The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

God of sea, land and sky, we worship You. Guide our lawmakers today in Your straight path. Inspire them with insight and courage that they may walk with integrity. Search their hearts and lead them away from all indirection, equivocation, and pretense that will keep them from arriving at Your desired destination. Fortify their desire to live with sincerity and self-effacement for the glory of Your kingdom on Earth.

We pray in Your holy Name. Amen.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I will have more to say about this later.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SETTLEMENT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I received a call from Secretary Donovan, the Secretary of Housing, indicating that Nevada was part of the settlement. It is in all the newspapers today. It appears Nevada will get about $1½ billion to work out our foreclosure problems in Nevada. We have led the Nation for years in foreclosures. We are not proud of that, but it is a fact.

For many years, we were the economic driver of the States. No State did better economically than Nevada for two decades. If you want a good job. come to Nevada. If you want to invest in real estate, come to Nevada or if you wanted to start a small business, come to Nevada. The collapse on Wall Street has hurt our housing market. We have not yet recovered. I commend the attorney general of Nevada, Catherine Masto, who was a fine lawver before she became attorney general and has only become better with the work she has done. She negotiated this. I am very proud of her and confident the work she did will bring dividends to the beleaguered housing industry in Nevada.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

FIRST LIEUTENANT ERIC YATES

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I have the sad duty today to share with my colleagues the story of one brave Kentuckian who sacrificed his life for his country. First Lieutenant Eric Yates, of Rineyville, KY, was killed on September 18, 2010, in Kandahar province, Afghanistan, after insurgents attacked his patrol with an improvised explosive device. He was 26 years old.

For his heroic service, Lieutenant Yates received several awards, medals, and decorations, including the Bronze Star Medal, the Purple Heart, the National Defense Service Medal, the Afghanistan Campaign Medal Bronze Service Star, the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon, the NATO Medal, the Combat Action Badge, and the Overseas Service

On Veterans Day last year, Lieutenant Yates's alma mater, Western Kentucky University, honored him by inducting him into its ROTC Hall of Fame. A likeness of Lieutenant Yates, etched in granite, was unveiled and placed on the university's landmark Guthrie Bell Tower.

The history department at Western Kentucky University, working with the Yates family, also established the First Lieutenant Eric Yates Memorial Scholarship. "We have made it our mission to make it a scholarship that will be here forever, to keep Eric alive in our hearts," says Kathy Yates, Eric's mother. Thanks to fund raisers and generous donations, that scholarship fund now has over $20,000 in it.

Eric was born on July 1, 1984, to Kathy and David Yates, and grew up on a farm in Rineyville. A typical little kid, he liked to play with toy tractors and watch cartoons. Batman and Power Rangers were his favorites. "He went through a phase where he wore a cape all the time so he would be ready for any impending danger," remembers Kathy. Eric attended Rineyville Elementary School, and played baseball.

On the farm, the Yates family grew hay and tobacco, and there was work to be done clearing weeds, topping plants, cutting the tobacco, and stripping it in the barn to get it ready for market. "I am so thankful for that time we spent together working and talking, as that's when you really get to know your children and the work ethic they develop," Kathy says.

One spring when Eric was about 10 and his little brother Nathan was about 6, David told his two sons they could each pick a newborn calf after their hard work stripping tobacco all winter. Nathan picked out the biggest bull he could find. He could not understand why his big brother Eric chose a little heifer calf. "I want the gift that's going to keep on giving," Eric said, and he went on to sell a calf from that cow every year for the next 13 years.

In high school Eric got his first job for Butternut Bread, filling the shelves in Wal-Mart, and was elected as treasurer of his school's chapter of Future Farmers of America.

During the summer of 2001, the Yates family took a vacation to our Nation's capital here in Washington, D.C. Eric was thrilled to visit the White House, the Smithsonian, Arlington Cemetery, the Korean Memorial, the Vietnam Memorial, Robert E. Lee's house, and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Kathy recalls how he practically taught the family a history lesson at every stop along the way. "He was amazed by all of it," she says.

Soon after that summer trip came the events of 9/11. A junior in high school, Eric read as much about the brutal terrorist attacks on this country as he could. "I had not seen anything that grabbed his attention like that fateful day," Kathy remembers. It was then that Eric began to think about a career in the U.S. Army.

After graduating from John Hardin High School in 2003, Eric started at Elizabethtown Community College. Then he transferred to Western Kentucky University and joined their ROTC program, with an eye toward a military career. He hoped to return to Hardin County one day after retiring from the Army, to teach and share his stories of military adventure.

Eric graduated from WKU in 2008. "We were so proud of him that weekend as David and I put on his gold bars at his commissioning ceremony," Kathy says. After graduation, he joined the 101st Airborne Division and was stationed at Fort Campbell, Kentucky, a point of pride for Eric as that was the same division his grandfather, Herbert L. Crabb, had served in

In May of 2010, Eric was deployed to Afghanistan with B Company, 1st Battalion, 502nd Infantry Regiment, 101st Airborne Division. It would be his first and only deployment.

We are thinking of First Lieutenant Yates's loved ones today, Mr. President, as I recount his story for my colleagues in the Senate, including his parents, David and Kathy Yates; his brother, Nathan Yates; his grandfather, Herbert L. Crabb; and many other beloved family members and friends.

Eric's family learned after his tragic death that he had left behind a letter he wanted read at his funeral. His parents have gracefully shared that letter with me, and I would like to read it for my colleagues now. Eric writes as follows:

Hello to everyone in attendance.

I'm sorry that you all had to gather here today for this event—no, really I am. But since you are here I would like to take the chance to say a few things, try to impart some of my knowledge and wisdom that I have stored up over the past 26 years. I consider myself fairly cultured and worldly, so please pay attention; I have the following advice.

Number one, take a chance. Get out there and do something you wouldn't normally do. You will see and do some really cool stuff and meet some really fine and interesting people. Once an Army buddy and myself ate breakfast with a homeless man in Oklahoma City, and I must say he left an impression on me

Number two, watch the original Star Wars trilogy. It's an amazing story.

Number three, no matter how old you are, get off the couch and exercise. You will look and feel so much better, have more energy and be happier.

Number four, read a lot books, both fiction and non-fiction, newspapers, magazines, blogs, online stories, movie reviews—all these things will help you understand the world around you, your role in it, and why what happened to me happened where and when it did.

Number five, save your money. You don't own your things; your things own you.

Number six, liquor is better than beer.

Number seven, don't reject new ideas immediately

That seems to be all that I wanted to say, so thank you for coming. Please have a safe trip home and have a good life. Love, Eric Yates.

It is a great loss, Mr. President, that First Lieutenant Eric Yates will not have a long and happy life himself, with the opportunities to share those lessons—and many more—with the people that fill that life. But I am honored to be able to share them now with my colleagues in the United States Senate.

And I am honored to stand here today and recognize Lieutenant Yates's heroic service, and the solemn sacrifice he has made on behalf of a loving family, a proud Commonwealth, and a grateful Nation.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

LOWERING TUITION COSTS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, since his State of the Union Address, President Obama and Vice President BIDEN have been talking about their efforts to help students afford to go to college, which is something we are all in favor of.

The President's proposals include what he calls a higher education race to the top. It has a familiar sounding formula. Though, in this case, it will impose new rules and mandates and price controls on colleges and universities in States. Unfortunately, this race to the top is headed in the wrong direction

The President should turn around his higher education race to the top and head it in the direction of Washington, DC, to help the federal government compete for ways to stop adding mandates and costs on States that are soaking up dollars and driving college tuition through the roof.

Let me be specific and offer three examples of how a race to the top headed toward Washington, DC, could actually help students by saving them money on their tuition.

First, Washington could stop overcharging students on their student loans. They are doing that now by borrowing money at 2.8 percent, loaning it to students at 6.8 percent, and using the profit to help pay for the new health care law and other government programs.

Second, Washington could help students with lower tuition by repealing the new Medicaid mandates on States that take effect in 2014. These new Medicaid mandates will further reduce State funding for higher education and raise tuition at public colleges and universities, which is where approximately 75 percent of students go to college.

Third, Washington could stop prohibiting States from reducing spending on Medicaid at a time when State revenues and expenditures are going down. That forces States to spend money on health care that otherwise would be available for higher education.

Let me talk about each of those three ideas.

First, this business of overcharging on student loans. I think it would come as a big surprise to most students to know that Washington is borrowing money at 2.8 percent and loaning it to them at 6.8 percent, and using the profit to pay for the health care law and for other government programs. We have roughly 25 million students attending 6,000 colleges and universities in America today, and approximately 16 million of those have Federal loans that allow them to spend that money at the school of their choice. Approximately 70 percent of the Federal funding made available for our higher education last year—about $116 billion went for those student loans. Under the new health care law, the Department of Education is going to be borrowing money from the Treasury at 2.8 percent and then loaning it to the students at 6.8 percent. So, the government is actually overcharging 16 million students and taking that profit and spending it on new government programs, including the new health care law.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, over the next 10 years, here is where the profit goes, approximately: $8.7 billion goes to pay for the new health care law; $10.3 billion goes to pay down the Federal debt; and $36 billion goes to support other Pell grants. So if we really want to help students pay for tuition, why would we not use this profit to reduce the interest rate on student loans? CBO says we could have reduced the rate from 6.8 percent to 5.3 percent and let the students have the savings instead of letting the government have the savings. By reducing the interest on student loans that much, students would save an average of $2,200 over 10 years. That is a lot of money for the average student borrower who has approximately $25,000 in debt.

I have proposed the idea of legislation that puts a "truth in lending" label on every one of the 16 million student loans, saying this: Beware: Your government is overcharging you on your student loan to help pay for the health care law and other government programs.

Here is a second way Washington could help lower tuition rates. Washington could repeal the Medicaid mandates imposed on States that take effect in 2014 and will inevitably drive up tuition rates. This is how that works. The new health care law requires States to expand and help pay for Medicaid coverage. This in turn requires Governors who are making up budgets likely go for higher education and spend it instead on Medicaid.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, this new expansion of Medicaid will cost States an additional $20 billion over 10 years and add 16 million more people to Medicaid programs. The CMS Chief Actuary says it may add 25 million to the Medicaid Program, costing States even more. We know this is going to happen because it has already happened. For years Medicaid mandates have been imposing huge costs on States, which in turn soaks up money for colleges, and in turn causes tuition to go up to replace that money.

According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, average State funding this year for Medicaid increased by 28.7 percent compared to the prior year. Where did the money come from? In Tennessee, which had a 15.8-percent increase in State spending on Medicaid last year, at the same time there was a 15-percent decrease in State spending for higher education. That is a real cut, not a Washington cut; that is 15 percent less money. That did what? There was a 7.3-percent increase in tuition at public universities and an 8.2-percent increase in tuition at community colleges to make up for the cuts.

In California, where the state enrolls 8.3 million Medicaid beneficiaries, they are expected to gain 2 million more when the new health care law is implemented in 2014. Just over the last year, there has been a 13.5-percent decrease in State support for higher education in California, along with a 21-percent increase in tuition and fees at State universities and a 37 percent increase in tuition at community colleges. Most of those students probably do not know that the principal reason their tuition is going up is because of the Federal health care mandates on the State.

From 2000 to 2006, spending by State governments on Medicaid increased by 62.6 percent. This has been going on long before President Obama came into office. I balanced it as Governor in the 1980s. Every year I tried to keep education funding at 50 percent of the State budgets. In those days the States paid for 70 percent of the cost of operating the University of Tennessee or the community college and tuition paid for 30 percent of the cost. We had an implicit deal with the students that if we raise tuition, we will raise State funding by about the same amount. Those days are long gone.

Medicaid costs on States are the most insoluble part of the budget dilemma we have here in Washington, I believe Medicaid either should be run 100 percent by the Federal Government or 100 percent by the States. I came to Washington and suggested that to President Reagan in the 1980s. He agreed, but many did not. So it is not new. We should not blame President Obama for the fact that this has gone to take money that, otherwise, would on for 30 years, but we ought to hold him responsible for making it worse.

Here is how he has made it worse in a third way-by a so-called maintenance of effort requirement on States as a condition of continuing to receive Federal payments under Medicaid. The 2009 stimulus bill prohibited States from imposing new eligibility standards, methodologies, or procedures as a condition of receiving Federal Medicaid payments. The new health care law extends the maintenance of effort requirements through 2014. So for 5 years, throughout this recession, while State revenues are going down, the Federal Government in its wisdom has been imposing billions of new dollars in Medicaid mandates on States requiring them to spend more on Medicaid. And what happens? They must spend less on something else.

In 2010, New York Lieutenant Governor Richard Ravitch, a Democrat, eloquently talked about that problem. He said Medicaid is "the largest single driver of New York's growing expenditures," making up more than one-third of the State total budget. New York spends twice as much on Medicaid as California. He said this spending is expected to grow at an annual rate of 18 percent over the next 4 years but that the Federal stimulus and health care expansions have made it harder for States such as New York and California to cut expenditures because of the strings attached. He said:

These strings prevent States from substituting Federal money for State funds, require States to spend minimum amounts of their own funds, and prevent States from tightening eligibility standards for benefits.

So while the Federal Government is burdening the States with hundreds of billions of dollars in Medicaid liabilities, the President has made it worse by forbidding States from tightening their eligibility requirements as their economies shrink.

The administration and Congress have left Governors with little choice but to cut in other areas, and that usually turns out to be public higher education, where 75 percent of students go to school. So why is tuition going up? The biggest reason is us—Congress, Washington DC. Instead of pointing the finger at States and colleges, we ought to look in the mirror.

There is another problem with the President's proposals. His proposals are not likely to affect many students, and if they do they are more likely to hurt them than help them. Here is why that is true. Ninety-eight percent of all Federal money made available to college students goes directly to the students to spend at one of the 6,000 institutions of their choice.

The President's proposals would only affect three programs of campus-based aid that eventually affects about 2 percent of all students and impacts about 2 percent of all the federal money available for higher education. What the President would propose doing includes putting price controls on colleges offering those programs and saying that students could not go to the institution if tuition goes up too much. So if a low-income student wants to go to the University of Tennessee or North Carolina or Michigan and tuition goes up more than the Federal Government says it should, mostly because of Federal policies, what happens? The student cannot go to the University of Michigan or the University of Tennessee or the University of North Carolina. Those schools have plenty of applicants. They are going to get their students anyway. So the effect will be to make it harder for a low-income student to go to the college of his or her choice.

What should we be doing? I think it is pretty obvious. The taxpayers already are generous with support for students going to college. The average tuition at a 4-year public institution is $8,200. At a 2-year community college, it is $3,000. At private institutions, it may be closer to $28,000 or $30,000 a year. To make it easier, there are 16 million student loans—$116 billion in new student loans last year. There are 9 million Pell grants, supported by $41 billion in taxpayers' dollars. So half our 25 million college students have a Federal grant or loan to help pay for college, and they spend it at one of 6.000 institutions of their choice.

Still, the rising cost of tuition is a real problem for American families. Tuition and fees have soared over the past 10 years above the rate of inflation by 5.6 percent a year at public 4-year institutions. This adds up to about a 113 percent increase in tuition over the decade.

Colleges and universities need to do their part to cut costs. I have suggested that well-prepared students ought to be offered 3-year degrees instead of 4. The president of George Washington University has suggested ways that colleges could be more efficient. He said he could run two complete colleges with two complete faculties in the facilities now used half the year for one. That is without cutting the length of student vacations, increasing class size, or requiring faculty to teach more. Requiring one mandatory summer session for every student every 4 years, as Dartmouth College does, would improve institutions' bottom line. The GW president said his institution's bottom line would improve by $10 to $15 million a year. Those are just two good ideas.

There is nothing wrong with President Obama's proposal to encourage ideas like that, even to give grants and put the spotlight on colleges that are trying those things. The Malcolm Baldrige Award for Quality Control years ago did a lot to improve quality in business and government without spending very much. But mandates and price controls on 6,000 autonomous colleges and universities is not the right prescription. They are more likely to hurt students than help. They are more likely to drive up tuition than lower it. And they are more likely to diminish the quality of the best system of higher education in the world.

The reason we have the best system is, for one reason, because generally the Federal Government keeps its hands off those autonomous colleges, and the second reason is that students can choose among those 6,000 institutions with the money we make available to them in grants and loans.

Rather than creating new price controls, new mandates, and new regulations of the kind that have already pushed tuition higher, I suggest the President turn his race to the top around. Instead of heading it towards the States and colleges, head it towards Washington, DC. Stop overcharging students for their student loans, stop requiring States to spend more State dollars on health care at the expense of public colleges and universities, repeal the new Medicaid mandates that in 2014 will take already-high tuition and drive it even higher, and let the Federal agencies compete to see how they can stop adding costs that are the main reason college tuition is rising. That would be the real race to the top. That is the real way to help students afford col-

PREVENTIVE SERVICES MANDATE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, for some time now Americans have suspected that this administration has lost touch with the American people. John Meacham, the former editor of Newsweek and a fan of the President, explained this detachment by explaining that the President does not "particularly like people." That might be an overstatement, but he is on to something. This administration seems to take its cues from the far left, whether or not they represent the aspirations and hopes of ordinary Americans.

Nowhere is this disconnection from the American people on better display than with the hamfisted decision by Secretary Kathleen Sebelius and the Department of Health and Human Services to require that religious persons and institutions violate their most cherished beliefs or face the consequences.

Late last year, HHS ordered all employers, including religious institutions, to cover in their employer insurance plans such things as sterilization, contraception, and abortion-inducing drugs and devices. With very limited exceptions, religious hospitals, universities, and charitable institutions would face the choice of dropping coverage for their employees or violating their consciences.

The Nation's Catholic bishops and other religious institutions many pleaded with this administration to grant broader waivers to avoid jeopardizing these institutions' constitutional rights to freely exercise religion. But the administration, rather than side with millions of religious Americans who just want to be left alone to practice their own faith, decided to throw in with the most radical of proabortion advocates. They decided to subordinate our central constitutional commitment to religious liberty to a radical agenda that is overtly hostile to all of these people of faith.

The response has been overwhelming. At church this weekend millions of American Catholics were read a letter from their bishops. The message was simple, and it was powerful. This action is unjust and one with which they will not comply. They are right, and they shouldn't. The first amendment doubly protects religious liberty. It prohibits the government establishment of religion and explicitly protects the free exercise of religion, the first individual right listed in the Bill of Rights. That is how important religious liberty is to America.

In our system of government, such fundamental rights and principles are supposed to trump statutes, regulations, and political agendas. The Constitution and the liberties that it protects are supreme not the fleeting politically driven motivations of any particular administration. Yet the Obama administration, as it has always does, has turned these priorities upside down. In this administration, politics trumps absolutely everything else, even the Constitution and religious liberty. Instead of conforming their political agenda to the Constitution, they distort the Constitution and even liberty itself to conform to their political agenda.

The politicians driving this mandate underestimated the American people who have in succession rejected the sorry efforts by the administration to defend its actions. The administration first hid behind the opinion of a purportedly objective medical group that birth control should be included in health insurance plans, but the American people knew who was ultimately responsible for this rule—not some board of so-called experts but the President and his officers. They tried to minimize this mandate's impact by arguing that many States already have similar requirements. But this was incredibly misleading since nearly all of those States have much broader religious protections. In fact, only three States have religious exemptions as narrow and limited as this new Federal mandate.

They tried to assuage the concerns of religious citizens by saying that the rule does not cover churches and houses of worship, but Americans will not accept only the remnant of our constitutional rights that the President chooses to recognize. Were we supposed to thank the Obama administration for letting us retain a few scraps of religious liberty? There are many religious institutions and organizations that do not fit into the Obama administration's artificial, narrow categories but that just as fully exercise their faith and religious missions. Religious liberty belongs to the Catholic hospital or the University of Notre Dame no less than it belongs to the Catholic Church.

Then, when this simmering controversy broke wide open a few weeks ago, Secretary Sebelius thought she could make it all go away by agreeing not to impose this mandate for another year. Like her boss the President she just plain doesn't get it. Religious liberty is not a bargaining chip or a deal sweetener like premium floor mats or an upgraded appliance. Did she think Americans would not mind losing this cherished liberty if they were allowed to spend just a little extra time with it?

The Obama administration's attitude toward religious liberty has become "enjoy it while it lasts." And to the administration's surprise, the American people have been less than enthusiastic about this cavalier attitude toward constitutional rights.

The President of the United States takes an oath to support and defend the Constitution, to stand for the fundamental liberty of all Americans. He and the officials responsible for this mandate have fallen far short of this oath.

The fight for religious liberty began before America was born, and it must be fought continually. We can all see that now. It is a part of our constitutional heritage. Our Founding Fathers pledged their lives, fortunes, and sacred honor to defend the principle that all people are created equal and endowed by God with certain unalienable rights. The right for persons and institutions to be free to practice their faith without undue interference by the government is among our most cherished rights and liberties.

There was a day when liberals and conservatives, Democrats and Republicans—everyone—joined to defend liberty. I should know. I was the principal Republican co-sponsor of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act brought together unprecedented grassroots and congressional coalitions to defend this first freedom. They knew that rights such as religious liberty rise and fall together, that religious liberty cannot be packaged, sliced, diced, and doled out in little pieces to please certain interest groups. We need that same unity today because religious liberty is just as important and, sadly, just as threatened as it was in

In addition to violating the first amendment right to freely exercise our religion, this mandate also appears to violate that landmark law, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. It burdens the free exercise of religion and is clearly not, as the law requires, a narrow means of achieving a compelling purpose.

Last month the Supreme Court unanimously held that the right of religious organizations to decide who may further their religious mission trumps nondiscrimination statutes. The Obama administration argued that religious organizations are nothing special, that they should have no more freedom from Federal control than, say, a labor union or a social club. In other words, religious liberty is simply no big deal to the Obama administration

Writing for the entire Supreme Court, Chief Justice Roberts called this a remarkable view of religious liberty, one that is "hard to square with the text of the First Amendment itself, which gives special solicitude to the rights of religious organizations."

Soon the Supreme Court will have the opportunity to rule on the constitutionality of ObamaCare. What the preventive services mandate confirms beyond all doubt is that the constitutional defects in ObamaCare only begin with the insurance mandate that will be before the Supreme Court. There are some other issues there as well, and I hope the Court examines every one of them and overturns this law.

The very DNA of ObamaCare is unconstitutional. At its core, the law and its expansion of government are a threat to personal liberty. The decision to implement this law in a way that forces religious institutions to violate their deepest principles is a vivid demonstration of what happens to personal liberty when the power of the state expands. As the state controls more and more of our lives to further a political agenda, our freedom is put in greater and greater jeopardy.

After 3 years of this administration, the American people seem to be saying enough is enough. Those responsible for this decision to force religious institutions to subsidize health coverage for abortifacient drugs need to be brought to account. The President needs to answer for this. Secretary Sebelius needs to answer for this. The Attorney General needs to answer for this. How could he let this happen?

Let me say, however, that getting answers is not enough. Congress needs to assert its authority as the representative of the American people, stand for the first amendment, and restore religious liberty by overturning this health care law.

For those who are on the front lines fighting this mandate: I applaud your courage, and please understand that you are not alone; you are Democrats, Independents, Republicans, and others. The Obama administration may not care about religious liberty, but the Constitution does, and I, along with many of my colleagues, will fight alongside you until we prevail over this unjust law. This new HHS mandate cannot be allowed to stand, and I am confident that if the will of the American people prevails, it will not stand.

I belong to a faith that has been persecuted and mischaracterized for many decades. We are the only church in the history of America that had a Governor issue an extermination order against its members. That is how bad it got in this greatest of all countries where religious liberty is without question our most valued right. We understand what it is like to be persecuted. I don't care whether one is liberal, conservative, independent, or what, and I don't care what religious beliefs folks out there all have. There is no excuse for this type of heavy-handed, hamhanded, overgovernmentalization of our religious freedom. We simply cannot allow this to stand.

Does President Obama have the guts to stand up for religious liberty? If he doesn't, he should not be President of this United States. If he does, I will be the first to compliment him for it. It comes right down to the Constitution itself and, in many respects, I believe the most important provision in the Constitution. Religious liberty is something that our early leaders risked their lives to obtain because they were persecuted because of their religious beliefs.

I call on the President of the United States to change this, to acknowledge that this is a mistake, and to understand that we are united—Democrats, Republicans, Independents, and others—in the protection of this great liberty.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

MOVING AHEAD FOR PROGRESS IN THE 21ST CENTURY ACT—MOTION TO PROCEED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 1813, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Motion to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 311, S. 1813, a bill to reauthorize Federal-aid highway and highway safety construction programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Well, Mr. President, this is a big day for those of us who believe strongly that we need to focus on job creation, a better business climate, a bill that will, in fact, not only protect jobs but create new jobs. That is the bill we are hoping will get the goahead at 2 o'clock, what we call MAP-21, the Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century Act, S. 1813.

This has been—if I could use an analogy that fits—a long road to get to this point so we can, in fact, make sure we have an adequate road system, an adequate highway system, an adequate transit system, and that we make sure. as a world leader, our infrastructureour bridges, our roads-keep up with the demands put upon them. There are many demands put upon them because we are a great nation with commerce and heavy-duty vehicles on our roadways and railroads that cross over roadways that create potential problems, and, certainly, we have a robust transit system that needs to keep up with the times.

Last night, I received a letter from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and I was very pleased to see it because they support the bill Senator INHOFE and I, on a bipartisan basis, were able to get through our committee on a unanimous vote.

It is a rare moment in history, frankly, when the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and labor unions all come together, with everyone on the same page, to say: Let's move forward with a bill. In these days of controversy and debate—and, Lord knows, I am immersed in many of them—this is one where we have been able to carve out a very important consensus, not only in the Environment and Public Works Committee but in the Banking Committee—where Senators Johnson and Shelby work together—to get a piece of this bill done.

In the Finance Committee—where Senators there are led by Senator BAUCUS—they were able to hammer out a tough and important agreement to fund this bill because it has some shortfalls due to the fact that the highway trust fund has been going down because cars are getting better fuel economy—and that is a good thing—but the bad, unintended problem is the trust fund now has fewer dollars, so we run short of what we need to keep our bridges and highways and transit systems going.

So what a moment it was to see not only our committee but the Banking Committee, the Finance Committee, and the Commerce Committee, with a couple of exceptions on a couple of provisions—they did their job as well, and we are trying to work with them to resolve whatever matters remain in that portion of the bill.

But I want to quote from the letter from the Chamber of Commerce that I received last night. I want to share a couple lines with everyone. I am quoting:

The Chamber strongly supports this important legislation. Investment in transportation has proven to grow jobs, and the need for Congress to act on transportation infrastructure is clear.

Another quote:

Passing transportation reauthorization legislation is a specific action Congress and the Administration can take right now to support job growth and economic productivity without adding to the deficit.

Those two quotes I think show we have done our job well.

This is a bill that is paid for. This is a bill that, because of the way it was written, is a reform bill, which I will go into. But it also protects the jobs we currently have, which is 1.8 million jobs in the transportation area, and also, because of the way we have boosted a program called TIFIA—which I will talk about, which is a highly leveraged program—we have the capacity to add over a million new jobs. Mostly these jobs are in the private sector. That is where they are, and that is what we are focused on in this legislation.

I mentioned Senator INHOFE before, my ranking member on the Environment and Public Works Committee. I expect him to be in the Chamber shortly. I cannot tell you of the trusted partnership we were able to develop with him that went not only for his relationship with me in working on this bill, but the staff-to-staff relationships which have blossomed into friendships and trust. I think what we have shown is that each of us can be a tough but fair partner. Our staffs understand where we are coming from. But we have a bigger goal in front of us than our differences; that is, our agreement that it is our responsibility to fix our aging roads and highways and bridgesour infrastructure—to put people back to work, to boost our economy, and, as Senator Inhofe has talked about very often, with examples that are in many ways heart breaking, we have problems with safety in our Nation. We have bridges that are crumbling. We have seen them with our own eyes. We cannot turn away from this because we may have disagreements on lots of other things.

It has been a long but a very worthwhile journey to get to this stage because the payoff here, if this bill eventually becomes law, is, as I said, protecting 1.8 million jobs and creating up to another million jobs.

Again, I want to mention the Commerce Committee. I did not thank Senators Rockefeller and Hutchison for their work on this as well. So we have four committees that are involved in writing this bill. Each committee has voted out their bills. If all goes right today, and we get a resounding goahead, I hope we begin with amendments on the EPW portion, and then move to add the different other bills to this bill, until we have added all fourall the committees together—and then I hope we will have a resounding vote and get to a conference committee. We have major differences with the other body, but I think we can work them out for the good of the people and the thousand organizations that back us in this bill, in this effort.

I also have to thank Senator HARRY REID, the majority leader. He brought this bill to the floor. He exerted the right kind of pressure on all of our committees. He encouraged us. He understands clearly that, as we try to get out of this recession—and we have seen beneficial results from our actions in a number of areas—this is going to mean a big boost for jobs.

I want to also say that within my committee we have what we call the big four: it is the chairman and the ranking member—myself and Senator INHOFE—and then it is the chairman of the Highway Subcommittee and the ranking member there; and that is Senator BAUCUS and Senator VITTER. So I honestly think if you look at the big four, and you look at our philosophies, and you look at where we are from and the differences we bring to the table, we cover the whole Senate in terms of the range of ideologies but are tied together by a belief that this is something that needs to get done. And Senators BAUCUS and VITTER were with Senator Inhofe and me every step of percent. These are real people with the way, for which we are very grate-

I mentioned, I alluded to a thousand organizations that have been involved on the outside pushing us to get this done. My hat is off to them. They make up a broad coalition. I have spoken frequently with them to give them an update on how we are doing, and I have to tell you they truly represent America. Over the course of this debate, if I have the time—and in many ways I hope I do not have the time because I hope we can get this done and not spend a whole lot of time on it because I think the committees have done such a good job, but if we have excess time on the floor, I intend to read as many of those organizations into the RECORD as I possibly can because that coalition is remarkable in its reach.

They were led by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. It is an unprecedented coalition. They came together regardless of ideology and differences. Every time I look at this list, I am reminded that essentially it is America. It is America: business, labor groups, State organizations, city organizations, and organizations from all 50 States.

We received a letter from these thousand organizations recently, and I am going to quote some of what they said. They said:

There are few federal efforts that rival the potential of critical transportation infrastructure investments for sustaining and creating jobs and economic activity....

They wrote:

In 2011, political leaders-Republican and Democrat, House, Senate and the Administration-stated a multi-year surface transportation bill is important for job creation and economic recovery. We urge you to follow words with action:

And this is what they asked us:

Make Transportation Job #1 and move legislation immediately in the House and Senate to invest in the roads, bridges, [and] transit systems that are the backbone of [our] economy, its businesses large and small, and communities of all sizes.

Again, it is important to note, our surface transportation bill creates or saves millions of jobs, benefiting millions of American families across the country. What a great signal it will send, as we struggle to get out of the slowdown and we begin to see the light at the end of the tunnel. This will be a very large light because there are very few other things we can do here that have the reach of a transportation bill.

Let's talk about the construction industry. According to the most recent unemployment figures, there are 1.5 million construction workers out of work, with the industry facing an unemployment rate of 17.7 percent. Construction workers are out of work.

I show you a chart I have in the Chamber. The national unemployment rate is 8.3 percent. We want to see that come down. But look at that construction industry unemployment rate: 17.7 pride in what they do. And we know the housing industry has had a horrible time. It has stalled out, and it is in a horrible trough.

So if we can take those construction workers and offer them an opportunity to build the roads, the bridges, the highways, the transit systems, it will put them to work and we will get that 17.7-percent rate down.

I do not know if we have a picture of that stadium. This is a picture of the Super Bowl stadium. From what I understand, it seats about 100,000. That is what we see here. If we had 15, 15 of these pictures, 15 Super Bowl stadiums' worth of people, that is how many people are unemployed in construction.

I use this not only because I watch the Super Bowl, although my Niners did not get in and it was upsetting, but because this is a picture, a visual. Imagine every one of those people unemployed times 15. It is a visual, I think it is important that we keep in mind we are talking about real people who have lost real jobs because of this recession and especially the housing downturn.

This is a chance to put them to work. There is an urgent need to get this legislation through the conference committee and onto the President's desk because the current transportation authorization extension expires on March 31. I wish to say to colleagues who may be watching or staff who may be watching: You may have a lot of amendments in your mind, in your heart, and everybody has a right, and I support your right. But please think very hard before you start bringing down amendments that will slow us up. Those thousand organizations know we need to keep our eye on the ball, and these organizations are in all our States. They represent millions and millions and millions of American families. So let's not add extraneous matters, please. Let's not have frivolous amendments, killer amendments. We all can offer these. I have several I could offer in a heartbeat. But this is not the place to have our ideological disputes. This is a bill that is a jobs bill. This is a bill that is good for our businesses. This is a bill that will save 1.8 million jobs and create up to 1 million more at a time when we must have that kind of wind at our back.

There is another reason. Not only does the highway bill expire in March, but we also know the trust fund is running out of money for projects already in the pipeline. So we have to find a reliable and stable source of funding. Senator BAUCUS and his Finance Committee have come up with a way to responsibly fill this shortfall. I cannot thank them enough, the Democrats and Republicans on that committee. Thank you. Because what you have done is to have come up with some very good ways to pay for the shortfall, and those ways do no harm.

We must push forward for another reason which I alluded to before. America's aging infrastructure is crumbling. Let me just tell America this: Some 70.000 of our Nation's bridges are structurally deficient-70,000 of our Nation's bridges are structurally deficient, 50 percent of our roads are not up to standard.

If you are in your home and you have little kids and someone who is an expert comes up to you, an engineer, and says your house could easily crumble, we all know what you would do. You would get out of there, fix it, and then move the family back in. This is no different. If somebody tells you your house is crumbling, you have to fix it. If somebody says to us, our Nation's bridges are structurally deficient and over 50 percent of our roads are not up to standard, we have to act.

My dear friend and colleague who is going to manage this bill with me has arrived. I will tell him, I am about 5 minutes away from finishing my opening statement and yielding to him. But he is more eloquent than anyone I have ever heard on two issues; one, what is the role of government. He makes the point, which I am not going to take away from him, as to how infrastructure fits into that.

He also is eloquent on the point of safety. Because he has seen with his own eyes what happens if we do not get our infrastructure sound and safe. We have a deteriorating part of our infrastructure, and it needs to be fixed.

We cannot be an economic leader if we cannot move people and goods. We cannot thrive as a nation if our people are trapped in traffic and our businesses are trying to move goods and they are trapped in traffic. We lose 4.8 billion hours from work and we pay the price for that in loss of productive time and in dirty air.

As to our bill that was passed out of the Environment and Public Works Committee. I wish to say to my ranking member who was not here and his staff was not here at the time that I started, I praised him to the sky—and staff-because regardless of our differences on many issues, we have been able to put this country first in this

I am so grateful for the spirit of cooperation we have brought to our work, which was captured in the Banking Committee where Senators JOHN-SON and SHELBY got together, and in the Finance Committee where many Republicans joined our Democratic friends to figure out a way to fund this responsibly, and in the Commerce Committee where we have one or two little hiccups, but I do believe we are going to resolve them. I am proud we were out there first showing we could do this.

People said all over the Senate: If BOXER and INHOFE can do this, anything is possible.

MAP-21 is a reform bill, and I am proud about that. It consolidates 90 programs into less than 30. It focuses on key national goals. It gives greater flexibility to the States to invest in their top priorities. It eliminates earmarks. It establishes performance measures to improve accountability. It accelerates project delivery, and it provides resources for a new national freight program.

This bill is responsible. It continues the current level of funding plus inflation which, as I said, protects 1.8 million jobs. The TIFIA Program, which Senator INHOFE and I agreed to increase, which stands for Transportation Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act, is also embraced by Chairman MICA over on the House side.

So Republicans and Democrats agree that by making more funds available through TIFIA, we can mobilize up to $30 billion more from the $1 billion we have placed in that fund and create up to 1 million jobs.

I wish to thank the mayor of Los Angeles and the Chamber there and the workers there who brought the idea of leveraging to my attention. I wish to say that Tom Donahue, of the U.S. Chamber, president there, Richard Trumka, the president of the AFL and many business and labor groups throughout our Nation supported this TIFIA Program to stretch taxpayer dollars in a safe way.

Again, they have done that in the House bill as well, which is very good for us.

I am proud of this bill and the reforms in it. I am proud of working relationships we have established across party lines in our committee. I could say, very honestly, there are a lot of things this bill does not have that I am sorry about, that I wanted to see in there. I am not going to detail those. But I know Senator INHOFE feels the same way. But there were certain things that were lines in the sand for each of us, and it was a give and take that resulted in this compromise which is a good bill—a good solid bill.

We put those controversial issues aside for the good of the Nation. I will close with this. Ever since Dwight Eisenhower started us on a path to build the Interstate Highway System, transportation has been a bipartisan effort. I asked my staff to research some of the comments made by President Eisenhower in 1963 when he established the Federal Interstate Highway System

Actually, he wrote his autobiography in 1963. He established the System in 1956.

This is what he said:

More than any single action by the government since the end of the war, this one would change the face of America with straightaways, cloverleaf turns, bridges, and elongated parkways. Its impact on the American economy—the jobs it would produce in manufacturing and construction, the rural

MAP-21 is a reform bill, and I am areas it would open up—was beyond calcula- must invest in our aging transpor-

It is very important to note how bipartisan this is. Ronald Reagan in 1982, "More efficient roads mean lower transportation costs."

He said:

Lately driving is not as much fun as it used to be. Time and wear have taken their toll on America's roads and highways.

He said it well. So we have Democratic Presidents, Republican Presidents, Democratic Senators, Republican Senators all working in a bipartisan way. Votes on these bills have been overwhelming, 79 to 8; 372 in the House to 47—all of our President's signing these laws. Historically, major surface transportation legislation has received overwhelming bipartisan support.

In 1991, the Intermodal Surface Transportation and Equity Act, ISTEA, with a Senate Democratic majority, passed by a vote of 79 to 8. The House, with a Democratic majority, passed it by a vote of 372 to 47. President George H.W. Bush signed it into law. At the December 18, 1991, signing ceremony, President Bush said:

ISTEA is "the most important transportation bill since President Eisenhower started the Interstate System 35 years ago . . . this bill also means investment in America's economic future, for an efficient transportation system is absolutely essential for a productive and efficient economy."

In 1998, the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century, TEA-21, with a Senate Republican majority, passed by a vote of 88 to 5. The House with a Republican majority, passed it by a vote of 297 to 86. President Bill Clinton signed it into law.

In 2005, the Safe, Accountable, Flexible, Efficient, Transportation Equity Act: A Legacy for Users, SAFETEALU, passed the Senate, with a Republican majority, by a vote of 91 to 4. The House, with a Republican majority, passed it by a vote of 412 to 8. President George W. Bush signed it into law.

