to try under. Unfortunately, without an effective witness protection program, localities may often choose to move a case to Federal court where witness protection is available rather than providing that protection themselves.

So, Mr. Speaker, I rise with my colleagues on the other side of the aisle to support strongly that we find those opportunities in which local government can provide this service rather than removing to Federal court. This is a cost-saving, commonsense initiative, and I support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, with respect to my great colleague from the great State of Maryland, Congressman CUMMINGS, I will yield so much time as he may consume.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) for yielding, and I want to certainly thank Chairman CONYERS, Chairman SCOTT, Mr. ISSA, the entire Judiciary Committee, and the House leadership for recognizing the importance of this legislation by bringing it to the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, while our soldiers fight in Iraq and Afghanistan, many citizens across our Nation are facing terrorism right here at home, right here in their own neighborhoods. People are being murdered in broad daylight, and their killers are walking free because we do not protect witnesses to crimes from threats against their safety if they cooperate with the police, if they testify in court, or even if they are listed as witnesses to testify in court.

This epidemic of witness intimidation is a menace to our civil society, and it is a plague on our entire justice system. In fact, it was the deaths of Angela and Carnell Dawson and their five children, ages 9 to 14, that first motivated me to address this issue. I can remember very vividly sitting at a funeral with one adult casket and with the caskets of five children. Then, a day later, the husband died, and we went to his funeral.

The entire Dawson family was killed in October 2002 when a gang member firebombed their home in the middle of the night in retaliation for Mrs. Dawson's repeated complaints to the police about the recurring drug trafficking in her east Baltimore neighborhood.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that Mrs. Dawson literally lived within about a 5-minute drive from my house.

Angela Dawson and her family were not affiliated in any way with drugs or gangs. Rather, Mrs. Dawson was just a civic-minded parent, trying to clean up her neighborhood, and trying to make it a safe place for her children and for other families.

While several State and local entities have established witness assistance programs, many of these programs have fallen victim to the tough economic times and have had to be discontinued. Conversely, the U.S. Marshals Service uses $65 million to operate its Federal Witness Security Program, and it has an excellent track record. In all of its years in existence, they have never been known to have lost a witness, and at the same time, the prosecutors in those cases have had an 89 percent success rate.

It is because of this inequity that I call upon my colleagues to give law enforcement the ability to protect the sanctity of our justice system and pass H.R. 1741, the Witness Security and Protection Grant Program Act.

H.R. 1741 would help local law enforcement officers strengthen witness assistance and protection units, sending a very loud and clear message to criminals that our citizens and we in the Congress of the United States of America will not be deterred by fear tactics like intimidation.

Speaking of intimidation, throughout the City of Baltimore, we have a group that put out two trailers entitled "Stop Snitching." In one of those trailers I, along with the State's attorney, were threatened because we were standing up for this legislation and because we were standing up for witnesses. I made it very clear to them that I have no fear because, if you can have a situation where a person can literally be standing on a corner and 20 people know the perpetrator and the perpetrator comes up and blows somebody's brains out and nobody testifies, what happens then is that we have given the criminal more power; we have taken power away from regular citizens. The next thing you know, the criminal feels that there are no consequences to his or her actions.

You cannot have a criminal justice system that is effective and efficient unless you have the cooperation of witnesses. It is up to this Congress to make it very, very clear that we will not, under any circumstances, stand for witnesses to be intimidated, harmed, threatened, killed or in any way deterred from carrying out their duties to assist police and law enforcement.

The bill would provide $150 million in competitive grants over 5 years to enable State and local governments to establish witness assistance programs with priority given to cities or to locales that have had an average of at least 100 homicides per year during the most recent 5-year period. H.R. 1741 would also allow these programs to receive technical assistance from the United States Marshals Service.

By improving the protection for State and local witnesses, we come one step closer to alleviating the fears and the threats of prospective witnesses and to safeguarding our communities from violence.

Again, I want to thank Mr. CONYERS. I want to thank Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. SCOTT, and the ranking member for their support. I urge my colleagues to pass this legislation.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished attorney from the City of New Orleans, the junior Member from Louisiana, Mr. CAO.

Mr. CAO. I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1741, the Witness Security and Protection Grant Program Act.

Crime is the number one concern of my constituents in New Orleans and in Jefferson Parishes in Louisiana. Crime is my top concern, too. My district includes the City of New Orleans, which, as of June 1, has already seen 80 murders. Further, according to the FBI's annual report on crime released last week, New Orleans leads the Nation in murders. This says nothing about the incidence of other types of crime, from sexual offenses to robberies.

I hold in my hand a photo of Sergeant Manuel Curry. He was a popular and much-loved member of the New Orleans Police Department. At 62 years of service, he was one of America's longest-serving police officers. Tragically, for the NOPD and for New Orleans, he passed away last week, and our thoughts and prayers are with his wife, with his family, and with his NOPD colleagues.

Here is an article from today's newspaper. It reports that, within hours of Sergeant Curry's death, three people broke into his home and stole guns, money, jewelry, and medication. While at the funeral home, arranging her husband's burial, his wife was notified of the burglary.

Our thoughts and prayers also go to the family of this couple, Orlander Cassimere, Sr., and his wife of 55 years. Elder Cassimere was scheduled to have preached the Mother's Day sermon this year at the church in New Orleans' Lower Ninth Ward, where he was pastor; but on that day, relatives found him and his wife fatally shot in their home. It is thought that their murders are connected to a relative's plan to testify in a kidnapping and attempted murder case.

Reading these articles makes me angry and sick because of the actions of these individuals who disgraced the memories of Sergeant Curry and of the Cassimeres. They disgrace all of the people of New Orleans and of Jefferson Parishes. If these stories don't paint a picture of out-of-control crime, I don't know what will.

I continue to meet with law enforcement and with prosecution officials in my district, and I am presently working with them to leverage Federal resources. They must have all of the resources they can get.

The Witness Security and Protection Grant Program will go a long way towards addressing the issue of crime in my district because, without adequate protection and assurances, these witnesses will stop coming forward, and crime will remain out of control.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for this effort with this important bill, and I look forward to working with them on other important legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I will yield 3 minutes to my fellow Judiciary Committee member, Congressman PEDRO PIERLUISI.

Mr. PIERLUISI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1741, and I want to commend Congressman CUMMINGS for his terrific work on this bill.

H.R. 1741 will provide funding to States and to territories so they can create or can improve their witness protection programs. Priority for funding would be given to those jurisdictions with the highest rates of violent crime.

Violent crime continues to plague many of our communities. Many of those crimes were likely observed by one or more bystanders. Whether these witnesses choose to come forward or choose to remain in the shadows, many of those crimes will depend, in large part, on whether they feel safe cooperating with law enforcement. It is, therefore, critical to the effective functioning of our criminal justice system that government at all levels has the means to provide for witness security.

As Attorney General of Puerto Rico, I have worked with many witnesses who have received threats that they or their loved ones would be harmed if they testified against a defendant. Not unreasonably, some of these witnesses ultimately chose to remain silent. Others elected to plunge ahead despite the risks, motivated by a sense of civic duty. The key point is this:

Choosing between providing information that may deliver a criminal to justice and protecting one's own safety is a choice that no witness should be forced to make.

Since 1970, the Federal government has operated its own successful witness protection program. In light of a 2006 report by the Department of Justice that found that witness intimidation was pervasive and increasing, the need to support similar programs at the State and territorial levels is beyond question. Therefore, I respectfully urge my colleagues in this Chamber to support H.R. 1741.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, at this time, it is my pleasure to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague from Georgia for bringing forth and for handling this commonsense bill on the floor of the House. I want to thank my colleague from California for yielding me time.

This is an important issue. There are many issues that are remarkably important to the American people, and I want to talk about one of them. It is the national energy tax.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there is a proposal that is moving through the House committees right now that will have a remarkable effect on the American people. If history holds true, there will be very little time on the floor of this House to debate this issue. As the Speaker has said, she wants to get it done by July 4.

So I would suggest that it is important for all of our colleagues to be paying attention to the national energy tax and to the consequences of it. I would suggest that the American people ought to be paying attention as well. Let me point out a couple of the issues on this national energy tax.

By an outside group, by an objective group, the estimates are that it will destroy millions of jobs—1.1 million jobs on average each year. It will raise electricity rates 90 percent after adjusting for inflation. It will increase gasoline prices by 74 percent. It will increase residential natural gas prices by 55 percent. It will raise the average family's annual energy bill by $1,500. That's right, Mr. Speaker, by $1,500. It will increase inflation-adjusted Federal debt by 26 percent. So let's review.

This national energy tax, supported by the Speaker, is going to decrease jobs, and she is trying to get it through this House by the end of this month. It will decrease jobs; it will increase electricity rates; it will increase gas prices; it will increase natural gas prices; it will increase the family energy bill; and it will increase the Federal debt.

Now, the American people think this is a terrible idea, and they are very frustrated with the fact that the commonsense solutions that have been put on the table are not being given an opportunity to come to the floor.

What are those commonsense solutions?

Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know and as the American people know, there are good bills out there. One of them is one that I have cosponsored, H.R. 2300, coming out of the Republican Study Committee and the Western Caucus. It is called the American Energy Innovation Act.

What it does is provide for increasing production, responsible production of American resources. It provides for increasing conservation so that we decrease the demand side of the energy curve; and it provides for expansion of innovation, incentives for innovation so that we unleash the genius of the American people to solve the challenges that we have in the area of energy. It doesn't tax the American people. It doesn't decrease jobs. It doesn't increase electricity prices, as the Democrat plan would do. It doesn't increase gas prices, as the Democrats would do. It doesn't increase natural gas prices, as the Democrat plan would do. It doesn't increase the family energy bill, and it doesn't increase the Federal debt. No, Mr. Speaker, it solves the problems in the way that the American people want them solved.

The American Energy Innovation Act would increase production in a responsible and environmentally sensitive and sound way. It would increase innovation so that we develop a new energy for this 21st century, and it would increase conservation, decrease that demand side so that we don't continue to support countries overseas that, frankly, aren't necessarily our friend.

I appreciate the opportunity to commend my friend from Georgia for his bill. I appreciate my friend from California for offering this opportunity to speak to my colleagues and to ask the Speaker if she wouldn't allow for full and open debate of appropriate energy bills that American people can support, not ones that increase their taxes and decrease jobs all across this land.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, nothing can be more important than the liberties that we enjoy under our Constitution. This bill that we are considering could not be any more important.

Therefore, in that regard, I wish to yield 5 minutes to my good friend from New Jersey, Congressman PASCRELL.

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, this is truly bizarre. We're talking about life-and-death issues—and I know technically you can speak about anything. But we're talking about life-and-death issues. We have seen witnesses disappear, go underground so that law enforcement cannot protect us. Yet the gentleman, my good friend from Georgia, gets up and talks about something which has absolutely nothing to do with what we're talking about. But I guess that's par for the course.

So I thank the ranking member. I thank the chairman. I thank Mr. CUMMINGS for getting this legislation. And Mr. CUMMINGS has done us all a great favor. Nothing is going to help law enforcement more than our trying to help with the protection of the witnesses out there who view these crimes.

Criminal street gangs have been a major concern all across this country and in New Jersey; and truly, law enforcement cannot do its job without this legislation. Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that there is a more significant thing that we can do in reversing the losing battle that we face at this point and attacking street crime and ending modern-day organized crime on the streets. You need viable witnesses who are not left to chance and risk and will not be frightened or intimidated.

In a 2007 survey conducted in New Jersey by the State police, respondents in 4 out of every 10 New Jersey municipalities—that's 43 percent—reported the presence of street gangs in their jurisdiction during the previous 12 months, not only in cities but in suburban communities. As a former mayor, I know how tough it is for our cities and communities to deal with gang problems all across the United States of America. Gang members are involved in violent and drug-related crimes and recruit young folks in our public schools. Catching and punishing the perpetrators of these crimes is oftentimes difficult, if not impossible. Gangs are so pervasive in many communities that the threat of violent reprisal against members of a community or gang members who want to leave severely hinders law enforcement investigations.

H.R. 1741 would provide a crucial missing link that prevents many of these crimes from being solved in the first place. This legislation will allow the Justice Department to begin offering grants to local communities to implement local witness protection programs. What have we come to? When we talk about witness protection programs, we think we're talking about something 20 years ago, 40 years ago. We're talking about now. We're talking about in our own neighborhoods. We're talking about in our own families. That's what we're talking about. Ensuring witness safety, short- and long-term relocation, and financial and housing assistance are essential to the effective investigation and prosecution of gang-related crimes, Mr. Speaker. The Federal Government must reach out to assist local police departments in keeping our communities and our schools safe. This bill will provide a critical service to many needy communities. I thank those folks who brought it to the floor, particularly Mr. CUMMINGS, my good friend from Maryland. I'm glad we could stay, most of us, on the topic at hand.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, we believe that the precious time on the floor needs to be well spent, and we certainly support that we are well spending it. This is an important piece of legislation. It's important because, in fact, we in the Federal Government need to team with cities and localities around the country to ensure that we not distort where prosecutions are made. I fully support this legislation because, with all due respect to my colleague, it will relieve the cities and the counties from often choosing a Federal venue rather than a local venue if we help with protecting their witnesses, something that the Federal Government and the U.S. Marshals have proven to do very well. So I do support the bill. It's a bipartisan bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would ask how many minutes are left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are 6 minutes remaining for the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman from California has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I now yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Houston, Texas, and also a fellow member of the Judiciary Committee, Ms. JACKSON-LEE.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I thank the distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee and chairperson of the subcommittee for yielding.

I rise in support of H.R. 1741, which is long in coming and long overdue. Tragically, we are seeing the increased utilization of gun violence and certainly the increased impact on our teenagers. Whether it is guns used in gang activity or guns used to slaughter innocent persons in various stop-and-go shops or others, we are seeing that kind of senseless violence. Over the last couple of days, I saw in my own community two hardworking shopkeepers murdered and slaughtered in their own shop early in the morning; and the kind of killing it was may have generated witnesses who need to be protected. We have watched the slaughter of children in the Chicago school district, which has gotten to be an epidemic condition. They have been using guns. There have been young people leaving churches who have been shot and killed. So we understand the value of this legislation. I remember hearing before the Judiciary Committee where the individuals who wanted this kind of protection told us of the fear in which they live.

H.R. 1741, sponsored by my good friend, Representative ELIJAH CUMMINGS, is an important legislative initiative; and I would ask my colleagues to, likewise, support it. It joins right together with H. Res. 454 that will be on this House floor in a few minutes that deals with the 25th anniversary of the National Center For Missing and Exploited Children and has a lot to do with the protection of our Nation's children, those who have been kidnapped and murdered, and those who have been exploited. Again, it ties back to this whole question of protecting witnesses who provide the necessary testimony to convict those of these heinous crimes.

This may not be the underlying necessity for H. Res. 515; but I rise to also add my support for the legislation that condemns the slaughter and murder of Army Private William Long and the wounding of Army Private Quinton Ezeagwu. That was a terrorist act of which we condemn. It may be that the alleged perpetrator is in prison, but we don't know whether there is a widespread conspiracy. We hear so. Again, H.R. 1741 would allow us to protect these witnesses. The act of killing our military personnel on U.S. soil was an act of terror, and I abhor it. I denounce it. It is a resounding disgrace in this country; and therefore, H. Res. 515 should, in fact, be able to pass. All of these tie to the idea of protecting witnesses in criminal activities because we realize how frightening a prospect it is.

I also add my support to H.R. 2675, the extension of the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004. I am also a member of the Subcommittee on Antitrust and view this as an important legislative initiative.

Allow me to close by suggesting that as we saw in my remarks earlier today on the floor in H. Res. 505, condemning the death of Dr. George Tiller, we have conditions here that warrant this legislation, H.R. 1741. It is terrible that violent acts are perpetrated here in America, that violent acts come about through the use of firearms and other manners and, therefore, there will be witnesses that will be necessary to bring these people to justice. I cannot imagine allowing these heinous crimes to be perpetrated without being able to prosecute because a witness is frightened for themselves and their family. The legislation that we are now speaking to provides that protection, and I ask my colleagues to support the legislation.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would yield back the balance of my time and support the passage of this important legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. The great Constitution of the United States of America starts off with a preamble, and that preamble goes as follows:

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

So this bill deals with domestic tranquility; and as you know, Mr. Speaker, the most powerful beast imagined can always be brought down by just a little parasite inside of that particular beast. We too can be subjected to internal parasites, and we can die from that. The question is, are we willing to die to ensure that domestic tranquility is achieved? If we truly care about ourselves, our own safety and the safety of our dear families, neighbors and anyone else, should we not be willing to die to protect our liberties by calling it like it is, street crime? You see something happen—regardless of whether or not you consider that snitching or not, and I would say that it's not. But do you have the courage to be able to do what will really protect your folks? That's the question.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1741, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

ANTITRUST CRIMINAL PENALTY ENHANCEMENT AND REFORM ACT OF 2004 EXTENSION ACT

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2675) to amend title II of the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004 to extend the operation of such title for a 1-year period ending June 22, 2010.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 2675

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004 Extension Act".

SEC. 2. DELAY OF SUNSET.

Section 211(a) of the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004 (15 U.S.C. 1 note) is amended by striking "5 years" and inserting "6 years".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENT.

The amendment made by section 2 shall take effect immediately before June 22, 2009.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from California (Mr. ISSA) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation extends by 1 year expiring provisions of the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004, otherwise known as ACPERA. ACPERA not only increases maximum criminal penalties under the Sherman Act for hardcore antitrust violations but also created whistleblower incentives to spur antitrust cartel detection.

Portions of the 2004 act are set to expire in 2 weeks on June 22. This 1-year extension preserves the penalties and incentives currently in place, while affording Congress time to explore possible improvements to the 2004 act.

I am pleased to have as cosponsors of this bill the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, JOHN CONYERS, as well as full committee Ranking Member LAMAR SMITH and Courts Subcommittee Ranking Member HOWARD COBLE.

Cartel violations are some of the worst crimes perpetrated on the American consumer; yet they are too often crimes we cannot see, as all of this criminal activity takes place in secret meetings behind closed doors. In the previous bill, we were talking about crime in the streets, and now we are talking about crime in the suites.

Price-fixing cartels can go undetected for years, possibly forever. With hundreds of millions or even billions of dollars worth of unlawful profits at stake, these criminal cartels are very effective at finding ways to keep their actions secret. But 5 years ago, Congress gave the Justice Department's Antitrust Division a new weapon to attack this secrecy head-on. ACPERA promotes the detection and prosecution of illegal cartel behavior by giving participants in a price-fixing cartel powerful incentives to report the cartel to the Justice Department and cooperate in the prosecution of the cartel.

Before ACPERA, the Justice Department could offer leniency to a coconspirator who exposed a cartel and helped bring it to justice. But the cooperating party remained fully liable to paying treble damages to the cartel's victims and potentially exposed to having to pay the entire amount.

ACPERA addressed this shortcoming in the criminal leniency program by also limiting the cooperating party's exposure to liability with respect to civil litigation. ACPERA empowers the Justice Department to limit civil liability of a cooperating party to single damages, not treble. The remaining co-conspirators, however, remain jointly and severally liable for all damages. In this way, Mr. Speaker, the act strikes a carefully crafted balance, encouraging the cartel members to turn on each other while ensuring full compensation to the victims.

The positive impact of this law cannot be overstated. In the first half of this year, ACPERA has aided the antitrust division in securing jail sentences in 85 percent of its individual prosecutions and over $900 million in criminal fines.

As chairman of the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Courts and Competition Policy, I want to ensure that the Justice Department has all the tools it needs to continue its excellent work, which is to protect consumers against price-fixing cartels.

Again, I thank the bipartisan coalition of Members who have joined me as cosponsors in this very important legislation. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to inquire if the gentleman has any further speakers after I conclude?

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. We have no more speakers, and I would be prepared to conclude.

Mr. ISSA. Excellent. I will be brief.

This is noncontroversial. In fact, the Antitrust Criminal Enhancement Reform Act of 2009 is about a program that is working. It is a program that not only do I hope we will unanimously pass and send to the Senate, but that the Senate will act quickly so that after the 2 weeks remaining, this statute will not expire, and we will use this year wisely to review and reauthorize in a longer term basis this act.

ACPERA has in fact worked. It is something that both the majority and minority have agreed on, and I urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield back my time on this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2675.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WEBCASTER SETTLEMENT ACT OF 2009

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2344) to amend section 114 of title 17, United States Code, to provide for agreements for the reproduction and performance of sound recordings by webcasters.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 2344

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Webcaster Settlement Act of 2009".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF AGREEMENTS.

Section 114(f)(5) of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (D), by striking "2008" and inserting "2008, the Webcaster Settlement Act of 2009,";

(2) in subparagraph (E)(iii), by striking "to make eligible nonsubscription transmissions and ephemeral recordings"; and

(3) in subparagraph (F), by striking "February 15, 2009" and inserting "at 11:59 p.m. Eastern time on the 30th day after the date of the enactment of the Webcaster Settlement Act of 2009".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from California (Mr. ISSA) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Webcaster Settlement Act of 2009 allows the recording industry and the providers of Internet radio, also known as Webcasters, to negotiate reasonable royalty rates for the streaming of sound recordings on the Internet.

While a relatively new technology, the audience for Internet radio is growing rapidly. Fifty to 70 million Americans listen to Internet radio each month, in part because of the diverse programming available to cater to many different musical tastes.

In 1995, Congress passed a digital performance right for sound recordings. In 1998, the Digital Millennium Copyright Act expanded the right to Internet radio services by granting them the privilege of using copyrighted music at an industry-negotiated rate, or in the event the industry could not negotiate a rate, at a government-mandated rate determined by the Copyright Royalty Board, or CRB.

At the request of Webcasters, in 2004 Congress enacted the Copyright Royalty and Distribution Reform Act, which authorized a CRB proceeding to set fair statutory rates for Internet radio. Accordingly, in 2007, the CRB announced new statutory royalty rates for sound recordings to be paid by Webcasters.

The CRB's decision, which sets rates on a minimum fee, per-song, per-listener formula, would require Webcasters to pay significantly higher royalties than they previously paid under a percentage-of-revenue model.

Because of concerns that the higher rates are likely to threaten the future of Internet radio, Congress enacted the Webcaster Settlement Act of 2008. Signed into law last October, it allowed for the implementation of royalty fee agreements reached on or before February 15, 2009, between the recording industry and Webcasters that would serve as an alternative to the payment scheme set forth in the CRB decision.

While some Webcasters were able to reach consensus with the recording industry, others have not yet reached an agreement. Enactment of the Webcasters Settlement Act of 2009 will give more parties an opportunity to reach a consensus by allowing them to negotiate alternative rates. This opportunity to reach consensus will protect the viability of technology enjoyed by millions of Americans every day.

This legislation has the full support of the relevant parties. I commend the Internet radio and recording industries for the substantial progress that has been made in negotiations in recent months, and I encourage them to resolve all outstanding issues promptly so that we may see a thriving Internet radio industry in the near future.

I commend my colleague, JAY INSLEE of Washington, for his leadership on this legislation, as well as Intellectual Property Subcommittee Chairman HOWARD BERMAN for facilitating discussions between the parties.

I would like to also commend Judiciary ranking member, Mr. LAMAR SMITH, for his leadership in making this a truly bipartisan effort, and I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume for our response to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from California yielding.

H.R. 2344, the Webcaster Settlement Act of 2009, grants limited statutory authority to SoundExchange, the government-designated entity that is responsible for disbursing Webcasting royalties to copyright owners.

The bill gives SoundExchange the legal authority to effect an agreement that has already been negotiated with certain “pureplay” Webcasters for the performance of sound recordings over the Internet.

Under the terms, the bill will provide a window of 30 days for other Webcasters to agree to be bound by this new agreement.

For those Webcasters who choose to take advantage, they will be able to substitute the rate and rate calculation methods provided in the agreement for those previously announced by the copyright royalty judges, CRJs, on April 30, 2007.

These new terms will run through the end of 2015, which means that this group of Webcasters and sound recording artists who are due royalties under the Webcasting licensing will benefit from the extended period of certainty in their economic relationship.

Mr. Speaker, I have a strong preference for voluntarily negotiating settlements, which allow each side to compromise, claim a measure of victory, and go home.

This is particularly true when the alternative is for parties to engage in lengthy and expensive adversarial legal and lobbying efforts such as those that have followed the CRJs’ determination in the Webcasters proceedings in 2007.

When they issued their 117-page final order, the CRJs established the statutory rates and the terms for the performance of compulsorily licensed Internet streamed music for a 5-year period that is due to expire December 31, 2010.

The law provides this process because we have an obligation to ensure that copyright owners whose works are made available in a government-mandated license are fairly compensated by the private parties who seek to benefit from such use.

Indeed, the Judiciary Committee and the Congress established the CRJ process, in no small part, in response to Webcasters’ concerns that the previous Copyright Arbitration Royalty Panel, or CARP, process effectively prohibited many small entities from participating.

Nevertheless, despite their advocacy for this process, some Webcasters have suggested from time to time that the CRJs acted unfairly in reaching their decision. But the record reveals that the decision came at the end of an 18-month proceeding that included 48 days of testimony, 192 exhibits, 475 pleadings, motions and orders, and a transcript that exceeded 13,000 pages.

Notwithstanding these facts, the Congress enacted the Webcasting Settlement Act of 2008 late last year to provide an additional period of time for parties to negotiate private agreements. That period expired February 15, 2009.

Several entities, including the National Association of Broadcasters, are to be commended for reaching an accord during this window, but it appears a number of others were either unable or unwilling to come to terms during the generous period of time that Congress provided.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2344, but in so doing, I note that it seems a bit like the tail wagging the dog for Congress to legislate and create exceptions to the due process and notice requirements in the existing statutory process each time one party or another calculates they could get a better deal by disregarding the deadline the law provides.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would yield to my colleague from the great State of Washington, the Honorable JAY INSLEE, as much time as he may consume.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I’m pleased to commend the Webcaster Settlement Act of 2009 to my colleagues.

I just want to make two or three points. First, this phenomenon of online radio is just a tremendous service for our constituents; 42 million Americans are enjoying this on at least a semiregular basis. It is growing rapidly. It is a very, very beloved service. And when it goes missing, as it did recently in my City of Seattle, a little station called OCO was sort of providing underground music to my local community and had to shut down as a result of the CRB decision, and it is much missed. We hope to get this and many other things back up when we get this settlement going.

Second, I think there is widespread agreement that the average 47 percent of revenues that the CRB decision would require simply is not sustainable for the industry. And I want to commend all parties to the discussions to try to find an appropriate way to move forward.

The third point I want to make is that keeping online radio going and healthy is not just about entertainment; it’s about news, it’s about public information, it’s about emergency preparedness. We’ve got to do everything we can to give our constituents multiple sources of information. By allowing this bill to go through—and, hopefully, the parties will reach a final settlement—we’re going to allow a democracy to blossom.

So I want to thank Chairman CONYERS and Ranking Member SMITH for their cooperation in facilitating this and commend this bill to my colleagues.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I now yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this legislation and urge its passage, and I do so for a reason that I believe does tie fairly into another piece of legislation. This is a piece of bipartisan legislation with Chairman CONYERS. Another piece tries to deal with a greater inequity than even this one.

While Internet broadcasters or podcasters or Webcasters pay as much as half of their revenues, half of their gross revenues if they play performances of music, and NAB was cited as being a participant, let me make something very clear, Mr. Speaker. The National Association of Broadcasters has chosen to have an absolute “burn the bridge” attitude toward terrestrial broadcasters paying even a cent.

I join with Chairman CONYERS, Mr. BERMAN, myself, and many others, in urging that this pattern of lowering to what we believe is a more fair rate or helping lower to what we believe is a more fair rate, in fact, flies in the face of terrestrial broadcasters continuing to say that the only fair amount to pay in the way of royalties to the music producers, the actual performers, is zero.

The public today, Mr. Speaker, when they hear this, if they hear this, will be shocked to find out that when they listen to terrestrial radio, nothing is paid to the artist.

Well, if they listen to Internet radio, actually more than half in some cases of the gross revenues of these Internet broadcasters is paid to the performers.

As Mr. INSLEE said, I do believe that perhaps it is too much; that there is, in fact, a point at which, when you tax something too much, even if it’s taxed to pay the performance, you may get too little of it. To that extent, we need to find an amount that balances fairly compensation for the creative artist who brought us this fine music and those who would seek to make it available to the public.

I hope that this piece of legislation will help for those doing business on the Internet and that H.R. 2344 will be quickly adopted and that it will lead to more affordable rates for the Internet.

But I cannot, in good conscience, fail to mention that these companies trying to start and promote a new industry and a service in many places in which terrestrial broadcasts may be poor or not available at all find themselves hampered while they pay half of their revenues out in royalties, competing against terrestrial broadcasters who insist on continuing to pay not a penny.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will look for this legislation to become law. I look for the other legislation behind it to be brought to the floor, fairly considered, and voted on in order to bring performance fairness.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would join my colleague on the other side of the aisle in support of H.R. 848, which is the bill that you just mentioned, and the reason why is because it’s just an issue of fairness. It’s fairness to the artist as well as fairness to the platforms upon which we hear these sound recordings, Internet radio being one.

Cable, satellite, they have to pay performance royalties, which is really performers' royalties. They must pay that. But the broadcast industry, AM/FM radio, basically, is protected, if you will, or exempted from having to pay. This is anticompetitive, and it also results in great tragedy where these radio stations are able to play music repetitively that we all enjoy listening to, and then the artist who performs the music doesn't get a dime. And so many of them are forced to work what I call the "Chitlin Circuit" and, you know, can't even purchase their prescription medication for diabetes, whatever infirmity that they may have. And then some even die indigent and there's no coverage for burial expenses.

And so it's really an issue of fairness. And unfortunately, the broadcast industry has done a despicable thing, and that is to play the race card. And they do it with the deceptive and false statement that H.R. 848 is an attempt to drive black broadcasters, black radio stations off, out of existence, and nothing could be further from the truth.

May I inquire though, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not there are anymore speakers?

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further speakers at this time and would close quickly when the gentleman is ready.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I will yield back.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia. I, again, reiterate my appreciation for his appropriate and wonderful statements on H.R. 848, a bill that would simply eliminate Congress' prohibition on the Copyright Royalty Board from reaching a fair and equitable royalty for performers.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CUMMINGS). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2344.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONDEMNING THE MURDER OF PRIVATE WILLIAM LONG

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FRANKS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 515 rightly condemns the murder of Army Private William Long and the wounding of Army Private Quinton Ezeagwula, who were shot outside the Army Navy Career Center in Little Rock, Arkansas, on June 1, 2009.

This dastardly attack on two young Americans who were simply standing outside the Armed Forces Recruiting Center where they worked should shock the conscience of all Americans.

Private Long, who was 23, was murdered. Private Ezeagwula, who is 18, was wounded. They had answered their call to service and were willing to lay down their lives for their country, but the deadly attack came here at home, not on a field of battle halfway across the world.

There are more than 1.4 million Active members of the Armed Forces protecting America, and more than 1.2 million Reserve members. There are more than 8,000 Army and Army Reserve recruiters, and more than 7,000 Navy recruiters, serving at more than 1,500 military recruiting stations and centers in the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam, and Europe. Each one of these men and women are courageous patriots who deserve our support, and this deadly attack is nothing short of dastardly.

This resolution offers the condolences of this House to the family of Private Long, expresses our hopes for a full recovery for Private Ezeagwula, and urges that the perpetrator or perpetrators of this senseless shooting be brought to justice.

I want to commend our colleague, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FRANKS), for introducing this resolution. It is an appropriate statement of what I note to be the views of every Member of this House. At a time like this, it is important for all of us to stand together to support our men and women in uniform and to speak with one voice against violence directed against them.

I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on June 1 of 2009, only about a week ago, Private William Long, only 23 years old, was shot and killed as he worked at the Army Navy Career Center, which is a military recruitment center, in Little Rock, Arkansas. Private Quinton I. Ezeagwula, age 18, was also shot in the attack that day. Thankfully, Private Ezeagwula survived; although our latest information is that he remains still in critical condition.

Mr. Speaker, most persons who are listening today are hearing about Private Long's death for the first time. It's likely that most Americans haven't heard of his killing because Private Long's murder forces the issue that the mainstream media does not want to confront or report on, and that is Islamic terrorism within and coming from within the United States.

The man accused of shooting Private Long and Private Ezeagwula was formally known as Carlos Bledsoe. Bledsoe converted to Islam and changed his name to Abdulhakim Mujahid Muhammad. He later traveled to Yemen where he was there studying under an Islamic scholar. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have millions of law-abiding Muslims in this country. Acts of terror committed by some members of a religion should never be used to condemn all members of that religion. At the same time, however, we cannot be blind to the jihadist ideology of some Muslims of this country who believe that they have a religious duty to murder the innocent.

The mindset of radical Islamic terrorism which today seems to find fertile ground in the soil of jihad claims that the cause of justice is advanced by killing the innocent and by killing those who seek to protect the innocent. This is the fundamental reality. And when the American media and we, as a people, refuse to call evil by its name, it imperils us all and it dishonors all of those, like these two soldiers who have sacrificed and bled to protect the innocent from that evil.

Mr. Speaker, the American soldier does not fight because he hates what's in front of him. He fights because he loves what is behind him. Private Long's so-called crime was his commitment to defending the innocent against those who would cause them and all of us harm. That commitment is the price required oftentimes to maintain our freedom. That commitment was carried deeply in the heart of Private William Long. He displayed it bravely by wearing the uniform of the United States armed services and dying in it for all of us. That commitment will forever be the legacy of his life on this Earth.

Mr. Speaker, today there are approximately 1.2 million Reserve component members of the Armed Forces protecting America; more than 8,000 Army and Army Reserve recruiters; and more than 7,000 Navy recruiters serving at more than 1,500 military recruiting stations and centers in the United States, Guam, Puerto Rico, and Europe. This attack could have ended the lives of any one of those noble men and women. Each of them risks his or her life every single day to preserve America's freedom and to defend the right of every American to live free, to be free, and pursue their dreams.

So today, Mr. Speaker, I've introduced House Resolution 515 to offer our deepest condolences to the family of Private William Long on behalf of the United States House of Representatives, to offer our hope of a full and complete recovery for Private Quinton Ezeagwula, and to urge the prosecution of the preparator of this senseless shooting to the fullest extent of the law, and finally, to urge the American people to join together in condemning such horrific acts of violence upon the noble men and women of our Armed Forces.

We pray especially that the hearts of all of those that Private Long knew and loved would find comfort and peace in the knowledge that in dying, because he wore the uniform of the United States military, their loved one laid down his life for the sake of human freedom and on behalf of those who could not defend that freedom for themselves. No legacy could be more noble, Mr. Speaker.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. SNYDER).

Mr. SNYDER. People in America, Mr. Speaker, mourn the loss of any of our troops in combat or not, here or abroad. Andy Long, private, United States Army, was killed in Little Rock, Arkansas in my district 1 week before he was to leave to be with his unit headed to Korea. We mourn his loss today. So, also, do we hope and pray for the rapid recovery of Private Ezeagwula who was wounded.

I attended the funeral yesterday of Andy Long in Conway, Arkansas, and met both families. The Long family is a military family: his great-grandfather served; his grandfather served; his father is a retired marine warrant officer; his mother served and is a veteran—and, in fact, she was in the parking lot waiting to give him a ride home when the shooting began. His brother Triston is in the military today and will be headed to Iraq this summer.

A family tradition for this family is that the father prepares a letter to give to the son when he deploys. Yesterday, Andy's father, Retired Marine CWO4 Daris Long, read the following letter to his son. He had these ideas in mind to give to his son and put them down in writing, and the letter was placed in the casket yesterday at the funeral. And this was the letter that Daris Long wrote to his son:

"Dear Andy, let me start by telling you how proud your mother and I are of you in your choice to serve this country. The profession of arms is not an easy job. It is not 9-5. You won't often get a choice in what you want, when you want to do something, or even voice some of your opinions.

"You took an oath, 'I, William Andrew Long, do solemnly swear to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same.' That means a lot. In my mind, it means that whatever your personal feelings are, you may have to put them aside because you don't get to decide who you are going to protect, you protect the rights of all. Oliver Hazard Perry, a War of 1812 Naval hero, once toasted the country with this, 'My country, right or wrong, but first my country.' That statement was often quoted out of context by my generation in the end years of the Vietnam War by protestors. In light of your oath, its true meaning is revealed. Always remember, your loyalties are to the principles upon which this country was established. Your duty is to the country, not some cause, not some character, not to some party."

Mr. Long continues: "'That I will obey the orders of the President of the United States, the officers and non-commissioned officers appointed over me, acting in accordance with regulations and the Uniform Code of Military Justice. So help me, God.' You are to obey the rightful orders given you. I am sure you were given classes on the laws of warfare, what is right and what is wrong. This part of the oath charges you to do the right thing. This part absolutely absolves you from obeying illegal orders. It reminds you that the old 'I was just following orders' routine doesn't excuse you from misconduct that results from following an illegal order. It does not mean you can refuse to follow orders you may disagree with but only those that are clearly illegal. You have to have a moral compass and rigidly follow it.

"You are now on your way to Korea. What we had talked about, filling your off-duty time with constructive pursuits, may have to go on hold with what is going on over there now."

Mr. Long continues: "You need to find someone in your unit who is good at what he does professionally and personally and get into his hip pocket. Learn what he knows. Your leaders are going to be pressed to have everything and everybody ready in case things go south. You may not have time to get your newly acquired skills down to an art. You need to support your leaders and fellow soldiers by being a good follower. Remember, as an infantryman, your life support system is the guy next to you. You need to trust him. He needs to know he can trust you. When you are in the thick of things your focus will narrow to your immediate brothers in arms, other things will fade the mere distractions. You need to have your head on a swivel, be aware of your surroundings. Follow your orders quickly and completely. Please, for your own sanity and to ease the burden of your immediate leaders, don't get bogged down with all the whining and back seat driving you may hear from 'sea lawyers' in your unit—every outfit has them—they are known, some have more, some have less."

Mr. Long continues: "I was once where you are, at the bottom of the food chain. However, after having been promoted up the ladder to Chief Warrant Officer 4, I can tell you that at each level of command, at fire team, squad, platoon, company, and so on, the people in charge are always being pounded on to take care of their people. Your welfare is key to the success of the accomplishment of the mission. There will be times that you will have to be reminded of this and you may think I am full of it, but it is fact."

Mr. Long continues: "This quote has been used many times and I think it was attributed to some anonymous author who wrote on a c-ration box somewhere in the field in Vietnam: 'For those who have fought for it, freedom has a flavor the protected will never know.' I am personally proud of your progression from boy to man. It's been hard, but the end result is my hero. You and your brother serving are a joy to me. You both are foregoing a lot by doing what you are doing especially now when your country is in peril. You both are heroes by having the moral courage to stand up when the country needs you most, when others are not willing to give up their creature comforts. These are times I wish I were still doing what you are. However, the profession of arms is a young man's game. The last recruits I trained are now coming up on 29 years, 3 months in service if any of them are still in."

Mr. Long continues: "My heart is with you. My mind is still ticking through the pre-deployment checklists, what the priorities are, where I am going. I know you are in the Army and I'm sure you are tired of hearing how the Marines do it. Marines march to the sound of the guns. You need to do the same. Don't let others do your job, your duty. I haven't told your mom in words, but all those times I left on a moment's notice and came back long after others were home, I volunteered. I wasn't going to be left behind to let others do my job or what I considered a job I could do better. I'm telling you this because your job is to stand watch on the wall, separating us, from those who would do us harm. Your day only ends when you've done your duty."

And Mr. Long finishes: "So you have a lot of long days ahead of you. I've told this to Triston, and now it is your turn. I hope you take this letter as it is meant—from a father who loves you, trying to give you some hard-learned life experience. Even though we have had our ups and downs, I have always loved you. You are in both my thoughts and prayers. You are my son. You are my hero. I love you. Semper Fidelis, Dad."

Mr. Long put this letter in the cassette, and then he reminded me today that he intends to write a similar letter to his son Triston when he deploys to Iraq this summer.

I want to make a brief comment about the resolution.

I was not involved with the writing of this resolution. I think I would have phrased part of it differently. It says, Resolved, that the House of Representatives, number 3, urges swift prosecution to the fullest extent of the law the perpetrator of this senseless shooting.

My own view is that we do not know all of the facts surrounding this shooting. If it turns out that, in fact, the perpetrator, whoever did this, was trained, supported by some overseas group affiliated with al Qaeda or any of the other terrorist groups, the hell with swift prosecution. We need to take "em" out.

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, just a personal thought on my part.

Sometimes a country oftentimes asks itself the question of what really is the source and fundamental essence of our security. And oftentimes, we think that that is the length and breadth of our military might, and I would only remind us all that thousands of years ago, China built the Great Wall to protect China. This was a wall that would have challenged some of our modern day tanks and they thought that they were completely secure, but in that time China was invaded three different times because the enemy simply bribed the guard who opened the gate and let them in.

I would submit today that the greatest and most important factor for the freedom of a people is the commitment in the heart of its people, and especially those who put on the uniform, to be committed enough to stand in the way of the aggressor and their homeland. And that is exactly what Private Long and Private Ezeagwula tried to do.

There is a verse that says, Greater love hath no man than this; that a man lay down his life for his friends. It is the most noble of all acts that we can accomplish on this Earth. Sometimes I think we forget how much some people give for the freedom that we have. Privates Long and Ezeagwula are good examples.

Mr. Speaker, I think sometimes we also forget the price that families pay. You know, it is easy for us to focus upon only the fallen, but those who remain and the grief that is laid upon their broken shoulders is often sometimes something we cannot identify with.

I was in the Press Club here a few days ago, and I saw a diamond-shaped picture of a cold, icy, windy day out at Arlington National Cemetery. A woman stood alone with her back to the viewer standing at a tombstone. There was no one else in the cemetery and the wind was blowing and her clothes were out to the side. It was the loneliest thing I had ever seen. And the title was simply, "The Widow." Now, I understand that Private Long was not yet married, but I am sure there was someone out there that loved him, and I know that his parents loved him. And the family has faced a loss that none of us can even imagine. So as we salute Private Long, I also think it is in order to salute his family, who have paid such a high price so we can stand here in this Chamber and talk about freedom.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NADLER of New York. How much time do I have remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has 10½ minutes.

Mr. NADLER of New York. Well, I won't take that, but I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, we ask every member of our armed services—2.6 million men and women in the Active and Reserve forces—to be willing to lay down their lives for our country in defense of our freedom, if need be, and they are willing to do that. And every time, whether in Iraq or Afghanistan or anywhere else around the globe, a member of our armed services is killed in action there is a grieved family, a lover, a wife, a husband, a mother, a father, a son, a daughter for all of these who are grieved and whose loss can never be made up. And we sometimes, except on Memorial Day, forget about that. And this happens all the time, too often, and we don't think about it too much. We ought to think about it because our freedoms are dependent on it; our way of life is dependent on it. And none of us would be here enjoying our freedoms if it weren't for the willingness of our sons and daughters to do what they have to do to keep us safe and free.

This resolution does not address all of that; it simply addresses two members of our armed services, one of whom was killed and one of whom was severely wounded. But the difference is that they weren't in a combat zone; they were murdered and wounded here at home, supposedly in a safe place. And it illustrates that even here at home not everyone is safe.

So this resolution mourns the death of Private Long and the wounding of Private Ezeagwula, and it extends our condolences to the family of Private Long and our wishes for the best recovery to Private Ezeagwula. It is little enough that we can do, but it is really all we can do at this point. It says we are grateful. It reminds us of the sacrifices that are made.

I appreciate Mr. FRANKS' introduction of this resolution. I urge everyone to support it. And as with the resolution I spoke of earlier today, I cannot believe anyone will not support it. So I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

CONDEMNING THE MURDER OF PRIVATE WILLIAM LONG

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 515) condemning the murder of Army Private William Long and the wounding of Army Private Quinton Ezeagwula, who were shot outside the Army Navy Career Center in Little

Mr. NADLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 515, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECOGNIZING NATIONAL PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND SPORT WEEK

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 503) recognizing National Physical Education and Sport Week, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 503

Whereas, May 1 through May 7, 2009, is observed as National Physical Education and Sport Week;

Whereas childhood obesity has reached epidemic proportions in the United States;

Whereas the Department of Health and Human Services estimates that, by 2010, 20 percent of children in the United States will be obese;

Whereas a decline in physical activity has contributed to the unprecedented epidemic of childhood obesity;

Whereas regular physical activity is necessary to support normal and healthy growth in children;

Whereas overweight adolescents have a 70 to 80 percent chance of becoming overweight adults, increasing their risk for chronic disease, disability, and death;

Whereas type 2 diabetes can no longer be referred to as "late in life" or "adult onset" diabetes because it occurs in children as young as 10 years old;

Whereas the Physical Activity Guidelines for Americans recommend that children engage in at least 60 minutes of physical activity on most, and preferably all, days of the week;

Whereas children spend many of their waking hours at school and therefore need to be active during the school day to meet the recommendations of the Physical Activity Guidelines for Americans;

Whereas teaching children about physical education and sports not only ensures that they are physically active during the school day, but also educates them on how to be physically active and its importance;

Whereas according to a 2006 survey by the Department of Health and Human Services, 3.8 percent of elementary schools, 7.9 percent of middle schools, and 2.1 percent of high schools provide daily physical education or its equivalent for the entire school year, and 22 percent of schools do not require students to take any physical education at all;

Whereas according to the survey, 13.7% of elementary schools, 15.2% of middle schools, and 3.0% of high schools provided physical education at least three days per week, or the equivalent thereof, for the entire school year for students in all grades in the school;

(2) calls on school districts to implement local wellness policies as defined by the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 2004 that include ambitious goals for physical education, physical activity, and other activities addressing the childhood obesity epidemic and promoting child wellness; and

(3) encourages schools to offer physical education classes to students and work with community partners to provide opportunities and safe spaces for physical activities before and after school and during the summer months for all children and youth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 503 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 503, which supports efforts to increase physical activity and participation of youth in sports.

Physical education is necessary in the face of our Nation's growing childhood obesity crisis. The Department of Health and Human Services estimates that by 2010, 20 percent of children in the United States will be obese. Without physical education and youth sports, this epidemic would surely be worse than its current situation.

Childhood obesity places a significant burden on our health care system. Overweight adolescents have a 70 to 80 percent chance of becoming overweight adults, a key predictor of chronic disease and disability. The rise in childhood obesity has also been accompanied in the rise of prevalence of type 2 diabetes among children and adolescents.

Teaching children about physical education and sports provides not only physical activity during the typically sedentary school day but also instills in children the importance of physical activity as a way to stay healthy. It is important that we recognize and encourage physical education in our Nation's schools as a necessary component of a holistic education.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to recognize the value of physical education and youth sports. A 2006 survey by the Department of Health and Human Services found that only 3.8 percent of elementary schools, 7.9 percent of middle schools, and 2.1 percent of high schools provide daily physical education or its equivalent for the entire school. Twenty-two percent of schools do not require students to take any physical education. This exists despite research that shows a positive correlation between physical activity and academic performance. In addition, physical activity provides our children with self-esteem and improves their emotional health.

We recognize that our Nation shares a collective responsibility in reversing the trend of childhood obesity. National Physical Education and Sports Week reaffirms the central role that these activities play in encouraging healthy practices for children.

The future of our children's health is an issue that deserves our Nation's utmost attention. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague, Congressman ALTMIRE, for introducing this resolution, and I urge our colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 503 to recognize National Physical Education and Sports Week, which took place this year from May 1 through May 7.

The health and wellness of America's children is undoubtedly a subject of great concern at this time in history. Over 33 percent of America's elementary school children are overweight or obese, and over 13 percent of America's high school children are obese.

Overweight and obese children are developing diseases and vascular conditions that were once thought of as conditions affecting only the middle-aged. Obese children have been shown to be at an increased risk of coronary heart disease, diabetes, respiratory problems, and numerous other debilitating diseases. In addition, they often suffer from low self-esteem and feelings of isolation and other psychological side effects.

Physical activity is an important aspect of health in preventing obesity and obesity-related illnesses in both children and adults. Regular physical activity substantially reduces the risk of a number of preventable diseases, such as coronary heart disease, the Nation's leading cause of death, and decreases the risk for stroke, colon cancer, diabetes, and high blood pressure. It also helps to control weight, contributes to healthy bones, muscles, and joints, reduces falls for older adults, and is associated with fewer hospitalizations.

Physical activity need not be strenuous to be beneficial, but in the age of innumerable video games, computer activities, and television channels, it often takes a back seat in the lives of America's youth.

Physical education and sports encourage children to participate in physical activity on a regular basis in a group setting that can foster teamwork, competition, and a sense of accomplishment. In addition, a correlation has been seen between children that participate in sports and higher academic achievement in the classroom.

Participation of children in organized sports has grown in recent decades. However, the percentage of children participating in daily physical education programs has declined in recent times; although the importance of physical activity has become increasingly apparent.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommends that children engage in 60 minutes of physical activity 5 or more days a week. Only 35 percent of children regularly meet this recommendation, however. Physical education programs and sports create an opportunity for children to build lifelong healthy habits in a fun and engaging environment. As such, they should be supported and encouraged.

I ask my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize an outstanding colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. ALTMIRE), for 2 minutes.

Mr. ALTMIRE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of my resolution to celebrate National Physical Education and Sports Week. This resolution simply recognizes the role that physical activity and sports play in creating a healthy lifestyle for children and adults and encourages schools and communities to promote physical education and activities.

Today, there are more than 9 million overweight children in the United States. And as a result, children are now being diagnosed with high blood pressure, high cholesterol, and type 2 diabetes, all afflictions once thought to be age-related. And these children are at an increased risk also for chronic diseases like heart disease and cancer.

The benefits of physical activity have been well-documented. Research shows daily physical activity reduces the risk of heart disease, high blood pressure, and diabetes, and also increases self-esteem and performance in the classroom. It is for these reasons and many more, Mr. Speaker, that I introduced this resolution, and I encourage my colleagues to support it.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. SCALISE).

Mr. SCALISE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague's offer to yield time on this bill as this bill discusses the need to create healthy lifestyles for children. I think that something we should also be discussing here is the need to create economic opportunities for children, to make sure that our children not only are having a lifestyle that's healthy in school, teaching physical fitness, but also making sure that we are dealing with policies up here in Washington that allow them to have real opportunities when they get out of school.

There is one bill that is moving through this body right now, the cap-and-trade energy tax, that would severely jeopardize our children's opportunities to have a better life, to have the opportunities that we had in our life. And so as we are talking about legislation right now to create healthy lifestyles, I think we should also be looking at the policies that come out of this body that could actually create big impediments, impediments that would deny them opportunities when they graduate from school.

Let's talk about that cap-and-trade energy tax that is moving through. We just got a new, updated report by the Congressional Budget Office. The cap-and-trade energy tax that has been proposed imposes $846 billion in new taxes, taxes on energy that would affect every American, denying people the ability to buy healthy food for their children because they would be spending, according to the President's own budget director, $1,300 a year more in higher utility prices, not to mention how much more money they would be spending in higher gas prices at the pump, creating a greater dependence on Middle Eastern oil at a time when we need to be creating a national energy policy that is comprehensive, that uses our natural resources to create good jobs here in America, to fund and bridge us into those alternative sources of energy, like wind, like solar, like nuclear power, so that we can truly reduce our dependence on Middle Eastern oil and give those young children an opportunity to have good jobs here in America, using American natural resources to propel them.

We have got an alternative bill called the American Energy Innovation Act, a bill that takes an all-of-the-above approach, that actually utilizes American natural resources, our oil, our natural gas. There are estimates that we have got almost 100 years of natural gas reserves here in this country. In fact, in Louisiana, the largest natural gas find in the history of our country occurred just 3 years ago. I know one of my colleagues will be talking about that. But we have got the ability here in our country to secure our energy independence. We've got legislation we have filed that would help us secure that energy independence, and they won't allow us a hearing on this bill because they are promoting this cap-and-trade energy tax, a tax on energy. Again, as we're talking about our young children, encouraging them to lead healthy lifestyles, we need to also be creating policies here that give them those opportunities so that they don't get out of school and have to go straight to the unemployment line.

Their bill, this cap-and-trade energy tax, and I have got a copy of it right here. There are 55 pages, 55 pages in their bill dedicated to job losses, to American jobs that will be lost due to a cap-and-trade energy tax. In fact, the National Association of Manufacturers has estimated the cap-and-trade energy tax would run 3 to 4 million jobs out of America to countries like China and India, who are just chomping at the bit to take our jobs.

So you would wonder why at a time when we are here discussing legislation to encourage our children to lead healthy lifestyles, as we should, there's also legislation moving through this Congress, pushed by the leadership in this Congress, that's trying to tax energy and run millions of jobs overseas to countries like China and India at a time when we are seeing record-level unemployment, over 9 percent. We broke the mark of 9 percent just in this last report, 9 percent unemployment in this country, at a time when so many people are cutting back because times are tough. And the answer that the leadership in Congress has is to promote a tax on energy, an $840 billion tax on energy that would run millions of jobs overseas.

The real irony, when they talk about the goal of reducing carbon emissions, the real irony is the countries that will be getting our jobs, China, to produce the same steel that's produced here in America today, will actually emit more carbon to produce the same steel because they don't have the current environmental regulations that we have here in America. So the real irony is that they would be running jobs overseas to countries that will actually emit more carbon.

Spain just did a study on cap-and-trade because they experimented with it for years. Spain, after finally realizing it was a bad idea, looked back and noticed that for every new job they created in a "green" industry, they lost 2.2 regular jobs, and of those new jobs they created, 9 out of 10 of them were temporary jobs. So, in essence, they lost 20 jobs for every full-time job they created.

So we need to promote good policies, but we need to defeat this cap-and-trade energy tax.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. FLEMING).

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend from Pennsylvania for yielding me this time.

I think this is an important bill. I do rise in support of it. I'm a family physician who has treated diabetes even in and among teenagers, which is a sad situation when you consider the future of someone who develops diabetes so young. And certainly the physical future is very important.

But I am also very concerned about the fiscal future of our youth. I'm very troubled today. A constituent came to me today from the oil and gas industry and was discussing with me the problems that already are emerging with the loss of tax incentives to invest in exploration that is going on in my district and districts around. So, Mr. Speaker, I think that looking down the line here at the fact that we have not yet developed an energy policy, I know my side of the aisle, we Republicans, attempted to get to the floor a no-cost stimulus bill which would have, I think, been very innovative and certainly revolutionary in getting our energy costs down. But having said that, as gas prices now are approaching $3 a gallon and we are still in a severe recession, just think that even $4 a gallon pretty soon is probably going to be bypassed very quickly.

With that, I just want to reiterate what my friend also from Louisiana, Mr. SCALISE, has discussed as we move into the cap-and-trade debate, the cap-and-tax debate, if you will, where every analyst that we have been able to read sees this as a pure form of taxation, that the real underlying purpose of it is to raise more money for, I guess, social spending or perhaps single-payer, nationalized, health care spending. I'm not sure. But the net effect of that is just what we have seen with the incubator that we call Spain, and that is cap-and-tax has been in play there for 10 years, and what has been the net result?

Well, today the unemployment rate in Spain is 17.5 percent. As Mr. SCALISE mentioned, for every job that's been gained, a so-called "green" job—and again, I will get to that in a moment as to what a green job, I think, is supposed to be—there has been a loss of 2.2 real jobs. And I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in the State of Louisiana and surrounding States that the jobs that we have today that come from the oil and gas industry are very significant jobs. They carry benefits. They carry pay easily in the $50,000 to $100,000 range in many cases. And the so-called "green" jobs that are discussed, if you look at Spain and their experience, what they found was that 90 percent of the green jobs were implementation jobs, that is, construction. And, of course, once the construction or implementation period is over, that job goes away; so there is only left a remaining 10 percent of the total green jobs that even become permanent jobs.

But then if you look further underlying that, Mr. Speaker, what you find is that the green jobs are really a pass-through of taxpayer money into the system and then as payroll for these so-called "green" jobs. They are not a direct result of an exponential growth of a healthy economy or a healthy oil and gas industry.

So, as we move into this debate—and I understand it's being pushed pretty hard right now—we've got to decide are we going to continue to put more taxes on our citizens in the way of higher utility bills, which will impact the poor and those on fixed income to the tune of over $3,000 a year of added electrical bills, or are we going to see our manufacturing have to leave this country and go overseas because it can no longer compete with the higher energy costs? What is really the question here? How are we going to have more revenue into our Treasury by killing off jobs?

So I don't think this is any longer a theoretical discussion. I think we are talking about real people and real jobs. And all we have to do is to look at Spain and other countries who have attempted this.

But just in summary, Mr. Speaker, I think that we need to be very careful about what government is taking over and what it's controlling. If you look to Western Europe, where socialism has been rampant for years, you actually see a retraction, a move away from that. Even Pravda made a statement recently that we are going headlong into Marxism when, in fact, the rest of the world is pulling back.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLEMING. With that, I thank you for your time in the discussion.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. THOMPSON).

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in this steady march and drum towards cap-and-trade or cap-and-tax, it strikes me that certainly the health of our Nation is really what's at risk here in terms of what cap-and-trade will do to our Nation, what it does to our businesses, our industries, what it does to our families, what it does to the individual citizens in terms of the costs that will be placed upon them, the burden that they have to bear, and it's a burden that affects all segments of the society. Those that I worry most about actually are those who live paycheck to paycheck and those who just barely get by in their household budgets and what this significant increase of costs will be, specific to turning a light switch on in Pennsylvania with energy costs going up 30 percent, with filling up your gas. I represent a very rural district, and in rural America we drive. We drive to work. We drive to pick up our groceries. We drive sometimes to pick up our mail. And the cost of gas is estimated to increase by 76 percent. Those are costs that our families and individuals cannot bear.

But I think there is something out there, as opposed to this big government proposal of cap-and-trade, that we should be looking at, and that is using our natural resources like natural gas. Natural gas currently accounts for roughly 23 percent of our overall energy consumption, and natural gas is the cleanest fossil fuel. Natural gas is used for many energy sources, but it's also vital as a feedstock ingredient in many products we consume every day. Anything from plastics to pharmaceuticals use natural gas as an ingredient.

Now, as a member of the House Agriculture Committee, I must point out how important natural gas is to our farmers and our agricultural sector. We can't grow our food without fertilizer, and natural gas is an important ingredient in fertilizer. We only have to go back as far as last summer when we saw the price of energy skyrocket in our country, and that's what we are looking at now under cap-and-trade, to see what the impact of that was on our farmers and on food prices. Many farmers in the past few years have been hurting because of high energy costs.

The United States has an abundant supply of natural gas, and the vast majority of what we consume is produced right here at home. Let me repeat that. The vast majority of natural gas we produce, that's a homegrown product, and that's good for this country.

Oil, for instance, is a world price. That means that we pay $69 a barrel, today's price, but so does Germany, Japan, and Canada. However, natural gas is not a world price, meaning that the price of natural gas varies from country to country, and it's simply supply and demand. When we produce more natural gas, its costs will come down.

Now, having said that, I believe that we should expand upon our natural gas production, which could act as a bridge to get us into a future where renewables really will be the major energy source. Renewables such as wind, solar, and the like are all energy sources that we would like to utilize. But it's also important to bear in mind that these sources make up only about 1 percent of what we consume, and the major reason for that is because they are not as inexpensive as coal, oil, and natural gas. However, the majority party in Washington would like to make renewables more viable by increasing the costs of fossil fuels through the proposed cap-and-trade bill.

Now, last fall the House Republicans had an important and major victory in Congress. They led the way in removing a longstanding moratorium on the Outer Continental Shelf. I would like to see us move forward in producing in the OCS, which estimates the project has a net royalty worth of $1.7 trillion.

Another area that shows great promise is my home State of Pennsylvania. Eighty percent of Pennsylvania rests upon the Marcellus Shale, which is likely the third largest natural gas field in the world. That's literally hundreds of trillions of cubic feet of clean-burning natural gas that could power our country for decades, bringing jobs and all of the economic benefits with it.

Just today, in The Wall Street Journal, there was an article on the marketplace page entitled, "KKR Invests in Gas Explorer." Within cap-and-trade, we talk a lot about these renewables that only exist because of the subsidy that we're putting into them. This is a great article because this is what America is all about in terms of real science. It talks about the company KKR that has invested in gas exploration. It didn't take stimulus money. It didn't take subsidy money from the Federal government or from any other level of government. It was free market enterprise money for investing in natural gas because they recognized the value of it.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any further speakers?

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I do not have any additional speakers. I urge a "yes" vote, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, routinely, this Chamber is visited by many young people, by many groups of young people, reminding us that we are in need of promoting and of advancing sound and principled ideas and policies that will be inherited by them, by their generation. They will inherit the good and the bad works that we do, and they will count on us for finding sound and reasonable solutions.

That being said, I believe it's very important for us to advance the opportunity for them to have a sounder environment. They have the right to breathe cleaner air. We have within our grasp the opportunity to reduce that carbon footprint. We have the opportunity to go forward and to cut this pattern of advancing $475 billion annually to foreign economies for fossil-based fuels. We can do better with green solutions, and we can advance House Resolution 503, which allows for us to promote physical education and sports, which will advance the general health and well-being of our students and which will give them stronger academic performance.

I strongly urge our colleagues to support House Resolution 503. I encourage them to vote "yes" on Representative ALTMIRE's resolution.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 503—Recognizing National Physical Education and Sport Week.

This measure will signal to school districts across the country that they must begin to place health and wellness among their top priorities when planning curriculums for the upcoming school year. The rates of childhood obesity, heart disease, and diabetes in this country are unacceptable, and it is incumbent upon local school systems to provide programs and education that will teach students fundamental healthy lifestyle habits.

Therefore, I firmly support this resolution and I commend my colleague Rep. JASON ALTMIRE for bringing this measure before the floor.

Physical education that takes place within schools and incorporates nutritional guidelines, physical activity, and a holistic approach to fitness will not only reverse the alarming increase in childhood obesity, but it will also result in a general decline in obesity and heart disease among the general U.S. population. As studies have shown, obese children have a 70 to 80 percent chance of becoming overweight adults, further increasing their risk for chronic disease.

Our nation's minority communities are at particular risk, as poverty, lack of education, and diets high in fat and calories are all contributing factors increasing the likelihood of childhood obesity. During my visits to schools and conversations with children and their parents, I always emphasize the importance of not only academic success, but also a healthy lifestyle including physical fitness.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that we begin to rethink our old paradigms about health. In addition to treating the effects of unhealthy lifestyle habits—heart disease, diabetes, and chronic illness—we must enhance our efforts to promote prevention of disease and encourage healthy living.

Redirecting our attention toward youth health today will help children grow up to be healthy and productive adults. This will also reduce future healthcare costs. Therefore, I am pleased to add my voice of support for H. Res. 503. Moreover, I will be working with my colleagues to make sure we continue to take the necessary steps to educate our nation's children and adults about the importance of healthy lifestyle habits.

Mr. TONKO. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 503.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECOGNIZING AMERICORPS

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 453) recognizing the significant accomplishments of the AmeriCorps and encouraging all citizens to join in a national effort to salute AmeriCorps members and alumni, and raise awareness about the importance of national and community service.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 453

Whereas the AmeriCorps national service program, since its inception in 1994, has proven to be a highly effective way to engage Americans in meeting a wide range of local needs, national response directives, and promote the ethic of service and volunteering;

Whereas, each year, AmeriCorps provides opportunities for 75,000 citizens across the Nation to give back in an intensive way to their communities, States, and to the Nation;

Whereas those same individuals have improved the lives of the Nation's most vulnerable citizens, protect the environment, contribute to public safety, respond to disasters, and strengthen the educational system;

Whereas AmeriCorps members, after their terms of service end, remain engaged in their communities as volunteers, teachers, and nonprofit professionals in disproportionately high levels;

Whereas AmeriCorps members serve thousands of nonprofit organizations, schools, and faith-based and community organizations each year;

Whereas, on April 21, 2009, President Barack Obama signed the Edward M. Kennedy Serve America Act, passed by bipartisan majorities in both the House and the Senate, which reauthorizes and expands AmeriCorps programs to incorporate 250,000 volunteers each year;

Whereas national service programs have engaged millions of Americans in results-driven service in the Nation's most vulnerable communities, providing hope and help to people facing economic and social needs;

Whereas, this year, as the economic downturn puts millions of Americans at risk, national service and volunteering are more important than ever; and

Whereas 2009's AmeriCorps Week, observed May 9 through May 16, provides the perfect opportunity for AmeriCorps members, alums, grantees, program partners, and friends to shine a spotlight on the work done by members—and to motivate more Americans to serve their communities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) encourages all citizens to join in a national effort to salute AmeriCorps members and alumni, and raise awareness about the importance of national and community service;

(2) acknowledges the significant accomplishments of the AmeriCorps members, alumni, and community partners;

(3) recognizes the important contributions to the lives of our citizens by AmeriCorps members; and

(4) encourages citizens of all ages and backgrounds and from each state to consider serving in AmeriCorps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous materials on House Resolution 453 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TONKO. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the substantial contributions that AmeriCorps has made towards national and community service.

AmeriCorps began in 1994 as an effort to engage Americans in the ethic of service and volunteerism. The organization launched following the establishment of the Corporation for National and Community Service under the National and Community Service Trust Act. The initial class of 20,000 volunteers established an immediate tradition of assisting communities across the country. This tradition involves improving the lives of the Nation's most vulnerable citizens, protecting the environment, contributing to public safety, responding to disasters, and strengthening our educational system.

We recognize the real impact that AmeriCorps has and continues to have on our Nation's communities. Since 1994, more than 570,000 individuals have served with the organization. These individuals have tackled some of the Nation's toughest issues, including illiteracy, gang violence, homelessness, and drug abuse. They have worked with thousands of organizations ranging from Habitat for Humanity to the Red Cross. After their terms of service, these members remain engaged in their communities as volunteers, as teachers, and as nonprofit professionals at disproportionately high levels.

In my district, in the capital region of New York State, we have a large AmeriCorps program with the Self Advocacy Association of New York. The AmeriCorps members, all with developmental disabilities, travel around the State, giving presentations—promoting the importance of self-advocacy for people with disabilities, the general awareness of disability-related issues and the importance of full community inclusion of people with disabilities.

This is important work, and I am so pleased we have these volunteers back home in my congressional district. We realize that, as this current economic downturn puts millions of Americans at risk, the need for volunteers and national service will be more important than ever.

The recently signed Edward M. Kennedy Serve America Act expands the AmeriCorps program to incorporate some 250,000 volunteers each year. It is important to recognize the commitment of these volunteers so that future generations will continue to support the ideal of national service. The strength of our Nation depends upon individuals who take action towards building better communities.

We observed AmeriCorps Week May 9 through May 16. AmeriCorps Week provides current volunteers, alums, grantees, program partners, and friends with the opportunity to highlight the important work done by this great organization. It is a chance for us to thank those individuals whose service to society cannot be fully measured.

It is also a wonderful opportunity for us to motivate future individuals to pursue the ethic of service, whether in organizations such as AmeriCorps or in the various other service opportunities that exist in our Nation. The ethic of service is a manifestation of the greater ideal of democracy. The AmeriCorps pledge begins: "I will get things done for America to make our people safer, smarter, and healthier." It is important that we recognize that service is a civic duty. Not only do we express gratitude for service, but we express gratitude through service. When we acknowledge the significant accomplishments of AmeriCorps as an organization, we affirm the importance of service as a necessary component of any democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage everyone to take a moment to appreciate the contributions made by AmeriCorps. These volunteers are the muscle of America, and they deserve this recognition.

I want to thank Representative MATSUI for bringing this resolution to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to pass this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 453, a resolution recognizing AmeriCorps Week observed last month on May 9 through May 16.

AmeriCorps recognizes the individuals who have chosen to participate in the AmeriCorps program, and they have dedicated a significant amount of time helping others in local communities.

In 1990, President George Herbert Walker Bush signed the National Service Act, a network of national service programs that engage Americans in intensive service to meet the Nation's vital needs in education, public safety, health, and the environment.

In 1993, President Bill Clinton signed the National Community Service Trust Act, which established the Corporation for National and Community Service, which brought the full range of domestic community service programs under the umbrella of one central organization.

Finally, just a few months ago, President Obama signed the latest reauthorization of the Corporation for National and Community Service, a bill that was developed and passed in a strong bipartisan fashion in both Chambers. This legislation builds on the reforms to the corporation, started by the previous administration, to ensure additional accountability in national service programs. This most recent legislation will also help smaller organizations participate in national service, and it will ensure that the unique skills of America's veterans are well-utilized.

AmeriCorps offers 75,000 opportunities for adults of all ages and backgrounds to address a myriad of needs in communities all across America, such as tutoring and mentoring disadvantaged youth, fighting illiteracy, building affordable housing, and assisting communities in times of natural disaster. For example, in the last 3 years, more than 4 million service hours have been spent helping gulf coast communities recover and rebuild after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. That's 4 million hours of service made possible by the organizations and by the individuals who chose to participate in the AmeriCorps programs.

This resolution recognizes one week where we salute current and former AmeriCorps members for their important work. It also allows us to thank all community partners who make it possible for AmeriCorps members to serve.

I want to take this opportunity to thank my fellow cochairs on the National Service Caucus, Representatives MATSUI, EHLERS and PRICE, for introducing this resolution. I ask my colleagues to support it.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield as much time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I thank my colleague of Pennsylvania for yielding me some time.

Mr. Speaker, this bill encourages Americans to support AmeriCorps. There are some around the country who would agree with that. There are others who would not because there are problems with AmeriCorps, such as moneys that have been expended on ACORN. Other funds and efforts by AmeriCorps volunteers have been utilized in campaigns, which I don't think is quite appropriate, particularly when we're trying to promote volunteerism.

Whether people would support AmeriCorps or not, I think that there is another issue that, if the American people were to fully comprehend and understand, the vast majority of this country would not support. It's what the liberals in this Congress are calling cap-and-trade legislation. I call it tax-and-cap legislation because that's what it's all about. It's about taxes. In fact, the President recently said, if this bill were not passed, he would not have the money to fund his socialized medicine program for which he is actually pushing very hard and for which he wants passed by the end of this year.

Now, socialized medicine is going to take people's choices away. It's going to take their choices of doctors away, their choices of hospitals, their choices of what medications they can utilize, whether they can even have a procedure or have surgery that is so desperately needed. It's going to be a program that's going to literally kill people because it's going to deny them care that's desperately needed.

So this tax-and-cap legislation—"cap-and-trade" as it's called—is about money. It's not about the environment. It's about money. It's about more funds being brought into the Federal government to foster what I call a "steamroll of socialism" that's being shoved down the throats of the American people. It's going to slay the American economy. It's going to cost jobs.

The President has talked about using Spain as the icon for what we should look at. Well, in Spain, the icon that the President looks to, we have already seen that for every single green job that it has produced another 2.2 jobs, which were real jobs, permanent jobs, were destroyed.

In my congressional district in northeast Georgia, right now, today, in many counties, we have an unemployment rate of nearly 14 percent. The national average is over 9 percent. In northeast Georgia, it's higher, much higher. I have manufacturing entities within my district that tell me, if this cap-and-trade/tax-and-cap legislation is passed, they're going to lock the doors, and the unemployment rate in northeast Georgia is going to go up markedly from what it is today, which is roughly 14 percent. I think we're going to see 18 percent, 20 percent, maybe 25 percent unemployment in northeast Georgia because of one bill, because of one bill that is being pushed down the throats of the American people: this cap-and-tax—"tax-and-cap" as I call it—cap-and-trade legislation, the Waxman-Markey bill.

It's going to be disastrous for the American economy, it's going to be disastrous for American workers, and it's going to be disastrous for the poor and those who are on limited incomes.

Why do I say that? Well, I say that because every single person in this country utilizes energy. Every single person, when they flip on their light switch, their electric bill is going up. Every single person in this country is dependent upon gasoline or diesel fuel. Why? Even if they don't have a car, even if they use public transportation, it is gasoline and diesel fuel that motivates America. But it's more than that. Groceries don't grow in the grocery store. Grocery prices are going to go up markedly because of this tax-and-cap legislation. Every single good and service in this country is going to go up because of this tax-and-cap legislation.

Now I'm a conservationist. I fought in the conservation movement for a long period of time. We have to be good stewards of our environment. There's no question. I want clean air and clean water just as much as the most ardent, rabid environmental activist in this country. I'm a physician, and I know what dirty air does to my patients who have chronic obstructive pulmonary disease or chronic asthma and lung diseases. We must have clean air. We can do that, but we can do that without destroying our economy. We can do that without costing American jobs.

All we're going to do is run jobs overseas instead of having them here in America. We ought to have public policy that grows our economic base, not kills it. Tax-and-cap legislation would kill it. We ought to have public policy that stimulates the economy instead of kills it. Tax-and-cap will kill it.

We are in a bad economic situation today. People are hurting all over this country. We are borrowing too much. We're spending too much. We're taxing too much. We see the policy from this administration and the liberal leadership of Congress in both the House and the Senate that is going to not only extend this current recession, but I believe it's going to deepen it. I believe it will even take us into a severe recession to the point of a frank, outright depression. Tax-and-cap legislation is going to be the locomotive that takes us down those tracks, and it's going to be a high-speed train taking us toward economic ruin. That high-speed train is going to run off a cliff, and it's going to take the American economy and the American people with it. It's going to kill small business. It's going to kill big business. It's going to kill jobs. It's going to hurt poor people. It's going to hurt the elderly, those on limited incomes. It's going to raise the cost of medicine, raise the cost of health care.

And why are we doing this? It is so, as the President himself has said, that he can have the funds to create a bigger socialized medicine program and other socialized programs, bigger government, bigger spending, more economic doom and gloom that's going to be foisted upon the American people. We've got to stop it. And if the American people realized what was happening, they'd stand up and say no to cap-and-tax, cap-and-trade, what I call tax-and-cap legislation, as well as the socialized medicine program, the two big things that this administration and the liberal leadership in this Congress are pushing. Both of them are going to be disastrous. Both of them are going to kill jobs. Both of them are going to take away choices. Both of them are going to destroy our economy. Both of them are going to put our children and grandchildren in severe economic peril. And believe me, I believe it's immoral. I think it's totally immoral because we are robbing our children and our grandchildren of their economic futures. They will live at a standard that's much below ours today.

We have a clear picture of where the leadership in this Congress is taking us and the way the administration is taking us. All we have to do is look in Venezuela. This administration and the liberal leadership in this Congress is going down the same road that Hugo Chavez has taken the Venezuelans. Venezuela nationalized their energy systems. That's exactly what we're trying to do here with cap-and-trade. In Venezuela, Hugo Chavez nationalized the financial institutions. We've already done that. We've nationalized Chrysler and GM, and they're trying to force Ford into the same trap. We've nationalized the insurance industry. We're nationalizing everything of major consequence in this country economically. And now the leadership wants to nationalize, federalize, socialize the health care system in America.

Now where is that train going to take us? We've got a clear picture of that, too. All we have to do is look in Cuba, look in the Soviet-controlled Soviet Union prior to them making their reforms and turning toward a more capitalistic system. But we can look at Cuba. Cuba, prior to Fidel Castro taking over that government, was very prosperous. Certainly they had problems, but not the problems that they have today. In Cuba we have a very rich elite, headed by a Marxist, Fidel Castro. The vast majority of the people in that country are struggling, very poor, with no choices. That's exactly where we're heading in America today if we continue down this road, this steamroller of socialism, this high-speed train that's going to drive us off the economic cliff. We've got to stop it.

Republicans have offered alternative after alternative. We had alternatives to the housing crisis. The liberals on the other side were obstructionists. They wouldn't let our alternatives be heard. We had alternatives to the stimulus bill. I call it the nonstimulus bill because it has not and will not stimulate the economy. We had alternatives. The other side were obstructionists. They would not allow our ideas to be heard or brought to this floor for debate.

We've offered alternatives to the banking crisis. But what have we done? We've bailed out Wall Street. Republicans have offered many alternatives to bail out Main Street, but they are not heard on this floor. Over and over again, the other side has been obstructionist. They've blocked every effort that we have brought on our side, from the Republican side, to bring forth commonsense, market-based free enterprise solutions that would not have put our children and grandchildren's futures at peril. But the other side have been obstructionists. They have not allowed those things to be heard. They have been buried in committee. We introduced the bills. We had press conferences. The Main Street media around this country are very compliant with the leadership on the liberal side because they bury it and don't even report the alternatives.

We hear on the other side that the Republicans are the Party of No. Well actually we are the Party of Know, but it's K-N-O-W. We know how to solve these problems in America. We know how to solve the banking problems. We know how to solve the stimulus/economic problems. We know how to solve the environmental problems, the energy problems, the health care problems that America faces. But are our ideas heard? The other side is the side of no, N-O, because they say no to every proposal that we've made on our side.

The press also is the party of no, N-O, because they've not reported on any of the proposals that we've offered, and it's not right. It's actually going to be disastrous to the American people, and the American people need to stand up and say no to this steamroller of socialism. Stop this high-speed train running off the cliff of economic doom that's going to take our children and grandchildren down into the chasm of a poor economy, struggling to try to pay off the debt for this totally inappropriate outright steamroller of socialism that's being forced down the throats of the American people.

We've got to stop it. And we can stop it if the American people rise up and say no to the steamroller, put a stop to this high-speed train that NANCY PELOSI's driving and HARRY REID's driving that is going to hurt our children, it's going to hurt America, and I'm not sure that we can recover in the next 10 decades, century. It may take that long to put us back on the right track, if we can ever get back on the right track.

We've seen over and over throughout history societies destroyed because of people doing things in a self-centered manner, and that's exactly what's happening in this country today. We are self-centered as a people. We need to look at serving other people, particularly our children and grandchildren, put this country back on the right track, and we can do that.

Former U.S. Senator Everett Dirksen one time said, when he feels the heat, he sees the light. The American people need to put the heat on Members of Congress in the House and the Senate and say no to cap-and-tax, cap-and-trade legislation, to the Waxman-Markey bill. They need to say no to the socialized medicine program that the liberal leadership on the Democratic side is trying to force upon us which will take our choices away. They need to say no to the steamroller of socialism, no to big government, and yes to free enterprise, yes to personal responsibility and accountability, yes to small business. We cannot borrow and spend our way to prosperity. We have to stimulate the economy by stimulating small business. We have to have money in the hands of small businessmen and -women around this country to create jobs. We have to have money in the hands of the taxpayers so that they can have money for a college education for their children, buy clothes, buy food.

The bill just before this one was about encouraging physical education for our children. I'm a medical doctor, and I have seen over and over again how fat and out of shape the kids in this country are. But our economy is going to be skinny and poor because of a fat, bloated Federal Government that the liberal leadership in this House and this Senate are trying to force upon the American people.

So the American people need to stand up and say no to all these steamroller of socialism programs, to the cap-and-trade, to socialized medicine; and say yes to the Republican alternatives that will look to the free marketplace and will stimulate the economy, get us back on the right track and help us have a strong economic future not only for us today but for our children and our grandchildren for the next decades to come.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I do not have any additional speakers, and I would yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, if there is a common thread woven through the fabric of volunteers across this great country of ours, it's a sense of positive, a positive spirit, a positive attitude, positive energy going forward and building stronger communities, enhancing the quality of life of American citizens. Their deeds speak to our needs.

So to focus effectively and most positively on the subject at hand, bringing us to House Resolution 453, I will close with my comments focused in great respect for the volunteers of this country, the spirit of this House resolution. I would suggest that they are that muscle of America. They make a total difference. They enhance the quality of life of each and every American, and the recognition of our volunteers through AmeriCorps, the spirit of House Resolution 453, should be recognized and responded to by our colleagues. I would encourage a "yes" vote on the resolution.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 453, which recognizes the significant accomplishments of the AmeriCorps programs, encourages all citizens to join in a national effort to salute AmeriCorps members and alumni, and helps raise awareness about the importance of national and community service to our country.

AmeriCorps Week is celebrated each year to honor the important work that AmeriCorps volunteers provide to our communities.

This year, we celebrated National AmeriCorps Week with a renewed sense of purpose after the passage of the Senator Edward M. Kennedy Serve America Act. Already we have seen a rise in AmeriCorps applications and a tremendous interest in national and community service as a direct result of this legislation.

The Serve America Act restores the promise of our national service programs by expanding the AmeriCorps programs' volunteer capacity from 75,000 to 250,000 volunteers across the country, and reauthorizes the Corporation for National and Community Service for the first time in 15 years.

In my district of Sacramento, AmeriCorps National Civilian Community Corps, or as we say NCCC, volunteers provide immense benefits to our community and our region. Trained in CPR, first aid, disaster response and firefighting, NCCC teams have responded to every national disaster since the program was established.

As a Co-Chair of the National Service Caucus, it is a pleasure to call attention to the tremendous work of those involved at every level and in every AmeriCorps program.

As a result of the great work of these volunteers, extraordinary things are happening all around America. The service programs and new initiatives help address some of our nation's toughest problems, from poverty and unmet education needs, to natural disasters.

I urge my colleagues to continue to support AmeriCorps volunteers and take this opportunity to thank them for their dedication to our country and to their communities.

Mr. FALCOMA. I rise in support of House Resolution 453 which recognizes the significant accomplishments of the AmeriCorps and encourages all citizens to join in a national effort to salute AmeriCorps members and alumni, and raise awareness about the importance of national and community service.

I want to commend my good friend from the 5th district of California, Ms. DORIS MATSUI, for introducing this important resolution. I also want to recognize the cosponsors for their strong support of House Resolution 453.

Ever since its creation in 1993 by President Clinton, AmeriCorps has honorably served our nation's communities. I am also encouraged by the recent decision by the Obama Administration to increase the total number of volunteers in AmeriCorps to 250,000 by the year 2012, which further demonstrates that AmeriCorps is fulfilling its mission and honorably serving its purpose.

Today, this legislation honors the thousands of volunteers who have selflessly served communities in areas such as education, public safety, health, and the environment. As a result of all their hard work and service, communities across the nation have benefitted tremendously. For example, AmeriCorps has provided mentoring programs to children of incarcerated parents. The program recruits and provides knowledgeable and caring mentors for these children with parents in prison. In 2007, statistics show the program provided mentoring to 93,400 children of incarcerated parents, more than double its target goal of 36,000 children. In addition, AmeriCorps has also been endorsed by a growing number of higher education institutions. In the 2007 fiscal year, 76 institutions matched the AmeriCorps Education Award, an award that provides up to 5,000 dollars a year to volunteers who demonstrate outstanding service in the AmeriCorps programs. This goes to show the support the AmeriCorps is getting from higher-education institutions around the country.

Back in 2003, I co-sponsored House Resolution 2125, introduced by my friend, Ms. ROSA DELAURIO of Connecticut, the Rite of Passage Community Service Act, which created a national network of service programs that allowed for young people who were part of community-based, after-school, and summer service corps programs to work with older AmeriCorps members who could organize service projects and act as mentors to new AmeriCorps members. In the midst of this economic downturn millions of Americans are without jobs and AmeriCorps can provide opportunities for many to become involved in their communities and benefit our nation.

I recognize that there are still some areas that need improvements, but the overall purpose of AmeriCorps programs has been a success. The program has become the number one catalyst for service and voluntary work, in the country.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to announce my support for AmeriCorps and to salute all AmeriCorps members nationwide. Since AmeriCorps was created in 1994, Texas has benefited from over 22,000 young people serving a year or more in our communities. Through programs such as the National Civilian Community Corps, City Year and Teach For America, AmeriCorps volunteers address critical Texas needs in education, public safety, disaster response and recovery, and environment preservation. These programs serve an important role as they provide an outlet for people to serve their country in a manner that had previously not been afforded.

In the last 14 years more than 500,000 individuals have served through AmeriCorps and have earned education awards worth more than $1.5 billion, making the dream of higher education more attainable. This national service program has provided opportunities for growing numbers of Americans to serve our nation.

AmeriCorps members serve thousands of nonprofit organizations, schools, and faith-based and community organizations each year. With the enactment of the Edward M. Kennedy Serve America Act, which President Obama signed on April 21, 2009, three times as many American's will now have the opportunity to serve. This program has engaged millions of Americans in results-driven service in the Nation's most vulnerable communities, providing hope and help to people facing economic and social needs. With the current economic downturn putting millions of Americans at risk, national service and volunteering are more important than ever.

Mr. Speaker, the AmeriCorps program has done great things for Texas and the country as a whole. I am indeed honored to support the significant accomplishments of this wonderful program which represents the very best of the United States of America.

Mr. TONKO. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 453.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

SUPPORTING INTERMEDIATE SPACE CHALLENGE

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 411) supporting the goals and ideals of the Intermediate Space Challenge in Mojave, California.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 411

Whereas the Intermediate Space Challenge in Mojave, California, is a program designed to capture the imagination of youths regarding outer space;

Whereas the aspiration of the Intermediate Space Challenge is to introduce, instill, and energize youths' interest in the engineering, mathematics, and science career fields;

Whereas the Intermediate Space Challenge focuses on 4th, 5th, and 6th grade students during their formative years;

Whereas the Intermediate Space Challenge provides students the opportunity to visit the Mojave Air and Space Port, a 3,300 acre flight research center;

Whereas aviation legends and private space pioneers such as Burt Rutan, Dick Rutan, Brian Binnie, and Mike Melvill have worked with and spoken to students participating in the program;

Whereas the Intermediate Space Challenge enables students to work together in a team environment to choose a team name, create team banners, craft an essay, and develop and use their math and science skills to construct and launch a small rocket under appropriate supervision; and

Whereas the program judges student rocket teams on banner designs, essays, and rocket construction and performance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) supports the goals and ideals of the Intermediate Space Challenge;

(2) commends the volunteers who run the Intermediate Space Challenge and the Mojave Air and Space Port for opening its facility to the young leaders of the future in the science and engineering fields; and

(3) encourages teachers and school administrators across the country to implement similar programs to stimulate students and infuse them with a love of engineering, mathematics, and science.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on House Resolution 411 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TONKO. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support the goals and ideals of the Intermediate Space Challenge in Mojave, California. The Intermediate Space Challenge Program captures children's imaginations as it relates to science, math, space, and experimental learning.

The competition began in response to the Ansari X Prize manned spaceflight contest in 2004, won by Mojave's own SpaceShipOne in 2004. In twin flights from the Mojave Air and Space Port, the spacecraft designed by Burt Rutan took pilots Mike Melvill and Brian Binnie to space and back, claiming a $10 million prize.

Marie Walker originally founded the Intermediate Space Challenge. She coordinated with Stu Witt, Mojave Airport's general manager, and they planned the first challenge in 2004. It has been a great success in the Mojave community. Now in its fifth year, students look forward to the annual competition, with younger students anticipating the time when they are old enough to participate.

The Intermediate Space Challenge hosts a student rocket launch competition, where fourth, fifth, and sixth-grade students compete to build a model rocket that reaches the highest point during launches. Points are awarded on rocket altitude, color, marketing strategy, and spirit. In some cases, the handmade rockets reach up to 600 before parachuting downward.

Individual awards are given in each category, with the overall winner announced at the end of the event. The challenge allows students to work in teams, create a team banner, craft an essay, and develop their small rocket. During the events, many of the students get a chance to view professional rockets and hear how they operate.

The Intermediate Space Challenge fosters great interest in science, in technology, in engineering, and in math among these students and certainly is expected to serve to develop the next great aerospace adventurer of our time.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I express my support for this resolution, and I want to thank Representative MCCARTHY for bringing this resolution forward. I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution, especially in light of our critical need for additional scientists, mathematicians, engineers and related professions. This program that we are recognizing through this resolution is so important to encouraging young people to pursue study in these fields.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 411, a resolution supporting the goals and ideals of the Intermediate Space Challenge that takes place every year in Mojave, California.

Each May 4th, 5th and 6th graders from school districts around the Mojave Air and Spaceport gather at the Spaceport to show off their homemade rockets and compete to see how far the rockets can actually fly. Points get awarded based on altitude, color, marketing strategy, and spirit of the final product. The Challenge was designed to spark interest in the science and engineering career fields early in a student's educational career. The hands-on nature of the event allows students to see how the concepts they learn about in the classroom can be applied to actually make a rocket soar.

We have all heard about the critical need for American scientists, mathematicians, engineers and other professionals in the Science, Technology, Engineering or Math—STEM—fields for short. For that reason, we passed the America COMPETES Act last Congress. We have also continued to think about the importance of STEM throughout the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act and I expect it to be a big topic of conversation when we start on the reauthorization of No Child Left Behind. With several leaders in the area of STEM education on our Committee, such as Representatives EHLERS, MCMORRIS-RODGERS and HOLT, we have ensured that programs such as the Adjunct Teacher Corps got incorporated into our education laws. Through the Adjunct Teacher Corps, we allow professionals in STEM fields to come into the classroom to teach or to provide ongoing professional development to classroom teachers who do not have that subject matter expertise. Programs like this and the others included in both the Higher Education Act and the America COMPETES Act demonstrate the federal government's commitment to trying to help fill the shortfall that currently exists in the STEM pipeline.

Programs such as the Intermediate Space Challenge show what local communities are doing to try and light that spark at an early age for students to become interested in STEM subjects. We should recognize these efforts and encourage other communities to utilize their own resources to develop hands-on projects. These types of projects show students how their classroom knowledge can be translated into real life applications. I support the goals and ideals put forward by the Intermediate Space Challenge and I encourage my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the prime sponsor of this legislation, the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. MCCARTHY).

Mr. MCCARTHY of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 411, a resolution I introduced that honors the goals and ideals of the Intermediate Space Challenge at the Mojave Air and Space Port located in my district in Mojave, California.

Mojave Air and Space Port has a long history of firsts, from Burt and Dick Rutan's collaboration on the Voyager around-the-world flight in 1986 to 2004's flight of SpaceShipOne, the first privately funded manned spacecraft.

Nearby are Edwards Air Force Base and China Lake Naval Weapons Center, which are cutting-edge research and testing facilities that are continuing to push the envelope. In fact, when I visit the National Air and Space Museum here in Washington, D.C., I feel at home. There are so many aircraft from my district, like SpaceShipOne, Voyager, Chuck Yeager's Glamorous Glennis that broke the sound barrier, and the X-15, which, incidentally, we celebrated the 50th anniversary of the X-15's first flight yesterday.

The Intermediate Space Challenge started in 2005 under the direction of Marie Walker. Marie is the CEO of Fiberset, a Mojave company that manufactures composite products and components. She saw an opportunity in and around Mojave to bring together fourth, fifth and sixth-grade students with aerospace leaders to educate them and inspire them to become the next generation of aerospace pioneers. I am proud to recognize their hard work on this fifth anniversary year of the program, and I appreciate being able to participate.

Marie Walker and all those who have been instrumental in organizing and executing the Intermediate Space Challenge recognized the opportunities to grab the attention of our students through the Intermediate Space Challenge and get them interested in science and engineering.

Students work in teams to write an essay, create a banner, and then build and design a rocket. They get assistance from high school students as mentors, so the program engages students from multiple age groups. The teams of fourth, fifth and sixth-graders then compete both on rocket performance and on a team spirit. Paralleling the X-Prize's requirement for a privately funded manned spacecraft to go up into space twice in two weeks, students' rockets make two flights.

During the course of the events, the students hear from special guest speakers. Students have heard from aviation pioneers Burt and Dick Rutan and the SpaceShipOne astronauts in past years. Through the words and actions of these real, live aerospace heroes, students can see that the opportunities are limitless.

I appreciate the support of Chairman MILLER and Ranking Member McKEON, who are also original cosponsors, and my colleague JIM COSTA, who has always been supportive of the activities at the Mojave Air and Space Port.

Congratulations to all the students who have participated in this event. I look forward to many more years of successful student rocket launches, and with that, I am proud to support and bring this resolution to the floor.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any further speakers?

Mr. PLATTS. I do have additional speakers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TONKO. I reserve my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mrs. BLACKBURN).

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I do rise to support the Intermediate Space Challenge.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, many of the young people that are growing up and participating in this are going to find they are going to grow up in a very different America than we have grown up in because of the increase in taxes that are taking place every single day and the way this crowds out opportunity for young people.

Indeed, my colleagues across the aisle have become the party of punishment, and that is what I am hearing from my constituents as I traveled across the Seventh Congressional District this past week, and they are very, very concerned.

What they are telling me is they know that clean air and clean water and clean energy are important, and, Mr. Speaker, I think we as politicians would say we are even for clean mud. We are just not for taxing people out of their house and home to pay for clean energy. And that is exactly what this cap-and-trade bill, or cap-and-tax, as we call it, cap our growth, tax our people, trade our jobs, and that is what it is going to do, as the Democrats put a price on the very air that we breathe.

The cap-and-trade bill that came out of the Energy and Commerce Committee last week, the Federal building standards that are in that bill are of concern to our Realtors, to our commercial property holders, knowing that there will be these standards that are going to be very, very difficult for them to comply with, knowing that there are going to be energy audits put on their houses, knowing that they are going to have to buy carbon credits if they don't have solar panels on their roof or a windmill in the yard, knowing that they literally are going to see the air that they breathe taxed.

As my colleague from Georgia had previously said, you know, groceries don't grow in a grocery store. They don't grow in a grocery store, Mr. Speaker; they grow out in the fields. They require this carbon dioxide in order to grow and be green and be healthy and provide the food and the forestation that we need here in the United States and certainly around the globe.

The cap-and-trade bill is something that is going to limit opportunity. It is something that we are going to see affect jobs and future jobs. We know that it is expected to cost us over 1 million jobs lost and that we are going to see our unemployment numbers rise substantially, and we are going to see our electricity rates go up by 90 percent.

When we were in committee, we offered an amendment that would have ended cap-and-trade if gas went over $5 a gallon. Mr. Speaker, our colleagues across the aisle sought to defeat that.

We said, let's end it if unemployment goes past 15 percent, and our colleagues across the aisle said no, they were not going to end it if employment went past 15 percent.

We said, let's tell everybody what this costs, how much is it increasing the cost of your electric power, how much is it increasing the cost of the gas you buy, how much is it increasing the cost of the food you eat. And our colleagues across the aisle said no, they were not going to disclose that and vote for and support that amendment.

We even offered an amendment that would protect the innovators of tomorrow who are going to solve the energy issues that we have before us, and they sought not to provide that intellectual property protection for all these young boys and girls, many who are going through the Intermediate Space Challenge now, many who will be the innovators of tomorrow, who will solve the energy issues for future decades, who will create the electric cars.

Indeed, when you look at the electric cars and the lithium ion batteries, the three States that hold the most patents for furthering this invention are California, Ohio, and my great State of Tennessee. Intellectual property protection should have been provided for those. Many of those innovators of tomorrow are in this program that we are celebrating. It is very sad that the party of punishment doesn't provide the protection that those young men and women need to be the innovators of tomorrow.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any further speakers?

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I have one additional speaker.

Mr. TONKO. I reserve my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA).

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I also rise in support today of what this would mean to our young people in this country. In my old State Senate district I represented an area in Erie County near Plum Brook Station, which is a large NASA testing facility. Just to the east of there, we had NASA Glenn, which is in Cuyahoga County.

The things that we can do and achieve in this country through the space program are limitless. However, if we stand by what we are seeing happening across Congress today with this cap-and-tax legislation, we are in trouble.

One of the things I am proud of is the fact that in my Fifth Congressional District I represent an area where we manufacture solar panels with First Solar. We have another company coming on line this fall that will also be in solar manufacturing. We also in my district have wind turbines, ethanol, hydrogen, biomass, and we are doing all these things in the alternative.

Also though it is very, very important in this country that we have that base load capacity that we have to have to be able to manufacture, that we have to have if we want to continue to be able to be independent in this country, especially when we are talking about manufacturing in the new age of space. We have to make sure that we have these homegrown companies here today. It is going to be very, very difficult to do that if we don't have the manufacturing capacity and if we also don't have that base load capacity.

One of the things we have found, of course, is that we don't have that base load capacity in certain areas, and we also don't have the ability of being able to go out there on the nuclear facilities. I think 1977 was the last time that we had a nuclear facility permitted in this country. And the problem that we have today is if we want to have more nuclear, to be able to produce more power, to be able to keep our manufacturing capacity, it is going to be very tough to do, because a lot of these parts are no longer made in this country.

We have to go overseas to buy these if we can get them today. And some of the very large components are made in Japan. And there's a long waiting list because so many countries are out there wanting to build nuclear facilities and keep up that base load capacity. Why is it important?

Well, again, if we don't utilize that all-of-the-above policy of not only having the alternatives because we all want to make sure in this country that we have a clean environment, but we also want to make sure that we have nuclear, clean coal, oil, natural gas and geothermal.

We've all seen the headlines in the paper of course where, you know, CBO score saying that we're looking at $846 billion on this new cap-and-tax, which would be a massive energy tax on the American people. But at the same time, as the gentledady from Tennessee was just talking about, is the tremendous cost on individuals.

One of the analyses from the Heritage Foundation shows that they're looking at around a $4,300 per year tax on an average family. And how do they get to that number? It says, our $1,500 number is just the direct impact of household energy bills. Your energy bill, your natural gas bill, your home heating bill, and of course the amount of gas you put in your tank, and that would be around $1,500.

But also, there is that ripple effect that goes through the economy that takes it up to $4,300. And in the year 2035 alone, the cost is $8,276, and the cost per family for the whole energy tax aggregated from 2012 to 2030 is $116,680.

And compare it if we did not have a cap-and-tax, the real GDP losses increase an additional $2 trillion, from $7.4 trillion under the original draft to $9.6 trillion under the new draft.

Compared to no cap-and-trade, the average economic or unemployment increases an additional 261,000 jobs, from 844,000 lost jobs under the original draft to 1.1 million jobs under the new draft.

Also, interesting enough in the paper today in the Washington Times is an article, "GDP hit found with cap, trade." This is from the Brookings Institution. "The Brookings Institution on Monday said cap-and-trade legislation to reduce carbon dioxide emissions would lower the Nation's gross domestic product in 2050 by 2.5 percent, compared with levels it would reach if the legislation is not implemented."

It also says that, "About 35 percent of crude-oil-related jobs and 40 percent of coal-related jobs would be lost in 2025."

It goes on to say: "It assumes that the majority of workers would find new jobs, but the net job loss would be 0.5 percent over the first 10 years that the legislation is in effect."

I don't think that this country can afford it because, again, to go on, you know, when you're looking at reducing the aggregate gross GDP by $9.6 trillion, destroying 1.1 million jobs, raising electric rates, as the gentledady from Tennessee just mentioned, by 90 percent after adjusting for inflation, seeing gasoline prices up to 74 percent, raising residential natural gas prices by 55—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. PLATTS. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. LATTA. I appreciate the gentleman for yielding.

—raising natural gas prices by 55 percent, raising an average family's annual energy bill by $1,500, and again, increase the inflation-adjusted Federal debt by 26 percent, or $29,150 additional Federal debt per person after adjusting for inflation.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any further speakers?

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I have no additional speakers.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, decades ago, a global space race inspired all sorts of ingenuity and innovation. It enabled this country to stretch its thinking, provide for lofty opportunities, and emerge with a higher level of status in the global community because it had won that space race.

Providing many, many opportunities, it is indeed the inspiration for today's House Resolution 411, as witnessed through the Intermediate Space Challenge in Mojave, California. Today, we have that same opportunity to stretch our thinking, to provide that loftiness, to be able to emerge with an innovation economy driven by another sort of global race, one called an energy race, which will find the winner to be the exporter of energy innovation, energy thinking, energy ideas, and energy intellect.

And so I think the moves forward by this House can perhaps inspire another saga of intermediate space challenge. But today we recognize and support the goals and ideals of that great Intermediate Space Challenge through House Resolution 411.

I would encourage our colleagues to support this resolution. It is most meritorious.

I yield back my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 411.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSUMER ASSISTANCE TO RECYCLE AND SAVE ACT

Ms. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2751) to accelerate motor fuel savings nationwide and provide incentives to registered owners of high polluting automobiles to replace such automobiles with new fuel efficient and less polluting automobiles.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 2751

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. SUTTON) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Ohio.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Ms. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of over 2,000 men and women who work in the Ohio assembly plant in my district and approximately 50,000 Ohioans whose jobs are associated with that plant. I rise for the 159,000 Ohioans with auto-related jobs and the 3 to 5 million Americans who rely on the auto industry to provide for their families.

I rise today on behalf of the environment, as we turn the corner to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, improve fuel economy, and to help reduce our reliance on foreign oil.

I rise today on behalf of the consumers throughout our great country who continue to struggle during this global recession. And I rise today as the proud sponsor of the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, also known as the CARS Act.

And I want to thank President Obama for his support of this legislation. And I want to thank Speaker PELOSI for supporting this effort and thank Majority Leader HOYER for all of the help that he has provided as we worked to deliver the benefits of this bill to the American people.

And I want to thank Chairman WAXMAN, Chairman MARKEY, Chairman Emeritus DINGELL, and Representatives ISRAEL, INSLEE, STUPAK and UPTON for their collaboration and support on this bill. And thank you to my colleagues, Representative CANDICE MILLER and Representative BRUCE BRALEY, who started this process with me back in March.

Mr. Speaker, the bipartisan CARS Act will shore up millions of jobs and stimulate local economies. It will improve our environment and reduce our dependence on foreign oil. It will provide much-needed financial assistance to consumers to trade in less fuel-efficient vehicles for vehicles which achieve a measured increased fuel-efficient.

What the CARS Act will not do is allow someone to trade in a vehicle and receive a voucher to purchase a vehicle that is less fuel efficient.

We have ensured environmental integrity in this bill, and this bill demonstrates that we do not have to bind ourselves to the arguments of the past. We no longer have to give in to the temptation of either/or thinking. The CARS Act demonstrates that we can free ourselves from the false argument of either you are for the environment or you are for jobs. We can do both. We must do both, and that's exactly what the CARS Act does.

2009 auto sales are down nearly 42 percent below the 2005 peak. We have not seen such a decline since 1955, and this decline jeopardizes our country's largest manufacturing industry.

These are not ordinary times. These times call for bold action. Three to 5 million jobs are at risk. Auto-related jobs number in the thousands in every State in our Nation, and though it's called the CARS Act, this bill is far more than about just cars. It's about people. It's about the millions of families in this great Nation who depend on the strength of our auto and related industries for their livelihood. It's about our friends and our neighbors, and it's about our communities that depend on auto-related jobs for their tax base to support their schools, their police, fire and other city services.

By passing the CARS Act, we can shore up these jobs, get customers back into the showrooms, help our dealers move cars, and improve the environment.

Nations across the world have instituted incentive programs. In May, while our auto sales in this country fell 34 percent, sales in Germany increased 40 percent after they instituted a program.

On May 19, the Committee on Energy and Commerce passed an amendment of the CARS Act to the American Clean Energy and Security Act by a bipartisan vote of 50-4.

Under the CARS Act, consumers will trade in less fuel-efficient vehicles and receive an electronic voucher for $3,500 to $4,500 at the point of sale toward the lease or purchase of a vehicle with increased fuel efficiency. Light-duty trucks, both small and large, also qualify under the program, and work trucks, often used by small businesses, will be eligible for replacement as well.

And though our fleet modernization program is open to vehicles, regardless of where they are made, I encourage everyone who participates in this program to think about the families who depend upon cars made in the United States and ask you to purchase a fuel-efficient vehicle assembled right here at home to help shore up jobs and help our environment.

Some refer to this bill as the "Cash for Clunkers" bill. Others use a gentler term, "fleet modernization." But by any name, by any title, the CARS Act offers significant multiple benefits.

This bill has earned broad-based support. It has the support of Ford and GM and Chrysler, the United Auto Workers, the Business Round Table, the Automotive Trade Policy Council, the Ohio Automobile Dealers Association, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, PPG Industries, National Paint and Coatings Association, the Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers, Motor & Equipment Manufacturers Association, Specialty Equipment Market Association, the Association of International Automobile Manufacturers, the American Iron and Steel Institute, Automotive Recyclers Association, the United Steel Workers, the National Automobile Dealers Association, the American International Automobile Dealers, the National Association of Manufacturers, the AFL-CIO, and the United States Chamber of Commerce. These groups have provided letters of support for this bill, and Mr. Speaker, I would like to include them in the RECORD.

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 9, 2009.

HON. BETTY SUTTON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: Ford Motor Company strongly supports the adoption of the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act of 2009 (CARS Act) introduced by Rep. Betty Sutton. This "cash-for-clunkers" proposal would provide an incentive to consumers to trade-in an older, less-efficient vehicle for a new, higher fuel-economy one.

During the recession, foreign and domestic automakers have experienced a steep decline in auto sales not seen in over fifty years. Last week, in fact, automakers reported that U.S. auto sales for May 2009 were down 33 percent from the same month a year ago. Action by Congress is urgently needed to jumpstart vehicle sales and the automotive sector of the U.S. economy.

The CARS Act would help consumers, support jobs and also improve the environment. Consumers will benefit from a robust incentive to purchase a new, more efficient vehicle and the cost savings from buying less fuel.

While the vouchers provide direct help to consumers, it also helps support jobs across the industry. Automakers, autoworkers, suppliers and dealers all benefit from increased sales and that's why the proposal has been endorsed by both labor and business, including the UAW and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

For the environment, the plan would help reduce fuel consumption and decrease emissions by taking old vehicles off the road and replacing them with new, cleaner ones. Plus, the program would have the added benefit of generating as much as $2 billion in needed sales tax revenue for the states. Thirteen governors have written Congressional leaders in support of rapid action on a cash-for-clunkers program.

The CARS Act is timely, temporary, and targeted and is urgently needed. We request that Members of Congress work to quickly enact this important legislation by voting "yes" on the CARS Act. Thank you for consideration of our views.

Sincerely,

PETER LAWSON,
Vice President, Government Relations.

HON. BETTY SUTTON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: Chrysler LLC strongly supports the Consumers Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, H.R. 2751, that you have introduced. Your bill will establish a fleet modernization program that will encourage consumers to turn in older vehicles to be scrapped and receive in return a voucher to be used towards the purchase of cars and trucks with better fuel economy. The Act is designed to provide consumers with a wide variety of vehicles to purchase. Similar programs in other countries have helped to counter the effects of this global recession, while improving fleet-wide fuel economy. As such, the Act will greatly benefit consumers, dealers, automakers, and suppliers, while moving this country towards energy independence and environmental sustainability.

Your bill deserves broad bipartisan support, and we urge all members of the House to vote in favor of the Consumers Assistance to Recycle and Save Act.

Sincerely,

JOHN BOZZELLA,
Senior Vice President, Chrysler.

GENERAL MOTORS,
Washington, DC, June 8, 2009.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: The House of Representatives will soon consider the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save (CARS) Act by Representatives Sutton, Dingell and Upton. I urge you to support this legislation which creates a carefully balanced fleet modernization program to stimulate U.S. auto sales and jump start the economic recovery.

This bill is supported by the Automotive Alliance, Automotive Trade Policy Council and all of their member companies (see attached letters). It includes input from the domestic and foreign brand auto companies and auto dealers.

Nearly every major industrial country around the world now has all emergency auto 'scrappage' program in place and the results have been immediate and impressive. In Europe and Latin America, these programs have been instantly successfully, with countries such as Germany seeing dealerships flooded with consumers and up to 400% increase in sales. In contrast, here in the U.S. auto sales have shown consistent declines of 30-40% from last year, month after month.

We believe this is an enormous win for consumers, for the American economy, and for our combined national commitment to environmental progress and stewardship. We urge you to support the Sutton, Dingell, Upton CARS bill.

Sincerely,

KEN W. COLE,
Vice President, Global Public Policy and Government Relations.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: This Tuesday the House is scheduled to take up fleet modernization (so-called "cash-for-clunkers") legislation sponsored by Representative Betty Sutton. The UAW strongly urges you to vote for this important legislation.

The Sutton fleet modernization bill incorporates the compromise provisions that were agreed to by the Obama administration, House leaders, including Chairmen Waxman, Markey and Dingell, and Representatives Upton, Candice Miller, Stupak, Israel and Inslee. The provisions of this compromise were previously approved by the House Energy & Commerce Committee by an overwhelming, bipartisan vote.

By providing incentives for consumers to scrap older, less fuel efficient vehicles and to purchase new, higher mpg vehicles, this measure would result in significant reductions in oil consumption and greenhouse gas emissions. At the same time, it would provide an immediate boost to auto sales, thereby helping auto dealers and automotive production and jobs in this country. Significantly, the structure of this program is carefully crafted so it would apply to all auto companies in a balanced, competitively neutral manner.

Due to the financial and economic crises that have engulfed our nation, the auto industry has experienced a sharp drop in auto sales from over 16 million vehicles per year to less than 10 million. This has resulted in unprecedented difficulties for automakers, suppliers, dealers, workers and retirees. One immediate action that Congress can take to respond to this dire situation is to act promptly to pass the Sutton fleet modernization legislation. Accordingly, the UAW strongly urges you to vote for this measure when it is taken up by the House this Tuesday.

Sincerely,

ALAN REUTHER,
Legislative Director.

Hon. BETTY SUTTON,
House of Representatives, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: Mazda North American Operations urges the House to pass a fleet modernization, or "cash for clunkers," bill that will benefit American consumers and increase vehicle sales, especially now when demand is extremely depressed. Additionally, older, less fuel-efficient models will be replaced by newer ones that are cleaner for the environment, more fuel-efficient, and include many new safety technologies. To that end, President Obama last week repeated his call to Congress to enact such legislation. We understand that Representative Sutton's fleet modernization bill, which enjoys broad bipartisan support, will be considered on the suspension calendar as soon as tonight.

The bipartisan framework created by Representative Sutton's bill, will achieve significant economic stimulus and environmental benefits. We would have preferred a simpler program that allowed broader participation with regard to the types of vehicles turned in and the replacement vehicles. In particular, we would have liked all vehicle leases to be included. Despite our concerns over the details of the current proposal, on balance, we believe Representative Sutton's bill will result in incremental sales volume at a time when the industry is badly in need of assistance.

Around the world, consumers are already benefitting from similar programs, and the resulting economic stimulus has been significant. In January, Germany implemented a fleet modernization program. At the end of the first month of the program, sales in Germany were up 21% over 2008. Corresponding sales in the U.S. were down 41% for the same period. To date, 15 countries have enacted automotive fleet modernization programs and many more are considering enactment.

A fleet modernization program can deliver real benefits to consumers, the environment and the economy. The U.S. is already well behind other major economies in adopting a fleet modernization program, and many buyers are now delaying purchase decisions until the Congress acts.

We urge you to vote for Representative Sutton's fleet modernization bill.

Sincerely,

TIM O'SULLIVAN.

JUNE 5, 2009.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: On behalf of the automobile dealers in northeast Ohio, I want to offer our support of the "Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act" (CARS Act). It is our understanding that this bill will be considered early next week and we urge its passage.

As you know, the current economic environment of automotive retailing has now reached historic lows in both sales and consumer confidence. This bill, also known as "Cash for Clunkers", could well provide the needed incentive for consumers to trade in older vehicles and purchase more fuel efficient and safe automobiles.

Providing an incentive to stimulate sales is a critical step in the recovery of the automobile industry and congressional passage of the CARS Act represents an opportunity to benefit both the economy and the environment.

We very much appreciate your assistance and support of franchised new automobile dealers and urge Congress to act swiftly to stimulate the economy with this program.

Sincerely,

TERRY METCALF,
Executive Vice President.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: This Tuesday the House is scheduled to take up the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save (CARS Act) fleet modernization bill sponsored by Representative BETTY SUTTON. The United Steelworkers (USW) urges your support for this legislation.

The USW is the largest industrial union in North America and we represent more workers in the auto sector than any other union. Hundreds of thousands of our members work in jobs supplying the auto industry. From the glass, to the tires, to the plastic, to the hundreds of pounds of metal that comprise every vehicle; Steelworkers manufacture these products in locations all across the country. Even paper, the catalogs and brochures that the automakers use to market their vehicles, are often the product of the work of Steelworkers. But, countless other citizens—union and non-union—such as auto dealers, accountants, restaurant and shop owners, have their jobs tied to the auto industry.

The auto industry has experienced a sharp drop in auto sales from over 16 million vehicles per year to less than 10 million, resulting in extraordinary challenges for automakers, suppliers, dealers, workers, retirees and entire communities. Our members in the supply chain have suffered significant layoffs as a result of the financial and economic crises that brought auto buying to a halt. Those layoffs may only be the top of iceberg as the effects of the Chrysler and GM bankruptcies are to yet to be felt.

One immediate action Congress can take to respond to this dire situation is to vote to pass the Sutton fleet modernization bill which incorporates the compromise provisions that were agreed to by the Obama administration, House leaders, including Chairman Waxman, Markey and Dingell, and Representatives Upton, Candice Miller, Stupak, Israel, and Inslee.

Providing incentives for consumers to scrap older, less fuel efficient vehicles and to purchase new, higher mpg vehicles, from all auto companies, will result in reductions in oil consumption and greenhouse gas emissions while providing an immediate boost to auto sales, thereby helping auto suppliers, dealers and automotive production and jobs in this country.

Sincerely,

HOLLY R. HART,
Legislative Director.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: This week, the House is likely to take up the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save (CARS) Act introduced by Representative Betty Sutton and a number of other colleagues. This bill will create a carefully balanced program to stimulate U.S. auto sales and jumpstart the economy. The Automotive Trade Policy Council and its member companies—Chrysler LLC, Ford Motor Company and General Motors Corporation—strongly support this bill and we urge you to vote for it.

Nearly every major industrial country around the world now has an emergency auto 'scrapage' program in place and the results have been immediate and impressive. In Europe and Latin America, these programs have been instantly successful, with countries such as Germany seeing dealerships flooded with consumers and a 28% increase in sales. In contrast, here in the U.S. auto sales have shown consistent declines of 30-40% from last year, month after month.

The Sutton CARS bill will establish a well-crafted and balanced fleet modernization program. The CARS bill is a compromise measure resulting from months of work between the Administration, domestic and foreign brand auto companies, environmental organizations and auto dealers. The measure offers a solid program that will give consumers with older vehicles an immediate cash incentive from the U.S. government to purchase new more fuel efficient cars and trucks. In addition, the bill was structured to be environmentally progressive i.e., the incentives to consumers are higher for vehicles that achieve fuel economy ratings above current government CAFE standards.

The CARS legislation will both accelerate national economic recovery by creating an estimated one million new sales of fuel efficient vehicles and provide clear incentives to move toward our environmental goals more quickly.

This is a winner for consumers, for the American economy, and for our combined national commitment to environmental progress and stewardship. We thank you and urge you to vote for the Sutton CARS legislation.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN J. COLLINS,
President.

JUNE 8, 2009.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: On behalf of PPG Industries' 15,000 U.S. employees, and the 299 at our Barberton and Strongsville facilities in your district, I deeply appreciate your sponsorship of H.R. 1550, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, also known as the CARS Act, designed to help get the American automobile industry back on its feet by offering incentives for Americans to trade in their old cars for new, more fuel-efficient automobiles.

About 4 percent of the U.S. gross domestic product (GDP) is in the auto industry, making it the nation's largest manufacturing sector. PPG's automotive coatings and fiber glass are an important part of the auto supply chain. Last year, the U.S. auto industry provided hundreds of millions in sales and more than 1,260 manufacturing and research and development jobs to PPG.

As a global supplier of paints, coatings, chemicals, optical products, specialty materials, glass and fiber glass, our vision is to become the world's leading coatings and specialty products and services company. We operate on the leading edge of new technologies and solutions and are a streamlined, efficient manufacturer.

Members of the coatings and related industries have been particularly hit hard by the dramatic decrease in sales of new automobiles in America. While the auto manufacturers themselves have received almost all of the focus of attention—and deservedly so—there are countless suppliers to the industry who are hurting as well. The answer is to increase demand, which the CARS Act achieves with incentives for fuel efficient vehicles.

Again, thank you for your continued leadership on this issue. I look forward to continuing to work with you on policy matters important to the success of PPG, our employees and our retirees and their families.

Sincerely,

CHARLES E. BUNCH,
Chairman & Chief Executive Officer,
PPG Industries.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: On behalf of the AFL-CIO, I am writing to urge you to support legislation introduced by Rep. SUTTON to establish a fleet modernization program, which we expect the House to consider this week on the suspension calendar.

The Sutton bill would establish a program to provide incentives for consumers to scrap older, less fuel-efficient vehicles and purchase new, higher mile-per-gallon vehicles, resulting in significant reductions in oil consumption and greenhouse gas emissions. This "cash for clunkers" program would provide an immediate boost to auto sales, helping to preserve domestic auto production and American jobs.

The program is carefully crafted so it applies to all auto companies in a balanced, competitively neutral manner. The legislation in corporate compromise provisions agreed to by the Obama administration, House leaders (including Chairmen Waxman, Markey and Dingell), and Reps. Candice Miller, Stupak, Upton, Israel and Inslee. The House Energy & Commerce Committee recently approved the provisions of this compromise by an overwhelming, bipartisan vote.

Due to the financial and economic crises that have engulfed our nation, the auto industry has experienced a sharp drop in auto sales resulting in unprecedented difficulties for automakers, suppliers, dealers, workers and retirees. Congress can take immediate action to help the auto industry by promptly passing the "cash for clunkers" legislation. The AFL-CIO urges you to support Rep. Sutton's fleet modernization bill.

WILLIAM SAMUEL,
Director, Government Affairs Department.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: The U.S. Chamber of Commerce strongly supports the "Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act," which is expected to be voted on tomorrow. This important legislation is urgently needed to help jumpstart U.S. auto sales, generate economic growth, and help protect jobs.

This bill would provide incentives to Americans to purchase new vehicles that meet a set of criteria to ensure that the new vehicles will be more fuel efficient than the vehicles they would replace. Not only would this "cash for clunkers" proposal provide an important environmental benefit, but the legislation would help an industry in crisis. The recession has affected industries across the United States, but the auto sector has been particularly hard hit as industry sales have declined rapidly. U.S. light vehicle sales were more than 16 million units as recently as 2007. Last week, J.D. Power & Associates estimated that sales will not exceed 10 million units for all of 2009, an approximately 40 percent drop in just two years.

The auto industry is one of the most important sectors of the U.S. economy, representing four percent of the U.S. gross domestic product and accounting for one in 10 American jobs. The steep drop in vehicle sales is not only affecting foreign and domestic automakers and workers, but also their network of dealers, suppliers, vendors, and other businesses that provide goods and services to them.

The Chamber, the world's largest business federation representing more than three million businesses and organizations of every size, sector, and region, urges you to support the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act. The Chamber may consider votes on, or in relation to, this issue in our annual How They Voted scorecard.

Sincerely,

R. BRUCE JOSTEN.

DEAR SPEAKER PELOSI: The Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers (Alliance) writes to urge the House to pass a fleet modernization, or "cash for clunkers," bill to benefit American consumers as soon as possible. A well crafted fleet modernization program will provide two beneficial effects: helping to stimulate auto sales during the current economic/credit crisis and replacing older, less fuel-efficient vehicles with cleaner, safer, more fuel-efficient ones. To that end, President Obama last week repeated his call to Congress to enact such legislation, and we understand that Representative Sutton's fleet modernization bill, which enjoys broad bipartisan support, will be considered on tomorrow's suspension calendar.

While Alliance members would have preferred a program open to all new vehicles that meet the mileage targets, the bipartisan framework created by Representative Sutton's bill, will achieve significant economic stimulus and environmental benefits, because it provides a broad array of eligible vehicles and will appeal to a large segment of consumers. Ultimately, oil savings and emissions reductions will happen only if buyers can use vouchers to buy vehicles that meet their needs.

Around the world, consumers are already benefitting from similar programs, and the resulting economic stimulus has been significant. In January, Germany implemented a fleet modernization program. At the end of the first month of the program, sales in Germany were up 21% over 2008. Corresponding sales in the U.S. were down 41% for the same period. As of this writing, fleet modernization programs have been adopted in China, Japan, UK, Brazil, Spain, Austria, France, Italy, Portugal, Romania and Slovakia, and are under consideration in several others.

A fleet modernization program can deliver real benefits to consumers, the environment and the economy. The U.S. is already well behind other major economies in adopting a fleet modernization program, and many buyers are now delaying purchase decisions until the Congress acts. We strongly urge the Congress to send a message to American car buyers by sending a bill to the President's desk without delay.

We urge Representative Sutton to vote for Representative Sutton's fleet modernization bill.

Sincerely,

DAVE MCCURDY,
President and CEO, Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: On behalf of the Specialty Equipment Market Association (SEMA), we wish to extend our sincere appreciation to you for including a provision within the CARS Act to exclude vehicles of model year 1983 and earlier from the scope of the program. This provision serves to safeguard vehicles that may possess unique historic or aesthetic value qualities, and are irreplaceable to motor vehicle hobbyists and related businesses as a source of restoration parts.

SEMA also takes this opportunity to thank you and your staff for being available during the cash for clunker debate to discuss the challenges facing the entire scope of the automotive industry. We look forward to working with you on other auto industry issues in the future.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN B. McDONALD,
Vice President, Government Affairs.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: The Association of International Automobile Manufacturers (AIAM) is pleased to support your "Cash for Clunkers" legislation. AIAM represents 13 international motor vehicle manufacturers who account for 35 percent of all light duty motor vehicles produced in the United States. AIAM members have invested over $40 billion in U.S.-based production facilities, have over 6,500 locally owned dealerships, directly employ over 90,000 Americans, and indirectly generate almost 600,000 thousand U.S. jobs in dealerships and suppliers nationwide.

The automobile industry is experiencing one of the worst slumps in its history. Passage of a broad, stimulative, fleet modernization measure, as the President has requested, would help consumers purchase new more fuel efficient vehicles, reduce dealer inventories and provide a much needed boost to the industry and the economy. Ideally, this legislation should be administratively simple and cover as many new cars and light trucks as possible, whether purchased or leased. This type of approach has been implemented in numerous other countries with impressive results.

Again, we applaud you for your leadership on this issue and urge immediate passage of this much needed legislation.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL J. STANTON,
President & CEO.

JUNE 9, 2009.

UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: On behalf of Business Roundtable, I am writing to support the fleet modernization bill proposed by Congresswoman Sutton that is expected to be considered by the House of Representatives today. This bill provides a financial incentive for consumers to purchase new and more energy efficient vehicles resulting in the removal of less energy efficient vehicles from the nation's highways. It will also increase needed jobs to spur the economy, reduce greenhouse gas emissions and increase national energy security. We believe that this legislation will give a boost to the economy at a time of great economic uncertainty. We also note that the legislation will be financed by the already allocated money in the stimulus package and will not require financing through additional deficit spending. Thank you for your leadership on this important subject.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL G. MORRIS,
Chairman, President and CEO,
American Electric Power Company, Inc.,
Chairman, Sustainable Growth Initiative,
Business Roundtable.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: On behalf of the Automotive Recyclers Association (ARA), an international trade association representing over 4,500 automotive recycling facilities through memberships in the United States and fourteen other countries around the world, we are pleased to support the "Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act" (CARS). This legislation seeks to address the distress of anemic motor vehicle sales that have generated negative economic issues throughout our country.

The CARS Act allows for the reuse of nearly all parts from the vehicles retired under the program. The recovery, recycling, and resale of automotive parts are important because it maximizes the availability of replacement parts. Consumers and businesses rely on parts from recycled vehicles because of their substantial savings in reduced repair costs and lower insurance premiums.

ARA looks forward to working with staff from your office and others as the regulatory phase of this program moves forward. We believe there are important issues regarding the adequate handling of these vehicles under the National Motor Vehicle Title Information System (NMVTIS) and steps to ensure that these vehicles are properly handled environmentally that need particular attention during the rulemaking process.

On behalf of its members, ARA thanks you for your consideration of the concerns of America's automobile recyclers, and we look forward to working with you on this legislation.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL E. WILSON,

JUNE 9, 2009.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The National Association of Manufacturers (NAM)—the nation's largest industrial trade association—supports the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act (H.R. 2751), which is scheduled to be voted on today. This legislation would provide incentives for the purchase of new, fuel efficient motor vehicles. The auto industry represents the country's largest manufacturing base and we believe H.R. 2751 will help jump start the industry and save well paying jobs by stimulating the production and sales of new cars and trucks.

As you well know, the auto industry currently faces challenges of historic proportions. Over the past 16 months, retail sales of motor vehicles have fallen 26 percent, vehicle production has fallen 41 percent and the sector has lost 281,000 jobs. Nearly a fifth (17%) of the 1.6 million manufacturing jobs lost during this recession has come from the auto sector.

At the same time, the industry is critical to our nation's economic recovery and future growth. Almost four percent of U.S. gross domestic product is auto-related. One out of every 10 U.S. jobs, or about 13 million, is auto-related, and auto workers receive $335 billion annually in compensation. In 2006, the motor vehicle sector spent $16.6 billion in R&D alone.

By providing temporary incentives for the purchase of new more fuel efficient vehicles, this fleet modernization amendment will provide a much-needed boost to the struggling auto industry, including manufacturers, dealers, suppliers and other related industries.

NAM members believe strongly that a vibrant manufacturing sector is key to our nation's economic recovery and future growth. Similarly, a revitalized auto industry is key to a strong manufacturing sector. This legislation, which provides timely targeted tax incentives to jump start the auto industry, will help get our nation's economy back on track and ensure job creation and sustainable economic growth. Thank you in advance for supporting this important bill.

Sincerely,

DOROTHY COLEMAN,
Vice President, Tax &
Domestic Economic Policy.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: On behalf of the more than 17,000 members of the National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA), I want to offer our support for your bill establishing a temporary vehicle fleet modernization (also known as "Cash for Clunkers") program. It is our understanding that this bill will be considered in the U.S. House of Representatives sometime today.

As you may know, the current state of all automotive retailing is dire and consumer confidence is near historic lows. When measured on a per capita basis, annual sales of new vehicles have reached levels not seen since World War II. A successful fleet modernization program could well encourage hundreds of thousands of consumers to trade in older vehicles in return for an incentive to purchase more fuel-efficient, safer vehicles. This program is modeled after several successful programs in other states and in other countries.

We very much appreciate the time and attention you have devoted to bringing together a broad coalition of stakeholders into the legislative process and to developing a workable program. As the bill moves forward, NADA is committed to working with you to ensure legislation is passed by Congress and signed into law. We will also need the same sense of urgency that you brought to the legislative process as this important initiative moves through the regulatory process within the Department of Transportation.

Thank you again for your help and support of America's franchised new automobile dealers.

Sincerely,

DAVID W. REGAN,
Vice President, Legislative Affairs,
National Automobile Dealers Association.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY,
Akron, OH.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SUTTON: I am writing to thank you for your personal help in sponsoring the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act (CARS) Act and respectfully ask that Congress take swift action to pass this important legislation.

Passage of this measure will provide immediate assistance to the automobile industry by providing direct support incentives to consumers to purchase new fuel efficient vehicles. With estimates that the CARS Act will provide incentives for Americans to purchase approximately one million new cars and light trucks, this action by Congress will provide an immediate and timely boost to the automobile industry.

Similar legislation offered by you in the House Energy and Commerce Committee was passed by a 50-4 bipartisan vote, showing widespread support for this program.

On behalf of Goodyear and our associates across the United States, thank you for your continued support and assistance. I look forward to continuing to work with you on this and other issues of importance to Goodyear.

Sincerely,

ISABEL H. JASINOWSKI.

THE OHIO AUTOMOBILE DEALERS ASSOCIATION,
June 5, 2009.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: On behalf of our members in your district as well as those throughout Ohio, I am writing to voice our strong support for your "Consumer Assistance to Recycle & Save" proposal, which we understand may receive full House consideration in the near future.

It's no secret Ohio's auto sales are weak, which impacts both our industry as well as Ohio's state and local governments. Your proposal encourages the removal of older vehicles from the road in favor of more fuel-efficient and safe vehicles, which benefits consumers, our industry and the environment.

Thanks again for your strong leadership on this proposal and your support of Ohio's automobile retail industry.

Sincerely,

TIM DORAN,
President.

JUNE 9, 2009.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: Support H.R. 2751, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act—Automobile dealerships across the country again watched sales decline in May—for the first time in 2009 no single brand saw an improvement over 2008 sales. U.S. sales dropped by an average of 33.7 percent this month, setting the seasonally adjusted annual sales rate (SAAR) at 9.9 million vehicles. Annual sales for 2008 was 13.8 and 2007 was 16.4 million units. I start off reporting these numbers so you can better understand the urgency of my request—we need a "cash for clunkers" program now.

The American International Automobile Dealers Association (AIADA), representing 11,000 international nameplate automobile franchises and their more than 500,000 employees, write today urging you to vote to support the cash for clunkers legislation introduced by Congresswoman Betty Sutton, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, H.R. 2751. The entire auto industry needs to focus fully on recovery. The first element of that recovery is incentivizing customers to buy. Today, we look to the House of Representatives to do just that by passing a cash for clunkers plan that will quickly and effectively stimulate sales.

Done with the right balance, cash for clunkers is an opportunity to benefit both the economy and the environment. AIADA, and its dealer members, support H.R. 2751, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, and again urge you and your colleagues to act swiftly to stimulate the economy with this program and pass this legislation.

Sincerely,

CODY L. LUSK,
President.

— UAW LOCAL 2000.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SUTTON: I, on behalf of the working men and women of Ohio Assembly Plant and the approximate 50,000 Ohioans whose jobs are associated with the Ohio Assembly Plant, write to express all of our gratitude to you for your work on and for support of the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act (CARS Act).

Passage of this important legislation will not only help the consumer and public by putting cars on the road that run cleaner and maintain better fuel efficiency, but it will provide assistance by boosting car sales to the struggling auto industry in America. This will also help to create a safer driving atmosphere as the older and potentially dangerous vehicles on our roads are replaced with new ones.

The authors of this legislation should be highly commended for their efforts in providing equal support for ALL the auto companies in a competitively, neutral manner. The members of Local 2000 wish to extend our thanks to you for your continual efforts where the security of our jobs at Ohio Assembly Plant and the safety and well being of the citizens of the 13th District and the entire country are concerned.

If the members of UAW Local 2000 or I can assist you in these efforts in any way in the future, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Very truly yours,

JIM DONOVAN,
President.

Mr. Speaker, we must pass the bipartisan CARS Act today for our workers, for our environment, for consumers, for our economy, for our country.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague from Ohio and my colleague from Michigan, Mrs. MILLER. This is not the perfect bill, but this is it. There is no plan B. This is not the original bill that Ms. SUTTON and Mrs. MILLER introduced, but this is the bill that passed our committee 50-4.

One in 10 jobs in America are auto-related. In the last couple of years now, particularly through this tough recession, we have lost one in five manufacturing jobs, and certainly the Midwest has been critically hurt.

The auto sector, we've seen auto sales plummet from 17 million car sales just 2 or 3 years ago to probably what will be less than 10 million, not only this year, but next year as well. Not only the Big 3 supports this, but Toyota, Honda, the Chamber, a whole number of different groups, the UAW, the Auto Manufacturers, the National Association of Manufacturers, the auto dealers as well. You know what this bill is? It's a jobs bill.

□ 1600

But more important than that, it's an American jobs bill, and it's time to stop the dominos from falling the wrong way and beginning to turn the switch from "red" to "green" for auto jobs and get something in the hands of consumers that will boost their confidence.

Now, who else has done this bill? Well, 16. And guess what? The sales are up. Germany, sales have increased by 40 percent; France, sales are up March through May; the UK, Japan, China, Korea, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Malaysia, Austria, Romania, Luxembourg, The Netherlands. Even Slovakia, auto sales have increased by some 18 percent.

Madam Speaker, this is a very good bill. It's one that has bipartisan support. It's time to put American jobs first and begin to move this process forward. We know we have a majority in this House for this bill. The question is do we have two-thirds. I would like to think we do. This is it. We're not going to have another bill. It's not going back to Rules. We need to pass this.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SUTTON. At this time, it's my honor to yield 1 minute to the gentleman, my colleague from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI).

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, this bill is about putting America first. We heard this all throughout the last campaign about how we need to invest in America and we need to protect American jobs. And Congresswoman BETTY SUTTON has stood up for American jobs, and she is putting new meaning to "putting old Betty back in the garage and putting new cars on our streets." That's why it's imperative that the auto industry, especially in Ohio, be preserved under this bill. Twenty-five percent of Ohio's economy is based on how well or how poorly the automotive industry performs. There were 560,000 new vehicle registrations alone last year in Ohio. That averages to more than $24 million per dealership in Ohio.

This bill is about putting America first and putting Americans back in American-built cars. I will be proud to support this bill today on the House floor.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I would yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Republican whip, Mr. CANTOR from Virginia.

Mr. CANTOR. I thank the gentleman from Michigan.

Madam Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition to this bill. It was my sincere hope that this bill would have come to the floor under a process that would have allowed Members to offer amendments. Had we been permitted to do so, I would have offered an amendment to allow individuals to use the credit for the purchase of a fuel-efficient, previously owned vehicle. Even after a generous credit, for many American families, a new car is financially out of reach. Yet with gas prices rising again, these families deserve the same opportunity to upgrade their current vehicle to a more fuel-efficient model. For these families, the credit that can be used towards the purchase of a fuel-efficient, pre-owned car could make all of the difference.

Indeed, there is already a substantial inventory of previously owned, fuel-efficient vehicles on dealer lots available for purchase. As a result, these purchases will promote the goals of the program by increasing the number of fuel-efficient vehicles on the road. It is also important to remember that the livelihood of tens of thousands of Americans depend on the used car market.

Used car sales outnumber new car sales 3-1 in the U.S., and there are more than twice as many used car dealers as new car dealers in this country. Treating cars that meet the same fuel-efficiency standards differently, based on whether they are new or previously owned, effectively picks winners and losers among these dealers. Given the difficult economic situation faced by all Americans, I do not believe that it is wise or necessary to reward some Americans while punishing others.

If we were to expand this bill to include the purchase of previously owned vehicles, it would truly be a win-win. As it helps the environment by encouraging more fuel-efficient vehicles, it would also help ease our dependence on foreign oil, and it would provide another incentive to help jump-start the economy.

Madam Speaker, I'm saddened I was not permitted to offer my amendment, but I'm hopeful as this bill works its way through the process we can work to address the concerns of those who make their living selling previously owned vehicles.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, may I inquire how much time we have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. BALDWIN). The gentlewoman from Ohio controls 13 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan controls 16 minutes.

Ms. SUTTON. It's my honor, Madam Speaker, to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, Chairman WAXMAN.

Mr. WAXMAN. Thank you very much for yielding time for me to speak in favor of H.R. 2751, the CARS Act.

I worked closely with Representative SUTTON and other members of our committee to negotiate this legislation, and I believe it hits the trifecta: it's good for the economy, good for consumers, and good for the environment.

For the auto industry, it means a big leap in sales right when the industry needs it most. CBO estimates that this program will help sell 600,000 cars, many of them made right here in America. It's no wonder that the Big Three, the UAW, and the auto industry support the bill. For consumers, it means a chance to get rid of the old gas guzzling clunker and receive a voucher worth up to $4,500 to get a new, more fuel-efficient car. The better gas mileage, the higher the subsidy. And for the environment, it means a win. With every new sale, every car or truck sold under this program will be more fuel efficient or cleaner than the car or truck it replaces.

I appreciate the work of Representative SUTTON and my other colleagues on the committee for this legislation. I want to acknowledge their efforts on behalf of the American auto industry and American autoworkers. This legislation was an amendment added to the ACES energy bill passed by our committee by a strong bipartisan 50-4 vote.

I ask my colleagues to vote "yes": "yes" for the economic benefits of the bill, "yes" for the benefits of consumers, and "yes" for the improvement in environmental quality.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, at this point, I would like to yield to 2 minutes to one of the cofounders of the Manufacturing Caucus and certainly a member of the Automotive Caucus, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO).

Mr. MANZULLO. Madam Speaker, this bill will spur auto sales and revitalize our manufacturing sector. Without a strong manufacturing sector, we will not have an economic recovery. While I would have preferred a simple $5,000 voucher for any new car purchase, Congresswoman BETTY SUTTON moved this bipartisan bill so it really stimulates the economy because it sets the chain of supply into motion. It gets people back to work in our factories. If the first-time home buyer tax credit for $8,000 is working to spur the housing market, just think what this will do for the auto industry.

Stimulating sales is the only way to get the auto industry back on its feet—not further top-down infusions of money from the top. The bill gets the American people involved because it's bottom-up. It sets the fire of manufacturing. It gets us going again. And even if somebody does not want to buy an automobile, this person will still indirectly benefit from the positive ripple effect.

Look what happens when 1 million automobiles are sold in America today. The Caliber—proudly built in the 16th Congressional District of Illinois, along with the two smaller Jeeps—the sale of 1 million automobiles in this country means 60,000 people go back to work, $1.4 billion is returned in sales tax to the State and local governments, $750 million in Federal taxes is paid by the workers and savings of unemployment, COBRA, food stamps and job training of almost $3 billion. This bill almost pays for itself.

But the beauty of it is the fact that it returns the supply chain. It gets people working again. It gets the economy moving again. Instead of communities having to come to Washington looking for money, the money gets restocked simply because of the payment of the taxes.

Vote for H.R. 2751. This is a real stimulus.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, at this time it's my honor to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) 2 minutes.

Mr. KILDEE. I thank the gentlelady for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2751, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act. This bill will provide incentives for the purchase of new, more efficient vehicles helping to revitalize our auto industry, preserve jobs, and clean up our environment. The need for this bill could not be greater. As we all know too well, our domestic industry has been suffering a prolonged downturn, and our families are feeling the effects. The recent bankruptcy filings by Chrysler and General Motors further underscore the critical need for action.

H.R. 2751 will provide consumers with up to $4,500 in vouchers for trading in their old vehicles and purchasing new, more fuel-efficient models. Not only will this provide a much-needed boost to the auto industry, including manufacturers, dealers, and suppliers, but it will help preserve jobs in our communities.

Additionally, we are cleaning up the environment by reducing our demand on foreign oil. I have always said that what America drives drives America. And I am committed to a strong and vibrant automobile industry. This legislation will help us get through this difficult time and get our automakers on the path to being the economic engine that has driven the American economy.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this important legislation.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, at this point I would yield 2 minutes to the gentlelady from the great State of Michigan, who was an original author with Ms. SUTTON of the first bill, Mrs. MILLER, for 2 minutes.

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in very strong support of this bill that will help support American jobs. We all understand the challenges facing our auto industry. This industry, which is so vital to our national economy, has been hit literally by an economic hurricane which has caused hardships not only for the automakers, but also the suppliers, the dealers, and everyone who has a stake in this industry and its success.

This legislation is a very strong bipartisan approach that will help get the assembly lines moving, keep traffic in the showrooms, protect jobs, and give our economy a desperately needed jolt. And how do we know that it will work? Because it has already been implemented in nations across the globe. Because in every nation that has implemented a similar program, auto sales have risen, and in every nation that has not—like us—the sales continue to fall. That's why this legislation has the strong support of groups like the UAW, the National Auto Dealers, Ford, General Motors, Chrysler, Mazda, the Alliance of Automotive Manufacturers, the Association of International Automobile Manufacturers, the National Paint and Coatings Association, the Motor and Equipment Manufacturer's Association, the Specialty Equipment Manufacturing Association, the American Iron Steel Institute, the AFL, the CIO, the Chamber of Commerce. I could go on and on.

And why do they all support this legislation? Because they understand that the best way to jump-start our economy is to get auto sales moving. The plight of the auto industry is a national problem affecting our entire Nation. And we know this because of the troubles of Chrysler and General Motors dealers across the Nation that are being closed with countless jobs being lost. We know this because suppliers who serve the industry are struggling to stay afloat with countless more jobs being lost and at risk. And we know this because two of our iconic industrial giants—both Chrysler and General Motors—are today in bankruptcy court.

All of these providers are clamoring for action, and they deserve the help of this Congress. Simply put, we must act. So let us support legislation that will protect American manufacturing jobs. And this legislation will also give our economy the boost that it needs. I certainly do want to thank my colleagues for all of their support. And I urge support of this passage.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, at this time it is my honor to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman emeritus and a leader in this effort as well, the gentleman from Michigan, Congressman John DINGELL.

Mr. DINGELL. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this fine, bipartisan bill, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, authored by my friend and colleague, Ms. SUTTON of Ohio. I commend her and her bipartisan cosponsors for their work on behalf of this.

The bill has the support of the Obama administration, the UAW, domestic and foreign automobile manufacturers, suppliers, and dealers.

It also will result in meaningful reductions in vehicle fleet carbon emissions and fuel consumption while providing much-needed stimulus to our ailing automakers and economy.

I express my deep gratitude to Chairman WAXMAN, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. STUPAK, as well as Representatives SUTTON, ISRAEL and INSLEE, for their collaborate, collegial approach during the negotiations on the legislation. And I want to commend my friend, Mr. UPTON, and others of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle as well as the entire Michigan delegation, for their work on behalf of this.

This legislation cannot wait. The longer it is put off, the more auto sales will be depressed. And consumers who are excited about this proposal will continue to wait for Congress to pass this bill before buying that new car that we want them to have.

In view of the unprecedented turmoil faced by the domestic automakers and growing imperatives to address global warming, Ms. SUTTON's fleet modernization bill stands out as a really practical mechanism by which to achieve consumer savings, reduce fuel consumption, lower carbon dioxide and criteria pollutant emissions, as well as increase sales for a critical sector of the national economy. Indeed, in countries such as Germany, fleet modernization programs have been wildly successful in all of these areas.

This is a good bill. It will help us with the environment, and it will help us with employment. It will see to it that the United States moves forward rapidly towards a full and adequate recovery from this terrible recession in which we find ourselves.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill, and I commend its author again.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama and a member in good standing of the Auto Caucus, Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. ROGERS of Alabama. I rise today to offer my reluctant support of the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act, also known as the Cash for Clunkers program.

All of us have witnessed the devastation felt by our automotive sector. In my home State of Alabama, as in many other States, workers have lost their jobs or had their hours cut. Many hard-working dealers have simply been forced to close their doors.

To help protect our jobs and stimulate the automotive sector, we must work to stimulate consumer credit markets and restore consumer confidence. That is why I recently introduced my bill, the Consumer Auto Relief Act. Unlike the bill we are considering today, my proposal would help all sectors of the automotive industry.

In addition to offering tax credits to working families to help purchase new vehicles, the bill would also help incentivize lenders to finance new vehicles. The bill would also place no limitations on eligibility to participate in the program. Unfortunately, my bill is not what is on the floor today. Nonetheless, despite my reservations about

H.R. 2751, I believe that passing it is better than doing nothing, but not by much. I offer my support for the bill and urge its passage.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, it is my honor to now yield 1 minute to the distinguished Speaker of the House to speak on this bill, Speaker NANCY PELOSI.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentlelady for yielding. I commend her for her tremendous leadership in putting together this legislation that we have before us. She, Representative ISRAEL and Representative INSLEE all worked very hard to come to a position that we can all support today. Mr. MARKEY is here of the Select Committee, and of course Mr. DINGELL, the Chair Emeritus of the Energy and Commerce Committee. Others, Mr. BRALEY, Mr. STUPAK—well, all of our colleagues have had an important role—Mr. KILDEE and our colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle. Hopefully we will have a good, strong bipartisan vote today on this legislation.

Because you all have given us an opportunity to pass legislation that is a benefit to our economy and a benefit to our environment, we can create and save jobs while addressing the air pollution issue, so important to our children's health. We will do this by allowing Americans to trade in their own gas-guzzling vehicles and receive vouchers worth up to $4,500 to help pay for the new, more fuel-efficient cars and trucks.

I will go into some specifics—I know we've heard it over and over again, but this CARS bill is quite a remarkable piece of legislation, and the timing is perfect. And when they trade in these cars, they will strengthen America's auto industry, creating jobs and reducing layoffs, and save more than 250 million gallons of gas. This has been tried and true around the world in recent months with great success. In Germany, for example, it boosted auto sales by 20 percent.

Because this legislation will deliver consumer savings, increase vehicle demand, help save American jobs while cutting greenhouse gas emissions and reducing our dependence on foreign oil, it is supported by a broad coalition. That coalition includes the Big Three automakers, the United Auto Workers, car dealers, business groups such as the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, and, in the lead, the Obama administration.

Today, with this legislation, we will ensure a strong American manufacturing base. As much as anything that we can do in terms of addressing the issue of the auto industry in our country, this is a national security issue. The auto industry's success is essential to ensuring that we have a strong manufacturing base. This legislation today will ensure that we have a strong manufacturing base and get more fuel-efficient vehicles on the road, which is essential to our economy, to our national security, and a clean, green future.

I commend my colleagues once again. I commend Congresswoman SUTTON for her determination to accelerate the pace of when we would bring this legislation to the floor and urge strong bipartisan support for the bill, which it certainly deserves.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, may I inquire how much time is left on both sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan controls 11 minutes, and the gentlewoman from Ohio controls 7 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, this bill is a bad idea spawned by a bad idea that was spawned by still yet another bad idea—and it will likely spawn a lot of other bad ideas in the future.

The first bad idea was to bail out the auto industry in the first place. The second bad idea was for the government to essentially take over the auto industries. We all know that government is not very good at manufacturing anything, so it has to manufacture demand. And that's what this bill is about. It is defying the laws of economics and saying we can manufacture enough demand to keep the auto industries afloat without other measures that they need to take to stay afloat. We can't simply manufacture demand any more than we can defy any of the other laws of economics.

A list was given of those who support this legislation. It says it has broad support from Ford, GM, Chrysler, the Automobile Dealers Association, the labor unions, the Chamber of Commerce. Can anybody tell me honestly if anybody on that list has ever turned down a government subsidy of any type? I would submit I've never heard it, not in the time that I've been here. So it shouldn't surprise anybody that this list of individuals or organizations supports this legislation. That doesn't mean that we should. We have a duty to represent the taxpayers as well here.

I should note that just this morning there was a press conference about PAYGO—pay-as-you-go, don't pay out anymore than you take in. Where is the money going to come from for this? Perhaps that's why it is on the suspension calendar so that what should govern this place—what kind of PAYGO rules that we have—don't actually apply. But you've got to pay the piper at some point, and we simply can't continue to go down this road.

Madam Speaker, this is a bad idea. This is a clunker of a bill that ought to be retired, and we ought to apply the cash toward our unsustainable deficit.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, it is my honor to yield 1 minute to the distinguished chairman from Massachusetts, Chairman MARKEY.

Mr. MARKEY of Massachusetts. I thank the gentlelady, and I congratulate the gentlelady for her excellent work on this legislation.

To Mr. DINGELL, to Mr. INSLEE, Mr. STUPAK, Mr. ISRAEL, to Mr. BRALEY, to Mr. WAXMAN, this is truly the work of a lot of people coming together. And ultimately, the approach has produced a win-win-win situation: a win for our consumers who get a new, more efficient vehicle; a win for reducing our dependence on imported oil; and a win for an industry struggling to regain its footing. And I will add one more win because it is always a win when Members from the Rust Belt and the two coasts can join together and come up with a compromise that all sides can support.

The price of a gallon of gasoline is rising inexorably, back up to $4 a gallon. It has gone up $1 at the pump on a national average since December. The price of a barrel of oil has gone from $30 to $69 since December. This is the kind of bill we need to put in place. My congratulations to the gentlelady.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, may I inquire how much time the gentleman from Michigan controls.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan controls 9 remaining minutes, and the gentlewoman from Ohio 6 remaining minutes.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, at this time, it is my honor to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, Chairman BART STUPAK.

Mr. STUPAK. Madam Speaker, as one of the authors of H.R. 2751, I urge support of the Cash for Clunkers program that will provide cash vouchers of up to $4,500 at auto dealerships for consumers who trade in aging, less fuel-efficient automobiles and replace them with modern fuel-efficient models.

The Cash for Clunkers program accomplishes a dual task of reducing emissions and stimulating sales in the auto industry. I applaud Congresswoman SUTTON for her leadership on this important issue. And I appreciate the support of Chairman WAXMAN, Chairman Emeritus DINGELL, Chairman MARKEY, Chairman INSLEE, and Majority Leader HOYER in helping to bring this agreement to the House floor.

The Cash for Clunkers program provides an incentive for Americans to do their part to reduce emissions without imposing new regulations on industry or consumers. This bill results in cleaner cars on the road and an increase in sales for the struggling auto industry.

The value of the voucher and the criteria used to determine eligibility vary based on the type of car you are trading in and the type of car you are buying. The agreement we have reached on Cash for Clunkers ensures that a variety of needs of consumers are covered under the program.

The Cash for Clunkers program encourages consumers to buy 1 million new cars and trucks. This program bolsters the automotive industry at its weakest point in years while revitalizing manufacturing and jump-starting our economy.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I would just note that I have a list of folks wanting to speak, but they're not here. That is why I am reserving the balance of my time.

Ms. SUTTON. I would just inquire of the gentleman, we have an abundance of speakers and not quite enough time, would you like to yield some time?

Mr. UPTON. I will yield the gentlelady 4 minutes of my time to control.

Ms. SUTTON. I thank the gentleman very much.

At this time, Madam Speaker, I would like to yield 30 seconds to my colleague from Ohio, Congressman TIM RYAN.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. I thank the gentlelady and want to congratulate her.

I would like to make two quick points. One is, the gentleman from Arizona, when he was here, mentioned about manufacturing demand. It was the tax credit for SUVs that actually manufactured the demand that led to a lot of the issues we are dealing with now with the environment. And also, the gentleman was critical of the auto industry. I would like to remind him that it was the auto industry and the tax dollars that the Midwest sent out to build the West. All the water lines and sewer lines in congressional districts that were made out West were made by the taxpayers and the auto industry and the steel industry that sent their money out. So I just wanted to clear the record.

I thank the gentlelady from Ohio. I get nervous anytime I see Ohio and Michigan working together, but in this particular instance, it's a good deal.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, at this time, it is my privilege to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, Representative PETERS.

Mr. PETERS. Madam Speaker, the CARS Act of 2009 is critical not only to spur growth in America's auto industry but to save and create jobs throughout our country.

History shows that one of the quickest ways to end a recession is to sell more automobiles. New car sales constitute a major percentage of a nation's consumer spending.

Increasing vehicle sales also stimulates demand for raw goods from which automobiles are manufactured. Production of glass, steel, plastics, and other primary materials will be increased as more new cars are sold, creating jobs throughout the country.

Many other nations have acted to strengthen their economies with policies to design and to sell more automobiles, and the U.S. should not be left behind. Many Members of the House have recently expressed their desire to support auto dealers in their States. There is no better way to help car dealers going forward than to pass this important legislation. We must pass the CARS Act today to create a recovery not just for our auto industry but for the entire economy.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, at this time it is my privilege to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. Let me thank Mr. UPTON. I assume I'm using 2 of his minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. LEVIN. No, that's fine. I may yield back, but this is true bipartisanship.

We all know there's a major restructuring of the auto industry going on as we are here today, and there is a very simple truth: If there is not increased demand, that restructuring cannot succeed. And I think only rigid ideologues would say it's impossible to stimulate demand. There has been a historic drop in demand for vehicles in this country. It's about one-half of what it was not so long ago. And it remains true globally. This is not only a national phenomenon; it's a global phenomenon.

Other countries have acted. And I salute Representative SUTTON and all who have worked on this to step up to the plate for the basic manufacturing base of the United States of America.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, at this point, it is my privilege to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Washington, Representative JAY INSLEE.

Mr. INSLEE. Madam Speaker, I just want to point out something about the benefits of efficiency in this bill. We know it's going to help the important auto industry, but I want to point out how it will help consumers in efficiency.

Under this bill, Americans who participate will save an average of 133 gallons of gasoline a year by having access to a more efficient car. At the price of $2.71 a gallon, that's a saving of $368 a year in gasoline. That is 250 million gallons of gasoline that we otherwise will not be burning.

Now, the reason I point this out is there is a benefit to the environment in our efforts to stop global warming in this bill, and Mr. ISRAEL and I had earlier introduced a piece generally in the same direction, heading with the great leadership of BETTY SUTTON and JOHN DINGELL and BART STUPAK, and we put our bills together, and this is the product.

Some folks have argued that the efficiency provisions of this bill are not aggressive enough. The bill I introduced with Mr. ISRAEL had more aggressive targets.

But I want to point out something that is a singular achievement of this bill, and I want to thank BETTY SUTTON for her leadership on this. If we are going to stop global warming, we indeed are going to have to come together all across the country. Folks in the steel industry are going to need to work with people on the coast. People in the Midwest, in the Rust Belt States in the auto industry are going to need to work with those folks in the San Francisco Bay region.

Congress means coming together, and this bill, I think, represents a perfect example of how our Nation needs to come together to tackle the many challenges we have in dealing with global warming. And when we pass this bill today, it will be one step, one brick in the wall of that effort, for a true clean energy revolution in America that we can all be proud of across the country.

Congratulations.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, I receive the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Madam Speaker, it is time to get America moving again, and that's exactly what this bill does. The auto sector is so important to our country in virtually every single community. It doesn't have to just be a community that has an assembly line. It's the communities that build parts, whether it be a gas cap or a part for a brake, a side panel, a piece of trim, a window. Auto dealers are in virtually every community across the country, and they average about 50 employees per dealership. So this bill impacts every single community across America.

No one here today has talked about what this bill also does. We will rely less on foreign oil because the average consumer, by taking advantage of this program, will save $780 in fuel costs because they're going to trade in that old car and they're going to have a more fuel-efficient, better emission vehicle than they had before; $780 per household for those that take advantage of it. We have fraud and abuse provisions in here so that they won't be taken advantage of.

And to my good friend Mr. FLAKE, yes, there is a sunset. This program doesn't go on forever. There is a sunset. It's a temporary Band-Aid to fix an economic problem that needs America's attention.

Isn't it better, isn't it better to have people work and have a job and pay taxes than having them laid off and receive benefits? I think most Americans would rather have that job. They want to pay their taxes. This is a bill that helps America, and that's one of the reasons why it passed in our committee 50-4.

I would urge all of my colleagues to support this. And, sadly, because of the procedure, it does have to pass tonight by a two-thirds vote rather than a majority. I would like to think that we can exceed that two-thirds and pass it.

With that, Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, we have heard overwhelming support for the CARS Act on the floor today and from across the country throughout this process. I want to thank, first of all, the gentleman from Michigan for what a fantastic job he has done in moving this bill on the floor this afternoon and for all of the work that he put into making it a success. I also want to thank all of those, many of whom we have heard from today here on the floor, for all of their help and their support in getting this innovative measure to the floor and on the way to the beneficial effects for the American people. I also want to thank all of the staff who worked on this bill and bringing it together: my staff, Nicole Francis Reynolds and Christine Corcoran, as well as the staff on the Committee on Energy and Commerce and others, Representative DINGELL's staff. It has been a truly collaborative process, and we have a good result.

We have heard about how this bill will improve our environment, serve as an economic stimulus, and shore up the 3 to 5 million jobs in the auto and related industries. Close to home in my district, the Akron Area Auto Dealers Association put it this way: "Providing an incentive to stimulate sales is a critical step in the recovery of the automobile industry, and congressional passage of the CARS Act represents an opportunity to benefit both the economy and the environment."

Local 2000 of the United Auto Workers, which assembles the Ford E-Series line of vehicles in my district in Avon Lake, has stated: "Passage of this important legislation will not only help the consumer and public by putting cars on the road that run cleaner and maintain better fuel efficiency, but it will provide assistance by boosting car sales to the struggling auto industry in America."

And the United Steelworkers, who represent hundreds of thousands of workers in jobs supplying the auto industry, summed it up like this: "From the glass, to the tires, to the plastic, to the hundreds of pounds of metal that comprise every vehicle, steelworkers manufacture these products in locations all across the country. Even the paper, the catalogues, and brochures that the automakers use to market their vehicles are often the product of the work of steelworkers. But countless other citizens, union and non-union, such as auto dealers, accountants, restaurant and shop owners, have their jobs tied to the auto industry."

Governors from 12 States, including Governor Strickland from Ohio, the Governors of Michigan, Colorado, Delaware, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin all support this effort today.

It's time to act, Madam Speaker. It's time to pass the CARS Act, and I urge a "yes" vote on the bill.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Madam Speaker, I stand today in strong support of H.R. 2751, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act.

This bipartisan piece of legislation is desperately needed to reinvigorate our domestic auto industry and replace high-emission vehicles with cleaner, more fuel-efficient cars.

This fleet modernization bill will help stimulate auto sales across the country by replacing approximately one million new cars or trucks on the road.

Specifically, old passenger cars and light duty trucks or SUV's must receive 18 miles per gallon (mpg) or less to participate in the program.

Consumers can receive vouchers—ranging from $3,500 to $4,500—to help reduce the cost of a new vehicle if the new vehicles receive greater fuel efficiency.

The greater the increase in fuel efficiency, the greater the value of the voucher.

New passenger cars must receive at least 22 mpg and light trucks or SUV's must receive at least 18 mpg. Large light-duty trucks and work trucks are also eligible for the program.

By replacing aging vehicles with more fuel-efficient ones, this bill will help reduce oil consumption in America, lower overall fuel costs and reduce transportation emissions to help us meet any national climate program.

I want to thank Representative SUTTON, Chairman-Emeritus JOHN DINGELL, and others for their leadership in moving this legislation forward, and I hope this legislation swiftly becomes law.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Madam Speaker, in Texas we implemented a program called Air Check Texas, which was designed to replace older, polluting vehicles with newer ones. The program succeeded in getting vehicles 10 years or older—or those that had failed an emissions test—off of the road. The program in Texas focused mostly on older vehicles because they emit 10 to 30 times as much pollution as newer vehicles. In fact, vehicles that are 13 years old and older account for just 25 percent of miles driven, but 75 percent of all tailpipe emissions.

While I support Representative SUTTON in her Cash for Clunkers and I am a co-sponsor because I believe in both the stimulative and environmental benefits of getting older vehicles off of the road, I don't believe that the arbitrary 18 mpg combined efficiency requirement for the trade-in vehicle is beneficial. Setting an arbitrary number like 18 mpg leaves a lot of folks with older, polluting vehicles behind the wheel of these cars because they can't afford a new car without the $3500 or $4500 this voucher would provide.

As the bill is currently written, a 1986 Peugeot station wagon with a 20 mile per gallon combined efficiency would not qualify for the voucher, but a 2009 Mercedes Benz station wagon would, because it has an EPA combined efficiency rating of 15.5 miles per gallon fuel. Clearly the intent of the bill is not to subsidize the new car purchase of a 2009 Mercedes driver. So let's think a bit more about our 1986 Peugeot driver and helping him or her improve the efficiency and tailpipe emissions of that car.

Expanding this program to model years and failed emissions tests—like the successful program in Texas—will achieve a more far-reaching success than the program as written. I support this legislation, but as the legislation moves forward I believe the combined efficiency requirements for the trade-in vehicle should be dropped and a model-year approach should be explored.

Mr. HOLT. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2751, the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act.

The Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save Act would strengthen demand for automobiles in the United States and provide much needed relief to struggling car companies and dealerships. More commonly known as the "Cash for Clunkers Act," this legislation would allow car owners to trade in their old inefficient automobiles for new more fuel efficient automobiles. The Cash for Clunkers Act could spur the sales of up to 1 million more fuel efficient cars and trucks. It would help to save jobs and shore up car dealerships, and it would help save more than 250 million gallons of gas a year.

Our national car companies are struggling in the floundering economy. Since last year ago, national car sales have fallen by 34 percent. Car dealerships across the nation are closing their doors, and it is estimated that in my home state of New Jersey 8,000 jobs in the automobile industry could be lost by the end of the year.

This legislation allows consumers to receive a voucher for $3,500 if they turn in their old car for a new automobile that is 4 miles per gallon more fuel efficient. Those who buy new models that are 10 miles per gallon more fuel efficient would receive a $4,500 voucher. Owners of sport utility vehicles, pickup trucks or minivans that get 18 miles per gallon or less could receive a voucher for $3,500 if their new truck or SUV is at least 2 miles per gallon higher than their old vehicle. The voucher would increase to $4,500 if the mileage of the new truck or SUV is at least 5 miles per gallon higher than the older vehicle.

Programs like the Cash for Clunkers Act have proven effective in increasing car purchases; Germany enacted a similar measure that increased car sales by more than 20 percent. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation that would spur our economy and decrease dangerous greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, though I voted for the Consumer Assistance to Recycle and Save or the CARS Act, I have serious reservations about it. Unfortunately, despite its good intentions, it will send jobs overseas and it does little to help our ailing climate.

I cosponsored H.R. 1550, an earlier version of the bill. That version allowed consumers to get a voucher for cars assembled in the U.S. The version under consideration today has no such assurances, which means that significant amounts of the funds will go toward the purchase of cars made in countries like China. We are giving with one hand and taking with the other.

Our auto industry needs our help more than ever. Yet we are handing over money, jobs and infrastructure to our international competition. It is made worse by the terms of the GM bankruptcy which requires that plants in the U.S. are closed while shipping auto manufacturing jobs to other countries like Mexico and South Korea. We can't protect the auto industry by sending their work to other countries.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the CARS Act for the fleetwide fuel efficiency gains it will create, the energy security it will enhance, the air quality it will improve and the boost it will give our flagging economy.

Under this "Cash for Clunkers" legislation, consumers with vehicles getting less than 18 MPG can get vouchers for $3500 towards the purchase of a new vehicle that gets at least 4 MPG better than the vehicle they are retiring—and $4500 towards the purchase of a new vehicle that gets at least 10 MPG better than the vehicle they are retiring.

While I am among those who would favor even stronger standards, this legislation nevertheless points American drivers in the right direction and will stimulate new car sales during a period of time when the auto industry and their dealer networks can use that business the most. I urge my colleagues' support.

Ms. SUTTON. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. SUTTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2751.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. FLAKE. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on the motion to suspend on H.R. 2751 will be followed by 5-minute votes on motions to suspend on H.R. 1741 and House Resolution 505.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 298, nays 119, answered "present" 2, not voting 15, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mrs. Wanda Evans, one of his secretaries.

RECOGNIZING 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL CENTER FOR MISSING AND EXPLOITED CHILDREN

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 454) recognizing the 25th anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 454

Whereas an estimated 800,000 children are reported missing each year in the United States;

Whereas 200,000 of that number are abducted by family members, and 58,000 are abducted by non-family members, for which the primary motive is sexual assault;

Whereas each year 115 children are the victims of the most serious abductions, kidnapped by non-family members and either ransomed, murdered, or taken with the intent to keep;

Whereas the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) serves as the national resource center and information clearinghouse for missing and exploited children;

Whereas NCMEC was established by Congress in 1984;

Whereas NCMEC has assisted law enforcement in the recovery of more than 138,500 children;

Whereas NCMEC's Amber Alert program has led to 443 recoveries;

Whereas in 2008, NCMEC helped recover more children than any other year in the organization's 25-year history, raising the recovery rate from 62 percent in 1990 to 97 percent today;

Whereas NCMEC operates the toll-free 24-hour national missing children's hotline, which has handled more than 2,377,000 calls;

Whereas NCMEC provides assistance to families and law enforcement agencies in locating and recovering missing and exploited children, both nationally and internationally;

Whereas NCMEC offers technical assistance and training to law enforcement in identifying and locating non-compliant sex offenders;

Whereas NCMEC has a team of forensic artists who create age progression photos, which has assisted in the successful recovery of 895 children;

Whereas NCMEC CyberTipline has handled more than 686,000 reports;

Whereas NCMEC's Child Victim Identification Program has reviewed and analyzed 23,000,000 child pornography images and videos, 8,600,000 in 2008 alone;

Whereas NCMEC's sex offender tracking team has already located 402 missing sex offenders;

Whereas NCMEC operates a child victim identification program to assist law enforcement in identifying victims of child pornography;

Whereas NCMEC develops and disseminates programs and information about Internet safety and the prevention of child abduction and sexual exploitation;

Whereas NCMEC facilitates the deployment of the National Emergency Child Locator Center during periods of national disasters; and

Whereas NCMEC deploys Team Adam, a rapid response and support system comprised of retired law enforcement officers, to provide on-site technical assistance to local law enforcement agencies investigating cases of child abduction and sexual exploitation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives recognizes the 25th anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material on H. Res. 454.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 454, which recognizes the 25th anniversary of the National Center For Missing and Exploited Children. The NCMEC serves as the national resource center for missing and exploited children.

It is estimated that 800,000 children are reported missing every year in the United States. Two hundred thousand of that number are abducted by family members, and 58,000 are abducted by nonfamily members, for which the primary motive is sexual assault. It is with great sadness that this national tragedy continues year after year.

We recognize today the National Center's persistent efforts in reuniting families and stopping the abuse and exploitation of our children. During its 25-year history, the organization has assisted in the recovery of more than 138,000 children. NCMEC's Amber Alert Program alone has led to 443 recoveries. NCMEC's efforts have led to a rise in the recovery rate of missing children from 62 percent in 1990 to 97 percent today.

The organization offers assistance and training to law enforcement around the country in identifying and locating missing and exploited children, as well as non-compliant sex offenders. NCMEC also actively combats children's pornography by reviewing millions of images and videos in a national effort to identify victims of child pornography and the perpetrators behind these heinous crimes.

Madam Speaker, NCMEC acts as the ultimate advocate for our Nation's most vulnerable individuals. The organization sends a message to parents around the country that our Nation will never abandon its search for the thousands of children missing at any given moment. It is important to recognize that for the individuals at the NCMEC, the mission is never quite complete.

On May 25th of 2009, we recognize the 27th National Missing Children's Day. The day marks the anniversary of the disappearance of 6-year-old Etan Patz. For nearly three decades, the search for Etan and many other children has continued as part of the persistent efforts of the NCMEC.

Madam Speaker, once again I express my support for the center, and I thank Representative POE for bringing this resolution to the floor. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution, which seeks to pay tribute and recognize the important work of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

I am honored to yield such time as he may consume to the sponsor of this important resolution, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE).

Mr. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielding and the support of the gentleman from New York.

I'm proud to sponsor H. Res. 454, which recognizes the 25th anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

As founder and co-Chair of the Victims' Rights Caucus, along with my friend from California, Mr. COSTA, I am thankful for the work that the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children does to protect the Nation's children.

At the time the Center was founded 25 years ago, there were little or no resources available to assist law enforcement with the cases of missing children. In fact, there was no way for police to enter information about missing children into the FBI's national crime computer. Today, thanks to the work of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, this is no longer the case.

Each year, approximately 800,000 American children are reported missing. When a child is missing, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children works tirelessly alongside families and law enforcement agencies in locating, finding, and recovering the children and bringing them home to their parents.

Many people may be familiar with John Walsh from his TV show America's Most Wanted, but they may not realize the tragic events that led to his advocating on behalf of children and his work with America's Most Wanted.

In 1981, Adam Walsh, son of John and Reve Walsh, was abducted from a toy department store in Florida at a shopping mall. Two weeks later, fishermen found Adam's decapitated head. They never found his body. He was 6 years old.

Last year, after 27 years of not knowing who killed their son, police announced that Adam's murderer was a serial killer who had died a decade earlier while serving five life sentences in prison. Ottis Toole was his killer's name, and although we know this knowledge did not take away the Walshes' pain, we hope that it gave them some peace of mind and a sense of justice.

Even during the years of unanswered questions, John Walsh turned his loss into advocating on behalf of children. He helped fight for the passage of the important Federal legislation, such as the Missing Children's Act of 1982 and the Missing Children's Assistance Act of 1984.

The Missing Children's Assistance Act of 1984 established a national resource center and a clearinghouse for missing and exploited children, thus creating the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. President Reagan officially opened the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children on June 13, 1984. Twenty-five years later, we thank John Walsh for his pioneer efforts and recognize the center for their work on behalf of America's children.

We celebrate today that, since 1990, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children's recovery rate of missing children has increased from 62 percent to 97 percent. Many children owe their rescue to the center, and many parents are grateful for the return of their kids, thanks to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

This legislation is sponsored by both the Victims' Rights Caucus and the Caucus for Missing and Exploited and Runaway Children. I would like to thank my friend and fellow co-Chair of the Victims' Rights Caucus, JIM COSTA, and the co-Chairs of the Missing and Exploited Children's Caucus, JUDY BIGGERT, BART STUPAK, ZOE LOFGREN and FRANK WOLF.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. TONKO. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any further speakers?

Mr. PLATTS. Madam Speaker, yes, I do. I have at least two additional speakers.

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE).

Mr. ROYCE. Madam Speaker, I rise to support this resolution. I think, in recognizing the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children here on its 25th anniversary, it is time for us to reflect on just what a role it played in terms of increasing the recovery rate over time of missing children.

If you think about the last 25 years and the fact that 138,000 missing children have been recovered, returned to their families, but that in the early years that rate ran at 62 percent and now that rate is up to 97 percent, you begin to get an appreciation for just what the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children were able to do for humanity, for these children, for these families.

As mentioned, it was officially opened in June of 1984 by President Ronald Reagan, and since its inception, it has become the leading organization worldwide dealing with the issue of missing and exploited kids.

I've been pleased to support many of the initiatives that it's worked for, including:

The Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children Registration Act, which was in 1994, and it mandated that sex offender registries be established in every State;

Megan's Law of 1996, which mandated that every State provide community notification when dangerous sex offenders are released, was driven by the push from the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children;

The PROTECT Act of 2003, which created a national AMBER Alert Program and strengthened law enforcement's ability to punish violent criminals who prey upon children;

And, of course, the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, which created a national sex offender public database. And it's because of that work over the years that that rate is up to 97 percent today.

Now, despite all that's been accomplished, I'm sure there is much more that can be done, should be done. I congratulate the NCMEC for its 25th anniversary. I congratulate it for its work on behalf of so many child recoveries to date.

And let this resolution remind us that there is nothing more important than the safety of our Nation's children, and that the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children has done such great work in this regard.

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Madam Speaker, I am honored to yield to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DANIEL

E. LUNGREN), who played an important role in the foundation and formation of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in 1984, as much time as he may consume.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Madam Speaker, it is hard to believe that it was 25 years ago that this Congress worked to facilitate the establishment of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

I recall being on the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee when John Walsh and his wife testified before us. It was at a time when they did not know who had murdered their child.

It was at a time in this country where we specifically prohibited the use of the FBI in attempting to participate in any activities to try and find missing children. We had a statutory delay for any participation by the FBI. There was a lack of coordination that was not only in existence, but was promoted by law at that time.

And I recall, after John Walsh and his wife testified before us, the shrugging of shoulders by some who basically had to tell the Walshes that there was nothing that we could do here on the Federal level.

John Walsh and his wife did not take that as an answer. They spoke to many of us here in the Chamber, but actually those of us on the subcommittee and committee at that time, and challenged us to try and find a way to make it possible that we could have a seamless web between the Federal Government, the State government and local government when the question was a missing child. And the strength and persistence of that couple, combined with others who joined them around the country was extraordinary at that time.

It seems so commonplace now for us to talk about the 25th anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. It seems so commonplace for us to talk about hundreds of thousands of children being reported missing yearly, and the fact that there was almost a collective shrug of the shoulder at that time saying, it is a terrible tragedy, but there's nothing we can do about it.

It seems so commonplace now that when a child is missing, with all of the various laws that have followed after the creation of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, that almost instantaneously you have law enforcement across the board communicating with one another and creating a mechanism by which there can be the exchange of information and the encouragement of the exchange of information so that we can find these children.

One thing we knew 25 years ago, and it remains the same today, the sooner you know that a child is missing, the better the chances are of being able to find that child. The sooner you have law enforcement involved, along with the communities, the better the chances are that you will have a successful recovery of that child and a successful reuniting of that family.

So I hope people understand why we celebrate the 25th anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children and that it has been the result of thousands upon thousands of people working for this effort.

Had it not been for a single couple, the Walshes, who, out of tragedy, decided to make something positive, had it not been for them coming here to the Congress and insisting that we look at this issue and insisting that there was something that can be done and insisting that just because we used to do it the old way was no reason or no excuse for not trying to do something different, had it not been for them, we would not be celebrating the 25th anniversary, nor would we be celebrating the thousands upon thousands of successful reunitions that have taken place around this country.

So this is a wonderful recognition of the center, but I hope it will also be a tremendous recognition of the contributions made by two wonderful Americans, the Walshes.

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PLATTS. Madam Speaker, I, again, urge a "yes" vote in support of this important resolution and commend Mr. POE for his sponsorship, as well as Mr. LUNGREN for his important work in the foundation of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 454, recognizing the 25th anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

In 1979, while on his way to school, 6-year-old Etan Patz disappeared from the streets of New York City. In 1981, 6-year-old Adam Walsh disappeared from a Florida shopping mall. The media attention and search efforts that resulted from these two cases focused the nation's attention on the problem of child abduction and the need for a coordinated effort to address this problem.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, NCMEC, as it is called in acronym, was created by Congress in 1984, through the Missing Children's Assistance Act. NCMEC works in partnership with the U.S. Department of Justice and is the nation's resource center and clearinghouse for information on missing and exploited children. Since 1984, NCMEC has assisted law enforcement with more than 154,000 missing child cases, resulting in the recovery of more than 138,000 children.

NCMEC's mission includes helping to prevent child abduction and sexual exploitation; helping to find missing children; and assisting victims of child abduction and sexual exploitation, their families, and the professionals who serve them. NCMEC provides assistance to families and law enforcement agencies in locating and recovering missing and exploited children, both nationally and internationally.

NCMEC offers many services, including a 24-hour call center. NCMEC's toll-free national hotline, 1-800-THE-LOST, has handled more than 2.3 million calls.

NCMEC also manages a distribution system for missing-child photos; a system of case management and technical assistance for law enforcement and families; training programs for Federal, State and local law enforcement; and programs designed to help stop the sexual exploitation of children.

NCMEC is the only private, non-profit organization that combines these resources to provide support to law enforcement, state clearinghouses, and parents working to find missing children.

I stand in support of this resolution recognizing the 25th Anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. I ask for my colleagues' support.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, the resolution before the House, H. Res. 454, recognizing the 25th Anniversary of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, is one that obviously brings with it many happy endings for at least 138,000 families.

And while not all of the stories are those happy endings, the center has provided itself as a resource, as a network that has devoted itself to the reconnection of our youth to their families. And so, with that outstanding record and with the concerns for missing children still alive and haunting us as a society, I strongly encourage a "yes" vote on the resolution.

I yield back my remaining time, Madam Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 454.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. PLATTS. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONGRATULATING AIRCRAFT OWNERS AND PILOTS ASSOCIATION ON ITS 70TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 472) congratulating and saluting the seventieth anniversary of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association (AOPA) and their dedication to general aviation, safety and the important contribution general aviation provides to the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 472

Whereas the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association (AOPA) was formed 70 years ago, in May 1939, on the eve of World War II;

Whereas the AOPA is committed to improving general aviation safety;

Whereas the AOPA created the AOPA Air Safety Foundation, the only organization dedicated solely to that end, nearly 60 years ago;

Whereas the AOPA represents more than 415,000 members, or 7 out of every 10 pilots in the United States;

Whereas the AOPA has, for 7 decades, provided those pilots with education, information, and advocacy at all levels of government;

Whereas the AOPA was among the earliest proponents of civilian use of the Global Positioning Satellite System, setting the stage for development of the Next Generation Air Transportation System;

Whereas the AOPA was a leading advocate of the General Aviation Revitalization Act of 1994, which led to the recovery of the United States general aviation light aircraft manufacturing industry, a major United States export and a plus on the trade balance sheet;

Whereas the AOPA has developed and maintained close working relationships with agencies of the Federal Government, especially the Department of Transportation, the Department of Homeland Security, the Federal Aviation Administration, and the Transportation Security Administration; and

Whereas those relationships have allowed the public and private sectors to address various issues of legitimate concern to the Federal government in ways that impose the least possible burden on general aviation pilots and aircraft owners: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) congratulates and salutes the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association (AOPA) for celebrating its 70th anniversary;

(2) commends the AOPA for creating the AOPA Air Safety Foundation nearly 60 years ago to improve general aviation safety;

(3) commends the AOPA for helping lead the recovery of the United States general aviation light aircraft manufacturing industry; and

(4) commends the AOPA for setting the stage for development of the Next Generation Air Transportation System.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on House Resolution 472.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in support of House Resolution 472, congratulating and saluting the 70th anniversary of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association and their dedication to the general aviation, safety, and the important contribution that general aviation provides to the United States of America.

AOPA was incorporated on May 15, 1939, as a nonprofit organization dedicated to general aviation. AOPA represents more than 414,000 members, which is about 70 percent of all United States pilots. In 1950, AOPA created the Air Safety Foundation, which provides general aviation pilots with training, education, and research on information and safety that are important to all pilots.

AOPA was a leading advocate in the General Aviation Revitalization Act of 1994 which led to the recovery of the U.S. general aviation and light aircraft manufacturing industry. In recent years, AOPA has been active on many general aviation issues such as global positioning navigation, flight service station modernization, FAA reauthorization, and the Next Generation Air Transportation System, known as NextGen.

House Resolution 472 congratulates and salutes the 70th anniversary of AOPA and its dedication to general aviation, safety, and the important contribution made by all aviators to the United States. In addition, the resolution commends AOPA for creating the Air Safety Foundation, leading the recovery of general aviation of light aircraft in the manufacturing industry and setting the stage for the development of NextGen.

For these reasons and others, I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 472.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 472. I'm a cosponsor of the resolution introduced by my colleague, Mr. DENT of Pennsylvania, congratulating the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association on the organization's 70th anniversary.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 472. I am a cosponsor of the resolution introduced by Mr. DENT congratulating the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association (AOPA) on the organization's 70th anniversary.

For decades, AOPA has provided important safety information to pilots all over the country, making it a valuable safety partner with the FAA and the House Transportation Committee.

In addition, AOPA continues to perform an advocacy function for pilots and aircraft owners providing a helpful voice both at the FAA and here in Congress. Representing roughly 415,000 pilots and aircraft owners, AOPA has been a valuable stakeholder helping to shape policy solutions to safety issues facing the general aviation industry.

Finally, in representing pilots and aircraft owners, AOPA represents a general aviation industry that is critical to our nation's economy. The manufacturing of general aviation aircraft as well as the maintenance and operation of general aviation aircraft supports 1,265,000 high-quality jobs here in the United States. General aviation also inspires the love for flying that has led to so many U.S. commercial airline pilot careers.

I support the adoption of the resolution.

I yield such time as he may consume to the author of the resolution, Representative CHARLES DENT.

Mr. DENT. Thank you, Congressman PETRI, for your part of this legislation.

On May 15, 2009, the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, or AOPA, celebrated its 70th anniversary. Since its inception on the eve of the Second World War, AOPA has grown to be one of the strongest voices for general aviation in the United States.

Throughout its rich history, AOPA has developed and maintained close working relationships with Federal Government agencies including the Department of Transportation, Department of Homeland Security, Federal Aviation Administration, and the Transportation Security Administration. By working closely with these agencies, AOPA has helped us create the safest and most efficient aviation system in the world.

For the last 7 years, AOPA has also fostered a dynamic relationship with Congress, and specifically the members of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on which I serve. The association's first political activity was to urge the U.S. Senate to pass legislation establishing the civilian pilot training program which allows thousands of American pilots to gain their certification through Federal Government support. Decades later, AOPA remains a key actor in the development in our Nation's aviation policy having played a vital role in the crafting and passage of this year's FAA Reauthorization Act.

Today, AOPA's membership exceeds 400,000, including seven out of every 10 pilots in this Nation. I'm confident every Member of Congress currently has a valuable relationship with the general aviation pilots flying in their districts.

On a personal note, AOPA members from the Lehigh Valley area serve on my aviation advisory board proved to be some of the most informed and influential participants. Their expertise has truly been a great resource for me as I serve on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and the Aviation Subcommittee.

Madam Speaker, I believe the passage of this resolution congratulating AOPA on its 70 years of service is a fitting way to salute the many pilots who help make our aviation system the safest and most efficient in the world. And at this time I would like to encourage everybody to support this legislation and urge its adoption.

Mr. PETRI. At this time, Madam Speaker, I yield as much time as he may consume to my colleague from Michigan, VERN EHLERS.

Mr. EHLERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As a student pilot, and as the co-chairman of the House General Aviation Caucus, as well as a proud member of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 472, honoring the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association on their 70th anniversary.

Since 1939, AOPA has effectively represented the general aviation community at the local, State, and Federal levels. With a membership of more than 415,000—or two-thirds of all of the pilots in the United States—AOPA is the largest and one of the most influential aviation associations in the world. I have been a member for a number of years.

General aviation is a catch-all category that includes all nonscheduled, all nonmilitary aviation. There are more than 230,000 general aviation aircraft in the United States, which use nearly 19,000 small and regional airports. These airports help connect people and industries that do not always have easy access to our commercial airports.

Recently, general aviation has come under attack by the media and those that view general aviation as a corporate indulgence or an expensive toy used exclusively by the wealthy. That is simply not true. Actually, the fact is that companies that utilize general aviation are more productive and, thus, more competitive.

I can give two examples from my hometown of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Recently, I was talking to a businessman there. He's a contractor. He's built a number of buildings. They've decided to expand into the Upper Peninsula of Michigan and into Canada. As you know, Michigan is surrounded by the Great Lakes so it's very hard to get from point A to point B quickly. However, they bought an airplane, and they were able to zip easily from the Grand Rapids headquarters to all the work sites in Canada and in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. More often than not, these airplanes pay for themselves.

I have another businessman in Grand Rapids who told me that his airplane saved him a considerable amount of money because when his executives went to visit his plants scattered around the U.S.—most of them in forests because he's in the lumbering business and he has 30-some businesses around the country—it takes at least one person one day to get to any of these sites using commercial aviation because they have to go to a major commercial airport, rent a car and drive 30, 40 miles into the forest to their site. But with their own private airplane, they could usually land within a few miles. They can complete three business visits in 1 day instead of one.

So, as they say, these airplanes pay for themselves.

In addition, most of the private pilots I know are not rich but middle class working people that love to fly. In the wake of these disparaging stories that have appeared in the media, the AOPA and its supporters in Congress have worked hard to educate the public and spread the word about the importance of general aviation to our economy and our transportation system.

Every private pilot is passionate about flying, and the AOPA is the organization they rely on to stay abreast of current political events and aviation events and to advocate on their behalf.

I congratulate the AOPA on this historic anniversary, and I wish them continued success, and I look forward to celebrating future anniversaries with them as well. And I hope by then, I am able to fly more often than I am while I'm in the Congress.

Mr. BOCCIARI. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his efforts to promote general aviation. It's very clear, having, myself, several classifications as a multiengine commercial instrument single engineer, that general aviation needs to do all it can to promote and respond to the needs of its pilots—in particular, training of the pilots. It is very important that we recognize the significance of this organization and what it means to general aviation.

I concur with the remarks of the ranking member and also concur with the gentleman and his remarks with respect to the importance of this bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, H. Res. 472, introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT), which congratulates and salutes the 70th anniversary of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association (AOPA) and its dedication to general aviation (GA), safety, and the important contribution that GA provides to the United States. The resolution also commends AOPA for: creating the Air Safety Foundation, leading the recovery of the GA light aircraft manufacturing industry, and setting the stage for the development of the Next Generation Air Transportation System by being an early proponent of the civilian use of the Global Positioning System. I thank Representative DENT for his leadership on this measure.

AOPA was incorporated on May 15, 1939, as a non-profit organization dedicated to GA. Since then, the organization has been a leading advocate for GA pilots and now represents about 415,000 members. AOPA has also provided GA pilots with valuable safety education and training through the Air Safety Foundation, which was created in 1950. The Air Safety Foundation is the largest non-profit organization dedicated solely to GA safety.

AOPA was a primary supporter of the General Aviation Revitalization Act (GARA) of 1994. The GA industry boomed following the passage of GARA, which placed fair and reasonable limitations on the time period during which a manufacturer would be legally liable for aircraft defects.

I congratulate AOPA for working to support GA over the past 70 years. GA stimulates local and regional economies—it comprises over one percent of the U.S. Gross Domestic Product and supports almost 1.2 million jobs. In addition, GA provides communities with essential services, and affords businesses the flexibility and mobility that they require. Many industries and public services depend on GA to be successful and efficient, including emergency medicine, firefighting, news services, energy exploration, and farming.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H. Res. 472.

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res 472, a resolution to congratulate the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association on their seventieth anniversary, and speak to their dedication to general aviation, to safety, and the important contribution general aviation provides to the United States.

The AOPA was established seventy years ago, on the eve of World War II. This non-profit association has been dedicated to general aviation, improving general aviation safety, providing pilots with training, education and advocating on their behalf at every level of government.

More than 75% of all flights in the United States are general aviation. America relies on general aviation for business, medical delivery services, sightseeing and for just plain fun and a love of flying.

General aviation is a vital industry in America's economy. Currently there are 19,000 airports nationwide that provide jobs for 1.3 million Americans and bring in more than $100 billion dollars annually.

After the terrorist attacks of 9/11, the AOPA responded by partnering with the TSA to develop a nationwide Airport Watch Program that uses pilots as eyes and ears for observing and reporting suspicious activity.

Flight Safety has remained a principal focus for the AOPA, so they have supported new technologies to make aviation safer. AOPA was a principle advocator of the GPS navigation systems which helped lead the way for the Next Gen Air Transportation System—with aviation-specific applications and advanced innovations such as weather forecasting.

And today, the AOPA represents more than 289,000 American general aviation pilots—including my husband who is a long time member. He started flying when he was a fighter pilot in Vietnam, and now we fly an RV-8, which he built in our garage.

I am proud to support the resolution to honor the AOPA for the commendable work they do in the aviation field.

Their dedication to aviation, aviation safety, training general aviation pilots, and to new technologies makes me proud to support this association.

Congratulations on your first 70 years.

Mr. PETRI. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time. I urge passage of the bill, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, the swift passage of this bill is very important.

I yield back my time as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 472.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RALPH REGULA FEDERAL BUILDING AND UNITED STATES COURTHOUSE

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1687) to designate the Federal building and United States courthouse located at McKinley Avenue and Third Street, SW., Canton, Ohio, as the "Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse," as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 1687

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RALPH REGULA FEDERAL BUILDING AND UNITED STATES COURTHOUSE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 1687.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Madam Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the bill I introduced, H.R. 1687, as amended, and urge its quick passage.

This bill designates the building located at McKinley and Third Streets, S.W., Canton, Ohio, as the Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse. The bill has strong, bipartisan support.

While I know Congressman Regula as my predecessor, many of you on both sides of the aisle were also fortunate enough to call him a colleague, a mentor, and a friend. He was a true steward of his district and earned every accolade from his constituents, who knew him only as Ralph. He combined a unique blend of procedural acumen, hard work, and collegial personality in rising to a position of leadership on the House Appropriations Committee. All the while, he never forgot where he came from, consistently setting the standard and making sure that his constituents received the assistance they needed with their problems.

As a former teacher and principal, Ralph was a leader in pushing to improve our students' reading skills, develop teacher training, and increase Pell Grant funding. He also increased by millions of dollars the amount of Federal money committed to research in fighting cancer, heart disease, and birth defects.

Ralph was a leader in alternative energy. And he was an early champion of fuel cell technology, helping my district earn a reputation as a national leader in fuel cell research and development.

Congressman Ralph Regula served with distinction and represented the 16th District of Ohio for over 30 years—in fact, it was 36 years. He is a native Ohioan, born in Beach City, Ohio, on December 3, 1924. After high school, Congressman Ralph Regula served in the United States Navy with distinction and honor in World War II. He later graduated from college and earned his law degree in Canton, Ohio, at William McKinley School of Law. He went on to become a lawyer and later a State legislator.

He was first elected to Congress in 1972 and served 18 consecutive terms, retiring last year to spend more time with his lovely, lovely wife, Mary, and college sweetheart, as well as their three children and four grandchildren.

As much as I wish to claim this as an original idea, I have to give thanks and credit to Senator SHERRON BROWN, who first introduced this legislation last December before I was sworn in.

It is appropriate that we honor Congressman Ralph Regula with this bill because in many ways this building would not exist without his efforts, having laid the groundwork for it many, many years ago.

The Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse will continue Ralph's legacy, serving Stark

County for many years to come. It is most fitting and proper to honor Congressman Regula with this designation.

I support this bill, as amended, and urge its immediate passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to thank the chairman and the sponsor, the gentleman from Ohio, for sponsoring this legislation. He mentioned the history of Mr. Regula. He obviously served honorably the people of the 16th District in Ohio for 18 consecutive terms, from 1973 until last Congress, becoming the second longest-serving Republican Member in the House, Mr. Speaker.

Congressman Regula has a great legacy and has had a long and distinguished career in public service, always, always serving his country. Early on, he served in I think the most honorable way that one can ever serve this country, and that is in the Armed Forces, in the Navy. After completing his legal education, he went into private practice of law. In the early 1960s, Congressman Regula served as a member of the Ohio State Board of Education, and then he went on to serve in the Ohio House of Representatives, also in the Ohio State Senate prior to his election in the Congress.

Naming this Federal building in Ohio is appropriate to recognize Congressman Regula's commitment to public service, to his constituents, and to this Nation. The respect that he earned while serving in Congress is really demonstrated by what we are seeing today, the fact that this bill is sponsored by Ohio representatives from both sides of the aisle.

Again, I want to thank the sponsor of this legislation. I support the passage of this bill and urge my colleagues to do the same. Again, this is a man who has served this country with distinction.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Mr. SERRANO. I thank the gentleman.

Today, I rise in support of H.R. 1687, legislation to bring well-deserved recognition to Congressman Ralph Regula, who was first elected to Congress in 1972.

Congressman Regula retired in January of this year after serving in Congress for 18 consecutive terms. He had a wealth of experience on the House Appropriations Committee, serving as chairman of both the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Subcommittee and the Interior Subcommittee.

When I assumed the chairmanship of the House Financial Services Appropriations Committee in this Congress, Congressman Regula was the ranking member, and he was a mentor and a partner. I learned a lot about how to be an effective chairman from Congressman Regula by watching him in action and talking to him as my ranking member.

As a Member from an urban district, New York City, I also learned a lot about him and about farming. And I must tell you, I learned something that may sound funny to some folks, but I learned the difference between jelly and jam, and he was an expert on the subject. What I most treasure is his friendship because Congressman Regula was a true and generous friend to me.

The designation of this Federal building and courthouse in Canton, Ohio, as the Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse is an appropriate honor for this man who has devoted his life to public service. He served in the Navy, was a lawyer, a member of the Ohio State Board of Education, the Ohio House of Representatives, and the Ohio State Senate before joining Congress and beginning his many years of distinguished and dedicated service on behalf of his constituents of the 16th Congressional District of Ohio.

We are doing something really good today; we are honoring a man who deserved this. And let me just conclude by saying this: I imagine when we leave here—when the day comes that I leave here—you want to be remembered for your work, but I think more than that you want to be remembered by your colleagues as how you treated them and how you interacted with them. Ralph Regula was a gentleman. Ralph Regula was a colleague. Ralph Regula never had anything nasty to say about anyone. And as I said before, coming from a community where I came from and coming from a community where he would tell me about driving his pickup truck and going out to his farm, it was two different worlds, and yet I learned to admire him, to love him, and to respect him.

And so today I wanted to join this celebration to say thank you to him. And I know, Mr. Speaker, it's somewhere outside the rules of the House to speak to a TV audience or to people in the gallery, so I won't do that, but I suspect that Congressman Regula is watching us today and needs to know that we care about him, that we care a lot, and that this is an honor, one of many, that he truly deserves.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATOURETTE).

Mr. LATOURETTE. Thank you, Mr. DIAZ-BALART, for the recognition. And I want to thank Mr. BOCCIERI of Ohio for introducing this piece of legislation.

Mr. BOCCIERI—I can't call him Congressman Regula's replacement because nobody can replace Congressman Regula, but he is his successor. And, unluckily, I also happen to be his successor as the dean of the Ohio Republican Delegation because in the last two elections you guys have wiped everybody out, and at eight terms, I'm the head guy on our side in the State of Ohio.

But, as has been mentioned, Ralph served 36 years here. And 36 years is the longest that any Republican Member of Congress has served from the State of Ohio. He had a lot to do, and I think Mr. PETRI is going to talk about his work with the parks when he was the chairman of the Interior Subcommittee, but Ralph's real gift, when it came to our side of the aisle at least, back in happier days—and Mr. BOCCIERI, happier days are when the Republicans were in the majority, that definition. Ralph guided us. And if you looked at the Ohio delegation back in the 1990s, most of us were the chairmen of full committees. We had two cardinals, Mr. Regula and Mr. Hobson of Springfield. And that was all Ralph's doing. He made a commitment to make sure that there was an Ohioan on every committee that mattered.

When I was elected—I'm a lawyer by training—I said, Ralph, I think I would like to be on the Judiciary Committee. And he said, What are you, nuts? We need a Republican from Ohio on the Transportation Committee. And he put me there, and it was one of the happiest times of my life.

There are two things that I want to talk about. Mr. SERRANO is right about his observations, but I came in the Class of 1994, so I'm one of those Republican revolutionaries that created the first majority since 1954. And Mr. Speaker, you may remember—and others may remember—that at that time there was a lot of rhetoric in this Chamber and there were some things that became targets. And parks became targets. But what I will always remember is that it was the desire on my side of the aisle to zero-fund things like the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities. And I thought that was misguided, and Congressman Regula, as the chairman of the Interior Subcommittee, also felt that that was misguided. And as a result, although those agencies saw reductions during that time, they were never zeroed out. And I think in this appropriation cycle we will finally get back to the level of funding that they received prior to 1994.

I will tell you that a few years before Congressman Regula's retirement he was in line as the most senior guy to become the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. And he worked very hard at that. He created an organization called CARE, and worked hard—raised a lot of money in what you had to do and all that other business—and he was denied that honor, that opportunity. I will tell you that, in my mind, it had a lot to do not with the quality of the other candidates, who were both excellent. It had a lot to do with the fact that Ralph had angered people back in the 1990s because he wouldn't eliminate the National Endowment for the Arts, he wouldn't eliminate the National Endowment for the Humanities, he wouldn't agree to shut down the Department of Education. And as a result, even though Ralph had a long and distinguished career here, I think he was punished.

The other thing I want to say about Ralph is his partner, his life partner, Mary—Mary, of course, is the brains behind the First Ladies' Library. Mr. Speaker, if you ever happen to be traveling through the State of Ohio and you have to take a restroom break or you have to get off and get a soda, stop at the First Ladies' Library, because it really is an amazing creation that wouldn't be in existence today if it wasn't for Mary Regula, with the support of her husband, Ralph Regula.

So, Mr. BOCCIERI, I again want to thank you very much. This is an amazingly wonderful bipartisan effort on your part, and Senator BROWN, who you mentioned, to name something after somebody who really deserves to have something named after him. I never have served with a finer public servant than Congressman Regula. I know that that building will make him proud, and it should make the citizens of Canton, Ohio, proud as well. And I thank you for honoring my friend.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I wish to thank the gentleman from Ohio. His remarks were not only appropriate, they were well-guided in terms of what Mr. Regula meant not only to our part of Ohio, but what he meant to America.

Campaigning through the district and having the occasion to work with Congressman Regula while I was in the State legislature, people knew him not as a conservative, not as a liberal, not as a Democrat or Republican, but just as Ralph. And that type of leadership, that type of portrayal of American politics is what we should all rise to emulate. He was a man of his word, a man of integrity, and a man who believed in the Constitution. And he told me, he said, When you go to Congress, John, make sure that you protect the Constitution and, in particular, the fact that we own the checkbook, we write the checks, we appropriate the money, we here in Congress are responsible for the taxpayers' dollars. He was responsible for millions and millions of dollars coming back to the State of Ohio, whether it was research in fuel-cell technology or whether it was the First Ladies' Library that his wife had such a brilliant idea to anchor in our part of Ohio and the Midwest, or just funding for all the medical research that we're doing in our State, he was a leader. And he believed in the innovation and creativity of the American people, and in particular of all Ohioans. He was a man of great integrity, and someone who obviously I, as Congressman LATOURETTE said, would not be able to replace, but certainly respect as his successor.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I yield to the gentlelady from California, our Speaker of the House of Representatives, Speaker PELOSI.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and thank him for giving us this opportunity to come to the floor to sing the praises of our former colleague—we always will have him as a colleague in our hearts, but former colleague on the floor, Congressman Ralph Regula of Ohio.

As many of you know and as has been acknowledged, Ralph Regula served in the House with great distinction for 38 years of service, 38 years of service and not only service, great leadership. Last year we sadly said good-bye to him, but now tonight we will honor him by creating a longstanding testament to his leadership, designating the courthouse and Federal building in his hometown of Canton as the Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse.

I want to acknowledge Congressman JOHN BOCCIERI for his work in shepherding this legislation through Congress and for doing an exceptional job, I believe, following in the footsteps of Ralph Regula in representing Ohio's 16th Congressional District.

Congressman Regula's entire life was devoted to public service and still is. He was a distinguished Navy veteran of World War II. He served our country in that way, and he served in both the Ohio Senate and the Ohio House of Representatives as well as the State Board of Education. And aren't we fortunate that when he came to Congress, he was already an experienced legislator with a strong commitment to educating our children.

Thirty-eight years. Imagine that. Some of our Members weren't even born when Ralph Regula came to the Congress. Thirty-eight years in the House of Representatives, earning the distinction of being the second-longest-serving Republican in the Congress.

Congressman Regula's leadership benefited our entire Nation. It was a personal privilege for me to work with him on the Appropriations Committee. I saw firsthand his leadership, his knowledge of the issues, the respect that he commanded for all who came before him and the respect he had from both sides of the aisle.

I personally am grateful to him for transforming San Francisco's former Army base—he was very much a part of doing that—the Presidio, into one of our Nation's premier parks, and we have honored him on many occasions in San Francisco, most recently at Fort Baker.

None of us can come together and talk about Ralph Regula without talking about Mary Regula because they served here in Congress as a team. Ralph would be the first to say that it was the love of Mary and their three children and four grandchildren that made his leadership possible. And we all know that Mary is the one who made a decision that we would have a National First Ladies' Library in Canton, Ohio, to honor the contribution to our Nation of the First Ladies of America. It's a phenomenal thing. She had an idea, she executed it, and now people can visit and see that important part of American history thanks to Mary Regula.

Today we honor a great congressional leader, a great friend to all of us, and a great man. I urge all of my colleagues to understand the privilege that we have of expressing our appreciation for Ralph Regula's leadership by supporting this legislation, and I join my colleagues from Ohio on both sides of the aisle for the honor that we are paying to Ralph Regula tonight. And I again thank JOHN BOCCIERI for shepherding this through the Congress.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

I concur with the Speaker's eloquent remarks, especially about Mary, who champions women in their role in politics. And for my two daughters who are sitting behind me and the ones I have at home, she has been a shepherd for all in the 16th District as well as our country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI).

Mr. PETRI. I thank my colleague for yielding. I thank the previous speakers, particularly the Speaker of the House for taking the time from her busy schedule to come down here to honor a distinguished colleague on the occasion of naming the Federal courthouse in his hometown after him, and that's the gentleman I had the privilege of serving with for nearly 30 years and getting to know and one whom I admire a great deal, and that is Ralph Regula.

You've heard about the spirit with which Ralph Regula approached his responsibilities as a legislator. It was positive. He worked with all Members of this body, and he did what he thought was in the best interest of this country and this institution.

You learn a lot about Members of this body when you visit their districts. And my wife and young daughter and I had the habit, as we would drive back to Wisconsin for the August break, of picking a different route across the country and taking a few extra days and stopping to see historic and interesting places and making it an educational and fun thing rather than just an ordeal to go across the country. And one year we decided to go through and visit John Seiberling, another colleague in Akron, Ohio, from a distinguished family, Seiberling Tire and all that, and he had his home which they had lost in the Depression, Stan Hywet, which is one of the largest private homes in the United States.

And in the course of doing that, he took us through the thing, and I discovered that he and Ralph Regula had worked together for many years to create what is now, I believe, the largest national park east of the Mississippi, the Cuyahoga. I know they were both tremendously proud of that. It was a wonderful opportunity for that area of Ohio because there are large cities on various sides of this and it provides recreational and other opportunities for a large population. And if they had not acted when they did, it might not be there today. It was done by those two Representatives working as best they could with colleagues in both political parties and will stand, I think, as a lasting monument to their joint efforts on behalf of our country and certainly the people of their region in Ohio.

Ralph and Mary were and are a great team. And one other thing I think I might mention, Ralph is kind of a gentleman farmer, I guess, and he used to spend a lot of time working there, and he loved his grandchildren and family and all of that. But Ronald Reagan was kind of a gentleman farmer, too. He had this ranch out in California where he cleared brush and was trying to develop it. And it turned out that he and Ralph were talking over at the White House for some reason about some other things, and Reagan discovered that Ralph was going back to work on some fencing on his farm and he asked him if he could explain how he did it. So Ralph came back to a meeting afterward and said that Reagan had taken careful notes and everything else and then a week or two later gave him, I think, a signed copy of the instructions that Ralph had given to him, that it was a good fence.

Ralph did a great job and it's an appropriate honor. I strongly support the passage of this legislation.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Mr. Speaker, just a few more comments and I think we will be wrapping this up very soon.

To piggyback on what the gentleman was suggesting, as I said earlier, Ralph was not known as a Democrat or a Republican, a conservative or a liberal; he was just known as "Ralph." I remember, in some closing remarks at a recent banquet that we were at, I was telling folks, and I feel at liberty to say this, I'm a freshman Member here, that this collegiality that we are sharing right now becomes few and far between at times and we need to return this Chamber, this body, our dialogue to that kind of respect for each other, where we may disagree on ideas, as Democrats and Republicans, we both believe in the end goal. And like a married couple, we may argue about how we get to the end destination, taking this exit ramp, that road, but at the end of the day, like a married couple, we always end up where we need to go. And we need to respect that. And I think that this bill respects the service of Ralph Regula and his contributions to northeast Ohio, and in particular what it will mean to the people of Stark County who go there to find relief and find help from their government. And every day they walk into that building, that building that's being built right now, they will see his designation, his name, and it will be a remembrance of what he meant.

Just one last comment, Mr. Speaker. This district that I am currently representing and serving in is, by all measures, arguably a swing district. It has Democrat and Republican registrations, even Independents inside the race. But yet he held this district for 36 years, and the Congressman before him held this district for 18 years, and the other Federal building in the city is named after him, Frank T. Bow. And so what this says is that the people of northeast Ohio, in particular the 16th District, they respect legislators, they respect Congressmen like Ralph Regula and his predecessor because they believe in our greatest asset, which is our people.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief.

I want to echo the words of the gentleman from Ohio. I think they were very well-stated. I also want to thank the Speaker of the House for coming down today and speaking in such well-deserved words but kind words to a man that really loved this institution, loved this country, and served both so very well.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1687, as amended, introduced by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI), designates the building located at McKinley Avenue and Third Streets, SW, in Canton, Ohio, as the "Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse". The bill has broad bipartisan support.

The designation honors the exemplary public service of our former colleague from Canton, Ohio, Ralph Regula. Ralph represented the 16th district of Ohio for 36 years, from January 3, 1973 to January 3, 2009. Former President Gerald Ford, while serving as the House leader, recommended Ralph Regula for an appointment to the Committee on Appropriations. He served with distinction on the Subcommittee on the Interior and the Subcommittee on Labor, Health, and Human Services.

Ralph Strauss Regula was born in Beach City, Ohio, on December 3, 1924. During World War II, Congressman Regula served in the United States Navy. He later went on to earn a B.A. from Mount Union College in 1948, and then graduated from the William McKinley School of Law in Canton, Ohio, in 1952.

Congressman Regula served in many different capacities in his long tenure in public service. He was a member of the Ohio State Board of Education from 1960–1964. Regula was then elected to the Ohio State House of Representatives from 1965–1967, and subsequently served in the Ohio State Senate in 1967–1972. He then went on to be elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in the 93rd Congress, and served for 36 years.

Congressman Regula last served as the ranking member of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services and General Government, and was one of the longest serving Republican Members of Congress. Congressman Regula retired at the end of the 110th Congress after a career of nearly 50 years of public service. Congressman Regula is married to Mary Regula and has three children and four grandchildren.

It is most fitting and proper to honor Congressman Regula with this designation.

I support H.R. 1687, as amended, and urge its passage.

Ms. SUTTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1687 . . . to commemorate the career and service of our friend and colleague, Congressman Ralph Regula, by designating the Federal Building and U.S. courthouse in Canton, Ohio, as the "Ralph Regula Federal Building and United States Courthouse."

For 38 years, Congressman Ralph Regula was a dedicated public servant and champion for Ohio.

While I served only one term with Congressman Regula, I worked with him long enough to recognize his strong and dedicated service to our country, as well as his great love for Ohio.

Congressman Regula is the consummate public servant. His career of service began long before the 38 years that he dedicated to this House.

After graduating from high school, he served in the Navy during World War II.

Congressman Regula continued his public service as a member of the Ohio State Board of Education. He went on to serve in the Ohio House and the Ohio Senate. When he arrived in Congress in 1973, Congressman Regula's greatest years of serving our country were still ahead of him.

His leadership was apparent immediately. As a freshman member, alongside Congressman John Seiberling, he fought hard to have President Ford establish the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area.

Congressman Regula continued his fight to help build and protect the Cuyahoga Valley over the next 34 years of his career.

In 1974, Congressman Regula said ". . . we could be the architects in preserving this heritage for future generations; it goes far beyond today in terms of the potential.”

Today, that potential has been fully recognized.

The Cuyahoga Valley National Park is one of the most heavily visited national parks in the country.

It is one of the great treasures Congressman Regula has left us. And, I am privileged to be able to carry on his efforts to continue to preserve and expand the Park.

I want to thank Senator BROWN and Congressman BOCCIERI for leading the effort on this bill.

No one is more deserving of this great honor than Congressman REGULA. He left a great legacy for all of us to live up to.

It is clear that the citizens of Canton and the 16th congressional district are eternally grateful for his endless contributions.

I thank him for his service, and I am glad to be a part of this effort to recognize his importance by helping to pass this bill.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. With that, Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Mr. Speaker, at this time I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KISSELL). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1687, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the yeas have it.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

RECOGNIZING CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE RECREATIONAL BOATING COMMUNITY

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 410) recognizing the numerous contributions of the recreational boating community and the boating industry to the continuing prosperity and affluence of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 410

Whereas the boating community in the United States includes over 59,000,000 individuals, generates more than $33,000,000,000 annually in the United States economy, and provides jobs for 337,000 citizens of the United States who earn wages totaling $10,400,000,000 annually;

Whereas boaters often serve as stewards of the marine environment of the United States, educating future generations of the value of these resources, and preserving such resources for such generations' enjoyment;

Whereas there are approximately 1,400 active boat builders in the United States, using materials and services contributed from all 50 States;

Whereas boating, as an activity, provides opportunities for families to be together, appeals to all age groups, and has a beneficial effect on the physical fitness and scholastic performance of those who participate; and

Whereas, July 1, 2009, would be an appropriate day to establish as National Boating Day: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that—

(2) the President should issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe National Boating Day with appropriate programs and activities that emphasize family involvement and provide an opportunity to promote the boating industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on House Resolution 410.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 410, recognizing the numerous contributions of the recreational boating community and the boating industry to the continuing prosperity and affluence of the United States.

This bipartisan resolution was introduced by Representatives RON KLEIN of Florida and HENRY BROWN of South Carolina, along with the co-Chairs of the Congressional Boating Caucus, Representatives GENE TAYLOR of Mississippi and CANDICE MILLER of Michigan.

House Resolution 410 honors the 59 million boaters in the United States. As evidenced by the bipartisan cosponsors of this resolution, American boaters span all across the country, including my constituents in Washington State who take to the waters of the Puget Sound.

Boating provides a great activity for thousands of families, Mr. Speaker, on our lakes and certainly on our great coasts—to fish, to dive, to snorkel or to simply enjoy America's stunning natural marine resources.

Boating isn't just a recreational activity. The boating industry is one of America's great industries that includes about 1,400 active boat builders in the United States, including many in my district, using materials and services contributed from all 50 States. These are American jobs that are creating a uniquely American product. Additional jobs include electricians, carpenters, painters, and engineers who work to repair or to refit recreational vessels—along with all the crew members and employees at our many marinas and harbors.

When taken together, boating in America generates more than $33 billion annually for our economy, and it provides 337,000 jobs, totaling $10.4 billion in wages every year. For these reasons, I am urging my colleagues to support House Resolution 410.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of House Resolution 410, a resolution recognizing the recreational boating community and industries.

I now recognize for as much time as he may consume our colleague from South Carolina, Mr. HENRY BROWN.

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. I appreciate my colleague from Wisconsin for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my support for House Resolution 410, legislation I was proud to introduce with Representative KLEIN. As the Representative for 75 percent of South Carolina's coast and for many of my State's recreational and commercial boaters, I am proud of this resolution, which recognizes the numerous contributions of the recreational boating community and of the boating industry.

Boating is big business in the State of South Carolina, with more than $826 million in sales a year and with nearly 9,000 boating industry employees across the State. Boats are owned by families of all income levels in communities across my State and the Nation. In my district alone, there are 82,441 registered recreational boats, and there are 145 boating businesses which range from small charter operations and marinas to major boat engine manufacturers at Cummins Marine, an employer of hundreds of my constituents.

Nationally, the recreational boating community includes over 59 million Americans, and it makes a significant impact on our economy. Boaters also serve as stewards of the marine environment as the boating community has a long history of educating future generations on the value of these resources and on how to preserve them for their enjoyment. Additionally, through annual motorboat fuel taxes, boaters contribute more than $100 million towards fish restoration and towards other environmental programs.

More than anything else, boating is important to American families as it provides opportunities for them to spend quality time together. It appeals to all age groups, and it has the beneficial effect on the physical fitness and scholastic performance of those who participate.

At the request of my constituent, Mr. Bill Hanahan, I worked to include language in this resolution, marking the important role that boating plays for American families. As Mr. Hanahan said, Joining family and friends on the water is a great way to escape the chaos of our busy lives, create quality memories together and appreciate nature in all its glory.

Boating does just that, and I encourage all of my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to yield 4 minutes to the cosponsor of this resolution, Mr. KLEIN of Florida.

Mr. KLEIN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN) for yielding me time, and I also want to commend him for his leadership on this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 410, a resolution I introduced with my friend from South Carolina, the Honorable HENRY BROWN, along with the distinguished co-Chairs of the Congressional Boating Caucus, the Honorable GENE TAYLOR from Mississippi and the Honorable CANDICE MILLER from Michigan.

Our resolution highlights the important contributions of the recreational boating community and the boating industry as to the quality of our lives and as to our continued economic prosperity. I urge President Obama to issue a proclamation calling upon the American people to observe July 1 as National Boating Day.

Boating is a famous symbol for south Florida, where I come from, and for other parts around the country. Millions of residents in our community and tourists take to the waters of south Florida to boat, to fish, to dive, to snorkel, and to view scenic tours along our pristine coastline and along our unique intercoastal waterway. Palm Beach County alone has over 40,000 registered boaters. Fort Lauderdale's majestic canals have earned it the nickname "the Venice of America."

The significance of the boating community is not only symbolic. The industry is a major economic engine in Florida, responsible for over $2.8 billion in direct sales and for 30,000 jobs State-wide. In my district alone, there are over 34,000 registered boats. The industry produces $193 million, and it employs over 2,000 of my constituents.

As everyone here knows, the contributions of the boating community extend far beyond the Sunshine State. The boating community includes 59 million people and 13.6 million registered boats throughout the United States. In addition, the recreational boating industry provides more than $37 billion in sales and in services to the U.S. economy, and it provides over 300,000 jobs throughout our country.

One need only look at the geographic diversity among members of the Congressional Boating Caucus, of which I am a proud member, to measure the broad influence and contributions of the boating community and of the boating industry. Members come from 33 States, including Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Kansas, and West Virginia.

Clearly, boating is not just a coastal pastime. It is an American pastime. Boating also brings us closer to our natural resources and treasures. I strongly believe that an appreciation for environmental stewardship comes through an interaction with nature. For example, it's hard to comprehend the beauty of our coral reefs until you see it under water with your own eyes through a boat. Once you do, you begin to understand their importance and the need to protect them for the continued health of our oceans.

Boating gives us these cherished opportunities to commune with nature, and it should be no surprise that boaters can be impassioned stewards of the environment, teaching future generations of boaters to have a healthy respect and appreciation for our natural resources.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 410, and I thank the gentleman from Washington again for bringing H. Res. 410 to the floor.

I urge its passage.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to our colleague from Indiana, Representative SOUDER.

Mr. SOUDER. I thank my friend and colleague from Wisconsin for his leadership on Transportation and for the time to speak on this bill.

As a member of the Boating Caucus, since we first formed this, I am really pleased to be supportive of this resolution. In northeast Indiana, basically, I represent a lot of water with plants and farms in between.

In Kosciusko County, we have 100 lakes. In Steuben County, we have 100 lakes. Along this ridge, one water system heads towards Lake Erie; one water system heads towards Lake Michigan, and the other goes down into the Mississippi Valley. Because of geological potholes basically connected together, sometimes through small dams and sometimes in natural larger lakes, we have the bulk of the lakes in Indiana. It is when the glaciers pulled back. So in this zone, I would guess we may have 40 to 60 percent of the natural lakes in the State of Indiana.

Some have been, historically in United States' history, big attractions, not necessarily as big a tourist attraction as in Florida or as in Wisconsin or, for that matter, as in Washington State, but Winona Lake was a big Chautauqua area.

In Kosciusko County, we have a number of State parks on these lakes, and so we're proud to bring in lots of regional tourism and people who enjoy them. They're sometimes lined up to get to the open space on our lakes in Indiana.

Yet, as the number one manufacturing district in the United States—I can't remember the latest figures—I believe we're fifth in the manufacturing of boats. Many of those boats go down to Florida and to the coasts. The inboard-outboard engine and the jet engine were both invented in my district, working with Volvo in Sweden. Many of the larger boat companies are based there—everything from float boats to fishing boats to high-powered speedboats. It is a critical part of our district. It has been a pleasure to work with the boating industry as we work on how to get retail floor plan financing for boats.

We hear a lot right now about GM and Chrysler—the auto companies. I represent Elkhart County, along with Congressman JOE DONNELLY. We've been working to make sure of the RV industry, 58 percent of which is there; but if you'll notice and look carefully at the retail floor plan financing and at SBA and at what they've done through TALF and other things, you'll see it says cars, trucks, RVs, motorcycles, and boats, because the same challenge that we're facing in the auto industry is true for the boating industry, which is how do we make sure there are adequate boats being purchased from manufacturers; how do we make sure there is the financing to keep them afloat, and then how do we make sure of the dealers. If they can only get one-fourth of their normal inventory there, here in this peak season for selling boats, it isn't going to work.

So this is a very unusual time and an important time for the boating industry. Not only are we entering the summer season in the Great Lakes region and in other areas of the country where boating and recreation are at a peak, but it's also a time of survival. It is probably the biggest challenge to the boat manufacturers since the luxury tax nearly sunk them years ago.

So I stand, honored to speak on behalf of this resolution because it's very important that we call to the attention of the American people not only the great pleasures of recreational boating but also the importance of having our boating industry survive.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, we have no further speakers. So, at this point, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I fully support House Resolution 410, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 410, introduced by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KLEIN), which recognizes the recreational boating community and boating industry for their contributions to the national economy and urges the President to issue a proclamation to observe July 1, 2009 as National Boating Day.

In the United States, the boating community consists of over 59 million people and over 13 million registered recreational boats. The boating community supports over 330,000 American jobs with total wages totaling approximately $10.4 billion a year. There are approximately 1400 boat builders in the United States that construct and repair boats using materials and services from all 50 States. In addition, recreational boating and the boating industry contribute over $33 billion to the American economy annually.

In my state of Minnesota, there are over 866,000 registered boats—the third largest number of boats of any state in the country. In fact, Minnesota has the most boats per capita of any state: there is one boat for every six people.

Whether it is on the river, a lake, along the ocean, inter-coastal or intra-coastal waterway, recreational boaters support and depend on over 12,000 marinas all across the United States.

Recreational boating is an American pastime. It is a family activity that appeals to all age groups and is a constructive outlet for entertainment. Whether water skiing, snorkeling, fishing, or just relaxing on the water, boating is a perfect reason to turn off the television and put away the video games and to bring families and friends closer together. For these reasons, July 1, 2009, should be established as National Boating Day.

I support H. Res. 410, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of H. Res. 410. This resolution commends the recreational boating industry and boating community for their sizable contribution to the economy of United States, and for their stewardship of the environment.

There are more than 59 million boaters in the United States today, helping to generate $33 billion dollars annually in economic activity. As a result, the boating industry supports an estimated 337,000 employees, who manufacture and sell boats and operate the harbors and marinas. The goods and services purchased to build and maintain boats come from each of the fifty states. Therefore, boating does not only help the water regions of our country, but benefits America as a whole.

That having been said, the boating industry and community are especially important to Michigan and to Michigan's economy. They provide invaluable assets to my district, which has Lakes Huron and St. Clair and the St. Clair River on its eastern border. Boating is not just an important recreational opportunity; for many, life on the water becomes a way of life. The impact of boating spills over into other sectors of the economy like tourism and hospitality industries.

Unfortunately, when the economy falters, it is often the recreational boating industry that feels the impact first. Many people think of boating as a recreation for only the rich, but in Michigan we know that is simply not the case. The people who make the boating industry what it is are the working class individuals who spend their weekends out on the water with friends and family. When those people face economic challenges, you will find that the boating industry does as well.

In this climate, the boating industry is facing some difficult times, nowhere more difficult than in the state of Michigan. In Michigan, we were once the number one state in terms of total boat registrations, but we have since slipped to fourth. Given the challenges that have faced the Michigan economy over the last few years, this is no surprise. The boat manufacturers, dealers, and marina operators should all be commended for their efforts to keep going through this economic period.

Since coming to Congress, I have worked to promote issues that are important to maintaining a thriving and profitable boating industry. I am proud to co-chair of the Congressional Boating Caucus with GENE TAYLOR, and together we have worked on a number of issues to help the boating industry weather the storms that have come its way. This resolution will acknowledge the contributions of the boating industry as they fight through this difficult time.

I urge all of you to please join with me in supporting this bi-partisan initiative to recognize our boaters and recommend that President Obama issue a proclamation calling for the observation of National Boating Day.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 410, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 410.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPORTING NATIONAL PIPELINE SAFETY DAY

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 484) expressing support for designation of June 10th as "National Pipeline Safety Day".

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 484

Whereas there are more than 2,000,000 miles of gas and hazardous liquid pipelines in this country operated by over 3,000 companies;

Whereas these pipelines play a vital role in the lives of people in the United States by delivering the energy we need to heat our homes, drive our cars, cook our food and operate our businesses;

Whereas in the past decade significant new pipelines have been built to help move North American sources of oil and gas to refineries and markets;

Whereas, on June 10, 1999, a hazardous liquid pipeline ruptured and exploded in a park in Bellingham, Washington, killing two 10-year-old boys and a young man, destroying a salmon stream, and causing hundreds of millions of dollars in damages and economic disruption;

Whereas in response to this June 10th pipeline tragedy Congress passed significant new pipeline safety regulations in the form of the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002 and the Pipeline Inspection, Protection, Enforcement, and Safety Act of 2006;

Whereas in the past decade the U.S. Department of Transportation's Pipelines and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration, with support from a diverse group of stakeholders, has instituted a variety of important new rules and pipeline safety initiatives such as the Common Ground Alliance, pipeline emergency training with the National Association of State Fire Marshals, and the Pipelines and Informed Planning Alliance;

Whereas even with all these new pipeline safety improvements, in 2008 alone there were still 274 significant pipeline incidents causing over $395,000,000 in property damage and uncounted economic disruption;

Whereas even though pipelines are the safest method to transport huge quantities of fuel, pipeline incidents such as the 1994 pipeline explosion in Edison, New Jersey that left 100 people homeless, the 1996 butane pipeline explosion in Texas that left 2 teenagers dead, the 2000 pipeline explosion near Carlsbad, New Mexico, that killed 12 people in an extended family, the 2004 pipeline explosion in Walnut Creek, California, that killed 5 workers, and the 2007 propane pipeline explosion in Mississippi that killed a teenager and her grandmother are still occurring;

Whereas these millions of miles of pipelines are still out of sight and therefore out of mind for the majority of individuals, local governments, and businesses, leading to pipeline damage and general lack of oversight;

Whereas greater awareness of pipelines and pipeline safety can improve public safety;

Whereas a "National Pipeline Safety Day" can provide a focal point for creating greater pipeline safety awareness; and

Whereas June 10, 2009, is the 10th anniversary of the Bellingham, Washington, pipeline tragedy that was the impetus for many of the above-mentioned safety improvements and would be an appropriate day to designate as "National Pipeline Safety Day": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) supports the designation of National Pipeline Safety Day;

(2) encourages State and local governments to observe the day with appropriate activities that promote pipeline safety;

(3) encourages all pipeline safety stakeholders to use this day to create greater public awareness of all the advancements that can lead to even greater pipeline safety; and

(4) encourages individuals across the Nation to become more aware of the pipelines that run through our communities and do what they can to encourage safe practices and damage prevention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on House Resolution 484.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to ask the House of Representatives to support the designation of June 10, tomorrow, as National Pipeline Safety Day. There are more than 2 million miles of gas and hazardous liquid pipelines in our country. Pipelines play a vital role in the lives of the American people by delivering the energy we need to heat our homes, to drive our cars, to cook our food, and to operate our businesses.

In the past decade, significant new pipelines have been built to help move oil and gas to refineries and to markets. These pipelines are invisible to most people and, therefore, are out of sight and are out of mind. This can lead to pipeline damage and to a general lack of government oversight.

On June 10 of 1999, a pipeline leak caused a massive explosion in my district in Bellingham, Washington. The rupture released more than a quarter of a million gallons of gasoline into Whatcom Creek. The gasoline ignited, sending a fireball racing down the creek, which killed two 10-year-old boys and an 18-year-old man. The two boys—Stephen Tsiorvas and Wade King—were playing in the creek on a summer day, near their homes, and 18-year-old Liam Wood had just graduated from high school and was fly fishing for trout.

Previous generations certainly ask themselves, Where were you when President Kennedy was shot? But in my district, people literally ask the question and know the answer to, Where were you when the pipeline exploded? It had that much of an impact in my district.

In response to this tragedy and several other pipeline explosions across the country, Congress passed legislation to strengthen pipeline safety regulations. The 2002 Pipeline Safety Improvement Act increased penalty fines, improved pipeline testing timelines, provided whistleblower protection, and allowed for State oversight. In 2006, Congress reauthorized the 2002 law by passing the Pipeline Inspection, Protection, Enforcement, and Safety Act, or the PIPES Act. Since that day in June, we've made significant progress in ensuring the safety of our Nation's pipelines. The frequency of so-called "high-consequence events" to pipelines has diminished almost 35 percent in the last 10 years. Due to the integrity management program required by the new law, pipeline operators have made extensive repairs to their pipelines that otherwise would have led to future accidents.

The 811 One-Call program now provides a number that people can call before they dig to make sure that they won't hit a pipeline when they do dig. "Call 811, the One-Call program." And Congress has significantly increased the number of pipeline inspectors in the field. However, we must remain vigilant. That's why I have introduced House Resolution 484, a resolution to recognize tomorrow, June 10, 2009, the 10-year anniversary of the Bellingham pipeline explosion, as National Pipeline Safety Day. My resolution encourages individuals, State and local governments, and pipeline safety stakeholders to use this day to create greater public awareness of pipelines and pipeline safety. It has the support of Washington State Governor Christine Gregoire, the Whatcom County Council, the Pipeline Safety Trust, the Pipeline Association for Public Awareness, the American Gas Association and the American Public Gas Association.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do encourage my colleagues to support House Resolution 484.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I would like to express my support for House Resolution 484, designating June 10 as National Pipeline Safety Day, and yield such time as he may consume to my colleague from Florida (Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART).

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman for his generosity with the time.

I rise in support of this resolution, designating National Pipeline Safety Month. Mr. Speaker, pipelines obviously play an important role in our society through the operation of our homes, our businesses, and the delivery of energy to drive our cars, to cook our food, to keep us warm in the winter and cool in the summer. It is an undeniable reality that energy affects all aspects of our lives, and all Americans need it and depend on energy.

That's why it's unfortunate that some in the majority and in the administration, frankly, are proposing this cap-and-trade legislation that many are calling cap-and-tax legislation that would dramatically increase the cost of energy for all Americans, every single American. Estimates say that this bill could increase a cost to a family of four close to $3,000 a year, $2,937 a year, to be exact, and raise electrical rates on families by 90 percent after adjusting for inflation, boost gasoline prices by 74 percent on American families, and natural gas prices by 54 percent. If that were not bad enough, it would also put American businesses at a huge competitive disadvantage with their competitors from other countries that don't pursue that kind of legislation, be it China or India.

Now let's take a look at what some key players in the administration have recently stated about this legislation, some facts. For example, Peter Orszag, as CBO director and currently as the OMB director, testified to the Ways and Means Committee on September 18, 2008. He said, "Decreasing emission would also impose costs on the economy. Much of those costs will be passed along to consumers in the form of higher prices for energy and energy-intensive goods."

Mr. Orszag's written testimony stated that the average annual household cost was $1,300. That's for a 15 percent cut in CO₂ emissions, which, by the way, happens to be 80 percent less than the cut sought by this administration.

Another fact. On March 17, 2009, Energy Secretary Steven Chu, testifying before the Science Committee said, "The cap-and-trade bill will likely increase the cost of electricity."

Another fact I would like to bring up today, Energy Secretary Steven Chu said advocating adjusting trade duties as a "weapon" to protect U.S. manufacturing, because otherwise, again, U.S. manufacturing would be put at a huge disadvantage. He said establishing a carbon tariff would help "level the playing field" if other countries haven't imposed mandatory reductions in carbon emissions; again, referring to the fact that it would put our industry at a huge disadvantage. Again Mr. Chu said, "If other countries don't impose a cost on carbon, then we will be at a disadvantage," and he went on to say, "and we would look at considering duties to offset that cost." But the legislation doesn't have those in the bill.

Again, what we are looking at then is, the United States will impose a self-inflicted wound to put our industry and our country at a huge disadvantage, increasing costs of energy to all consumers in this great country of ours at a time in particular when everybody is hurting.

Last month on May 21, the current CBO director testified before the House Budget Committee and said, "CBO has been very clear that a cap-and-trade system or a carbon tax would raise the price of carbon emissions, and the cost would ultimately be borne by households." Again, it's not rocket science,

Mr. Speaker. And again, "It's also widely understood that if we raise the price of carbon emissions and our trading partners do not, then that creates an additional challenge for carbon-emitting industries." Those are his words. I added that part about the rocket science, to be fair; but those are his words.

So it's fitting that we are now here talking about pipelines and energy. I just hope that we don't forget the big picture as well and that we don't impose this huge cost on our consumers and those who use gasoline and turn on lights, like everybody does, that manufactures using energy, like every industry does, that we don't put them at a huge disadvantage.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the parents of the three young men who died in the explosion would be very interested to hear the thoughts of the gentleman from Florida on energy.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I believe this resolution highlights the need to properly maintain pipelines and encourages the development of pipeline safety programs. I support the passage of this resolution and urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Mr. PETRI and Mr. MICA as well as Mr. YOUNG, Mr. OBERSTAR, and Ms. BROWN for all their help in putting this resolution together and getting it to the floor today. I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 484.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 484, introduced by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN), which expresses support for designating June 10th as "National Pipeline Safety Day".

Pipelines have a critical place in our national infrastructure. The national pipeline network of over 2.2 million miles efficiently delivers gasoline, natural gas, oil, and other essential energy products across the country each day. However, because of the volatile nature of the products they deliver, if pipelines are not properly cared for, or they are carelessly tampered with, there can be serious consequences.

That is what occurred in 1986 in Mounds View, Minnesota, when a Williams pipeline ruptured. Vaporized gasoline combined with air and liquid gasoline flowed along neighborhood streets. About 20 minutes after the accident occurred, the gasoline vapor was ignited when an automobile entered the area. Fire spread rapidly along the path of the liquid gasoline, killing a woman and her daughter and severely burning another victim. According to accident investigators, there were known deficiencies in the cathodic protection applied to the first 10 miles of the pipeline and Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 484, introduced by the corrosion to the weld seams. Employees also had failed to shut-off the manually operated gate valve until one and half hours into the spill.

According to the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), had the valve been remotely operable or had remote-operated valves been installed on the line at the time of the accident, the pipeline could have been shut down by the dispatcher soon after the failure was detected, thereby decreasing substantially the amount of product released into the neighborhood. Ignition of the fuel may not have been prevented; however, the extent and severity of the damage could have been reduced.

The NTSB first identified the need for rapid shutdown of failed pipelines to limit the release of product following a pipeline rupture in a 1970 study, entitled "Effects of Delay in Shutting Down Failed Pipeline Systems and Methods of Providing Rapid Shutdown". Since then, a number of accidents that highlight the need to reduce the release of hazardous gases or liquids have occurred. In 1995, the NTSB recommended that the Department of Transportation's Research and Special Programs Administration (RSPA) expedite requirements for rapid shutdown of failed pipeline segments on high-pressure pipelines in high-consequence areas.

However, RSPA failed to act on the NTSB's recommendations, opting instead to further study the issue. That prompted Congress to pass the Accountable Pipeline Safety and Partnership Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-304), which required the Secretary of Transportation to assess the effectiveness of remotely operated valves and to prescribe standards, within two years of enactment, for installation of the valves based on that assessment. The regulations were not issued until 2001—too late for the victims of the 1999 hazardous liquid pipeline explosion in Bellingham, Washington.

The June 10, 1999, explosion caused the release of about 237,000 gallons of gasoline into a creek that flowed through Whatcom Falls Park in Bellingham, Washington. The gasoline ignited, sending a fireball about 1.5 miles down the creek, which took the lives of two 10-year-old boys, Stephen Tsiervas and Wade King, and an 18-year-old young man, Liam Wood. Eight additional inhalation injuries occurred, a single-family residence and the city of Bellingham's water treatment plant were severely damaged, and the wildlife in Whatcom Creek was completely destroyed.

Investigators found, among other things, that Olympic Pipe Line had no remote-operated shut off valves on the line, which could have prevented the release of hundreds of thousands of gasoline and the loss of three young lives. Following the Bellingham accident, RSPA ordered the pipeline company to install an automatic check valve just downstream of the rupture location so that the volume of product released would be limited in the event of a future pipeline rupture in that area. Again, a case of too little, too late.

Pipeline accidents, such as the ones in Mounds View and Bellingham, are not isolated incidents. According to the Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration (PHMSA), which now oversees the safety of our nation's pipeline infrastructure, 2,888 significant pipeline incidents occurred between 1999-2008, resulting in 173 fatalities, 632 injuries, and $2.7 billion in property damage.

In response to these incidents, Congress passed the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002 (P.L. 107-355), which increased penalties for violations of safety standards; developed qualification programs for employees who perform sensitive tasks; strengthened pipeline testing requirements; required government mapping of the pipeline system; established a public education program for communities that live around pipelines; and enhanced whistleblower protections.

In 2006, Congress furthered these pipeline safety efforts by passing the Pipeline Inspection, Protection, Enforcement, and Safety Act (P.L. 109-468), which required development of an integrity management program for distribution pipelines; implemented long-standing NTSB safety recommendations on the installation of excess flow valves, development of hours-of-service standards for pipeline employees, and adoption of safety standards for Supervisory Control and Data Acquisition (SCADA) systems; and increased pipeline inspection and enforcement personnel.

Despite these significant measures, much work remains to be done. PHMSA has not implemented many of the mandates from the 2006 Act. Over the next several months, as we look to reauthorization of the pipeline safety program in fiscal year 2011, we will work with PHMSA to ensure full implementation of the Act.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H. Res. 484.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 484.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECOGNIZING NATIONAL HOMEOWNERSHIP MONTH

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 502) recognizing National Homeownership Month and the importance of homeownership in the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 502

Whereas the month of June is recognized as National Homeownership Month;

Whereas the people of the United States are one of the best-housed populations in the world;

Whereas owning a home is a fundamental part of the American dream and is the largest personal investment many families will ever make;

Whereas homeownership provides economic security for homeowners by aiding them in building wealth over time and strengthens communities through a greater stake among homeowners in local schools, civic organizations, and churches;

Whereas creating affordable homeownership opportunities requires the commitment and cooperation of the private, public, and nonprofit sectors, including the Federal Government and State and local governments;

Whereas homeownership can be sustained through appropriate homeownership education and informed borrowers; and

Whereas affordable homeownership will play a vital role in resolving the crisis in the United States housing market: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) fully supports the goals and ideals of National Homeownership Month;

(2) recognizes the importance of homeownership in building strong communities and families; and

(3) reaffirms the importance of homeownership in the Nation's economy and its central role in our national economic recovery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GARY G. MILLER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this legislation and to insert extraneous material thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation which recognizes June as National Homeownership Month. As Chair of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity, I am indeed committed to good public policy that will assist citizens to realize the American dream of homeownership. I would like to thank Representative GARY MILLER for his continued leadership on ensuring that this resolution comes to the floor every year. This is the seventh time that he has introduced this resolution, and I appreciate his commitment to America's homeowners. Preserving homeownership is more important today than ever before, with foreclosures reaching record levels and millions more Americans struggling to stay in their homes. Homeownership has historically been the single most important wealth-building tool available to families in this country. However, homeownership, as we know it, is at risk. The foreclosure crisis has all but erased the gains we have made in increasing homeownership rates, especially for minorities; and the gains those families thought they had achieved through increases in home equity have also diminished as now 20 percent of homeowners owe more on their homes than they are worth.

The combination of unemployment, unsustainable and predatory mortgages, and uncooperative mortgage servicers has created a perfect storm of record rates, of loan defaults and foreclosures. According to the Mortgage Bankers Association, a record 12 percent of mortgages are either in default or in foreclosure. According to the Center For Responsible Lending, 6,500 foreclosures occur each day in the United States. By the end of 2009, there will be 2.4 million families in foreclosure. We must keep families in their homes, and this Congress and the administration have developed programs to do just that. For example, the Making Home Affordable program, announced by President Barack Obama in March, builds on legislation I introduced at the beginning of this Congress to end this unending avalanche of foreclosures.

Despite the commitment from the administration and Congress to reduce foreclosures, mortgage servicers have been reluctant to modify troubled loans. In fact, NeighborWorks recently found in its survey of housing counseling agencies that servicers are generally uncooperative. They take up to 60 days to respond to requests and frequently lose important documents. In order to be true to the spirit of National Homeownership Month, I call on all mortgage servicers to fully participate in the Making Home Affordable program and to work with families to maintain their ownership.

Vulnerable homeowners are also threatened by scam artists who offer to rescue or help struggling homeowners stay in their homes for an exorbitant fee that must be paid up front. They often deliver either nothing or a higher payment than the homeowner was paying before contacting these companies. The Federal Trade Commission has begun to crack down on these scammers, and I support these efforts.

Prospective homeowners are also caught up in this economic crisis. Because they have no other home to sell, first-time homebuyers have the ability to help stabilize housing prices and neighborhoods. Housing experts are saying that now is the time to buy, but many first-time homebuyers are finding themselves locked out of the housing market. Many families who would otherwise be buying homes now lack the required down payment. Fortunately, the recently enacted $8,000 tax credit for first-time homebuyers is now being monetized so that these homeowners can use it to pay closing costs or to assist with their down payment.

America's homeowners face many challenges this month and will face many more this year. This resolution demonstrates this Congress' commitment to assisting them and first-time homebuyers in achieving the American dream of homeownership.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the month of June is recognized as National Homeownership Month. On June 3, 2009, I introduced this bipartisan resolution with 12 of my colleagues, including the ranking member, and I would like to thank MAXINE WATERS. As I recall, you have been here every time on the floor speaking with me. You are an ardent supporter of housing. You understand the benefit of that to communities and how it really helps people who need homes.

We are in a tough time, but we need to acknowledge the importance of homeownership in building strong communities and families. Owning a home is a fundamental part of the American Dream and is the largest personal investment most families will ever make.

For millions of American families, homeownership provides an entry into the middle class, and is a key to building wealth. Moreover, in addition to providing financial benefits to individuals, homeownership also helps strengthen communities. Homeowners have a greater stake in the success of their local schools, civic organizations and churches.

We have recently experienced significant upheaval in the U.S. housing market which has affected the entire economy. My home State of California in particular has been heavily impacted by the mortgage crisis, with thousands of families losing their homes. Despite all of this occurring in the current housing market, we need to remember that homeownership has historically been the single largest creator of wealth for most Americans.

As someone who has been involved in the housing industry for more than 35 years, I have seen my fair share of housing downturns. From these experiences, I have learned that at a time of stress, it is important to ensure that liquidity continues to flow to the housing market in order to keep the markets functioning.

The loan limit increases for FHA and GSEs included in enacted law are finally providing affordable, safe mortgages for homeowners who were previously forced to resort to risky loans that impaired their ability to keep their home.

Additionally, I have also cosponsored the Homebuyer Tax Credit Act, which was introduced by my fellow Southern Californian, KEN CALVERT, to bring stability to the housing market and encourage responsible homeownership. Congressman KEN CALVERT's bill would expand the homebuyer tax credit provisions included in the enacted stimulus bills. During these economically challenging times, it is more important than ever to provide tax relief to hard-working families.

In the first quarter of 2009, the homeownership rate was 67.3 percent. It has become more difficult for many people to retain homeownership today. Many families are trying very hard just to be able to make their house payment each and every month.

In the past we have seen downturns in the seventies, eighties and nineties. This is probably the most significant one I have ever seen. At this point in time we need to acknowledge that supporting homeownership is a worthy goal of this Congress, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution by voting "yes."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to request of my colleague that we join in a little colloquy prior to going to our closing.

Representative MILLER, I know that you have been involved with real estate and housing and development and you understand a lot about the housing markets. And while we have identified that there certainly are problems we have been going through, a crisis with foreclosures and a kind of a meltdown, I am extremely hopeful that we are going to be able to stabilize this housing market and that we can continue to encourage our families to seek homeownership opportunities.

I think we see some indications of the banks getting stronger and being able to pay back money that the United States citizens have invested in the banks in order to stabilize this housing market. But I would like to have your opinion: Based on your expertise and your involvement for so many years, do you think that we are beginning to have a turnaround?

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Well, you have worked very closely with me over the years on dealing with conforming loan limits in high-cost areas for Freddie and Fannie, and in California we almost felt like step-children for years. The limits were so low that people in California could not be able to use them to buy a home, and they were forced into riskier loans that many times you and I fought hard to change.

We have raised the GSEs and the FHA loan limit in California and are helping a tremendous amount of people refinance their homes, or people who need to sell a home and people buying a home be able to get into the marketplace at probably at least 100 basis points cheaper than they would be able to get into a jumbo loan.

I don't know if it is over, Maxine. I really wish I could say it was. I remember back in the early eighties when the prime went to 21.5 percent. You remember that. As a developer, I was paying a 24.5 percent interest rate for construction projects I had, and if anybody could even get a loan for 12 percent, they would buy a house at that point in time. But you couldn't get it.

I hope we are doing what is right, providing liquidity in the marketplace to encourage people to take advantage of the deals that are out there today. But you see more and more lenders having to foreclose on homes, and they are putting them on the marketplace. In fact, I have a bill right now that Chairman FRANK is going to be bringing up before the committee that allows banks, instead of forcing those homes on the marketplace, they can lease those homes for up to 5 years, and that way you get a lot of these distress sales off the marketplace.

Hopefully we can find a reasonable bottom at that point in time and the market will start to come back. But you have such a glut of foreclosed properties on the market today that it keeps driving values down further and further, and that makes it more difficult for people to be able to stay in their home, because many times they owe more than it is worth.

So hopefully we can get together, and we have done many of these things in a bipartisan fashion, and create a structure that will create a bottom and get us out of this. I am looking forward to that.

But I am really thankful to you for your help and your cooperation and your support for the housing market. You have a passion for that, as I do, and I know SPENCER BACHUS does and Chairman FRANK does also, and hopefully working together in a bipartisan fashion we can find a bottom and move the American people in a positive fashion forward.

Ms. WATERS. Thank you very much. I do appreciate your comments, and I value them because of your experience.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is with great enthusiasm that I support H. Res 502, recognizing June as National Homeownership Month and the importance of homeownership in the United States.

Since the founding of this great nation, homeownership has been fundamentally tied to the American Dream. However, the right to own land or a home has not always been an inclusive one—for many generations homeownership was denied to communities of color and women. While we have taken great strides to rectify past injustices, much remains to be done, which reflects the importance of this resolution.

Owning a home represents much more than a roof and walls to protect one's family from the elements, or a space to raise a family. A home is the single most valuable asset one can own, and the wealth it can generate over time is crucially important for rising out of poverty. This reason alone, reflects the irrevocable damage that the foreclosure crisis is inflicting on our communities.

The bursting of the housing bubble and the economic crisis have resulted in the loss of countless American homes; countless dreams have been disrupted, and countless Americans are now struggling to deal with the ramifications of the actions of greedy, dishonest businesspeople more focused on personal gain than on truly honoring the dream of homeownership.

We now find ourselves at a critical point in American history. The housing and financial markets are undergoing fundamental changes; and while the Administration and this legislative body continue to work to implement programs to sustain homeownership, we must not forget those of us who are still working to realize the dream of owning their own home.

I firmly believe that homeownership should be a dream realized by every responsible American, and believe that we should continue to work to provide opportunities to make those realizations possible.

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. I have no further speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 502.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1886, PAKISTAN ENDURING ASSISTANCE AND COOPERATION ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2009, AND PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2410, FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2010 AND 2011

Mr. PERLMUTTER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 111-143) on the resolution (H. Res. 522) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 1886) to authorize democratic, economic, and social development assistance for Pakistan, to authorize security assistance for Pakistan, and for other purposes, and providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2410) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State and the Peace Corps for fiscal years 2010 and 2011, to modernize the Foreign Service, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

CELEBRATING THE LIFE OF MILLARD FULLER

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 385) celebrating the life of Millard Fuller, a life which provides all of the evidence one needs to believe in the power of the human spirit to inspire hope and lift the burdens of poverty and despair from the shoulders of one's fellow man.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 385

Whereas Mr. Millard Fuller, as the founder of Habitat for Humanity and as a dedicated citizen, displayed extraordinary commitment, selflessness, and benevolence throughout a lifetime of philanthropy and goodwill;

Whereas Mr. Fuller, despite achieving financial success by which he could live out the rest of his life in well-earned comfort, instead chose to devote himself to a cause greater than himself, abandoning his fortune for a life of service;

Whereas this commitment was most profoundly manifested in the establishment of Habitat for Humanity in Americus, Georgia, an organization whose core principle was, in Millard Fuller's own words, "To make it socially, morally, politically and religiously unacceptable to have substandard housing and homelessness";

Whereas Habitat for Humanity has, since its founding in 1976, and with the help of countless volunteers, constructed over 300,000 homes for 1,500,000 of the world's less fortunate, providing hope that would otherwise be lost and promise that would otherwise lay unrealized;

Whereas Habitat for Humanity's success has left an enduring mark of progress on the world, an achievement facilitated by Millard Fuller's leadership and commitment to a higher ideal, to a more empathetic and noble world, and to a vision of what can be achieved when a united people extend their hands in selfless service;

Whereas Mr. Fuller's life has been previously and deservedly honored by President William Jefferson Clinton, who awarded him the Nation's highest civilian honor, the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1996; and

Whereas Millard Fuller passed away on February 3, 2009, leaving behind a loving wife, Linda Fuller, a proud family, and a world filled with inexhaustible gratitude: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) celebrates the life of Millard Fuller, a life which provides all the evidence one needs to believe in the power of the human spirit to inspire hope and lift the burdens of poverty and despair from the shoulders of one's fellow man;

(2) honors Millard Fuller for three decades of leadership and service through Habitat for Humanity, and the millions he and his organization have inspired to embrace a passion for the good and the just; and

(3) urges the people of the United States to recognize and pay tribute to Millard Fuller's life and legacy of service by carrying on his vision for a kinder, gentler world, following the example he so emphatically set.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLEAVER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GARY G. MILLER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this legislation and to insert extraneous materials thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to recognize and celebrate the life of Mr. Millard Fuller, the founder and strength behind one of our Nation's most well-known and beloved nonprofit institutions.

Mr. Fuller led Habitat for Humanity from its founding in 1976 until 2005. He was an amazing man who was able to turn a simple idea into a global housing juggernaut serving over 100 countries. Through his leadership, Habitat for Humanity has created affordable homes for more than 300,000 families and 1 million people, families that otherwise would have remained in substandard housing.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that it is appropriate for this body to pass this resolution for a gentleman who certainly is worthy of having this recognition.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of House Resolution 502, celebrating the life of Millard Fuller, founder of Habitat for Humanity. Millard Fuller, along with his wife, Linda, founded Habitat for Humanity in 1976.

Habitat for Humanity operates as a nonprofit Christian housing ministry. Working together with local affiliates, Habitat provides safe, decent and affordable housing for people of all backgrounds. Since its founding, Habitat for Humanity has built more than 300,000 homes worldwide in 3,000 communities and provided housing for more than 1.5 million people.

Habitat for Humanity provides needy families with an opportunity for homeownership. The average cost of a Habitat home in the U.S. is $60,000. Habitat for Humanity sells homes at no profit to Habitat homeowners. In order to purchase a home, a Habitat homeowner must invest hundreds of hours in sweat equity into building not only their Habitat house, but houses for others as well. A Habitat homeowner is also responsible for making a down payment and monthly mortgage payments.

Habitat for Humanity is able to finance its operations through mortgage payments made by Habitat homeowners, donations and volunteer labor. Habitat also accepts government funds, so long as they have no conditions that would violate Habitat principles.

In my State of California, Habitat for Humanity has worked tirelessly to provide housing for needy Californians.

Thousands of people have a decent place to live because of the work of many volunteers and the generosity of thousands of donors.

Mr. Speaker, Habitat for Humanity is an organization that deserves to be honored. I urge my colleagues to join me and vote "yes" on this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. SANFORD BISHOP.

Mr. BISHOP of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it often takes loss to remind ourselves of our unwavering appreciation and unfaltering gratitude for those few extraordinary people who, despite their ability to enjoy tremendous success and reward for themselves, instead commit their energies and talents to the betterment of the world.

Millard Fuller of Americus, Georgia, was one of those extraordinary few. He passed away February 2nd, leaving behind a wife and family, but, more importantly, a legacy that is all the evidence one needs to believe in the power of the human spirit to inspire hope and lift the burdens of poverty and despair from the shoulders of one's fellow man.

Throughout his life, Millard Fuller's talent and passion were put on display in no small number of ways. He grew to be a great entrepreneur, founding a marketing company that made him a millionaire before he was 30 years old. He was a great lawyer and headed the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Alabama. He was a great Christian, one who walked away from his hard-earned wealth to pursue a life of service and philanthropy through the founding of the tremendously successful Habitat for Humanity.

Millard led the organization for more than three decades, and through the application of what he called the "economics of Jesus," helped to provide over 300,000 homes to the destitute and downtrodden across the globe.

However, more than any of these things, Millard was a great man. His selflessness serves as an inspiration to people throughout the Nation and all across the world.

Born to a grocer in Lanett, Alabama, Millard refused to allow his modest beginnings to define the course of his life. Although he attained great fortune from his tireless efforts as a businessman, he soon found that in order to live a life of fulfillment, he had to dedicate himself to a simple life of devotion and service to a higher purpose.

He traveled to Africa in order to observe what he could do to improve the lot of the impoverished. He became a staunch advocate for aid to Africa's poor and traveled the United States for assistance in his efforts for Africa.

After moving to Americus, Georgia, which is located in the Second Congressional District of Georgia, which I'm proud to represent, Millard and his supporters founded what would become the most visible and effective manifestation of his desire to make a difference, an organization dedicated to providing housing and support for the poor, Habitat for Humanity.

For more than 30 years, Habitat for Humanity, with the help of countless volunteers, ranging from the average citizen to former President Jimmy Carter, built hundreds of thousands of homes for the world's disadvantaged. Its mission has reflected a simple philosophy best expressed in Millard's own words. He said, "We want to make it socially, morally, politically and religiously unacceptable to have substandard housing and homelessness."

In 1996, President Bill Clinton recognized Millard's dedication by awarding him The Presidential Medal of Freedom.

In 2005, Millard also founded the Fuller Center for Housing, a nonprofit housing ministry dedicated to eliminating poverty housing worldwide by providing the structure, guidance and support that communities need to build and repair homes for the impoverished among them.

It is my great honor to sponsor H. Res. 385, which celebrates the life of Millard Fuller and the impact that he had on so many. As this resolution is voted on today, let us seek to emulate Millard Fuller's passion for the good and the just and his selfless spirit of a better, gentler world.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution to honor the life and the memory and the legacy of Millard Fuller.

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, in closing, you have to admire an individual who applies Christian principles to his life. He didn't just talk good. He didn't just tell a story, he created good and he created a life for many people.

There's nothing like looking in the eyes of an individual or a family who is moving in a new home, especially when the family was involved in that home, building that home, and helping build homes for other people. You have to admire him for what he did, and all the individuals in this country and other countries who give of their time, their talent and their resources for the betterment of humanity.

And at this point in time, I would ask for an "aye" vote on a man who deserves it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, let me just agree with my colleague, who talked about the living out of beliefs.

I read a story in one the newspapers today which I thought was one of the most theologically unsound things I've seen or read recently. It compared the times President Obama and President Bush said the name "Jesus," as if there is something that is magically going to happen as a result of calling the name. And I think we are going into a slippery slope when we begin to compare people by how they call the name of their deity.

But in the case of Millard Fuller, he acted out his beliefs. And we believe in, at least my religious tradition, that there can be no faith, measurable faith, unless there are works. And we say faith without works is dead. And so you see today on the political scene, a lot of talk about religion, but after all is said and done, there's almost always more said than done. And so we have reason to stand up and celebrate Mr. Fuller, who put his faith into action.

I never had the opportunity to work on more than two Habitat homes, and I really hate the fact that I've not been able to do more. But I appreciate the fact that former President Jimmy Carter has become one of the most ardent supporters of Habitat for Humanity and has actually worked on tens and tens of homes, not only in this country, but around the world.

And by the organization's 25th anniversary, tens of thousands of people like President Jimmy Carter were volunteering with Habitat, and more than a half million people were living in Habitat homes. I am proud to count myself among the numbers of Habitat volunteers, and I'm also proud that I have the opportunity to speak in favor of Millard Fuller, a prolific writer, authoring 10 books, and a man who put his faith into action.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLEAVER) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 385.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HONORING THE U.S. BORDER PATROL ON ITS 85TH ANNIVERSARY

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 498) honoring and congratulating the U.S. Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 498

Whereas in the early 20th century, control of the border was sporadic and piecemeal, and included mounted guards, Texas Rangers, and military troops;

Whereas Supervising Inspector Frank W. Berkshire wrote to the Commissioner-General of Immigration in 1918, "If the services of men now being drafted cannot be spared for this work, it may be that the various departments vitally interested would give favorable consideration to the formation of an independent organization, composed of men with out the draft age. The assertion is ventured that such an organization, properly equipped and trained, made up of seasoned men, would guard the border more effectively against all forms of lawlessness than a body of soldiers of several times the same number . . .";

Whereas the prohibition of alcohol and numerical limits placed on immigration to the United States by the Immigration Acts of 1921 and 1924 further exposed our inability to control our borders;

Whereas in response to this urgent need the Labor Appropriations Act of 1924 officially established the U.S. Border Patrol with an initial force of 450 officers to help defend our borders;

Whereas over the past 85 years the border patrol has undergone enormous changes, but their primary mission has remained the same, to detect and prevent the illegal entry of persons into the United States;

Whereas since 1998, the Border Patrol has seized more than 15,567,100 pounds of marijuana and more than 189,769 pounds of cocaine nationwide;

Whereas the border patrol is on the front line of the U.S. war on drugs, having seized more than 14,241 pounds of cocaine and more than 1,800,000 pounds of marijuana in fiscal year 2007;

Whereas in the wake of the attacks of September 11, 2001, the border patrol has taken on a new mission as part of the U.S. Customs and Border Protection agency, with the priority mission of preventing terrorists and terrorist weapons from entering the United States;

Whereas the U.S. Border Patrol today is our Nation's first line of defense against many threats, patrolling 8,000 miles of international borders with Mexico and Canada and the coastal waters around Florida and Puerto Rico;

Whereas the mission of the agency says, "We are the guardians of our Nation's borders. We are America's frontline. We safeguard the American homeland at and beyond our borders. We protect the American public against terrorists and the instrument of terror. We steadfastly enforce the laws of the United States while fostering our Nation's economic security through lawful international trade and travel. We serve the American public with vigilance, integrity and professionalism.";

Whereas the Border Patrol has adopted a clear strategic goal, to establish and maintain operational control of the border of the United States;

Whereas this strategy consists of five main objectives, establishing substantial probability of apprehending terrorists and their weapons as they attempt to enter illegally between the ports of entry, deterring illegal entries through improved enforcement, detecting, apprehending, and deterring smugglers of humans, drugs, and other contraband, leveraging "Smart Border" technology to multiply the effect of enforcement personnel, and reducing crime in border communities and consequently improving quality of life and economic vitality of targeted areas;

Whereas today over 18,800 agents risk their lives in pursuit of these objectives;

Whereas the Border Patrol recognizes 104 official line of duty deaths in service to their country;

Whereas the U.S. Border Patrol has spent past 85 years keeping this country safe from threats like terrorists, illicit drugs, weapons, and criminals;

Whereas the Border Patrol Inspectors of the past and the Border Patrol Agents of today perform their duties on foot, in automobiles, by horse, and in boats;

Whereas today the Border Patrol uses state of the art technologies to aid in the performance of their duties; infrared cameras, remote video surveillance, unattended underground sensors, and ground radar support their National Strategy;

Whereas they use canine teams to detect both humans and narcotics at immigration checkpoints as well as in daily operations;

Whereas their Special Response Teams and Tactical Unit are specially trained for domestic and international emergencies and they have Search, Trauma, and Rescue teams, which provide humanitarian and rescue capabilities, performing countless rescues every year; and

Whereas the Border Patrol is also supported in their mission with air and marine assets and personnel from CBP Air and MarineNow, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) expresses its support for the Border Patrol's goals and objectives;

(2) expresses its gratitude to the U.S. Border Patrol for its commitment to protecting the United States; and

(3) congratulates the Border Patrol and its exemplary workforce on 85 years of service to the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 498, honoring and congratulating the United States Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary, and I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

As the chairwoman of the Committee on Homeland Security Subcommittee for Border, Maritime and Global Counterterrorism, I have been fortunate enough to visit the border several times to see firsthand the good work of the Border Patrol. I have seen it, not just on the southern border with Mexico, but also that with Canada.

These dedicated men and women patrol America's borders, often in harsh climates, in isolated conditions, under dangerous conditions, in order to keep our Nation secure.

Representatives of Customs and Border Protection, the Border Patrol, and its agents have also testified many, many times before our committee about the challenges they face, particularly the Border Patrol's rapid growth and its evolving mission in recent years.

I don't know if a lot of you remember, but just a few years back, our Border Patrol was only 450 people. Today it numbers almost 19,000, and it's on track to grow to 20,000 agents by the end of next year.

When it was founded, the Border Patrol's sole mission was to prevent persons and contraband from entering our country illegally. But, in particular, in the wake of the attacks of September 11 of 2001, the Border Patrol is also charged, it is our front line, with stopping terrorists and their weapons from entering our country.

In the early days of the Border Patrol, agents patrolled our borders without the benefit of modern technology. But today they have sensors, cameras, in addition to their traditional "sign-cutting" or their tracking skills, which they still use in some of the mountainous areas, especially out there in the Arizona and California desert. And through all these changes, the Border Patrol and its agents have maintained a steadfast commitment to serving our Nation.

I commend the Border Patrol and all the agents who have served honorably under the Patrol's proud 85-year history. It is certainly fitting that the House of Representatives is marking this anniversary today with this resolution.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Mr. TEAGUE, the gentleman from New Mexico, for offering this fine resolution, and I urge all of my colleagues to give it their support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of H. Resolution 498, celebrating the anniversary of the Border Patrol and honoring their service.

The Border Patrol was established in the Immigration Act of 1924, and celebrated its 85th anniversary just recently on May 28, 2009.

The Border Patrol is one of the most public faces of the Department of Homeland Security. For those who aren't familiar with the differences, the Border Patrol covers the areas between the ports of entry as opposed to the ports of entry. The 18,000 men and women in green work every day along the borders and coastlines of the United States, often in some of the most rugged and challenging terrain.

I have this oversized map here that the Marfa sector of the Border Patrol had given me from Texas. And this is just one small section of the border, but I wanted to use it to illustrate a few points. Marfa, Texas, is one of the more, let's just say, rural parts of America, which is why it was featured in "No Country for Old Men," "There Will Be Blood," because it was such a kind of an undeveloped area.

The area at the bottom on the point is the big bend of Texas that you see. That's Big Bend National Park. Those mountains in that area, the Chisos, are about 7,000 feet. A lot of people think our border is just flat and that it would be very easy to see all the problems coming through, but, in fact, it's very mountainous.

The far northwest edge of this map, in the western side of the Marfa sector, is Presidio. Presidio is a point of entry. That point of entry, for example, it's called Presidio because it was a fort, and that's where General Pershing, for example, chased Pancho Villa across. There's no other legal point of entry for hundreds of miles as you go across that border through Big Bend and up until the far side, which is near Lake Amistad and Del Rio sector. These areas are very vulnerable to penetration by any number of things.

And a lot of times the Border Patrol, as well as illustrating that the National Park Service has a huge chunk there, huge chunk over in other parks, that this border is not simple, and that when people say, Can't you just put a couple of thousand agents there and control the border, well, no, it is an incredible challenge.

During my time in Congress, I have had the opportunity to visit almost every Border Patrol sector on the north and south borders. There's 2,000 miles on the south, 4,000 miles on the north. The challenges are diverse, and the criminal element seeking to exploit our open borders are inventive and have significant resources. Drug smugglers are using helicopters, ultralight aircraft, fast boats, and something as simple as coyotes, forcing illegal aliens to carry 50-pound loads of drugs on their back to bring in contraband. The challenge is endless and the mission is critical.

In the 6-plus years that the Border Patrol has been in the Department of Homeland Security, their agency has doubled in size. Congress has provided authorization funding for hundreds of miles of fencing and vehicle barriers, which combined, total over 600 miles. Efforts to provide additional technological resources to the Border Patrol through the SBInet program, that should, when complete, provide an additional capability to detect and respond to illegal entry.

A sign that the efforts to gain operational control of the border are working is the growing drug cartel violence in Mexico. Nearly 8,000 people have been killed in drug-related violence in Mexico. It's a tragic situation, and it is absolutely critical that we continue to support and strengthen the Government of Mexico, headed by President Calderon.

At the same time, we must further strengthen our own border security efforts, and cannot be dependent on another nation doing that.

The Border Patrol's years of honorable service have not been without loss. To date, 104 agents have lost their lives in duty to their country. Additionally, hundreds of assaults, from rockings to Molotov cocktails to threats on their lives occur every year to our Border Patrol agents.

As we celebrate the 85th anniversary of the Border Patrol, it is important to remember and honor the agents who have paid the ultimate sacrifice in defense of our country. Luis Aguilar is the most recent who was run over by a drug smuggler trying to flee. As the guards of our borders, the Border Patrol is an important layer of security and often the last line of defense in preventing dangerous people and goods from entering the United States and infiltrating the U.S. communities.

The Border Patrol cannot let down their guard as criminal organizations are continually looking for vulnerabilities in our security to bring in contraband. The consequences of a drug load that slips through the layered defense are significant. According to the Department of Justice, in 2007 almost 32 percent of high school seniors used marijuana in the past year and 5 percent had used cocaine. The vast majority of these drugs are smuggled across our borders.

The reality of post-September 11, 2001, is that terrorist organizations may also seek to exploit openings along our borders to smuggle operatives or potential weapons. In the week since their anniversary, May 28, the Border Patrol has apprehended six alien gang members and four convicted sex offenders, seized three guns, six trailers carrying contraband, including one with 40 illegal aliens; seized 16,609 pounds of marijuana, five vehicles and an ultralight aircraft. And my favorite is about 6 a.m. last Sunday, agents spotted an individual on a surf board approximately 200 yards offshore paddling north of the international border in Imperial Beach. The surfer was holding a blue duffel bag. He released it as agents approached. Soon after, the blue duffel floated ashore and was inspected by Border Patrol agents and had five packages of marijuana with an estimated street value at $75,000. They're creative, if nothing else, and our Border Patrol has to be creative and persistent in response.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution and to honor the Border Patrol, express support for their important mission and pledge support to enhance their capabilities to gain operational control over our border.

85 YEARS OF PROTECTED BY

Thursday, May 28, 2009, will mark the 85th anniversary of the United States Border Patrol. Founded in 1924, the U.S. Border Patrol was established in El Paso, Texas, and Detroit, Michigan. The Purpose: To combat the illegal entry of aliens, contraband, and the flow of illicit liquor from Mexico and Canada into the United States. The U.S. Border Patrol is steeped in a long and rich history that is passed down to each new recruit as they begin their careers at the academy. The newly organized El Paso Border Patrol Station was assigned 25 Patrol Inspectors, many of whom were recruited from the ranks of the Texas Rangers. Today, The Border Patrol boasts over 18,000 agents, in 20 sectors, and 164 stations around the nation.

Under the authority of the Immigration Act, approved by Congress on May 28, 1924, the Border Patrol was created as a uniformed law enforcement branch of the Immigration Bureau. This prompted the establishment of the El Paso Border Patrol Sector on July 1, 1924. It was the height of Prohibition in the United States, and organized crime was a growing concern, as the mafia controlled a majority of the alcohol being smuggled into the United States. As a result, liquor smuggling from Mexico and Canada became a well organized, thriving industry. The opportunity to earn substantial sums of money became a temptation for many illegal aliens that were willing to enter the United States carrying a few crates of contraband.

It wasn't long before gun battles began to erupt between Border Patrolmen, and smugglers attempting to avoid arrest. In February 1927, El Paso Sector experienced one of the bloodiest months for the agency. As old newspapers report, during the entire month, there had not been a 24-hour period of time without a gunfight between smugglers and Patrol Inspectors. These gunfights added to the renown of the Border Patrol, as patrolmen gained a reputation for winning most of these shootouts.

Almost immediately after the establishment of the El Paso Station, a need was seen to have officers at outlying locations. Other stations soon opened within the sector. The Border Patrol began to grow, as the situation along the border was steadily deteriorating. As the prohibition era reached the peak of its infamy; lawlessness and violence became more common along the water borders of the Detroit Sector. Several Detroit Sector Patrol Inspectors were killed in the line of duty during this period, as smugglers attempting to bring contraband across the border resorted to violence to protect their cargo from the Border Patrol Inspectors.

Eighty-five years later, the Border Patrol has evolved into the finest law enforcement organization in the world. On a daily basis, the Border Patrol is confronted with a large number of threats that would never have been conceived of at the time of the agency's inception. Criminal organizations have evolved as well, adopting a wide variety of weapons and technology to aid them in their efforts to enter the United States while smuggling human cargo and other contraband. Since 9-11, the agency has had to adapt yet again, to our nations newest threat; terrorism. The U.S. Border Patrol has proven over its long history that its men and women are up to the task ahead, and stand ready at our nation's borders.

The U.S. Border Patrol will be hosting several events for the 85th Anniversary, including a Headquarters celebration honoring all of the men and women, past and present, who have made the Border Patrol what it is today.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 3 minutes to my good friend, Mr. SILVESTRE REYES from the great State of Texas who, by the way, has probably over 30 years of experience in the Border Patrol Agency.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California for yielding me time, and I also want to thank you for your support of the men and women of the United States Border Patrol and the important work that you do through your chairmanship and the subcommittee that deals with border issues.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 498, a bill that honors and congratulates the United States Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary. And I also want to thank my good friend and neighbor, HARRY TEAGUE from New Mexico, the gentleman that has sponsored this legislation, for his support of the United States Border Patrol men and women. And the ranking member as well, thank you for your support. I think that the men and women of the United States Border Patrol do incredible work.

The United States Border Patrol has a unique and rich history that began on May 28, 1924, when Congress passed the Labor Appropriations Act which officially established the U.S. Border Patrol in El Paso, Texas, and Detroit, Michigan. Established during the height of Prohibition in the United States, the initial 450 patrol inspectors were not only charged with preventing the entry of undocumented immigrants into the United States but were also responsible for combating the entry of illicit liquor from Mexico and from Canada.

Eighty-five years later, the Border Patrol has evolved to include almost 19,000 agents in 20 sectors and 164 stations around our country. The brave men and women of the Border Patrol are currently responsible for securing 8,000 miles of our international borders, both with Mexico and Canada and the coastal water around Florida and Puerto Rico. Since 9/11, the Border Patrol has been on the front lines in our national strategy to detect and apprehend terrorists and their weapons as they attempt to illegally enter the United States.

Before coming to Congress, I served for 26½ years in the U.S. Border Patrol. For half of that time, I was a Border Patrol sector chief, first in McAllen, Texas, and then in El Paso, Texas. As the only Member of Congress with a background in border enforcement, I am keenly aware of the invaluable work that these brave men and women perform for our country each and every day. We have a lot to thank them for.

In these times of heightened security, the U.S. Border Patrol and those agents are not only vital in helping to protect our country from terror threats and illegal entry of drugs but they also apprehend and deter human smugglers and bring them to justice. Oftentimes these agents are the first people to respond in humanitarian situations in the desert by providing first aid, food, water, and shelter to people that have gotten in trouble because of the heat and the distance that they're forced to travel in remote areas. Border Patrol agents perform countless rescues every year and provide critical training to law enforcement, both at home and abroad.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 30 more seconds.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Border Patrol is vital to our Homeland Security strategy and has evolved into one of our country's finest law enforcement organizations. I'm a proud co-sponsor of Mr. TEAGUE's resolution in honor of their 85th anniversary. I urge all of my colleagues to support this bill, and I thank the men and women of the United States Border Patrol for working each and every day to keep us safe.

Mr. SOUDER. I continue to reserve.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman who authored this particular resolution, the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. TEAGUE).

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 498, a resolution honoring and congratulating the U.S. Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary. This bill shows our support for the men and women who have served and are currently serving in our Nation's Border Patrol, and I encourage my colleagues to vote with me in support of this resolution.

The Border Patrol has undergone incredible changes over the past 85 years. They have grown from an initial force of 450 to over 18,800 agents today. They have learned to deal with new threats such as terrorists and weapons of mass destruction. And they have adapted ground-breaking technologies—such as infrared cameras and unattended underground sensors—to better face the challenges confronting them.

But despite these changes, their primary mission has stayed the same: to detect and prevent illegal entry of persons into the United States. As we all know, doing this is no easy task. They must patrol over 8,000 miles of international borders with Mexico and Canada and the coastal waters around Florida and Puerto Rico. They are our first line of defense against many threats, including terrorists, illicit drugs, weapons, and criminals; and they perform admirably at these tasks.

Since 1998, the Border Patrol has seized more than 15 million pounds of marijuana and 189,000 pounds of cocaine. Most importantly, border agents have very dangerous jobs. They risk their well-being every day on our behalf. In 85 years, 104 Border Patrol officers have lost their lives in the line of duty. In my district, the Border Patrol has an especially active presence, the El Paso Border Patrol sector, which covers all of New Mexico, covers 262 miles of border and employs over 2,600 agents. In fiscal year 2008 alone, they made over 30,000 apprehensions and seized over 87,000 pounds of marijuana.

Also in my district, in the town of Artesia, we have the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center at this facility which covers over 220 acres of space.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. TEAGUE. The Border Patrol agents, along with the other Federal agents, get the training they need to better perform their duties and adapt to the new challenges facing them.

In closing, the functions of the Border Patrol are more important today than ever. We have given them an incredibly difficult task and the brave men and women of the Border Patrol deserve the full support of Congress in achieving their goals.

I would like to thank Congresswoman SANCHEZ, Chairman REYES, Chairman THOMPSON, Congressman MCCAUL, and Majority Leader HOYER for their leadership in helping bring this resolution to the floor.

Again, I urge all of my colleagues to join me in support of this resolution.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

First, I want to thank my friend and chairman of the subcommittee, Ms. SANCHEZ, who's been an excellent leader of our subcommittee and we work together closely on many things, not just noncontroversial bills like today. I thank Mr. TEAGUE for his leadership and my long-time friend, Mr. REYES, also the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, not only for his work in Congress but his work with the Border Patrol.

And again and most personally, today I want to thank every agent, every Border Patrol agent in America for helping protect us, as well as Chief David Aguilar for his leadership and further service. It sometimes gets a tad boring, sometimes it gets a little hot. On the Canadian border, sometimes it gets a little cold. It isn't exactly the most exciting job in America at all times, but what each of these agents does is extremely important to the safety of our Nation.

It may not be quite politically correct right now to talk about terrorism, but in fact it is a key part of our first line of defense in the border, and the Border Patrol is a key part of that. And we haven't had a terrorist attack on our soil since 9/11, partly because of our men and women in green.

It may not be quite politically correct right now to talk about stopping illegal immigration; but quite frankly, the safety of our Nation, the integrity of American citizenship requires legal, orderly entry. This isn't to say how many there should be, what type of immigration law we should have, but requires an orderly, legal process. So do many American jobs require this.

And it may not be quite politically correct right now to talk about stopping illegal drugs, but in doing so, the agents of the Border Patrol have made our streets safer, they have helped prevent child and spousal abuse, they have lowered emergency rooms admissions, they have helped people make child support payments by helping them hold their jobs because of illegal narcotics and other things causing them to lose their jobs or by intercepting them or driving the prices up because of what they intercept.

We're never going to stop all drug abuse. And every Border Patrol agent knows he can't. But what he knows is he can intercept large numbers that would have gone to the streets and the homes of America and would have resulted in huge problems in crime and family safety in America.

So maybe we don't want to call it the war on drugs anymore. Instead we call it a disease, and for those who get addicted, it is a disease. But in fact unlike doctors and nurses who fight cancer, or researchers who fight cancer or people who fight lupus or diabetes, the Border Patrol agents are getting shot at and they die.

So whether we want to call it a war or whatever we want to call it, the individuals who use these illegal narcotics do not wake up one morning and suddenly discover that a heroin needle got put in their arm or that somehow they were snorting crack in their sleep or snorting cocaine in their sleep. In fact, it is somewhat different. And I want to make sure that our men and women of the Border Patrol understand that there is bipartisan support to making sure that we keep our border secure; that we continue to block illegal narcotics; that we continue to block terrorists; and you are our first line of defense on our huge borders, and we cannot thank you enough for risking your lives for the rest of us.

I yield back.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to close, and I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I thank the gentleman from Indiana, my ranking member on the subcommittee that oversees all of the border issues for America. He's been a strong advocate for the Border Patrol as well as for all of the agencies, really, that sit within our jurisdiction. And so I thank him for taking the time tonight to be down here and helping to work on this bill.

You know, the Border Patrol just doesn't work at the southern and the northern border. As was mentioned, we'll see them in Puerto Rico and some other areas, and also we send them to other countries to train people as to the whole issue of border patrol and how to take a look at what's coming in. In fact, in Iraq we've sent several to help to set up some of the border patrol issues out there in that country.

So we have a large group of men and women who come to work every single day, love America, and work very hard on behalf of the American people. And for this reason, Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support House Resolution 498, honoring and congratulating the Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary, and I urge the rest of my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 498, which honors and congratulates the U.S. Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary.

Much has changed since 1924, when Congress formally established the U.S. Border Patrol and charged just 450 officers with securing our Nation's borders.

Today, more than 18,000 Border Patrol agents patrol 8,000 miles of international borders with Mexico, Canada and the coastal waters around Florida and Puerto Rico.