Elected officials are not the only people who recognize the importance of maintaining our transportation systems. The American public also supports rebuilding the Nation through infrastructure investment.

According to a poll released last October by CNN, 72 percent of Americans—and 54 percent of Republicans—support "increasing federal spending to build and repair roads, bridges and schools."

Roads and bridges are neither Democratic nor Republican, and all elected officials need to leave partisanship on this issue at the door. Bipartisanship is the only way to get the job done, and Senator INHOFE's and my partnership in this effort is proof positive that it can be done.

Senator INHOFE and I do not agree on many issues, but we found common ground on this one. We agree that we must invest in our aging transportation systems, we must boost the economy, we must put people back to work, and we must pay for it in a way that is not divisive or partisan. Neither Senator INHOFE nor I got our wish list in this bill, but we do have a bill that both of us can support. At the end of the day, that is what matters.

The American people deserve to have their elected officials work together to solve our pressing problems, and that is what we did. The bill before us is thoroughly bipartisan, and therefore nobody will think it is perfect, but it is a very strong commitment to our transportation systems and to the health of our businesses, workers, and communities that depend on it.

I say today is a good day. I have tried to thank everyone I can think of who had anything to do with it. It is my privilege now to yield the floor and look forward to the comments of my ranking member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I am not sure, I say to my good friend Senator BOXER, she is going to be too excited about some of the things because what I wish to do is establish what is unique about this bill.

There is a committee in the Senate. It is not like any committee in the House. In the House, they have two separate committees. It is called Environment and Public Works. So it is two almost unrelated committees. Our committee has more jurisdiction than any other committee in the Senate, but it handles things that are totally different.

I will sound a little partisan right now, but I am very concerned about President Obama and what he has done to this country in terms of the deficit. A lot of people do not realize that the budgets actually come from the President—not the Democrats, not the Republicans, not the House and the Senate. Those budgets have had deficits of around $4½ trillion. I have been very upset about that.

I am upset about what the President is doing with the military right now. If we have to go through the sequestration as is planned, we are going to lose about $1 trillion in defense spending over the next 10 years. The third area is in energy. We have the opportunity to be totally energy self-supporting just by developing our own resources, but the problem is a political problem. The fourth area is over regulation.

I say this because my good friend, the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, would disagree with me in all those areas because we do not agree. I look at the regulations and the fact that, in my opinion, they are driving our manufacturing base overseas. I see the crown jewel of all regulations is cap and trade. They tried their best to do it.

They had the McCain-Lieberman bill in 2003 and again in 2005. We had the Boxer bill—several Boxer bills that Senator Boxer was involved in—certainly Waxman-Markey.

We defeated them all, and now what the President is trying to do is do through regulation what he could not do through legislation. I only say that because I am in agreement with the chairman of the committee, Senator BOXER, on most of what she just said because of the significance of this. I am going to repeat what I said yesterday, I guess it was, or the day before. When rankings come out, historically since I have been in the House and the Senate—I came to the Senate in 1994—I am always ranked among the most conservative Members.

My good friend Senator BOXER is ranked among the most liberal Members—progressive, liberal. But what I appreciate about her is that she is a sincere liberal.

She understands that. In her feelings, she believes government should be involved in more things than I do. I hasten to say this again, that while I have been historically considered the most conservative Member, I am a big spender in two areas. One area is national defense—I am very concerned about what is happening in national defense—the other area is infrastructure.

Way back when I was in the House and on the Transportation Infrastructure Committee, at that time we worked very hard for a robust bill, for reauthorizing the transportation system. We were successful. That was back in the good old days, I say to Senator BOXER, when we always had surpluses in the highway trust fund.

The highway trust fund probably goes down as the most popular tax in history because people know, since 1953, it has been a trust fund where people pay their 18 or so cents per gallon, and it goes to maintaining those roads they are driving on. So it is directly related to the gasoline purchased.

Then some things happened. First of all. I can remember when we had surpluses. So everybody who had their own deal wanted to get in on surpluses, and they started expanding the highway trust fund expenditures beyond just maintaining and building roads. That was one of the problems. Then along came a lot of the changes. When they talk about electric cars, whether one is for them or against them, and mandating gas mileage, that reduces the proceeds dramatically. In the beginning, I think they probably should have had the highway trust fund geared to a percentage instead of cents.

Now fast-forward to recent times and we have a deteriorating system. I was proud of the Environment and Public Works Committee I have been talking about. In 2006, prior to the last election, I was chairman because the Republicans were in the majority. At that time, we did the 2005 highway reauthorization bill, and it was $286.4 billion—a very robust bill. Yet we could pretty much document that we didn't do anything new in that bill. We just maintained what we had. It expired in 2009. Since then, we have been operating on extensions.

This is significant. Before I get on to operating on an extension, I will mention what we are talking about. Senator BOXER and I. Our Environment and Public Works Committee has the jurisdiction over the highway title of the bill. Some things are controversial. Not many. I don't know of anything controversial in the highway title. The Commerce Committee with Senator ROCKEFELLER as chairman and Senator HUTCHISON as ranking member, the Finance Committee with Senators BAU-CUS and HATCH, and the Banking Committee—that is TIM JOHNSON and RICH-ARD SHELBY from Alabama—have done their work now.

Ours is the highway title. In my State of Oklahoma, because of the condition of the bridges and highways—the last time I looked, I think Missouri and Oklahoma tied at dead last in the condition of our bridges—we had a young lady—and I have told this story many times; this is most compelling. This young lady—a mother of three small children in Oklahoma City—drove under one of our bridges and a chunk of concrete dropped off and killed them. These are serious matters. So bridges have dropped, just as one did in Minnesota and down in south Texas.

We have had so many times when crumbling infrastructure has given way. I remember when they considered Oklahoma—since we became a State in 1907, we are one of the newer States—people didn't think we had infrastructure problems. They thought that was just confined to California, New York, and the older parts of the country. That is not true anymore because in many of those older parts the infrastructure has been rebuilt while some of the newer States have been ignored. That is why in Oklahoma it is critical.

People say they don't want earmarks. Senator BOXER said: We don't have earmarks.

I would like to discuss that because I am a strong believer as opposed to the people who don't want us to do what we are supposed to be doing when we were sworn to uphold the Constitution, article I, section 9—we should be the ones, the House and Senate, to do the appropriating and the authorization. By saying we are not going to do it and defining earmarks as appropriations and authorization, I can see why Democrats lined up to do away with earmarks in a recent vote because that turns it over to President Obama, and he was very supportive of that.

Some Republicans are going to talk about that again. This is not something that is a problem with this bill.

In this bill, we have things that come from the needs of our States. We have a secretary of transportation in Oklahoma who has been before our committee numerous times because that secretary of transportation has been in that job for many years now. Before that, he was director of transportation for, I think, 30 years. There is nobody who is more knowledgeable on that issue.

So we checked—and I do—with the department of transportation in Oklahoma on their prioritizing of projects. We have a system—and I wish all States had this system. We have transportation districts and chairmen of the districts. They can use the same criteria throughout Oklahoma, and they determine what should be fixed and where the money should be spent. So it is not a political decision, a decision where we are doing what most people consider to be earmarks and trying to help our friends. That is not what we do in Oklahoma. This system, frankly, works very well.

So now we go back to the extensions. Here is the problem with extensions. Our 2005 bill expired in 2009. We have now gone through eight extensions. The problem we have with extensions is that we cannot do anything creative. We cannot change, reform the system. We just have to take the money that is available and try to use it as best we can. But we cannot not reform a system that needs to be reformed.

I have said some things that were not all that complimentary about my partner-in this case. Senator BOXER. We have served together for years in trying to overcome these obstacles. On the highway title of the transportation bill that we are going to be voting on, we have done a good job. When I think about the reforms—and I compliment Senator Boxer. She has been in a real tough position with some of the more liberal members of her party and in some of the things to which she has agreed. We sat down and worked out the differences in a lot of these problems

State flexibility, we have that in this bill, which we have never had before. I have always been a believer that we are the guys who are in the best position to determine the needs of the States.

I have often said I have served on the State level of government; I have been mayor of a major city. I believe the closer you get to the people, the more responsible government is. I believe that to be true. That is what we have done. We have done that in the flexibility that we have given the States in our program.

Senator BOXER mentioned that we cut down the number of programs by two-thirds. We are down to one-third in the number of programs we had before. That is major reform.

NEPA: We have done streamlining, which is something we have tried to do for a long time. Let me mention the one area of reform that I want everybody to listen to because this is significant. We have had a friendly disagreement, Senator BOXER and I, on transportation enhancement. These are things we could argue do not affect transportation directly. I have always believed these things we spend money on that comes from the highway trust fund should go into transportation projects. But they have not. Two percent of the highway funding is required to go to enhancements. That equates to 10 percent of the surface transportation money.

So we can use 10 percent or 2 percent, depending on which one we are applying it to. If we take 2 percent of the total funding, that is a lot of money. Enhancements are things people criticize us for. I think that criticism is just.

How did we handle this situation and get a highway bill in the highway title portion? We sat down and worked out something right here on the floor of the Senate and said there has to be an answer. In Oklahoma, we don't even want enhancements. How can we handle this? We worked out an agreement that a State, at its own decision level, is able to use this 2 percent of the total highway funding that would go to enhancements in any way they want to do it, and primarily in taking care of some of the unfunded mandates, the requirements there, where the government is saying to people in Oklahoma that this is what they have to dosome endangered species stuff and those things, they can use it this way.

In my State, we cannot have any of the 2 percent going to enhancements. Other States feel differently. This is not one size fits all.

So we have the opportunity that they can do what they want. These are reforms. We never had reforms like those before. I am proud we are able to do it. I compliment the chairman of the committee for being willing to do this, for taking the time to talk to her colleagues and say: All right, the choice is not do we want a perfect bill for Democrats or do I want one for Republicans. I think we have a pretty near perfect bill for Republicans on the highway title. I am very proud of what we have come up with. Nonetheless, it has been heavy lifting. I applaud the chairman of the committee.

I want to go back to this extension. If we were to continue to operate on extensions, the amount of money we would be spending on highways would reduce by about 34 percent, about one-third. If we talk to Gary Ridley in Oklahoma as to what that would do in terms of our program that we already have online, we would have to default on some contracts. We would have to be in a situation where we are not able to do the things that are in our 5-year plan in Oklahoma. We think things out for a long time. Let me mention the one area of reform that I want everybody to listen to because this is significant. We have had a friendly disagreement, Senator BOXER and I, on transportation enhancement. These are things we could argue do not affect transportation directly. I have always be a serious problem.

I suggest to every Member of the Senate, before they make final decisions on the bill, call their director of highways in their States and talk to them. Talk to your State legislators, Democrats and Republicans, conservatives and liberals alike. This is the one area where they will agree. In Oklahoma, they are in agreement. They want to have a highway bill. They look to constituents and say this is life threatening and we have to do a better job. This is a partnership thing. We are going to have more flexibility for State programs, streamlining, and are not going to be encumbered by mandatory enhancements. I don't know of one member of the Oklahoma House or Senate who doesn't want this.

What is wrong with doing what the people at home want? I used to work as mayor of the second largest city in Oklahoma. My phone rings off the hook about programs that need to be completed in our highway system in Oklahoma. I sometimes look at people who demagog the issue and talk about: Oh, no, we don't want to spend all this. There is one area where conservatives and liberals alike should be spending—two areas—national defense and infrastructure.

I remember when Congresswoman BACHMANN was talking around the country about the spending during the earmark argument. They got back to Minnesota and talked about the needs for transportation. She said, "I am not talking about transportation."

That is the point we need to get across. Of course, I throw in national defense, but that is not in this discussion. Transportation infrastructure is something we have to do. In Oklahoma, we are going to do our part, do everything we can to get with the bill. It is not going to change anything except for the fact that it is going to be able to handle that.

Oh, I didn't see—but I am managing the time.

By the way, I want to comment, Mr. President—

Mrs. BOXER. Wait a minute, the Senator is not managing.

Mr. INHOFE. Maybe I am not.

Mrs. BOXER. Well, we are both managing the time

Mr. INHOFE. We are both doing it. All right.

What I am saying is that shouldn't really be a Democrat-Republican management here because there are a lot of Democrats who agree with me and a lot of Republicans who agree with Senator BOXER. But we do have the junior Senator from Kentucky here who wants to be heard.

Mrs. BOXER. Well, I do have some remarks I would like to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the Chair.

I think Senator INHOFE and I will have to talk about how we are going to yield back and forth, but at this point I had not finished my remarks and I wanted to respond to his.

We are here as partners on this bill. We are not partners on a lot of things. And I didn't say, when I opened my remarks, where we are not partners, but my friend did, so I am going to respond to his opening comments in which for some reason he wanted to open by saying that the one place we differ—and he is right on this—is that he blames President Obama for the deficit. Now, I want to put this on the record: I do not. Let me tell you why. When Bill Clinton was the President of these United States, he turned over a booming surplus of $236 billion to George W. Bush, and it didn't take him but the blink of an eye to turn those surpluses as far as the eye could see into raging deficits, and he left President Obama a $1.4 trillion deficit, for which my colleagues on the other side blame President Obama. Not only did George W. Bush leave him this kind of deficit, but he left him the worst recession since the Great Depression, a total collapse of Wall Street, bleeding jobs-800,000 a month. Yet we have turned it around. The President has shown magnificent leadership—saved Detroit.

My friend further said that another place we disagree—and he is right—is that President Obama is driving manufacturing overseas. No. The Tax Code, which the Republicans support, which rewards companies for moving overseas, is very much responsible for that.

So that proves the point. We get mad at each other. He is annoyed now that I am saying these things, and I was annoyed at him for saying what he said. But the great news today is that we are here to pass a bill.

My friend said I had a problem with liberal Members in my own party. I have to say there was concern, for sure. He is right. But once I explained to them that the ranking member and I have to work together, they were terrific about it. And I think some of my colleague's Republican friends said the same. They said: OK, we have to make this happen. So I congratulate all Members on both sides of the aisle who put aside these really tough differences we have, and you just saw a little bit of it.

I am not going to get into the climate change area because my friend believes it is the greatest hoax and I believe it is a scientific fact.

We could go on and on with these arguments. It would be interesting. It would be like "Crossfire." Do you remember that show where two people got up there and argued? Yes, we could do that in every way. But in this bill we have decided to fight for what we believe in but at the end of the day get a bill we believe is fair.

Did my friend want me to yield?

Mr. INHOFE. No. I just wanted to say that this should be very visible to everyone. How could you and I agree and feel so strongly about infrastructure in America when we have such diverse opinions philosophically? My case rests.

Mrs. BOXER. You made the point. I was happy when you made the point because it gave me a chance to argue with you, and we both enjoy that, and we will continue. Our friendship is deep. We each know when we talk to each other that it is from the heart. But when it comes to this particular issue, we both agree we have to get a bill done. So much is dependent upon it.

I just received a letter from the Americans for Transportation Mobility. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter to which I am referring.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Washington, DC, February 8, 2012. TO THE MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE: The Americans for Transportation Mobility (ATM) Coalition is a nationwide group representing business, labor, highway and public transportation interests that advocate for improved and increased investment in the nation's aging and overburdened transportation system. The ATM strongly supports the motion to proceed to S. 1813, "Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century" (MAP-21), and urges the Senate to pass a multi-year reauthorization of highway, public transportation and safety programs that both includes reforms to the federal programs and maintains, at minimum, FY 2011 investment levels adjusted for inflation before the expiration of the six-month extension of current law on March 31, 2012.

At a time of continuing economic stagnation in the construction sector, slow U.S. economic growth, and increasing competitive pressures, multi-year highway and transit reform and investment legislation is critical for boosting productivity, U.S. economic competitiveness and supporting jobs. A study released last week by the Associated Equipment Distributors found that over two years one dollar spent on infrastructure construction produces roughly double ($1.92) the initial spending in direct and indirect economic output. The long-term impact is also significant, with a dollar in aggregate public infrastructure spending generating $3.21 in economic output (GDP) over a 20year period.

We commend the Senate committees that helped craft S. 1813, a bi-partisan bill for stabilizing federal transportation funding mechanisms for the near-term and avoiding draconian cuts amounting to one-third of total federal investment in highway, transit and safety programs. Cuts of this magnitude would accelerate the deteriorating performance of the nation's surface transportation network, greatly undermine U.S. economic growth and competitiveness, and result in the real loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs across the country. This bill includes important policy reforms that would improve the delivery of transportation improvements by consolidating programs, reducing red tape, and leveraging private sector resources.

The ATM Coalition will strongly oppose any amendments to reduce the funding levels established in this legislation, and remains committed to working with Congress to find reliable revenue streams sufficient to support the long-term growth and the fiscal sustainability of the Highway Trust Fund.

Without the certainty of a multi-year bill, current problems become harder to solve as highway and transit conditions worsen and land, labor, and materials get more expensive. Absent passage of a multi-year reauthorization, there would be continued uncertainty and erratic funding for critical infrastructure investments and the public and private sectors would continue to respond by delaying projects, withdrawing investment, and laying off employees.

We encourage you to support the motion to proceed to S. 1813. The ATM Coalition stands ready to bring together business, labor, highways and transit stakeholders to provide Congress the public support to pass an adequately funded multi-year surface transportation bill by March 31, 2012.

Sincerely,

AMERICANS FOR TRANSPORTATION MOBILITY.

Mrs. BOXER. I want to tell you who signed this letter. And my friend may not have seen it. The American Public Transportation Association, the American Road and Transportation Builders Association, the Associated Equipment Distributors, the Association of Equipment Manufacturers, the Associated General Contractors, the American Society of Civil Engineers, the International Union of Operating Engineers, the Laborers' International Union of North America, the National Asphalt Pavement Association, the National Stone, Sand, and Gravel Association, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Now, I have to say—

Mr. INHOFE. Will the Senator yield for a question.

Mrs. BOXER. Yes, but let me make one statement. This list I have just read represents America—Republicans, Democrats, and Independents.

Yes, I yield.

Mr. INHOFE. Even though we haven't ironed out how to handle time, we have a Senator who wanted to speak 20 minutes ago, and if we could, I would love to get back into the dialog.

Mrs. BOXER. I am finishing this, and then I will yield the floor and am happy to have him speak. I felt this was opening time for the chairman and the ranking member to lay down their case, and I am not about to let an attack on the President of the United States of America go unanswered. I am not going to do it. So if we are going to go down that road, we are going to have a give-and-take. If we are going down the road I hope we will go down, it is about getting this bill done.

So let me talk about this letter, and then I will yield the floor. And I say to my ranking member, we will decide how to divide the time, and we should. That is fine with me.

They say in this letter:

We commend the Senate committees that helped craft S. 1813, a bi-partisan bill for stabilizing federal transportation funding mechanisms for the near-term and avoiding draconian cuts amounting to one-third of total federal investment in highway, transit and safety programs.

They are talking about the fact that the highway trust fund is a third of where it should be. That is why we are so happy that the Finance Committee, on a bipartisan vote, is replacing these funds.

The letter goes on to talk about what would happen if we didn't do this bill:

Cuts of this magnitude would accelerate the deteriorating performance of the nation's surface transportation network, greatly undermine U.S. economic growth and competitiveness, and result in the real loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs across the country. This bill includes important policy reforms that would improve the delivery of transportation improvements by consolidating programs, reducing red tape, and leveraging private sector resources.

Additionally, this great coalition, which is comprised of the chamber of commerce, the unions, and business, says:

The ATM coalition will strongly oppose any amendments to reduce the funding levels established in this legislation, and remains committed to working with Congress to find reliable revenue streams sufficient to support the long-term growth and the fiscal sustainability of the Highway Trust Fund.

This next quote from their letter is so important:

Without the certainty of a multi-year bill, current problems become harder to solve as highway and transit conditions worsen and land, labor, and materials get more expensive. Absent passage of a multi-year reauthorization, there will be continued uncertainty and erratic funding for critical infrastructure investments and the public and the private sectors would continue to respond by delaying projects, withdrawing investment, and laying off employees

We encourage you to support the motion to proceed to S. 1813.

Of course, Mr. President, that is the motion we will be voting on today at 2 p.m.

They continue:

The ATM Coalition stands ready to bring together business, labor, highways and transit stakeholders to provide Congress the public support to pass an adequately funded multi-year surface transportation bill by March 31, 2012.

On the issue of the enhancements, we already had a vote on enhancements before, and we turned back proposals to do away with enhancements. So what we did in this bill is we said to the States: Guess what, you have much more flexibility.

I have to tell you—and I won't do it now, but perhaps Senator PAUL is going to speak about these enhancements—we know for sure that these enhancements—and I think that is the wrong name because they are really safety projects—have saved lives because they fund things such as pedestrian paths and safe passageways for kids to get to school. So while my colleague and I may differ, I strongly believe Congress stands behind—I should say the Senate stands behind continuing to fund these safety projects. and we have given the States far more flexibility. So I hope we will defeat any amendment to remove the ability of our States to determine which of those safety projects they want because we have the facts behind us-13 percent of traffic fatalities involve pedestrians and bicyclists. I feel we give our States the opportunity, and if Oklahoma doesn't have any of these problems because it is a much more rural State than California, I am happy with that. But we have to understand that these are safety projects, and I hope we will defeat any amendment that tries to reduce the ability of the States to fund these projects.

I vield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Kentucky be recognized for up to 7 minutes. He has been trying to get on for quite some time. I think that is agreeable with everyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kentucky. FOREIGN AID TO EGYPT

Mr. PAUL. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from Oklahoma on being a leader in trying to repair and restore our infrastructure. I think the Senator from Oklahoma has shown that this is a bipartisan issue.

I rise today not only to support the bipartisan nature of rebuilding our infrastructure but also to address an urgent concern regarding what is happening in Egypt. I rise to introduce an amendment to suspend foreign aid to Egypt until they release our American citizens.

The situation in Egypt over the past year has been tumultuous, and their people and government stand at a moment where they will choose their future. Will they stand for freedom? Will they choose to stand with the United States? The choice is entirely theirs, of course, but their recent actions are troubling and should give us reason to reconsider our significant aid to the Government of Egypt.

What bothers critics of our foreign policy is the disconnect between hope and reality. Well-intentioned people vote to give aid to countries in hopes they will promote freedom, democracy, and the interests of the United States abroad. Too often, though, it does none of those things. Instead, it enriches dictators and emboldens governments that act against our interests.

Right now American citizens who work for prodemocracy organizations in Egypt are being held hostage. There really is no other way to put it. These innocent American citizens are not being allowed to leave Egypt and are facing trial by a military government.

This situation has been allowed to escalate by the Obama administration over the past several months as authorities in Egypt have accelerated a cynical war against these prodemocracy forces—these individuals who are American citizens—in an attempt to gain support from radicals who are convinced that NGOs represent a Western plot to undermine Egypt. These extremists seek to impose their own agenda in Egypt and are determined to prevent Egypt's democratic process as much as possible.

The Supreme Council of the Armed Forces in Egypt—the ones responsible for the transition—has demonstrated that they are not only willing but are in the process of using American citizens as scapegoats for the continual upheaval in Egypt. Their actions do not illustrate a significant democratic transition. In fact, they are encouraging and provoking distrust among the Egyptian people by making false allegations about the nature of these American citizens.

In the aftermath of the Arab revolution and the toppling of the authoritarian Mubarak government, Egypt finds itself in critical need of support in order to build a functioning democratic system. Yet, in late December. Egyptian authorities abruptly raided the offices of several nongovernmental organizations working toward democratic development, seizing their computers and documents. This past weekend Egyptian prosecutors filed criminal charges against these innocent American citizens. This must not be allowed to stand.

The American people should be concerned. We are subsidizing behavior, through U.S. taxpayer foreign aid to Egypt, that is leading to and allowing for the unjust detainment of American citizens in Egypt. Egypt is one of the largest recipients of foreign aid, totaling over $70 billion over the last half century. Egypt's ruling military has itself received $1.3 billion in foreign aid every year since 1987, and they have the gall to hold American citizens hostage. This must end.

Not everyone in this body agrees on foreign policy or on the role of U.S. foreign assistance. But the reckless actions of Egyptian authorities in this matter should bring us together to form one undeniable conclusion: American foreign assistance dollars should never be provided to any country that bullies our citizens, recklessly seeks to arrest them on imaginary charges or denies them access to their most basic rights.

Egypt must immediately stop the detainment and prosecution of these American citizens. If they fail to do so, then we have the moral obligation to immediately end their foreign aid. The time for action is now.

I will offer an amendment to suspend Egypt's foreign aid until our American citizens are released. It is our duty as our people's representatives to ensure no more American taxpayer dollars will flow to Egypt until they rescind the charges against innocent Americans and allow them to peacefully leave the country. The American people are behind this, and I advise the Senate to consider that we should no longer send foreign aid to a country that is illegally detaining our citizens.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, with the Senator from Kentucky still on the floor, I appreciate what he has said, and I am glad he has shown support for the Leahy amendment which passed in the last foreign aid bill.

There was a lot of pushback from a number of people, the administration and on the Senator's side of the aisle, initially, when I wrote into the law that said it would suspend any money— $1.3 billion—for the military, unless there was a certification that they were upholding the moves necessary toward democracy.

As a result, all the money the Senator is concerned about is being held back because of the Leahy amendment—which is joined in by Senator GRAHAM, whom I see coming onto the floor-when we did the Foreign Operations bill.

I appreciate the words of the Senator from Kentucky. I can assure him, with the Leahy amendment, none of the foreign aid is going to Egypt as they conduct their operations the way they are.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2011

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD letters in support of the reauthorization of the bipartisan Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act report.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL TASK FORCE TO END SEX-UAL AND DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN,

February 9, 2012.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: We, the undersigned organizations, represent millions of victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking, and the professionals who serve them, throughout the United States and territories. On behalf of the victims we represent, we ask that you support the Violence Against Women Act's (VAWA) reauthorization.

VAWA's programs support state, tribal and local efforts to address the pervasive and insidious crimes of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking. These programs have made great progress towards keeping victims safe and holding perpetrators accountable. This critical legislation must be reauthorized to ensure a continued response to these crimes.

Since its original passage in 1994, VAWA has dramatically enhanced our nation's response to violence against women. More victims report domestic violence to the police and the rate of non-fatal intimate partner violence against women has decreased by 53%. The sexual assault services program in VAWA helps rape crisis centers keep their doors open to provide the frontline response to victims of rape. VAWA provides for a coordinated community approach, improving collaboration between law enforcement and victim services providers to better meet the needs of victims. These comprehensive and cost-effective programs not only save lives, they also save money. In fact, VAWA saved nearly $12.6 billion in net averted social costs in just its first six years.

VAWA has unquestionably improved the national response to these terrible crimes. We urge you to support VAWA's reauthorization to build upon its successes and continue to enhance our nation's ability to hold perpetrators accountable and keep victims and their children safe from future harm.

We look forward to working with you throughout the reauthorization process. #### NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL, Washington, DC, January 11, 2012.

DEAR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS: Since its passage in 1994, the Violence Against Women Act ("VAWA") has shined a bright light on domestic violence, bringing the issue out of the shadows and into the forefront of our efforts to protect women and families. VAWA transformed the response to domestic violence at the local, state and federal level. Its successes have been dramatic, with the annual incidence of domestic violence falling by more than 50 percent.

Even though the advancements made since in 1994 have been significant, a tremendous amount of work remains and we believe it is critical that the Congress reauthorize VAWA. Every day in this country, abusive husbands or partners kill three women, and for every victim killed, there are nine more who narrowly escape that fate. We see this realized in our home states every day. Earlier this year in Delaware, three childrenages 12, 21/2 and 11/2—watched their mother be beaten to death by her ex-boyfriend on a sidewalk. In Maine last summer, an abusive husband subject to a protective order murdered his wife and two young children before taking his own life.

Reauthorizing VAWA will send a clear message that this country does not tolerate violence against women and show Congress' commitment to reducing domestic violence, protecting women from sexual assault and securing justice for victims.

VAWA reauthorization will continue critical support for victim services and target three key areas where data shows we must focus our efforts in order to have the greatest impact:

Domestic violence, dating violence, and sexual assault are most prevalent among young women aged 16-24, with studies showing that youth attitudes are still largely tolerant of violence, and that women abused in adolescence are more likely to be abused again as adults. VAWA reauthorization will help us break that cycle by consolidating and strengthening programs aimed at both prevention and intervention, with a particular emphasis on more effectively engaging men and local community-based resources in the process.

A woman who has been sexually assaulted can be subjected to further distress when the healthcare, law enforcement, and legal response to her attack is not coordinated and productive. Whether it is a first responder without adequate training, a rape kit that goes unprocessed for lack of funding, or a phone call between a crisis counselor and a prosecutor that never takes place, sexual assault victims deserve better. We must develop and implement best practices, training, and communication tools across disciplines in order to effectively prosecute and punish perpetrators, as well as help victims heal and rebuild their lives.

There is a growing consensus among practitioners and researchers that domestic violence homicides are predictable and, therefore, often preventable. We can save the lives of untold numbers of potential homicide victims with better training for advocates, law enforcement, and others who interact with victims to recognize the warning signs and react meaningfully.

The fight to protect women from violence is one that never ends. It is not a year-to-year issue, which is why we think it is critical that Congress reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act. We know a great deal more about domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking than we did 17 years ago. Reauthorizing VAWA will allow us to build on those lessons and continue to make progress and save lives.

VAWA was last reauthorized in 2006 and time is of the essence for reauthorization of this important law. We urge Congress to take on this critical mission and reauthorize VAWA

NATIONAL SHERIFFS' ASSOCIATION, Alexandria, VA, February 1, 2012.

Hon. Patrick Leahy, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC. Hon. Mike Crapo, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY AND SENATOR CRAPO: On behalf of the National Sheriffs' Association (NSA) and 3,079 elected sheriffs nationwide, I am writing to express our support for the Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act (VAWA).

NSA and the nation's sheriffs recognizes the extreme seriousness that the crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, stalking, and sex trafficking have on law enforcement, victims, and communities across the nation. Originally established in 1994, VAWA works to increase officer and victim safety, while striving to prevent future abuse, by providing resources to law enforcement agencies to enhance their core programs and policies, as well as to reaffirm the commitment to reform systems, that affect victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, stalking, and sex trafficking.

The reauthorization of VAWA would continue to enable law enforcement agencies across the country to adequately address domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, stalking, and sex trafficking crimes by expanding funding for programs that recognize the concerns and needs of victims. Furthermore, VAWA supports the key collaboration between the victims' services community; health care community; and law enforcement to ensure that all victims are receiving the critical treatment and services necessary after a crime has occurred.

However, we do have one point of concern regarding the VAWA reauthorization involving PREA (Prison Rape Elimination Act) standards as they apply to the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). NSA strongly believes that sexual violence and abuse have no place in our correctional facilities. As such, NSA has been working closely with the Department of Justice (DOJ) on PREA to ensure that the final standards take into consideration the vast differences between jails, which sheriffs largely operate, versus prisons; thus enabling for the efficient and effective implementation in jails nationwide.

Title X of the VAWA reauthorization would require DHS to establish and implement PREA standards for DHS detention facilities. As you may be aware, many sheriffs contract with DHS to house criminal aliens in their jails. As sheriffs will need to comply with PREA standards when finally established by the DOJ, NSA would ask that you, and the Senate Judiciary Committee, ensure that the VAWA reauthorization language clarifies that DHS PREA standards need to be consistent with DOJ PREA standards. This would ensure that there are not differing standards for jails based on the federal, state, or local detainees held, as well as help with the swift and successful implementation of final PREA standards.

While the law enforcement community, and society as a whole, has made great strides in combating such crimes as domestic violence, sexual assault, stalking, sex trafficking, and dating violence since the original enactment of VAWA, there is still more work that still needs to be done. The reauthorization of VAWA will enable the continued partnership among sheriffs and victims' advocates and service providers to protect victims and prevent future victimization throughout the United States throughout the United States. Senator Leahy and Senator Crapo, the National Sheriffs' Association thanks you for your leadership on this important issue in the 112th Congress.

Sincerely,

Sheriff Paul H. Fitzgerald, President.

FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS ASSOCIATION, Washington, DC, January 31, 2012.

Hon. Patrick Leahy, Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee.

Hon. Charles Grassley,

Ranking Member, Senate Judiciary Committee.

DEAR CHAIRMAN LEAHY AND RANKING MEMBER GRASSLEY: On behalf of the 26,000 members of the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association (FLEOA), I am writing to express our full support for Senator Leahy's proposed reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). FLEOA has supported the essential purpose of this legislation since it was first passed in 1994. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, one in four women will experience domestic violence in their lifetime. In our proud Land of the Free and Home of the Brave, this is unacceptable.

FLEOA fully supports the substitute amendment to S. 1925. The amendment properly calls for the U Visa cap to be raised to allow for the recapture of 5,000 unused U Visas. Current law authorizes an annual issuance of only 10,000 U Visas. Unfortunately, dangerous criminals remain undaunted by this cap and it only serves to discourage non-citizen battered women from cooperating with law enforcement.

The absolute priority for all law enforcement officers is the pursuit and capture of violent criminals. By limiting the number of U Visas law enforcement can request, Congress is effectively amputating the long arm of the law. Law enforcement officers and prosecutors don't hand out U Visas like cotton candy. U Visas are an essential tool carefully used by law enforcement and tempered with great scrutiny. Again, our unwavering priority is to do everything within our means to protect women who are victimized by violent criminals.

I respectfully ask that both parties rally behind this important legislation, and that we unite in recognition of the need to protect all battered women from dangerous criminals.

Respectfully submitted,

JON ADLER,
National President.

Mr. LEAHY. For almost 18 years, the Violence Against Women Act has been the centerpiece of the Federal Government's commitment to combat domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

Senator CRAPO and I introduced this bill, a moderate bill, which has now gone through the Senate Judiciary Committee and should be voted up or voted down. It saves money, but it also commits to those programs needed by our States.

At some point, if it is delayed much longer, I am going to come to the floor and recount some of the horrific crime scenes I went to of violence, sexual violence, domestic violence, the things that are being combated now, things that happened when we did not have the Violence Against Women Act.

Last Thursday, the Judiciary Committee approved the bipartisan Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act. For almost 18 years, the Violence Against Women Act, VAWA, has been the centerpiece of the Federal government's commitment to combat domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

It has been extraordinarily effective, and the annual incidence of domestic violence has fallen by more than 50 percent since the landmark law was first passed.

As a prosecutor in Vermont, I saw firsthand the destruction caused by domestic and sexual violence. Those were the days before VAWA, when too often people dismissed these serious crimes with a joke, and there were few, if any, services for victims.

We must not go back to those days. This law saves lives, and it must be reauthorized.

Senator CRAPO and I introduced a moderate bill that incorporates input from survivors of domestic and sexual violence all around the country and the tireless professionals who serve them every day.

This legislation builds on the progress that has been made in reducing violence against women, and it makes vital improvements to respond to remaining, unmet needs.

Unfortunately, partisan politics threaten to stop this critical legislation from moving forward. We have seen this same pattern too often.

The Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act and the Second Chance Act, both laws originally championed by Republican Senators and supported by Republican Presidents, are now suddenly unacceptable.

This obstruction must stop. These programs are too important. They save lives. They make our communities safer Nowhere is that more true than for the Violence Against Women Act. Certainly, helping survivors of domestic and sexual violence should be above politics.

The last two times VAWA was reauthorized, it was unanimously approved by the Senate. Now, this law, which has done more to stop domestic and sexual violence than any other legislation ever passed, faces Republican opposition. That is not right.

To those who suggest that this legislation creates too many new programs, I say that is simply not true. In fact, the bill reduces the scale of VAWA.

It consolidates 13 existing programs and reduces authorization levels by nearly 20 percent while providing for only one small additional program.

The improvements in this bill are important but modest when compared to previous reauthorizations, which created many new grant programs and raised authorization levels almost across the board.

I have heard some say that our bill protects too many victims. I find that disheartening. One thing I know from my time as a prosecutor, and I would hope it is something we can all agree on, is that every victim counts.

All victims deserve protection. That is a message we have heard loud and clear from our States and something I hope is common ground.

More than 200 national organizations and 500 State and local organizations have expressed their support for this bill.

Many of them have written strong letters urging swift passage of this legislation including the National Task Force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence, the National Association of Attorneys General, the National District Attorneys' Association, the National Sheriffs' Association, and the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association.

This legislation has the support of five Republican Senators.

I thank Senators CRAPO, KIRK, MURKOWSKI, BROWN, and COLLINS for their

the reauthorization of this landmark legislation.

This is the Violence Against Women Act. It should not be a partisan matter. I hope that all Senators will support this bill and that we can move quickly to reauthorize this critical legislation.

It is a law that has saved countless lives, and it is an example of what we can accomplish when we work together.

AIR NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVES

Madam President, I am glad to see the senior Senator from South Carolina. For the first 50 or 60 years I was in the Senate—or it felt like that—it was a different senior Senator. But I am delighted to see the senior Senator from South Carolina, Mr. GRAHAM, who is joining me to address a matter of great importance to the Nation at a crucial moment in our history.

The U.S. Air Force last week offered a preliminary look into its budget for fiscal year 2013. While the President will formally submit his budget proposals on Monday, last week's briefing and information papers offered enough detail for the Senate to begin considering the overall strategic direction of the Air Force Future Years Defense Program. In Pentagon jargon, that is usually called FYDP.

I have to say I am deeply disappointed and very worried as I look at the first glance at that proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GRAHAM. Madam President, I appreciate the opportunity to engage in this colloquy.

As cochairman of the Guard Caucus, which obviously has the Air National Guard Component, Senator LEAHY has been a real pleasure to work with.

The bottom line is, this effort to downsize the Air Force falls incredibly heavy on the Air National Guard. There will be 3,000 Active-Duty members lost regarding the plan he just mentioned, 5,000 coming from the Air National Guard. The airframes to be eliminated in the plans Senator LEAHY just mentioned fall disproportionately on the Air National Guard. In just a moment, we are going to talk about the bang for your buck in terms of the Reserve component called the Air National Guard, and we are going to challenge the Congress and the Department of Defense to reconsider this because, quite frankly, it makes no military or fiscal sense.

Mr. LEAHY. As an example of the approach to the budget cuts, one of the A-10 units slated for cutting, the 127th Wing from Michigan, just returned from fighting bravely in Afghanistan and as a welcome home: Great job. Sorry, we are going to disband you.

The approach to budget cuts the Air Force has decided to take is simply wrong. We have to have budget cuts. We know that. But there is a wide variwillingness to step forward and support ety of reasons why this makes not the sense it should. I draw the Senate's attention to a study produced by the Pentagon last year that was signed by the Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs and the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs that demonstrated what we already knew: Even when mobilized, Reserve component units are far less expensive than their peer units in the Active component.