Previously, the Border Patrol was responsible only for stopping illegal aliens and contraband from crossing our borders—an enormous challenge on its own.

But in the wake of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, Border Patrol's mission was expanded to include preventing terrorists and their instruments from entering the United States.

One thing has not changed in the last 85 years, however.

The men and women of the Border Patrol continue to risk their lives serving the American public with vigilance, integrity and professionalism.

As Chairman of the Committee on Homeland Security, I have been to our borders and seen firsthand Border Patrol agents serving our Nation, often under very difficult conditions.

That is why I am pleased to support this resolution, in honor of all those helping to secure America's borders today and throughout the Border Patrol's 85-year history.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would thank the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. TEAGUE, for authoring H. Res. 498.

His congressional district includes Artesia, New Mexico, home to the Border Patrol Academy, where thousands of new Border Patrol agents have been trained.

Mr. TEAGUE's constituents are fortunate to have a strong advocate for that fine facility and for the Border Patrol as an organization.

Again, I urge all of my colleagues to support this very worthy resolution, and join in honoring and congratulating the U.S. Border Patrol on its 85th anniversary.

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in support of H. Res. 498, a resolution honoring and celebrating the United States Border Patrol on its 85th Anniversary.

The United States Border Patrol is a federal law enforcement agency within U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP), a component of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). The Border Patrol was founded on May 28, 1924 as an agency of the United States Department of Labor to prevent illegal entries along the Mexico-United States border.

The Border Patrol's mission remains as the deterrence, detection and apprehension of illegal immigrants and individuals involved in the illegal drug trade who generally do not enter the United States through designated ports of entry.

Ever since its founding, the U.S. Border Patrol has been there defending our borders and homeland. They were there to prevent Ahmed Ressam, also known as the "Millennium Bomber," from entering this country and killing our citizens with explosives he intended to detonate at the Los Angeles International Airport during the holiday season prior to the 2000 millennium. They were there to apprehend Richard Goldberg, a suspected child molester, after he was arrested in Ottawa, Canada. Goldberg was on the FBI's "Top 10 Fugitive List" and was featured on "America's Most Wanted." Further, just this month, they were there to seize close to $1.5 million in cocaine and marijuana along the Southern border.

The Border Patrol is this nation's first line of defense against many threats. They patrol over 8,000 miles of international borders with Mexico and Canada as well as the coastal waters around Florida and Puerto Rico.

The brave men and women of the Border Patrol work tirelessly to secure and facilitate trade and travel while enforcing hundreds of U.S. regulations, including immigration and drug laws. They keep our country safe from threats such as terrorists, illicit drugs, weapons, and criminals. Today over 18,800 Border Patrol Agents risk their lives in defense of our country. These brave men and women join thousands of others who have served our country in the Border Patrol over the last 85 years.

America can rest assured that its borders and homeland will be protected by the courageous men and women of the U.S. Border Patrol. I commend the U.S. Patrol on its proud and distinguished history of protecting the United States and strongly urge my colleagues to support this important resolution.

Mr. MCCAUL. Mr. Speaker, as the lead Republican sponsor of this resolution I would like to thank the gentleman from New Mexico, Congressman TEAGUE, as well as Chairman REYES for all of their work on putting together this legislation.

The U.S. Border Patrol has been keeping this country safe from threats like terrorists, illicit drugs, weapons, illegal immigrants and criminals for 85 years. I would like to thank the border patrol and I commend them for their service.

In the early 20th century, control of the border was sporadic and piecemeal and included mounted guards, Texas Rangers, and military troops. After the prohibition of alcohol and the immigration reforms of 1921 and 1924, the Labor Appropriations Act of 1924 officially established the U.S. Border Patrol with an initial force of 450 officers to help defend our borders.

Today the Border Patrol uses state of the art technologies to aid in the performance of their duties; infrared cameras, remote video surveillance, unattended underground sensors, and ground radar.

CBP is responsible for guarding nearly 7,000 miles of land border the United States shares with Canada and Mexico and 2,000 miles of coastal waters surrounding the Florida peninsula and off the coast of Southern California. The agency also protects 95,000 miles of maritime border in partnership with the United States Coast Guard.

I would like to praise for their tireless efforts the 52,000 CBP employees including the over 18,000 CBP Border Patrol agents, 1,000 CBP Air and Marine agents, almost 22,000 CBP officers and agriculture specialists and the nation's largest law enforcement canine program.

I would also like to pay particular tribute to the 104 CBP employees who lost their lives in service to their country.

In sum, CBP performs the vital task of securing America's borders 24 hours a day, seven days a week while facilitating legitimate trade and travel. I congratulate them on their 85th anniversary and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this Resolution.

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res. 498. Last week was the 85th anniversary of the United States Border Patrol. In 1924, Congress approved the Immigration Act, which established the U.S. Border Patrol.

Their long and illustrious history began with 25 Patrol Inspectors in El Paso, Texas and Detroit Michigan with the mission of combating the illegal entry of aliens, contraband, and the flow of illicit liquor from Mexico and Canada into the U.S.

During the height of prohibition, lawlessness and violence became more common along the water borders of the Detroit Sector. Several Detroit Sector Patrol Inspectors were killed in the line of duty, as smugglers attempting to bring contraband across the border resorted to violence to protect their cargo from the Border Patrol Inspectors.

A lot has changed since 1924, but the core mission of the Border Patrol is still detecting and preventing the illegal entry of aliens and preventing the smuggling of contraband. Since the terrorist attacks of 9-11, the focus of the Border Patrol has changed to include detection, apprehension and deterrence of terrorists and terrorist weapons.

America has given this vital task to a group of dedicated law-enforcement agents, who are their eyes and ears, in the air, land and sea. They work in a variety of climates, and seize a great deal of the drugs intended for our streets and our children.

Coming from a border district, I have a real interest in ensuring that the Border Patrol is equipped with the right mix of personnel, technology, and equipment that will enhance our ability to separate legitimate travel and trade, from those that seek to do us harm or enter our nation illegally.

The Detroit Sector of the Border Patrol is responsible for 863 miles of our liquid border with Canada, and in the last five years, Agents have made nearly 5,000 arrests—an impressive accomplishment.

Chief Patrol Agent Randy Gallegos, and the men and women of Sector Detroit are dedicated professionals, who defend the border and our nation owes them and the entire U.S. Border Patrol a debt of gratitude for their distinguished service to our nation.

They follow the proud tradition of securing our border that began eighty-five years ago in small stations, with only a handful of agents. Today, there are over 18,000 men and women who wear the green uniform of a Border Patrol Agent.

Without these brave Americans our nation would be less secure, and for that I want to offer my sincerest thanks. Our Border Patrol agents epitomize the motto of the Border Patrol—Honor First.

Congratulations on your first eight-five years!

I urge my colleagues to support passage of this resolution.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 498.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATUTORY PAY-AS-YOU-GO ACT OF 2009—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 111-46)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Budget and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Today I am pleased to submit to the Congress the enclosed legislative proposal, the “Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2009,” or “PAYGO,” together with a sectional analysis.

The deficits that my Administration inherited reflect not only a severe economic downturn but also years of failing to pay for new policies—including large tax cuts that disproportionately benefited the affluent. This failure of fiscal discipline contributed to transforming surpluses projected at the beginning of this decade into trillions of dollars in deficits. I am committed to returning our Government to a path of fiscal discipline, and PAYGO represents a key step back to the path of shared responsibility.

PAYGO would hold us to a simple but important principle: we should pay for new tax or entitlement legislation. Creating a new non-emergency tax cut or entitlement expansion would require offsetting revenue increases or spending reductions.

In the 1990s, statutory PAYGO encouraged the tough choices that helped to move the Government from large deficits to surpluses, and I believe it can do the same today. Both houses of Congress have already taken an important step toward righting our fiscal course by adopting congressional rules incorporating the PAYGO principle. But we can strengthen enforcement and redouble our commitment by enacting PAYGO into law.

Both the Budget I have proposed and the Budget Resolution approved by the Congress would cut the deficit in half by the end of my first term, while laying a new foundation for sustained and widely shared economic growth through key investments in health, education, and clean energy. Enacting statutory PAYGO would complement these efforts and represent an important step toward strengthening our budget process, cutting deficits, and reducing national debt. Ultimately, however, we will have to do even more to restore fiscal sustainability.

I urge the prompt and favorable consideration of this proposal.

BARACK OBAMA.
THE WHITE HOUSE, June 9, 2009.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

AIR FORCE LIEUTENANT COLONEL MARK E. STRATTON, II

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, noble sacrifice dominates the character of a man who so willingly dedicates his life for others. There are none who understand that any better today than the men and women in our U.S. military. They personify the very essence of what it means to be an American.

Today, under the morning sky at Arlington Cemetery, myself and other Members of Congress—ROB WITTMAN from Virginia, JO BONNER from Alabama, and Senator SESSIONS from Alabama—joined several hundred other family members and friends as a 21-gun salute and “Taps” was played for United States Air Force Lieutenant Colonel Mark E. Stratton, II. The somber silence of the grave sites was broken with this tribute.

Colonel Stratton trained as a navigator on an Air Force KC-135. In his honor, one of these massive aircraft flew low and slow over Arlington Cemetery, over the flag-draped coffin of one of Air Force’s finest. He gave his life helping the Afghan people to know dignity of a life lived in freedom.

He was assigned to the Joint Staff at the Pentagon here in Washington, D.C. and he served as the commander of the Panjshir Provincial Reconstruction Team in Afghanistan. On May 26, 2009, Mark died near Bagram Airfield of wounds that he sustained from an improvised explosive device, what we call an IED.

Mark had strong Texas ties. He graduated from Texas A&M University in December of 1991 with a degree in political science. And while at Texas A&M, he was a member of Squadron 1 in the Corps of Cadets. He received his commission through the Reserve Officer Training Corps in 1992. He has numerous Air Force commendations, including the Purple Heart and the Bronze Star.

He is remembered by friends as a man of unquestionable character and loyalty. He was a patriotic individual who exemplified the spirit of the American airman.

Lieutenant Colonel Gil Delgado, Mark’s former roommate at Texas A&M, described Mark as a man who passionately loved God, his family, his friends and his country, and it showed in everything Mark did.

Through his heroic work in Afghanistan, Mark lived a life helping other people. His time was spent building roads and clinics, schools and canals for the Afghan people. He was an ambassador for the American spirit. He described the job to family and friends as the best he had ever had in his entire career. When he was killed, Mr. Speaker, the villagers in Afghanistan had a memorial service in his honor.

Mark held a deep sense of tradition. Just a few weeks prior to his death, Mark made a special effort to share his Texas Aggie spirit with the Afghan friends that he had met. Mr. Speaker, each April 21, the day Texas gained independence, Aggies from Texas A&M observed what is called Aggie Muster. This occasion is where all Aggies gather in all parts of the world to honor Aggies who have died the previous year.

Even though Mark was the only Aggie within 100 miles of his forward operating base, he convinced the Panjshir Provincial Governor and his security detail to join him atop a nearby mountain to observe the very special occasion of Aggie Muster. One Aggie Air Force colonel and Afghan villagers paid tribute to Americans who died the previous year; that must have been a sight to see.

Texas Aggies have a long tradition of military service. In fact, during World War II, Texas A&M produced over 14,000 officers, more than came from West Point or Annapolis combined. Mark was a proud Texas Aggie.

Mark is survived by his wife, Jennifer, and their three children, along with his mother, stepfather, and his brother, Michael. Mark's late father and namesake served as an Army captain in the Vietnam War. His stepmother, Debby Young, lives in southwest Houston. Mark's brother, Michael, and stepbrother, Steven, also live in the Houston area.

A great testament to Mark's life is the lives he forever changed through his work; every structure, every canal and road well traveled. Every school Mark helped build will offer generations of Afghan children the opportunity that comes from education. Every clinic he helped build will be a place where sickness will be cured, where human suffering is relieved, and where lives are being saved every day.

Mark has left a noble legacy as he has come to the end of this Earthly journey. It is for others now to pick up the torch he used to light a way for the Afghan people in the rugged mountains and deserts of this remote nation.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said, "The legacy of heroes is the memory of a great name and the inheritance of a great example." Next year, on April 21, at Aggie Muster, Lieutenant Colonel Mark Stratton's name will be called. His name and life will be remembered by Aggies and other grateful Americans and by his Air Force buddies. But no doubt the people of Afghanistan will also remember the man from America, the Air Force colonel who built their schools, their water wells, and their villages. And maybe those villagers will return once more to that mountaintop and pay tribute to this American hero, Lieutenant Colonel Mark Stratton.

And that's just the way it is.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR HEALTH CARE ACT—TITLE 42

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. RICHARDSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce H.R. 2744, the Equal Rights for Health Care Act—Title 42. The concept of equal rights is a pillar of our Nation and the reason why so many immigrate here to the United States.

Indeed, the U.S. was founded on the principle that all Americans should have the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. In order to enjoy this blessing of life and liberty, however, one must be healthy, and that means they have the benefit of equal treatment and research.

For example, men and women have different symptoms when it comes to heart disease. Unlike men, most women do not experience chest pain. Instead, 71 percent of the women report having flu-like symptoms, and patients, doctors, and researchers need to make sure that emergency attendants, tests, and prescription drugs are informed about the differences that we might have.

H.R. 2744, the Equal Rights for Health Care Act—Title 42, will prohibit discrimination in health care services and research programs that receive Federal funding based upon sex, race, color, national origin, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability status.

Civil rights laws have historically been a powerful mechanism for effecting necessary change in the United States. Each law represents a national commitment to end discrimination and to establish a mandate to bring the excluded into the mainstream. These equal rights laws ensure that the Federal Government delivers on the Constitution's promise of equal opportunities so that every individual has the right to develop his or her talents. Health care should be no exception.

In 1971, only 18 percent of women, compared to 26 percent of men, had completed 4 years or more of college. In 1972, the title IX amendment was introduced by Representatives Edith Green of Oregon and Patsy Mink of Hawaii. In 1980, I attended the University of California, Santa Barbara, where I played on the women's basketball team. I witnessed firsthand that there was a difference between playing on the women's team and the men's team. For example, for women, we had to travel in two or three vans to go to all of our away games, where the men were allowed to fly on a plane. You might say why is that something that was important? Well, we lost instruction time, we had time in general lost, preparation was lost, and recuperation was lost. That's why title IX was so important.

In 2007, we celebrated the 35th anniversary of title IX, which assured the women's right to education equality. And the U.S. Department of Education showed that 56 percent of all women, compared to 44 percent of men, now have achieved 4 years or more of college. So title IX has been working.

Federal law prohibits discrimination across a wide array of public policy arenas, none more than when you consider the difference between voting, public education, and now what we should do in health care.

H.R. 2744, the Equal Rights for Health Care Act—Title 42, seeks to have the same effect on the health care community. Despite access to health care, patients are not always in geographic proximity to medical facilities that can provide the consistent care that is needed.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the age-adjusted death rate for all cancers for African Americans in 2001 was 20 percent higher than Caucasian Americans. In 2002, the percentage of Hispanics and Latinos who were 65 years or older and received adult immunization shots was only 47 percent, as compared to 70 percent of Caucasians.

In 2000, the infant mortality rate among Native Hawaiians was 60 percent higher than Caucasians.

And the rate of leg amputations as a result of diabetes is four times greater of African Americans who receive Medicare than their counterparts, Caucasians.

A list of disparities can go on and on, and so we must put an end to this inequality. Therefore, I have introduced H.R. 2744 so that Congress can take another step towards equal rights, and I look forward to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle joining me.

I'm proud to have a long list of diverse organizations that are supporting this legislation, groups such as the Family Equality Council, the Families United States of America, and, lastly, the National Minority Quality Forum.

I urge all my colleagues to support this legislation that ensures that equal services once and for all will also extend to health care as well, from diagnosis to treatment, and it's a part of the fast-growing health care debate. It's important that a statement of beliefs is made when we reform health care. Equality must be a founding principle, and we must insist that as health care debates move forward, we take the time to ensure that all Americans have the same rights. Let's move forward on title XLII as we did in title IX.

PUBLICATION OF THE RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT 111TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. HALVORSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ZOE LOFGREN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. ZOE LOFGREN of California. Madam Speaker, I submit for publication the attached copy of the Rules of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct for the U.S. House of Representatives for the 111th Congress. (b) Any Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives may request a written opinion with respect to the propriety of any current or proposed conduct of such Member, officer, or employee.

(c) The Office of Advice and Education may provide information and guidance regarding laws, rules, regulations, and other standards of conduct applicable to Members, officers, and employees in the performance of their duties or the discharge of their responsibilities.

(d) In general, the Committee shall provide a written opinion to an individual only in response to a written request, and the written opinion shall address the conduct only of the inquiring individual, or of persons for whom the inquiring individual is responsible as employing authority.

(e) A written request for an opinion shall be addressed to the Chair of the Committee and shall include a complete and accurate statement of the relevant facts. A request shall be signed by the requester or the requester's authorized representative or employing authority. A representative shall disclose to the Committee the identity of the principal on whose behalf advice is being sought.

(f) Requests for privately-sponsored travel shall be treated like any other request for a written opinion for purposes of paragraphs (g) through (l).

(1) The Committee's Travel Guidelines and Regulations shall govern the request submission and Committee approval process for privately-sponsored travel consistent with House Rules.

(2) A request for privately-sponsored travel of a Member, officer, or employee shall include a completed and signed Traveler Form that attaches the Private Sponsor Certification Form and includes all information required by the Committee's travel regulations. A private sponsor offering officially-connected travel to a Member, officer, or employee must complete and sign a Private Sponsor Certification Form, and provide a copy of that form to the invitee(s).

(3) Any individual who knowingly and willfully falsifies, or who knowingly and willfully fails to file a Traveler Form or Private Sponsor Certification Form may be subject to civil penalties and criminal sanctions pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 1001.

(g) The Office of Advice and Education shall prepare for the Committee a response to each written request for an opinion from a Member, officer, or employee. Each response shall discuss all applicable laws, rules, regulations, or other standards.

(h) Where a request is unclear or incomplete, the Office of Advice and Education may seek additional information from the requester.

(i) The Chair and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to take action on behalf of the Committee on any proposed written opinion that they determine does not require consideration by the Committee. If the Chair or Ranking Minority Member requests a written opinion, or seeks a waiver, extension, or approval pursuant to Rules 3(m), 4(c), 4(e), or 4(h), the next ranking member of the requester's party is authorized to act in lieu of the requester.

(j) The Committee shall keep confidential any request for advice from a Member, officer, or employee, as well as any response thereto. Upon request of any Member, officer, or employee who has submitted a written request for an opinion or submitted a request for privately-sponsored travel, the Committee may release to the requesting individual a copy of their own written request for advice or submitted travel forms, any subsequent written communications between such individual and Committee staff regarding the request, and any Committee advisory opinion or travel letter issued to that individual in response. The Committee shall not release any internal Committee staff work product, communications or notes in response to such a request, except as authorized by the Committee.

(k) The Committee may take no adverse action in regard to any conduct that has been undertaken in reliance on a written opinion if the conduct conforms to the specific facts addressed in the opinion.

(1) Information provided to the Committee by a Member, officer, or employee seeking advice regarding prospective conduct may not be used as the basis for initiating an investigation under clause 3(a)(2) or clause 3(b) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, if such Member, officer, or employee acts in good faith in accordance with the written advice of the Committee.

(m) A written request for a waiver of clause 5 of House Rule XXV (the House gift rule), or for any other waiver or approval, shall be treated in all respects like any other request for a written opinion.

RULE 4. FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

(a) In matters relating to Title I of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, the Committee shall coordinate with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Legislative Resource Center, to assure that appropriate individuals are notified of their obligation to file Financial Disclosure Statements and that such individuals are provided in a timely fashion with filing instructions and forms developed by the Committee.

(b) The Committee shall coordinate with the Legislative Resource Center to assure that information that the Ethics in Government Act requires to be placed on the public record is made public.

(c) Any Financial Disclosure Reports filed by Members of the Board of the Office of Congressional Ethics that are forwarded to the Committee by the Clerk shall not be subject to paragraphs (d) through (q) of this Rule regarding Financial Disclosure Statements filed pursuant to Title I of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978. The Office of Congressional Ethics retains jurisdiction over review of the timeliness and completeness of filings by Members of the Board as the Board's supervising ethics office.

(d) The Chair and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to grant on behalf of the Committee requests for reasonable extensions of time for the filing of Financial Disclosure Statements. Any such request must be received by the Committee no later than the date on which the Statement in question is due. A request received after such date may be granted by the Committee only in extraordinary circumstances. Such extensions for one individual in a calendar year shall not exceed a total of 90 days. No extension shall be granted authorizing a non-incumbent candidate to file a statement later than 30 days prior to a primary or general election in which the candidate is participating.

(e) An individual who takes legally sufficient action to withdraw as a candidate before the date on which that individual's Financial Disclosure Statement is due under the Ethics in Government Act shall not be required to file a Statement. An individual shall not be excused from filing a Financial Disclosure Statement when withdrawal as a candidate occurs after the date on which such Statement was due.

(f) Any individual who files a report required to be filed under title I of the Ethics in Government Act more than 30 days after the later of—

(1) the date such report is required to be filed, or

(2) if a filing extension is granted to such individual, the last day of the filing extension period, is required by such Act to pay a late filing fee of $200. The Chair and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to approve requests that the fee be waived based on extraordinary circumstances.

(g) Any late report that is submitted without a required filing fee shall be deemed procedurally deficient and not properly filed.

(h) The Chair and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to approve requests for waivers of the aggregation and reporting of gifts as provided by section 102(a)(2)(C) of the Ethics in Government Act. If such a request is approved, both the incoming request and the Committee response shall be forwarded to the Legislative Resource Center for placement on the public record.

(i) The Chair and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to approve blind trusts as qualifying under section 102(f)(3) of the Ethics in Government Act. The correspondence relating to formal approval of a blind trust, the trust document, the list of assets transferred to the trust, and any other documents required by law to be made public, shall be forwarded to the Legislative Resource Center for such purpose.

(j) The Committee shall designate staff counsel who shall review Financial Disclosure Statements and, based upon information contained therein, indicate in a form and manner prescribed by the Committee whether the Statement appears substantially accurate and complete and the filer appears to be in compliance with applicable laws and rules.

(k) Each Financial Disclosure Statement shall be reviewed within 60 days after the date of filing.

(l) If the reviewing counsel believes that additional information is required because (1) the Statement appears not substantially accurate or complete, or (2) the filer may not be in compliance with applicable laws or rules, then the reporting individual shall be notified in writing of the additional information believed to be required, or of the law or rule with which the reporting individual does not appear to be in compliance. Such notice shall also state the time within which a response is to be submitted. Any such notice shall remain confidential.

(m) Within the time specified, including any extension granted in accordance with clause (d), a reporting individual who concurs with the Committee's notification that the Statement is not complete, or that other action is required, shall submit the necessary information or take appropriate action. Any amendment may be in the form of a revised Financial Disclosure Statement or an explanatory letter addressed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(n) Any amendment shall be placed on the public record in the same manner as other Statements. The individual designated by the Committee to review the original Statement shall review any amendment thereto.

(o) Within the time specified, including any extension granted in accordance with clause (d), a reporting individual who does not agree with the Committee that the Statement is deficient or that other action is required, shall be provided an opportunity to respond orally or in writing. If the explanation is accepted, a copy of the response, if written, or a note summarizing an oral response, shall be retained in Committee files with the original report.

(p) The Committee shall be the final arbiter of whether any Statement requires clarification or amendment.

(q) If the Committee determines, by vote of a majority of its members, that there is reason to believe that an individual has willfully failed to file a Statement or has willfully falsified or willfully failed to file information required to be reported, then the Committee shall refer the name of the individual, together with the evidence supporting its finding, to the Attorney General pursuant to section 104(b) of the Ethics in Government Act. Such referral shall not preclude the Committee from initiating such other action as may be authorized by other provisions of law or the Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE 5. MEETINGS

(a) The regular meeting day of the Committee shall be the second Tuesday of each month, except when the House of Representatives is not meeting on that day. When the Committee Chair determines that there is sufficient reason, meetings may be called on additional days. A regularly scheduled meeting need not be held when the Chair determines there is no business to be considered.

(b) The Chair shall establish the agenda for meetings of the Committee and the Ranking Minority Member may place additional items on the agenda.

(c) All meetings of the Committee or any subcommittee shall occur in executive session unless the Committee or subcommittee, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, opens the meeting to the public.

(d) Any hearing held by an adjudicatory subcommittee or any sanction hearing held by the Committee shall be open to the public unless the Committee or subcommittee, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, closes the hearing to the public.

(e) A subcommittee shall meet at the discretion of its Chair.

(f) Insofar as practicable, notice for any Committee or subcommittee meeting shall be provided at least seven days in advance of the meeting. The Chair of the Committee or subcommittee may waive such time period for good cause.

RULE 6. COMMITTEE STAFF

(a) The staff is to be assembled and retained as a professional, nonpartisan staff.

(b) Each member of the staff shall be professional and demonstrably qualified for the position for which the individual is hired.

(c) The staff as a whole and each individual member of the staff shall perform all official duties in a nonpartisan manner.

(d) No member of the staff shall engage in any partisan political activity directly affecting any congressional or presidential election.

(e) No member of the staff or outside counsel may accept public speaking engagements or write for publication on any subject that is in any way related to the employment or duties with the Committee of such individual without specific prior approval from the Chair and Ranking Minority Member.

(f) All staff members shall be appointed by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee. Such vote shall occur at the first meeting of the membership of the Committee during each Congress and as necessary during the Congress.

(g) Subject to the approval of the Committee on House Administration, the Committee may retain counsel not employed by the House of Representatives whenever the Committee determines, by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, that the retention of outside counsel is necessary and appropriate.

(h) If the Committee determines that it is necessary to retain staff members for the purpose of a particular investigation or other proceeding, then such staff shall be retained only for the duration of that particular investigation or proceeding.

(i) Outside counsel may be dismissed prior to the end of a contract between the Committee and such counsel only by a majority vote of the members of the Committee.

(j) In addition to any other staff provided for by law, rule, or other authority, with respect to the Committee, the Chair and Ranking Minority Member each may appoint one individual as a shared staff member from the respective personal staff of the Chair or Ranking Minority Member to perform service for the Committee. Such shared staff may assist the Chair or Ranking Minority Member on any subcommittee on which the Chair or Ranking Minority Member serves. Only paragraphs (c) and (e) of this Rule and Rule 7(b) shall apply to shared staff.

RULE 7. CONFIDENTIALITY

(a) Before any Member or employee of the Committee, including members of an investigative subcommittee selected under clause

5(a)(4) of Rule X of the House of Representatives and shared staff designated pursuant to Committee Rule 6(j), may have access to information that is confidential under the rules of the Committee, the following oath (or affirmation) shall be executed in writing:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will not disclose, to any person or entity outside the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, any information received in the course of my service with the Committee, except as authorized by the Committee or in accordance with its rules."

Copies of the executed oath shall be provided to the Clerk of the House as part of the records of the House. Breaches of confidentiality shall be investigated by the Committee and appropriate action shall be taken.

(b) No member of the staff or outside counsel may make public, unless approved by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, any information, document, or other material that is confidential, derived from executive session, or classified and that is obtained during the course of employment with the Committee.

(c) Committee members and staff shall not disclose any evidence relating to an investigation to any person or organization outside the Committee unless authorized by the Committee.

(d) Members and staff of the Committee shall not disclose to any person or organization outside the Committee, unless authorized by the Committee, any information regarding the Committee's or a subcommittee's investigative, adjudicatory or other proceedings, including but not limited to: (i) the fact or nature of any complaints; (ii) executive session proceedings; (iii) information pertaining to or copies of any Committee or subcommittee report, study or other document which purports to express the views, findings, conclusions or recommendations of the Committee or subcommittee in connection with any of its activities or proceedings; or (iv) any other information or allegation respecting the conduct of a Member, officer or employee of the House. This rule shall not prohibit the Chair or Ranking Minority Member from disclosing to the Board of the Office of Congressional Ethics the existence of a Committee investigation, the name of the Member, officer or employee of the House who is the subject of that investigation, and a brief statement of the scope of that investigation in a written request for referral pursuant to Rule 17A(k). Such disclosures will only be made subject to written confirmation from the Board that the information provided by the Chair or Ranking Minority Member will be kept confidential by the Board.

(e) Except as otherwise specifically authorized by the Committee, no Committee member or staff member shall disclose to any person outside the Committee, the name of any witness subpoenaed to testify or to produce evidence.

(f) Except as provided in Rule 17A, the Committee shall not disclose to any person or organization outside the Committee any information concerning the conduct of a respondent until it has transmitted a Statement of Alleged Violation to such respondent and the respondent has been given full opportunity to respond pursuant to Rule 22. The Statement of Alleged Violation and any written response thereto shall be made public at the first meeting or hearing on the matter that is open to the public after such opportunity has been provided. Any other materials in the possession of the Committee regarding such statement may be made public as authorized by the Committee to the extent consistent with the Rules of the House of Representatives. If no public hearing is held on the matter, the Statement of Alleged Violation and any written response thereto shall be included in the Committee's final report on the matter to the House of Representatives.

(g) Unless otherwise determined by a vote of the Committee, only the Chair or Ranking Minority Member of the Committee, after consultation with each other, may make public statements regarding matters before the Committee or any subcommittee.

(h) The Committee may establish procedures necessary to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of any testimony or other information received by the Committee or its staff.

RULE 8. SUBCOMMITTEES—GENERAL POLICY AND STRUCTURE

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of these Rules, the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee may consult with an investigative subcommittee either on their own initiative or on the initiative of the subcommittee, shall have access to evidence and information before a subcommittee with whom they so consult, and shall not thereby be precluded from serving as full, voting members of any adjudicatory subcommittee. Except for the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee pursuant to this paragraph, evidence in the possession of an investigative subcommittee shall not be disclosed to other Committee members except by a vote of the subcommittee.

(b) The Committee may establish other noninvestigative and nonadjudicatory subcommittees and may assign to them such functions as it may deem appropriate. The membership of each subcommittee shall provide equal representation for the majority and minority parties.

(c) The Chair may refer any bill, resolution, or other matter before the Committee to an appropriate subcommittee for consideration. Any such bill, resolution, or other matter may be discharged from the subcommittee to which it was referred by a majority vote of the Committee.

(d) Any member of the Committee may sit with any noninvestigative or nonadjudicatory subcommittee, but only regular members of such subcommittee may vote on any matter before that subcommittee.

RULE 9. QUORUMS AND MEMBER DISQUALIFICATION

(a) The quorum for an investigative subcommittee to take testimony and to receive evidence shall be two members, unless otherwise authorized by the House of Representatives.

(b) The quorum for an adjudicatory subcommittee to take testimony, receive evidence, or conduct business shall consist of a majority plus one of the members of the adjudicatory subcommittee.

(c) Except as stated in clauses (a) and (b) of this rule, a quorum for the purpose of conducting business consists of a majority of the members of the Committee or subcommittee.

(d) A member of the Committee shall be ineligible to participate in any Committee or subcommittee proceeding in which such Member is the respondent.

(e) A member of the Committee may seek disqualification from participating in any investigation of the conduct of a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives upon the submission in writing and under oath of an affidavit of disqualification stating that the member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. If the Committee approves and accepts such affidavit of disqualification, the Chair shall so notify the Speaker and ask the Speaker to designate a Member of the House of Representatives from the same political party as the disqualified member of the Committee to act as a member of the Committee in any Committee proceeding relating to such investigation.

RULE 10. VOTE REQUIREMENTS

(a) The following actions shall be taken only upon an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee or subcommittee, as appropriate:

(1) Issuing a subpoena.
(2) Adopting a full Committee motion to create an investigative subcommittee.
(3) Adopting or amending a Statement of Alleged Violation.

(4) Finding that a count in a Statement of Alleged Violation has been proved by clear and convincing evidence.

(5) Sending a letter of reproof.

(6) Adopting a recommendation to the House of Representatives that a sanction be imposed.

(7) Adopting a report relating to the conduct of a Member, officer, or employee.

(8) Issuing an advisory opinion of general applicability establishing new policy.

(b) Except as stated in clause (a), action may be taken by the Committee or any subcommittee thereof by a simple majority, a quorum being present.

(c) No motion made to take any of the actions enumerated in clause (a) of this Rule may be entertained by the Chair unless a quorum of the Committee is present when such motion is made.

RULE 11. COMMITTEE RECORDS

(a) All communications and all pleadings pursuant to these rules shall be filed with the Committee at the Committee's office or such other place as designated by the Committee.

(b) All records of the Committee which have been delivered to the Archivist of the United States shall be made available to the public in accordance with Rule VII of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE 12. BROADCASTS OF COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

(a) Television or radio coverage of a Committee or subcommittee hearing or meeting shall be without commercial sponsorship.

(b) Not more than four television cameras, operating from fixed positions, shall be permitted in a hearing or meeting room. The Committee may allocate the positions of permitted television cameras among the television media in consultation with the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(c) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the Committee, or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

(d) Television cameras shall not be placed in positions that unnecessarily obstruct the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

PART II—INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY

RULE 13. HOUSE RESOLUTION

Whenever the House of Representatives, by resolution, authorizes or directs the Committee to undertake an inquiry or investigation, the provisions of the resolution, in conjunction with these Rules, shall govern. To the extent the provisions of the resolution differ from these Rules, the resolution shall control.

RULE 14. COMMITTEE AUTHORITY TO INVESTIGATE—GENERAL POLICY

(a) Pursuant to clause 3(b) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee may exercise its investigative authority when:

(1) information offered as a complaint by a Member of the House of Representatives is transmitted directly to the Committee;

(2) information offered as a complaint by an individual not a Member of the House is transmitted to the Committee, provided that a Member of the House certifies in writing that such Member believes the information is submitted in good faith and warrants the review and consideration of the Committee;

(3) the Committee, on its own initiative, undertakes an investigation;

(4) a Member, officer, or employee is convicted in a Federal, State, or local court of a felony;

(5) the House of Representatives, by resolution, authorizes or directs the Committee to undertake an inquiry or investigation; or

(6) a referral from the Board is transmitted to the Committee.

(b) The Committee also has investigatory authority over:

(1) certain unauthorized disclosures of intelligence-related information, pursuant to House Rule X, clauses 11(g)(4) and (g)(5); or

(2) reports received from the Office of the Inspector General pursuant to House Rule II, clause 6(c)(5).

RULE 15. COMPLAINTS

(a) A complaint submitted to the Committee shall be in writing, dated, and properly verified (a document will be considered properly verified where a notary executes it with the language, "Signed and sworn to (or affirmed) before me on (date) by (the name of the person)" setting forth in simple, concise, and direct statements—

(1) the name and legal address of the party filing the complaint (hereinafter referred to as the "complainant");

(2) the name and position or title of the respondent;

(3) the nature of the alleged violation of the Code of Official Conduct or of other law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the performance of duties or discharge of responsibilities; and

(4) the facts alleged to give rise to the violation. The complaint shall not contain innuendo, speculative assertions, or conclusory statements.

(b) Any documents in the possession of the complainant that relate to the allegations may be submitted with the complaint.

(c) Information offered as a complaint by a Member of the House of Representatives may be transmitted directly to the Committee.

(d) Information offered as a complaint by an individual not a Member of the House may be transmitted to the Committee, provided that a Member of the House certifies in writing that such Member believes the information is submitted in good faith and warrants the review and consideration of the Committee.

(e) A complaint must be accompanied by a certification, which may be unsworn, that the complainant has provided an exact copy of the filed complaint and all attachments to the respondent.

(f) The Committee may defer action on a complaint against a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives when the complaint alleges conduct that the Committee has reason to believe is being reviewed by appropriate law enforcement or regulatory authorities, or when the Committee determines that it is appropriate for the conduct alleged in the complaint to be reviewed initially by law enforcement or regulatory authorities.

(g) A complaint may not be amended without leave of the Committee. Otherwise, any new allegations of improper conduct must be submitted in a new complaint that independently meets the procedural requirements of the Rules of the House of Representatives and the Committee's Rules.

(h) The Committee shall not accept, and shall return to the complainant, any complaint submitted within the 60 days prior to an election in which the subject of the complaint is a candidate.

(i) The Committee shall not consider a complaint, nor shall any investigation be undertaken by the Committee, of any alleged violation which occurred before the third previous Congress unless the Committee determines that the alleged violation is directly related to an alleged violation which occurred in a more recent Congress.

RULE 16. DUTIES OF COMMITTEE CHAIR AND RANKING MINORITY MEMBER

(a) Whenever information offered as a complaint is submitted to the Committee, the Chair and Ranking Minority Member shall have 14 calendar days or 5 legislative days, whichever occurs first, to determine whether the information meets the requirements of the Committee's rules for what constitutes a complaint.

(b) Whenever the Chair and Ranking Minority Member jointly determine that information submitted to the Committee meets the requirements of the Committee's rules for what constitutes a complaint, they shall have 45 calendar days or 5 legislative days, whichever is later, after the date that the Chair and Ranking Minority Member determine that information filed meets the requirements of the Committee's rules for what constitutes a complaint, unless the Committee by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members votes otherwise, to—

(1) recommend to the Committee that it dispose of the complaint, or any portion thereof, in any manner that does not require action by the House, which may include dismissal of the complaint or resolution of the complaint by a letter to the Member, officer, or employee of the House against whom the complaint is made;

(2) establish an investigative subcommittee; or

(3) request that the Committee extend the applicable 45-calendar day period when they determine more time is necessary in order to make a recommendation under paragraph (1) or (2) of Rule 16(b).

(c) The Chair and Ranking Minority Member may jointly gather additional information concerning alleged conduct which is the basis of a complaint or of information offered as a complaint until they have established an investigative subcommittee or the Chair or Ranking Minority Member has placed on the agenda the issue of whether to establish an investigative subcommittee.

(d) If the Chair and Ranking Minority Member jointly determine that information submitted to the Committee meets the requirements of the Committee rules for what constitutes a complaint, and the complaint is not disposed of within 45 calendar days or 5 legislative days, whichever is later, and no additional 45-day extension is made, then they shall establish an investigative subcommittee and forward the complaint, or any portion thereof, to that subcommittee for its consideration. If at any time during the time period either the Chair or Ranking Minority Member places on the agenda the issue of whether to establish an investigative subcommittee, then an investigative subcommittee may be established only by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee.

(e) Whenever the Chair and Ranking Minority Member jointly determine that information submitted to the Committee does not meet the requirements for what constitutes a complaint set forth in the Committee rules, they may (1) return the information to the complainant with a statement that it fails to meet the requirements for what constitutes a complaint set forth in the Committee's rules; or (2) recommend to the Committee that it authorize the establishment of an investigative subcommittee.

RULE 17. PROCESSING OF COMPLAINTS

(a) If a complaint is in compliance with House and Committee Rules, a copy of the complaint and the Committee Rules shall be forwarded to the respondent within 5 days with notice that the complaint conforms to the applicable rules.

(b) The respondent may, within 30 days of the Committee's notification, provide to the Committee any information relevant to a complaint filed with the Committee. The respondent may submit a written statement in response to the complaint. Such a statement shall be signed by the respondent. If the statement is prepared by counsel for the respondent, the respondent shall sign a representation that the respondent has reviewed the response and agrees with the factual assertions contained therein.

(c) The Committee staff may request information from the respondent or obtain additional information relevant to the case from other sources prior to the establishment of an investigative subcommittee only when so directed by the Chair and Ranking Minority Member.

(d) The respondent shall be notified in writing regarding the Committee's decision either to dismiss the complaint or to create an investigative subcommittee.

RULE 17A. REFERRALS FROM THE BOARD OF THE OFFICE OF CONGRESSIONAL ETHICS

(a) The Committee has exclusive jurisdiction over the interpretation, administration, and enforcement of the Code of Official Conduct pursuant to clause 1(q) of House Rule X. Receipt of referrals from the Board under this rule does not limit the Committee's discretion to address referrals in any way through the appropriate procedures authorized by Committee Rules. The Committee shall review the report and findings transmitted by the Board without prejudice or presumptions as to the merit of the allegations.

(b)(1) Whenever the Committee receives either (A) a referral containing a written report and any findings and supporting documentation from the Board; or (B) a referral from the Board pursuant to a request under Rule 17A(k), the Chair shall have 45 calendar days or 5 legislative days after the date the referral is received, whichever is later, to make public the report and findings of the Board unless the Chair and Ranking Minority Member jointly decide, or the Committee votes, to withhold such information for not more than one additional 45-day period.

(2) At least one calendar day before the Committee makes public any report and findings of the Board the Chair shall notify in writing the Board and the Member, officer, or employee who is the subject of the referral of the impending public release of these documents. At the same time, Chair shall transmit a copy of any public statement on the Committee's disposition of the matter and any accompanying Committee report to the individual who is the subject of the referral.

(3) All public statements and reports and findings of the Board that are required to be made public under this Rule shall be posted on the Committee's website.

(c) If the OCE report and findings are withheld for an additional 45-day period pursuant to paragraph (b)(1), Chair shall—

(1) make a public statement that the Committee has decided or voted to extend the matter referred from the Board on the day of such decision or vote; and

(2) make public the written report and findings pursuant to paragraph (b) upon the termination of such additional period.

(d) If the Board transmits a report with a recommendation to dismiss or noting a matter as unresolved due to a tie vote, and the Committee votes to extend the matter for an additional period as provided in paragraph (b), the Committee is not required to make a public statement that the Committee has voted to extend the matter pursuant to paragraph (b)(1).

(e) If the Committee votes to dismiss a matter referred from the Board, the Committee is not required to make public the written report and findings of the Board pursuant to paragraph (c) unless the Committee's vote is inconsistent with the recommendation of the Board. A vote by the Committee to dismiss a matter is not considered inconsistent with a report from the Board that the matter is unresolved by the Board due to a tie vote.

(f) Except as provided by paragraph (g):

(1) If the Committee establishes an investigative subcommittee respecting any matter referred by the Board, then the report and findings of the Board shall not be made public until the conclusion of the investigative subcommittee process pursuant to Rule 19. The Committee shall issue a public statement noting the establishment of an investigative subcommittee, which shall include the name of the Member, officer, or employee who is the subject of the inquiry, and shall set forth the alleged violation.

(2) If any such investigative subcommittee does not conclude its review within one year after the Board's referral, then the Committee shall make public the report of the Board no later than one year after the referral. If the investigative subcommittee does not conclude its review before the end of the Congress in which the report of the Board is made public, the Committee shall make public any findings of the Board on the last day of that Congress.

(g) If the vote of the Committee is a tie or the Committee fails to act by the close of any applicable period(s) under this rule, the report and the findings of the Board shall be made public by the Committee, along with a public statement by the Chair explaining the status of the matter.

(h)(1) If the Committee agrees to a request from an appropriate law enforcement or regulatory authority to defer taking action on a matter referred by the Board under paragraph (b)—

(A) The Committee is not required to make public the written report and findings of the Board pursuant to paragraph (c), except that if the recommendation of the Board is that the matter requires further review, the Committee shall make public the written report of the Board but not the findings; and on the matter at the request of such law enforcement or regulatory authority within one day (excluding weekends and public holidays) of the day that the Committee agrees to the request.

(B) The Committee shall make a public statement that it is deferring taking action

(2) If the Committee has not acted on the matter within one year of the date the public statement described in paragraph (h)(1)(B) is released, the Committee shall make a public statement that it continues to defer taking action on the matter. The Committee shall make a new statement upon the expiration of each succeeding one-year period during which the Committee has not acted on the matter.

(i) The Committee shall not accept, and shall return to the Board, any referral from the Board within 60 days before a Federal, State, or local election in which the subject of the referral is a candidate.

(j) The Committee may postpone any reporting requirement under this rule that falls within that 60-day period until after the date of the election in which the subject of the referral is a candidate. For purposes of calculating any applicable period under this Rule, any days within the 60-day period before such an election shall not be counted.

(k)(1) At any time after the Committee receives written notification from the Board of the Office of Congressional Ethics that the Board is undertaking a review of alleged conduct of any Member, officer, or employee of the House at a time when the Committee is investigating, or has completed an investigation of the same matter, the Committee may so notify the Board in writing and request that the Board cease its review and refer the matter to the Committee for its consideration immediately. The Committee shall also notify the Board in writing if the Committee has not reached a final resolution of the matter or has not referred the matter to the appropriate Federal or State authorities by the end of any applicable time period specified in Rule 17A (including any permissible extension).

(2) The Committee may not request a second referral of the matter from the Board if the Committee has notified the Board that it is unable to resolve the matter previously requested pursuant to this section. The Board may subsequently send a referral regarding a matter previously requested and returned by the Committee after the conclusion of the Board's review process.

RULE 18. COMMITTEE-INITIATED INQUIRY OR INVESTIGATION

(a) Notwithstanding the absence of a filed complaint, the Committee may consider any information in its possession indicating that a Member, officer, or employee may have committed a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or any law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the conduct of such Member, officer, or employee in the performance of the duties or the discharge of the responsibilities of such individual. The Chair and Ranking Minority Member may jointly gather additional information concerning such an alleged violation by a Member, officer, or employee unless and until an investigative subcommittee has been established. The Chair and Ranking Minority Member may also jointly take appropriate action consistent with Committee Rules to resolve the matter.

(b) If the Committee votes to establish an investigative subcommittee, the Committee shall proceed in accordance with Rule 19.

(c) Any written request by a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives that the Committee conduct an investigation into such person's own conduct shall be considered in accordance with subsection (a) of this Rule.

(d) An inquiry shall not be undertaken regarding any alleged violation that occurred before the third previous Congress unless a majority of the Committee determines that the alleged violation is directly related to an alleged violation that occurred in a more recent Congress.

(e)(1) An inquiry shall be undertaken by an investigative subcommittee with regard to any felony conviction of a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives in a Federal, State, or local court who has been sentenced. Notwithstanding this provision, the Committee has the discretion to initiate an inquiry upon an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee at any time prior to conviction or sentencing.

(2) Not later than 30 days after a Member, officer or employee of the House is indicted or otherwise formally charged with criminal conduct in any Federal, State or local court, the Committee shall either initiate an inquiry upon a majority vote of the members of the Committee or submit a report to the House describing its reasons for not initiating an inquiry and describing the actions, if any, that the Committee has taken in response to the allegations.

RULE 19. INVESTIGATIVE SUBCOMMITTEE

(a)(1) Upon the establishment of an investigative subcommittee, the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee shall designate four members (with equal representation from the majority and minority parties) to serve as an investigative subcommittee to undertake an inquiry. Members of the Committee and Members of the House selected pursuant to clause 5(a)(4)(A) of Rule X of the House of Representatives are eligible for appointment to an investigative subcommittee, as determined by the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee. At the time of appointment, the Chair shall designate one member of the subcommittee to serve as the Chair and the Ranking Minority Member shall designate one member of the subcommittee to serve as the ranking minority member of the investigative subcommittee. The Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee may serve as members of an investigative subcommittee, but may not serve as non-voting, ex-officio members.

(2) The respondent shall be notified of the membership of the investigative subcommittee and shall have 10 days after such notice is transmitted to object to the participation of any subcommittee member. Such objection shall be in writing and must be on the grounds that the subcommittee member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. The subcommittee member against whom the objection is made shall be the sole judge of any disqualification and may choose to seek disqualification from participating in the inquiry pursuant to Rule 9(e).

(b) In an inquiry undertaken by an investigative subcommittee—

(1) All proceedings, including the taking of testimony, shall be conducted in executive session and all testimony taken by deposition or things produced pursuant to subpoena or otherwise shall be deemed to have been taken or produced in executive session.

(2) The Chair of the investigative subcommittee shall ask the respondent and all witnesses whether they intend to be represented by counsel. If so, the respondent or witnesses or their legal representatives shall provide written designation of counsel. A respondent or witness who is represented by counsel shall not be questioned in the absence of counsel unless an explicit waiver is obtained.

(3) The subcommittee shall provide the respondent an opportunity to present, orally or in writing, a statement, which must be under oath or affirmation, regarding the allegations and any other relevant questions arising out of the inquiry.

(4) The staff may interview witnesses, examine documents and other evidence, and request that submitted statements be under oath or affirmation and that documents be certified as to their authenticity and accuracy.

(5) The subcommittee, by a majority vote of its members, may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, and other items as it deems necessary to the conduct of the inquiry. Unless the Committee otherwise provides, the subpoena power shall rest in the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee and a subpoena shall be issued upon the request of the investigative subcommittee.

(6) The subcommittee shall require that testimony be given under oath or affirmation. The form of the oath or affirmation shall be: "Do you solemnly swear (or affirm) that the testimony you will give before this subcommittee in the matter now under consideration will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth (so help you God)?" The oath or affirmation shall be administered by the Chair or subcommittee member designated by the Chair to administer oaths.

(c) During the inquiry, the procedure respecting the admissibility of evidence and rulings shall be as follows:

(1) Any relevant evidence shall be admissible unless the evidence is privileged under the precedents of the House of Representatives.

(2) The Chair of the subcommittee or other presiding member at any investigative subcommittee proceeding shall rule upon any question of admissibility or relevance of evidence, motion, procedure or any other matter, and may direct any witness to answer any question under penalty of contempt. A witness, witness counsel, or a member of the subcommittee may appeal any rulings to the members present at that proceeding. A majority vote of the members present at such proceeding on such appeal shall govern the question of admissibility, and no appeal shall lie to the Committee.

(3) Whenever a person is determined by a majority vote to be in contempt of the subcommittee, the matter may be referred to the Committee to determine whether to refer the matter to the House of Representatives for consideration.

(4) Committee counsel may, subject to subcommittee approval, enter into stipulations with the respondent and/or the respondent's counsel as to facts that are not in dispute.

(d) Upon an affirmative vote of a majority of the subcommittee members, and an affirmative vote of a majority of the full Committee, an investigative subcommittee may expand the scope of its inquiry.

(e) Upon completion of the inquiry, the staff shall draft for the investigative subcommittee a report that shall contain a comprehensive summary of the information received regarding the alleged violations.

(f) Upon completion of the inquiry, an investigative subcommittee, by a majority vote of its members, may adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation if it determines that there is substantial reason to believe that a violation of the Code of Official Conduct, or of a law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the performance of official duties or the discharge of official responsibilities by a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives has occurred. If more than one violation is alleged, such Statement shall be divided into separate counts. Each count shall relate to a separate violation, shall contain a plain and concise statement of the alleged facts of such violation, and shall include a reference to the provision of the Code of Official Conduct or law, rule, regulation or other applicable standard of conduct governing the performance of duties or discharge of responsibilities alleged to have been violated. A copy of such Statement shall be transmitted to the respondent and the respondent's counsel.

(g) If the investigative subcommittee does not adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation, it shall transmit to the Committee a report containing a summary of the information received in the inquiry, its conclusions and reasons therefore, and any appropriate recommendation.

RULE 20. AMENDMENTS TO STATEMENTS OF ALLEGED VIOLATION

(a) An investigative subcommittee may, upon an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, amend its Statement of Alleged Violation anytime before the Statement of Alleged Violation is transmitted to the Committee; and

(b) If an investigative subcommittee amends its Statement of Alleged Violation, the respondent shall be notified in writing and shall have 30 calendar days from the date of that notification to file an answer to the amended Statement of Alleged Violation.

RULE 21. COMMITTEE REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

(a) Whenever an investigative subcommittee does not adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation and transmits a report to that effect to the Committee, the Committee may by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members transmit such report to the House of Representatives;

(b) Whenever an investigative subcommittee adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation but recommends that no further action be taken, it shall transmit a report to the Committee regarding the Statement of Alleged Violation; and

(c) Whenever an investigative subcommittee adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation, the respondent admits to the violations set forth in such Statement, the respondent waives the right to an adjudicatory hearing, and the respondent's waiver is approved by the Committee—

(1) the subcommittee shall prepare a report for transmittal to the Committee, a final draft of which shall be provided to the respondent not less than 15 calendar days before the subcommittee votes on whether to adopt the report;

(2) the respondent may submit views in writing regarding the final draft to the subcommittee within 7 calendar days of receipt of that draft;

(3) the subcommittee shall transmit a report to the Committee regarding the Statement of Alleged Violation together with any views submitted by the respondent pursuant to subparagraph (2), and the Committee shall make the report, together with the respondent's views, available to the public before the commencement of any sanction hearing; and

(4) the Committee shall by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members issue a report and transmit such report to the House of Representatives, together with the respondent's views previously submitted pursuant to subparagraph (2) and any additional views respondent may submit for attachment to the final report; and

(d) Members of the Committee shall have not less than 72 hours to review any report transmitted to the Committee by an investigative subcommittee before both the commencement of a sanction hearing and the Committee vote on whether to adopt the report.

RULE 22. RESPONDENT'S ANSWER

(a)(1) Within 30 days from the date of transmittal of a Statement of Alleged Violation, the respondent shall file with the investigative subcommittee an answer, in writing and under oath, signed by respondent and respondent's counsel. Failure to file an answer within the time prescribed shall be considered by the Committee as a denial of each count.

(2) The answer shall contain an admission to or denial of each count set forth in the Statement of Alleged Violation and may include negative, affirmative, or alternative defenses and any supporting evidence or other relevant information.

(b) The respondent may file a Motion for a Bill of Particulars within 10 days of the date of transmittal of the Statement of Alleged Violation. If a Motion for a Bill of Particulars is filed, the respondent shall not be required to file an answer until 20 days after the subcommittee has replied to such motion.

(c)(1) The respondent may file a Motion to Dismiss within 10 days of the date of transmittal of the Statement of Alleged Violation or, if a Motion for a Bill of Particulars has been filed, within 10 days of the date of the subcommittee's reply to the Motion for a Bill of Particulars. If a Motion to Dismiss is filed, the respondent shall not be required to file an answer until 20 days after the subcommittee has replied to the Motion to Dismiss, unless the respondent previously filed a Motion for a Bill of Particulars, in which case the respondent shall not be required to file an answer until 10 days after the subcommittee has replied to the Motion to Dismiss. The investigative subcommittee shall rule upon any motion to dismiss filed during the period between the establishment of the subcommittee and the subcommittee's transmittal of a report or Statement of Alleged Violation to the Committee or to the Chair and Ranking Minority Member at the conclusion of an inquiry, and no appeal of the subcommittee's ruling shall lie to the Committee.

(2) A Motion to Dismiss may be made on the grounds that the Statement of Alleged Violation fails to state facts that constitute a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or other applicable law, rule, regulation, or standard of conduct, or on the grounds that the Committee lacks jurisdiction to consider the allegations contained in the Statement.

(d) Any motion filed with the subcommittee pursuant to this rule shall be accompanied by a Memorandum of Points and Authorities.

(e)(1) The Chair of the investigative subcommittee, for good cause shown, may permit the respondent to file an answer or motion after the day prescribed above.

(2) If the ability of the respondent to present an adequate defense is not adversely affected and special circumstances so require, the Chair of the investigative subcommittee may direct the respondent to file an answer or motion prior to the day prescribed above.

(f) If the day on which any answer, motion, reply, or other pleading must be filed falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, such filing shall be made on the first business day thereafter.

(g) As soon as practicable after an answer has been filed or the time for such filing has expired, the Statement of Alleged Violation and any answer, motion, reply, or other pleading connected therewith shall be transmitted by the Chair of the investigative subcommittee to the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee.

RULE 23. ADJUDICATORY HEARINGS

(a) If a Statement of Alleged Violation is transmitted to the Chair and Ranking Minority Member pursuant to Rule 22, and no waiver pursuant to Rule 26(b) has occurred, the Chair shall designate the members of the Committee who did not serve on the investigative subcommittee to serve on an adjudicatory subcommittee. The Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee shall be the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the adjudicatory subcommittee unless they served on the investigative subcommittee. The respondent shall be notified of the designation of the adjudicatory subcommittee and shall have 10 days after such notice is transmitted to object to the participation of any subcommittee member. Such objection shall be in writing and shall be on the grounds that the member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. The member against whom the objection is made shall be the sole judge of any disqualification and may choose to seek disqualification from serving on the subcommittee pursuant to Rule 9(e).

(b) A majority of the adjudicatory subcommittee membership plus one must be present at all times for the conduct of any business pursuant to this rule.

(c) The adjudicatory subcommittee shall hold a hearing to determine whether any counts in the Statement of Alleged Violation have been proved by clear and convincing evidence and shall make findings of fact, except where such violations have been admitted by respondent.

(d) At an adjudicatory hearing, the subcommittee may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, and other items as it deems necessary. Depositions, interrogatories, and sworn statements taken under any investigative subcommittee direction may be accepted into the hearing record.

(e) The procedures set forth in clause 2(g) and (k) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives shall apply to adjudicatory hearings. All such hearings shall be open to the public unless the adjudicatory subcommittee, pursuant to such clause, determines that the hearings or any part thereof should be closed.

(f)(1) The adjudicatory subcommittee shall, in writing, notify the respondent that the respondent and respondent's counsel have the right to inspect, review, copy, or photograph books, papers, documents, photographs, or other tangible objects that the adjudicatory subcommittee counsel intends to use as evidence against the respondent in an adjudicatory hearing. The respondent shall be given access to such evidence, and shall be provided the names of witnesses the subcommittee counsel intends to call, and a summary of their expected testimony, no less than 15 calendar days prior to any such hearing. Except in extraordinary circumstances, no evidence may be introduced or witness called in an adjudicatory hearing unless the respondent has been afforded a prior opportunity to review such evidence or has been provided the name of the witness.

(2) After a witness has testified on direct examination at an adjudicatory hearing, the Committee, at the request of the respondent, shall make available to the respondent any statement of the witness in the possession of the Committee which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified.

(3) Any other testimony, statement, or documentary evidence in the possession of the Committee which is material to the respondent's defense shall, upon request, be made available to the respondent.

(g) No less than 5 days prior to the hearing, the respondent or counsel shall provide the adjudicatory subcommittee with the names of witnesses expected to be called, summaries of their expected testimony, and copies of any documents or other evidence proposed to be introduced.

(h) The respondent or counsel may apply to the subcommittee for the issuance of subpoenas for the appearance of witnesses or the production of evidence. The application shall be granted upon a showing by the respondent that the proposed testimony or evidence is relevant and not otherwise available to respondent. The application may be denied if not made at a reasonable time or if the testimony or evidence would be merely cumulative.

(i) During the hearing, the procedures regarding the admissibility of evidence and rulings shall be as follows:

(1) Any relevant evidence shall be admissible unless the evidence is privileged under the precedents of the House of Representatives.

(2) The Chair of the subcommittee or other presiding member at an adjudicatory subcommittee hearing shall rule upon any question of admissibility or relevance of evidence, motion, procedure, or any other matter, and may direct any witness to answer any question under penalty of contempt. A witness, witness counsel, or a member of the subcommittee may appeal any ruling to the members present at that proceeding. A majority vote of the members present at such proceeding on such an appeal shall govern the question of admissibility and no appeal shall lie to the Committee.

(3) Whenever a witness is deemed by a Chair or other presiding member to be in contempt of the subcommittee, the matter may be referred to the Committee to determine whether to refer the matter to the House of Representatives for consideration.

(4) Committee counsel may, subject to subcommittee approval, enter into stipulations with the respondent and/or the respondent's counsel as to facts that are not in dispute.

(j) Unless otherwise provided, the order of an adjudicatory hearing shall be as follows:

(1) The Chair of the subcommittee shall open the hearing by stating the adjudicatory subcommittee's authority to conduct the hearing and the purpose of the hearing.

(2) The Chair shall then recognize Committee counsel and the respondent's counsel, in turn, for the purpose of giving opening statements.

(3) Testimony from witnesses and other relevant evidence shall be received in the following order whenever possible:

(i) witnesses (deposition transcripts and affidavits obtained during the inquiry may be used in lieu of live witnesses if the witness is unavailable) and other evidence offered by the Committee counsel,

(ii) witnesses and other evidence offered by the respondent,

(iii) rebuttal witnesses, as permitted by the Chair.

(4) Witnesses at a hearing shall be examined first by counsel calling such witness. The opposing counsel may then cross-examine the witness. Redirect examination and recross examination by counsel may be permitted at the Chair's discretion. Subcommittee members may then question witnesses. Unless otherwise directed by the Chair, questions by Subcommittee members shall be conducted under the five-minute rule.

(5) The Chair shall then recognize Committee counsel and respondent's counsel, in turn, for the purpose of giving closing arguments. Committee counsel may reserve time for rebuttal argument, as permitted by the Chair.

(k) A subpoena to a witness to appear at a hearing shall be served sufficiently in advance of that witness' scheduled appearance to allow the witness a reasonable period of time, as determined by the Chair of the adjudicatory subcommittee, to prepare for the hearing and to employ counsel.

(l) Each witness appearing before the subcommittee shall be furnished a printed copy of the Committee rules, the relevant provisions of the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to the rights of witnesses, and a copy of the Statement of Alleged Violation.

(m) Testimony of all witnesses shall be taken under oath or affirmation. The form of the oath or affirmation shall be: "Do you solemnly swear (or affirm) that the testimony you will give before this subcommittee in the matter now under consideration will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth (so help you God)?" The oath or affirmation shall be administered by the Chair or Committee member designated by the Chair to administer oaths.

(n) At an adjudicatory hearing, the burden of proof rests on Committee counsel to establish the facts alleged in the Statement of Alleged Violation by clear and convincing evidence. However, Committee counsel need not present any evidence regarding any count that is admitted by the respondent or any fact stipulated.

(o) As soon as practicable after all testimony and evidence have been presented, the subcommittee shall consider each count contained in the Statement of Alleged Violation and shall determine by a majority vote of its members whether each count has been proved. If a majority of the subcommittee does not vote that a count has been proved, a motion to reconsider that vote may be made only by a member who voted that the count was not proved. A count that is not proved shall be considered as dismissed by the subcommittee.

(p) The findings of the adjudicatory subcommittee shall be reported to the Committee.

RULE 24. SANCTION HEARING AND CONSIDERATION OF SANCTIONS OR OTHER RECOMMENDATIONS

(a) If no count in a Statement of Alleged Violation is proved, the Committee shall prepare a report to the House of Representatives, based upon the report of the adjudicatory subcommittee.

(b) If an adjudicatory subcommittee completes an adjudicatory hearing pursuant to Rule 23 and reports that any count of the Statement of Alleged Violation has been proved, a hearing before the Committee shall be held to receive oral and/or written submissions by counsel for the Committee and counsel for the respondent as to the sanction the Committee should recommend to the House of Representatives with respect to such violations. Testimony by witnesses shall not be heard except by written request and vote of a majority of the Committee.

(c) Upon completion of any proceeding held pursuant to clause (b), the Committee shall consider and vote on a motion to recommend to the House of Representatives that the House take disciplinary action. If a majority of the Committee does not vote in favor of the recommendation that the House of Representatives take action, a motion to reconsider that vote may be made only by a member who voted against the recommendation. The Committee may also, by majority vote, adopt a motion to issue a Letter of Reprimand or take other appropriate Committee action.

(d) If the Committee determines a Letter of Reprimand constitutes sufficient action, the Committee shall include any such letter as a part of its report to the House of Representatives.

(e) With respect to any proved counts against a Member of the House of Representatives, the Committee may recommend to the House one or more of the following sanctions:

(1) Expulsion from the House of Representatives.

(2) Censure.

(3) Reprimand.

(4) Fine.

(5) Denial or limitation of any right, power, privilege, or immunity of the Member if under the Constitution the House of Representatives may impose such denial or limitation.

(6) Any other sanction determined by the Committee to be appropriate.

(f) With respect to any proved counts against an officer or employee of the House of Representatives, the Committee may recommend to the House one or more of the following sanctions:

(1) Dismissal from employment.

(2) Reprimand.

(3) Fine.

(4) Any other sanction determined by the Committee to be appropriate.

(g) With respect to the sanctions that the Committee may recommend, reprimand is appropriate for serious violations, censure is appropriate for more serious violations, and expulsion of a Member or dismissal of an officer or employee is appropriate for the most serious violations. A recommendation of a fine is appropriate in a case in which it is likely that the violation was committed to secure a personal financial benefit; and a recommendation of a denial or limitation of a right, power, privilege, or immunity of a Member is appropriate when the violation bears upon the exercise or holding of such right, power, privilege, or immunity. This clause sets forth general guidelines and does not limit the authority of the Committee to recommend other sanctions.

(h) The Committee report shall contain an appropriate statement of the evidence supporting the Committee's findings and a statement of the Committee's reasons for the recommended sanction.

RULE 25. DISCLOSURE OF EXCULPATORY INFORMATION TO RESPONDENT

If the Committee, or any investigative or adjudicatory subcommittee at any time receives any exculpatory information respecting a Complaint or Statement of Alleged Violation concerning a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives, it shall make such information known and available to the Member, officer, or employee as soon as practicable, but in no event later than the transmittal of evidence supporting a proposed Statement of Alleged Violation pursuant to Rule 26(c). If an investigative subcommittee does not adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation, it shall identify any exculpatory information in its possession at the conclusion of its inquiry and shall include such information, if any, in the subcommittee's final report to the Committee regarding its inquiry. For purposes of this rule, exculpatory evidence shall be any evidence or information that is substantially favorable to the respondent with respect to the allegations or charges before an investigative or adjudicatory subcommittee.

RULE 26. RIGHTS OF RESPONDENTS AND WITNESSES

(a) A respondent shall be informed of the right to be represented by counsel, to be provided at the respondent's own expense.

(b) A respondent may seek to waive any procedural rights or steps in the disciplinary process. A request for waiver must be in writing, signed by the respondent, and must detail what procedural steps the respondent seeks to waive. Any such request shall be subject to the acceptance of the Committee or subcommittee, as appropriate.

(c) Not less than 10 calendar days before a scheduled vote by an investigative subcommittee on a Statement of Alleged Violation, the subcommittee shall provide the respondent with a copy of the Statement of Alleged Violation it intends to adopt together with all evidence it intends to use to prove those charges which it intends to adopt, including documentary evidence, witness testimony, memoranda of witness interviews, and physical evidence, unless the subcommittee by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members decides to withhold certain evidence in order to protect a witness, but if such evidence is withheld, the subcommittee shall inform the respondent that evidence is being withheld and of the count to which such evidence relates.

(d) Neither the respondent nor respondent's counsel shall, directly or indirectly, contact the subcommittee or any member thereof during the period of time set forth in paragraph (c) except for the sole purpose of settlement discussions where counsels for the respondent and the subcommittee are present.

(e) If, at any time after the issuance of a Statement of Alleged Violation, the Committee or any subcommittee thereof determines that it intends to use evidence not provided to a respondent under paragraph (c) to prove the charges contained in the Statement of Alleged Violation (or any amendment thereof), such evidence shall be made immediately available to the respondent, and it may be used in any further proceeding under the Committee's rules.

(f) Evidence provided pursuant to paragraph (c) or (e) shall be made available to the respondent and respondent's counsel only after each agrees, in writing, that no document, information, or other materials obtained pursuant to that paragraph shall be made public until—

(1) such time as a Statement of Alleged Violation is made public by the Committee if the respondent has waived the adjudicatory hearing; or

(2) the commencement of an adjudicatory hearing if the respondent has not waived an adjudicatory hearing; but the failure of respondent and respondent's counsel to so agree in writing, and therefore not receive the evidence, shall not preclude the issuance of a Statement of Alleged Violation at the end of the period referenced to in (c).

(g) A respondent shall receive written notice whenever—

(1) the Chair and Ranking Minority Member determine that information the Committee has received constitutes a complaint;

(2) a complaint or allegation is transmitted to an investigative subcommittee;

(3) that subcommittee votes to authorize its first subpoena or to take testimony under oath, whichever occurs first; and

(4) the Committee votes to expand the scope of the inquiry of an investigative subcommittee.

(h) Whenever an investigative subcommittee adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation and a respondent enters into an agreement with that subcommittee to settle a complaint on which the Statement is based, that agreement, unless the respondent requests otherwise, shall be in writing and signed by the respondent and the respondent's counsel, the Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the subcommittee, and outside counsel, if any.

(i) Statements or information derived solely from a respondent or respondent's counsel during any settlement discussions between the Committee or a subcommittee thereof and the respondent shall not be included in any report of the subcommittee or the Committee or otherwise publicly disclosed without the consent of the respondent.

(j) Whenever a motion to establish an investigative subcommittee does not prevail, the Committee shall promptly send a letter to the respondent informing the respondent of such vote.

(k) Witnesses shall be afforded a reasonable period of time, as determined by the Committee or subcommittee, to prepare for an appearance before an investigative subcommittee or for an adjudicatory hearing and to obtain counsel.

(l) Prior to their testimony, witnesses shall be furnished a printed copy of the Committee's Rules of Procedure and the provisions of the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to the rights of witnesses.

(m) Witnesses may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights. The Chair may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional responsibility on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the Committee may cite the offender to the House of Representatives for contempt.

(n) Each witness subpoenaed to provide testimony or other evidence shall be provided the same per diem rate as established, authorized, and regulated by the Committee on House Administration for Members, officers and employees of the House, and, as the Chair considers appropriate, actual expenses of travel to or from the place of examination. No compensation shall be authorized for attorney's fees or for a witness' lost earnings. Such per diem may not be paid if a witness had been summoned at the place of examination.

(o) With the approval of the Committee, a witness, upon request, may be provided with a transcript of the witness' own deposition or other testimony taken in executive session, or, with the approval of the Chair and Ranking Minority Member, may be permitted to examine such transcript in the office of the Committee. Any such request shall be in writing and shall include a statement that the witness, and counsel, agree to maintain the confidentiality of all executive session proceedings covered by such transcript.

RULE 27. FRIVOLOUS FILINGS

If a complaint or information offered as a complaint is deemed frivolous by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, the Committee may take such action as it, by an affirmative vote of a majority deems appropriate in the circumstances.

RULE 28. REFERRALS TO FEDERAL OR STATE AUTHORITIES

Referrals made under clause 3(a)(3) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives may be made by an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members of the Committee.

THE 30-SOMETHING WORKING GROUP: HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MURPHY) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Madam Speaker, I thank you and Speaker of the House PELOSI for allowing the 30-Something Working Group, which has been empowered by the Speaker's office, to come down to the House floor every so often and share with our colleagues here in the House really some of the burning questions of our constituents out there, especially those that affect younger individuals and younger families, and to talk about how this House, under new leadership with a new face in the White House, is rising to answer those questions and meet those challenges.

We'll put this poster up at the end of the hour as well, but we are always eager to hear feedback from people who want to know more about the 30-Something Working Group. Madam Speaker, thanks to members of your class, we have a number of new members of the 30-Something Working Group and they've been coming down and joining us occasionally in these hours. We're glad to have Mr. ALTMIRE with us and hopefully some guests to join us this evening as we try to focus our discussion this evening on an issue of just incredible importance to our constituents. That is the issue of health care for all Americans.

We sit at a moment of great economic peril for this country and the people that we represent. There is not an hour or minute, frankly, that goes by when we are back in our districts where we're not talking to a family or to a shop owner, to a factory worker, to a small business man about the difficulty that they face in this economy. It's getting harder and harder to keep businesses open. It's getting harder and harder to hold onto your job. And for the now 9½ percent of Americans that are out of work, it's getting hard to find a way back into the workforce.

For those of us who believe that now is the time to pass not incremental health care reform but major structural health care reform, we support that not just because we think that it's a moral imperative, as the richest Nation in the world, that we shouldn't be the outlier in the global health care system by which we still stand as the only country in the industrialized world that has such a high percentage of our citizens without access to our health care system; not just that, as the country which claims to be the leader of the free world, we still sit in a country where children go to bed at night sick because their parents can't afford a doctor; but because we believe that it's part and parcel of how we start to get this economy back on firm footing again.

For families out there that have seen their wages remain flat over the last 5 years and have seen the percentage of their income dedicated to health care costs grow exponentially, they didn't figure out that this economy was in trouble last fall when the banks collapsed. They knew it long ago. For our auto companies that have been struggling for a very long time to compete competitively on a global stage when $1,500 of every car that they sell is attributable to health care costs, $1,500 more than their competitors in Japan or Germany, they knew that the health care system was dragging this economy down long before last fall. And for small- and medium-sized businesses across this country who have seen their premiums dedicated to keep their employees insured grow by 10 or 12 or 14 percent a year, far outpacing the similar increase in revenues coming into their coffers, they knew that health care was weighing this economy down long before the newspapers discovered that this economy was in crisis and in trouble last fall.

If we really want to emerge from this recession stronger than ever, if we really want to be competitive in the global stage, if we really want to recognize the strength of this economy lying in the hundreds of thousands of 2- and 5- and 10- and 20-person businesses out there in each and every one of our districts, then we have got to fix our health care this year. And we can't just do it with a Band-Aid here or there, pardon the pun. We've got to do it with real reform that at the same time lowers the cost of care and expands access to more people. I happen to think that it should be a right as a matter of being a citizen of the United States that you should get health care, but I recognize that the only way that you do that is by lowering the cost of care across the board.

We spend twice as much as all of the other industrialized nations on health care, essentially, maybe a little bit less than twice as much, for a system that still leaves 50 million people uninsured. We can get access for everybody out there as long as we start spending less or, at the very least, that we start controlling the rate of growth.

So I think we are going to talk about all these things tonight as the 30-Somethings come to the floor. We are going to talk about health care, health care reform as a moral imperative, as a matter of conscience for this Nation. We're going to talk about it as an economic imperative, and we're going to talk about it both from the context and the perspective of getting care to people that don't have it today and trying to lower the cost of care so that all of us, whether or not we have it or don't have it, don't continue to pay for a system that far too often provides very expensive care without having accompanying results.

So I'm glad to be here on the floor today with a good friend who has joined here for a number of Special Order hours, Mr. ALTMIRE. Ms. BALDWIN has joined us as well.

I'm glad to yield the floor to Mr. ALTMIRE.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I cannot think of a bigger issue to be dealing with right now. We have so many issues that this Congress is dealing with. Certainly energy, education, this enormous mountain of debt which we have accumulated over the years, all of these issues are critically important, and all of them are issues that this Congress is going to deal with. The issue of health care is an issue that impacts our national debt. We cannot dig our way out of this hole. We cannot achieve structural surplus like we had in the 1990s. We can't ever even approach that until we deal with the skyrocketing cost of health care.

This is an issue that affects every American in this country very directly. It affects every family and it affects every small business in the country in ways that other issues that we deal with don't on a daily basis.

So what we are talking about here tonight and what this Congress is doing over the course of this summer as we put together this health care reform bill is the three legs of the stool, as the gentleman pointed out, making sure that we find a way for every American in this country to gain access to our system and get affordable health care, making sure that we bring down the costs for everyone. Because we talk about the 47 million Americans who don't have any health insurance right now. They get treated. They show up at the emergency room, and they get their health care. It's certainly not the most cost-effective way. It's probably not the most efficient way, and it's probably not the best way for them to get health care, but they'll end up in the system somewhere. And as the gentleman knows, those of us who have insurance pay for them. They get covered. They get their treatment. But the cost shift that takes place is the reason why an aspirin costs $10 when you go to the hospital.

It's very easy to demagogue this issue if you're in it for political reasons, to say, well, here's what they want to do: They want to take your money and give it to those people who don't have health insurance because 87 percent of Americans in this country have health care. We spend a lot of time talking about those who don't, but 87 percent of Americans have health care. Now, they are in many cases one illness or injury away from losing everything, certainly one job loss away, and tens of millions of Americans that have coverage live in fear of losing it for those very reasons. Tens of millions more are underinsured. They have some coverage; they don't have what they need. And in many cases, the insurance companies have people, millions, approximately 2 million people, that are employed in this country specifically to find a way, if you are insured, to make sure that they can deny your claim, to redline you, to find a preexisting condition exclusion, to find a reason why they shouldn't have to pay your claim. Now, that's another of the issues. Lastly is quality. So you have cost, you have access, and you have quality.

We have in many ways the best health care system anywhere in the world, and the challenge that we have in putting this bill together is we want to preserve what works. We want to say to the 87 percent of Americans who have health care, if you like your plan, if you enjoy the health care plan that you have and you want to keep it, we're not going to touch it and you can keep it. But if you want another alternative, we're going to find you another alternative. And if you have too much out-of-pocket costs, you're not satisfied with the situation that you have, we're going to give you another alternative. But we want to preserve what works in the current system. We want those who have health care to be able to keep it. And we want to make sure that our medical innovation, our technology, our research, which far exceeds anything available anywhere else in the world, is preserved. We want to fix what doesn't work and we want to preserve what does work.

So we are going to increase quality. And we're going to talk about, tonight, ways we are going to do that, the approaches we are going to take. We are going to increase access, bringing everybody into the system, which helps us all. And we're going to do access, we're going to do cost, and we're going to do quality improvements in this bill, all the while preserving what works in the current system.

And the gentleman used an example of how we're already paying for health care, something I mentioned earlier. Those who are afraid to bring new people into the system because they fear that this is going to increase their own costs, well, what I talk about when I have town meetings about health care is, again, they're already paying for people who don't have health insurance in a variety of ways. When that individual shows up at the emergency room, the cost shift takes place because the person without insurance gets their treatment and somebody else pays for it. Those of us who have health insurance pay for it. That's why an aspirin costs $10.

I had knee surgery many years ago, and to make sure that they operated on the right knee, they put a black magic marker that said "L" on my left knee. When we got the bill, I saw that that black magic marker to put that "L" on cost $20. That's because of the cost shift that takes place. Now, that's one example. Every American who's had to deal with the health care system has a similar example. If everybody is covered and everybody is in the same risk pool, we're not going to have that type of cost shift that takes place. But that's only one example of how we are paying for it.

The gentleman talks about $1,500 of the price of every car made in this country is due to health care costs because American manufacturers have to pay for health care for their employees and other countries don't have that burden in the manufacturing sector.

So we're starting at a $1,500 disadvantage for that one product. Think about the supply chain. Think about the way goods and services end up in a consumer's hands. Think about the distribution from the person who manufactures it—from the company that manufactures it—to the people who distribute it, to the people who stock the shelves, to the people who operate the stores, to the people who run the cash registers. At every segment of that supply chain, there is a health care component to that. That company, that business is paying, in many cases, health care for their employees. That is what we're paying for.

So, when you hear about people who don't have insurance and when you hear about the skyrocketing costs of health care, think about that part of it as well, not just what your copayment or your premium or your deductible is. Think about how every sector and every segment of our lives is impacted by that.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALTMIRE. I will.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. I want to just put an example to one of the points you made here, which is this cost shift that happens. You talk about the folks who don't have insurance or who are underinsured. They get it, right? We have universal health care in this country. You've just got to wait until you're so sick that you end up in the emergency room until you get it.

In fact, President Bush, while he stalled on health care for 8 years, famously remarked, you know, don't worry about the uninsured—I'm paraphrasing—because they'll get health care when they need it. They just have to show up to emergency rooms.

Well, I've told this story maybe even on this House floor before. I told it 100 times back in Connecticut. When we were debating health care reform in the State legislature, I'll never forget a woman who came and testified before us. She told this story:

She said, you know, I was working. I was employed, but my employer didn't provide health care, and I didn't make enough to go and get it on my own. I think she might have had some kids, and she had gotten them insured, but she hadn't had insurance herself. She started noticing over the course of a couple of weeks that she had a real pain in her foot. The pain would sort of get worse, and then it would get better. She knew that she should go see a doctor, but she knew that a couple of things were going to happen: one, she was going to be billed a pretty exorbitant amount for the visit; two, she was going to have to go into the pharmacy and have to probably pay for some antibiotic to treat it. She was savvy enough to understand that, when she did that, she was going to pay the highest cost in the whole system. If you were uninsured, you were going to pay top dollar for that visit, and you were going to pay top dollar for that drug. You don't get the benefit of the bulk purchasing that the Federal government gets through Medicaid or through Medicare or that the insurance companies get through similar programs.

So, one night, she finally decides the pain is just so unbelievable that she can't stand it anymore, and so she goes to the emergency room. She gets to the emergency room too late to save her foot. She has a foot infection that has gotten so bad that she has to have it amputated. For her, that is a life-changing event. Her life is never going to be the same. She is never going to be the same person or the same mother. She is going to have to deal with the disability for the rest of her life just because she didn't have the money or the coverage to get some simple antibiotics that would have treated that foot infection. That just doesn't make sense in the richest country in the world.

Think about it from just a cost perspective. I don't know how much that surgery cost, but it was in the thousands of dollars, I am sure. She didn't have the money to pay for it. Maybe she got billed for it, but probably, more than likely, it just sort of got sucked into the unreimbursable cost by that hospital and got picked up, essentially, by the taxpayers in subsidies for that hospital or by those people who had the insurance, through higher insurance rates, in order to help the hospital to compensate for the people like that woman who didn't have care.

So we paid for that surgery. You and I paid for a surgery that didn't have to happen. There is a woman walking around now with her life fundamentally altered simply because she didn't have access to insurance. Sometimes people need to hear these examples, Mr. ALTMIRE, of what it really means when somebody only has health care when they get so badly sick or ill that they show up in emergency rooms.

Mr. ALTMIRE. I thank the gentleman.

That is just one example, and we're going to deal with a lot of policy options over the next several months. To talk about just one related to what the gentleman is talking about, prevention and wellness is something that everyone can agree has to be an important component. We have to incentivize doctors and hospitals and our health care system more generally to keep people healthy and to keep people out of the system and not wait until the last minute when a situation develops like the one the gentleman talked about.

In western Pennsylvania, where I'm from, I'll just talk about one disease which is near epidemic proportion. That's diabetes. In some cases, it's preventable. In some cases, it's not. For every individual whom you can put on a program of wellness and can prevent diabetes from taking place or, at minimum, delay its onset, you're changing that person's life for the better. You're making a material difference in the life of that person and of his family. You're also, in a more global sense, saving money for the health care system. If you take that one person times the entire country and the entire group of people for whom you can delay the onset for not just diabetes but for any affliction which one may later get in life, you can prevent injuries if you keep people healthy. For the weekend warriors and so forth with joint injuries, with arthritis and its onset, these are very costly diseases to treat, and they can be debilitating in many cases, but they can be prevented or they can, at least, be made better in many cases.

So this is the type of thing that we want to incentivize in our health care system for which, right now, there is no incentive. Under our current reimbursement in health care, we reimburse based on the number of times one shows up to a doctor's office. Their incentive is also for you to be sick. They make more money the more often you go to see them. We want the reimbursement system to be based on keeping you healthy and on keeping you out of the system, reimbursing based on the quality of care provided, not on the volume of services provided. So this is one example of the policy option that we are considering.

I would be delighted to yield to the gentlewoman from Wisconsin at this time.

Ms. BALDWIN. Well, I thank the gentleman.

I also want to appreciate my friend and colleague, Congressman MURPHY, for bringing us together on this really critical issue.

You know, health care for all is the issue that brought me to politics in the first place, and it's certainly the issue that keeps me here. I join my colleagues tonight on the floor to affirm our fight that we must complete comprehensive health care, meaningful and affordable comprehensive health care reform, this year. We can no longer afford to wait for health care reform.

There was a recent report from the very respected Robert Wood Johnson Foundation that projects, if Federal reform efforts are not completed, that within 10 years the cost of health care for businesses could double, that the number of uninsured Americans could reach 65.7 million and that middle income families would really be the hardest hit. They would bear the brunt of our inaction.

I represent a district in south central Wisconsin. Last month, I had the opportunity to gather and to meet with a number of stakeholders in my community. I got a chance to hear from diverse perspectives—from public and private urban and rural health providers, from patient advocates, from insurers, from businesses, and from labor. I always find it extremely helpful to hear divergent viewpoints and to get new suggestions as we prepare to write this bold, new legislation.

No matter what their particular perspectives in this debate are, their main message was very clear, that the system is broken and that we have to fix it. Some would argue that we really don't even have a system intact anymore.

I want to share just three quick stories from constituents, from Wisconsinites, that really symbolize what is broken in our health care system, that being the unaffordability of individual markets, the insurance discrimination based on preexisting conditions, and the struggles of small businesses. I really think it's important that we, as Americans and as Members of Congress, hear these stories. Our constituents, using their own words and telling their powerful and compelling stories, make the best case for health care for all and for the actions that we must take. So I'm just going to share with you excerpts of three letters that I've received.

One is from Jean from Rio, Wisconsin. Jean writes, "My husband, Steve, has worked hard his whole life, but as of last year, he has not been able to find work because of the downturn in the economy. Neither of the jobs that I have held have offered me health insurance. We have relied on insurance that we purchased in the individual market, which costs nearly $10,000 a year and has a $5,000 deductible, meaning that we pay out of pocket for basic doctor visits, screenings and prescriptions.

"Twenty years ago," Jean writes, "Steve became very ill, and in the intervening years has developed multiple brain tumors that require extensive treatment and care. We eventually realized that he has recurring tumors due to a neurological disease and should be screened on an annual basis. Unfortunately, insurance does not cover these $13,000 procedures, and we cannot afford to pay that on an annual basis. We can only hope and pray that more tumors are not developing. It is just so infuriating that, in this wonderful country, we cannot get wonderful medical care."

Lorraine from Port Washington, Wisconsin, writes, "When my husband filled out an insurance application in July of 2002, he was asked if he had ever been diagnosed or treated for cancer in the past 5 years. He replied, 'No.' He had never been diagnosed with cancer nor operated on nor treated for cancer. What he did have was basal cells—small carcinomas—which are never malignant and have to be removed from most blue-eyed blonds in the course of getting older.

"When my husband was diagnosed with bone marrow failure disease, the insurance company denied any coverage for his medical care, citing a pre-existing condition. We were left with over $125,000 in medical bills. My husband has now passed away, and I am just thankful that I am not in complete financial ruin."

Sally, from Madison, Wisconsin, writes me to say, "I've had my own law office for 29 years. I employ two full-time employees and one part-time employee. I provide health care benefits for our small firm, but I have faced an annual increase in premiums of 12 percent, forcing me to pass on higher cost-sharing to these three employees. One employee has diabetes and also extends coverage to her husband, who is a dairy farmer without health insurance coverage. Because of their high medical costs, it would have been very difficult for me to find new health insurance without facing even higher rates. Health insurance is becoming steadily less inclusive and more difficult to keep—and it's no wonder that, in today's economy, families count health care costs as one of their top pocket-book issues."

Madam Speaker and colleagues, these stories illustrate why affordable, quality health care for all is so important and is so necessary. Universal coverage is both a moral and an economic imperative if we are to succeed in the 21st century. For the first time, I firmly believe that health care for all is within our grasp. We must act now.

Again, I want to thank my colleagues, my friend Congressman MURPHY and my friend Congressman ALTMIRE, for taking this fight up and for bringing us together to address this important issue.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Thank you very much, Ms. BALDWIN. I'm always amazed at how articulate your constituents are. It really is amazing to hear the stories firsthand because, as Mr. ALTMIRE mentioned and as one of your constituents mentioned, there is an entire industry out there that is dedicated to trying to stop people from getting care. That's what you get when you build in the type of profit motivation that we have and the pressure on shareholder return. We treat health care and the economy around it just like we treat, basically, every other industry out there. I think there are a lot of us here who believe that there is something fundamentally different about health care than the auto industry or the cereal industry or the widget industry and that, when the consequences of somebody's not being able to get that product is life or death, maybe we should have some different rules that govern it. Maybe there is no problem with having some incentive built in for innovation, for success and for all the rest. Maybe there should be a limit to that, and there should be some constraints on the system.

So I thank you for joining us, and please stick around for a little while.

Mr. ALTMIRE, you are talking about the three pedestals here of access, cost and quality. I think it's just important for us to talk for a second about how we sort of have an assumption in this country that the more money you spend, the better care you're going to get, right? And what we have found, as we sort of surveyed one particular segment of the country to the next, is that isn't necessarily the case, that spending more money and just having more health care doesn't necessarily deliver better health care. There are great surveys from Dartmouth University and other places that show that, actually, if you can better coordinate care, if you can get physicians talking to each other, if you can get primary care doctors doing more work up front, you can spend more money on preventive health care, as you talked about, that you can get better health care out there. So one of the things when we talk about controlling cost is trying to actually get people to have a decrease rather than an increase in utilization. I think it will be a big central part of our discussion here about how we do that.

There are very interesting ideas about how you try to encourage providers to work together, about how you invest more in primary care. But a subject that we have talked about on this House floor, which is going to be fundamental to this discussion, is giving those physicians and hospitals the tools to do that. The only way that you can try to get doctors talking to each other about complicated patients, the only way that you can try to really empower the consumers themselves to take more ownership over their own health care is to make sure that they have the ability, as physicians or providers, to track those patients through the system or, as a consumer of health care yourself, to track your care as you move through the system. Technology is really the key to that, and we have already taken a great step forward on that issue through the stimulus bill. There is $19 billion in the stimulus bill dedicated to building out the world's best, most connected, most highly technologically advanced health care information system so that as an individual walks into the emergency room, that that treating physician can immediately figure out what his medical history is, what tests he's already had, what's been ruled in, been ruled out relative to the illness that they present with. We can save billions of dollars just by having better information in the system. I am so glad that our President had the foresight to see those savings down the line by investing money in the stimulus bill to get that technology out as quickly as possible so that it can be a platform for those savings. There are going to be a thousand different ways that we talk about to save money in this system, and we know that that's how we get access. But I don't think any of it is going to be possible, Mr. ALTMIRE, without that investment in technology, something that you talk a lot about.

Mr. ALTMIRE. We have talked about that, and I do think that the money that was in the stimulus plan and then money in the succeeding budgets, which we're also going to make a priority, is going to make a big difference. Health care is the only major industry in the country remaining that has not gone to an interconnected, interoperable computerized system. And I would ask my colleagues to think about the fact that—the gentleman's from Connecticut, and I'm from Pennsylvania—if we go to San Diego, and we put our bank card in the machine, we can pull up all of our financial records in a safe and secure way and never think about privacy or any type of intrusion. You just take for granted that that's going to work. But if you show up on that same trip at the emergency room in San Diego, well, they don't have any of your records. They don't have your history. They don't have your family medical history. They don't have your allergies. They don't have any of your imaging, your x rays and so forth. And they're going to ask you half a dozen times when you're there, what are you allergic to, and can you fill out these forms and, most importantly, how are you going to pay, what's your insurance? But if we were to go to a system, like every other industry in America has, where you have an electronic health record that goes with you everywhere you go and has your family history records, your personal medical history, your allergies, and yes, all your insurance information, then when you show up at the emergency room, they're not going to have to ask you half a dozen times. They're going to be able to get right down to the business of treating you for whatever the reason is you find yourself in that situation. We have to make sure that as we move forward as a country, we reward those who have already taken matters into their own hands. There are a lot of major health systems in this country from coast to coast that have spent hundreds of millions of dollars of their own money to make this a reality, to connect their own systems. The problem that we have in implementing this is, if you're a wealthy community and you have a system that's making a lot of money, a hospital system, you can afford to do that. But if you're a rural physician, a health care provider in central Pennsylvania or anywhere in this country 80 miles from the nearest hospital, you can't afford hundreds of thousands of dollars to upgrade your computerization to interconnect your records with the nearest hospital. It's just something you can't even consider, and that's where this money is going to go. We're going to move towards having an interconnected system in this country to resolve some of the issues that the gentleman has talked about. We're not going to allow it to get to the point—with the Department of Defense, for example, which has a wonderful health care information technology system, and the Department of Veterans Affairs, which also has a wonderful health care information technology system; but there's one problem. They literally cannot communicate with each other. What they do is, if you're one of the brave servicemen or -women who are serving our country as part of the Department of Defense, you're a part of their program, and they have all of your medical records; but when you leave the military and become a veteran and enter the VA system, under the current system, the Department of Defense sends a PDF file by e-mail to the VA, and somebody has to open up that file. They can't manipulate it in any way. They have to type by hand your entire career's medical history—if you've been there for 30 years, think about what we're talking about—into the new system for the VA.

Now Secretary Shinseki and Secretary Gates have announced that moving forward, they're going to merge the systems for the new people who enter the military. So moving forward with the newer generation of our military men and women and our veterans, we're not going to have this problem. But for the millions who have served up to this point, it's not interoperable. They cannot communicate with one another.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. ALTMIRE, scale it down. There are thousands of hospitals, some of which are in the State of Connecticut, that have competing systems, even within their own hospitals, that don't talk to each other. There are hospitals that have one electronic records system for their emergency room and then one electronic medical records system for their in-patient unit. So the same thing that happens as you move from active service out to be part of the veterans health care system works within a matter of days in a hospital setting. When you come in and present to the ED, you then aren't on the same record system when you move over to the in-patient unit. Now that is because we do not have a sort of nationally agreed-upon platform for how systems communicate with each other. And a lot of hospitals say to themselves, well, I have got one really good system for emergency rooms, and then I want to buy this other really good system for in-patient care. We have got to have some national standards that basically say to any hospital or physician's office that's buying into a records system that you can be guaranteed that you are going to get a system that presents you with all the data and tools that you need and will be able to communicate with everybody else. In fact, there's no way that we're going to spend that stimulus money without some national standards to guarantee that that happens. But as a sort of preview as to how politicized and how politically charged this debate can become, when we were debating that portion of the stimulus bill, which really is a commonsense investment in information technology, something that there should be no reason why Republicans and Democrats should disagree. I don't want to put words in Mr. BURGESS mouth. He is a Republican Member from Texas. He comes down to the floor very often to talk about the crisis in our health care system, and he talks in a very articulate way about the need to upgrade our information system. So there's a lot of potential agreement on this issue between Republicans and Democrats. But it didn't stop the sort of right wing in this country from going out and spreading lies that this investment in information technology was the Federal Government's attempt to have a Big Brother takeover of health care, and this was the Federal Government reaching in and controlling all of your health care information and knowing everything about every illness that you've had or prescription drug that you're on. It's the furthest thing from the truth. We're just simply trying to standardize private health care investments that have been made by hospitals and doctors across this country. But I think it speaks to how difficult this debate is going to become. There is a group of folks out there who are either just ideologically opposed to having the government have any role in health care, or folks who are part of the status quo who are making their fortunes off of health care today that don't want the rules of the game changed. Even when it comes to what should be fairly noncontroversial issues, like investments in information technology, I mean, my God, you know, it's boring to say, right, but it's so important. It's just not that controversial. We're still going to find a lot of people on the outside that are going to fight us on this issue, as they will on many others, Mr. ALTMIRE.

Mr. ALTMIRE. There are many issues that are just like that, as the gentleman knows; and this gets to the complexity of the bill that we are going to be bringing to this floor and to the other body over the course of the next several weeks. If you look at what we expect, at minimum, the outcome to be on the insurance side, I think everyone would agree that a very likely outcome is going to be the insurance industry will not be able to re-line you. They're not going to be able to use pre-existing conditions to exclude you from care. They're not going to be able to do the lifetime limits for people with chronic diseases. Basically, they're going to have to take all comers, and they're not going to be able to set your rates based on your individual health status. I think we would all agree that is a likely outcome to this debate.

Now the insurance industry makes a compelling case, and I think an actuary would tell you that the only way that works is if we find a way to make sure everybody is included in our health care system. You can't just have the sick people or the people who are about to become sick part of the risk pool. You have to have everybody. That's why it's so important that we expand access to the entire Nation, include these 47 million Americans who don't have health coverage, the tens of millions of more that are underinsured because the only way the risk pool works is if you have the young and the healthy, people who aren't going to use the services right now today to offset the risk for those who are. But as the gentleman indicates, there is still going to be opposition to this concept when we move forward and when we talk about ways to move people into the system that currently don't have access.

One of the ideas that we talk about, which the gentleman from Connecticut is very involved in, is the idea of having a choice for people to join a plan that would compete with the private insurance industry. We hear a lot of talk about how the private sector always does it better than government. They're more efficient. They're more cost effective. The government is too bloated. So I would say to those who make that case, well, then, what are you worried about? What are you worried about the competition from the government if the private sector always does it better than government? The difference in this case, if we do it right—and certainly there are ways you can structure it that wouldn't be the correct way—but if we establish a level playing field for the competition, you are going to have a situation where there's not going to be a profit motive, and there's not going to be any reason for someone to choose that plan who's involved in shareholding and so forth. You're not going to have that. You're not going to have people who are employed to try to deny claims. That might be a difference in the way these plans compete. But if we do it right, it would be a level playing field.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. The gentleman knows that I think this is, for me, critical to reform going forward. I really do think that if you empower consumers to have real choice, that that is one of the ways in which we're going to control cost. Right now when you decide you want health care insurance, if you are a business or an individual, it's a real cloudy picture out there. You don't know exactly what you're buying. You don't know the combination of deductibles and premiums that are going to force costs on you. You can't ever be sure exactly what the benefit plan is, whether pre-existing conditions are covered here and not here. So one of the things that we're talking about that is fundamental to this reform is really trying to standardize the market, creating some national standards for health insurance; that you've got to have this basic benefit package that covers preventive services and real catastrophic care; that you can't discriminate against people that have pre-existing conditions; that you can't have lifetime limits; to basically give people some certainty that when they go out and purchase insurance, that they're going to get insurance, that they're going to get something they can actually use.

So, a lot of us say, well, you know, why not give people the option, if they don't like the private insurers who are inevitably going to take a piece of their premium and pay the CEO a big salary or pay back shareholders or turn it into profit, why not give them the option to purchase a nonprofit, government-issued plan?

Now, Mr. ALTMIRE, you are right, that that only works if that government option, that government health care option, has to finance itself; that it doesn't get a subsidy from the Federal Government to help it compete with the private plans. But if that public insurance option has to pay for itself, just like every private insurance company has to, they collect premiums, pay for care and it all has to be self-financing, then you are exactly right, what is the problem?

If the government is so inefficient, then they will end up having an insurance plan that costs more than the private insurers, and nobody is going to buy that. But if our theory is correct, that by not having the profit motivation that the private insurers have, that they can run a more cost-effective product, then why shouldn't consumers have that choice?

The people in this Chamber who are going to say there can be no public insurance option available to individuals are taking choice away from consumers. I would rather have my 700,000 constituents be able to have as many choices as possible. I want them to decide whether they think that private insurance or public insurance is better for them.

Everybody will answer that question differently. But I think that those of us that are going to be favoring a publicly sponsored health care plan as one of the options for individuals and businesses out there are going to be on the side of consumer choice, and I think if we give consumers that choice, it is going to create a really competitive structure that will end up with some people having public insurance, some people having private insurance, but a real competition by which we lower health care costs, Mr. ALTMIRE.

Listen, I get it. The devil is in the details of making sure that you don't give a little competitive advantage to that public option, but I think that it is really a linchpin of health care reform going forward, if we can get it right.

Mr. ALTMIRE. Think about the competitive advantage that businesses have in this country. Some are able to offer health insurance, some are not. Less than half of small businesses in this country are able to afford to offer health care to their employees.

What we want to create is a system where everyone in America will be covered and every business that chooses to do so will be able to afford to offer that benefit to their employees and to their potential employees to be able to recruit and retain the highest quality worker. That might be a benefit that small businesses would like to offer. We want to give them the opportunity to afford that benefit if they so choose.

But, again, we want to preserve what is working in our current system. We want those who have coverage and like it to not be touched in this. And that has to be a part of this. But for those that want to have another option, those who want to make a change, maybe the family status has changed over time, the plan that you are in doesn't work for you any more, we want to give them as many options as possible, and we want to give them the ability, as the gentleman indicates, to do some comparative shopping, to compare apples to apples, to look at what the costs are for the family situation across the different plans. Right now you are unable to do that.

If you are a Federal employee and you have the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program, it is a little bit easier. That is a plan where you are able to look at some of the paperwork and get on the computer and do comparison shopping. We want every American to have the same ability that Federal employees have today.

I would say to the gentleman, when we talk about this idea of the employers being required in some way to either offer health insurance to their employees or to pay into the system so that those employees will have the ability to make that choice, we don't want to do that in a way, and I want to be very clear about this, we don't want to do that in a way that is going to incentivize employers to say, well, you know what? I will just stop offering health care coverage and all of my employees can go into the plan. That is not what this is about.

We don't want to add one more financial burden to half of the small businesses in the country, the ones I am talking about that are already unable to afford health care. We don't want to add to their financial burden. We recognize that this is a very complicated issue and it is going to be very difficult to achieve these goals.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. ALTMIRE, we spend so much time with our business community, our chambers of commerce, when we are back home and when they come visit us down here, that we know what the reality is out there.

These folks that right now can't afford to give health care to their employees desperately want to do that. They want to do it first because it is just the right thing. They are members of their community like anybody else is, and they want to be able to provide health care to their employees, whether they have two employees or 40 employees. That is just the kind of people that are out there running small businesses by the skin of their teeth across this country.

But they also need to do it from an economic standpoint. They know that to the extent that they can't offer health care or can't offer the kind of generous plan that they would like to, they are at a disadvantage against their competitors who can offer that type of health care. They are at a disadvantage against the big employers who can steal their employees away.

So this is really an issue that our small businessmen are waiting to be a part of the solution, and if we can offer them, whether it is through a public option or through lower rates on private plans, a more affordable health insurance option, they are going to take it. They are going to grab it.

You are right, we don't want to set up any incentives where they are going to push people off to the public plan. But we know the majority of folks are going to want to be part of the solution out there, just for reasons of conscience, but also for reasons of their own salvation as a particular business.

Mr. ALTMIRE. And the gentleman hits the nail right on the head, talking about bringing down the costs. That is where we started this discussion. We are going to pass a health care reform bill this year. I am confident in saying that. The public support is there, the support in this Congress is there. We need to certainly finalize the details, and that is going to take some work. But this issue is too important, it is too important to this country, it is too important to families, it is too important to businesses, and it is too important to every individual in this country for this not to become law this year. I am confident that will happen.

We have to bring down the costs of health care. That is why this is so important. We have to bring down the costs for our families, we have to bring down costs for our businesses, and we certainly have to bring down the costs for our government.

As I started our remarks tonight by saying what this is about is the structural deficit over the long term that we have in our budget, and addressing the issues like energy and like education that have led to the skyrocketing deficit and debt that we have over the long term, and the only way you can begin to bring that under control is by bringing down the cost of health care for everyone in this country at every level, both in the private and the public sector. That is what this bill is going to do, that is what this discussion is about.

So, to close it out, I would yield back to the gentleman.

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. I thank Mr. ALTMIRE and Ms. BALDWIN for joining us tonight.

Let's make no mistake about this. This is going to be a fight. This is going to be a fight, because to do this right, you are going to have to take on some folks who have gotten real fat over this health care system. You are going to have to take on some ideologues that just don't believe that the government has any role in trying to get health care to people.

There is a polling memo going around Washington written by Newt

Gingrich's pollster essentially outlining in 28 pages how you stop health care reform from happening. That is the agenda of a lot of people in this town, a lot of folks on the other side of the aisle, that they do not want health care reform to happen.

Now, some of it is for good, honest policy reasons. I believe it is an incredibly mistaken belief that the private sector can just fix this on their own. They haven't done it for the last 50 years. How can we expect they are going to do it overnight?

Some of it though is very cynical politics. Some of it is due to people that look back to 1994 and the failure of the Clinton health care plan in the 2 years prior, and believe that if folks can stand in the way of President Obama or this Democratic House passing health care reform, that they will gain some electoral advantage out of that.

Now, I hope that is the minority of people that are standing in the way of this bill. But make no mistake, there are people out there who simply see political advantage against Democrats in general or against the President of the United States in stopping health care reform from happening.

Now, they may have succeeded back in 1993. I wasn't here, Mr. ALTMIRE wasn't here, so we can't speak to all the reasons that happened. But that is not going to happen this time. Not because you have got smarter people in the House of Representatives or you got necessarily a better strategy moving forward, but because the American people are not going to stand for the status quo.

They know this economy is tough and they feel more conscious than ever of the fact that they are just one paycheck away from losing their health care and becoming one of the tens of thousands of individuals out there who have been forced into bankruptcy because of health care costs.

The status quo is not good enough for people out there, and despite 28 pages of polling telling the folks on the other side of the aisle how to stop this from happening, I believe that the will of the majority of Americans is going to bring us together to get a good bill passed.

We are here as 30-somethings in the Democratic Caucus talking about that tonight, but I believe that there is going to be a groundswell of public support that is going to force us, both parties, to come to the table and do something, not small, not minor, not temporary, but something big and permanent to fix all of the underlying problems in this health care system, to make sure that more people have it and less businesses are burdened by it.

So, again I would like to thank Speaker PELOSI for once again giving us the opportunity as the 30-something Working Group to come down here tonight, and remind folks that they can e-mail us at 30somethingdems@mail.house.gov. If you have any questions for us, any feedback on what you have heard this evening, www.speaker.gov/30something is where you find us on the Web.

NOT LEARNING FROM HISTORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. AKIN. Madam Speaker, there was a cynical comment that was made by people who take a look at history. They say that one of the things we learn from history is that we learn nothing from history. I don't know that that is universally true, but certainly for our subject for this evening, that will certainly be the theme, that we are not learning very much from history.

We are going to be taking a look at the fruit of fiscal mismanagement, and particularly what is going on in our country in terms of a very, very important number, and that is unemployment. The unemployment numbers have continued to rise, in spite all kinds of assurances that by spending tons and tons of money, that we can turn those numbers around.

The historic connector here that is I think quite interesting is a fellow by the name of Henry Morgenthau. Probably you have not heard of Henry Morgenthau, but he was an important figure in his own day. And here in this Chamber, in this House, Henry Morgenthau met with the Ways and Means Committee in 1939.

Henry Morgenthau was FDR's Secretary of the Treasury and he had 8 years working on a theory that is known as Keynesian economics. He was one of the main architects of Keynesian economics, whose idea was that what the government needs to do is to stimulate the economy. You have heard that phrase over and over, stimulate the economy, and the purpose of stimulating the economy is, of course, to create more jobs.

That is a little bit like grabbing the straps on your boots and lifting up and trying to fly around the room. It doesn't work. And after 8 years of failed experience, these were the words, the very quote of Henry Morgenthau here in this building before the Ways and Means Committee.

He said, "We have tried spending money. We are spending more than we have ever spent before, and it does not work." His words are echoing down through history. "It does not work, I say. After 8 years of the administration, we have just as much unemployment as when we started, and an enormous debt to boot."

These are the words coming to us, floating down through history by Henry Morgenthau, the main architect of Keynesian economics. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the master of the policy of stimulating the economy with big spending.

Maybe we haven't been doing a good enough job on stimulating the economy with big spending, so let's just take a look and see what we have come up here in just the last year or so.

I am joined by a number of my good friends and colleagues who are going to help us in unpacking some of what is in this spending that we have and also going to help talk about this incredible statement that was made by the President last week that, somehow or another, that his administration had created 100,000 to 150,000 new jobs. It is kind of amazing, because all of the actual numbers from the government show that that is not true at all.

So we have quite an interesting evening together. And I'm joined by a good friend of mine from Iowa, Congressman KING, who is here to join us in our conversation tonight. I hope that everybody else will feel comfortable to just tune right in and join us. We're going to have a little bit of fun and take a look at some of the economics. It's a serious picture, but it's an example to us that we must learn from history. It's also an example of the fact that America is on the wrong track.

As we take a look at what's going on with job losses, I think many Americans, Congressman KING, understand the fact that all is not right and that unemployment number jumping up as high as 9-something percent is not acceptable.

I would yield time to my good friend from Iowa, Congressman KING.

Mr. KING of Iowa. I thank the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) for pulling this hour together. And I listened to the first flash of illumination of common sense here coming from deep within history of Franklin Delano Roosevelt's administration, his Treasurer, Henry Morgenthau, saying that Keynesian economics does not work.

And so I wanted to add to this, John Maynard Keynes' philosophy that he spoke about during that period of time of the implementation of the New Deal that was presented by FDR, and historians have taught for years that FDR's New Deal saved us from the Great Depression, although there isn't any evidence of that, especially, FDR's Secretary of the Treasury making the statement that Keynesian economics does not work.

Now, Henry Morgenthau was a contemporary of John Maynard Keynes, and Keynes became prominent in the twenties and throughout the thirties and kind of wrapped up his career in the forties. But Keynes described how Keynesian economics worked. He did this himself, and his description was this. He said, I can solve all the unemployment in the United States. All we need to do is go find an abandoned coal mine and go out in that abandoned coal mine and drill a whole group of holes out there, and then take American cash, tamp it down into those holes, and then fill the abandoned coal mine up with garbage and turn the entrepreneurs loose to dig up the money. That would solve all the unemployment in the United States of America.

Now, that doesn't sound very rational when I say this on the floor of the House of Representatives, but that came out the mouth of John Maynard Keynes, who inspired this Keynesian economics and Morgenthau's response.

I yield back.

Mr. AKIN. I just have to kind of wonder what he was drinking when he came up with a theory like that. That's an interesting tidbit of history.

Mr. KING of Iowa. And we didn't have EPA approval either.

Mr. AKIN. He didn't have EPA to put the garbage in the mine. I'm sure he would have gotten in trouble with that.

It's just a treat to have, also, my good friend Congressman LAMBORN who's joining us tonight as well. And we're just getting started now, talking a little bit about this idea that somehow all of this spending that we've been seeing in this last year that we've been here together, this incredible level of spending, is supposed to help with this unemployment problem. And yet, just as Morgenthau would have predicted, we're seeing unemployment going up and the spending just totally out of control.

I yield time to my good friend, Congressman LAMBORN.

Mr. LAMBORN. Well, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for letting me have this time. It's good to join you for a few minutes with this time that you've put together to speak and present to the American people and to have a dialogue between each other what the spending is really costing us. And so far it's not producing jobs. I think we hit 9.4 percent, if I have that correct, of what the latest unemployment figures are.

Mr. AKIN. Just affirming that, reclaiming my time and affirming that number, yes, it is now 9.4 percent. You recall that there was a promise when we got to this great big—they call it a stimulus bill. We call it the porkulus bill. When we got to this porkulus bill, they said, If you don't pass this bill, if you don't do that, why we may have unemployment at 8 percent. And here we are at 9.7 percent, and we did pass the bill. And so the excuse is, well, this thing is really helping us a lot. Well, I sure hope it doesn't help us in that direction too much longer because that was what was supposed to be. But I think you're right. Your number is 9.7.

I yield.

Mr. LAMBORN. Thank you. With that amount, 9.4 percent, which I think is the high point for 25 years, unfortunately it's the high point in unemployment in our country for two and a half decades.

And I just wanted to mention, it's so inconsistent or even hypocritical for the press to say that this is not anything other than an unmitigated disaster. They're falling all over themselves trying to put a spin on this thing saying, Oh, it's really not as bad as it seems. The rate of growth of unemployed people has slowed down, or it's less than we thought it was going to be.

Can you imagine if we were 12 months ago, 24 months ago, when George Bush was President, what the press would have said? They would have said, It's horrible, and the policies are doing this and driving unemployment up.

Mr. AKIN. Just reclaiming my time a minute. What would the press have said if, under the Bush administration, they claimed that they created 100,000 to 150,000 jobs and they didn't have any documentation for that? Say, Where in the world did you get that number, because the numbers that have just come out show that we've lost jobs. It's gone the other direction.

If you had a track record like that—this is just the year, this year. This is starting in February, March, April, this is another March, 14, 28, April, April, May and May, this is just a few months here. And this is what's going on with unemployment. And you're out here and you claim, Hey, we just created a whole lot of jobs. People would kind of wonder, I would think the press corps would say, Wait a minute. Where'd you come up with this 100,000 to 150,000 jobs that he claimed last week that they created? I supposed he'd say, Well, if we hadn't passed this great big porkulus bill, why, by golly, it would be worse. Of course he hasn't learned from Henry Morgenthau.

I yield back.

Mr. LAMBORN. The gentleman from Missouri is correct. It's so inconsistent. If this was the previous President, the press would just be laying right into him. Right now they're giving the President a pass. And it's inconsistent, and I think the American people can see through that.

And Congressman, you also mentioned, what are these phantom jobs out there that were saved? Anyone can claim, well, there's one or two or 300,000 jobs that were saved. I can't document it, but just take my word for it, and the press isn't looking at that either. I just wish the press would do their job of being an honest, objective observer and reporter of what the facts are. And until the press does that, the American people are really not being served well.

Mr. AKIN. Well, reclaiming my time, I think you're right. And I'd like to just take a moment and get into—these numbers are easy for us to rattle off, just off the tip of our tongue, but let's take a look.

First of all, you've got $700 billion in this Wall Street bailout. Now, some of this came under President Bush, and I think the people in this room voted against this thing because it didn't make a lot of sense. Half of it, though, is the beginning of this year, and we keep dumping all this money out, and it's not quite clear what we got for it. And then we get to this thing here, this economic stimulus which is supposed to be fixing this unemployment problem. And what's going on in this bill?

I've got a few, just choice examples I'll share, but I know others of you here have some examples. We're joined by a number of fantastic Congresspeople, and here's one. This is one here, this is you can't afford a bicycle after purchasing a $1 million home. Okay. This is money for Washington, D.C., part of the stimulus money that's supposed to be helping us with jobs.

Washington, D.C., Department of Transportation will spend $3 million in stimulus money to expand its Smart Bike program. The money will increase the program by five times, from 10 bike racks to 50 bike racks, and from 100 bikes to 500 bikes. Neighborhoods expected to get the new bike racks include Adams Morgan, Columbia Heights, Capitol Hill, Anacostia and Georgetown, where the average single-family home runs at $1.2 million. Boy, now there is an interesting use of money. May be a wonderful thing to do, but I'm not sure what we should be taxing everybody to try to create jobs.

And we've got a lot of other fun examples. I'm joined by my good friend Congresswoman BACHMANN, and Congresswoman BACHMANN is articulate and a good friend to people who care about jobs and care about fiscal sanity.

I yield time.

Mrs. BACHMANN. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for calling this together so that we could call attention to the job losses that are happening all across the United States. It's in your district. It's in my district. It's every one of our districts here that are represented this evening.

And I was absolutely shocked, as I've been watching this play out, of the Federal Government jumping in and taking over private businesses, beginning with Chrysler and then now with General Motors. We're seeing something that we haven't seen. I don't know if we ever have seen anything like this in the history of our country, and I am still livid over the conversation I had today.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time just a minute, what you just said is so important for people to understand, and that's because we don't have quite the sense of history. We've just heard from one of our other guests just a minute ago that this is a 25-year high in unemployment.

But what you've just talked about is, when the President goes in and fires the president of General Motors and appoints the people a board and decides to rewrite the bankruptcy laws, this is unprecedented. And I think, my good friend, you have a specific example from your district about what this could mean to Main Street America. I wish you'd saw share that with us tonight.

Mrs. BACHMANN. I do. I had met with dealers in my district before from Chrysler, and they looked me in the eye and they said they were just flabbergasted. They couldn't believe that they got a pink slip that they were going to be out of business by the end of the month. All the cars that they had on their lot they'd have to sell. They were going have to wrap up and go out of business by the end of the month. And they told me that they were one of the most successful Chrysler dealerships, not just in Minnesota, but in the Nation. They performed 160 percent better than the top performers in the country. They met all the criteria for staying open for Chrysler, and still they were pink-slipped. No one could understand.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, I'm just trying put myself in the shoes of the family who owned that dealership that you're talking about.

Mrs. BACHMANN. This particular family, Congressman, had put $5 million into this dealership just prior to receiving this notice. They were slated to adding another Jeep dealership to the Chrysler business that they already had. Significant amount of money, and they produced tax revenue to the amount of $3 million every year on that 5-acre parcel that they utilized.

Mr. AKIN. Just reclaiming my time, so you have a dealer who's been in business in your town for what, 90 years or something I think you were saying?

Mrs. BACHMANN. This particular dealer had been in the business since the early 1920s. The one that I spoke with today had been in business for 90 years. They were a General Motors dealership.

Mr. AKIN. Ninety years, and their dealership was assessed at, what was the value of it?

Mrs. BACHMANN. There's a recent appraisal done on this dealership, very successful dealership. They have all the debts paid. They own everything outright and clear, and the appraiser said this dealership is worth $15 million.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, so $15 million, and then you wake up one morning and you get this thing in the mail and it says your $15 million just basically vaporized, didn't it?

Mrs. BACHMANN. Was worthless. Now the only thing that their dealership is worth today is the underlying property that the building sits on. They put all sorts of money into building their building, which is now free and clear. They worked hard to make sure they could pay for it, and now it's a dealership building. And as most Americans know who are listening to us speak this evening, if you have a dealership building, you can't use it for much else other than a dealership. And trust me, there's no one out there right now who's too interested in buying an old used dealership building because there's not new car dealers going up out there.

Mr. AKIN. So once again we have another projection of this example of Washington thinking they know how to do everything, deciding who's going to be the president of General Motors. All of this money that belongs to our constituents, we're going to dump this money into various companies, and then we're going to try and manage. We can't manage D.C. What makes us think we can manage car companies?

What an example of—and I think there are some other examples of what's going on with some of this spending.

And I see that we're also joined by Congresswoman LUMMIS from Wyoming, I believe. So we've got the West pretty much covered. We've got Iowa covered. We're going to have Georgia in just a minute.

Please join us.

Mrs. LUMMIS. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for pulling us together this evening for this discussion.

In Wyoming, our economy is very much based in the energy industry because we have coal, oil, gas, uranium, wind, solar, biomass, and that is the mainstay of our economy by far.

So as we watch the 350 to 375 very small businesses that are drilling for oil and gas and see the legislation that is coming before this Congress at the behest of the Democratic Party, it will devastate our businesses.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, so you're talking about the tax that they're proposing to pay for some of the spending that is that cap-and-tax situation which is going to devastate small business, and small business, of course, is where these jobs are created; is that correct?

Mrs. LUMMIS. Absolutely. I think the Americans have the perception that Big Oil is who is recovering these natural resources; but even those firms hire very small, literally mom-and-pop operations, five and six employees to go out and drill the drilling, to do some environmental compliance, to do the surveying, and to complete those wells, and do the fracturing of the deep seams that are required to cause the gas to flow into a natural gas well. These are very small operators. As I said, in Wyoming alone, over 350 businesses.

Yet what we see on the horizon taxwise through the national energy tax that's being called cap-and-trade would be utterly devastating to those businesses.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, what you're doing is making a tremendously important connection. And I think a lot of people do get that impression that all of the jobs in America are General Motors or General Electric or Mobile Oil or whatever it happens to be. But in reality, as one of the most ranking members in small business, what you find is you define small business as about 500 employees or less. Small businesses create almost 80 percent of the new jobs in America.

So what you're saying is exactly spot on to what all of our data shows, and if you're looking at 80 percent of the new jobs and you're looking here at an increasing level of unemployment, what you should be paying attention to is what are you doing for small business. And what you're talking about is we're doing something that we haven't learned from history. You're going to slap a great big tax on them to cover up all of this spending. And what's going to happen is you're going to dry up the potential of those new jobs that could come from small business.

I appreciate you making that connection.

And I'm going to just jump over to my good friend from Georgia, a medical doctor, but also somebody who has quite a fair amount of passion about freedom and about some of these economic issues as well, my good friend Dr. BROUN from—is it the Atlanta area?

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. No, sir. I live near Watkinsville, Georgia, south of Athens, and I represent northeast Georgia. And I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The chart that you have down there on the floor. If you put the date of this week on the next bar, going back to what Mrs. BACHMANN was just talking about, these dealerships are shutting the doors. Dealerships may have 20 employees, they may have 30 or 40 employees. I've met with a number of them. There is a dealer in my district in Clayton, Georgia, in Rabun County, right up on the North Carolina line, called me this week and he got one of those pink slips. He is a customer of the automaker, and that's what all of these dealers are, they're actually customers. And what is happening is this administration is forcing the Big Three automakers to fire their customers, and that makes absolutely no economic sense.

But this dealer doesn't do any floor planning. In other words, he doesn't have to borrow money from the automaker to put the cars on his lot. He owns them all. He's paid for them all. He owns his dealership. He doesn't owe anything to the carmaker. But they have fired him. And in doing so, this administration has fired all their employees.

So the next bar for all of these dealerships I think is 780-some-odd just this week that are going to be fired—the dealership's going to be fired, thus all of their employees are going to be fired. And that's going to put that bar even higher. And it's just not right.

This is an unprecedented takeover from the private sector by this administration—by the car czar that has been set up by this President—and it is totally unconstitutional, it's totally against freedom, it's totally unprecedented. And it's exactly the same thing that Hugo Chavez is doing down in Venezuela.

So if we could imagine that next bar on that graph, it's going to be even higher than it is.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, what I'm hearing you say is—you're a medical doctor. You're not claiming to be some economic expert. You're saying common sense says that this 9.7 percent unemployment that we got right now is not the end of this problem and that the idea of the tremendous level of spending that we're seeing is not going to help. You're agreeing with Henry Morgenthau from 1939 that all of this spending is not going to make this any better. And what's more, a lot of that spending is going to result in more unemployment rather than less.

Is that the bottom line of what you're getting at?

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield, absolutely. That's what's going to happen. You cannot borrow and spend yourself to economic prosperity. And that's what's going on here. We're borrowing too much, we're spending too much, taxing too much, and it's going to cost jobs.

I'm sure we'll come back to discussing what the gentlelady from Wyoming was talking about because there is somebody else that's going to talk a lot of jobs across this country. But we're going down a road that is going to hurt our economy. It's going to cost jobs, as we see an increasing number of jobs on your chart there that are being lost. And unemployment claims, we're going to have more and more of those. And it's really taking away from the future of our children and your grandchildren.

Mr. AKIN. That's the bottom line. I think that's what's gotten us staying here this evening talking about this subject. This is critical. This is a very significant problem.

I would like to jump back to my friend from Iowa, Congressman KING, a gentleman who has run his own private business for many years before he came to Congress, knows a little bit about small business, knows a little bit about taxation and red tape. And he also understands what some of these massive government spending programs in the last year, what these are liable to do in terms of effects on our economy.

Mr. KING of Iowa. I thank the gentleman from Missouri. I started business in 1975, a capital-intensive business with a negative net worth so I had to actually make everything work or it would have collapsed around myself. And I remember prior to that looking for a job. I applied for a good number of jobs. Worked for other people. They worked for me. I had to build a business up a piece at a time, a component at a time.

One of the points that I think would illuminate this when I look at the numbers that are there on the chart: $700 billion on the Wall Street bailout, $787 billion in the stimulus plan. That was going to—and I remind everybody here and including Madam Speaker—if she were paying attention—I would be reminding her that President Obama said that his stimulus plan was going to save or create 3.5 million jobs—and that was just back a couple of months ago right there on the time line where a $787 billion. 3.5 million jobs saved or created. And I thought at the time, How do you measure a saved job? It was there when you started, it was there when you're done the. It's one that your economic plan didn't destroy, but it isn't necessarily one your economic plan saved.

So now we have the White House saying they've saved or created a dinky little 100,000–150,000 little jobs when their endeavor is 3.5 million jobs. And by the way, that number is not out of thin air. That is off of the White House's Web site, WhiteHouse.gov/economy. So those numbers are real.

Another image that flashes to my mind when I hear the gentleman from Georgia talk about Hugo Chavez, I had a flashback about the visitation that took place between our Commander in Chief, leader of the free world, President Obama and Hugo Chavez down in Central America. And I recall that we needed to have a strong message from the President of the United States that would embrace Colombia and ask for a vote on the floor of this House as was agreed to under those terms. We didn't get that meeting, but we got a glad-handed, big smiley happy face meeting between Hugo Chavez and President Obama.

And I remember the image that flashed in my mind. One of them is Hugo Chavez could declare our President to be El Diablo at the podium of the United Nations and say, The smell of sulfur still lingers from yesterday. And those anti-American people laughed and cashed our checks. And just a few months later we have President Obama glad-handing with Hugo Chavez. And when I saw that image, I realized that the great nationalizer of the industries in Venezuela who had just nationalized a rice plant that belongs to a good Minnesota company named Cargill was standing there smiling next to President Obama who was the greatest nationalizer of all, who has since nationalized two of the three largest carmakers in the world—General Motors and Chrysler—and we've watched the nationalization of our financial institutions, our insurance industry. The list goes on and on.

The free market system from top-down is being swallowed up and nationalized instead of privatized.

And I would also make this point that our President today was elected at least in part because he challenged President Bush and criticized President Bush for going into Iraq without an exit strategy. This President has declared that he doesn't want to own or manage Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, the financial institutions, the insurance agencies, or the automakers of America. But he has engaged in all of that without an exit strategy.

I call upon President Obama to come up with an exit strategy to divest the Federal government and the taxpayers from this private sector industry that have been so nationalized that he makes Chavez look like a piker.

And I yield back.

Mr. AKIN. That's really quite a summary of where we are. What we're getting at is this disease that struck the Washington area just one year or two ago. It's bailout fever, you know. And we got into this idea that we're going to bail everybody out—at least if you're big and important. If you're a small business, you're going to go bankrupt. If you're a car dealership, you go bankrupt and you lose $15 million in one day. But we're going to bail out all of these, and in the process, what's going on in unemployment? Is this nationalizing of businesses such a good idea? I think there are a lot of people having some very extreme second thoughts.

This was not going to happen if we voted for that great big porkulus bill. I'm on the Armed Service Committee. When you say $787 billion, that's more than my paycheck. I tried to figure out how much money is that. And the biggest thing we deal with in any committee is aircraft carriers. These are big things. If you ever get on an aircraft carrier, you could play a game of football on the deck of one. They're really big, and they cost a ton of money. We have 11 in our total fleet. They cost about $3 billion a piece.

So if you take a look at what happened to us in the first 5 weeks after we've been told that President Bush is spending way too much money, we put this bill in place—this was the trimmed-down version—on this floor we voted for $870-something billion. That would be over 250 aircraft carriers anchored end-to-end. I couldn't even imagine. You could make a highway across them. That's how much money that's in this package alone.

That's not the Wall Street bailout, and that's not this appropriations bill that's full of goods. That's not this international monetary bailout that they're talking about doing where we're going to take defense money and give it to foreign countries, put it in a fund so that Chavez and the Iranians and other people can take defense money out of the United States away from our taxpayers so that they can fund their governments, and we're talking about doing that. We're wondering why in the world do we have this unemployment. I think we're making some big mistakes economically.

I would like to jump back over to my very good friend Congresswoman BACHMANN who, by the way, is a great articulator of free enterprise principles and does a wonderful credit to Minnesota.

We're delighted that you're here, and please chip in and join in.

Mrs. BACHMANN. I thank the gentleman from Missouri.

And I'm very concerned again about these motor takeovers from the Federal Government. One thing that I am very concerned about, a story came out today where there's been approximately 1,500 letters that have gone out to GM dealerships.

One story that came out today, there is a dealership that I know of that applied to their Democrat Senator to appeal for help so that they could stay open. That Senator was able to arrange a meeting between the dealer and the officials at GM. We all know GM is now Government Motors because it's owned by the American people. It's been nationalized. There is no private corporations the way we used to think of GM. Now, the main stockholder is the American Government. So this Democrat Senator who was applied to for help was able to secure a meeting with General Motors and a car dealership, and they were able to get their dealership back.

Well, that's great, that's wonderful.

There is also another article I saw today where a constituent had contacted one of the representatives, a Democrat representative here in this Chamber, Representative BARNEY FRANK. BARNEY FRANK was able to go and talk to the right people and get this dealership back open. Is that what we have come to in this country, that rather than a private business with a private contract with another private corporation, they're no longer able to work out their agreements because, as columnist Michael Barone has called, he said, Now we've moved into the realm of gangster government. We have gangster government when the Federal Government has set up a new cartel and private businesses now have to go begging with their hand out to their local—hopefully well politically connected—Congressman or their Senator so they can buy a peace offering for that local business. Is that the kind of country we are going to have in the future?

When I was on the phone today for over an hour with one of my local dealers, the very first thing out of her mouth was this, she said, This is the most un-American thing I have ever seen in my life. I can't believe that I lived to see the day that my country would come to this point where, having my dealership for 90 years, I get a letter FedExed to me that tells me I have until Friday to sign this document to not only give up my company that was made worthless—worth $15 million, made worthless overnight—now GM is demanding that she hand over her customer list, her service customer list to GM. Why? GM most likely will use those customer lists, they will give it to her former competitors. What is she getting for this? What is her remuneration? She had the rug pulled out from her and from her husband. They virtually lost everything overnight to what? To what Michael Barone calls a gangster government.

We need to call this for what this is, my colleagues. We need to call this for what this is. Call it out. The American people need to get outraged and figure out that it could be them next. No business is safe when you see the administration appoint czars—car czars, wage czars—there's over 20 czars that have been appointed. And what do those czars do? They bypass the Congress. We are the people's elected representatives; we have been bypassed.

We now have an imperial presidency where the President has appointed various czars reporting directly to him. And now he is reaching into the confines of private businesses and overnight rendering them virtually worthless—unless, unless they have a special tug, a political tie to a local Democrat Congressman. Is that what we've come to? And I yield back.

Mr. AKIN. Well, I just appreciate the lady's passion and strong support for the concept of freedom.

You know, what we're really talking about here is, what is the job of the government? And we have come to a point where we have actually elected people who have forgotten this basic concept, and that is, the government that can give you anything you want can also take away everything from you, including your freedom.

And that is the great danger of this insidious creeping bureaucracy where the Government inserts itself into all kinds of different businesses. The Founders would have been outraged at what you've just described. And even people from not so many generations before us would say, that is impossible, that could never happen in America.

Mrs. BACHMANN. If the gentleman would yield, the Founders went so far as they began a revolution over a stamp tax, over a stamp tax. This is the actual outright taking of someone's personal property. And the Founders were unwilling to pass the Constitution without the Bill of Rights. And as the gentleman knows, the Bill of Rights was to protect individuals, people, not to protect government, but to protect people from the encroachment of big government upon their leaders. And the Fifth Amendment guarantees the right of your personal property. Big government cannot come in, they are prohibited from coming in and taking your personal property without just compensation. Here is a perfect example of violation of these citizens' Fifth Amendment rights.

Mr. AKIN. You are absolutely right. And we have seen other examples of it; the decision in Connecticut where some local municipality decided to trample the Fifth Amendment, just walk right in and take somebody's private home in order to make a strip mall so they could tax the strip mall. And the Supreme Court jumped to the defense of the local government saying, that's just fine. And they just ignored the Fifth Amendment.

And so we see this continuously growing government. And if you take a look at where we are spending money, it is just absolutely amazing. And here is an example. This is a town that is supposedly almost bankrupt—I think it's Pawtucket, Rhode Island, if I remember right. The city on the verge of bankruptcy spends $550,000 in stimulus money for a skateboard park. Now, what in the world is the Federal Government doing with bicycle racks in D.C. in million-dollar neighborhoods, skateboard parks somewhere else. We're putting it all in here and claiming somehow it's going to make unemployment better, and yet the numbers are going nuts. The President, it seems—what's going on with the White House Press Corps? He claims they've just created 150,000 jobs, and yet you see the data going, we're already at 9.7 percent.

And it's my understanding, when you jump to the next big tax we're talking about, they want to be like Spain. And Spain has the enviable 17.5 percent unemployment. Is that where we're going? How long is this going to go before the American public says enough already; it's time to change this big spending?

If you want to see this thing graphically, this is a little bit chilling. This is historic budget imbalance. These are the different years of the Presidents. These years over here are President Bush. And those of us here that are Republicans, we didn't like the fact that President Bush was spending too much money. This is deficit spending. This is a budget imbalance. But take a look. When we were kids, didn't you have to go—what was it, first grade, what thing doesn't fit the pattern? Take a look at this year. Take a look at this budget imbalance that we're talking about. You think that's not going to affect jobs? You don't think that means the government is going to get its nose into all kinds of people's business? That's what we're concerned about.

I would like to go to my good friend, Congresswoman LUMMIS from Wyoming. You know, the thing I like about Wyoming and the Western States? You have a sense of freedom and a little bit of a sense of property ownership and you have a sense of small business. And I appreciate that perspective. Please join our conversation.

Mrs. LUMMIS. I thank the gentleman.

In Wyoming, we have had surpluses in our budget for the last 7 years, and it is because of the explosive growth in the production of energy. It has made our unemployment among the lowest in the Nation. In fact, there were times during the last 7 years that we have had, statistically, zero unemployment. Incredible. While I was running for this position, I stopped at a fast-food place to get an iced tea late at night, and they offered me a job and my daughter a job at this fast-food place because they are so much in need of employees.

Wyoming is unique in that regard, and it is because we are producing domestic energy. And there are new discoveries of domestic natural gas all over the United States. The Balkan in North Dakota is fantastic. It is producing wealth for people who have been farming at that very narrow margin of profitability, 0 to 4 percent, for years.

Mr. AKIN. Well, wait just a minute. You're talking about we're creating jobs and wealth and all this, and the government is not doing it? Oh, my goodness. That's a novel idea; the government is not coming in and telling you how to run everything.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Not only are we producing the cleanest burning hydrocarbon that there is, natural gas, but we are doing it in a way that makes us less dependent on foreign energy. And what we are seeing in this Congress are policies that will actually make us more dependent on foreign energy at a time—

Mr. AKIN. Let me just stop you there because what you said is very, very important. You are finding sources of natural gas—one of the cleanest burning fuels that we know, in terms of hydrocarbon-type fuels anyway—and you are finding that, which is making it so that you have plenty of jobs in Wyoming, you are not doing it with a lot of government help, and yet the government is going to try to create policies to make us more dependent on foreign energy. What would that be? I would suppose that one way to do that would be to tax your natural gas, because if that's taxed, then the foreigners have a better chance of getting business here. Is that where you're going?

Mrs. LUMMIS. And to the gentleman from Missouri, we are also proposing in this Congress to tax drilling costs, to raise the taxes on the brackets, to do away with the death tax, to put the recovery of natural gas under the Safe Drinking Water Act. Virtually every time I turn around, almost every day here, we are doing something that will impair our ability to produce our own natural resources.

And it's not just in Wyoming, there have been these fabulous new finds of natural gas that run up both sides of the Appalachian Mountains all the way from Pennsylvania clear to the Southern States. All of those States could have new natural gas production, the cleanest burning hydrocarbon, that reduces our need for foreign energy, that reduces the out-migration of jobs, it keeps them here, it grows them here. It grows revenue for those States.

I can tell you, as our State treasurer in Wyoming for 8 years, we had, just off interest income off State investments, the largest source of income for our State's general fund from one source, interest income off State investments. And all of those State investments, every one of them, came from severance taxes on oil, gas, coal, uranium.

Mr. AKIN. Isn't that something? Well, you are an energetic Congresswoman from an energetic State. And it's encouraging to hear that we do have those supplies of energy here.

It is ironic, I think, that when you take a look back at the history of the Department of Energy, it was created so that America could be energy independent. And they have added many, many jobs to the Department of Energy, and yet we have become more and more dependent on foreign energy. And if we had more people like you in this Congress, I think that would change, and we would see that we would be getting back to good old American energy of a lot of different types. And we would let the marketplace, and not the government, make the choices as to which type you are going to use in each State.

My good friend from Georgia, Congressman BROWN.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Congressman AKIN, I appreciate you yielding.

I wanted to come back to something that you said that I think the American people need to understand very clearly. The President has talked about looking to Spain as being the model of this energy tax—I call it tax-and-cap because it's about taxes, it's about revenue for the Federal Government, it's about getting more revenue to socialize medicine and other things to nationalize, all of the business and industry that is already being nationalized, and even more. But in Spain, I would like to confirm something. It is my understanding, if you would, please, sir, it's my understanding in Spain, when they put on their tax-and-cap or cap-and-trade policy a number of years ago, they touted it as creating green jobs.

Mr. AKIN. I think they call them subprime jobs now, but go ahead, Congressman.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Well, the point is, they talked about creating green jobs. Just recently, one of their—I think it's members of Parliament—was over here talking to the Conservative Opportunity Society. And he told us—I don't recall if you were there, Mr. AKIN, or not—but he said for every single green job that was produced in Spain they lost 2.2 jobs. The green jobs that were created were temporary jobs; the jobs that were lost were permanent jobs, industrial jobs. And that's what I kind of recall. Is that correct?

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, that was exactly what he said. And actually, that made common sense to me because when you go back to this Keynesian economic scheme, what they would argue would be, Hey, we just took all this tax money and we hired these people; so when we hired somebody, we created a job; so, therefore, we had a net. We just hired someone to increase the job by one.