It has always been a foregone conclusion that the Air National Guard costs are far less than Active component costs when they are on base or in garrison. Personnel are not drawing the salaries their peer units are and so on. But the Pentagon report showed something more interesting. It showed the Guard and Reserve save taxpayers dollars even when mobilized. The Reserve component units are estimated to be about one-third as expensive as similar Active component units, and they can deploy nearly half as often. That adds up to lot of savings in dollars and cents, but it also reflects a very major component of our security, because in the wars we fought in the last decade, we could not have done it without these Guard and Reserve units.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Senator is absolutely right. When we look at the utilization of the Guard and Reserve since 9/11, it has been at World War II levels. When we go into the combat theater, we can't tell the difference between Guard, Reserve or Active-Duty member, which is a testament to all three.

But when we look at what the Air Force is doing—and I think it is proper to consider the other services—the Marine Corps is making no reduction to their Reserves. The Army is making very small cuts in the Guard and Reserves and substantial cuts to the Active Forces. The Army and Marine Corps plans support the new strategic concept of reversibility; that is, the part of the Department of Defense strategic guidance. We cannot be sure what contingencies might arise, and we cannot afford to make cuts that will leave us incapable of responding when nec-

Secretary Flournoy, during her last speech to the Defense for Policy, stated that "the Guard and the Reserves will play an extremely important role" in the reversibility concept because they give the military built-in adaptability and resourcefulness. This reversibility concept is what we are doing to reduce the defense infrastructure. If it were ever reversed or had to be reversed because of some contingency, we want to make sure that is possible. The Guard and Reserve is the most capable force to maintain and, in terms of the concept of reversibility, is our best bang for the buck.

So the Air Force is taking a different approach than the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to their Reserve component, particularly their Air National Guard. I think Senator LEAHY and I are going to make sure that decision is examined in-depth.

Mr. LEAHY. I agree with my colleague on that, and that is why the bipartisan Guard Caucus will have some very strong statements.

We look at what the former Chief of Staff of the Air Force, GEN Ron Fogelman, said before these plans were announced. He argued for a larger Reserve component and a smaller Active-Duty Force. He did a guest column in DefenseNews. He said, among other things:

The big question is, how does the department reduce its budget and continue to provide a modern, balanced and ready defense when more than half of the budget is committed to personnel costs?

The answer to that question is right before us: We should return to our historic roots as a militia nation. So, what does that mean, exactly? Simply put, it means we should return to the constitutional construct for our military and the days when we maintained a smaller standing military and a robust mili-

To do that, leaders must put old parochial norms aside and be willing to actually shift forces and capabilities to the National Guard and Reserve.

He said "put old parochial norms aside." He goes on to say:

This would enable significant personnel reductions in the active components. It would also result in a larger reserve component. Most important, it would preserve capability and equipment that has cost the American taxpayer trillions of dollars, nest it in our mostly part-time Guard and Reserve, and have it available should it be needed.

This concept worked well for our country for the better part of two centuries. Unfortunately, several generations of leaders have come and gone, and most of today's leadership fails to recognize the true potential of the militia model.

We need our collective senior military and civilian leaders to recognize there is a way back to a smaller active military and a larger militia posture. The fiscal environment and emerging threats demand it.

Those aren't my words. Those are the words of a former Air Force Chief of Staff.

Mr. GRAHAM. Senator LEAHY is right. When we look at our Constitution itself, it talks about a militia. When we look at the history of the country, it is the citizen soldier who got this whole concept called America started.

We do need a standing Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps. But when we are looking at the budget problems we face and the fiscal concerns we have as a nation and we want to restructure the military, I will be talking in just a minute about why we should be looking for a greater role from the Guard and Reserve just from economics. But when it comes to military capability. I think we have the best of both worlds now: a very efficient, quite frankly, cheaper force to maintain with very similar, if not like, capabilities. We don't want to let that concept be eroded by a plan that I think doesn't appreciate the role of the militia and doesn't appreciate the cost-benefit analysis Guard pilots retire with an average of from a robust Reserve component.

Mr. LEAHY. In fact, Senator GRAHAM and I introduced a successful amendment in last year's Defense authorization bill that required the Pentagon and the GAO perform studies that should produce more conclusive analysis of the relative cost of similar units in the Active components and the Reserve components. We are also aware of at least two other third-party studies currently underway to address the questions. I think we are going to have three or four such studies that will conclusively answer the questions. Senator GRAHAM and I-and I think most of our colleagues in the Senateconsider these proposed Air Force cuts to be dangerously premature. Once we cut the Reserve components, once we send an aircraft to the boneyard at Davis-Monthan Air Force Base and these airmen and pilots go out to civilian life, we don't get them back. In fact, that is precisely why the Army and Marine Corps have taken a different approach of preserving their Reserve component force structure: They can mobilize Active component troops they place in the Reserve component. But once we cut that, they are gone forever. They are gone forever.

Mr. GRAHAM. What I am about to provide to the body, I think we need to absorb and be aware of.

This study that Senator LEAHY is talking about, an analysis of the effectiveness and cost, is an ongoing endeavor. I would like to know more about what the study yields before we make what I think are pretty Draconian cuts in the Air National Guard.

But this is what we know before the study. This information is already in: According to an Air Guard briefing, the Air National Guard, operating under today's deployment constraints, is still 53 percent of the cost of an equivalent Active-Duty major command. The Air National Guard costs $2.25 billion less annually than a similarly sized Active Air Force command. That is $6.2 million a day in savings.

After 20 years of service, our average enlisted airman costs nearly $80,000 a year in total compensation. On the other hand, an identical Air National Guard enlisted airman costs about $10,000 a year, about an 85-percent savings.

Over a 20-year career, an Air National Guard airman will save the country about $1 million compared to an active-duty airman. At 22 years, an active-duty pilot will cost about $150,000 in compensation. On the other hand, an Air National Guard pilot at 22 years costs the taxpayers about $30,000 in total compensation. Over a 26-year career, an Air National Guard pilot will save the country nearly $2 million compared to an active-duty pilot.

Active-duty pilots retire on average with 22 years of service. Air National 26 years of experience, giving the country a greater level of experience and ability for those final 4 years, at a much lower cost. These cost figures do not even account for other life cycle and infrastructure savings that a Reserve component-first model would yield.

These are stunning numbers without the study to fully be accomplished. We are going to do our best, I say to Senator LEAHY, to tell the story of capability and cost.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, clearly this approach, if we keep the Guard and Reserve, saves our country precious resources at a time we need to tighten our belts. There are a couple of things we agree on. Everybody in the Senate agrees that our military has to be kept strong and vigilant to threats from our enemies. But the source of our military strength has been and always will be our economic might. If we are to protect ourselves militarily while also marshaling our economic power, moving to the kind of constitutional defense model my colleague has discussed should be our first choice.

I think these Air Force proposals are ill-advised and premature at the very least. I think they are flat-out wrong, as has already been said here on the floor. When any of us who have visited the areas, especially in the last few years, where our military guard and our Reserves are deployed, you cannot tell the difference between their duties or the risks they put themselves inbetween the active-duty and Guard and Reserve components. The National Guard has been given a much greater role in our overall national defense more missions, greater responsibility, heavier burdens. They perform these missions superbly, with great skill and effectiveness. They have defended our interests, and many have lost their lives doing it, but they carried out the same missions as everybody else.

The Senate National Guard Caucus worked closely with all concerned to accommodate and facilitate these changes. But now we are going to take an active role in informing the Senate as these are being made. We are not going to sit by while any of the military services decimate their Reserve components. We will work together, Senator Graham and I. with the Senate Armed Services Committee on which he serves with distinction, and the Senate Appropriations Committee which we are both privileged to serve, but also the entire membership of the Senate, to produce a thoughtful, wellconceived strategy for military manpower that makes use of a cost-effective and accessible, fully operational, trained, and ready Reserve component.

Mr. GRAHAM. I look forward to working with Senator LEAHY and others to bring about what he indicated to make it a reality. The bottom line of this whole discussion is that the Cold War is over. We are very proud of our standing military, our Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guardthey do a terrific job, the standing military. The militia component has been the heart and soul of this country since its founding and in a post-Cold War war on terrorism environment where you have to call on resources that the Guard and Reserve have that are unique—like civil affairs. When you are going into Afghanistan and Iraq, it is one thing to clear the village; you have to hold the village. You have to hold it. Agricultural specialists come from the Guard and Reserve, people from Vermont and South Carolina who have skills in their day job, who can do more in the war effort than dropping a bomb.

As we look at the threats we face, I think we need to understand the Reserve component is more valuable than ever. We are not defending the Fulda Gap against a massive Soviet Union tank invasion. We have to be nimble, we have to deploy quickly. The Reserve component, particularly the Air National Guard, has a great return on investment and, like any other part of the military, can be reformed. But this proposal doesn't reform it; it in many ways neuters the Air National Guard and at a time when that makes no sense. We will continue this endeavor, and I look forward to working with Senator LEAHY and others to create a rational approach to the Reserve and Guard

Mr. LEAHY. I thank my friend from South Carolina. We will from time to time report to the Senate on this issue It is extremely important. It comes down to the bottom line: Have the best defense at the least cost to the taxpayer. That is what we are both aiming

OPERATION FAST AND FURIOUS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, for over a year now I have been investigating Fast and Furious. That is an operation coming out of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms.

This has been a very complicated investigation. It has been made even more difficult because of the Justice Department's lack of candor and transparency. Basically, the Justice Department is stonewalling, interfering with Congress's constitutional responsibility of oversight.

For example, the Justice Department's Office of Inspector General recently disclosed that it has received 80,000 pages of documents from the Department and over 100,000 e-mails.

Think of what the Inspector General gets from the Department: 80,000 pages and 100,000 e-mails. How much do you think they have given the Congress of the United States, which has the constitutional responsibility of oversight? It is only 6,000 pages that we have received.

Similarly, the inspector general has been allowed to conduct 70 witness interviews. How many has the Justice Department allowed the Congress, in our responsibility of oversight, to interview? Only 9 witnesses.

Last week, Attorney General Eric Holder testified before the House Committee On Oversight and Government Reform. The Justice Department did a document dump to Congress the Friday night before the hearing. That has become a very bad habit of the Department of Justice. In fact, without giving us any advance notice that it was coming, they actually put a CD under the door of our office, after business hours. What did they do for the press? They gave the same documents to the press 2 hours before they ever gave them to us. Yes, they managed to find time to leak the documents to the press during regular business hours. This is the kind of cooperation we get from the Justice Department in our constitutional responsibility of oversight.

What I am telling my colleagues here is that we have a terrible lack of cooperation from the Justice Department. The Justice Department is not only thumbing its nose at the Senate, they are doing it to the entire Congress of the United States, when we know there are 80,000 pages of documents and they only give us 6,000 pages; when there are 100,000 e-mails and we get a handful of e-mails. Why would they be so mysterious by putting a disk under our door on a Friday night and giving it to the press 2 hours before? What sort of attitude is that of our Justice Department toward the cooperation you ought to have with our filling our constitutional role of oversight? So I guess I would say there is hardly any cooperation whatsoever from the Justice Department.

Even though we get a dribble here and a dribble there, even though we get a CD under the door, instead of very openly face to face receiving documents, what we got last Friday did reveal further facts about a previously unknown proposal to allow these guns to cross the border.

We have long known that in March of 2011, Deputy Attorney General James Cole had a conference call with all Southwest border U.S. agents. In a follow-up e-mail after the call, Mr. Cole wrote:

As I said on the call, to avoid any potential confusion, I want to reiterate the Department's policy: We should not design or conduct undercover operations which include guns crossing the border. If we have knowledge that guns are about to cross the border, we must take immediate action to stop the firearms from crossing the border, even if that prematurely terminates or otherwise jeopardizes an investigation.

Attorney General Holder himself told us in a hearing in May that Mr. Cole was simply reiterating an existing Justice policy in his e-mails, not communicating new policy. So imagine my surprise when I discovered in the document slid under my door late last Friday that while in Mexico Assistant Attorney General Lanny Breuer proposed letting guns cross the border. Mr. Breuer's proposal came at exactly the same time the Department was preparing to send its letter to me denying that the ATF ever does the very thing he was proposing.

In a February 4, 2011 e-mail, the Justice Department attache in Mexico City wrote to a number of officials at the Justice Department:

AAG Breuer proposed allowing straw purchasers to cross into Mexico so [the Secretariat of Public Safety] can attest and [the Attorney General of Mexico] can prosecute and convict. Such coordinated operations between the US and Mexico may send a strong message to arms traffickers.

We have people here in Washington saying the program doesn't exist at the same time we have people talking down in Mexico City of what we are trying to accomplish by the illegal sale of guns.

That e-mail I quoted, the recipient of it included Mr. Breuer's deputy, Jason Weinstein, who was helping to write the Justice Department letter to me that they would later withdraw for its inaccuracies. In other words, they wrote a letter to me on February 4 of last year that in October they admitted they misled us. Mr. Weinstein was sending updates about the draft letter to Mr. Breuer in Mexico at the very same time so he cannot say he didn't know about it. Yet, during his testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee, Mr. Breuer downplayed his involvement in reviewing the draft letter. It is outrageous to me that the head of the Justice Department's Criminal Division proposed exactly what his Department was denying to me was actually happening.

The Justice Department's letter to me clearly said:

ATF makes every effort to interdict weapons that have been purchased illegally and prevent their transportation to Mexico.

They said that at the very same time Mr. Breuer was advocating that a Justice Department operation allow weapons to be transported into Mexico. Further, what Mr. Breuer advocated directly contradicted what the Justice Department said its policy was.

Is it possible they can have it both ways? No, you cannot have it both ways. If they didn't have a policy against such operations, and if the left hand doesn't know what the right hand is doing, perhaps it is not a surprise that an operation like Fast and Furious sprang up. After all, as that same Justice Department attache wrote of a meeting a few days after his first email:

I raised the issue that there is an inherent risk in allowing weapons to pass from the US to Mexico; the possibility of the [Government of Mexico] not seizing the weapons; and the weapons being used to commit a crime in Mexico.

Well, the light bulb went on. If you are selling 2,000 guns illegally and they don't interdict them, well, yes, they end up murdering hundreds of people in Mexico and at least one person in the United States.

If the Justice Department did have a policy against such operations, this is a record of Mr. Breuer proposing to violate it. That is not just my conclusion, that is the Attorney General's conclusion as well.

At last week's hearing in the House of Representatives, the Attorney General was asked to explain the contradiction between his deputy's antigunwalking policy and the evidence of Mr. Breuer's proposed operation to let guns cross the border. He could not answer that question, but the Attorney General answered:

Well, clearly what was proposed in, I guess, February by Lanny Breuer was in contravention of the policy that I had the Deputy Attorney General make clear to everybody at Main Justice and to the field . . .

Perhaps this disconnect between Justice Department policy and Lanny Breuer's proposal explains Mr. Breuer's previous inaction to stop gunwalking. When he found out about gunwalking 2010, he failed to do anything to stop it or to hold anyone accountable. He simply had his deputy inform ATF leadershin.

Regardless, Mr. Breuer's contravention of Justice Department policy is yet another reason why it is long past time for Mr. Breuer to leave the Department of Justice.

Mr. Breuer misled Congress about whether he was aware of the Department's false letter to me. To this day he is still the highest ranking official in any administration that we know was aware of gunwalking in any Federal program, yet he took no action to stop gunwalking. He failed to alert the Attorney General or the inspector gen-

Mr. Breuer has failed the Justice Department, and he has failed the American people. This failure raises some important questions. When did Attorney General Holder determine that Mr. Breuer was proposing allowing straw purchasers to reach Mexico with traffic weapons? What has he done about it? Will Mr. Breuer be held accountable for hatching a plan to directly violate the Attorney General's anti-gunwalking policy? The Attorney General clearly testified that the proposal was in contravention of that policy. How does the Justice Department know other senior criminal division officials were not proposing operations similar to Fast and Furious? These are just a subset of some of the major questions remaining in our investigation of Fast and Furi-

It has now been 1 year since the Department sent me its false letter. How did the Justice Department move from its position of dismissing the complaints of whistleblowers to acknowledging that now those whistleblower complaints are true? What officials were internally dismissive of whistleblower complaints and who believes that they could have merit and should be taken seriously? To what extent did Justice Department officials seek to retaliate against whistleblowers? Exactly how and when did the Justice Department officials begin to learn the truth of what happened?

Former ATF Director Ken Melson has testified how and when he learned that guns had walked in Fast and Furious. What about Attorney General Holder? When and how did he learn guns had walked? What about Assistant Attorney General Lanny Breuer? A year after Operation Fast and Furious concluded, who will be held accountable? Why didn't top Justice officials see the clear connection between Fast and Furious and previously flawed operations that they have admitted they knew about? How has the Justice Department assessed the mistakes and culpability of these officials?

Finally, it is time for the Justice Department to stop stonewalling and in Operation Wide Receiver in April of start providing answers. It is time for Holder to share with Congress the other 74,000 pages of documents they have turned over to the inspector general. It is time for Holder to give us access to the dozens of other people the inspector general has been allowed to interview.

> In short, it is time for Holder to come clean with the American people. The sooner he does it, and the Department does it, the sooner we can get to the bottom of what happened.

I vield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

A SECOND OPINION

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, I come to the floor today, as I do week after week, as a physician who practiced medicine in Casper, WY, taking care of families in the community and across the State for about a quarter of a century. I come as a doctor providing a second opinion about the health care law. Since this health care law was signed by the President almost 2 years ago, the public has been overwhelmingly opposed to it. The Democrats in Congress drafted this health care law. They did so quickly and behind closed doors. In spite of the President's promise that the discussions would be held on C-SPAN, no one saw what was happening.

Now the bill is law and, as NANCY PELOSI said, first you have to pass it before you get to find out what is in it. We have, as Americans, witnessed week after week the unintended consequences of the rush of the Democrats to score what they thought would be a political victory. So I continue to come to the floor with a second opinion because week after week there is another new finding of this monstrous law, and it is why week after week this health care law remains incredibly unpopular. The list of victims of this law continues to grow longer each week. Small business owners, families, people who get their coverage through their employers, and patients all across the country have already been impacted by this health care law.

But on January 20, the third anniversary of the President's inauguration, the President's health care law found a very new target, and that target amazingly is religious liberty. Now this administration is mandating that religious institutions provide services that undermine the beliefs of religious institutions across the country. In my opinion, and in the opinion of many across this Nation, this ruling tramples one of the amendments of the Constitution, I would say it is an easy amendment to find since it is the first one. It is the one which protects the rights to freedom of religion and freedom of expression. Reading from the Constitution, Amendment No. 1, Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

If you take a look back at our Nation's history, the right to freedom of religion is one of the main reasons that many people came to America in the first place, and it is one of the reasons people have fought and have died for our Nation.

So what is someone to do? Well, Washington Archbishop Donald Wuerl has expressed the dilemma many institutions face, and he did it in a letter last week. The archbishop in Washington said the mandate will allow a Catholic school only one of three options: No. 1, to violate its beliefs by providing coverage for medications and procedures that Catholics believe are immoral; No. 2, to cease providing insurance coverage for all of its employees and then face ongoing and ultimately ruinous fines; or, No. 3, attempt to qualify for the exemptions by hiring and serving only Catholics, exclude evervone else.

Many Americans understand all three of those options are indefensible. Americans from across the political spectrum are speaking out against President Obama's big government power grab. One of my Democratic colleagues, Senator Joe Manchin, called this mandate un-American. Another, Senator Bob Casey, a Democrat from Pennsylvania, objected to forcing Catholic institutions to violate their religious beliefs. Then we have former Representative Kathy Dahlkemper, a Democrat from Pennsylvania, who voted for the health care law in the House of Representatives, who said she would never have voted for the final version of the health care law "if I expected the Obama administration to force Catholic hospitals and Catholic colleges and universities to pay for contraception."

Even liberal commentators such as E.J. Dionne and Mark Shields have criticized the administration for being unwilling to offer a broader conscience exemption to religious-affiliated institutions.

Now that the President's liberal allies are even opposed to this unprecedented power grab, the White House is trying to clean up the mess. It has signaled that it is willing to compromise on its decision. Instead of a mild compromise, the regulation—and the entire health care law—needs to be fully repealed. As the Wall Street Journal editorial board points out:

In any case HHS would revive this coercion whenever it is politically convenient sometime in Mr. Obama's second term. Religious liberty won't be protected from the entitlement state until Obamacare is repealed.

I think all Americans should be afraid of the course this White House is on with this regulation. This debate isn't about women's health; it is about power. Washington should not have the power to force religious people and religious institutions to take actions that contradict their beliefs.

What we are going to continue to see as the health care law and the mandates and the regulations continue to come out is a government and an administration that continue to expand the government reach in terms of its size, in terms of its scope, and in terms of its grab for power.

The health care law was supposed to be about people and health care—the care they need from the doctor they want at a cost they can afford. Instead we have a lot of IRS agents but no new doctors and nurses. I go to townhall meetings and ask: How many of you under this health care law who are hoping to get the care you need from a doctor you want at a price you can afford—how many of you believe the cost of your health care, because of this health care law, will increase, the costs to you will go up? All the hands went up. That is what the people believe when they hear more and more about this health care law.

Then I say: How many of you believe the quality and availability of your care will go down? Again, the hands went up.

These are the American people knowing everything they do about the health care law, which is very complicated and has not given them what they asked for: the care they need, from a doctor they want, at a cost they can afford. What they find and believe is that they are going to be actually paying more and getting less. That is not what the American people have been promised. It is not what they want. It is not what they are finding out they have received now that the law has passed.

So this clearly explains why Republicans in the Senate and in the House continue to be committed to repealing the President's health care law.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for up to 15 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Reserving the right to object, if I could ask my friend through the Chair, would it be possible for me to have 2 minutes prior to his statement, and then following my remarks the floor will be the Senator's.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Sure.

Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, I wish to take 2 minutes to respond to Senator BARRASSO, who offered a second opinion. I hope my colleague will also talk about that.

I have to say it is stunning to see the assault on women's health that is taking place from the Republican Party day after day after day. First, they tried to stop women from getting breast screenings. Then they tried to stop us from getting cervical cancer screenings. Now they are going after our ability to get birth control.

I have to say this: We know that for a full 15 percent of women, birth control is pure medicine. They suffer from debilitating monthly pain, endometriosis. We have stories of women who couldn't afford birth control pills and a cyst got out of hand resulting in the loss of an ovary. We know that birth control is used for a very serious skin condition. So if they want to stand here and say that women don't have a right to our medicine, that is their right but don't put it into the frame of religious freedom.

We know President Obama said he was going to do what 28 States have done; that is, to make sure women who work in this country have the ability to get access to birth control pills through their insurance. That is as simple as it gets. Twenty-eight States do it. I never heard a word out of them—never. And eight of those States had no exception when President Obama made an exception for 335,000 churches.

So let's not stand here and talk about the overreach of the Federal Government and the rest of it. The fact is our States have been doing this for years. More than 50 percent of women in this Nation have the ability to get contraception. It is about health. It is the Institute of Medicine that said it is critical. It will cut down on tens of thousands of abortions when families plan their families.

So as long as our colleagues on the other side want to make women a political football in this country, there are many of us here, women and men alike, who are going to stand sentry and say: You can't do this to the women of this Nation.

This is the 21st century, and we are arguing about birth control instead of how to get out of this economic malaise when we are finally seeing light at the end of the tunnel? Oh, no. I am hoping we go to a highway bill this afternoon, but we have to now have this diversion about an issue that was resolved, frankly, in the 1950s and in the 1960s.

So I thank my colleague for this opportunity. Senator BARRASSO has a right to a second opinion, but I think his opinion is off the mark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam President, I appreciate the comments of the Senator from California. She is on the floor today with Senator Inhofe—unlikely peas in a pod, one pretty liberal, one pretty conservative, very different views—to talk about job creation, infrastructure, building highways and bridges and public transit, and job creation. As so often is the case, people on the other side want to change the subject.

In my State, the elections 1½, 2 years ago were all about lost jobs, about lost manufacturing jobs that, frankly, accelerated during the Bush years, and we finally turned that manufacturing job loss around. We have seen 20 straight months of job increases in manufacturing.

But the legislature in Columbus, my State capital, and the Governor, what are they doing? They are not fighting for job creation. They are going after workers' rights and women's rights—the heartbeat bill, pretty extreme—instead of focusing on job creation.

That is what I came to discuss on the Senate floor today too—not specifically on this bill but another infrastructure bill, which I will get to in a moment.

The comment I heard from Senator BARRASSO, only from the end of his discussion, was that he wants to repeal the health care law. How do they tell a 23-year-old who now is on her mother's insurance, who is without a job and doesn't have insurance, that she is going to lose her insurance she has through her mother's insurance? How are they going to explain it to the family who has a child with a preexisting condition who now can get insurance when the insurance company denied it before? How are they going to explain it to the Medicare retiree, the 72-yearold woman on Medicare who now has no copay, no deductible, free screenings for osteoporosis, or the man who gets prostate screenings—how are they going to explain that? They want to repeal that.

How are they going to explain the fact that they want to repeal stopping one of the most insidious insurance company practices, which is that if people get too sick and they are too expensive, insurance companies just cut them off? They want to repeal that prohibition. I guess it is because they want to do the insurance companies' bidding over and over. That is a big part of their game.

It just breaks my heart when I see the progress we have made for the millions of Americans who now will have health insurance. I know the Senator and my colleagues, everybody in this body has good health insurance. People in this body are generally pretty affluent. They have good government insurance. But they don't want millions of men and women in our country—people who have lost jobs, people who are working without insurance—they don't want them to have insurance, all for some political gain of repealing ObamaCare. It is too bad.

Madam President, now I wish to focus on job creation. I wish to make some remarks on legislation I introduced today that is not directly Senator BOXER's and Senator INHOFE's highway bill, but it is about water and sewer systems and infrastructure.

WATER INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. President, earlier today I was on a call with Tony Parrott, executive director of the Metropolitan Sewer District of Greater Cincinnati. We talked about how communities in Ohio are struggling to afford the necessary upgrades to improve sewer systems. In parts of the State with something called combined sewer systems, every time there are heavy rains waste and storm water overflows, the sewers overflow, and the water is dumped into our rivers and creeks and lakes.

The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 800 billion gallons of untreated wastewater and storm water from these combined sewage overflows, these combined sewer systems, are released into our rivers, lakes, and streams each year. It poses a threat to public health and the environment, and it undermines the competitiveness of our businesses. So not only do building these water and sewer systems and upgrades create jobs, but we also know if we don't, local businesses aren't going to expand. If they are not certain they are going to have good, clean water available at a decent and reasonable cost, they are not going to expand their businesses, especially if it is manufacturing.

The cost of addressing these combined sewage overflow systems in Ohio is some $6 billion according to the EPA, $1 billion in northeast Ohio, and $2 billion in the Cincinnati area.

So that is why today, because there are 81 Ohio communities requiring water infrastructure improvements, I am reintroducing the Clean Water Affordability Act. In previous Congresses I introduced this legislation with our Republican colleague from Ohio, Senator Voinovich. This bill will protect ratepayers, lead to cleaner water, and promote economic development. It would invest $1.8 billion to be distributed over the next 5 years through a grant program for financially distressed communities administered by EPA Administrator Jackson. I have spoken to her conveying the concern of Ohio's CSO communities. The program provides a 75/25 cost share, similar to what we have done on highway issues in the past: 75 percent Federal Government cost, 25 percent local government cost.

It is estimated that every $1 billion invested in infrastructure, similar to the highway bill that Senators INHOFE and BOXER are working on, will create—that for every $1 billion invested, upwards of 20,000 jobs would be created.

It will promote green infrastructure. Cities such as Bucyrus or Steubenville should be encouraged to use green infrastructure if it costs less than traditional construction and produces the same environmental benefits.

I will continue to work with mayors such as Dave Berger of Lima and Bob Armstrong of Defiance, county commissioners, and others such as Tony Parrot, who explained to me how years of reduced infrastructure investments have eroded their water and sewer systems.

When we were kids in the 1950s and 1960s and 1970s and into the 1980s, the U.S. infrastructure was the envy of the world. Whether it was the interstate system, whether it was the Federal, State, local partnerships on water and sewer systems, whether it was the building of community colleges and the beginnings of technology and wiring for our telecommunications systems in the 1950s and 1960s, we were the envy of the world.

Today, because so many in this government think we need to cut spending at all costs on everything, we simply have not kept up with the infrastructure. That is why countries such as China that are investing so much money in infrastructure—we run the risk of them passing us by in manufacturing and all the things we care about that build a solid middle class.

This legislation is an economic development imperative. This legislation is an imperative for citizens of our country—having clean drinking water, safe drinking water, predictable access to water at a reasonable cost. It is important for our families. It is important for our communities. It is important for business development. It is important for a strong middle-class manufacturing country, which we still are.

I ask my colleagues to support this important legislation I am introducing today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I take this time to urge my colleagues to let us proceed on the reauthorization of the surface transportation act, S. 1813. This is a critically important bill, and I am proud to be on two committees that have had jurisdiction over this bill. One is the Environment and Public Works Committee, where Senator BOXER and Senator INHOFE have worked together to bring out a bill that received the unanimous support of our committee. I also serve on the Senate Finance Committee, where Senator BAUCUS and Senator HATCH have worked together so we have the sufficient revenues in order to be able to finance the reauthorization bill during its 2-year reauthorization.

This bill is so important to our country. First, it gives predictability to our

State and local governments. It gives predictability to the highway engineers. It gives predictability to contractors to know the funding will be there in order to advance our transportation programs. When we do these short-term extensions, it really does cause significant problems for planners. If you are trying to plan a transportation project, you need to know the funding is going to be there for more than just a few months. You need to have some degree of predictability. This legislation will allow us to give that predictability to those who are involved in the decisionmaking. It has been 2009 since we last reauthorized the surface transportation act. It is time for us to act.

This bill will also help us as far as American competitiveness is concerned. We need to have modern transportation infrastructure, whether it is our highways, our bridges, or our transit systems. We need to make sure we can meet the challenges to today's society.

I could talk about just in this region our needs in the transit area. We have one of the most congested communities in the Nation in Washington, DC. Many of my constituents who live in Maryland go to work every day in Washington, DC, working for the Federal Government, using the mass transit system. That system is aged and needs attention. We need to provide the financing nexus in this area in order to be as competitive as we can with transportation options for the people of this country.

This bill is important for jobs. You hear that over and over. In Maryland, the passage of this bill will preserve or expand 10,000 jobs for its people. I expect the Acting President pro tempore would have similar numbers in New Mexico. It is important in every State in this Nation.

It is also important for safety. I will give you one number in Maryland that really has me concerned. There are 359 bridges in the State of Maryland that have been rated structurally deficient and 4.6 million motorists travel over those bridges every day. The State of Maryland is taking steps to make sure the motorists are safe, but we need to fix those bridges in a more permanent way. The longer we wait, the more it costs. Deferred maintenance means we are not doing what we should to protect the future needs of our communities. This legislation puts a heavy priority on maintaining our transportation infrastructure so it is safe and we can move forward into the future.

The legislation is balanced between transit and highway. I know that in certain regions of this country, highways are the principal means of transportation, and their interest in transit is not quite as great as it is if you represent the people of New York or you represent the people of Maryland or you represent the people in an urban center where public transit becomes a very important part of our transportation needs. This legislation is balanced to take care of the needs of our highways and the needs of our transit systems. I think it is a credit to that balance that in the Environment and Public Works Committee and in the Banking Committee—the two committees that have principal jurisdiction over the highway program and over the transit program—we had unanimous support on bringing this bill forward. That is how we should be proceeding to consider legislation. We have that type of bipartisan cooperation because this bill is properly balanced.

Let me also point out that we have received hundreds of letters from organizations that support the passage of the surface transportation reauthorization act. We have the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, we have the AFL-CIO, we have businesses, we have labor groups, we have local communities, we have national groups.

This bill has been put together in a way where we can get it done this year, and it would be very important for the people of this country and for our economy.

Let me talk a little bit about my State of Maryland and the Maryland department of transportation. They have given us a list of projects that will move forward if we can get this bill reauthorized, from the beltway around Baltimore, to critical roads in Montgomery and Prince George's Counties, to our rural areas. I could share some of those specific examples. But this will affect the ability of Maryland to move forward with critical roads and transit needs, and we need to get that done.

I want to talk a little bit about some of the specific issues that are in the bill that I want to highlight.

The Appalachian Development Highway System is one for which we have put a separate provision historically in the code because we recognize that in bringing economic opportunity to that part of our Nation, which includes West Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania—and it also includes some of our Southern States that are in the Appalachia highway region—it is tough to get jobs there. I was just recently in the most western part of Maryland up in Garrett County, and I can tell you it is difficult to get companies to move into that region. One of the problems is that you have to go over the mountains. It is not easy to get over the mountains

We have a real opportunity around Cumberland, MD, to be able to expand dramatically the economic opportunities and jobs by completing the north-south highway that goes through Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia. Now there is reason to celebrate that in this bill that can become a reality.

There is an amendment I had offered that is included in this legislation that provides the toll credits so we can advance this project. It was a major issue needed, particularly in the Pennsylvania part of this north-south highway.

So we do have reason to celebrate that in this legislation we have a way of completing the Appalachian Development Highway System in my part of the country.

Senator ROCKEFELLER has been working very closely on this issue, and I really applaud his leadership. We are going to be looking to see whether we might be able to strengthen it more, through amendments to this bill, to make sure these projects get the priority to which they are entitled.

For the sake of flexibility, we have combined many of the specific programs into more general programs. That is part of the balance in this legislation—to give greater flexibility to local governments. That is important. But we also want to make sure the national priorities receive the attention they need, and the Appalachian Development Highway System is a national priority. We want to make sure that is, in fact, done.

I wear another hat as chair of the Water and Wildlife Subcommittee on the Environment and Public Works Committee, and I want to do everything we can to make sure the Federal Government, as a partner in developing highways and roads and transit systems, does what is important for clean water in our communities. A large part of the pollutants that enter into our waters comes from storm runoff. In the Chesapeake Bay region, the largest growth source of pollutants going into the Chesapeake Bay comes from storm runoff. Well, highway construction can help or hurt storm runoff. If you do it the right way, you actually can help keep pollutants out of our streams and rivers and bays. So I am hopeful that during the discussion of this bill on the floor of the Senate, we will look for ways we can make this bill helpful in the best practices being used in order to deal with storm runoff, as we deal with major transportation programs in this country.

One of the programs I have spent a lot of time on is the Transportation Enhancement Program, the TE Program. That has been used by local governments to do what is critically important to our communities. I could talk about bicycle paths. I could talk about paths that have connected communities, which has allowed us to take cars off the roads. This is a small amount of money, but it becomes very important for getting motorists off the roads. We have the use of the Transportation Enhancement Program so it is safe for motorists who want to pull off to the side of the road to see the vistas. We have used funds for that. That is a safety issue.

So transportation enhancements are important programs. We want to make sure the flexibility and funding opportunities remain. Chairman Boxer has been very careful to work out an arrangement so we can advance that, and I thank her for it. I have been working with Senator Cochran, and we are hoping to offer an amendment that will make it clear we need to work with the local governments as we look at how the transportation enhancement funds are being used.

Let me tell you about another opportunity I think we could have in the consideration of this bill, and that deals with our veterans.

There is a way we could use the training veterans receive while in military service to help when they come back here as far as truckdrivers are concerned. We are looking for an amendment in regard to that area where we could advance that issue.

There are many areas in this bill that we think are extremely important to advance our needs. It is a bipartisan bill. We have to get this done.

I know Senator BOXER is on the floor. Once again, I compliment her for her patience and leadership in working through each of these issues.

We are looking forward to a robust debate on the floor of the Senate. I hope Members who have amendments will allow us to proceed. Let's take a look at amendments, but let's proceed in the spirit in which the Environment and Public Works Committee, the Banking Committee, and the Finance Committee reported the bills to the Senate; that is, listen to each other, do not lose sight of the prize of getting this bill done, and be willing to compromise so that we can maintain the type of bipartisan cooperation we need in order to get this bill enacted. If we do that, we will be doing something so important to our country.

This bill will create jobs. This bill will help our economic recovery. This bill will help our future. I am proud to be part of the group that has brought this bill forward to the floor of the Senate.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to speak in favor of moving ahead for progress in the 21st century, something that most Americans—almost all Americans—have to be in favor of, and if a lot of them knew about this legislation, I think they would be in favor of it too.

It has been 862 days since SAFETEA-LU expired—862 days. That legislation was written in 2003, passed this body and signed into law in 2005. We have extended that legislation, SAFETEA-LU, eight times since it expired in 2009, brought it back from the dead eight times

John Chambers, who is the CEO of a big technology company called CISCO, likes to say that the key to global economic competitiveness is having the best workforce and the best infrastructure in the world. He has said that is where the jobs will go in the 21st century—best workforce, best infrastructure, you will get the jobs. We must continue to modernize—in the spirit of those words—modernize and maintain our infrastructure if it is to remain the best.

I wish to start today by congratulating Senators BOXER and INHOFE for pulling together—and their staffs and subcommittee staffs as well—I wish to start by congratulating them for pulling together a bipartisan Transportation bill that begins to address America's infrastructure needs. This comes on the heels of our passing earlier this week a conference report, a compromise on the FAA reauthorization to bring the air traffic control system of our country into the 21st century and to also begin rebuilding and improving our airports as well. This is a pretty good one-two punch in the period of 1 week

This legislation before us today makes key reforms to our Federal transportation policy that will help make the best use of our taxpayers' dollars. The legislation sets clear national goals for transportation investment. We do not just throw money at these problems; we actually strive to achieve a number of specific goals. And this bill asks State transportation departments to do their part to achieve those national goals. It accomplishes this by implementing new performance measures that will help to hold States accountable for the outcomes of the investments we are prepared to make. This will ensure that we are building the most effective multimodal transportation network we can by putting our dollars to the most productive use.

Passing this legislation is critically important to America's economic health at home and our competitiveness abroad. We have heard that here today, and we will hear it for the next several days. This legislation, if adopted and signed into law, will create or save several millions of jobs, in a day when we need every job we can save or create, in States such as New Mexico, States such as Delaware, and 48 other States as well.

In my State of Delaware, for example, we are planning significant new transportation investments. We already have a bunch of them underway, but new ones will contribute to our State's productivity. Some of those will help to relieve the congestion along important corridors such as I-95. We have already done some good work in putting in highway-speed E-ZPass on I-95 through the toll plaza to expedite and move the flow of traffic. We are now working on a big intersection where I-95 intersects with State Route 1. a major north-south highway. That has been a big bottleneck for years. We have some good work going on with that. We want to be able to finish that. Other improvements will allow shippers to move freight more quickly and reliably down roads such as Route 301, which comes up through Maryland and the Delmarva Peninsula into Delaware on its way to I-95.

Each of my colleagues could no doubt talk about similar efforts in their State. Each of these projects is part of our national transportation system. Taken together, the system is greater than the sum of its parts. Having a world-class transportation system has helped to make America what it is today. This bill will ensure that we have a transportation system that allows America to return to prosperity and to grow that prosperity.

I am looking forward to debating this bill on the Senate floor. I appreciate the time to get started on that here today. As a Senator and as a recovering Governor, I know that everything I can do I can do better, and as good as this legislation is I think there is always room for improvement.

I have never introduced a perfect bill. My friend who is presiding over the Senate may have, but I am not sure. As good as this legislation is, there is room for improvement.

I plan to bring forward a couple amendments that I think will improve the bill. We talked about a few in the markup in the full committee. For example, I believe we need to do more on the issue of traffic congestion. I go back and forth on the train about every day and night, and in the morning I see traffic lined up for miles, trying to get from north to south and parallel to the Northeast corridor of Amtrak, as we zip along. This city is recognized as maybe the most congested city in America.

In 2010 I am told that drivers in the United States in the more urban and suburban areas wasted some 1.9 billion gallons of fuel due to traffic congestion. That is almost 2 billion gallons of fuel. Congestion is a major challenge in larger U.S. cities and increasingly even in smaller cities and towns too.

The burden and the cost of traffic congestion is felt by both travelers and freight shippers, diminishing our quality of life and costing us money. According to the Texas Transportation Institute—they come up with this study that is announced every year—the average commuter across the country spent 34 hours sitting in traffic—not moving at 40, 30, 20, or 10 miles an hour but sitting in traffic. That is up from 14 hours in 1982. This burden lowers productivity and results in wasted fuel and cost Americans more than $100 billion in 2010, or nearly $750 wasted for every commuter. Traffic congestion is also increasingly hurting the reliability of the transportation system, which is particularly important to freight shippers, where the value each minute can be as much as $5. It is about $300 an hour. As America's economy continues to recover, we must make sure that traffic is not a drag on job growth. According to that same Texas Transportation Institute, by 2015—3 years from now—the cost of gridlock will rise from $101 billion to something like $133 billion.

That is the bad news. There is good news too. Fortunately, we have new tools to address congestion. For example, better management of accidents, improved timing of traffic signals, real-time traveler information, and managed toll lanes—and I will talk more about that next week—all provide low-cost congestion benefits. These are just a few of the strategies that have been helping passengers and freight shippers to better anticipate, avoid, and manage the impact of congestion. They are smart and are being successfully used on a smaller scale. They are ideas we want to replicate in cities and counties and States across the country. I will offer an amendment that would, in the States with the worst congestion, target funding for these cost-effective congestion-relief strategies. My amendment will help to give Americans some of their time and money back. It will help shippers grow their businesses too. I hope my colleagues will support it.

Second, I believe that anything worth having is worth paying for. If we will not raise user fees at the Federal level, we should at least stop prohibiting States from doing so if that makes sense. I will offer an amendment to give States more flexibility to use tolls and user fees on their roadways. An increasing number of States are looking at tolls and user fees as a source of funding, and the Federal Government should not stand in their way.

We have used tolls as a source of revenue in Delaware for years, and it has helped us to maintain and improve the critical I-95 corridor and to provide a north-south corridor that stretches from the northern part of the State past Dover, past Dover Air Force Base and the central part of Dover.

Toll revenue is also often a critical part of forming public-private partner-ships, which I know many of my colleagues support. I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this amendment.

In closing, Congress needs to act on transportation legislation. The rest of the country is counting on us. The infrastructure of our country gets graded on an annual basis by, among others, the engineers of our Nation. They look at transportation more broadly than just highways and bridges. And it is not just railroads, bridges, and ports, they look at all of it. Last year, the grade they gave us was a D. That is not as in "delightful," and that is not as in "distinguished"—that is maybe more in the area of "derelict." We can do a whole lot better.

We have taken action this week with respect to our air traffic control systems. We have taken a step toward beginning to rebuild and improve our airports. The legislation will let us, in the next 24 months, make our roads, highways, and bridges safer, less congested, and something we can treasure as a real asset.

Lastly—and I have said this before and it bears repeating—the major job of government—not the only but a major job of government—is to provide a nurturing environment for job creation and job preservation. It is not the only job of government, but it is a big job of government. A big part of creating that environment for job creation and preservation is a road, highway, and bridge infrastructure that we can all be proud of in the 21st century. This legislation will help us go in that direction. It is important to follow on the heels of this legislation and not just waste 2 years but build on it to do smarter things in the years to come.

That having been said, while the chairman is here, I thank her for her leadership. People say: Why can't Congress get anything done? I think the way Senator Boxer and Senator INHOFE have worked together on this legislation, with the staffs, is a great model for the rest of us. We thank them for their leadership.

I vield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Delaware because he and the occupant of the chair are very important members of this great committee, the Environment and Public Works Committee. As one or our most senior Members, he has taken a tremendous interest in everything we do. I look to his leadership on a number of issues, including controlling mercury, which is dear to his heart and mine. He is a leader on nuclear plant safety and has been extremely helpful. I thank him for the good role he plays on that committee.

We will have a number of amendments. It is going to be delicate with the amendment process. That is fine. I encourage everybody, if they have an amendment, to go for it. But we have an agreement that the leadership on the committee—we are either all going to go for an amendment or not. We don't want to stymie this.

I appreciate the Senator alerting us that he is going to offer those two them to us so we can share them with Senator INHOFE.

We have received another letter of support, which I am proud to put in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 9, 2012.

DEAR SENATOR: The twenty nine national associations and construction trade unions that comprise the Transportation Construction Coalition (TCC) strongly urge all members of the Senate to vote for the motion to proceed on S. 1813, the "MAP-21" surface transportation reauthorization proposal. This legislation would provide critical investments and policy reforms needed to improve the nation's highway and bridge network

The federal highway and public transportation programs have been operating under a series of temporary extensions for more than two years. MAP-21 would end that dysfunctional cycle and restore stability to the federal surface transportation programs. In a very challenging budgetary environment, the legislation would authorize current (inflation-adjusted) levels of highway and public transportation investment. Furthermore, the Senate Finance Committee has developed a bipartisan plan to assure these investments do not add to the federal deficit.

The TCC has long supported reforming the federal highway and public transportation programs to focus on national goals and deliver transportation benefits faster and at lower cost. Specifically, we support steps to accelerate the transportation project environmental review and approval process through the use of deadlines, flexibility for state departments of transportation, expedited reviews for projects with no significant impact, and greater authority for the U.S. Department of Transportation with other federal agencies. The TCC also supports efforts to increase the involvement of the private sector resources to help meet the nation's transportation challenges.

We commend all senators involved in developing a comprehensive, bipartisan reauthorization proposal that would continue the strong tradition of federal leadership in the area of transportation policy. We urge all members of the Senate to vote to move the surface transportation reauthorization process forward by supporting the motion to proceed on S. 1813.

Sincerely.

TRANSPORTATION CONSTRUCTION COALITION.

Mrs. BOXER. It is from the Transportation Construction Coalition. They are urging all of us for an "aye" vote on the motion to proceed to the Transportation bill. They have said wonderful things about our bill-that they like the steps we have taken to accelerate all the reviews and flexibility for the States, greater authority for our States, and the fact that we did this in a comprehensive way and in a bipartisan way. I am very grateful.

What I would like to do is read the names of these organizations because it shows you the depth in America of the support for this bill: The American Road and Transportation Builders: Associated General Contractors; the amendments. I urge the Senator to get American Coal Ash Association; the American Concrete Pavement Association: the American Concrete Pipe Association; the American Council of Engineering Companies; the American Subcontractors Association; American Iron and Steel Institute; American Society of Civil Engineers: American Traffic Safety Services Association; the Asphalt Emulsion Manufacturers Association; Asphalt Recycling and Re-Association; claiming Associated Equipment Distributors: Association of Equipment Manufacturers; Concrete Reinforcing Steel Institute; International Slurry Surfacing Association; International Association of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental and Reinforcing Iron Workers; International Union of Operating Engineers; Laborers-Employers Cooperation and Education Trust; Laborers' International Union of North America: National Asphalt Pavement Association; National Association of Surety Bond Producers; National Ready Mixed Concrete Association; National Stone, Sand & Gravel Association; National Utility Contractors Association; Portland Cement Association: Precase/Prestressed Concrete Institute; the Road Information Program; and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America.

The reason I read these 29 organizations—there are 1,000 organizations behind our bill-I want colleagues to understand how people have come together from all sides of the aisleunion workers, nonunion workers, the businesses and union businesses. Evervbody has come together—Democrats, Republicans, and Independentson our committee. The reason is that we are coming out of a very tough and deep recession where housing was hurt deeply, and we are having a very tough time coming out of the housing recession. Construction workers have a 15percent or more unemployment rate, compared to an 8.3-percent unemployment rate in the rest of the workforce. If you put them into Super Bowl stadiums, they would fill 15 Super Bowl stadiums. Imagine that.

We have an obligation to come together on behalf of jobs and the aging infrastructure that needs to be fixed. We have bridges collapsing and roads that are not up to par. We have problems in this Nation, and we can stop them and solve them only if we come together.

I will end here because my colleague would like the floor, and that is fine. I think we will have an opportunity at around the 2:15 hour or so to come together united and give a great vote of confidence to this bill, to move it ahead with an overwhelming vote. Maybe I am dreaming, but I hope for well over 60 votes to go forward. Then let's get to the amendment process and let's not offer extraneous amendments that have to do with everything but transportation. Let's keep this focused.

Then we can get to conference and get a bill to the President.

In closing, if our bill is the law of the land, we would save 1.8 million jobs and be able to create up to another million jobs. There is a lot riding on this bill. I hope we will come together this afternoon.

Thank you for your indulgence. I yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF CATHY ANN BENCIVENGO TO BE A UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Cathy Ann Bencivengo, of California, to be United States District Judge for the Southern District of California.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will be 30 minutes of debate, equally divided, prior to a vote on the nomination, with the time already consumed counting toward the majority's portion.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to speak on behalf of the nomination of magistrate judge Cathy Ann Bencivengo to the position of district judge for the Southern District of California.

Judge Bencivengo will fill a judicial emergency vacancy in a judicial district along the southwest border that has one of the highest and most rapidly increasing criminal caseloads in the country.

The Southern District of California includes San Diego and Imperial Counties. It borders Mexico, and it consequently has a large immigration caseload. It ranks fourth in the country in terms of criminal case filings per authorized judgeship.

The district's former chief judge, Irma Gonzalez, wrote me a letter urging Judge Bencivengo's confirmation and highlighting the felony caseload crisis in the district. As Chief Judge Gonzalez explained, since 2008 criminal case filings in the district have increased by 42 percent and civil case filings by 25 percent. In the past fiscal year alone, criminal cases had risen 17 percent up to the time of her letter. It is, in fact, a judicial emergency.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is advised the previous allotted time has expired.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I ask unanimous consent to speak for 7 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Let me tell everyone a little about Judge Bencivengo. She is a consensus nominee who was approved by the Judiciary Committee by a voice vote. That does not often happen. There was no objection from any colleague on any side of the aisle.

She was recommended to me by a bipartisan judicial selection committee which I have established in California to advise me in recommending judicial nominees to the President. This committee reviews judicial candidates based on their legal skill, reputation, experience, temperament, and overall commitment to excellence.

Judge Bencivengo has been a U.S. magistrate judge in San Diego for the last 6 years, and she has earned an outstanding reputation in that judicial role.

Throughout my advisory committee's process, Judge Bencivengo has actually set herself apart as a person who would be truly exceptional. She was born in New Jersey. She began her undergraduate career at Rutgers. She earned a bachelor's in journalism and political science and a master's from Rutgers as well.

She worked for a leading American corporation—Johnson & Johnson—in New Brunswick. She then attended the University of Michigan Law School, where she excelled, graduating magna cum laude, and was inducted into the Order of the Coif.

After law school, she joined the San Diego firm of Gray Cary, which later became part of a major international law firm. She became a founding member of the firm's patent litigation group. Her knowledge of patent law, which she honed in law school and in private practice, made her a valued resource for her colleagues and clients, so she quickly rose through the ranks at her firm. She was selected as the national cochair of her firm's patent litigation group, a role in which she managed 70 patent attorneys.

In 2005, she became a magistrate judge, a role in which she has served as a serious and thoughtful jurist. Since her appointment, she has published 180 opinions, over 190 reports and recommendations, over 1,800 orders on nondispositive motions, and roughly 800 of her orders involved felony criminal cases.

She has substantial expertise in patent law, which will be welcome in the district, which is part of a new Federal judicial program designed to assign more patent cases to judges who are experts in the field of patent law. So she will be helpful.

Judge Bencivengo has received high praise from any number of people. I know of no opposition to her confirmation. I think this advice and consent process will yield a very good, seasoned

San Diego magistrate judge for the district court, and I am very proud to recommend her and to have had unanimous consent of the Judiciary Committee for her confirmation.

I see Senator LEE on the floor. Perhaps I could ask unanimous consent that when Senator LEE concludes, and if there is time remaining, I be recognized to speak for a couple minutes as in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for a period of up to 7 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that time.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this nomination. I do so not because of the qualifications of this particular nominee, but instead I do so in defense of the U.S. Constitution.

In opposing President Obama's appointments, I have repeatedly made clear this is a constitutional issue. Each time I have spoken—and I have done so on numerous occasions—I have set forth in detail the reasons why I believe on a legal basis, on a constitutional basis, why President Obama's recent purported recess appointments are unprecedented and unconstitutional. I have also made absolutely clear that my opposition to President Obama's appointments is not partisan and that I will hold a Republican President equally accountable whenever any Republican President makes a similarly unconstitutional claim of power.

This President has enjoyed my cooperation up to this point. I voted for many, if not most, of his nominees. That cooperation cannot continue—not in the same way he has enjoyed it up to this point. In light of the fact he has disrespected our authority within this body, he has disrespected the Constitution.

Unfortunately, many of my colleagues have refused to engage on the real substance of this issue. Instead, they have repeatedly changed the subject to partisan politics, the nominations process, and Richard Cordray's qualifications to head the CFPB. Even worse, and despite my repeatedly making clear I intend to hold any Republican President to the same standard to protect the institutional and constitutional prerogatives of the Senate rather than the interests of any political party—given those are at stake—the Democrats, including the President himself, have accused me of playing politics. I wish to be clear again: This is not the case. I am here to defend the constitutional prerogatives of the Senate and the separation of powers and the system of checks and balances that are at the heart of our constitutional system.

The Senate's advice-and-consent role is grounded in the Constitution's system of checks and balances. In Federalist 51, James Madison wrote:

. . . the great security against a gradual concentration of the several powers in the same [branch of government], consists in giving to those who administer each [branch] the necessary constitutional means and personal motives to resist encroachments of the

Among those constitutional means is the Senate's ability to withhold its consent for a nominee, forcing the President to work with Congress to address that body's concerns.

The key conclusion of the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel memorandum, on which President Obama relied in making these recess appointments, is that the President may unilaterally decide and conclude that the Senate's pro forma sessions somehow do not constitute sessions of the Senate for purposes relevant to the recess appointments clause, in clause 3 of article II, section 2. If allowed to stand, this deeply flawed assertion would upend an important element of the Constitution's separation of powers. Under the procedures set forth by the Constitution, it is for the Senate. not for the President, to determine when the Senate is in session. Indeed, the Constitution expressly grants the Senate that prerogative, the power to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings."

Commenting on this very provision in his authoritative constitutional treatise, Joseph Story noted:

[t]he humblest assembly of men is understood to possess [the power to make its own rules,] and it would be absurd to deprive the councils of the nation of a like authority.

Yet this is precisely the result of President Obama's attempt to tell the Senate when it is or is not in recess.

I am saddened some of my colleagues in the Senate are not more jealous of this body's rightful constitutional, institutional prerogatives. As they well know, the Constitution's protections do not belong to any one party, and its structural separation of powers is meant to protect against the abuses of present and future Presidents of both parties. Acquiescing to the President in the moment may result in temporary political gain for the President's party, but relinquishing this important piece of the Senate's constitutional role has lasting consequences for Republicans and Democrats alike.

It is on this basis, and because of the oath I have taken to uphold the Constitution of the United States, that I find myself dutybound to oppose this nomination. I strongly urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to take seriously their obligation both to the Constitution and to the institutional prerogatives of the Senate and to do the same.

I yield the floor.

pore. The Senator from California.

 $\operatorname{Mrs.}$  FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I would like to briefly respond to Senator LEE's comments.

I understand the reasons for which he is opposing this nominee. I would again point out that, in my opinion, based on what I heard the distinguished Senator say, it has nothing to do with the nominee. It has to do with a peripheral issue. I would hope a majority of the Senate would understand this is a totally noncontroversial, totally capable, totally qualified, and totally good nominee. To hold her confirmation hostage is something that doesn't redound well on this body.

This is a judicial emergency in the Southern District of California, and we need to get this judge approved. So while I appreciate the Senator's comments—I think most of us are well aware of the feelings on the other side—I think somehow, some way, we have to come together and prevent what is happening. And what is happening is, if I don't get my way on something, I am going to hold up appointments, I am going to hold up confirmations, and I am going to do whatever I can to show I have power to disrupt this body.

In essence, the body can be disrupted. We know that. There are very strong minority rights in the Senate rules of order. But at the same time, we have an obligation to see that qualified people who want to serve in this Government—in this case in the judicial arm, in the Federal Court system—have an opportunity to do so, and where there is real danger in terms of overly high caseloads, we can respond and get qualified nominees in place.

I appreciate what the Senator had to say. I understand it. But I appeal to this body: Please vote to approve Cathy Bencivengo to the Southern District of California.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today. the Senate will finally vote on the nomination of Judge Cathy Bencivengo to fill a vacancy on the the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of California, where she has served as a Magistrate Judge since 2005. An experienced judge and lawyer, with 17 years in private practice before becoming a Magistrate Judge, Judge Bencivengo received the highest possible rating from the ABA's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, unanimously "well qualified." Her nomination. which has the strong support of her home State Senators, Senators Feinstein and Boxer, was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee on October 6. Yet, despite the support of every Member of the Judiciary Committee, Democratic and Republican, and despite vacancies across the country in nearly one out of every 10 Federal judgeships, it has taken over 4 months for Senate Republicans to con-

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tem- sent to a vote on Judge Bencivengo's nomination.

> I thank the Majority Leader for securing today's vote. There is no reason or explanation why the Senate Republican leadership will not consent to vote on the other 18 judicial nominations waiting for final Senate action. All but three of them were reported by the Judiciary Committee without opposition, just like Judge Bencivengo's nomination.

> Earlier this week I urged Senate Republicans to join with Democrats and take long overdue steps to remedy the serious vacancies crisis on Federal courts throughout the country. Consenting to vote on a single judicial nomination, only the third such vote we have had this year, is not much in the way of progress.

> There is no reason or explanation for why Senate Republicans continue to block a vote on the nomination of Jesse Furman to fill a vacancy on the Southern District of New York. His nomination was voted out of the Judiciary Committee on September 15, nearly 5 months ago, without opposition from a single member of the Committee and a month before the nomination being considered today. Mr. Furman, an experienced Federal prosecutor who served as Counselor to Attorney General Michael Mukasey for 2 years during the Bush administration, is a nominee with an impressive background and bipartisan support. We should have voted on his nomination many months ago, and certainly before the end of the last session. Senate Republicans have now skipped over that nomination and stalled it for almost 5 months.

> Senate Republicans continue to block even judicial nominations with home State support from Republican Senators. Republican Senator MARCO RUBIO and Democratic Senator BILL NELSON of Florida both introduced Judge Adalberto Jordan of Florida to the Judiciary Committee when we held his confirmation hearing last September for his nomination to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the Eleventh Circuit, and both strongly support his nomination.

> Judge Jordan is an experienced jurist who has served as a judge for the Southern District of Florida since 1999. If confirmed, Judge Jordan will be the first Cuban-born judge to serve on the Eleventh Circuit, which covers Florida. Georgia and Alabama. Born in Havana, Cuba, Judge Jordan immigrated to the United States at age 6, going on to graduate summa cum laude from the University of Miami law school. After law school, he clerked for Judge Thomas A. Clark on the Eleventh Circuit, the court to which he is now nominated, and for Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, a President Reagan appointee to the United States Supreme Court. Judge Jordan has been a prosecutor in the Southern District of Florida, serving as Deputy Chief and then Chief of the Appellate Division. Judge Jordan has been a professor, since 1990 teaching at his alma mater, the University of Miami School of Law, as well as the Florida International University College of Law. It is no surprise that the ABA's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary unanimously rated Judge Jordan "well qualified" to serve on the Eleventh Circuit, the highest possible rating from its non-partisan peer review. It is also no surprise that his nomination was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee nearly 4 months ago. The surprise is that Senate Republicans continue to stall action on this nomination for no good reason.

Judge Jordan is the kind of consensus judicial nominee that should be welcomed as one of the many examples of President Obama reaching out to work with Republican and Democratic home State senators and the kind of superbly qualified nominee we should all encourage to serve on the distinguished bench of Federal appeals court judges. In the past the Senate would have voted on his nomination within days or weeks of its being reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee. Yet Republicans refused to consent to a vote on Judge Jordan's nomination before the end of the last session and it has been stalled on the Senate Calendar for nearly 4 months. When we finally do vote on Judge Jordan's nomination I am certain he will be confirmed with broad bipartisan support, perhaps unanimously. There is no good reason the Senate is not voting to confirm Judge Jordan today.

If caseloads were really a concern of Republican Senators, as they contended when they filibustered the nomination last December of Caitlin Halligan to the D.C. Circuit, they would not continue to block us from voting on Judge Jordan's nomination to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the Eleventh Circuit, one of the busier circuits in the country. They would not continue to block a vote on the nomination of Judge Jacqueline Nguyen, reported last December to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the Ninth Circuit, the busiest Federal appeals court in the country. They would consent to vote on the nomination of Paul Watford, a well-qualified nominee to fill another judicial emergency on the Ninth Circuit. They would stop blocking us from voting on the nominations of David Nuffer to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the District of Utah, Michael Fitzgerald to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the Central District of California, Miranda Du to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the District of Nevada, Gregg Costa to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the Southern District of Texas, and David Guaderrama to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the Western District of Texas.

Of the 19 judicial nominations now awaiting a final vote by the Senate, 16 were reported by the Judiciary Committee with the support of every Senator on the Committee, Democratic and Republican. Month after month and year after year, Senate Republicans find excuses to delay confirmation of consensus judicial nominees for no good reason. These delays are a disservice to the American people. They prevent the Senate from fulfilling its constitutional duty. And they are damaging to the ability of our Federal courts to provide justice to Americans around the country.

The cost of this across-the-board Republican obstruction is borne by the American people. More than half of all Americans, nearly 160 million, live in districts or circuits that have a judicial vacancy that could be filled today if Senate Republicans just agreed to vote on the nominations that have been reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee. It is wrong to delay votes on these qualified, consensus judicial nominees. The Senate should fill these numerous, extended judicial vacancies, not delay final action for no good reason.

By nearly any measure we are well behind where we should be. Three years into President Obama's first term, the Senate has confirmed a lower percentage of President Obama's judicial nominees than those of any President in the last 35 years. The Senate has confirmed just over 70 percent of President Obama's circuit and district nominees, with more than one in four not confirmed. This is in stark contrast to the nearly 87 percent of President George W. Bush's nominees who were confirmed, nearly nine out of every 10 nominees he sent to the Senate.

We remain well behind the pace set by the Senate during President Bush's first term. By this date in President Bush's first term, the Senate had confirmed 170 Federal circuit and district court nominations on the way to 205. and had lowered judicial vacancies to 46. By the time Americans went to the polls in November 2004, we had reduced vacancies to 28 nationwide, the lowest level in the last 20 years. In contrast, the Senate has confirmed only 125 of President Obama's district and circuit nominees, and judicial vacancies remain over 85. The vacancy rate is double what it was at this point in the Bush administration.

I, again, urge Senate Republicans to abandon their obstructionist tactics and do as Senate Democrats did when we worked to confirm 100 of President Bush's judicial nominees in 17 months. I urge them to work to reduce judicial vacancies as we did by considering and confirming President Bush's judicial nominations late into the Presidential election years of 2004 and 2008, reducing the vacancy rates in those years to their lowest levels in decades. That is the only way we have a chance to make up some of the ground we have lost and to address the serious and extended crisis in judicial vacancies.

I congratulate Judge Bencivengo on her confirmation today and hope that we can soon take up the rest of the 18 judicial nominations still awaiting a Senate vote.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering the nomination of Cathy Ann Bencivengo to be U.S. district judge for the Southern District of California. I support this nomination which will fill the vacancy that has been created by Judge Jeffrey Miller taking senior status. I would also note that this vacancy has been designated as a judicial emergency.

After today, the Senate will have confirmed 126 nominees to our article III courts. I would note that even as we continue to reduce judicial vacancies, the majority of vacancies have no nominee. In fact, 46 of 86 vacancies have no nomination. Furthermore, 18 of the 33 seats designated judicial emergencies have no nominee. So when I hear comments about "unprecedented" vacancy rates, I would ask my colleagues and the other interested parties to look first to the White House. The fact is, the Senate is doing its job in providing advice and consent to the President's judicial nominees.

Judge Cathy Ann Bencivengo presently serves as a U.S. magistrate judge for the Southern District of California. She was appointed to that court in 2005.

She received a bachelor of arts from the Rutgers University in 1980, a masters from Rutgers in 1981, and her juris doctorate from University of Michigan Law School in 1988.

Upon graduating law school, Judge Bencivengo became an associate at the law firm DLA Piper. There, she worked as a civil litigator, primarily handling intellectual property cases. In 1996, she became a partner at DLA Piper. She also was the national cochair of patent litigation for DLA Piper from 1993 to 2005.

In 1994, Judge Bencivengo was appointed as a judge pro tem for the San Diego Small Claims Court. She served there until 2006, volunteering approximately six times a year and hearing judgments on about 100 cases.

Since becoming a magistrate judge in 2005, Judge Bencivengo has presided over two cases that have gone to final verdict.

The American Bar Association Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary has rated Judge Bencivengo with a unanimous "well-qualified" rating.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am proud to vote for the confirmation of

Merkley

Magistrate Judge Cathy Ann Bencivengo to the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of California. Judge Bencivengo was recommended to the President by my colleague, Senator Feinstein, and will be a great addition to the Federal bench.

Judge Bencivengo will bring to the bench her broad experience as a skilled lawyer and a Federal magistrate. A graduate of Rutgers University and the University of Michigan Law School, Judge Bencivengo served as a partner and the National Co-Chair of Patent Litigation Group for the international law firm of DLA Piper. In 2005, she received an appointment to become a Magistrate Judge for the Southern District of California, where she has authored more than 170 opinions.

I congratulate Judge Bencivengo and her family on this important day, and urge my colleagues in the Senate to join in voting to confirm this highly qualified nominee to the Federal bench.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

NOT VOTING-4

Kirk Roberts Moran Wicker

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 85, the nays are 11. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I wish to thank my colleagues. This is a tremendous vote here to move forward with one of the most important jobs bills we could do in this session, because we are talking about protecting 1.8 million jobs and the possibility of another 1 million jobs being created through an expanded TIFIA Program which leverages local funds at very little risk to the Federal Government. So this is a good vote.

I wish to take this opportunity now to thank colleagues on both sides of the aisle, but also to thank the over 1,000 groups out there—everyone ranging from left to right and everything in between; from workers organizations, to businesses, to the Chamber of Commerce, to the AFL-CIO. It is rare we can walk down the aisle together.

But now the true test comes. We have a lot of work to do to complete this legislation, to make it real, to give that certainty out there, get those jobs going. We have a lot of work to do. We and VITTER and all the members of the have the Banking Committee which, under the able leadership of Senators JOHNSON and SHELBY, has a title we have to add. We have to add a title from the Finance Committee. We want to add the title from the Commerce Committee. Then we would have all four committees represented in this legislation. Then we can move to get a strong vote and get it to conference, and, I have to say, tell the House side that we have a truly bipartisan bill that deserves their consideration. But if we start seeing amendments that go to issues that are unrelated to thisthe hot-button issues of the day, the issues where we have the ideological divide—we are going to slow this down.

I guess I wish to say to my colleagues on the Democratic side and the Republican side: Please do not mess up this bill and load this bill with extraneous matters. Senator INHOFE and I are very happy to look at germane amendments. We are ready to look at those. We have made an agreement that if we don't agree, we are going to oppose it. We are working together. But extraneous matters don't belong on this bill unless they have overwhelming support and they are not controversial. I am very hopeful, but I have seen bills come to the floor and get loaded down and at the end of the day the American people lose. We cannot afford to lose this bill.

I want my colleagues to imagine 15 Super Bowl stadiums and imagine in your mind's eye what it looks like, and in all of those 15 Super Bowl stadiums every seat is filled, every seat is filled with a construction worker. That is how many construction workers are out of work—more than 1 million. So we cannot fail these workers. We cannot fail these businesses. These are good jobs. The housing crisis is not yet behind us. We have a long way to go. Construction has slowed down. So we need to make sure our construction workers are back on the job. We need to make sure we fix our bridges that are crumbling. We need to make sure we keep goods moving. This is a 21st century economy with an infrastructure that is not keeping up.

I want to take a moment to thank again the members of the Environment and Public Works Committee. Senator SANDERS, who is in the chair, is a very important member who is focused like a laser beam on jobs. He focuses on jobs, jobs, jobs. He knows, as I do, that we didn't get everything we wanted in this bill, not by a long shot. But we know there are times you have to put that aside for the good of the people so we get something done; and something done here is protecting 1.8 million jobs and creating up to 1 million new jobs with our expanded TIFIA.

So I thank the Presiding Officer for his hard work on getting us to this moment. I thank Senator INHOFE for his amazing cooperation; Senators BAUCUS committee; Senators Johnson and SHELBY of Banking; Senator ROCKE-FELLER, who worked so hard with Senator HUTCHISON, and we hope will resolve the outstanding issues in Commerce; Senator BAUCUS, who worked with Senator HATCH, and we did get a good Finance piece.

We are so ready to go. We are going to wait to see whether our colleagues on the other side will insist upon 30 hours going postcloture or whether they will yield back that time and allow us to get started on the amendment process.

So at this moment, I am going to put in a quorum call, note the absence of a quorum, and hope we can quickly move to amend this bill.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. SHAHEEN). The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEGICH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. BEGICH. Madam President, I come to the floor with a simple message about our economy. I know we are in the process of our Transportation bill, and the chairman of the committee may come out momentarily, so I will yield when that moment happens so we keep that process going because that bill is about creating jobs and infrastructure investment. But I just wanted to comment on the fact that we have made incredible progress, and we continue to make incredible progress, when we think about where we were 3 years ago and where we are today.

I know some in Washington like to focus on scare tactics and talk how bad things are or how they could be worse if we continue on whatever path they think we are on. But the fact is we have to look at the recent notifications produced not by a bunch of politicians but by other people who are looking at the economy or investing in the economy or participating in the economy in a pretty direct way. One statistic is reflected on this incredible chart. When we look at it, it speaks for itself.

Just prior to 2009 and a little after, we had about 8 million jobs that were lost. This chart shows we have now had 22 months of consecutive growth, but actually we have had 23 months of consecutive growth. This number, which says we have had 3.2 million new jobs, is actually closer to 3.7 million new jobs in our economy since the great recession started in late 2008, early 2009.

I know people come down and say: Oh, it could be better. I don't know about you, but the way I see it, this was bad; this is better. Can we do better? We always strive to do better. That is the American way. We try to do better as we move on. But there is no question there is good news and job losses are diminishing and now gone with job gains. These are private sector job gains, which is important but, more important, the underlying issue of the job gains is small business.

If we watched the data this last month—when the unemployment rate was estimated to be a little higher, but it actually came out at 8.3, lower than almost every economist thought—all we had to do was look underneath the data point and it was very clear that small businesses were hiring. They are the backbone of this economy. If they are hiring in December and January, in months when people expect-in January especially—the economy will start slowing down, the reason they are hiring is because they see the future and they see increasing sales and the potential

Again, I know we hear people say: Oh, it is not as good as it could be. But 8.3 is better than what everybody figured it would be. Do I want it lower? Does the Presiding Officer want it lower? Of course, we do. But the trend lines are clear.

We also had a 4-year low in U.S. jobless claims, again boosting spending in our economy. An article in CNN in late December noted "consumer confidence shoots higher again." Why is that important? The more consumers are confident about the economy, the more they engage in the economy.

It is interesting to note how low refinancing rates are—3.75 percent, 3.875 percent, unbelievably low. Yet people are still hesitant. But when we start looking at the data points from the last few weeks—especially one that came out yesterday-more and more people are refinancing—a 21-percent increase last month in refinancing. Why is that important? Again, consumers feel confident. The rates are strong for them so they can get a better rate on their home. Net result: More money in their pocket for themselves to spend on their families, on whatever they want to buy—vacations, a new remodel job they want to do, the kitchen they have been holding off fixing up or that fence that is tipping over a little bit. Now they will hire a small contractor to fix it. So consumer confidence is on the rise.

Again, we will hear it is not good enough. Yes, but it doesn't mean we are done. We have a lot of work ahead of us, but we have done incredible things.

In an AP article on February 3, just last week or so, we saw the headline "Homebuilders See Stable Housing Market Ahead." Let me repeat that: stable housing market. Some people will say: It is not a growing housing market. No, but before it was diving, it was sinking, it was disappearing. So "stable" is good. Because when we go from stable and we move to the next level, that is growth.

The automobile industry—GM. I million, a 47-percent increase, and oneknow I talk about this one a lot. Three years ago, it was flat on its back. People said: It is not going to survive; let it go away. Today, GM, according to a January 19 article in Forbes—not a very liberal magazine—"GM is No. 1 in the World Again in Auto Sales." No. 1. Why is that important? Because they are hiring more people, at all ranges in salaries. Their secondary facilitator, the suppliers are hiring more people. People who ship those cars are hiring more people; again, moving forward.

In the Budget Committee a couple days ago, Fed Chairman Bernanke was surprised by this strong growth in manufacturing. Again, a few years ago, people said: Oh, manufacturing, we are never going to get back to the good old days. Again, we see growth. "Industrial Suppliers Power Up Sales," says a Wall Street Journal article from January 21.

Here is another headline—this one from CNBC on December 8: "US State Tax Revenues return to Pre-recession Levels." Why is this important? That shows subeconomies within States and within communities are growingagain, a stronger economy.

Back in my home State, we are making progress on the Chuckchi and Beaufort Seas, where we will see huge potential oil and gas development, with 26 billion barrels of known recoverable oil today. I think it is a lot higher, but that is what we know about. It could provide, once in production, 30,000 jobs and millions in payroll, not just throughout Alaska but throughout this country because that is U.S. oil for U.S. consumption and utilization or export, if we are in the business of selling it. But the point is, it is jobs for Alaskans, jobs for Americans.

This month, Shell got a final air permit for its drillship, putting them one step closer to exploration. There is no question in my mind we are going to make that happen. Three years ago, people were saying: We are never going to do anything in Federal waters. We will never develop our resources in Alaska because it is in Federal hands. and the laws, the rules, the regulations don't allow it. I stand here to say that after just 3 years, National Petroleum Reserve, Chuckchi and Beaufort, billions of barrels of oil are in exploration and/or development. That has happened in just 3 years.

People are right when they say in the last 30 years we have had a lot of sluggish opportunity in that field. But today it is moving forward. In 3 years, there is new activity. That is powerful for our country from a national security perspective but also from an economic security perspective.

We know ConocoPhillips—again, I already mentioned National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska—has now received its permit to move forward, and they hope to start developing in 2013.

In 2010, investments in Alaska's mining exploration totaled more than $264 third of the total spent on mining exploration in the United States overall was in Alaska. There is a new gold rush in Alaska with continued increasing in gold prices. Placer mining applications, generally submitted by small family-run operations, rose from 350 in 2005 to over 581 this year. Alaska even has a reality show called "Gold Rush."

Exports to Alaska topped over $5 billion in 2011, and China is now our No. 1 top trading partner. There are liquefied natural gas opportunities in the Asian market that we are exploring. I can assure you Alaska and Alaska companies have a strong interest in moving forward

The good news is spreading across this country. But as I say, our work is not done. We must continue to build on this progress and secure a long-term economic stability that will protect our middle-class American families and support our small businesses moving forward. We must address the deficit. Unemployment is still too high. It is better, but it is still too high, and our housing market is still a little weak. Europe's economic situation remains uncertain, and we continue to depend on unstable sources of foreign oil.

All of that is why we must move forward on an agenda that will continue to strengthen our economy, protect middle-class families, and support small businesses, including extending the payroll tax cuts and unemployment insurance, developing a true energy plan that includes domestic oil development, address tax reform to protect the middle class, rebuild this country's infrastructure, and strengthen our housing market.

We can and must improve our economy and address long-term fiscal challenges at the same time. Even with hard work ahead, there is a lot of reason for optimism. We are moving in the right direction. We are creating jobs, and we are turning this economy around.

I will end on this note. I spend time looking at every business publication and reading what is going on not just from a global perspective but from companies themselves, and I have been seeing headlines—again, from the Wall Street Journal—such as "Jobs Power Market Rebound: Unemployment Rate Dips to 8.3% on Broad Gains," "Dow at Highest Since May 2008."

Some people say: It is hard to gauge that based on the market. But if you are one of those people who put a little money aside for your retirement—in maybe a 401(k) or an IRA—or you have a little set-aside for the kids to go to college, then you know 2009 was a sad year. You were thinking you were going to have to work a lot longer just to make up some of that money. Today, the market is double what it was then. I would challenge people to take their 2009 March-April statements, if they have them—an education account for their kids or an IRA—and compare that to what it is today. It is better. Can it be even better than it is today? Absolutely. That is what we will continue to strive for.

Again, I am going to continue to come to the floor and talk about this great economic news. I know people want to see the worst in things sometimes, but I think what has made this country great is that, generally, we see the best in things. We see what the opportunities are and we take advantage of them. We risk a little bit—as we did with the auto bailout and the cash for clunkers. We took a little risk and walked the road alone.

Today, that is almost all paid off and, guess what. There is a thriving industry providing jobs all across the country. So we have a lot to be proud of and a lot to look forward to. We just have to keep on the path, take a little risk once in a while, push the envelope, and bank on the American people.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANCHIN). The clerk will call the roll. The bill clerk proceeded to call the

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I now ask unanimous consent that all postcloture time be yielded back and that the motion to proceed be agreed to: that the committee-reported amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, be considered original text for the purposes of further amendment; further, that it be in order for Senator Boxer or designee, on behalf of Senators Johnson and Shelby, the chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee, to call amendment No. 1515, which is at the desk; finally, that following the reporting of the amendment, the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, postcloture time is yielded back and the motion to proceed is agreed to.