And what the economist found was, when you take that tax money out of things, what happens is, when you took the tax money away to hire the one person, you lost 2.2 jobs over in the private side. So that ratio seems to kind of follow the economic principle that when the Federal Government—yes, you can have the Federal Government take a whole lot of money and hire a lot of people to dig holes in the ground, or whatever, but when you do it by taking that money away from the private sector, you are killing those small businesses, which is a source of where you're generating a lot of these jobs. So I think that is where he was going.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. If the gentleman would yield back just a half second. I want to go back to the outrage that my dear friend, MICHELE BACHMANN from Minnesota, was showing us. The American people should be outraged. And the American people can call a stop to this. We can't. We, as Republicans, have offered alternative after alternative. Wall Street bailout; we offered an alternative, and President Bush, Henry Paulson, the leadership in the House and Senate wouldn't accept it. The nonstimulus—as you call it porkulus bill; I call it the nonstimulus stimulus bill—we offered alternatives. The leadership in this House were obstructionists and wouldn't allow us to have an open hearing and discuss it.

The omnibus appropriations, we had alternatives. We have had alternatives for all this. They call us the Party of No, n-o, but really we are the Party of Know, k-n-o-w, because we know how to help stimulate the economy. We know how to create jobs, and you do that through small business and give the money back in ways to create an environment where small business can create jobs. As the gentleman from Missouri so aptly told us just a few minutes ago, small businesses is where those jobs are created. It's about 85 percent of them. But we have offered alternative after alternative. And this what I call "tax-and-cap" legislation has been estimated it's going to cost America, that somewhere between 1.7 to 8 million jobs are going to be lost. In my district in northeast Georgia, we have got in multiple counties right at 14 percent unemployment.

Mr. AKIN. You're talking about millions of job loss as a result of this new tax that's being concocted here.

I would like to recognize another doctor who has joined us. We have got some doctors out tonight, and my good friend Dr. BURGESS, I want to recognize him. What we have been talking about is this incredible trend in unemployment and also the trend of excessive spending.

I would be happy to have your perspective, Doctor.

Mr. BURGESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I was watching in my office and heard this discussion, and I did want to come over and say just a few words.

Of course, you're correct. We had a report in our Joint Economic Committee last Friday about the current unemployment rate in excess of 9 percent. Of course, we spent $878 billion in February of this year. The President told us that was what we had to spend in order to prevent the unemployment rate from going in excess of 8 percent. Clearly we have seen that number already exceeded. And then we heard at the beginning of this week that because of those numbers, the President was going to accelerate the pace of spending, accelerate the pace of distributing the stimulus money. We weren't spending fast enough was our problem.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, I know the comments need to be directed to the Speaker's chair, but I would remind the Speaker that none of us in this room, in fact, no Republican, voted for in favor of that stimulus bill last February.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time for a moment, in a way that's a little bit unusual, isn't it? There are usually a few Democrats who will vote differently than their party or a few Republicans who will vote differently. In this case, though, on this great big porkulus bill, every single Republican voted "no."

Mr. BURGESS. You're absolutely right. Every single one of us did a gut check and said this is not what I came to Washington, DC, to do. It's not what I came to accomplish.

One of the things I wanted to share with the gentleman and share with the House tonight, my hometown newspaper, the Dallas Morning News, runs a column every Sunday by a columnist named Scott Burns, a respected economist. Scott Burns this Sunday was quoting an economist in Austin, Texas, Lacy Hunt. Lacy Hunt, going back to the Great Depression, said, and I am quoting here: "Irving Fisher saw it first. The man who may have been the greatest American economist wrote about the debt-deflation theory of the Great Depression in 1933. He saw that excess debt controls nearly all the economic variables." He went on to say: "Think about it for a minute. It's a very powerful statement. Excess debt controls nearly all of the economic variables."

What does that mean? That means we cannot control the unemployment rate. That means almost everything is out of our grasp because of the massive amount of debt that we have accumulated. And on Monday of this week, the President said he wanted to accelerate the pace of spending because we weren't getting that money out the door fast enough. Again let me reiterate, excess debt controls every other economic variable. It was true in 1933. I suspect the same is true today.

He goes on to say, Scott Burns, "It means that the government stimulus won't do much. Basically you can't borrow your way out of excess debt." I think every Member on the floor here tonight has recognized that at one time or another.

And then the final point that he made: "The only thing that will allow recovery is the passage of time."

Fortunately, Congress is not in control of that, and time will pass at a set rate regardless of what we think that it will or won't do.

Mr. AKIN. Reclaiming my time, I want to get what you're saying because I think this is important. You're saying there is a relationship between this tremendous level of debt that we are building and the unemployment numbers. In other words, when you have a whole lot more debt, particularly debt with spending, and, of course, spending is causing the debt, you're going to have bad trouble with unemployment. Is that what this economist is saying, gentleman?

Mr. BURGESS. Precisely correct. And I thank the gentleman for yielding back.

We are in a period of prolonged economic underperformance is the other statement they go on to make. It will essentially be a lost decade. We will recover, but the operative factor will be time and not actions. That is something that most people do not want to hear.

Again, excess debt controls almost every other economic facet. You cannot spend your way out of this problem. The unemployment rate went up. The correct response is to not shove more money out the door. The correct response is do what you can to get control of that spending and begin to erode the debt, begin to put the debt on a glide path to reduction. That's where the recovery will come, and that will take time. There is no other way around that.

But, again, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think this is a wonderful discussion that you've had tonight. I thank you for bringing this to the attention of the American people.

Mr. AKIN. I appreciate the doctor from Texas bringing some wisdom here and some economic common sense. And certainly I think most people know intuitively these things are connected. If you spend a whole lot, eventually you're going to go into debt and then the debt is going to influence things. And in this case, I am an engineer by training, not a medical doctor, but it's almost like drawing a vacuum economically in the economy. So those small businesses that we are just hearing about like out in Wyoming, those small businesses don't have the money they need to invest to drill a well or whatever it is; so the main engine of job creation just dries up. So what you are doing is almost like either starving or dehydrating your economy because the government is just becoming so oppressive and expansive in everything that it is trying to do. And as we heard eloquently expressed from the gentleman from Minnesota, the story about what happens when the Federal Government starts to get into the business of running car things. I am picturing there is going to be somebody possibly listening into our discussion that's going to be a cartoonist, and they are going to think about the automobile that is going to be designed by the U.S. Congress, and they are going to have an interesting caricature of what the engine and the wheels look like and how big it is and all kinds of things. There is probably already a YouTube being created or something along those lines. But it's not a pretty picture of having the Federal Government running our business in our private sector. And the genius of our country is to make that distinction, and we are blurring it badly and it's going to cause a lot of trouble.

I am going to yield to my good friend Congressman KING from Iowa. Please join us.

Mr. KING of Iowa. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for yielding.

There are a couple of points that linger in my mind. One of them is to add to the points that the gentlemen from Georgia and Missouri were making about Spain, and I concur. For every green job created, it cost 2.2 jobs in the private sector because it starved capital, but also each of those green jobs created cost $770,000 to generate that job. So it was a massive cost in capital.

I want to throw another point into this in a brief way, a teaser in a way.

The cap-and-trade component of this legislation that's impending to be driven through this House floor yet this month of June, we have experience with that here in the House of Representatives. When Speaker PELOSI was elected and received the gavel, she declared that this Capitol complex would be carbon neutral. So she ordered that the generating plant that provides the electricity that illuminates this room when she allows the lights to be on would be changed from coal generation over to natural gas under the auspices of this idea that natural gas isn't a hydrocarbon, which we know can't be upheld by an engineer or a doctor or a layperson. But in any case, she ordered the switch over to natural gas, doubled the cost of the electricity, and still found out we were not carbon neutral but we're still emitting a surplus of CO₂ into the atmosphere, so went on the Board of Trade and purchased $89,000 worth of carbon credits, the very central commodity that is at the middle of the cap-and-trade discussion that's going to be presented on the floor of this House, $89,000 for carbon credits to offset the CO₂ emissions that are going off into the atmosphere so we can light this Capitol complex. And I chased that back down and found out that some of that money went to no-till farmers in South Dakota. Presumably they had still been farming in South Dakota. It didn't change their behavior. And some of that money also went to a coal-fired generating plant at Chillicothe, Iowa, that had received a government grant to burn switchgrass. I went there and looked at that. They hadn't burned any switchgrass in 2 years and got a check anyway. That's how cap-and-trade will work in the United States of America. If we can't get it right in Congress, we are not going to get it right in America.

Mr. AKIN. I appreciate that vivid example of more wasted time. I am going to yield again to my good friend Congresswoman BACHMANN from Minnesota.

Mrs. BACHMANN. Last weekend my family sat down and we were watching the commercial movie "Titanic." And as I was listening to Dr. BURGESS from Texas talk about the debt and the burgeoning debt load that the United States takes, once the ice gash came in the side of the Titanic, which we all remember was called the "unsinkable Titanic," we think of the United States. Nothing can possibly sink the United States. We will always be a superpower. But one thing that has kept us a superpower has been freedom, free market economists. We are in the process of watching the deconstruction of free market economists before our very eyes, something we have never seen. But as the ice ripped that hole in the Titanic, water started being taken on, and the engineer came out and brought the blueprint of the Titanic. Water came into the first chamber, spilled over to the second, spilled over to the third, and by the time it filled up so many chambers, it was over. It was impossible to resurrect that ship.

That's, I think, Mr. AKIN, what you have been bringing before this body this evening. You've been showing to the American people that at a certain point when we have such excessive levels of spending that in turn leads to such excessive level of taxation that in turn leads us to excessive levels of borrowing that at a certain point we wonder what that tipping point will be if the United States will not be able to recover.

We do have an alternative, as Dr. BROWN said. We have a positive alternative that next quarter we could already see growth in our economy. But this plan that President Obama has put forward is the kind of plan that we could watch last night, or last weekend on TNT in the movie "Titanic." If we follow that plan that President Obama has put before us, we know what that outcome will be and a lot of very innocent people may go down with that ship.

Mr. AKIN. I very much thank Congresswoman BACHMANN and the other great guests that we have had tonight. I thank you for this little symposium on freedom and the need to have the Federal Government restrained to its proper limits.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Madam Speaker, for the next hour, I am going to be joined by a number of my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle, and most of them are members of the GOP Doctors Caucus, and we are going to spend time, Madam Speaker, talking about health care reform. Certainly that is the number one thing that's on our plate as we go through these next 6 weeks leading up to the August recess. And, of course, as the President has outlined his desire to have a health reform bill on his desk for signature sometime in mid October of this year, whether or not that can be done remains to be seen. There are a lot of thoughts out there as to how to approach this, but we feel that it's very important as physician Members. I think there is something like 339 years of clinical experience combined in this GOP Doctors Caucus. About 15 of us are health care professionals who have actually practiced in the field, if you will, most of us involved just in clinical medicine, what I like to refer to, Madam Speaker, as meat-and-potatoes medicine. Not research at some high academic institutions but actually seeing patients every day in the office, in the operating room, in the delivery room. And so I think we have a perspective that we would like to share with Members on both sides of the aisle.

Earlier in the evening, Madam Speaker, we heard from the 30-Something Group on the Democratic majority side. They were very articulate, very well spoken, but I think very wrong in some of the ideas that they have in regard to a government default plan, and we will talk about this during the hour.

□ 2200

I have been joined by a couple of my colleagues, Dr. John Freeman, the doctor from Louisiana; and Dr. PAUL BROWN from Georgia.

I would like to yield time to my colleague from Louisiana at this point.

Mr. FLEMING. I thank my friend and fellow physician and colleague, Dr. GINGREY.

You made reference to the 30-Something Democrats, and I watched that debate, that discussion with great interest because, to be honest with you, with 32 years of medical practice and also owning businesses for nearly as long, when I hear this discussion about how a public plan can work, I really try to view that and try to understand that; but I always come out totally mystified with how this sort of thing could ever work.

And to clarify the debate, basically Congress right now is looking at three different options. One is a total single payer nationalized health care system, Medicare for all. One would be a private system for all, which is what we, on the Republican side, back. And then the other is a public and private system that are competing with one another. So I really watch with great interest our colleagues on the other side—none of whom are physicians, I might add—talk about how this could be a great deal, a great success, where you have a public system that's competing with a private system, somehow that's going to drive cost and prices down, and we're going to get a dividend from that.

Well, what I would do is point out to my colleagues, let's look at Medicare today and Medicaid as well, both government-run systems. Both of them are running out of money rapidly, the budgets are exploding and expanding, and they are living off the fat of the private system. Today we know—in fact, a recent survey, a study came out showing that the average subscriber to private insurance spends an extra $1,000 a year to support the Medicare and Medicaid system. We also know that a lot of that support comes by way of the uninsured who are routed through the emergency room, who don't have any coverage; and if you think that the Medicare recipients pay for that, forget it. That's not happening. Who is paying for that is the taxpayer and those who subscribe to private plans.

So right now the systems that exist, Medicare and Medicaid, are, for the most part, supported not by premiums and not even fully by the taxpayers, but are supported by those who pay premiums into private plans. So if you expand Medicare to where everyone is eligible for a Medicare-type plan, who in their right mind is going to stay on private insurance when they know that they're going to have to pay increasing size premiums in order to get the same level of care that those on Medicare, who are largely supported by taxes, are going to get?

What ends up happening is you lose that critical mass of those under private insurance, and so private insurance then becomes only an afterthought, a sliver of the economy. So what you're left with is a giant public system, a Medicare that's much bigger than what we have today. Incidentally, I will remind those that today, as it stands, Medicare will run out of money within 10 years, as it is. It's unsustainable as it is. Now if we grow it into a much bigger system, where are those cost savings going to come from?

I will yield back in a moment, but I just want to bring out the fact that no one has ever been able to show that a government-run system, particularly a health care system, but any government-run system in which the economy is being controlled in some way has ever controlled cost. And even today we know that health care costs are going up twice the rate of inflation.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I want to apologize to the gentleman. I referred to him as Dr. John Freeman. Actually, it's Dr. JOHN FLEMING, a family practitioner from the great State of Louisiana. And it reminds me, the reason I did that, Madam Speaker, is because Dr. John Freeman was one of my classmates in medical school and also one of my co-residents in my OB/GYN training back in Georgia. I think Dr. John Freeman practiced his entire career in Boone, North Carolina; and I hope Dr. John, wherever he is, is doing well, if he happens to be tuning into C-SPAN tonight.

I wanted to say before yielding time to my colleague, Dr. PAUL BROUN, a fellow physician and family practitioner from the Athens and Augusta areas of Georgia, there was a letter sent from the National Coalition on Benefits within the last couple of days, addressed to the leadership of the House and Senate, House Speaker NANCY PELOSI, House Minority Leader JOHN BOEHNER, Senate Majority Leader HARRY REID, and Senate Minority Leader MITCH MCCONNELL, talking about the strong opposition to a public plan. I don't have time to stand here and read the names of all of these firms, but just to mention a few: Wal-Mart Stores, Xerox Corporation, Wellpoint Incorporated, Weyerhaeuser Company, National Restaurant Association, Bank of America, National Association of Health Underwriters, CIGNA Corporation, Chrysler LLC, Nike. I could go on and on. That's just maybe 5 percent of the number of companies that are a part of this National Coalition on Benefits that are so opposed to this idea of a public plan, which our colleagues, the 30-Something group, just an hour ago touted so strongly.

At this point, I would like to yield to my good friend and colleague from Georgia, Dr. PAUL BROUN.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Thank you, Dr. GINGREY, for yielding.

I think the American people need to look at what President Obama said as a candidate and go back to what Dr. FLEMING was talking about just a few moments ago about the options. Republicans are offering options because certainly we need to do something about health care financing. People are hurting. Health care expenses have gotten too high. Medicines are too high in the drugstore. Doctor bills are too high. Doctors are actually earning less money today. When I was practicing full time prior to coming to Congress, I was making in real dollars less money than I did 20 years ago and seeing as many or more patients. We see the whole health care system being strained tremendously. But candidate Obama talked about giving the American public options, a public versus private option. He said, if you like your current insurance, fine. Stay there. But as Dr. FLEMING was talking about just a few minutes ago, what President Obama is actually offering us is a reduced-price health care financing system that's going to take away people's choices. It's going to take away their ability to choose their doctors. It's going to take away their ability to choose the hospital, what medicines that they have. It's going to delay them being able to get needed procedures, surgeries, delayed in getting x rays that are needed, ordered by their doctor. It's going to take the choices away from the patient, and it's going to put those choices in the hands of a Washington bureaucrat. I don't think the American people want that. I'm not sure that they understand yet what we're talking about tonight in our second opinion, that government-run health care is not going to give them the choices that they're used to today. They're not going to be able to stay in their private plans because they're going to be priced out of the market. They're going to have to go to that government-sponsored plan that is going to markedly narrow their choices.

What it's going to do is it's going to kill people because, as we saw in the stimulus bill, there is a new program set up in the Federal Government to look at cost effectiveness and comparative effectiveness, comparing the effectiveness of health care decisions. Age is going to be one of the measures of how those decisions are going to be made.

We already see this happening in Canada. We already see it happening in all the socialized health care systems around the world. When people have celebrated a few birthdays and are getting what growing up down in Georgia folks talked about being "long in the tooth," a little white haired, as I am turning to be, then what happens in those government-run health care systems is they just deny the procedures, deny the tests, deny the care that the people need to stay alive, and people just die.

Now, in Canada, a system that many tout, many on the other side in the Democratic Party tout the Canadian system and others, if you are a certain age and need a kidney transplant, you just don't get it. If you need bypass surgery, if you are a certain age, they will put you on the list, but you never get off the list. You just die. If you need medications, you are denied those. If you have cancer treatment that is needed, you just don't get those.

We in this country, with the health care that we as physicians can give, we have made marked strides since I graduated from the Medical College of Georgia in how people survive various forms of cancers.

I think Dr. ROE is probably going to talk about breast cancer, because he very eloquently talks about that frequently, but our breast cancer survival rates in this country are extremely good. In other countries, where they have socialized medicine, people die, and there is very poor long-term survivability of that disease. Heart disease, diabetes, you can go down the list of all these chronic diseases.

In socialized health care systems, as this administration and the leadership in this House and the Senate across the way want to take us, it is going to take away people's choices. They are not going to be able to get the care that they desperately need to stay alive, and it is just the wrong thing to do.

Dr. GINGREY, I just congratulate your efforts in trying to bring these things out to the American public, and I appreciate your being one of the cochairman of the Doctors Caucus and helping the American people to understand the direction that we are being led by this leadership, the liberal leadership in this House and the Senate, because it is not going to be in the best interests of the American public, and it is actually going to create a financial collapse, as Dr. FLEMING was talking about, that is going to be exacerbated, and people are going to be exasperated because of this rationing of care, taking away their choices, and some Federal Government bureaucrat in Washington, DC is going to make those health decisions for them. It is not going to be their doctor, it is not going to be their family and it is not going to be the patient, and it is the wrong thing to do.

I thank you for yielding.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman.

Before yielding to our colleague from Tennessee, Dr. ROE, a fellow OB-GYN physician, I just want to say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, Madam Speaker, that what we are about is trying to work in a cooperative way on both sides of the aisle and offer our expertise, to say to our colleagues, and there are some health care practitioners on the majority side as well, and we have reached out to them and made ourselves available, we want to be at the table.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, we are not at the table. We haven't been enjoined, if you will. But we still hope, because we do have some ideas, I think some very good ideas, in regard to bringing down the cost of health care, making it more accessible, making it more portable, making it available to everybody, and that would include people who are currently considered high risk, maybe even considered uninsurable, or if they can get insurance it is because they can afford to pay three or four times the normal standard rate, which many, many cannot.

So we want to talk about some of those things tonight, and we will get back to that.

At this point I yield to my colleague from Tennessee, Representative ROE.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Thank you, Dr. GINGREY and also Madam Speaker. It is good to be here tonight to discuss a very important, and I believe, Dr. GINGREY and Madam Speaker, probably from a social standpoint, the most important issue that we will discuss, and probably this health care debate is the most important one since the mid-sixties when Medicare was voted on.

Just to give you a little background, I am a native Tennessean, practiced medicine in Johnson City, Tennessee, in that region for 31 years, and really saw a tremendous change in the health care delivery system from 1970 when I graduated from medical school until the current. I really marvel myself at the miracles that occurred.

I recall when I was in medical school when St. Jude's Children's Hospital had just opened, it hadn't been there long, and the death rate among childhood cancers was 80-plus percent. Today, over 80 percent of those children survive and live and thrive.

We are having a debate on what kind of system best fits America and its personality, and I will share with you some things we have learned in Tennessee about a public and a private system.

What I hear when I am out talking to people is that, number one, they are worried about the cost of care. They are worried about the availability of it. And there is another whole discussion that we haven't had, which is accessibility.

As we age, as the medical population and caregivers age, there is going to be a huge problem of accessibility in this country. We are already seeing it in our own communities, where in the next 7 years we will need 1 million more registered nurses in America. In the next 8 to 10 years there will be more physicians retiring and dying than we are producing in this country.

Well, you know, that is not sustainable. You cannot maintain the quality of care that we have grown to expect and the medical advances we have grown to expect without practitioners. That is an entirely different issue, not part of this debate, but indeed very much a part of this debate.

In Tennessee, about 14 or 15 years ago we had Medicaid. We got a waiver to try a managed care system. Back in the eighties and nineties, managed care was going to be how we were going to control the ever-escalating health care costs. So it was a wonderful idea to try to provide care to as many Tennesseans as we could at as low a cost as we could.

What we did was we hastily put a plan together, as we are doing right here in this Congress right now. The most astounding thing I have ever heard in my life is in 60 days, or less than that, we are going to vote on a health care plan that affects every American citizen, 300 million of us. And your health care choices, as you know, are very personal choices. They are between you and your physician and your family.

So the plan was a managed care plan, and it was a very rich plan. It provided a lot of care for not much money, and for some people no money. What happened was that people made very logical choices. About 45 percent of the people who ended up on TennCare actually had private health insurance, but dropped it. Why did they drop their care? Well, you had a plan, this TennCare plan, which was cheaper, but provided more coverage, so therefore people made again a very conscious decision.

The problem with the plan is, as with every public plan so far, is it does not pay the cost of the care. That cost has been shifted over to the private sector. So when you look at your health insurance costs going up each year, you are paying or supplementing, a tax really, on your private health insurance premiums caused by the increased usage of the public plan.

In Tennessee, for instance, the TennCare plan covered about 60 percent of the cost of actually providing the care. If everyone in Tennessee had the TennCare plan, most providers would lock the door, throw the key away and walk away because they couldn't pay their bills. Medicare, another plan that we have, pays about 90 percent of the cost, and our uninsured pay somewhere in between.

Now, what I think will happen with this public plan is that once again, because politicians are involved in designing the plan, what will happen is more and more and more things will be promised about what will be covered in the plan, but when it comes to paying for it, and if we have time we can get in and discuss the Massachusetts plan a little bit, what will happen is you will have a Medicaid plan that doesn't pay the cost, you will have a Medicare plan that doesn't pay the cost, and you will have a public funded "competitive" plan that is subsidized by government but doesn't pay the full cost of the care, meaning more and more costs will be shifted on to the private payers.

Well, what will happen over time, I think, is that, again, individuals first, small businesses, 20, 30, 40, 50 in the business will say, We just can't afford this private continually escalating cost of private health insurance. And what will happen then is more will be shifted to the public plan, and over time you'll end up with a single-payer system. And a lot would say, and I've heard it argued here on the House floor, Well, so what? What's wrong with that? We have a government-run, one-payer health care system. What's the problem with that? Everybody has coverage. Well, everybody has a health insurance card, but that doesn't necessarily mean you can get health care. Don't confuse a plastic card that says you have coverage with actually getting care.

Well, what do I mean by that? Well, let me give you an example.

When President Clinton had his heart attack, he went to the hospital, had a heart attack. He was operated on several days later, I think 3 or 4 days, and probably the reason, in my opinion, he probably got a blood thinner that took a few days to get out of his system. And he was operated on and went home.

Had he had that heart attack in Canada, they would have said, Mr. Clinton, you can go home and in 117 days, that's the average amount of time it takes to get a bypass operation in Canada, you can come back and get your bypass operation.

Two weeks ago, I was in Morristown, Tennessee, talking to a physician there who is Canadian. His father began to have chest pain. I won't go through all the details about how long it took him to get a treadmill, how long it took him to see a cardiologist. Anyway, 11 months later, the man got—his left anterior descending coronary artery was 90 percent blocked, and he finally survived and got a bypass operation. I do not believe the American people are going to put up with that type of health care system. We are not.

The other thing that I think that's been so astonishing to me, and I know Dr. GINGREY and Dr. FLEMING, you have seen this, and Dr. BROWN also, are the medical advances. When I graduated from medical school, we had one cephalosporin antibiotic, one. That's a type of antibiotic we use in infection. There probably are 50 today.

There were about five antihypertensives, high blood pressure medicines, three of which caused severe side effects. I mean, it was almost better to have the high blood pressure than take this medicine. Today there are over 50, and the side effects have been reduced dramatically. People do so much better.

So there are a lot of reasons, and we can go to it, and I'm going to yield back some time now, Dr. GINGREY and Dr. FLEMING, for comments. And I have some other comments about a single-payer system. It's a good idea, as you pointed out a moment ago, to try to cover as many people as we can in this Nation as inexpensively as we can, and I agree with that.

I yield back.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Well, I thank the gentleman. And before yielding back to Dr. FLEMING, I wanted to say to my colleagues, Madam Speaker, that we are the party of a second opinion. And, of course, tonight we are talking about health care reform, but it could be an energy bill, a comprehensive, all-of-the-above approach to solving our energy problems and any other issue. But none really at this point in time is more important than solving this health care problem.

And the bottom line is to, again, to lower the cost of health care, to make it accessible to everyone within their financial reach. And there are so many things that we can do short of, Madam Speaker, turning this over to the Federal Government to run what may be like they run Amtrak or the post office or, indeed, the Medicare program. And I don't think that that's what people really want and expect. We can do better than that. And there are a number of issues in particular that we could talk about in detail if we had more than just an hour, Madam Speaker.

But clearly, this idea of electronic medical records, I think, is a way eventually to save money. I think the money that we put in the stimulus package, $19 billion to provide grants, I've got a piece of legislation that would help physicians purchase hardware and software and a maintenance program that's specialty specific, whether it was my specialty of OB/GYN or Dr. FLEMING's specialty of family practice or a general surgery specialty program produced by a company in my district called Greenway where you have, as part of that electronic medical record program, you have algorithms set up of best practices that are developed not by a government bureaucrat, Madam Speaker, but by that very specialty group, those men and women, those leaders of that specialty society that want to do what is best and they want the best outcome at the lowest possible cost. They want to get paid a fair amount for their services, of course.

And, in fact, with an electronic medical records system, they're more likely, Madam Speaker, especially under the Medicare program where you have something called evaluation and management code and intensity of care that you bring, doctors, I think, tend to undercode because, Madam Speaker, they're petrified that some inspector general is going to come along and demand to see 10 charts out of their 10,000 and nitpick and find some few, two out of 10,000 where they overcoded, and first thing you know they're not participating in the Medicare program and maybe even they're facing a jail sentence.

So electronic medical records would—I don't know how much money, my colleagues, it would save, but I know that it would lead to a better practice of medicine based on best principles. We wouldn't need to have some comparative effectiveness institute, kind of like the Federal Reserve Board, telling doctors what they should do and not do, when it's time to operate, what medication to prescribe. We would have those best practices as part of an electronic medical records system. We could cut down on duplication of testing.

People could be in Timbuktu, and with that little card smaller than our voting card, they, Madam Speaker, they could take that card, even in a country where they don't speak the language, or maybe they come to the emergency department comatose and can't speak any language, you reach in their pocket, pull out that card, swipe it, just like we would our voting card, and there's the entire record. We know what they're allergic to. We know what medications they're on. We know their past medical history, and we give them the best and most effective, cost effective, safest medical care.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I'll be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Just a point right here. You were making an excellent point, Dr. GINGREY, about why you don't want the Federal Government to come between a patient and a doctor.

A veteran can go to an emergency room, have an electronic medical record at the VA, can show up somewhere in an emergency room, let's say, in our area we have a VA Hospital in Johnson City, and let's say he lives in Mountain City, Tennessee. He shows up there and the doctor in the emergency room at Mountain City does not have access to his VA record, to his electronic record that they have at the VA. Now, I think we can do better than that, and that's going on right now.

So that veteran who's up there with, maybe he's an elderly veteran, a World War II veteran with a very complicated medical history, that emergency room doctor is flying by the seat of his or her pants, and I think we can do better.

And again, the health care decisions should be made between a patient and a doctor. And I don't want to let the private insurers off the hook here. You and I know this, and Dr. FLEMING, also.

I remember one of the last cases I did in practice before I retired to run for Congress, I spent almost as much time on the phone with a private insurer trying to get the case approved as I did actually doing a major surgical procedure. Now, that's the ridiculous item of the day when you do that, when you're not providing care to someone, you're arguing with a bureaucrat at the private health insurer.

I yield back.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Reclaiming my time, those stories are just all too familiar, and it's a shame that that time is wasted when it can be better spent with the patient.

I wanted to mention too, Madam Speaker, the issue of medical liability reform. Now, for a number of years—I've been here 7, this is my fourth term, and every year I have introduced medical liability or tort reform modeled after the system that was adopted back in the late seventies in California. The acronym for that bill is MICRA, but it has worked. It has stabilized the malpractice insurance premiums in that State. Yes, they've gone up somewhat because of inflation, but compared to other States that don't have that reform where there is a limitation on a claim, a judgment for pain and suffering, noneconomic, and where there is the elimination of this joint and several liability and there is collateral source disclosure—and I could go into some of the weeds of it.

But, obviously, we have not been able to pass that. When we Republicans had the majority in this House, we would pass it every year, Madam Speaker, in the House; but so many attorneys who are Members of the United States Senate would block that.

Well, why can't we come together again in a bipartisan way and say, look, we can agree that part of the cost of medicine, cost of health insurance is the fact that medical practitioners order so many unnecessary—and in some cases, Madam Speaker, harmful—tests, draw too much blood, get an MRI one day and a CAT scan the next day and a standard x ray the next day because they're trying to cover the possibility that someone would say, Why didn't you order this, or why didn't you order that?

Lord knows we've gotten to the point now where everybody who shows up in the emergency department anywhere across these great 50 States with a headache is going to get a $1,200 CAT scan instead of a blood pressure check and an aspirin and a "come back to my office in the morning."

So this is an area in which we could clearly come together in a bipartisan way and hash out. Well, if the California version of tort reform is not acceptable, how about a medical tribunal, a group of independent people looking at the claim and saying whether or not it has merit?

There are so many things that we could do. And I've got a few more ideas, Madam Speaker, that I want to talk on, but I do want to refer back to Dr. FLEMING and hear from him because I know he's got a lot of things he wants to share with us.

I yield to Dr. FLEMING.

Mr. FLEMING. I wanted to tone down on the debate a little bit more.

Again, we heard the 30-something Group Democrats talking about the debate earlier, and one said something very interesting. It really caught my ear. He said that the debate is basically Democrats want health care reform, Republicans do not want health care reform.

Now, I have spoken on this floor, as you know, Dr. GINGREY and Dr. ROE as well, and I've heard you speak many times; many Members of our conference have spoken; I've spoken a number of times throughout the district. I've listened to everyone from Speaker Gingrich to many others. I have yet to hear one Republican say that he is against health care reform.

So I want to remind my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that the only way we're ever going to solve our health care problems—which make up about 20 percent of our economy—we must have an honest debate. And framing the other side into a position that really doesn't exist is not going to get us there. In fact, I would say that we really agree, from what I can understand, on 90 percent of the discussion.

We all agree that we should do away with pre-existing illness; we all agree that we should have portability; we all agree there should be a hundred percent access to care; we all agree that we should lower the cost of care. I can draw you a great list. There is really, when you get down to it, only one thing we disagree with, and that is we feel that a private system, private industry—even if it's paid for by the Federal Government—in many cases does a much better job in terms of quality of care and customer service and a much better job of controlling costs.

This is proven time after time.

Compare our economy with a socialistic economy and you see every time that we provide much better products and services and at a much better price than those countries do.

So, really, the only disagreement is who is actually controlling the care. And, of course, I submit to you that a government-run system is a real problem. And I will tell you where I learned this.

When I was in the Navy as a physician, I noticed in the first year that the commanding officer of the hospital sent out a call and said if there is—this is budget time of the year—and if there is anything that you think we could ever want in this hospital, wink wink—meaning, think of something; dream of things—put it on a list, because if we don't preserve that budget the way it is, then our budget will be cut next year. And that, my friend, is the way government works. If you don't force it into the budget, if you don't make sure and protect your territory, it won't be there next year. Somebody will cut into it. And that's really the way government works.

And I will give you an example, a real-life example of how we will never be able to get rid of waste, fraud, and abuse from our health care system if it's run by the government.

Think about this: we have to throw out a wide net, which is very expensive. We may capture a few offenders out there. Because it would have to be a criminal act, we would have to prove that they really did it on purpose; and then at the end of the day we would have to prosecute them with a lot of dollars; and then we may get one person, and we may get a few dollars. That's the way you get rid of fraud and abuse in a government system.

In a private system, much different. You have a physician or some other provider in a health care organization that's privately run, and if his practices are not the best practice and he's not practicing in a cost-effective way, that shows up on a graph; and often, of course, you go to that provider and you reeducate, and you have him work with colleagues, and you get him back to the protocols. And if that doesn't work, then you fire him. Easy problem to solve. It doesn't require all of that—there is no crime involved. So you can work in the most effective way possible.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Reclaiming my time, I think that the gentleman has certainly hit the nail right on the head in regard to this, and we could go back to what we talked about earlier in regard to electronic medical records, which would be specialty specific—the information, of course, would be available for any provider who is seeing the patient.

But in regards to best practices, as the gentleman was talking about, and these algorithms, I mean, doctors, let's face it, they're busy. They're operating; they're delivering babies. They don't have time, nor can they afford every 4 months going to a continuing medical education course. A lot of times they have to do that online. And it is hard to keep up.

But with electronic medical records, this would help them keep up. It would absolutely help them order the right tests, give the best outcomes. And as Dr. FLEMING pointed out, if they're in a single specialty group of eight surgeons and one in the group is not getting the information the others are getting, that information is available internally and externally. And you kind of police your own.

I want to give—I think he just asked for 1 minute—my good friend, DANA ROHRBACHER, is going to be on the floor in the next hour. He asked for a minute, and I yield to him.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. As we are making fundamental decisions about things such as health care, which is so important to our country and important to each and every citizen, we should keep in mind the fundamental differences that you are bringing up tonight between a government-controlled health care system and an individual-controlled health care system, where the individual basically controls a great deal of the resources that he or she depends upon for his or her health or the health of their family as compared to having those resources totally at the command of the government. And the one word that comes to mind is politicalization of what's happening and what could that possibly mean in health care.

Let me give a little suggestion that if we have government-controlled health care, we're going to have illegal immigrants involved in the system. Our Democratic colleagues, as good-hearted as they are, cannot get themselves to say "no" to providing health care benefits to illegal immigrants. If we provide the type of operations that we want for our own people—heart operations and various things that are very expensive operations for health care—to be granted to illegal aliens, you can expect that it will, number one, bankrupt the system; but, number two, we will have illegal aliens coming here from every part of the world. And, in fact, one of the problems right now is that we already provide too much health care for illegal immigrants.

That issue alone should be a red bell for everyone out there saying, Do I really want the government to control health care and make the decision and give part of the money to an illegal immigrant?

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Well, reclaiming my time, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution in regard to that.

When you look at that number of 47 million who do not have health insurance, according to the Census Bureau, Madam Speaker, probably as many as 10 million of them are illegal immigrants. Now, they're not entitled, so to speak, to health insurance. That's not to say that you might not have a situation of extreme compassion if an illegal immigrant is admitted through one of our emergency departments and they are absolutely in the throws of a fatal illness, maybe it's a young, otherwise healthy person with congestive heart failure or congenital malformation that is resulting in an inability to sustain their blood pressure and they are on the verge of death, they would get the care in that hospital—in any hospital I think across the United States.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. And no one argues with that.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Yes. Of course not. They would get that care to save a life, of course we would. But the gentleman brings up a good point. And I did want to point out the segue into that number of 47 million.

It is estimated that maybe 18 million of those 47 million are making more than $50,000 a year, and many of them just choose, of their own volition—maybe they're 10 feet tall and bullet proof, 20-somethings, 30-somethings, have the Methuselah gene, they think, and don't spend much money on health care, and they just elect not to put the $200 a month payroll deduction or whatever it is. And maybe they have their own escrow account or their own health savings account. I think it's a bad decision, I think it's a bad bet, but a lot of people do that.

And you can't really force them, I don't think, unfortunately, in this Democratic plan, Madam Speaker. What the President is talking about is to have a mandate on the employer. If they are above a certain number of employees and if they don't provide health insurance for their employees, then they have to pay a tax or pay a percentage of their payroll into this connector; and individuals are absolutely required to sign up for health insurance, or if not, they have to pay a tax. I mean, that is not the American system. We want to encourage young healthy people to get health insurance.

And I want to make one point before I yield back to either one of my two colleagues. The insurance industry can help in a great way by looking at this. Let's say, take an example, a 22-year-old young man, newly married, newly employed, is not really convinced that paying for health insurance on a monthly basis is to his advantage, but he does it anyway. And he puts in whatever the cost is for a family premium and his portion of that payment month after month, year after year, with the same company maybe 15 or 20 years. During the course of that time, Madam Speaker, envision this, that individual develops high blood pressure, or maybe in addition to that high blood pressure develops type 2 diabetes—maybe the diabetes comes first, and then the high blood pressure—and then after that develops coronary artery disease. And then all of a sudden the company goes out of business and that individual is out of work, out of insurance, and desperately needs it. But because of these preexisting conditions, once COBRA runs out, how are they going to get health insurance? How are they going to afford—struggling maybe to find a new job, but how are they going to be able to go out with no tax deductibility and purchase a health insurance plan that is three and four times the amount of a standard plan for everybody else?

What I would say, Madam Speaker, to the Association of Health Insurance Plans, why don't you grant those individuals credible coverage, just like we did in Medicare part D, the prescription drug benefit? If you have a credible insurance plan that covers prescription drugs, say, on a supplemental plan, and then you lose that after 4 or 5 years, then you shouldn't be penalized when you get into part D—and, indeed, the law says you won't be penalized. But why should the insurance company penalize these people who, in good faith, all those years have put that money, that premium—the insurance industry had it invested and had a good return on their investment—when these people all of a sudden are in a high-risk situation, I think they should get a community rating.

I would be very curious to know how my colleagues feel about that, and I will yield to Dr. FLEMING.

Mr. FLEMING. I appreciate your yielding. I just wanted to take a moment to follow up on what you said and Mr. ROHRABACHER.

We have 47 million uninsured, 10 million of course are illegal aliens. And of course that is a solvable problem by only allowing legal aliens and requiring them to pay taxes and insurance like anyone else, and those who are here illegally should not be here. So that's not really a health care problem, at least primarily, that is an immigration problem.

We also have, as you point out, at least half that 47 million who are insurable people, and very cost effectively, but they choose not to. That really hurts the risk pool, and we should do things to incentivize them.

The real problem is the 10 or 15 million people who are either business owners or they work for small businesses and they can't get cost-effective insurance. And they're the ones that delay care, they're the ones that don't go to their primary doctor, they're the ones that end up going to the emergency room, getting care at a time when the outcomes are the worst and the cost is the highest.

So when you think about it—and polls show that 75 percent of people are happy with what they have, whether it's Medicare or Medicaid, private insurance—it's that 25 percent that can't get affordable care. That's where the problem is, and that's where the focus needs to be. And if we do that, we get cost-effective coverage for them—and there are many ways of doing this, and we would have to get into ways to determine that—we would really have this problem under much better control. But if we, on the other hand, blow this thing out with a single-payer system, we are going to have exploding budgets as far as the eye can see, and I don't see any end to that. I thank you, and I yield back.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I thank the gentleman, and I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Just a couple of comments.

Our colleague from California made great points. And I am going to ask the two of you who have been here for a while to discuss this Medicare part D discussion in just a moment. But he is correct. What happened was, when we created the TennCare plan in Tennessee, we are surrounded by eight States in the State of Tennessee, and we had a plan much richer than the surrounding States. So guess what happened? People came into the State. First of all, when we first put the plan out, all you had to have was a post office box. Well, there were a lot of post office boxes that occurred, and a lot of people came into the State of Tennessee to get care.

The way the Governor handled that—and remember that government-run plans—and I want people to understand, this is a very important point—in Tennessee, when it was about to break the State, our Governor, along with the legislature, made some very tough decisions. They cut the rolls. They limited the number of people that were on the TennCare plan. In a plan in England or in Canada or other single-payer systems, what happens is you ration care, you create waits. For example, in Canada—and this is the head of the Canadian Medical Association, not PHIL ROE saying this—but he said you could get your dog's hip replaced in a week in Canada, but it takes 2 to 3 years for a person to get their hip replaced in Canada. And I think you made that point this morning during 1 minutes.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Reclaiming my time, we did talk about it this morning, and it was a Canadian testimony, was it not? And I yield back to you.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. It was. And I think the discussion, as I recall—and

Dr. FLEMING is absolutely right, there are not that many disagreements, it's who is controlling these health care decisions; is it a bureaucrat or is it the patient and a doctor? And I think that is where the big discussion is.

Now, as I recall, when the Medicare part D discussion came up, the problem was going to be—the argument I heard the other side make was that without this public option there wouldn't be enough competition, and therefore prices would go up. But was what happened in part D—and I'm not saying part D certainly is perfect, it's not—but what happened was, with a competitive market out there, that actually came in lower without the public option when you had the private option competing in the open market. And I believe the discussion among the Democrats was that without this public option, that wouldn't happen. Well, just the opposite happened.

And again, we have seen what happened in Tennessee, I don't want to go over it again. But I can assure you that it will be a plan that promises more than it can deliver for the funds that are available, and there will be two options. And you know what those options are, and that's long waits—and I just don't think the American people are interested, I know I'm not interested in that.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Well, reclaiming my time, and I think you're absolutely right, that the only way to solve the cost overruns, which would no doubt occur—and I do believe, as our friend from California suggested, that if the government was running the whole show, and eventually if we approve this government default plan, that's just a giant step, and it's just a baby step toward a single-payer system. And when you get into that situation, I can almost assure you, Madam Speaker, that under current leadership, you would have any and all, come one come all, just like they did in Tennessee. And Dr. ROE was describing the TennCare program and the problems they ran into.

And then the only way you could pay for it, as he points out, would be to start cutting reimbursement to the providers, to the health care providers, to the physicians, to those primary care docs that we so desperately need to be focusing and to be running our medical homes and to make sure that people are taking their medication, that there's an emphasis on wellness and keeping people healthy, keeping them out of the doctor's office, keeping them out of the emergency room, out of the hospital, and toward the end of life hopefully out of the nursing homes and in their own homes. That's why I think it's a mistake to even go in that direction of government-run health care.

I clearly feel, and I know my colleagues on the floor tonight agree with me, Madam Speaker, that the private marketplace works. And my two colleagues that are with me tonight weren't in the House back in 2003, but I know they were following the debate very carefully and very closely and maybe even felt that Medicare part D was something that we couldn't afford. Certainly it added cost, if you crunch the numbers statically, to the Medicare annual payments, Medicare part D did. But in the long run, in the long run, because of that program, if they can afford to take their medications for some of these diseases that I mentioned earlier, high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes, and keep these things under control, then clearly what happens is you shift costs from part A, the hospital part of Medicare, and from part B, the doctor part, the surgeon part, the amputation part, the renal transplant part, and then also in part D keeping folks from having a massive stroke hopefully by controlling their blood pressure and you spend less on the skilled nursing home part. So I think that's a pretty good bargain and a pretty compassionate way of approaching things.

But our Democrat colleagues, Madam Speaker, who were in the minority at the time, stood up here and they symbolically, some of them, tore up their AARP cards because that senior organization had the audacity to support a Republican bill. And then, of course, they said, well, why can't we have a government default plan and why can't the government come in and set the price and say, okay, this is the price, this is the monthly premium for part D, the prescription drug part, and these free market thieves will not be able to run up the price? And they even suggested, Madam Speaker, that we set that monthly premium at $42 a month. Fortunately, my colleagues, that amendment was defeated. And when the premiums first came in from the prescription drug plans, the private plans competing with one another for this business, they came in at an average of $24 a month. Now, 3 years later, that has gone up a little bit because of inflation, but it's nowhere near $42 a month.

So if we don't learn from our history, we are going to repeat those same old mistakes. And it looks like the Democrats, with this idea of letting the government come in and run everything and saying that we can't trust the free market, I guess that's what they want to do with General Motors as well, and I'm very anxious to see how that one turns out.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Good points about the private versus the public sector. The private sector will always be more efficient and more responsive. And you have heard this story before, but when I began practice and when you did, Dr. GINGREY and Dr. FLEMING also, when a patient came to me, and I took care of nothing but women, and when they came to me with breast cancer—which I unfortunately saw way too much of and our practice diagnosed about a case a week. It was that common or is that common.

And we just had a relay this weekend. In 1977 or so, the 5-year survival rate was about 50 percent, maybe a little bit better, but about 50 percent. And the big argument came: Do you do a disfiguring operation of a radical mastectomy or a lumpectomy? Because the survival rates were the same. So what has happened over that time is that now a patient can come to you or me or any of our colleagues and we can tell them that because of early detection, because of education, because of mammography, you're going to have a 98 percent survival rate in new medications. That is a wonderful story to tell. And I know no matter how tough the times are for that patient, you can look at them and say, You're going to be okay.

In the English system, they quit doing routine mammography. And why did they quit doing that? Screening mammograms aren't done anymore. Why? Well, because it costs more than the biopsies. Sometimes a test will tell us we have something when we don't have it. That's called a false positive. And the phone call that I love to make is to my patients to say, You do not have cancer. So this is one where they quit doing that because the cost of the biopsies was more than the screening. The best rates they had were 78 percent survivals, and those are going to go down if you use that technique.

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. If the gentleman will allow me, as we get very close to that bewitching hour of 11 o'clock, my southern drawl had better get a little faster than a drawl. But my mom, Helen Gingrey, who lives in Aiken, South Carolina, in a retirement community, a great community, Kalmia Landing, my mom had her 91st birthday on February 8 of this year. Well, when she was 90, about 5 or 6 months ago, 6 or 8 months ago, she had a knee replacement. And Mom had gotten to the point, Madam Speaker, where she could barely walk, in constant pain, on the verge of falling and breaking her hip at any moment. And now she is enjoying life and enjoying being with her friends, and maybe she's going to live another 10 or 15 years. I don't know. She seems to have the Methuselah gene. But do you think in Canada or the U.K. or one of these countries where they ration care that she would have had an opportunity to have that knee replacement? The answer we all know, Madam Speaker, is absolutely not.

I would say in closing, the one thing I would like to see is the equal tax treatment of the health care benefit for individuals who have to go out and buy them in the market on their own. They don't get it from their employer. Why should they not get a tax advantage health care plan just like everybody else? And you know what, Madam Speaker? I have not heard the Democrats in the House, the Democrats in the Senate, or President Obama talk about that. And talk about fairness and wanting to be equitable, let's hear some more about that. We will talk about it in future Special Orders.

I want to thank my colleagues Dr. ROE, Dr. FLEMING, and my good friend from California, Representative DANA ROHRBACHER, for being with me during this hour.

THE BIGGEST POWER GRAB IN HISTORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. KILROY). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRBACHER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Thank you very much.

Madam Speaker, a thought came across me about 2 days ago. I was out on the water, surfing off of San Clemente, California. I was sitting there on my surfboard. The pelicans and the birds were jumping into the water and carrying fish out of the water, and the dolphins were swimming by. It was just a beautiful day. I couldn't help but remember that many years ago when I was a young reporter, one of my first assignments was to cover a speech being given by Jacques Cousteau. He was a hero to me at that time, and I really relished the idea of going out and being able to interview him after a speech he was giving at UCLA. I got to the speech, and I found that Mr. Cousteau was being very pessimistic about the future of the oceans, and he was telling the kids there was no future in the ocean, that 10 years from now—this was in the early 1970s he was saying this—there would be no life in the ocean. "The oceans will be black, lifeless masses, black goo." I felt that it was a bit pessimistic; and when I had my chance to interview him afterwards, I turned on my tape recorder and introduced myself. He was ready for the interview. I said, Aren't there also some optimistic sides about the ocean, that perhaps we will someday be able to farm them, like with shellfish and regular fish perhaps, being able to ranch them, you might say, in the ocean? And that might be a great source of protein for the whole world that we would then have under better control. He came right up to me, and all these students were watching, and he put his face right up next to my nose, and he said, Didn't you hear me? The oceans will be dead in 10 years. Black goo. Dead.

I'll never forget that. I mean, that was something that was really pounded right into my memory because his nose was almost touching my nose. I could smell the garlic on his French breath, and I will tell you that it was an experience. I thought about that just 2 days ago while I was surfing. The fish were jumping, and the porpoises were swimming, and the pelicans were landing and picking up the fish in the water, the oceans totally alive, and I am totally alive and very grateful to have the oceans that we have. Obviously Mr. Cousteau was wrong. I can't tell you today whether he was lying or intentionally misinforming those students, but he was dead wrong.

Now students come to visit me a lot. I've been in Congress now over 20 years, and I try to see every student that comes from my district. I try to see them; and I talk to them, giving them a chance to ask me questions. But I always ask them a question too. So my students from Southern California, young high school students, I always ask them, Is the air in our congressional district, in our area of Southern California, is it cleaner or dirtier than it was 45 years ago when I went to high school in this very same area? And almost 90 percent of the students adamantly insist that the air back then was so much cleaner: Oh, you're so lucky to have lived in an age in Southern California where the air was so clean, and now it's so dirty and all of us are destined to die and to be infected with this pollution in our lungs.

Well, the fact is, that is dead wrong as well. Someone continues to misinform our young people, perhaps for political reasons, whatever. But the fact is, when I tell them that they are 180 degrees wrong, that, in fact, the air is so much cleaner now that there's almost no comparison to what it was when I was a young person in high school, they are incredulous. Many of them don't believe me when I say that. But they know afterwards when they check up on it that they have been lied to.

Well, whatever the reason, whatever the motive behind this misinformation that's being provided to young people, whether it was Jacques Cousteau or whether it's the educational establishment or if it is any of the other people we're talking about who have ties to the radical environmental movement, whatever the reason they are misinforming our students, it's not just the students. It's our general population as well.

For decades, phony, frightening predictions, false climate assumptions and inaccurate information fed into computer climate models have been foisted on the American people, including our young people, and people throughout the world. Even worse, honest discussion on these issues of climate have been stifled, and critics have been silenced in order to create an illusion of a consensus that the climate is going haywire and that we're in for a global warming calamity. So why is this? Why do we have this specter of man-made global warming being portrayed as a global calamity in the making? Well, it's being used to stampede the public and, yes, stampede officials into accepting what appears to be the biggest power grab in history. One doesn't have to be a conspiracy nut to realize there are a significant number of people who really believe in centralizing the power of government into the hands of elected and even unelected officials, centralizing that power in Washington and elsewhere. And these unelected officials, who now will be given so much power, are expected to be competent and expected to be well motivated. They are expected to prove that by doing the things that are consistent with the goals and the values of the people who are pushing to centralize power in their hands.

That we have a group of leftists who believe in centralizing power should not surprise anyone. But what we have here is the leftist politicians in this country who believe in centralizing power anyway have been willing to go along and exaggerate and, yes, play fast and loose with the facts in order to promote this notion of man-made global warming. But we didn't expect these people who have a motive of trying to centralize power, or whatever the motive is of these alarmists in the radical environmental movement, we didn't expect them to act any other way. But we need to ask ourselves, why did it take prominent members of the science community so long to step forward to be counted in the face of this massive, heavy-handed campaign of deceit?

Well, I trace the reluctance of our scientists to step up back to the abrupt dismissal of Dr. William Happer, who was then the top scientist at the Department of Energy back in 1993. Happer was too professional, too objective for what Vice President Gore had in mind. So off with his head. Immediately that was one of the first actions taken when the Clinton administration took power. Out the door with Dr. Happer. This man, this prominent and very well-respected Ph.D., his dismissal in that way was a message to the science community: If you want a grant, you toe the line. And what followed was a one-sided drum beat, one-sided promotions, one-sided research grants, and one-sided thinking. Those were the order of the day for the 8 years of the Clinton presidency. The media bias, which of course went along with that, played hand in glove, has never let up with that bias. We just had a major conference here in Washington with hundreds of prominent individuals, many of whom are great scientists, Ph.D.'s, and heads of major university science departments. Yet that conference, which was skeptical of man-made global warming, didn't get any publicity. Very, very few news articles came out of this. Yet these were very prominent and important people.

This kind of repressive atmosphere where the press doesn't report that and that we had years and years where people were not being able to get grants unless they toed the line that Vice President Gore wanted, in this repressive atmosphere, many leaders of the scientific community just remained silent. They sort of became turtles. They tucked their heads in and figured they'd hunker down and live through it. But the ignoring of a campaign of deceit that was utilizing the prestige of the science community has taken its toll, and it's taken a long time to get these scientists out of their shell and to step forward with integrity, as is expected of the men and women of science.

So here we are on the edge—laws, taxation, controls, regulation, mandates are about to be enacted; and we've had 15 years of stifled debate. Even my GOP colleagues are afraid to take on the phony science that is at the heart of the man-made global warming propaganda juggernaut. Again, these people in the GOP, they oppose this theory; but they just want to say that what is being proposed by the Democrats will cost too much and will have too little impact on climate or temperature for it to justify this huge cost. Well, they're right. What's being proposed will have a huge cost and very little impact; but if, indeed, we are facing a global warming calamity that's being caused by human activity, the costs shouldn't matter.

So I have to argue that principle and basic science is the important element of the discussion of the manmade global warming theory and the laws and regulations and controls and taxation that we are now on the verge of passing here in Washington, D.C.

The bottom line is that the science behind the manmade global warming proposals in Congress and the draconian laws which will follow are based on faulty science. The science is wrong. What has been presented to us by Vice President Gore and the radical environmental community and liberal leftists who want to centralize power in government, the facts that they have presented us have not been accurate. This has either been an intent to deceive, or perhaps just a benevolent intent to save the world.

So it is not just a cost analysis of current legislative proposals that show that the proposals claiming to thwart manmade global warming would obliterate jobs. We know that.

All these proposals that say, well, we are going to try to thwart global warming that way or this way, or this regulation, this taxation, this requirement of cap-and-trade, we have had major economists warn these things will destroy the American economy. But if they claim it is about saving the planet, people are going to listen to them.

But it will destroy the economy, and the irony of it is, this will have nothing to do with saving the planet, but will in fact perhaps make the environment of our planet worse, rather than better. That is why they have tried to stifle the debate.

The real scientific justification for their power grab is science, and an honest discussion of that science will show that the science being presented to justify this power grab is at best inaccurate, and, at worst, a total lie.

You have all heard it, and everyone knows about this. People in Washington, we don't need to be told that there has been an attempt to stifle debate. But I would ask that the American people think about what they have heard about the manmade global warming theory over these 15 years, but especially over these last 4 years.

How many have heard the words "case closed?" Isn't it ironic that all of a sudden everybody started using the words "case closed?" What does that mean? That means no more debate. The words "case closed" was a clumsy, and, I might add, a heavyhanded attempt to shut off discussion even before we had a chance to have an honest discussion of the issues. Because, as I said, the scientists in the 8 years beforehand had been denied research grants unless they were wanting to toe the line on global warming. How many have heard "case closed?" We all have.

When Mr. Gore speaks about global warming, he never takes questions. Why would it be that someone who believes in something so adamantly refuses to debate the issue on TV and refuses to take questions? I have certainly a lot less invested in this issue than Vice President Gore. I give speeches and always take questions, and I have certainly been willing to debate this issue in public and on television.

So why do we hear the words "cased closed," stifling debate, and Mr. Gore, one of the prime advocates of this issue, not willing to take questions? Why is it that people who have, you know, skepticism about manmade global warming, why is it that they complain, like Robert Gray, former chairman of the American Meteorological Association? Why do we hear from them that they were turned down for grant applications so many times? Why do we hear that from a man who mentioned that he had received 13 such research grants prior, prior, to the Clinton administration, and then been totally cut off?

Doesn't that say something, when someone of that caliber, a Ph.D., the president of the Meteorological Association, can't get a grant to study the frequencies of hurricanes? And even today this man points out contradictory information. His view is—a man with decades of experience and credentials, Ph.D.'s and credentials in meteorology, says no, the idea that mankind's human actions is causing hurricanes is false, and there is no evidence of that.

Well, and then what else do we hear? We hear name-calling. I was on a television show recently where they called me a troglodyte, I guess troglodyte, that is the word, that I am anti-science, and I am bigoted in some way. I kept presenting scientific arguments about manmade global warming, but all I got back was name-calling.

Case closed. We are not going to answer any questions. No grants for skeptics. And, yes, anybody who disagrees with us is a low-life who doesn't believe in science. Yes, you don't believe in science.

Can you imagine moving forward to have an honest discussion about manmade global warming and being dismissed before you get to the discussion as being anti-science, and then after insisting on four or five issues on science, not having those arguments even answered, but instead having my religion questioned?

Well, dismissing rather than answering legitimate challenges to the manmade global warming theory is par for the course. This is standard operating procedure. Case closed, standard operating procedure. No questions, standard operating procedure. No grants for skeptics, standard operating procedure.

These people have been trying their best to basically steamroll over anyone who would get in their way without having to have the honest discussion of an issue of this magnitude. All of it is simply a Herculean effort not to discuss the scientific assumptions that are at the basis of the manmade global warming concept.

So what is that all about? Why are they not willing to discuss the science? All it is about is not discussing the science, shutting down anybody else with any other ideas without combating the ideas.

Well, the reason why they have tried so hard to have "case closed" and all of these things that I have just mentioned, it is because their basic theory, the science theory behind manmade global warming is wrong. It is dead wrong, and that is why they won't discuss it. And if they won't discuss it, we can discuss it.

I would suggest that if there is anyone in this Congress who would like to debate me on this issue for an hour sometime between now and the time this Congress has to vote on cap-and-trade legislation, I will gladly meet them for an hour and discuss this issue.

So let's start discussing it tonight, and then maybe sometime in the next few weeks someone from the other side will take advantage of that offer to have an honest discussion with me and with the public about this issue. If it is so important, let's have an open and honest discussion. So let's look at some of the real science-based challenges to the predictions of an oncoming manmade global warming calamity.

Okay. In briefing after briefing—I am a senior member of the Science Committee—and over the years in briefing after briefing on global warming, I couldn't help but notice that the charts that showed that we have increased the temperature of the planet by 1 degree, here is the chart, it is going up like this, I couldn't help but notice where they started, down here. And down there was 1850.

1850 is actually the line, the baseline that is used for temperature comparisons by the global warming community, by the people who believe in manmade global warming. But 1850 has some significance. 1850, in that era, those few years there, that was the end of the little ice age. That was the end of a 500-year decline in world temperatures.

Okay, so why is it that people who want us to be concerned about a 1 degree temperature increase are making the baseline of comparison the bottom of a 500-year decline? Well, if it is at the bottom of a 500-year decline, if it is that low point they are comparing it to, what is all the hysteria about if we are talking about a 1 degree rise in temperature? What is that all about, or even a 2 degree rise in temperature?

The fact is we know that there have been weather cycles and climate cycles throughout the history of the world. They are now trying to use a low point of a cooling cycle to compare it to say we should be upset when there is even a 1 degree change.

What about those other weather cycles? Number one, let's ask, how can you use that as a baseline? Number two, what about the other weather cycles and that weather cycle? How about the weather cycle that went down for 500 years?

The fact is that over 500 years ago, actually 1,000 years ago, the weather was very warm. It was a lot warmer than it is today, a lot warmer than the 1 degree that we have.

□ 2320

The fact is, there were big areas of Greenland that were green. They actually had agriculture and a green part of that area. Iceland was an area that had plants and crops. Vineland, which the Vikings said, people thought, well, they were claiming that there were vines there but there really weren't. No, the temperature was different. It was warmer 1,000 years ago.

So there have been numerous weather cycles that have had nothing to do with human activity, unless you believe that the Vikings, of course, there was something that they were doing that was changing the weather. And, if there was a warming cycle, and again, if we've had a warming cycle since that time, it's only been 1 degree.

But these past climate cycles, there's one thing that we have to try to pick up. Why is it then that we've had these cycles? Why is it then, and why is this cycle we are claiming which is a 1 degree rise in temperature from a 500-year low, why is this different? Why are we trying to change the rules of the game and centralize power and look at this as some sort of crisis when it's just another cycle? And why, what is causing the cycle then?

Well, it seems that cycles of climate follow solar activity. The cycles we've had before mankind even emerged can be traced back through ice cores to solar activity. Now, we've seen it here on Earth and we've seen it on other planets.

Let's note this. When I was in this debate the other night, a Member of Congress, a good friend, went on about how horrible it was, of course we're having manmade global warming. Look what's happening in the Arctic. In the Arctic, the polar bears are being destroyed. Well, of course that's not true. There's a polar bear explosion in terms of their population. There are two types of polar bears that are losing, that are not able to keep up with the changes in the climate there. But most other polar bears, because it's warmer, actually are living better than they were before, and the population of polar bears is going up. How ironic that we end up putting them on an endangered species list at a time when their numbers are increasing.

But let's get back to the central point. Something's going on in the Arctic. And my friend and colleague is saying, oh, how horrible it is and going into great detail to touch people's hearts about a polar bear on a piece of ice. And then I said, you're saying that this is caused by human activity and, thus, we have to have all these taxes and controls and things to save the planet from this?

Well, yes, that's what he's saying. Well, I said exactly what I've said to Arnold Schwarzenegger. I said this to myself on the program. Yes, the ice cap is retreating. There's no doubt about that. But when I say that, I'm not talking about our ice cap. That's clear to us. But what about the ice cap on Mars? There is an ice cap on Mars, and just by coincidence, it is retreating at exactly the same time as our ice cap is retreating. Doesn't that indicate that it might be the sun and not us driving SUVs or modern technology that's creating these many, many cycles that we've had, including the one that we are already in?

Yes, an ice cap is retreating on Mars and it's retreating in the world. Is that just a coincidence? Well, that's a scientific challenge. Let's have an answer to that. So, we have polar ice caps melting on Mars, and it's not just a coincidence, I believe. So tell me why this doesn't indicate to us that what we're really talking about is solar, what we are facing today in the climate changes that have taken place today, just as it has in the past is that it has to do with solar activity.

So now remember, by the way, ice caps may have been melting in the Arctic, but one thing people miss, the ice caps are not melting everywhere, just the northern ice cap. In Antarctica, to the south, ice is actually accumulating. And so in the north, yeah, there is a polar bear population, I think two species of polar bears are suffering. Most every one, the rest of them are expanding their population.

And by the way, I understand now, even in that area, the ice is beginning to return. But the ice has always been accumulating in the Antarctic over these years. That's never told to us. It's as if the whole world is increasing in temperature, but they don't bother to mention the areas where the ice is actually accumulating.

Well, the manmade global warming theory has been focused on CO₂. This is, of course, and again, let's talk about the science of these issues. CO₂ is a miniscule part, a miniscule part of our atmosphere, and if you ask the ordinary person, they think it's 20 percent of the atmosphere. Well, actually it's .023 percent, I believe, so that's less than 1 quarter of 1. It's less than 1 quarter of 1 percent of the atmosphere is CO₂. And of that, at least 90 percent of the CO₂ in the atmosphere is not traced to human activity.

I've been in hearings where most people claim it's more like 5 percent of the CO₂ in the atmosphere is traced to human activity. You know, and by the way, one huge volcano or even massive fire like they've had in various countries would dwarf everything that we're trying to do to reduce CO₂ into the amount of CO₂ that that would put into the atmosphere, because CO₂ is not a significant part of the atmosphere. It's a miniscule—it's like a thread being put across the line on a football field, and that's what you're changing by focusing not just on the CO₂, which is .023 percent, but it's also, of that, 90 percent of that is not manmade. It's made by nature.

So the most important discussion in terms of manmade CO₂, which, as I say, the manmade part of it is just a small contributor, it's a small contributor to a very tiny element in the atmosphere, and suggesting that that is changing our climate is ludicrous. In fact, it is warming and has released CO₂ and there have been—it is warming a little bit. There has been, over the years, until recently, and over the years, there has been times when CO₂ was going up dramatically and down dramatically but had nothing to do with the climate of the planet. For example, manmade—if manmade—here's a basic can question. Here's another science challenge. If manmade CO₂ causes warming, why, as CO₂ levels were rising dramatically in the 1940s, fifties, sixties and seventies, why, if the CO₂ was rising in those decades, why was there actually a cooling of our climate in those decades?

Okay. Let's hear the science. Come on. I just had a science. I've had five or six points now. Why is everyone afraid to take on these scientific answers? If indeed CO₂ causes it to warm, well, then how come, when we had massive increases in CO₂ in the forties, fifties, sixties and seventies that it got cooler and not warmer? Well, the calculations on global warming have been based on fraudulent numbers.

And here's another scientific challenge. A recent study shows that over 80 percent of America's temperature and weather stations which have been the source of temperature readings that supposedly indicate a warming trend, supposedly, these very same monitoring facilities have been compromised and are faulty in the information they're providing.

The numbers have been skewed. They are suspect because the monitors that have been relied upon do not meet the basic scientific standards that are required of them for us to believe in the numbers that they're giving us. In other words, the equipment is compromised; the figures coming out of the equipment cannot be relied upon. And our system, with 80 percent of our monitors who do not meet the standards, the scientific standards for us to rely on their numbers—our system has been heralded as the best in the world. So think about that. What's going on in the rest of the world when we're talking about one little rise, a one-degree rise in temperature since the end of the little ice age which was a 500-year low of temperature?

So even that we can't figure out—even with that one degree we don't know, because the monitors have been placed in faulty ways or have not been kept and maintained in the right way.

And so what we have had is a lot of people who have been making predictions over the last 20 years, especially Vice President Gore. But if the science community had been given these grants—but only if they're going to come to the conclusion about global warming that we want you to—these people in the science community and these other political people who have got their own motives behind this bulldozer approach and this steamroller approach to accomplishing what they're out to accomplish, those people have been telling us that we're facing a man-made global warming climate calamity and it was in the making. And we were told that the temperatures were either going to continue to go up and up and it would reach a certain point and then there would be some sort of tipping point and then it would jump up by a number of temperature points. So it would be five or six points, or whatever they were predicting. It was a huge jump in temperature at some point.

Well, that's not what's happened. I heard that for 10 years, 10 years for the people who were giving out all of the grants, 10 years from all of the people who were shutting out any type of real debate, 10 years of "don't ask any questions, case closed." And those people are on the record, and they have been warning us of man-made global warming that was about to get out of hand. But for over a decade, it has not gotten any warmer.

Yes, 11 years ago in 1998 it was a very hot year, and that was the year—since then, every year has been cooler. It has not gotten warmer since then. And they say, Well, that was a very hot year. Well, so was 1931 was a very hot year, and it was followed by decades, I might add, of cooling. So that doesn't mean anything. That was just an anomaly that we had a hot year in 1998, because ever since then the temperature has not been going up.

The global warming alarmists' predictions were wrong, all right? Come and debate that. There is a scientific challenge. I keep giving scientific challenges, and what I get back in this debate is, You're a bigot; you're anti-science; you're stupid. Name-calling. I mean, the people on the other side who always are willing to call people names rather than confront their arguments are very easy to spot. You just take a look. You listen to what's being said. Who is offering an argument that needs to be discussed? Who's calling names? They have been trying to shut down this debate by calling anybody who disagrees with them horrible personal names.

Well, let me repeat this one point: it has not gotten any warmer for over a decade and we're still—it looks like we're even still getting cooler. That is totally contradictory to the predictions that were aggressively made to us, as they only gave their grants to the people who would agree with that over the years.

This is why global warming alarmists have now, en masse, changed the wording that they use. They were wrong, so let us just change the way we talk about things. Now it's climate change, okay? Everybody think about it. All of these same people were talking about global warming 20 years ago, spending billions of dollars on research that was bogus research, you know. It was intended to come out with what they were buying from the scientists. They were telling us it was going to get warmer, and they kept using the term "man-made global warming." And now they call it "climate change," and all of a sudden, they all change and it all became climate change.

Well, every time you hear that word used by an environmental radical, by one of these alarmists, it is an admission that they were wrong and that they refuse to admit that they were wrong. Refusing to admit you're wrong after you've been so aggressive in promoting something is certainly not an honest debate and an honest discussion.

If I am proven wrong on a point, I will apologize and change my position. I won't try to change my wording so it sounds like I was never wrong in the first place.

These people were wrong. Remember it. Every time the word climate change is used, remember these were the same people who were talking about global warming, and they want to have it both ways. No matter if it gets warmer or colder, they want to blame it on human activity when, in fact, all of the evidence suggests that cycles come from solar activity.

Expert after expert is now pointing to the flaws in the central argument.

And the other thing you hear is, of course, that all of the scientists agree. There is your other way of shutting down debate. All of the scientists, all of the prestigious Ph.D.s and scientists agree. That is not true. And it hasn't been true for years.

So Al Gore's scientific mumbo-jumbo was wrong, all of the scientists agreeing with him is wrong, the temperature predictions have been wrong, and the man-made CO₂ premise is wrong.

Now we find out that the monitors used to collect the data were placed next to air-conditioning exhaust vents—which made the temperature higher—and in parking lots, and on top of buildings, and near other heat sources which, of course, made all of their statistics totally unreliable. We hear that.

We also know the methodology of using computer models has been questionable from the very beginning. We all know the saying: garbage in, garbage out. But no one was permitted to hear the questions; no one was permitted to ask follow-up questions as to—no one has been permitted to totally understand the software that went into that questionable computer modeling.

The observations have been wrong. The attempt to stifle debate and shut up those people who disagree by calling them names, denying grants, and making personal attacks has been wrong. Thus, I would suggest the biggest power grab in our history is wrong, and the public should wake up. The public should understand that what we are seeing is a brazen power grab that is wrong.

So, let's review the scientific challenges to the man-made global warming theory. See if anybody ever tries to come and have an argument about the science.

Baseline comparison is at the bottom of a 500-year decline in temperature. That is not the scientific way of determining whether a slight rise in temperature is significant. The science measurements were partly or severely flawed by a monitoring system that was—did not meet the standards necessary to have accurate information. Past climate cycles were frequent even before the emergence of mankind. Cycles like the retreating polar ice caps are parallel to similar cycles on Mars suggesting solar activity, rather than human activity, is the culprit. Increasing CO₂ levels did not cause warming, which can be shown in the 1940s, 1950s, 1960s, and 1970s where there was an increasing level of CO₂, but yet it was getting cooler.

So let's have an honest debate. Let's quit calling names. Let's quit dismissing legitimate science-based questions.

Address the scientific issues being raised rather than sloganeering about a consensus of scientists that does not exist. Again, the so-called "consensus," case closed—that consensus does not exist. More and more, thousands of scientists are signing on as skeptics to this manmade global warming theory.

This leads to an important point that needs to be made. Perhaps the biggest lie the public must deal with is that all the prominent scientists in the world totally agree with the manmade global warming theory. That's probably the biggest lie, as I mentioned. Instead of answering scientific questions, alarmists have simply claimed all the scientists agree. I've been interviewed on this at least half a dozen times, and every interview begins with, well, all of the scientists agree that manmade global warming is a reality, how can you disagree with all of them? It is just another tactic aimed at repressing an honest discussion of something that should be a scientific issue and discussed with all sincerity.

I will now submit the names of 10 prominent scientists, 10 of the thousands of scientists who have signed on to suggest that manmade global warming is far from accepted by all scientists. These are the heads of science departments, the presidents of scientific and academic associations, people with doctorates in the areas of study, and they are coming forward at last, they're coming out of their shell at last after all of these years of intimidation. This is only a list of 10, but there are thousands more who are stepping forward to voice honest skepticism, if not total rejection, to the claim that human activity is creating a global warming climate catastrophe.

The first one is Dr. Richard Lindzen, top scientist from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Dr. William Gray, Colorado State University, former president of the American Meteorological Association. Dr. David Nowell, former chairman and NATO meteorologist from Canada. Dr. Gerhard Kramm, University of Alaska in Fairbanks. Dr. Yury Izrael of the Russian Academy of Sciences, a senior member of the Russian Academy of Sciences whom I met and spoke to, and also a member of the IPCC United Nations report, who now makes it very clear that he does not believe in that report or manmade global warming. Dr. Ian Pilmer of the University of Melbourne. Dr. Diane Douglas, climatologist and paleoclimatologist. Dr. Harry Lins, cochairman of the IPCC Hydrology and Water Resources Working Group. Dr. Antonio Zichichi, president of the World Federation of Scientists. Dr. Ivar Giaever, Nobel Laureate and physicist.

So this idea that all the scientists are lockstep in favor of the theory of manmade global warming is a lie, not just a lie, a damnable lie aimed at cutting off honest communication. And who's doing that? Who's making this adamant statement that all the scientists are in agreement with this? Well, we've had people who say these things and said things all along. There's the global warming alarmists now who are making these statements. But let us just remember, these scares have happened in the past. I remember when my mother wouldn't serve cranberries at Thanksgiving because they caused cancer. I remember when Professor Meryl Streep warned us of alar-causing cancer, which just about ruined the apple industry for 2 years. That also was wrong.

We heard about cyclamates causing cancer, which cost the industry billions of dollars and disrupted very healthy patterns of nutrition that could have been based on cyclamates rather than high fructose corn syrup. That, too, was wrong.

We remember the nuclear power catastrophe at Three Mile Island, when Dr. Jane Fonda, that Ph.D. genius, taught us that nuclear power was so dangerous, that what we have done instead of using nuclear power, we began relying on overseas oil and gas and burning coal. Then remember the acid rain? That was as near a high pitch as what we hear about global warming. Ronald Reagan stood up, put his hand up and said, no, we are going to have scientific research on this acid rain issue before we commit to all sorts of regulations and taxes that will destroy our economy. Luckily, Reagan did that, and when a $500 million study was complete, it verified the fact that acid rain was a minimal problem, not a major problem, a minimal problem that didn't justify any of the draconian raises in taxes and controls that were being suggested by those environmental alarmists.

Then of course the granddaddy of them all was, many of the same people who now talk about global warming were then talking about global cooling back in the early 1970s, some of the very same people. Yes. And what happened to global cooling? The cycle started going in another direction. Then it became, Oh, my God, it's global warming. Well, now it's back to global cooling. So is this all caused by us driving SUVs? No. Maybe it's caused by the sun. Maybe there are natural reasons for the cycles of climate on this planet.

The so-called "experts" were wrong when they told us about all of these things. All of these were exaggerated problems, exaggerated threats to our well-being. And the American people were deceived in many of these cases, whether it was about nuclear energy or whether it was about cranberries. And we had fanatics who were fast and loose with the truth and fast and loose with facts. Well, that's exactly what's going on today.

And what's the problem with that? Well, the problem is there are serious side effects when one gets you focused on something that's not true, like cranberries causing cancer or nuclear energy being such a threat. You end up doing things that are actually harmful to you that you wouldn't do otherwise. When you have CO₂ being called the primary pollutant for concern, you are doing a horrendous disservice to the people of this country. By focusing on CO₂, which is not harmful to human beings at all and in fact is a plant food—CO₂ makes plants grow better, it does not harm human beings. And if our job is just to try to reduce the amount of CO₂ in the world, we will actually be doing a grave disservice because we won't be concentrating on the pollution, like NO₂ and other things that are very harmful, the particulates out of diesel trucks that are particularly—again, no pun intended—but particular particulates that are very harmful to people. I have three children. I have my baby Anika and Tristan and Christian. I love those babies, and I do not want them to breathe in dirty air. And if we focus on CO₂, we are doing a disservice to them and their generation and we are doing a disservice to the older people of this country who will also breathe in the dirty air. And focusing on CO₂ to save the planet. That's because what's happening here is these people are out to save the planet, but they are not out to save the people of the planet.

I remember one solution to a non-existent threat, which also caused a huge destruction of people, was, of course, the eliminating of DDT. Now, DDT, we were told, was destructive to the environment, especially to bird egg shells. Well, then, DDT is banned. And what is the result of DDT being banned? Malaria out of control in Third World countries where before it had been nearly eliminated. DDT was eliminated and malaria made a comeback, and millions of children in the Third World have died because of this nonsense.

I can't tell you if pelican egg shells are less fragile because of DDT, but I can tell you the tradeoff with millions of young children dying in Third World countries isn't worth that tradeoff about how fragile and building up the shell of a pelican.

Unfortunately, the people driving policy here are out to save our planet; they're not out to save our children or our seniors or any other people on the planet. That is the same mindset that would dramatically damage our economy in order to save the planet, with no consideration of the hardship and deprivation to ordinary people that would result from the draconian controls and taxation that is being proposed here in Washington right now as an answer to the global warming threat, the manmade global warming threat.

Now that manmade global warming has been driven into the public consciousness, the alarmists have the leverage right here in Washington. What should we expect unless the public changes its perception? There is a price to pay, just like those millions of little kids dying in Africa of malaria, and there is a price to pay for listening to irrational alarmists.

Excessive taxation regulation mandates are now being proposed in Washington, and they will reduce our gross domestic product by over $7 trillion, destroying nearly 2 million jobs by 2012, at a time when we really need jobs. It will raise electricity rates by 90 percent above inflation, incur $33,000 worth of additional Federal debt for every man, woman and child in America. And it will help the Chinese and other people steal our businesses from us. And this is only step one.

And even with this monstrous cost, little progress is expected. Here's back to the central point most Republicans want to make: That that cost isn't worth what we're going to get out of it. Well, no, there won't be any change in the temperature, and little change in the amount of CO₂ in the atmosphere. And CO₂ isn't harmful to people or this world.

The real calamity brought on by global warming will be the economy-killing taxes and regulations that are put in place to solve a nonexistent problem. That economic decline that we're talking about is just Round one, however. Round two is easy to predict.

Global and international bodies and our own government and our own Congress will be given the right and power to intervene in our lives to prevent manmade global warming. That's what it's all about, globalism. If man makes it, man must then be controlled. That's why it was so important for them to steamroll over anybody who is in opposition and wanted to ask some questions. They want nobody to ask questions about their theory about manmade global warming because they believe men and women, people, need to be controlled. That is part of their theory of government. It will make it a whole new, more benevolent world. Unfortunately, a lot of the government they are talking about is not the American Government. We are talking about international mandates from unelected bodies that we will then pass on power and authority to, which is supported by many of the people right here in this Congress.

For example, in the future, we are going to face all kinds of mandates and controls from the Federal Government and the internationality. Some of these would be, for example, mandated increases in parking fees. Do they tell you that now? All your local communities are going to have to raise your parking fees. And there will be major impediments to the private use of automobiles. And then, of course, they've got to end frequent flyer miles and they've got to end discount air travel because, believe it or not, and nobody has ever been telling you this, they believe that airplanes are the biggest CO₂ footprint of all. That's right. Your frequent flyer miles and your discount tickets have got to go. Of course, the elite will be able to fly around in their private planes giving a donation by supposedly planting trees somewhere and thus they can fly in their private planes. But the rest of us cannot go to see our sick relatives on a discounted ticket. No one has heard about this. Nobody has heard about these types of controls that are going to be mandated on our own people by the United Nations perhaps. What has been the purview of local government will be transferred to much higher authorities. Local government will be required to follow international guidelines, climate guidelines, when it comes to building, zoning, even local planning.

This is part of our liberty. Where we live, what we eat, how we run our lives, this is what is at stake. It's called liberty. This is a fight between the globalists, who found a vehicle to try to gain power and grab power, and those people who do believe in liberty and justice. We call them patriots. We call them people around the world who do believe in these Western values of dignity for the individual and freedom and justice.

Yes, even our diet has been targeted by those claiming that animal flatulence and deforestation make meat the enemy of climate. We aren't even going to be able to have barbecues in our backyard, much less have hamburgers. Now, these are one of those things that people will laugh that no one could ever go that far. What is going on here is laying the foundation for extensive controls that now are up to the individual or up to the local government being given to a central government.

If you aren't frightened by this, you should be. We have a fanatical movement of steely-eyed zealots who cannot admit they made a mistake, who always attack the other person rather than trying to have honest discussions of issues. Couple that with self-serving interests, and there are many self-serving interests who are involved in this. They now have joined in a political coalition that believes they have the right to run the economy, run business, run local schools, and run our lives. They have been looking for an excuse to assume power.

Now, the left has always wanted to have power. Leftists have always wanted it. They believe that they can do better and make humankind over and make it a better world by having absolute power over the choices of the people who live in this world. Well, they have found a calamity. They can threaten the people of the world with a calamity in order to stampede them into a monstrously horrific policy, and that's what we are on the edge of here in Washington.

In this last 8 months here in Washington, hundreds of billions, even trillions of dollars have been shoveled into the coffers, and no one knows where the heck this money has gone to. There have been looters from all over the world in our financial system and everyone who has benefited from that. The American people know that this Congress was stampeded into giving away trillions of dollars because we were told there was going to be an economic calamity. I'm very proud I never succumbed to that hysteria that was perhaps the greatest rip-off in history. Well, the global warming stampede is designed to cover up the biggest power grab in history, and it too will be costly.

Wake up, America. Wake up, America. We should not be giving our power and our liberty, not to the central government in Washington, D.C., certainly not to the United Nations, which is composed of countries who are governed by crooks and kooks. And the United Nations having power to set regulations over our lives in the name of saving this world from a climate catastrophe would itself be a catastrophe to the freedom of liberty and justice in this country and to the freedom-loving people of the world.

Well, even Al Gore must be a bit embarrassed now that he has to use the words “climate change” rather than “global warming.” It’s an inconvenient truth for him. The fact is it’s no longer warming. He must think that we are stupid if he thinks that we have not noticed that it’s now “climate change” instead of “global warming” and that we haven’t noticed that there are large numbers of scientists that are opposing what is being proposed. And he must think we are stupid if he thinks that these taxes and regulations and draconian laws that are being proposed are things that we will just accept because we have been frightened into submission.

Wake up, America. We need to save our country and future generations and we need to save the world from this incredible power grab, the greatest power grab and worst power grab in history.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING MAYOR GIGI GRUBER

HON. PETER J. ROSKAM

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. ROSKAM. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor a dedicated public servant from my Congressional District, Mayor Claudia "Gigi" Gruber of Itasca. After twelve years as Mayor, Gigi is stepping down.

In her first experience with elected public office, Gigi served one term as a Village Trustee in Itasca. Then, in May 1997, Gigi was elected Mayor of Itasca. Over the years, Gigi has been an insightful observer, keen in her understanding of the long-term challenges facing the Village. Throughout her career, she has tackled these challenges with deft skill, deep understanding, and strong personal integrity.

While constant change has brought a steady stream of new difficulties for Itasca to confront, one thing has remained the same. Mayor Gruber has kept a steady hand to the wheel, advising the Village Board and working tirelessly for the benefit of the community and her residents.

Gigi Gruber has been an advocate for the people of Itasca since her very first days in office. Gigi truly embodies the meaning of a public servant as she approaches her job with compassion and humility. In her time with the Village, she has shown true leadership to bring economic development to the area. Gigi has improved all of our lives and left an indelible impression on the Village of Itasca.

Madam Speaker and Distinguished Colleagues, Gigi Gruber is a remarkable leader who has dedicated her life to serving the people of Itasca. Please join me in recognizing her extraordinary service and wishing her every happiness in her life's upcoming endeavors.

A TRIBUTE IN REMEMBRANCE OF MANUEL BURGOS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Manuel Burgos, a distinguished community activist of East New York.

Manuel Burgos is a true East New Yorker and operates the small business Rare Arts. Growing up in East New York during the 1970s enabled Mr. Burgos to see first hand how disinvestments, crime, lack of social services and inadequate healthcare effects the neighborhood he is from. Mr. Burgos decided to enter community service to enhance the atmosphere and nature of East New York.

Before he turned 13, Mr. Burgos had already participated in many vacant lot clean-ups throughout the neighborhood. By his late teens he worked as a youth leader in his church's efforts to provide a Friday night safe haven for other youth in his neighborhood. At the age of 16, Mr. Burgos worked on a political campaign that made him realize political participation was the necessary means to effecting real change in communities like East New York. While in college he learned of the community organizing work of other young Latinos around the country and this shaped his future in critical ways.

Throughout his twenties, Mr. Burgos worked in his church as a youth mentor providing youth programming and a safe haven for teens. He worked in several nonprofits such as Cypress Hills LDC and the East New York Urban Youth Corps (ENYUUC) as a director for afterschool programming. While working for ENYUUC Mr. Burgos partnered with local police, community leaders, residents and merchants in a pilot program called Community Safety Initiative (CSI) to create a powerful problem solving consortium that was directly responsible for significant drops in violent crime. During this time, Mr. Burgos served as co-writer of the East New York Weed & Seed.

Today Mr. Burgos continues his work as a technical assistance provider on the local level, giving back to community projects that he helped build years ago. He has authored many papers on community-based collaborative problem solving and he developed a training guide on the same subject. His business, Rare Arts, is the mold of his writing and designing skills.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Manuel Burgos.

AARON MENDOZA

HON. ED PERLMUTTER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud Aaron Mendoza who has received the Arvada Wheat Ridge Service Ambassadors for Youth award. Aaron Mendoza is a senior at Arvada High School and received this award because his determination and hard work have allowed him to overcome adversities.

The dedication demonstrated by Aaron Mendoza is exemplary of the type of achievement that can be attained with hard work and perseverance. It is essential that students at all levels strive to make the most of their education and develop a work ethic that will guide them for the rest of their lives.

I extend my deepest congratulations once again to Aaron Mendoza for winning the Arvada Wheat Ridge Service Ambassadors for Youth award. I have no doubt he will exhibit the same dedication he has shown in his academic career to his future accomplishments.

HON. PHIL GINGREY

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize a young man from Georgia's 11th Congressional District who has distinguished himself as an excellent student and leader and has committed to serving his country. I am proud to announce that William Orr from Rome, Georgia, has received an appointment to the United States Military Academy. Will attends Darlington School, where he has a 3.93 Grade Point Average and has been selected as a member of the National Honor Society. In addition to his academic achievements, Will has also been an athletic star for Darlington, where he has played on Darlington's football, basketball, and soccer teams. He has earned varsity letters in four sports while at Darlington and was a captain on the football team for two years. Will is also very dedicated to public service and has participated in multiple mission trips with his church. Further, he has been selected to be a part of West Point's Summer Leadership Seminar.

Will Orr is an incredibly well-rounded young man, and I am honored to have the privilege to nominate him for an appointment to the U.S. Military Academy. I ask that my colleagues take this time to congratulate Will as well as his parents, James and Jo Orr, for all of his accomplishments. It is because of dedicated young people like Will that America has the finest military in the world. Our nation is fortunate to have his service.

TRIBUTE TO SSG JEFFREY ALAN HALL

HON. PARKER GRIFFITH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. GRIFFITH. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of SSG Jeffrey Alan Hall.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

On June 1, 2009, Jeffrey Hall and two other soldiers were killed in Afghanistan by a roadside bomb west of Kabul. Jeffrey was part of the U.S. Army's 2nd Battalion in the 10th Mountain Division and had achieved his life-long goal of earning the distinction of serving as a U.S. Army Ranger. As our nation and my community struggles with this sudden loss, I would like to pause and recognize Staff Sergeant Hall and the ultimate sacrifice paid by him and his family.

Jeffrey was an eight-year veteran of the United States Army, earning many well-deserved awards and decorations including two Army Commendation Medals, the National Defense Service Medal, a NATO Medal and a Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal. This was Jeffrey's third tour in Afghanistan. He was an American Hero who believed in his mission and told his father that this was a sacrifice he was willing to make to protect his country and the freedoms we enjoy.

Jeffrey Hall was a soldier but he was also a loving son to his parents Charles and Annette, a devoted husband to his wife Allison and eleven months ago became a father to Audrey Faith. Jeffrey loved life and his family and the outpouring of love and affection by his family and friends is the real tribute to the man that he was and the life that he led.

Staff Sergeant Hall is an inspiring example that we can all look up to and aspire to be like. He put the safety of all Americans before his own, and the people of this nation will be forever grateful. He motivated and inspired those around him and will be greatly missed by all who knew him, and by those who never had the honor and privilege of meeting him.

Our country lost a great soldier and an even better son last Monday. All of us in north Alabama are deeply saddened by Jeffrey's passing. On behalf of the entire community in the Tennessee Valley, across Alabama and a grateful nation, I rise today to remember SSG Jeffrey Allen Hall and to pay tribute to his honor, his sacrifice and his memory.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO THE RETIREMENT OF RICHARD A. GILTS AS PERRYSBURG POLICE CHIEF

HON. ROBERT E. LATTA

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. LATTA. Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride that I pay a very special tribute to an outstanding Police Chief in the Fifth District of Ohio. Richard A. Gilts of Perrysburg, Ohio has been serving the area for Thirty-Nine years, where he was promoted as the Sixth Chief of Police of Perrysburg in 2003.

Madam Speaker, there is no question that the safety of our citizens is vital. In January of 1976, when Richard was hired on to the Perrysburg Police Division, he rose through the ranks to become Sergeant in 1983 and Lieutenant in 1993. The safety of its citizens is of utmost importance to the city. Chief Gilts has demonstrated his commitment to this goal through his involvement in programs such as Safety Town, D.A.R.E., and the Perrysburg Police Foundation. Chief Gilts was an active member of Rotary International, having served as the President of the Perrysburg Rotary Chapter from 2005 to 2006.

On August 12, 2004, Chief Gilts dedicated a new 26,000 square foot police facility, which replaced the 4800 square foot station that was constructed at the same location in 1965. On August 28, 2004, Chief Gilts and the Police Division assisted with operational matters during a visit by President George W. Bush at the historic Fort Meigs Memorial Park. In the week leading up to the event, Chief Gilts and the Department were consumed by logistical and tactical issues, such as procurement and placement of equipment and props, fencing, barriers, site and crowd security, medical assistance, personnel scheduling and perimeter security.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute for the service of Chief Gilts. On behalf of the people of the Fifth District of Ohio, I wish Chief Gilts all of the best in his future endeavors.

MEDICARE TRANSITION CARE ACT OF 2009

HON. EARL BLUMENAUER

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Madam Speaker, today I am proud to introduce the Medicare Transition Care Act of 2009.

When people leave the hospital after an operation or illness, they are often overwhelmed by a complicated and risky road to recovery. Patients frequently report difficulty remembering clinical instructions, confusion over medications, and, in cases where multiple providers are involved, often get conflicting instructions from different providers. Providing a transitional care benefit within Medicare will help coordinate care, develop a care plan for patients and their caregivers, identify potential health risks, and prevent unnecessary hospitalizations.

This bipartisan legislation gets to the heart of improving quality while reducing costs. A study published in April 2009 in the New England Journal of Medicine found that almost one-third of Medicare beneficiaries studied who were discharged from a hospital were re-hospitalized within 90 days. Additionally, one-half of the individuals re-hospitalized had not visited a physician since their discharge, indicating a lack of follow-up care. The study estimated that Medicare spent $17.4 billion in 2004 on unplanned re-hospitalizations.

The Medicare Transition Care Act will directly address continuity of care problems by increasing support to patients as they move from the hospital to their new care setting and ensuring that appropriate follow-up care is provided during this vulnerable period. The benefit would be phased-in, initially targeting just the most at-risk individuals by providing evidence-based transitional care services tailored to their specific needs.

I am proud to partner with Congressman BOUSTANY, a cardiothoracic surgeon, on this commonsense legislation that will improve the quality and efficiency of our health care system.

HONORING THE INDIANA NATIONAL GUARD'S 1313TH ENGINEER COMPANY WHO WILL SOON BE DEPLOYING TO IRAQ

HON. BARON P. HILL

OF INDIANA

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. HILL. Madam Speaker, today, I would like to pay honor to the Indiana National Guard's 1313th Engineer Company, who will be deploying to Iraq in July and spending the next year there. These brave citizen soldiers, based out of Camp Atterbury in Edinburgh, IN, will be conducting a wide range of engineering missions in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom; including searching for improvised explosive devices, building roads and bridges, and, in general, improving lives to both our service personnel in Iraq and Iraqi civilians.

I am confident that their skilled work and dedication to duty will save lives, improve conditions in Iraq, and ultimately work toward the completion of our country's mission in Iraq.

I would also like to honor the families of these Guardsmen, who without their love and support, would make this already difficult task that much more challenging. They too share in the hardships of military service, and they too deserve our utmost thanks and respect.

These brave Hoosier Guardsmen and their families will be in my thoughts and prayers.

CONGRATULATING RAMSEY POLICE DEPARTMENT D.A.R.E. PROGRAM STUDENTS

HON. SCOTT GARRETT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, today, the Ramsey Police Department will hold its D.A.R.E. graduation ceremony with the students from the John Y. Dater and St. Paul Interparochial Schools. The young people participating in this important program have made a commitment to say no to drugs, underage drinking, and gang violence. They have done this with the support of Chief of Police Bryan Gurney and the brave men and women of the Ramsey Police Department.

Drug Abuse Resistance Education, or D.A.R.E., began as a small program in Los Angeles in 1983. Today, it is implemented in more than 75 percent of our nation's school districts and in more than 43 other nations. This program allows children to defeat the negative cultural influences that they are challenged with daily by opening the lines of communication between law enforcement and youth and empowering them with confidence and courage to say no to drugs.

I am proud of the young boys and girls who participated in this program in Ramsey, and I would like to recognize them all for taking this step toward positive citizenship:

A thirteen-year veteran of the force, Patrolman Shoemaker was recently honored as the New Jersey D.A.R.E. Officer of the Year. As Patrolman Shoemaker told the Bergen Record, "A policeman needs to be a leader and a role model in the community. I'll protect you from the bad guys. But, also, if you're going through something tough . . . a policeman can be your friend." Patrolman Shoemaker has daily lived up to these words. All who interact with Patrolman Shoemaker—criminals aside—can't help but sing his praises, and today I add my voice to the choir. I commend this humble and dedicated public servant on this well deserved recognition. I know Ramsey students and parents alike would join me in saying that our streets are safer and communities stronger for his presence.

A TRIBUTE IN REMEMBRANCE OF REVEREND DOCTOR PASTOR LAURENT LOUIS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. TOWNS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Reverend Doctor Pastor Laurent Louis, a man dedicated to serving God, his family and the community.

Pastor Laurent Louis was born on February 12, 1956 in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. He attended Lycee Petion a school that stressed duty, responsibility and serving others. In June 1978, he graduated high school and studied theology at the International Seminary of California. He is a caring father, loving husband, devoted pastor and a committed community leader.

At the age of 15, Pastor Louis began serving his church and the community with great respect and responsibility. He taught Sunday school and led the youth to a spiritual and disciplined life while devoting time and energy to his community. People in his community elected him to be the General Secretary of the soccer teams of the Croix Des Bouquets. He later became a sports broadcaster and an impartial referee in his sportive career. He knew health and sports can lead to good academics and a successful life.

Pastor Louis came to New York City in January of 1981 and soon fell in love with the Big Apple. He saw the need for his community to organize spiritually, and he immediately joined Emmanuel Baptist Church. It did not take his pastor long to discover Pastor Louis' leadership and appointed him assistant pastor, youth president and leader of the missionary. He accomplished his mission so well that when there was a need for a station church at Coney Island, Pastor Louis was selected to take on the task; within a few months there were 40 members.

Pastor Laurent Louis also founded an academic club to have students help one another. He understood how to bring good people together from the community to help in this endeavor. This club saved many young students and 95 percent succeeded academically. With good will and the help of good people, Pastor Louis was able to accomplish so much for his community.

Pastor Louis has been happily married for 25 years, and enjoyed a successful life with his wife Marie Mireille Louis and their six children. His first daughter Deborah, his sons Nathanael and Benjamin are attending college. His daughters Eltamar and Jessica are in high school and Johanna is in elementary school.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Pastor Laurent Louis.

TRIBUTE TO JOHNSON COUNTY ASSISTANT ELECTION COMMISSIONER KAREN BROWNING

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. MOORE of Kansas. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to pay Karen Browning, who recently stepped down after 41 years of service with the Johnson County, Kansas, Election Office, including 27 years as Assistant Election Commissioner.

Dedicated, experienced public servants like Karen Browning are the glue that holds government together at all levels, but they often do not receive the respect and consideration that they deserve. Karen Browning's retirement took from her office 41 years of deep devotion to her community and an intricate knowledge of the rules and history of Johnson County elections—a background that the citizens of Johnson County will find to be irreplaceable. I am pleased to have this opportunity to share with the other members of the House of Representatives a brief profile of Karen Browning which recently was published in the Johnson County Sun. I know that all Johnson Countians join with me in wishing Karen Browning all the best as she embarks upon her much deserved retirement, and we also thank her for her years of dedicated service and work to ensure that Johnson County elections have been conducted in a manner above reproach.

ELECTION OFFICIAL RETIRES AFTER SERVING 40 YEARS

(By Chuck Kurtz)

It was a one-issue, one-candidate "election" and assistant election commissioner Karen Browning cast the only vote: "Yes to Proposition Retirement."

After nearly 41 years with the Johnson County Election Office in Olathe, Browning officially retired May 22; a reception in her honor is planned for 3 to 6 p.m. June 17 at the Election Office, 2101 E. Kansas City Road, Southeast of Bass Pro, where Kansas Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh will pay tribute to her service.

Also speaking will be County Chairwoman Annabeth Surbaugh and Johnson County Election Commissioner Brian Newby.

Browning said she always will look back on her career with great fondness.

"My time at the Election Office was an incredible experience, full of hard work, passion for elections and democracy," she said. "It has been a great career that I have always enjoyed, but it's time for a new chapter in my life and to take it easy." In the past 40 years Browning has: Worked in more than 200 Johnson County elections, including 11 presidential elections; Served under six of Johnson County's eight election commissioners and 32 county commissioners; and, Watched the county's voter registration increase almost fourfold.

She said she welcomed the end to hand-counting thousands of paper ballots when the county switched to touch-screen voting machines. Counting paper ballots is time consuming, she said, and computers bring quicker results and less stress.

Browning's passion for the importance of voting was instilled in her as a child.

"My folks always talked about voting and how important it was," she said. "I started when I was young. Voting was already an important part of my life."

That led to her passion for doing her best as an employee at the election office. Newby said Browning was a walking encyclopedia and office historian. She has complete records on every election since she has been with the county.

"If anyone has a question about a past election, Karen is the person to ask," he said.

"She has given so much to our county and to our voters; she provided the best return on tax dollars that could ever be imagined," Newby said. "She leaves with the distinction of being the most effective election office employee ever in Johnson County."

In Browning's first presidential election Nov. 5, 1968, a total of 88,314 of Johnson County's 100,610 registered voters cast their ballots. In her last presidential election, Nov. 5, 2008, a total of 285,001 of the 364,441 registered voters cast ballots.

Her first job at the election office was as a key punch operator since all voter registration cards and reports were typed by hand.

"When we processed registrations, we typed them into the books that went to the polling places," she said. "We typed men on one page and women on another, which I found very interesting."

Newby said Browning has been instrumental in the evolution of the voter registration process, which she has overseen for many years.

In 1978, Browning was named election clerk supervisor followed by election manager in 1979 with primary responsibilities for voter registration and list maintenance.

She has served as assistant election commissioner the past 27 years.

Browning also has overseen Census and mapping operations, and knows Johnson County geography like the back of her hand, since any "visible ground feature" might someday be needed as a precinct boundary.

Although the election process has experienced significant changes over the years, Browning said one thing has not changed. The integrity of the ballot, even from a touch-screen voting machine, is still held sacred, and that requires rigorous adherence to the office's confirmation procedures, she said.

Browning has mixed feelings about leaving Johnson County public service, but admits she will miss the people.

"Elections begin and end with people," she said.

In retirement, Browning plans to spend more time with her family, and continue to volunteer in her many civic and church activities.

Her family includes three sons, three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

"We will miss her and wish her well," Newby said, "but we are gratified to know that she will always be a phone call away to advise us if we have a thorny issue. We even offered—threatened, I guess—to continue equipping her with a Blackberry so she could still be in the e-mail loop and give us guidance."

So far, no response from Browning.

HONORING THE WORK OF LOUISE BALLERSTEDT RAGGIO, MOTHER OF THE TEXAS FAMILY CODE

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Louise Ballerstedt Raggio, a trailblazer and an advocate who has spent her life making sure that women and families have equal rights under the law.

Mrs. Raggio was born in Manor, Texas and spent the early part of her life as the daughter of a hardworking, Texas farm family. From an early age, she learned the importance of perseverance and dedication to a cause, and these traits have remained persistent throughout her life. She graduated first in her class from high school and went on to earn an undergraduate degree with highest honors from the University of Texas at Austin.

After marrying and giving birth to two children, Mrs. Raggio began law school at Southern Methodist University in a time when it was not typical for a woman to do so. During law school, she gave birth to a third son, and although it was difficult, she persisted, graduated, and passed the Texas State Bar in 1952. Later, she took a job in the Dallas County District Attorney's office and took over all child and family cases. She was soon promoted and began doing criminal prosecution. During this time, she became active with the Texas State Bar and joined the newly-formed Family Law Section of the State Bar in 1960. She would eventually become Chairwoman of the committee, making her the first woman in Texas history to become Chair of any such committee.

As Chairwoman, Mrs. Raggio and her committee uncovered 44 state laws which discriminated against women, and notably, married women. She began a campaign to enact a Marital Property Bill and after seven drafts, Governor Connally signed it into law, marking the end of a three-year effort. She was so successful that she was asked to undertake the entire revision of all family laws in Texas and after ten years the Family Law Section of the Texas State Bar created the first complete Family Code of laws in the world.

Today, Mrs. Raggio has garnered numerous recognitions and honors including being elected the first female director of the State Bar of Texas. She is consistently regarded as the Mother of the Texas Family Code and Southern Methodist University has developed an annual Louise Ballerstedt Raggio Lecture Series in her honor. I ask my fellow colleagues to join me in honoring the work of Mrs. Raggio and her lifelong commitment to a fair and just legal system.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SUSAN M.
BRITTON

HON. PAUL TONKO

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. TONKO. Madam Speaker, New York State American Legion Auxiliary President, Susan M. Britton, has served with distinction during her term in office from July 2008 through July 2009. Mrs. Britton traveled to all 62 counties in the great state of New York, inspiring the members of the American Legion Auxiliary to honor and serve the veterans of New York State.

Susan Britton is a 35 year member of Clarke White Unit 589, American Legion Auxiliary in Albany County. She has remained an active and vital member of the organization, volunteering her services to veterans at the Stratton VA Medical Center in Albany and at the Albany VA Fisher House.

This year Department President Britton has chosen "Operation Purple" as her special project. Operation Purple began in 2004 and is sponsored through the National Military Family Association (NMFA). Operation Purple is the only program open to children of personnel from all branches of the U.S. Armed Forces ("purple" representing inclusion of the branches). The program focuses on helping military children deal with the challenges and stress that come with deployment by providing free weeks of summer camp at different locations to bring children together in a fun and healthy environment.

As word has spread about Operation Purple, there is a pressing need for additional support to allow as many children as possible to attend this specialized program. All funds donated will support resident children within New York State. There are two camps, located in Lewis and Orange counties.

Special fundraising projects have been conducted to support Operation Purple, including those by the American Legion Family, which include The American Legion, American Legion Auxiliary, and the Sons of the American Legion. To date, over $60,000 has been raised to provide military children in New York with the opportunity to attend one of these camps.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO COMPANY
B, 202D ENGINEER COMBAT
BATTALLION

HON. ROBERT E. LATTA

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. LATTA. Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride that I rise to pay a very special tribute to a brave group of men in Ohio's Fifth Congressional District. Company B of the 202d Engineer Combat Battalion is celebrating their sixty-sixth anniversary.

Madam Speaker, there is no question the military is one of the key building blocks of our country. From the earliest days of our Nation's history, courageous men and women have fought for the freedom and safety of the American people. Our soldiers have opened doors for America's citizens and allowed our children to live in a nation that is peaceful and free.

During World War II, Company B served in campaigns in Normandy, Central Europe, Northern France, Ardennes and the Rhineland. They were the only group to serve in all five campaigns and receive five battle stars in World War II.

The servicemen of Company B also fought alongside the 1st, 2d, 3d, 9th, and the 15th U.S. Army, the British 2d Army and the U.S. Navy throughout the war in 10 countries. One of their most significant contributions to the War effort was the construction of the longest Treadway Pontoon Bridge in the world at 1152 feet, which was built in less than six hours while facing enemy fire.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute to Company B of the 202d Engineer Combat Battalion. INTRODUCTION OF MOLALLA WILD
AND SCENIC RIVER BILL

HON. KURT SCHRADER

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. SCHRADER. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to introduce The Molalla Wild and Scenic River Bill. This legislation would designate 21.3 miles of the Molalla River as "wild and scenic" and would provide federal designation in preserving the character of this section of the Molalla River.

This legislation is supported by numerous elected officials, civic leaders, and recreational and environmental groups in Clackamas and Marion counties including American Rivers, the City of Molalla, the Oregon State Police, the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife, Wild Salmon Center, and the Willamette Riverkeepers. All of these groups recognize the social, cultural and economic benefits of this bill.

In Oregon, the Molalla River is known for its many recreational purposes which include hiking, diving, fishing, kayaking, whitewater rafting, picnicking, mountain biking, and horseback riding. It still serves as a water source for many citizens in Canby and Molalla, Oregon, and is nationally recognized for its beautiful and scenic wildlife. It provides spawning beds for threatened Steelhead Trout and Chinook salmon and is also an essential wildlife area for the pileated woodpecker, red tree vole, red-legged frog, northern spotted owl, Pacific giant salamander, and both golden and bald eagles.

Designating this section of the Molalla River as "wild and scenic" would permanently ensure its protection and preservation as one of Oregon's many natural state treasures. It would guarantee that future generations can experience the river's rich historical, cultural, and recreational purposes. I am excited to introduce this legislation and urge my colleagues to support it.

This year's season came to a close on March 21st at University Park, PA, and resulted in a 49-27 defeat of Nativity BMV by Bishop Guilfoyle's Lady Marauders. The hard work and talent of the nineteen players, as well as their five coaches, most certainly led to this rewarding experience.

TRIBUTE TO GENERAL DAVID D. MCKIERNAN

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. SKELTON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the accomplishments, dedication, public service and valor of General David D. McKiernan, U.S. Army, outgoing Commander of NATO's International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) and Commander U.S. Forces Afghanistan, who served our Nation with distinction during 37 years of faithful service. General McKiernan will retire from the Army on 1 August 2009, and we owe him our thanks and gratitude for his many efforts and years of service on behalf of our Nation.

A native of Ft. McPherson, Georgia, General McKiernan entered the U.S. Army in 1972, after graduating from the College of William and Mary and receiving a ROTC commission from the U.S. Army. During the course of his career he served at every level from platoon leader to four star commander. The units he commanded included the 1st Battalion, 35th Armor (Iron Knights), 1st Armored Division, 1st Brigade (Iron Horse) 1st Cavalry Division, 1st Cavalry Division, and 3rd U.S. Army/Combined Forces Land Component Command. He culminated his career serving as the theater commander—COMISAF/US Forces Afghanistan.

This superb officer performed key leadership roles during many of the crises and operations of the past 15 years. He served as the Deputy Chief of Staff G-2/G-3 with the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corp) while forward deployed in Sarajevo, Bosnia-

Herzegovina. From August 1998 until September 1999, he served as Deputy Chief of Staff, Operations, Headquarters, United States Army, Europe and Seventh Army during a period of simultaneous operations in Bosnia, Albania, and Kosovo. General McKiernan subsequently became the Coalition Forces Land Component Commander for Central Command. In March 2003, General McKiernan commanded and led all coalition and U.S. conventional ground forces in the invasion of Iraq.

As the capstone for an exceptional career of service to our country, General McKiernan distinguished himself from 3 June 2008 to 3 June 2009 while serving as the Commander, International Security Assistance Force and Commander, U.S. Forces—Afghanistan. General McKiernan was instrumental in developing the partnerships and setting the conditions necessary for achieving mission success in Afghanistan. He revamped the campaign strategy. He worked to improve command and control in that war by reorganizing the ISAF headquarters staff to better execute that strategy and working to establish a new command—U.S. Forces Afghanistan, significantly improving coordination of counterinsurgency operations across Afghanistan.

In the fall of 2008, General McKiernan articulated the need for a sizeable increase in U.S. forces in the strategically important southern region of Afghanistan to improve security and help safeguard national elections in August 2009. He was the first to recommend the need for a sizeable increase in civilian resources from the U.S. Government to bolster governance and development efforts.

General McKiernan improved operations in Afghanistan, issuing new Counterinsurgency Guidance as the campaign shifted to efforts to protect the Afghan population, obtaining legal authorities to conduct counternarcotics interdiction, improving force protection measures, and issuing new guidance that cut down on non-combatant casualties. General McKiernan worked with the Ministry of Interior to develop the Afghan Public Protection Program, which could become a blueprint for developing bottom up governance in the districts and provinces throughout the country. He worked with the Afghan Government to support a highly successful 2008–2009 voter registration program with over 4.5 million Afghans registering without major incident and prepared the plans to support a fair and credible election in August 2009. He received approval for his recommendation to accelerate the growth of the Afghan National Army to 134,000 by December 2011, and has started the planning effort to grow the Afghan National Security Forces up to 400,000 in the years to come. He also was the architect behind the plan to bring U.S. units in 2009 that can not only conduct a rigorous counter-insurgency campaign in the south, but can build the capacity of the Afghan Army and Police by training, partnering and mentoring with Afghan Army and Police units. General McKiernan personally reinvigorated the Tripartite Commission (TPC) process with Afghanistan, Pakistan, and ISAF, and conducted bilateral meetings to improve U.S. and Pakistan relations and to make the case that both countries face a mutual terrorist threat. It is certainly my hope that General McKiernan's initiatives build momentum going into the summer of 2009.

General David D. McKiernan is a true American patriot. His leadership, keen intellect and performance throughout an intensive and demanding period of military history were instrumental in achieving success in mission after mission. He boldly led "America's finest" during combat operations in Desert Storm, the Balkans, the invasion of Iraq and finally in the harsh and difficult mountains and deserts of Afghanistan. I know his selfless performance of duty, courage under fire, exceptional integrity and quiet pursuit of excellence has inspired many American warriors who have served with him. I am sure he will be truly missed in Afghanistan by his troops, diplomatic colleagues, NATO and our Coalition partners, and the Government of Afghanistan. It gives me great pleasure today to recognize and salute a great American—General David McKiernan—before my colleagues. I wish General McKiernan and his lovely wife Carmen all the best that life has to offer as he concludes a most distinguished career in service to our country.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MILITARY OVERPAYMENT FAIRNESS ACT
OF 2009

HON. CAROL SHEA-PORTER

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Ms. SHEA-PORTER. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the Military Overpayment Fairness Act. Payment errors are common in all military branches and the burden of having to quickly repay an overpayment can place a significant strain on military families.

When I had a meeting with National Guard families and asked for their most significant problems, they spoke to me about the hardships caused by overpayment errors. I heard the story of a National Guard Sergeant from New Hampshire who was injured in Afghanistan and hospitalized in Walter Reed. Due to an error by the Defense Finance and Accounting Service (DFAS), he received four months of pay in error. He immediately brought these overpayments to DFAS's attention. DFAS assured the service member that there was no error and that he was entitled to all of the money he received. The service member disputed the payments several times, but was told they were correct. Then, a year later, DFAS reversed itself and suddenly notified him that he had been overpaid. They began deducting at the rate two-thirds of his monthly paycheck. To make matters worse, by this time he had enrolled in college and still had the continued, added burden of house payments. This and other similar stories show the severity of this problem in my home state of New Hampshire and across the nation.

I am introducing this legislation to ease the burden on servicemen and women by requiring DFAS to take into account the finances of members of the Armed Forces when pay errors are made. This bill gives the Department of Defense the flexibility to negotiate the terms of repayment, taking into account the finances of the service member, to avoid causing service members undue hardship. In addition, the bill states that not more than 10 percent of a service member's pay can be deducted monthly for an overpayment. Currently, up to two-thirds of a service member's salary can be deducted. The bill delays repayments if service members are wounded, ill, or deployed. It also has a five-year statute of limitations. These provisions should encourage the Department of Defense to improve its accounting practices.

The men and women that serve our nation have already sacrificed for our country—there is no excuse for placing undue financial burdens on these men and women as a result of poor accounting practices. I was proud to introduce legislation to address the hardships caused by these errors. I look forward to its consideration in the House of Representatives.

INTRODUCTION OF FEE
DISCLOSURE BILL

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce The Defined Contribution Plan Fee Transparency Act of 2009. During the last Congress, we expected some guidance from the Department of Labor on the issue of fee transparency, but not much was finally implemented. Therefore, I believe that Congressional action is warranted and this bill provides a strong disclosure requirement to benefit both workers and companies in understanding fees.

A few years ago, AARP conducted a survey of 401(k) participants to find out what they knew about the fees paid by their plans. Plan fees can make a huge difference in your account balance. As the Department of Labor has pointed out in a helpful guide on the issue, "Fees and expenses paid by your plan may substantially reduce the growth in your account." Literally, it pays to know what these expenses are. What the AARP found in their survey is instructive: 83 percent of participants acknowledged they do not know how much they pay in fees or expenses. Considering the number of people who have told me they do not dare to even open their 401(k) statement in this devalued market, that percentage may have increased even more!

But fees are a serious issue and one which participants need to understand from the outset. The House Education and Labor Committee has held several hearings to highlight this issue over the past 18 months, and I commend the Committee Chairman, Mr. MILLER, for his leadership and thoughtful ideas about how to address fair disclosure.

The growth in defined contribution plans offers great opportunities for workers, with alternatives and options they did not have before. Many workers, however, are simply overwhelmed with the information distributed and, because of that, may not be able to utilize these opportunities. Certainly, more disclosure is preferred. But, as AARP found out, the need to better understand this information means it must be in an easily digestible format and in plain English.

The legislation I am filing today, which updates the bill I filed last Congress, would provide for disclosure both to the worker and to the employer. Participants, or workers, would get both an enrollment notice up-front and a quarterly notice updating them on their account. At enrollment, the bill requires that for each of the plan's investment alternatives, the employer would have to disclose the alternative's objective and investment manager, its risk and return characteristics and its historic rates of return in comparison to a benchmark. In addition, the employer must indicate whether the alternative is passively managed, as with an index fund, or actively managed, plus the differences between these two investment styles and whether or not the alternative is a single-alternative investment solution, such as a lifecycle or target retirement date fund.

Regarding fees, the bill requires employers to disclose to employees at enrollment the annual operating expenses for each investment alternative (together with a translation of these asset-based fees into illustrative dollar amounts), whether such fees pay for services beyond investment management, such as plan administration, and whether there are additional charges for buying or selling the particular alternative, such as redemption fees. In addition, participants must be provided with information about any separate fees they will be charged for plan administration as well as a notice that certain plan services they may decide to use could have separate charges associated with them, such as investment advice programs, brokerage windows, or plan loans. Accompanying these disclosures would be a statement that participants should not select investments based solely on fees but based on careful consideration of a range of factors including the alternatives' risk level, returns and investment objectives. The bill requires this information about plan investments to be provided to employees annually as well.

In addition to this enrollment notice, each quarter, participants would receive information about the investments they had selected and the fees applicable to their accounts. This quarterly notice would describe which investment alternatives the individual participant was invested in, what percentage of the participant's total account each alternative represented, the risk and return characteristics of each such alternative and whether such alternatives were passively or actively managed. The statement would also summarize for participants what asset classes their account is invested in, with percentage breakdowns. On fees, the quarterly notice must describe the annual operating expenses (with dollar examples) and any sales charges for the alternatives the participant has selected, any separate charges for plan administration and any deductions for participant-initiated services. In addition, to assist employees who may want to make investment changes, the notice must tell participants how to access investment characteristic and fee information for alternatives in which they are not invested.

My bill also requires service providers to disclose to employers various fee and expense information in advance of a contract. This will ensure that employers have the information they need to bargain effectively with plan service providers and to keep costs at reasonable levels for participants.

Providers must give the employer an estimate of total fees, a detailed and itemized list of all the services to be provided under the contract and a schedule of any transaction charges that participants may face. Providers that offer multiple bundled services must separate the fees charged under the contract into fees for investment management and fees for administration and recordkeeping and must also disclose fees paid to intermediaries or other third-parties. Providers must also disclose whether they expect to receive payments from third-parties in connection with providing services to the plan, also referred to as revenue-sharing, and if so, must name those parties and the amount expected to be received from each. This revenue-sharing information is critical so that employers understand how their providers are being paid and whether any such financial relationships give rise to potential conflicts of interest. Providers will likewise have to disclose whether they may benefit from the offering of proprietary investment products or those of third parties and must tell employers if the investment products offered to the plan are available at other price levels. Plan service providers must also provide this detailed disclosure statement to employers every year the contract is in place and prior to any material modification of the contract. In addition, employers must make such statements available to plan participants upon written request so that those employees who want to delve into the details of the plan's financing can do so.

The Department of Labor's guide on 401(k) fees states that fees and expenses generally fall into three categories: plan administration, investment, and individual services fees. By requiring all service providers, whether they just provide recordkeeping or if they perform it all, to disclose fees in broad categories, such as these, companies and employees can better evaluate what they are getting for what price they pay. It is my understanding that some service providers are already disclosing more than what is required. I hope that we can capture those "best practices" and implement them across the board so that all workers and employers have the best data available.

Additionally, my bill would apply not only to 401(k) plans, but to all tax-preferred, participant-directed defined contribution plans, including 403(b) plans and governmental 457(b) plans. The amendments contained in the bill are all within the Internal Revenue Code, and therefore, penalties for not complying will be taxes assessed per violation per day, subject to a cap. The bill is forward-thinking, pushing electronic delivery as much as possible. I hope to work with the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. RANGEL, to address this issue within the Committee very soon as I know he shares my concern that the taxpayers' interests be protected.

Despite the fact that 8 in 10 participants do not know what fees are charged, there is some good news out there too. According to a survey released in April by Deloitte, the International Foundation of Employee Benefit Plans, and the International Society of Certified Employee Benefit specialists, the average expense ratio for plan investments was down from the prior survey period. Clearly, the attention to fees is having some impact resulting in lower costs.

It is my hope that this bill will provide much more information about plan fees and expenses in a useful way without overwhelming recipients. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

WORLD ELDER ABUSE
AWARENESS DAY

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Ms. DELAURO. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the important work being done in Connecticut to bring attention to the problem of elder abuse, and to ask that all of my colleagues join the national observance of World Elder Abuse Awareness Day on June 15th.

Older adults are our parents and neighbors and friends—the grown-ups who cared for us when we were young and once protected us from harm. Now, we can help them live safely and with dignity. Sadly, elder abuse and neglect happens all too frequently in America. Elder abuse can be financial, sexual, emotional, and neglect; and it is not always intentional. It can happen in any kind of home. Sometimes abuse is the unintended action of an overwhelmed family member. Sometimes it is out of anger. Never is it deserved. Only one out of five cases is ever reported, and awareness of the problem is our first line of defense.

In Connecticut's Third District, The Coalition for the Advocacy, Prevention and Elimination of Older Adult Abuse (CAPE), is working to bring this hidden crisis into the light. They began a little over a year ago with a grant from the National Committee for the Prevention of Elder Abuse. CAPE is led by The Center for Elder Abuse Prevention at The Jewish Home for the Elderly and the Southwestern Area Agency on Aging. Today, the partnership has earned the generous support of The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Local Funding Partnerships and many local funders including The Fairfield County Community Foundation and The Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Foundation. These resources allow The Center to help victims who cannot stay at a domestic violence shelter, because of physical or cognitive issues that occur in late-life, find a safe temporary place to live, where their special needs can be met and the healing can begin.

On June 15th, CAPE will be holding a World Elder Abuse Awareness Day event at the Jewish Home for the Elderly in Fairfield. I commend their efforts to ensure that my constituents know how to spot the signs that a friend or loved one may be the victim of abuse, and where they can go for help. And I encourage my colleagues to contact me to learn more about elder abuse and become part of the solution in their communities.

Again, I commend the work of The Center and CAPE. Ending elder abuse begins by making every day World Elder Abuse Awareness Day.

CONGRATULATING THE UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON MEN'S CREW TEAM

HON. JIM McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. McDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, I would like to submit the following:

University of Washington Men's Rowing Team and Honored Guests,

I write to give my hearty congratulations to the University of Washington's men's rowing team for earning their 12th varsity eight national championship, the 107th IRA Regatta, and sweeping the eights on the way to a historic four golds and five medals overall.

This astounding overall performance was capped by a thrilling come-from-behind victory over arch-rival California and I would like to take this time to commend the varsity rowers on their fine performance. Heath Allen, Aljosa Corovic, Will Crothers, Steve Full, Rob Gibson, Jesse Johnson, Max Lang, Katelin Snyder, and David Worley have earned my utmost admiration, as have all the members of the University of Washington's rowing team, down to the last rower in the boathouse.

What makes this victory so impressive is the volume of dominance exhibited by this extremely deep team. The varsity eight winning gold is an impressive feat in itself, but to sweep the eights is the highest testament to the dedication of the team and the culture of hard work and determination established by Coach Bob Ernst.

Since 1903, when the University of Washington first participated in intercollegiate rowing, our crews have established themselves as the toughest and most determined crews in the country. This year's crews have continued that tradition by emphatically putting the "gold" back in the purple and gold.

I am extremely proud to represent you in Congress and I know that with the foundation of hard work instilled in these young rowers by their coach and the University of Washington, there are no limits to what they will go on to accomplish in life.

country. I am proud to announce that Grant Tucek from Powder Springs, Georgia has received appointments to both the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy and will enter the Military Academy this year. HONORING NEWSWEEK RANKING OF THE SCHOOL FOR THE TALENTED AND GIFTED AND THE SCHOOL FOR SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING AT YVONNE A. EWELL TOWNVIEW CENTER

OF TEXAS

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the School for the Talented and Gifted and the School for Science and Engineering at Yvonne A. Ewell Townview Center for receiving the extraordinary honor of being ranked as the top two public schools in the nation.

Each year, Newsweek ranks the top public high schools out of a possible 27,000, placing these two schools as the top two out of the 1,500 schools listed. For 2009 the Magnet School for the Talented and Gifted ranked number one, with the Magnet School for Engineering and Science ranking number two. I am delighted that these two schools have achieved such a distinction, placing them among the elite public institutions in this country.

Additionally, I would like to recognize W. T. White High School which ranked 171st and Woodrow Wilson High School which ranked 637th. These rankings put all of these high schools in the top 6 percent of all public secondary schools in the country.

Located in my district of Dallas, Texas, Townview Magnet is one of the most diverse schools in the state, with minorities representing over half of the student population. Given the diverse nature of the City of Dallas itself, and the increased globalization of most industries, the students attending these two schools will have the opportunity not only to impact the Dallas area, but on a global scale. This marks the third time in 4 years that the School for the Talented and Gifted has been ranked number one in the nation. This unveiling marks the second time that the School of Engineering and Science has been ranked second nationally, the other year being in 2007.

This honor shows the values of a good educational environment, as many of the students attending these two schools will have opportunities to be the future leaders of this country. This honor will serve as an inspiration to the faculty, staff and students of Townview Magnet School to maintain a high level of work. I extend my appreciation for the hard work of everyone involved in achieving this honor, and lend my support to the future success of Townview.

Madam Speaker, again, I congratulate the students, teachers, principals and parents of Townview Magnet School for the Talented and Gifted and the Magnet School for Science and Engineering on this honor.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO VAN WERT MIDDLE SCHOOL

HON. ROBERT E. LATTA

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. LATTA. Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride that I rise to pay a very special tribute to an outstanding school in my district in Northwest Ohio. Van Wert Middle School in Van Wert, Ohio is one of only 80 schools in the United States to be recognized as a School to Watch by the National Forum to Accelerate Middle Grades Reform.

Madam Speaker, there is no question that education is the foundation of our country. From the earliest days of our nation's history, children have sought out the opportunity to learn subjects such as math, science, and literature. Education has opened doors for America's citizens and allowed our nation to be one of the most advanced in the world.

Every year, the Schools to Watch program identifies schools across the country that are well on their way to meeting the criteria for high performance. These schools are known to be academically excellent, developmentally responsive, and socially equitable.

In order for Van Wert Middle School to be selected for this prestigious honor, this high-performing school established norms, structures and organizational arrangements to support and sustain its trajectory toward excellence. Van Wert Middle School has a sense of purpose that drives every facet of their practice and decision-making.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute to the Van Wert Middle School. Our communities are well served by having dedicated educators who go above and beyond the norm to teach the citizens of tomorrow. On behalf of the people of the Fifth District of Ohio, I am proud to recognize this great achievement.

HONORING ANNETTE GODISSART

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. SHUSTER. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the accomplishments of Ms. Annette Godissart, the recipient of the Bedford County Rotary Club's 2009 Citizen of the Year Award. As this year's award winner, Annette has shown exemplary service as a citizen of Bedford County.

In addition to her duties as a Laboratory and Cardio-Pulmonary Manager at UPMC Bedford Hospital, Annette has remained steadfast in her service to the community as a volunteer, with an emphasis on the youth of Bedford County. Whether serving the Bedford County School System as a member of the Athletic or Technology Committee, or acting as umpire for youth softball games, her efforts to aid in the positive development of Bedford County youths have been constant.

Annette has been integral to the success of the Bedford County "Reality Tour" at the Bedford County Jail. Here, on a monthly basis, she has spent the last five years working to convey the importance of remaining drug-free to hundreds of local teenagers by showing them the stark realities of drug abuse. This type of selfless volunteerism is another way in which Annette seeks to mold the future leaders of Bedford County.

The artistic and civic-minded aspects of Annette's community service are shown in her involvement in community theatre as well as the Boy Scouts of America. In the theatre Annette entertains Bedford County residents through her stage talents, appearing in several shows each year with the Bedford County Players, a local non-profit theater group that promotes the involvement of youth in on stage productions. With respect to scouting, after years of service to her two sons, and the Boy Scouts, as a scout leader, Annette remains active as a merit badge counselor, where she helps scouts to earn their Theatre Merit Badges.

Through her dedication to community service, and her enduring commitment to the young men and women of Bedford County, Annette Godissart is an exemplary citizen who embraces the Rotary Motto of "Service above Self." RECOGNIZING CONGREGATION TORAT EMET

HON. PATRICK J. TIBERI

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. TIBERI. Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to recognize Congregation Torat Emet. This synagogue is the product of the hard work and dedication of many individuals in Central Ohio and their commitment to the religious growth of their membership and the local Jewish community.

Central Ohio is blessed with many houses of faith that can claim long traditions of service to our community. The addition of Congregation Torat Emet to Central Ohio will continue to make it a vibrant and thriving spiritual center. The congregation will serve the community well and is an inspiration to all.

Throughout our community's history those seeking a place to learn more about their faith have found a home among our houses of worship. The faithful dedication exhibited helps to make Columbus and Central Ohio the kind of place where citizens of all religions and nationalities desire to live, work and raise their families.

This congregation, of more than 150 families, began only five years ago. The goal of securing and strengthening modern Orthodoxy in Central Ohio has been driven by Jay and Jeanie Schottenstein along with Rabbi Howard Zack. Rabbi Zack has been the Spiritual Leader of Congregation Torat Emet since its inception in September 2001. Today, as they open their second Synagogue in Columbus, Ohio may the local Jewish community celebrate the reality of this vision.

I offer my congratulations to the Congregation Torat Emet and the dedication of their new facility.

VETERANS NONPROFIT RESEARCH AND EDUCATION CORPORATIONS ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2009

HON. BOB FILNER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 9, 2009

Mr. FILNER. Madam Speaker, today I introduce the "Veterans Nonprofit Research and Education Corporations Enhancement Act of 2009".

As the nation's largest healthcare provider network and the custodian of our veterans' health, the Department of Veterans Affairs has an important role to play in the development of innovative new healthcare technologies, medication, and practices.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Veterans Affairs research program is well respected within the research community. The program focuses on research that concerns the special health care needs of veterans especially war related injuries and illnesses.

Some recent successes of the program include neuromotor prosthesis for paralyzed patients, development of an artificial retina for veterans who have lost vision due to retinal damage, and the use of a generic drug (prazosin) for veterans with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder.

Importantly, this research program does not just benefit veterans but also American citizens as a whole. Years ago, this program was responsible for bringing to the medical community the pacemaker.

Nonprofit Research Corporations were authorized by Congress in 1988. The intent of these Corporations was to provide a flexible funding mechanism to conduct research and education at VA medical centers. Today, there are 82 independent, state-chartered corporations.

Nonprofit research corporations are a critical component of the overall VA research program. In Fiscal Year 2007 alone, nonprofits were responsible for securing $250 million from the private sector and non-VA public funding to support over 4,000 research and education programs at the VA. This includes providing nearly 2,500 without compensation research employees who work side-by-side with VA-salaried employees.

This legislation authorizes the creation of multi-medical center research corporations that would allow two or more VA medical centers to share one Nonprofit Research Corporation. VA facilities with small research programs may join with larger ones. Additionally, smaller ones will be allowed to pool resources to support a Corporation.

It also clarifies the purpose of the corporation by enabling Nonprofit Research Corporations to support functions related to the conduct of research and education.

Additionally, this legislation will broaden the qualifications for the two mandatory non-VA board members beyond familiarity with medical research and education to acquire those with legal and financial expertise for sound governance and financial management. This provision would also remove the overly strict language prohibiting non-VA board members from having any financial relationship, current or past with a for-profit entity which funds VA research or education. This change would be consistent with the rules applied to federal employees in dealing with conflict of interest by allowing for means of recusal.

This legislation further clarifies the powers of corporations. Some of the key authorities provided by this provision include allowing the Corporations to charge registration fees for education and training programs and to use such funds to offset program expenses or for future educational purposes.

It will allow the VA to reimburse Nonprofit Research Corporations for the salary and benefits of NPC employees loaned to VA under Intergovernmental Personnel Act (IPA) assignments.

Finally this legislation will improve accountability and oversight of corporations by requiring each Nonprofit Research Corporation to submit an annual report to the Secretary of the VA on operations, activities, and accomplishments. It would also require Nonprofit Research Corporations with revenues in excess of $300,000 in any given year to obtain an audit.

I urge your support.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following leader remarks, there will be a period of morning business for up to 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each. The Republicans will control the first 30 minutes and the majority will control the second 30 minutes.

Following morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the tobacco legislation. There will then be up to 1 hour for debate only, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees. This morning, we hope to reach an agreement to dispose of the pending Lieberman amendment and several additional amendments. Upon the use or yielding back of the debate time on the bill—that is 1 hour—and disposition of the Lieberman amendment, the substitute amendment will be agreed to and the Senate will proceed to a cloture vote on the underlying tobacco bill; therefore, Senators should expect a vote at around 11:30.

NOMINATIONS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have 25 nominations the Republicans have held up. They are important. I was visited by Secretary Salazar regarding Hilary Tompkins, who is somebody he needs. She would be a lawyer for the Interior Department. She has a great education and background. That was cleared yesterday, and then the Republicans said no.

We have numerous people. For the Sentencing Commission, there is William Sessions of Vermont. We hear that is being held up because Senator LEAHY is from Vermont and they don't like the way Chairman LEAHY is handling the Judiciary Committee. That is what we have been told. We also have Harold Koh. I heard on Monday, day before yesterday, from Secretary Clinton that this is somebody she needs very badly. Mr. Koh is going to be the lawyer for the State Department. We have a number of people under the auspices of the judiciary, and we can go through these. We have somebody who is going to help run the Department of Homeland Security, Rand Beers, who is well-qualified and a good person. The topper of them all is LTG Stanley McChrystal to be the man who runs Afghanistan.

I hope people will search their consciences and try to get these done. I cannot file cloture on every one of these. So that people watching this will understand our Senate procedure, it takes days for us to do that. With 25 nominations held up, it would take all summer—until we finish the July recess and beyond that—for us to get this done, filing cloture on every one of these. I hope it doesn't come to that.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in a single word, the health debate is about “choices.” Will our country choose to tell parents they cannot take their child to the doctor because insurance is not in existence or is prohibitively expensive? Will we choose to tell small businesses they have to lay off employees because they cannot afford skyrocketing health care premiums? As was outlined by Senator DURBIN yesterday, a small businessman he talked about was dealing with the travails of trying to maintain health insurance for his employees. Will we choose real, meaningful health care reform that assures everybody the quality care they deserve?

There is another way this debate is about choice. Democrats are committed to ensuring all Americans can choose their doctors, hospitals, and health plans. No matter what the Republicans claim, this government has no intention of choosing any of these things for you or meddling in any of these relationships. We have said that time and again. If you like the coverage you have, you can choose to keep it or you can change if you desire.

Like most Americans, we believe there should be more choice and more competition to lift the heavy weight of crushing health care costs. Today, 18 cents of every dollar spent in America is on health care. If we don't do something about this legislatively, by 2020 it will be more than 35 percent of every dollar spent in America. If we leave it up to private insurance companies, which are more interested in keeping their profits than keeping us healthy, that won't happen. One of the best ways to do that—that is, to give people choice and competition—is to pass the health care legislation.

Third, the Republicans have a choice in this debate. They can choose to work with us or against the interests of the American people. From the start, we have reached out to Republicans in this debate. Senator BAUCUS has done everything he can to get a bipartisan bill. He still believes he can do that. I hope that is the case. Senator DODD, filling in for Senator KENNEDY, has done the same. He has reached out to Ranking Member ENZI and others on the committee to try to come up with a bipartisan bill. That bill was given to us yesterday.

Again, from the start, we have reached out to Republicans. We have let them know we would rather write this bill with them. That is what we want to do. Republicans, so far, have made it quite clear what they are against. We remain interested to learn what they are for. Democrats continue to save for our Republican colleagues a seat, or seats, at the table, and we sincerely hope they will take those seats.

Last year, the American people made their choice clear. In no uncertain terms, they rejected the Republican status quo. Those with coverage know their health care bills are higher because of tens of millions of Americans who are uninsured. They know they should not have to go bankrupt or lose their home just to afford to stay healthy or care for a loved one.

I am sure we will disagree in the debate at times, and that is fine. We welcome an open and honest debate on the issue. We welcome a dialog.

One choice we do not have is to wait. We don't have a choice to wait. Health care is not a luxury. It should not be a luxury. We cannot afford another year in which about 50 million of us have to choose between basic necessities and lining the pockets of big insurance companies just to stay healthy.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, Americans are increasingly frustrated with the U.S. health care system as we know it. They expect real reform, not just the promise of reform that never seems to come or the illusion of reform that ends up destroying what is good about the current system and replacing it with something that is actually worse.

Americans don't think basic medical procedures should break the bank, and they don't understand why millions of Americans have to go without basic care in a nation as prosperous as our own. Still, many Americans are quite happy with the health care they currently have, and they don't want to be forced into a government plan they don't like.

So the need for reform is not in question. The real question is what kind of reform—the kind that makes care more affordable and accessible or the kind that makes existing problems worse.

One thing most people like about health care in the U.S. is the quality of cancer care that's available here. Far too many Americans die from cancer. Yet for all the problems we have, the fact is, America boasts some of the highest cancer survival rates in the world. And that is not the kind of thing Americans want to see change. But it could very well change if the U.S. adopts a government-run health care system along the lines of the one some are proposing.

A recent study comparing U.S. cancer survival rates with other countries found that, on average, U.S. women have a 63 percent chance of living at least 5 years after a cancer diagnosis compared to a 54 percent rate for women in Britain. As for men, 66 percent of American males survive at least 5 years while 45 percent of British men do.