"(1) estimate the balance of the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account) at the end of such fiscal year and the end of the next fiscal year, for purposes of which estimation the Secretary shall assume that the obligation limitation on Federal-aid highways and highway safety construction programs is equal to the obligation limitations enacted for those fiscal years in the MAP-21;

"(2) determine if the estimated balance of the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account) would fall below—

- "(A) $2,000,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year for which the obligation limitation is being distributed; or
- (B) $1,000,000,000 at the end of the next fiscal year:

- "(A) Estimate the balance of the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account) at the end of fiscal years 2012 and 2013. For purposes of which estimation, the Secretary shall assume that the obligation limitation on Federal-aid highways and highway safety construction programs will be equal to the obligation limitations enacted for those fiscal years in the MAP-21.

For purposes of this calculation, the Secretary shall assume that the obligation limitation on Federal-aid highways and highway safety construction programs for the fiscal year 2013 will be equal to the obligation limitation for fiscal year 2012, as reduced pursuant to this subparagraph.
- "(D) Adjust the distribution of the fiscal year 2012 obligation limitation to reflect any reduction determined under subparagraph (C).

(other than the Mass Transit Account) for fiscal year 2012 to carry out each of the Federal-aid highway and highway safety construction programs (other than emergency relief and funds under the national highway performance program that are exempt from the fiscal year 2012 obligation limitation) by an aggregate amount equal to the amount of adjustment determined pursuant to paragraph (1)(D). The amounts withdrawn pursuant to this subparagraph are permanently rescinded.

"(b) SOLVENCY CALCULATION FOR FISCAL YEAR 2013 AND FISCAL YEARS THEREAFTER.—

- "(1) ADJUSTMENT OF OBLIGATION LIMITATION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), in distributing the obligation limitation on Federal-aid highways and highway safety construction programs for fiscal year 2013 and each fiscal year thereafter, the Secretary shall—

  - "(A) OBLIGATION LIMITATION.—
- "(i) RECALCULATION.—In a fiscal year in which the Secretary withholds obligation limitation based on the calculation under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall, on March 1 of such fiscal year, repeat the calculations under subparagraphs (A) through (C) of such paragraph. Based on the results of those calculations, the Secretary shall—
- "(I) if the Secretary determines that either of the conditions in paragraph (1)(B) would occur, withdraw an additional amount of obligation limitation necessary to prevent such occurrence; or

- "(ii) LAPSE.—Any obligation limitation that is enacted for a fiscal year, withheld from distribution pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) (or withdrawn under clause (i)(I), and not subsequently distributed under clause (i)(II) shall lapse immediately following the distribution of obligation limitation under such [paragraph] clause.
  - "(B) CONTRACT AUTHORITY.—
- "(i) IN GENERAL.—Upon the lapse of any obligation limitation under subparagraph (A)(ii), an equal amount of the unobligated balances of funds apportioned among the States under chapter 1 and sections 1116, 1303, and 1404 of the SAFETEA-LU (119 Stat. 1177, 1207, and 1228) are permanently rescinded. In administering the rescission required under this [subparagraph] clause, the Secretary shall allow each State to determine the amount of the required rescission to be drawn from the programs to which the rescission applies, except as provided in clause (ii).

"(ii) Rescission of funds apportioned in FISCAL YEAR 2013 AND FISCAL YEARS THERE-AFTER.—If a State determines that it will meet any of its required rescission amount from funds apportioned to such State on or subsequent to October 1, 2012, the Secretary shall determine the amount to be rescinded from each of the programs subject to the rescission for which the State was apportioned funds on or subsequent to October 1, 2012, in proportion to the cumulative amount of apportionments that the State received for each such program on or subsequent to October 1, 2012.

"(3) OTHER ACTIONS TO PREVENT INSOL-VENCY.—The Secretary shall issue a regulation to establish any actions in addition to those described in subsection (a) and paragraph (1) that may be taken by the Secretary if it becomes apparent that the Highway Trust Fund (other than the Mass Transit Account) will become insolvent, including the denial of further obligations.

(4) APPLICABLE ONLY TO FULL-YEAR LIMI-TATION.—The requirements of paragraph (1) apply only to the distribution of a full-year obligation limitation and do not apply to partial-year limitations under continuing appropriations Acts.".

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, our country is unique in the world because it was established on the basis of an idea, an idea that we were all endowed by our Creator with certain unalienable rights—in other words, rights that were conferred not by a king or a President or a Congress, but by the Creator himself. The State protects these rights but it does not grant them. What the State does not grant the State cannot take away. That is what this week's debate on a particularly odious outcome from the President's health care law has been about.

Our Founders believed so strongly that the government should neither establish a religion nor prevent its free exercise that they listed it as the very first item in the Bill of Rights, and Republicans are trying today to reaffirm that basic right. But apparently our friends on the other side do not want to have this amendment or debate. They will not allow those of us who were sworn to uphold the U.S. Constitution to even offer an amendment that says we believe in our first amendment right to religious freedom.

Frankly, this is a day I was not inclined to think I would ever see. I have spent a lot of time in my life defending the first amendment but I never thought I would see the day when the elected representatives of the people of this country would be blocked by a majority party in Congress to even express their support for it, regardless of the ultimate outcome.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

MAP-21

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of my distinguished Republican colleague. The Senate just voted 85 to 11 to invoke cloture on a motion to proceed to the surface transportation bill, a bipartisan bill the sponsors of which, Senator Boxer and Senator Inhofe—an unlikely pairhave joined together to move forward on, a piece of legislation that is extremely important to this country, a bill that will save or create 2 million

There are four parts of this bill within the jurisdiction of four Senate com-

at this time to offer amendment No. mittees. The Environment and Public Works Committee is what we are on now. I have sought to amend that with a provision that is coming from the Banking Committee. We have one coming from the Finance Committee—that has been approved on a bipartisan basis, and we will move after we do those two to the Commerce section. We have not dealt with the Finance Committee provision or the Commerce Committee.

I appreciate that the Republicans never lose an opportunity to mess up a good piece of legislation. We have had that happen now for the last 3 years. We saw it in spades last year. Here is a bipartisan bill to create and save jobs. No one disputes the importance of this legislation. Every State in the Union is desperate for these dollars. We are not borrowing money to do it; it is all paid for. Whether it is the State of West Virginia, the State of Missouri, or the State of Nevada, all the departments of transportation are waiting to find out what is going to happen at the end of March. That is fast approaching. We need to get this done.

Then I hope we can deal with other matters and not get bogged down on this legislation. Let's do the Banking part of this bill. Let's do the Finance part of this bill. Let's do the Commerce part of this bill.

But to show how the Republicans never lose an opportunity to mess up a good piece of legislation, listen to this: They are talking about first amendment rights, the Constitution. I appreciate that. But that is so senseless. This debate that is going on dealing with this issue, dealing with contraception, is a rule that has not been made final yet. There is no final rule. Let's wait until there is at least a rule we can talk about. There is not a final rule. That is all you read about in the newspapers, why there are discussions going on as we speak. There is not a rule. Everybody should calm down. Let's see what transpires.

Until there is a final rule on this, let's deal with the issue before us. That is saving jobs for our country. People can come and talk about the Constitution, the first amendment-I have never seen anything like this before, but I have never seen anything like this before, either. There is no final rule. Why don't we calm down and see what the final rule is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. President, I am, of course disappointed not being able to offer this amendment today, but it is an amendment we talked about for some time. It was a bipartisan amendment. It was a bipartisan piece of legislation. Senator Nelson from Nebraska and I wish to offer it and wish to offer it as soon as possible.

I have the highest regard for both of our leaders, both the majority leader and minority leader, and understand they have a job to do, but this highway bill is clearly going to take some time. This is a 4-page amendment that I would be glad to see voted on on Monday. It has been widely studied all week, this week. I would have been glad to see it voted on when I filed the bill in August. There was not a rule then either, but both Mr. Nelson and I, Senator Rubio, Senator Ayotte, and others were anticipating that we were going to begin to see exactly the kinds of things this discussion this week has brought about.

This is about the first amendment. It. is about religious beliefs. It is not about any one issue. In fact, this amendment specifically does not mention a specific issue. It refers to the issue of conscience. In the amendment itself the reference is made to the letter that in 1809 Thomas Jefferson sent to the New London Methodist, where he says: of all the principles in the Constitution, the one that we perhaps hold most dear, if I could paraphrase it a little bit, is the right of conscience and that no government should be able to come in and impose itself between the people and their faith-based principles.

In health care we have never had this before. Why didn't we need this amendment or why didn't we need the bill that was filed in August 5 years ago or 1 year ago or 2 years ago or 3 years ago? Because only with the passage of the Affordable Health Care Act did we have the government in a position, for the first time ever, to begin to give specific mandates to health care providers.

This bill would simply say those health care providers do not have to follow that mandate if it violates their faith principles, faith principles that are part of a health care delivery system. That could be through any number of different faith groups, and I have talked to a lot of them. Frankly, some of those faith group views of health care do not agree with my views or my faith's views of health care. But that is not the point here. This is not about whether I agree with what that faith group wants to do. It is whether they are allowed to do it; whether the representative of that view of health care and how it affects people is able to say to their government: No, this is something that is protected by the Constitution. It is protected by the first amendment. You cannot require me to provide a service—through a faithbased institution—that I do not agree with or you cannot require me as a health care provider to provide a service that I do not agree with because of my faith.

It doesn't mean you cannot get it somewhere else if it is something that can legally be done. It just means people of faith or institutions of faith do not have to do it. That is why in almost every Catholic church in America, the last two weekends, a letter has been read from the bishop or the archbishop that said this is unacceptable, it should not be complied with.

That is why the Chaplain to the Army, the Chief Archbishop to the Army, Bishop Broglio, sent out a letter to be read at Catholic mass at Army posts all over the country. Initially that letter was not going to be read because it did not agree with the tenets the government was pursuing at the time—which is the violation that people would see most offensive, I think, that the government would actually begin to say to people of faith you cannot even talk about it. You cannot even have that letter read on a military post, from the person who is responsible to the chaplains and the Catholic chaplains in the military.

Maybe it is a faith view of how to deliver health care that somebody in the Christian Science community has or somebody in the Seventh Day Adventist community has or the Southern Baptist community or whatever that might be. The specific thing is not the issue here. The issue here is can government require a faith-based institution to go beyond the tenets of its faith.

I know the Democratic leader, the majority leader, said there is not even a rule yet. The White House said—the administration said there would be a rule. And to make it even more offensive, they said: And, by the way, here is what the rule is going to be and we are going to give you a year to figure out how to adjust your views to accommodate the rule.

I would have been less offended if they said here is the rule and we understand it is in violation of your views but here is what is going to be the rule and you will have to comply with it. The idea they could change your views, your religious views, your religious beliefs, in a year or a lifetime because some Federal regulator says you need to is unbelievably offensive in our country based on the principles that we hold most dear in the Constitution itself.

So this amendment, which is bipartisan in nature and I think easily understood because it is so fundamental to who we are, is an amendment that could be quickly debated, it could be quickly voted on. The Senate of the United States could express its view. I believe that view would be one supportive of institutions of faith.

By the way, also, the administration saying we gave an exemption for the church itself—No. 1, I do not know how long that exemption would last. And, No. 2, I think that shows a lack of understanding of the work of the church or the work of the synagogue or the work of the mosque or the work of people of coming together. If the only thing that matters in their work is what happens within the four walls of the church or whoever works in the four walls of the church every day, these institutions are not what I believe they are.

The great schools, the great hospitals, the great community-providing institutions of America have, so many of them for so long, been based on faith principles. This amendment would say for health care, those faith principles would still be the overriding principle. For health care, if someone does not agree with the direction of the government, they do not have to perform that service. They do not have to provide that specific kind of insurance to their employees.

Remember, the underlying bill here, the underlying rule that has been announced, even though it may not have been officially issued, is one that talks about people who have chosen to go to work for, to get a paycheck for, to work at the direction of a faith-based community. Then to tell that community what your insurance has to look like—that is just one of the many steps. If the government can do that, what can't the government do? If the government can do that, where does the government stop? If the government can do that—when you say this is something I don't believe in so I don't want to be part of this particular health care issue, this health care moment, this health care episode-whatever you want to call it. you say, oh. well, you have to do it because the government says you have to do it and the first amendment does not matter, the protection of conscience doesn't matter, the Jefferson letter to New London Methodist doesn't matter.

Until the enactment of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. this was never an issue and nothing would happen if this amendment was approved and became the law of the land. Nothing would be different tomorrow than it was a year ago, because a year ago people were not doing this. Five years ago nobody would have even thought it was possible, that the Federal Government would tell a faithbased hospital what their insurance plan exactly had to look like, the plan that they offered their employees or would tell faith-based health care providers what they could do and what they could not do or would say if you are not going to do everything the government will pay for, we will not pay you to do anything the government pays for.

This is an issue many people in the country feel strongly about, many people in the Senate, both Democrats and Republicans, feel strongly about. We can let this go on and create the anxiety it creates for the faith community or we can bring this amendment up, debate it—and, frankly, I think it is pretty well understood—debate it, vote on it, and let the country know that we still support the Constitution of the rare occurrence today. It simply re-United States. quires registration for lobbyists who

While I am disappointed I did not get to offer this amendment today, I will be back and I am going to do my best to get this amendment offered at the earliest possible time, and I would be glad to see the Senate join me, and the majority join me, in saying let's get this important issue off the minds of the American people and let them know the Constitution still matters and religious liberty is still the first amendment to the Constitution in the United States.

STOCK ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, 1 week ago we passed a very important good government bill, the one that would make sure Members of Congress cannot benefit from insider trading information. I added to that an amendment that I think is a good government amendment. It calls for people who are involved in political intelligence gathering—we don't hear much about that profession, but it is quite a business. I asked that they be registered just like lobbyists are registered, and I would like to speak to the point of why that is very important and why it is important to bring it to the Senate's attention, even though it passed by a vote of 60 to 39 just a few

In the dark of night on Tuesday of this week, the House released its version of the insider trading bill that goes by the acronym STOCK, which wiped out any chance of meaningful transparency for the political intelligence industry. Think about the chutzpah of the people in the House of Representatives—a small group of people—taking out the language I put in that bill when similar language is cosponsored by 288 Members of the House of Representatives, but it happened. So that bill is coming back without the Grassley amendment on it, and we need to think about what we are going to do if we believe in good government, and if we believe there ought to be more transparency in government.

What we are faced with is a powerful industry that works in the shadows—economic espionage. They don't want people to know what they do or whom they work for. They are basically afraid of sunlight, I would guess. My amendment was adopted in the Senate on a very bipartisan basis, kind of a rare occurrence today. It simply requires registration for lobbyists who seek information from Congress in order to trade on that information.

So isn't it very straightforward if trades are taking place based upon "political intelligence"—that is their word, "economic espionage" is my word-obtained from Congress or the executive branch, people in this country should know who is gathering such information. Not requiring political intelligence professionals to register and disclose their contacts with government officials is a very gaping loophole that my amendment fixes. In fact, political intelligence firms actually brag about this loophole, and I will give an example about that bragging. This is on the Web site of an organization called the Open Source Intelligence Group, a political intelligence firm:

Our political intelligence operation differs from standard 'lobbying' in that the OSINT Group is not looking to influence legislation on behalf of clients, but rather provide unique 'monitoring' of information through our personal relationships between law-makers, staffers, and lobbyists.

Providing this service for clients who do not want their interest in an issue publicly known is an activity that does not need to be reported under the Lobbying Disclosure Act, thus providing an additional layer of confidentially for our clients.

This service is ideal for companies seeking competitive advantage by allowing a client's interest to remain confidential . . .

Think about the words "personal relationships," "confidentiality." Basically, what they are saying is do all this under the radar.

I wish to go back, if you didn't hear it the first time, let me repeat some of this for you, a much shorter quote:

Providing this service for clients who do not want their interests in an issue publicly known is an activity that does not need to be reported under the Lobbying Disclosure Act, thus providing an additional layer of confidentiality for our clients.

We have it here on paper, and I just read it to you. This firm—probably one of many firms; I don't know how many firms are doing this—is telling potential clients: If you don't want anybody to know what you are asking of Federal officials, hire us. That is wrong, but that is why firms such as this don't want to register. If someone on Wall Street is trying to make money off conversations they had with Senators or staff, we should know who they are. It is that plain and simple.

Since the passage of my amendment, which would require political intelligence lobbyists to register as lobbyists, I have heard a great deal of "concern" from the lobbying community. Political intelligence professionals have claimed they should do their business in secret for several reasons.

Now, this is the explanation of why they need secrecy. First, they have said if they are required to register, they will no longer be able to sell information to their clients because people will not want to hire them. That makes me wonder, what do they have to hide?

Second, they have said many of them have large numbers of clients, and it would take them a lot of time to register these large numbers of secret clients. Again, that makes me think we actually need more transparency to find out who are all of these people buying intelligence information.

Third, they have claimed it would not address the so-called "20-percent loophole" that allows people who spend less than 20 percent of their time lobbying from having to register under existing laws as lobbyists. Not too many people know of that 20-percent loophole, but that is a pretty big loophole. A person can lobby, but they don't have to register if they don't spend more than 20 percent of their time on it. Well, on this issue I have some good news for these people. We don't make the mistake that caused the 20-percent loophole. My amendment requires anyone who makes a political intelligence contact to have to register. No loopholes, no deals, no special treatment, just everyone registers.

Finally, I just want to assure people, particularly journalists, that they would not have to register. Now, that information has been floating around, and it has been floating around that some constituents looking for information in order to make a business decision might have to register. Not so. Only political intelligence brokers, people who seek information so others can trade securities, would have to register.

As I said before, if people want to trade stocks from what we do in Congress, we should know who they are. After all, the basic underlying piece of legislation prohibits Members of Congress from having insider trading information and profiting from it. We ought to know with whom we are dealing. The American people deserve a little sunshine from this industry and on this industry.

Last night, the House turned away from transparency. They supported the status quo. What we need is a full and open conference process so we can take up this very important issue once again that the House believes was somehow not very important, even though 288 Members of the House of Representatives—that is two-thirds of the House of Representatives—have signed on to this principle that these people ought to register. We can take that up then in conference, both the House and Senate, working together.

Is every word in this bill the way it ought to be? If somebody wants to point out some things that ought to be changed, I am open to that. But don't forget, 288 people in the House have signed on. It can't be too bad.

So if we don't get to conference or if we have to debate this again on the floor of the Senate, we might not get 60 votes again. So I worry we will miss the best opportunity we have had for openness and transparency in years.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. Wyden pertaining to the introduction of S. 2098 are printed in today's Record under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANKEN). The Senator from Minnesota.

NEW ENERGY AGENDA

Ms. KLOBUCHAR. Mr. President, I am on the floor today to discuss something that has been a top priority for me in the Senate; that is, the critical need to get serious about building a new energy agenda for America, one that keeps our businesses competitive in the global economy, preserves the integrity of our environment, and restarts the engine that has always kept our country moving forward—and that is innovation. I am specifically focused on the energy tax extenders, those that are so necessary for us to keep going in the area of homegrown and renewable energy.

We all know there is no single solution for getting us there. What we need is not a silver bullet; we need a silver buckshot, as we like to say in Minnesota.

I have talked about the need with many of my colleagues to continue developing alternative resources such as hydro, geothermal, biofuels, solar, wind, and we have also talked about how we need to continue to develop existing technologies such as domestic oil and gas production while enforcing appropriate safeguards. This is the very "all-of-the-above" approach we need to take in order to keep all options on the table.

This means exploring some of the new proposals we have seen with promising technologies such as the smart grid. But it also means extending the critical tax incentives that have been so important in advancing the development of the next generation of biofuels and the next generation of renewable energy. That is why I have pushed to ensure that we have the right policies in place for encouraging clean energy innovation, including the biodiesel tax credit which supports over 31,000 jobs and has allowed domestic production to more than double since 2011. It means the production tax credit, which made it possible for wind power to represent over one-third of all new electricity generation capacity in the United States last year.

Think of that figure. Think of the strides we have made and where we can go in the future. The advanced energy manufacturing tax credit has leveraged $5.4 billion in private investment, boosting growth and creating new U.S. manufacturing jobs by producing components and equipment for the burgeoning global renewable energy industry.

Extending these critical tax credits will help strengthen our country's clean energy businesses so they can continue to grow and thrive. But they are just one part of the equation. Again, there is no silver bullet solution to our Nation's energy challenges, and that is why we need to be willing to come together to hammer out a comprehensive strategy for moving forward. We cannot afford to keep our heads buried in the sand. We cannot afford to let yet another golden opportunity pass us by. Sadly, too many have already come and gone.

Over the years, I believe there have been—especially in this last decade—several moments when we could have acted but didn't when we had the full support of the American people who had wanted a new direction in energy policy. The first was immediately after 9/11 when President Bush—if he had made a new energy policy one of the challenges to the country in addition to invading Afghanistan and combating terrorism, I believe we could have moved forward. But that didn't happen, and there is no need to dwell on it today.

The second moment was before the arrival of the Presiding Officer in the Congress, and that was in the summer of 2008 when we did take action to raise gas mileage and energy-efficiency standards—something I like to call building a bridge to the next century—but we didn't make the kind of comprehensive progress on a comprehensive energy plan that we should have made.

The third moment was when President Obama first came into office. At that time, I advocated for a clean energy standard that I believe could have passed in the first 6 months. It could have been combined with some of the other comprehensive things we were talking about. We had a bipartisan group going at the time, a group of 14 of us. But, instead, a decision was made to focus on cap and trade later, instead of starting with that clean energy standard and building from that.

Those were missed opportunities, a chain of missed opportunities. But until we get serious about building a newer energy agenda for America, we are going to continue to struggle with the consequences which have created a vicious cycle of economic and environmental costs, not least of all those caused by climate change.

Climate change, as the Presiding Officer knows, is not just about melting glaciers and rising ocean levels. Shifting global trends have the potential to wreak intense havoc on local economies, particularly those anchored in agricultural. The facts stand for themselves.

In January 2010, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission said for the first time that public companies should add climate change to the list of possible financial or legal impacts that they actually disclose to investors.

The Bureau of Economic Analysis, at the Department of Commerce, estimates that at least one-third of the U.S. gross domestic product is weather and climate sensitive, with a potential economic impact of $4 trillion a year. Much of that impact would be wrung out of our farm communities and from States with large rural populations, such as my own. Any farmer will tell you a change in weather can mean the difference between a bumper crop and a complete disaster-regardless of how hard that farmer works. So it goes without saying that any kind of significant swing in climate—paired with increasingly unpredictable rainfall could pose a problem to Americans who make their living off the land.

In 2008, Minnesota's farms, forests, and ranches produced $18 billion in goods and exported close to one-third of that. This is a sector that is critically important to our economy, and we cannot afford for it to be jeopardized. We also cannot afford the rising costs of fire management, as forest fires have become increasingly intense in recent years.

The current path is not sustainable. That is why I am on the floor, in the hope that we can spark a meaningful conversation, but, most specifically, that we look at extending those energy tax credits.

I believe we can take a page from our State, the State of Minnesota.

My home State is proof that policies promoting homegrown energy can also promote business growth and job creation. The unemployment rate in the State of Minnesota is 5.7 percent—well below the national average—and part of that is thanks to our energy policies. In fact, a recent report by the Pew Charitable Trust showed that in the last decade Minnesota jobs in this sector grew by 11.9 percent, compared to 1.9 percent for jobs overall.

As I travel around the State, I can see the progress that has been made. I think of places I have visited, such as Sebeka, MN, where a small telephone company felt their customers who were in extremely rural areas needed backup power supplies. So what did they do? They found a way to combine wind turbines and solar panels so their customers could actually purchase backup power. They did it themselves, and they sold it to their customers.

It was very popular, and at one point an 80-year-old man came to see them, and he said: I would like to purchase more. I want to do my whole house in solar. The telephone company said: Sir, you can do that, but it will take you about 10 years to get your investment back, but it is going to be worth it. Do you mind if we ask how old you are? The man said: I am 80 years old but I want to go green.

That is one of those true stories from the State of Minnesota.

Then there is Pentair, a Minneapolisbased water solutions company that has donated a custom-designed Rain Water Recycling System to the new and great Target baseball field. That technology will capture, conserve, and reuse rainwater, saving the ballpark more than 2 million gallons of water each year.

In one of General Mills' manufacturing plants, they have developed their own innovative way to reuse water—diverting it to the local municipal golf course to water the grass.

These are just a few examples of Minnesota's commitment to energy innovation. There are countless stories out there, but it is not just a Minnesota story, it is an American story.

I would note that the renewable energy standard in Minnesota—25 by 25— is one of the most aggressive in the country—30 percent for Xcel—and yet our unemployment rate is so much better than the rest of the country.

The quest to develop clean, sustainable, homegrown energy is not specific to just one part of the country or, for that matter, just one political party. Our renewable energy standard was actually nearly unanimously adopted by the legislature—Democrats and Republicans—and signed into law by a Republican Governor, Governor Pawlenty. This is an issue I believe can and should unite us, and it is a way to address these concerns because it builds a coalition across a broad spectrum; that is, energy policy. It saves money. It is better for the environment. It is certainly better for our national security, producing our own homegrown energy.

In the past, Democrats and Republicans have managed to come together to confront tough challenges—from the Civil Rights Act in the 1960s, to keeping Social Security solvent in the 1980s, to welfare reform in the 1990s.

But perhaps the most fitting example, in the context of combating climate change, is the Clean Air Act. As the Presiding Officer knows, that landmark bill took the first steps to address acid rain and expanded efforts to control toxic air pollutants.

When the bill passed in the 1990s, it had strong bipartisan support from Democrats and Republicans alike. It is worth mentioning that all 10 Members of the Minnesota delegation at the time, which included 5 Democrats and 5 Republicans—that was our Federal delegation—supported the bill, including Republican Senator Dave Durenberger, who was among its chief authors and staunchest supporters.

Since then, the Clean Air Act has helped prevent more than 18 million child respiratory illnesses and 300,000 premature deaths.

Policies to protect our rivers, lakes, and streams have also had a positive impact on people's health.

Coming from the "Land of 10,000 Lakes," I have a unique appreciation for the importance of clean water. It is the resource that sustains our lakes and rivers, that provides critical habitat to countless fish and millions of migratory birds, that fuels our thriving outdoor economy.

Hunting and fishing are more than just hobbies in our State, I say to the Presiding Officer. They are a way of life, and they are critically important to our economy.

Every year, nearly 2 million people fish our lakes and our streams, and close to 700,000 people hunt our fields and forests.

Nationwide, the hunting and fishing industry is valued at $95.5 billion a year, and it brings in $14 billion in revenue. Clean water is a fundamental pillar in supporting this economic sector and protecting people against dangerous toxins such as mercury.

Minnesota has passed some of the most stringent mercury rules in the country. In 2006, our State legislature passed laws requiring our largest powerplants to cut mercury emissions 90 percent by 2015. The Federal Government is finally catching up and will publish a requirement in coming days to make similar reductions by 2016.

Yet despite everything we have done to combat mercury pollution, we are still grappling with its consequences. A recent analysis of 25 years of data has found an unexpected rise in average mercury levels in northern pike and walleye from Minnesota lakes. After declining by 37 percent from 1982 to 1992, average mercury concentrations in these fish began to increase in the mid 1990s.

During the last decade of that period, 1996 to 2006, average mercury concentrations increased 15 percent. These numbers make one of the clearest possible arguments for supporting Federal protection, because we all have a stake in protecting the health of our fish and wildlife, and we cannot do that if we cannot keep dangerous toxins out of our air and water supply.

This is important to our economy, but it is also important to maintaining a certain way of American life, a way of life that many of us grew up with that we ought to be able to pass on to future generations. I grew up in a family that valued the outdoors. I was 18 years old before I took any vacation that did not involve a tent or a camper in one way or another.

This did not just start with my parents. My grandpa was an avid hunter and fisherman. He worked 1,500 feet underground in the mines in Ely, MN.

You can imagine why for him hunting was his way of life. This was his way out. When he got above ground from those mines, it was something he loved to do. I want future generations of Minnesotans to be able to enjoy these same pastimes. I want them to be able to fish in clean water, to hunt in abundant forests, and to camp out in our beautiful wilderness. But I also want them to know the same America we know, an America that is innovative, that is forward thinking, that is willing to come together and hammer out hard-won solutions to tough challenges.

Nowhere is this more important than our quest to move America forward through smarter energy and environmental policies. I cannot help but think, this is our generation's version of the space race and energy race. But the finish line will not be Neil Armstrong placing a flag on the Moon. It will be building the next generation of energy-efficient windows, and doing it in northern Minnesota instead of in China, or an electric car battery factory in Memphis, TN, instead of Mumbai, India, or a wind turbine manufacturer in San Jose, CA, instead of Sao Paulo, Brazil.

This is my vision for an energy America that is energy independent, a stronger, more innovative America. I know you all want to same thing. That is why I am here on the floor today, because I know we cannot continue to get by with piecemeal energy policy. We cannot play red light-green light with our tax incentives as we are doing this year, and that is why we have to put them in place again.

What we need now is a comprehensive national blueprint for energy policy, a solution that will serve the integrity of our air, of our water and natural resources, that gives businesses the incentives to research and develop new sources of energy that invest in the next generation of American innovation.

That is our challenge. It is not going to happen overnight, but I believe we will get it done. We have before; we will do it again. One way to start is to make sure we extend these energy tax credits.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, there is an old political axiom that is attributed to Thomas Jefferson, more recently to Gerald Ford, that says: A government that is big enough to give you everything you want is also big enough to take it all away.

Those words took on a whole new meaning this last week when we found out the Secretary of the Health and Human Services Department, Kathleen Sebelius, was issuing new regulations with regard to the health care act that passed last year that would apply to religious-affiliated universities, charities, and hospitals.

I think we have to remember exactly why it was that many of our fore-fathers came to this country in the first place. They came, in many cases, because they were trying to get away from religious persecution in their homelands. So they came to the United States with the desire to start anew and to assert that in this new government they formed that they would protect freedoms, basic freedoms, such as religious liberty.

So in the Declaration of Independence they said:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are [the rights to] Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness.—[In order] to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

So that was a foundational principle of our democracy, and it was enshrined, when they wrote the Constitution, in the first amendment of the Bill of Rights, when they said:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. . . .

It was the very first right they enshrined in the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of the United States. That was the weight they attached to the important issue of religious liberty, and it was consistent with the statement in the Declaration of Independence, where it says that those rights are endowed by our Creator. They are not given to us by a State. They are not given to us by government. They are something that is endowed by our Creator. The government is here to protect those rights.

So when this issue popped up on many people's radar screen-and, of course, it has been percolating out there for quite a while, but there had been an opportunity to weigh in and to provide comments, with the hope that the Department of Health and Human Services would come to the right conclusion and exempt religious-affiliated schools, hospitals, and charities—when that was not going to be the case and they were going to require these very organizations to do something that violated their consciences and violated the teachings and the practices of their faith, many people across this country—we have all heard from them—got very engaged on this issue.

It seems to me, at least, there is a very simple answer to this; that is, the administration could go back and revisit this issue and more broadly make this exemption not just for churches—which is where it is today—but also for church schools, church hospitals, church universities.

It was interesting, Tuesday morning the minority leader in the Senate, Senator McConnell, was out here talking about this issue, and he mentioned:

One out of six patients in America is treated at a Catholic hospital. Catholic Charities is the largest private provider of social services to poor children, families, and individuals in America. The Catholic Church runs the largest network of private schools in the country.

He goes on to say:

These institutions have thrived because they have been allowed to freely pursue their religious convictions in a country that, until now, respected their constitutional right to do so.

He went on to say in that statement: If the rights of some are not protected, the rights of all are in danger.

I think what has many of the churches across this country and many of the universities and many of the hospitals concerned about is that this is going to become a finalized regulation.

The proponents of the regulation are saying there is a year to comply with it. I would submit to you that asking people in this country to check their principles at the door not now but a year from now is not making any kind of an accommodation.

This needs to be reversed. This is clearly a violation of religious liberty, the protection and right we have in the first amendment of our Constitution in our Bill of Rights, and I hope the administration will do the right thing and acknowledge that they have made a mistake, that they have gone too far, that they have overreached, that they have treaded in an area they should not tread and make this right. The way to make this right is to reverse this decision.

Some have argued: What is that going to mean? Does that mean people in this country are not going to have access to contraceptive services? The answer to that is absolutely not. Contraception would be widely available. It is just that religious-affiliated employers would not be forced to fund this coverage which violates the tenants of their faith. It does not have anything to do with contraception. It does not have anything to do with that issue at all. What it has to do with is the issue of religious liberty and whether we are going to respect that or are we going to allow that to be eroded, and who knows where this goes next.

The other point I would make is, this is also, I think, an example of what happens when you get a government that is so big it can give you everything you want but also big enough to take it all away. There are a lot of people who, when this was debated, when the affordable care act was debated, argued—myself included—this would lead to government running more of our lives, making more decisions, intruding more, having more control, and making decisions with regard to people's health care.

I would submit this is an example—and perhaps example No. 1—of that very fact. What we are seeing now is, the affordable care act—as it gets implemented, we are giving more and more power to the Federal Government, and when we do that, when big government gets bigger and bigger, it has more latitude when it comes to running over the rights of ordinary Americans. This is a perfect example of that.

I could go down the list of other regulations. I have come down to the floor many times to talk about regulatory overreach, excessive regulations that go way beyond common sense, that do not deal with issues of public health and safety but are simply regulations for regulation's sake.

People have heard me come down and talk about the Department of Labor's efforts now to regulate the young people who work on family farms and ranches and the overly proscriptive way in which they are trying to keep young people from performing duties they learned growing up that they are trained to do, that contribute to the overall success and prosperity of family farms and ranches.

The Department of Labor's proposal right now would restrict young people from working at elevations that are more than 6 feet, from working with farm animals that are more than 6 months old, from working around grain elevators or stockyards or operating certain kinds of equipment, many pieces of equipment, types of equipment that are fairly standard on a farming operation. It strikes at the very heart of what makes a family farm and ranch operation tick. It is an assault on the heartland of this country and the culture and values that have helped shape it and make it great.

So this issue of regulatory overreach and big government is an issue that I think is symbolized by this current debate. What we are having is a debate about the reach of government to where they can start coming up with regulations under the new health care law that clearly violate the religious liberty protections that are afforded for people in this country under the first amendment and which I think our Founders, if they were around today, would find incredibly offensive.

This is an affront, an assault on these very liberties. It is an assault on our Bill of Rights, our Constitution. It is something the administration should walk back from and make right. They can do that very simply by reversing this or widening or broadening this exemption to cover religious-affiliated schools, universities and charities. And they could do that right now.

I would hope that would be the case. If it is not, there is legislation that has been proposed here. A number of my colleagues have already filed bills. In fact, Senator Blunt was down here earlier today and asked to call up an amendment that would address this issue. It was objected to on the grounds that it is not related to the underlying bill, the highway bill. Well, if it is not related to the highway bill, then let's provide an opportunity for Congress to weigh in on this. I can tell you one thing, the American people are weighing in on this. This Congress of the United States, as their representatives, needs to stand for the American people and, more importantly, needs to defend the Constitution of the United States. If the administration is going to take this step, and if the administration is not going to walk back from this, this Congress of the United States needs to be heard.

There will be numerous attempts until that opportunity is presented by my colleagues and me to make sure this wrong is fixed, is corrected, and that the religious liberties for which our Founders came to this country and for which so many have fought and died over the years to defend are protected, and those rights that are enshrined in our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution and our Bill of Rights are protected for the American people.

I yield the floor.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

OBSERVING NATIONAL INVENTORS' DAY

• Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, today I would like to focus attention on inventors. Senate Joint Resolution 140. Public Law 97-198, designated February 11, the anniversary of the birth of the inventor Thomas Alva Edison, as National Inventors' Day.

Each year we recognize the contributions of those who use their imagination and skills to conceive, create, concoct, discover, devise, and formulate new devices, machines, and processes in order to receive patents, trademarks, and copyrights.

Inventors play an enormously important role in promoting progress in every aspect of our lives. Invention and innovation are basic to the technological and manufacturing strength of the United States and our economic. environmental, and social well-being.

The Constitution specifically provides for the granting of exclusive rights to inventors for their discoveries. During the First Congress, President George Washington prevailed upon the House and Senate to enact a patent statute and wisely advised that "there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage than the promotion of science."

In our State, since our Nation's bicentennial, over 1,600 patents have been issued to Alaska residents. The ingenuity of our citizens is reflected in the variety of patents issued such as a contaminated sea ice containment, separation, and removal system; an audible fishing weight; and a fish pin bone removal apparatus—just to name a few.

In recent years, over 500 new applications have been received by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office from Alaskans involving wells, hydraulic and earth engineering, and electric conductors and insulators.

I applaud the efforts of support groups in Alaska such as the Inventors Institute of Alaska, Alaska Inventors and Entrepreneurs, and the Patent and Trademark Resource Center.

The genius of inventors is key to our future. The next great American invention could be among the patent applications pending at the Patent Office.

On the observance of National Inventors' Day, I urge all Alaskans to reflect on contributions of inventors and to take part in appropriate programs and activities.

REMEMBERING CHIEF MASTER. SERGEANT LUTHER JEFFERSON, SR.

• Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am honored to salute the life and service of retired CMSgt Luther Jefferson, Sr., who served as a Tuskegee Airman in the 332nd Fighter Group. Chief Jefferson will be remembered not only for his valor and service to his country but also for his compassion, optimism, and generous spirit. He died at his home in Victorville, California on January 19, 2012

Luther Jefferson was born March 23, 1923, in Cotton Valley, LA, and was the fifth of 11 children born to Andrew and Sue Willie Curry Jefferson. Reared in poverty on a sharecropper's farm, Luther was determined to work hard, study diligently, and maintain a positive outlook on life.

In March 1943, Luther Jefferson was drafted into the U.S. military. While completing basic training at the Army Air Base in Greenberg, NC, he learned of an experimental training program for African-American pilots, based at the Tuskegee Institute and Tuskegee Army Air Field in Alabama. After passing the required examination and being accepted into the program, he was assigned to the 332nd Fighter Group's 99th Fighter Squadron—part of an elite group now known as the Tuskegee Airmen. Logging more than 5,000 hours in aircraft that included the P-40 Fighter and B-25s, he helped protect Army Air Corps bombers in Italy during WWII and participated in the post-WWII Berlin Airlift. Following the war, Jefferson was assigned to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base at Dayton, OH in the Research and Development Section of New Aircraft and Human Characteristics—as one of a select few chosen to test new aircraft and combat simulavehicle escape tool; an ocean spill and tions. Luther Jefferson also participated in the Dugway Proving Ground atomic test in Utah. By the time he retired from the U.S. Air Force in 1972, Luther Jefferson had become one of the branch's first African-American chief master sergeants.

As a civilian, Chief Jefferson remained active in his community and volunteered as a Little League umpire and a Meals-on-Wheels driver for homebound seniors.

Luther Jefferson, Sr., passed away at 88 years of age. I extend my heartfelt condolences to his two siblings Avis Jefferson and Alice Shaw; three children, Deborah Jefferson, Yvonne Atkinson, and Andrew Jefferson; and his six grandchildren, extended family, and numerous friends.

I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the life of Tuskegee Airman CMSgt Luther Jefferson, Sr.

HONORING CAPTAIN CARLTON JACOB HOLLAND, JR. USA

BARRASSO. Mr. President, today I honor Captain Jake Holland, United States Army, for his service in defense of Wyoming and our Nation.

Captain Holland of Casper, WY, was an Army Ranger assigned to the 48th Army of the Republic of Vietnam, Advance Team 88, Headquarters, Military Assistance Command-Vietnam Advisors, Military Assistance Command. He was stationed in the Central Highlands of Phuoc Long Province as a MACV advisor to the South Vietnamese.

The Central Highlands were a critical supply route for the Viet Cong through the Ho Chi Minh Trail. The MACV mission was infamously known as one of the most dangerous missions for ground troops. They deployed deep into the jungle in small teams of four to train and assist the South Vietnamese Army and the indigenous Montagnard fighters.

Early in the morning on February 9, Captain Holland and his men came under attack. They were outmanned and outgunned by the Viet Cong but that did not dissuade their determination to resist the attack on Bu Dang Compound.

As the enemy advanced closer to the compound demanding surrender over loud speakers, Captain Holland established a perimeter with his remaining forces. He picked up a .50 caliber machine gun and moved from position to position, exposing himself with each burst of fire. After all of the ammunition ran out, Captain Holland and his men succumbed to their wounds but they never gave up the fight. He was 36 years old.

Forty-seven years ago today, on February 9, 1965, Wyoming suffered its first casualty of the Vietnam War. For his valiant actions on this fateful day, Captain Holland was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the second highest honor in the Army. His decorations also included the Purple Heart Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Vietnam Service Medal, and the Vietnam Campaign Medal.

Today, Captain Holland lays in rest with his brothers in arms at Arlington National Cemetery in Section 35, site 3621. His name is engraved on Panel 01E, Line 86 at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

In Wyoming we never forget. It is through this tradition that we make every effort to honor and remember those who have selflessly made the ultimate sacrifice. We hold Captain Holland's service and valor high.●

RECOGNIZING WEST NOTTINGHAM ACADEMY

• Mr. CARDIN, Mr. President, I wish to recognize the 200th anniversary of the chartering and relocation of West Nottingham Academy in Colora, MD. West Nottingham Academy is recognized as the oldest boarding school in the nation 267 years after the school's original founding. West Nottingham Academy was founded in 1744 by Samuel Finley, a young Presbyterian minister from Ireland who later became president of Princeton. The school prepared boys for university study, and two early graduates, Benjamin Rush and Richard Stockton, went on to sign the Declaration of Independence. In 1812, West Nottingham Academy was granted a Charter by the State of Maryland, and moved to its present location. Notable alumni include Maryland Governor Austin Lane Crothers, Cincinnati founder John Filson, North Carolina Governor Alexander Martin, and Pennsylvania Congressman Peter Kostmaver.

West Nottingham Academy has evolved from its humble beginnings as a log cabin addition to Samuel Finley's home to a modern campus that is home to 120 boarding and day students in grades 9-12 representing eight States and ten countries. Student life is enriched outside the classroom by interscholastic sports teams, service learning opportunities, student-led clubs, and educational excursions to Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Washington.

West Nottingham Academy uses an innovative, student-centered academic approach which celebrates students' many learning styles through a variety of teaching methods. The student-centered approach is exemplified in West Nottingham's Chesapeake Learning Center, where students with learning differences receive support services uniquely tailored to help each student reach his or her full potential.

I would ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating West Nottingham Academy on the bicentennial of its chartering and relocation, and on over 200 years of providing educational opportunity and leadership to Maryland and our Nation. ●

TRIBUTE TO SERGEANT FIRST CLASS JEREMIAH MOCK

• Mr. HELLER. Mr. President, today I wish to honor SFC Jeremiah Mock on the occasion of his oath of reenlistment in the Nevada Army National Guard. His commitment to the citizens of the Silver State is unwavering, and Nevada is honored by his service.

I would first like to recognize all of our Nation's service men and women. Each and every day, our troops are serving the United States to protect our freedom. They dedicate their lives to serve this great Nation and constantly make grave sacrifices to ensure the safety of our country. Our servicemembers and their families deserve our gratitude and thanks.

Before serving in the Nevada National Guard, Sergeant Mock served 9 years in the Army Reserve, where he was deployed repeatedly on combat tours to Iraq and Afghanistan. His continued dedication to service led him to join the Nevada National Guard in 2007, and he continues to serve his State, despite becoming the innocent victim of a brutal shooting in Carson City, NV, on September 6, 2011. I will never forget this tragic event, and I continue to send my thoughts and prayers to the victims and their families.

I commend Sergeant Mock for his bravery and thank him for his faithful service to his State and country. I also wish to recognize Sergeant Mock's wife, SSG Stephanie Mock, who enlisted in the Nevada Air National Guard shortly after the tragic events of September 6, 2011. The Mock family is a true inspiration and illustration of a proud Nevada family who have overcome great hardship through faith and determination.

I congratulate Sergeant Mock on his reenlistment and am humbled by him and all of our courageous service men and women. Let us continue to be mindful of our dedicated servicemembers who fight to protect and preserve the ideals of freedom and democracy.

RECOGNIZING MIYAKE RESTAURANTS

• Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, one of the proudest American traditions is that of an individual who starts out on his or her own, takes a risk, and opens a successful business. Such entrepreneurs are the true drivers of our economy, creating jobs and supporting other small enterprises while revitalizing the areas in which they operate. Today I commend chef Masa Miyake of Miyake Restaurants, who has done exactly this in the city of Portland. ME.

In 2007, Masa was working as a chef in New York City and living in Queens with his wife and two young children. He dreamt of relocating to a place that offered a better quality of life for his children and somewhere with savory seafood. Maine offered him all of these things, and having vacationed on Maine's coast in the past, the State reminded him of the beauty of his native Japan. Coincidentally, Masa actually grew up in Japan's Aomori Prefecture in northern Japan, Maine's sister state.

When Masa opened Food Factory Miyake later that year in Portland, he and his wife and eventually one other person were the sole employees of the operation. As a small firm starting out, they did not have a liquor license, and initially the business was BYOB—bring your own beverage. But through hard work and ingenuity, Masa grew the business and built a respected brand, not to mention an excellent selection of authentic drink pairings including wine and sake.

Today, Masa's two restaurants—the revitalized original Miyake and the new Pai Men Miyake noodle restaurant—employ over 38 individuals. Maine is well known for its first-class seafood, and is really beginning to make a name for itself in the trendy world of sushi and haute Asian-fusion cuisine, thanks in no small part to chef Masa Miyake.

Further, Masa has developed his 3-acre backyard into a small farm. Here, Masa and his staff grow vegetables and raise livestock to directly supply his restaurants and other local Maine businesses, including Rosemont Markets, Hugo's, and the Barn on Walnut Hill. These include rare animals such as blue Swedish ducks, Freedom Ranger chickens, and guinea hens. This dynamic blend greatly enhances the rich culture of our State, and I congratulate Chef Miyake for his innovative approach to food and hope other budding entrepreneurs will follow his lead.

I am proud to extend my congratulations to chef Masa Miyake not only for his substantial contribution to the culinary scene in Maine but also for recognizing and highlighting the appeal of Maine as a great place to raise a family and start a business. Job creators with vision and big ideas like Chef Miyake are exactly what Maine needs as we work to restore and improve the economy in our small but vibrant and beautiful State. I offer my best wishes for continued success to Miyake Restaurants and look forward to Chef Miyake's future succulent dishes.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. HELLER:

S. 2080. A bill to authorize depository institutions, depository institution holding companies, Fannie Mae, and Freddie Mac to lease foreclosed property held by such entities for up to 5 years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. HELLER. Mr. President, when our Nation's economy was thriving, Nevada was at the heart of the construction boom. Buildings and homes were going up across the State. Neighborhoods were growing, schools were being built at record rates, and the construction industry was flourishing. All of this activity drove investments into other areas of the economy, and for many life was good in Nevada. But when the crisis hit, the highs that my State experienced were matched by the lows that followed.

Nevada now leads the Nation in unemployment with more than 160,000 Nevadans looking for a job. Many can no longer afford their homes. Nevadans are being forced into bankruptcy and facing foreclosure. While Nevada is home to some of the most resilient, hard-working people in the country, almost one-quarter of Nevadans are so frustrated that they have simply given up hope for better employment.

Much of the difficulty Nevadans are experiencing can be traced back to the crisis in my State. The ill effects of the depressed housing market are widespread. High rates of foreclosures are devastating to families, neighborhoods, and entire communities. Families who have been foreclosed upon are already having a hard time paying their bills. Add to those difficulties the time spent finding a new place and the costs of moving and their problems are compounded. Time spent fighting the bank to avoid foreclosure and relocating would likely be better used to find a job or better paying employment.

One of the biggest problems distressed home owners are facing is the programs that have been put into place to help keep people in their homes that have not lived up to expectations. My office spends a great deal of time with Nevadans on the cusp of losing their homes, looking for help, and trying to keep families in their homes. It is truly heart wrenching to hear some of these stories. These homeowners do not want to foreclose, and obviously they do not want to lose their homes.

I recently received this e-mail from a constituent in Reno who is fighting to keep their home. I would like to share that with you.

We hoped for a win-win situation but in the end all we got was a nightmare in which everyone loses: my sister and I obviously lose, our neighborhood loses as another house sits vacant with a rusting metal sign in the front, our State loses as the housing plight increases again, the bank loses because they lose a customer who just needed another chance and, most importantly, democracy loses as the plutocrats roll over another family.

When families move, their children often have to change schools. So now not only are children forced to move from their homes, they are also leaving behind their schools and their neighborhoods. This kind of destabilization is harmful for families who are already struggling.

Consider the effects of foreclosures on neighborhoods and communities. The widespread availability of housing is flooding the real estate inventory in Nevada. This is forcing down home values and making it difficult for other people to sell their homes as well. In February 2006 the average home in Nevada was valued at $309,000. Today the home values have dropped to $120,000.

Homes left vacant and uncared for can quickly become an eyesore, pushing low home values even lower. This means others in the neighborhood can have a difficult time selling their homes if they want to move. If they find a better job elsewhere, for example, they may not be able to take it because they cannot sell their homes for a reasonable price, if they are able to sell them at all.

Today I am introducing legislation to help reverse these destabilizing forces. The bill I am introducing today, the Keeping Families in their Home Act, will help address large unsold housing inventories and give families a chance to stay in their homes. This bill would allow banks, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, to enter into long-term leases, including an option to purchase properties acquired through foreclosure with the prior homeowner or any individual.

By providing an opportunity for the homeowner to stay in their home, the bank is giving families a chance to regain sound financial footing. This commonsense solution helps provide some much needed stability is available for all families.

While I believe this bill is a good step in the right direction, let me be clear: much more needs to be done to help the housing problems facing Nevada. The programs already in place simply have not done enough and have not lived up to expectations.

I was pleased to see reports of growth in our economy, but people in my State continue to suffer. Back home Nevadans still believe there are no jobs. Small businesses are trying to survive while gridlock in Washington is making it harder for employers to know what is expected in the coming year. Crushing regulations are bringing Nevada's growth industries to a halt. In order for Nevada to experience real long-term recovery, Washington needs to fundamentally change the way it works. Congress needs to stop overspending. Republicans and Democrats should come together to close unfair loopholes and make the Tax Code easier for businesses to understand and to follow. This bill is just one solution to help turn around this housing crisis. It is also an idea that both Republicans and Democrats can support.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to pass this bill and others into law so that we can help families dealing with foreclosures across the country. As I have said before, moving forward I welcome any and all ideas on how to fix the housing crisis in this country. Nevadans cannot afford to wait any longer.

In the meantime, I urge my colleagues to seriously consider supporting this bill. This legislation can go a long way toward helping families, stabilizing neighborhoods, and stem any further reduction in home prices. I hope Senators will join me in this endeavor so the President can sign this bill into law and help families who badly need it.

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER:

S. 2088. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to permanently double the amount of start-up expenses entrepreneurs can deduct from their taxes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Small Business Start-up Support Act of 2012, legislation that will promote small business growth in my home state of West Virginia, and around the country.

Since the recession, I have met with countless business owners, as well as those who dream of starting a small business. One of the common themes of these conversations is the difficulty these individuals have raising capital, particularly when a business is in its infancy.

This legislation helps those individuals out, by expanding a successful provision of the tax code that allows business owners to deduct up to $5,000 of start-up costs. These start-up costs are things like legal and marketing costs that are necessary to get a business up and running, but put a strain on an already tight budget. My bill would expand this deduction so that individuals can deduct up to $10,000 of start-up costs.

For a business to survive, and thrive, its owner has to do their homework during its infancy. They have to study things like supply chains and distribution models. They have to develop marketing plans. Each of these things has a cost that is incurred before a business makes dollar one. That is when a business owner is most in need of assistance and that is why this credit was first enacted.

A temporary expansion of the startup deduction was enacted in 2008, and it was one of many actions this Congress took to help business owners weather the recession and keep their doors open. President Obama included a permanent extension of this provision in his "Startup America" legislative agenda and I am committed to seeing it become law.

I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation and thank the chair for allowing me to speak on this issue.

By Mr. ENZI:

S. 2091. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to reform the international tax system of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise to speak about a bill I am introducing today, the United States Job Creation nies don't bring those earnings back and International Tax Reform Act of 2012. The name says it all. This is a bill that would incentivize American companies to create jobs in the United States while at the same time leveling the playing field for U.S. companies in the global marketplace. This bill would reform and modernize the rules for taxing the global operations of American companies and would help America become a more attractive location to base a business that serves customers all over the world.

Unfortunately, our current tax rules do just the opposite. In fact, many businesses could be better off if they were headquartered outside the United States. That is not right, and Congress should fix it. This bill would do that.

I wish to thank Senator HATCH and members of his staff who have been helpful in working through the complexities of this international tax.

I also wish to mention Eric Oman, a member of my staff and a CPA, who worked with me in developing this legislation. He has lived overseas and worked with the U.S. tax laws overseas. That is the kind of expertise we need to reform international tax law.

I wish to thank all who testified before the Finance Committee, especially Scott Naatjes, who is the vice president and general tax counsel of Cargill. This man has dealt with the complex accounting of foreign earnings and the money to be repatriated to the United States, an actual practitioner whom we relied on. He gave us insight into years of records that have to be reviewed for a single item in the complex web of the current international tax system in order to bring the money back to the United States.

Finally, I wish to thank DAVE CAMP. the chairman of the House, Ways, and Means Committee, who kick-started the discussion on tax reform when he released his discussion draft last Octoher.

Enacted in the 1960s, our current international tax rules have passed their expiration date. Many of the U.S. major trading partners, including Canada, Japan, the United Kingdom, and most of Europe have moved to what are called territorial tax systems. That is actually a word for a global tax system. These types of tax systems tax the income generated within their borders and exempt foreign earnings from tax.

The United States, on the other hand, taxes the worldwide income of U.S. companies and provides deferral of the U.S. tax until the foreign earnings are brought home. Deferral of the tax until the earnings are brought home encourages them not to bring the money home. It actually incentivizes them to leave their money abroad and to expand over there. Because the United States has nearly the highest corporate tax rate in the world, compaand, as I said, reinvest outside the United States. That certainly is not a recipe for U.S. growth and U.S. job creation.

The dominance of U.S.-headquartered companies in the global marketplace is waning. Thirty-six percent of the For-Global 500 companies were headquartered in the United States in 2000. In 2009, that number dropped to 28 percent. That is from 36 percent to 28 percent among the Fortune Global 500 companies headquartered in the United States. Clearly, America is losing ground and our current international tax rules are a big part of the problem.

The bill I am introducing would help to right the ship by pulling our international tax rules into the 21st century so U.S. companies are not at a competitive disadvantage with foreign companies because of American tax rules that are outdated by changes most other countries have already made. The bill would give U.S. companies incentives to create jobs in the United States and undertake activities in the United States in order to win globally.

First, if the foreign earnings have already been subject to a tax in a foreign country, this bill would provide a 95percent exemption from the U.S. tax on those foreign earnings. This would allow for American-managed capital to be put to the most productive use and help stabilize our economy.

Second, this bill would allow foreign earnings that are currently sitting overseas to be brought back to America at a reduced rate—not a zero tax rate but a greatly reduced rate—and with the ability to pay that, the taxes that are owed in installments. That gets the cash back now and still gets some taxation for us instead of leaving it all overseas. This provision would serve as a transition to the new territorial system by allowing U.S. companies to unlock a significant amount of capital currently being held offshore and quickly move into the new territorial system, and that means more jobs and a better economy. It also emphasizes one of the things I talk about with any of the tax changes—as one of the few accountants—we have to transition into these things if we want the companies stable enough that they can exist through the change in the Tax Code, and that provides for a transition as well.

Third, this bill would reduce the U.S. tax burden on income generated by American companies from ideas and innovations. This bill would encourage companies to develop and keep rights to ideas and inventions in the United States. When families tune in to "60 Minutes" on Sunday evenings, they would hear fewer stories about how U.S. companies are moving their profits to tax haven countries and avoiding U.S. tax on those earnings. Families would hear fewer stories about how the U.S. multinational companies set up post office boxes in the Cayman Islands and Switzerland without a single employee or officer of the company anywhere on site and attribute a significant portion of their foreign earnings to those jurisdictions.

Instead, families would hear more stories about how U.S. companies are generating the ideas and inventions of tomorrow right here in America.

This bill can be a first step in tax reform. We have a lot of work to do in many other areas of tax law in order to make it simpler, fairer, and more transparent. We need to be looking at the individual tax system, the corporate tax system, and particularly how we tax the passthrough entities such as partnerships and S corporations that have to pay the tax on the money when it is still invested in the business.

I also recognize, as we move forward in these other areas, it may be appropriate to make changes to this bill. This is exactly how the legislative process should work, and I look forward to getting back to conducting the Senate's business in regular order, where we work through the issues in the committee first and offer amendments to improve the bills that ultimately come to the Senate floor, where there is a shot for everybody else to make amendments.

But today with the introduction of this bill, we move from discussion to action with respect to a single piece of the tax reform. The Simpson-Bowles deficit commission recommended a move to a territorial system, and I am glad to be moving the conversation forward on this recommendation with the introduction of this bill. I hope this bill will begin a discussion, a discussion of fairness that needs to begin yesterday.

I hope Members and their staff will review the bill and the detailed explanation we have prepared. I also ask that all interested stakeholders review the bill and reach out to my staff and the staff of the Finance Committee to discuss what they like, what they don't like, and their suggestions for improvements. That is the way bills are supposed to work.

The international tax rules are not easy or simple and reforming them will be a heavy lift. But those things are worth doing, and when they are worth doing, they are rarely easy or simple.

I look forward to joining with my colleagues to pass international tax reforms that our American companies and our country desperately need.

Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2091

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

By Mr. WYDEN:

S. 2098. A bill to support statewide individual-level integrated postsecondary education data systems, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, when we went to college, usually things were different. Often a student took out a loan, but those loans were manageable, and usually there were jobs waiting. Today, too often that is not the case. In fact, the students today who take out loans will leave school weighed down, on average, with $25,000 worth of debt. They are going to be trying to get into a labor market where there are more than four unemployed Americans for every available job.

It has been noted that for the first time student loan debt exceeds credit card debt, and that now totals over $100 billion. Now, clearly, investment in higher education is an economic imperative. Education is the great equalizer. It enables upward economic mobility, and it breaks down class structures that impair many countries' ability to grow their economies. A highly-skilled and educated workforce is the basis for a healthy economy, and it is the linchpin to our economic future.

In every major economic decision our people make, they try to evaluate the value of that decision. Like prospective homeowners who inspect and assess the potential value of their future home, in my view future students should be able to comparison shop and choose a school and a program based on what their return on investment will be.

Our capital markets work best when we can accurately measure the value of the things we choose to invest in. We saw what happens when this is not the case when the housing bubble burst, and our economy is still struggling to recover from the mortgage meltdown. In many instances, consumers who didn't have all the facts bought a product based on misleading information and fell victim to predatory lenders looking to make a profit off that growing bubble.

Consumers must know what they can expect from their investments, and students are entitled to know the value of their education before they go out and borrow tens of thousands of dollars from the banks and from the government to finance their choices. Right now, consumers don't have this information, though the information exists. It is unavailable to students and families too often when they are making perhaps the most important decisions that affect their future—both their financial future and their career.

That is why today I am introducing the Student Right to Know Before You Go Act, which would help college students get the information they need about their education. This proposal would ensure that future students and their families can make well-informed decisions by having access to information on their expected average annual earnings after graduation; rates of remedial enrollment, credit accumulation, and graduation; the average cost, both before and after financial aid, of the program, and average debt upon graduation; and, finally, the effects of remedial education and financial aid on credential attainment and a greater understanding of what student success can mean.

For markets to work, there has to be good information available, and until now it has been extremely hard for students and families to collect this data in a cost-effective way while at the same time ensuring student privacy. However, the States, as we have seen so often-the Presiding Officer of the Senate and I have talked about this from time to time—the States have piloted their own programs and proved that the technology exists to enable our ability to generate and share this information in a way that students and consumers can use while at the same time protecting their privacy.

This technology, in my view, makes it possible to ensure a return on their investment for students, for parents, for policymakers, and taxpayers. It is going to help us create a workforce that meets the demands of the businesses that employ it and ensures that our workers can successfully compete in the global economy.

One last point, if I might. I think it is clear that access to higher education is an integral part of the step ladder to success and particularly success for the middle class who built this country. Chairman HARKIN, of course, the chairman of our committee who deals with these issues, has probably done more than any other Member in the Senate to put a focus on this issue and how important it is to grow the middle class and address the big concerns they have faced.

Middle-class people haven't had a pay raise in a full decade. It seems to me as part of the agenda—and Chairman HARKIN has had some excellent hearings on these higher education issues—one of the best ways we can come together on a bipartisan basis is to empower students and empower families to be in the best possible position to make the college choices that are going to pay off in the years ahead.

That is what this legislation, the Right to Know Before You Go Act, would do. I hope my colleagues will consider it in the days ahead.

SENATE RESOLUTION 371—DESIGNATING THE WEEK OF FEBRUARY 6 THROUGH 10, 2012, AS "NATIONAL SCHOOL COUNSELING WEEK"

Mrs. MURRAY (for herself, Ms. Col-LINS, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. SANDERS, Mr. WEBB, Ms. KLOBUCHAR, Ms. STABENOW, and Ms. SNOWE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Whereas the American School Counselor Association has designated the week of February 6 through 10, 2012, as "National School Counseling Week":

Whereas the importance of school counseling has been recognized through the inclusion of elementary- and secondary-school counseling programs in amendments to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.);

Whereas school counselors have long advocated that the education system of the United States must provide equitable opportunities for all students:

Whereas personal and social growth results in increased academic achievement:

Whereas school counselors help develop well-rounded students by guiding the students through academic, personal, social, and career development;

Whereas school counselors assist with and coordinate efforts to foster a positive school culture resulting in a safer learning environment for all students;

Whereas school counselors have been instrumental in helping students, teachers, and parents deal with personal trauma as well as tragedies in the community and the United States:

Whereas students face myriad challenges every day, including peer pressure, depression, the deployment of family members to serve in conflicts overseas, and school violence:

Whereas school counselors are one of the few professionals in a school building who are trained in both education and mentalhealth matters:

Whereas the roles and responsibilities of school counselors are often misunderstood:

Whereas the school-counselor position is often among the first to be eliminated to meet budgetary constraints:

Whereas the national average ratio of students to school counselors of 459 to 1 is almost twice that of the ratio of 250 to 1 recommended by the American School Counselor Association, the American Counseling Association, the National Association for College Admission Counseling, and other organizations; and

Whereas the celebration of National School Counseling Week would increase awareness of the important and necessary role school counselors play in the lives of students in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

SEC. _____. REDUCE UNNECESSARY SPENDING ACT OF 2012.

- (a) SHORT TITLE AND PURPOSES.-
- (1) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Reduce Unnecessary Spending Act of 2012".
- (2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to create an optional fast-track procedure the President may use when submitting resission requests, which would lead to an upor-down vote by Congress on the President's package of rescissions, without amendment.
- (b) RESCISSIONS OF FUNDING.—The Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by striking part C and inserting the following:

"SEC. 1021. APPLICABILITY AND DISCLAIMER.

"The rules, procedures, requirements, and definitions in this part apply only to executive and legislative actions explicitly taken under this part. They do not apply to actions taken under part B or to other executive and legislative actions not taken under this part.

"SEC. 1022. DEFINITIONS.

- "In this part:
- "(1) The terms 'appropriations Act', 'budget authority', and 'new budget authority' have the same meanings as in section 3 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.
- "(2) The terms 'account', 'current year', 'CBO', and 'OMB' have the same meanings as in section 250 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 as in effect on September 30, 2002.
- "(3) The term 'days of session' shall be calculated by excluding weekends and national holidays. Any day during which a chamber of Congress is not in session shall not be counted as a day of session of that chamber. Any day during which neither chamber is in session shall not be counted as a day of session of Congress.
- "(4) The term 'entitlement law' means the statutory mandate or requirement of the United States to incur a financial obligation unless that obligation is explicitly conditioned on the appropriation in subsequent legislation of sufficient funds for that purpose, and the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program.
- "(5) The term 'funding' refers to new budget authority and obligation limits except to the extent that the funding is provided for entitlement law.

- "(6) The term 'rescind' means to eliminate or reduce the amount of enacted funding.
- "(7) The terms 'withhold' and 'withholding' apply to any executive action or inaction that precludes the obligation of funding at a time when it would otherwise have been available to an agency for obligation. The terms do not include administrative or preparatory actions undertaken prior to obligation in the normal course of implementing budget laws.

"SEC. 1023. TIMING AND PACKAGING OF RESCIS-SION REQUESTS.

- "(a) TIMING.—If the President proposes that Congress rescind funding under the procedures in this part, OMB shall transmit a message to Congress containing the information specified in section 1024, and the message transmitting the proposal shall be sent to Congress not later than 45 calendar days after the date of enactment of the funding.
- (b) PACKAGING AND TRANSMITTAL OF RE-QUESTED RESCISSIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (c), for each piece of legislation that provides funding, the President shall request at most 1 package of rescissions and the rescissions in that package shall apply only to funding contained in that legislation. OMB shall deliver each message requesting a package of rescissions to the Secretary of the Senate if the Senate is not in session and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives if the House is not in session. OMB shall make a copy of the transmittal message publicly available, and shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of the message and information on how it can be obtained.
- "(c) Special Packaging Rules.—After enactment of—
- "(1) a joint resolution making continuing appropriations;
- "(2) a supplemental appropriations bill; or "(3) an omnibus appropriations bill;
- covering some or all of the activities customarily funded in more than 1 regular appropriations bill, the President may propose as many as 2 packages rescinding funding contained in that legislation, each within the 45-day period specified in subsection (a). OMB shall not include the same rescission in both packages, and, if the President requests the rescission of more than one discrete amount of funding under the jurisdiction of a single subcommittee, OMB shall include each of those discrete amounts in the same package.

"SEC. 1024. REQUESTS TO RESCIND FUNDING.

- "(2) EXCLUSION PROCEDURE.—The Clerk shall include in the bill each numbered rescission request listed in the Presidential package in question, except that the Clerk shall omit a numbered rescission request if the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House, after consulting with the Chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate, CBO, GAO, and the House and Senate committees that have jurisdiction over the funding, determines that the numbered rescission does not refer to funding or includes matter not permitted under a request to rescind funding.
- "(b) INTRODUCTION AND REFERRAL OF LEGISLATION TO ENACT A PACKAGE OF EXPEDITED RESCISSIONS.—The majority leader or the minority leader of the House or Representatives, or a designee, shall (by request) introduce each bill prepared under subsection (a) not later than 4 days of session of the House after its transmittal, or, if no such bill is introduced within that period, any member of the House may introduce the required bill in the required form on the fifth or sixth day of session of the House after its transmittal. If such an expedited rescission bill is introduced in accordance with the preceding sentence, it shall be referred to the House committee of jurisdiction. If the committee has not reported the bill by the end of the 5-day period, the committee shall be automatically discharged from further consideration of the bill and it shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

"(d) House Motion To Proceed.-

"(1) IN GENERAL.—After a bill to enact an expedited rescission package has been reported or the committee of jurisdiction has been discharged under subsection (c), it shall be in order to move to proceed to consider the bill in the House. "(2) Points of order.—All points of order against the bill are waived, except that a point of order may be made that 1 or more numbered rescissions included in the bill would enact language containing matter not requested by the President or not permitted under this part as part of that package. If the Presiding Officer sustains such a point of order, the numbered rescission or rescissions that would enact such language are deemed to be automatically stripped from the bill and consideration proceeds on the bill as modified.

"(3) PREVIOUS QUESTION.—The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to its passage without intervening motion, except that 4 hours of debate equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent are allowed, as well as 1 motion to further limit debate on the bill.

"(3) DISCHARGE.—If the committee has not reported the bill by the end of the 3-day period, the committee shall be automatically discharged from further consideration of the bill and it shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

"(4) MOTION TO PROCEED.—On the following day and for 3 subsequent calendar days in which the Senate is in session, it shall be in order for any Senator to move to proceed to consider the bill in the Senate. Upon such a motion being made, it shall be deemed to have been agreed to and the motion to reconsider shall be deemed to have been laid on the table.

"(5) DEBATE.—Debate on the bill in the Senate under this subsection, and all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall not exceed 10 hours, equally divided and controlled in the usual form. Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with such a bill shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled in the usual form. A motion to further limit debate on such a bill is not debatable.

"(g) SENATE POINT OF ORDER.—It shall not be in order under this part for the Senate to consider a bill approved by the House enacting a package of rescissions under this part if any numbered rescission in the bill would enact matter not requested by the President or not permitted under this Act as part of that package. #### SEC. RESPECT FOR RIGHTS OF CON-SCIENCE.

- (a) FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.—
- (1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following: (A) As Thomas Jefferson declared to New London Methodists in 1809, "[n]o provision in our Constitution ought to be dearer to man than that which protects the rights of conscience against the enterprises of the civil authority".
- (B) Jefferson's statement expresses a conviction on respect for conscience that is deeply embedded in the history and traditions of our Nation and codified in numerous State and Federal laws, including laws on health care.
- (C) Until enactment of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (Public Law 111-148, in this section referred to as "PPACA"), the Federal Government has not sought to impose specific coverage or care

- hazards caused by wildlife, and railway-high- requirements that infringe on the rights of conscience of insurers, purchasers of insurance, plan sponsors, beneficiaries, and other stakeholders, such as individual or institutional health care providers.
  - (D) PPACA creates a new nationwide requirement for health plans to cover "essential health benefits" and "preventive services" (including a distinct set of "preventive services for women"), delegating to the Department of Health and Human Services the authority to provide a list of detailed services under each category, and imposes other new requirements with respect to the provision of health care services.
  - (E) While PPACA provides an exemption for some religious groups that object to participation in Government health programs generally, it does not allow purchasers, plan sponsors, and other stakeholders with religious or moral objections to specific items or services to decline providing or obtaining coverage of such items or services, or allow health care providers with such objections to decline to provide them.
  - (F) By creating new barriers to health insurance and causing the loss of existing insurance arrangements, these inflexible mandates in PPACA jeopardize the ability of individuals to exercise their rights of conscience and their ability to freely participate in the health insurance and health care marketplace.
  - (2) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this section are-
  - (A) to ensure that health care stakeholders retain the right to provide, purchase, or enroll in health coverage that is consistent with their religious beliefs and moral convictions, without fear of being penalized or discriminated against under PPACA; and
  - (B) to ensure that no requirement in PPACA creates new pressures to exclude those exercising such conscientious objection from health plans or other programs under PPACA.
  - (b) RESPECT FOR RIGHTS OF CONSCIENCE.
  - (1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1302(b) of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (Public Law 111-148; 42 U.S.C. 18022(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:
  - "(6) Respecting rights of conscience with REGARD TO SPECIFIC ITEMS OR SERVICES .-
  - "(A) FOR HEALTH PLANS.—A health plan shall not be considered to have failed to provide the essential health benefits package described in subsection (a) (or preventive health services described in section 2713 of the Public Health Service Act), to fail to be a qualified health plan, or to fail to fulfill any other requirement under this title on the basis that it declines to provide coverage of specific items or services because-
  - "(i) providing coverage (or, in the case of a sponsor of a group health plan, paying for coverage) of such specific items or services is contrary to the religious beliefs or moral convictions of the sponsor, issuer, or other entity offering the plan; or
  - "(ii) such coverage (in the case of individual coverage) is contrary to the religious beliefs or moral convictions of the purchaser or beneficiary of the coverage.
  - "(B) FOR HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS.-Nothing in this title (or any amendment made by this title) shall be construed to require an individual or institutional health care provider, or authorize a health plan to require a provider, to provide, participate in, or refer for a specific item or service contrary to the provider's religious beliefs or moral convictions. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a health plan shall not be con-

- sidered to have failed to provide timely or other access to items or services under this title (or any amendment made by this title) or to fulfill any other requirement under this title because it has respected the rights of conscience of such a provider pursuant to this paragraph
- "(C) NONDISCRIMINATION IN EXERCISING RIGHTS OF CONSCIENCE -No Exchange or other official or entity acting in a governmental capacity in the course of implementing this title (or any amendment made by this title) shall discriminate against a health plan, plan sponsor, health care provider, or other person because of such plan's. sponsor's, provider's, or person's unwillingness to provide coverage of, participate in, or refer for, specific items or services pursuant to this paragraph.
- (D) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in subparagraph (A) or (B) shall be construed to permit a health plan or provider to discriminate in a manner inconsistent with subparagraphs (B) and (D) of paragraph (4).
- (E) PRIVATE RIGHTS OF ACTION.—The various protections of conscience in this paragraph constitute the protection of individual rights and create a private cause of action for those persons or entities protected. Any person or entity may assert a violation of this paragraph as a claim or defense in a judicial proceeding.
  - "(F) REMEDIES.-
- "(i) FEDERAL JURISDICTION.—The Federal courts shall have jurisdiction to prevent and redress actual or threatened violations of this paragraph by granting all forms of legal or equitable relief, including, but not limited to, injunctive relief, declaratory relief, damages, costs, and attorney fees.
- "(ii) INITIATING PARTY.—An action under this paragraph may be instituted by the Attorney General of the United States, or by any person or entity having standing to complain of a threatened or actual violation of this paragraph, including, but not limited to, any actual or prospective plan sponsor, issuer, or other entity offering a plan, any actual or prospective purchaser or beneficiary of a plan, and any individual or institutional health care provider.
- "(iii) INTERIM RELIEF.—Pending final determination of any action under this paragraph. the court may at any time enter such restraining order or prohibitions, or take such other actions, as it deems necessary.
- "(G) ADMINISTRATION.—The Office for Civil Rights of the Department of Health and Human Services is designated to receive complaints of discrimination based on this paragraph and coordinate the investigation of such complaints.
- "(H) ACTUARIAL EQUIVALENCE.—Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit the Secretary from issuing regulations or other guidance to ensure that health plans excluding specific items or services under this paragraph shall have an aggregate actuarial value at least equivalent to that of plans at the same level of coverage that do not exclude such items or services.".
- (2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of Public Law 111-
- SA 1521. Mr. WICKER (for himself and Mr. VITTER) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 1813, to reauthorize Federal-aid highway and highway safety construction programs, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, in honor of Black History Month 2012, I rise today to recognize a community leader from the Bronx whom I deeply respect, Ms. Karen Washington.

SEQUESTRATION WEAKENS OUR NATIONAL SECURITY

HON. JOE WILSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this Nation currently faces a clear and present danger to our national security that this body has the ability to defeat: Defense Sequestration. This is an issue that we must address sooner rather than later. Senator JOHN McCAIN recently stated, "I believe the cuts that would be required by sequestration aimed at the Department of Defense are a threat to our Nation's security. We still live in a very dangerous world and everyone agrees that this kind of sequestration cannot take place."

House and Senate Republicans are determined to prevent sequestration from occurring. Slashing the Army by 80,000 troops, cutting 20,000 Marines, and reducing 10,000 Air Force personnel is risky. The United States does not have the luxury of choosing our enemies or deciding if we will be attacked. Our military must be properly funded, equipped and prepared to protect our families from extremists who carry signs calling for "Death to America."

In conclusion, God Bless our troops and we will never forget September 11th in the Global War on Terrorism.

HON. AARON SCHOCK

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. SCHOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of an exceptional young person whose character and accomplishments during his short life of 15 years merit commendation. Chris Canning was an honor student, musician, athlete, humanitarian, and elite martial artist.

In addition to achieving the status of First Degree Black Belt in Taekwondo in only 4 years and playing baseball, basketball and football for his high school, Chris found time to volunteer in his community of Maroa, Illinois, delivering food and clothing to those in need and working in an animal shelter.

Chris has been honored for his service to others and excellence in martial arts by the United Nations Youth Assembly, the World Martial Arts Hall of Fame, the United States Olympic Committee, and the USA Taekwondo Martial Arts Commission, among many others. Despite all of these accolades, the qualities that Chris's family and friends most associate with him were humility and a commitment to service above self. His pursuit in each of life's endeavors, in and out of the martial arts, was to give more than he received, not to gain praise or honor, but to share achievement with others and to set aside his own desires in order to help those less fortunate. His greatest satisfaction came from being there when needed and making a difference.

He was a sincere friend and loving son, and he is missed by all who knew him. His legacy lives on through the Chris Canning Foundation and Awards Program, which has been given to 77 youths from around the world who exemplify the strength of character and excellence that Chris possessed.

It is my honor to recognize the legacy of this exceptional young man from Central Illinois today.

HONORING JAMES "JIM" SCHRANZ

HON. RALPH M. HALL

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor James "Jim" Schranz for his tireless efforts to promote and expand retirement security for all Americans. Jim has played an integral role in the formation of the Employee-owned S Corporations of America (ESCA) and will soon be stepping down from his role as the founding Treasurer to fully enjoy his retirement with his wife Nancy.

After earning his MBA from the Cox School of Business at Southern Methodist University, Jim began working at Austin Industries, rising to Vice President of Human Resources. In 1998, he took on the role of Treasurer with ESCA where he used his knowledge of this important and unique retirement savings vehicle to help protect and expand it to other businesses across Texas and the United States. Through ESCA's efforts, Members of Congress have become better educated about retirement savings benefits created by private, employee-owned companies for their employee-owners. Jim has been instrumental in the fight to prevent inadvertent harm to S corporation Employee Share Ownership Plans (ESOPs), particularly in the days of pension reform. His retirement is well-deserved.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, please join me in honoring Jim Schranz and wishing him all the best as he retires.