Just as important as treatment is early detection. And here again, the U.S. routinely outperforms countries with government-run health care systems. According to one report, 84 percent of women between the ages of 50 and 64 get mammograms regularly in the United States—far higher than the 63 percent of women in the United Kingdom. Access to preventive care is extremely important and, frankly, when it comes to breast cancer, preventive care is something we do quite well in the U.S.

These are the kinds of things Americans like about our system, and these are the kinds of things that could change under a government plan. Americans don't want to be forced off their existing plans, and they certainly don't want a government board telling them which treatments and medicines they can and cannot have.

It is no mystery why Americans have higher cancer survival rates than their counterparts in a country such as Great Britain. Part of the reason is that Americans have greater access to the care and the medicines they need. And they don't want that to change. All of us want reform but not reform that denies, delays, or rations health care. Instead, we need reform that controls costs even as it protects patients.

Some ways to do this would be by discouraging the junk medical liability lawsuits that drive up the cost of practicing medicine and limit access to care in places such as rural Kentucky; through prevention and wellness programs that reduce health care costs, such as programs that help people quit smoking, fight obesity, and get early diagnoses for disease; and we could control costs and protect patients by addressing the needs of small businesses without imposing mandates or taxes that kill jobs.

All of us want reform, but the government-run plan that some are proposing for the U.S. isn't the kind of change Americans are looking for. We should learn a lesson from Canada. At a time when some in the U.S. want government-run health care, Canada is instituting reforms that would make their system more like ours.

According to Canadian-born doctor David Gratzner, the medical establishment in Canada is in revolt, with private sector options expanding and doctors frustrated by government cutbacks that limit access to care. The New York Times reported a few years ago that private clinics were opening in Canada at the rate of about one a week—private clinics. Dr. Gratzner asked a simple question: Why are Americans rushing into a system of government-dominated health care when the very countries that have experienced it for so long are backing away? Many Americans are beginning to ask themselves the very same thing.

SOTOMAYOR NOMINATION

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, Senator LEAHY's decision to rush Judge Sotomayor's confirmation hearing is, indeed, puzzling. It risks resulting in a less-informed hearing, and it breaks with years of tradition in which bipartisan agreements were reached and honored over the scheduling of hearings for Supreme Court nominees. It damages the cordiality and good will the Senate relies on to do its business. These kinds of partisan maneuvers have always come with consequences. This time is no different.

The explanations that some of our friends offered yesterday to justify a rushed hearing were almost as remarkable as the decision itself and the partisan way in which it was handled. Some said Republicans proposed unreasonable hearing dates. Yet no one can cite the time and place when any of these supposed requests were made.

But blaming Republicans for statements they never made was not as ludicrous as the claim that Judge Sotomayor's long judicial record is somehow reason to rush the review process. Not only is this counterintuitive—why should it take less time to read more cases?—it also flies in the face of every statement our Democratic friends made on the topic after the nomination of the last two Supreme Court nominees.

Time and time again, they told us the Senate was not a rubberstamp and that hearings for Judge Alito and Judge Roberts could not be rushed. As Senator LEAHY put it at the time:

We want to do it right. We don't want to do it fast.

Republicans respected these requests because we recognized the importance of a thorough review. On the Alito nomination, for instance, Senators had 70 days to prepare for a hearing on a nominee who, as Senator LEAHY noted at the time, had handled some 3,500 cases on the Federal bench. Judge Sotomayor has handled over 3,600 cases, so it stands to reason we would have as much time to review her record as we did Judge Alito's. But for some reason, the old standard has been thrown out as new reasons have emerged for rushing the process on this nominee.

As Senator SESSIONS informed us yesterday, the questionnaire Judge Sotomayor filled out suffers from significant omissions. For example, she failed to produce numerous opinions from cases in which she was involved as a district attorney.

In addition, she failed to produce a memorandum from her time with the Puerto Rican Legal Defense Fund that opposed the application of the death penalty. When this omission was brought to the judge's attention, I understand the White House then provided this memorandum, saying it was an oversight. But in the rush to complete the questionnaire in order to garner a talking point, you are prone to these sorts of mistakes. This, of course, counsels the Senate to have a thorough, deliberative process, not a rush to judgment in order to meet an arbitrary deadline.

When it came to Republican nominees such as Judge Roberts and Judge Alito, our Democratic friends wanted to review the record, and Republicans worked in a bipartisan fashion to come to a consensus on a fair process that respected the minority's rights. Yet when it comes to a Democratic nominee, our friends want to deny Republicans the same rights. They want the shortest confirmation timeline in recent memory for someone with the longest judicial record in recent memory. Let me say that again.

They want the shortest confirmation timeline in recent memory for someone with the longest judicial record in recent memory.

This violates basic standards of fairness, and it prevents Senators from carrying out one of their most solemn duties—a thorough review of the President's nominee to a lifetime position on the highest Court in the land. The decision to short circuit that process is regrettable and completely unnecessary.

I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business for up to 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the second half.

The Senator from Nevada.

GUANTANAMO

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, as we are confronted with the news this week of the first of what may be many deadly terrorists being transferred to American soil, I am still left to wonder what the administration's plan is for the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay.

I recently had the privilege of visiting Guantanamo Bay. I traveled down there with Senators BROWNBACK, BARRASSO, and JOHANNIS. I would like to start out by saying how proud I am of the job our men and women in uniform who are stationed down there are doing. ADM Dave Thomas and his staff are doing an outstanding job, and their efforts need to be recognized. These are the kinds of individuals who make America great and who keep us safe.

This is the type of facility where you do not have a true understanding of how well run it is until you go down there and see it in person for yourself. I would actually encourage our President to go down and see firsthand what Guantanamo Bay is like, what the facility is like, how the prisoners are treated down there, and how well our service men and women in uniform are performing.

As we are all aware, 6 months ago, President Obama set an arbitrary timeline of January 2010 to close Gitmo. It is now mid-June, and it appears he is no closer now than he was back in January of this year in identifying what his plan is. We still have seen little more than political rhetoric and no concrete plan of how to deal with the prisoners currently being housed at Gitmo.

My question to the administration is: Why are we rushing to close this world-class facility without first having a plan in place? The administration should work with Congress on a bipartisan basis to first come up with a plan, if a plan is even possible, and then proceed from there.

Included in this population are critical figures involved in the 9/11 attacks on the United States and the bombings of a U.S. warship, the USS Cole, and also terrorists captured from the battlefield in Afghanistan. As I stated earlier, one of the most deadly terrorists who was formerly at Gitmo and is directly responsible for the deaths of 224 individuals is now in the United States.

On our trip, we were able to see the security measures that have been put in place to keep these evil individuals from escaping or doing harm. These individuals do not view this war we are in as over. A document that was found in an apartment of an al-Qaida operative in Manchester, England, appropriately entitled the "Manchester Document," lays out how terrorists should act if captured.

According to the Manchester Document, if an individual is detained, he should "insist on proving that torture was inflicted on him. . . ." Whether it was or not, they want to use the press. They want to try to show that torture was used on them.

According to this document, they want to "take advantage of visits from outsiders to communicate with brothers outside the prison and exchange information that may be helpful to them in their work outside the prison. . . ." They are to "master the art of hiding messages . . . and provide information about the enemy's strengths and weaknesses, movements of the enemy and its members."

The terrorists practice this doctrine on a daily basis. In addition, on a regular basis, they abuse our troops down at Guantanamo Bay. It is not the other way around.

A spokesman for the Pentagon stated that 14 percent of the over 500 who were released from Guantanamo Bay have returned to some sort of terrorist activity—14 percent. Some people say: Boy, that is a very low recidivism rate. But if we think about it, these are mass murderers and evil individuals. These are people who want to set out to destroy our country, our way of life, and kill as many Americans as they can. Do we want to transfer or release some of these individuals even if only 14 percent of them return? The lives of American troops are at stake.

By the way, the people who were released early, the over 500, those are the people we actually thought were safe. The people who are still there are the most dangerous and deadly.

One of the people who was transferred detonated a car bomb in Iraq. Another is now a leading al-Qaida operative in Yemen. As I said before, these were supposedly the safe ones.

What would happen if those currently at Gitmo returned to the battlefield?

This document and the actions of those detained at Guantanamo Bay illustrate what some in this Congress seem to have forgotten. We, as a nation, are still at war. They are trying to kill Americans and destroy our very way of life. The prisoners at Gitmo realize this. Our troops realize this. It is time that we in Washington, DC, wake up and realize it as well.

The facilities at Gitmo are state of the art and are some of the most impressive I have ever seen. After touring the facilities down there, I believe it would be next to if not impossible to recreate those facilities in the United States, partially because of the physical location of the facility.

Guantanamo Bay is also the appropriate place to conduct military commissions. The privacy and seclusion of the unique courtroom facilities that have already been built there allow classified information to be protected and allow privacy for the 9/11 families who are grieving and have chosen to watch the proceedings down there. Too often, we forget about those individuals, the families of the 9/11/01 victims.

Transferring these hardened terrorists to facilities in the United States would make each of the facilities where they are transferred to, and the communities in which they are situated, terrorist targets. Let me repeat that.

Transferring these hardened terrorists to facilities in the United States would make each one of the facilities they are transferred to and the communities in which they are situated terrorist targets.

Would you like to own a small business, a gas station or a convenience store around one of these prisons that house terrorists? I know I wouldn't.

Another observation that struck me while I was down at Guantanamo Bay was the care and treatment of the detainees. Every—every—effort is made to ensure their religious rights are respected. During my visit to the facility, we even paused as part of our tour out of respect for prayer time of the detainees.

In addition, there are various programs and resources to provide detainees with instructional training and social recreation. Listen to these statistics.

Available to the detainees are over 13,000 books for them to read, 910 magazines, and various newspapers in different languages that are distributed weekly. They have access to a vast collection of DVDs for the detainees. It is almost like they have Netflix down there. They also have satellite television, including Al-Jazeera. Detainees are permitted quarterly phone calls to family members and have received or sent over 22,000 pieces of mail, including privileged attorney-client mail. Finally, we offer literacy classes, second language classes, and art classes for the detainees. These detainees are provided better health care than a lot of Americans are.

Does any of this sound like abuse? Does any of it sound like abuse?

In his first 6 months, President Obama has had to make some tough decisions. Some of these decisions, such as his Afghan policy, I publicly supported. He needs to realize, though, that on this issue of transferring these hardened terrorists to the United States there is strong bipartisan opposition. If the President were to go down to Gitmo, tour the facilities, and to be completely honest with himself, I believe he would come to the same conclusion I did. In the end, there are no superior alternatives to Guantanamo Bay.

The administration must answer this question: How does closing Guantanamo, especially without a plan, make the American people safer?

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UDALL of Colorado). The Senator from Arizona.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from Nevada for his remarks and I want to associate myself with them.

I want to speak to health care and the reform that we are attempting to achieve here in Washington. Little disagreement exists about the need for health care reform. A routine trip to the doctor's office can be surprisingly expensive, and many fear if they lose their jobs or even if they switch jobs, they will be left without health care. Others who are unemployed may be wondering how they can afford to see a doctor at all. So the question is, How can we reform health care so that everyone has access to high quality care without changing what works for millions of Americans?

President Obama wants to centralize power in Washington, to change the way health care is obtained by all. He would create what he calls a public option. This would not be an insurance program run by the public but one run by the Federal Government; that is to say, bureaucrats here in Washington, and I believe it would result in a one-size-fits-all government system that would depend upon complex rules and financing schemes, some kind of Federal health board and, of course, higher taxes. It would also inevitably create waiting lists for treatment and denial of care for many. Why? Because the Federal Government resources are not unlimited, so health care for some will have to be delayed or denied to keep spending in check.

The plan the senior Senator from Massachusetts has put forward would create a medical advisory council to determine what treatments people should get and when they should be treated. The goal of this medical advisory council, again, would be to control spending, not to ensure that everyone gets care when they need it. It could tell Americans when they can get their treatment and what medications they can and cannot have. The plan of the Senator from Massachusetts would also offer subsidies to those whose incomes reach 500 percent above the poverty line.

President Obama has said that if new government-run health care is created, you won't have to use it if you prefer your current plan. That is not the way the legislation is being written. The way the legislation is being written in the Finance Committee is that after your contract expires—and it is usually an annual contract—your insurance is gone, and your insurance company must begin to abide by a new set of Federal rules and regulations. That means you will not have the same policy you had before.

Moreover, the government-run care would quickly crowd out other insurers. Employees who have insurance through their company could be forced into the government plan if their employer decides it is simpler or cheaper to pay a fine to the Federal Government and eliminate the coverage. The company might reason: Why bother doing the paperwork when we can tell people to get on the government-run plan? That is exactly what the health experts say will happen.

The Lewin Group has estimated that 119 million people will shift from a private plan that they currently have onto this new government-run plan if it is created. That would affect two-thirds of the 170 million Americans who currently have private insurance, all but ending private insurance in this country.

First, we have the takeover of the auto companies and banks and AIG and student loans and now health care. That is apparently the agenda at play here.

Republicans believe that health care reform should make health care affordable and portable and accessible. That last point is often overlooked. Health care needs to be accessible. People need to get the care they need when they need it, and what the doctor prescribes for them rather than what a bureaucrat says they can have. Access to health care does not mean access to a waiting list. Individuals and families, not the Federal Government, should control decisions about their health care. The principles of freedom and choice should apply here. The government should not eliminate your choices and get between you and your doctor.

I am not sure why some are embracing government-run insurance when those programs have created so many problems in Canada and the United Kingdom. Many people think that Canadians and Europeans get the same quality of health care Americans get but pay less. That is not true. The stories you hear from individuals in those countries about months- and years-long waiting lists and denial of care are not cherry-picked scare stories. They are commonplace. People often have to wait months for an MRI or a dental procedure or a hip replacement that they urgently need.

According to a new study by the Fraser Institute, which is a Canadian-based think tank, the average wait time for treatment from a specialist in Canada is 18.3 weeks. That is the average waiting time. Stop and think for a moment. You may have had your physician say, I think you have something very drastically wrong with you and I think you need to see a specialist to confirm whether that diagnosis is true, but you are going to have to wait on average 18 weeks for the specialist to see you.

Some people then say, well, at least everybody in Canada has a doctor. That is also not true. That same study reports that 1.7 million Canadians—and that is out of a country with a population of 33 million—were unable to see a family physician in the year 2007. Let me repeat: 1.7 million people couldn't even see a family doctor, and that number does not include those who have a doctor and are on a waiting list, so add the wait times. The bottom line is that having a government-run plan does not guarantee that everyone will have access to a doctor or to medical care. Indeed, it chokes access.

There are some Canadian doctors who are taking action because of this. Private hospitals are sprouting up all over Canada. Dr. David Gratzner, who is a physician, recently wrote an article in the Wall Street Journal about the story of another physician, Dr. Brian Day of Vancouver. Dr. Day, who is an orthopedic surgeon, grew tired of the government cutbacks that reduced his access to an operating room, while at the same time increasing the number of people waiting to see him. So he opened a private clinic, the Cambie Surgery Center, which employs more than 100 doctors. Public hospitals send him patients because they are too busy to treat them. The New York Times has reported a private clinic is opening each week in Canada.

Think about that. This is in response to a wonderful health care system? No, it is in response to a health care system that denies care to patients.

Opening a private clinic that gives health care access to more people, of course, is a noble thing to do, and I commend Dr. Day, but the success of these clinics also shows that many people who can get out of government-run health care will do so.

Americans do not deserve or want health care that forces them into a government bureaucracy that will delay or deny their care and force them to navigate a web of complex rules and regulations. They want access to high-quality care for their own families and for their neighbors. They want to pick their own doctors, and they do not want Washington to dictate what care they can and cannot get for their families.

On a personal note, none of us in the Senate or in the gallery or anybody who may be watching us, I suspect, cares more about anything in the world—other than perhaps their own freedom—than the health of their family. If there is a health emergency right now, we will all drop anything we are doing to provide whatever health care is needed for our family. We don't want anybody to stand in the way of that. But the bottom line is that it is inevitable; when government wants to control the cost of providing health care, and it has control, what it will do is to either deny information to people about what options are available, as happens in Germany, for example; delay the care, which is frequently what happens in Canada; or what frequently happens in Great Britain, where they have a board that makes these decisions, they deny the care altogether because it is simply too expensive for what they consider the value you get out of it. For example: If you are over a certain age, then you are not likely to have an operation such as a hip operation or a knee operation. There are other restrictions that apply as well.

We don't want that in America. We don't want the government in Washington saying that because we want to save money, you can't get care. I would also remind folks that the alternative that is being created in Canada—these private clinics—is not available under the one government-run program we have in America—the Medicare system. We also have a veterans' care system. But under Medicare, there is no alternative. You can't have private care. If you are on Medicare, and you go to a doctor who serves Medicare patients, it is against the law for him to treat you and then charge you individually for that. Under Medicare, it is either Medicare or no care. That is the law.

I know because I tried to get it changed. We tried to get something called private contracting, which would be the same as that alternative in Canada—the private clinic. We tried to get that for Medicare, so that if you were not satisfied with what Medicare gave you, and you wanted to speed it up or get a private doctor, even if he charged you whatever amount he charged you, you would have the right to do that. No. What Congress did was to say—in the middle of the night, in a conference committee—that you cannot do that. Only if a doctor says in advance, I will not treat Medicare patients for at least 2 years is he able to provide that care to you.

So we have a perverse incentive. If you want to take care of people outside of Medicare, you have to agree not to treat Medicare patients. And since we have so many physicians deciding not to take Medicare patients, that is the wrong incentive. We should be encouraging them to take more Medicare patients and at least allow the option that people in Canada have.

The bottom line is, Washington-run health care is not a good idea, and Republicans are not going to support legislation that includes Washington-run insurance companies or that gets in between the physician and the patient and interferes with that important relationship to deny or delay care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

NOMINATION OF HILLARY TOMPKINS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I come to the floor today, as I did on June 2, to urge quick action on the nomination of Hillary Tompkins to be the Solicitor in the Department of the Interior. That is an important job in this country and in the Department of the Interior, and the President has chosen well in choosing Miss Tompkins to be the Solicitor. She has broad experience in natural resource issues. She is extremely well qualified in all respects. She was chief counsel to the Governor of New Mexico, Governor Richardson, until recently, where she demonstrated her ability to lead a team of lawyers in that position and to provide sound legal counsel. So it is unclear to me why anyone would be objecting to her being approved as our Solicitor.

When I came to the floor on June 2, about 8 days ago, and talked about this subject, I asked unanimous consent that we proceed to executive session, that her nomination be confirmed, and that we advise the President of our action and the Senate go back to other business. Senator McCONNELL, on behalf of the Republican Members in the Senate, objected and said that—I think his specific response was they were still working on this. Let me quote him. He said:

We have not been able to get that nomination cleared yet on this side, but we will be consulting with the Republican colleagues, and at some point let him know whether it is possible to go forward.

I assume the word "him" in that quote refers to me. At any rate, he objected. That was disappointing. But I am even more disappointed to announce or to call attention to the fact that we still are not able to clear Miss Tompkins for this important position. I think it is unfair to her, I think it is unfair to our former colleague, now Secretary of the Interior Salazar, who needs a capable person in this position. We should not be standing in the way of that occurring. I think his ability to serve the people of the country will be improved by having a good solicitor in that office and we should get on with the job of confirming that nomination.

At the time I was urging action on her nomination before, I was advised that there were two Senators who had objections. Senator COBURN had put a hold on the nominee because of concerns of one kind or another—I don't know the specifics—and I believe Senator BUNNING had concerns as well. I have now been advised that both of those Senators have withdrawn their holds and are now satisfied.

Senator BUNNING had written a letter to Secretary Salazar raising concerns about coal mining and mountaintop-removal-related issues. Secretary Salazar responded to that letter on June 4. As I understand it, Senator COBURN also wrote. His letter was to Miss Tompkins, raising questions about whether she was in fact committed to enforcing the law when she was the Solicitor. She wrote him back and said she is clearly committed to enforcing the law, which of course would be part of her oath of office.

Based on those exchanges of letters, I am informed that both Senator BUNNING and Senator COBURN are satisfied that her nomination can go forward at this time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the correspondence between those two Senators and Secretary Salazar and the nominee Hillary Tompkins, following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Those concerns have been resolved. I am not clear as to what the continued problem is, why we cannot get this nomination cleared. I raise it at this point. I put people on notice, or the Senate on notice, if we are not able to get it cleared I will once again come to the floor and ask unanimous consent later this week for us to proceed to executive session and to confirm that nomination.

I think this is a highly irregular process to just hold someone hostage for some totally unrelated concern which she has no ability to control. If there were some problem with this nominee, if there were some objection to her qualifications, clearly that would be a different matter. But as far as I know there is no objection to her qualifications. There is no problem with this nominee or any statements she has made or any action she has taken. On that ground, I think we need to move quickly to confirm her nomination. I hope my colleagues will agree and will allow that to happen later today.

I yield the floor.

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, June 3, 2009.

HILARY TOMPKINS,
Department of the Interior,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MS. TOMPKINS, As you know, on May 22, 2009, President Obama signed into law the Protecting Americans from Violent Crime Act. This act was overwhelmingly approved in a bipartisan fashion in both the Senate and the House of Representatives as an amendment to the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009, and will take effect in February, 2010.

The act states, "The Secretary of the Interior shall not promulgate or enforce any regulation that prohibits an individual from possessing a firearm including an assembled or functional firearm in any unit of the National Park System or the National Wildlife Refuge System if—

(1) the individual is not otherwise prohibited by law from possessing the firearm; and
(2) the possession of the firearm is in compliance with the law of the State in which the unit of the National Park System or the National Wildlife Refuge System is located."

Forty-eight states protect the rights of their residents to carry a concealed weapon. Properly implemented, the Protecting Americans from Violent Crime Act should, for the first time, also protect the individual's right to carry and possess firearms in all national parks and wildlife refuges, in accordance with state and federal law.

As Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, will you commit to ensuring the law is implemented in a way that robustly protects the rights of law-abiding gun owners, as Congress clearly intended? Will you also commit to vigorously defend this law against hostile litigation?

Thank you for your desire to serve our great country. I look forward to receiving your response by Friday, June 5, 2009.

Sincerely,

TOM COBURN,
U.S. Senator.

June 5, 2009.

Hon. TOM COBURN, M.D.
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COBURN: Thank you for your letter of June 3, 2009, containing questions to me that relate to the Protecting Americans from Violent Crime Act, which was included in Public Law 111-24 and will take effect in February 2010.

Following the enactment of Public Law 111-24, the Secretary announced that the Department would follow Congress's directive and implement the new law when it takes effect. If confirmed as Solicitor, I will be duty-bound to uphold and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States, including this particular law.

With regard to defending this law against legal challenges, the Attorney General of the United States is charged by statute with representing the United States in all legal matters. If confirmed, I will commit to working closely with the Department of Justice in connection with any defense of this Act and all other federal laws.

Sincerely,

HILARY C. TOMPKINS.

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, June 4, 2009.

Mr. KEN SALAZAR,
Secretary, Department Of Interior,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SALAZAR: I am writing to express my continued concern about the Department of Interior's decision to reverse its stream buffer zone policy and ask the Department of Justice to file a plea with the U.S. District Court requesting that the current rule be vacated. Coal mining is a top energy issue to the Commonwealth of Kentucky and consequently I have an extreme interest in the stream buffer zone rule.

Aside from striking a balance between environmental protections, the now abandoned rule clarified a long standing dispute over how the Surface Mining law should be applied. Issuance of the rule represented the culmination of a seven year process that was thorough and well vetted. While I appreciate the comments that you and other members of the Department of the Interior have made regarding the importance of the role of our coal mining communities in our national energy landscape, I also believe that nearly a decade of examination of this issue should not be overturned lightly.

I respectfully ask for your full commitment to work with me as DOI determines how it will resolve the stream buffer zone matter. I further ask for a prompt written reply to this request. I appreciate your consideration and look forward to hearing from you. Please feel free to contact Sarah Timoney, of my staff, at 202-224-4343 should you have any questions.

Best personal regards,

JIM BUNNING,
United States Senator.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, June 4, 2009.

Hon. JIM BUNNING,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BUNNING: Thank you for your letter dated June 4, 2009, regarding the lawsuit surrounding the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement's Stream Buffer Zone regulation.

The matter is currently in litigation. We have asked the Court to take action that will allow the 1983 Reagan Administration rule to continue in force in all of the states that have delegated authority under the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act. Kentucky, along with most states, currently follows the 1983 rule.

I will ensure that there is an opportunity for public input on the potential development of a comprehensive new stream buffer zone rule that would update and clarify the 1983 rule. We will keep you informed of our progress in this matter and welcome your suggestions.

As I have said many times, we must responsibly develop conventional energy sources, including coal, in order to achieve greater energy independence. I look forward to working together to achieve these goals.

Sincerely,

KEN SALAZAR.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL PIPELINE SAFETY DAY

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, this morning I rise to remind all of us of a promise our government has made to the American people. It is an unspoken trust that certain things in our lives and communities are taken care of, that we don't have to think much about because we trust our government to keep us safe.

I think most Americans turn on the tap each day and expect the water they drink to be safe, and they probably do not think a lot about it. We expect if there is an emergency we will be able to pick up the phone and dial 9-1-1 and someone will answer and send help to us.

That is exactly what the people who lived in Bellingham, WA, used to think about oil and gas pipelines, if they thought about them at all. But all of our senses of safety and innocence were shattered 10 years ago today when tragedy struck for three families, and an entire community came together to grieve and to learn and eventually stand up and say: Never again.

June 10, 1999, was a quiet sunny day in Bellingham, WA. For a lot of the students there it was the last day of school for the year. That should have been how it remained—as a day when kids played and celebrated about the coming of summer. Unfortunately, due to a series of mistakes and neglectful actions, it is now remembered as a day of fear and loss that the community still grieves.

Ten years ago today, around 3:30 in the afternoon on the west coast, a gasoline pipeline that ran through Bellingham, underground and near Whatcom Falls Park, ruptured, releasing more than a quarter of a million gallons of gasoline into Whatcom Creek. That gas ignited, sending a huge fireball racing down the entire creek, destroying everything in its path for more than a mile. It created this huge plume of smoke that rose more than 20,000 feet into the air.

The photo behind me was taken just moments after that explosion. Minutes before this, it was just a quiet creek, and this is what it looked like. That dramatic explosion took the lives, tragically, of three young people. Stephen Tsiorvas and Wade King were playing along the banks of the creek when this tremendous fireball ran across the water and set everything around them ablaze. They were both badly injured, and Stephen threw Wade into the creek and jumped in himself to try to soothe their burns. The boys were burned over 90 percent of their bodies and both died the next day. They were both just 10 years old.

The same afternoon, the same time, 18-year-old Liam Wood, who had just graduated from high school 5 days earlier, was fly fishing along this creek. He was overcome by the fumes, lost consciousness, and drowned. Stephen, Wade, and Liam were innocent victims of a horrific accident. But it was an accident that could have been and should have been prevented.

Pipeline networks stretch across the entire country. They run under our homes, they run by our schools, and our offices. Most people do not even know they are there. In fact, former Bellingham Police Chief Don Pierce, who was on this scene that day back in 1999, was recently quoted as he said:

As I was standing there none of it made any sense because creeks don't catch on fire. I don't think I knew that there was a gas pipeline that ran under there.

The chief of police didn't know there was a gas pipeline underneath.

Nationwide, the Office of Pipeline Safety oversees more than 2.3 million miles of pipeline that transports hazardous liquids and natural gas under communities across the country. They perform a very important service, bringing oil and essential products to our homes and businesses.

Prior to this accident in Bellingham, WA, I rarely heard about them myself and, like most Americans, I just assumed they were safe. At first I thought the Bellingham explosion was a fluke, something that never happens. Then, when I started to investigate this issue, I was astonished by what I learned. It turned out that what happened in Bellingham that day was not an isolated occurrence. In fact, it was not even rare.

According to the Office of Pipeline Safety, from 1986 until the time of this accident in 1999, there had been more than 5,500 incidents resulting in 310 deaths and 1,500 injuries.

Not only had these accidents destroyed families, they had destroyed the environment. At that time, 6 million gallons of hazardous liquid were being released by these incidents every year—6 million gallons. That is like having an oil spill the size of the Exxon Valdez disaster every 2 years. The environmental damage was estimated to cost $1 billion.

In addition to this horrific loss that was sustained by these three Bellingham families, this explosion caused massive environmental damage. In fact, I had been scheduled to be at this exact site just a few weeks later to dedicate a great, newly restored, salmon spawning ground. When I went there and saw the damage after the explosion, I was shocked. That blast had destroyed all the plant and animal life in the creek, and a once very lush and diverse habitat had been burned to ashes.

Again, our community was not unique. At that time, on average, our Nation was suffering one pipeline accident every single day. While Bellingham may not have been unique in our tragedy, we were one of a kind in our response. Today, 10 years after the unthinkable happened, the story of the Bellingham natural gas explosion is also a story of how a community came together to tackle a nationwide problem and protect other Americans from coast to coast. As we together learned about the problems with inspection and oversight of our national pipeline system, the community channeled their grief into action.

Through research, I found out there were inadequate laws, insufficient oversight, too few inspections, and not enough trained inspectors, as well as a lack of awareness about these pipeline dangers. I learned one of the most important public safety offices, the Office of Pipeline Safety, was underfunded and neglected.

I asked the inspector general of the Department of Transportation to investigate the Office of Pipeline Safety and provide recommendations for how we could make this system work better, and I got to work writing a bill to improve pipeline safety in America.

It turned out to be a very long, hard fight to convince Congress this was something we had to do something about. The people of Bellingham stood with me every single step of the way. The parents of the young victims who were tragically lost on this date came to Washington, DC, to testify. So did Bellingham Mayor Mark Asmundson, and Carl Weimer, who is now head of the Pipeline Safety Trust.

That trust came into being thanks to the efforts of families and a group called SAFE Bellingham, that had organized to fight for the better pipeline safety and accident prevention measures.

So together with them and the great support of colleagues here in the Senate—Senator JOHN MCCAIN took a tremendous lead as chair of the committee, and I thank him for that; former Senators Slade Gorton and Fritz Hollings came together; Senator CANTWELL; Congress Members Jack Metcalf, RICK LARSEN; many others—together we worked very hard and passed and President Bush finally signed into law our legislation in 2002 to give the Office of Pipeline Safety the resources and the muscle it needed to keep Americans safe. That law improved the training of pipeline personnel. It raised the penalty for safety violations. It invested in new technology that was badly needed so we could improve pipeline safety. It improved the inspection practices and, importantly, expanded authority to our States to conduct their own safety activities.

So children today in every corner of our State are safer because the people of Bellingham stood up and said: We do not want this to happen ever again.

But I am here today to remind us, 10 years later, that the work is not done. While our law has greatly reduced the number of pipeline tragedies, there still are accidents every year. That is why I am on the floor today to introduce a Senate resolution designating June 10 as National Pipeline Safety Day. I am introducing this resolution to remind all of our communities to remain vigilant and to encourage their State and local governments to continue to promote pipeline safety and to create public awareness of the pipelines that run under and through every one of our communities.

For me, this 10-year anniversary is a reminder of a day of terrible pain we must never forget. But it is also a reminder that we cannot just assume someone else is taking care of things. We cannot slip back to where we were before. We have to stay vigilant and continue to work to improve the safety of our pipeline system. That is the best way we can continue to celebrate and honor Steven, Wade, and Liam.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. Res. 181 which was submitted earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The assistant bill clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 181) designating June 10, 2009, as "National Pipeline Safety Day."

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mrs. MURRAY. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table with no intervening action or debate, and any statements be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 181) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 181

Whereas there are more than 2,000,000 miles of gas and hazardous liquid pipelines in the United States that are operated by more than 3,000 companies;

Whereas gas and hazardous liquid pipelines play a vital role in the lives of people in the United States by delivering the energy needed to heat homes, drive cars, cook food and operate businesses;

Whereas, during the last decade, significant new pipelines have been built to help move North American sources of oil and gas to refineries and markets;

Whereas, on June 10, 1999, a hazardous liquid pipeline ruptured and exploded in a park in Bellingham, Washington, killing 2 10-year-old boys and a young man, destroying a salmon stream, and causing hundreds of millions of dollars in damage and economic disruption;

Whereas, in response to the pipeline tragedy on June 10, 1999, Congress enacted significant new pipeline safety regulations, including in the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002 (Public Law 107-355; 116 Stat. 2985) and the Pipeline Inspection, Protection, Enforcement, and Safety Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-468; 120 Stat. 3486);

Whereas, during the last decade, the Pipelines and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration of the Department of Transportation, with support from a diverse group of stakeholders, has instituted a variety of important new rules and pipeline safety initiatives, such as the Common Ground Alliance, pipeline emergency training with the National Association of State Fire Marshals, and the Pipelines and Informed Planning Alliance;

Whereas, even with pipeline safety improvements, in 2008 there were 274 significant pipeline incidents that caused more than $395,000,000 of damage to property and disrupted the economy;

Whereas, even though pipelines are the safest method to transport huge quantities of fuel, pipeline incidents are still occurring, including the pipeline explosion in Edison, New Jersey, in 1994 that left 100 people homeless, the butane pipeline explosion in Texas in 1996 that left 2 teenagers dead, the pipeline explosion near Carlsbad, New Mexico, in 2000 that killed 12 people in an extended family, the pipeline explosion in Walnut Creek, California, in 2004 that killed 5 workers, and the propane pipeline explosion in Mississippi in 2007 that killed a teenager and her grandmother;

Whereas the millions of miles of pipelines are still "out of sight", and therefore "out of mind" for the majority of people, local governments, and businesses in the United States, a situation that can lead to pipeline damage and a general lack of oversight of pipelines;

Whereas greater awareness of pipelines and pipeline safety can improve public safety;

Whereas a "National Pipeline Safety Day" can provide a focal point for creating greater pipeline safety awareness; and

Whereas June 10, 2009, is the 10th anniversary of the Bellingham, Washington, pipeline tragedy that was the impetus for many of the safety improvements described in this resolution and is an appropriate day to designate as "National Pipeline Safety Day": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates June 10, 2009, as "National Pipeline Safety Day";

(2) encourages State and local governments to observe the day with appropriate activities that promote pipeline safety;

(3) encourages all pipeline safety stakeholders to use the day to create greater public awareness of all the advancements that can lead to greater pipeline safety; and

(4) encourages individuals throughout the United States to become more aware of the pipelines that run through communities in the United States and to encourage safe practices and damage prevention relating to gas and hazardous liquid pipelines.

Mrs. MURRAY. I thank my Senate colleagues.

I remind all of us as Americans that we have to be vigilant about what is around us, and when we are, we can make a difference in the lives of many people. The tragedy that occurred in Bellingham, WA, 10 years ago today will remain with me always and with the families of Bellingham and everyone else. But if we do our work and we remain vigilant and we fund the Office of Pipeline Safety and we insist on strong protections, we can protect families in the future. That is what is important about today.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HEALTH CARE

Mrs. MURRAY. Earlier this morning and, in fact, for the past several days, I have been interested to hear the comments from several of our Republican counterparts on the issue of health care. They are talking about Canada. Now, that is interesting. I appreciate that. Coming from a State close to Canada, we are very interested in what Canada does. But the discussion about what Canada does with its health care system has no bearing on what we are trying to do here in the Senate and Congress to reform the American health care system.

I guess, and I am only guessing, they want to talk about Canada because they do not want to talk about their real priority. Their real priority in coming out and inflating a discussion that should not even exist because it is not what we are talking about is simply because they want to protect the status quo. They want to protect the status quo in our health care system today. So they are out here talking about Canada. Well, that is not an option.

Let me tell you what we are doing because this is a very important discussion and a very important piece of legislation we are beginning our work on in the Senate. The status quo is not acceptable. This is an extraordinary moment of opportunity for real reform in health care. We here in the Senate are working very hard to come up with legislation that will reduce the cost for our families, for our businesses, and for our government.

Like all of my colleagues, I go home every weekend and I hear from individual families and people, from community leaders and businesses that the status quo is not acceptable. They will not tolerate a debate here in the Senate that goes for the status quo.

We here in the Senate are working on legislation that will protect people's choice of doctors, will protect their choice of hospitals, will protect their choice of insurance plan. If you like what you have today, that will be what you have when this legislation is passed. And that is very important. We are also working as a goal to assure that affordable, high-quality health care is available for every American. That is not the case today. Our work really builds on the existing employer-based system we have. We strengthen it. Again, if you like what you have, you will be able to keep it. Let me say this again: If you like what you have, when our legislation is passed and signed by the President, you will be able to keep it. But if you do not like what you have today in terms of your health care or if you do not have any health care insurance at all, we are going to provide new options for you so you have better health care.

Health care reform is not a luxury, it is an imperative today. Our health care system puts far too many Americans into crisis, and reforming it is an urgent necessity that demands our immediate attention. If we are going to restore the economy and secure our Nation's fiscal future, now is the time to make health care more affordable for American families and business and government at every level. Doing nothing is not an option.

As we move forward on this debate, I remind all of us, do not be distracted by superfluous arguments that do not apply to the bills we are discussing.

The bill on which we are going to move forward in the Senate makes sure that if you like what you have today, you are going to be able to keep it. But as you and I both know, Mr. President, too many people cannot afford their health care today or they are unable to get health insurance because their insurance company says: You have too many problems, we are not going to insure you, or they do not have insurance at all. We want to make sure health care is available to every American.

I am very proud of the effort that is going on as we speak. The health care committee is meeting today with our Republican colleagues to walk through our ideas we have now been putting together and get their input and ask for their opinions. We hope to work with them side by side, and we are giving them every opportunity to do so, because health care has to work for all Americans.

So despite the rhetoric we heard on the floor this morning about Canada, which I love—Canada is a great country—that is not what we are doing here. We are moving forward on health care reform that is drastically needed. The status quo is not an option. Doing nothing is not an option. Stopping us from moving forward is not an option. This is an issue we are having the courage to take up and move forward on because America needs us to do that.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEGICH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, we are considering a bill that would allow the Food and Drug Administration to regulate one of the most deadly substances for sale in America, tobacco, a substance responsible for 400,000 deaths, more than HIV/AIDs, for example, each year, more deaths than illegal drug use, alcohol use, motor vehicle accidents, suicides and murders combined, a substance responsible for $100 billion in health care costs every single year. I am glad we have finally reached this point. I hope we can pass this bill with a strong bipartisan vote. This moment has been coming for 20 years. There are Senators who deserve credit for where we are today in coming to this moment in history, none more than Senator TED KENNEDY. Senator KENNEDY has been our leader on this issue. Unfortunately, his personal health struggle prevents him from joining us regularly, and he may not be here for the vote today, but we wouldn't have reached this point without him. His dogged determination to reduce the number of tobacco-related deaths and illnesses in America has brought us to this moment in history. We will be voting with him in mind, as we should.

I thank Senator CHRIS DODD, who once again has stepped in, in an extraordinary way, as he did with credit card reform, passing a bill that had been decades in the making. Senator DODD, at the last moment, has been called in by Senator KENNEDY and has done a spectacular job to move this bill forward. I am hoping we can pass it and get it enacted into law. It will save lives. But we can't blame tobacco for all the faults in our health care system. There are many parts that need to be addressed.

The United States spends about 17 percent of its GDP, gross domestic product, on health care. This amounts to $7,400 per person on health care each year. We spend more than twice as much as any other country on Earth when it comes to health care. As of 2006, health spending in the United States was 90 percent higher than any other industrialized country. Health insurance premium increases consistently outpace inflation and the growth in family earnings. About 30 percent of America's poor people spend more than 10 percent of their income on health care. Since the beginning of this decade, health insurance premiums have gone up by 78 percent. Everybody knows this. No matter who one works for—private business, public entity—we know the cost of health insurance keeps skyrocketing. Wages have only gone up 15 percent in that period. People and families cannot keep up. Overall, 46 million Americans have lost their insurance. Many lose their insurance for periods during the course of a year because of changing jobs and losing jobs.

With the amount of money our country dedicates to health, the facts don't line up. Yesterday my colleague from Arizona, the Senate Republican whip, JON KYL, spoke about the problems with our health care system. I am glad he agreed there are problems to address. I need to clarify at least my view as to some of the things he said. Democrats in Congress are committed to working with President Obama to ensure that Americans can keep the health care they have, if that is their choice. Yesterday, Senator KYL said:

If you are an employee of a small business, for example, when your insurance contract runs out—and those contracts are usually 1 year or 2 years—the bottom line is, even though you may like it, at the end of the next year, when the contract runs out, you don't get to keep it.

That is not accurate. I have to say Senator KYL is saying something that doesn't reflect the position of the President, nor any Democrat I know in Congress. We believe—and we stand by this—if you like your current health insurance plan, you will be able to keep it, plain and simple, straightforward.

Senator KYL alluded to specific frustrations felt by small business owners across the country. Believe me, I understand that issue better than some. I have been working with Senator

BLANCHE LINCOLN of Arkansas, Senator SNOWE of Maine, and Senator KLOBUCHAR of Minnesota to come up with a plan so small business owners will be able to afford health insurance. I am happy to say that, at least at this moment, there is an indication the Finance Committee is considering our bill as part of their overall work product. As important as keeping your health plan, if you like it, if you are a small business owner, you find health premiums have increased 200 percent because you had one sick employee or one sick baby born to a family of one of your employees, we want to make sure you are no longer subject to the unfair practice of raising premiums for that situation. In today's system, at the end of the contract, small businesses are at the mercy of insurance companies that are in it for profit.

Earlier this week, I talked about a small businessman in Springfield, my hometown, who, in a span of just a few years, has seen his insurance premiums increase by 500 percent, though he has never turned in a claim. He has been forced to change his health care plan repeatedly. Because he is a small business owner, he has no bargaining power. What we are trying to do is ensure Americans are protected from this kind of price increase and that promised services are there when they need them.

My colleagues on the other side of the aisle continue to raise tactics of fear and concern to steer us away from the real issues at hand. Yesterday the Senator from Arizona talked about "a new regime of regulation for the insurance companies." He expressed concern that Democrats in Congress are trying to control what health insurance companies are doing. If the Senator is talking about trying to take under control some of the practices of health insurance companies today, I would say it is long overdue. People know what happens when their health insurance premiums go up dramatically, even though they haven't turned in a claim. Folks know when health insurance companies say they are going to exclude preexisting conditions and your health insurance policy is virtually worthless because the problems you face in life can't then be covered. Folks know what it is to call that health insurance company and bargain or argue with some clerk over coverage. Changing those things, if that is what regulation is all about, is long overdue. It is time that customers, consumers, families, and businesses had a fighting chance when it came to health insurance companies.

We will hear plenty of speeches in the Congress in opposition to health care reform from a lot of people who are speaking for the health insurance companies. Why don't they come up and say it. If they want to come to the floor and say: We like the current system; we don't believe it needs to be changed; we don't believe there is a crisis facing us in terms of cost; we believe that health insurance companies are doing a great job and shouldn't have to change their ways, let that be their position. But it is a position that is indefensible with the vast majority of the American people. They understand we should be focusing on the best interests of patients and families, not the best interests of health insurance companies, nor the best interest of the Federal Government.

The bottom line is, we have to come up with health care reform which starts to reduce the cost of health care, making it more affordable, preserving quality, creating incentives for good health care outcomes, and focusing on the family and the patient, not on the government agency.

I am encouraged my colleague from Arizona raised the issue of insurance contracts, given his concern with small businesses and access to health care. I think he would want attention paid to what insurance companies are doing to these small businesses. Earlier this year, the GAO released a report showing how little competition there is and what a tough time small businesses have to find health insurance. The medium market share of the largest carrier of the small group market was about 47 percent, ranging from 21 percent in Arizona to about 96 percent in Alabama. This leaves American small businesses with few choices. We want to change that. Those who come to the floor of the Senate defending the health insurance companies and saying they want no change in the health care system have to defend the indefensible. How do they explain what small businesses and families are facing now when they are trying to find affordable, quality health insurance?

If my colleague from Arizona wants to help small businesses, let him join us in the bipartisan bill Senators LINCOLN, SNOWE, KLOBUCHAR, and I are offering, the SHOP Act. By doing so, he will be working with us in committees to make a positive change.

I also wish to clarify one thing. Time and again, Senator MCCONNELL, on the Republican side, and Senator KYL have come to argue against government health care. They talk about it in the most general terms. What they are actually arguing against is a public option. What we hope to see come from all this debate about health care reform is lots of opportunities for America's families and businesses to shop for health insurance from private insurance companies but to have, in some circumstances, the option of a government-run plan they can choose, if they wish—voluntary choice. Of all the criticism heard on the floor about government health insurance, I have yet to hear Senator MCCONNELL or Senator KYL criticize Medicare. Why? Because 40 million Americans count on it.

They know that were it not for Medicare, they couldn't afford health insurance. People live a whole lifetime without health insurance protection. Finally, when they hit age 65, they have Medicare, and they thank the Lord for that day.

Medicare does a great job. Medicare is a proven success. For over 40 years, Medicare has provided quality care to America's seniors and disabled, and we have seen the longevity, the life expectancy of seniors increase every year and their independence increase because they don't end up with a mountain of health debt to pass on to their children or have to exhaust their savings. If the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Arizona want to come to the floor and argue against Medicare, I welcome the debate. I wish to be here when they say that government health insurance program has failed us. It has not. It has worked. To create a public option for those across the country as part of health care reform is long overdue. We need to build on and improve Medicare, and we can do that.

We also have to make sure our health care system is based on science and the best outcomes, that we encourage preventive care, that we see those elements in our society where people can do things to make their own health care better.

Time and again you will hear the Republicans come to the floor as if they are part of the Travel Channel. They do not want to talk about America and the problems we face. They want to talk about England, New Zealand, Australia, Canada. They do not want to talk about the United States of America.

Well, it is time for them to come home and recognize that we can improve our health care system, letting Americans keep the health insurance they have if they want to keep it, making sure we start to bring costs down, making quality health insurance available, giving families the peace of mind that the cost of health insurance is not going to go through the roof and beyond their means. That is part of this debate.

Democrats are working to ensure Americans have real choice when it comes to their health care.

My colleague from the other side of the aisle referred to the public option as government-run insurance. He believes that the insurance industry is already regulated enough and that a public option is unnecessary.

I can tell the Senator that when I am receiving hundreds of letters and phone calls from constituents who cannot afford health insurance and who are seeing their premiums increase at alarming rates then I know our current health care insurance industry is not working for everybody.

In fact, according to a survey by the Kaiser Family Foundation, two-thirds of Americans support a public health insurance option similar to Medicare to compete with private health insurance plans.

Republicans want to preserve a broken system—one with escalating costs and no guarantee that policies won't be cancelled.

Rather than help insurance companies, Democrats want to put American families first and help those struggling with high health care costs.

A public option for health insurance offers the American people the security that the government is looking out for their best interests—just like Medicare does for our seniors.

My colleague is correct in that the Medicare Program needs some changes. I hope he will be supportive of the changes we will include in the health reform package.

Yes, we need to streamline the Medicare Program, restructure the delivery of care, and emphasize quality. We will do it and save costs. But we should build on what works, and despite what my colleague says, Medicare works.

According to a study by the Commonwealth Fund, 61 percent of elderly Medicare beneficiaries said they had received excellent or very good care, compared to only half of those with employer-sponsored healthcare.

This health care debate is Congress's opportunity to improve what we have and cut costs for the future.

Comparative effectiveness research will help us do just that. Senator KYL claims that the government may misuse comparative effectiveness research as a tool to ration or deny health care. His use of the word "rationing" is only a veiled attempt to defend the status quo no matter how ineffective.

Comparative effectiveness is a tool to expand Americans' access to high-quality health care, not restrict it. When we know which treatments are more effective than other treatments, people will want the best and avoid what is ineffective. But we need this research in order to distinguish the best from the not so good.

Our health care system rations care today based on ability to pay. If we reform our health system and identify which treatments are most effective, we can reduce that hidden rationing by making health care more affordable for everyone.

We need to learn what works and empower providers and patients to use that information. That is rationing—is a sensible component of the effort to build a high-quality, value-based, results-oriented health system.

We have serious problems in our health care system. This is America, and America needs a uniquely American solution to our Nation's health care problems. This is what Senate Democrats are committed to enacting.

Mr. KYL told some tragic stories of individuals in Canada and Britain whose experience with their country's health care system was not what we would define as quality health care.

I am sure we would like to think my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are sincerely concerned with the quality of health care around the globe, but I am more inclined to believe that this is their scare tactics trying to cloud the important issues once again.

In fact, Mr. KYL is following the specific instructions of Republican political consultant Frank Luntz.

Here it is, on page 2, talking point No. 5 from a memo given to my Republican colleagues to guide their way of framing the health care debate:

(5) The healthcare denial horror stories from Canada & Co. do resonate, but you have to humanize them. You'll notice we recommend the phrase "government takeover" rather than "government run" or "government controlled." It's because too many politicians say "we don't want a government run healthcare system like Canada or Great Britain" without explaining those consequences. There is a better approach. "In countries with government run healthcare, politicians make your healthcare decisions. They decide if you'll get the procedure you need, or if you are disqualified because the treatment is too expensive or because you are too old. We can't have that in America."

This debate is not about talking points or messaging or even other countries. Countries such as Canada and Britain have government-run healthcare and each has their unique set of good and bad aspects to the system. But, what we need to focus on is the people in our country. In our system today, insurance companies make the decisions and decide for people if they can get the procedure they need, or if they are disqualified because the treatment is too expensive. We can do better than that in America.

Patients and their doctors make the best decisions for a patient's health and wellbeing.

Every Senator in this Chamber can agree: Our health care reform efforts should be patient-centered.

I hope my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will work with Democrats to ensure a strong health care package for the American people.

Mr. President, I see two of my colleagues are on the floor. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. First, Mr. President, I wish to thank my colleague and friend from Illinois for his outstanding words once again on health care, and on the fact that we need some kind of check on the insurance companies. Our colleagues offer none. They just point to Canada and England, as he mentioned, which is a totally different system than we are focusing on.

Second, I wish to thank my colleague from Oregon, who is doing a great job in his first year in the Senate, for his generosity so I could speak for a brief moment and share with my colleagues some words about an act of bravery that occurred in my State yesterday.

TRIBUTE TO KEN MITCHELL

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, as the Senate right now debates some of the biggest national issues of our time, it is important to sometimes take a step back and look to some of the great acts that are happening every day in our towns, cities, and States. So I wish to call attention to an act of personal heroism—and that is the appropriate word; this man is a true hero—that took place in my home State of New York.

Yesterday morning, at the South Orangetown Middle School in Blauvelt, NY—a town in Rockland County about 45 minutes from New York City—a disgruntled man with a gun stormed into the office of the school superintendent. He grabbed the superintendent, Ken Mitchell, by the necktie and started threatening him and making demands. At least three gunshots were fired.

This is the kind of situation that would have scared most everyone. But, as we have learned now, Ken Mitchell is no ordinary person.

With his safety and the safety of his students on the line, he showed remarkable courage and wrestled the gunman down to the ground. He was able to grab the gun, kick it out of the way, and get the gunman pinned on the ground.

Usually when a SWAT team arrives at the scene of a crime, they are the ones to do the serious crime fighting. But this time, by the time they got there, they walked in on the school superintendent, who had already disarmed and pinned to the ground the dangerous criminal. To top it all off, Superintendent Mitchell even recognized one of the SWAT team members he had once coached as a kid on the local hockey team.

According to people on the scene, Mr. Mitchell was ready to get back to his office. As his brother-in-law said: "his tie wasn't even messed up"—just another day on the job for another great New Yorker.

It should be no secret to anyone that this incident could very quickly have turned into something unspeakable. While the headlines today are ones of praise, they could have easily been ones of grief. And praise God they were not.

But as one of New York's Senators, I want to rise publicly and congratulate Ken Mitchell for his act of bravery and heroism. As a parent myself, I know what it is like to send kids off to school in the morning and hope and pray they will come back home safely.

It is people such as Ken Mitchell who make it easy for parents to know their kids are in good hands when they wave goodbye on the schoolbus and send Johnny or Jill off to school.

Ken Mitchell is a reminder that every minute of every day Americans are engaging in personal, quiet acts of heroism and bravery about which we should all be grateful. I am proud he is from my State. And I am proud that, if even for one moment, I can give him some of the recognition he deserves.

I am sure Superintendent Mitchell is back at work right now as if nothing happened. However, Superintendent Ken Mitchell, on behalf of all New Yorkers, all Americans, and parents everywhere, we say thank you. It is Americans like you that make us proud.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and once again thank my colleague from Oregon for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. MERKLEY. Mr. President, in the coming weeks we are going to be taking up what is probably one of the most vexing policy challenges of the last 50 years: how to reform our health care system and provide affordable, accessible health care to every single American. The goal could not be more straightforward: to guarantee access for every American—and the stakes could not be higher.

Our small businesses are collapsing under the weight of health insurance premiums. Last month, Oregon's largest insurer announced that the small business premium was going up 14.7 percent. That is on top of a 26-percent increase the previous year.

Large employers have the challenge as well. In a global economy, our broken health care system is a major competitive disadvantage. A greater share of the price of each car in the United States goes to health care than goes to steel. Mr. President, $1,500 of the cost of a car goes to health care, while across the border in Canada that price is zero. If we are going to compete in the world, we need a competitive, cost-effective health care system.

Of course, the biggest impact of our expensive, ineffective health care is most acutely felt around the kitchen table by our working families. With unemployment skyrocketing, virtually every family is reminded of how tenuous its connection is to health care—just one pink slip away from losing health care for their family.

Even those with insurance find health costs out of reach. Nearly half of the personal bankruptcies are by folks who have health insurance but who still could not manage all the health care costs because of when they became ill.

So this is what it boils down to: Working families in America, if they have health care, are concerned about the copays, they are concerned about being underinsured, and they are concerned about losing their insurance with the loss of a job. Those working families without health care are worried about getting sick and how they are going to get well if they are already sick.

This does not have to be the case. Health care is already devouring a large portion of our economy—18 percent of our gross domestic product—driving long-term Federal deficits and crowding out important State investments in education, in infrastructure, in social services, and pretty much everything else, and it is only projected to get worse as our population ages and health care inflation runs rampant year after year.

Put simply, if we do not reform our health care system, our economy will not thrive. That is a stark choice. Our economy and health care are tied together.

I know none of this is news to the Presiding Officer or to any Members of this esteemed Chamber. In fact, since President Truman, 60 years ago, called for health care for every working American as a national priority, we have been struggling to achieve that goal, and we have not yet gotten there. We have been periodically trying to fix up a fragmented, expensive, unfair system. But the fear of change has always overtaken the sense of possibility.

Those stakes and that history make it all the more critical that we seize this moment to meet the challenge President Obama has laid out for us and that we deliver on health care reform. This is the year—2009 is the year. This is the year to deliver on the promise to give every American access to affordable health coverage, to ensure that our economy has the same potential to be the engine of prosperity and opportunity and employment in this century that it was in the last century.

To make this happen, we have to find ways to make our health care system more affordable. We need to spend our health care dollar in smarter ways so we can put money back in the pockets of Americans and make our businesses more competitive.

The good news is we have lots of examples of how to do this right now. Extensive research has documented that the regions of our country which spend the most per person on Medicare, that is, 60 percent more than the regions with the lowest expenditures on health care, do not end up with better health care. The lowest spending regions actually have the same or better health care outcomes after adjusting for health histories, ages, and occupations. Plus, the beneficiaries are more satisfied.

So if we could take the practices and change them in the high-cost regions to match the low-cost regions, we would save, in Medicare alone, hundreds of billions of dollars.

Our job in this health care reform effort is to change some of the rules of the road so they encourage and enable all providers to act more like the high performers, those providing and delivering high quality, lower cost health care.

That is why this legislation needs to get us to start spending our health care dollars more wisely, investing more in prevention, investing in chronic disease management, building a research base about what works and what financial incentives are necessary to utilize those practices, rewarding care delivery built around coordination and efficiency rather than fragmentation and volume. We know these things work, and we need to make them the norm, not the exception.

We cannot stop the bleeding in our health care system costs without also doing something about the convoluted and broken health insurance marketplace. The first thing we need to do is to end the insurance company practices that penalize you if you are old or you are sick or you have ever been sick.

I am outraged when I hear stories from Oregonians about being turned away because of their preexisting conditions or their potential propensity toward certain diseases. The folks who need health care the most are being turned away the most, and that is not a health care system.

We have 50 million Americans without health care. That is what this conversation is about: taking that 18 percent of our gross domestic product we spend currently and finding a way to provide good quality coverage to every single American—not leaving out 50 million Americans.

Those are reforms that anyone can get behind. But I understand as we talk about other changes to how people get insurance, folks can get nervous. They can worry about the system changing in ways that are not beneficial to them. That is why I keep coming back to this point: We are going to provide the health care system we have for the people who have it, but we are going to improve it, we are going to improve it by making it more cost effective, so we can also provide health care to the 50 million who do not have coverage.

With these reforms, our citizens will have more choices. And choice in health care options is good. Instead of leaving individuals and small groups at the mercy of insurance companies providing expensive plans with very high administrative costs, those individuals and those small businesses will be able to participate in a marketplace that groups them together with millions of other Americans so they can benefit from the larger pool of health care participants.

This marketplace will resemble something very close to the list of options Federal employees have. When you become a Federal employee, you have an option of this plan or this plan or this plan. Well, that is what we are going to do. We are going to provide a list of plans citizens can choose from, being part of a larger pool. We are going to provide a list of plans small businesses can choose from and benefit from, being a part of a larger pool of the insured.

This is a structure we are familiar with as Members of Congress. What works for Members of Congress, what works for Senators will work for working Americans. These plans give apples-to-apples comparisons so citizens can pick the plan that fits their family the best. It will ensure minimum standards so our workers are not ripped off, and the access to the marketplace will come with premium assistance so strapped consumers can get help affording the premiums to obtain health care.

Given the track record of inefficiencies and cherry-picking by private insurers, I think it is imperative that consumers have multiple choices, including a public option. Public option is simply a way to describe what we are already providing to our seniors throughout this Nation: A public, organized plan, a very efficient plan.

Administrative costs of Medicare are around 2 percent, while the administrative costs for the individual applicants to the health care system for our small businesses is 30 percent. Why not let our individuals, why not let our small businesses benefit from a 30-percent improvement in the use of the health care dollar? This public option would compete on a level playing field with private plans, it would further expand choices for consumers, it would be a tool for keeping costs low, and it should be a part of any package we put forward.

One would think all of us in this room, hearing from our constituents in every corner of our States, would understand this whole conversation is about addressing one of the highest stress factors for working families in every part of this Nation, but there are opponents of this reform. My colleagues across the aisle hired a consultant, Frank Luntz, to prepare a plan to torpedo health care. This plan came out in April. This 25-page document is about how to kill any plan that is put forward. This goes on to say it doesn't matter what the specifics of the plan are, adopt language that attacks it and present it as the opposite of what it is. Because what this document says is that Americans want this health care reform, so you can't fight it head-on, you have to recharacterize it, reframe it.

What does this plan that has been put out to kill health care say? It says: Time is on our side. If we can slow the process down, we can kill it. Well, all windows of opportunity are open for a certain period of time and then they close, so I suppose that is smart advice if you want to kill health care, but if you want to do something for the 50 million Americans without health care, then we need to move forward quickly with health care reform.

This Republican document about how to kill health care says: Say the plan is centered around politicians. Say it is about bureaucrats. Say it is about Washington, DC.

Well, I am not sure what there is about providing health care options to 50 million working Americans who struggle every day to address the cost of health care, and often end up in personal bankruptcy, and forgo all kinds of other opportunities so their child can go to the doctor. That has nothing to do with bureaucrats. That has nothing to do with Washington. That has everything to do with family values and strengthening the foundation of our families.

This document about how to kill health care says: Bring in denial and horror stories from Canada or other parts of the world to suggest to people they will lose their relationship with their doctor; that somehow they will be jerked out of the arrangement they have found to be so satisfactory. Scare them. Scare the citizens of the United States.

Well, I can tell my colleagues that what is scaring the citizens of the United States is they can't afford their health care, and they want us to do something about it. Bringing up false horror stories that have no bearing on the plan before us to scare our citizens and make them worry even more is not responsible. What is responsible is to do something about a broken health care system.

This document has lots more about how to kill health care. It says: Take this and say this will destroy the personalized doctor-patient relationship. Take this and say this will create waste, fraud and abuse, and so on and so forth; every poll-tested set of words designed to decrease support and scare people into forgoing this once-in-a-decade opportunity or pass this once-in-a-generation opportunity we have to change the health care system.

One may think I am raising this document before my colleagues—this plan for how to kill health care—and that maybe it doesn't have any bearing on the real debate, but it absolutely does. These talking points are being echoed in this very Chamber—in this very Chamber—in order to kill health care.

Let's see. Here we go: Frank Luntz's memo—that is this memo on how to kill health care that came out in April—it says: Talking point No. 5: Health care denial horror stories from Canada and other countries do resonate, but you have to humanize them. You will notice we recommend the phrase “government takeover” rather than “government-run” or “government-controlled.” Why? Because government takeover sounds even scarier.

So what do we hear on the floor of this Chamber from our minority leader recently? I quote: “Americans are concerned about a government takeover of health care, and for good reason.” It goes on.

So recognize that is a point that is coming from a document about how to kill health care, not a responsible debate about the plan we have in front of us.

Let's take a look at another example in Frank Luntz's memo. His memo, talking points Nos. 3 and 4: Time is a government health care killer. Nothing else turns people against a government takeover of health care than the expectation that this plan will result in delayed and denied treatment. The arguments against the plan—now, note that this is about a plan that wasn't written; it is about any plan put forward. The arguments against this plan must also center around politicians, bureaucrats, and Washington. Note the emphasis on saying the plan will result in delays and denied treatment.

What have we heard on the floor of this Chamber from the minority leader? We have heard recently:

Americans don't want to be forced by bureaucrats—

That comes right out of these talking points—to give up their private health care plan to be pushed into a Washington-run government plan.

Right out of those talking points. They don't want to wait 2 years for surgery, and they don't want to be told they are too old for surgery.

All of this straight out of this roadmap.

My friends, in the face of 50 million Americans without health care and with working Americans in every one of our States going bankrupt as they struggle with health care expenses, it is irresponsible to utilize a roadmap of rhetoric that comes from polling about how to scare people. That is irresponsible. What we need to do is lay out a plan on how we can create affordable, accessible health care for every single American, addressing one of the biggest factors that degrades the quality of life for our citizens across this Nation.

We have a unique opportunity. We have an opportunity because small business wants help with those 26-percent increases and those 14.7-percent increases in premiums they are having to pay and they are not able to continue paying them. Large businesses are asking for help to become cost competitive so we can restore manufacturing in our Nation and put people to work and rebuild the middle class and have successful international corporations operating out of America. Families around the kitchen table are asking for help today. They know how they have struggled. They know if they have health care they might lose it next week when they lose their job. They know if they have health care, they might not be able to make the copays if they have something serious happen with their child. They know if they don't have health care, they are going to have to forgo virtually everything else or perhaps forgo the treatment itself because they won't be able to afford to make those payments to the doctor or to the hospital.

This is the moment when families and small businesses and large businesses are coming together to paint a new vision to improve the quality of life and to strengthen the foundation of our families. Let us seize this moment.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

FAMILY SMOKING PREVENTION AND TOBACCO CONTROL ACT

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, after the close of morning business, we will return to the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. This is a piece of legislation which has been in the making for two decades or more which would finally say that tobacco is going to be regulated, as it should have been a long time ago.

For the longest time, the tobacco lobbyists were the most powerful lobby on Capitol Hill, and they managed to create an exemption in virtually every law so that no Federal agency could take a look at them and regulate them and basically know what we know about every product and service offered in America. They said: Well, the Food and Drug Administration shouldn't have any authority. The tobacco lobby argued: We are not really food and we are not really a drug. So they managed to wiggle their way through the Federal statute book and at the end of the day have virtually no regulation or oversight. Unfortunately, while they have been doing that, 400,000 Americans have been dying every year of tobacco-related disease. It is the No. 1 preventable cause of death in America today. It is a product which is sold legally and a product which kills with lethality. That is a fact.

We know from experience that the tobacco industry has a tough assignment. What kind of business can survive that loses 400,000 of its customers every year, customers who die because of addiction to tobacco-related products? They needed a marketing campaign. The problem was, if you tried to market tobacco products to adults, most of them had the good sense to say: That is not a smart thing to do; I am going to stay away from tobacco. So they had to change their marketing strategy. If you couldn't market to adults, you know the kids may be vulnerable, and that is where they went, with a vengeance, with the idea of addicting children to tobacco early in life, because, of course, tobacco products, with nicotine, are addictive. To some, it is a very strong addiction. They fight for a lifetime, with patches and a doctor's care and hypnosis and anything they can think of. Some people can shake it and move away from it; others spend a lifetime addicted. So the tobacco companies went after the kids. They knew if they could get their products in the hands of children, and children would try them, they would become the next generation of smokers and ultimately a future generation of victims of tobacco. So this deadly cycle began by the tobacco companies, and the Federal Government took a hands-off attitude.

Back in the 1960s, we created a little warning label on tobacco cigarettes. You see it on billboards. It is so small, people don't notice it. It has become so commonplace, nobody even registers with the message it delivers.

For the longest time, we have argued that tobacco should be regulated, that the products that are sold in America should have an agency with oversight keeping an eye on them. The tobacco companies fought it off year after year.

Finally, with this new President, with this new Congress, we have reached the moment where we have a chance to pass this important legislation. This is a bill that will protect children and will protect America, and it will reduce tobacco use. The House passed their version last month with a wide majority, and now it is time for the Senate to act. Every day that we don't act, 3,500 American kids—children—will light up for the first time. That is enough to fill 70 schoolbuses of kids who will try cigarettes every single day for the first time. A thousand of those 3,500 will then become regular smokers. The addiction will begin.

Tobacco companies spend nearly $40 million every day to lure this new generation of customers with blatant deceptive advertising—promotions of candy-flavored cigarettes and advertising that is aimed directly at kids—all the while they are loading their products not just with tobacco leaf but with chemicals. They put in extra nicotine, incidentally. If there isn't enough nicotine naturally occurring in tobacco, they load it up so that your addiction becomes stronger, your craving grows, and your body demands more and more tobacco. It is time we put a stop to this marketing and give the Food and Drug Administration the authority to regulate this industry.

There are 43 million Americans who smoke today. People often say to me: Well, why don't we just ban this product? If I thought that would end smoking in America, I might consider it. But we know better. With 43 million Americans currently addicted, they are not going to quit cold turkey tomorrow. A black market would emerge, and then the next thing you know the underground economy would be sustaining tobacco. That would not be the result we are looking for.

In my home State of Illinois, about one out of five kids smokes. That means that every year 65,000 kids in Illinois try a cigarette for the first time, and almost 20,000 become regular daily smokers. These kids consume 34 million packs of cigarettes a year. There are 8.6 million people in the United States who currently suffer from tobacco-related disease. It is responsible for 90 percent of lung cancer deaths, one-third of all cancer deaths, and one in five deaths from cardiovascular disease. Approximately half of all continuing smokers will die prematurely as a result of the disease. Sadly, in Illinois, 317,000 kids alive today will eventually die from the smoking addiction which they started as kids.

Here is what the bill does. We put teeth in the law to restrict the marketing and sale of tobacco products to kids. We require tobacco companies to disclose the ingredients on their products. We require the Food and Drug Administration to evaluate any health claims for scientific accuracy and public health impact. We give the FDA the power to require companies to make changes to tobacco products to protect public health. And we require larger, stronger warning health notices on tobacco products. These are common-sense reforms that will start to reduce the terrible toll tobacco has taken on families all across this Nation. The FDA is the right agency to do this. It is the only agency that can bring together science, regulatory expertise, and the public health mission to do the job. Through a user fee on tobacco companies, the bill gives the agency the money it needs to conduct its new responsibilities.

This is a strong public health bill, and it is a bipartisan bill. After more than 10 years of effort, we have never been so close to giving the FDA the authority it needs to regulate tobacco. I urge my colleagues to resist any amendments that will weaken this bill or add provisions that might stop it from becoming a law. FDA regulation of tobacco products is long overdue.

I can recall arriving on Capitol Hill as a new Congressman years and years ago. In the first orientation meeting we had as new Democratic Congressmen, one of the older Members of the House came in, closed the door, and said: I want to tell you something. When tobacco issues come up, we vote with the tobacco companies. That is for your friends in tobacco-producing States. You give them a helping hand, and someday they may give you a helping hand. That is the way it works.

Well, that was one of the first things we were told about being a Member of Congress; tobacco was that important on the political agenda. Certainly for some Members from tobacco-producing States, it may have been the most important thing that brought them to Capitol Hill. However, over the years, some of us wandered off of this agenda. I offered an amendment to ban smoking on airplanes and had the opposition of all of the leaders in the House of Representatives, Democrat and Republican. But it turned out that so many Members of the House flew in airplanes and couldn't stand this fiction of smoking section and nonsmoking section that they supported my amendment. So over 20 years ago we banned smoking on airplanes.

FRANK LAUTENBERG was my champion over here in the Senate and together we started a Federal policy that I might say kind of tipped one domino over and people started saying if secondhand smoke is dangerous on airplanes it is dangerous in other places.

That movement has grown in intensity. We have seen the kind of leadership at local and State levels that has continued to make it a potent force. But today is our chance. As I mentioned earlier, I am sure Senator DODD will join me saying we wish one of our colleagues were with us here today, and that is TED KENNEDY, who is home recuperating. TED KENNEDY was our champion and inspiration for years on this issue. He hung in there and fought for this when a lot of people gave up. TED never gave up. When it came to the issues in his heart and soul, he fought as long as he possibly could.

We continue that fight today and he handed the banner to Senator DODD, who has done an extraordinarily good job on this bill. He has been called into action in the Senate repeatedly. Just a few weeks ago we passed the Credit Card Reform Act after more than 20 years of trying. We finally got it done. It was a dramatic change in the law to protect consumers and families across America.

Today, with the passage of this—at least the movement of this bill forward toward passage this week—we are going to be able to protect millions of children and Americans from deadly tobacco-related disease.

I thank Senator DODD for his leadership. I commend this bill to our colleagues. This is our moment in history. Let's not miss it. Let's seize this opportunity to create protection for a lot of young people who will otherwise find you are compromised by this deadly tobacco product.

I yield the floor.

Pending:

Dodd amendment No. 1247, in the nature of a substitute.

Schumer (for Lieberman) amendment No. 1256 (to amendment No. 1247), to modify provisions relating to Federal employees retirement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, as I understand it, we are going to have a vote at 12:30. I ask unanimous consent the time between now and 12:30 be equally divided between the minority and majority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(At the request of Mr. DODD, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

• Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, later today, the Senate will vote to approve legislation that should have been enacted years ago—authority for the FDA to regulate tobacco products, the most lethal of all consumer products.

It has been a long and arduous path with many political obstacles. Fortunately, the legislative journey is nearing a successful conclusion. The House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed a nearly identical bill earlier this spring. In May, the Senate HELP Committee approved the FDA Tobacco bill with the support of a strong bipartisan majority. On Monday, 61 Senators voted to invoke cloture on the committee-passed bill. President Obama is anxiously waiting to sign it into law. Passage of the legislation is much more than a victory for those of us who have long championed this cause. It is a life saving act for the millions of children who will be spared a lifetime of addiction and premature death.

The need to regulate tobacco products can no longer be ignored. Used as intended by the companies that manufacture and market them, cigarettes will kill one out of every three smokers. Yet the Federal agency most responsible for protecting the public health is currently powerless to deal with the enormous risks of tobacco use. Public health experts overwhelmingly believe that passage of H.R. 1256 is the most important action Congress can take to protect children from this deadly addiction. Without this strong congressional action, smoking will continue at its current rate, and more than 6 million of today's children will ultimately die from tobacco-induced disease.

Smoking is the number one preventable cause of death in America. Nationally, cigarettes kill well over 400,000 people each year. That is more lives lost than from automobile accidents, alcohol abuse, illegal drugs, AIDS, murder, and suicide combined.

The American Cancer Society, the American Heart Association, the American Lung Association, the American Medical Association, the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids and eighty-six other national public health organizations speak with one voice on this issue. They are all supporting H.R. 1256 because they know it will give FDA the tools it needs to reduce youth smoking and help addicted smokers quit.

A landmark report by the Institute of Medicine, released 2 years ago, strongly urged Congress to “confer upon the FDA broad regulatory authority over the manufacture, distribution, marketing and use of tobacco products.”

Opponents of this legislation argue that FDA should not be regulating such a dangerous product. I could not disagree more. It is precisely because tobacco products are so deadly that we must empower America's premier public health protector—the FDA—to combat tobacco use. For decades the Federal Government has stayed on the sidelines and done next to nothing to deal with this enormous health problem. The tobacco industry has been allowed to mislead consumers, to make false health claims, to conceal the lethal contents of their products, to make their products even more addictive, and worst of all—to deliberately addict generations of children. The alternative to FDA regulation is more of the same. Allowing this abusive conduct by the tobacco industry to go unchecked would be terribly wrong.

Under this legislation, FDA will for the first time have the needed power and resources to take on this challenge. The cost will be funded entirely by a new user fee paid by the tobacco companies in proportion to their market share. Not a single dollar will be diverted from FDA's existing responsibilities.

Giving FDA authority over tobacco products will not make the tragic toll of tobacco use disappear overnight. More than 40 million people are hooked on this highly addictive product and many of them have been unable to quit despite repeated attempts. However, FDA action can play a major role in breaking the gruesome cycle that seduces millions of teenagers into a lifetime of addiction and premature death.

What can FDA regulation accomplish?

It can reduce youth smoking by preventing tobacco advertising which targets children. It can help prevent the sale of tobacco products to minors. It can stop the tobacco industry from continuing to mislead the public about the dangers of smoking. It can help smokers overcome their addiction. It can make tobacco products less toxic and less addictive for those who continue to use them. And it can prohibit unsubstantiated health claims about supposedly “reduced risk” products, and encourage the development of genuinely less harmful alternative products.

Regulating the conduct of the tobacco companies is as necessary today as it has been in years past. The facts presented in the Federal Government's landmark lawsuit against the tobacco industry conclusively demonstrate that the misconduct is substantial and ongoing. The decision of the Court states: “The evidence in this case clearly establishes that Defendants have not ceased engaging in unlawful activity . . . Defendants continue to engage in conduct that is materially indistinguishable from their previous actions, activity that continues to this day.” Only strong FDA regulation can force the necessary change in their corporate behavior.

We must deal firmly with tobacco company marketing practices that target children and mislead the public. The Food and Drug Administration needs broad authority to regulate the sale, distribution, and advertising of cigarettes and smokeless tobacco.

The tobacco industry currently spends over thirteen billion dollars each year to promote its products. Much of that money is spent in ways designed to tempt children to start smoking, before they are mature enough to appreciate the enormity of the health risk. Four thousand children have their first cigarette every day, and 1,000 of them become daily smokers. The industry knows that nearly 90 percent of smokers begin as children and are addicted by the time they reach adulthood.

Documents obtained from tobacco companies prove, in the companies' own words, the magnitude of the industry's efforts to trap children into dependency on their deadly product. Studies by the Institute of Medicine and the Centers for Disease Control show the substantial role of industry advertising in decisions by young people to use tobacco products.

If we are serious about reducing youth smoking, FDA must have the power to prevent industry advertising designed to appeal to children wherever it will be seen by children. This legislation will give FDA the authority to stop tobacco advertising that glamorizes smoking to kids. It grants FDA full authority to regulate tobacco advertising "consistent with and to the full extent permitted by the First Amendment."

FDA authority must also extend to the sale of tobacco products. Nearly every State makes it illegal to sell cigarettes to children under 18, but surveys show that many of those laws are rarely enforced and frequently violated. FDA must have the power to limit the sale of cigarettes to face-to-face transactions in which the age of the purchaser can be verified by identification. This means an end to self-service displays and vending machine sales. There must also be serious enforcement efforts with real penalties for those caught selling tobacco products to children. This is the only way to ensure that children under 18 are not able to buy cigarettes.

The FDA conducted the longest rule-making proceeding in its history, studying which regulations would most effectively reduce the number of children who smoke. Seven hundred thousand public comments were received in the course of that rulemaking. At the conclusion of its proceeding, the Agency promulgated rules in the manner in which cigarettes are advertised and sold. Due to litigation, most of those regulations were never implemented. If we are serious about curbing youth smoking as much as possible, as soon as possible; it makes no sense to require FDA to reinvent the wheel by conducting a new multiyear rule-making process on the same issues. This legislation will give the youth access and advertising restrictions already developed by FDA the force of law, as if they had been issued under the new statute. Once they are in place, FDA will have the authority to modify these rules as changing circumstances warrant.

The legislation also provides for stronger warnings on all cigarette and smokeless tobacco packages, and in all print advertisements. These warnings will be larger and more explicit in their description of the medical problems which can result from tobacco use. Each cigarette pack will carry a graphic depiction of the consequences of smoking. The FDA is given the authority to change the warning labels periodically, to keep their impact strong.

The nicotine in cigarettes is highly addictive. Medical experts say that it is as addictive as heroin or cocaine. Yet for decades, tobacco companies vehemently denied the addictiveness of their products. No one can forget the parade of tobacco executives who testified under oath before Congress that smoking cigarettes is not addictive. Overwhelming evidence in industry documents obtained through the discovery process proves that the companies not only knew of this addictiveness for decades, but actually relied on it as the basis for their marketing strategy. As we now know, cigarette manufacturers chemically manipulated the nicotine in their products to make it even more addictive.

An analysis by the Harvard School of Public Health demonstrates that cigarette manufacturers are still manipulating nicotine levels. Between 1998 and 2005, they significantly increased the nicotine yield from major brand-name cigarettes. The average increase in nicotine yield over the period was 11 percent.

The tobacco industry has a long dishonorable history of providing misleading information about the health consequences of smoking. These companies have repeatedly sought to characterize their products as far less hazardous than they are. They made minor innovations in product design seem far more significant for the health of the user than they actually were. It is essential that FDA have clear and unambiguous authority to prevent such misrepresentations in the future. The largest disinformation campaign in the history of the corporate world must end.

Given the addictiveness of tobacco products, it is essential that the FDA regulate them for the protection of the public. Over 40 million Americans are currently addicted to cigarettes. No responsible public health official believes that cigarettes should be banned. A ban would leave 40 million people without a way to satisfy their drug dependency. FDA should be able to take the necessary steps to help addicted smokers overcome their addiction, and to make the product less toxic for smokers who are unable or unwilling to stop. To do so, FDA must have the authority to reduce or remove hazardous and addictive ingredients from cigarettes, to the extent that it is scientific ally feasible. The inherent risk in smoking should not be unnecessarily compounded.

Recent statements by several tobacco companies make clear that they plan to develop what they characterize as "reduced risk" cigarettes. Some are already on the market making unsubstantiated claims. This legislation will require manufacturers to submit such "reduced risk" products to the FDA for analysis before they can be marketed. No health-related claims will be permitted until they have been verified to the FDA's satisfaction. These safeguards are essential to prevent deceptive industry marketing campaigns, which could lull the public into a false sense of health safety. Only by preventing bogus claims will there be a real financial incentive for companies to develop new technologies that can lead to genuinely and verifiably safer products.

This legislation will vest FDA not only with the responsibility for regulating tobacco products, but with full authority to do the job effectively. It is long overdue.

Voting for this legislation today is the right thing to do for America's children. They are depending on us. By passing this legislation, we can help them live longer, healthier lives. I know that the Senate will not let them down.●

Mr. DODD. There are over 1,000 organizations that support H.R. 1256. I ask unanimous consent that some of these letters of support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 26, 2009.

Hon. HENRY WAXMAN
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WAXMAN: We are writing to endorse the "Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act," which you introduced on March 3, 2009. If enacted, this legislation will make a significant contribution in our national campaign to reduce the harm caused by tobacco and to protect our children and public health.

As you are aware, in the next 365 days, more than 400,000 Americans will die prematurely from tobacco use and more than 450,000 children, 12 to 17 years old, will become regular, daily smokers and part of the next generation of grim statistics. This year, under your leadership, the United States Congress has an opportunity to bring about fundamental change by enacting your legislation to regulate tobacco products and their marketing.

The "Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act" is the kind of tobacco regulation that makes sense and that is long overdue. It would prevent the tobacco companies from marketing to children. It would require disclosure of the contents of tobacco products, would authorize FDA to require the reduction or removal of harmful ingredients, and would require FDA to promptly address the complex issues raised by menthol tobacco products. It would prohibit terms like “light” and “low tar” which have been used to mislead smokers into thinking that those tobacco products are less harmful. And it would force the tobacco companies to scientifically prove any claims about “reduced risk” products.

Some have questioned whether FDA can take on this important new task and whether it will have sufficient resources. Having thoroughly studied this issue, we believe that the bill gives the FDA the resources it needs to do the job properly; and, without question, the FDA is the right agency to implement this new regulation because it has a public health mandate and the necessary scientific and regulatory experience.

The Congress can change the course of this public health crisis by voting to enact your legislation to provide FDA with authority over tobacco products. This is a strong bill and would significantly advance the public health.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY,
CANCER ACTION NETWORK,
Washington, DC, May 18, 2009.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
*Chairman, Committee on Health, Education,
Labor and Pensions, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.*

DEAR CHAIRMAN KENNEDY: On behalf of the volunteers and supporters of the American Cancer Society Cancer Action Network (ACS CAN), the advocacy affiliate organization of the American Cancer Society, we thank you for your leadership on The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, S. 982. We fully support this legislation to give the U.S. Food and Drug Administration long-needed authority to regulate the production, marketing and sale of tobacco products.

Every year, more than 400,000 Americans die from causes related to the use of tobacco products. The annual direct health care cost from tobacco use is $96 billion. Every day 3,500 kids smoke their first cigarette and each day 1,000 young people become regular smokers, one-third of whom will die prematurely as a result.

More than 1.4 million Americans will be diagnosed with cancer this year and more than 550,000 will lose their battle with the disease. There will be 159,000 lung cancer deaths this year. Smoking is responsible for 87 percent of the deaths from lung cancer.

Despite the overwhelming evidence of harm to public health and costs to the health care system, tobacco products remain virtually unregulated. In the absence of government intervention, the tobacco industry continues to market its deadly products to children, deceive the general public about the harm they cause, and fail to take any meaningful action to make their products less harmful or less addictive.

Your legislation would begin commonsense oversight of the industry by giving FDA the necessary authority and resources to regulate the manufacturing, marketing, labeling, distribution and sale of tobacco products. The bill will give FDA authority to prevent tobacco advertising that targets children, prevent the sale of tobacco products to minors, identify and reduce the toxic constituents of tobacco products and tobacco smoke, and regulate industry health claims about the risks of tobacco products.

This is strong and effective legislation broadly supported by the public health community. We assure you that ACS CAN will work vigorously to protect the approach you have taken and to see it enacted into law this year.

Thank you again for your commitment to this critically important and long overdue legislation.

Sincerely,

DANIEL E. SMITH,
President.

AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 14, 2009.

Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
*Chairman, Committee on Health, Education,
Labor and Pensions, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.*

DEAR CHAIRMAN KENNEDY: The American Lung Association commends the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions for considering S. 982, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. Your legislation would finally give the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) authority over tobacco products.

This legislation will provide the FDA with the authority to stop the tobacco companies from advertising to children, making misleading health claims about their deadly products and from manipulating their products to make them increasingly more addictive. FDA authority over manufactured tobacco products will finally allow our nation to begin to take significant steps to reduce the tobacco-caused death toll that claims more than 392,000 American lives each year and results in $193 billion annually in health care costs and lost productivity.

The American Lung Association is grateful to you for your leadership and we look forward to working with you to ensure its passage by the Senate in June.

Sincerely,

CHARLES D. CONNOR,
President and CEO.

Chicago, IL, May 11, 2009.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: On behalf of the physician and medical student members of the American Medical Association (AMA), I am writing to express our strong support for S. 982, the “Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act,” and to urge the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions (HELP) Committee to approve S. 982 during its mark up of the bill. This legislation would give the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) the authority to regulate the manufacture, sale, distribution, and marketing of tobacco products. The AMA firmly believes that Congress must act this year to protect the public’s health by passing the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

Cigarette smoking remains the leading preventable cause of death and disease in the United States. Each year, tobacco use kills more than 400,000 Americans and costs the nation nearly $100 billion in health care bills. As physicians, we see daily the devastating consequences of tobacco use on our patients’ health. Patients suffer from preventable diseases including cancer, heart disease, and emphysema that develop as a result of the use of a single product—tobacco. The evidence is overwhelming concerning the health risks of using tobacco products, particularly when used over decades.

Ninety percent of all adult smokers begin while in their teens, or earlier, and two-thirds become regular, daily smokers before they reach the age of 19. Each day, approximately 4,000 kids will try a cigarette for the first time, and another 1,000 will become new, regular, daily smokers. As a result, one-third of these kids will die prematurely. Despite their assertions to the contrary, the tobacco companies continue to market their products aggressively and effectively to reach kids, who are more susceptible to cigarette advertising and marketing than adults. Congressional action to provide the FDA with strong and effective regulatory authority over tobacco products is long overdue.

We applaud you for your leadership on strong FDA regulation of tobacco and other critical public health issues. The AMA looks forward to working with you and your colleagues to enact S. 982 and its companion in the House, H.R. 1256, into law.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL D. MAVES.

AMERICAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIA-TION,

Washington, DC, May 13, 2009.

Hon. EDWARD KENNEDY,
Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions, Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN KENNEDY: On behalf of the American Public Health Association (APHA), the oldest and most diverse organization of public health professionals and advocates in the world dedicated to promoting and protecting the health of the public and our communities, I write in strong support of S. 982, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, legislation that would give the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) the authority to regulate tobacco products. In April, the House of Representatives passed this legislation by an overwhelming bipartisan majority and we are hopeful the Senate will move quickly to pass the bill.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), tobacco use is responsible for about 438,000 deaths each year in the United States. In addition to this staggering statistic, tobacco use costs more than $96 billion each year in health care expenditures, and an additional $97 billion per year in lost productivity. Furthermore, 3,600 kids between the ages of 12 and 17 years initiate cigarette smoking every day. In spite of this, tobacco products remain virtually unregulated. For decades, the tobacco companies have marketed their deadly products to our children, deceived consumers about the harm their products cause, and failed to take any meaningful action to make their products less harmful or less addictive. Your bill would finally end the special protection enjoyed by the tobacco industry and protect our children and the nation's health instead.

This legislation meets the high standard established by the public health community for FDA tobacco regulation. Importantly, the bill would create FDA authority to effectively regulate the manufacturing, marketing, labeling, distribution and sale of tobacco products, including the authority to:

Stop illegal sales of tobacco products to children and adolescents

Require changes in tobacco products, such as the reduction or elimination of harmful chemicals, to make them less harmful and less addictive

Restrict advertising and promotions that appeal to children and adolescents

Prohibit unsubstantiated health claims about so-called "reduced risk" tobacco products that discourage current tobacco users from quitting or encourage new users to start

Require the disclosure of tobacco product content and tobacco industry research about the health effects of their products

Require larger and more informative health warnings on tobacco products.

Study and address issues associated with menthol tobacco products

We thank you for your continued leadership on this and other important public health issues. We look forward to working with you to ensure the legislation is passed by the Senate and signed by the president this year.

Sincerely,

GEORGES C. BENJAMIN,
Executive Director.

CAMPAIGN FOR TOBACCO-FREE KIDS,
Washington, DC, May 14, 2009.

Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN KENNEDY: We are very pleased that the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions will next week undertake consideration of S. 982, the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, your legislation to give the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) authority over tobacco products. On April 2nd, the House passed this legislation with a solid bipartisan vote of 298-112. We look forward to its passage by the Senate in the near future.

Tobacco use remains the leading cause of preventable death in the U.S., killing more than 400,000 Americans each year and costing our health care system an estimated $96 billion annually. More than 1,000 kids become regular, daily smokers each day—and one-third of them will ultimately die from their addiction. Amazingly, tobacco products are virtually unregulated by the federal government. Tobacco products are exempt from basic health regulations that apply to other consumer products such as drugs, medical devices and foods. This special protection allows tobacco companies to market their deadly and addictive products to children, mislead consumers about the dangers of their products, and continue to manipulate ingredients in order to make them more addictive and attractive to children.

There are more than 1,000 national, state and local organizations that support this legislation (the full list of supporting organizations can be seen at: <http://www.tobaccofreekids.org/reports/fda/organizations.pdf>) and both the President's Cancer Panel and the Institute of Medicine support Congress giving the FDA the authority to regulate the manufacture and marketing of tobacco products.

We applaud your leadership on this important public health legislation and look forward to working with you to ensure its passage by the full Senate.

Sincerely,

MATTHEW L. MYERS,
President.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF PEDIATRICS,
Elk Grove Village, IL, April 29, 2009.
Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: On behalf of the 60,000 pediatricians, pediatric medical subspecialists and pediatric surgical specialists of the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP), I would like to express our support for the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act (H.R. 1256), legislation to protect child health by providing the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) with strong authority to regulate tobacco products. The bill made historic progress this year, passing in the House early in the session by an overwhelming bipartisan majority of 292-112. We urge the Senate to take up and approve FDA tobacco legislation as soon as possible and oppose the alternative offered by Senators Burr and Hagan.

It is estimated that more than 3 million US adolescents are cigarette smokers and more than 2,000 children under the age of 18 start smoking each day. If current tobacco use patterns persist, an estimated 6.4 million children will die prematurely from a smoking-related disease. Smoking and exposure to second-hand smoke among pregnant women cause low-birth weight babies, preterm delivery, perinatal deaths and sudden infant death syndrome. Other effects may include childhood cancer, childhood leukemia, childhood lymphomas and childhood brain tumors. Well over 30,000 births per year in the United States are affected by one or more of these problems.

The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act will provide the FDA with broad new authority and resources to regulate the manufacture, marketing, labeling, distribution and sale of tobacco products, including advertising. The marketing provisions include banning advertising near schools and tobacco sponsorship of sporting events. The bill would require tobacco company disclosure of cigarette constituents as well as larger and stronger health warnings on cigarette packs. It would also give the FDA the authority to regulate the amount of nicotine in cigarettes, ban flavored cigarettes, and prevent the marketing of products labeled as "reduced harm." This enhanced power can reduce tobacco use by adolescents and young adults, thus limiting the number of people exposed to tobacco's health-compromising and life-threatening risks.

The Academy opposes the alternative tobacco regulation legislation offered by Senators Burr and Hagan titled the Federal Tobacco Act of 2009 (S. 579). It does not provide the protections necessary to protect children from the harms of tobacco. Rather than place tobacco regulatory authority in the FDA, S. 579 would create a new and untested bureaucracy to do the job. The bill does not contain the strong marketing or labeling provisions necessary to prevent our nation's youth from starting a lifelong addiction to tobacco. The Federal Tobacco Act would also mistakenly assure tobacco users of the safety of so-called "reduced-risk" tobacco products, give the tobacco industry a voice in scientific decision making, and prevent mandating meaningful changes in tobacco product ingredients. We urge the Senate to oppose this alternative and swiftly pass FDA tobacco legislation.

Thank you for your dedication to the health and well-being of children. We look forward to working with you to pass this important legislation.

Sincerely,

DAVID T. TAYLOR, JR.,
President.

Mr. DODD. Let me take a couple of minutes. I know my colleague and friend from Wyoming, Senator ENZI, is coming to the floor as well. I think Senator COBURN is going to be here to make a point of order. I will keep an eye out so I do not exceed the time.

I want to point out to my colleagues that this is now down to the last few votes on this matter. I had hoped we would have been able to consider some of the other amendments that were being offered. But as my colleagues, I think, are probably aware, one of the amendments to be considered was an amendment offered by my colleague Senator LIEBERMAN. There was objection to that amendment coming up. As a result, we could not reach an agreement on allowing time for the other amendments to be considered, amendments offered by Senator ENZI, Senator BUNNING, Senator COBURN, and Senator HAGAN.

In fact, an amendment offered by Senator ENZI—he and I reached an agreement on that. It is regrettable that we weren't able to get to it. I hope we can fix it at another time. That is an example of what happened when we couldn't get unanimous consent to go forward. Nonetheless, I hope the substitute will be adopted, cloture will be invoked, and we can schedule a vote for final passage, as I believe we will, in the next day.

This is important. A lot of work has been done on this bill. As Senator DURBIN, our friend from Illinois, pointed out, this is work that has gone on for decades between Republicans and Democrats. It is a bipartisan bill. We spent 2 days on markup, considering amendments, adopting some, accepting some. That brought us to the position we are in today with this legislation.

As I have said over and over again over the last number of weeks as we have considered this bill, this is an unprecedented action we will be taking, an historic moment in many ways. For the first time ever in the history of our country, the 100-year-old regulatory agency, the Food and Drug Administration, which regulates all the food and products we ingest and consume as Americans, will now for the first time be allowed to regulate tobacco products.

The FDA, the Food and Drug Administration, as I pointed out, not only regulates the food we humans consume but also pets—cat food, dog food, bird feed, hamsters—all those products have to be approved by the FDA. One product we have not been able to legislate because of opposition from the tobacco industry is tobacco products. We are about to change that. My hope is with a vote today and tomorrow, and then agreement with the House, the President will be in a position to sign the legislation that will, first, give the Food and Drug Administration the opportunity to regulate these products and, as important, to determine and set guidelines and regulations dealing with the sale and marketing to young people.

It has been said, I know, over and over again, maybe not often enough, 3,000 to 4,000 children begin smoking every day in America. Every day we delay having the FDA take on this responsibility and begin controlling the marketing and sale of these products, we run the risk of more and more children starting the habit. We know that of that 3,000 to 4,000 who start smoking every day, 1,000 of them end up becoming addicted to the products. One in five high school students in my State of Connecticut today smoke. I suspect those numbers are probably fairly uniform across the country. Of that number I have mentioned, the thousand who become addicted, about one-third that number will die from smoking-related illnesses. Four hundred thousand people every year lose their lives as a result of tobacco-related illnesses.

Again, this is a self-inflicted wound. Obviously we have known this for a long time. The Surgeon General has warned for years, every scientific study that has been done has cautioned about what happens if people develop the habit of smoking and the dangers associated with it. We talk about loss of life but there are also those who become debilitated through the contraction of various diseases associated with smoking.

I apologize for making this case with numbers, but it is so important my colleagues understand where we are and how important this vote is, to be able to do this. We are now already beginning the debate about health care in the country. That debate is going to go on for the next number of months. A major feature of the health care debate is prevention, to try to prevent people from getting the diseases that cost them and their families and our country so much. What better way to take a step toward prevention than to deal with an issue like smoking and tobacco products, which causes so many deaths in our country, so many illnesses.

In fact, if you take suicides, murders, AIDS, alcohol-related deaths, automobile accidents, drug-related deaths, and combine all of them, they do not equal the number of fatalities that occur every year as a result of the use of tobacco products.

If we are truly interested in making real headway on prevention, what better way than to begin to deal with the issue of marketing and sale of tobacco products to young people. That is what a major part of this bill does.

We also provide help to the producing States because we recognize that for farmers in these States, this will be a major adjustment for them economically. This bill accommodates that as well.

I say to my friends on the other side, particularly, those who have offered—want to offer some of these amendments, we didn't have a chance to consider some of them, but I want them to know it was not objection on this side to that at all. There were objections to the Lieberman amendment going forward that created this problem. But, nonetheless, the work that has been done on this bill I think is deserving of our support. It is worthy of our unanimous adoption.

As I said over and over again, if you were to collect all of the adult smokers in the country—and 90 percent of adult smokers began as children, by the way—but if you asked all of them their opinion on whether we ought to do something about marketing these products to children, I would be willing to venture a guess that 98 percent of adult smokers, if they could speak with one voice today, would tell us to pass this bill. The last thing a parent who smokes wants is their children to start smoking. They know the hazards, they know the damage, they know the heartache that comes with the illnesses associated with these products.

On behalf of all parents in the country, smokers and nonsmokers, let us adopt this legislation and take a major step in dealing with the dreaded health problems associated with tobacco products.

I see my colleague from Wyoming so let me stop here and give him the remainder of the time he needs to comment on this. I thank him and his staff who have been working on this. I am a late arrival. He worked with Senator KENNEDY on this problem long before I was directly involved with it. I thank him for his work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. ENZI. I thank the Senator from Connecticut, Senator DODD, who is working as chairman on this committee, for his passion, enthusiasm, and for listening to us. We do have a few things that are in the bill, but there are several other things that ought to be considered. We want the bill to be as good as possible. When we do cloture, we cut off that possibility.

I have a couple amendments that I think, if they were addressed—I know one is kind of accepted on both sides, but we cannot get them in. That is a frustration. We should not be having frustrations on something as important as this bill. It is important that we stop kids from starting smoking and that we get people already smoking to stop smoking. It is adding to the health care bills of all of us. It is a cost shift we are experiencing. It is not good for their health. Then there are family members who are having secondary smoke. People do not realize the problems they are giving to their family members by doing that.

I do oppose cloture today. There are several amendments I would like to offer. They are all germane amendments. I am glad they were germane amendments. We have been trying to reach an agreement on offering these amendments but it has been without any success, and if we invoke cloture we will not have a chance to consider any of these amendments.

I hope we have a way to give these amendments serious consideration. If we cannot, I have to oppose cloture and I ask my colleagues to do the same. I think we can get it worked out in a relative hurry but not unless the train stops for a moment, a little hesitation here.

I want to get this bill done. I am hoping we can complete it. But I think there are some important points that have to be made on it.

I yield the floor.

CHARACTERIZING FLAVOR

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Madam President, recent attempts by the tobacco industry to sell and market candy-flavored cigarettes are a real threat to our Nation's children. With flavors such as cherry, grape, and strawberry, these cigarettes are intended to get our children addicted to a deadly product that kills more than 400,000 people a year. The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act section 907 prohibits the use in cigarettes of flavors, herbs, spices, such as strawberry grape, orange, clove and cinnamon, when used as a "characterizing flavor" of the tobacco product or smoke. I applaud you along with Senator KENNEDY for prohibiting these products.

Mr. DODD. As you know, most new smokers start as children. Every day, approximately 3,500 kids will try a cigarette for the first time, and another 1,000 will become new, regular daily smokers. We should do everything possible to protect our children from the dangers of smoking.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. However, it is my understanding that the language in section 907 is not meant to prohibit the use of any specific ingredient that does not produce a "characterizing flavor" in a cigarette or its smoke; is that correct?

Mr. DODD. The Senator from New Jersey is correct. While the term "characterizing flavor" is undefined in the legislation, it is intended to capture those additives that produce a distinguishing flavor, taste, or aroma imparted by the product. Nothing in this section is intended to expressly prohibit the use of any specific ingredient that does not fall into this category.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the Senator for this clarification.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I am pleased the Senate is taking up the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Act which will save hundreds of thousands of lives and more than $155 billion in health care costs every year. Currently, there are more than 44 million smokers, of which 90 percent began smoking before the age of 18. Tobacco is a product that is responsible for 440,000 deaths each year, is the leading cause of preventable death, and yet, is not regulated.

The Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act will go a long way in regulating tobacco products, and will make it less likely that a child will establish a dependence on tobacco products. In the United States alone, every day approximately 3,000 minors take up smoking. Simply reducing the use of tobacco by these minors by even 50 percent will prevent more than 10 million children from becoming habitual smokers, saving over 3 million of them from premature death due to tobacco related disease.

It is critical that the FDA gain regulatory authority over tobacco related products, in order to ensure that consumers are better informed of the possible risks, addictive qualities, and adverse health effects of these products. In addition, this legislation will create more transparency and, as in many other consumable goods, tobacco manufacturers will be required to list all ingredients included in their tobacco products. This bill also gives the FDA the ability to set quality criteria for tobacco products, prohibit cigarettes containing any flavoring other than tobacco or menthol, as well as require the FDA approval for all labels before being put on the market.

In 2005, cigarette manufacturers spent more than $13 billion to attract new users, retain current users, and increase consumption. Children especially are exposed to tobacco advertising, seeing tobacco use glorified in movies, and advertisements and sponsorship of sporting events. This advertising misleads users, children and adults, to believe products are healthy, for example, "light" or "low-tar" designations. Our Nation stands to benefit greatly from this legislation, both in quality of life and revenue saved. The diseases and deaths caused by smoking are preventable, and every person has a stake in the issue, whether they smoke or not.

I was disappointed in 1998 when the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decided in Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation v. Food and Drug Administration, FDA, that the FDA did not have the authority under existing law to regulate tobacco as an addictive drug, and I am pleased the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act will take steps to address this lack of regulation. This bill has the support of over 1,000 organizations and deserves our support.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I regret that the Senate was unable to reach an agreement with regard to consideration of the amendment which Senators LIEBERMAN, AKAKA, COLLINS, and VOINOVICH offered to H.R. 1256. The amendment, which was ruled non-germane, reformed several Federal employee retirement provisions. It made changes to benefit computation rules for certain Federal employees, including the ability to count sick leave and part-time service, and it authorized Federal agencies to reemploy Federal pensioners on a part-time basis.

I cosponsored this amendment. Its importance particularly resonates with me as a large number of Federal employees work and reside in my home State of Maryland. But that is not why I cosponsored it. I cosponsored the amendment because it was the right thing to do for all of America's Federal employees.

The Lieberman amendment would have extended to employees under the Federal Employees' Retirement System certain benefits which already apply to employees under the older Civil Service Retirement System. This bipartisan amendment had the potential to affect the lives of hundreds of thousands of Federal employees who work hard every day, many at modest pay grades, only to find that their benefits do not mirror those of their colleagues in the same positions.

We had an opportunity to send an important message to America's Federal workers by bringing up this amendment. We had an opportunity to give them additional incentives to continue the missions they pursue on behalf of all of us, to demonstrate that Congress still cares about doing what is right and fair. I regret we were unable to consider this amendment because of the objections of a minority of Senators.

I commend Senator LIEBERMAN and the other Senators who worked so diligently on this amendment. We will have other opportunities. I pledge my continued support for America's Federal employees, just as they continue to work for America each and every day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, on behalf of Senator LIEBERMAN I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding rule XXII, that I be permitted to call up amendment No. 1290 and that the amendment be modified with the changes at the desk; that once this modification is made, amendment No. 1256 be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DEMINT. I object. I make a point of order that the pending Lieberman amendment is not germane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The point of order is well taken. The amendment falls.

Under the previous order, the substitute amendment is adopted.

The amendment (No. 1247) was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. The pending matter will be a vote at 12:30, in a few minutes, on the cloture motion, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DODD. We will go to the vote right away. I appreciate the comments of my friend from Wyoming. I wish the RECORD to note there were no objections on this side to any of the amendments being offered, the germane amendments. My friend from Wyoming is absolutely correct. I regret that, that we didn't have an opportunity to debate those, but let me say there may be a time and opportunity for us to deal with these on other vehicles as well, but my hope is we can invoke cloture and move forward.

I am prepared to yield back the time and proceed to the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on Calendar No. 47, H.R. 1256, Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act.

Harry Reid, Christopher J. Dodd, Robert P. Casey, Jr., Debbie Stabenow, Blanche L. Lincoln, Patty Murray, Ron Wyden, Jack Reed, Sheldon Whitehouse, Maria Cantwell, Roland W. Burris, Richard Durbin, Mark Udall, Edward E. Kaufman, Tom Harkin, Benjamin L. Cardin, Bill Nelson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call is waived. The question is. Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on H.R. 1256, Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are mandatory under the rule. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 67, nays 30, as follows:

------	---------

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 67, the nays are 30. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I wish to thank my colleagues. This is, again, a strong bipartisan vote on this issue, and it allows us now to get to the final passage. We have had about, I think, three cloture votes on this bill. If we followed the regular order, the vote would occur at 6:05 a.m. tomorrow morning. I am sure the leader will not make us do that, but that may be the price you pay for all the cloture votes we have had to go through. But sometime tomorrow the vote will occur, and the leadership will obviously decide when.

Let me again thank Senator ENZI and his staff and Senator KENNEDY and his staff. They have gone back many years. I am a place-holder on this. I hope our friend from Massachusetts is watching this because he battled 10 years to get us to this point.

If we can make a dent in those 3,000 to 4,000 kids who start smoking every day—the estimates are 11 percent will not start smoking because of what we are about to do on this bill. If we can make a difference in those 400,000 who lose their lives every year and those who contract emphysema and related illnesses, this may be the most important prevention step we take in the short term on our health care efforts.

So for my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who have made this possible, this is a moment they can take great satisfaction in having made a significant contribution to the well-being of Americans. I thank all of them for that and urge a strong vote tomorrow for the passage of the legislation. Then we will work out—and we may not have to work out differences with the House—but if we do, we will then send this bill to the President for his signature, hopefully in the next few days. For the first time in the history of our country, the Food and Drug Administration will be able to regulate tobacco products, and that is a major achievement for our country's children.

With that, Madam President, I thank my colleagues again and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold his request?

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I withhold that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to be able to speak as in morning business for 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SAFE COMMISSION ACT

Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, I rise today to again call attention to the irresponsible and reckless fiscal path we find ourselves on as a nation and to urge my colleagues to act now to take the first step toward meaningful, comprehensive tax and entitlement reform through the enactment of the Securing America's Future Economy Commission Act, which I introduced with Senator JOE LIEBERMAN.

I urge my colleagues to take the time to read a recent letter from Senator LIEBERMAN and I urging their support of this legislation.

The SAFE Commission has broad bipartisan support outside of Congress, including the Peter G. Peterson Foundation, the Business Roundtable, the Concord Coalition, the National Federation of Independent Business, the Brookings Institution and the Heritage Foundation—I think if you get the Concord Coalition and the Heritage Foundation to support a piece of legislation, it has to be pretty bipartisan and fair—and also the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget. All of these organizations back the SAFE Commission concept as the way to tackle tax reform and our entitlement crisis.

I say to the Presiding Officer, as you may know, recently Chinese Prime Minister Wen Jiabao publicly voiced his concern about the security of the "huge amount of money" China has invested in the United States, saying, "To be honest, I am definitely a little worried." He then went on to call on the United States to "maintain its good credit, to honor its promises and to guarantee the safety of China's assets." I hope this frightens you as much as it frightens me. China is the largest foreign creditor of the United States, holding an estimated $1 trillion in U.S. Government debt. Though it may be unlikely due to the complex interdependent relationship we have with China, if China were to call in that debt, sell off its holdings, or direct its foreign investments away from the United States, the impact on our economy and our national security would be devastating. I have been saying for years that we cannot allow countries that control our debt to control our future.

The fact is foreign creditors have provided 70 percent of the funds the United States has borrowed since 2001. As a result, 51 percent of the privately owned national debt is held by foreign creditors—mostly foreign central banks. That is going to be increased significantly because of all the borrowing we are doing. These lenders are starting to express significant concerns about the status of our fiscal situation. To be frank, they should be concerned.

Our spending is out of control. As a result, our debt is skyrocketing. When I arrived in the Senate in 1999, gross national debt stood at $5.6 trillion, or 61 percent of our GDP. The Obama administration recently projected the national debt to more than double to $12.7 trillion by the end of fiscal year 2009. From 2008 to 2009 alone, the Federal debt will increase 27 percent, boosting the country's debt-to-income ratio—or national debt as a percentage of GDP—from 70 percent last year to 89 percent this year.

As shown on this chart, here is where we were back when I came to the Senate in 1999. In 2008, last year, the national debt as a percentage of GDP was 70 percent. Today, it is at 89 percent. You can see we are going to be very close to 100 percent of our GDP on our national debt. I call this the Pac Man that is eating up our revenue—particularly the interest. We are going to pay money that could be used for other things.

Alarming, the figures I just mentioned do not count our accumulated, long-term financial obligations. The Peterson Foundation recently pointed out that the Federal Government has accumulated $56.4 trillion in total liabilities and unfunded promises for Medicare and Social Security as of September 30, 2008. That works out—listen to this—to $483,000 per American household or $184,000 for every man, woman, and child in the country to pay for these unfunded obligations. In other words, we have $56.4 trillion in total liabilities and unfunded promises for Medicare and Social Security. It is an unfunded liability. If you look at it per household, it is $483,000 per household, and if you look at it per individual, for every man, woman, and child in the United States, it is $184,000.

To be completely fair to President Obama, our annual deficit and growing national debt have been problems for some time now. And, folks, I have come to the floor of the Senate time and time again to talk about paying down debt, balancing our budget, and so forth.

To my knowledge, President Bush never once mentioned the debt in any one of his State of the Union Addresses to Congress. But under the Obama administration, we have exacerbated the problem with an Omnibus appropriations bill that includes $408 billion in nonemergency funding, a $787 billion stimulus bill, and a 10-year proposed budget where the lowest deficit for a single year is larger than any annual deficit from the end of World War II to President Obama's inauguration.

I know we are going through some tough times. Over the past year, we have been hit by an economic avalanche that started in housing, spread to the financial and credit markets, and then continued onward to every corner of our economy. I know it well. I am a Senator from Ohio. We are spending money to get out of this economic mess, but we cannot allow that to be an excuse to continue our reckless fiscal path. We have to start finding ways to work harder and smarter to do more with less. It does not take an economist to realize our course is unsustainable. I know it, the Obama administration knows it, the American people know it.

The Obama administration knows we can no longer ignore this crisis. Peter Orszag, whom I consider a friend, the Obama administration's OMB Director, has even said:

I don't want to sound like the boy crying wolf, but it is a fact that, given the path that we are on, two things: One is we will ultimately wind up with a financial crisis that is substantially more severe than even what we are facing today if we don't alter the path of Federal spending; and secondly, that if we were on that path in the future and something like we are experiencing today occurred, we would have much less maneuvering room to fight those fires, because we will have already depleted the fire truck.

And I am disappointed that as OMB Director he has forgotten his commitment to entitlement and tax reform he so boldly and loudly called for when he was CBO Director. You would think a change in title would not cause such a memory loss on as important an issue as the financial health of our country. To me, it can only mean one thing: that Peter Orszag's boss, President Obama, must not be serious about addressing the growing national debt or, worse, does not understand our fiscal crisis or, even worse than that, that he just does not care.

Just last Friday, the Washington Post ran an opinion piece taking the administration to task for lacking a plan on just how we start to dig our country out of this financial crisis. The article details Treasury Secretary Geithner's trip to Beijing 2 weeks ago, where he went to reassure China—the world's largest holder of our Treasury debt, as I mentioned—that lending money to the U.S. Government is still a wise thing to do.

Mr. Geithner insisted that:

In the United States, we are putting in place the foundations for restoring fiscal sustainability.

In a moment that all Americans should consider a wake-up call, Mr. Geithner was met with laughter—laughter—when he told a group of Chinese students that their country's assets were very safe in Washington.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD this Washington Post article. The title of it is "No Laughing Matter, Why the U.S. needs to get serious now about long-term budget deficits."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, June 5, 2009]

NO LAUGHING MATTER

The Obama administration inherited from its predecessor both a tanking economy and a huge federal budget deficit. Under the circumstances, it cannot be faulted for increasing the deficit in the short run, because a mammoth recession called for fiscal stimulus. Thus, it is neither surprising nor irreversibly dangerous that the total federal debt held by the public looks as if it will reach 57 percent of gross domestic product by the end of fiscal 2009 on Sept. 30—well above the previous four decades' average of about 40 percent. What is more alarming is that, barring major spending cuts or tax increases, President Obama's budget could drive that figure to 82 percent by 2019, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

We are already getting a taste of the problems that could develop if the president and Congress do not address this soon. Since the end of last year, the interest rate on 10-year Treasury notes has gone up from 2 percent to over 3.5 percent. That number is within historical norms; indeed, Treasury rates probably had been artificially depressed during the financial panic of the fall. But the spike, which will cost the government tens of billions of dollars, also reflects mounting investor concern—at home and, especially, abroad—about the U.S. fiscal situation. If government borrowing costs continue to accelerate, they could kill economic growth for years to come.

It was a sign of the times that Treasury Secretary Timothy F. Geithner had to travel to Beijing this week to reassure China, the world's largest holder of Treasury debt, that lending money to the U.S. government is still a wise thing to do. Mr. Geithner insisted that, "in the United States, we are putting in place the foundations for restoring fiscal sustainability." To be sure, China doesn't have many good alternatives to parking its massive trade surpluses in dollars. But it does have some, including commodities and the debt of more fiscally prudent European governments. In a moment that all Americans should consider a wake-up call, Mr. Geithner was met with laughter when he told a group of Chinese students that their country's assets were "very safe" in Washington.

The chairman of the Federal Reserve, Ben S. Bernanke, was considerably more decorous than the Chinese students in testimony before Congress on Wednesday but, in essence, only slightly less skeptical. "Even as we take steps to address the recession and threats to financial stability," he said, "maintaining the confidence of the financial markets requires that we, as a nation, begin planning now for the restoration of fiscal balance."

Mr. Bernanke did not say explicitly that there is no such plan in Mr. Obama's budget—at least not according to the CBO, whose estimates of the president's budget show annual deficits lingering indefinitely above 4 percent of GDP. Nor did he point out that Congress has yet to come up with credible financing for the president's desirable but expensive health care proposal. He did not say that Mr. Obama and Congress have done nothing so far to deliver on the president's pledge of entitlement reform. But if the Fed chairman had said those things, he would have been absolutely right.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Madam President, this week, as you know, President Obama announced a plan to reenact statutory pay-as-you-go, pay-go. Now, what is "pay-go"? Pay-go basically is this: If you want to spend more money, you either have to find other spending you are going to reduce or, in the alternative, you are going to have to raise taxes to pay for it.

Unfortunately, the President's plan exempts things like the 2001-2003 tax cuts, patching the alternative minimum tax, updating physicians' payments in Medicare—and last but not least, modifying the estate tax. These expenses would be exempt from pay-go.

Folks, I believe this is intellectually dishonest. This does not reflect the high standards the President has set for his administration. In my opinion, it is more like the smoke and mirrors of the past that got us into the mess we find ourselves in today.

Maya MacGuineas, president of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, puts it like this:

It is like quitting drinking—

She was referring to the President's pay-go announcement. Here is what she says—

It is like quitting drinking, but making an exception for beer and hard liquor. Exempting these measures from pay-go would increase the 10-year deficit by over $2.5 trillion. That's not fiscal responsibility.

Today, I am reiterating my call for President Obama and Congress to enact the first pillar of meaningful tax and entitlement reform through the enactment of the SAFE Commission Act. I am asking my colleagues and their staffs to step up and look at this legislation and read the "Dear Colleague" letter Senator LIEBERMAN and I sent this last week with materials from the Peterson Foundation. Those materials, for a Senator or for staff members, lay out what I am talking about today. In addition, there is a DVD that is called IOUSA that was put together by the Peterson Foundation. I think it takes about an hour to look at it, but I don't know of anything that is out there today that depicts our financial crisis as well as that DVD does.

The SAFE Commission we are talking about would create a vehicle, much like we do for the BRAC process, to take on the tough issues of Social Security, tax reform, and creating, by a vote of 13 out of 20 members—there would be 20 members on the Commission; 2 of them would be from the administration, but it would take 13 out of 20—and if you have 13 out of 20, the recommendations would be fast-tracked through a special process and brought to the floor of both Chambers.

In other words, we would give it expedited procedure and then we would have to either vote up or down, just as we do on the BRAC process. It would break the logjam in Washington and show the American people and the world that we are serious about getting this Nation back on track.

For the life of me, I cannot understand why President Obama doesn't support this concept. I know he is getting a hard time from Speaker PELOSI and from several other Members in the House of Representatives, although STENY HOYER is in favor of the commission approach to solving our entitlement and tax reform crisis. We all know we can't get this done through the regular order of business. We know it. We would not be able to get it done. The proof of it is we haven't been able to do it thus far, so we are going to need the Commission. Everybody understands we are going to need it.

I know the President wants to move on climate change. But he has to know that from a substantive point of view and a political point of view, he is going to have to do something about this long-term financial crisis in which we found ourselves. It would seem to me he could go forward with climate change, he could go forward with health care reform, and get the Commission formed. It will take the Commission at least a year to finish its business.

Think of this: If the Commission is able to get 13 out of 20 members to come back with a bipartisan solution to dealing with tax reform and entitlement reform, that would be wonderful. It would take that issue off the President's plate. In other words, sooner or later, our President and his party are going to have to face up to the fact that the people of America are really worried—and so are the people of the world—about us doing something about tax reform and entitlement reform.

Wouldn't it be great—I mean, if I were the Governor, as I was for 8 years in Ohio, and somebody said: Governor, you know what. You have a real problem. And what we are going to do is, we are going to put a commission together on a bipartisan basis, and we are going to come back with recommendations to get the job done—I would kiss them and say: Wonderful. I could kind of forget about it, except for the two people in the administration who were working on it. If they came back with a bipartisan solution, wow. Get it through Congress and we deal with the substantive problem and we get a big political problem off our plate just before going into the next Presidential election. So I just hope there is some more thought being given by the administration, more thought given by the Congress.

We all say: Oh, yes, we are concerned about the national debt. We have to do something about it. But when you go home, what are you going to point to for the people, your constituents? What are you going to point to and say: I am sincere about this; I want to do something about it. Then they are going to ask you: Well, what did you do? One of the things you can do is say: I supported a bipartisan commission. They are going to go to work during the next year. They are going to come back with recommendations, and this is the way we can deal with the problem that is going to be such a burden on the future of our country.

I came here in 1999, and one of the reasons I came here was to deal with our deficits and with reducing our national debt. I am going to be leaving this place at the end of next year. I have three children, and I have seven grandchildren. I happen to believe that just like the pages who are here today in this room, they are going to have to work a lot harder, work a lot harder than I do in order to maintain the standard of living that I have been able to have because the competition in the world today is a lot keener than it was 15 or 20 years ago. They are just going to have to work harder than they have ever had to work before to maintain the kind of standard of living that we would like to have for them and for my children and grandchildren. But if you think about it, if we don't deal with this problem I am talking about today, we are going to lay on their backs taxes that will break the bank.

So we put them in a position where they are going to have to work harder to maintain a decent standard of living. Then, what we are saying to them is, we are going to let you pay for those things that we weren't willing to do without or pay for on our own. To me, that is absolutely immoral. It is absolutely immoral.

One of the things I would hope is—and I feel like a broken record, but I would hope that the Holy Spirit would somehow enlighten us to face up to this very serious responsibility, one that if we don't face up to, will have a devastating impact on the future of our country and our children and grandchildren.

I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold his request?

Mr. VOINOVICH. Yes, I will.

Mr. VITTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 15 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DRUG REIMPORTATION AND REFORM

Mr. VITTER. Madam President, today I rise to speak on two crucial issues which I had hoped we would not only be debating in the context of this FDA bill currently before the Senate, but actually acting on in that context. So I have to say as I speak about these two issues I am disappointed we are not taking this obvious, major opportunity of acting on a major FDA bill to again not only have me speak, but all of us act together on the crucial issues of, No. 1, the reimportation of prescription drugs; and, No. 2, meaningful generic drug reform so that we get generics to market sooner as a lower cost alternative for American consumers. I wish to touch on each of these in turn.

I was glad to support my friend, the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, and many Democratic and Republican colleagues, in introducing an amendment to the FDA tobacco bill to enact comprehensive reimportation of prescription drugs. This has long been an issue that has truly united, in a sincere bipartisan way, Democrats and Republicans. Many Democrats and many Republicans have agreed. I think at a time when, unfortunately, the partisan divide and sometimes divisive and bitter partisan rhetoric is at an all-time high, it is important to find areas where we can bridge that divide in a meaningful and sincere way.

It is important to work on real issues and real solutions together and bridge that divide. Reimportation is a great example of that.

Now, we have on record a clear majority in the Senate and well over 60 votes for reimportation. We have a clear majority in the U.S. House for reimportation, and we have an administration and a President who are for reimportation, and he is on record in that regard in his service in the U.S. Senate. In addition, we have an important issue that can save all of us and can save our health care system billions of dollars as we go into health care reform. Surely, we need to be talking and acting in ways that can cut costs in health care without endangering the public, without hurting patient care, and this is a great opportunity.

The CBO has estimated that Americans would save about $50 billion—$50 billion with a “b”—over the next 10 years if reimportation were enacted. So we have a true bipartisan issue which has true consensus support in the Senate, in the House, and in the administration, which can save all of us and our health care system $50 billion. Let's act. Surely, this is a recipe for something we can act strongly on and produce positive results.

So what is going on? Well, I am afraid what is going on is exactly what my colleague, the Senator from Arizona, Mr. MCCAIN, suggested on the Senate floor last week. He stood bravely on the Senate floor and read directly from a lobbyist e-mail, a lobbyist of big PhRMA, the association which represents the biggest pharmaceutical companies, and read a detailed e-mail about how they were going to block and derail this effort of mine and Senator MCCAIN's and Senator DORGAN's and others.

I think seeing that come to pass, seeing this effort successfully blocked from the FDA bill—something that is clearly a major opportunity on which to pass reimportation, a big FDA bill—that has to grow the cynicism of the American public. Americans all across our country have to be out there thinking: OK, what is wrong with this picture? Reimportation unites Democrats and Republicans, a big majority in the Senate, a big majority in the House, the support of the President, saves the system $50 billion, obvious opportunity to pass it on an FDA bill, but, once again, it is cut off. It is blocked from consideration, from moving forward. That has to increase everybody's cynicism, and we have to work beyond that to pass this important legislation for the American people.

I am happy the majority leader has generally said he would find time on the Senate floor for consideration of a reimportation bill. We need to move. We would like a date certain, Mr. Leader, a date certain for that important consideration. After so many years of waiting, after so many years of the big PhRMA lobbyists and others blocking us from that consideration, we would like that debate and that action as soon as possible. It is certainly appropriate as we go into a major debate on health care reform.

I would underscore the same message with regard to the second crucial topic: reform with regard to generic drugs. For many months now, I have been working with several Members, most notably Senator SHAHEEN of New Hampshire, on bipartisan consensus generic drug reform.

Once again, I was very hopeful that this FDA bill on the floor of the Senate now would be a prime opportunity, an obvious opportunity, to pass that consensus bipartisan reform. Once again, that door was closed to us. We are not going to have that opportunity, and I express real disappointment.

But we need to act in that area. I look forward to continuing to work with Senator SHAHEEN, Senator BROWN, and others in that important area. We have been focused on two things, in particular, that can make a huge difference.

First, we need to clear up certain loopholes, quite frankly, in the law that allowed drug companies to make labeling changes when their patent protection is about to run out, when generic was about to be open to go on the market. They were able to make slight labeling changes to extend that protection longer, in my opinion, in a somewhat artificial way. We need to reform the law and clear up those loopholes so that generic can come to market and provide Americans with a lower cost alternative.

Surely the drug companies need a period of protection so they can recoup their enormous investment in research and development. But what they don't need, and what we should not allow, in my opinion, is tweaking the labels at the eleventh hour and extending that protection in an artificial and, in my opinion, unreasonable way. That is a big area of reform I have been working on with Senator SHAHEEN and others.

A second area of needed reform is to elevate the Office of Generic Drugs and its importance within the FDA. We need to give it more stature. We need to have the head of that office report directly to the head of the FDA, the Administrator. We need to fund it properly so that, again, we put the proper emphasis on generic drugs. Generics are a good, safe, lower cost alternative to millions of American seniors and other Americans. They provide that today. But they can provide that lower cost alternative to an even greater extent if we take these common-sense, consensus, bipartisan measures—if we do away with these loopholes that allow last-minute labeling changes to artificially and unreasonably extend a company's patent, and if we elevate the stature of the Office of Generic Drugs within the FDA.

Again, it was an obvious opportunity to do just that in a bipartisan consensus way as we debate and act on this major FDA bill on the floor of the Senate now. I am sorry that door has been closed to us. I am sorry we have lost that opportunity. It is a shame. But we need to move on that issue, just as we need to move on reimportation now in the next few months this year in this body and in the House of Representatives.

We desperately need important health care reform. We need savings in the system to make costs of the overall health care system more reasonable, without sacrificing patient care, without telling seniors they cannot get this treatment or they cannot get that operation. These are commonsense, achievable ways to do that, by stabilizing the cost of prescription drugs. That is one of the most significant costs in our health care system with one of the most significant growth patterns. So let's act on reimportation, let's act on generics reform, let's act in a bipartisan way, let's act for the best interests of American seniors and all the American people.

With that, I yield the floor.

CREDIT CARD FAIR FEE ACT

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, yesterday I reintroduced the Credit Card Fair Fee Act. This legislation will provide fairness and transparency in the setting of credit card interchange fees.

Several weeks ago, the Senate passed legislation that will crack down on abusive fees and practices that credit card providers impose on consumers and cardholders. It is landmark legislation. It was 20 years in the making. I was pleased to support it and glad it passed.

We also need to take a hard look at the fees and the restrictions credit card providers impose on retailers. Retailers such as the restaurant down on the corner, the grocery store, the shop, these have to be looked at as well.

Currently, banks and credit card companies impose a system of fees and restrictions on retailers that accept their cards as a form of payment. There is a growing recognition that many of these fees and restrictions are anticompetitive and unfair to businesses and consumers.

Many people assume credit cards make their money off the customers who use them in direct payment, interest charges, and penalties. It turns out there is a whole level of fees that is imposed on retailers which, obviously, is passed on to consumers but have a direct impact on sales in America. If we do not address flaws in the system, many businesses will find it hard to make a profit, and the credit card fees cause consumer prices to go up as well. The most flawed element of the current system of merchant fees is the interchange fee. It is a fee merchants pay to card issuing banks on each debit or credit card transaction.

Under the current system, card networks, such as Visa and MasterCard, unilaterally set the rates for these interchange fees. These fees vary from card to card, but they average about 2 percent of the transaction they cover. Card companies don't let their member banks negotiate with merchants over the fee rates, and they prevent merchants from encouraging customers to use cards that carry lower fees.

Yesterday, the Secretary of the Treasury was in before my appropriations subcommittee. It turns out, we accept credit cards for some 200 different agencies in the Federal Government. I asked the Secretary how much we pay in interchange fees to these credit card companies—as we accept credit card payments for everything from taxes to purchases at the Government Printing Office. It turns out it is well over $200 million a year. The GAO did a study in which it was asked whether, in fact, the Federal Government bargains for lower interchange fees because of the volume of business we do. It turns out there is virtually no bargaining allowed, not even with the Federal Government.

If merchants want to accept credit cards, those merchants simply have to abide by the rates, just like the Federal Government, that the card networks set, even when the rates are increased.

In fact, card companies regularly increase their interchange rates. A report by the Federal Reserve Bank in Kansas City found that between 1996 and 2006 Visa and MasterCard interchange rates increased from approximately $1.30 per $100 transaction to $1.80. That is about a 40-percent increase over that 10-year period of time. The rates have gone up even further for cards that have rewards programs. The total amount of interchange fees collected last year was $48 billion, according to estimates of the National Retail Federation. It is a huge increase from 2001, when the figure was $16.6 billion.

Despite these rising fees, many merchants have no real choice but to accept these cards as a form of payment. Consumers use their credit and debit cards for over 40 percent of all transactions. Interchange fees cut into retailer profits and force many merchants to raise consumer prices or go out of business.

As you think about it, what does it mean for the profitability of a company if the business is required to pay the credit card company 2 percent of the sale price on every sale? Well, for some companies that operate on a very tight margin, it can be significant. Best Buy, the large and successful electronics retailer, has a net profit margin of only 2.2 percent. Whole Foods, a well-known grocery store, has a profit margin of 1.4 percent. The food and drugstore retail sector has a profit margin of only 1.5 percent, according to Fortune magazine.

How can these companies continue to be profitable if rising interchange fees paid to credit card companies cut into their already small operating margins?

In 2007, the National Association of Convenience Stores reported the entire convenience store industry had profits of $3.4 billion dollars; however, they paid credit card interchange fees of $7.6 billion. Over twice the amount of industry profit was paid to credit card providers.

Of course, it has an impact on smaller businesses. Rich Niemann, a friend of mine, who is coming by my office this afternoon in Washington, runs Niemann Foods, a chain of 65 grocery stores based in Quincy, IL. Every year I meet with him, and every year he asks me for help with interchange fees. Last year, Niemann Foods made $6 million in profits but paid $3 million in interchange fees. Those fee payments are going up every year. He has no ability to negotiate any change in those fee amounts. It is a growing expense he can't control.

Rising interchange fees cause many merchants to raise the price of their goods to cover these interchange fees. I don't want to drive small grocery stores out of business or small convenience stores. We don't want prices to go up for consumers across the board because of nonnegotiable credit card fees. The Credit Card Fair Fee Act will help restore fairness. The goal is simple. It incentivizes companies that provide credit cards and the merchants that accept them to sit down together and negotiate fees and terms both sides can live with.

The bill establishes a framework for negotiations and gives both sides a legitimate voice at the table. Under the bill, merchants would receive limited antitrust immunity to negotiate collectively with the providers of card systems over the fees and terms for access to the system. The bill then motivates the merchants and card providers to work out voluntary agreements. It establishes a mandatory period for negotiations.

If they fail to reach a voluntary agreement, the matter would then go to an arbitration-style proceeding before a panel of judges appointed by the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission. The judges would collect and disclose full information about credit card fees and costs and then order a mandatory settlement conference to attempt to facilitate a deal. If that fails, the judges would conduct a hearing where the merchants and card providers would each propose what they think is a fair set of fees and terms. The judges then would select the proposal that most closely represents what would be fairly negotiated in a competitive market. This set of fees and terms would govern access to the card system by merchants for a period of 3 years.

The bill contains safeguards to ensure the judges can only select a set of proposed fees and terms that is fair and pro-consumer. But the ultimate goal is to reach a deal before the process gets to the point where the judges would need to issue a ruling.

This is an archaic element of commerce in America that has a direct impact on consumers, the money we pay for goods and services, as well as the profit margins of a lot of businesses that are struggling. The credit card companies have been unable to justify their interchange fees in terms of the actual cost of processing credit card payments. It is a profit margin on their side for which they are not accountable.

My legislation is supported by the Merchants Payments Coalition, a coalition of retailers, supermarkets, convenience stores, drugstores, fuel stations, online merchants and other businesses. The coalition's member associations collectively represent about 2.7 million stores nationwide, with approximately 50 million employees.

I ask my fellow colleagues in the Senate to take a look at the legislation. I warn them in advance, if they are interested in looking at this issue of credit cards and interchange fees, be prepared. You are going to hear from every bank that issues a credit card, and they are going to tell you the Durbin legislation is the end of the world. But I hope you will also listen to the merchants and retailers in the States you represent. They will tell you this system is unconscionable and unsustainable.

To have the credit card companies dictate these fees to their retailers all across America is fundamentally unfair. We should have arm's length negotiation. We should also have at the Federal Government level a negotiation to determine what is the best arrangement for taxpayers when it comes to paying these credit card fees to the companies that provide credit cards for transactions with the Federal Government. It is not an unreasonable approach.

I hope my colleagues will take a look at this issue, and I hope they will listen to their merchants and retailers back in their States.

GUANTANAMO

Mr. President, I wish to commend the Obama administration for the progress they have made to date on closing the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay. According to media reports today, the Obama administration has reached a historic agreement with the Government of Palau to transfer 17 Guantanamo detainees to this Pacific island. These 17 detainees are Uighurs from China.

The Bush administration determined that all 17 are not enemy combatants and do not pose any risk to U.S. national security. The Bush administration had determined the Uighurs couldn't be legally returned to China, for fear they would be imprisoned and tortured. A Federal Court looked at all the classified evidence against these 17 Uighurs and found there was no legitimate reason to hold them and ordered them released. The President, this administration, is going to follow that court and follow the law.

I commend President Obama and those working with him for finding a solution to what has been a vexing problem by convincing the Government of Palau to accept Uighur detainees. This is the kind of diplomacy we need to achieve a better standing in the world and a more peaceful and secure situation for the United States.

Something else happened yesterday as well. There was an important development. The administration transferred Ahmed Ghailani to the United States to be prosecuted for his involvement in the 1998 bombings of our Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. Those bombings killed 224 people, including 12 Americans. I have been to Kenya. I saw the bombed building. It was devastating. It is hard to imagine what happened inside that building and nearby when those bombs were detonated. We know 224 people died, including 12 of our own.

I wish to commend President Obama for his determination to hold Ahmed Ghailani accountable for his alleged crimes. For 7 long years, the Bush administration had failed to convict any of the terrorists who planned the 9/11 terrorist attacks. For 7 long years, only three individuals were convicted by military commissions at Guantanamo. Two of those individuals, incidentally, have been released. President Obama has been clear, it is a priority for his administration to bring to justice the planners of 9/11 and other terrorists who have attacked our country, such as Ahmed Ghailani.

Unfortunately, this issue has become very political and very complicated over the last several months. Some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have expressed some things on the Senate floor which I don't think are consistent with the security of the United States. Senator McCONNELL, the distinguished minority leader, and Senator KYL, the distinguished assistant minority leader, have argued we should not transfer suspected terrorists from Guantanamo to the United States in order to bring them to justice. They have argued we cannot safely hold any of these detainees in prison in the United States, even—one of their arguments—during the course of the trial.

When you look at the failed track record of prosecuting terrorists at Guantanamo, it is pretty clear if Ahmed Ghailani isn't prosecuted in the U.S. courts, there is a good chance he will never be punished for his crimes. President Obama made it clear when he said:

Preventing this detainee from coming to our shores would prevent his trial and conviction. And after over a decade, it is time to finally see that justice is served, and that is what we intend to do.

Even Senator KYL appears to have softened his position. On the floor of the Senate yesterday, he spoke about Ahmed Ghailani and said:

Everybody acknowledges that there are some people who need to be tried for serious crimes, in effect, like war crimes, and they should be tried in the United States.

I commend Senator KYL for this statement. I think it is a sensible, reasonable position. But let us acknowledge the obvious: If we are going to try these Guantanamo detainees in the United States, we are going to incarcerate them while we try them. There is no other reasonable alternative. If they are found guilty and face imprisonment, what will we do with them? I am glad Senator KYL acknowledged the obvious. Of course, we have to bring these terrorists to justice, and an American court is the best place to do it.

The U.S. Government frequently brings extremely dangerous individuals to the United States for prosecution. Ramzi Yousef—the mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Center bombings, captured in Pakistan—was brought to trial in the United States, convicted, and is now being held in a Federal supermaximum security prison, a convicted terrorist.

Some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle continue to argue we should not prosecute Guantanamo detainees in U.S. courts because no prison in America is safe to hold them. Ramzi Yousef was held in the Metropolitan Corrections Center in New York during the course of his trial for over 2 years—safely. My colleagues seem to think American corrections officers are not capable of safely holding terrorists. Republican Senator LINDSEY GRAHAM, who is a military lawyer, said:

The idea that we cannot find a place to securely house 250-plus detainees within the United States is not rational.

What is the record? Today, our Federal prisons—and this is the most updated number from the Justice Department—hold 355 convicted terrorists, including al-Qaida leaders such as Ramzi Yousef, who masterminded the World Trade Center bombing in 1993. No prisoner has ever escaped from a Federal supermaximum security facility. Clearly, we know how to hold these terrorists safely and securely so no one in America is at risk.

Unfortunately, some on the other side of the aisle continue to argue that we should keep Guantanamo open at all costs. I disagree. I believe, President Obama believes, and I think many Americans believe that closing Guantanamo is an important national security priority. But it isn't just the President—and President Bush, for example—who want to close Guantanamo. Among those military and security leaders calling for the closing of Guantanamo are: GEN Colin Powell, the former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and former Secretary of State; Republican Senators JOHN MCCAIN and LINDSEY GRAHAM; former Republican Secretaries of State James Baker and Henry Kissinger and Condoleezza Rice; Defense Secretary Robert Gates, first appointed by President Bush; ADM Mike Mullen, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and GEN David Petraeus.

Yesterday, Senator KYL made a statement taking issue with some of my earlier comments about Guantanamo.

Senator KYL asked: "What is wrong with the prison at Guantanamo?"