HON. MIKE QUIGLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the week in which we celebrate the National Salute to Veteran Patients which begins February 12th.

The United States Department of Veterans Affairs annually observes the week of February 14th as our Nation's National Salute to Veteran Patients. This week is our opportunity to honor the more than 98,000 veterans who are cared for day-in and day-out by our Nation's Veterans Affairs hospitals, outpatient clinics, and nursing homes.

Our Nation's veterans have sacrificed much to ensure the safety of our homeland. Their service oftentimes comes at a price to their own personal well-being. When our servicemen and women are injured, our Veterans Affairs hospitals provide vital services that help them heal and return to life in our communities. This week serves as a reminder to thank our veterans for their service to our country while also commending those who treat them with medical care.

I would also like to recognize the Veterans Affairs hospitals that serve the servicemen and women of Illinois's 5th District and the surrounding areas. The Jesse Brown Veteran Affairs Medical Center and the Edward Hines, Jr. Veteran Affairs Hospital admirably serve our veterans throughout the City of Chicago as well as into other parts of Illinois and Indiana. With more than one million outpatient visits between the two hospitals in a single year, the doctors, nurses and staff of both Jesse Brown and Edward Hines, Jr. are to be commended for the care that they provide to our veterans.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring our Nation's veterans during this National Salute to Veteran Patients week.

CELEBRATING THE SESQUI-CENTENNIAL OF SAN RAFAEL CITY SCHOOLS

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 150th anniversary of San Rafael City Schools, an institution with a long and proud legacy of service to the young people of Marin County. San Rafael City Schools dates almost to the foundation of our county itself, and its history reminds us of the powerful role our system of public education has played in shaping the character and direction of our communities.

The first of the San Rafael City Schools—the fourth public school in the county—was opened in San Rafael in 1861, just over a decade after Marin County was founded and California was admitted into the Union. In a city numbering only several hundred residents, this first school counted 25 students in its first year, and it remained the city's only public school for 26 years.

As San Rafael began to assume its role as Marin County's population center, the school system expanded rapidly to meet new demand. A second elementary school was added in 1887, and in 1888 the county's first high school, which expanded further in 1899. New elementary schools were added again in 1904 and 1909, followed by an even more intense series of construction projects mid-century, eventually numbering over a dozen new, expanded, or retrofitted facilities. Today, 12 schools serve San Rafael's nearly 6,000 students, including separate districts for K–8 and high school education.

Since its founding, San Rafael City Schools has been an anchor for local families. It has played an integral role in the strength and success of San Rafael and Marin County, sending generations of Marin young people into the world with the preparation necessary to tackle our country's challenges. More recently, the special role of San Rafael City Schools has been recognized in the bond measures city voters have supported to support extensive infrastructure modernization projects.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join me in celebrating the sesquicentennial of San Rafael City Schools. This is an institution that represents the democratic promise of public education to empower every individual, and in so doing foster and uplift an entire community.

HON. MIKE McINTYRE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. McINTYRE. Mr. Speaker, an unavoidable conflict required that I miss roll call #45,

HON. RALPH M. HALL

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Cary M. Maguire, a fellow Texan who exemplifies fortitude, American entrepreneurship, and community service.

Over the past twenty years, Cary's strength of character was tested and proven as he fought for justice in a property rights dispute against the Houston, Texas city government. Despite being dealt a bad hand, court after court, Cary never surrendered. He showed courage and faith that justice would prevail, and his perseverance was ultimately rewarded.

Cary is the founder, Chair, and President of the Dallas-based Maguire Oil Company and Maguire Energy Company. In 1991, Cary's company was given a permit by the city of Houston to drill near the banks of Lake Houston. However, when his crew began the project a city officer patrolling the area stopped the team, citing a city ordinance that prohibited drilling within 1,000 feet of the shore. The city revoked Maguire Oil's permit, and a lengthy court battle began.

The case was shuffled around for fourteen years as courts argued over jurisdiction and how to proceed. In 2009, a Harris County court-at-law awarded Maguire $2 million in damages, plus $2.2 million in interest. The City appealed this ruling before agreeing on a settlement, settling a lawsuit that spanned two trials, four appeals and the administrations of four mayors.

While acknowledging that the amount spent in legal fees exceeded the amount of the settlement, Cary stated that he continued the case because he thought it was important to defend the principle that while government has the right to take property for the public good, it does not have the right to do so without compensating the property owner.

Cary proceeded to donate the settlement money to found the Center for Ethics and Public Responsibility that bears his name at Southern Methodist University (SMU) in Dallas, Texas, where he serves as Trustee Emeritus in recognition for his outstanding service to the University as a member of the Board of Trustees from 1976 to 2000.

In addition to his founding grant to create the Maguire Center for Ethics and Public Responsibility, Cary also endowed a university-wide professorship in ethics at SMU. He has provided additional funds for programs and facilities in SMU's Edwin L. Cox School of Business, including the Maguire Energy Institute, the Maguire Chair in oil and gas management, and the Maguire Building housing undergraduate programs in the Cox School.

In 1995 he and his wife, Ann, were among the first recipients of SMU's Mustang Award honoring individuals whose longtime service and philanthropy have had a lasting impact on the University.

His national leadership positions include service on The National Petroleum Council, the Executive Committee of Mid-Continental Oil and Gas Association, and membership of the Madison Council of the Library of Congress, where he funded the Maguire Chair in Ethics and American History.

Mr. Speaker, Cary Maguire's professional and philanthropic contributions will have a lasting value not only in the great State of Texas, but our nation. He embodies many outstanding qualities that define the American spirit. As we adjourn the House of Representatives today, let us do so in appreciation of this American leader, Mr. Cary Maguire.

HONORING CARL E. HEASTIE,
MEMBER OF THE NEW YORK
STATE ASSEMBLY AND CHAIRMAN OF THE BRONX DEMOCRATIC COUNTY COMMITTEE

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, in honor of Black History Month 2012, I rise today to recognize a lawmaker from the Bronx whom I admire greatly, the Honorable Carl E. Heastie.

Carl E. Heastie has been Assemblyman for the 83rd Assembly District in the Bronx since 2000. Since he became an Assemblyman, he has been recognized by his colleagues as being one of the most active members in Albany. He currently serves as Chairman of the New York State Assembly Committee on Cities, where he is responsible for addressing issues facing New York City and New York State's other urban areas. He has also earned the respect of local and state elected officials through his work as Chairman of the Bronx Democratic County Committee.

Assemblyman Heastie attended New York City public schools, and always had a love for math. This interest was developed and refined while at the State University of New York at Stony Brook where he earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Applied Mathematics and Statistics and an MBA in Finance from the Bernard M. Baruch College, CUNY. Assemblyman Heastie has extensive experience in budgeting issues, and served as a budget analyst for the City of New York's Comptroller's Office prior to his election. Assemblyman Heastie's expertise in evaluating numbers has garnered the respect and admiration of his peers.

Since taking office, Assemblyman Heastie has been successful in securing much needed resources for his district in the areas of housing, health and human services and education. Among his many accomplishments, he was a lead negotiator for the construction of new schools in the Bronx. Aware of the needs of low-wage workers, Assemblyman Heastie was the author of the Wage Theft Prevention Act which provided stiffer penalties for employers who steal wages from employees. Additionally, because of concerns about potential barriers that victims of domestic violence may face when trying to leave their abuser, Assemblyman Heastie drafted a law to allow domestic violence victims to be released from their lease obligation if it is found that their remaining in their residence would keep them exposed to a dangerous situation.

Mr. Speaker, Assemblyman Carl E. Heastie has earned a much-deserved reputation as a hardworking, determined and exceptional public servant. He is part of a new wave of elected officials in this country whose qualities include fidelity to the best interests of one's constituents and honesty in public dealings. Mr.

Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in recognizing a gifted individual, and someone who carries with him the hopes of thousands of New Yorkers, including myself, The Honorable Carl E. Heastie.

John was born in Brooklyn, New York on January 6, 1922 to Joseph Murray and Madeline Cassidy. He was a gifted pilot, qualifying in 20 different aircraft, and was a dedicated lifetime member of the Air Force Association.

John also recognized the value of higher education, and in 1957 he received a Bachelor of Science in Political Science from St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia, PA, where he served as an ROTC teacher. That same year, he graduated from the United States Air Force Command and Staff College at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama. John continued his education by earning his Master's of Business Administration at the University of Dallas in 1977 at the age of 55.

Service was part of John's character, so it came as no surprise that he took the initiative to mentor many young adults in their educational pursuits. John created a scholarship fund through his local Air Force Association chapter for college students struggling financially. He took an active role in encouraging these students and shared in their joy as they reached their goal of graduation.

Upon his retirement from the Air Force, John and his family moved to Greenville, Texas where he began a second distinguished career in the aerospace industry, serving thirty-one years and retiring in 1998 at the age of 76. For nineteen of those years, he was appointed to serve as Chairman of the Employees' Political Action Committee. As Chairman, John hosted informative political forums in Greenville, inviting many special guests over the years including then Governor Bill Clements: then Governor and former President George W. Bush; former U.S. Senators Lloyd Bentsen, Phil Gramm, John Tower, as well as our current U.S. Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON. I was also honored as his Congressman to attend several of John's forums.

John was a highly respected man known for his intelligence, honesty, and integrity, both in his own community and in Washington. Everyone who knew John was struck by his innate optimism, his positive attitude, and his genuine kindness. John was a natural leader, and I am fortunate to have counted him as my friend. He will be dearly missed by all those whose lives he touched.

Mr. Speaker, as we adjourn today I ask that my colleagues join me in honoring this American patriot, Colonel John Joseph Murray.

COLORADO SCHOOL OF MINES WOMEN'S SOFTBALL TEAM

HON. ED PERLMUTTER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud the Colorado School of Mines Women's Softball Team, who last spring won a berth in the NCAA Women's Softball Tournament for the second time in school history. The Orediggers finished the year with a conference record of 28-11, and an overall record of 36-24, sharing the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference Championship with Metropolitan State College of Denver. The School of Mines also hosted the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference softball championship last spring. The three day event was a success for the School of Mines and all the schools that participated. Two of the School of Mines players were named to the All Tournament Team, Kelly Ulkrich, and Macy Jones.

The women of the Orediggers softball team should be extremely proud of their 2011 season, and their efforts on the diamond and in the classroom. These women exemplify the idea of the collegiate student-athlete. The Colorado School of Mines specializes in hard sciences, and I commend these young women in their dedication to fields that have traditionally been male dominated. They are an inspiration to girls everywhere who want to study science and engineering.

I also want to congratulate pitcher Kelly Ulkirch who was named the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference Women's Athlete of the Month for April 2011.

I extend my deepest congratulations to the women of the Colorado School of Mines Women's Softball Team. The lessons they are learning as student-athletes will make these women the science and technology leaders of tomorrow. I am proud to have this world class school in my district. I wish the team best of luck in the 2012 season I hope it is even more successful than 2011, again congratulations, and Go Orediggers!

IN SUPPORT OF H. RES. 525: NATIONAL SCHOOL COUNSELING WEEK

HON. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 525 and support the goals of "National School Counseling Week."

I introduced this resolution to recognize the tireless efforts of a group of professionals who have dedicated themselves to our children and their education.

I wish to take this opportunity to recognize the diligent and hardworking school counselors throughout our country. Counselors like Sue Im, in my home district, at Gahr High School in Cerritos.

Every day counselors do exceptional work to help our students reach their highest potential. It is because of their unending dedication—children across our country succeed in becoming engineers, doctors, and even Members of Congress.

School counselors play a vital role in the development of our students on academic, social, and personal levels. Unfortunately, there aren't enough of them. Counselors often find themselves the casualty of budget cuts.

The average student-to-counselor ratio in America's public schools, 459-to-1, is almost double the 250-to-1 ratio recommended by the American School Counselor Association and the National Association for College Admission Counseling. Those numbers are even worse in California where the student to counselor ratio is a dismal 810 students to one counselor—one of the worst ratios in the country.

Our secondary school counselors work vigorously to increase graduation rates, identify problems in our schools and improve morale by inspiring students to challenge themselves and explore new opportunities.

Primary counselors often help identify students with health problems or disabilities that interfere with learning. They also help youngsters to cope with traumatic events, from moving to a new school to the death of a parent.

Our counselors do amazing work that often goes unrecognized. Our communities are strengthened by the students who are championed by their school counselors.

I urge my colleagues to support this effort to recognize the outstanding work that counselors do to ensure that our children's future is full of promise.

THE PASSING OF DR. STEPHEN LEVIN

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, it was with tremendous sadness that I learned today of the passing of Dr. Stephen Levin. Dr. Levin was one of our Nation's foremost experts in occupational and environmental medicine and in his career cared for thousands of Americans with work-related injuries and illnesses. But New Yorkers may know Dr. Levin best at the Director of the World Trade Center Worker and Volunteer Medical Screening Program, where he helped identify the emergence of 9/11-related illnesses and led the medical community's response to this unprecedented health crisis.

The Medical Screening Program was a precursor to the current World Trade Center Health Program, which was enshrined in law by the James Zadroga 9/11 Health and Compensation Act, a bill I authored with Congressmen NADLER and KING and on which I worked with Dr. Levin to pass. Without Dr. Levin's pioneering research, service, and dedication to 9/11 responders, volunteers, and survivors, we may never have passed the Zadroga Act.

This is no doubt a terribly sad time for Dr. Levin's loved ones, but I hope they will be comforted by the fact that his life was so well-lived, and by the thoughts and prayers of thousands of Americans whose lives are immeasurably better because of his work.

WENDY GOINS

HON. ED PERLMUTTER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud Wendy Goins of Golden Bodyworker for receiving the Ambassador of the Year Award from the Greater Golden Chamber of Commerce.

This award is given each year to an individual who is a member of the Chamber Ambassadors. Wendy has been very active in promoting the Chamber in several ways, such as attending ribbon cuttings, grand openings, ground breakings, mentoring new Chamber members, attending Chamber functions, staffing the membership luncheon prize table, and many more.

With a full work schedule, Wendy finds time to promote the Chamber, attend functions and accepts challenges with a no defeat attitude. She is a real asset to the Golden community.

I extend my deepest congratulations to Wendy Goins for this well deserved recognition by the Greater Golden Chamber of Commerce. I have no doubt she will exhibit the same dedication and character in all her future accomplishments.

HONORING LONG-TIME COMMUNITY ACTIVIST & HONORARY FILIPINOTOWN MAYOR: DR. JACINTO "JAY" VALENCIA

HON. JUDY CHU

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. CHU. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a great loss to our community, Dr. Jacinto "Jay" Valencia, who passed away on January 31, 2012, at the age of 63. My heart goes out to his loving wife, Rosalie; his son, John; his daughter, Aileen V. Michel; his grandchildren Cello, Mycah and Naiya; and the rest of his family, friends and loved ones.

I was proud to have known Dr. Jay, as he was fondly called by his friends, for many years. He was a tireless advocate for his community and for working families, and rose to one of the highest positions in the Filipino American union movement.

Dr. Jay was vice president for administrative and legislative affairs of the National Union of Health Workers, based in California, where he worked hard to secure fair benefits and compensation for the organization's membership.

His most lasting legacy, however, was his selection as the first Mayor of Philippinetown, Inc. and his work in securing the designation of Filipinotown as a Historic District by the City of Los Angeles in 2002.

His passion for bettering the lives of his fellow community members was evident in his work for elected officials he believed in, such as his stint as field representative for then California Assembly Speaker Antonio Villaraigosa in Sacramento in the 1990s, and his long-time work in organized labor. He joined SEIU 99 in Los Angeles in 2000 and remained with the organization until his selection as vice president of NUHW, which represents many Filipino and Filipina hospital workers.

Born in the Philippines on Sept. 11, 1949, Dr. Jay was very active in politics in his native country. A dedicated fighter for liberty and democratic rights, Dr. Jay was detained under martial law for being a staff member of the late Senator Benigno Aquino, Jr. in 1972. He also actively campaigned for Eddie Villanueva during the Philippines presidential elections in 2009 and was president of Bagong Pilipino.

He brought his passion for serving his community back to the United States, where he was a leader, advisor or member of many Filipino American organizations including Justice for Filipino American Veterans, through which he lobbied for full compensation of Filipino World War II veterans in Washington and Sacramento.

I urge my House colleagues to join me in honoring Dr. Jacinto "Jay" Valencia for his record of civic leadership, indomitable spirit and remarkable service and contributions to his community and to our nation.

RECOGNIZING LIEUTENANT BENNIE F. BOWERS, JR.

HON. FRED UPTON

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Lieutenant Bennie F. Bowers, Jr., a native of Benton Harbor, Michigan, who is retiring from the Michigan State Police after 25 years of impeccable service.

It is with great pleasure that I congratulate Lieutenant Bowers on his impressive and inspiring service record to the state of Michigan. His 25 years of steadfast community involvement have helped keep Michigan safe, and have made all of us from Southwest Michigan extremely proud. Lieutenant Bowers' renowned career includes protecting Michigan's citizens while posted at Michigan State Police's Battle Creek Post, Paw Paw District Headquarters and Regional Dispatch, Detroit Post, and most recently, the Metro Post. His selfless actions have made a real difference to folks within and outside of my district for decades. Lt. Bowers used innovative methods to enforce law. He was never satisfied with the status quo, and always worked to improve the communities in which he worked. He was respected by his peers and known as one to "lead by example."

Lt. Bowers' leadership is exemplified in his founding of the Michigan Youth Leadership Academy. Lt. Bowers recognized the importance of fostering discipline, respect, leadership, and teamwork in our youth. His efforts assisted in the reduction of youth crime and ingrained skills which those youth will carry with them for their whole lives. Lt. Bowers was also instrumental in the Michigan State Police Explorer Program, a program that works with youth interested in pursuing a career in law enforcement. Part of Lt. Bowers' legacy will be the youth he influenced to serve as Michigan's next generation of law enforcement officers.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to recognize Lt. Bowers' inspiring commitment to our great state and my constituents. I applaud Bennie on a fine career and wish him the best of luck in his retirement and future endeavors.

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Cordova recently completed a 344-mile walk across Colorado in 44 days to bring awareness and support for his foundation. Despite his diabetes and neuropathy aliments he is set to begin a 2,745 mile journey across the country next February to raise money for veterans' services organizations. HONORING BRONX COUNTY DISTRICT ATTORNEY ROBERT T. JOHNSON

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, in honor of Black History Month 2012, I rise today to recognize an individual from the Bronx whom I admire greatly, the Honorable Robert T. Johnson.

Robert T. Johnson has been the District Attorney of Bronx County since January 1, 1989. His first election was a historic one, as he became the first African-American District Attorney in the history of New York State. He is now the longest serving District Attorney in Bronx history.

Mr. Johnson, a native New Yorker, was born in the Bronx. He is a product of some of the many great schools in our city, including James Monroe High School, the City College of New York, and New York University School of Law. He has dedicated much of his professional life to helping, protecting, and defending the residents of New York City, and has spent several years as both a criminal defense attorney for the Legal Aid Society, and eight years as a Bronx Assistant District Attorney. In August of 1986, he was appointed a Judge of the New York City Criminal Court, and was later promoted to Acting Justice of the New York State Supreme Court, where he served until 1988.

Although Mr. Johnson has emphasized the prosecution of serious crimes, he has shown a great understanding of the many other factors that impact the criminal justice system. He has worked to reduce recidivism, to improve community outreach, to support drug rehabilitation as well as alternatives to incarceration, and to better deploy crime prevention strategies. He deeply understands that being a District Attorney is about more than just conviction rates—it is about solving the underlying problems that cause crime in the first place. Towards that end, Mr. Johnson has also worked to educate young people in the Bronx in order to help prevent crime and improve the quality of life in our neighborhoods. Two recent examples of these efforts are the Youth Trial Advocacy Program (Y-TAP) and the Students Together Avoiding Risk (STAR) Program. Y-TAP provides high school students with an opportunity to develop debating and advocacy skills by competing in a moot court program under the supervision of Assistant District Attorneys. Through the STAR program, staff from the District Attorney's Office provide 5th and 6th graders, along with their parents, with guidance on the repercussions and impact of gang participation, gun violence and drugs.

Mr. Speaker, after so many years of working to protect the residents of the Bronx, Mr. Johnson has earned the gratitude of more people than he could possibly know. Mr. Johnson is not only a highly respected prosecutor who enforces the law justly and fairly, he is also revered by a wide variety of communities throughout the Bronx. This is a testament to his judicious manner and evenhandedness, qualities that are paramount for a district attorney. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in paying tribute to someone who serves the residents of the Bronx with such distinction, The Honorable Robert T. Johnson.

HONORING CLYDE W. BOWLING

HON. H. MORGAN GRIFFITH

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. GRIFFITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I, along with Mr. GOODLATTE, would like to honor Clyde W. Bowling, a devoted public servant to the people of Bluefield and Tazewell County, on the occasion of his 100th birthday.

Mr. Bowling was born on February 26, 1912. His family moved to Graham, now known as Bluefield, where he graduated from Graham High School in 1931. From 1933 to 1934, Mr. Bowling served as a member of the Civilian Conservation Corps, working at the Beltsville, Maryland, research center and in various forestry projects.

Mr. Bowling is a proud veteran of World War II. During the War, he served with the Combat Engineers, 99th Division, and the 743rd Railroad Battalion building railroads in Germany and Belgium.

His willingness to serve extended to the Tazewell County and Bluefield communities as well. Mr. Bowling served as the leader of Boy Scout Troop 144 for over 30 years. During this time he received several awards, including the Silver Beaver Award for distinguished service to young people. He was the Treasurer of the Town of Bluefield in 1962, a member of the Tazewell County Soil and Water Conservation Board in the 1960s, and held a position as a member of the Cumberland Plateau Planning District for 13 years. He worked closely with the Tazewell County Transportation Safety Commission for 40 years to increase highway safety and support improvements. He was actively involved with American Legion Post #122, the Masonic Lodge #122, the Graham High School Athletic Booster Club, the Bluefield Business and Professional Association, and was a charter member of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 9696. Mr. Bowling is also a longtime member of Virginia Avenue United Methodist Church.

Through hard work and dedication, Mr. Bowling established the Mountain Dominion Resource Conservation and Development Area, RC & D. He served as chairman of this organization as well as the New River-Highlands RC & D. In addition, he served in all offices of the State Association of RC & D Councils, as second vice president of the Southeast Association of RC & D Councils, and was named to the Virginia State Association of RC & D Hall of Fame. Mr. Bowling's contributions to the community are to be commended. He has impacted many lives throughout his 100 years. As a member of America's greatest generation, the young people of today have much to learn from his service and dedication. We are honored to pay tribute to this great man and this very special birthday. Happy Birthday, Mr. Bowling. Thank you for all that you have done for Southwest Virginia.

HONORING THE LIFE OF LONG IS-LAND VETERAN THOMAS H. WATKINS

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the life of Thomas H. Watkins, an American veteran from Long Island. He passed away on January 31, 2012. Now, the entire community is mourning this tremendous loss

Before becoming a fixture in the Long Island community, Thomas played a key role in World War II honorably serving the U.S. Army. In late 1942, he was drafted and assigned to the 92nd Infantry Division part of the legendary Buffalo Soldiers. Of the 909,000 African Americans selected for duty in the Army during World War II, the men of the 92nd division were among the only African Americans to see combat in Europe, putting their lives on the line in battle against the German troops in Italy. Despite the harsh reality of racial segregation, Thomas and the Buffalo Soldiers fought valiantly to defend the country they loved. It was their courage and bravery that earned the respect of their fellow servicemen and country. For the next 4 years Thomas went on to serve in Italy and Germany before being honorably discharged.

After serving on the battlefields, Thomas continued his commitment to his country at the Northport Veteran Affairs Medical Center. He went on to work on behalf of Long Island veterans for over 20 years before finishing his career with the Town of Huntington. Not only was Thomas a great resource for Long Island veterans, he was a deeply engaged civic leader and public servant in his community.

A member of the Bethel A.M.E. Church in Huntington, Thomas worked tirelessly for the congregation he loved as Trustee Emeritus. Also, aware of the vital need for racial equality in America, Thomas held a lifetime membership to the NAACP. His devotion to his community, faith and family should be commended.

There is no question that his fellow veterans, his family and Long Islanders will miss Thomas. In the wake of his passing, we should all remember the sacrifice our veterans make to keep us safe here at home. I am forever grateful for Thomas's contributions as a serviceman and leader on Long Island. I offer my sincerest thoughts and prayers to his family.

MEMORIAM FOR FRANK CUSHING, APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE STAFF DIRECTOR

HON. JERRY LEWIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Frank Martin Cushing, who gave more than 30 years of service to the Nation as a congressional staffer, culminating as the staff director for the House Appropriations Committee. Frank passed away on Monday, Feb. 6, 2012 at the age of 59.

Frank was a fabulous person, a true leader and someone who you could always count on to get an extremely difficult job done right—while leaving everyone feeling good about it when it was finished. He was a mentor and friend to so many of the wonderful staff who work for the Appropriations Committee, and one of the best people I ever worked with in my career in public service.

I first came to know Frank well when he came to work for me as staff director of the House Appropriations Committee on Veterans Affairs, HUD and Independent Agencies in 1994. He immediately helped craft a bill that reduced spending by several billion dollars, but at the same time won over many agency heads and executive branch officials who found him tough but fair and extremely knowledgeable about their needs.

Frank was a giant of a man. Members on both sides of the aisle—in both the House and Senate—respected him for his integrity, compassion, pragmatism and mastery of the political process. When I became Appropriations Committee chairman in 2005, there was no doubt in my mind who should be staff director of the full committee. I was extremely gratified when Frank agreed—and became just the 12th staff director of the House Appropriations Committee in U.S. history.

His legacy remains on the committee in the many excellent staff members he hired and trained. And he will be missed by the hundreds of members and staff throughout the House and Senate who came to know and admire him. I have no doubt that many will join me in reaching out to his wife, Amy and their four children, and express their sympathy at her loss and their gratitude for having known Frank Cushing.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide the obituary for Frank in order for my colleagues to understand what a truly remarkable person and public servant he was:

FRANK MARTIN CUSHING

APRIL 9, 1952-FEBRUARY 6, 2012

Frank Cushing, loving husband, son, father, grandfather, brother, and mentor died at his home in Falls Church on Monday, February 6, 2012. He was 59 years old.

Widely respected for his deep faith, integrity, and love of family and country, Cushing left an indelible mark in public policy through more than 30 years of public service in the House of Representatives, U.S. Senate, and Washington, DC business community. Cushing was widely regarded as one of the most knowledgeable individuals in Washington concerning the congressional appropriations and Federal budget processes.

Cushing graduated from the University of Idaho in 1974 with a Bachelor of Arts degree in political science and completed graduate level work in public policy administration at the University of Idaho and Boise State University in 1974–75. He came to Washington, DC in 1977 to work as a legislative assistant for Senator James McClure of Idaho. Cushing served as clerk of the Senate Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee for Chairman McClure from 1981–84 under full committee Chairman Mark Hatfield of Oregon, and as staff director for the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee under Chairman McClure from 1984–91.

Following a three-year stint as Corporate Vice President of a Fortune 50 energy firm, Cushing returned to Capitol Hill in 1995 to serve as Clerk and Staff Director of the House Veterans Affairs, Housing and Urban Development (VA-HUD) and Independent Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee for then Subcommittee Chairman Jerry Lewis of California under full Committee Chairman Bob Livingston of Louisiana. He left the Hill in 2003 to become a partner at a firm specializing in appropriations consulting but returned to the House in 2005 as the Clerk and Staff Director of the full House Appropriations Committee under newly elected Chairman Lewis. Cushing was the twelfth Clerk and Staff Director of the House Appropriations Committee in U.S. history and today his portrait hangs in the U.S. Capitol with his predecessors dating back to 1865.

Cushing retired from the Hill in 2008 to become a partner in a D.C. law and consulting firm where he devoted his time and energy to public policy, particularly relating to funding for science and education. His integrity, compassion, pragmatism, and masterful political skills were admired by House Members, Senators, and staff on both sides of the aisle. Cushing also served as an At-Large Trustee of the Consortium for Ocean Leadership. He also served on the Advisory Board of the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival at the University of Idaho.

Cushing is survived by his wife, Amy Hammer of Falls Church, VA; his mother, Elizabeth Cushing of Arlington, VA; his brother, William P. Cushing, Jr. of Norristown, PA.; 4 children, Christina Abel of Caldwell, ID, Jennifer Dewing of Crandon, WI, Amy Catherine Cushing of Falls Church, VA, and Nathaniel Allen Cushing, of Falls Church, VA; and 12 grandchildren. Friends and family were blessed to join him at home over the last weeks of his life on earth for a time of reflection, confirmation, and joy.

A memorial service celebrating the life and memory of Frank Martin Cushing will be held on Monday, February 13 at 3 p.m. at Columbia Baptist Church, 103 West Columbia Street, Falls Church, VA, where Cushing served as a deacon.

In lieu of flowers, donations are requested to be designated to the Frank Martin Cushing Public Policy Scholarship through the University of Idaho Foundation, Inc., P.O. Box 443147, Moscow, ID 83844–3147, as a part of the James A. and Louise McClure Center for Public Policy Research for which Cushing served on the Advisory Board. Contributions may also be directed to CrossLink International, 427 North Maple Avenue, Falls Church, VA 22046.

CONGRATULATING CHARLOTTE HAWKINS FLOWERS ON HER 112TH BIRTHDAY

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today and ask my colleagues to join me in wishing a happy 112th birthday to Ms. Charlotte Hawkins Flowers.

Ms. Flowers, or Gram as she is lovingly called by her family, was born on March 20, 1900 in Madison, Florida. Throughout her life, Gram has always taken care of others. Whether friends, families, neighbors or strangers, Gram always was ready to help others in any way she could. Her granddaughter, whom she has lived with in Riviera Beach since 2005, reflected that Gram lived her life in adherence to Ecclesiastes 9:10 which states that: "Whatever your hand finds to do, do it with all your might."

With a special place in her heart for helping children, Gram had a in-home day care center in the 60's and 70's and has been a foster grandparent. As the oldest of three daughters and four sons born to Date Hawkins, she left school in the third grade to help care for her siblings. However, she still learned how to read and write and provided her grandchildren with help with their homework.

Gram also has a knack for cooking, working as a cook at Florida State University and also as a private home cook. Although she personally has a sweet tooth and loves Coca-Cola, sweet tea, and sweet potato pie, as a cook, one of her specialties was homemade biscuits. In addition to filling others up with delicious food, she also fills them with wisdom. One of her trademark sayings is "Be careful how you treat people. Because you're up today doesn't mean you won't be down tomorrow." This sentiment was something my grandmother used to also share with me and are words we should all live by every day in caring for others.

To that end, Gram always was active in her church, the Philadelphia Primitive Baptist Church in Tallahassee. She believes that it is her walk with Jesus that keeps her going strong. This strength allowed her until a few years ago to visit the sick and shut-in members of her church. Although she learned to drive, Gram never got her drivers' license or owned a car so she would often walk to make these visits. Even at 111, Gram still tries to help out in any way she can.

Mr. Speaker, on February 20, 2012, Ms. Charlotte Hawkins Flowers will be celebrating her 112th birthday with her son's family in Florida. Although she has survived her six siblings and nine children, she will be surrounded by a multitude of family: 5 grandchildren, 12 great-grandchildren, 11 great-great grandchildren, 16 great-great grandchildren, and 4 great-great-great-great grandchildren, is my distinguished honor to wish her a very happy birthday and congratulate her on reaching this milestone and dedicating her life to caring for others.

HONORING PRINCIPAL YVETTE AGUIRRE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor a pillar of the Sunset Park community, an educator and an advocate for Brooklyn's children. Today, a wing of PS 169 is being dedicated to honor Mrs. Aguirre's years of service to the children of Sunset Park. As a teacher, Mrs. Aguirre saw firsthand the needs and potential of our children. She recognized that, when given the resources and opportunity to learn in the right environment, every child can become a successful member of the community. In that regard, she has been a steadfast champion for relieving overcrowding in our schools and neighborhoods. She successfully led a campaign that united the parents of Sunset Park and helped them coalesce behind a vision of better schools, smaller class sizes and a stronger community.

In 1997, Sunset Park opened Public School 24, an institution that has now served thousands of our community's children. Mrs. Aguirre became the school's first Principal. In that role she was always committed to ensuring students and classrooms were held to high expectations. That guiding philosophy, coupled with strong faculty development and mentoring, served as a recipe for success for all those who passed through PS 24's doors over the years.

While Mrs. Aguirre is now retired, Sunset Park's residents remember her many contributions. Naming a school wing after this prominent leader, woman, educator, principal and mentor is a fitting tribute to her legacy. The name of Principal Yvette Aguirre will remind students and the community of the work of a proud Latina, a positive role model and a champion for education.

Mr. Speaker, talented and passionate educators are a gift. They give of themselves tirelessly in an effort to improve our communities and ensure our children have access to opportunity. Mrs. Aguirre is one of those educators and, today, I would ask all my colleagues to join me in honoring her many achievements.

CITY OF GOLDEN USA PRO CY-CLING CHALLENGE STAGE SIX TEAM

HON. ED PERLMUTTER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud the City of Golden USA Pro Cycling Challenge Stage Six Team for receiving the Chairman's Award from the Greater Golden Chamber of Commerce.

The Greater Golden Chamber of Commerce Chairman's Award is a very special award and is not awarded every year. This award is at the discretion of the Chair. Nominees must contribute a great deal to the overall economic vitality of the Greater Golden Area.

For seven consecutive days, 135 of the world's top athletes raced across 518 miles through the majestic Rockies, reaching higher altitudes than they have ever had to endure, more than two miles in elevation. It featured the best of the best in professional cycling, competing on a challenging course through some of America's most beautiful scenery, including cities such as Aspen, Vail, Breckenridge, Steamboat Springs and Golden.

The USA Pro Cycling Challenge commissioned IFM, a global sports research firm with 20 plus years of cycling experience around the world, to conduct a quantitative research study to measure the overall economic impact of the inaugural cycling event. Their findings showed the economic impact to the State of Colorado was in excess of $83.5 million. Golden received a great deal of this impact as the crowds in Golden and surrounding areas were enormous. Due to the Golden Team's excellent job in 2011, the City of Golden has been awarded the beginning of the fifth stage for 2012.

I extend my deepest congratulations to the City of Golden USA Pro Cycling Challenge Six Team for this well deserved recognition by the Greater Golden Chamber of Commerce. I have no doubt they will excel in 2012.

 $\begin{array}{c} {\tt FEDERAL} \ {\tt RESEARCH} \ {\tt PUBLIC} \\ {\tt ACCESS} \ {\tt ACT} \end{array}$

HON. MICHAEL F. DOYLE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES  $Thursday, \ February \ 9, \ 2012$

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity this morning to talk to you about bipartisan legislation I've just introduced: the Federal Research Public Access Act.

When a federally-funded researcher writes a paper, too often that paper gets locked away behind a "pay-wall" and anyone who wants to learn from that federally-funded research has to pay exorbitant subscription or one-time

Our nation benefits when scientists are able to share their research and collaborate—sometimes across different fields of study.

The public benefits when it's able to learn about a rare disease whose only discussion is in a scientific paper. Or when science students are able to access and draw from a broad array of work by other scientists to enhance their research.

Other major funders of scientific research—especially in health—such as the U.K. government or private foundations are increasingly requiring the papers they fund to be available to the public.

Some universities such as Harvard, MIT, Stanford, Carnegie Mellon, and the University of Kansas require papers written by their professors to be made available to the public.

In 2008, the Appropriations Committee expanded the public access policy requirements of the National Institutes of Health. The NIH has since implemented an online public access system called PubMed, which has gotten tremendous support from the scientific community.

I believe we'd all benefit from greater access to cutting edge research, but several specific groups would probably benefit most: Scientists, whose research will be more broadly read; Scholars, who will have fewer barriers to obtaining the research they need and whose research will also be more broadly read; Funders, who will gain from accelerated discovery, facilitation of interdisciplinary research methodologies, preservation of vital research findings, and an improved capacity to manage their research portfolios; and Taxpayers, who will obtain economic and social benefits from the leveraging of their investment in scientific research through effects such as enhanced technology transfer, broader application of research to health care, and more informed policy development.

It's not hard to think of the high school student who wants to major in medicine or science digging around the database looking for ideas.

Nor is it hard to foresee investigators looking at research in other disciplines to get ideas they can apply to their own field.

Or a college student at an undergraduate institution getting access to a journal their college has never been able to purchase.

Or a researcher's publication getting cited more often in other studies because it's easier to find and its reach extended past its original journal's readers.

That's why I've introduced the Federal Research Public Access Act, which would require federal agencies with annual extramural research budgets of $100 million or more to provide the public with online access to research manuscripts stemming from federally funded research no later than six months after publication in a peer-reviewed journal.

My legislation is a bipartisan effort, and I thank my colleagues, Congressman KEVIN YODER of Kansas and Congressman WM. LACY CLAY of Missouri for joining me to express their strong support for public access to federal research. I'm also pleased to note that my colleagues in the United States Senate have also introduced identical, bipartisan legislation.

I've been working on this issue since the 2006 debate on the reauthorization of the National Institutes of Heath. I'm pleased to note that since 2006, the NIH has implemented a public access policy. But it still only applies to the NIH, while research funded by other federal agencies remains difficult or expensive to access.

In 2009, the White House's Office of Science and Technology Policy, OSTP, expressed interest in public access policies and issued a request for public comment on mechanisms that would leverage federal investments in scientific research and increase access to information that promises to stimulate scientific and technological innovation and competitiveness. In recent months, the OSTP continued this process by collecting a second round of public comments to inform its development of public access policies for federal agencies.

My bill would give the OSTP Congressional direction to assist it in crafting public access policies. I want OSTP to write the strongest, best rule possible. But even they need help and this legislation will provide them with guidance.

I believe that this bipartisan bill strikes a good balance among the needs of scientists, the rights of taxpayers, and the financial interests of companies that have historically published this research in peer-reviewed, usually expensive subscription publications. The bill gives publishers an exclusive six-month period in which the information will be available to subscribers, and it allows them to continue to market the additional value they add to these manuscripts when they publish them.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can move this bill through Congress before the end of the year.

H.R. 3582—PRO-GROWTH BUDG-ETING ACT AND H.R. 3578—BASE-LINE REFORM ACT

HON, BETTY McCOLLUM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES  $Thursday, \ February \ 9, \ 2012$

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to both H.R. 3582 and H.R. 3578. These misguided bills make it easier for Congress to pass budgets that give wealthy individuals unaffordable tax breaks while devastating America's communities with cuts to schools, hospitals and road and bridge repairs.