Let me respond to Senator KYL's question. What is wrong with Guantanamo is that it is a recruiting tool for al-Qaida and other terrorists.

That is not just my opinion. That is the opinion of our military leaders, based on their experiences fighting the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mike Mullen said:

The concern I've had about Guantanamo is it has been a recruiting symbol for those extremists and jihadists who would fight us. That's the heart of the concern for Guantanamo's continued existence.

General David Petraeus said Guantanamo is, "a symbol that is used by our enemies to our disadvantage. We're beat around the head and shoulders with it."

And Defense Secretary Robert Gates said:

Closing Guantanamo is essential to national security. It has become a rallying cry and recruitment tool for our enemies—endangering the lives of our soldiers in the field, diminishing the willingness of American allies to help wage the fight against al-Qaida and undermining the moral authority of the country.

Of course, Senator KYL is entitled to his point of view and I respect him and count him as a friend. But he offers no evidence to support his view, certainly no evidence that compares with those I have quoted here, starting with Gen. Colin Powell.

Not only is Guantanamo a recruiting tool for terrorists in the Middle East. There is evidence that al-Qaida is actually recruiting terrorists in Guantanamo itself. McClatchy Newspapers conducted an extensive investigation and concluded:

Instead of confining terrorists, Guantanamo often produced more of them by rounding up common criminals, conscripts, low-level foot soldiers and men with no allegiance to radical Islam . . . and then housing them in cells next to radical Islamists.

McClatchy found that, "Guantanamo became a school for jihad" and "an American madrasa."

Rear Admiral Mark Buzby, the former commander of Guantanamo's detention facility, said, "I must make the assumption that there's a fully functioning Al-Qaeda cell here at Guantanamo.”

Senator KYL also continues to claim that no one was abused at Guantanamo and that there is no connection between the abuses at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo. I commend him for his reading of the Senate Armed Services Committee Report.

But the Senate Armed Services Committee issued a bipartisan report that reached a different conclusion. Senator LEVIN, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and Senator MCCAIN, the ranking member of the committee, found, “Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld’s authorization of aggressive interrogation techniques for use at Guantanamo Bay was a direct cause of detainee abuse there.”

Senators LEVIN and MCCAIN also concluded, on a bipartisan basis, that there was a connection between the abuses at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo. They said:

The abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib in late 2003 was not simply the result of a few soldiers acting on their own. Interrogation techniques such as stripping detainees of their clothes, placing them in stress positions, and using military working dogs to intimidate them appeared in Iraq only after they had been approved for use in Afghanistan and at GITMO.

And, as I said yesterday, Susan Crawford, a top Bush administration official, concluded that Mohammad Al-Qahtani, the so-called 20th hijacker, could not be prosecuted for his role in the 9/11 attacks because he was tortured at Guantanamo Bay.

For many years, President Bush said that he wanted to close the Guantanamo detention facility, and there were few, if no complaints from the Republican side. But the President never followed through on his commitment.

Now that President Obama has made that same call, we hear this chorus of opposition. I think President Obama has accepted the challenge—the challenge to make certain that these detainees are treated in a responsible way; that those who should stand trial will stand trial for their crimes and war crimes; that those who cannot be brought to article 3 courts in America should be tried before reformed military tribunals that have rules of evidence and procedure more consistent with our values and laws; that some will be returned, like the Uighurs, if they pose no threat, to places where they cannot threaten the United States and that some will be kept in detention because they continue to be a threat to our Nation. That is a responsible course of conduct. It deserves bipartisan support.

I yield the floor.

THE SECOND “CAR CZAR” AWARD

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, this is the “Car Czar” award for Wednesday, June 10, 2009. It is a service to taxpayers from America’s new automotive headquarters: Washington DC.

It is the second in a series of “Car Czar” awards to be conferred upon Washington meddlers who distinguish themselves by making it harder for the auto companies your government owns to compete in the world marketplace.

On Monday, I presented the very first “Car Czar” award to the Honorable BARNEY FRANK of Massachusetts for interfering in the operation of General Motors. Congressman FRANK, who is chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, intervened last week to save a GM distribution center in his Massachusetts congressional district. The warehouse, which employs some 90 people, was slated for closing under GM’s restructuring plan. But Mr. FRANK put in a call to GM CEO Fritz Henderson and, lo and behold, the facility has a new lease on life according to the Wall Street Journal. Mr. FRANK, of course, is chairman of the House committee that recently orchestrated paying $62 billion in taxpayer dollars to give the U.S. Treasury 60 percent ownership of General Motors and 8 percent ownership of Chrysler.

Now, for this second “Car Czar” award, there are many deserving contenders.

For example, this afternoon the Honorable CHRIS DODD, Mr. FRANK’s Senate counterpart, is chairing a Banking Committee hearing featuring two of the administration’s chief meddlers in Washington-owned car companies: Mr. Ron Bloom, a senior advisor on the auto industry at Treasury and Mr. Ed Montgomery, White House Director of Recovery for Auto Communities and Workers.

Tomorrow, over in the House, the Financial Services Committee will hold a hearing on salaries of workers in companies the government owns.

Another obvious contender for the award is the administration’s new Chief-Price-Fixer for the cost of labor, Mr. Kenneth Feinberg who will review and approve how managers of car companies are paid. According to the New York Times article on June 8, Mr. Feinberg is likely not just to tell Government-owned car companies and banks how much to pay people, it is likely “everyone else’s compensation will be monitored, too.”

But there is time next week to honor all these worthy contenders. Today’s “Car Czar” award clearly should go to the Members of the Wisconsin and Michigan and Tennessee congressional delegations, each of whom met today in Washington with GM executives, imploring them to build small cars in our home States. In Tennessee’s case, of course, we were talking about the Saturn plant in Spring Hill, recently placed on standby.

In other words, I am giving the “Car Czar” award today to, among others, myself—the senior Senator from Tennessee.

Now, in my own defense, as Mr. FRANK’s spokesman said when Mr. FRANK was caught calling GM about the warehouse in Massachusetts—I was “just doing what any other Congressman would do” in looking out for the interests of his constituency. But that is precisely the reason for these “Car Czar” awards. As the Wall Street Journal put it, “. . . that’s the problem with industrial policy and government control of American business. In Washington, every Member of Congress now thinks he’s a czar who can call ol’ Fritz and tell him how to make cars.”

But consider for a moment the implications of all 535 of us in Congress regularly participating in such incestuous behavior. It is one thing, as I did in 1985 as Governor, to argue to General Motors to put the Saturn plant in Tennessee right next to the Nissan plant. That was an arm’s length transaction.

It is quite another thing for me as U.S. Senator and a member of the government that owns 60 percent of the company, to urge GM executives to build cars in my State. I can pretend I am making my case on the merits: central location, right to work laws, four-lane highways, hundreds of suppliers, low taxes, a successful Japanese competitor 40 miles away. But my incestuous relationship as owner taints the entire affair.

So I will continue to confer “Car Czar” awards—seeking to end the incestuous nature of these meetings and time-wasting hearings—until Congress and the President enact my “Auto Stock for Every Taxpayer” legislation which would distribute the Government’s stock in GM and Chrysler to the 120 million Americans who paid taxes on April 15. Such a stock distribution is the fastest way to get ownership of the auto companies out of the hands of meddling Washington politicians and back into the hands of Americans in the marketplace. It is also the fastest way to allow the car company managers to design, build and sell cars rather than scurry around Washington—under oath—answering questions and being instructed by their political owners how to build cars and trucks.

Distributing the stock to the taxpayers also may be the fastest way for Congressmen to get themselves re-elected. According to the Nashville Tennessean, an AutoPacific survey reports that 81 of Americans polled agree “that the faster the government gets out of the automotive business, the better.”

Now, here is an invitation for those who may be listening: if you know of a Washington “Car Czar” who deserves to be honored, please email me at CarAward@Alexander.Senate.gov, and I will give you full credit in my regular “Car Czar” reports here on the floor of the United States Senate.

And after you write to me, I hope you will write or call your Congressman and Senators and remind them to enact the "Auto Stock for Every Taxpayer Act" just as soon as General Motors emerges from bankruptcy. All you need to say when you write or call are these eight magic words, "I paid for it. I should own it."

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I am glad we are now engaged in the health care debate, but this debate is long overdue. I congratulate the Obama administration for taking on the tough issues. This is not an easy subject in order to reach the type of consensus necessary in order to pass major legislation. There are a lot of special interests that are going to make it difficult for us to move forward.

I am proud this administration is taking up this issue because we are in a health care crisis in America. I say that because the cost of health care is not sustainable. We spend twice as much as the next most expensive nation in the world per capita on health care—$2.4 trillion a year, 15 percent of our gross domestic product. Those numbers are increasing dramatically each and every year. The cost of health care is not sustainable.

We had a great deal of discussion here about fiscal responsibility and bringing our budget into balance. President Obama is correct. If we do not deal with the escalating cost of health care, it is going to make it virtually impossible for us to bring our budgets into balance in the future—whether it is a Medicare budget or Medicaid budget or a household's budget. We have to do a better job in reining in the cost of health care. America needs to be competitive internationally. We cannot be competitive internationally unless we find a way to bring down the cost of health care.

Family insurance premiums have gone up threefold in the last 8 years alone—much faster than earnings, three times as fast as earnings. The consequences for Marylanders is that they are going into bankruptcy. You have heard it said that we are only one health incident away from filing bankruptcy in America for many families. They have to make difficult choices: Should I really go see a doctor? Is it really that important, because do I really have the money to lay out? It is not covered by my insurance, or I don't have insurance, what do I do?

We have 46 million Americans today who have no health insurance, and it is very costly in the way they enter the system. They use the emergency rooms. They don't get preventive health care. They spend a lot of money. It increased 20 percent over the last 8 years.

In my State of Maryland, we have 760,000 Marylanders, 15.4 percent of our nonelderly population, without health insurance.

We need to reform our health care system. We need to build on what is right in our health care system and correct what is wrong.

What is right is that we have some of the highest quality health care in the world. I am proud that people from all over the world travel to my own State of Maryland to visit Johns Hopkins University or the University of Maryland Medical Center or NIH in order to get their health care needs met or to train their health care professionals. We want to maintain that edge in America, of leading-edge technology to keep people healthy. We have choice in our health care system. I believe that is good. You can choose the health plan in many cases. You certainly can choose your provider in many cases. That adds competition to quality of care in our system.

We have to correct what is wrong. The first thing we have to correct is the cost. We have to bring the cost down.

The first way to bring down the costs is for everyone to be in the system to deal with the uninsured. I congratulate our committee for coming forward with proposals that will include every American in our health care system. I think that is the prerequisite to health care reform.

Second, the proposals that are coming forward that recognize the advantage of preventive health care. In 1997 we amended the Medicare bill to include preventive health care services. Well, that has kept our seniors healthier, living better lives, and being less costly to the system itself by detecting diseases at an earlier stage. In some cases we can even prevent diseases by preventive health care.

That is what we need to do. It saves money. Preventive health care services cost in the hundreds of dollars. Surgery related to diseases not caught in the early stages are in the tens of thousands of dollars. It makes sense economically.

President Obama is right to invest in health information technology. That will save money. It also manages an individual's care in a much more effective way. So there are a lot of ways we can bring down the cost of health care. But let me talk about one issue that has gotten a lot of attention on this floor by some of my colleagues who seem to be opposing health care reform before we even have a bill before us, and that is the conversation about a public insurance option. I am somewhat bewildered by this discussion because I do not hear too many of my colleagues suggesting that the Medicare system should be done away with.

Now, the last time I checked, Medicare was a public insurance program. So let me differentiate because I think this point has been misleading on this floor.

When there is a government option, it does not mean the government provides the health care; it means it pays for the health care, as it does in Medicare. The doctors our seniors and disabled population go to are private doctors and private hospitals, as it should be. They have choice, as they should. The public insurance option just provides the predictability of a plan that will always be there.

My constituents in Maryland remember all too well the private insurance companies within Medicare who were here one day and gone the next day. Thank goodness they had the public option available to them in order to make sure they had coverage. Well, that is not true in Part D today. We do not have a public insurance option.

That was a mistake. We need a public insurance option, first and foremost, to deal with cost. We have to bring down the cost of health care. We have 46 million people without health insurance today. Are we going to let them try to figure out what private insurance to go to without the controls on cost? That is going to add to the cost in this country, not bring it down.

We have to at least have a comparison on a fair competition between public insurance and private insurance. I favor private insurance. But I want to have a public insurance option because I want the people of Maryland and around the Nation to have choice, to be able to choose the plan that is best for them.

They can stay in the plan they have now if they are satisfied with it. We want them to, and we encourage them to. But we want them to have a choice. We want the market to work. That is why the public insurance option has become more and more important.

Let me point out the two programs that we recently changed. Medicare Advantage. Well, Medicare Advantage is the private insurance option within Medicare that our seniors have the option, voluntarily, to join.

Well, when Medicare Advantage started, Medicare Plus Choice, it was a savings to the taxpayers because we paid the private insurance company 95 percent of what we paid the fee-for-service companies within the public option, saving money for the system. It made sense.

Well, guess what. Today we are paying the Medicare Advantage plans, the private plans, 112 to 117 percent of what we pay those who are in the traditional public option in Medicare. In other words, every person who picks private insurance costs the system money.

The Congressional Budget Office, which is a nonpartisan objective scorekeeper, says the Medicare Advantage premium we pay over what we would pay if they were in fee for service costs the system $150 billion over 10 years. So the public option is not only to offer choice to the people of our country between a plan that they want and it is available to them, whether it is a private plan or a public plan—remember, the providers are going to be private. This is not who provides the benefits; it is who pays for it, who puts together the plan. It will save the system money.

Part D: There is no public option in Part D. Many of us raised that issue back then, that we could have saved taxpayer money and saved Medicare money if we at least tried to keep the private insurance companies honest by having a public plan where we know what is being charged and paid for prescription drugs. Most of it is the cost of medicine. Why can we not have transparency? Why do we have to pay the high overhead costs of private insurance without the competition of a model that could save the taxpayers money and save our system money?

This is not a government takeover, as some of my colleagues have said. Medicare was not a government takeover. Medicare pays for the private doctors and hospitals so the disabled and seniors can get access to health care in America. I think those who make the arguments, which are basically scare tactics, are not adding to the debate anything that is worthy of this issue. This is a very important issue to the people of our Nation. This is our opportunity to fix our system by improving what is right, building on it, and correcting what is wrong.

But let's strengthen the good parts of our system. Let's strengthen those coverages that people are happy about, the employers who are providing health benefits to their employees, where it is working. But let's correct the runaway costs in our system, and let's provide a reasonable way that those who do not have health insurance can get health insurance.

If we can work together, Democrats and Republicans, this is an American problem. This is about America's competitiveness. This is about American families being able to afford their health care. This is about balancing our budgets in the future so America can continue to grow as the strongest economy in the world. But it starts today in this debate about fixing one of the underpinnings of our economy that is out of whack.

We need universal coverage. We need to have options available that will keep health care affordable for all people in this country and provide quality care for each American. That is what this debate is about.

I applaud our committees that are working on this issue. I applaud all of the Members of this body and the House who are seriously engaging in this discussion.

I think we can all learn from each other. If we work in good faith, we can develop a health care reform proposal that will maintain quality but provide access and affordability to every family in America. That should be our objective. I hope we will all work toward that end.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

ASME

Mr. KAUFMAN. Mr. President, I rise to congratulate the American Society of Mechanical Engineers on the 125th anniversary of their codes and standards.

As the only serving Senator who has worked as an engineer—indeed, I have a degree in engineering and worked as a mechanical engineer—I was proud to sponsor a resolution acknowledging the lasting impact ASME codes and standards have had on our Nation and on other parts of the world.

Now to non-engineers, codes and standards developed by and for mechanical engineers may sound like a lot of jargon and, candidly, like pretty boring stuff.

But as an engineer, I am proud to say that I believe that the nuts and bolts of how to build things, how to create, how to standardize and grow equipment and industries have been at the very heart of the American economic growth-engine for more than a century.

That kind of nuts and bolts thinking and creativity will be what leads America out of this recession and toward sustained economic growth once again.

So I'm pleased that the Senate has joined me in celebrating a success story of American engineering.

This story begins when ASME was founded in 1880. ASME currently includes more than 127,000 members worldwide.

It is a professional organization which promotes the art, science, and practice of mechanical and multidisciplinary engineering and allied sciences.

One of its chief functions since its founding has been the development of tool and machine part standards, along with uniform work practices to ensure mechanical reliability.

This week, ASME will celebrate its 125th anniversary of codes and standards development.

This is a tribute to the dedicated service of technical experts and engineers, whose efforts resulted in internationally accepted standards—standards that not only enhance public safety but also promote global trade.

Its first published performance test code was entitled "Code for the Conduct of Trials of Steam Boilers."

Since then, ASME has developed more than 500 technical standards for pressure vessel technology, electric and nuclear power facilities, elevators and escalators, gas pipelines, engineering drawing practices, and numerous other technical and engineered products and processes.

At present, ASME codes and standards, as well as conformity assessment programs, are used in more than one hundred countries.

Does engineering sound boring to you? Let's hope America's youth don't think so. We need to excite the young minds of thousands and thousands of young Americans about the possibilities of being an engineer, because engineers have always been the world's problem solvers. It is impossible to ignore the effect ASME's codes and standards have had on global development.

During the period of rising industrialization, as machines were expanding in use and complexity on farms and in factories, ASME standards helped to ensure the safety of engineers and workers using these machines.

Today, in our global economy, these codes and standards are continually revised and updated to reflect changes in technology. As a result, ASME's codes and standards are accepted across the globe and help to advance international commerce. The American Society of Mechanical Engineers has adapted to meet the changes and challenges in the engineering profession. I commend their accomplishments and contributions to the health, safety, and economic well-being of our Nation.

I am pleased that the Senate yesterday approved S. Res. 179.

When I went to college I wanted to be a mechanical engineer, in part because 52 years ago, after Sputnik, the United States was supporting science and engineering on an unprecedented level. America's competitive spirit helped us meet the challenges of those times. Thousands of innovations created myriad new opportunities for growth and development. We can do this again.

The financial crisis should lead to a cultural shift back to the strong foundations of innovation and know-how that have always been the American way. I am glad that the federal government is again investing strongly in supporting the basic scientific, medical, and engineering research that will spur the discovery and innovations to create millions of new jobs and shape a bright American future.

I thank my fellow Senators for joining with me in celebrating one small chapter in the American economic success story, with hope that we can inspire similar successes in the coming years.

BRIAN J. PERSONS

Mr. President, I wish to speak about our excellent Federal workforce.

In my years of government service, I have met so many wonderful people who give so much of themselves for the benefit of us all. That is why I believe it essential for the American people to have confidence in our Federal employees.

Americans need to know that they can place their trust in those charged with carrying out the people's work.

Our government is filled with talented individuals performing their jobs with excellence.

I cannot count—I literally cannot count—the Federal employees who deserve to be praised here in this Chamber, because that number is so great. But I hope to share one story today that is exemplary of our civil servants overall.

The ancient philosophers used to compare the government of a state with that of a vessel at sea.

In order to keep the ship afloat, to keep it headed in the proper direction, it required a captain and crew who were disciplined and responsible. Moreover, everyone on board—down to the lowest rank—had a job to do, and every task was critical.

So it is with government.

Every Federal employee, no matter how large or small one's job, keeps our ship of state afloat and sailing ever onward.

I have not chosen to reference this analogy by chance. Rather, it fits well with the story of a hardworking and accomplished civil servant whom I wish to recognize today.

I spoke earlier about the effect of engineers on our economy and our communities. The Federal employee I honor today has spent more than a quarter of a century working as a civilian engineer for the Navy Department.

Although today Brian Persons has risen to become executive director of the Naval Sea Systems Command, or NAVSEA, he began his public service as a ship architect at the Long Beach Naval Shipyard. A Michigan native and graduate of Michigan State with a degree in civil engineering, Brian went to work in 1981 for the Navy Department, designing and maintaining the ships of our fleet. Brian distinguished himself in the design division at Long Beach, and he was made a supervisory architect within a few years. While there, he worked on overhauls of surface ships, including the great battleships U.S.S. New Jersey and the U.S.S. Missouri. In 1988, when the U.S.S. Samuel B. Roberts struck a mine in the Persian Gulf, the Navy sent Brian to Dubai to provide analysis and repair options.

Although he was only asked to spend a week in the gulf, Brian remained with the stricken vessel for 45 days until it was again seaworthy.

Describing the experience years later, he said:

I am still amazed at the authority I was given to execute this project. I was lucky to have such an opportunity at such an early stage in my career.

I want our Nation's graduates to know that careers in public service are full of opportunities like the one given to Brian.

Federal employees at all levels get to work on exciting and relevant projects every day.

After his superb performance in Dubai, Brian was given a series of challenging jobs in the NAVSEA Commander's Development Program. Just 10 years after he first began his career, the Navy Department promoted Brian to be the director for maintenance and modernization under the assistant secretary for research, development, and acquisition. In this role, which he held for 5 years, he was responsible for overseeing policy on ship maintenance and modernization as well as the Navy's nuclear, biological, and chemical protection programs.

Brian returned to NAVSEA in 1996 and has worked in various roles there over the past 12 years. For his dedicated service in government, Brian was honored with a Meritorious Presidential Rank Award in 2004 and won the prestigious Distinguished Presidential Rank Award last year. This year, he was appointed as executive director of NAVSEA, its most senior civilian executive.

In addition to his work as an engineer and a manager, throughout the years Brian has served as a role model for those working with him, including a number of colleagues from traditionally underrepresented minority groups, whom he has mentored as they sought leadership positions in the Department.

This is truly the kind of service and mentorship we need to promote among engineers and other science professionals. Engineers can play an important role in bettering our communities and promoting education among our students.

I am glad we were able to include funding for service opportunities of this kind in the Serve America Act earlier this year. I call again on my colleagues and on all Americans to join me in recognizing the contributions of Brian Persons and all of the engineers, scientists, and technicians who continue to ensure that our ships of state remain seaworthy and on a forward course.

I honor their service and that of all our hard-working Federal employees.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, of all the complex issues the United States will deal with in this Congress, none will be more important than health care reform. Of all the momentous decisions we will make over the next few months, none will be more consequential or long-lasting than the votes we may take regarding the one-sixth of the American economy which comprises our health care system. If we get it right, we could devise a program that makes health care more accessible and affordable, provides health coverage to millions of Americans who are currently without health insurance, relieves Americans from worry about the effect changing jobs will have on their health care, saves lives through an increased focus on prevention and wellness, saves money by curbing the out-of-control growth in government health care programs, keeps patients and families in control of their health care choices, and makes doctors the decisionmakers on treatment options.

We have a great opportunity before us to improve the American health care system, but we run a perilous risk if we do not act wisely and carefully. We can fix our broken health care system by making it more accessible and affordable for Americans, and we can do so without jeopardizing quality, individual choice, and personalized care.

The American people need us to act on this issue, but they do not need or want us to act rashly. We do not need to enact a Washington takeover or a scheme that would inevitably lead to a government takeover of one-sixth of our gross domestic product.

I recently spoke with a resident of a country that is a major U.S. ally. He espoused the benefits of his country's government health care program, explaining in particular detail how the program works there. But then I posed a question: What happens in your country if you get cancer? He smiled and said: If I get cancer, I am going to the United States. He is going to the United States. It was a very telling answer that points up a profound truth: There are many things we need to fix about American health care, but there are a number of things we do right. There are a number of things right about our system, and we don't need to risk losing those things that today give Americans the highest quality health care system in the world.

Nine out of ten middle-aged American women have had a mammogram—

90 percent of American women—compared to less than three-fourths of Canadian women. More than half of American men have had a prostate test compared to less than one in six Canadians. Nearly one-third of Americans have had a colonoscopy compared to less than 5 percent of Canadians. These are statistics we need to be proud of as compared to our Western allies.

In addition to this focus in America on prevention, we also spend less time waiting for care than patients in Canada and the United Kingdom. Canadian and British patients wait about twice as long—sometimes more than a year—to see a specialist. We don't need health care reform that moves us in that direction. Mr. President, 827,429 people today, at this very moment, are waiting for some sort of procedure in Canada, and 1.8 million people in England are waiting for a hospital admission or outpatient treatment. They are having to wait for that in England.

We Americans also have better access to new technologies such as medical imaging than patients in Canada or the United Kingdom. Americans are responsible for the vast majority of all health care innovations. The top five U.S. hospitals—only five top U.S. hospitals—conduct more clinical trials than all the hospitals in any other single developed country. Only the top five outrank any other country in the world in clinical trials. We ought to be proud of that. We ought not to enact any program that would jeopardize that type of innovation.

Since the mid-1970s, the Nobel Prize in medicine or physiology has gone to American residents more often than recipients from all other countries combined. We get results based on our innovation and our research in the United States of America.

All these numbers translate into one very important fact: Americans have a better 5-year survival rate than Europeans for common cancers. For example, in the area of colon cancer, we have a 65-percent, 5-year survival rate in America, compared to only 50 percent in the United Kingdom. For prostate cancer, we have a 93-percent survival rate for 5 years in the United States; only 77 percent in the United Kingdom. In breast cancer, 90 percent of Americans who suffer from breast cancer have a 5-year survival rate; only 82 percent in the United Kingdom. For thyroid cancer that figure is a 94-percent, 5-year survival rate and only 75 percent in the United Kingdom.

Put another way, breast cancer mortality is 52 percent higher in Germany with their government-run system than in the United States, and breast cancer mortality is 88 percent higher in the United Kingdom with their government-run health care system. Prostate cancer mortality is 604 percent higher in the United Kingdom and 457 percent higher in Norway. Is there a genetic predisposition for the people of Norway to die of prostate cancer or of German women to have breast cancer? I don't think so. I think these numbers, these stubborn facts reflect that our American system of innovation and detection and treatment is a good thing, and as we improve and fix our system, we need to be careful to maintain that type of quality.

There are broken parts of our system, to be sure, but my point today is to urge this body to consider the consequences of all the options we will consider. There is no question we need to make health care more affordable and we need to expand access. Republicans support providing affordable access to coverage for every American, and we can do that without a Washington, DC, takeover of health care. What we cannot afford the risk of doing is eroding the quality of care in pursuit of our goals this year. The surest way to destroy quality is to hand the reins of health care over to the Federal Government.

I recently had the opportunity to discuss health care with a member of the British House of Commons. That member of Parliament said: Whatever you do, do not do what we did in the United Kingdom.

A Washington takeover of health care would result in a stifling of innovation. I am convinced it would result in long waits. As we consider a so-called public option, a public plan, we need to ask ourselves: Will it lead, as I believe it will, to a one-size-fits-all Washington takeover of health care and inevitably mean that our citizens will be denied and delayed the health care we need? We need to be careful as we answer that question. I regret to say the plan I see taking shape on the other side of the aisle would result in either a politician or a bureaucrat making your health care decisions instead of you and your doctor. I urge my colleagues to protect innovation and to protect quality.

I am convinced we can protect the doctor-patient relationship and make health care more affordable and accessible for all without jeopardizing the quality I have spoken about this afternoon. I believe all of us in this body want a solution that works for Americans. There is common ground to be found that would continue the opportunity for the United States to be that world leader in quality. Congress and the American people need to pay close attention as we proceed this summer and this fall on one of the most important debates in our time.

Thank you. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

OBSTRUCTIONISM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I wanted to say this to the occupant of the Chair personally, but I will take the opportunity to say it now. The presentation the Senator made on the floor regarding health care was stupendous, terribly impressive. I am going to take much of what the Presiding Officer said today and use it in the information I give people in Nevada and the presentations I am making on the floor. It was very good.

As the health care debate has heated up this week, Republicans have once again rolled out one of their standard, stale talking points: They question the efficiency of our government. When all else fails, all they do is berate the government.

But if Republicans want to have an honest debate about how our government operates, I think one of the first things I would suggest is that they should start looking in the mirror at themselves.

Today, Republicans are wasting more taxpayer time and more dollars for no good reason. The tobacco bill on the floor right now is both responsible and overdue. After making us wait out all the 30 hours of procedural time before even moving to the bill—Mr. President, the 30 hours isn't all of it. To get to that point, you have to file cloture, which takes 2 days, and then we have the 30 hours—a total waste of time. Republicans are now making us wait another 30 hours before we can vote on this bill. So it is 30 hours just to move to it, and then 30 hours once we are on it.

Let me reiterate how important the bill we are wasting time on not doing is to the American people. Every day, 3,500 Americans try a cigarette for the first time, and the vast majority of them are children. Nationwide, 3½ million high schoolers smoke; 3½ million boys and girls in high school smoke. That is more kids than participate in athletics in our schools who are smoking. Tobacco companies make money hand over fist by marketing and selling their poisonous products to our kids.

The bill before the Senate takes smart steps to keep our children and families healthier and keep the tobacco companies honest. It will make it harder for those companies to sell tobacco to children; help those who smoke overcome their addictions; it will make tobacco products less toxic for those who cannot or do not want to stop.

We have tried in good faith since last week to reach agreement with Republicans on amendments to this bill. Our floor staff has given the Republican floor staff a finite list of both Democratic and Republican amendments that we wanted to vote on as we consider the bill. With rare exception, the amendments were germane. If not germane, they were arguably germane.

But no. These amendments included three from Senator HAGAN, and one each from Senators COBURN, ENZI, BUNNING, and LIEBERMAN.

Unfortunately, despite repeated efforts to move forward, our Republican colleagues have said no every time.

Republicans are also slowing down our government in another way. In the few short months since President Obama took office, Republicans held up many of his nominees for crucial positions. There are 25 being held up right now, as we speak. Let me give you a few of them. We have had to have cloture votes this year on the Secretary of Labor; the Deputy Attorney General, the No. 2 person for a massive Justice Department; the Deputy Secretary of the Department of the Interior, which is like the Chief of Staff for the Department of the Interior; two members of the Council of Economic Advisers; and, incredibly, America's Ambassador to Iraq, Chris Hill. They held him up for a long time. Every time I spoke to Secretary Gates, he wanted to know where his Ambassador was, somebody to run that country—at least American interests in that country.

Today, they are holding up 25 or more qualified and noncontroversial nominees, including Rand Beers, nominated to be Under Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, a pretty important position; Cass Sunstein, nominated to head the Office of Management and Budget's Information and Regulatory Affairs division. You could go to any law school in America today and ask them to name the top 10 academics in law schools, and Cass Sunstein's name will be one of the 10 on everybody's list. But he is not good enough for the Republicans to get him cleared; Hilary Chandler Tompkins, nominated to be the Solicitor for the Department of the Interior. That is the lawyer there. They have 70,000 employees. Secretary Salazar thinks it is a good idea that he has a lawyer there. They are not going to allow that; William Sessions, nominated to be Chair of the U.S. Sentencing Commission. Listen to this one. We have been told the reason he is not going to be approved is because he is from Vermont, and Senator LEAHY is chairman of the Judiciary Committee. They want to embarrass a friend, the chairman of that committee, Chairman PAT LEAHY; Harold Koh, nominated to be the State Department's legal advisor. Just like the Interior Department, the State Department, Secretary Clinton wants a lawyer there, in that huge, most important office. But no. Robert Grove, nominated to be Director of the Census—no.

I have only mentioned five. There are 20 others. The Republicans recklessly refuse to confirm our new Ambassador to Iraq. Listen to what they are doing now. They are holding up LTG Stanley McChrystal, an eminently qualified soldier, whom President Obama and Secretary Gates chose to be our new commander in Afghanistan. I met him in my office the other day. This is a man with the military in his blood. His father was a great general. His father won five Silver Stars fighting for our country around the world. Stanley McChrystal is an expert in counterinsurgency, which we need so badly in Afghanistan. But, no, we are not going to get him approved—at least for now.

Republicans are so opposed to everything, they even oppose putting people in some of the most important positions in our government. We believe—the majority, Democrats—that those who have been chosen to serve our country must be able to get to work without delay.

Republicans across the country agree with that, also. But we have 40 Members of this body—Republicans—who don't represent Republicans across this country. Republicans, if given a chance, wouldn't they approve LTG McChrystal? Of course they would. And the other people I mentioned. We believe those who have been chosen to serve our country must be able to get to work without delay. President Obama was elected. Shouldn't he have the people he wants to work with him? Perhaps those listening think this is how the Senate always operates. The occupant of the chair is a new Senator. This isn't how it used to operate.

Let me put these delays into context. In the first 4 months of the Bush administration—the second Bush administration—I am sure it was the same in the first Bush administration—when the Senate was controlled by the President's party, and we were in the minority, there wasn't a single filibuster of a Bush nominee—not one. But in the first 4 months of the Obama administration, Republicans have filibustered eight of his nominees. Those are the ones we had to file cloture on. I have indicated that there are many others. With the constraints we have in the rules of the Senate, I cannot file cloture on every one of these. Those filibusters in the first 4 months of Senator Obama's administration are twice as many as President Bush faced in his first 4 months.

I hope people who are listening or watching understand this: We are not berating Republicans in Oregon or in Nevada or across the country. What I am saying is the Republicans here in the Senate—40 of them—are not being fair to our President and our country.

Last year, after Republicans held up the work of the Congress more than any other time in history—remember, we had 100 filibusters last year—the American people rejected the Republican status quo. They said no to Republicans' just-say-no strategy. I would hope they would learn that the American people don't like this—Independents, Democrats, and Republicans don't like it. We want to work together.

Take health care. They have seats at the negotiating table. We want to work with them. Energy, the same thing. There is no question the American people are taking notice, and they are fed up with petty partisan games. There is no question that these reckless tactics have consequences.

Republicans delay and delay and delay to their own peril. The truth is that all Americans suffer. It is time that the Republicans let us get to work and allow President Obama to have his nominees, and let's get this bill off the floor. Every day we wait, 3,500 more people are subject to being addicted to tobacco.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. BURRIS. Mr. President, for far too long, this Nation's broken health care system has limped along badly and in need of serious reform. Many in Washington have lacked either the foresight or the political will to take on this issue. For those who have tried, it has been almost impossible to get anywhere. Even today, the President's health care proposal is under attack from both the right and the left. I think we need to do better. Controversy should not drown out conversation.

The time has come to cast aside the constraints of partisanship, stop bickering, and start talking about real change. The American people have had enough. It is time to get to work.

The facts are plain: tens of millions of Americans are uninsured and underinsured. Many of these are children. Even employer-sponsored coverage is in jeopardy. Businesses are being drained by skyrocketing costs, and many have cut benefits. High premiums, rising copayments, and expensive prescription drugs are driving American families to the brink.

Can we stand by and watch as unreasonable health care costs cripple families who are already struggling? No, we cannot.

Can we allow this crisis to deepen, leaving more and more hard-working Americans behind? No, we cannot.

It is the solemn duty of this Congress to follow President Obama's lead and enact swift, responsible reform. We can cut costs and improve coverage. We can make the system smarter and less wasteful. We can empower individuals and families to make important decisions, not giant corporations or government bureaucracies. We can and we must make quality, affordable health care available to every single American.

While I support the role insurance companies play in our health care system, I strongly believe a public option should also be available. This would restore accountability to the system and increase competition, driving prices down and making good coverage, private or public, more affordable for everyone.

American businesses and families have waited far too long for meaningful health care reform. The time to act is now.

Some of my colleagues have been working to fix our broken system for many years. Senator KENNEDY has been a leader on this issue throughout his career. This is the moment he and many others have been working toward. We must seize this opportunity to reform health care in America. I urge my colleagues to work with President Obama, as well as Senator KENNEDY, to make sure everyone has access to quality, affordable coverage.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURRIS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOTOMAYOR NOMINATION

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I wish to assure our Members, the American people, and Judge Sotomayor that our committee is going to do its best to have a hearing on her confirmation that would be worthy of the serious responsibility we have and that the American people will feel is fair. I hope they will say it is the best hearing we have ever had.

I have to tell you, though, things are moving faster than I would like to have seen them move, and it does cause some difficulties for us. As I discussed on the floor yesterday, the Republican members of the Judiciary Committee are deeply concerned about this process being moved this rapidly. Yesterday, Chairman LEAHY unilaterally announced that the hearings would begin on July 13, some 48 days from the announcement of this nomination. I won't go into a lot of detail, but I would note that in the recent three Supreme Court nominees, Justice Breyer's hearing was 60 days after the announcement, Justice Roberts—the one that has been most cited and was the shortest—was 55, and Justice Alito's was 70. And I would note that Justice Roberts had 370 cases, whereas Judge Sotomayor has 3,500-plus cases to review. So I think, to quote Senator SCHUMER and Senator LEAHY in remarks they made previously, it is better to do it right than to do it too fast.

I would note that late last week, the White House sent her answers to the questionnaire we send to all the nominees, requiring a good deal of information, and that is done on a bipartisan basis. Those answers were sent forward with great fanfare. In a press release from the White House Counsel's Office, the Obama administration proclaimed that they set a record by completing the process in just 9 days. But this is a confirmation process, not a confirmation race. I think the White House should focus more on having thorough and complete answers to the questionnaire, not on entering the "Guinness Book of World Records" for the fastest response from a Supreme Court nominee.

We know now that Judge Sotomayor omitted or failed to include key information and has provided incomplete and sometimes contradictory responses to the questionnaire. The responses are not satisfactory. So today all seven Republican members of the Judiciary Committee, who have been through this—most of them—for some time and seen these issues develop before, have written to ask that the nominee fulfill her duty to provide clear and complete answers to our questions in order to obtain quite a bit of information that is now not available and should have been included.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have that letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, June 10, 2009.

Hon. SONIA SOTOMAYOR,
Office of the Counsel to the President,
The White House.

DEAR JUDGE SOTOMAYOR: Thank you for providing your questionnaire, assembled materials, and June 6, 2009 questionnaire supplement to the Judiciary Committee. Committee staff are reviewing your questionnaire responses and attachments and have noted a number of apparent omissions. In addition, we believe that some of your responses are incomplete. In view of these concerns, we would respectfully ask that you revisit the questionnaire and provide another supplement as soon as possible. If you believe that your questionnaire is fully responsive, we would appreciate an explanation to that effect.

To assist you in completing your questionnaire, below are some of the potential omissions detected to date:

(1) Question 6 asks for your employment record. Although you indicate that you were a member of the board of directors of the State of New York Mortgage Agency, it appears that you also served on the Administration and Personnel Committee (or the Program Committee) and as a member of the board of Community Planning Board #6. In addition, you indicate that you served as a member and vice president of the board of directors of the Puerto Rican Legal Defense & Education Fund; however, in response to Question 25, you indicate that you served as First Vice President. Please clarify your response and supplement as necessary.

(2) Question 12(a) requires lists and copies of materials written or edited. You have been widely described as an editor of the Yale Law Journal and as Managing Editor of the Yale Studies in World Public Order. However, you have not provided any copies of materials from either publication. Please provide the Committee with copies of any materials you edited during your tenure as an editor of both law reviews.

(3) Question 12(b) requires copies and or/descriptions of certain reports, memoranda, or policy statements prepared by specified organizations. You have stated that "As a member of various court committees, I have prepared and contributed to numerous reports and memoranda on court issues, which relate to internal court deliberations and are not available for public dissemination." However, the question is not limited to publicly available reports. Please provide such reports and memoranda.

(4) Also with respect to Question 12(b), you initially omitted a report concerning the death penalty that you drafted during your time on the Board of the Puerto Rican Legal Defense & Education Fund. We would appreciate confirmation that a thorough review of those records has been completed, given the initial omission, and that you have provided all relevant documents to the Committee in response to this question.

(5) Question 13(g) requires a brief summary of and citations for all opinions where decisions were reversed by a reviewing court or where the judgment was affirmed with significant criticism. For opinions not officially reported, copies are requested. Although you indicate with respect to Bernard v. Las Americas Communications, Inc., that there was no formal opinion, you make no such representation with respect to the United States v. Gottesman opinion or the United States v. Bauers opinion—yet it does not appear that copies of these opinions have been provided. Please clarify your response.

(6) Question 16(d) asks about trial experience and requires "opinions and filings" for cases going to verdict, judgment, or final decision. For three cases you have indicated that "The Manhattan District Attorney's Office is searching its records for information on this case." Please provide us with this information as a supplement to the questionnaire.

(7) Also with respect to Question 16(d), you state: "I tried an additional 14 cases during my time as an assistant district attorney, from 1979 to 1984. The Manhattan District Attorney's Office is searching its records for further information on these cases." Please provide us with this information as a supplement to the questionnaire.

(8) Question 16(e) asks about appellate practice. Nominees are asked to provide copies of briefs and (if applicable) oral argument transcripts. You state: "I have requested the briefs and any available transcripts from these cases from the Clerk of the Court of the Second Circuit on May 30th and will forward to the Committee as soon as I receive them." Please provide us with this information as a supplement to the questionnaire.

We are also concerned that some of your responses fail to provide the Committee with the information to which it is entitled in reviewing your nomination.

(1) In response to Question 11(b), you state that you are a member of an organization, the Belizean Grove, that discriminates on the basis of sex. However, you indicate that you “do not consider the Belizean Grove to invidiously discriminate on the basis of sex in violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct.” Please explain the basis for your belief that membership in an organization that discriminates on the basis of sex nonetheless conforms to the Code of Judicial Conduct.

(2) Question 12(d) requires a list of speeches, remarks, lectures, etc., given by the nominee or, in the absence of prepared texts/outline/notes, then a summary of the subject matter (not a topic or a description). We believe that numerous entries in your list do not provide a “summary” of your remarks; instead, they set forth general topics. For example:

“I spoke on Second Circuit employment discrimination cases”;

“I spoke at a federal court externship class on Access to Justice”;

“I spoke on the United States Judicial System”;

“I participated in a symposium on post-conviction relief. I spoke on the execution of judgments of conviction”;

“I spoke on the implementation of the Hague Convention in the United States and abroad”;

“I participated in an ACS Panel discussion on the sentencing guidelines”;

“I participated in a roundtable discussion and reception on ‘The Art of Judging’”;

“I contributed to the panel, ‘The Future of Judicial Review: The View from the Bench’ at the 2004 National Convention. The Official theme was ‘Liberty and Equality in the 21st Century.’”

This list is not exhaustive.

In addition, we are concerned about the fact that you have failed to provide a draft, video, or transcript for more than half of your speeches, remarks, lectures, etc. According to your questionnaire, you have identified 191 occasions responsive to the questionnaire. For 98, you stated that you could not locate any record, for one you stated that you gave a standard speech, for two you cross-referenced a different speech, for 81 you provided a draft or video, and for eight you provided news clippings instead of a draft, transcript or remarks. We are particularly troubled because there may well be transcripts available for certain remarks: for example, a transcript of the 2004 panel entitled “The Future of Judicial Review: The View from the Bench” was available online.

Please advise us of the process you undertook to search for these speeches, and for those that you are unable to provide to the Committee, please provide a more thorough explanation of the content of each speech.

Although you have provided a great deal of information to the Committee, and we appreciate your efforts, it is important that your information be complete to permit the Committee to properly evaluate your record in the short time that has been provided.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. We look forward to your receiving your supplemental answers as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

JEFF SESSION.
CHUCK GRASSLEY.
JOHN CORNYN.
JON KYL.
TOM COBURN.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, the judge has provided our committee with a good deal of information. We also appreciate that the judge has already once recognized that her quick questionnaire was incomplete. The issue was raised, and she provided the committee with additional information on June 6 which really should have been in the first response. However, we are still concerned with several aspects.

As I have already said, the minority leader reiterated this morning that members of the Judiciary Committee and the full Senate need a complete and thorough record in order to make informed judgments on this nomination.

This is a lifetime appointment. It is our one chance in Congress to get it right. A Justice on the Supreme Court, if not faithful, has the power to actually alter the Constitution in addition to faithfully follow it, and sometimes I think that is what they have done.

We need to know what kind of judges we are going to get. Does this judge understand that he or she will be under the law, subordinate to the law, one who must faithfully follow the law or do they believe they are above the law and have the freedom and the ability to interpret it in new and novel ways which might seem to further some agenda he or she might have, if they are on the bench? I think the American people are concerned about that. I think they are right to be concerned about that. Decisions have been rendered, in my opinion, that are not faithful to the Constitution, not required by the Constitution.

Those are things we need to talk about and do it in a fair way and do it at a high level. There is no need to be personal about it.

The oversights and errors in this questionnaire are the product of trying to rush through a nominee with one of the most lengthy records in recent history, maybe ever, to the Supreme Court, in one of the shortest timeframes in history.

I think we should try to get it right. I believe a fair and thorough process, in the best spirit of this Chamber and in the best interest of this Nation, is what we should look forward to. I want to see we get the complete record and get back on the right track. I believe we can do that and it is important we work at it.

I promise, as I said, to do what I can, and I believe we will have a very fair and objective hearing. But it is also important that we are fair to the American people. They are depending on us to carefully scrutinize anyone who comes up for confirmation. We cannot do that without a complete questionnaire.

There are a number of things I raised the other day, yesterday, about the shortfall. I will briefly make a point or two. The letter sets forth in some detail quite a number of areas we set forth. It is eight different items and some other comments that we believe are inaccurate and we call for additional information. There are some significant matters there.

When the judge supplemented her initial questionnaire on June 6 by providing us with a report concerning the death penalty article she drafted during her time on the board of the Puerto Rican Legal Defense Education Fund, she had initially omitted that from the report. We would appreciate confirmation that a thorough review of those records has been completed, given the initial omission, and that she has provided all the relevant documents to the committee in response to this question.

There are other questions of writings, reports, and speeches. Question 12(a) requires the nominee to provide copies of materials written or edited. Judge Sotomayor has been widely described as one of the editors of the Yale Law Journal and, as managing editor, Yale Studies in World Public Order. However, we have not received any copies of either publication that she has edited. We need to see copies of those materials.

The questionnaire also requires copies of reports, memorandums, and policy statements prepared by specified organizations. The judge responded:

[a]s a member of various court committees [she has] prepared and contributed to numerous reports and memoranda on court issues, which relate to internal court deliberations and are not available for public dissemination.

I don't think those are the kind of documents that are secret. I think they can be obtained, and I believe the questionnaire calls for all of those.

Paragraph 12(d) talks about a list of speeches and lectures providing the text of those speeches or, if that is not available, outlines or notes and, if not that, a summary of the subject matter involved in the speeches. About a third of those speeches have not been prepared and the summaries are inadequate. I will give an example. This was a response to one of them:

I spoke on Second Circuit employment discrimination cases.

There is no summary of what it was about, no outline or other information on that speech.

Another one:

I spoke at a federal court externship class on Access to Justice.

Another one:

I spoke on the United States Judicial System.

Another one:

I participated in a symposium on post-conviction relief. I spoke on the execution of judgments of conviction.

Another one:

I spoke on the implementation of the Hague Convention in the United States and abroad.

It goes on. There are several others. But those are inadequate responses, probably as a result of rushing the questionnaire through. I hope the nominee will go back and see, first of all, if she can find the written speech she gave and provide us a copy of it. That would be helpful as we review these matters because there have been some questions about speeches that the nominee has made.

I will not take any more time. I will let the letter speak for itself. I tried to call the judge earlier this afternoon, but she will not be available until sometime later, to tell her this is coming forward. I believe her staff may have already been notified of it, the White House Counsel's office.

These are not little bitty matters. They are important matters. If we are going to move forward in a record-breaking timeframe, the least we can expect is complete and full answers to these questions. It is appropriate that we insist this questionnaire be properly and completely answered. I hope and believe it will be. Certainly that is what our request is.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for about 12 or 13 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about health care reform. What else in regard to the interests of the American people and what we are doing here?

As the Republican leader, Senator MCCONNELL, has pointed out in several floor speeches over the past week or so, the desire for health care reform on both sides of the aisle is one that unites this Chamber across both political and geographic boundaries.

Our system of health care produces some of the best care in the world and it is the driver of a substantial share of the medical innovations that have wiped out diseases, improved our comfort, and extended our time on this Earth.

However, this system is not truly accessible to everybody, and that is the problem. That is what this entire debate boils down to: your ability to have access to a doctor, to go see the doctor of your choice when you need to see that doctor.

Solving this problem of access is exceedingly complicated, partly because it evidences itself in so many diverse ways all across the country, so many geographical areas. For example, in our rural areas in Kansas, we are struggling with attracting and retaining doctors and keeping the doors open to our hospitals, to our pharmacies, and clinics. We talk about recruiting athletes. My goodness, the business of recruiting doctors and health care professionals is equally as competitive.

In our urban areas such as Kansas City and Wichita, our providers face very different challenges which are just as daunting and which threaten a patient's ability to access health care.

On top of that, although some 250 million Americans have health insurance, somewhere in the neighborhood of 27 to 47 million, depending on who you are counting and who is talking, do not. That makes accessing health care expensive and very challenging for them.

In addition, the government-run Medicare Program, which is on the verge of bankruptcy, by the way, does not pay doctors and pharmacists and ambulance drivers and nurse clinicians—pardon me, clinical lab folks and home health care providers and almost every health care provider that you can name—they do not pay them enough to cover their cost. Unless these providers have a non-Medicare population to recoup their losses, they cannot stay in business and their patients lose out—a de facto rationing of health care.

As a member of both the Finance and HELP Committees, and the cochair of the Senate Rural Health Care Caucus, I am able to participate and have been participating, along with staff, in this complex and very difficult effort. We must reform our health care system into one that guarantees meaningful access for all Americans, and guarantees that patient-doctor relationship. However, this effort to date has been a tale of rhetoric versus that of reality, the promise of cooperation contrasted with the unfortunate but real fact of partisanship, something I do not like to say.

Let me explain. President Obama, who ran as a "postpartisan" candidate, has made many overtures to Republicans indicating a desire for this process to be bipartisan. He just met with some members of our leadership and obviously the leadership on the other side of the aisle as of today.

Others in the Senate have declared their goal to be a bill that attracts upward of 70 votes. Is that possible? I would hope so. It could be. That would be a tremendous victory for the Senate of the United States and the American people.

But the reality is something very different. Today in the HELP Committee, the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, we have just begun the process of walking through a 615-page bill that we are scheduled to mark up next Tuesday.

This bill does not have one single Republican contribution, as far as I can tell. Moreover, it is incomplete, with many details missing. For example, the small detail of how much it will cost.

There is no cost estimate to this bill of 615 pages, just going through it as of today, going to try to mark it up next Tuesday.

Come on. That is not the way we should be doing business. The Finance Committee has conducted a parallel and I think, quite frankly, a better process so far, and I wish to thank Chairman BAUCUS and Ranking Member GRASSLEY and their staffs for their efforts. But we still have not seen a detailed proposal or cost estimate, and we are being pushed to mark something up in the next few weeks as well.

I want everyone to understand why process is important. Health care reform is important, to be sure. Getting things done obviously is important. But so is process. It is not because I do not want health care reform, nor is any Member in this body in a position to say they do not want health care reform. I want every single Kansan, every single American, to be able to see the doctor of their choice when they want to, especially when they have to.

I speak today because this health care reform bill will likely involve one of the biggest, most important votes that I or any one of my colleagues will cast during the time we are privileged to serve in the Senate of the United States. This health care reform bill will affect the lives of every single American. It will reform a system that drives one-sixth of our economy, over 16 million American jobs. It will have consequences for medical science and innovation that improve the lives of not only those of us in this great country but all across the world. When people are really sick, they come to the United States.

This bill will spend upwards of $2 trillion—$2 trillion—our children and grandchildren will have to some day repay. If we are going to do this, we cannot afford to get it wrong. For this reason, I initiated a letter about a week ago on behalf of all of my Republican colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee and on the HELP Committee. I asked the chairmen of those respective committees, the distinguished chairman, Senator DODD, who is now serving in Senator KENNEDY's absence, to give this process the time and the careful consideration it deserves. That was the message of the letter: Give us the time and the very careful consideration this vital issue deserves.

It seems to me our requests have been extremely reasonable. First, please provide us with your detailed plan with enough time for us to read it, to understand it, and get feedback from our constituents back home, the people the bill will affect.

We have done this in the Finance Committee. Goodness knows, I do not know how many panels we have had, how many walk-throughs, how many slide presentations. Boy, that is tough in the afternoon to turn the lights off as Senators and try to pay attention to fact after fact after fact and suggestion after suggestion after suggestion and policy objective after policy objective on each day as we go through the legislative swamp, to try to get this from here.

Our requests, again, I think—I want to say it again. First, you should provide us with your detailed plan with enough time for us to read it, understand it, get feedback from our constituents back home, the people the bill will affect. The reason I said that twice is that every day we had one of these slide shows, every day we had a PowerPoint, every day we got more information, our office would send it back to the providers of health care in Kansas, much in the same fashion as members of the committee would send it to their people, and say: Hey, is this going to work? These are the people who actually do provide the health care.

I know the arguments that say: Well, now, wait a minute. We need to cut out fraud, waste, and abuse, and we need to be much more cost conscious. We need better practices in regard to better medical practices. We need a lot of things to either suggest or to incentivize or to maintain what the health care providers do.

But in the end result, if that person is sick, they are going to have to see a doctor, and they are going to have to see a nurse or some health care provider. So in the end result, we better at least be doing something that the providers say, yes, this makes common sense or you are going to see either one of two things: You are going to see a political revolt when they say, no, we are not going to go down that road or else you are going to see a continuation of rationing where providers say: No, I am not going to take part anymore in the Medicare Program, because I am not getting reimbursed up to cost.

You can have the best government program in the world, you can have the best government card in the world. But if you cannot find a doctor who provides service or a home health care provider who will provide service, or any provider who will provide that service well, where are you?

Second, I would like to see provided the cost estimates from the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Tax Committee. Let us know how much all of this is going to cost. That is extremely important. We are hearing anything from $1 to $2 trillion.

Then, lastly, how will it be paid for? I know we are into an era now where basically we have the printing presses rolling, and we have an Economic Recovery Act and we have many facets of that, we have the stimulus, the omnibus, we had the President's budget and we had TARP, and we had four different other acronyms under TARP, and we did not worry too much about the pay-fors and who was going to pay for it. We let the printing presses roll, because nobody wanted to see economic Armageddon.

Could we have done it better? I think so. But that is yesterday's decision. So we should identify how this will be paid for or are we not going to pay for it. Are we simply going to go ahead—there has been some discussion about some aspects of it that you would not pay for. There are other aspects that we need to go into, because they involve probable tax increases, and now is not the time to be increasing taxes, especially on the small business community, despite the need for health care reform.

I think asking for these details is absolutely fair. I think it is necessary under the circumstances. In fact, I would be ignoring my responsibilities to my constituents in Kansas if I did not demand these conditions be met.

Every single Republican member of the Finance Committee and HELP Committee signed the letter. Every single one expressed a desire to work with our colleagues to achieve bipartisan health care reform.

That brings me back to today's HELP Committee walk-through of 615 pages of an incomplete draft, the rushed HELP and Finance markup schedule, Tuesday, and then in about a week or two, the arbitrary floor debate deadlines that we hear from leadership. I hope our letter will slow this hurried dash to an imaginary finish line. Slow it down. Slow it down. I know it is extremely important that we pass good health care reform legislation. It is also extremely important to prevent bad legislation from passing and get America saddled with it for about 20 or 25 years. I wish at the end of every committee room, if in fact the bill gets to committee, the committee of jurisdiction, that we can hold appropriate hearings, we would have a sign that says, "Do no harm." And then right below it perhaps we could put "whoa," until everybody can slow down and read it in regard to process, and cost, and specifics of the bill, and trying to work together to get a good product.

There is no reason why the Senate should rush through a bill that has this much at stake. So time out. Time out. Time. Slow down. Give us the details. That is all we are asking for. The people of this great Nation deserve nothing less. Let's get health care reform and let's get it right.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THUNE. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

PAY-GO

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, there is a disturbing pattern emerging in Washington, DC, which I don't think is being lost on the American people. We have seen, since the beginning of this year, with the new administration coming into power, the new Congress taking control of the leadership in both the House and Senate, an enormous amount, an unprecedented amount of spending, borrowing, and taxing. To bear that out—this information has been used before—if you actually look at the numbers, you have to go back a long ways in American history, go back to the foundation of our country, go back to 1789, and you take it up to today, 2009, 220 years of American history, the total amount of debt that has been accumulated over that period of time, literally since the Presidency of George Washington through the Presidency of George Bush will be equaled in the next 5 years.

We will double the amount of Federal debt, public debt in this country in the next 5 years. We will triple it in 10 years. We are borrowing and spending money around here on a spree that literally is without precedent in American history.

It should be of concern to all Americans for the obvious reason. They have a share of that debt. In fact, according to USA Today, if you just take the amount of debt that has been accumulated since the beginning of this year, with the passage of the stimulus bill, with the new appropriations bill that passed, an 8.3-percent increase over the previous year, which was twice the rate of inflation, and all the other spending that is going on with the various bail-out programs and whatnot, the average family's share of the debt this year alone is $55,000. The average family's share of the Federal debt is $55,000 per family in debt accumulated just since the beginning of this calendar year.

The amount of borrowing is without precedent. The amount of spending that is being done is without precedent. All under the guise of this is an emergency, and we have to react this way. But I think as more of this spending and more of this debt accumulates, the American people have become more convinced that the spending isn't solving the problem it was supposed to solve, which was we were going to create jobs, get the economy growing and expanding again. We haven't seen any of those effects.

What we have seen, of course, is more debt, more interest, and a bill that we will hand to future generations that is not fair to them because we should not be penalizing future generations and pushing them because we haven't been able to live within our means.

The most recent response to that by the administration was yesterday. They came out and announced they are going to implement pay-go. So we are going to have pay-go regulations or pay-go policies now in place with respect to the Federal budget and the way we operate in Congress. Incidentally, even when pay-go was in effect, it was not very effective because much of the budget, much of the spending that occurs in Washington is outside the realm or outside the net of pay-go.

In fact, if you look at what pay-go does in terms of its design, it exempts all discretionary spending, would allow all current entitlement programs, such as Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid, to continue to grow on autopilot. It affects only new entitlements or tax cuts that may be created in the future. Pay-go also allows expiring entitlement programs to be extended without offsets but not expiring tax cuts.

So it is clearly biased in favor of higher spending and higher taxes. In fact, if it does not apply to discretionary spending and if, in fact, it does not in a meaningful way apply to entitlement reform—in other words, it simply puts sort of a cap on how much entitlements can grow, but it doesn't get at the fundamental issue that these programs continue to grow unabated—it is simply one thing: a statutory excuse to raise taxes. That is essentially what pay-go is.

The new administration came out with the news bulletin yesterday that this is somehow a bold, new step and that they are going to attack and take on this deficit and this debt we have. Of course, what they didn't tell us is—sort of the expression we use in my part of the country—it is like closing the barn door after the horse is already out of the barn because we have already got all this spending this year that wasn't covered by pay-go. The stimulus bill, which was $800 billion in new borrowing, was outside of pay-go. In fact, over the past several years now that the Democrats have been in power in the Congress, they have consistently violated the pay-go standard, about 15 times, to the tune of about $882 billion in all this new spending that was done outside of pay-go.

So now it is like all of a sudden coming to the conclusion and realization that now we are going to get serious about deficits, now we are going to get serious about spending, now we are going to somehow clamp down on all these new programs that are out there. Somehow, at least rhetorically, subscribing to pay-go as a concept is going to be the solution and the answer to that.

I think we all know better than that. As I mentioned, pay-go has been routinely sort of ignored in the past. Even if it were to apply, as I mentioned earlier, it does not capture much of the spending that goes on here in Washington. It is simply nothing more than a statutory excuse to raise taxes.

Having said that, I mentioned before much of the spending that has already occurred here in Washington. Yet the big-ticket items are still looming out there on the horizon in the future. By that I mean health care reform, which is a big priority of the administration. We are starting to see more details, get a little bit of a glimpse of what that might entail.

We know, for one thing, based upon the statements that have been made by the President and by the Democratic leaders in the Congress, they want it to include a government plan, purely and simply. They want a government plan, which means one thing; that is, that the government takes over health care in this country. Because you cannot maintain a private insurance program, you cannot maintain a private-sector delivery system, a market-based health care system in this country if you are going to have a government plan.

The government plan is where everybody, according to studies that have been done, eventually would end up going. They would gravitate there. More and more small businesses either would be forced to pay fines, if they did not have insurance themselves or offer insurance. The suggestion is—and I think it is a fair one based upon the analysis that has been done by a lot of the independent outside groups—you will see more and more small businesses giving up their health care coverage and having their employees move and transition into the government plan. The government plan will become the repository for all the employees who are currently covered in employer-provided health care plans in this country.

So the government component of this will continue to grow, and eventually you will have a system that very much models or is very similar to what we see in other places around the world. Some people talk about Canada, some people talk about Europe and all these great systems. But the reality is, a lot of the people in those countries come to the United States. The reason they come here is because we have the highest quality care and because they can get access to it.

The one thing that happens when the government runs health care is the government decides what procedures are covered. The government decides what treatments are going to be part of the coverage. The government will decide how soon you can get access to those treatments. What you find in other countries around the world are long lines, long waits, and that is fairly typical of the countries I mentioned.

The thing that makes the American system so unique in all the world is its dependence upon and its foundation upon a market-based system. It has led to incredible innovation. It has led to incredible research and development, new treatments, new therapies, and has provided all kinds of opportunities for people of this country to receive health care, and, frankly, as I mentioned before, for people from other countries who come here to get their health care.

So why we would want to throw out that part of our health care system that is so good and replace it with a government-run system—which, frankly, again, the government is going to get in the middle of the decision between the consumer of health care or the patient and their provider, the physician, and make those decisions. It seems to me that is not a model we want to emulate in the United States.

As I said, we have a system that needs reform. We have flaws in the way our current system works. But the fact is, it is the very best health care system in the world, and I think it would be a big mistake for us to go down a path that shifts and moves more and more people into a government-run, government-controlled system, where the government decides what procedures are going to be covered and how soon you are going to have access to them.

I think it does one thing: It obviously would lead to a rationing of health care. By that I mean, simply again, that the government would have to try the clamp down on costs, limit the access of people to have certain types of therapies, certain types of treatments, and I think you would find less and less choice available in health care in this country. That is what I think a government-run system would give you in the end.

Most of us on this side have laid out a number of proposals, alternatives to a government-run system. Everybody says: Well, come up with a plan of your own. We have a number of them out there. We have a Coburn-Burr plan that has been introduced. Senator GREGG from New Hampshire has a plan that has been introduced. There is a Bennett-Wyden bill, which is a bipartisan bill, that has been introduced out there. But there are a number of alternatives that have been put forward by Republicans.

To date, we have only seen little sort of generalities about the Democrat plan. All we simply know is they are going to insist upon a government-run component to that. Again, it simply is nothing more and nothing less than a government takeover of health care, which is going to lead to all kinds of outcomes that I do not think most people in this country are prepared for and, frankly, if they had the opportunity, would not support.

But they have entrusted us with the responsibility to look for ways to make health care more affordable in this country. There are lots of good suggestions which, as I said before, Republicans are putting forward. But it is going to be very difficult if the bright red line that is put forward by the Democrats in the Senate and in the House of Representatives is a government-run program, a government-run plan or else. I certainly am not going to subscribe to that sort of a solution for America's health care system. Nor do I think it is going to be in the best interests of patients and consumers around this country or providers, for that matter, to do that.

So health care debate is one debate that is out there. The reason I raised that issue is because it ties back into my point earlier that the amount of spending and borrowing and taxing that is going on here is—if you look back at what has already been done, it is enormous, it is enormous by any comparative standard in American history. But the big-ticket items are still out there because the health care plan, as we understand it—again, it has only been conceptual. We have not seen the details emerge from any of the Democrats' ideas. They are starting to roll more of it out. But one thing is clear: It is going to have a huge price tag. We are talking about anywhere from $1 trillion to $1.5 trillion to $2 trillion. Of course, if they are going to adhere to the newly announced pay-go standard, that means this new entitlement program has to be paid for.

So where does that $1.5 trillion or $2 trillion come from? Well, obviously, it is going to come from some revenues raised from some part of our economy. That means a lot of hard-working Americans are going to see their taxes go up to finance this new government takeover of health care, which is going to give them fewer options, and get in the way of the patient-doctor relationship and cost them a lot more in the form of higher taxes.

I think even though much of the spending I have already referred to is in our rearview mirror—all that is left is to pay the bill for that. We still have to pay the bill. We are borrowing, which means somebody is going to pay the bill. We are going to hand off the bill to the next generation of Americans because, obviously, when you borrow $1 trillion, someday it has to be paid back. In the meantime, when you continue to rack up that kind of borrowing and when you continue to do all the other things we are doing in our economy in terms of interventions, whether it is with regard to financial institutions or auto manufacturers—you can kind of go down the list—insurance companies now that the government actually has an ownership interest in that—we are acquiring enormous amounts of exposure and debt for the taxpayers of this country.

The health care plan is going to be another $1.5 trillion or $2 trillion on top of that. When you borrow that amount of money, you do have to pay it back. By the way, I should mention, too, the interest on the amount of debt we are going to rack up in the next 10 years alone is about $5 trillion. Think about that. That is just to pay the finance charge on the debt we have in this country. Think about the enormous burden that places on the American taxpayers and the American economy.

What generally happens in a case such as that is, when you borrow that much money, there is a lot more pressure out there, and the people who are buying that debt are, at some point, going to start demanding a higher interest rate. When interest rates go up, with the higher return on their investment, generally inflation follows with it. So you have all kinds of economic problems that are created by the level of borrowing we have already incurred. And we are going to add a new health care entitlement on top of that. It literally is breathtaking the amount of intervention we are seeing in the private marketplace today.

I talked about some of the spending and some of the borrowing that has been done. But in the taxes that are going to be associated with health care—and I could go down a list. There is a three-page list of the various, what we call pay-fors or ways of raising revenue to help finance health care. But there is also another big tax looming on the horizon, and that is the carbon tax, what we call the national sales tax on energy. If this climate change bill, which is currently moving through the House of Representatives, reaches the Senate, and if it does, in fact, pass the Congress this year, that, too, will entail an incredible amount of taxation, because there is no way in this country you can attach, essentially, a cost to carbon per ton and force companies that emit to buy the credits that would be associated with that without them passing it on. They are going to pass it on. Everybody admits that. The President has admitted that. The leadership on the other side has admitted that. All the utility companies in the country will tell you that.

A carbon tax, a national sales tax on energy, would hit places such as where I am from in the Midwest the hardest because we are, by and large, proportionately more dependent upon coal-fired power than are many other areas in the country. We have a sparse population, which means we have a "higher carbon footprint," which means people in the Midwest, in States such as mine, are going to pay way more for energy under any kind of a climate change bill or what we call a cap-and-trade bill or cap-and-tax bill.

However you want to refer to it, there is no way of getting around the fact that it is going to cost an enormous amount every single year for families in this country, for businesses in this country, for industrial users, for school districts. I have seen the statistics from school districts in my State, from commercial users, from residential users about what those costs are going to be. They are stunning.

So that is another tax that is still out there. Add that to the health care tax that will come with whatever health care bill is passed through here, and the amount of taxation is going to start to rival the amount of spending and borrowing that is going on in Washington.

But it brings me to my final point, and that is what I am concerned about and what I am starting to hear more and more from people in my State of South Dakota—in many cases unsolicited—who come up to me and raise this issue of the amount of government ownership of our private economy. We are seeing, again, unprecedented levels. If there is one bedrock principle in American history, it is the adherence to the ideals of private enterprise.

In recent months, however, the United States has substantially deviated from this historical pattern, and the Federal Government now owns substantial shares of major U.S. corporations. We own—the taxpayers; I mean you and I and all of us here—we are now shareholders in a lot of major U.S. corporations. The taxpayers—the Federal Government—own 79 percent of AIG, 75 percent of General Motors, 10 percent of Chrysler, 36 percent of Citibank, 80 percent of Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae. And it goes on and on and on.

So we have all this spending, borrowing and taxing and now, on top of that, increasing the amount of government ownership of America's private economy. If there is one thing Americans are clear on, it is that the government should not be taking over bigger and bigger shares of the American economy.

There was a survey recently by Rasmussen that said 75 percent of Americans agree the Federal Government should not take over the U.S. banking system. That was a poll done in February. More recently, 60 percent say that the bailout loans given to GM and Chrysler were a bad idea. That was an April 21 poll. A new poll, done on May 31, just recently, shows that 67 percent of Americans are opposed to providing General Motors with $50 billion and giving the government a 70-percent ownership interest in GM. Mr. President, 56 percent of voters said it would be better to let GM go out of business. None of us want to see that. But I think none of us, at least most Americans do not want to see the government owning more and more of American companies. The Federal Government is inevitably going to use that ownership stake to push its own agenda.

In a moment of extreme candor, former Labor Secretary Robert Reich declared that if the government is an active shareholder, they should “push management to take actions that are not necessarily geared toward higher shareholder return.”

Think about that statement. The government owns more and more of American businesses. They should “push management to take actions that are not necessarily geared toward higher shareholder return.” In other words, the government should use its newly acquired power in formerly private companies to further its own agenda.

Both the political process and the free markets are going to be distorted if that happens. In fact, in the New Republic, Noam Scheiber recently wrote that “government ownership invariably politicizes management decisions which could be a fiasco.” The article notes that a coalition of unions is lobbying against providing bailout dollars to Principal Financial Group because of its opposition to “card check.” You find more and more of these pressures on now because the government has a bigger and bigger stake in the government dictating day-to-day management decisions in American business. That is not a path I would argue we want to go down.

The Economist commented on the government-forced Chrysler bankruptcy:

In its haste it has vilified creditors and ridden roughshod over their legitimate claims over the carmaker’s assets. At a time when many businesses must raise new borrowing to survive, that is a big mistake. . . . The Treasury has also put a gun to the heads of GM’s lenders.

In a recent Bloomberg article, Bradley Keoun warns of some of the problems that Citigroup—and other banks incur in accepting bailout money—may encounter as a result of the partial government ownership. Among them he cites government pressure for stricter compensation rules, directives to focus on “State-approved social objectives,” instead of increasing earnings, scrutiny of advising or being forced to “exit risk-taking businesses that are profitable competitors.”

I think there is plenty of thought out there from people who understand the economy and the importance of the private market, its tradition, its contribution to the success of the American economy, and the prosperity we enjoy today, as well as lots of anecdotal and other evidence that when the government gets into these particular situations where it is trying to influence the day-to-day decisions of private business in this country, those who are trying to manage our private businesses in this country, leads to all kinds of fiascos and disaster.

I would mention one other point and that is, according to Bloomberg, after demands from lawmakers, Citigroup consented to support cramdown legislation, even though this policy was opposed by others in the banking industry.

It is pretty clear these types of interventions into the private marketplace, into the free market economy in this country, lead us down a path that is not good for the American taxpayer, not good for the American economy, and that it stifles innovation and entrepreneurship. In fact, I would argue it kills the entrepreneurial spirit in this country to have government taking bigger and bigger ownership interests, bigger and bigger ownership stakes in the American economy, and further dictating the decisions, the day-to-day decisions which American businesses make that are designed to grow their companies, to get a better return for their shareholders, to become more profitable, to make America more prosperous, to raise our standard of living, and to deliver more benefits to their employees—all these things that have driven this economy and made it the envy of the world. I don’t think we want to go down a path or stay down a path that gets us deeper and deeper into ownership of the private economy.

I am going to be introducing and filing a piece of legislation tomorrow which addresses this issue and which provides an exit strategy for the Federal Government and for the taxpayers to begin to get out of all these ownership interests they have in the American economy, and I will have the opportunity on the floor to talk more about that at a later time. But this afternoon, I wished to touch on these issues as we begin the debate which has sort of captured this city and the Congress and the administration and I think very soon will engage the American public over health care reform and the trillions of dollars of new taxes and revenues that are going to be necessary to finance the proposal the new administration has for health care reform and how that takes us even further down the path of government intervention and a level of nationalization of our private economy—in this case health care—and that pattern that just seems to be continuing and which I think more and more Americans are reacting to and more and more Americans, I believe, are going to become engaged in.

Members of Congress on both sides are going to be hearing from their constituents about what they perceive to be a real threat to the long-term viability, the long-term prosperity, and the long-term protection of the taxpayers’ interests.

I hope they will become more engaged. I certainly hope we will be able to defeat proposals that come before the Senate that call for greater governmental ownership, greater governmental intervention, greater expansion of governmental powers in Washington that will limit the choices of Americans, limit their access to health care opportunities, health care therapies, health care treatments that all too often are lost, I believe, in a system where the government rations care.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MCCHRYSAL NOMINATION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in my office a few minutes ago, I received a call from Admiral Mullen, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. I wrote down what he asked and what he said. He said: Senator, there is a sense of urgency that General McChrystal be able to go to Afghanistan tonight.

There is no commander in Afghanistan.

Admiral Mullen said—and I wrote it down: Admiral McChrystal is literally waiting by an airplane. It is 2 o’clock in the morning Thursday in Afghanistan. Dawn will soon be breaking and our troops will not have a commander there.

Is this what the minority wants? Why can’t they come and approve this man to go defend us in Afghanistan? I am without words to try to explain my consternation at the fact that General McChrystal, one of our most eminent, prominent, outstanding, qualified soldiers, a man whose father won five Silver Stars, a man whose record is one of being the leading person in our military to do counterinsurgency—that is what he is an expert in doing.

Let’s get the man approved tonight so he can leave in an airplane and get over there and take care of his men and women.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GUANTANAMO

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, it wasn’t that long ago that the Senate voted almost unanimously to oppose bringing any terrorists at Guantanamo to the United States. But earlier this week, the administration ignored the will of the American people as expressed through that Senate vote by transferring a Guantanamo detainee named Ahmed Ghailani to New York. The purpose of the transfer is to try Ghailani in a U.S. civilian court for his role in the African embassy bombings of 1998. The administration's decision raises a number of serious questions.

First, Ghailani has already admitted that he attended a terrorist training camp in Afghanistan and assisted those who planned and carried out the embassy attack, but says he did so unintentionally. In a U.S. civilian court, if you're found not guilty, you're allowed to go free. So if we are going to treat this terrorist detainee as a common civilian criminal, what will happen to Ghailani if he's found not guilty? And what will happen to other detainees the administration wants to try in civilian courts if they are found not guilty? Will they be released? If so, where? In New York? In American communities? Or will they be released overseas, where they could return to terror and target American soldiers or innocent civilians?

Second, if Ghailani isn't allowed to go free, will he be detained by the government? If so, where will he be detained? Would the administration detain him on U.S. soil, despite the objections of Congress and the American people?

Third, why does the administration think a civilian court is the appropriate place to try Ghailani? Congress enacted the military commissions process on a bipartisan basis as a way to bring terrorists to justice without disclosing information that could harm national security. Some have complained that the previous administration moved too slowly on military commissions, but a lot of that delay was due to the constant legal challenges that were leveled against the process, including by some in the current administration. In fact, Ghailani's case was already being handled by the military commissions process—to the point that a judge had established a trial schedule for him. I ask unanimous consent that the trial schedule be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA V AHMED KHALFAN GHAILANI (A/K/A "FUPI", "HAYTHAM", "ABUBAKAR KHAFLAN AHMED", "SHARIF OMAR")

BRUCE W. MACKENZIE,
CAPT, JAGC, USN Military Judge

Mr. McCONNELL. This schedule would be well underway if the administration had not suspended all military commission proceedings several months ago. Now we will have to start the process for Ghailani over again in civilian court.

The administration made the right decision by reconsidering its position on military commissions and deciding to resume their use. So why did the administration decide to stop the military commission proceedings against Ghailani that were being conducted in the modern, safe, and secure courtroom at Guantanamo and move him to the U.S. to try him in civilian court? Is it because the Administration doesn't think that by deliberately targeting innocent American civilians Ghailani violated the law of war? Does it think he should be treated as just another domestic civilian defendant?

Fourth, how will the administration ensure that trying Ghailani in a U.S. court doesn't damage our national security? As we've seen in the past, trying terrorists in the U.S. has made it harder for our national security professionals to protect the American people.

During a previous trial of suspects in the African embassy bombings, evidence showed that the National Security Agency had intercepted cell phone conversations between terrorists. According to press reports, this revelation caused terrorists to stop using cell phones to discuss sensitive operational details.

And during the trial of Ramzi Yousef, the mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Center attack, testimony given in a public courtroom tipped off terrorists that the U.S. was monitoring their communications. As a result, these terrorists shut down that communications link and any further intelligence we might have obtained was lost.

On the question of Guantanamo, it became increasingly clear over time that the administration announced its plan to close the facility before it actually had a plan. If the administration has a plan for holding Ghailani if he is found not guilty, then it needs to share that plan with the Congress. These kinds of questions are not insignificant. They involve the safety of the American people. And that is precisely why Congress demanded a plan before the administration started to move terrorists from Guantanamo. The American people don't want these terrorists in their communities or back on the battlefield. But that is exactly where Ghailani could end up if he is found not guilty in a civilian court. Before it transfers any more detainees from Guantanamo, the administration needs to present a plan that ensures its actions won't jeopardize the safety of the American people.

Finally, earlier today, the Senate majority whip came to the floor and claimed there is evidence that al-Qaida may be recruiting terrorists within Guantanamo. I am glad to see that the majority whip appears to be acknowledging the FBI Director's concerns that Guantanamo terrorists could radicalize the prison population if they were transferred into the United States. The fact that these terrorists might be able to recruit new members and conduct terrorist activities from behind bars is an important one. I also find it preposterous that the majority whip would assert that because I and others—including, by the way, members of his own conference—want to keep dangerous terrorist detainees away from American communities, we will enable terrorists to escape justice. Keeping these terrorists locked up at Guantanamo, and trying them using the military commissions process, is the best way to deliver justice while protecting the American people.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I have yielded the floor. The Senator can feel free to make a statement.

Mr. DURBIN. I was hoping to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I understand the majority leader was asking about clearing some military promotions earlier today. I wanted to indicate—and I see the assistant majority leader is here—we are clear with those and never had an issue with these particular promotions. Therefore, I suggest that we call them up and confirm them immediately.

Unless there is an objection from the other side, and having notified the other side, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following military promotions: Calendar Nos. 192, 193, and 194. I further ask unanimous consent that these nominations be confirmed en bloc, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate then resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed are as follows:

IN THE AIR FORCE

The following named officer for appointment in the United States Air Force to the grade indicated while assigned to a position of importance and responsibility under title 10, U.S.C., section 601:

To be general

Lt. Gen. Douglas M. Fraser

IN THE ARMY

The following named officer for appointment in the United States Army to the grade indicated while assigned to a position of importance and responsibility under title 10, U.S.C., section 601:

To be general

Lt. Gen. Stanley A. McChrystal

IN THE NAVY

The following named officer for appointment in the United States Navy to the grade indicated while assigned to a position of importance and responsibility under title 10, U.S.C., section 601:

To be admiral

Adm. James G. Stavridis

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now return to legislative session.

The Senator from Illinois.

GUANTANAMO

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I want to make my comments about the minority leader's statement on the floor while he is still here. If he is willing to stay, we can engage in a dialog on this issue. I think it is time we do come to the floor together, along with the Republican whip, and at least make it clear what our positions are on some of these issues related to Guantanamo because it has been a matter of concern and a lot of comment on the floor of the Senate over the last several weeks.

I was going to ask the Senator from Kentucky, the minority leader, whether I understood him correctly when he said he believed that this individual,

Ahmed Ghailani, if found not guilty in a court in the United States, would be released in the United States to stay here in a legal status. I wish to ask the Senator, if that is what he said, what is the basis for that statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I can only repeat what the President's spokesman himself said. I am responding to the question propounded to me by the Senator from Illinois. It is my understanding the President's spokesman yesterday refused to say what would happen to Ghailani if he were found not guilty. So there is some confusion about that.

Mr. DURBIN. There is no confusion. This is such a leap to argue that if this man, who is not a resident of the United States—if I am not mistaken, he is Tanzanian—that somehow if he is found not guilty in the courts of the United States, he is qualified to be released into our population. That is a statement—I don't know anyone could draw that conclusion. He would have no legal status to stay in the United States unless we gave him one.

By what basis does the Senator from Kentucky suggest that this man, who may have been involved in the killing of 12 Americans among 224 other people, is going to be released by President Obama into our communities and neighborhoods?

Mr. MCCONNELL. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. DURBIN. I am.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Let me say I am only quoting the President's spokesman. He says he doesn't know what would happen if Ghailani is released.

Let me say to the Senator from Illinois, let's assume that he is sent back to the country from which he came. I ask, in what way is America safer if this terrorist subsequently, under this hypothetical release in the United States, goes back to his native country from which he potentially could launch another attack on the United States?

Mr. DURBIN. I say in response, my colleague from Kentucky is gifted at the political craft. He has decided not to answer my question but to ask a question of me.

I say first that his assertion that this man, Ahmed Ghailani, if found not guilty would be released in the communities and neighborhoods of America cannot be sustained in law or in fact. He made that statement on the floor. That is the kind of statement that has been made about these Guantanamo detainees.

I don't know what will happen to Mr. Ghailani if he is found not guilty. It is conceivable that he could be charged with other things. It is conceivable he could face a military tribunal. It is conceivable he may be subject to detention.

I will say this with certainty. President Obama will not allow dangerous terrorists to be released in the United States in our communities and neighborhoods. I hope everyone on both sides of the aisle would agree with that.

I also wish to ask, if the Senator from Kentucky is critical of President Obama for announcing that he was going to close Guantanamo before he had a plan, why didn't we hear the same complaint when President George W. Bush announced he was going to close Guantanamo before he had a plan? Is the difference partisan?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to my friend from Illinois, he has made this point before, and I answered it before. I will answer it again.

I was against it when President Bush was in favor of it. I have been consistently against closing Guantanamo all along the way, no matter who the President was. At least you could say this about President Bush: He didn't put a date on it before he had an idea what he was going to do with them. And that is the core issue here.

Mr. DURBIN. The core issue is for 7 long years, the Bush administration failed to convict the terrorists who planned the 9/11 terrorist attacks—for 7 years. And for 7 long years, only three individuals were convicted by military commissions at Guantanamo, and two of them have been released. So to argue that the Guantanamo model is one that ought to be protected and maintained, notwithstanding all of the danger it creates for our servicemen overseas to keep Guantanamo open, is to argue for a plan under the Bush administration that failed to convict terrorists, failed with military tribunals and through the courts of this land.

I have to say that as I listen to the argument of the Senator from Kentucky, it is an argument based on fear—fear—fear that if we try someone in a court in America, while they are incarcerated during trial, we need to be afraid. There was no fear in New York for more than 2 years while Ramzi Yousef was held in preparation for trial and during trial because he was held in a secure facility.

Today we are told by the Department of Justice that there are 355 convicted terrorists in American prisons. I ask the Senator from Kentucky, does he believe we should remove them from our prisons, those already convicted, currently serving, such as Ramzi Yousef?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to my friend from Illinois, maybe we found an area of agreement. He is critical of the Bush administration for not conducting military tribunals more rapidly. I agree with him. I think they should have been tried more rapidly. But that is the place to try them, right down there in Guantanamo.

If my friend is suggesting it is a good idea to bring these terrorists into the United States and, if convicted, put them in U.S. facilities, the supermax facility has basically no room. There may be one bed. As far as I know, there is no room at supermax.

Not only do we have, if we bring them into the United States—I don't know why I am smiling. This is not a laughing matter. Say what you will about the previous administration, but we were not attacked again after 9/11.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, will—

Mr. MCCONNELL. I don't have the floor, I say to my friend from Arizona. Maybe he can get the Senator from Illinois to yield for a question as well.

I don't think we want to complain about the fact we haven't been attacked again since 9/11, I say to my friend from Illinois. Containing terrorists at Guantanamo, going after terrorists in Iraq and Afghanistan, clearly something worked. And to argue we would somehow be made more safe in this country by closing down Guantanamo I find borders almost on the absurd.

Mr. DURBIN. With all due respect, the Senator failed to answer my question. I asked him this question: If it is a danger to America that if we put a convicted terrorist in our country, if that creates a danger, as he said repeatedly, in our communities and neighborhoods near this prison or in other places, then I asked the Senator from Kentucky, What would you do with the 355 convicted terrorists currently in prison, and the Senator didn't answer. He said: We haven't been attacked since 9/11. That is unresponsive.

We know there are facilities where these convicted terrorists can be held safely and securely. Marion Federal Penitentiary in my home State has 33 convicted terrorists. I just spent a week down there, not far from the Senator's home State. There was not fear among the people living in that area because 33 terrorists are being held at Marion. You know why? Because our corrections officers there are the best.

I went in to see them, and I sat down with them. They are concerned, angry, even insulted at the suggestion that they cannot safely hold dangerous people. One of the guards said to me: We held John Gotti. He was convicted of being involved in gangland activity. We are holding terrorists from Colombia in drug gangs. We are holding them safely. We are holding serial murderers safely. We know how to do this, Senator. And if your colleagues in the Senate don't believe it, have them come and visit Marion Federal Penitentiary.

They are doing their job and doing it well. To come to the floor of the Senate repeatedly and to suggest we are in danger as a nation because convicted terrorists are being held in our prisons I don't think adequately reflects the reality of what we have today.

Let me also say, I respect the Senator from Kentucky for saying he has always been in favor of keeping Guantanamo open. I respect him for being consistent in his viewpoint. I disagree with that viewpoint. Among those who also disagree with his viewpoint is GEN Colin Powell, the former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and former Secretary of State under President Bush. He believes it should be closed. General Petraeus, someone I know the Senator from Kentucky has praised on the floor of the Senate, believes Guantanamo should be closed. They are not alone. Robert Gates, Secretary of Defense under President Bush and now under President Obama, believes it should be closed. Senator MCCAIN on your side of the aisle stated publicly that Guantanamo should be closed. Senator LINDSEY GRAHAM, on your side of the aisle, has stated publicly it should be closed. Former Secretaries of State have made the same statements.

He is entitled to his point of view. I respect him for holding that point of view even if he doesn't have the support from the security and military leaders I mentioned. But to come to the floor and repeatedly say to the American people that we are in danger because we are trying terrorists in the courts of America I think goes too far.

I think the President has done the right thing. I think this man Ahmed Ghailani should stand trial. If 12 innocent Americans died, and they did, among 224 people, this man should be on trial, and I think the President was right to bring him to the court for trial. To suggest that he shouldn't be, that he should be put in a military tribunal which has had a record, incidentally, over the last 7 years—military commissions at Guantanamo, in 7 years tried three individuals and two have been released—it doesn't tell me that it is a good batting record when it comes to dealing with war criminals.

I trust the courts of our land, the same courts that convicted Ramzi Yousef. I trust those courts to give Ghailani a fair trial under American law. I trust at the end of the day that a jury, if it is a jury, will reach its decision.

I can tell you this for certain. The suggestion by the minority leader that at some point after this trial Ghailani is going to be turned loose in the communities and neighborhoods of America, I don't understand where that is coming from. That is the kind of statement that I think goes to the extreme. I wish my colleague would reflect on that. We are not going to turn loose this man who is not a resident of the United States, not a citizen of the United States if he is found not guilty. The President would never allow it. Our judicial system would never allow it.

Do you think the Department of Homeland Security is going to clear this man to move to Louisville, KY, if he is found not guilty, or Springfield, IL? I don't think so. In fact, I think it is beyond the realm of possibility.

I also want to make it clear that we have before us an important decision to make. Are we going to deal with Guantanamo because it is a threat to the safety of our servicemen or are we going to keep it open so that some people who believe in it can have their political bragging rights?

I would rather side with those who believe closing Guantanamo brings safety to our men and women in uniform. Guantanamo is a recruiting tool for terrorists. That is not my conclusion alone. It is a conclusion that has been reached by many, as I look back and see those who have said it. For example, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mike Mullen:

The concern I've had about Guantanamo . . . is it has been a recruiting symbol for those extremists and jihadists who would fight us. . . . That's the heart of the concern for Guantanamo's continued existence. . . .

Same statement from General Petraeus, same statement from Defense Secretary Gates, same statement from RADM Mark Buzby and others. We have a situation with Guantanamo where it is not making us safer. The President has made the right decision, hard decision to deal with the 240 detainees he inherited. I think we should do this in a calm, rational, and not fearful way.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, let me say Senator McCain and Senator Graham can speak for themselves, but neither of them has ever been in favor of closing Guantanamo without a plan to do something. They want to see what the plan is to deal with these terrorists. Beyond that, they can speak for themselves. But they are not in favor of closing Guantanamo without a plan.

With regard to the suggestion that we should bring these prisoners to the United States and try them, my good friend from Illinois has suggested there is no down side to that. Why not do it? We could. But the question is, Should we? We should not because we passed the military commissions for the purpose of trying these very detainees. There are courtrooms and a $200 million state-of-the-art facility at Guantanamo to both incarcerate them and to try them. We know no one has ever escaped there, and we know we haven't been attacked again since 9/11.

But let's assume we did bring them up here for trial. My good friend has suggested no harm done. During the Ramzi Yousef trial, he tipped off terrorists to a communications link. During the Zacarias Moussaoui trial, there was inadvertently leaked sensitive material. The east Africa Embassy bombing trials aided Osama bin Laden. The blind Sheikh Abdel-Rahman trial provided intel to Osama bin Laden. When you have these kinds of trials in a regular American criminal setting, there are down sides to it.

In terms of community disruption, I would cite the mayor of Alexandria, VA, right across the river. Ask him how he felt about the impact of the Moussaoui trial on their community.

So I think the suggestion that somehow it is a good solution to bring these terrorists to the United States and to mainstream them into the U.S. criminal justice system is simply misplaced. If they are convicted, we don't have a good place for them. Everybody cited the supermax facility. Well, there is no room there. It is quite full. We have the perfect place for these detainees, for them to be detained and to be tried and ultimate decisions made.

I share the view of the Senator from Illinois that the previous administration did not engage in those military tribunals as rapidly as we all would like. They had a lot of disruptions from lawsuits and other things, and I expect they would argue that slowed them down. But I think they are in the right place—the right place to be incarcerated and the right place to have their cases disposed of.

Mr. President, my friend from Arizona is here and wants to address this, or another issue, and so I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNET). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I will speak briefly, then yield to the Senator from Arizona. I will be happy, if he wants to ask a question or maintain a dialogue, but I will make this very brief.

I have confidence in the courts of America. If I had to pick one place on Earth to have a trial and to be assured it would be a fair trial with a fair outcome, it would be right here in the United States of America. Maybe I have gone too far. Maybe I am showing my patriotism, or whatever it is, but I believe that.

If you said to me: We captured a terrorist somewhere in the world, where would you like to have them tried? It would be right here because I believe in our system of justice. I believe in the integrity of our judiciary. I believe in our Department of Justice prosecutors. I believe in our defense system, our jury system. I believe we have the capacity and the resources to try someone fairly better than anyplace in the world.

The Senator from Kentucky may not agree with that conclusion. He obviously thinks there is too much danger to have a trial of a terrorist in the United States. How then does he explain 355 convicted terrorists now sitting in American prisons, tried in our courts, sent to our prisons, safely incarcerated for years? That is proof positive this system works.

The Senator from Kentucky, the Republican leader, is afraid. He is not only afraid of terrorism—and we all should be because we suffered grievously on 9/11—but he is afraid our Constitution is not strong enough to deal with that threat. He is afraid the guarantees and rights under our Constitution may go too far when it comes to keeping America safe. He is afraid of using our court system for fear it will make us less safe, that it would be dangerous. He is afraid the values we have stood for and the Geneva Conventions and other agreements over the years may not be applicable to this situation.

I disagree. I have faith in this country, in its Constitution, its laws, and the people who are sworn to uphold them at every level. I believe Mr. Ghailani will get a fairer trial in the United States than anyplace on Earth, and that if he is found guilty in being complicit in the killing of over 200 innocent people and innocent Americans, he will pay the price he should pay, and he will be incarcerated safely.

This notion that we have run out of supermax beds and that is the end of the story—and the State of Colorado is the home State of the Presiding Officer, where the Florence facility is located—I would say to the Senator from Kentucky that may be true for the supermax facility at the Federal level, but there are many other supermax facilities across America that can safely incarcerate convicted terrorists or serial murderers or whomever. We can take care of these people.

If there is one thing America knows how to do—and some may question whether we should brag about it—we know how to incarcerate people. We do it more than any other place on Earth, and we do it safely. The notion there is only one place—Guantanamo—where these detainees can be safely held defies logic and human experience.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, first of all, I was going to interrupt and ask a question, but I simply conferred with Senator McConnell—and I will state and the RECORD can reflect the fact—that I believe Senator McConnell asked the question of where he would be released if he were acquitted. I don't believe he asserted that he would be released in the United States. I just wanted to clear that up. Obviously, we can check the transcript and determine it. I think that was his intent because of the question that Robert Gibbs had posed. At least that is my understanding of it. We can resolve that.

But I would like to say a couple of other things. First of all, it is important to have this debate. The Senate had a debate some weeks ago, and it is true 90 Senators voted against funding a program to close the prison at Guantanamo Bay. Six Senators voted in favor of moving forward with that.

I appreciate the Senator from Illinois staunchly defending the lonely six, but they represented also a minority of American public opinion, which has said, by 2 to 1, according to the USA Gallup poll, that it is against closing the Guantanamo prison, and by 3 to 1 they do not want the prisoners released in the United States.

Both sides have engaged in a little bit of rhetoric. For example, I would respectfully request my colleague from Illinois go back over what he said a moment ago and perhaps come back tomorrow and think about rephrasing it. I don't think it is fair to characterize the position of the Senator from Kentucky as being fearful of trying people in the United States; fearful, for example, that terrorists—or afraid of giving terrorists rights and so on. I don't think that is the issue. I think what is the issue is the question of whether, as a general rule, it is better to keep prisoners in Guantanamo prison than to put them somewhere else.

I, for one, don't fear trying some of these people who are appropriately charged and tried in Federal court in the United States. But I would also say it is loaded with problems and headaches, and I think my colleague from Illinois would have to acknowledge that the trials that have occurred here have produced some real problems. These are hard cases to try in the United States. You start with the proposition that there are huge security concerns.

Now, it can be done. There will be huge security concerns with this alleged terrorist from Tanzania, and it will cost a lot of money in the place where he is tried. It will pose very difficult questions for the judge, for the people within the courtroom, the parties to the case, the lawyers in the case. There are evidentiary questions and other questions that are illustrated by the case of Zacarias Moussaoui, who was tried in Alexandria. I think we can all acknowledge the government would certainly say that was a huge problem for them because it was difficult to use evidence in the case that had been acquired through confidential or classified methods. The case was ping-ponged back and forth several times between the District Court and the court of appeals. It was a difficult, hard thing to do.

Then there are the situations where cases have been tried in American courts and classified information has inadvertently—and in some cases not inadvertently—been released, gotten into the hands of terrorists. Let me just cite a few of these, and not to make the case that it is impossible or a terrible idea but also to refute the notion that it is a piece of cake. It is not. It is really hard. If you could avoid doing this, I think the better practice would be to try to do so. But on an occasional basis, when we have a good Federal charge, we have the evidence that can back it up, and we think we can get a conviction, there is nothing wrong in those few selected cases with doing it. But we can't say all 240 of the terrorists at Guantanamo qualify for that. Very few of them do, as the President said in his remarks.

Let me note some of these cases. The famous trial of Ramzi Yousef. Here is a statement by Michael Mukasey, the former Attorney General. This is a quotation from the Wall Street Journal, again, during the trial of Ramzi Yousef, the mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Center bombing:

Apparently, an innocuous bit of testimony . . . about delivery of a cell phone battery was enough to tip off terrorists still at large that one of their communication links had been compromised. That link, which in fact had been monitored by the government and had provided enormously invaluable intelligence, was immediately shut down, and further information lost.

I am not going to read the entire quotations but just some headlines. I mentioned the trial of Zacarias Moussaoui. That was a case also in which sensitive material was inadvertently leaked. Here is the headline from a CNBC story:

The Government Went To The Judge And Said, "Oops, We Gave Moussaoui Some Documents He Shouldn't Have." . . . Documents That The Government Says Should Have Been Classified.

There is a whole story about how that happened. The East Africa Embassy bombing trials, which occurred after 2001, September 26 is the Star-Ledger story.

The cost of disclosing information unwisely became clear after the New York trials of bin Laden associates for the 1998 bombings of U.S. embassies in Africa. Some of the evidence indicated that the National Security Agency, the U.S. foreign eavesdropping organization, had intercepted cell phone conversations. Shortly thereafter, bin Laden's organization stopped using cell phones to discuss sensitive operational details, U.S. intelligence sources said.

There is another story about the same thing, with a headline in the New York Times. There is another quotation about the trial of the blind sheik, a story we are all familiar with, of Michael Mukasey, the former Attorney General, saying this in the Wall Street Journal:

In the course of prosecuting Omar Abdel Rahman . . . the government was compelled—as in all cases that charge conspiracy—to turn over a list of unindicted co-conspirators to the defendants. Within ten days, a copy of that list reached bin Laden in Khartoum.

There are other cases. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have these articles printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

N.Y. LAWYER CONVICTED OF AIDING TERRORISTS

(By Associated Press)

NEW YORK.—A veteran civil rights lawyer was convicted Thursday of crossing the line by smuggling messages of violence from one of her jailed clients—a radical Egyptian sheik—to his terrorist disciples on the outside.

The jury deliberated 13 days over the past month before convicting Lynne Stewart, 65, a firebrand, left-wing activist known for representing radicals and revolutionaries in her 30 years on the New York legal scene.

The trial, which began last June, focused attention on the line between zealous advocacy and criminal behavior by a lawyer. Some defense lawyers saw the case as a government warning to attorneys to tread carefully in terrorism cases.

Stewart slumped in her chair as the verdict was read, shaking her head and later wiping tears from her eyes.

Her supporters gasped upon hearing the conviction, and about two dozen of them followed her out of court, chanting, "Hands off Lynne Stewart!"

She vowed to appeal and blamed the conviction on evidence that included videotape of Usama bin Laden urging support for her client. The defense protested the bin Laden evidence, and the judge warned jurors that the case did not involve the events of Sept. 11.

"When you put Usama bin Laden in a courtroom and ask the jury to ignore it, you're asking a lot," she said. "I know I committed no crime. I know what I did was right."

Lawyers have said Stewart most likely would face a sentence of about 20 years on charges that include conspiracy, providing material support to terrorists, defrauding the government and making false statements.

She will remain free on bail but must stay in New York until her July 15 sentencing.

The anonymous jury also convicted a U.S. postal worker, Ahmed Abdel Sattar, of plotting to "kill and kidnap persons in a foreign country" by publishing an edict urging the killing of Jews and their supporters.

A third defendant, Arabic interpreter Mohamed Yousry, was convicted of providing material support to terrorists. Sattar could face life in prison and Yousry up to 20 years.

Attorney General Alberto Gonzales called the verdict "an important step" in the war on terrorism.

"The convictions handed down by a federal jury in New York today send a clear, unmistakable message that this department will pursue both those who carry out acts of terrorism and those who assist them with their murderous goals," Gonzales said.

Stewart was the lawyer for Omar Abdel-Rahman, a blind sheik sentenced to life in prison in 1996 for conspiring to assassinate Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and destroy several New York landmarks, including the U.N. building and the Lincoln and Holland Tunnels. Stewart's co-defendants also had close ties to Abdel-Rahman.

Prosecutors said Stewart and the others carried messages between the sheik and senior members of an Egyptian-based terrorist organization, helping spread Abdel-Rahman's venomous call to kill those who did not subscribe to his extremist interpretation of Islamic law.

Prosecutor Andrew Dember argued that Stewart and her co-defendants essentially "broke Abdel-Rahman out of jail, made him available to the worst kind of criminal we find in this world—terrorists.”

At the time, the sheik was in solitary confinement in Minnesota under special prison rules to keep him from communicating with anyone except his wife and his lawyers.

Michael Ratner, president of the Center for Constitutional Rights, said the purpose of the prosecution of Stewart “was to send a message to lawyers who represent alleged terrorists that it’s dangerous to do so.”

But Peter Margulies, a law professor at Roger Williams University in Rhode Island who conducted a panel on lawyers and terrorism recently, called the verdict reasonable.

“I think lawyers need to be advocates, but they don’t need to be accomplices,” he said. “I think the evidence suggested that Lynne Stewart had crossed the line.”

Stewart, who once represented Weather Underground radicals and mob turncoat Sammy “The Bull” Gravano, repeatedly declared her innocence, maintaining she was unfairly targeted by overzealous prosecutors.

But she also testified that she believed violence was sometimes necessary to achieve justice: “To rid ourselves of the entrenched, voracious type of capitalism that is in this country that perpetuates sexism and racism, I don’t think that can come nonviolently.”

A major part of the prosecution’s case was Stewart’s 2000 release of a statement withdrawing the sheik’s support for a cease-fire in Egypt by his militant followers.

Prosecutors, though, could point to no violence that resulted from the statement.

BUSH ACCOUNT OF A LEAK’S IMPACT HAS SUPPORT

(By David E. Rosenbaum)

WASHINGTON.—As an example of the damage caused by unauthorized disclosures to reporters, President Bush said at his news conference on Monday that Osama bin Laden had been tipped by a leak that the United States was tracking his location through his telephone. After this information was published, Mr. Bush said, Mr. bin Laden stopped using the phone.

The president was apparently referring to an article in The Washington Times in August 1998.

Toward the end of a profile of Mr. bin Laden on the day after American cruise missiles struck targets in Afghanistan and Sudan, that newspaper, without identifying a source, reported that “he keeps in touch with the world via computers and satellite phones.”

The article drew little attention at the time in the United States. But last year, the Sept. 11 commission declared in its final report: “Al Qaeda’s senior leadership had stopped using a particular means of communication almost immediately after a leak to The Washington Times. This made it much more difficult for the National Security Agency to intercept his conversations.” There was a footnote to the newspaper article.

Lee H. Hamilton, the vice chairman of the commission, mentioned the consequences of the article in a speech last month. He said: “Leaks, for instance, can be terribly damaging. In the late 90’s, it leaked out in The Washington Times that the U.S. was using Osama bin Laden’s satellite phone to track his whereabouts. Bin Laden stopped using that phone; we lost his trail.”

In their 2002 book, “The Age of Sacred Terror” (Random House), Steven Simon and Daniel Benjamin, who worked at the National Security Council under President Bill Clinton, also mentioned the incident. They wrote, “When bin Laden stopped using the phone and let his aides do the calling, the United States lost its best chance to find him.”

More details about the use of satellite phones by Mr. bin Laden and his lieutenants were revealed by federal prosecutors in the 2001 trial in Federal District Court in Manhattan of four men charged with conspiring to bomb two American embassies in East Africa in 1998.

Asked at the outset of his news conference about unauthorized disclosures like the one last week that the National Security Agency had conducted surveillance of American citizens, Mr. Bush declared: “Let me give you an example about my concerns about letting the enemy know what may or may not be happening. In the late 1990’s, our government was following Osama bin Laden because he was using a certain type of telephone. And the fact that we were following Osama bin Laden because he was using a certain type of telephone made it into the press as the result of a leak. And guess what happened? Osama bin Laden changed his behavior. He began to change how he communicated.”

Toward the end of the news conference, Mr. Bush referred again to this incident to illustrate the damage caused by leaks.

JOSE PADILLA MAKES BAD LAW—TERROR TRIALS HURT THE NATION EVEN WHEN THEY LEAD TO CONVICTIONS

(By Michael B. Mukasey)

The apparently conventional ending to Jose Padilla’s trial last week—conviction on charges of conspiring to commit violence abroad and providing material assistance to a terrorist organization—gives only the coldest of comfort to anyone concerned about how our legal system deals with the threat he and his co-conspirators represent. He will be sentenced—likely to a long if not a life-long term of imprisonment. He will appeal. By the time his appeals run out he will have engaged the attention of three federal district courts, three courts of appeal and on at least one occasion the Supreme Court of the United States.

It may be claimed that Padilla’s odyssey is a triumph for due process and the rule of law in wartime. Instead, when it is examined closely, this case shows why current institutions and statutes are not well suited to even the limited task of supplementing what became, after Sept. 11, 2001, principally a military effort to combat Islamic terrorism.

Padilla’s current journey through the legal system began on May 8, 2002, when a federal district court in New York issued, and FBI agents in Chicago executed, a warrant to arrest him when he landed at O’Hare Airport after a trip that started in Pakistan. His prior history included a murder charge in Chicago before his 18th birthday, and a firearms possession offense in Florida shortly after his release on the murder charge.

Padilla then journeyed to Egypt, where, as a convert to Islam, he took the name Abdullah al Muhajir, and traveled to Saudi Arabia, Afghanistan and Pakistan. He eventually came to the attention of Abu Zubaydeh, a lieutenant of Osama bin Laden. The information underlying the warrant issued for Padilla indicated that he had returned to America to explore the possibility of locating radioactive material that could be dispersed with a conventional explosive—a device known as a dirty bomb.

However, Padilla was not detained on a criminal charge. Rather, he was arrested on a material witness warrant, issued under a statute (more than a century old) that authorizes the arrest of someone who has information likely to be of interest to a grand jury investigating crime, but whose presence to testify cannot be assured. A federal grand jury in New York was then investigating the activities of al Qaeda.

The statute was used frequently after 9/11, when the government tried to investigate numerous leads and people to determine whether follow-on attacks were planned—but found itself without a statute that authorized investigative detention on reasonable suspicion, of the sort available to authorities in Britain and France, among other countries. And so, the U.S. government subpoenaed and arrested on a material witness warrant those like Padilla who seemed likely to have information.

Next the government took one of several courses: it released the person whose detention appeared on a second look to have been a mistake; or obtained the information he was thought to have, and his cooperation, and released him; or placed him before a grand jury with a grant of immunity under a compulsion to testify truthfully and, if he testified falsely, charge him with perjury; or developed independent evidence of criminality sufficiently reliable and admissible to warrant charging him.

Each individual so arrested was brought immediately before a federal judge where he was assigned counsel, had a bail hearing, and was permitted to challenge the basis for his detention, just as a criminal defendant would be.

The material witness statute has its perils. Because the law does not authorize investigative detention, the government had only a limited time in which to let Padilla testify, prosecute him or let him go. As that limited time drew to a close, the government changed course. It withdrew the grand jury subpoena that had triggered his designation as a material witness, designated Padilla instead as an unlawful combatant, and transferred him to military custody.

The reason? Perhaps it was because the initial claim, that Padilla was involved in a dirty bomb plot, could not be proved with evidence admissible in an ordinary criminal trial. Perhaps it was because to try him in open court potentially would compromise sources and methods of intelligence gathering. Or perhaps it was because Padilla’s apparent contact with higher-ups in al Qaeda made him more valuable as a potential intelligence source than as a defendant.

The government’s quandary here was real. The evidence that brought Padilla to the government’s attention may have been compelling, but inadmissible. Hearsay is the most obvious reason why that could be so; or the source may have been such that to disclose it in a criminal trial could harm the government’s overall effort.

In fact, terrorism prosecutions in this country have unintentionally provided terrorists with a rich source of intelligence. For example, in the course of prosecuting Omar Abdel Rahman (the so-called “blind sheik”) and others for their role in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing and other crimes, the government was compelled—as it is in all cases that charge conspiracy—to turn over a list of unindicted co-conspirators to the defendants.

That list included the name of Osama bin Laden. As was learned later, within 10 days a copy of that list reached bin Laden in Khar-toum, letting him know that his connection to that case had been discovered.

Again, during the trial of Ramzi Yousef, the mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, an apparently innocuous bit of testimony in a public courtroom about delivery of a cell phone battery was enough to tip off terrorists still at large that one of their communication links had been compromised. That link, which in fact had been monitored by the government and had provided enormously valuable intelligence, was immediately shut down, and further information lost.

The unlawful combatant designation affixed to Padilla certainly was not unprecedented. In June 1942, German saboteurs landed from submarines off the coasts of Florida and Long Island and were eventually apprehended. Because they were not acting as ordinary soldiers fighting in uniform and carrying arms openly, they were in violation of the laws of war and not entitled to Geneva Conventions protections.

Indeed, at the direction of President Roosevelt they were not only not held as prisoners of war but were tried before a military court in Washington, D.C., convicted, and—except for two who had cooperated—executed, notwithstanding the contention by one of them that he was an American citizen, as is Padilla, and thus entitled to constitutional protections. The Supreme Court dismissed that contention as irrelevant.

In any event, Padilla was transferred to a brig in South Carolina, and the Supreme Court eventually held that he had the right to file a habeas corpus petition. His case wound its way back up the appellate chain, and after the government secured a favorable ruling from the Fourth Circuit, it changed course again.

Now, Padilla was transferred back to the civilian justice system. Although he reportedly confessed to the dirty bomb plot while in military custody, that statement—made without benefit of legal counsel—could not be used. He was instead indicted on other charges in the Florida case that took three months to try and ended with last week's convictions.

The history of Padilla's case helps illustrate in miniature the inadequacy of the current approach to terrorism prosecutions.

First, consider the overall record. Despite the growing threat from al Qaeda and its affiliates—beginning with the 1993 World Trade Center bombing and continuing through later plots including inter alia the conspiracy to blow up airliners over the Pacific in 1994, the attack on the American barracks at Khobar Towers in 1996, the bombing of U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998, the bombing of the Cole in Aden in 2000, and the attack on Sept. 11, 2001—criminal prosecutions have yielded about three dozen convictions, and even those have strained the financial and security resources of the federal courts near to the limit.

Second, consider that such prosecutions risk disclosure to our enemies of methods and sources of intelligence that can then be neutralized. Disclosure not only puts our secrets at risk, but also discourages allies abroad from sharing information with us lest it wind up in hostile hands.

And third, consider the distortions that arise from applying to national security cases generally the rules that apply to ordinary criminal cases.

On one end of the spectrum, the rules that apply to routine criminals who pursue finite goals are skewed, and properly so, to assure that only the highest level of proof will result in a conviction. But those rules do not protect a society that must gather information about, and at least incapacitate, people who have cosmic goals that they are intent on achieving by cataclysmic means.

Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the mastermind of the 9/11 attacks, is said to have told his American captors that he wanted a lawyer and would see them in court. If the Supreme Court rules—in a case it has agreed to hear relating to Guantanamo detainees—that foreigners in U.S. custody enjoy the protection of our Constitution regardless of the place or circumstances of their apprehension, this bold joke could become a reality.

The director of an organization purporting to protect constitutional rights has announced that his goal is to unleash a flood of lawyers on Guantanamo so as to paralyze interrogation of detainees. Perhaps it bears mention that one unintended outcome of a Supreme Court ruling exercising jurisdiction over Guantanamo detainees may be that, in the future, capture of terrorism suspects will be forgone in favor of killing them. Or they may be put in the custody of other countries like Egypt or Pakistan that are famously not squeamish in their approach to interrogation—a practice, known as rendition, followed during the Clinton administration.

At the other end of the spectrum, if conventional legal rules are adapted to deal with a terrorist threat, whether by relaxed standards for conviction, searches, the admissibility of evidence or otherwise, those adaptations will infect and change the standards in ordinary cases with ordinary defendants in ordinary courts of law.

What is to be done? The Military Commissions Act of 2006 and the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005 appear to address principally the detainees at Guantanamo. In any event, the Supreme Court's recently announced determination to review cases involving the Guantanamo detainees may end up making commissions, which the administration delayed in convening, no longer possible.

There have been several proposals for a new adjudicatory framework, notably by Andrew C. McCarthy and Alykhan Velshi of the Center for Law & Counterterrorism, and by former Deputy Attorney General George J. Terwilliger. Messrs. McCarthy and Velshi have urged the creation of a separate national security court staffed by independent, life-tenured judges to deal with the full gamut of national security issues, from intelligence gathering to prosecution. Mr. Terwilliger's more limited proposals address principally the need to incapacitate dangerous people, by using legal standards akin to those developed to handle civil commitment of the mentally ill.

These proposals deserve careful scrutiny by the public, and particularly by the U.S. Congress. It is Congress that authorized the use of armed force after Sept. 11—and it is Congress that has the constitutional authority to establish additional inferior courts as the need may be, or even to modify the Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction.

Perhaps the world's greatest deliberative body (the Senate) and the people's house (the House of Representatives) could, while we still have the leisure, turn their considerable talents to deliberating how to fix a strained and mismatched legal system, before another cataclysm calls forth from the people demands for hastier and harsher results.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, the only point I am making is that while it is possible to try these people in Federal court, it is very difficult. It frequently results in the disclosure of information that we don't want disclosed. I think it would be far better, if we can, to try these people in military commissions. The President has now said he would go forward with military commissions—modified to some extent—and I think that is a good thing for the trial of those who are suitable for that action.

The President also noted, of course, that there are going to be a lot of these terrorists who cannot be tried but are dangerous and need to be held, and the U.S. Supreme Court has affirmed the appropriateness of holding such people until the end of hostilities. The President has indicated that he would, in fact, do that.

I think there is no question, therefore, that we will be holding some of these people. The question is where best to do it. This is the nub of the argument that my colleague and fellow whip, the Senator from Illinois, and I have been having long distance. I relish the opportunity when we can both get our schedules straight to literally have a debate back and forth. I think it is an important topic.

I see now other colleagues are here, and so I will make one final point, and then I hope we can continue in this debate because I think it is a better policy to keep Guantanamo open and keep these prisoners there than to try to find some alternative.

Let me cite one statistic, and then make my primary point. According to the numbers I have—and I would be happy to share these with my colleague from Illinois with respect to the slots available in our supermax facilities, if I can find it—there are about 15 high security facilities which were built to hold 13,448 prisoners. Those facilities currently house more than 20,000 inmates.

The bottom line is that is not necessarily a supersolution either.

Did my colleague have a quick comment? I want to make my main point.

OK, thank you.

Here is my main point. There are those very credible people who say: Well, this is a recruitment symbol. Guantanamo prison is a recruitment symbol. I have no doubt they are right, it is a recruitment symbol. Several questions, however, are raised by that observation.

The first question is, even if it is false that there has been torture at Guantanamo prison—obviously, terrorists can believe falsehoods—should we take action based upon that falsehood?

The next question I think has to be asked is, does this mean, then, that other terrorist recruiting symbols need to be eliminated by the United States?

The third question is, would that eliminate their terrorism?

What is it exactly that animates these terrorists? Gitmo didn't even exist before some of the worst—in fact, before all of the worst terrorist attacks on the United States or U.S. facilities abroad. There was no Gitmo prior to 9/11. Yet we had all of the various attacks that occurred throughout the world leading up to 9/11 and 9/11 itself. They didn't need another reason to hate America. They didn't need another reason to be able to recruit people. They have all the reasons they can dream up.

I think the key reasons are that they fundamentally disagree with our way of life, and they believe they have an obligation, through jihad, to either get the infidels—that is all of us who don't agree with them—to bend to their will or to do away with us because they don't like our way of life. They do not like the fact that we have the culture we have. They do not like the fact that we give equal rights to women or that we have a democracy. There are a lot of things they hate about the Western World generally and about our society in particular.

These are obviously recruiting symbols and recruiting tools. Are we to do away with these things in order to please them? And even if we did, what effect would it have on their recruiting? Do you think they would then say: OK, great. You have closed Guantanamo prison, you have taken away women's rights, you are halfway home to us not recruiting anybody or terrorizing you anymore. If you will only get rid of the vote and institute Sharia law, we can start talking here.

I don't think that is the way they are going to act. They are going to have grievances against us no matter what. For us to assume we have to change our policies, to change what we think is in our best interests, simply to assuage their concerns because maybe they do use this as a recruiting tool, I think is to, in effect, hold our hands up and say: In the war against these Islamist terrorists, we have no real defenses because anything we do is going to make them unhappy. It is going to be a recruiting tool. After all, we wouldn't want to give them a recruiting tool.

I do not think it is too much of an exaggeration to make the point I made. One might say: Obviously, we are not going to give up our way of life. They are going to have to deal with that. Well, then they are going to keep recruiting. But we could at least get rid of Guantanamo prison. That would at least get rid of one thorn. Would it make a difference? Nobody believes it would make a difference.

The key point I make is—and this is just a disagreement reasonable people are going to have, I guess—I think Guantanamo is the best place to keep these people. My friend from Illinois thinks there are alternatives that are better and that, under the circumstances, we should make the change. Again, I observe that the American people seem to be on the side of not closing it down, and I do not think it all has to do with fear. I think it has to do with the commonsense notion that this is not going to remove terrorist recruiting. If it is better for us to keep them there, we might as well do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask consent to speak in morning business for 5 minutes. I see other Members are on the floor and I will finish after 5 minutes and yield the floor on this issue we have debated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. I respect my colleague from Arizona and I respect the fact that we are on the floor together. This is a rarity in the Senate, where people with opposing viewpoints actually arrive at the same moment and have a chance at least to exchange points of view if not have more direct communication. I would say, as follows: I don't know what motivates the mind of a terrorist. I think I have some ideas and my colleague does as well. I do not know that we will ever be able to save every soul when it comes to those who are inclined toward terrorism. Let's face reality, it is like crime in this country. We all would like to see it go away, but we know, intuitively, there are some people who are bad people and do bad things and need to pay the price, and I think the same is true for terrorism.

But when President Obama goes to Cairo, Egypt, and appears to speak to the Islamic world about this new administration and its new approach when it comes to dealing with Islam and says as part of it that the United States has forsworn torture in Guantanamo, he has said to the world: We are telling you this is a different day. It is a new day. For those who are not convinced in terrorism and extremism, at least understand that America is now ready to deal with you in an honest way, in a different way. What message does it send if the Congress turns around and says to the President: No, you can't say that to the Islamic world. We are going to keep Guantanamo open. We are going to keep this open, even if it is an irritant.

Don't take my word for it because I am not an expert in this field but those who are, many of them, believe Guantanamo should be closed. I would never question the sincerity or the resume of GEN Colin Powell, who has said close Guantanamo; GEN David Petraeus: Close Guantanamo; the Secretary of Defense: Close Guantanamo; President George W. Bush: Close Guantanamo.

All of these people who have seen the intelligence and have the background believe it is time to close that facility. This President is trying to make good on that promise by President Bush and turn the page when it comes to Guantanamo and its future. I think that is critical to bringing about a more peaceful world and reaching out and saying to this world: Things have changed.

I bet the Senator from Arizona joined me when we went upstairs to 407 and saw the photographs from Abu Ghraib. It is a moment none of us will ever forget as long as we live. Some of the things we saw there were gut-wrenching. I stood there with my colleagues, women and men, embarrassed at the things I looked at.

Some of those images are going to be with us for a long time, images that the people of the world have seen. We have to overcome them by saying it is a new day, and the clearest way to do that is to close Guantanamo in an orderly way, not to release any terrorists in the United States. On the question about whether we can incarcerate them—even if our prison population is as large as it is, there are facilities available. Once this President is given this option to reach out to States and this Nation, I am confident he will find accommodations in Federal prisons and supermax State prisons to deal with 240 people who are now left at Guantanamo. I think that is something we can expect to happen, and it will happen.

I will close by saying this: I asked the Senator from Kentucky twice if he would comment on what I heard to be his statement about whether this gentleman, Ahmed Ghailani, if found not guilty, would be released into the United States. He said Mr. Gibbs, the White House Press Secretary, had led him to that conclusion. I think, in fairness, Mr. Gibbs would say, clearly, he had no intention that this President or anyone in this administration would ever release this man, and there is no right under the law that he be released, even if he is found not guilty, into the U.S. population. It is not going to happen. I think raising that specter, raising that question, is raising that level of fear.

I do not think fear should guide us. America is not a strong nation cowering in the shadows in fear. America is a strong nation when we realize our challenge, stand together united, don't abandon our principles, and use the resources we have around the world to make certain we are safer.

The last point I will make is I have the greatest confidence in our system of justice, more than any in the world. I hope all my colleagues will have that same sense of confidence, that if the President sends a case to our courts of law, it will be handled professionally and fairly in the best possible manner.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have enjoyed this debate between these two great Senators. It is an interesting debate. I come down on the fact, if they are moved into any of our facilities in this country—and there are very few that could take them; in fact, I do not know of any that can take them that are not overcrowded right now—there will be the same screaming and shouting because they will not be treated anywhere near as well as they are treated down there at Guantanamo. No matter what we do that new day is not going to be a very happy day. It is far better to have this $200 million state-of-the-art facility that has been approved by international organizations as being better than expected, better than average facilities that would be acceptable—it is better to acknowledge that and keep treating them as decently and with as much dignity as we can, which is more than they will get in a supermax facility in this country or any other facility.

The supermax facilities are loaded with prisoners. They have more than they can handle now. Why would we put terrorists in among them, and why would we put them in this country where they can influence other people who are dissatisfied with life and have been discontented and have committed very serious crimes and allow them the recruitment possibilities they would have in our country? It doesn't make sense.

Why would we blow $200 million on state-of-the-art facilities and then spend another $80 million to shut it down? It seems like it is going a little bit too far because of the attempt of this administration to please, basically, people who support terrorists and the rest of the world.

Admittedly, there have been some outstanding people in our country who have come to the conclusion they should shut Guantanamo down, but they did so without having a real, viable alternative to Guantanamo. That is the issue that bothers me. I don't know of any State in the Union that wants these people within their prison system, assuming they could handle them. It means a lot more expense, a lot more problems. It means the possibility that they will be recruiting terrorists and helping criminals to become terrorists in our country. I can't begin to tell you the cost to this society if we do that. Be that as it may, the President seems to want to do that in spite of the fact that overwhelmingly the American people don't want him to do that.

STATE SECRETS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to express my reservations regarding the State Secrets Protection Act. Since one of the purposes of government is to provide a strong national defense, there are methods and sources that should never be disclosed for fear of irreparable damage to national security. The judicial branch has a long-documented history in addressing the state secrets privilege. Through the years, courts have affirmed time and again the privilege of the government to withhold information that would damage national security programs.

The modern origin of this doctrine was established in United States v. Reynolds. The Supreme Court created the Reynolds compromise, which stated that the privilege applies when the court is satisfied "from all circumstances of the case, that there is a reasonable danger that compulsion of the evidence will expose military matters which, in the interest of national security, should not be divulged." That is what the Supreme Court has held, and it has continued to affirm this position with the utmost deference to the executive branch. Under Reynolds, the state secrets privilege cannot—and has not—been lightly invoked. The pending bill before the Judiciary Committee, known as the State Secrets Protection Act, would negate the Reynolds compromise and create a higher standard of proof for the government to assert the privilege.

My analysis of the legislation before us leads me to conclude that this bill will bring chaos to the balance struck by Reynolds. This bill lowers the deference that courts give to the executive branch in its assertion of the state secrets privilege. It raises the burden of proof that the government must meet to protect state secrets. The courts have built great flexibility into the state secrets doctrine to allow themselves the latitude to reach an effective compromise between the rights of litigants and the needs of national security. This is conducted on a case-by-case basis.

The writers of this bill want to redefine the standard to only afford protection under the state secrets privilege only when the disclosure of evidence is "reasonably likely to cause significant harm" to national security. This is a serious departure from the long established precedent of Reynolds. This has ramifications that would severely impede the protection of national security secrets. It is preposterous to abandon a standard that has more than 55 years of jurisprudential evolution and case law to support it. The Reynolds compromise says if there is reasonable danger then we secure the information. S. 417 says if it is reasonably likely, you can compromise the information. S. 417 fails to protect state secrets.

This state secrets privilege is never lightly used and never used with impunity. The assertion of this right must be made in writing by the head of the executive agency invoking the state secrets privilege. In recent cases this has sometimes been the Director of National Intelligence. Courts may conduct their own probe to ensure that the privilege has been invoked correctly. This probe will include an examination as to why the information being sought is needed to prove a plaintiff's case. Conversely, courts will examine as to why the information is critical to national security. After thoughtful review, a judge makes the determination on the production of evidence alleged to have been covered by the privilege. Not a law passed by politicians.

There is a myth that the Bush administration invoked the state secrets privilege more than any other previous administration. Rooted in this fallacy is the idea that the administration overreached in asserting the privilege to protect information not previously thought to be within its scope. This erroneous notion was propagated by not only the media, but by Members of this body. Most legal experts in the field of national security law have stated that it is not possible to collect accurate annual statistics for year-to-year comparisons. There is no "batting average" that can be empirically compared from one presidential administration to another.

To do so would incorrectly operate under the assumption that the government is presented with the same amount of cases each year in which the privilege can be asserted. It makes absolutely no sense to me to compare the administrations and judge them based on the total number of times they asserted the privilege.

The flow of litigation changes from year to year and varies from each administration, as does the invocation of the privilege. It varies because of the times and circumstances. We have been living in very difficult times and circumstances where we have to protect this country; circumstances we have never had to face before. Therefore, it is ludicrous that attempts to compare the rate of assertions of this privilege and arrive at the incorrect conclusion that because the Bush administration used this privilege it must be changed.

Unfortunately, for the authors of this bill, the data does not support the hypothesis that the Bush administration ever used the state secrets privilege in an attempt to dismiss complaints. Published opinions have revealed in the 1970s the government filed five motions. In the 1980s the government filed motions nine times. In the 1990s the government filed motions 13 times. Preliminary data available for the Bush administration indicate that the privilege was used 14 times.

Therefore, the impetus for the State Secrets Protection Act does not support the conclusion that the Bush administration blazed a new trail in national security law. On the contrary, the authors of this bill are the ones attempting to alter national security law. Keep in mind, we have been going through an extended war on terrorism, and, frankly, there is a need to protect national security. That is why we have the state secrets law.

In the first 100 days of the Obama administration—get that now—in the first 100 days of the Obama administration, the Department of Justice has invoked this privilege three times—in the first 100 days. This is the administration that was complaining about this. Now they found, when they faced reality and how important this privilege is, they changed their tune, and they should. I commend the administration and specifically the President for recognizing this.

The administration has picked up where the Bush administration left off in three pending cases: Al Haramain Islamic Foundation v. Obama, Mohammed v. Jepperson Data Plan, and Jewell v. NSA. During an interview of a widely revered liberal journalist, Attorney General Eric Holder stated that in his opinion the Bush administration—get this word—“correctly” applied the state secrets privilege in these cases.

If this legislation is passed in its present form, private attorneys would be given access to highly classified declarations before a judge rules on whether the state secrets privilege should prevent such a disclosure. Can you imagine the harm that could come to our country? It is hard to believe that anybody would be advocating this in the Senate with what we have been going through and the special wars that we have been going through and the special type of terrorists that we have been having to put up with.

This legislation—lousy legislation—will have the effect of incentivizing lawsuits by rewarding attorneys who file lawsuits with a security clearance. I remember one case in New York where the attorney herself was convicted because she was passing on information.

Now this clearance will grant these attorneys access to classified information that if divulged could reasonably harm our national security interests. It is bad enough trying to keep secrets around here, let alone with people who really should not be qualified for that type of classification. Does an attorney need absolute proof of some violation of law to file a lawsuit to learn details about classified programs? No, under this bill, they simply need to make an accusation. Any accusation will do.

Ensuring national security programs stay classified is critical to our citizens' continued safety. Under this legislation, private attorneys, regardless of the merits of their lawsuits, will be given access to our Nation's secrets, secrets that are critical to the protection of our country. It is not hard to see how this legislation could seriously harm national security.

It is hard for me to see why anybody would be arguing for this legislation. It is a legitimate concern that ideological attorneys would be willing to compromise national security interests and secrets and disclose classified information. There are at least two recent instances involving the disclosure of classified information. These are recent. I am just talking about the recent ones, and then only two of them. There may be more.

In May 2007, a Navy JAG lawyer leaked classified information pertaining to Guantanamo detainees to a human rights lawyer. I find it disturbing that a U.S. military officer who is sworn to protect this Nation would disseminate classified information. But an even more troubling scenario is posed by private attorneys. In 2005, a more alarming case came to light when a civilian defense counsel was convicted of providing material support for a terrorist conspiracy by smuggling messages from her client, a Muslim cleric convicted of terrorism, to his Islamic fundamentalist followers in Egypt.

Do you know how difficult it was to convict an Islamic fundamentalist religious leader? Yet this man was convicted, and rightly so. His attorney compromised these matters. In press interviews after the attorney was convicted, she said, “I would do it again—it's the way lawyers are supposed to behave.”

She also said that “you can't lock up the lawyers. You cannot tell the lawyers how to do their job.”

I am not implying that all lawyers would act so egregiously. What I am saying is there is a profound reason why the government has classifications for categorizing the sensitivity of information that is vital to national security. Providing top secret clearances to persons outside the employment of the United States is a colossal blunder. This bill will allow that.

The courts recognize the executive branch's superior knowledge on military, diplomatic, and national security matters. Judges do not relish the thought of second-guessing decisions made by officials who are better versed on matters that may be jeopardized by allowing attorneys access to classified materials. Similarly, Congress should not relish the thought of second-guessing the judgment of courts that have given careful consideration regarding the appropriate legal standards to balance the interests of judges and national security programs.

The State Securities Protection Act does not protect state secrets. This bill upsets the judicially developed balance between protection of national security and private litigants' access to secret documents. The judicial branch has crafted a state secrets doctrine to give judges the flexibility to weigh these interests with appropriate deference to the executive branch. This judicially crafted doctrine is more than sufficient and has evolved from the 1912 case of Firth Sterling to Reynolds to current cases such as Hepting and Al Masri.

The State Secrets Protection Act is unnecessary and potentially harmful to national security. Unless serious changes are made to this legislation and the amendments offered by myself and my Republican colleagues are adopted, I cannot in good conscience vote this bill out of committee. I do not know how any Senator sitting in this body can do so.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INHOFE. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for 12 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GUANTANAMO

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I have come to the floor over the past several years, countless times, talking about a resource we have called Guantanamo Bay. People refer to it as Gitmo.

I was distressed about some of the statements our President made when he made the comment that we are going to close Gitmo and make sure there is no more torture. I have to say, there has never been one documented case of torture in Guantanamo Bay. It is ludicrous that people would say this. Every time I talk to someone who says we have to close Guantanamo Bay and you ask them what the reason for that is, they turn around and they say: It is because the people in the Middle East and some people in Europe think there is torture that has been going on. It goes back to the Abu Ghraib thing. This had nothing to do with Abu Ghraib. There has never been a documented case of torture.

Let's look at this resource. We got Gitmo in 1903. It is one of the best bargains we have had in government because we only paid $4,000 a year for this. It is a state-of-the-art prison. We don't have anything in the United States that is as secure and as humane as Gitmo. They have a ratio of doctors to detainees of two to one, the same with legal help. I have been down there several times. If you talk to the ones who won't be throwing something at you, they will tell you they have never had food and treatment as good as they have had down there. I can't imagine we would take a resource such as that and close it down and bring some 200 or 240 terrorists to the United States. Yet that is exactly what the President is talking about doing.

I was shocked when I picked up the newspaper on Monday morning and saw that Ahmed Ghailani, who was the terrorist who bombed the embassies in Tanzania and Kenya, was actually brought to the United States. He is in New York today. I didn't know about it until I read it in the newspaper. He is going to be adjudicated or go to trial in our court system.

Here is the problem we have with that. These people in Guantanamo Bay are terrorists, detainees. These are not criminals. These are not people who committed a crime. They are not people to whom the normal rules of evidence would apply. In fact, most of the rules of evidence, it was assumed, would be in the form of military tribunals. Of course, those rules are different than they are in the court system. What will happen when you have some of the worst terrorists in the world coming up and getting tried in our system and we find out they have to be acquitted because the rules of evidence are not what they were during the time they were brought into custody?

We have this resource we have used since 1903. It is the only place in the world we can actually put detainees. The President has said there are some 17 prisons in the United States where we can incarcerate these people. I suggest—and I don't think anyone will refute this—if you did that, you would have 17 magnets for terrorism.

One of the places they suggested happened to be Fort Sill in Oklahoma. I went down to Fort Sill. There is a young lady there who is a sergeant major in charge of our prison. She said: What is wrong with those people in Washington? What is wrong with the President, thinking that we can incarcerate terrorists here in Oklahoma?

This young lady was also a sergeant major at Guantanamo just a few months ago. She went back and she said: That is the greatest facility. There is no place where we can replicate that thing.

She said: On top of that, we have the courtroom that was built.

We spent 12 months and $12 million on a courtroom where we could have military tribunals, and they were going on. And President Obama ordered them to stop, and he wanted to bring them to the United States to be adjudicated here. This is outrageous.

I have heard people on the Senate floor talk about how bad Guantanamo Bay is. They will never be specific. They will never talk about what is wrong with Guantanamo Bay. What are they doing? Are they torturing people? No. Are they being mistreated? No. There are six levels of security. When you are dealing with terrorist detainees, you have to put them in areas where the level of their activity is greater and requires more or less security, and we have that opportunity to do it there. No place else in America, no place else in the world can they do that.

By the way, it is not just 245 detainees whom we have to deal with. It is worse than that because in Afghanistan, with the surge taking place right now, there will be more detainees. There are two major prisons: Bagram—and I can't remember the other one in Afghanistan. They will say they could be incarcerated there. No, they won't, because they won't accept any detainees who are not from Afghanistan. So if they are from Djibouti or from Saudi Arabia or someplace else, we have to have a place to put them or else you turn them loose or else you execute them.

A lot of these people who think they should not be incarcerated in any prison at all, you have to keep in mind, you can't turn them loose on society. These are people who are not normal, people like normal criminals. First of all, they have no fear of death. It is just ingrained in them. These are people who want to kill all of us. So we are talking about very dangerous people.

I am very much concerned. I did not believe President Obama would go through with bringing terrorists to the United States. I didn't think that would happen. Yet I picked up the paper Monday morning and there it is. Ahmed Ghailani, one of the worst terrorists around, killed 244 people, many Americans, in Tanzania and Kenya. This is something that I know the American people don't want. I would hope many of my good Democratic friends are not going to line up and support President Obama in bringing these terrorists to the United States.

I guess I am prejudiced. I have 20 kids and grandkids. I don't want a bunch of terrorists in this country where they are subjected to that type of thing. The fact is, they would be magnets; there is no doubt in my mind. This Sergeant Major Carter at Fort Sill said that if we put them down there, they would be in a position where it would draw terrorist activity to my State of Oklahoma.

By the way, I think there are 27 State legislatures that have passed resolutions saying they don't want any of the detainees located in their States. I can assure my colleagues that every one of the 17 proposed sites that would house these people is a site where they have passed resolutions saying: We don't want them here.

The liberal press is always talking about how bad things are and we have to close Gitmo. If you go down there, you find that those people have never been there. Almost without exception—I don't know of one exception where if they have gone down there and they have seen how humanely people are treated, they have seen a resource down there that we can't replicate any place in the United States, they come back shaking their heads saying: What is wrong with keeping Gitmo open? Even Al Jazeera went down there. That is a Middle Eastern network. They went down and had to admit publicly that the treatment was better there than it is in any of the prisons they are familiar with.

Abu Ghraib was a different situation. Yes, some of our troops were involved in that. Most people wouldn't call it torture. It is more humiliation than anything else. But nonetheless, they did that. But the interesting thing about Abu Ghraib is, prior to the time that the public was aware that was going on, the Army had already come in and started their discipline, and it stopped that type of thing from taking place. But even if it weren't, for people to think just because there was something in their minds that was torture that was going on in Abu Ghraib, to even suggest that was going on in Guantanamo Bay is totally fictitious.

I have been privileged to take several Members down with me to see this firsthand. I think every Member of the Senate should have to go down and see for himself or herself what is really going on down there.

We can't afford to take a chance on turning terrorists loose in the United States. The polling that came out just this morning showed that by a margin of 3 to 1, people do not want to close Guantanamo Bay. We have to keep Gitmo open.

I was in a state of shock when I found out that one of the worst terrorists incarcerated down there was brought back to face justice in our court system in New York.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMENDING NICKY HAYDEN

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Nicky Hayden, a native of Owensboro, KY., who has followed his passion and is an inspiration for all Kentuckians.

Hayden is among the world's elite in Grand Prix motorcycle racing. Driving at speeds of up to 200 miles per hour, with his knees sometimes only inches off of the ground, Hayden has won countless races all over the world.

Nicky's racing career has led him to win the Moto Grand Prix Championship in 2006, the AMA Superbike Championship in 2002, and the AMA Supersport 600 Championship in 1999.

Nicky's parents, Earl and Rose Hayden, could not be more proud of what their son has already accomplished since he began racing at a very young age.

An article in the June 2009 edition of Kentucky Living magazine chronicled Nicky's career, highlighting his exciting and successful career, his extensive travel schedule, and his love of his home State and town. I ask unanimous consent to have the full article printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. President, I further ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the achievements of Nicky Hayden and I wish him continued success throughout his career.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NICKY HAYDEN, THE KENTUCKY KID

(By Gary P. West)

When fans call you The Kentucky Kid and you race throughout the world on a motorcycle at speeds in excess of 200 miles per hour, you better believe you have to be good, real good.

That's what 28-year-old Nicky Hayden from Owensboro does, and as a professional motorcycle racer, who started out in the sport long before he was big enough for his feet to touch the ground while seated, he has become one of the biggest names in the sport.

Nicky was back home in Owensboro, or OWB as he calls it, taking the name from the local airport, on a summer break from an 18-race schedule that begins in March and ends in November.

"I travel 11 months a year," he says. "But I love coming home to my family. Family's important to me. Growing up here with my two brothers and two sisters, I have everything I want. My mom was from a big farm family, 11 brothers and sisters, so my family has always been close. I don't want to live in Monaco or anywhere else like that."

Nicky's parents, Earl and Rose, once upon a time, enjoyed the thrill of going fast on motorcycles themselves. Earl raced often and won on dirt tracks, while Rose competed successfully in "powder puff" leagues, but when their family began to expand, they turned to introducing their three sons to the sport.

While older brother Tommy and younger brother Roger have had successful professional riding stints, it's Nicky who has risen to world-class status winning the MotoGP or Grand Prix, the sport's most elite level of motorcycle racing. As the World Champion in 2006, he has picked up several other accolades that might be expected for a handsome bachelor who hangs out with jetsetters throughout Europe and the United States.

Nicky often finds himself far removed from his Owensboro home in order to race against riders from Italy, Spain, Portugal, Australia, and other countries throughout the world. But it's his return visits to Kentucky and his family and friends that help him keep his Daviess County values.

Swerving through curves, routinely leaning his motorcycle so far on its sides that the friction from the asphalt eats into his knee pucks, Hayden and his cycle appear to defy the law of gravity. Riding on the edge of traction, the slightest loss of concentration and his race is over.

Motorcycle racing, considered by many to be a daredevil sport, has gained its popularity on dirt tracks throughout America over the years. But with the strong influence of his parents, one question begs to be asked. Considering Owensboro's reputation as a hotbed for stock car racing how did the Hayden family stay focused on motorcycles?

With Owensboro names like Waltrip, Green, and Mayfield, all established NASCAR stars, it seems like it would have been easier to catch on with automobile racing.

But Hayden's star was growing at a much earlier age than it takes to get a ride in a car at Daytona.

By the age of 17, and still in high school at Owensboro Catholic, he was racing factory Honda RC45 superbikes and winning. In 2002, at the age of 21, he won the Daytona 200 while becoming the youngest ever to win an AMA Superbike Championship. He was years removed from the days when his parents would hold his bike in place for the start of a race because he was too small to touch the ground.

Soon after, Honda tapped The Kentucky Kid to join what many in the business consider the elite team in MotoGP racing, Repsol Honda. Earning rookie-of-the-year honors on the circuit his first year, his racing togs began to take on more sponsors than an Indy car. A jewelry line, clothing, sunglasses, tires, energy drink, watches, and, of course, Repsol, an oil and gas company operating in more than 30 countries, cover almost every inch of his protective racing ware.

With his boyish good looks and success as an international motorcycle racer, it was of little surprise when Hayden was listed among People magazine's 50 Hottest Bachelors in 2005.

That was followed by appearances on the Today Show, Jay Leno's Tonight Show, and a two-hour documentary on MTV appropriately called The Kentucky Kid, which chronicled his 2006 championship season. "It gave us good exposure in a market we hadn't been in," says Nicky.

Rubbing elbows and shaking hands with the likes of Michael Jordan, Brad Pitt, and Tom Cruise, and seeing your picture on a full-page Honda ad and in USA Today, further points out the two worlds Nicky lives in.

It did not come, however, without some difficulties and second-guessing. Family closeness made Nicky's travels throughout the world difficult at times, especially that first year in MotoGP competition.

"It was another world to me," recalls Nicky. "I was learning the bike, my team, the hectic travel schedule, and everything that went with it. My two brothers and I always trained, practiced, and rode together and then the next year I was out there by myself."

With Nicky and his family growing up on Rose's home-cooked meals, the sudden change in culinary choices as he traveled presented some problems.

"Oh, yeah, food was definitely an issue," his voice rising to emphasize the point. "It's not much fun being on an airplane with food poisoning. There have been several nights I have gone to bed hungry, and when I was in China I lived on watermelon for a while." "At the races I stay in a motor home at the track," he says.

One of the perks of racing at this level is that a motor home is delivered to each of his European races. It also includes an English-speaking satellite television that he says helped to overcome his loneliness.

The entire setting is thousands of miles removed from his Daviess County home, and thousands of thoughts about those days when he couldn't wait to finish high school and race motorcycles. It was his only thought.

"I did just enough in school to get by" to keep my grades up so my parents would let me race. I'm not proud of it, but I was so involved with racing it's about all I could think of," he says.

The brothers would fly out to races all over the U.S. and then catch the red-eye flights back in order to get back to school. It was difficult to stay focused on academics. In his junior year of high school, he had signed a six-figure contract and was driving a new truck. It was easy to see why the 17-year-old was not fully committed to school. In his words, the library and any required research were not a priority.

Racing motorcycles all over the world, Nicky has lost count of the number of countries he's visited. Not only is MotoGP racing fast on the track, but off as well. Nicky and his Repsol Honda teammate Dani Pedrosa, from Spain, travel with a sizeable entourage, finishing one race and immediately heading to another, much like a circus breaking down the Big Top and moving on to the next gig.

"We have about 75 people that go everywhere with us," Nicky says. "We have our own chef who prepares all of the food for the team. Then there are the mechanics, agents, trainers, engineers, tire, and hospitality people. It's a lot of people."

Make no mistake about it, MotoGP racing is big business. The custom Honda motorcycle, according to Nicky, cost in excess of a million dollars to build. The titanium and carbon racing machine is so aerodynamically designed with the very latest in technology that every piece, including the nuts and bolts, is custom-made. For sure this is not an assembly-line product. Weighing 325 pounds and sporting somewhere around 250hp, this mechanized piece of art can blast from 0 to 60 in less than three seconds.

Sponsors pay big bucks to have their names associated with The Kentucky Kid. With it comes a certain amount of pressure to excel. Following his world championship 2006 season, Nicky finished eighth in points. And at the end of the 2008 season, the result was the same, eighth.

"After being a world champion, I put pressure on myself," he says. "I hope my best years are ahead of me. This is a good age in this sport for riders."

When listening to Nicky talk about his racing future, it takes awhile before he says what he wants to do when his riding days are over.

Somehow, the subject just doesn't easily come up unless someone else asks about it.

"I really don't have a plan B," he says. "I know I want to race well into my 30s."

For sure Nicky doesn't have to look very far to see the personal devastation this daredevil sport can dish out or how quickly it could end. Back home in Owensboro last July, Nicky was enjoying several days of a summer break far from MotoGP. Also there were Tommy and Roger, who both ride on the AMA Superbike Tour. But they were home not because they necessarily wanted to be. They were recovering. Roger, who rides a factory bike for Kawasaki, had crashed several weeks earlier in Alabama, breaking his pelvis and vertebrae. A week later, Tommy, a rider for Suzuki, took a hard tumble in California, breaking bones in his back and puncturing a lung.

"It was crazy," says Nicky. "The next week I went down in Portugal but was not seriously injured."

For the most part Hayden has avoided serious injury. In August 2004, however, while training in Italy near Milan, he broke his right collarbone. Following surgery that involved inserting a plate, he was back racing in a few weeks.

Tragedy did strike the Hayden family. In May of 2007, Nicky's second cousin, 10-year-old Ethan Gillim, died as a result of a motorcycle accident in a race in Paducah. Ethan had started racing when he was 4, and in six years attained 18 national dirt track titles.

The Haydens' all three brothers are professionally represented by a management company, International Racers, out of Irvine, California. At the level Nicky is racing, the company has a full-time agent who accompanies him during the season in order to maximize the promotional opportunities for their star client.

A season of MotoGP consists of 18 races held in 16 different countries, and in 2008 two of these races were held in the United States, in Laguna Seca, California, and Indianapolis, Indiana. Throughout Europe, the sport has almost a cult-like following. Televised races attract in excess of 300 million viewers for each event, and another 200,000 frequently show up to see the races live.

"For sure the U.S. market hasn't been tapped," Nicky says. "I know there is an effort now being made to do it."

To help promote that market, just before last year's Indianapolis 500, Nicky blasted two laps around the 2½-mile track, giving car race fans a sampling of what was to come later in September with the 14th round of the 2008 MotoGP.

What will help increase the visibility in this country, perhaps, is for more American riders to achieve success. Currently there are only four, including Hayden, on a circuit dominated by foreign riders and sponsors.

As they should be, all of the Haydens have been well-compensated for their successes. Many Americans may be surprised to learn that Valentino Rossi, considered to be the best motorcycle racer in the world, earns a reported $30 million a year.

At the end of 2008's season, a new twist emerged with some big changes. For some time Nicky and Honda had been at odds, first about the way the manufacturer set his bike up and then it was a tire issue. They wanted Bridgestone tires and Nicky likes Michelin.

Soon the split became too much to overcome and now The Kentucky Kid rides for Ducati, an Italian bike company. He and Australian Casey Stoner are Ducati's featured riders, with Nicky kicking off the 2009 season on his 100th GP race with a new bike, a new team, and a new color.

As Nicky updates his fans on a video on his Web site, www.NickyHayden.com, "Honestly, I think red is a good color for me. I think it could be a good look and anything up front looks good. I mean, I could be up there in pink polka dots if you're winning races, I think you could pull it off."

With Nicky now on a Ducati, Tommy a Suzuki, and Roger a Kawasaki, the three have always been there for each other. All have achieved success in one form or another. The goal, of course, is to be good enough and fast enough to get a podium. In motorcycle racing terms that means first, second, or third. All three have had their share, but like any competitive athlete they want more.

REMEMBERING TAYLOR HENRY CARR, M.D.

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, today I wish to pay tribute to and recognize the passing of a remarkable citizen from my home State of Idaho, Dr. Taylor Henry Carr. He served his country as a gunnery officer in the Navy and he served his community as a doctor and philanthropist. He was a prime example of an American father, citizen, and patriot. He was also my uncle, and I am proud to be his nephew. As a doctor, he did much for the families of Idaho Falls, and, as a philanthropist, he did much for the community itself. Idaho Falls will miss him but will continue to benefit from the efforts of all those whom he influenced.

Dr. Carr's accomplishments attest to his contribution to his community and country. He was a Boy Scout and a gunnery officer in the Navy. He was editor of his college newspaper and student body president. He earned an undergraduate degree in pharmacy and a graduate degree in medicine. Over the course of his career, he served in many different roles including director of the Idaho Cancer Society, president of staff at Sacred Heart Hospital, and on the Board of Directors of the ISU Alumni Association.

Dr. Carr's favorite activities included fishing, golfing, skiing, and reading. He was a devoted husband to his wife Betty and a loving father to his seven children. In 2003, the Carr family won the Idaho Falls Arts Council's annual Support of the Arts award for contributions to the Eagle Rock Art Museum, the renovation of the Museum of Idaho, and the Willard Arts Center, the main gallery of which is named after Taylor and Betty Carr.

I remember, when I was young, spending as much time at my Uncle Carr's house as at my own. I learned a lot from him, as did so many others. He always expected you to be and do your best so as to better live up to your potential. Taylor Henry Carr fully lived up to his potential before passing away on April 24, 2009. He was an excellent example of the great citizens produced by my home State and his life is an excellent example for all Americans to follow.

REMEMBERING JACK HENNING

• Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, it is with a heavy heart that I ask my colleagues to join me today in honoring the memory of an extraordinary labor leader, civil servant, and dear friend of mine, John F. "Jack" Henning. Jack's legendary activism and innovation in the labor movement will serve as a source of inspiration for decades to come. Jack passed away on June 4, 2009. He was 93 years old.

Jack Henning was born in San Francisco on October 25, 1915, to hard-working Irish-American parents. After he graduated from St. Mary's College with a degree in English literature, he began what would become a lifelong and immensely successful career in the labor movement. In 1938, Jack began working for the Association of Catholic Unionists in San Francisco, and in 1949 he was hired by the California Labor Federation.

Recognizing Jack's exemplary leadership, hard work, and compassion for his fellow-man, former California Governor Pat Brown named him director of the California Department of Industrial Relations in 1959. A public servant and leader at both state and federal levels, Jack also served as Under Secretary of Labor under President Kennedy and was later appointed as U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand by President Johnson.

With an already impressive and accomplished career behind him, Jack returned to California in 1970 and continued his life-long effort to improve conditions for working Americans. For 26 years Jack served as the executive secretary-treasurer of the California Labor Federation, AFL-CIO, representing over 2 million workers.

Jack's leadership in the labor movement had a huge impact on workers across California and the Nation. A friend and colleague of Cesar Chavez, Jack worked alongside the United Farm Workers to pass California's groundbreaking Agricultural Labor Relations Act in 1975, which established the right to collective bargaining for farm workers. Jack went on to fight many successful battles for improvements in worker safety and compensation laws.

Jack's belief in, and dedication to, equal rights was not limited to the labor movement. Jack also fought against ignorance and racial discrimination. As the Regent for the University of California from 1977 to 1989, Jack worked to establish affirmative action policies and encouraged the University to divest from South Africa in protest of the country's support of apartheid.

Jack stood out as a driven organizer and hard worker who cared for his community deeply. Jack will be remembered by his friends and partners in the labor movement as a visionary, a talented orator, and stalwart defender of equal rights. He was a champion for workers everywhere, and he will be sorely missed. We take comfort in knowing that the future of the labor movement will continue to benefit from Jack's dedication for generations to come. We will always be grateful for Jack's example of a steadfast commitment to social and economic justice.

Jack is survived by his five sons, John Jr., Patrick, Brian, Daniel, and Thomas; two daughters, Nancy Goulde and Mary Henning; 12 grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. My thoughts are with Jack's family at this difficult time. ●

COMMENDING BARKWHEATS DOG
BISCUITS

• Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, today I wish to recognize the successful and thriving business of a young and insightful entrepreneur from my home State of Maine whose line of dog treats is truly one of a kind.

Barkwheats Dog Biscuits was founded in 2007 by entrepreneur Chris Roberts. A native of the Bangor area, Mr. Roberts left Maine to attend college and pursue a career as a recording engineer in Nashville. Upon returning to Maine, Mr. Roberts found himself baking frequently, a skill he developed while a baker at the University of Maine. This gradually led Mr. Roberts to begin baking for his two dogs, Baxter and Sabine, both rescued mixed-breeds. His passion for cooking soon led him to open Barkwheats, and he began making two varieties of all-natural dog biscuits: sea vegetables and chamomile, as well as ginger and parsley, the latter of which provides relief from dogs' bad breath.

In November 2007, Mr. Roberts began selling the biscuits at local farmers markets and organic cooperatives in the midcoast Maine region, near his home in Stockton Springs, as well as online. In very short order, the product gained immense popularity, due in large part to tourists who purchased the biscuits for their dogs. Upon returning home, these people began clamoring for Barkwheats at their local stores. He now ships his biscuits to dozens of pet stores across the country, including as far away as Alaska. Additionally, Barkwheats' products have been featured in newspapers, blogs, and magazines across the country, including Animal Wellness Magazine and ModernDog. To keep up with the demand, Mr. Roberts also purchased a machine that makes 2,300 biscuits per hour!

Barkwheats biscuits are completely organic, and over 95 percent of the ingredients come from local, Maine farmers in neighboring towns and counties. To support the State's economy and ensure that all items are fresh, Mr. Roberts purchases buckwheat from farmers in Union, eggs from Gouldsboro, parsley from Pittsfield, honey from Swanville, and even seaweed from off the Machias coast. Unable to find a farmer who produced ginger locally, he collaborated with Sustainable Harvest International, a Maine company that helps Central American farmers improve their lives while simultaneously restoring tropical forests, to purchase ginger from southern Belize. As a result of its efforts, Barkwheats Dog Biscuits is expected to be named the first Fair Trade Certified pet treat later this summer. Additionally, in an effort to care for the environment, Barkwheats dog biscuits are packed in 100 percent compostable recycled boxes, as well as bags made from wood pulp.

Chris Roberts' tasty treats represent a truly innovative way to combine supporting the local economy and giving pet owners a healthy, gluten-free option for their dogs. I commend Chris Roberts for his innovation and determination, and wish him continued success with his burgeoning business.●

S. 1232. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act with respect to the importation of prescription drugs, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-27. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah urging the opposition of federal legislation that would interfere with a state's authority to direct the transport or processing of horses; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 7

Whereas, the processing of horses has become a controversial and emotional issue and has resulted in the closing of all horse processing facilities throughout the United States;

Whereas, federal legislation has been introduced to amend the 1970 Horse Protection Act that would prohibit the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines for processing and other purposes;

Whereas, the loss of secondary markets has severely impacted the livestock industry by eliminating the salvage value of horses and has significantly reduced the market value of all horses;

Whereas, prohibitions regarding the processing of horses have resulted in significant increases in abandoned and starving animals and have had significant economic impact on the entire equine industry;

Whereas, the increase in unwanted or unusable horses has overwhelmed private animal welfare agencies and the public's ability to care for surplus domestic horses;

Whereas, the annual number of unwanted or unusable surplus domestic horses in the United States is currently estimated at 100,000 and continues to increase;

Whereas, issues related to the humane handling and slaughter of surplus domestic horses are best addressed by proper regulations and inspection and not by banning or exporting the issues; and

Whereas, state agriculture and rural leaders recognize the necessity and benefit of a state's ability to direct the transport and processing of horses: Now, Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah urges the United States Congress to oppose federal legislation that interferes with a state's ability to direct the transport or processing of horses; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the members of Utah's Congressional delegation.

POM-28. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah urging the National Collegiate Athletic Association to abandon the Bowl Championship Series (BCS) structure in favor of a college football playoff system; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 11

Whereas, the University of Utah football team finished the 2008 football season as the only undefeated football team in Division I-A, with a perfect 13-0 record;

Whereas, the University of Utah football team capped a season-long string of victories at the Sugar Bowl with an impressive 31-17 win over the University of Alabama, which held the number one ranking in the nation for five weeks;

Whereas, during the regular season, the Mountain West Conference had three teams in the Top 25 and had a 6-1 record against Pac-10 teams;

Whereas, in the 2008 season, the University of Utah football team defeated six bowl teams ranked in the Top 25, and won seven games away from home;

Whereas, as the matter currently stands, the University could go undefeated indefinitely and still not compete for a national title;

Whereas, the Bowl Championship Series (BCS) began in 1998 with the intent of crowning a definite national champion;

Whereas, the BCS relies on a combination of polls and computer rankings to determine which teams play in the BCS national championship game and help set the line-ups for the most prestigious bowl games.

Whereas, although the BCS may be an improvement over past championship determinations, the system is still widely acknowledged as falling short of its goal of establishing a definitive college football champion;

Whereas, many experts have candidly criticized the flaws in the BCS system and often use the 2008 University of Utah football team as the strongest argument for the failings of the system; and

Whereas, a national playoff is the only way to be certain that the team crowned as national champion has earned the designation on the gridiron: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Utah strongly urges the National Collegiate Athletic Association to abandon the Bowl Championship Series (BCS) structure for determining the Division I-A national football champion in favor of a playoff system so that all can be assured that the best college football team is the one crowned as national champion; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the BCS, the University of Utah football team, to the members of Utah's congressional delegation, and to President Barack Obama.

POM-29. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah expressing support for the current Bureau of Land Management resource management plans and the process used to complete the plans; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 8

Whereas, because the nation's dependence on foreign sources of energy leaves the economy vulnerable, serious effort must be devoted to decrease the nation's dependency on foreign energy sources;

Whereas, oil and natural gas form an essential bridge to attaining a future of energy independence sustained by alternative and renewable energy sources;

Whereas, the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (Act) mandates that the Federal Bureau of Land Management (BLM) manage public lands for multiple uses such as outdoor recreation, livestock grazing, energy exploration and production, conservation, and timber production;

Whereas, the Act establishes that the BLM sustain the health, diversity, and productivity of public lands for the use and enjoyment of present and future generations;

Whereas, in making decisions about land use, the Act requires the BLM to develop resource management plans and update them periodically;

Whereas, these important land use management decision documents require public input and participation;

Whereas, managing the nation's cherished public lands for multiple uses is a constant challenge;

Whereas, citizens expect the BLM to provide responsible energy and minerals development, recreational opportunities, appropriate access, and healthy landscapes, while still providing an adequate level of resource protection to ensure that future generations will continue to benefit from and enjoy these areas;

Whereas, the resource management plan process, developed by the BLM to accomplish these goals, is thorough, deliberative and very public;

Whereas, resource management plans provide administrative protections to some lands, including major constraints such as no surface occupancy and disturbance timing stipulations;

Whereas, extensive state and community input is invited and submitted both in writing and through the public hearing process;

Whereas, resource management plans for the Moab, Richfield, Price, Vernal, Monticello, and Kanab Field Offices recently went into effect after approximately eight years of development and review;

Whereas, hundreds of thousands of public comments were considered during the Enrolled Copy planning process;

Whereas, new environmental restrictions included in the resource management plans provide multiple layers of safeguards to prevent environmental damage to sensitive natural resources;

Whereas, the proposed plans envision maintaining areas open to oil and gas leasing, but also institute protective measures during development like timing limitations, best management practices, and advanced technology to minimize the footprint of developing important resources;

Whereas, there was no cutting of corners or abridgment of processes in preparing the resource management plans;

Whereas, due to the strong feelings regarding the use of public lands, every private group and government entity involved in the process would like to see some changes in the outcome, but all groups were heard and their concerns given thoughtful and careful consideration;

Whereas, the state of Utah and Uintah, Duchesne, Grand, Emery, San Juan, Sevier,

Garfield, Kane, Wayne, Piute, and Carbon Counties were cooperating agencies in the BLM's development of the current resource management plans and have interests in preserving the plans;

Whereas, upon approval of these management plans, the BLM offered for lease parcels of land which had been set aside for several years pending completion of the resource management plans;

Whereas, leases do not convey an unlimited right to explore or an unlimited right to develop oil and gas resources, but are subject to terms designed to minimize and mitigate the impacts of development;

Whereas, in addition to proposing an accommodation for the nation's pressing need for energy development, the plans also propose protecting public lands within the six planning areas where there are sensitive natural resources, making these lands off limits to surface disturbing activities and unavailable to oil and gas leasing;

Whereas, this type of protection would extend to almost one million acres of public land in addition to nearly two million acres of existing wilderness study areas;

Whereas, a lawsuit has been filed challenging the legality of the BLM's December 19, 2008, sale of oil and gas leases;

Whereas, the state has been granted permission by the Court to defend its interests in the lawsuit by participating as an intervenor;

Whereas, on February 4, 2008, the United States Department of the Interior rejected the bids offered on 77 of the oil and gas leases presented at the December lease sale; and

Whereas, the lawsuit and the oil and gas lease rejections strike at the heart of a careful, deliberative, lengthy public process to develop resource management plans that would benefit Utahns and the citizens of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah, the Governor concurring therein, express strong support for the Federal Bureau of Land Management's resource management plans developed for the Moab, Richfield, Price, Vernal, Monticello, and Kanab, Utah Field Offices, and most particularly for the lengthy, thoughtful, and public process used to develop the plans; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature and the Governor oppose current actions taken that may contest and delay implementation of the resource management plans; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature and the Governor request that the Department of the Interior expedite a review of the 77 bid-rejected parcels to determine which may be offered for leasing in the near future; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the United States Department of the Interior, the Federal Bureau of Land Management and its Utah office, the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance, the Uintah, Duchesne, Grand, Emery, San Juan, Sevier, Garfield, Kane, Wayne, Piute, and Carbon County Commissions, the Moab, Richfield, Price, Vernal, Monticello, and Kanab City Councils, the Utah Public Lands Policy Coordination Office, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-30. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah supporting the establishment of an Alternative Energy Training Center in Beaver County, Utah; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 10

Whereas, the United States relies heavily on foreign sources of energy;

Whereas, to sustain economic growth in the state and throughout the nation, it will be necessary to invest resources in all forms of power generation, including traditional sources such as coal, natural gas, and nuclear as well as renewable resources such as geothermal, wind, and solar;

Whereas, the Utah Renewable Energy Zones Task Force Phase I Report indicates that theoretical potential resources within Utah include 16,500 fifty megawatt solar renewable energy zones, 51 wind renewable energy zones with a combined generating capacity of approximately 9,145 megawatts, and a total of 2,166 megawatts of geothermal development potential, the bulk of which is located in rural Utah;

Whereas, with the Blundell Geothermal Plant, the newly commissioned Thermo Hot Springs Plant, and the more than 200 megawatt First Wind Project which is currently being developed, Beaver County has either under construction or in production close to 300 megawatts of renewable resource generating capacity, and many of the state's most significant undeveloped resources converge in Beaver County;

Whereas, as renewable generation becomes more widespread in the region, there will be a need to provide training opportunities to people working in that industry;

Whereas, the Milford High School Technology Department has played a key role in attracting investment in renewable energy generation to the Southwest region of the state and has led the way in preparing young people for promising careers in that industry;

Whereas, the Southwest Applied Technology College in Cedar City is offering classes related to renewable energy in Milford;

Whereas, Milford is an ideal site for a certified renewable energy training center because it has a core of leaders who are willing to make the region the center of renewable energy generation in the state and are prepared to meet any energy goal the state sets;

Whereas, as resource development expands, production of the components of solar generation, wind turbines, and similar equipment also provides opportunities for new and expanded manufacturing businesses in rural Utah where economic development is desperately needed and will increase the need for trained workers;

Whereas, the construction of utility scale renewable energy projects provides unprecedented economic development opportunities for counties lacking traditional energy producing resources; and

Whereas, providing a training center in Utah for renewable energy resource technologies and jobs will enable Utahns to better compete for these new energy resource jobs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses its support for the development and certification of an Alternative Energy Training Center in Beaver County; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Beaver County Commission, the Milford High School Technology Department, Utah's Energy Advisor, the State Energy Program, the Southwest Applied Technology College, Rocky Mountain Power, First Wind, Raser Technologies, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-31. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah supporting new nuclear power development in Utah; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 16

Whereas, Utah and the surrounding western states have experienced increased new electricity demands and have forecasted continued increases over the next several decades;

Whereas, Utah requires affordable and abundant energy for homes and businesses to maintain and grow its economy;

Whereas, Utah and the surrounding areas will likely suffer significant financial difficulties without new reliable and affordable electric generating resources being built, adding to and prolonging the depressed economy;

Whereas, Utah enjoys and continues to rely on cost effective coal fired power plants for 85% of its electric generation;

Whereas, Utah's ability to build any new significant coal fired power plants is limited;

Whereas, new emission controls, carbon capture technology, carbon sequestration, and advance coal combustion technologies should be encouraged, but are not projected to be commercially feasible and cost effective for at least 25 years;

Whereas, new natural gas electric generation could increase the volatility of retail electric prices and retail natural gas prices;

Whereas, hydro power resources are constrained and not expected to expand in capacity;

Whereas, nationwide nuclear power provides low cost, long term, stable retail and wholesale pricing for customers;

Whereas, the United States Congress and the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission worked together to improve the old process for licensing new nuclear power plants;

Whereas, the new nuclear power plant licensing process presently includes a "one step" Combined Operating License (COL) procedure, which combines construction and operating license applications and reviews into a single process;

Whereas, the new licensing process is more efficient, predictable, and reliable;

Whereas, three Early Site Permits for new nuclear plants, one of the new licensing processes now in place, have been issued with little or no delays from adjudication;

Whereas, the estimated time frame to complete a new nuclear COL is five years;

Whereas, the development of nuclear power plants will provide significant economic benefits to the local, regional, and state populations in the form of many high paying jobs and additional tax revenues;

Whereas, the construction of a new nuclear facility would inject billion of dollars into Utah's economy in the form of 3,500 construction jobs during a two unit construction period spanning up to seven years;

Whereas, one proposed site in Utah would contribute over $2 million in 2009 to the State Institutional Trust Lands Fund;

Whereas, operations of two new generation units would provide approximately 800 jobs for highly skilled workers over the plant's 60 year projected lifetime;

Whereas, the needed regulatory and legal framework to deploy safe, secure, and cost competitive nuclear power in Utah is in place;

Whereas, Utah already has a nuclear reactor at the University of Utah;

Whereas, the University of Utah Training Research and Isotope Production, General Atomics research reactor in Salt Lake City has been operating safely since 1975;

Whereas, the United States' nuclear industry has accumulated almost 3,400 reactor years of operation since the first plant started up in 1957 without serious injury or death to a single member of the public;

Whereas, the current practice of storing spent fuel in wet or dry storage containers at a nuclear power plant has been proven safe since commercial nuclear power began in 1957;

Whereas, 95% of the energy from a nuclear reactor's spent fuel has significant value and can be reprocessed or recycled for use as fuel in the future when this option is commercialized in the United States;

Whereas, spent fuel from a nuclear reactor is valuable;

Whereas, France, Japan, Russia, the United Kingdom, and Germany currently recycle or reprocess spent fuel successfully; and

Whereas, there is no scientific or safety rationale requiring the near term movement of spent fuel from the power plants where it is generated, and fuel can be safely and securely stored on site for up to 100 years without environmental impacts; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah urges that new nuclear power development be pursued within the boundaries of the state; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature urges that commercial development of new nuclear power be pursued in the state due to its beneficial impact on the economy, fuel diversification, and the environment, and its impressive operational safety and security record, in particular the fact that no member of the public has been seriously injured by operation of the 104 nuclear power plants currently operating in the United States; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature declares that nuclear power has been shown to be a viable cost effective option, that current rate payer protection laws and regulations are sufficient, and that no new legislation or special action is needed for the Public Service Commission to recognize nuclear power as a prudent investment; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature recognizes that no appropriations are needed for special committees or programs to determine whether a nuclear power plant can be built in Utah because the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission will review and adjudicate the licensing, as needed, and nuclear developers will pay for those costs; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature encourages investor-owned and municipally owned utilities and power marketers and traders to consider participating in a nuclear power project in Utah; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature recognizes commercial nuclear power plants as market-based, commercially competitive enterprises due to their safety and security record, the science and performance data, and the economic performance of the present power plants; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the United States Secretary of Energy, Governor Huntsman, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-32. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Utah urging Congress and the Bureau of Reclamation to support development of the Narrows Water Project in Central Utah; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 2

Whereas, water is fundamental to the economic base of Central Utah communities, and reliable water storage is necessary for both agricultural and municipal development;

Whereas, agricultural and municipal interests in Central Utah, including Sanpete County, suffer substantial economic hardship because of the lack of water storage facilities;

Whereas, in the early 1900s, local, state, and federal government officials acknowledged the need for water storage in Sanpete County and began efforts to develop the Narrows Water Project;

Whereas, reliable studies by multiple expert water engineering firms have determined the Narrows Water Project to be the least expensive, most cost-effective, and most environmentally sound means of storing water for Sanpete County;

Whereas, various studies, including a recent independent study by Utah State University, show Sanpete County to be among Utah's most effective users of modern conservation methods to conserve the water that is presently available to the county;

Whereas, the Bureau of Reclamation recognized the need for water storage in Sanpete County, and as early as the 1930s proposed a plan that would provide water storage for both Sanpete and Carbon Counties;

Whereas, the component of the Bureau of Reclamation's plan that would provide water storage for Sanpete County was never implemented, initially due to a disruption caused by World War II, and more recently by various questions regarding ownership of the water;

Whereas, numerous judicial decisions have now clearly established and defined the water rights involved in the Narrows Water Project;

Whereas, legal agreements between Sanpete County, Carbon County, the state of Utah, and various federal entities have recognized Carbon and Sanpete Counties' water rights from Gooseberry Creek; and

Whereas, the residents of Sanpete County, at great financial sacrifice, have waited for almost a century for the Narrows Water Project water storage facility that was promised to them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the state of Utah expresses support for the Narrows Water Project in Central Utah; be it further

Resolved, That the Senate urges Congress and the United States Bureau of Reclamation to support the development of the Narrows Water Project in Central Utah; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Bureau of Reclamation and to Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-33. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah supporting producing hydrogen from coal with carbon capture and sequestration (CCS) technology; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 12

Whereas, coal is one of Utah's most abundant resources and contributes substantially to Utah's economy;

Whereas, coal is an affordable base load fuel providing reliable electric power;

Whereas, demonstration of advanced coal technology for power generation can accelerate the development of the hydrogen energy economy in Utah;

Whereas, producing hydrogen from coal with carbon capture and sequestration (CCS) for newly permitted developments is one possible technology, among many, that has the potential to reduce carbon emissions and help protect and grow Utah's economy while continuing a strong commitment to a clean environment;

Whereas, advanced hydrogen from coal technology and CCS technology as proposed for potential next generation power plants in Utah would produce fewer carbon emissions than conventionally fueled power plants;

Whereas, the new advanced coal technology gasifies coal to produce a mixture of carbon dioxide, hydrogen, and other gases;

Whereas, the clean burning hydrogen can be used to fuel a power plant and the carbon dioxide can be captured and stored using geologic sequestration technology;

Whereas, CCS technology provides for the removal of carbon dioxide from fuel gases, reducing emission into the atmosphere;

Whereas, CCS technology will be crucial to reducing emission of carbon dioxide from newly permitted power plants specifically designed to use CCS technology while still meeting growing energy demand in a responsible manner with domestic fuel;

Whereas, CCS technology can be important to maintain Utah's position as a leader in energy technology and production;

Whereas, CCS technology will enable Utah to use its abundant coal resources while still meeting potential new regulations limiting carbon emissions and protecting and creating high-paying jobs in Utah;

Whereas, Utah's geological characteristics support sequestration technology;

Whereas, Utah is uniquely positioned to potentially lead and benefit from hydrogen production from coal and CCS technology;

Whereas, Utah's support of producing hydrogen from coal and CCS technology could place Utah businesses at the forefront of the new hydrogen and carbon economies;

Whereas, the state welcomes the potential jobs, tax base, economic enhancements and leadership position that could come with supporting advanced coal technology with CCS;

Whereas, the Public Service Commission should consider authorizing the recovery of cost-effective and prudently incurred costs that reduce carbon emissions;

Whereas, the Public Service Commission should consider hydrogen production from coal and CCS technology to be a reasonable investment for protecting the long-term interests of Utah's utility rate payers;

Whereas, the Legislature supports approving cost recovery of cost-effective and prudent investment in these technologies as determined by the Public Service Commission; and

Whereas, the Legislature supports resolving liability issues stemming from future adverse effects of sequestered carbon and believes the federal government is in the best position to provide a comprehensive liability solution: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses support for producing hydrogen production from coal with carbon capture and sequestration (CCS) technology as a means of strengthening Utah's economy and helping Utah to stand at the forefront of energy production; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature urges the Public Service Commission to consider authorizing recovery of cost-effective and prudently incurred costs that reduce carbon emissions and increase Utah's and the nation's energy security; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature recommends that the Public Service Commission consider hydrogen production from coal and CCS technology to be a reasonable investment for protecting the long-term interests of Utah's utility rate payers; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature supports approving cost recovery of cost-effective and prudent investment in these technologies as determined by the Public Service Commission; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature supports balanced consideration and research to explore all technologies that will continue to maximize future use and availability of coal and gas in an environmentally sound manner; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Utah's Energy Advisor, the State Energy Program, the Public Service Commission, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-34. A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Utah urging Congress and the Bureau of Reclamation to support development of the Narrows Water Project in Central Utah; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

POM-35. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah urging Congress to preserve the exemption for hydraulic fracturing in the Safe Drinking Water Act and to refrain from passing legislation that would remove the hydraulic fracturing exemption; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 17

Whereas, the United States Congress passed the Safe Drinking Water Act (Act) to assure the protection of the nation's drinking water sources;

Whereas, since the enactment of the Act, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has never interpreted hydraulic fracturing as constituting "underground injection" within the Act;

Whereas, in 2004, the EPA published a final report summarizing a study to evaluate the potential threat to underground sources of drinking water from hydraulic fracturing of coal bed methane production wells and the EPA concluded that "additional or further study is not warranted at this time . . ." and "that the injection of hydraulic fracturing fluids into coal bed methane wells poses minimal threat" to underground sources of drinking water;

Whereas, in the Energy Policy Act of 2005, the United States Congress explicitly exempted hydraulic fracturing from the provisions of the Act;

Whereas, the Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission (IOGCC) conducted a survey of oil and gas producing states which found that there were no known cases of groundwater contamination associated with hydraulic fracturing;

Whereas, hydraulic fracturing is currently, and has been for decades, a common operation used in exploration and production by the oil and gas industry in all the member states of the IOGCC without groundwater damage;

Whereas, approximately 35,000 wells are hydraulically fractured in the United States annually, and close to 1,000,000 wells have been hydraulically fractured in the United States since the technique's inception, with no known harm to groundwater;

Whereas, the regulation of oil and gas exploration and production activities, including hydraulic fracturing, has traditionally been the province of the states;

Whereas, the Act was never intended to grant to the federal government authority to regulate oil and gas drilling and production operations, such as "hydraulic fracturing," under the Underground Injection Control program;

Whereas, the member states of the IOGCC have adopted comprehensive laws and regulations to provide safe operations and to protect the nation's drinking water sources, and have trained personnel to effectively regulate oil and gas exploration and production;

Whereas, production of coal seam natural gas, natural gas from shale formations, and natural gas from tight conventional reservoirs is increasingly important to our domestic natural gas supply and will be even more important in the future;

Whereas, domestic production of natural gas will ensure that the United States continues on the path to energy independence;

Whereas, hydraulic fracturing plays a major role in the development of virtually all unconventional oil and gas resources and, in the absence of any evidence that such fracturing has damaged the environment, should not be limited;

Whereas, regulation of hydraulic fracturing as underground injection under the Act would impose significant administrative costs on the state and substantially increase the cost of drilling oil and gas wells with no resulting environmental benefits; and

Whereas, regulation of hydraulic fracturing as underground injection under the Act would increase energy costs to the consumer; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses support for maintaining the exemption of hydraulic fracturing in the Safe Drinking Water Act and urges the United States Congress to refrain from passing legislation that would remove the exemption for hydraulic fracturing; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-36. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah urging the Environmental Protection Agency to address the problems associated with its configuration of nonattainment areas relating to Utah; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 5

Whereas, on December 23, 2008, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) published county nonattainment designations for the federal air quality standard (NAAQS) for the fine particulate known as PM2.5;

Whereas, the EPA designated a total of three PM2.5 nonattainment areas within the state;

Whereas, the first area is Utah County; the second area is Salt Lake, Davis, and Weber Counties and portions of Box Elder and Tooele Counties; and the third area is Cache County and Franklin County, Idaho;

Whereas, designating areas two and three as nonattainment areas is contrary to the designations originally recommended by the state;

Whereas, the state has made a strong commitment to conservation and protection of the environment, and Utahns place a high value on the state's natural resources, including clean air;

Whereas, the state is also growing both in terms of population and businesses that offer jobs to local residents;

Whereas, Utahns are concerned not only with being good stewards of their natural environment, but also fostering strong economic development;

Whereas, the state recommendation for designation for certain counties as nonattainment for PM2.5 will lead to an accurate, timely, and fair resolution of PM2.5 nonattainment issues;

Whereas, the result may create a misperception that Utah has a bigger and more wide-spread air quality problem than is actually true;

Whereas, the current nonattainment area designations made by the EPA have created several problems that must be rectified as soon as possible;

Whereas, one of the PM2.5 nonattainment areas designated by the EPA includes all or a portion of five counties, and these overly broad designations should be pared back;

Whereas, the EPA should not designate areas as nonattainment until it has actual monitoring data justifying such a designation;

Whereas, in the case of Box Elder and Tooele Counties, it is clear that the designations include areas that have pristine air quality and do not exceed the NAAQS;

Whereas, for example, the portion of Tooele County designated "nonattainment" by the EPA includes the Deseret Peak Wilderness Area within the Stansbury Mountain Range;

Whereas, air quality in this wilderness area is widely known to be excellent, particularly in and around the pristine areas of the 11,000 foot Deseret Peak;

Whereas, there is no reason for the EPA to create a nonattainment area in a national wilderness area;

Whereas, one of the PM2.5 nonattainment areas designated by the EPA includes both Cache County in Utah and Franklin County in Idaho, creating a single nonattainment area with jurisdiction under agencies of two different states, and the EPA further creates a nonattainment area under the jurisdiction of two different EPA regions, Region 8 and Region 10; and

Whereas, interstate designations should be eliminated and the EPA should either divide the designation into two nonattainment areas or agree that Cache County can be redesignated attainment for PM2.5 on its own, with oversight solely by EPA Region 8, if monitoring data shows that the NAAQS has not been exceeded; Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah, the Governor concurring therein, urge the EPA to adopt the recommendation for PM2.5 designation as proposed by the state of Utah; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the United States Environmental Protection Agency, the members of Utah's congressional delegation, and to the Utah Department of Environmental Quality.

POM-37. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah expressing strong opposition to any federal legislation that would expand the reach and scope of the Clean Water Act; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 6

Whereas, over the past 35 years, the federal Clean Water Act, supported by other federal, state, and local laws, has governed the nation's waters and has helped ensure that Americans enjoy the cleanest rivers and lakes in the world;

Whereas, this landmark statute, further explained and clarified by subsequent Supreme Court cases, has struck a proper balance between clean water and state, local, and federal regulatory authority and responsibilities, while at the same time recognizing and protecting state primacy over water jurisdiction;

Whereas, the proposed Clean Water Restoration Act of 2007, H.R. 2421 and S. 1870, and similar legislation, attempts to make extreme changes to the Clean Water Act and threatens to destroy the careful inter-governmental balance that has been the hallmark of the law throughout its long history;

Whereas, the proposed federal legislation would change federal jurisdiction over water by expanding the definition from "navigable" to "waters of the United States" over which federal jurisdiction extends;

Whereas, that language change would allow federal reach to explicitly include "all interstate and intrastate waters and their tributaries . . .”, essentially establishing under federal law that all wet areas within a state, or areas that have been wet at some time, would fall under federal regulatory authority, including groundwater, ditches, pipes, streets, gutters, desert features, and even pools and puddles;

Whereas, this legislation would give the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the United States Army Corps of Engineers (Corps) authority over “all interstate and intrastate waters,” including non-navigable waters, thereby granting to Congress authority far beyond the original scope of the Clean Water Act;

Whereas, this legislation patently exceeds Congress’s constitutional powers, as “non-navigable” waters are unlikely to fall under the Commerce Clause, the principle-enumerated power upon which Congress has relied for passage of environmental laws;

Whereas, this legislation would dramatically expand the reach of the federal bureaucracy, would fundamentally erode the ability of state and local governments to manage their own water resources, and would cause an avalanche of new unfunded mandates to envelope state and local governments;

Whereas, this legislation would essentially grant the EPA and the Corps veto authority over local land use policies, and would grant the EPA and the Corps authority to regulate virtually all activities, private or public, that may affect “waters of the United States,” regardless of whether the activity is occurring in, or may impact, water at all;

Whereas, this legislation would eliminate existing regulatory limitations that allow common sense uses, including prior converted cropland and waste treatment systems, since the proposed definition does not include any regulatory limitations;

Whereas, this omission is particularly important because the existing rules acknowledge two important limitations covering prior converted cropland and waste treatment systems designed to meet Clean Water Act requirements;

Whereas, this legislation’s expanded definition would burden state and local governments administratively and financially and would thrust unfunded mandates on state and local governments by imposing significant new administrative responsibilities upon them;

Whereas, this legislation would require changes at the state level by impacting comprehensive land use plans, floodplain regulations, building and special codes, and watershed and storm water plans;

Whereas, local governments will also be impacted because they are responsible for a number of public infrastructure projects, including water supply, solid waste disposal, road and drainage channel maintenance, storm water detention, mosquito control, and construction projects; and

Whereas, local government efforts to carry out maintenance of government-owned buildings, including hospitals, schools, and municipal offices, could also be adversely impacted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah, the Governor concurring therein, express its strong opposition to any federal legislation that would expand the reach and scope of the Clean Water Act, and express their commitment to the goals and objectives of the original Act to keep our waters clean; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature and the Governor assert that it is not in the nation’s interest to regulate ditches, culverts and pipes, desert washes, dry arroyos, farmland, and treatment ponds as “waters of the United States” and therefore subjecting these waters to all of the requirements of federal regulation; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature and the Governor call upon Congress to preserve the traditional power of states over land and water use and avoid unnecessary alterations to the regulatory reach of the Clean Water Act amendments as proposed in the Clean Water Restoration Act of 2007 and similar federal legislation; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature and the Governor express their opposition to enacting the Clean Water Restoration Act of 2007 as proposed, as being without merit or justification based on 35 years of experience under the original Act as modified by court decisions and practice; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the members of Utah’s congressional delegation.

POM-38. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah supporting the withdrawal of the United States’ World Trade Organization commitments on gambling; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 1

Whereas, the World Trade Organization (WTO) Dispute Resolution Body found the United States to have made a commitment under the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) in the category of “Other Recreational Services” that covered gambling services;

Whereas, the Appellate Body of the WTO acknowledged the importance of “public morals” concerns in this WTO dispute and the legitimacy of the United States “public morals” defense in this case;

Whereas, states have considerable authority to regulate and prohibit various forms of gambling;

Whereas, a number of states communicated with the Office of the United States Trade Representative (USTR) to express their concern about the WTO decision and its implications for public morals and for state regulation of gambling;

Whereas, the USTR took steps last year to rescind the United States’ commitment in “Other Recreational Services,” consistent with the wishes of states as expressed through letters and direct communications to USTR, as well as the wishes of Congress as exemplified by the Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act;

Whereas, in withdrawing this commitment, the United States had to offer compensatory adjustments in its overall schedule of GATS commitments, providing market access opportunities to United States’ trading partners in other sectors;

Whereas, the United States has signed Free Trade Agreements with a number of nations that are home to major on-line gambling operations;

Whereas, the London-based Remote Gambling Association has already filed a complaint with the European Union asking that Europe bring a new WTO claim against the United States on gambling; and

Whereas, the Utah Legislature created the Utah International Trade Commission in 2006 as a legislative commission to address international trade issues: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses its gratitude to the USTR for its forthright position in the WTO gambling commitments dispute, and its willingness to withdraw the United States’ commitment under “Other Recreational Services” once it was determined that this commitment covered gambling; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah recognizes that this action reflects the increasing responsiveness of the USTR in addressing the legitimate regulatory concerns of states in light of international trade commitments undertaken by the federal government; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses its concern that the terms of the agreement whereby the United States withdrew the commitment under “Other Recreational Services” were withheld from members of Congress, the Intergovernmental Policy Advisory Committee (IGPAC), and state oversight commissions on international trade; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses its concern that the USTR’s recent actions are an effort to bypass Congress and IGPAC by proposing a solution outside of the constitutional United States Senate treaty ratification process; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses its concern that United States’ trading partners may attempt to bring further claims against federal and state gambling laws under trade and investment agreements that lack the “public morals” exception found in the WTO GATS; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the WTO, USTR, Utah Congressional delegation, and members of the U.S. Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees.

POM-39. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah urging Congress to grant the state of Utah waivers to establish an employer-sponsored work program and other strategies to address illegal immigration in the state; to the Committee on Finance.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 1

Whereas, illegal immigration is an increasing concern in many states, including the state of Utah;

Whereas, recent attempts by Congress to make major reforms in immigration law have stalled;

Whereas, without definitive direction from the federal government, states are struggling to adequately address the many issues surrounding illegal immigration within their respective borders;

Whereas, there is an increasing need for state and local governments to address problems associated with illegal immigration, most particularly in the area of job employment;

Whereas, federal waivers would greatly increase the state of Utah’s capacity to address current illegal immigration challenges;

Whereas, a federal waiver would be required for Utah to institute an employer-sponsored work program providing a two-year, renewable guest worker authorization for foreign workers;

Whereas, a second waiver is needed to withhold FICA and Medicare revenue and apply it toward the costs of the program;

Whereas, the proposed employer-sponsored work program will allow for Utah to deal with its current undocumented population in a fair manner;

Whereas, the employer-sponsored work program would also address Utah’s need for both unskilled and skilled laborers while ensuring that all available local workers are given ample opportunity to meet that need;

Whereas, if granted a waiver, Utah's employer-sponsored work program should require that potential workers register as a worker with the state, be fingerprinted, have their names processed through the Interagency Border Inspection Name Check System, pass a medical exam, be sponsored by their employer, have health and automobile insurance, and have funds withheld by their employer to cover health insurance and the administrative costs of the work program;

Whereas, through the granting of federal waivers allowing the state to provide the employer-sponsored work program, the state of Utah can address many challenges regarding illegal immigration issues its citizens currently face; and

Whereas, the employer-sponsored work program combines opportunity with enforcement in a responsible manner: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah, the Governor concurring therein, urge the United States Congress to grant the state of Utah waivers to implement an employer-sponsored work program, and to withhold federal FICA and Medicare revenue and apply it toward the health insurance and other administrative costs of the program; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement, United States Department of Homeland Security, the President of the United States, the members of Utah's Congressional Delegation, the Utah Labor Commission, and the Utah Department of Workforce Services.

POM-40. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Utah urging the Government of Turkey to grant the Ecumenical Patriarch international recognition and to respect the property rights and human rights of the Ecumenical Patriarchate; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 1

Whereas, the Ecumenical Patriarchate, located in Istanbul, Turkey, is the Sacred See that presides in a spirit of brotherhood over a communion of self-governing churches of the Orthodox Christian world;

Whereas, the See is led by Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, who is the 269th in direct succession to the Apostle Andrew and holds titular primacy as primus inter pares, meaning "first among equals," in the community of Orthodox churches worldwide;

Whereas, in 1994, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, along with leaders of the Appeal of Conscience Foundation, cosponsored the Conference on Peace and Tolerance, which brought together Christian, Jewish, and Muslim religious leaders for an interfaith dialogue to help end the Balkan conflict and the ethnic conflict in the Caucasus region;

Whereas, in 1997, the United States Congress awarded Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew the Congressional Gold Medal;

Whereas, following the terrorist attacks on our nation on September 11, 2001, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew gathered a group of international religious leaders to produce the first joint statement with Muslim leaders that condemned the attacks as "antireligious";

Whereas, in October 2005, the Ecumenical Patriarch, along with Christian, Jewish, and Muslim leaders, cosponsored the Conference on Peace and Tolerance II to further promote peace and stability in southeastern Europe, the Caucasus region, and Central Asia via religious leaders' interfaith dialogue, understanding, and action;

Whereas, the Orthodox Christian Church, in existence for nearly 2,000 years, numbers approximately 300 million members worldwide with more than 2 million members in the United States;

Whereas, since 1453, the continuing presence of the Ecumenical Patriarchate in Turkey has been a living testament to the religious coexistence of Christians and Muslims;

Whereas, this religious coexistence is in jeopardy because the Ecumenical Patriarchate is considered a minority religion by the Turkish government;

Whereas, the Government of Turkey has limited the candidates available to hold the office of Ecumenical Patriarch to only Turkish nationals;

Whereas, from the millions of Orthodox Christians living in Turkey at the turn of the 20th century and due to the continued policies during this period by the Turkish government, there remain less than 3,000 of the Ecumenical Patriarch's flock left in Turkey today;

Whereas, the Government of Turkey closed the Theological School on the island of Halki in 1971 and has refused to allow it to reopen, thus impeding training for Orthodox Christian clergy;

Whereas, the Turkish government has confiscated nearly 94% of the Ecumenical Patriarchate's properties and has placed a 42% tax, retroactive to 1999, on the Baloukli Hospital and Home for the Aged, a charity hospital run by the Ecumenical Patriarchate;

Whereas, the European Union, a group of nations with a common goal of promoting peace and the well-being of its peoples, began accession negotiations with Turkey on October 3, 2005;

Whereas, the European Union defined membership criteria for accession at Copenhagen European Council in 1993, obligating candidate countries to achieve certain levels of reform, including stability of institutions guaranteeing democracy, adherence to the rule of law, and respect for and protection of minorities and human rights;

Whereas, the Turkish government's current treatment of the Ecumenical Patriarchate is inconsistent with the membership conditions and goals of the European Union;

Whereas, Orthodox Christians in Utah and throughout the United States stand to lose their spiritual leader because of the continued actions of the Turkish government; and

Whereas, the Archons of the Ecumenical Patriarchate of the Order of St. Andrew the Apostle, a group of laymen who each have been honored with a patriarchal title, or "offikion," by the Ecumenical Patriarch for their outstanding service to the Orthodox Church, will send an American delegation to Turkey to meet with Turkish government officials, as well as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Turkey, regarding the Turkish government's treatment of the Ecumenical Patriarchate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the state of Utah urges the Government of Turkey to uphold and safeguard religious and human rights without compromise and cease its discrimination of the Ecumenical Patriarchate; be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of the state of Utah urges the Government of Turkey to grant the Ecumenical Patriarch appropriate international recognition, ecclesiastic succession, and the right to train clergy of all nationalities, and to respect the property rights and human rights of the Ecumenical Patriarchate; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Turkey, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-41. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah urging the Obama Administration to support the efforts of the Republic of China (Taiwan) to meaningfully participate in the specialized agencies of the United Nations; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 5

Whereas, the mission of the United Nations, as stated in the preamble to the United Nations Charter, is to "reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small";

Whereas, similarly, Article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, "Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms . . . without distinction of any kind . . . no distinction shall be made on the basis of political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs . . .";

Whereas, the global issues addressed by the specialized agencies of the United Nations are closely connected to the well-being of all mankind;

Whereas, as Taiwan cannot attend the conferences, mechanisms, and activities of the specialized agencies, the welfare of its people, as well as the interests of all humankind, have been seriously jeopardized;

Whereas, Taiwan has been campaigning for participation in the World Health Organization (WHO) for years, but has been unable to establish direct access to and communication with the WHO regarding disease prevention;

Whereas, Taiwan is restricted from attending WHO technical conferences and activities and as a result Taiwan can neither acquire the latest medical and health updates nor receive timely assistance when epidemics occur, as was the case with the SARS outbreak;

Whereas, as early as May 2006, Taiwan announced its decision to comply voluntarily with the International Health Regulations (IHR 2005) that went into effect June 15, 2007;

Whereas, although Taiwan has repeatedly submitted updates to the WHO about various diseases, the WHO has not responded;

Whereas, this has been detrimental to the health rights of the 23 million people of Taiwan and foreigners residing in and traveling to Taiwan;

Whereas, it also creates a weakness in the global epidemic surveillance network which can harm the international community;

Whereas, being the world's 18th largest economy and the 20th largest outbound investor, Taiwan possesses significant economic strength;

Whereas, Taiwan hopes to share its development experience with many developing nations;

Whereas, Taiwan is also willing to give back to the world through humanitarian assistance and technical cooperation;

Whereas, the issues that the specialized agencies of the United Nations system handle tend to be functional and technical in nature; and

Whereas, allowing Taiwan's participation with these specialized agencies would be helpful for the two sides of the Taiwan Strait to set aside differences and strengthen cooperation on issues of mutual concern, thereby gradually reducing friction and promoting stability and prosperity in the Asia-Pacific region: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah urges the Obama Administration to support Taiwan and its 23 million people in obtaining appropriate and meaningful participation in the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including the World Health Organization; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature urges that United States policy include the pursuit of an initiative in the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, such as the World Health Organization, which would give Taiwan meaningful participation in a manner that is consistent with the respective organization's requirements; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the United States Secretary of State, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the members of Utah's congressional delegation, the Government of Taiwan, the United Nations, and the World Health Organization.

POM-42. A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Utah urging the Government of Turkey to grant the Ecumenical Patriarch international recognition and to respect the property rights and human rights of the Ecumenical Patriarchate; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

POM-43. A resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah designating September 2009 as Hydrocephalus Awareness Month, and urges the federal government to create a national registry for collecting comprehensive statistics and data regarding hydrocephalus; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 3

Whereas, hydrocephalus is a serious neurological condition characterized by the abnormal buildup of cerebrospinal fluids in the ventricles of the brain;

Whereas, there is no known cure for hydrocephalus, which affects an estimated one million Americans;

Whereas, one in every 2,700 infants are born with hydrocephalus;

Whereas, more than 375,000 older Americans have hydrocephalus, which often remains undetected or incorrectly diagnosed as dementia, Alzheimer's disease, or Parkinson's disease;

Whereas, with appropriate diagnosis and treatment, people with hydrocephalus have the opportunity to live full and productive lives;

Whereas, the standard treatment for hydrocephalus was developed in 1952 and unfortunately carries multiple risks including shunt failure, infection, and over drainage;

Whereas, each year American taxpayers spend more than $1 billion to treat hydrocephalus;

Whereas, the Hydrocephalus Association is one of the nation's oldest and largest patient and research advocacy and support networks for individuals suffering from hydrocephalus; and

Whereas, the federal government should create a registry for collecting data and statistics on the impact of hydrocephalus: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the state of Utah designates September 2009 as Hydrocephalus Awareness Month in the state of Utah; be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of the state of Utah urges the federal government to create a national registry for collecting comprehensive statistics and data regarding hydrocephalus and its impact on American families; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Hydrocephalus Association, the United States Department of Health and Human Services, the Utah Department of Health, and to the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-44. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah supporting congressional action related to the Navajo Nation's ability to collect and track child support payments; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 5

Whereas, the Navajo Nation is the largest Native American tribe within the boundaries of the United States and is larger than ten of the 50 states;

Whereas, Navajo children under the age of 18 comprise almost half the total population, and some 61% of Navajo grandparents are responsible for grandchildren under the age of 18;

Whereas, over half the population of the Navajo Nation lives below the poverty level, an over 40% of persons on the Navajo Nation are unemployed;

Whereas, collecting child support for children whose parents are able to pay child support may be critical in the health and education of a good portion of Navajo children;

Whereas, the federal government granted the Navajo Nation and 39 other tribes the ability to collect child support, establish paternity, and enforce child and medical support obligations, but did not grant the Navajo Nation access to information essential for investigation and enforcement;

Whereas, the federal government has suggested that some states charge the Navajo Nation for access to important personal files of potential payers of child support;

Whereas, the Navajo Nation has collected almost $3,000,000 in past-due child support and received more than 10,000 acknowledgments of paternity for Navajo children; and

Whereas, the Navajo Nation department of child support enforcement has collected a total of $7,248,237 in child support during fiscal year 2007; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah encourage Utah's congressional delegation to take appropriate steps on behalf of the Navajo Nation to increase its effectiveness in child support collection and enforcement; be it further

Resolved, That Utah's congressional delegation is urged to encourage the federal government to include the Navajo Nation in a web access pilot program to obtain information critical to collection of child support for Navajo children; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to:

- (1) the members of Utah's congressional delegation;
- (2) the president of the Navajo Nation;
- (3) the speaker of the house of the Navajo Nation; and
- (4) the secretary of human services for the Navajo Nation.

POM-45. A resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah opposing the REAL ID Act of 2005 and its implementation of a national identification card; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 4

Whereas, the state of Utah recognizes the Constitution of the United States as the nation's charter of liberty, and that the Bill of Rights enshrines the fundamental and inalienable rights of Americans, including privacy and freedom from unreasonable searches;

Whereas, each of Utah's duly elected public servants has sworn to defend and uphold the United States Constitution and the Constitution of the state of Utah;

Whereas, the state of Utah denounces and condemns all acts of terrorism by any entity, wherever the acts occur;

Whereas, terrorist attacks against Americans, like those on September 11, 2001, have necessitated the crafting of effective laws to protect citizens of the United States and others from terrorist attacks;

Whereas, any new security measures of federal, state, or local governments should be carefully designed and employed to enhance public safety without infringing on the civil liberties and rights of innocent citizens of Utah and the United States;

Whereas, Title II of the REAL ID Act of 2005 creates a national identification card by requiring that uniform information be placed on every states' driver license, requiring that the information be machine readable in a standard format, and requiring that the card be used for any federal purpose, including air travel;

Whereas, REAL ID will be a costly unfunded mandate that the Department of Homeland Security estimates will, over the next ten years, cost states 3.9 billion dollars and individuals 5.8 billion dollars;

Whereas, regulations made by the Department of Homeland Security do not adequately address fundamental burdens that the statute imposes on states and individuals, or violations of privacy and constitutional rights;

Whereas, REAL ID requires the creation of a massive public sector database containing the driver license information on every American with a license, accessible to every state motor vehicle employee and every state and federal law enforcement officer;

Whereas, REAL ID enables the creation of an additional massive private sector database of driver license information gained from scanning the machine-readable information contained on every driver license;

Whereas, these public and private databases are certain to contain numerous errors and false information, creating significant hardships for Americans attempting to verify their identity in order to fly, open a bank account, or perform any of the numerous functions required to live in the United States today;

Whereas, the Federal Trade Commission estimates that 10 million Americans are victims of identity theft annually;

Whereas, these identity thieves are increasingly targeting motor vehicle departments;

Whereas, REAL ID will facilitate the crime of identity theft by making the personal information of all Americans, including name, date of birth, gender, driver license or identification card number, digital photograph, address, and signature accessible from tens of thousands of locations;

Whereas, REAL ID requires driver licenses to contain actual home addresses and makes only limited provisions for securing personal information for individuals in potential danger such as undercover police officers and victims of domestic violence, stalking, or criminal harassment;

Whereas, REAL ID contains no exemption for religion, limits religious liberty, and tramples the beliefs of groups like the Amish and certain Evangelical Christians;

Whereas, REAL ID contains onerous record verification and retention provisions that place unreasonable burdens on both Utah's Motor Vehicle Division and on third parties required to verify records;

Whereas, REAL ID will likely place enormous burdens on individuals seeking a new driver license, including longer lines, higher costs, increased document requests, and a waiting period;

Whereas, REAL ID was passed without sufficient deliberation by Congress and never received a hearing by a congressional committee or any vote solely on its merits;

Whereas, REAL ID eliminated a process of negotiated rulemaking initiated under the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004, which had convened federal, state, and local policymakers, privacy advocates, and industry experts to address the misuse of identity documents;

Whereas, more than 600 organizations opposed the passage of REAL ID, including the Utah Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union and the Utah Eagle Forum; and

Whereas, REAL ID would provide little security benefit and still leave identifications systems open to insider fraud, counterfeit documentation, and database failures: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the state of Utah supports the United States Government's campaign against terrorism and its commitment that the campaign not be waged at the expense of essential civil rights and liberties of the nation's citizens that are protected in the United States Constitution, including the Bill of Rights; be it further

Resolved, That the House of Representatives opposes any portion of the REAL ID Act that violates the rights and liberties guaranteed under the Utah Constitution or the United States Constitution, including the Bill of Rights; be it further

Resolved, That the House of Representatives expresses its opposition to state legislation, including appropriations, that would further the REAL ID Act in Utah unless the appropriation is used exclusively for the purpose of undertaking a comprehensive analysis of the costs to implement REAL ID, or to mount a constitutional challenge to the Act by the state Attorney General; be it further

Resolved, That the House of Representatives urges Utah's congressional delegation to support measures to repeal Title II of the REAL ID Act of 2005 and restore the negotiated rulemaking process established under Section 7212 of the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004; be it further

Resolved, That the House of Representatives urges the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security to not penalize any state or its citizens for failure to comply with the REAL ID Act pending further congressional consideration of whether to repeal the Act and replace it with an act that assists states in strengthening the security of their driver license system without burdening the finances of the states or the rights of the states' drivers; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Majority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, Governor Huntsman, and the members of Utah's congressional delegation.

POM-46. A resolution adopted by Legislature of the State of Utah expressing support for the construction of a museum and civil liberties learning center in Delta, Utah, for the purposes of preserving and educating about the Topaz Internment Camp site; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 2

Whereas, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066 on February 19, 1942, authorizing the evacuation of 120,000 people of Japanese ancestry from their homes in portions of Hawaii, California, Oregon, Washington, and Arizona to ten remote internment camps in Arkansas, Colorado, Arizona, California, Idaho, Wyoming, and Utah;

Whereas, one of those camps, Topaz, located near Delta, Utah, housed over 11,000 men, women, and children from September 11, 1942, until October 31, 1945, and was Utah's fifth largest city;

Whereas, over 25,000 Japanese Americans, many from Topaz, served in the United States military during World War II and suffered tremendous casualties while their families were confined in the internment camps;

Whereas, President Ronald Reagan signed into law the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, and President George H.W. Bush issued a letter of apology and redress payments to the survivors of these internment camps;

Whereas, the Topaz camp site must be preserved and protected as part of the nation's commitment to equal justice for all;

Whereas, the Topaz Museum Board, a non-profit agency, has raised money to purchase 626 of the 640 acres of the site, has sponsored pilgrimages and teachers' workshops, has conducted Topaz Day for fourth graders in Millard County, has restored a recreation hall from the camp, and collected artifacts and oral histories, in an effort to preserve the site and educate people about the internment of American citizens;

Whereas, the Topaz site was declared a "Save America's Treasures" project in 1999;

Whereas, the 2006 United States House of Representatives passed HB 1492, which authorized the Secretary of the Interior to create a program within the National Park Service to further protect and provide funding for the ten internment camp sites and other significant related areas;

Whereas, Congressman Chris Cannon and Congressman Jim Matheson joined 114 others to co-sponsor HB 1492;

Whereas, Senator Daniel Inouye introduced S1719 as a companion bill to HB 1492, along with five co-sponsors, including Senator Bob Bennett and Senator Orrin Hatch; and

Whereas, in 2007 the National Park Service declared the Topaz site to be Utah's thirteenth National Historic Landmark: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah expresses support for the Topaz Museum Board's effort to preserve and protect the site of the Topaz Internment Camp, to build a museum and civil liberties learning center in Delta, Utah, and to educate all citizens about Japanese American internment history, especially Topaz, through artifacts, exhibits, and oral histories; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Topaz Museum Board, former Congressman Chris Cannon, Senator Daniel Inouye, and the members of Utah's Congressional Delegation.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. JOHANNNS (for himself, Mr. ENZI, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. BOND, Mr. CHAMBLISS, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. RISCH, Mr. BARRASSO, Mr. THUNE, Mr. CORNYN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. ENSIGN, Mr. KYL, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. VITTER, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. WICKER, Mr. COBURN, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ISAKSON, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. BENNETT, and Mr. DEMINT):

S. 1223. A bill to require prior Congressional approval and emergency funding resulting in Government ownership of private entities; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. JOHANNNS. Mr. President, I rise to present a piece of legislation that I believe the Senate should consider immediately. I believe this legislation is so important that it can't wait. The legislation I introduce today is the Free Enterprise Act of 2009, and its purpose is very straightforward. The Free Enterprise Act of 2009 requires prior congressional approval of any TARP funding that results in the government taking a common or preferred equity interest in any private entity.

Since the inception of the TARP program, my colleagues from both sides of the aisle, in a very bipartisan way, have voiced concerns over the management, the oversight, and the purpose of TARP. Yet the program continues morphing and drifting away from its original purpose: to buy toxic assets and keep credit flowing to consumers. That was the purpose of TARP when it was sold to Congress back in October. TARP was never intended—never intended—to be a revolving, $700 billion blank check for the administration to use however it sees fit. Unfortunately, that is exactly what it has become.

First, the checks were used to bail out the banks, then to the struggling insurance giant AIG, then to the floundering housing market, and despite a December vote by Congress that rejected—specifically rejected—a bailout of the auto industry, TARP funds are now being used to bankroll the auto industry.

I am quite certain most of my colleagues would have looked at me in disbelief if I would have said a few months ago that TARP funds would essentially be used to buy a private auto company—General Motors—and then rush it through bankruptcy. Yet last Monday the Obama administration announced it would provide $30 billion more in TARP funds to buy General Motors, owning a 60-percent interest in the company.

The bottom line is our government is now running or is very deeply involved in major industrial sectors, including housing, banking, insurance, and now automobiles. There is no longer a clear distinction between companies owned by investors and entities owned and backed by the government.

I am deeply troubled by the change in how business in America is conducted, and I am worried we are causing irreparable changes and damage to our private market system. But I am equally troubled and worried that all these ownership and management decisions are being made—literally buying a car company—without congressional input or approval.

Many may completely disagree with me and think the government should get in the auto business, that they should own a 60-percent stake in General Motors or that the government should be a 34-percent owner of Citigroup. But the one thing all my colleagues should be able to agree on is the fact that Congress needs checks and balances.

Right now, disagree or agree with me, none of us in Congress have had a voice—neither a voice in support nor a voice in opposition. We woke up, just like the citizens of America, and found out that we own 60 percent of General Motors—a decision made by President Obama literally with no oversight by Congress.

What has happened is the legislative branch has effectively given President Obama a free pass to do as he wishes with $700 billion. But with the passage of this legislation, we can regain some type of oversight over the disbursement of TARP funds. Let's not continue to criticize the use and management of TARP funds and yet do nothing about it. Support for this legislation is an important step in the right direction. It would ensure that Congress provides checks and balances. That is what we were elected to deliver. That is why we are here.

At the very minimum, let's at least have a vote before the government takes ownership of private companies. My bill only asks for a simple majority governed by the normal rules of the Senate. But it makes a very significant statement that Congress has not fallen asleep at the switch.

I hope my colleagues will not choose to remain silently in their seats. We must fulfill our duties to provide oversight over the executive branch. That is what our Constitution demands. I urge my colleagues, whether you support or oppose funds for private industry, to reclaim the role Congress has in this process. Doing anything less would simply be a dereliction of our duty.

When I introduced this legislation as an amendment to S. 982, it quickly got 30 cosponsors. I am very happy to report that many of these people have joined me as cosponsors, and we are nearing that number again.

I encourage all of my colleagues to support this commonsense legislation and join me as a cosponsor. We can work together to ensure that free enterprise is not relegated to the back burner in this country, and, most important, we can work together, whether you agree or disagree, to make sure Congress is not relegated to the back burner. The Free Enterprise Act is a positive step in that direction.

By Mr. WARNER (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. CARDIN, and Mr. WEBB):

S. 1224. A bill to reauthorize the Chesapeake Bay Office of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to reauthorize the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's important programs to restore the Chesapeake Bay and its aquatic resources. This measure is a companion to H.R. 1771, a bill recently introduced in the House by Representatives SARBANES, WITTMAN and KRATOVIL. Joining me in sponsoring this legislation are my colleagues Senator WEBB from Virginia and Senators MIKULSKI and CARDIN from neighboring Maryland.

Throughout my public career, I have been a strong advocate for protecting our natural resources. One of the most important efforts in Virginia's environmental history has been preservation of the Chesapeake Bay, the nation's most important estuary. I am proud that we brought record funding to efforts related to cleaning the Chesapeake Bay and the toughest regulations for water quality yet. The Commonwealth's 3,300 miles of coastal resources provide significant economic contributions to tourism, recreation, commercial and sport fisheries, and wildlife enjoyment within our State. Yet the safety of the Bay is still in great jeopardy; pollution, habitat loss and other factors have taken their toll.

NOAA has been a principal partner with the Bay region states and other Federal agencies in efforts to protect and restore the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem since 1984. Its mission is focusing NOAA capabilities in science, service, and stewardship to protect and restore the Chesapeake Bay. Congress formally authorized NOAA's participation in the Bay in Public Law 98-210 enacted in 1992 and reauthorized the program in 2002, Public Law 107-372. That authority expired 3 years ago, in 2006, and must be reauthorized.

Over the years, NOAA's work in the Chesapeake Bay has focused on three critical and interrelated areas—ecosystem science, coastal and living resources management, and environmental education—all part of an ecosystem approach for Bay restoration and management. The agency's science and research programs, conducted in collaboration with major academic institutions, are helping decision-makers survey and assess trends in living resources, understand and evaluate the responses of these resources to changes in their environment, and establish management goals and progress indicators. Through the Chesapeake Bay Observing System and the next-generation Chesapeake Bay Integrated Buoy System, NOAA is providing monitoring data on environmental conditions and water quality in the Bay necessary to track Bay restoration progress. The NOAA Chesapeake Bay Office's fish, shellfish and habitat restoration programs are helping to restore native oysters, blue crabs, and bay grasses throughout the watershed. And NOAA's pioneering Bay Watershed Education and Training program, B-WET, is making hands-on watershed education and training available to students and teachers throughout the watershed, bringing marine and weather sciences into the classroom and helping to foster stewardship of the Bay.

NOAA administers its work throughout the 64,000 square mile, 6 State watershed from offices in Maryland and Virginia, which collaborate with State and other Federal agencies, academic institutions, and nongovernmental organizations to support Bay protection and restoration goals. In Norfolk, Virginia, the NOAA Chesapeake Bay Office's science and education programs are incorporated into exhibits at Nauticus, our State's premier maritime center, which receives more than 350,000 visitors annually, and helps inform the public about NOAA's programs and activities. At the College of William and Mary's Virginia Institute of Marine Science, VIMS, NOAA is collaborating with a major academic partner to improve understanding of Bay fisheries and support improved oyster restoration. At Stingray Point, Norfolk and Jamestown, NOAA has deployed first-of-its-kind CBIBS interpretive buoys that are not only providing critical real-time data streams for scientists, but multidisciplinary education tools to users of the Captain John Smith Chesapeake National Historic Water Trail. Throughout the Virginia and Maryland waters of the Chesapeake Bay, NOAA is assisting watermen impacted by reductions in blue-crab harvests.

But NOAA's work and responsibilities to the Chesapeake Bay restoration effort are far from complete. The partners in the Bay restoration need the agency's continued help and support. Throughout the Bay, ecologically important fish species are in decline or at risk due to disease, habitat loss, and other factors. Underwater grasses that once provided habitat to sustain these fisheries are at a fraction of their historic levels. As advanced as our science is, Chesapeake Bay managers still do not have adequate information about the estuary and its habitats to manage its living resources or mitigate diseases in fish and shellfish.

The legislation I am introducing today builds upon previous authorizations of the NOAA Bay Program and addresses several urgent, continuing or unmet needs in the watershed. The bill seeks to achieve five main objectives.

Increasing collaboration between the various programs and activities at NOAA to further NOAA's coastal resource stewardship mission.

Improving Bay monitoring capabilities and the coordination and organization of the substantial amounts of data collected and compiled by Federal, State, and local government agencies and academic institutions through further development of an integrated observations system and the Chesapeake Bay Interpretative Buoy System.

Strengthening the Chesapeake Bay Watershed Education and Training Program, B-WET, the competitively based program which provides students with meaningful Chesapeake Bay or stream outdoor experiences and teachers with professional development opportunities for Bay-related environmental education.

Supporting and encouraging public-private partnerships to restore finfish and shellfish populations, submerged aquatic vegetation and other critical coastal habitat through aquaculture, stock enhancements, propagation and other programs.

Ensuring that Federal funds are spent wisely and effectively on projects that have scientific and technical merit and are peer reviewed.

This legislation enhances NOAA's commitment to further scientific data collection, develops fishery management practices and habitat restoration, and strengthens Chesapeake Bay environmental education programs. Mr. President, the Bay is a national treasure and its restoration should be a national priority.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that letters of support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHESAPEAKE BAY COMMISSION,
April 29, 2009.

Hon. MARK R. WARNER,
U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg.,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: It has come to my attention that you will be introducing legislation shortly to reauthorize the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's (NOAA's) Chesapeake Bay Office, similar to H.R. 1771, which was recently introduced in the House of Representatives. I am writing to express our Commission's strong support for this legislation and to commend you for introducing it.

As you know, the Chesapeake Bay Commission is a tri-state legislative assembly established in 1980 to assist the states of Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania in cooperatively managing the Chesapeake Bay. The Commission has been a signatory to every Chesapeake Bay Agreement and continues to play a leadership role on a full spectrum of Bay issues: from managing living resources and conserving land, to protecting water quality.

We believe that reauthorizing and enhancing NOAA's Chesapeake Bay Office and its major programs in fisheries, habitat, integrated coastal observations and education are critical to the joint Federal, State and local efforts to restore Chesapeake Bay and its living resources. Our States rely heavily on NOAA's ecosystem science, coastal and living resources management, and environmental literacy capabilities to meet the commitments of Chesapeake 2000. For example:

NOAA-funded trawl surveys and stock assessment work provide information each year to help the states of MD and VA and the Potomac River Fisheries Commission decide how to manage the next season's blue crab fishery.

Since 2001 NCBO has provided over $28M to support native oyster restoration and habitat characterization in MD and VA. Current efforts are geared toward large scale ecological restoration projects in rivers like the Wicomico and Piankatank.

NOAA provides satellite-based remote sensing data for models that help state fisheries managers develop stock assessments.

Bay Watershed Education and Training (B-WET) grants totaling $2M-3.5M annually help provide meaningful watershed experiences for approximately 40,000 students throughout the watershed.

Chesapeake NEMO is providing direct assistance to local communities in PA, MD and VA to incorporate natural resources into local decision making.

NOAA's Chesapeake Bay Interpretive Buoy System (CBIBS) is providing critical real-time water quality, weather and interpretive information for managers, boaters, students and tourists alike.

The legislation you are introducing would reauthorize and strengthen NOAA's Chesapeake Bay Office. It would enhance monitoring capabilities through the further development of an integrated observations system and the Chesapeake Bay Interpretive Buoy System. It would bolster the Chesapeake Bay (B-WET) program which is helping to get students throughout the watershed outdoors and learning about the Bay. And it would help in our efforts to restore finfish and shellfish populations, Bay-grasses and other habitats through aquaculture and propagation programs.

In our special report to the Congress of February 2008, the Commission recommended reauthorization of the NOAA Chesapeake Bay Office and its major programs as a high priority. If the Commission can be of assistance to you or the Senate Commerce Committee as this legislation moves through the legislative process, please do not hesitate to let us know.

Sincerely,

DELEGATE JOHN. A. COSGROVE (VA.),
Chairman.

FRIENDS OF THE JOHN SMITH
CHESAPEAKE TRAIL,
Annapolis, MD, April 29, 2009.

Hon. MARK WARNER,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: On behalf of the Friends of the John Smith Chesapeake Trail ("the Friends"), I want to commend and thank you for your leadership in introducing the Chesapeake Bay Science, Education, and Ecosystem Enhancement Act of 2009. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's (NOAA) Chesapeake Bay Office plays a vital role in the management and restoration of the Chesapeake Bay. We are pleased that your bill will re-authorize this important program.

Over the past three years, the Friends have worked closely with the NOAA Chesapeake Bay Office to implement the Chesapeake Bay Interpretive Buoy System (CBIBS). The system provides real-time water quality data and interpretation to further protect, restore, and manage the Chesapeake Bay and marks the Captain John Smith Chesapeake National Historic Trail. CBIBS is part of the multi-state Chesapeake Bay Observing System (CBOS), and part of the U.S. Integrated Ocean Observing System (IOOS)—systems designed to enhance our ability to collect, deliver, and use estuarine and ocean information. As you may be aware, there are currently three CBIBS buoys in the Virginia waters of the Chesapeake Bay (James River, Elizabeth River, Rappahannock River) and three buoys in Maryland (Potomac River, Patapsco River and Susquehanna River). NOAA has identified a further need for expanded coverage throughout the Bay to include many of the most important areas where water quality information is needed, including Virginia's Eastern Shore and at the mouth of the Bay.

CBIBS buoys have been designed to accommodate almost any sensor and transmit the data for real-time display. Presently they measure and report a comprehensive suite of observations, including parameters used by the Chesapeake Bay Program for assessment of impaired waters: Air temperature and relative humidity; barometric pressure; wind speed and direction; near-surface water temperature; salinity; dissolved oxygen; chlorophyll-a concentration; turbidity; and wave height, direction, and period.

The NOAA Chesapeake Bay Office has built a partnership with the National Park Service, many non-government organizations and businesses to launch this system that serves the scientific community, John Smith Trail users and citizens interested in the maritime history and culture of the Bay. CBIBS and the Captain John Smith Chesapeake National Historic Trail will function together to enhance public awareness of the natural and cultural history of the Bay. Such awareness creates tremendous motivation in restoration and conservation efforts.

The CBIBS program will (1) enhance our understanding of the Bay's biological, physical and chemical processes serve as key tool for Bay restoration; (2) promote water based tourism along the John Smith trail; (3) create an invaluable real time tool for environmental education; (4) provide advanced information tools for coastal decision makers; (5) improve weather and harmful algal bloom forecasts; and (6) support safe maritime commerce. For these reasons, we are delighted that your bill includes language to formally authorize CBIBS.

The Chesapeake Bay is a wonderful national resource with a storied history. Your legislation re-authorizing NOAA's work will help ensure the vitality of our natural resources throughout the Bay. Please let us know how we can help you pass this important bill.

With warm regards,

DAVID O'NEILL,
President.

By Mr. SANDERS:

S. 1225. A bill to require the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to take certain actions to prevent the manipulation of energy markets, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam President, I rise today to introduce the Energy Market Manipulation Prevention Act.

Did you know we are in the midst of the worse economic crisis since the Great Depression? Millions of our fellow Americans are losing their homes, losing their jobs, losing their life savings, losing the ability to send their kids to college and, in many ways, they are losing the hope that their own children will have a brighter future and a better life than they have had. It is a very unusual moment in the history of our country.

In the midst of all of this concern and decline in the standards of living of millions of Americans, the last thing that our country needs right now is to see our people be ripped off at the gas pump this summer because of the speculators on Wall Street. Some of the very same people who caused this recession and have received the largest taxpayer bailout in American history are allowed to jack up oil prices through price manipulation and outright fraud.

This is obviously not only an issue for the moment for millions and millions of people who drive to work every day, but for truckers and farmers and all people who are dependent upon gas; and it is also an issue for many parts of our country, such as Vermont, where a lot of our people heat with oil. We are not going to sit around idly and watch the price of oil artificially rise so that elderly people who heat with oil are unable to adequately heat their homes in the wintertime.

Unfortunately, this artificial increase in oil and gas prices is exactly what is happening now, as it occurred similarly last summer, when the price of oil hit $147 a barrel. The price of gas at the pump was over $4 a gallon, and truckers paid more than $5 a gallon for diesel fuel. That is where we were last summer, and we are heading back there right now, unless Congress moves in an aggressive way to say no to speculation on oil futures.

As you know, the price of oil is supposed to be based on the fundamentals of supply and demand, not by excessive speculation. What all of us learned in economics 101 is that if there is limited supply and a lot of demand, the price of the product goes up. If there is a lot of supply and limited demand, the price goes down. That is one of the basic tenets of free market capitalism.

But interestingly, last month, crude oil inventories in the United States were at their highest level on record, while demand for oil in the United States dropped to its lowest level in more than a decade. In other words, there was a record amount of supply and less demand than we have seen over the last 10 years. Further, the International Energy Agency recently predicted that global demand for oil will drop this year to its lowest level since 1981.

What is going on? Demand is going down, supply is high, and what the fundamentals of economic theory tell us is that gas and oil prices will go down. But as everybody who fills up their gas tank today understands, that is certainly not the case, because gas and oil prices are going up.

Despite the record supply of oil and reduced demand, prices are going up, not down. In fact, the national average price of gasoline has jumped from $1.64 a gallon late last year to over $2.60 today. Crude oil prices recently reached a 7-month high.

The American people have a right to ask why is this happening, in contradiction to the basic economic process of supply and demand, and we have a right and the obligation to act to protect those consumers. The increased prices that millions of motorists are currently seeing have caused severe financial hardship for American families, truckers, small businesses, airlines, and farmers. It is putting enormous strain on an economy already in the throes of a deep recession.

We passed the stimulus package in order to create millions of jobs, in order to put money into the hands of working people, many of whom had lost their jobs. And now what we are seeing, as a result of this artificial increase in the price of gas and oil, is that those tax breaks we gave to working families are going not into the local economy, they are going right back to Wall Street and speculation, and they are going to the oil companies.

All of us have a responsibility to do everything we can to lower oil and gas prices immediately, so that they reflect supply and demand fundamentals, not excessive speculation. Therefore, the legislation I am introducing today will require the Commodities Futures Trading Commission to use its emergency powers to prevent the manipulation of oil prices and empower the CFTC with new authority to prohibit excessive speculation in the oil market.

Last July, the House of Representatives passed similar legislation by a vote of 402 to 19—widely bipartisan. But that legislation, unfortunately, did not become law. In addition, this legislation would also require the CFTC to, No. 1, immediately classify all bank holding companies and hedge funds engaged in energy futures trading as non-commercial participants and subject them to strict position limits.

No. 2, this legislation would eliminate the conflict of interest that arises when a firm, a large Wall Street financial institution, has employees under one umbrella responsible for predicting the future price of oil—the so-called analysts—while the same company controls physical oil assets and trading energy derivatives.

No. 3, this legislation would immediately revoke all staff no-action letters for foreign boards of trade that have established trading terminals in the United States for the purpose of trading U.S. commodities to U.S. investors.

I am delighted that Bart Chilton, one of the commissioners at the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, has supported this legislation.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that his letter to me be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR SANDERS: Thank you for taking the time out of your busy schedule to meet with me and Elizabeth Ritter regarding energy trading and needed regulatory reforms of our nation's commodities laws, rules and regulations. I appreciate your leadership in this area and look forward to working with you.

I did want to make a comment about your specific efforts. I commend you for your leadership in bringing transparency and accountability to U.S. energy markets. As you know, the Commodity Exchange Act provides the CFTC with broad emergency authority to take action, in its discretion, in order to maintain or restore orderly trading. In your proposed legislation, you have identified critically important areas of concern—excessive speculation in energy commodities, classification of bank holding companies and limits on their energy trading, hedge fund registration, classification and trading limits, conflicts of interest by entities that both trade and advise in the energy arena, and foreign market access. I wholeheartedly agree with you that the time to act on these issues is now, and the CFTC should aggressively utilize all available authorities as appropriate, including but not limited to emergency authority as currently defined in the CEA, to address these pressing issues.

Thank you again for your efforts on behalf of American consumers and taxpayers, and I look forward to working with you in the future on these important issues.

Sincerely,

BART CHILTON.

Mr. SANDERS. Let me briefly quote from the letter.

He says:

As you know, the Commodity Exchange Act provides the CFTC with broad emergency authority to take action, in its discretion, in order to maintain or restore orderly trading. In your proposed legislation, you have identified critically important areas of concern—excessive speculation in energy commodities, classification of bank holding companies and limits on their energy trading, hedge fund registration, classification and trading limits, conflicts of interest by entities that both trade and advise in the energy arena, and foreign market access. I wholeheartedly agree with you that the time to act on these issues is now, and the CFTC should aggressively utilize all available authorities as appropriate, including but not limited to emergency authority as currently defined in the CEA, to address these pressing issues.

Madam President, I thank the Commissioner for his support of this legislation.

On May 28, I wrote to Gary Gensler, the new Chairman of the CFTC, urging him to undertake many of these initiatives. Last week, in my office, I discussed this issue with Mr. Gensler. He indicated that he has instructed his staff to give him a list of all of the options available to the CFTC to respond to these concerns. While I appreciate Mr. Gensler's efforts on this issue, I hope this legislation will spur the CFTC to take immediate action to lower oil prices.

The bottom line is, right now, at a time when unemployment is soaring, when the middle class is struggling to keep its head above water, the prices at the gas pump are soaring, and we worry about what oil prices in the northern parts of our country will be in the wintertime, there is very strong evidence to suggest that what we are talking about is not supply and demand but excessive speculation on the part of Wall Street in terms of pushing up oil futures.

This Congress must act to protect the middle class and working people of this country, the consumers of this country. It is time for us to demand that the CFTC take the action that is necessary.

By Mr. CASEY (for himself, Mr. BENNET, and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 1226. A bill to amend the Richard B. Russell National School Lunch Act to improve paperless enrollment and efficiency for the national school lunch and school breakfast programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill with Senator BENNET of Colorado, called the Paperless Enrollment for School Meals Act. Senator BENNET and I wrote this legislation because of our mutual interest in increasing the efficiency of the school lunch program both in terms of getting meals to kids who need them and lowering program costs to school districts. Congressman FATTAH and Congresswoman SCHWARTZ are leading a companion bill on the House side.

Our bill creates a national program that is modeled after a pilot project that has been used in Philadelphia for the past 18 years. The Philadelphia program provides free lunch to all kids in schools that have over 75 percent of the students eligible for free lunches. The Philadelphia program also eliminates burdensome paper applications and replaces them with a periodic population survey that allows the U.S. Department of Agriculture to determine the reimbursement rate to the School District of Philadelphia for the meals they serve.

Modernization of the school lunch program is one of my top priorities when the Senate reauthorizes the Child Nutrition Act later this fall. The current system of requiring families to fill out paper applications at the beginning of each school year, having the school district collect and certify those applications, and then having USDA use the applications combined with the amount of meals served to determine a reimbursement rate is inefficient and outdated. Not only are paper applications inefficient, they are inaccurate. It is much more accurate to compile socio-economic data and survey populations to determine eligibility. We have anecdotal evidence of this fact in Philadelphia, where we have dramatically increased participation in school lunch through the pilot project that eliminates yearly paper applications, thereby eliminating stigma for enrollment, language barriers, and other factors that prevent eligible families from completing paper forms.

There is another way that our bill removes the stigma associated with free lunches. By providing free lunches for all students in schools that have a very high percentage of eligible children, no one is embarrassed to get their free lunch in the lunch line. Every student gets the same meal, so no one who is getting free lunches or reduced lunches. This is a very simple policy change that can get more kids eating school lunches—kids who might otherwise go hungry that day because they don't have food at home.

Senator BENNET and I have been working on this issue for months both separately and now collaboratively with our new legislation. And we know that this is just a starting point. We have introduced this legislation to start a dialogue with Chairman HARKIN and the other members of the Committee on Agriculture Nutrition and Forestry along with our colleagues at USDA. I think that there is a lot of energy around the ideas of paperless applications and universal meals included in our bill. I encourage all Senators to support this legislation and the principles of the national program Senator BENNET and I have outlined and save our schools money while increasing access to quality school meals for the kids who need them the most.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. AKAKA (for himself and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 1228. A bill to amend chapter 63 of title 5, United States Code, to modify the rate of accrual of annual leave for administrative law judges, contract appeals board members, and immigration judges; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today I introduce the Administrative Judge Leave Equity Act, a bill to provide leave equity for Administrative Law Judges, ALSs, Contract Board of Appeals Judges, CBAJs, and Immigration Law Judges. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by my friend, Senator MARK PRYOR.

In 2004, Congress passed the Federal Workforce Flexibility Act, which changed the leave accrual rate for mid-career employees entering the Federal workforce. Under the Act, agency heads were given the discretion to allow workers to qualify a period of an employee's non-Federal career experience as a period of Federal service. Additionally, the Act stated that all senior executives and senior-level employees accrued annual leave at the maximum rate of eight hours for each bi-weekly pay period.

Although senior executives were placed under a pay-for-performance system, administrative law judges accrued leave at the maximum rate, the same as other senior-level employees. Under the last administration, the Office of Personnel Management denied administrative law judges leave equity because they are not under a pay-for-performance system. I believe it is inappropriate for administrative law judges to be placed under any type of pay-for-performance system because it could compromise their independence. Independent decisionmaking is essential for administrative law judges, and is the reason ALJs and CBAJs do not receive bonus awards.

Currently, there is a shortage of ALJs to adjudicate benefits claims in the Social Security Administration. There are approximately 765,000 cases pending and not enough ALJs to process the backlog. I believe this bill will provide the Federal Government with an important tool in its efforts to recruit and retain highly-skilled administrative law judges.

I am pleased that this bill enjoys broad support from employee groups that represent administrative law judges, including the Association of Administrative Law Judges, the Association of Hearing Office Chief Judges, the Federal Administrative Law Judges Conference, the Forum of U.S. Administrative Law Judges, the International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, the National Association of Immigration Judges, and the Senior Executives Association.

The time has come to give administrative law judges the same benefits as other senior-level employees.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1228

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ACCRUAL RATE OF ANNUAL LEAVE FOR ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES, CONTRACT APPEALS BOARD MEMBERS, AND IMMIGRATION JUDGES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6303 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking subsection (f) and inserting the following:

“(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the rate of accrual of annual leave under subsection (a) shall be 1 day for each full biweekly pay period in the case of any employee who—

“(1) holds a position which is subject to—

“(A) section 5372, 5372a, 5376, or 5383; or

“(B) a pay system equivalent to a pay system to which any provision under paragraph (1) applies, as determined by the Office of Personnel Management; or

“(2) is an immigration judge as defined under section 101(b)(4) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(b)(4)).”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect on the first day of the first applicable pay period beginning on or after 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Ms. SNOWE):

S. 1229. A bill to reauthorize and improve the entrepreneurial development programs of the Small Business Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, the Small Business Administration has provided critical financial assistance and counseling to America's small businesses since 1953. The services and assistance provided through SBAs programs have been pivotal to this country's economic growth and have helped thousands of American entrepreneurs realize their dream of starting and growing a successful business. In this time of economic uncertainty, reauthorization of these entrepreneurial development programs is essential to moving our Nation forward.

What helps our entrepreneurs helps our entire economy. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, small businesses represent 99.7 percent of all firms, employ more than half of the workforce and account for half of the Nation's Gross Domestic Product. Small business management and technical assistance can potentially help millions of small businesses by teaching entrepreneurs and small business owners fundamental principles and practices regarding cash flow, cost management, how to access to capital and effective business planning. The SBA, through its resource partners such as Small Business Development Centers, SBDCs, Women's Business Centers, WBCs, Service Corps of Retired Executives, SCORE, and others, not only provides technical assistance and information to potential and current small business owners, but helps focus this Nation's entrepreneurial spirit into concrete economic growth.

As Chair of the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, I have heard from small business owners across the country. They have told me that the programs and services currently offered by the Small Business Administration provide access to important resources that enable them to start, grow and expand their businesses. But more can and must be done to help these entrepreneurs. Through an extensive reauthorization of the entrepreneurial development programs within the Small Business Act, I believe that we can dramatically improve the tools available to small business concerns while simultaneously growing and strengthening our economy.

That is why today I am introducing the Entrepreneurial Development Act of 2009. This legislation will provide SBA resource partners with the tools they need to effectively serve small businesses, giving them more opportunities to help lead the nation back toward economic prosperity.

Before I discuss details of this bill, I first wish to thank Senator SNOWE for her continued leadership on small business issues and working with me on this bipartisan effort. Over the past three congresses, the reauthorization of these programs has continued to receive support on both sides of the aisle, demonstrating the importance of reauthorizing essential entrepreneurial development programs.

SBA is utilizing resource partners such as SBDCs, SCORE, WBCs and others to ensure that we are growing the Nation's economy through entrepreneurial development. In 2007, with a modest Federal investment of approximately $97 million in assistance, SBDC clients generated nearly $220 million in additional Federal revenues. Many of the small businesses that received assistance from SBDC's attributed their success to assistance offered by the SBDC. Nationally, this economic activity resulted in approximately $2.26 in revenue for every Federal dollar expended.

This level of return on investment is not unique to SBDCs. According to an SBA report to Congress, SCORE helped create more than 19,000 new small businesses in 2007 at a cost of $29 per business and helped create more than 25,000 new jobs each year.

These programs also provide essential information, training and assistance to a broad and diverse cross-section of communities throughout the country, and serve to further grow a variety of industries. Resource partners such as WBCs and initiatives such as the Program for Investment in Microentrepreneurs, PRIME, are dedicated to serving clients who are economically and socially disadvantaged, providing tools and resources to small businesses in those communities that are most in need. According to a study sponsored by the Association of Women's Business Centers, AWBC, 2/3 of WBC clients have household incomes of less than $50,000 and 42 percent are women of color. These programs serve communities with limited access to capital and educational opportunities and provide them with the tools and information they need to start and manage a successful business.

The reauthorization of these programs is critical to effectively provide entrepreneurs with essential assistance and resources to start a successful business. The legislation will also create opportunities for veterans and service disabled small business owners. According to the Department of Veteran Affairs, there are more than 23.8 million veterans in the country, with hundreds of new veterans returning home from service in Iraq and Afghanistan each day. Many of these returning soldiers become entrepreneurs to support themselves and rebuild their lives after long deployments, which also serves to create new jobs in their communities.

Since the passage of The Veterans Entrepreneurship and Small Business Development Act of 1999, the SBA's Office of Veterans Business Development has been working to provide technical assistance and support to those veterans who have served our country and returned to start or grow a small business. This legislation seeks to ease their transition by providing business counseling and technical assistance through a new network of Veterans Business Centers, modeled after Women's Business Centers and Small Business Development Centers. The Veterans Business Center Program will provide services not only to returning veterans and service disabled veterans, but also to the families, spouses and surviving spouses of these heroic men and women.

The 111th Congress will be the third consecutive Congress during which comprehensive legislation reauthorizing and improving the SBA's Entrepreneurial Programs has been introduced. Ranking Member SNOWE introduced S. 3778 in the 109th Congress and former Chairman JOHN KERRY introduced S. 1671 and S. 2920, a bill to which I was a cosponsor, during the 110th Congress. In each previous Congress, this legislation was well received and passed unanimously out of Committee; however, these bills stalled before the full Senate. As Chair of the Small Business Committee this Congress, it is a top priority of mine to finally get this legislation passed and ensure that during this time of economic uncertainty, we are able to provide small businesses with the tools they need to grow and expand their businesses. With this in mind, I will work closely with Ranking Member SNOWE and the other members of the Committee in the coming months to get this legislation to the President's desk.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, as Ranking Member of the Senate Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, I rise today to join with Senator LANDRIEU to introduce the Entrepreneurial Development Act of 2009, a bill that would reauthorize and improve the U.S. Small Business Administration's, SBA, Entrepreneurial Development programs. I have long fought to expand the power and reach of the SBA's entrepreneurial development tools, which are used by millions of current and aspiring entrepreneurs and small businesses across the U.S. These programs demonstrate how Congress can play a positive role in enhancing private-sector financing for start-up companies. We must continue to strengthen these core SBA programs because they have proven invaluable in aiding the efforts and dreams of America's entrepreneurs, and in bolstering small business job creation.

The bill that I am cosponsoring today is the product of the type of bipartisan, consensus work product for which the Senate Small Business Committee has come to be known. The provisions contained in this legislation are a compilation of ideas and initiatives put forward by myself, Senator LANDRIEU, and other Committee members. Much of the language in the Entrepreneurial Development Act of 2009 was contained in S. 2920, the SBA Reauthorization and Improvements Act in the 110th Congress, the individual provisions of which were each passed unanimously by the Senate Small Business Committee during the 110th Congress. Unfortunately, that bipartisan bill never passed the Senate.

This act, among other things, builds upon the aforementioned successes of SBA's Entrepreneurial Development programs, which collectively created or retained 200,000 jobs in 2008 alone.

Since their inception, Small Business Development Centers, SBDCs, have been essential in the delivery of management and technical counseling assistance and educational programs to prospective and existing small business owners. The SBDC program has served over 11 million clients with new business starts, sustainability programs for struggling firms, and expansion plans for growth firms. For every dollar spent on the SBDC program, approximately $2.87 in tax revenue is generated.

According to a recent report conducted at Mississippi State University, as a direct result of its counseling programs, SBDC clients generated approximately $7 billion in sales and created over 73,000 new jobs in 2006. Therefore, it is imperative that in such troubling economic times we ensure that this program has the resources necessary to successfully aid small businesses. Through this legislation, which increases the SBDC program's authorization to $160 million by fiscal year 2012, this program will be in a better position to continue helping entrepreneurs succeed.

The Women's Business Center, WBC, program, established by Congress in 1988, promotes the growth of women-owned businesses through business training and technical assistance, and provides access to credit and capital, federal contracts, and international trade opportunities. The WBC program served more than 159,000 clients across the country last year, providing help with financial management, procurement training, marketing and technical assistance. WBCs also provide specialized programs that include mentoring in various languages, Internet training, issues facing displaced workers and rural home-based entrepreneurs.

Our legislation builds on our commitment to providing assistance to women entrepreneurs. It directs the SBA's Office of Women's Business Ownership to develop programs to bolster the growth of women-owned small businesses by providing support for business operations, manufacturing, technology, finance, Federal Government contracting, and international trade.

The bill also makes substantial improvements to the Women's Business Center program, which created nearly 9,000 jobs in the last fiscal year, including an expansion of the types of entities that are eligible to host WBCs to economic development organizations, state-chartered development organizations, and public or private colleges and universities. Finally, the bill directs the SBA to provide a minimum of $150,000 in funding annually to all new WBCs that are in their first 5 years of operation, allowing new centers to become fully established before they have to compete for federal funding.

The bill also reauthorizes SCORE, a non-profit association that matches business-management counselors with small business clients. SCORE volunteer counselors share their management and technical expertise with both existing and prospective small business owners. With its 10,500 member volunteer association, sponsored by the SBA, and more than 389 service delivery points and a website, SCORE provides counseling to small businesses nationwide. The national SCORE organization delivers its services of business and technical assistance through a national network of chapters, an Internet counseling site, partnerships with SBA, the SBDCs and WBCs, and with the public and private sectors. In 2008, SCORE created or retained 25,000 jobs, and this act will help improve this program by raising the authorization level to $13 million in fiscal year 2012.

In addition to reauthorizing SBA's ED programs and increasing their funding levels, this bill also addresses the crisis small businesses face when it comes to securing quality, affordable health insurance. Health insurance costs have increased by 89 percent since 2000. This has led to a disturbing trend of fewer and fewer small businesses being able to offer health insurance to their employees.

A key provision in this bill would establish a grant program to provide information, counseling, and educational materials to small businesses, through the well-established national framework of the SBA's technical assistance partners including SBDCs, WBC, Veteran's Business Centers, and SCORE.

Research conducted by the non-partisan Healthcare Leadership Council found that with a short educational and counseling session, small businesses were up to 33 percent more likely to offer health insurance to their employees. It is therefore vital that we provide the SBA's resource partners with the resources necessary to give small businesses the critical health care education they need to navigate the complex insurance market.

The SBA's entrepreneurial development programs provide tremendous value for a relatively small investment. I am committed to ensuring that Americans have the necessary resources to start, grow and develop a business. I believe that it is our duty to do everything possible to sustain prosperity and job creation throughout the U.S. I urge my colleagues to support this vital piece of legislation.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 1231. A bill to create or adopt, and implement, rigorous and voluntary American education content standards in mathematics and science covering kindergarten through grade 12, to provide for the assessment of student proficiency benchmarked against such standards, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce The Standards to Provide Educational Achievement for Kids, SPEAK, Act, a bill designed to provide incentives to states to begin holding every child in America to the same high standards. At its core, SPEAK will adopt and implement voluntary core American education content standards in math and science while incentivizing states to adopt them.

America's leadership, economic, and national security rest on our commitment to educate and prepare our youth to succeed in a global economy. The key to succeeding in this endeavor is to have high expectations for all American students as they progress through our Nation's schools.

Currently there are 50 different sets of academic standards, 50 State assessments, and 50 definitions of proficiency under the No Child Left Behind Act. As a result of varied standards, exams and proficiency levels, America's highly mobile student-aged population moves through the Nation's schools gaining widely varying levels of knowledge, skills and preparedness. Yet, in order for the U.S. to compete in a global economy, we must strengthen our educational expectations for all American children—we must compete as one Nation.

Recent international comparisons show that American students have significant shortcomings in math and science. Many lack the basic skills required for college or the workplace. This affects our economic and national security; it holds us back in the global marketplace and risks ceding our competitive edge. This is unacceptable.

America was founded on the notion of ensuring equity and opportunity for all. And yet, we risk both when we allow different students in different states to graduate from high school with very different educations. We live in a nation with an unacceptably high high school dropout rate. We live in a nation where 8th graders in some states score more than 30 points higher on tests of basic science knowledge than students in other states. I ask my colleagues today what equality of opportunity we have under such circumstances.

This is where American standards come in. Voluntary, core American standards in math and science are an important step in ensuring that all American students are given the same opportunity to learn to a high standard no matter where they reside. They will allow for meaningful comparisons of student academic achievement across states, help ensure that American students are academically qualified to enter college or training for the civilian or military workforce, and help ensure that students are better prepared to compete in the global marketplace. Uniform standards are a first step in maintaining America's competitive and national security edge.

While I understand that education is, after all, a state endeavor, we cannot ignore that at the end of the day America competes as one country on the global marketplace. This does not mean that I am asking states to cede their authority in education. What the bill simply proposes is that we use the convening power of the Federal Government to incentivize efforts to create a core set of common standards.

I would like to take a moment to recognize the recent remarkable achievement of the National Governors Association and the Council of Chief State School Officers in partnership with Achieve, Inc, ACT, and the College Board. Just last week they announced that 49 States and territories have joined the Common Core State Standards Initiative and have committed to a process to develop common standards in English language arts and mathematics. They have made a commitment to evidence-based and internationally benchmarked standards, which are scheduled to be developed later this year. This effort is outstanding. Just 2 years ago, when I introduced one of the first bills in the Senate on standards, this type of effort would have been unthinkable. Now, there is strong momentum behind providing all students across the country with competitive and consistent standards.

The SPEAK Act, provides flexibility in the creation or adoption of American standards, understanding that there are effective efforts underway that could be integrated into the program of Federal incentives that this bill would provide.

The SPEAK Act will task the National Assessment Governing Board with creating or adopting rigorous and voluntary core American education content standards in math and science for grades K–12. It will require that the standards be anchored in the National Assessment of Educational Progress’ math and science frameworks. It will also ensure that such standards are internationally competitive and comparable to the best standards in the world, similar to the outline created for the standards being developed through the Common Core State Standards Initiative.

States that do participate, while required to adopt the American standards, will be given the flexibility to make them their own. They will have the option to add additional content requirements, they will have final say in how coursework is sequenced, and, ultimately, States, and districts will still be the ones developing the curriculum, choosing the textbooks and administering the tests. The standards provided for under this legislation will simply serve as a common core.

The SPEAK Act will develop rigorous achievement levels. It will ensure that varying developmental levels of students are taken into account in the development of such standards. It will provide for periodic review and update of such standards. It establishes an American Standards Incentive Fund to incentivize states to adopt the standards. Among the benefits of participating is a significant infusion of funds for states to bolster their K–12 data systems.

No one will deny that our Nation is facing difficult economic times. However, there remains a steadfast commitment to improving education for our students, a commitment that includes working to develop voluntary American standards. I applaud states that realize that despite facing difficult budget realities, holding all students to the same, high standards will be what is best for the future of our nation. These States need and deserve incentives and resources to complete this important work.

I should also note that the SPEAK Act has garnered endorsements from businesses, math/science organizations, foundations, and the education community. Through the leadership of Congressman VERNON EHLERS in the House of Representatives it shares not only bicameral, but bipartisan support. Together we have all come together to affect meaningful change in our public schools.

We live in an economy where you can no longer lift, dig or assemble your way to success. Today, you have got to think your way to success so that when public education doesn’t work, when we fail to compete as one nation, our entire country gets left behind. Low expectations translate to an America that is less competitive on the world stage. If that happens, we are going to wonder why we didn’t do anything about it while we still had time.

Core American standards will set high goals for all students, allow for meaningful comparisons of achievement across states, and help ensure that all of our students are qualified to enter college. At the end of the day, we all want what is best for our country and parents want what is best for their kids. With core standards, America will begin the work of regaining its competitive edge in the global economy. In the life of every student, equality will be made a little more real with reintroduction of this bill, as the skills and knowledge we expect of them are no longer made contingent on where they reside.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting the SPEAK Act. As we start holding our students to the same high standards, I expect that we will be amazed at the excellence that follows.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:
 (1) Throughout the years, educators and policymakers have consistently embraced standards as the mechanism to ensure that every student, no matter what school the student attends, masters the skills and develops the knowledge needed to participate in a global economy.

(2) Recent international comparisons make clear that students in the United States have significant shortcomings in mathematics and science, yet a high level of scientific and mathematics literacy is essential to societal innovations and advancements.

(3) With more than 50 different sets of academic content standards, 50 State academic assessments, and 50 definitions of proficiency under section 1111(b) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6311(b)), there is great variability in the measures, standards, and benchmarks for academic achievement in mathematics and science.

(4) Variation in State standards and the accompanying measures of proficiency make it difficult for parents and teachers to meaningfully gauge how well their children are learning mathematics and science in comparison to their peers internationally or here at home.

(5) The disparity in the rigor of standards across States yield test results that tell the public little about how schools are performing and progressing, as States with low standards or low proficiency requirements may appear to be doing much better than States with more rigorous standards or higher requirements for proficiency.

(6) As a result, the United States’ highly mobile student-aged population moves through the Nation’s schools gaining widely varying levels of knowledge, skills, and preparedness.

(7) In order for the United States to compete in a global economy, the country needs to strengthen its educational expectations for all children.

(8) To compete, the people of the United States must compare themselves against international benchmarks.

(9) Grounded in a real world analysis and international comparisons of what students need to succeed in work and college, rigorous and voluntary core American education content standards will keep the United States economically competitive and ensure that the children of the United States are given the same opportunity to learn to a high standard no matter where they reside.

(10) Rigorous and voluntary core American education content standards in mathematics and science will enable students to succeed in academic settings across States while ensuring an American edge in the global marketplace.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONSSENATE RESOLUTION 181—DESIGNATING JUNE 10, 2009, AS “NATIONAL PIPELINE SAFETY DAY”

Mrs. MURRAY (for herself and Ms. CANTWELL) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 181

Whereas there are more than 2,000,000 miles of gas and hazardous liquid pipelines in the United States that are operated by more than 3,000 companies;

Whereas gas and hazardous liquid pipelines play a vital role in the lives of people in the United States by delivering the energy needed to heat homes, drive cars, cook food and operate businesses;

Whereas, during the last decade, significant new pipelines have been built to help move North American sources of oil and gas to refineries and markets;

Whereas, on June 10, 1999, a hazardous liquid pipeline ruptured and exploded in a park in Bellingham, Washington, killing 2 10-year-old boys and a young man, destroying a salmon stream, and causing hundreds of millions of dollars in damage and economic disruption;

Whereas, in response to the pipeline tragedy on June 10, 1999, Congress enacted significant new pipeline safety regulations, including in the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002 (Public Law 107-355; 116 Stat. 2985) and the Pipeline Inspection, Protection, Enforcement, and Safety Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-468; 120 Stat. 3486);

Whereas, during the last decade, the Pipelines and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration of the Department of Transportation, with support from a diverse group of stakeholders, has instituted a variety of important new rules and pipeline safety initiatives, such as the Common Ground Alliance, pipeline emergency training with the National Association of State Fire Marshals, and the Pipelines and Informed Planning Alliance;

Whereas, even with pipeline safety improvements, in 2008 there were 274 significant pipeline incidents that caused more than $395,000,000 of damage to property and disrupted the economy;

Whereas, even though pipelines are the safest method to transport huge quantities of fuel, pipeline incidents are still occurring, including the pipeline explosion in Edison, New Jersey, in 1994 that left 100 people homeless, the butane pipeline explosion in Texas in 1996 that left 2 teenagers dead, the pipeline explosion near Carlsbad, New Mexico, in 2000 that killed 12 people in an extended family, the pipeline explosion in Walnut Creek, California, in 2004 that killed 5 workers, and the propane pipeline explosion in Mississippi in 2007 that killed a teenager and her grandmother;

Whereas the millions of miles of pipelines are still “out of sight”, and therefore “out of mind” for the majority of people, local governments, and businesses in the United States, a situation that can lead to pipeline damage and a general lack of oversight of pipelines;

Whereas greater awareness of pipelines and pipeline safety can improve public safety;

Whereas a “National Pipeline Safety Day” can provide a focal point for creating greater pipeline safety awareness; and

Whereas June 10, 2009, is the 10th anniversary of the Bellingham, Washington, pipeline tragedy that was the impetus for many of the safety improvements described in this resolution and is an appropriate day to designate as “National Pipeline Safety Day”;

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates June 10, 2009, as “National Pipeline Safety Day”;

(2) encourages State and local governments to observe the day with appropriate activities that promote pipeline safety;

(3) encourages all pipeline safety stakeholders to use the day to create greater public awareness of all the advancements that can lead to greater pipeline safety; and

(4) encourages individuals throughout the United States to become more aware of the pipelines that run through communities in the United States and to encourage safe practices and damage prevention relating to gas and hazardous liquid pipelines.

SENATE RESOLUTION 182—RECOGNIZING THE DEMOCRATIC ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE PEOPLE OF ALBANIA AND EXPRESSING THE HOPE THAT THE PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS ON JUNE 28, 2009, MAINTAIN AND IMPROVE THE TRANSPARENCY AND FAIRNESS OF DEMOCRACY IN ALBANIA

Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mrs. SHAHEEN, Mr. CARDIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. DEMINT) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 182

Whereas the people of Albania have made extraordinary progress from authoritarian government and a closed market to a democratic government and market economy in less than two decades;

Whereas the Republic of Albania, with the advice and consent of this Senate and the governments of the other member countries, was officially admitted to full membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on April 2, 2009;

Whereas the Thessaloniki Declaration of 2003 confirmed that the countries of the Western Balkans are eligible for accession to the European Union once they have fulfilled the requirements for membership; and

Whereas the Government of Albania has accepted numerous specific commitments governing the conduct of elections as a participating State in the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE): Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) urges the Government of Albania to fulfill the commitments it has made to the OSCE with respect to the conduct of its upcoming elections, and to ensure that those elections are free and fair;

(2) urges the Government of Albania to expedite the implementation of its voter identification card program to minimize the possibility of disenfranchisement and provide as many cards as possible to eligible voters prior to the election;

(3) commends the positive step taken by the Government of Albania to reduce the cost of the voter ID card significantly and avoid charges of a poll tax; and

(4) expresses its hope that credible democratic elections in Albania will contribute to a strong and stable government responsive to the wishes of the people of Albania and strengthen Albania’s standing within NATO and European institutions.

RECOGNIZING COACH SUZANNE YOCULAN

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise tonight to recognize a very special Georgian. Suzanne Yoculan just retired as the coach of the women's gymnastic program at the University of Georgia.

Coach Yoculan is a graduate of Penn State University, and she was named head coach of the University of Georgia gymnastics team in 1983. The team, under her leadership, has been nothing short of spectacular. During her 26 years at the helm, Georgia's gymnastics team, or the Gym Dogs, as they are affectionately referred to, have posted a meet record of 831 wins, 117 losses, and 7 ties, for a winning percentage of .870—pretty spectacular.

Let me list the accomplishments the Gym Dogs have achieved under the leadership of Coach Yoculan: Four undefeated seasons: 1993, 1998, 1999, and 2006. Her teams have finished in the top three in the Nation 19 out of the last 21 years. They have also been a part of the Super Six, the final six NCAA teams every year since the format was introduced in 1993, and have never missed the NCAA women's gymnastics competition. She was Southeastern Conference Women's Gymnastics Coach of the Year in 1986, 1987, 1999, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2008, and 2009. She was the NCAA Women's Gymnastics Coach of the Year in 1987, 1993, 1998, 2006, and 2008. Under her leadership, the Gym Dogs won 21 regional NCAA titles, and they won 16 Southeastern Conference championships and 10 NCAA women's championships, including in the years 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, and 2009. Yes, that is right—the last 5 years in a row, under Coach Yoculan's leadership, our Gym Dogs have won the national championship each and every year.

This year, in April, the team competed in the NCAA match at the Bob Devaney Center in Lincoln, NE. After a slow start, Coach Yoculan gathered the team in the locker room, gave them a pep talk, and demanded, as she always does, an awful lot from her lady athletes. And did they ever respond in a very positive way. They came down the stretch with several different 10s on various platforms and won the national championship for the fifth consecutive time.

Coach Yoculan made this statement after the meet:

It is really a magical team that has so much fortitude and just love for the sport and passion, and they never quit. I feel blessed, and I actually lived it every day being around them, and that is the thing I am going to miss the most.

Well, those of us who are Bulldogs feel blessed to have had Suzanne Yoculan as our gymnastics coach for the last 26 years. We congratulate her on a very successful career, and certainly we wish her the best in wherever life may take her from here.

GUANTANAMO BAY

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, next I rise to speak about the terrorists being held at Guantanamo Bay naval facility, or Gitmo. There are over 240 terrorists in U.S. custody at the military detention facility in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, today. Let me describe some of the individuals who reside at Guantanamo.

First, Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, or KSM, is the self-proclaimed and quite unapologetic mastermind of the 9/11 attacks. KSM admitted he was the planner of 9/11 and other planned, but foiled, attacks against the United States. In his combatant status review board, he admitted that he swore allegiance to Osama bin Laden, was a member of al-Qaida, was the military operational commander for all foreign al-Qaida operations, and much more. KSM and four other detainees who are charged with conspiring to commit terrible 9/11 attacks remain at Guantanamo today. In addition, Gitmo houses Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri, who was responsible for the October 2000 USS Cole bombing which murdered 17 U.S. sailors and injured 37 others. Also residing at Gitmo are Osama bin Laden's personal bodyguards, al-Qaida's terrorist camp trainers, al-Qaida bomb makers, and individuals picked up on the battlefield with weapons trying to kill American soldiers—our young men and women who patriotically serve their country. The detainees at Guantanamo are some of the most senior, hardened, and dangerous al-Qaida figures we have captured.

In May, just 3 weeks ago, the Senate voted 90 to 6 to prohibit any of these hardened terrorists from being brought to the United States. Despite this clear objection, the administration transferred one detainee, Ahmed Ghailani, to New York City yesterday. He is facing charges in the Southern District of New York for his role in the August 7, 1998, bombings of two U.S. Embassies in Africa.

Some of my colleagues in the Senate have touted this as an example of how we can bring criminal charges against the Gitmo detainees and try them in our courts. However, no one has pointed out that Ghailani was indicted on March 12, 2001, a full 6 months prior to the terrorist attacks of 9/11 and after a full investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The case against Ghailani was built long before he was transferred to Gitmo in 2006. To imply that other detainees, many of whom the FBI has never investigated or collected evidence against, may similarly be prosecuted in U.S. courts is naive.

The President, in announcing the closing of Guantanamo Bay in January of this year, failed to come forward with a plan to tell the American people what he intended to do with the rest of the remaining prisoners being held in that facility. Americans are outraged about the fact that there is now the potential for those individuals to be transferred to the United States and the possibility that some of them may be released into American society.

The reaction of the administration to the outcry from the American people and to the outcry from Members of this body has been: Well, we are going to work this out. We are going to get people to take these individuals.

Well, needless to say, the previous administration had been trying to get folks to allow the return of their countrymen who are housed at Guantanamo for years, and they were not successful. That is why we still have 241 detainees at Guantanamo.

Yesterday, there was an announcement that 17 Uighurs, or Chinese terrorists, are going to be sent to the country of Palau. I doubt there are many Americans who can even tell you where Palau is. It turns out it is a country containing many islands somewhere out in the Pacific, not far from the Philippines.

In order to get Palau to take these 17 Uighurs, the Obama administration has committed to paying that country $200 million or, if my calculation is correct, about $11,764,705 per individual. A pretty good payment for taking these prisoners.

If that is the standard we are going to be using and the precedent we are now setting, you can figure the numbers to look at how much money it is going to cost us to transfer these remaining prisoners to other countries.

Guantanamo is a symbolic issue for many people around the world. I am not one who is going to stand here and say we should not close it. Obviously, there should be some long-range plan to get us out of Guantanamo and to ultimately close it. But without the administration coming forward with a plan, the American people are deservedly outraged at the fact that these individuals may be transferred to criminal facilities in the United States. They, thus, become eligible for all rights of individuals who are housed on U.S. domestic soil, including the right of habeas corpus, and, thus, because not in every case have our soldiers been able to look a guy in the eye who has a rifle in his hand and who is shooting at him, but they are able to disarm him and take the weapon away from him, they don't have the opportunity to gather evidence on the battlefield and to bag up all that evidence and take the time to write down names of witnesses who saw the activity on the battlefield. So there is the potential that some of these individuals might ultimately be successful in a habeas corpus action, be set free by some judge in a U.S. court and, thus, be eligible to be ingratiated into U.S. society.

A couple weeks ago, I filed a bill in the Senate which prohibits, No. 1, any detainee at Guantanamo from being transferred to the United States. The administration has already breached that, and that is why it is more important than ever we consider this bill.

But more importantly, if the President exercises other powers that he has outside of what may be even enacted into law, constitutional powers he may have, and brings these individuals into the United States, my bill will prohibit any opportunity for any of these individuals who are now housed at Guantanamo from ever being released into the society of the United States.

I sought to get this bill up as an amendment to the supplemental, but, unfortunately, my friends on the other side of the aisle saw it in a different way and would not let my amendment come up. We are going to be back. We are going to have this bill up either as a standalone bill or as an amendment at the next opportunity to make sure we do everything we can as Members of the Senate who voted 90 to 6 to not bring these individuals from Guantanamo to the United States, to again have the opportunity to vote on this issue and to make sure that not only do we not bring them here, but that if by some quirk the President decides we ought to bring them here and does so, then there is never the opportunity for those individuals to be released into the United States, into any of our communities, irrespective of where they may reside.

I simply will close tonight and say this is a very serious issue that, in fact, is being considered by the conferees tonight, I understand, on the supplemental that we voted on a couple weeks ago. The language that was agreed to by that 90-to-6 vote may be in jeopardy. Democrats may be trying to pull that particular provision out of the supplemental and to, thereby, not have language in there that would prohibit these individuals from coming into our country.

I think that is certainly against the will of the American people, it is certainly against the will of the Senate in a big way, and I think would be a huge mistake.

I look forward to continuing the debate on this issue. I look forward to our bill coming up, either in the form of a standalone bill or in the form of an amendment because this is an issue that is not going away until we figure out a way to deal with these individuals who are incarcerated at Guantanamo in a lawful manner as enemy combatants and that we figure out a way to deal with them on a long-term basis that ultimately will allow us to leave Guantanamo and close that facility.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,

I hereby appoint the Honorable JESSE L. JACKSON, Jr. to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

God Almighty, send forth Your spirit to guide the Members of the House of Representatives today and every day of this 111th Congress. By Your power, manifest the strength of this democracy.

So direct the course of this body that policies and decisions made here may proclaim Your goodness to all the people. Not in words only but with every action freely accepted, may this Nation show the world that it is an agent of reconciliation and peace for all and give You glory, both now and forever. Amen.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain up to 15 requests for 1-minute speeches on each side of the aisle.

BRINGING AN END TO THE WARS IN IRAQ AND AFGHANISTAN

(Mr. KUCINICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KUCINICH. Iraq did not have weapons of mass destruction, had no intention or capability of attacking the United States, and had nothing to do with al Qaeda's role in 9/11. Each and every statement made by the previous administration in support of going to war turned out to be false. Yet here we are, a new administration and the same old war and expansion of the war in Afghanistan. We cannot afford these wars spiritually. They are wars of aggression, and they're based on lies. We cannot afford these wars financially. They add trillions to our national debt and destroy our domestic agenda. We cannot afford the human cost of these wars, the loss of lives of our beloved troops and the deaths of innocent civilians in Iraq, Afghanistan and Pakistan.

So why do we do this? Why do we keep funding wars when they're so obviously against truth and justice and when they undermine our military? These are matters of heart and conscience which must be explored. Our ability to bring an end to these wars will be the real test of our power.

THE INEFFECTIVE BIG GOVERNMENT STIMULUS

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics has admitted there is no way to actually substantiate the number of jobs saved in this economy. Yet the White House continues to rely on this talking point to divert attention away from job losses. They should put this political rhetoric to bed and work with Republicans on proven bipartisan solutions to encourage job creation and economic growth.

House Republicans have long advocated that we keep more money in the economy by not taking it out in the first place. Presidents Kennedy and Reagan understood this. They supported relief for American families and small businesses as the engine of job creation and general prosperity. We should learn a lesson from history.

I am confident our economy will recover, but it will do so because of the hard work and perseverance of Americans. Conversely, filtering billions of borrowed dollars through a bureaucratic maze will be, as we have seen, slow and inefficient.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th.

THE NEW WAR IN AFGHANISTAN

(Ms. TSONGAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. TSONGAS. Mr. Speaker, following September 11, our Armed Forces made tremendous strides in Afghanistan, but our resources were diverted to fight the war in Iraq. The circumstances now present in Afghanistan and the region are markedly different than those that characterized our original entry in 2001. As a result, the President's request for supplemental funding is not a reallocation of resources. It is support for a new and different war and must be assessed as such.

I have repeatedly asked in various venues how the President's new strategy would bring regional stability, the length of time, and troop levels that such a commitment requires and what our exit strategy would be. The best answer I have received thus far was from Admiral Mullen. He said, "I think it's going to be a while. At what level of combat, what level of troops, that's difficult to predict right now."

A "yes" vote on the supplemental is fundamentally an acceptance of an open-ended military commitment to Afghanistan. That is not something I can support.

WHAT IS THE EXIT STRATEGY FOR GUANTANAMO BAY?

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, Americans want to know and they want to know now—what is the exit strategy for Gitmo? In the dark of the night, the first Gitmo terrorist indicted for killing innocent Americans was moved to New York. The White House approved this despite the fact that 65 percent of Americans do not support closing Guantanamo and sending dangerous and deadly detainees to U.S. prisons.

It's about time this administration started an open and honest dialogue on the future of Gitmo and inform the Congress before ferrying terrorists to America. This sneaky middle-of-the-night move shows that the administration does not want to publicly answer any questions about their exit strategy on Gitmo. Americans want, need and deserve to know exactly where these terrorists will go come next January, and we don't want them here in the United States. We don't need al Qaeda recruiting and training hardened criminals in our prisons.

NOTHING ABOUT COAL IS CLEAN

(Mr. QUIGLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, nothing about coal is clean. From extraction, to waste slurry, to stream contamination in Appalachia, nothing—I repeat—nothing about this energy source is clean. In order to extract coal from the ground, mountains are literally blasted apart, killing wildlife and destroying forests, contributing to erosion, flooding and pollution that hits local communities and causes severe health problems. Over 1,200 miles of stream in Appalachia alone have been buried or completely contaminated because of mountaintop mining.

In order to prepare the coal for burning, an overwhelming amount of water is needed to clean the coal. For every ton of coal cleaned, 20 to 40 gallons of water are used to wash the coal, creating a sludgy pollutant known as slurry. Over 90 million gallons of slurry are created every year while harvesting and preparing coal for burning. Keep in mind, we haven't even begun to burn the stuff yet.

Green jobs are the key to economic and environmental progress in regions torn by surface and mountaintop mining and struggling economically due to the destruction of the land. These include jobs in wind, hydroelectric and biofuel power. These jobs will give hard-hit communities a long-term future for their families instead of a short-term paycheck in exchange for the quality of life in the region forever.

BRITISH HOSPITAL PATIENTS DRINK OUT OF FLOWER VASES

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, while our President preaches the virtues of government-run health care, the Prime Minister of Great Britain is apologizing to his country for their socialized system. And no wonder—Bella Bailey went to Staffordshire Hospital for minor surgery. But things were so bad, she got scared because of the poorly trained English staff. Her fears proved correct when a nurse dropped Bailey on the floor. Her daughter said, "Meals were brought to patients who couldn't feed themselves, but the staff wouldn't help. Elderly men wandered the halls in a confused state. Vulnerable patients were left hungry and dirty screaming in pain without help."

"Some patients were so thirsty, they drank from flower vases. It was like a third-world country. Things were so bad, I fed patients and took them to the lavatory. It was like I was watching my mum die and others too."

Well, Mrs. Bailey did die in that government-run hospital from injuries sustained while there. Do we really want the government controlling access to health care? Nationalized health care will have the competence of FEMA, the efficiency of the Post Office, and the compassion of the IRS.

And that's just the way it is.

CLEAN ENERGY JOBS EARN ALBUQUERQUE A RANKING IN KEY JOB GROWTH AREAS

(Mr. HEINRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HEINRICH. Mr. Speaker, we are at a tipping point in our country's energy policy debate. Today, Americans are realizing the potential jobs that are at stake in our country's energy policy.

In New Mexico's First Congressional District, Schott Solar is on track to employ 1,400 people in Albuquerque; Solar Array Ventures, another 1,000 people; hundreds have already helped build the 100-megawatt High Lonesome Mesa wind energy project; and Sandia National Laboratories continues to partner with multiple clean energy startups.

These clean energy jobs earned Albuquerque a second-place ranking in Kiplinger magazine's 2009 listing of cities leading the country in key job growth areas, the kinds of jobs that are leading America toward economic recovery.

Mr. Speaker, to realize the promise of a clean energy economy, to leave a healthy environment to our children, and to end our dangerous dependency on foreign oil, I urge Congress to take bold, decisive action on America's energy policy.

WORKING ON BEHALF OF ORLEANS AND JEFFERSON PARISHES

(Mr. CAO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CAO. Mr. Speaker, the issues of crime and hurricane recovery are most important for Orleans and Jefferson Parishes. Yesterday I voted for the Witness Security and Protection Grant Program Act, and it passed. Law enforcement officials in my district must have the Federal resources needed to protect our citizens.

On Monday, I requested a government review of unresolved FEMA public assistance projects that will help Louisiana move forward with delayed disaster recovery efforts. Lastly, I was able to acknowledge the diverse culture of New Orleans by cosponsoring a resolution to honor black music.

It has been a productive week.

URGING THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO MOVE SLOWLY AND CAUTIOUSLY IN ITS RELATIONS WITH CUBA

(Mr. SIRES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SIRES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak for those oppressed in Cuba that cannot speak for themselves. As the administration is moving forward with immigration talks, as the Organization of American States is welcoming Cuba, I rise to remind my colleagues in Washington and my friends abroad that when you deal with Cuba, you are not dealing with a benign regime. You are dealing with a dangerous regime. The regime's most recent crackdown has surfaced in the oppression of religion.

In May 2008, Pastor Omar Gude Perez was arrested and charged with human trafficking. When no evidence was found to support the charges, the Cuban regime simply changed the charges. He is now on trial for "counter-revolutionary conduct." A man who has been dedicated to his religion now faces years in prison.

Last week, 30 evangelical, non-political pastors were arrested by Cuban authorities. This is a clear attack on religion by the Castro regime.

On top of these atrocities, we hear that two Castro spies may have been working among us in our government for decades. It is crucial that the United States Government move slowly and cautiously in our relationship with Cuba. In light of this, the administration must not make any further decisions regarding Cuba until a comprehensive damage assessment is completed and Congress is fully briefed.

CHINA AND AMERICA'S DEBT

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, during a speech last week at Beijing University in China, U.S. Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner was laughed at when he attempted to assure students that the Chinese government could continue to safely invest in American debt. The largest holder of our national debt is now openly laughing at our financial situation. At the same time, Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke was here on Capitol Hill calling for fiscal restraint. Every dollar spent by the government is taken from the people in taxes or borrowed against future generations.

Our Nation's fiscal responsibility is so lacking that a developing nation snickers at the mention of sound investment in our debt. Traveling the world, begging creditor nations to allow us to continue our spending binge is not the kind of international engagement we need. Our economy will turn around because of the ingenuity of the American people, not because of out-of-control, irresponsible government spending and borrowing.

HEALTH CARE

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Republicans gave us a Medicare prescription drug benefit complete with a donut hole based on subsidizing the health insurance industry and the prescription drug industry. Now they are at it again. They are absolutely opposed to a public plan option for health insurance, because that would make the health insurance industry compete. Their solution to the 50 million Americans without health insurance and those who are one pink slip away from losing it is tax breaks, so they can go out and buy private insurance.

Well, here is a little secret. Private insurance is exempt from antitrust laws, thanks to the Republicans, so they can and do collude. They won't let you have a preexisting condition. They can discriminate in any way they want. They can price gouge. They can price fix. And the Republicans say that driving people to that system, not giving them a low-cost, public plan option, and making the health insurance industry more cost effective and truly competitive is a better solution.

Now, come on, guys. Do you really care about those 50 million people, or not?

LOWERING STANDARDS OF LIVING THROUGH THE WAXMAN-MARKEY BILL

(Mr. LUCAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LUCAS. The Waxman-Markey bill is one of the most monumental bills that this Congress will consider. It has the potential to permanently damage the standard of living for every man, woman, and child for decades to come. Yet Speaker PELOSI and the administration want to force this bill through Congress.

This bill will tax you. It creates a massive national energy tax that will be devastating to those who live and work in rural America. It promises higher energy costs, lost jobs and higher food prices. This bill will affect all of us. If you like being warm in the winter, if you like being cool in the summer, if you own a farm or a small business, if you like to eat, if you like to go anywhere, this bill will affect you.

Agriculture is squarely in the cross-hairs of this bill because it is energy intensive. That is why 40 agricultural groups, including the American Farm Bureau, have expressed opposition to it. No large farm group has endorsed it.

A 1,000-page bill of this magnitude deserves thoughtful consideration and debate. Instead, Speaker PELOSI is rushing it through Congress to the detriment of all of us.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. BUTTERFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, from the creation of Medicare and Medicaid in 1965 to the reauthorization of SCHIP earlier this year, we have come a long way toward ensuring that every American has access to affordable, quality health care. These programs, Mr. Speaker, ensure that our children and the disabled and the elderly have access to health care. Now it is time to get serious and to help those people in the middle who have been left out.

Family health care costs are increasing. Families cannot afford the rising cost of health premiums, many employer-sponsored plans are providing less coverage and higher deductibles, and there are 45 million Americans with no insurance.

We must seize this opportunity to enact reforms that reduce costs, protect existing plans, preserve our choices in doctors, hospitals and care, and ensure affordable quality health care for all. I support President Obama and the Democratic leadership. We must act now.

WAXMAN-MARKEY BILL IS ALL HAT AND NO CATTLE

(Mr. NEUGEBAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, in Texas there is an old saying about the cowboy that was all hat and no cattle; in other words, he was all show and no substance.

At a time of economic hardship, Mr. Speaker, this Waxman-Markey energy bill is all tax and no energy. It is going to cost every American family a $3,100 increase in their energy costs. Farm income is expected to decrease $8 billion in the near term and almost $50 billion in the outyears, a 57 percent decrease in farm income over the next 20 years.

The trouble with this cap-and-tax is it is also going to increase the cost of buildings and construction of farm buildings. In a town hall meeting last week, Mr. Speaker, the people in the 19th Congressional District said, Congressman, please stop this cap-and-tax bill. They know that this is a plan not to produce more energy, but it is a plan to increase taxes, to take more money out American families' pockets.

Mr. Speaker, I stand for the American farmers and families and small businesses all across America. I opposed this cap-and-tax plan. The Waxman-Markey bill is all hat and no cattle.

ENERGY

(Ms. TITUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. TITUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of efforts to spur investment in clean-energy and energy-efficiency technology that will create clean-energy jobs back home in Nevada and across our country.

Investments in clean-energy technologies like solar, wind, geothermal, smart grid and advanced batteries will help the United States regain its competitive edge in a global green economy, reduce our reliance on foreign oil and improve our energy security.

Clean-energy jobs, like manufacturing solar panels and windmills and constructing new energy-efficient buildings, are jobs that can stay right here at home in the United States. But the United States is currently losing the clean-energy jobs and marketplace share to countries like China, Germany and Korea.

A thriving clean-energy economy will ensure that the United States creates a sustainable manufacturing base that will compete with the rest of the world. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to make the investments necessary to help create a booming, clean-energy economy right here in the United States.

SOLDIERS OVERSEAS SHOULD HAVE THEIR VOTES COUNTED

(Mr. FLEMING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today out of concern with the recent news that one out of every four ballots requested by military personnel and other Americans living overseas may have gone uncounted in the 2008 election. These findings were released in a recent Senate hearing.

The report claims that of 441,000 absentee ballots requested, 98,000 were claimed to be lost. Over 13,000 were rejected because of missing signatures or failure to notarize. Another 11,000 were returned as undeliverable.

I agree with Senator SCHUMER that this system needs an overhaul. While erving our country overseas, our soldiers deserve to have their votes counted and their voices heard. We need to ensure there is sufficient time for ballots to reach them and have them fill them out and return them for inclusion for their vote to count.

The cornerstone of democracy, Mr. Speaker, is the right to vote. Those sacrificing to protect this right should be given every chance to participate in the electoral process.

REMEMBERING THOSE DEVASTATED BY IOWA FLOODS

(Mr. BRALEY of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, one year ago today, I got in a plane and flew back home to Waterloo, Iowa, to a district and a State underwater. The railroad bridge in downtown Waterloo was torn down by the raging waters of the Cedar River, and my entire State went through the worst natural disaster in our State's history.

It is hard to believe that that much time has passed, but the work continues and the good, resilient people of Iowa continue to build, which is why Secretary Donovan is there today announcing the latest rounds of HUD assistance to help people get back on their feet and rebuild their homes.

I will be wearing next week, in the congressional baseball game, the jersey of the Anamosa Blue Raiders. Last year, this baseball team's entire field was under 10 feet of water, and it is a symbol of what happens when communities all over this country are devastated by natural disasters. That is why the work we do in this body is so important, and I continue to call upon people to keep in mind those who are devastated in a similar way in the years and days ahead.

KEEPING AMERICA COMPETITIVE IN THE GLOBAL ECONOMY

(Mr. REICHERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REICHERT. Mr. Speaker, American jobs are being threatened by new proposals to tax the earnings of American employers operating in markets around the world. We cannot forget that we are in a global economy. America cannot just be a participant in this global economy, but they have to lead in this global economy. In the middle of a downturn, it makes no sense to eliminate a tax incentive like deferral that American employers need to compete in a global marketplace and create American jobs at home.

Eliminating tax incentives like deferral would send U.S. jobs overseas and almost make it impossible for us to compete with China, India and Europe. Raising taxes on the earnings of U.S. companies discourages investments at home and increases the cost of employing U.S. workers. One of the largest employers in my districts, Microsoft, said last week that raising these taxes on their foreign earnings would force them to move thousands of employees out of the United States.

Congress must help to protect, promote and create jobs at home by encouraging American employers to invest and engage in new markets.

PROTECTING AMERICAN WORKING WATERFRONTS

(Ms. PINGREE of Maine asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, coastal communities across this Nation are in trouble. In Maine and in other coastal States, working waterfronts and the jobs they provide are quickly disappearing.

Working waterfronts include commercial fishing, boatyards and other businesses who need access to the water. Once these businesses close, once the waterfront stops supporting these businesses, history shows us they do not come back.

Recently, I introduced the Keep America's Waterfronts Working Act of 2009. This bill will help communities acquire permanent access to the water and develop programs to protect working waterfronts and the jobs they provide, the backbone of our coastal communities.

A report released this week, the "State of the U.S. Ocean and Coastal Economies," coauthored by Professor Charlie Colgan from the University of Southern Maine, found that coastal counties contributed 42 percent of the national economic output in 2007, and working waterfronts are critical to supporting this economy.

We must protect working waterfronts and the jobs they provide. I would like to thank my colleagues for joining together to protect working waterfronts, and I look forward to working together to move this legislation through Congress.

RECOGNIZING DR. TERRY BRADLEY ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

(Mr. NUNES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. NUNES. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to offer my gratitude on behalf of the people of the 21st Congressional District for the lifetime service of Dr. Terry Bradley. He is retiring from his position as superintendent of the Clovis Unified School District.

I have known Terry for many years as his Representative in Congress. His hard work and commitment to the students and faculty of Clovis Unified has always impressed me. Indeed, Terry's legacy is one that should be celebrated. During his tenure, he presided over faculty investments amounting to over $1 billion. These improvements, as well as his commitment to excellence, have made a real difference in the quality of education for the students.

While the parents and students of Clovis will miss him, Terry can leave his position with full confidence that Clovis Unified School District, a school district that has helped lead the valley into the 21st century, will continue to thrive for future generations.

WE MUST REFORM HEALTH CARE

(Mr. PAYNE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the time has come to take decisive action on health care reform. We simply cannot afford to wait any longer. American families and small businesses have seen the cost of health care coverage steadily rise to the point where many can no longer afford to pay their premiums. We know that our system is broken when we have 46 million Americans, many of them in my home State of New Jersey, who are only one illness or one accident away from being wiped out financially.

As President Obama and the majority in Congress work to take our Nation in a new direction, we are firmly committed to making improvements in our health care system in a way which will reduce costs, preserve a patient's choice of doctors and plans, and ensure quality, affordable health care for all.

It is important that we promote wellness by investing in prevention and educating about healthy life choices. Health care reform is an issue that we can resolve if we work together in good faith for a solution. Just saying "no," as some in Congress have chosen to do, will only worsen the problem.

ADDRESSING GREENHOUSE GAS EMISSIONS

(Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Energy and Commerce legislation that addresses greenhouse gas emissions. We have heard a lot of fear-mongering here on the floor of the House of Representatives and a lot of misinformation trying to scare voters and consumers into believing that somehow their taxes are going to go up. That is not true.

As a matter of fact, this is a carefully crafted bill that provides lots of exemptions to energy-intensive industries to trade to vulnerable industries that will really make a difference in people's lives. But, frankly, to stand still is to lose, and that is why so many companies, like Johnson & Johnson, ConocoPhillips, have endorsed this legislation.

Energy-intensive industries have endorsed this legislation because they know that if we are going to move forward and stay competitive as a country and if we are going to protect the interests of our consumers and the environment, we need a new platform. This bill provides that.

I support the legislation, urge my colleagues to do so too, and not to listen to fear-mongering.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1886, PAKISTAN ENDURING ASSISTANCE AND COOPERATION ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2009, AND PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2410, FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2010 AND 2011

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 522 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 522

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 1886) to authorize democratic, economic, and social development assistance for Pakistan, to authorize security assistance for Pakistan, and for other purposes. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived except those arising under clause 9 or 10 of rule XXI. The amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs now printed in the bill, modified by the amendment printed in part A of the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution, shall be considered as adopted. The bill, as amended, shall be considered as read. All points of order against provisions of the bill, as amended, are waived. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, and on any further amendment thereto, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; (2) the further amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in part B of the report of the Committee on Rules, if offered by Representative Ros-Lehtinen of Florida or her designee, which shall be in order without intervention of any point of order except those arising under clause 9 or 10 of rule XXI, shall be considered as read, and shall be separately debatable for 30 minutes equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent; and (3) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

SEC. 2. At any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2410) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State and the Peace Corps for fiscal years 2010 and 2011, to modernize the Foreign Service, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived except those arising under clause 9 or 10 of rule XXI. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. All points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute are waived except those arising under clause 10 of rule XXI. Notwithstanding clause 11 of rule XVIII, no amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in part C of the report of the Committee on Rules. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived except those arising under clause 9 or 10 of rule XXI. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

(b) conform the title of H.R. 2410 to reflect the addition to the engrossment of H.R. 1886;

(c) assign appropriate designations to provisions within the engrossment; and

(d) conform provisions for short titles within the engrossment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Florida, my good friend, Mr. DIAZ-BALART.

All time yielded during consideration of the rule is for debate only.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that all Members be given 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 522.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H. Res. 522 provides for consideration of H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009, and H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011. Both bills are debatable for 1 hour each, equally divided and controlled by the Chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The rule on H.R. 1886 self-executes as a manager's amendment to resolve jurisdictional concerns in the bill and legislation providing for Afghanistan-Pakistan security and prosperity enhancement. It also makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute authored by Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN, which is debatable for 30 minutes.

The rule for H.R. 2410 makes in order 27 amendments listed in the Rules Committee report. Each amendment is debatable for 10 minutes, except the manager's amendment, which is debatable for 20 minutes. The rule includes a motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, the United States is faced with many challenges on the world stage. It is critical that Congress put forth the necessary funding to help rebuild our diplomatic capabilities abroad and mitigate the damage that was done under the previous administration's leadership.

H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011, is the first foreign relations-related authorization bill to reflect essential democratic priorities since 1993. As such, it provides a new direction forward and vital resources to boost our diplomatic capacity, improve our relations around the world, protect our national security, and make use of America's smart power, rather than rely on the military only solutions of past Congresses and the previous administration.

H.R. 2410 and H.R. 1866, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009, together, set forth a progressive foreign affairs agenda that emphasizes diplomatic, economic and social efforts at change, not just the use of military force.

For years the Department of State has been denied critical resources to fulfill its core diplomatic missions in furthering our global interests and protecting our national security. In neglecting diplomacy, we have missed opportunities to prevent and mitigate conflicts around the world.

Our diplomatic activities are woefully underfunded, undermanned, and underutilized. We must rebuild our diplomatic capacity to meet the needs of our increasingly complex global relations. Diplomatic, economic and social assistance is a much wiser and less expensive investment than war. Rather than relying on either hard power or soft power, we must, instead, emphasize smart power.

Promoting democracy, human rights, the rule of law and the development of civil society is a matter of leadership requiring us to think beyond unilateral military solutions and to, instead, embrace a much more comprehensive approach to our relations with the international community. This rule enables us to consider legislation to do just that.

The first legislation on this rule, the Foreign Relations Act, advances crucial and laudable programs. The Department of State is authorized to hire more than 1,500 Foreign Service officers, ensuring that our overseas posts will be staffed with eager and knowledgeable workers committed to promoting American culture, values, and policies.

Critical multilateral assistance is authorized to fund our obligations to international organizations, including the United Nations and global peacekeeping operations. This effort demonstrates the United States' commitment to working with our friends and allies as a true partner in peace and cooperation.

I'm particularly pleased with the increased funding authorization for the Peace Corps, enabling a dramatic expansion in the number of volunteers and countries served. Peace Corps volunteers exemplify our national commitment to improving the world, devoting their lives to helping the world's poorest people build communities and lift themselves out of poverty. As one of our Nation's most treasured and effective international programs, we must ensure that it attracts top quality volunteers and can reach into the farthest corners of the world.

Improvements in refugee and migration assistance are a critical part of this legislation. The United States has a long history of commitment to humanitarian issues, and this bill authorizes the funds necessary to improve resources and programs to effectively help families reunite and resettle.

I fully support section 235, relating to Iraqi refugees, whom the United States has a special obligation to help. There are more than 4.7 million Iraqis currently displaced within their own country and in neighboring states. Sadly, however, this situation has not improved much. And yet the principal reason, I believe, that this crisis has not received the attention that it should is because Iraqis are not living in refugee camps. Instead, they are a mobile population scattered throughout the region. This fact alone has made this humanitarian crisis virtually invisible to the international community. However, for those Iraqis who remain stranded, jobless, and deprived of essential services, with conditions worsening by the day, this deepening crisis only threatens to further destabilize the entire region. Section 235 of this legislation is an important step towards fulfilling our obligation to assist the Iraqi people recover from years of war and conflict.

If a picture is really worth 1,000 words, then all one must do is look into the face of the Iraqi refugee, as I have, who has had a family member murdered, kidnapped or tortured, and their own life threatened, to know that the United States must respond. I'm, therefore, grateful that my language, introduced in legislation, was included in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this rule also includes H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enforcement Act. This legislation takes our Pakistan policy in a new direction, affirming the United States' commitment to a sustained partnership with Pakistan.

Since 2001, the United States has provided over $12 billion to Pakistan, without specific goals or objectives. Frankly, the situation has only gotten worse since that time.

By providing over $6 billion in 4 years in democratic, economic and social development assistance, this bill demonstrates our determination to help Pakistan build a stable, democratic and prosperous future.

□ 1045

This funding will provide critical resources for Pakistan to address the fundamental needs of its citizens.

Through the Pakistan Counterinsurgency Capabilities Fund, the United States is also committed to helping Pakistan combat terrorism and the Taliban insurgency. At the same time, mindful of the past history of neglecting oversight, this legislation provides a range of transparency, evaluation, and accountability standards to ensure that our money and efforts are being applied effectively and efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, as I am concerned about the situation of Iraqi refugees, I am also concerned about the situation of Pakistan's refugees. According to news reports, more than 3 million people in Pakistan's northwest region have been uprooted due to ongoing fighting. Like the Iraqi refugee crisis, the Pakistan refugee problem, if not handled properly, could become a ticking timebomb with ramifications far beyond what we can conceive today.

It is imperative that the mistakes of the previous administration with regard to Iraq are not made again. I am pleased that the United States has recently committed $200 million on top of a previous commitment of $110 million, but we must not think that this is the end of our responsibility. The United States must seize this opportunity and implement a comprehensive plan to address this growing humanitarian crisis.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good rule that paves the way to considering essential legislation to put our foreign policy on the right path towards improving our relations around the world. I urge adoption of the rule and passage of the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my good friend, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), for the time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First I would like to say a word about the session of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States, OAS, held last week. It was an embarrassment. Fidel Castro in Cuba wants the U.S. to apologize to him for having kept the U.S. market and its millions of tourists and billions of dollars in financing from him and for having denied him full diplomatic recognition for decades.

He also wants the international community to kneel before him and apologize, which is what the OAS did last week. Fidel Castro has been recruiting advocates, spies, defenders, cronies, and servants for years. The ideological and psychological fascination and dependency that Hugo Chavez has on Fidel Castro has allowed Castro to utilize Chavez's billions of petro dollars to purchase many important defenders. It is part of the public record that a suitcase of Chavez cash heading to Mrs. Kirchner in Argentina was recently intercepted by authorities before reaching its intended destination.

Castro has purchased advocates and spies through the years via the always-present threat of blackmail after trips to totalitarian Cuba, where the regime tapes visitors in compromising situations, as confirmed by Interior Ministry defector Roberto Hernandez del Llano and Cuban counterintelligence defector Major Roberto Ortega.

Castro also serves as a banker for illicit money possessed by those who seek to avoid detection by the anti-laundering mechanisms set up by the international community. It matters not if the money's source is political corruption or narcotrafficking.

Through his mastery of the semantic of anti-American Marxism-Leninism, he has also conned others into being his spies. No other state sponsor of terrorism—no other state, in fact—has had more spies arrested and convicted in the United States in the last decades as Fidel Castro's dictatorship.

Let us remember Ana Montes, one of the top analysts at the Defense Intelligence Agency who was arrested in 2001 and subsequently convicted of espionage in Federal court and whose treason led to the deaths of many, including U.S. Special Forces Sergeant Gregory Fronius. And just last week, Walter and Gwendolyn Myers, a long-term State Department official and his wife with access to classified documents, were arrested for spying for their beloved hero, the Cuban tyrant.

Hugo Chavez's absolute dependency on Fidel Castro for every major decision, even for his phrases and gestures in international forums, is unprecedented. While the Soviet Union used to send Castro economic aid and also orders and instructions, Chavez sends Castro billions of dollars and receives orders from him.

What the world witnessed, first at the April Summit of the Americas and then at last week's meeting of the OAS, was a culmination of years of preparation in the purchase and cultivation of advocates and defenders by Fidel Castro. Castro's defenders know full well that chapter II, article 3d of the Charter of the Organization of American States requires the existence of representative democracy in all of the countries of our hemisphere and that the Inter-American Democratic Charter of 2001 carefully spells out the collective steps to be taken when an American republic's democracy is even threatened. They know that Cuba, under Castro, was the only country in our hemisphere where free elections have not been held in over 50 years and where dungeons are full of nonviolent political prisoners who are subjected to hell on Earth each day of their lives. They know that under Castro Cuba is a personal island-estate, a ranch, a personal landholding or homestead, a totalitarian fiefdom owned by one man with a brother who enjoys the title of head of State and carefully carries out his brother's orders.

At the OAS meeting of last week, we witnessed an example of the Obama administration's diplomatic incompetence and its appeasement of the enemies of the United States. The administration went along and agreed to violate the OAS Charter and the OAS Inter-American Democratic Charter in an action that constituted a grotesque and unmerited betrayal of the oppressed people of Cuba.

The Obama administration says that the OAS resolution was a great victory because even though paragraph 1 of the "resolved" clause unilaterally lifted the exclusion of the Cuban military dictatorship, in paragraph 2, the dictatorship was allowed to initiate a process of dialogue to reenter the OAS in accordance with the practices, purposes, and principles of the OAS. In other words, in the first sentence, the OAS ripped up and threw in the garbage can the practices, purposes, and principles of the OAS, including its charter and the Inter-American Democratic Charter. And then in the next sentence, it invited the Cuban military dictatorship back in in accordance with the practices, purposes, and principles of the OAS. Some victory. I mention this in the context of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act because the American taxpayer should not be paying for almost 60 percent of the putrid embarrassment which is the OAS.

I recognize that on funding international organizations, the administration will get its way, just like the Bush administration would get its way whenever someone in the OAS would propose ending the exclusion of the Cuban military dictatorship and the administration would simply say, That's a nonstarter. But here is the heart of the issue with regard to U.S.-Cuba policy: The U.S. Congress must continue to condition access by the Cuban regime to the billions of dollars in U.S. tourism and massive investment in trade financing to the liberation of all political prisoners, without exceptions; the legalization of all political parties, without exceptions, labor unions and the press; and the scheduling of multiparty elections. That is critical leverage for a democratic transition to take place in Cuba when Fidel Castro dies, for he is the ultimate source of absolute personal totalitarian power in that enslaved island, like a modern day Caligula or Nero, and that moment is approaching.

We must keep in mind the effect of unilateral concessions such as last week's shameful OAS action on Fidel Castro. How does he react to such unilateral concessions? The repression is more intense than ever; the brutality, more savage than ever. The alliance with Chavez, the Iranian dictatorship, the Syrian regime, Middle Eastern terrorists, and with the North Korean dictatorship is closer than ever. That is what must be kept in mind about unilateral concessions to the Cuban military dictatorship.

Now, specifically with regard to the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, earlier in the year Secretary Clinton testified before the House Foreign Relations Committee that she had challenged the State Department to reform and innovate and save taxpayer dollars. I found the Secretary's statement to be quite appropriate. Unfortunately, the majority has decided to ignore that challenge and instead today has brought forth legislation that authorizes increased spending by 35 percent without increased transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

This legislation will also increase U.S. taxpayer funding authorized for the United Nations by nearly one-third without requiring the United Nations to undertake necessary reforms to improve efficiency and stop blatant corruption.

While failing to place accountability standards in this bill, the majority decided to include provisions in the Pakistan Assistance Act—which is also being brought to the floor with this one rule—that will micromanage U.S.

policy toward Pakistan. In a letter to the Armed Services Committee, Secretary of Defense Gates and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mullen wrote that "the degree of conditionality and limitations on security assistance to Pakistan" in the legislation "severely constrains the flexibility necessary for the executive branch and the Department of Defense given the fluid and dynamic environment that exists in Pakistan."

This rule bringing forth two pieces of legislation limits the number of amendments that the House will be allowed to debate. Out of the 85 amendments submitted to the Rules Committee, the majority decided to make 27 amendments in order. I understand that the majority has a responsibility to move legislation and manage the time on the floor, but if we look at the amendments the majority made in order, they do not fully address the scope and range of issues of concern to House Members. For example, amendments that would prohibit funds from being used by the State Department to encourage U.S. courts to dismiss claims brought against European insurance companies to recover compensation from Holocaust-era insurance policies, or, for example, to re-list the North Korean tyranny as a state sponsor of terrorism were prohibited from being debated.

I don't understand why the majority blocks a debate on such important amendments. I don't know if they're afraid of debate or protecting the Members from tough votes or afraid of the democratic process, or all of the above.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased at this time to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California, my good friend, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BERMAN.

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding me this time, and I rise in strong support of the rule authorizing the Foreign Relations Act to come to the floor, H. Res. 522. This rule covers both H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011, and H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement Act of 2009.

These are both critical measures. H.R. 2410 provides the resources necessary for the President to realize his vision of making vigorous diplomacy a cornerstone of our strategy to promote U.S. national security.

By wisely investing resources to strengthen our diplomatic capabilities, we can help prevent conflicts before they start and head off the conditions that lead to failed states. This approach is a much more cost-effective one than providing massive amounts of humanitarian aid, funding peace-keeping operations or, in the most extreme circumstances, deploying U.S. troops into harm's way.

I think the Rules Committee has crafted a fair rule in regard to the bill, one that continues our efforts to include a number of amendments from the Republican side.

With respect to H.R. 1886 regarding Pakistan, I do not need to remind my colleagues of the challenge to U.S. national security posed by the situation in that country.

□ 1100

We cannot allow al Qaeda and any other terrorist group that threatens our national security interests to operate with impunity in the tribal regions or any other part of Pakistan. Nor can we permit the Pakistani State and its nuclear arsenal to be taken over by the Taliban. H.R. 1886 was designed to address these threats by supporting democracy, enhancing U.S. economic assistance, and providing the Pakistani military with the tools they need to fight the terrorists.

I am pleased we could work out a consensus on this important bill with our colleagues on the Committee on Armed Services as reflected in the amendment made in order by the rule. And I'm also pleased that the rule makes in order a Republican substitute. This way we can discuss the best way forward to ensure that we get the results we need in this ongoing effort to combat those who threaten our Armed Forces, our allies, and even our homeland.

I urge all my colleagues to support the rule.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank my good friend for yielding.

I rise in opposition to the rule.

Let me just say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, in the 1990s, I served as chairman of the International Operations and Human Rights Subcommittee, at first having served as ranking member to Tom Lantos. Then when the House went Republican, we switched and I became the chairman of that committee. And one of the responsibilities of that committee was to write the Foreign Relations Act, the State Department Reauthorization Act, for the country. And we worked very hard, Mr. Lantos and I, very diligently in crafting a bill that was, A, truly bipartisan and, B, open to virtually every amendment that Members wanted to offer.

I remember bringing a bill to the floor, Mr. Speaker, where every day Members just had to file their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a preprinting requirement, so in the morning we would wake up and find out what amendments might be offered, and then we would deal and dispatch positively or negatively with those amendments. The process was open, transparent and fair.

Today we have a very much closed rule, except on matters where there is consensus. Sure, there are some Republican amendments. But on areas where there is significant and fundamental disagreement, especially an amendment that I had hoped to offer to authorize the office for Global Women's Issues, I had been precluded that opportunity. And I want to say to my colleagues I didn't do that when I chaired the subcommittee, and I worked very hard in a bipartisan way with my friends, and I do consider you on the other side of the aisle friends, to ensure that we all got to express our voice and vote on things that mattered, that we all had an opportunity to express ourselves.

In Committee, I offered an amendment to establish a Global Office on Women's Issues. It lost in a party-line vote. Every Democrat voted against it; every Republican voted for it. That legislation would have established a new Office for Global Women's Issues led by an ambassador-at-large, designed to coordinate and advise on activities, policies, programs, and funding related to women's empowerment internationally. The amendment would promote activities designed to expand educational opportunities and job training for women, equal pay for equal work, microfinancing and microenterprise programs for women, property inheritance rights for women, an improvement of maternal mortality, expand pregnancy care centers, combat forced abortions and forced sterilization, to enhance our efforts in the area of sex and labor trafficking particularly of women and other forms of violence against women, seeking an end to genital mutilation, stop child marriage, and promote changes in male attitudes and behavior that are detrimental to women. That was all prescribed in the legislation, and obviously other things could be included as well, consistent with core human rights norms that all human life, Mr. Speaker, is sacred and precious and worthy of protection regardless of age, sex, race, color, creed, disability, wantedness, or condition of dependency. My amendment sought to hold harmless unborn children and their mothers from the violence of abortion.

The Smith amendment is abortion neutral and states that the new office shall not engage in activities to author the laws or the policies of foreign countries with regard to how abortion is regulated or permitted. Abortion neutral. I would like it to be a pro-life office that says it time to empower and embrace and enfranchise unborn children.

I say to my colleagues, We live in 2009. We no longer have any doubts about the humanity of an unborn child. Unborn children are just like you and I except they're young, they're immature, and they're dependent. And their human rights are violated with impunity not just in this country but around the world. Sadly, the Obama administration, and I say this with great sadness, Mr. Obama is well on his way to becoming the abortion President. Virtually everything he has done through Executive order and through appointments and through other policies promote the killing of unborn children and the wounding of their mothers.

So I rise in opposition to this rule, Mr. Speaker. Whether this body chose to vote up or down on my amendment, we should have had the opportunity. It saddens me greatly because, again, I have great affection for the chairman, Chairman BERMAN, and for his staff, with whom I have worked very closely on human rights issues. This is a human rights issue.

There could be a consensus about the new office that's being created, that has already been created, and that this gives statutory affirmation to for women's issues. But, unfortunately, we will not have that opportunity.

I will remind my colleagues that Alveda King, Dr. Martin Luther King's niece—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Dr. Martin Luther King's niece, Alveda King, has had two abortions. She now heads up an organization called the Silent No More Awareness Campaign, and she speaks out and says that this is the new civil rights movement, protecting the unborn child but equally protecting women from abortion. It is violence against women. It is violence against children.

The new Global Office on Women's Issues ought to at least be neutral, I would say affirm the unborn but at least neutral when it comes to respecting unborn human life.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado (Mr. POLIS), my colleague and a good member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of the rule and H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011. I would like to thank Chairman BERMAN and the House Foreign Affairs Committee for their continued insight, leadership, and their focus on diplomacy in the realm of foreign affairs and for bringing this much-needed reform legislation to the House floor.

Mr. Speaker, during the Bush administration, the Department of Defense acted as our primary foreign liaison, much to the detriment of our relationships worldwide. This bill corrects the damage done over the past 8 years by providing the State Department with much-needed resources that will once again make diplomacy the centerpiece of our outreach effort.

This bill authorizes funding for the State Department and USAID to help prevent, navigate, and peacefully resolve foreign crises. This bill strengthens our own Nation by putting forth the image of America that we want the world to see: a hardworking nation rooted in tolerance and innovation. It reflects our commitment to intellectual diplomacy and allows the United States to lead by example.

For instance, by doubling the amount of volunteers in the Peace Corps, we can double our response to humanitarian and international development needs. By creating the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation, we would allow more students, regardless of their economic background, to experience foreign cultures.

This legislation creates 1,500 foreign service jobs at the State Department with another 700 at USAID over the course of fiscal years 2010 and 2011. It funds language training programs, sorely neglected for years due to underfunding.

As the Representative of the Second District of Colorado, we have a large Tibetan and Tibetan Buddhist community, and I'm particularly appreciative that this bill establishes a Tibet section in the American Embassy in Beijing and a United States consulate in Lhasa, Tibet. These offices will follow political, economic, and social developments inside the country and report on human rights. It also establishes a Tibetan scholarship program that will enhance cultural exchange possibilities for American students and develop increased understanding of the region as a whole.

Another crucial element of modernizing the State Department is fighting the discrimination against the LGBT community worldwide, including in Iraq. This legislation requires the State Department to monitor and track violence, criminalization, and restrictions on fundamental freedoms, basic human rights, consistent with U.S. law. It requires the State Department to demand foreign governments to change or repeal discriminatory laws that criminalize homosexuality as well as requiring reports on related violence and discrimination. This will ensure that our foreign counterparts heed our rejection of intolerance and ensure that all people are granted the dignity they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I also applaud H.R. 1886, the Pakistan Enduring Assistance and Cooperation Enhancement, or PEACE, Act. It demonstrates America's commitment to foreign diplomacy and codifies the principle that social and economic development is critical to fighting terrorism and promoting peace.

Both bills bring to mind T.H. White's idea that "might is not right." Military intervention is not as strong a diplomatic tool as fostering understanding.

I urge my colleagues to support and vote "yes" on the rule and the bill.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE).

Mr. ROYCE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that Pakistan is at a very critical juncture. We have radical militants. We have radical madrasas that are graduating an ever-increasing number of jihadists out of those schools, and we have a weak government with nuclear weapons.

This Pakistan bill is a good attempt to guide our engagement in Pakistan in a way that gives us the best chance to see that our aid is spent in a constructive and responsible fashion, which hasn't been the case. I commend its author, Chairman BERMAN.

As to the rule, I think it is problematic. The State Department authorization bill, quite simply, spends money we don't have, over a third increase at a time when we're borrowing money from China and elsewhere. Amendments to cut this amount were not made in order. I think that was a mistake.

I am very disappointed, let me add, though, at the addition done by the Rules Committee of a flawed trade provision. Don't get me wrong. Trade can do far, far more than aid for Pakistan's economic development and social stability, which is in our interest. The problem is that this provision is far too restrictive and burdensome as to do any good. In fact, it may be harmful to trade. At a time when Pakistan is perhaps the greatest threat facing us, this is no time for window dressing and business as usual. This preferential trade provision as it came out of Rules Committee is simply unacceptable.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BERMAN.

Mr. BERMAN. I again thank my friend from Florida for yielding me some additional time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to use this time to deal with one of the points made by my friend from Florida (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART) and then more substantially to the issue raised by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. DIAZ-BALART cited a letter signed by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of Defense that was sent a number of weeks ago, long before a series of changes were made in this bill. At the time that letter was sent, we had a very elaborate resolution of disapproval process for the Presidential determinations. That has been struck. We had a very high waiver standard vital to national security interests. That has been struck. We had a great dispute that was existing over how the Pakistan Counterinsurgency Cooperation Fund should work. Those issues have all been worked out with the House Armed Services Committee. The House Armed Services Committee has worked through all of these issues with us. They are reflected in the Pakistan bill. This is the committee to whom the Secretary's letter was addressed. A number of changes have been made. My friend's comments relate more to the Pentagon's view of this bill before all those changes were made than they do now.

□ 1115

The issues I would really like to focus on are the issues raised by the gentleman from New Jersey. This is a State Department authorization bill.

The first thing was to put together this bill to say we are not going to use this piece of legislation to change the substantive law on the issue that is so controversial for which disagreements are so strong in this House. This is not going to be a vehicle for changing the law on that subject. So, when a number of the groups came with a compelling case—the pro-choice groups—that we should include a provision in this bill that prohibits any President in the future from imposing an executive order, such as the Mexico City policies, I said I would love to. I support that position, but we're not going to use this bill to do it.

The gentleman from New Jersey, in his heart, is not truly driving at the Office of Global Women's Issues. This is an office that, in one form or another, has been around since 1975. Their purpose is to promote education for women and girls around the world and to promote political empowerment, like the right to vote for women and dealing with problems of violence against women. There is no basis for assuming that this office is going to do anything to promote or to lobby for abortion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. BERMAN. Moreover, in the manager's amendment, which is made in order by this rule that we are now debating, I said let us establish in policy our statement of neutrality on this issue. We include in the manager's amendment a provision which says nothing in this section, and in particular, the duties of the Office of Global Women's Issues, shall be construed as affecting in any way existing statutory prohibitions against abortion.

There will be no change whatsoever in existing statutory prohibitions against abortion or in existing statutory prohibitions on the use of funds to engage in any activity or effort to alter the laws or policies in effect in any foreign country concerning the circumstances under which abortion is permitted, regulated or prohibited.

That means the Siljander amendment, the Helms amendment and the Leahy amendment, which construct the current state of the law with respect to U.S. efforts on this issue abroad, remain in effect and unchanged, and there is nothing in the statutory institutionalization of an already existing Office of Global Women's Issues that will change any of that. We reaffirm that by this statute.

What the gentleman from New Jersey wants to do—he didn't quite say it, but he acknowledges it when asked about it—is change the law. That's legitimate. He can have his efforts; but for those of us who say let's not use this as a vehicle one way or the other and for those of us who have rejected efforts that we, personally, support and to which I am very much committed in the pro-choice community regarding this issue, there is no basis for saying that this bill is defective because it doesn't serve either side's agenda on this particular issue.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank my colleague for yielding.

I had three amendments that were brought before the Rules Committee yesterday, and for the life of me, I can't figure out why the Rules Committee didn't make these amendments in order. Let me just talk to you about these three amendments. Then I'd like for the Rules Committee to comment on them, if they would.

First of all, there is a man named Benon Sevan, who has been indicted in the Oil-for-Food scandal with Saddam Hussein. Saddam Hussein was kicking millions of dollars to this guy in the Oil-for-Food scandal. This guy has been indicted. He is hiding in Cyprus right now, and the U.N., with our money, is going to pay his legal bills, and they're almost $1 million already.

Why should the American taxpayer be paying the legal bills of Mr. Sevan, who was involved in the Oil-for-Food scandal that we all know about? Why should the United States taxpayer be paying his legal fees, especially when he is hiding out in Cyprus?

Well, that was one of the amendments, and I hope you'll explain to me why the American taxpayer should be paying for that.

The second amendment deals with liquidated assets that we give to enterprise organizations around the world. We give hundreds of millions of dollars to organizations around the world to help the economies of various countries. When those enterprise funds and organizations are liquidated, they take that money, and they put it into foundations or into other organizations within those countries. Right now, there is $900 million that is sitting out there of American taxpayer money that is going to foundations in other countries, and we don't believe all of that money should go there, because it is not for its intended purpose. So, if they want to do that, we think we should get at least half of our money back, which would be $450 million.

For the life of me, I can't figure out why the Rules Committee wouldn't want to get at least half of our money back that's not being used for its intended purpose. It makes no sense to me, so I hope they'll explain that to me.

Lastly, Jerusalem in Israel is our best ally in the Middle East. Since the 1967 war, Israel has maintained that united Jerusalem is the indivisible, eternal capital of Israel. On November 14 of 2005, Congress mandated that the embassy be moved to Jerusalem. We mandated that our embassy be moved from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem in 2005, but we did give the President waiver authority under certain circumstances. Every single year, there has been a waiver granted that does not allow our embassy to be moved to Jerusalem.

I think that's wrong. It's time to change that. My amendment would have said that we move our embassy and that we start building the embassy in Jerusalem now just as it was proposed and passed by this Congress in 2005.

So I would like for my Democrat colleagues on the Rules Committee to explain to me why these three amendments were not made in order: one dealing with something we've already done, which was to order our embassy in Israel to be moved to Jerusalem. We've already ordered that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I hope you will explain.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. KLEIN), my colleague and fellow Floridian.

Mr. KLEIN of Florida. I thank the Congressman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the rule and the underlying legislation, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act of 2009. This bill will allow us to advance our foreign policy and our national security goals, and I believe very strongly in those goals.

I would also like to briefly speak about one provision in the bill that will help to ensure the safety of many Americans. As many of us know, June 1 is the beginning of hurricane season, and there are many ways to be prepared. Hurricane hunter planes, used by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and by the Air Force, fly into hurricane areas to more accurately predict where a hurricane is going. However, certain countries are not allowing these planes to fly into their airspace. If one country obstructs our hurricane preparedness efforts, it could be the difference between life and death. This legislation puts in place measures so that the State Department can resolve this issue as soon as possible and can help protect our Americans.

I would like to thank the chairman for allowing us to work on this issue and on all of the others with me and with others. I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point made by the distinguished chairman as to the strings on the military aid to Pakistan, I hope and expect that that will be engaged in during the debate with the ranking member, who very clearly in the Rules Committee pointed out that the strings are still excessive.

I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. LEE).

Mr. LEE of New York. I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the rule and the underlying bill. The legislation we're set to consider today is the latest demonstration of Washington's failure to understand how the middle class lives in these difficult economic times.

Try, for instance, to explain the logic in granting a 23 percent increase to overseas foreign service officers to the workers in my district who are either taking pay cuts or who are losing benefits as their families in my district are doing their best to make ends meet. When Washington spends money, it does not have to fund these salary increases. It is not just the disconnect on spending that is cause for concern.

In the last month alone, gas prices in my district have been up over 41 cents. These are resources coming from individuals who are struggling in my district to make ends meet. Now Democratic leaders are pushing for an ambitious national cap-and-trade tax. This new energy tax will cost between $200 and $300 a month for struggling families. This affects not only families but small businesses, ranchers and farmers. I can't think of a worse way to deal with our pressing energy needs than to have a tax situation.

We need to be looking at an all-of-the-above strategy, be it nuclear power, wind or solar. We need not be looking at trying to tax right now, which will push businesses further away and which will create a loss of jobs in our communities. Whether it's the excessive spending in the measure we are considering today or whether it's this new national energy tax, Washington continues to grow more and more out of touch with middle-class America and with the families of my district.

I urge my colleagues to vote down the rule and to oppose the underlying bill.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, how much time do both of us have?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) has 6½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART) has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. I would inquire of my friend if he has any additional speakers.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Then I would reserve at this time and would allow that you go forward.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Thank you.

I yield 2 minutes again to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank my good friend for yielding.

I just want to say to my pro-life friends on the Democrat side of the aisle: think consequences.

In late April, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton testified one of our hearings—and this is the question I posed to her—Is the Obama administration seeking in any way to weaken or to overturn pro-life laws and policies in African nations and in Latin American countries either directly through multilateral organizations, including the United Nations, the African Union or the Organization of American States, or by way of funding NGOs like Planned Parenthood?

Secretary of State Clinton answered that the administration was “entitled” to advocate abortion “anywhere in the world.”

She also went on to redefine the words “reproductive health,” which are found in many documents and in many laws around the world, in a way completely contrary to the accepted definition by the previous administration and by many others to now include abortion. So every time you see those words now in a document, to the Clintons and to the Obamas, they mean “abortion on demand.”

The Office of Global Women’s Issues should be all about promoting human rights for women. Promoting violence against children and promoting the wounding of their mothers by advocating abortion is not human rights. It is the contrary. It is the exact opposite.

I hope my colleagues will realize that the amendment that my good friend and colleague, the chairman of the committee, Mr. BERMAN, is offering simply restates current law. It says the new office will follow the law. Did anybody expect that the office would not follow the law? Of course they would. Well, hopefully, they would.

We need to make sure, we need to ensure that this new office, which will be a command and control center, for women’s rights and empowerment and not become an office for NARAL, for Planned Parenthood or for others in the promotion of child deaths around the world. Let’s hold harmless the precious lives of unborn children. Let’s mitigate maternal mortality and all of the other crises affecting women, not the killing of unborn babies.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Ms. CLARKE), my good friend.

Ms. CLARKE. I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS).

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. This authorization includes provisions that keep our country safe, that advance human rights, and that promote gender equality across the globe.

In the 110th Congress, I introduced H. Res. 1504 in response to a 2007 report by the United Nations’ Office on Drugs and Crime and the World Bank, linking drug trafficking to rising crime rates in Caribbean nations.

□ 1130

The measure calls for increased cooperation between the U.S. and Caribbean officials to combat drug trafficking and promote counterterrorism. CARICOM, made up of 15 countries, including Trinidad and Tobago, Haiti and Jamaica, serves as our Nation’s third border. Drug traffickers and criminals use these nations as transit points en route to the United States, making us less safe and contributing to a deterioration of the human welfare and social and economic development of those nations. This authorization acknowledges this problem and authorizes the President to incorporate CARICOM into the Merida Initiative. This will provide CARICOM with the technical and logistical support needed to combat drug trafficking and promote counterterrorism.

Also included in this authorization is the enactment of the Shirley A. Chisholm Educational Exchange Program. I was an original cosponsor of the stand-alone bill, H.R. 416. This program provides scholarships for CARICOM students to study at American colleges and universities and requires that, upon program completion, participants either return to the CARICOM or seek a job that directly benefits CARICOM nations and their people. This exchange program will create a safe and economically vibrant Caribbean Basin and keep us safe here at home.

The authorization also includes language that creates the Office of Women’s Global Affairs with the fully empowered ambassador-at-large. According to the Center for Development and Population Activities, gender equality is essential for development, democracy, and global progress.

Thank you for yielding time, and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the rule and underlying bill.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire how much time remains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART) has 5 minutes. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) has 4½ minutes remaining.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BROUN).

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to this rule. I am very disappointed that the Rules Committee did not rule my amendment in order. My amendment would have required the State Department to wait for a response from the CIA before issuing a visa to an applicant when a Security Advisory Opinion has been requested.

National security is a primary function of the Federal Government under the Constitution, and after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, our Nation has had to take a closer look at our policies and create a more layered approach to security, including visas. However, as tourism has once again increased, so have the waiting times for some visas.

Earlier this year, the Department of Homeland Security initiated a review of the State Department visa approval process, Mantis applicants in particular. The committee staff was finally briefed last week on changes that had already been implemented. According to details supplied during the briefing, DHS determined that the waiting period for Mantis visas was too long. The primary reason cited was lack of staff.

Instead of simply increasing the staff and resources needed, DHS recommended and implemented several policy changes—a small window for certain intelligence agencies to respond before State could clear the visa. This is insane.

Let me be clear. What we’re talking about is allowing some foreigners to enter our country before our intelligence agencies have fully vetted their visa applications. Again, what we’re talking about is allowing some foreigners to enter our country before our intelligence agencies have fully vetted their visa applications.

I’m very concerned about these changes, and I urge my colleagues to join me in investigating this issue. It’s an important aspect of our national security, and I am disappointed that my amendment was not allowed to receive debate and a vote on the floor today.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have no additional speakers, and I'm prepared to close.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of our time to the ranking member, Mr. DREIER.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, it seems like a long time ago, but I would like to begin by congratulating my friend from Miami for his very thoughtful and very passionate opening statement. It's very important, Mr. Speaker, that we get this bill right because it clearly has an impact on every bilateral, regional and multilateral relationship that we have in the world. And I hope very much that at the end of the day, we will be able to get it right.

I would like to take my time to talk about just one of those very important bilateral relationships that we have, and that is the relationship with what Colin Powell described as the most misunderstood country in the world. I'm talking, Mr. Speaker, about the fourth most populous country in the world, the largest Muslim population in the world, and of course, by virtue of that, the largest Muslim democracy in the world, that being Indonesia.

Now, as we look at the changes that have taken place over the past 11 years in Indonesia, it is absolutely remarkable and extraordinarily impressive. The 32-year reign of Suharto came to an end in 1998, and since that time, we have seen democracy take hold and build.

We all know that democracy is a work in progress. We in America know that our democracy continues to be a work in progress and Indonesia's is as well. The challenge of ensuring that the military comes under civilian rule is one with which they're still grappling. And if you think about this country, 17,000 different islands and hundreds of languages and ethnicities, and yet they have been able to cobble together what President Yudhoyono described to some of us as the convergence of modernity, Islam, and democracy.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to this day to work on that relationship through our House Democracy Assistance Commission, where we're working to build the parliament which, again, a little more than a decade ago was a sham organization, and today it is growing and building well. Other institutions, including the very important rule of law in Indonesia, are continuing to build as well.

So there are challenges. We all know that. And I hope very much that we will be able to continue to encourage the kind of reform that is taking place there. So at the end of the day, I have to say on this measure that we're dealing with, as Mr. DIAZ-BALART has pointed out so well, there are some important amendments that some of my colleagues have spoken about that were not made in order. So I'm going to urge my colleagues to join with us in opposition to this rule because Mr. SMITH, the distinguished ranking member of the full committee, Ms. ROSLEHTINEN, and others, argued that we should have an open amendment process that would allow a free-flowing debate on all of these issues.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is a good rule that paves the way to improving our relations around the world.

As I listened to the ranking member, my good friend on the Rules Committee, I thought that he was going to support the rule because he's so impressed with the work that was put forward in this bill that covers developing democracies, which he has been such a tremendous champion of over a period of time.

Mr. DREIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. I'll yield for 5 seconds.

Mr. DREIER. I think it could be even better if we were to have an open amendment process.

I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Reclaiming my time, clearly it covers what you like, and I'm delighted. After years of neglect, now is the time to inject the critical resources that will enable the Department of State and other foreign policy agencies to carry out their important work of rebuilding lasting partnerships with our friends and allies.

The underlying bills include important provisions to fulfill our obligations to the United Nations, to peace-keeping efforts, to humanitarian aid and refugee assistance, and to building effective counterterrorism and arms control policy, and yes, to do everything in our power to avoid unwanted pregnancies in the first place. These bills are a great leap forward.

I urge a "yes" vote on the previous question and the rule.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this rule and the underlying bill, H.R. 2410. I especially want to express my appreciation to the Chairman, Members and staff of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, for crafting a bill that will allow the State Department and our embassies around the world to close the diplomacy gap and carry out their missions more effectively.

I especially wish to thank Chairman BERMAN and his staff for working with me to include language in the managers' amendment to develop and implement a comprehensive strategy to address global hunger and food security, issues very close to my heart and also a priority for the Committee.

A wide range of federal departments and agencies have jurisdiction over policies and programs addressing global hunger and food security, often lacking coordination and a coherent vision. A comprehensive strategy will increase the impact of the resources we invest in these programs and ensure that U.S. policies and programs contribute in a more substantial way to reducing global hunger and increasing food security around the world.

Advancing such goals is not just a humanitarian and development priority, it also strengthens our national security. Every child who receives a meal in school, every farmer who can make a decent living from the land, every mother who raises a well-nourished child, every family that has hope for the future creates a more stable country, region and world, less prone to recruitment by those who would sow terror or the exploitation of old hatreds and prejudice.

I salute the Chairman and the Committee for including this provision in the managers' amendment and in the House bill.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on adoption of House Resolution 522 will be followed by 5-minute votes on motion to suspend the rules on House Resolution 453 and motion to suspend the rules on House Resolution 454.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 238, nays 183, not voting 12, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2010 AND 2011

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 522 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2410.

□ 1220

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2410) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State and the Peace Corps for fiscal years 2010 and 2011, to modernize the Foreign Service, and for other purposes, with Mr. HOLDEN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIR. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered read the first time.

The gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the United States now confronts the most complex array of threats in many decades, if not the entire history, of our Nation.

Afghanistan and Pakistan, Iran, North Korea, terrorism, nuclear proliferation, drug trafficking and climate change all pose major challenges to our national security. And we must confront these threats in the midst of a global financial crisis with enormous ramifications both at home and around the world.

Our brave men and women in uniform are making unbelievable sacrifices to protect our security interests around the globe. They and their families deserve our deepest respect and gratitude. But we should not expect the military to shoulder the entire burden.

The State Department and our other civilian foreign affairs agencies have a critical role to play in protecting U.S. national security. Diplomacy, development, and defense are the three key pillars of our U.S. national security policy. By wisely investing resources to strengthen our diplomatic capabilities, we can help prevent conflicts before they start and head off conditions that lead to failed states.

For years we have failed to provide the State Department with the resources it desperately needs to pursue its core missions. With the expansion of U.S. diplomatic responsibilities in the 1990s, and the more recent demands of Iraq and Afghanistan, the Foreign Service has been strained to the breaking point. Sixteen percent of all positions are currently unfilled. One in nine positions overseas is vacant.

As Secretary of Defense Robert Gates recently stated: "It has become clear that America's civilian institutions of diplomacy and development have been chronically undermanned and underfunded for far too long."

The legislation before us today, Mr. Chairman, takes an important first step in correcting that situation. It supports President Obama's request for funding to hire over 1,000 new staff, including at least 750 Foreign Service officers; 332 of these positions will be used to immediately expand our diplomatic presence in Afghanistan, Pakistan and other strategic areas. A further 213 positions will be dedicated to improving and expanding training in critical needs languages such as Arabic, Chinese, Hindi, and Urdu.

The bill also provides resources requested by the administration for significant numbers of new public diplomacy officers, arms control experts, counterterrorism specialists.

And the bill has important provisions to promote more strategic thinking in the State Department and help the Foreign Service transition from traditional diplomatic framework to a more expeditionary one.

To help ensure the Department can continue to attract the best and brightest and retain these professionals over the long term, H.R. 2410 closes the pay gap that currently results in a 21 percent pay cut when junior Foreign Service officers leave Washington on assignment.

The bill also authorizes funds to pay our full dues and all recognized arrears to the United Nations.

The legislation supports a significant expansion of the Peace Corps, an increase in international broadcasting activities, a vigorous public diplomacy effort, and a strengthened arms control and nonproliferation bureau at the State Department, which will soon be under the head of our dear colleague, Mrs. TAUSCHER.

In addition, the bill creates a new foundation to significantly increase the number of American students studying abroad, enhances U.S. efforts to help Mexico and other Latin American countries reduce drug violence, and addresses a number of key human rights and democracy issues around the world.

H.R. 2410 also reforms our system of export controls for military technology, improves oversight of U.S. security assistance, and requires a report to Congress on actions taken by the United States to maintain Israel's qualitative military edge.

This legislation is supported by a wide range of organizations, from the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, on one hand, to Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International on the other. From the Aerospace Industries Association, the Satellite Industry Association, on one hand, to CARE, Oxfam, the Peace Corps Association, Refugees International, and the Genocide Intervention Network on the other, the Save Darfur Council, Church World Service, and the American Council on Education, a coalition of all the major public and private universities in this country all strongly support this legislation.

I urge all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this important legislation.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take our time in opposition to this bill.

And, Mr. Chairman, some Dear Colleague letters sent out by a few Members earlier this week, Mr. Chairman, in order to express their support for this bill, tended to focus on the few attractive features of the bill, such as the improvements that it would make on the Merida Initiative, our vital effort to assist Mexico and other Central American countries to fight the dangerous drug cartels.

Unfortunately, supporters of this bill have remained silent or ignored its fundamental problems. And the fundamental problems on this bill are that the bill calls for exorbitant spending in the absence of true reform, and that the bill does not take the difficult but necessary step of setting priorities, either with out-of-control spending or with important international issues that are facing our country.

By our best estimate, the bill before us represents an estimated 12 percent increase in planned expenditures above the levels of fiscal year 2009. It creates 20 new government entities, offices, foundations, programs and the like. These new programs, and these new initiatives that are funded in this bill constitute expenditures that go beyond even this 12 percent increase to accounts previously funded in fiscal year 2009.

The bill also represents a 35 percent increase in State Department main salary and operating accounts. We have to ask ourselves, where is the money coming from to support the additional funding?

In the coming fiscal year alone, Mr. Chairman, fiscal year 2010, we are expected to have to pay almost $285 billion, that's billion with a B, in interest costs, just interest, not payment on the debt itself. By fiscal year 2014, our cost for interest on the debt will likely have risen to about $560 billion, again, that's with a B, in that year alone, again, for interest payments alone, not for the debt payments that will have to be made.

Our deficit in the coming fiscal year, 2010, is now projected to total an estimated $1.3 trillion. Yet the funding levels proposed by this bill seem oddly detached from the reality that our families are facing today and that our Nation is facing.

Both in committee markup and at the Rules Committee, I offered amendments that would have capped increases for next year at 3.7 percent, a 2008 annual rate of inflation. This amendment would have saved taxpayer dollars, more than $2.8 billion in authorized funds. That amendment, again, would have saved American taxpayers more than $2.8 billion, with a B, in authorized funds.

Unfortunately, this measured, calibrated approach was rejected twice in favor of the largesse in this spending bill.

In trying to justify the enormous spending increases in this bill, supporters paint a picture of a hollowed-out shell of a State Department suffering from years of neglect. Yet, according to the Congressional Research Service and the State Department's own data, funding for the State Department and related agencies doubled from fiscal year 2000 through 2008. This clearly shows that growing the bureaucracy and throwing money at the Department of State are not the answer.

Supporters of this bill further argue that the major funding increases for the hiring of new staff are necessary, even in the absence of reforms. I note that there was an effort last Congress by colleagues in the other Chamber to ascertain the levels of absenteeism at various U.S. Government agencies. The results for the State Department were impressive—in an ironic way. The Department explained that it did not specifically track absences without official leave. It was the only executive branch agency that could not provide such information. Instead, the State Department only tracks those incidents in which such absenteeism reaches such an egregious level that discipline is required.

As a result, we—and the management of the Department—have little idea if the Department's own personnel are at their posts at the times we would expect them to be. And although we realize the overwhelming majority of State Department employees are hard-working patriots, they are the ones who should be upset about absenteeism in others. The bill before us today does not address such questions, nor does it build on earlier inquiries such as the ones I have cited. Instead, supporters of this bill focus their arguments on unfilled State Department vacancies. And these arguments, too, Mr. Chairman, do not bare careful scrutiny. Most of the so-called "vacancies" are the result of shifting personnel to high-priority posts rather than cuts in funding.

Furthermore, the State Department always shows unfilled positions on their books because those numbers are the result of our overseas posts' self-identified needs rather than being a budget-driven number. It is a way of saying that they would like more employees and more funding. What agency wouldn't? I expect that all Americans would identify very significant unfunded needs in our own homes and our families and our budgets.

Moreover, at a time when we need to cut the deficit, in just one little-noticed instance, this bill bypasses an opportunity to transfer several hundred million dollars to our Treasury to help us pay down our national debt. In fact, an amendment offered by my friend from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) was not made in order by the rule.

Mr. BURTON's amendment would have required that just half of the funds of U.S.-funded enterprise funds abroad be turned over to our U.S. Treasury when they close down their operations. By remaining silent on the disposition of such funds, Mr. Chairman, this bill would instead allow loosely overseen so-called "legacy institutions" to take possession of all of those funds. This bill prefers to focus on creating new U.S.-funded foundations and offices that will add hundreds of millions of dollars in new costs to the taxpayers over the coming years.

And when it comes to policy issues, Mr. Chairman, this bill does not set the priorities that we believe would best serve our Nation. Not only does this bill provide close to $2 billion in funding for the United Nations—not including peacekeeping—without requiring any reform, but it also authorizes the payment of all claimed U.N. arrears or back payments. Why should American taxpayers be asked to write a blank check to the U.N.? Why not demand specific returns on our investments? Instead, efforts to leverage our contributions to secure concrete, systematic and comprehensive reforms through the U.N. system were rejected by both the Foreign Affairs Committee and in Rules.

This bill provides an inexplicable authorization to pay a higher rate for U.N. peacekeeping than even the U.N. is charging us. The bill's assessment rate could result in the U.S. paying, in 1 year alone, more than $100 million for U.N. peacekeeping above that which the U.N. requires us to pay.

The bill also fails to take any action to address endemic corruption at the United Nations. In fact, not only does the underlying bill and the manager's amendment remain silent on the U.N.'s misuse of American taxpayer funds for activities that undermine U.S. interests, but an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana—again, Mr. BURTON—which sought to prevent U.S. taxpayer dollars from paying for the legal fees of corrupt U.N. officials was rejected at Rules and will not be considered today because, Mr. Chairman, the U.N. has decided to pay the legal fees, possibly almost $900,000, of Benon Sevan, who ran the U.N.'s corrupt and disastrous Oil-for-Food program which was supposed to help innocent Iraqis but instead was exploited by Saddam's regime. U.S. Federal and state prosecutors have charged Sevan with bribery and conspiracy to commit wire fraud. But this bill before us does nothing to protect taxpayer dollars from bankrolling and rewarding corruption at the U.N.

The underlying bill also helps foster the culture of corruption at the United Nations by failing to leverage U.S. contributions to the U.N. Development Program, UNDP, until it accepts the jurisdiction of the U.N. Ethics Office.

The UNDP, to which the U.S. contributes $100 million or more per year, continues to be the poster child for mismanagement, corruption, and waste, from Zimbabwe to Uganda to Burma to North Korea. In fact, the United Nations Development Program had to pull out of North Korea after reports emerged that development aid was being diverted to the North Korean dictatorship. Now, unbelievably, UNDP is returning to North Korea with essentially no meaningful protections to prevent U.S. taxpayer dollars from again benefiting Kim Jong Il and his corrupt cronies. Our Treasury Department has even engaged a collection agency to retrieve over $7 million in U.S. taxpayer dollars mismanaged by UNDP in Afghanistan.

We might never know about UNDP's corruption and mismanagement without the help of brave whistleblowers. Unfortunately, whistleblowers have few protections at the U.N., and the UNDP has reportedly retaliated against a number of them, including the one who exposed their operations in North Korea.

Mr. Chairman, this bill should do more in safeguarding our constituents' hard-earned dollars. Nowhere are U.N. failures which undermine U.S. interests clearer than with respect to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, UNRWA. UNRWA has a strictly humanitarian mandate to provide aid to Palestinian refugees, but it continues to compromise its mandate and our U.S. taxpayer dollars. It does so by emitting propaganda against Israel in favor of Hamas, doing business with banks targeted by our government for terror financing and money laundering, and by refusing to vet its employees and aid recipients for ties to Palestinian militant groups like Hamas.

UNRWA's Commissioner-General says she doesn't even consider Hamas to be a foreign terrorist organization. And her predecessor admitted that members of Hamas were on UNRWA's payroll, saying, I don't see that as a crime. No one can guarantee that over hundreds of millions of dollars in U.S. funds sent to UNRWA will not end up in the hands of Hamas. Yet, this bill takes a see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil approach, refusing to demand accountability and transparency for our investments.

Supporters of this bill will claim that it strengthens nonproliferation activities at the Department of State. However, the pertinent section of the bill contains contradictory statements regarding the Department's nonproliferation and arms control infrastructure.

On the one hand, the bill asks the Secretary of State to develop a comprehensive plan to determine what the Department actually needs in terms of personnel, additional authorities and new appropriations in order to carry out its arms control and nonproliferation policies. Yet, before that plan has even been drafted, this bill removes the statutory requirement for the Assistant Secretary for Verification and Arms Control, authorizes $3 million for 25 new positions focused on arms control, and mandates other programs and activities. These provisions actually appear to be laying the foundation to reverse the reforms that were enacted by this House in 1998 under the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act.

Further, by removing the requirements for the Assistant Secretary for Verification and Arms Control, it is diminishing its importance, and targets for possible dissolution the bureau at State that was instrumental in the dismantlement of Libya's nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons program. This is also the one bureau that has consistently pressed for greater disclosure by the North Korean regime on the totality of its nuclear activities.

And on the issue of North Korea, Mr. Chairman, this bill and our Congress have remained largely silent on this, one of the most grave foreign policy crises currently confronting our Nation. North Korea's leader is preparing to test yet another long-range missile which could reach Alaska, Hawaii, and the west coast possibly as early as next week. Yet, an amendment I offered in Rules to address the escalating crisis in North Korea's nuclear brinkmanship was rejected.

This amendment would have re-listed North Korea as a state sponsor of terrorism, as suggested by Secretary of State Clinton this past weekend. It called for full implementation of sanctions, including those imposed by the U.N. Security Council resolutions adopted after previous North Korean missile and nuclear tests, but never fully enforced. It contains consequences as called for by the administration's North Korean Special Envoy after Pyongyang's April 5 missile test. This amendment raised great concern about Pyongyang's defiant, continuing proliferation of weapons of mass destruction to Iran, to Syria, and other rogue regimes. It also pointed to the North Korean regime's horrific record on human rights abuses.

Pyongyang made a provocative and reprehensible decision just a few days ago in a secretive kangaroo court to sentence U.S. citizen journalists Laura Ling and Euna Lee to 12 years of hard labor in the North Korean gulag. This amendment demanded the immediate and unconditional release of our two U.S. citizens before the lifting of any U.S. sanctions or granting of diplomatic recognition.

Much of the language of my amendment had been accepted by the chairman last year and incorporated into the Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Reform Act of 2008. The Foreign Affairs Committee unanimously adopted the agreed-upon North Korea language during a markup held last May. Yet the amendment I offered to address this threat to U.S. national security interests and to our allies in the region was rejected yesterday by the Rules Committee.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, at a time when our country faces a range of threats in our own hemisphere, this bill does not set out a comprehensive approach to those threats. The bill also displays a willingness to put our national security interests in the hands of the vaguely defined "international community."

Mr. Chairman, because of the fundamental weaknesses and the core problems with this bill that have not been addressed, I will not be able to support this bill. I urge my colleagues to also oppose H.R. 2410 and vote "no" on final passage.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to the vice chair of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, the chairman of the Subcommittee on the Middle East and South Asia, Mr. ACKERMAN.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I rise in strong support of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorizations Act. And I want to commend our chairman, the gentleman from California, for his commitment to this legislation, which I believe is a reflection of the gentleman's enormous dedication to this institution and its role under the Constitution.

For many years, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act has been held hostage to debates about abortion and family planning, to the inability of the other body to get 60 of their Members to agree to anything, and to a general feeling that it just wasn't essential to do. The result has been an insidious decay of the effectiveness of our diplomatic capabilities and our capacity to influence events around the world.

Some might ask, what does this have to do with my constituents? Isn't that why we have a strong military to protect us? Isn't that their role? The simple answer is that our diplomats and our development professionals are not a luxury, nor a fancy affectation of power. These are not aristocrats sipping tea while wearing striped pants and ascots. These are people who are on the front line of our defense. Not the Army, not the Navy, not the Air Force, the Marines, or the Coast Guard; it is the Foreign Service that lives always full time out in the ugly and dangerous parts of the world representing our interests, building alliances, monitoring and reporting on events that may affect our security, and helping to defuse crises and tensions before they sometimes burst into armed conflict or war.

There is a simple reason that both the Secretary of Defense Gates and Admiral Mullen, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have repeatedly and passionately insisted on the necessity of rebuilding and strengthening the State Department. It will save the lives of the people for whom they are responsible. It will allow the Armed Forces to avoid conflict. It will shorten conflicts by allowing our military to focus on security, not negotiations, not governance nor development.

In this respect, the title of the bill may mislead some. The bill is not about foreign relations; it's really about our national security. Our national security. It's about the safety of this Nation and our ability to protect and advance our interests around the world. Military power is essential. The United States would not be the country that it is if we did not have such an extraordinary military. But our Armed Forces exist chiefly to deter and defend. Whatever the last few years may have suggested, we are not a Nation that believes in starting wars to solve problems nor in the use of force to resolve political conflicts. A strong State Department and revitalized U.S. Agency for International Development are not favors that we do for others. These are institutions that are essential to our national security and our national interests. The bill is, in fact, merely a downpayment on a process of rebuilding that should have begun years ago.

So if you want to bring our troops home from Iraq, then you know that Iraqis have to improve their own internal cooperation and performance in their government. Who is supposed to help them with that? If you want to help Afghanistan and get our troops home from there, then you know that that problem is about poppy farming and police corruption that have to be addressed. Who is supposed to help them with that?

If you want to prevent Iran's nuclear program from setting off a chain reaction of proliferation, then you know that we're going to need a broad international coalition to stop them. Who's supposed to put it together and keep it together?

We can not afford a second-rate diplomatic corps any more than we can tolerate troops who are untrained, ships that are rusting or aircraft that are unmaintained. Our national security is a whole. We can't succeed with our military and fail with our diplomacy and development, and then hope to be safe. It doesn't work.

That's what this bill is about: keeping our nation safe. And it deserves the support of every Member.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), the ranking member on the Subcommittee on the Middle East and South Asia, who had very good amendments to offer yesterday.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I want to thank the ranking member on her opening statement.

My goodness, I think you covered just about everything and you did it very well. And I want to compliment your staff for working so hard on that statement.

I'm perplexed on this bill because there is some language in there that I like. For instance, the commitment to Israel, giving them support for their missile defense system, I think that's a positive. But there are so many negatives in this bill that it's going to make it very difficult for those who would like to support it to not be able to. Let me just give you a couple of examples, and the ranking member just mentioned that.

North Korea should be called a terrorist state. They're launching missiles and threatening the security of the entire region as well as giving nuclear technology to other countries. In addition to that, there's money in here, our tax dollars, that are going to defend Mr. Sevan, who is hiding out in Cyprus right now because he's been indicted and the U.N., using our tax dollars, is going to pay for his defense, which is almost $1 million. We shouldn't be using taxpayer dollars for that, and we ought to let the U.N. know it.

In addition to that, the bill is increasing spending by 12 percent to $41 billion over a 2-year period. There's a pay raise in there, and I understand these people work very hard, but we are having difficult times here at home. People in this country are suffering, and they want to give a 23 percent increase in pay to overseas Foreign Service officers. I just don't get that. Maybe a pay raise of some size should be realized, but 23 percent when this country is really suffering economically makes no sense.

It also creates an Office for Global Women's Issues. And it's highly likely that this office will include, in its mission, the advancement of abortion advocacy abroad. And I don't think this body ought to be doing that, especially those who believe so strongly in the right-to-life provisions that we have supported in the past.

The CHAIR. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I yield an additional 30 seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

And then, of course, it has a sexual orientation amount of language in it which would require the tracking of discrimination related to sexual orientation for actual or perceived sexual orientation and gender identity violations. And then, finally, it increases the U.N. spending by so much and the contributions we would have to give by 32 percent over the 2009 levels.

This is not a good part of the bill. We would like to support the bill, but unfortunately, there is too much junk in it, Mr. Chairman. I wish we didn't have to say "no" to this.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 1 minute to one of the new members of the committee who has been of tremendous assistance on a variety of issues, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CONNOLLY).

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. I thank the illustrious chairman of our committee, who has done so much hard work in moving forward U.S. foreign policy.

Mr. Chairman, I, of course, rise in support of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act.

President Obama has redefined the playbook and raised expectations for America's engagement in the global stage. As we all know too well, the U.S. is involved in two theaters of war in Iraq and Afghanistan. Defeating extremist militants will require the proper diplomatic resources, and as Secretary Gates has stated in both the Bush and Obama administrations, we cannot win these wars by sheer force alone.

To this end, the bill authorizes funding for 1,500 new Foreign Service officers. It strengthens the Peace Corps by making it U.S. policy to double the number of volunteers and by authorizing $400 million in fiscal year 2010 and $450 million in fiscal year 2011. It requires that the President conduct an 18-month strategic review of defense trade controls beginning not later than March 31, 2010, to determine the effectiveness of current export regimes.

According to the Defense Department, the Department of State's mission is critical. On July 15, Secretary of Defense Gates said, "Truly harnessing the full strength of America requires having civilian institutions of diplomacy and development that are adequately staffed and properly funded."

The CHAIR. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield to another new Member of the House and of the committee, a great Member, Mr. MCMAHON, for 1 minute.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2410, and I would like to thank the great gentleman from California, Chairman BERMAN, for working with all the members of this committee, the more senior and the junior as well, and in particular for including provisions that are raised by so many of my constituents back home in Staten Island and Brooklyn, New York.

As we know, effective diplomacy complements defense strategy and requires a combination of several important efforts, and as my colleague the great gentleman from Virginia, GERALD CONNOLLY, was mentioning, Secretary of Defense Gates himself has said, "Long-term security challenges require our government to operate with unity, agility, and creativity, and will require devoting considerably more resources to nonmilitary instruments of national power."

Mr. Chairman, the United States must be more serious about its diplomatic commitments, responsibilities, and presence overseas to ensure a more secure future for her own citizens. I hope that all of my colleagues will join with us today in supporting this important legislation and send an important message that will be heard loud and clear around the world.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am now pleased to yield 1 minute to a good friend from California who has been on the committee and has returned, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, I thank our chairman for all he has done to make sure that this is a Foreign Relations Authorization Act that we can be truly proud of.

I'm pleased that this bill moves our foreign policy away from intimidation and preemption to a policy based on smart security. This bill invests in our dedicated Foreign Service officers, increases funding for international student exchanges, doubles the number of Peace Corps volunteers.

We must send a clear message to the world community that we are rededicating ourselves as a Nation to diplomacy, and H.R. 2410 actually absolutely helps. With it, military might will no longer be our sole representative overseas.

So I urge my colleagues to support smart security, which is supporting education, infrastructure, diplomacy, agriculture, and we can do that by voting in favor of this legislation.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MILLER), the chairman of the Science and Technology Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight and a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. MILLER of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I also rise in support of this legislation, which takes major steps to rebuild the capacity of our civilian foreign affairs agencies. It will strengthen diplomacy and development, two neglected pillars of our national security. Most important, this bill strengthens our capacity to prevent genocide and meet the needs of peacekeeping missions in the Democratic Republic of Congo and elsewhere in the world. This bill will provide funds to refurbish helicopters needed for peacekeeping missions.

More than 5 million people have died in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo, the deadliest conflict since the Second World War, and violence continues in Darfur and Chad. The people of Darfur are still waiting, as are those of the Democratic Republic of Congo and Chad, where shortages of helicopters are crippling the work of U.N. peacekeepers. If we are to regain our moral authority in the world, we must continue to lead the fight against genocide and champion the protection of innocent civilians. This bill will help.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON), a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2410. I want to thank Chairman BERMAN for including H.R. 2828, a bill that Congressman BLUNT and I cosponsored in the last Congress that passed the House 409-12, in the manager's amendment. H.R. 2828 compensates relatives of U.S. citizens killed in the 1998 embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania.

On August 7, 1998, al Qaeda truck bombs exploded simultaneously at the embassies in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, and Nairobi, Kenya. The embassy bombing in Nairobi killed 12 Americans serving the American people. They were: Sergeant Nathan Aliganga; Consul General Julian Bartley and his son, Jay Bartley; Jean Rose Dalizu; Molly Huckaby Hardy; Staff Sergeant Kenneth Hobson II; Prabhi Kavaler; Arlene Kirk; Dr. Louise Martin; Michelle O'Connor; Master Sergeant Sherry Lynn Olds; and Tom Shah.

H.R. 2828, therefore H.R. 2410, remembers their sacrifice and provides restitution to the loved ones they left behind.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is the very least that a grateful nation can do. I urge an "aye" vote on H.R. 2410, and I want to thank Chairman BERMAN, Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN, and Mr. BLUNT for their support.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chair, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to my colleague from California (Mr. SCHIFF), a former member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and a member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SCHIFF. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the Foreign Affairs Committee for all their hard work on the Foreign Relations Authorization Act and thank Chairman BERMAN for his support and his staff for working with me to include the Daniel Pearl Act as a part of this legislation. By incorporating the Daniel Pearl Freedom of the Press Act, the committee brings much-needed attention to a critical human rights issue.

This legislation calls upon the Secretary of State to greatly expand its examination of the status of freedom in the press worldwide in the State Department's Annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices. The Daniel Pearl Act requires the State Department to identify countries in which there were violations of freedom of the press and whether the government of those countries participate in, facilitate, or condone the violations. This report will spotlight those governments which seek to silence media opposition.

The Daniel Pearl Freedom of the Press Act also establishes a grant program aimed at broadening and strengthening media independence internationally. Grant recipients will provide regionally and culturally relevant training to journalists and media organizations to help them meet international standards.

Again, I thank the chairman for his leadership on human rights issues and his support of the Daniel Pearl Freedom of the Press Act.

□ 1300

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I am now pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. FORTENBERRY).

Mr. FORTENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is critical for us to provide a clear vision for U.S. foreign policy to represent the best of the United States of America. I want to thank Chairman BERMAN and Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN for their efforts to bring this important measure to the floor today.

Mr. Chairman, a Muslim cleric once whispered to me, Do not forget the goodness of America. America is justice.

While much has changed in the world in recent years, the core ideals that made the United States a generous, principled and prosperous Nation—the commitment to justice for all—remain unchanged. We are now entwined in a more interdependent world, which entails the potential for great good or for great harm. We can innovate to build sustainable capacities to help all persons achieve their full potential, or we can find ourselves in a race against time in seeking to prevent advanced technological capacities, such as nuclear weapons development, from serving tyrannical purposes that aim to destroy and to subjugate free people to coercive ideologies.

While not always popular, I believe that it is essential to engage other nations as a force for good in the world by maintaining a robust and effective diplomatic and assistance framework. This is why I do support some of the more aggressive proposals contained in this measure, such as the augmentation of Foreign Service officers at the Department of State and at the United States Agency for International Development.

We simply cannot respond to monumental changes in the world with an overextended workforce and with diminished capacities to accomplish complex and difficult assignments. However, it does concern me that many people throughout the world hold a dualistic view toward our country. Given the nature of the system of government that we have been very fortunate to inherit, they look to us in hope, and they see the United States as a force for great good. However, on the other hand, they are wary of the imposition of controversial Western-style notions upon them.

For instance, pursuant to Secretary Clinton's recent testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, we are now faced with a policy that equates abortion advocacy with health care advocacy, a policy that is very divisive in our own country and is one that many nations around the world repudiate. It is not consistent with internationally accepted notions of human rights. Such a policy will undermine the very relationships we are seeking to strengthen through this measure.

While I see great value in strengthening our foreign relations overall, I remain deeply concerned that the bill before us today provides a framework for injecting jarring and discordant notes from divisive and unresolved domestic disputes here in our country into U.S. foreign policy. We should be using this process to find our common ground, to develop the tools that actually bind the human family, that lift weary human hearts around the world, that provide justice for all, especially for vulnerable persons, including the elderly, the mother and her unborn child, the father seeking to provide protection for his family, and the tribe and culture seeking recognition, dignity and freedom from tyranny and twisted ideologies.

In good conscience I cannot support this legislation as it stands because it risks subordinating U.S. foreign policy to highly-charged domestic social controversies and imposing controversial Western social paradigms on cultures that should have the freedom to preserve their most cherished traditions for the well being of men and women, families and children.

The approach before us risks politicizing our foreign service at a time when a strong, united, bipartisan approach to the myriad security and diplomatic challenges we face is vital. Our foreign policy should reflect our shared values as a nation, and I stand ready to work with my colleagues on that which unites us. With that said, I regret that I must urge my colleagues to vote no on this measure.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the very active and distinguished member of the committee, the gentlewoman from Texas, Ms. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Thank you very much to both the chairman and the ranking member of the full committee, Chairman BERMAN and Ranking Member ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN.

Mr. Chairman, it is too short a time to talk about the catastrophic positive effect that this will have on the American people—on their security and on their position in the world. We have always been a country that recognizes the importance of minding our own business but, frankly, that also understands the importance of being a good friend.

I rise to support H.R. 2410 because this legislation authorizes the hiring of 1,500 additional Foreign Service officers over the next 2 years. If you have visited these embassies, as I have, you know that they are the positive face of America. They work hard. They engage in negotiations. More importantly, they solve problems. We also put forward the necessary resources for the U.N. peacekeeping missions in Darfur, in the Republic of Congo and in Chad.

Because of the section 1127 Sense of Congress, I am delighted that my legislation on ensuring that we continue to push for the comprehensive peace agreement is in this legislation.

Then I am extremely delighted and pleased that section 1104 has placed my statelessness bill into this legislation, which dictates that it is the purpose of this section to increase global stability and security for the United States and for the international community and to decrease trafficking and discrimination by reducing the number of individuals who are de jure or de facto stateless. This will help women and children, those who have been dispossessed and those who have been victims of human trafficking. Some of those cases have found themselves into my own community in Texas.

So let me again, Mr. Chairman, say that I rise to support H.R. 2410.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. INGLIS), a member of our Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. INGLIS. I thank the gentlewoman from yielding.

Mr. Chairman, there was an exchange in the Foreign Affairs Committee that was very instructive when it came to abortion and to this bill. Our colleague CHRIS SMITH, the tireless advocate for the unborn, was asking questions of Secretary Clinton. Secretary Clinton said these words to our friend CHRIS SMITH:

So we have a very fundamental disagreement, she said, and it is my strongly held view that you, CHRIS SMITH, are entitled to advocate, and everyone who agrees with you should be free to do so anywhere in the world, and so are we.

So who is the “we”? If that “we” means the Federal Government, the United States of America through its State Department, in the Secretary of State’s speaking “we,” then there is a real concern about whether this would then become the policy of the United States to advocate abortion overseas.

So our friend CHRIS SMITH proposed an amendment that was rejected by the Rules Committee that would have clarified this issue by saying that the U.S. will not lobby countries to legalize, fund or promote abortion except in the cases of forcible rape, incest or to save the life of the mother.

That language was rejected by the Rules Committee, which means, in the “we” that Secretary Clinton was talking about, it may be that the United States Department of State is going to be doing exactly what she was talking about: advocating the opposite position of what CHRIS SMITH was talking about.

Then the majority has inserted some language that is completely meaningless in this bill that was made in order at the Rules Committee. I hesitate to read it because it really is rather convoluted; but it says that the bill does not affect existing statutory prohibitions on the use of funds to engage in any activity or effort to alter the laws or policies in effect in any foreign country concerning the circumstances under which abortion is permitted, regulated or prohibited.

Well, that sounds sort of interesting, but the problem is it’s a complete sham because the law apparently referenced doesn’t exist. Therefore, there is no prohibition, so the language is meaningless. We don’t have the protection that our friend CHRIS SMITH was urging in the Rules Committee and was giving us an opportunity to vote on here on the floor to make it so that the United States Department of State is not actively advocating the overturning of abortion laws in foreign countries.

It is disturbing that the Rules Committee didn’t make that in order but, rather, made a sham amendment in order that does not do anything but, actually, just obfuscates the issue. It was just very disappointing, so I urge my colleagues to oppose this measure.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 1 minute to a great member of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CARNAHAN).

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this Foreign Relations Authorization Act. It provides the necessary resources for the State Department to fully carry out its core mission—U.S. diplomacy based on smart power as advanced by President Obama and Secretary of State Clinton—from authorizing funding for the U.N., for peacekeeping operations, for international organizations to establishing a critical study abroad program and doubling the size of the Peace Corps. This bill provides critical support for the State Department in helping to restore our image around the world—all critical tools for U.S. diplomatic power.

One of my particular interests is in looking for ways to increase and to enhance study abroad programs. Having studied overseas myself in undergrad, I am very pleased with the inclusion of the Paul Simon Study Abroad Act. American students who live and study in other countries not only gain invaluable experience, but they serve as some of America’s best ambassadors.

I want to thank the chairman for including this provision as well as my amendment, which will ensure that existing study abroad programs have equal access to grant funding so that they can expand their already successful missions. Mr. Chairman, thank you for your work on this bill. It will make a substantial difference in our diplomatic efforts to reengage the world.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), a member of our Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. PAUL. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me these 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill. Some are hopeful that this will be a less militaristic approach to our foreign policy. Quite frankly, I don’t see any changes. I wish it were something that would represent a humble foreign policy, but when you put an extra $100 million into the military operations of the United Nations, I hardly think this is a change in direction. Actually, it's $18 billion that is going into more meddling, and we don't have $18 billion.

The President has now asked us here in the Congress to follow the PAYGO rules. Well, that might be a good idea if we had set aside the idea that we would raise taxes, but we're not going to cut any domestic spending for this foreign spending, so the odds of this following the PAYGO rule are essentially nil.

I want to call attention to one provision in this that is rather disturbing to me, and that is the Civilian Stabilization Initiative. This is new. It was not invented by this administration. It was invented by the last administration. This is to set up a permanent standing, nation-building office with an employment of or with the use of nearly 5,000 individuals.

So what is the goal of this new initiative going to be? It will facilitate democratic and political transitions in various countries.

Now, if you want to talk about interfering in the internal affairs of other nations, that is exactly what this is all about. Facilitating democratic and political transitions? Well, of course. We've been doing that for a long time, but we've gotten ourselves into a lot of trouble doing it. We did it in 1953, and we're still suffering the consequences. This initiative is a little more honest. It's up front. We're actually supporting and funding a facility that would be involved in political transitions. The mandate in this is to "reconstruct" societies. That sounds wonderful. There are a lot of societies that need reconstruction, but so many of the societies that we have to reconstruct we helped to destroy or to disrupt.

Think of what our troops and our money have done in Afghanistan as well as in Iraq. I think this provision, itself, is enough reason to vote against this authorization.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere, my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL).

Mr. ENGEL. Well, I thank the chairman, and I especially want to thank him for his great leadership as chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly support this legislation. This legislation reinvigorates the Foreign Affairs Committee, and it provides a needed shot in the arm to American diplomacy. For too long, we have not given our diplomats the resources they require, and this bill provides a much-needed boost to those serving on the front lines around the world for our country.

Specifically, H.R. 2410 authorizes 1,500 additional Foreign Service officers, and it doubles the size of the Peace Corps.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere, I would also like to thank Chairman BERMAN for including several sections I developed to promote good relations with our partners in the Americas.

First, the bill incorporates the countries of the Caribbean into the Merida Initiative, a U.S.-Mexico-Central America security partnership.

□ 1315

The Caribbean leaders told us they wanted this at the Summit of the Americas, and I'm glad we've included this provision.

Second, the bill directs the State Department to develop a public diplomacy plan to prepare Haiti if Temporary Protected Status is granted to Haitians in the U.S. We need to grant TPS to Haitian nationals in the U.S., and we must be ready to inform Haitians in Haiti that they should not leave if TPS is provided.

Third, the bill establishes a coordinator to track all U.S. Government Merida-related funding. With multiple government agencies involved, Merida is too important to be lost in the bureaucratic shuffle.

Finally, the bill creates an inter-agency task force on the prevention of small-arms trafficking in the Western Hemisphere.

While recent media attention has focused on the high number of guns—90 percent—recovered from crime scenes in Mexico that are originally from the United States, this is not just a Mexico issue. Jamaican Prime Minister Golding told me that 90 percent of the guns recovered in Jamaica also originate in the U.S., so I'm glad we're doing something about that in this bill.

So again, Mr. Chairman, thank you again for your excellent work on this bill and for including these important sections that I urged, and I look forward to voting for this bill.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, we seek to reserve at this time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from American Samoa. He's chairman of the Subcommittee on Asia, the Pacific and the Global Environment, my friend, ENI FALEOMAVAEGA.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill, H.R. 2410, and thank the gentleman from California, our distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for his leadership and for his ability to bring this bill before the floor. Although there are several portions of the bill that my subcommittee had a part in introducing, I am especially appreciative for the inclusion of one of the provisions to rename the South Pacific Scholarship Program in honor of one of our distinguished late Members of this institution, the late Congressman Phil Burton, who was chairman of the Subcommittee on Territories and Insular Affairs. He was a voice for Pacific Island nations and territories.

Beyond American Samoa, the late Congressman Phil Burton, who served as a U.S. Congressman from 1964 to 1983, worked every day of his life to ensure social justice and human dignity for all of the people, and the people of the Pacific are especially grateful for his services. Unbeknown to many of our colleagues, Chairman Burton was also the driving force in recognizing the importance of certain items in the Pacific region which our country declared as a strategic trust immediately after World War II, and this was done before the United Nations.

Formally known as the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, Chairman Burton, in consultations with the Department of Defense, the State Department and Interior and several other Federal agencies and key officials of the administration, he played a pivotal role whereby as a result of these consultations resulted in the Congress approving certain compacts of free association for the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Republic of Palau, the Federated States of Micronesia, and a coveted relationship between the United States and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands. I might note also that the President of Palau has consented in helping us in terms of dealing with the Uyghur people that hopefully that this might be resolved and worked out.

The CHAIR. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentleman an additional 15 seconds.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Congressman BURTON was also instrumental in helping establish the Pacific Island Development Program that is now an integral part of the East-West Center.

Mr. Chair, I rise today to commend the gentleman from California, the Honorable HOWARD BERMAN, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, for his leadership in offering H.R. 2410, the State Department Authorization bill, and I thank the gentleman for including a number of my provisions in the base text.

I am especially appreciative for the inclusion of my provision to rename the United States-South Pacific Scholarship Program (USSP) in honor of my mentor, the late Congressman Phillip Burton who, as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Territories and Insular Affairs, was a voice for Pacific Island populations, and made it possible for American Samoa's Governor and Lieutenant Governor to be popularly elected rather than appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

In 1951, President Harry S. Truman issued Executive Order 10264 which transferred administrative responsibility for the islands of American Samoa from the Secretary of the Navy to the U.S. Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior, in turn, appointed our Governors.

In 1960, the people of American Samoa adopted a Constitution. The Constitution was revised in 1966 and was approved by the Secretary of the Interior on June 2, 1967. In 1967, the Revised Constitution of American Samoa provided for an elected Legislature, or Fono, consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives. However, it did not provide our people with the right to elect our own Governor and Lieutenant Governor and, at the time, American Samoa was the only remaining offshore area of the United States which did not have a popularly elected Governor and Lieutenant Governor.

On June 10, 1976, Congressman Phil Burton took notice of American Samoa's situation and introduced a bill to make it possible for our Governor and Lieutenant Governor to be popularly elected rather than appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. As staff counsel the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Congressman Burton instructed me to draft this legislation which the U.S. House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed by a landslide vote of 377 to 1.

Instead of sending his bill to the Senate, Congressman Burton decided to consult further with the Secretary of the Interior, Rogers C.B. Morton, about American Samoa's unique political status as an unincorporated and unorganized territory which was and is unlike the organized territories of Guam and the Virgin Islands. As a result of their consultations, the two agreed that Secretary Morton would issue a Secretarial Order (No. 3009) authorizing the American Samoa Government to pass enabling legislation to provide for an elected Governor and the Lieutenant Governor.

Secretary's Order No. 3009 amended American Samoa's Constitution to specifically provide for an elected rather than an appointed Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Secretary's Order 3009 was also in keeping with the will of the majority of voters in American Samoa who voted in favor of electing their own Governor and Lieutenant Governor in a plebiscite that was held on August 31, 1976.

Furthermore, Congressman Phil Burton introduced legislation on August 2, 1978 to provide that the Territory of American Samoa be represented by a nonvoting Delegate to the U.S. House of Representatives. I also was tasked with drafting this legislation which became Public Law 95-556 and was made effective October 31, 1978.

Beyond American Samoa, the late Congressman Phillip Burton, who served in the U.S. Congress from 1964 to 1983, worked every day of his life to ensure social justice and human dignity for all people, and the people of the Pacific are especially grateful for what he has done for us. Congressman Burton's service as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Territories and Insular Affairs indirectly impacted U.S. foreign policy in the South Pacific region, and it is only fitting that the USSP, which Congress established at my request in 1994, will now be renamed some 15 years later in honor of my mentor, if the Senate also agrees to acknowledge and honor the late Congressman Burtons' service.

I also thank Chairman BERMAN for accepting my request to recognize Kazakhstan's commitment to nonproliferation and for offering to host a nuclear fuel bank.

My office also worked closely the Foreign Affairs Committee to establish a Central Asia Scholarship program for public policy internships, and to establish scholarships for indigenous peoples of Mexico and Central and South America.

I also appreciate the Committee's support of my efforts on behalf of Pacific Island States. Diabetes, a seriously debilitating disease, has reached epidemic proportions in the Pacific Islands States including the Cook Islands, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Nauru, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu. While recognizing that simple, relatively low-cost means already exist to reduce the incidence of diabetes significantly through appropriate prevention and treatment programs, these programs have not as yet reached the Pacific Islands so as to effect a major reduction in the incidence of diabetes. In order to contribute to the improvement of health conditions, the authorization I requested will provide assistance for health services designed to prevent and treat diabetes in the Pacific Islands, and also for safe water and sanitation.

I also thank the Committee for including language which I offered regarding West Papua. I continue to believe it is necessary for the Secretary of State to report on the 1969 Act of 'Free' Choice, the current political status of West Papua, and the extent to which the Government of Indonesia has implemented and included the leadership and the people of West Papua in the development and administration of Special Autonomy. I also believe it is necessary for the Administration to report to the appropriate Congressional committees the extent to which the Government of Indonesia has certified that it has halted human rights abuses in West Papua.

However, in consideration of Indonesia's presidential elections scheduled for July 8, 2009, I asked Chairman BERMAN to pull the West Papua language from the bill so as not to influence the outcome of the elections. I thank Chairman BERMAN for agreeing to my request to remove this language, and I am hopeful that once elections are finalized that Indonesia will renew its commitment to implementing Special Autonomy.

Again, I thank Chairman BERMAN for his leadership and support in moving this legislation forward, and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 2410.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I continue to reserve our time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, for purposes of a colloquy, I'm pleased to yield 1 minute to a former member of the committee, a member of the Budget Committee and the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I rise, Mr. Chairman, and urge that clean water and sanitation be addressed at the highest level at the State Department and USAID. The lack of safe water and sanitation is an ongoing threat to global security. It remains the world's preventable health problem, accounting for 2 million deaths a year, a child dying every 15 seconds and half the illness in the developing world.

We simply cannot meet our goals to deal with poverty, health and development without addressing this crisis. On Earth day, I introduced the bipartisan Paul Simon Water For the World Act with the goal to provide a hundred billion of the world's poorest with first-time access to safe drinking water and sanitation.

I would like to work with you, Mr. Chairman, to assure that clean water and sanitation are adequately funded and represented at the highest level of our diplomatic and development efforts.

Mr. BERMAN. I want to manifest very clearly my intention to take up a major rewrite of foreign assistance legislation later this year, and we will address the issues raised in the Water For the World Act as part of that effort.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your attention to this critical issue and am looking forward to working with you under your leadership.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I continue to reserve.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to a friend of a very, very long time, a member of the committee as well as the Agriculture Committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. COSTA).

Mr. COSTA. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank Chairman BERMAN for the hard work that he and the committee staff have done on reauthorization of this bill. A lot of work has been put into it, and I think all of us, as we look upon the challenges we face around the world, understand that there has to be a utilization of all of the tools in our foreign policy tool box to ensure that we take care of America's interests and that we gain greater support in our interests abroad.

Smart Power is a part of that effort. Smart Power allows us to reenergize our diplomatic work around the globe. Specifically, the reauthorization of this bill allows the State Department to do work that the Department of Defense is doing, more appropriately under the Department of State: international organizations, strengthening the Peace Corps, focusing on drug trafficking and violence along our southern borders. There are so many good things that this does.

Smart Power is often overlooked, but it's a vital tool in this foreign policy toolbox. We've seen the benefits of American Smart Power in Afghanistan and Iraq, and we need to continue to do that good work.

I thank the chairman and his staff for the importance of the reauthorization. I urge all of the Members to vote for this bill.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I continue to reserve.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee—she was, then she wasn't, and now she is—and my friend from Nevada (Ms. BERKLEY).

Ms. BERKLEY. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding and for his extraordinary leadership not only for this bill but on our committee.

I rise today in support of this important bill. It contains a number of important elements that all of my colleagues should support. It increases our diplomatic corps dramatically, allowing the hiring of 1,500 additional Foreign Service officers over the next 2 years; it increases our financing of peacekeeping missions in Darfur and Chad; it doubles the size of the Peace Corps and sets out a plan for better response to humanitarian needs worldwide.

The bill also contains a sense of Congress calling for the release of captive Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit. He has been held hostage for nearly 3 years, and it's time that he be brought home to his family and his loved ones. If there is ever to be a Palestinian state, returning Gilad Shalit would be a true demonstration that the Palestinians are capable of self-governance and humanitarian behavior.

With that, I call on my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I continue to reserve.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to a great member of our committee, also a member of the Science and Technology Committee, the gentlelady from Arizona (Ms. GIFFORDS).

Ms. GIFFORDS. Thank you, Chairman BERMAN, for your leadership, and Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN as well.

I want to let you know that it's important that this provision on U.S. export controls that is now going to be entered into the manager's amendment with support is important to the fundamental job that we have as a Member of Congress, which is our U.S. national security. A recent report of the National Academy found that U.S. national security and economic prosperity depends on full engagement in science, technology, and commerce. However, some of the unintended consequences of our current U.S. export control system have contributed to a situation in which the U.S. is now among leaders in science and technology areas but no longer dominates.

As Chair of the Science and Technology Committee Subcommittee on Space and Aeronautics, I'm especially concerned about our leadership in space, especially as more nations seek to increase their space activities. This provision directs the President to take into account the views of the relevant Federal departments and agencies and to provide a report to Congress on the plans of those agencies to streamline

U.S. export controls and processes to better serve the United States. We can't afford to undercut our scientific and technological competitiveness.

I urge Members to support the legislation.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I continue to reserve.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am now pleased to yield to another excellent member of the committee, former colleague in the legislature in California, the gentlelady from California (Ms. WATSON), 1 minute.

Ms. WATSON. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I rise today in support of H.R. 2410, particularly the section that authorizes a way to enhance our public diplomacy efforts worldwide by ensuring diplomatic and consular mission libraries and resource centers open to the public to show American-made films that promote American culture, principles, and values.

Also, there is another provision in section 214, public diplomacy resource centers, and it amends the State Department's Basic Authorities Act of 1956 to direct the Secretary of State to ensure that diplomatic and consular mission libraries and resource centers are open to the general public to the greatest extent practicable and to schedule public showings of American films that showcase American culture, principles, values, and history.

The CHAIR. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I am pleased to yield an additional 15 seconds.

Ms. WATSON. Also, section 215 has grants for international documentary exchange programs and authorizes the Secretary of State to make grants to U.S. nongovernmental organizations that use independently produced documentary films to promote a better understanding of the United States abroad and a better understanding of global perspectives of other countries in the United States. I urge your support.

Mr. Chair, I rise today in support of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act of 2009, and I commend Chairman BERMAN for his leadership in support of a new direction in our foreign policy. This bill will authorize the State Department from 2010 thru 2011, build capacity to the Department by adding fifteen hundred (1,500) new Foreign Service Officers, and enhance our Public Diplomacy efforts worldwide.

Section 214, Public Diplomacy Resources Center amends the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 to direct the Secretary of State to ensure that diplomatic and consular mission libraries and resource centers are open to the general public to the greatest extent practicable to schedule public showings of American films that showcase American culture, principles, values, and history.

Section 215, Grants for International Documentary Exchange Programs authorizes the Secretary of State to make grants to U.S. non-governmental organizations that use independently produced documentary films to promote a better understanding of the United States abroad and a better understanding of global perspectives of other countries in the United States.

Section 330, Department of State Employment Composition amends the Foreign Relations Authorization Act of 2003 to direct the Secretary of State to report on efforts to develop a uniform definition of diversity that is congruent with core values and vision of the Department, and to evaluate the diversity plans specifically relating to the Foreign Service and Senior Foreign Service. This section also provides for a GAO Review by the Comptroller General of the United States to assess the employment composition, recruitment, advancement, and retention policies of the State Department for women and minority groups.

As many of my colleagues may know the State Department has some of the worst diversity rates among its Foreign Service Officers. If you look at the top levels of the Foreign Service regarding diversity you will find there is basically none.

Mr. Chair, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2410, a bill which will enhance our Public Diplomacy efforts worldwide, diversify our Foreign Service, and give the State Department the tools necessary to meet our foreign policy goals.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I continue to reserve my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am now pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT) for purposes of a colloquy.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hard work of Chairman BERMAN on this bill, and I would like to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman on the issue of science and diplomacy.

Mr. Chairman, I'm very pleased to support H.R. 2410. It's a strong bill that accomplishes many good things. There is one area that it does not address explicitly, and that is the role that science can play in our diplomatic portfolio.

In his recent speech in Cairo, the President reminded us all that the great ideas that have shaped our world have sprung up from every corner of the planet. Science provides a common language through which individuals from different nations and distinct cultures can communicate, cooperate, and work together toward common goals. Science can advance our diplomatic goals and diplomacy can advance science for the public good.

I'm aware that the chairman is working on legislation related to enhancing science as a tool for diplomacy, and I look forward to working with the chairman on this effort.

I yield to the chairman.

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thank him for his suggestion. I agree completely that science constitutes an untapped and undertapped resource in America's diplomatic toolbox, and I can assure the gentleman that I am committed to enhancing our capacity in this area, collaborating with him on this effort, including further legislation as well as a role in the foreign assistance reform process that we are working on.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the chairman.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE), our Republican Conference Chair and a member of our Committee on Foreign Affairs.

□ 1330

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chair, I rise in opposition to the Foreign Relations Authorization Act.

The American people deserve a foreign relations bill that respects our Nation's budget and our Nation's values. Sadly, H.R. 2410 does neither. At a time when ordinary Americans are struggling to make ends meet, this legislation would add billions of dollars in new funding to our foreign and State Department operations. Expanding taxpayer funding of Peace Corps and the U.N. regular budget by one-third in a single year without any U.N. reform is extraordinarily frustrating to many of us who have been fighting to use the power of the purse here in Washington, D.C., to drive fundamental reform in that body.

But beyond these extraordinary increases—a single-year increase of 35 percent in the State Department's basic salary and operations—this legislation does a disservice to the values of millions of Americans who cherish the sanctity of life and the sanctity of marriage. This legislation creates a new office and ambassador for global women's issues for women's empowerment internationally. Secretary Clinton testified before our committee that it would be the policy of this administration to protect the rights of women, including rights to reproductive health. Democrats on the committee actually rejected an amendment to clarify that it would not be U.S. policy to lobby countries to legalize, fund or promote abortion. I even offered an amendment in the committee to change language that would require State Department training, reporting, and overseas advocacy of foreign laws regarding homosexual activity. I sought to change that, to make it clear that State Department employees ought to promote universally recognized human rights, those upon which Americans agree; and that was rejected in the committee.

This legislation, in embracing abortion rights overseas, in embracing the advocacy of changes in laws regarding homosexuality around the world, advocates a set of values that are at odds with the majority of the American people. We deserve a foreign relations budget that respects our pocketbooks and our values. This does neither, and I urge its rejection.

The CHAIR. The gentlewoman from Florida has 30 seconds remaining, and the gentleman from California has 3 minutes remaining.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to give the remainder of my time and any time that the chairman of the committee has to the wonderful gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER), who is going to be in a colloquy with our esteemed chairman.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I would like to thank the chairman and the ranking member very much for this courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, section 826 of our bill has been carefully crafted to protect our national security interests. Subsection (b) of that section provides that the President's authority in paragraph (a) to remove satellites and related components from the United States munitions list may not be exercised with respect to any satellite or related component that may, directly or indirectly, be transferred to, or launched into space by the People's Republic of China.

Do you agree with me that the intent of paragraph (b) is that, with respect to any transfers to or launches by China, no satellite or related component shall be removed from the United States Munitions List?

Mr. BERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BERMAN. I appreciate it.

The answer is, I certainly do agree. In the case of China, under our legislation, all satellites and related components must remain on the United States munitions list.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I thank you and the ranking member. This is a vitally important clarification for our aerospace industry. While at the same time opening up better trade and technology with friendly countries, it ensures that we do not send technology to the Chinese.

Mr. BERMAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I certainly would. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERMAN. The gentleman's remarks are worth elaborating on. The whole notion of a domestic commercial satellite industry is very much at stake if we can't, in appropriate situations, export and arrange for those kinds of transfers, and I think it is part of what the gentleman pointed out. That is why both the Satellite Industry Association and the Aerospace Industries Association support this legislation.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Thank you very much. Again, thank you to the ranking member as well.

The CHAIR. The time of the gentlewoman from Florida has expired. The gentleman from California has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an exchange of letters between the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND GOVERNMENT REFORM,

Washington, DC, June 9, 2009.

Hon. HOWARD L. BERMAN,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BERMAN: I am writing about H.R. 2410, the "Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011." The Committee on Foreign Affairs reported this legislation to the House on June 4, 2009.

I appreciate your effort to consult with the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform regarding those provisions of H.R. 2410 that fall within the Oversight Committee's jurisdiction. These provisions address issues related to the federal civil service and government contractors.

In the interest of expediting consideration of H.R. 2410, the Oversight Committee will not request a sequential referral of this bill. I would, however, request your support for the appointment of conferees from the Oversight Committee should H.R. 2410 or a similar Senate bill be considered in conference with the Senate. Moreover, this letter should not be construed as a waiver of the Oversight Committee's legislative jurisdiction over subjects addressed in H.R. 2410 that fall within the jurisdiction of the Oversight Committee.

Please include our exchange of letters on this matter in the Congressional Record during consideration of this legislation on the House floor. Again, I appreciate your willingness to consult the Committee on these matters.

Sincerely,

EDOLPHUS TOWNS,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,

Washington, DC, June 10, 2009.

Hon. EDOLPHUS TOWNS,
Chairman, Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter regarding H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011.

I appreciate your willingness to work cooperatively on this legislation. I recognize that the bill contains provisions that fall within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform. I acknowledge that the Committee will not seek a sequential referral of the bill and agree that the inaction of your Committee with respect to the bill does not in any way serve as a jurisdictional precedent regarding our two committees.

Further, as to any House-Senate conference on the bill, I understand that your Committee reserves the right to seek the appointment of conferees for consideration of portions of the bill that are within the Committee's jurisdiction, and I agree to support a request by the Committee with respect to serving as conferees on the bill, consistent with the Speaker's practice in this regard.

I will ensure that our exchange of letters is included in the Congressional Record and I look forward to working with you on this important legislation.

Sincerely,

HOWARD L. BERMAN,
Chairman.

Mr. SIRES. Mr. Chair, today I rise to give my full support for the passage of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. I believe defense, diplomacy and development are the three key components of our national security strategy. This bill will give the Department of State and Peace Corp the tools necessary to ensure that diplomacy plays an integral role in furthering U.S. foreign policy goals.

H.R. 2410 strengthens our diplomatic corps by giving the Department of State the authority to hire over 1,500 new foreign service officers and improve their language capabilities. The bill also seeks to double the number of Peace Corps volunteers in the field. Peace Corps volunteers are vital to U.S. diplomacy as they are often the only American faces in some of the world's most remote places. Finally, this legislation establishes the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation to expand the number of U.S. students studying abroad, learning new languages and fostering cultural understanding.

Mr. Chair, H.R. 2410 puts us one step closer to developing a global security strategy that uses diplomacy as a crucial tool to help ensure our safety at home and abroad. I would urge all of my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Chair, I rise in support of H.R. 2401, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. This legislation will enhance our national security by providing adequate resources to the State Department, which has been underfunded for the last 8 years. Diplomacy and international development are key components to any national security agenda.

I was also pleased to see that title nine of the bill, which enhances the Merida Initiative, includes provisions to further combat gun trafficking and drug cartels. However, I was greatly disappointed that the House Homeland Security Committee was not included in the development of this title or the previous Merida Initiative legislation. The Department of Homeland Security plays a significant role in the Merida Initiative by coordinating through its agencies that are assisting Mexico and other foreign governments address issues surrounding smuggling, trafficking and violence at our borders and internationally. Thus I firmly believe this committee should have been allowed to play a role in this legislation.

As Chairwoman of the Homeland Security Subcommittee on Border, Maritime and Global Counter Terrorism, I have held several hearings on issues affecting the Merida initiative. These hearings focused on the ongoing violence along our southern border, drug trafficking, weapon trafficking and cash trafficking. My subcommittee and the full committee on Homeland Security have been at the forefront of addressing the threats posed by drug trafficking organizations and other transnational crime syndicates. Many of the recommendations made during our recent hearings, including southbound border check points for cash and guns going into Mexico, have been implemented along the border.

The hearings also emphasized that many agencies—including the Department of Homeland Security—will need to work together closely to stop these growing transnational crime networks. The Merida Initiative would not be as effective without the constant and tireless work of the brave men and women at the Department of Homeland Security. I hope that in the future more consideration will be given to the role the Department of Homeland Security plays implementing critical security initiatives like the Merida Initiative.

My colleagues on the Committee on Homeland Security look forward to working with our friends on the other relevant committees to continue to develop, implement and improve initiatives such as the Merida Initiative.

I ask my colleagues to support the underlying legislation.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Chair, I thank my colleague on the Rules Committee, Mr. HASTINGS, for yielding me time. I commend him for his hard work on foreign relations issues.

Mr. Chair, today this Congress takes action to support our country's interests around the world.

A strong foreign service and a healthy State Department are not luxuries. They are absolute necessities in today's foreign policy climate.

Our country has historically shouldered great responsibilities on the international stage. From combating nuclear proliferation, to spurring international development, to protecting and advancing human rights around the world, the challenges we face as a country are great.

Two of these challenges particularly hit home for me, Mr. Chair.

As most of us know, two American journalists were sentenced to 12 years of hard labor in North Korea this week after an abrupt and questionable trial.

One of these reporters grew up in my hometown of Sacramento. Her family continues to maintain ties to the Sacramento community.

I know that the State Department is doing everything in its power to secure the release of Laura Ling and Euna Lee. I commend and support our government's efforts to bring these brave and courageous two women back home.

With today's bill, Congress is doing its part to ensure that Americans in similar situations around the world know that their country will never abandon them.

Our responsibility as a nation is not only to those fortunate to call themselves "Americans," though. Another issue of urgent importance is the plight of about 5,000 Hmong refugees in Thailand.

These refugees, including many women and children, have fled persecution in their home country of Laos based on historical grievances dating back to the Vietnam War era. They now live in unspeakably harsh conditions in a refugee camp in the Petchabun province of Thailand, and are under constant threat of being forcibly repatriated back to Laos to face certain persecution.

Our State Department has been working tirelessly to save the Hmong from this near-certain death sentence, and I have supported these efforts in every way that I can. I have written letters to the Thai government and to our own foreign policy leadership, asking them to spare the Hmong from any further suffering.

We have a responsibility to protect innocent people, Mr. Chair, just as we have a responsibility to protect our own in countries like North Korea.

Today's legislation gives our government the tools it needs to carry out this essential mission. It helps us strengthen our role in influencing world affairs so that we can work toward a future where basic human rights and dignity are respected the world over.

For this reason, I strongly support the bill before us today, Mr. Chair. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chair, Chairman BERMAN and the entire Foreign Affairs committee are to be commended for bringing an excellent bill to the floor.

These much needed reforms reflect Congress' strong support for strengthening U.S. diplomacy and are consistent with the new vision for global engagement championed by President Obama.

As a former Peace Corps volunteer, I am very pleased that H.R. 2410 authorizes $450 million for Peace Corps.

I'd like to express my appreciation to Chairman BERMAN and Ranking Member ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN for including Peace Corps in their bill and for supporting a substantial increase that will help send volunteers to the 20 countries that have already requested Peace Corps volunteers.

Recently, the Chicago Council on Global Affairs called for 300 to 600 new volunteers in Sub-Saharan Africa to work on agriculture as a step toward America reasserting global leadership in the fight against hunger and food insecurity.

The Chicago Council notes that "The Peace Corps' presence goes a long way toward convincing people that America knows about their circumstances, is committed to partnership to lift them out of poverty and is willing to send hard-working Americans, experienced in agriculture, to live and work with them for an extended period."

Rwanda's President recently wrote, "We view the return of the Peace Corps as a significant event in Rwanda's recovery. These young men and women represent what is good about America; I have met former volunteers who have run major aid programs here, invested in our businesses, and I even count them among my friends and close advisors."

Peace Corps volunteers live and work in the poorest communities in countries around the world. The work that they do day in and day out is the finest expression of American generosity and solidarity that our government has to offer.

I enthusiastically support H.R. 2410 and urge my colleagues to vote for the bill.

Mr. POSEY. Mr. Chair, as every Member of the House knows, our country is confronted with an enormous deficit of almost $2 trillion this year alone, which is in addition to the existing mountain of national debt and a projected debt of $1.3 trillion for next year. At some point, this Congress needs to face the reality that you cannot continue to spend as though the bill will never come due.

The evening news is bleak with continuing housing foreclosures and the highest unemployment rate in decades. The Federal Reserve is exercising emergency lending powers.

Foreign investors, including the government of China, are concerned about buying more U.S. government debt. But the majority in this body is living in a different world. The correct response would be for the government to live within its means, just as American families must do. For some reason, the leadership in Washington insists on going full-speed ahead in its binge spending, adding perks for public employees and billions of dollars in foreign aid spending while Americans continue to lose their jobs. Today's Foreign Relations Authorization Act is another case-in-point of Washington out of touch.

While American families are cutting back on their spending, this legislation would grant an arbitrary 35 percent increase in the State Department's basic salary and operations account, and at a time when more Americans are unemployed than at any time in the past 25 years this bill provides a 23 percent pay raise for Foreign Service Officers. In committee, Democrats voted down an amendment to cap the increases in the bill at the annualized rate of inflation. The bill also cuts the budget for the Office of the Inspector General—the one who is to keep a watchful eye on where Americans' tax dollars are spent.

The bill also increases funding for the United Nations (U.N.) by 30 percent over the current year's funding. In the past, any additional U.S. taxpayer funding has been tied to further reforms. This bill actually asks the U.N. for no reforms and provides it $100 million more for the peacekeeping activities than they asked for. I have cosponsored U.N. reform legislation and believe it is critical that we enact these reforms of an entity that has serious waste, fraud and abuse problems. As one of ninety cosponsors of H.R. 557, the United Nations Transparency, Accountability and Reform Act, I believe Congress should withhold funding to the U.N. unless some serious reforms are undertaken. Instead, today's bill rewards them with significant increases in funding. The bill also includes language affirming controversial international agreements for which the United States is not even a party, such as the U.N. Convention on the Law of the Sea. This bill funds the Human Rights Council which includes the following nations as members of the council: Saudi Arabia, Nigeria, China and Cuba. This is ludicrous.

H.R. 2410 contains worrying language that would create a new office with a vague directive of promoting "women's empowerment internationally." While I support ensuring that women are treated equitably, it is important to understand what this provision will lead to. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton testified before the Foreign Affairs Committee stating that she would use the State Department to ". . . protect the rights of women, including their right to reproductive health care . . . [which] includes access to abortion." Thus, money will be spent within this office to promote abortion overseas, a policy which tens of millions of Americans object to.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this legislation and work for the good of those whom we represent by reining in the spending. Congress should authorize and appropriate funding sufficient for conducting a strong foreign policy, rather than increasing government salaries, expanding the size of government foreign aid programs, and rewarding the U.N. with more money than they asked for.

Ms. LEE of California. Mr. Chair, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act and want to thank our Chairman for his outstanding leadership and work on this major legislation.

In the words of President Obama, "America is a friend of each nation and every man, woman and child who seeks a future of peace and dignity," and this legislation rightfully commits the resources necessary to uphold that promise.

I want to just take a moment to highlight a couple of provisions that we worked to have included in this bill:

First, I want to thank Chairman BERMAN for including the United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Program from legislation I introduced which previously passed the House in the 110th Congress, the Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Act.

This valuable initiative will promote better understanding of U.S. values and culture by offering scholarships to Caribbean students to pursue studies in the United States.

Second, I am pleased this legislation includes reporting language I offered regarding the enduring and horrible humanitarian crisis in Gaza. Improving the lives of the Palestinian people in Gaza is essential to fostering conditions necessary for stability, economic and social development, and lasting peace.

Finally, on the heels of President Obama's brilliant speech in Cairo, I want to take a moment to underscore the importance of supporting the President, Special Envoy Mitchell and Secretary Clinton as they bring renewed focus and energy toward advancing a two state solution that will bring lasting peace. And that includes supporting Israel's right to exist and the call for an end of the continued Israeli settlements.

Again, I want to thank the gentleman for the time and encourage support for this important bill.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chair, while our constituents are losing jobs and homes, H.R. 2410 would use borrowed money to increase funding by one-third in a single year for State Department operations, for the UN regular budget, and for the Peace Corps.

It would increase the State Department's basic salary and operations account by 35%.

It would add 2,200 new Foreign Service Officers, 20 new government entities, and 48 new reporting requirements.

Without requiring any reform, it would authorize all UN arrearages and volunteers the U.S. pay $100 million more for peacekeeping next year beyond what the UN is currently charging us.

The reported bill also embraces a controversial social agenda, including provisions that could allow abortion promotion.

Attempts at the full committee mark-up to affirm the genuine empowerment and protection of women and girls around the world was soundly rejected.

In addition to problems with what the bill includes, many deserving Republican amendments were excluded from the reported version.

One of those was a funding amendment I have offered which caps any account increases at 3.7 percent over current year levels.

This reasonable 3.7 percent increase is the average rate of inflation for 2008.

By taking this measured, responsible approach, my funding amendment would produce a single-year cost savings of 2.82 billion dollars in 2010, as compared to the Majority's bill.

In short, H.R. 2410 is an irresponsible bill on policy and funding levels.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Chair, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, and commend Chairman BERMAN for his leadership on this bill. Diplomacy and international development are cornerstones of U.S. national security, and H.R. 2410 will ensure that these key strategic tools are maximized in our efforts to protect America and rebuild our standing in the world.

H.R. 2410 provides robust authorization for rebuilding civilian capacity by authorizing 1,500 new Foreign Service Officers for the State Department and promotes training to ensure our diplomats have the skills to confront twenty-first century challenges. Additionally, the bill authorizes 700 new Foreign Service Officers for USAID, an important step to rebuild the capacity of our development agency to provide appropriate, effective aid to countries and communities in need around the world.

Improving the livelihoods of vulnerable and oppressed women around the world should be a key component of U.S. foreign policy, and I applaud the inclusion of the authorization of the "Office of Women's Issues" in the base bill. Irrefutable research has shown that incorporating the unique needs of women into development policy is integral to ensure our aid initiatives' effectiveness; by coordinating and advising on gender integration and international women's empowerment, this office will help to increase the efficiency of our foreign assistance. As evidenced by its opposition to this office's authorization, the extreme anti-choice wing of the Republican party continues to put ideology over fact and science. Let me be clear: this bill in no way changes existing statutory prohibitions on abortion. A vote against this bill inhibits our government's ability to advance women's empowerment initiatives aimed at stability, security, and equality around the world.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chair, thank you, Madam Speaker and thank you Chairman BERMAN for your efforts on H.R. 2410, Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011." The Committee has once again produced legislation that will help America engage its neighbors and promote national security.

The primary objective of this legislation is to rebuild the capacity of the Department of State to fulfill its core diplomatic mission in fulfilling U.S. national security goals. In a recent hearing Secretary Clinton stated that the priorities of the State Department and other international organizations are clear. Their focus is to deploying the tools of diplomacy and development along with military power. We are securing historic alliances, working with emerging regional powers, and seeking new avenues of engagement. While this may seem like a herculean task, I have confidence that these goals can be successfully accomplished with the passing of this legislation.

H.R. 2410 is a wide encompassing bill that will set the tone on how we engage other nations and strengthen the use of diplomacy as a tool to interact with other countries around the world. This legislation will give President Obama and Secretary Clinton the non-military support they need to engage other nations and change the view of America in the world. President Obama has stated that defense, diplomacy and development are the three keys to strengthening our national security. In recent years, diplomacy and development have been short-changed. Capacity must be rebuilt in these critical areas.

In addition, I appreciate my Sense of Congress language being included in Section 1127, entitled Sense of Congress Sudan, that the United States should support efforts to find a stable and lasting peace in Sudan in the wake of devastating conflict that led to major humanitarian disaster in Darfur and through the Sudan. This conflict caused the deaths of hundreds of thousands and continues to cause violence in Darfur and throughout Sudan. The language further provides that to achieve peace in Darfur, all parties must agree to uphold the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA). The language provides that the United States should support efforts to prepare for the national elections and for the referendum. It further provides that the United States should support efforts to develop international strategy to support the rebuilding of Sudan, with a particular focus on key CPA benchmarks including transitional justice, actions addressing the perpetrators of war crimes, policies towards, the return of displaced Darfuris and other people to their homeland, and management of the armed forces, and that U.S. policy toward Darfur should be fully integrated with U.S. policy toward the CPA as a full and lasting resolution to the Darfur crisis hinges on the resolution of a common set of national problems. We must insure the solution to the continued genocide in Sudan.

To understand the importance of my Sense of Congress language, it is important to address the history of Sudan. The crisis in Darfur began in February 2003, when two rebel groups emerged to challenge the National Congress Party (NCP) government in Darfur. The crisis in Darfur in western Sudan has led to a major humanitarian disaster, with an estimated 2.45 million people displaced, more than 240,000 people forced into neighboring Chad, and an estimated 450,000 people killed.

In July 2004, the House and Senate declared the atrocities in Darfur genocide and on May 4, 2006, the Government of National Unity and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army signed the Darfur Peace Agreement after almost two years of negotiation. In July 2007, the U.N. Security Council passed Resolution 1769, authorizing the deployment of a robust peacekeeping force in Darfur. The resolution authorized the United Nations African Union force in Darfur to take all necessary measures to protect its personnel and humanitarian workers.

In July 2008, International Criminal Court (ICC) Chief Prosecutor Luis Moreno-Ocampo accused President Omar Bashir of Sudan of genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes and asked ICC judges to issue an arrest warrant for President Bashir. On March 4, 2009, the ICC Pre-Trial Chamber issued a warrant of arrest for President Bashir. On March 4, 2009, the ICC Pre-Trial Chamber issued a warrant of arrest for President Bashir for war crimes and crimes against humanity.

It is important that against this backdrop that the U.S. reaffirms that genocide is still occurring in Darfur, displaced individuals should be resettled in their homeland, and the perpetrators of war crimes should be prosecuted.

This legislation is intended to shore up U.S. diplomacy and development efforts. Defense, diplomacy, and development are the three pillars of our national security. In recent years, diplomacy and development have been short-changed. Capacity must be rebuilt in these critical areas.

The legislation authorizes hiring 1500 additional Foreign Service Officers over the next two years and contains provisions on recruitment and training of officers to improve the Foreign Service's ability to respond to modern challenges. It requires the State Department to conduct a quadrennial review of its policies and programs that defines objectives, budget requirements and how these programs fit into the President's national security strategy.

Among other significant measures in the bill are provisions that:

Ensure that the United States will meet its financial commitments to the United Nations (U.N.) and other international organizations;

Allow financing the refurbishment of helicopters for U.N. peacekeeping missions in Darfur, the Republic of Congo and Chad;

Establish the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation as a new executive branch corporation to expand dramatically the number and economic diversity of U.S. students studying overseas;

End the long-standing practice of excluding the committed partners of Foreign Service officers from the benefits routinely provided to the spouses and children of officers serving abroad;

Support the Administration's plan to double the size of the Peace Corps, and authorize a plan to use short-term volunteers to respond to humanitarian and development needs worldwide;

Broaden the Merida anti-drug trafficking initiative to include the Caribbean, and improve monitoring and evaluation of Merida programs; and Increase resources and training for enforcement of intellectual property rights, especially in countries identified by the U.S. government as lax in enforcing those rights.

I have also worked tirelessly on incorporating my bill on Statelessness in its entirety in Section 1104, entitled "Statelessness." The purpose of this section is to increase global stability and security for the United States and the international community and decrease trafficking and discrimination by reducing the number of individuals who are de jure or de facto stateless. As a consequence of their statelessness, individuals are unable to claim right to a nationality and its respective rights and obligations, and instead they are excluded from full participation in civil society. The framework of this language establishes that the right to a nationality is a foundation of human rights, and a deterrent to displacement, since the State is the primary vehicle through which people are guaranteed their inalienable rights, and are made subject to the rule of law.

Additionally, this language ensures that it shall be the policy of the United States that the President and the permanent U.S. Representative to the United Nations work with the international community to increase political and financial support for the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to prevent and resolve problems related to statelessness, and to promote the rights of the stateless by taking the following specific actions. The language urges U.N. and U.N. Country teams in countries with significant stateless populations to devote increasing attention and resources to bring about registration and documentation of all residents. The language advocates for the creation of an Inter-Agency Task Force on Statelessness with UNHCR and UNICEF. With respect to improving conditions for Women and children, Section 1104 urges the U.N. to devote special attention to restore secured citizenship to trafficked women and girls, and to work with Member States to guarantee that national legislation gives women full and equal rights regarding citizenship, and addressing the needs and rights of stateless children. Finally, this important language urges UNICEF to increase its efforts to encourage all U.N. Member States to permit full and easy access to birth registration for all children born in their territories, and promotes the issuance of birth certificates to all children born to refugees and displaced persons.

In conclusion, emerging challenges that will define our century such as climate change, weak states, rogue regimes, criminal cartels, nuclear proliferation, terrorism, poverty, and disease all must be addressed in order to protect our national security. America must work with our neighbors around the world to address these challenges and in doing so, it is our responsibility as Members of Congress to make sure organizations that are dealing with these issues get the resources they need to do their jobs safely and effectively.

Mr. SCALISE. Mr. Chair, the House of Representatives passed the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. Unfortunately, this bill opens a door that will jeopardize one of the fundamental principles that our country was founded upon: the right to life.

I am disturbed that the liberals in Congress want to allow taxpayer dollars to be spent on the promotion of abortion in foreign countries through the creation of the "Office of Global Women's Issues." Secretary Clinton has acknowledged that this office will be used as a means to promote reproductive rights of women. She also testified before Congress that she believes that reproductive rights include abortion. I find it troubling that Secretary Clinton is forcing a pro abortion agenda on foreign nations, including countries with pro life laws. This pro abortion agenda by the State Department contradicts President Obama's statements that he wants to work toward reducing the number of abortions that are performed.

I applaud Congressman CHRIS SMITH for offering an amendment that would have explicitly prohibited this Office from participating in abortion activity. His amendment would have also promoted maternal health, women's empowerment, and educational opportunities for women. While I supported his amendment, unfortunately it was rejected. If we establish this office, we should set guidelines that promote a culture of life, not a culture of abortion.

Secretary Clinton clearly expressed that she intends to promote and provide abortion through the Office of Global Women's Issues when she said: "We happen to think that family planning is an important part of women's health and reproductive health includes access to abortion . . ." and also that "we are now an administration that will protect the rights of women, including their rights to reproductive health care."

Unborn lives are the most defenseless lives, and it is our job to stand up and protect them. Under no circumstances should Americans be forced to fund abortions, either domestically or abroad.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chair, H.R. 2410, the Foreign Affairs Authorization, has several laudable provisions that would improve our national security and our country's standing in the world. But it includes language that grants Congressional endorsement of preemptive war against Iran.

The provision in question says "It is the sense of Congress that Israel has the inalienable right to defend itself in the face of an imminent nuclear or military threat from Iran . . ." Among the lessons that should have been learned from the war in Iraq is that preemptive war based on an imminent threat (real or perceived) is a violation of recognized rights under international law and undermines a nation's standing in the international community. Rather than recognizing Israel's right to self defense against an imminent attack, a right recognized by international law, this bill contains language that supports preemptive war against a threat. A war with Iran is not in Israel's best interest, it is not in the United States best interest, and it is not in the world's best interest. The provision undermines the establishment of peace in the Middle East.

I do not make the decision to oppose the full legislation lightly. It has important provisions. The additional resources authorized by this bill are necessary to make up for a history of drastic underfunding and inattention to diplomacy. This bill highlights our commitment to a new diplomatic strategy as our nation strives to heal the wounds between our country and the world.

It authorizes additional funding to train and deploy 1,500 additional Foreign Service Officers. It commits $1.8 billion for fiscal year 2010, as well as the necessary funds in 2011 to fulfill our assessed contributions to international organizations such as the United Nations. The bill will create an additional 25 positions at the Department of State for arms control and nonproliferation. Creation of the Rotation Program will help to strengthen inter-agency cooperation toward nuclear abolition.

The bill requires that the State Department investigate the humanitarian crisis in Gaza and the atrocities associated with an occupation that compromises the health and dignity of the Palestinian people. I am hopeful that the report will allow the U.S. to credibly claim a commitment to engage in a more even handed and diplomacy oriented foreign policy.

I do not agree with inclusion of Section 822 of the bill, which reduces the number of Congressional notifications about arms transfers between the U.S. government and the governments of other nations. For example, a Congressional notification is currently required for the transfer of major defense equipment sales valued at $14 million or more. With enactment of this section, the threshold will be raised to $25 million or greater. As such, the trigger for Congressional review will happen less often.

Furthermore, I oppose the increased funding levels for the Merida Initiative and expansion of this flawed program to the Caribbean countries. Time and again, research has demonstrated that illicit drug production in developing countries stems from pervasive rural poverty and lack of sustainable sources of income. More money for guns and other tools of destruction will do nothing to ease the suffering of those struggling with addiction or alleviate the social problems that compel people to produce and/or traffic drugs.

This body must take measurable actions to replace policies of aggression with policies of dialogue, adherence to international law and an unwavering dedication to the protection of human rights. By including the provision that paves the way for preemptive war against Iran, this bill continues the failed policies of the previous administration. Therefore, I could not vote for it.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Chair, I rise today to express my strong support for H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011. I want to commend my colleague, Mr. BERMAN of California, for his leadership in moving this important bill through the Committee on Foreign Affairs and bringing it to the Floor today. This important legislation represents an opportunity for the U.S. Congress to assert its proper advisory role in shaping civilian elements of our national security infrastructure.

This legislation firmly launches the U.S. on an effort to invigorate our frontline defense: Diplomatic and development capabilities at the heart of our vast global engagements. Of course, diplomacy is effective only if backed by a robust military, but we know even heroic efforts by our military forces in Iraq and Afghanistan won't secure stable victories without complementary civilian efforts.

This bill reinvests in our ability to build global consensus that favors U.S. interests. It increases Peace Corps programs and expands public diplomacy, broadcasting, and educational exchanges that will forge lasting bonds and build allies. Finally, this bill removes our arrearages to the United Nations, boosting our credibility in this key forum that lends legitimacy and effectiveness to so many of our multilateral endeavors. It also seeks to realign U.S. policies on controlled exports, streamlining licensing to help protect U.S. jobs and preserve the competitive edge of U.S. businesses while preserving nonproliferation goals.

Mr. Chair, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bill that represents a significant step towards restoring diplomacy as our Nation's first line of defense. By expanding dialogue, diplomacy, and development today, we will avoid the far greater costs of solving crises that instead would emerge from our indifference.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chair, H.R. 2410, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, authorizes funding for the Department of State, the United States Peace Corps, and various international organizations. I cannot support H.R. 2410. This legislation recklessly overspends American tax dollars, fails to enact any much-needed reforms of international organizations, and actively supports a radical social agenda that conflicts with the majority views of the American people.

By authorizing more than $40 billion over five years, the House Democrats are again recklessly spending money that the American people do not have. At a time when so many Americans are struggling to make ends meet, exorbitant increases in foreign policy spending are absolutely inappropriate.

H.R. 2410 authorizes additional funding of 13 percent for the State Department, 32.4 percent for the Peace Corps, and 35 percent for State Department salaries. These types of increases clearly demonstrate that Congressional Democrats are failing to be good stewards of the nation's treasury.

H.R. 2410 also provides billions of dollars for the United Nations and other international organizations without demanding any reforms. Without serious reforms the United Nations will continue to fail to meet the challenges facing our world. This legislation does nothing to reformulate the U.S. payments to the United Nations to more accurately reflect current economic conditions. It fails to implement a code of conduct for UN employees, does nothing to reform UN procurement or budgetary procedures, fails to freeze the UN budget, and does not address the UN's continued push for an international tax. Providing billions of American tax dollars without conditions weakens any effort to bring about meaningful reform.

Most concerning, though, is that H.R. 2410 aggressively advocates for a radical social agenda. American foreign policy should advocate for the national interests of the American people, not a divisive, extremist policy to placate liberal activists.

First, this legislation establishes an Office for Global Women's Issues to promote the task of "women's empowerment internationally." Given the rescission of the Mexico City Policy and this administration's strong commitment to abortion, there were serious concerns that this office will be used to promote the legalization of abortion abroad. The Obama administration and Democrat leadership clearly intend to use this office to promote international abortions.

All doubt was removed when Republicans offered a substitute amendment to ensure this office would not advocate for international abortions. It was defeated on a party-line vote.

H.R. 2410 also takes an extraordinary step to require the Bureau for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor to track violence or restrictions based on "perceived sexual orientation and gender identity.” The bill would also require that the annual human rights report include information about violence or discrimination based on “perceived sexual orientation or gender identity.” Finally, the bill would require Foreign Service officers to take instruction on identifying violence or discrimination based on “perceived sexual orientation or gender identity.” Our tax dollars are not well spent monitoring the treatment of homosexuals worldwide.

This legislation furthermore mandates that American diplomats make overturning other country’s laws regarding homosexuality a foreign policy priority. During committee consideration of the bill, Rep. MIKE PENCE offered an amendment that charged the State Department with continuing in their work to “to protect all people against gross violations of internationally recognized human rights, as described in section 116(a) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.” This language would have committed the U.S. to the protection of homosexual people—as they would any person—against torture, cruel, inhuman treatment, or “other flagrant denial of the right to life, liberty, and the security of person.” Unfortunately, this amendment was voted down by committee Democrats.

U.S. foreign policy should be focused on progressing clear national security interests of the American people. Carving out special considerations regarding homosexuality, irrespective of larger foreign policy goals, could hinder vital diplomatic efforts. U.S. foreign policy should not be used as to promote special interests concerns, but the vital common strategic interests of this nation.

Mr. Chair, for these reasons, I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing H.R. 2410.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIR. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule and shall be considered read.

The text of the committee amendment is as follows:

SEC. 212. ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC DIPLOMACY RESERVE CORPS.

(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that currently a shortage of trained public diplomacy Foreign Service officers at the mid-career level threatens the effectiveness of United States outreach to publics abroad.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Foreign Service should recruit individuals with professional experience relevant to public diplomacy, and provide training and mentoring to cultivate their skills in order to build up the corps of professionals in the public diplomacy cone; and

(2) apart from the public diplomacy cone, training of all Foreign Service officers should include more information on techniques of public diplomacy.

(c) ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC DIPLOMACY RESERVE CORPS.—Section 301 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 3941) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(e) ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC DIPLOMACY RESERVE CORPS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of State is authorized to establish in the Foreign Service a Public Diplomacy Reserve Corps consisting of mid- and senior-level former Foreign Service officers and other individuals with experience in the private or public sector relevant to public diplomacy, to serve for a period of six months to two years in postings abroad.

“(2) PROHIBITION ON CERTAIN ACTIVITIES.—While actively serving with the Reserve Corps, individuals may not engage in activities directly or indirectly intended to influence public opinion within the United States in the same manner and to the same extent that employees of the Department of State engaged in public diplomacy are so prohibited.”.

SEC. 213. ENHANCING UNITED STATES PUBLIC DIPLOMACY OUTREACH.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The platform strategy for United States public diplomacy programs has changed dramatically with events of the past decade. The United States Government used to operate hundreds of free-standing facilities around the world, known as “American Centers” or “America Houses”, that offered venues for cultural and educational events as well as access to books, magazines, films, and other selected materials about the United States. The consolidation of the United States Information Agency (USIA) into the Department of State accelerated the post-Cold War process of closing these facilities, and the deadly attacks on United States embassies in Tanzania and Kenya prompted the imposition of security requirements under law that included co-locating United States Government employees in hardened embassy compounds.

(2) Information Resource Centers, which offer library services and space for public events, that are now located in embassy compounds allow limited access—and in some cases, none whatsoever—by the public, and half of them operate on a “by appointment only” basis. “American Corner” facilities, operated by local contacts in university or public libraries in some countries, are no substitute for a designated venue recognized as a resource for information on United States culture and education staffed by a knowledgeable representative of the embassy.

(b) PARTNERSHIP ARRANGEMENTS TO FURTHER PUBLIC DIPLOMACY AND OUTREACH.—Recognizing the security challenges of maintaining free-standing public diplomacy facilities outside of embassy compounds, the Secretary of State shall consider new partnership arrangements with local or regional entities in foreign countries that can operate free-standing American Centers in areas well-trafficked by a cross-section of people in such countries, including in downtown storefronts, health care clinics, and other locations that reach beyond library patrons and university students. Where such partnership arrangements currently exist, the Secretary shall evaluate the efficacy of such partnership arrangements and determine whether such partnership arrangements can provide a model for public diplomacy facilities outside of embassy and consulate compounds elsewhere. Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall brief the appropriate congressional committees on the evaluation and determinations described in the preceding sentence.

(c) ESTABLISHMENT OF CERTAIN PUBLIC DIPLOMACY FACILITIES.—After taking into account relevant security needs, the Secretary of State shall consider placing United States public diplomacy facilities at locations that maximize the role of such facilities in the educational and cultural life of the cities in which such facilities are located, and help build a growing constituency for such facilities, in accordance with the authority given to the Secretary under section 606(a)(2)(B) of the Secure Embassy Construction and Counterterrorism Act of 1999 (22 U.S.C. 4865(a)(2)(B)) to waive certain requirements of that Act with respect to the location of certain United States diplomatic facilities in foreign countries.

SEC. 214. PUBLIC DIPLOMACY RESOURCE CENTERS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF LIBRARIES.—Section 1(b)(3) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2651a(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (D), by striking “and” at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (E), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; and”; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(F) provide for the establishment of new and the maintenance of existing libraries and resource centers at or in connection with United States diplomatic and consular missions.”.

(b) OPERATION OF LIBRARIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of State shall ensure that libraries and resource centers established and maintained in accordance with subparagraph (F) of section 1(b)(3) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (as added by subsection (a)(3) of this section) are open to the general public to the greatest extent practicable, subject to policies and procedures established by the Secretary to ensure the safety and security of United States diplomatic and consular missions and of United States officers, employees, and personnel posted at such missions at which such libraries are located.

(2) SHOWINGS OF UNITED STATES FILMS.—To the extent practicable, the Secretary of State shall ensure that such libraries and resource centers schedule public showings of United States films that showcase United States culture, society, values, and history.

(c) ADVISORY COMMISSION ON PUBLIC DIPLOMACY.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this section, the Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy (authorized under section 1334 of the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (22 U.S.C. 6553)) shall submit to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report containing an evaluation of the functions and effectiveness of the libraries and resource centers that are authorized under this section.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—From amounts authorized to be appropriated for Diplomatic and Consular Programs pursuant to section 101(I)(A), there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of State such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2010 and 2011 to carry out this section.

SEC. 215. GRANTS FOR INTERNATIONAL DOCUMENTARY EXCHANGE PROGRAMS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Since September 11, 2001, a distorted perception of the United States has grown abroad, even as many Americans struggle to understand the increasingly complex world beyond the borders of the United States.

(2) This public diplomacy crisis poses an ongoing threat to United States security, diplomatic relations, commerce, and citizen-to-citizen relationships between the United States and other countries.

(3) Independently produced documentary films have proven to be an effective means of communicating United States ideas and values to populations of other countries.

(4) It is in the interest of the United States to provide assistance to United States nongovernmental organizations that produce and distribute independently produced documentary films.

(b) ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary of State is authorized to make grants, on such terms and conditions as the Secretary may determine, to United States nongovernmental organizations that use independently produced documentary films to promote better understanding of the United States abroad and better understanding of global perspectives and other countries in the United States.

(c) ACTIVITIES SUPPORTED.—Grants provided under subsection (b) shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be used to carry out the following activities:

(1) Fund, distribute, and promote documentary films that convey a diversity of views about life in the United States to foreign audiences and bring insightful foreign perspectives to United States audiences.

(2) Support documentaries described in paragraph (1) that are made by independent foreign and domestic producers, selected through a peer review process.

(3) Develop a network of overseas partners to produce, distribute, and broadcast such documentaries.

(d) SPECIAL FACTORS.—In making the grants described in subsection (b), the Secretary shall give preference to nongovernmental organizations that—

(1) provide at least 35 percent of the total project cost in matching funds from non-Federal sources; and

(2) have prior experience supporting independently produced documentary films that have been broadcast on public television in the United States.

(e) REPORT.—Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report that contains a detailed description of the implementation of this section for the prior year.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for Educational and Cultural Exchange Programs pursuant to section 101(4), there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of State $5,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2010 and 2011 to carry out this section.

(b) STUDY AND REPORT.—Section 604(c)(2) of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1469(c)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

“(2)(A) Not less often than once every two years, the Commission shall undertake an in-depth review of United States public diplomacy programs, policies, and activities. Each study shall assess the effectiveness of the various mechanisms of United States public diplomacy in light of several factors, including public and media attitudes around the world toward the United States, United States citizens, and United States foreign policy, and make appropriate recommendations.

“(B) The Commission shall submit to the Secretary and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a comprehensive report of each study required under subparagraph (A). At the discretion of the Commission, any report under this subsection may be submitted in classified form or with a classified appendix.

“(C) Upon request of the Commission, the Secretary, the Chair of the Broadcasting Board of Governors, and the head of any other Federal agency that conducts public diplomacy or strategic communications activities shall provide to the Commission information to assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities under this paragraph.”.

(c) ENHANCING THE EXPERTISE OF THE UNITED STATES ADVISORY COMMISSION ON PUBLIC DIPLOMACY.—

(1) QUALIFICATIONS OF MEMBERS.—Section 604(a)(2) of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1469(a)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentences: “At least four members shall have substantial experience in the conduct of public diplomacy or comparable activities in the private sector. No member may be an officer or employee of the United States.”.

(2) APPLICATION OF AMENDMENT.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall not apply to individuals who are members of the United States Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 217. SPECIAL OLYMPICS.

(1) Special Olympics International has been recognized for more than four decades as the world leader in providing life-changing sports training and competition experiences for persons with intellectual disabilities at all levels of severity.

(3) Special Olympics has documented the challenge of ignorance and poor attitudes toward intellectual disability worldwide and its capacity to change discriminatory attitudes to understanding, acceptance, and advocacy for people with intellectual disabilities. These activities have received financial support from the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs (ECA) of the Department of State, among other sources.

(b) ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAM.—Section 3(b) of the Special Olympics Sport and Empowerment Act of 2004 (Public Law 108-406) is amended, in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by striking “Secretary of State” and inserting “Secretary of State, acting through the Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs”.