H.R. 3582, the Pro Growth Budgeting Act, requires the Congressional Budget Office, CBO, to use "dynamic scoring" as part of a macroeconomic impact analysis of tax provisions. This new method is based on the false premise that tax cuts pay for themselves, which would hide the true costs of passing even more tax cuts for America's wealthiest individuals.

H.R. 3578, the Baseline Reform Act, mandates a fundamental change in how CBO forecasts future discretionary spending in its baseline, requiring CBO to unrealistically assume that spending in the future will stay the same and not keep pace with inflation. Over the long-term, this could result in a substantial decrease in vital government services that niillions of Americans rely on.

Both of these bills present a distorted picture of the federal budget outlook. H.R. 3582 and H.R. 3578 will fail to create jobs, reduce the national deficit, or put the country on a fiscally sustainable path. By bringing these bills to the floor, the House Republican Majority is once again failing to focus on the most pressing need of our constituents: growing the economy and creating jobs.

It is time to leave behind the failed Republican economic policies of the last decade. The Great Recession proved that deregulation and tax cuts for the wealthy at a time when America is fighting two wars destroys jobs and produces enormous deficits. Republicans and Democrats need to come together around a new agenda that makes strategic investments in our country. We can start with President Obama's American Jobs Act, which would put more than 1 million Americans back to work, according to independent economists. By working together, we can build a stronger, more competitive economy for the 21st cen-

I urge my colleagues to oppose them.

GAUGING AMERICAN PORT SECURITY

HON. JANICE HAHN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. HAHN. Mr. Speaker, the lessons of 9/11 have taught us that we must continuously be vigilant in proactively seeking out and preventing our country's most pressing threats. That is why after 9/11, Congress began to shine a spotlight on previously ignored issues such as border security, airport security and strengthening identification procedures. However, an area that continues to be ignored is port security.

In the U.S., tens of thousands of ships each vear make over 50,000 calls on U.S. ports. These ships carry the bulk of the approximately two billion tons of freight, three billion tons of oil transports, and 134 million passengers by ferry each year.

The volume of traffic gives terrorists opportunities to smuggle themselves or their weapons into the United States with little risk of detection. According to a report by the Council on Foreign Relations, in May 2002 there were HONORING THE LIFE AND SERVICE reports that twenty-five Islamist extremists entered the United States by hiding in shipping containers.

This highlights the need for an immediate legislative solution to counter this problem. However, it is difficult to come up with an effective solution without first knowing all of the potential dangers.

That is why I am introducing the Gauging American Port Security (GAPS) Act. The GAPS Act addresses these problems by requiring that the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) report to Congress on the current weaknesses and vulnerabilities of U.S. ports and ensures that DHS develops a comprehensive plan for addressing them. Only by focusing on the specific dangers that threaten our port security, can we develop effective solutions to ensure our nation is prepared for any and all types of attacks.

Mayor Calvo began working for the Government of Guam in 1952, where he served as Chairman for Parks and Recreation within the Department of Public Works. During his time at Public Works, Mr. Calvo was instrumental in organizing summer programs for teens. He continued this passion for helping the island's youth during his term as Mayor, where he organized sporting events for baseball and basketball.

Mayor Calvo was strongly involved in the introduction of Little League baseball on Guam. From the early 1950s to the official national chartering of the Little League in 1967. Mayor Calvo was a leading supporter for the development of the sport for our island's youth. In 1983, he proposed to split the Little League Far East region into the Asia region and the Pacific region, in order to give the smaller Pacific nations an opportunity to compete in the Little League World Series. In 2000, the proposal was passed and since then Guam has sent teams to compete in the Little League World Series.

HONORING THE ACCOMPLISH-MENTS OF UNITED WAY OF MCLEAN COUNTY ILLINOIS

HON. TIMOTHY V. JOHNSON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Thursday, February 9, 2012

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker I rise today to recognize the outstanding achievement of the United Way of McLean County. The United Way provides funding for 27 agencies that operate a total of 45 local programs to help assist the homeless, people with developmental disabilities, and families in crisis.

The United Way, with the help of citizens and businesses throughout McLean County, raised over $4.3 million during its latest fundraising period.

This money was raised in part by a community that has always valued self reliance and over the years has come together in times of hardship to meet common goals and to assist its own citizens. The great people of McLean County are proof that we do not need to rely on the government to take care of every problem.

I would like to also thank State Farm and all of their employees. Together, they donated a total of $1.9 million to the cause of the United Way. This includes $99,000 that State Farm donated before the close of fundraising to make sure the United Way exceeded its goal of $4.3 million. State Farm's continued relationship with the McLean County community is another illustration of the benefits that accompany accepting and promoting private businesses in your local area.

The United Way is an asset to McLean county, and I pray for their continued success and assistance in the years to come.

Even before his passing, people of South Dallas reflected on his seemingly limitless passion for helping others.

Reverend Garrett loved all and served all in his community. Through the Church, he created programs to help the homeless and feed the hungry, provided financial assistance to the poor, funded scholarships for underprivileged youth, and spearheaded initiatives to care for the elderly and the disabled. During Hurricane Katrina, Reverend Garrett assisted with relocating thousands of evacuees, extending his contributions far beyond the Dallas area.

In recognition of his years of service, the community came together last year to petition for the renaming of Bexar Street in Reverend Garrett's honor. With overwhelming support from the community and the Dallas City Council, the street will be named in honor of Reverend Carlton Garrett. It is a fitting tribute to someone who served the South Dallas community and beyond for so many years.

Mr. Speaker, I am saddened to lose such an integral member of the Dallas community. Reverend Garrett is part of a distinguished group of people who have always put the needs of others ahead of their own, and made invaluable contributions to the world. While the Dallas community will surely miss Reverend Garrett, his memory will live on in the hearts and minds of all whom he has inspired throughout his life, and through the good deeds and service that touched so many lives.

CONDEMNING THE ONGOING VIOLENCE IN SYRIA

HON. BETTY McCOLLUM

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to condemn the unspeakable violence that the Government of Syria has committed—and continues to commit—against its own citizens. For the past eleven months, the Syrian people have engaged in peaceful demonstrations to demand their basic, universal human rights. These demonstrations have been met with unrelenting bloodshed and torture. Thousands of Syrian men, women, and children have been slaughtered. There can be no question: President Bashar al-Assad must step down, or be removed from power.

Last week, the United States, the Arab League, and a growing international coalition together called for a United Nations Security Council resolution that would end the crisis and begin a transition to democracy in Syria. I am appalled that Russia and China have chosen to veto this measure, and stand with a brutal dictator rather than the Syrian people. This veto is an outrage, and serves only to endorse President Assad's ongoing massacre. On February 4th, the day of the U.N. Security Council vote, the Syrian military launched a devastating attack on the city of Homs that continues today. Hundreds of unarmed civilians have been killed.

I strongly support President Obama's efforts to work with America's western and Arab allies to stop the bloodshed. Though China and Russia have chosen to stand with Assad, the world will not. Already, nations across the Middle East and throughout the world are expelling Syrian diplomats, tightening sanctions, and ratcheting up pressure on the Syrian government. The time has come for President Assad to step down, and for the Syrian people to determine their own future.

She is married to Frederick Williams and to that union they have two children, James and Samantha.

After graduating, she served as a registered nurse at the University of Mississippi Medical Center hospital assisting on the general medical and surgical floors. HONORING LONG-TIME COMMUNITY ACTIVIST AND UNION ADVOCATE: MRS. LEORA HILL

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 9, 2012

Ms. CHU. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a great loss to our community, Mrs. Leora Hill, who passed away on New Year's Day, 2012, at the young age of 60. My heart goes out to her husband, Wayne Hill; her daughter, Tonii Nichole Brady; her six grand-children and great-grandchild; and the rest of her family, friends and loved ones.

Leora was an extraordinary citizen, an activist for working families, a dedicated public servant and a tireless advocate for her community in the Crenshaw District of Los Angeles. A fighter for her fellow California residents, Leora spent hundreds of hours attending community meetings, lobbying elected officials and volunteering on dozens of political and public service campaigns.

Leora's dedication to her fellow Californians led her to a 23-year career as a tax technician for the State Board of Equalization, where she helped thousands of entrepreneurs and small business owners navigate the state tax process, file the necessary paperwork to start their businesses and helping entrepreneurs to create jobs and become viable and productive members of the business community.

Her passion for ensuring fair rights and decent wages for California's working families kicked off a longtime tenure as an activist in her union, SEIU Local 1000, where she became chair of the Committee on Political Education, COPE, for Southern California. She also served as President of Local 1000's District Labor Council 723, where she was the labor leader for state employees in south Los Angeles County.

Leora was a true fighter for the underdog. When state employees were threatened with major reductions in wages and furloughed by the governor, she made numerous media appearances, speaking out forcefully in favor of working families.

Leora's tireless efforts on behalf of working families were recognized by then-SEIU International President Andy Stern with a special recognition in 2008.

Leora was also dedicated to increasing political awareness and civic involvement among her fellow residents. Her recruitment of friends, neighbors, and co-workers for political campaigns and other efforts to improve her community truly made a difference in the lives of countless Californians.

I urge my House colleagues to join me in honoring Mrs. Leora Hill for her record of civic leadership, her indomitable spirit and her remarkable service and contributions to her community and to our Nation.

SURFACE TRANSPORTATION ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in the 1950s, America embarked on the largest public works project in its history: a new web of interstate highways. This came about as a result of then-President Eisenhower reflecting upon a time when he was given an assignment as a young major to bring a caravan of vehicles across the country as part of his duties in the Army. It was a terrible experience—roads were dilapidated, rutted—and it was something he never forgot.

When he became President of the United States, he decided something should be done about that. This was a tremendous undertaking; 47,000 miles of highways would, for the first time, connect businesses and communities from sea to shining sea. President Eisenhower—of course, a Republican—said the investment would pave the way for a new era of American growth. He said:

America will be a nation of great prosperity, but will be more than that: it will be a nation that is going ahead every day. . . . The expanding horizon is one that staggers the imagination.

President Eisenhower said a new highway system was essential to our economy, our safety, and our progress as a nation. That is just as true today as it was in 1954.

Today, America depends on more than 4 million miles of roadways to keep our economy humming. We use those roads to take the kids across town to school and to take products across the Nation to market. But the system of highways, roadways, railways, and bridges upon which the American economy depends—and in which we invested our great resources during the last century—has fallen into a state of disrepair.

This is hard to comprehend, but more than 70,000 of our bridges are structurally deficient. They need major repairs or need to be replaced completely—70,000 bridges. Every month in America enough pedestrians are killed to fill a jumbo jet. Many of these deaths could have been prevented by proper sidewalks and crosswalks. Bus and train ridership grows every year while public transportation dollars shrink every year. One of every five miles of American roads is not up to safety standards.

Let me repeat: We have 70,000 bridges that are structurally deficient, and we have 20 percent of our roads not up to safety standards. Crumbling infrastructure is a terrible drag on our economy. But this crisis is also an opportunity. By rebuilding our transportation system, we can put 2 million Americans back to work and boost our economy right away.

The surface transportation bill that is on the Senate floor this week is one of the most important pieces of legislation we will consider the entire year. It will help modernize our transit system, rebuild America's roads and bridges, and create or save millions of middleclass jobs. And, it will do it in a fiscally responsible way.

Democrats and Republicans agree that making America's transportation system great again will boost our economy, and that is what this bill is all about. It is a bipartisan bill sponsored, of course, by the chairman of the committee BARBARA BOXER and the ranking member of the committee Senator INHOFE.

President Reagan called a world-class transportation system an investment in tomorrow that we must make today. So it is no wonder this strong bipartisan surface transportation legislation passed the committee unanimously. I am cautiously optimistic that spirit of cooperation will continue this week.

I hope the junior Senator from South Carolina did not speak for the majority of Republicans last week when he said, "We don't have shared goals with the Democrats." I would like to believe Republicans share our goal of strengthening the economy and creating millions of jobs for American workers. I would like to believe they share a goal, as Eisenhower and Clinton and Reagan did, of rebuilding a world-class transportation system to support a world-class economy.

This week Republicans have an opportunity to prove they share these goals. The surface transportation jobs bill is too important to get bogged down with ideological amendments. Unrelated legislation that would limit women's access to health care has no place on a transportation bill. So let's stay laser-focused on our most important task: putting 2 million Americans back to work rebuilding our roadways and railways. Together we can keep this Nation, as President Eisenhower said, "moving ahead every day."

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized.

THE BUDGET

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, President Obama released a budget today that isn't really a budget at all. It is a campaign document. The President's goal isn't to solve our problems but to ignore them for another year, which will only ensure they get even worse. Once again, the President is shirking his responsibility to lead by using this budget to divide us.

The game plan is perfectly clear. Rather than reach out to Congress to craft a consensus budget, the President will take this budget on the road, as he did today, and talk about the parts he thinks audiences will like. What he will not say is that it is bad for job creation, bad for seniors, and it will make the economy worse.

The President's budget is bad for jobs because it includes the biggest tax hike in history and continues policies such as the Democrats' health care law that is making it harder for small businesses to hire.

A little more than a year ago, the President extended current tax rates because he thought raising them would be bad for jobs. Today he will call for raising them anyway because he thinks it is good for him.

The President's budget is bad for our seniors because it doesn't protect the security of Medicare and Social Security and assures those programs keep careening toward insolvency.

The President's budget is bad for our country's economic security because yet again the President failed to take the prime opportunity this budget provides to address the Nation's $15 trillion debt.

Contrary to the President's claims out on the road, this budget is literally loaded with deficit reduction gimmicks that would trigger an IRS audit for anybody else and make our current economic situation even worse.

Now, the President isn't going to mention any of those things, but Americans deserve to know the whole truth about this budget. They deserve to know why the President's own party own top advisers are trying to deflect serious questions about what is really going on here.

Yesterday, the President's Chief of Staff said the reason this budget will not get anywhere in the Senate is because it would take 60 votes to pass-60 votes to pass—and the Democrats don't have that many votes on their own.

Well, I would suggest Mr. Lew review his Sunday briefing materials a little more closely next time. As someone who has run the Office of Management and Budget for two different Presidents. he knows as well as anybody in Washington a simple majority is all it takes to pass a budget resolution in the Senate, a simple majority. In other words, Democrats could pass this President's budget without a single Republican vote—not one.

The inconvenient truth that President Obama and his own top advisers don't want to admit is that this budget isn't going anywhere because the President's own party doesn't want to have anything whatsoever to do with it. Indeed, the majority leader in the Senate has already declared it "dead on arrival."

Now, Jack Lew knows this as well as I do, and the fact that he does proves beyond any doubt the President has no intention of this budget ever actually being implemented. If he can't even count on members of his own party to support it, who does he expect is going to support it?

The truth is, Democrats want to have it both ways. The President wants to be able to take his budget around the country to talk about the parts of it he thinks people will like, and Democrats in Congress want to be able to avoid a vote on it because it is so damaging for job creation and seniors and the econ-

Well, if anybody wants to know what a failure of leadership looks like, this is it. This is it. Three years ago, President Obama promised to cut the Federal deficit in half by the end of his first term. He hasn't even come close. Here he is once again proposing the same failed policies that have prolonged this economic crisis well into the President's fourth year in office. After the national debt increased under his watch by more than 40 percent, he is still throwing good money after bad. He is still spending money we don't have on things we don't need. He still refuses to lead.

Democrats in Congress have been more than happy to enable him. They haven't passed a budget of their own in 3 years, and all indications are they will not pass one this year either—a failure of congressional leadership that will surely go down in history. At this point, nothing seems capable of rousing this President to action. Every day we hear the alarm bells sounding from across the Atlantic. It doesn't seem to doesn't want to vote on it and why his phase him. Every day we hear the warnings from experts and economists that our fiscal situation unsustainable.

Just a few months ago, the unthinkable happened when America's credit rating was actually lowered for the first time in history.

What is this President's response? A budget he knows even his own party will not support. That is his response to this $15 trillion debt. So this is a charade—a charade. The only question is when this President's own refusal to lead will catch up to all the rest of us.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President. I wish to continue the comments along the line of our distinguished Republican leader and talk about the President's proposed budget that was released today.

Unfortunately, the President's budget proposes more debt, more spending, and higher taxes. It is bad news for job creation and for America's job creators and portends nothing good; indeed, only does it portend ominously for our country getting back on the right economic track and creating the kind of growth that will generate jobs and prosperity.

The President's proposed budget again ignores his own bipartisan fiscal commission, the Simpson-Bowles Commission, which concluded in December of 2010 that America faced "a moment of truth" because we simply had spent more money than we were taking in for too long and had accumulated too much debt, which was killing economic growth and threatening to turn us into a Western European country, which we see today that the eurozone is in jeopardv.

One week from today, millions of Americans will celebrate President's Day, our national holiday that honors all our Commanders in Chief. But this year, President Obama will share a distinction that no other President has ever had: He has proposed a budget that dwarfs all the debt accumulated over more than 22 decades by all his predecessors.

When President Obama took office in January 2009, the national debt was about $10 trillion or, broken down for every man, woman, and child in America, about $33,000, something that neither political party could be particularly proud of.

Today it is far worse: more than $15 trillion, an increase of more than 50 percent in 3 years. Under this budget proposal that the President released today, Federal borrowing will never stop. The national debt will more than double to $26 trillion or $75,000 for every man, woman, and child in America. Simply put, the President's proposed budget makes it worse, not better.

We all know we can't keep this up. The sad part is the President understands this too but simply refuses to provide the leadership necessary to put us on the right path.

We have heard it before, but I will repeat it. Former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, ADM Mike Mullen, said the debt is the biggest threat to our national security. How could that be? It is because, as Admiral Mullen knows and we are now learning, when we live in fiscally constrained times, some of the first cuts that occur are to the Defense Department. In fact, while the Defense Department incurs roughly 20 percent of discretionary spending, it has so far been planned for 50 percent of the cuts, increasing the national security risk to every American.

After promising the American people he would cut the deficit in half by the end of his first term, the President's most recent plan means America will have an annual deficit of more than $1 trillion for every year of his Presidency. That is right, $1 trillion of deficit for each of the 4 years of his first term in office. This is unprecedented and dangerous. It is dangerous to our prosperity and to our Nation's future.

While the President seems to be unwilling to come to grips with the nature of our debt crisis, my constituents in Texas understand that the national debt poses very real security risks because they are already beginning to see the cuts that are occurring or are planned in our national security spending. My constituents in Texas are also concerned, in a State that happens to be growing faster than almost any other part of the country, that the threat of higher taxes discourages the people to whom we look to create jobs, to start new businesses.

Rather than have a comprehensive review of our Tax Code, as the Simpson-Bowles Commission proposed, this budget proposes to target certain industries, such as the domestic oil and gas industry, despite rising prices at the pump. The White House seems oblivious to what would happen to the jobs that are generated by this industry and all the revenue the government would lose if we outsource even more of our energy production to foreign Nations.

The President appears to feel like small businesses are undertaxed because the so-called millionaire's tax he has proposed will hit many small businesses that we depend upon to create jobs. Indeed, as Senator McConnell just acknowledged, it was only December of 2010 when the President himself agreed to extend expiring tax provisions because, as he stated, higher taxes would be the last thing we would want to do during a fragile economic recovery because we know it will serve as a wet blanket; it will be a disincentive on job creation.

We need a serious discussion on tax reform. The Simpson-Bowles Commission made a responsible proposal—not perfect but a good start. But the President has simply ignored the recommendations of his own bipartisan commission since those recommendations were made in December of 2010.

The President's budget also proposes about $1.9 trillion in new taxes, as I indicated. The good news, from my perspective, is that we already had a number of votes last year on these kinds of tax increases, and the Congress has rejected them. The bad news is these assumed tax increases help mask the true size of the deficits in the President's proposed budget and will do damage to any hope of sustained job creation.

Then there is the phony accounting, the gimmicks. Unfortunately, all we have to do is look at the Gallup poll to see in what regard Congress is held; and it is the kind of gamesmanship and the gimmicks in this budget which contribute to people's cynicism about their elected officials and about their government.

What does the President do? He says we are going to save money from future war spending, and we are going to use that as an offset for new spending and to reduce the deficit. But I have to observe, that is cynical at best. His budget is claiming artificial savings from money that never would be spent in the first place for wars that hopefully will never be fought. But he is saying, because we will not fight this unspecified war, then we are going to take that savings as if we would and save it and offset it to try to balance the budget.

Even this gimmick cannot hide the fact the President wants to continue the record-level stimulus spending that began on his watch. You will recall Christina Romer, head of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, told us if we just pass this $787 billion stimulus bill, unemployment will never go above 8 percent.

If we go back and look at those same charts and what they say about the first quarter of 2012, they project unemployment at 6 percent. Obviously, that stimulus failed to meet its own projections, and what President Obama wants us to do is more of the same and to spend more borrowed money.

The vacuum of leadership that starts at the White House extends, unfortunately, to this Chamber, a Senate led by Majority Leader REID, in which he has no plans to present a budget for the third year in a row. Even before the President released his budget, the Senate majority leader already told the American people the Senate will ignore it. He was quoted in the press saying it would be foolish for the majority to propose a budget.

Why? Because he doesn't want to subject members of his own caucus to hard votes, to tough decisions. These are exactly the kinds of tough decisions the American people sent us to make, and these are exactly the kinds of tough decisions every household and every small business in America is expected to make in order to cope with this economic crisis we find ourselves in. But this is exactly what Majority Leader REID has chosen to protect his members from making. Why? Because it will help solve the problem? No. Because he doesn't want them to be held accountable in the next election.

We know it has been more than 1,000 days since the Senate passed a budget, and it is just unthinkable, to me, that we would fail to meet one of our most basic responsibilities. Can you imagine a family or a small business operating without a budget? We know why it is so important and why the absence of a budget has encouraged and facilitated runaway spending: Because when we budget, we figure out how much money we have and we figure out what we must have and what our priorities are. Then we figure out what we would like to have but maybe can't afford to have now so we need to put off. And then we figure out what we want but we can't afford that so we are going to have to do without Congress has simply, under Senator REID and the Democratic majority of the Senate, refused to meet its responsibilities for fiscal discipline. It is clear they are running out of excuses.

Senator McConnell pointed out that Jack Lew, the President's new Chief of Staff, said: The reason why Democrats can't pass a budget, even though they hold the majority, even though they control the agenda, is because of those mean old Republicans, because it takes 60 votes to pass a budget.

Mr. Lew has been around a long time and he knows that is not true. I had hoped he would have corrected the record because he knows—and we all know—it takes a simple majority of the Senate to pass a budget. But before we can pass a budget, Majority Leader REID has to call it up and bring it on the floor of the Senate and schedule a vote, which he has simply refused to do.

So instead of acting responsibly and proposing a budget and voting on a budget and allowing it to be debated, the President has chosen to take the low road and, last year, simply to attack chairman of the House Budget Committee PAUL RYAN and House Republicans for the budget they passed. It is not perfect, but it was trying to do their job and to make a responsible proposal. But rather than meet that responsible proposal with a counterproposal and try to work out the differences during the legislative process, the President, unfortunately, took the low road and attacked and attacked and attacked, rather than trying to offer a viable solution.

It should come as no surprise that under the President's watch, the national debt has grown to more than $15 trillion and is now larger than the U.S. economy. That is right, our debt is 100 percent of our gross domestic product. Government spending is now 25 percent of our economy; unfortunately, revenue is about 15 percent. So we have a 10-percent gap, which represents the annual deficit, and the cumulative deficits make up that $15 trillion debt.

We know our Nation has lost its AAA credit rating from Standard & Poor's because they are becoming concerned about our willingness-indeed, about our ability—to meet our most basic responsibilities. All three major rating agencies have assigned a negative outlook to our Nation's long-term rating. What that means is potentially the specter of higher interest rates that we have to pay when China and other countries buy our sovereign debt. A 1percent increase, if they became worried about our ability to repay our debts and they simply charged us more, would wipe out any savings we might otherwise be able to make through

The warning sound has been heard, and the fiscal tsunami that many budget experts have said in the past would not hit this Nation is fast approaching. It is a challenge that faces the country today, not just tomorrow, and we need solutions. The way the American people feel about this overhang of debt and the lack of clarity with regard to taxes and regulation in our future is shown in the stagnant job growth we have seen.

No sensible job creator is going to start a new business or to expand an existing business with such huge debt and such great uncertainty about their taxes, the regulatory overreach, and the economic environment. They are simply not going to do it. All we have to do is look across the Atlantic Ocean and watch our European friends and what they are going through today and see what will happen when governments overspend and debt is allowed to run unchecked.

What is so disappointing is that President Obama has had multiple opportunities to embrace a bipartisan fiscal overhaul plan. The one I keep mentioning is the Simpson-Bowles plan, and the reason I do is because it is his debt commission that he appointed. It was bipartisan. We had three Republican Senators who were on that commission who voted for it; $4 trillion worth of cuts, tax reform that would lower the marginal tax rates, eliminate $1 trillion-plus in expenditures, and would create economic growth and certainty for our economy and help put America back to work in the meantime. Unfortunately, the President, instead of embracing that bipartisan proposal, with the budget submission he makes today indicates he has chosen once again to remain on the sidelines and to campaign rather than try to come up with real solutions. The President's plan fails to right the ship and will continue to lead us down the path of more debt, higher taxes, and runaway spending—a path that has brought the economies of many European countries to the brink.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I am here today to talk about the President's budget, which he submitted today. In an era of trillion-dollar deficits and historic debt and the greatest level of government spending since World War II, I believe the President's submission today was not a responsible budget. Instead of keeping his campaign promise to cut the deficit in half in his first term, this budget assumes continued deficits this year and next in the trillion-dollar range.

Given the promises President Obama made when he came to the White House and how poorly the last budget was received by Republicans and Democrats alike in Congress—in fact, it was voted on here on the floor of the Senate, and it was defeated by a vote of 97 to 0given those things, I hoped President Obama would step forward and turn the rhetoric into action and put forward a responsible budget to deal with the fiscal problems our government faces—no more punting, no more gimmicks, a real budget that honestly faces the fiscal crisis we have and helps put us back on track. Instead, we see a document today that is really more tailored toward campaign talking points than really addressing the long-term solvency of the Federal Government.

The President begins by proposing a new $350 billion in stimulus bill. By the way, that is $350 billion with no offsets—in other words, no spending reductions to pay for it.

The President's budget then claims $5.3 trillion in deficit reduction over the next decade. As I have looked at this budget today, it seems to me that only a minuscule amount of this is from new spending cuts. In fact, as I read this budget, 99.9 percent of the claimed deficit reduction consists of the following: No. 1, tax increases, about $1.9 trillion; No. 2, Iraq, Afghanistan war savings, which is viewed by most here in Congress, both sides of the aisle, as a gimmick—in other words, spending money that was not going to be spent anyway—$848 billion; No. 3, already enacted discretionary caps and entitlement changes, primarily from the Budget Control Act, these so-called sequesters or acrossthe-board spending cuts that Congress has already enacted, and that is $1.7 trillion; and then finally net interest savings from those policies, which the budget says is going to be $800 billion.

Out of the claimed $5.3 trillion in deficit reduction, that leaves about .1 percent—$4 billion—of the claimed savings over the decade. So 99.9 percent of the deficit reduction he claims is through tax increases or, again, changes in spending that either have already occurred or they are not going to occur. On top of that, the President hid in his baseline—in the baseline he assumes for his spending, he hides about $479 billion in new spending. Now, this is on Pell grants and on the Medicare doc fix. So the claimed savings—even the $4 billion—vanish completely.

Overall, when compared to the current policy baseline, the President would tax $4 trillion more and spend about $2 trillion more over the next 10 years of this budget. The yearly deficit would end the decade in the $600 billion range, even assuming peace, prosperity, and historically low interest rates. The national debt over the next 10 years would rise by $11 trillion, for a total debt of over $25 trillion 10 years from now.

The main tax hike would end the 2001-2003 tax cuts for singles making over $200,000 and couples making over $250,000. There will be a lot of debate on the floor regarding this tax policy over the next year as we come to the end of the year when all of these tax cuts-$5 trillion of them—are scheduled to end, but just with regard to this tax hike, this will result in lower economic growth and more job losses according to the Congressional Budget Office. They have now testified before the Budget Committee as to the fact that this will result in higher unemployment next year. This is in large part because, according to Internal Revenue Service data, 48 percent of small business income would be subject to higher taxes under this budget proposal.

I support tax reform. I think it is important. But simply taking the current code and adding higher tax rates is going to have an impact on small businesses and therefore on our economy and on jobs. This is ultimately about jobs. It is about everyday economic concerns people in Ohio and around the country have.

In this budget document, we do see some honesty, but it does not make me optimistic at all. Acknowledging the impact this budget will have on the economy, the President's budget actually concedes unemployment rates next year higher than this year, and the year after higher than this year. His prediction is that unemployment rates will be 8.9 percent in 2012 and 8.6 percent in 2013—totally unacceptable and a testament to the fact that Washington cannot continue to rely on short-term sweeteners and budget the Senate floor to address this idenspending gimmicks to grow our economy and get the country out of this fiscal mess.

Again, I am disappointed in the budget we have seen today. I hope the Senate will work its will, put together its own budget, taking the President's budget and other ideas but then coming up with something that actually does address the very real fiscal problems we face, bring such a budget to the floor of the Senate, have it debated by both sides, and work out what we have not done in this Senate for over 1,000 days, which is prepare a blueprint for the fiscal and economic future of our country. ## RELIGIOUS LIBERTIES

Mr. JOHANNS. Mr. President, I rise today to comment on the developments of the past few weeks which, in my view, have been incredibly tragic but maybe, on the other hand, reassuring. On the one hand, it is tragic that our own government launched an attack on first amendment rights. The President launched this assault unapologetically in the black-and-white print of a rule that clearly restricts religious liberties. It says contraceptives and abortion-inducing drugs must be provided free of charge to women. What the President did not anticipate by his rule was the backlash it would generate.

It is reassuring, on the other hand, to know that Americans will make their voices heard when their constitutional rights are being trampled. For the first time in many years, people of many different faiths, as well as the defenders of the Constitution, have found a unifying rallying cry. They are sending the message that enough is enough; it is time to stop this administration's march into every single facet of our lives. At issue is one of the very basic rights in this country. It is one of the basic rights this country was founded to protect. It is the right to freely exercise religion—a right this President pledged to uphold when taking the oath of office.

Many Americans were lulled into complacency in 2009 by promises that apparently the President did not intend to uphold. Back then I came to tical issue. In the thick of the very contentious health care debate. I urged my pro-life colleagues and the pro-life community to stand up against the health care bill that was being considered here in the Senate. I pointed out that the Hyde amendment, which prohibits taxpayer dollars from being used for abortion, was absolutely absent in the bill, something that now appears to be no accident whatsoever. On that day I shared the National Right to Life's very real concerns that the bill "tries to conceal that unpopular reality with layers of contrived definitions and hollow bookkeeping requirements." Unfortunately, though, empty promises that the bill respected life were enough to convince my presumably pro-life colleagues to support the bill. After all, they had heard the promises straight from the President's mouth.

Remember when the President told Americans "under our plan, no Federal dollars will be used to fund abortions, and Federal conscience laws will remain in place." Congress ignored the warnings, charged forward, blurry eyed, voting in the middle of the night, and passed the health care bill that we all now know violates the very conscience rights the President himself by his own words promised to protect.

As the law is being put into place, we are truly heading into uncharted waters for this Nation. On Friday, after weeks of criticism, the President announced a so-called compromise. We were told by his Chief of Staff that it will be that way or it will be the highway. So what is the compromise? It would still force every plan to offer contraceptives and abortion-inducing drugs, even plans offered by religious organizations with deeply held religious beliefs.

The President claims religious employers with objections won't technically be required to offer the coverage because insurance companies will be forced to offer it free. What? Are we, as Americans, expected to believe that the many religious organizations paying the employer's share of the health care costs are not paying for these services? What kind of accounting gimmick is that? What kind of sleight of hand is that?

The President is blinded by his ideology. This fight is about religious and moral beliefs. It is not about accounting. What we have witnessed this past week is another attempt to hide the unpopular reality with layers of misleading rhetoric and hollowed promises. The truth? The truth is that many individuals who object to contraceptives and abortion-inducing drugs as a matter of religious principle will still have to provide them and pay for them. Don't fool yourself; they are not going to be free. Drug companies don't walk in and give away free drugs. Pharmacists don't dispense them free. Of course, the cost will be passed along to every employer and every American in the form of premiums that we pay. Calling these services free is flat wrong. There is a cost and, unfortunately, it is a high one at that. They come at the cost of our religious freedoms.

The administration's position is that it can force insurers to provide contraceptive coverage for "free" because the drugs are cheaper than the cost of being pregnant. Our government said that at the very highest level. That logic is unprecedented and it is downright disturbing. Who is to say that in days to come the administration won't order health plans to cover abortion free on the premise that it is cheaper than the cost of prenatal care, birth, and caring for human life? The same twisted logic could apply for physicianassisted suicide and a whole array of controversial procedures.

Many out there may try to refute this by repeating the President's claim that the law prohibits mandated abortions, but that same claim promised to protect the religious liberties he is now forcing many to violate. Well, many of us will not sit idly by and watch this unprecedented effort, and I am not alone. The President should listen to the country. The gimmicks of the 2009 bill may have put some to sleep. This time Americans are not being fooled. Americans of all faiths, all beliefs, of different views on a whole variety of topics share a love for their Constitution and the rights embodied in that Constitution. Well, they are awake now and their eyes are fully open.

As a Catholic myself, I could not be more proud of the Catholic bishops for standing strongly. Their statement rejecting the President's smoke-and-mirrors compromise is compelling and it is spot on. The bishop said:

... today's proposal continues to involve needless government intrusion into the internal governance of religious institutions and to threaten government coercion of religious people ... to violate their most deeply held convictions.

And they go on to say:

In a Nation dedicated to religious liberty as its first and its founding principle, we should not be limited to negotiating within these parameters. The only complete solution . . . is for HHS to rescind the mandate of these objectionable services.

Yes, we were told by the President's Chief of Staff negotiating is over, it will now be our way or the highway. Well, the bishops responded. The bishops called the President's attempt to appease them unacceptable. Yes, America has been awakened and now Congress must act on their objections.

There is legislation waiting to be debated that would protect the religious liberties granted in our Constitution. The legislation introduced by Senator Roy Blunt holds President Obama to his promises. This legislation continues the 200-year tradition of this great Nation ensuring those who believe in the sanctity of life are not forced to have a hand in someone else's death. It protects conscience rights across the board. There is a bottom line and the bottom line is this: If President Obama is allowed to dictate to religious organizations what beliefs they will be allowed to hold or not to hold, then this country we all love will be a much different place and it will be a much different place for our children and grandchildren.

If the President succeeds, then our Constitution is no longer the defining document of a great Nation. Well, we do know the position of this administration, and I stand here today to categorically reject it.

I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

THE BUDGET

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I came down today to talk about the highway bill we are on, and I want to say I appreciate the way we are dealing with each committee's portion of the bill as we go along. I know we are on the base bill at present, but before I get into that, I do want to make some comments about the budget.

I know we have had an inability in the Senate to pass a budget over the last 1,100 days. I know the Acting President pro tempore—a friend of mine—led a city and had to do this each year. We had to do the same in our State and city. I think those of us who come to this body are always shocked at the lack of fiscal discipline that takes place in Washington in general, but I have to say in looking at the administration's budget that was put forth today, it makes a mockery of the American people.

Our State has been blessed. We have had Governors who have been Republicans and Democrats, we have had people on both sides of the aisle, and our State has been governed well for a long time. I believe if a Governor of our State put forth a budget such as the budget put forth today, they would be run out of our State because it is not a serious budget.

I know the Acting President pro tempore and I have been to many meetings and looked at some of the proposals that have been put out by groups like Bowles-Simpson, and it is stunning to me when we know the biggest issue our country faces is ourselves—meaning our own inability to deal with the fiscal issues that are before us and to deal with all of the reforms we know have to take place. When we know we are our own greatest enemy, to have a document that has been put out the way this one has been put out in almost a flippant way, is almost to say we don't have to deal with this serious issue that our country has to face which is pretty unbelievable.

There is no focus on the kind of tax reform that I think so many of us support that would broaden the base and lower marginal rates and have tremendous economic growth. There is no focus on dealing with programs such as Medicare and Social Security that people depend upon, that people have counted upon all of their lives and yet we know they are not going to exist in a very short amount of time unless we do something. Instead, this document totally puts its head in the sand on these issues. It doesn't deal with them.

To the Acting President pro tempore I will say that I think it is irresponsible for a President, facing the kinds of issues our country is facing and who is seeking another term, not to lay out to deal with these issues, just as I believe, by the way, that whoever the Republican nominee is, I think it is incumbent upon him to do exactly the same. I think all of us need to know what our Chief Executive Officer's plans are for this country as they relate to, again, the most important issue we have to deal with.

The most appalling about it is we have millions of people looking for jobs right now. Unemployment is exceptionally high. I think almost every Member of this body who talks to people out there who actually are part of small business job creation knows they will tell us they are concerned about the future of our country. That is the biggest overhang that is keeping them from investing. So these issues are tied together in a most unique way. The greatest threat to our future is our inability to deal with fiscal issues. Our Chief Executive Officer, the President, has laid out a laughable document, one that, again, makes a mockery of the American people; yet at the same time it is us acting on real fiscal discipline that actually would drive our economy to grow and create jobs.

TRANSPORTATION ACT

I am very disappointed, which brings me to the point at hand. We have a highway bill. It is the first time I think we have dealt with a highway bill since I have been in the Senate for 5 years. We keep kicking the can down the road. It is my understanding that the EPW Committee passed this out 100 percent—Rs and Ds passed this out. Apparently they did some very good work, working together, to pass a base bill.

It is also my understanding, though, that the Finance Committee is charged with paying for this and has come up with pay-fors that work like this: We are going to spend this money over a 2year period but we are going to pay for it over a 10-year period. Again, I look at the Acting President pro tempore. somebody I know was responsible in the job he had prior to being here, and I am sure he is in this job too. But here is what we are doing: We are going to have Republicans down here constantly railing against the President's budget. My friends on the other side of the aisle won't do that out of respect, but I am sure they are wondering what in the world has been handed to us. At the same time, we have a piece of legislation on the floor that we are going to be dealing with that candidly does a lot of the same thing. We are going to spend money over the next 2 years and yet we are going to pay for it over the next 10. I think that is absolutely irresponsible. I hope before this highway bill leaves the floor we will either reduce the amount we are spending on it—which I hate to see happen because I know we do need to spend money on infrastructure around our country-or we will figure out a way to pay for it where if we are going to spend money over a 2-year period, we will also generate revenues to pay for it over a 2year period. This bill does not do that.

I do want to remind my Republican friends-I know we had some Republican support on the Finance Committee—that one of the things we railed about most with the health care bill that has divided our country in so many ways was that we took 6 years worth of cost and 10 years worth of revenues. All of us said it was a sleight of hand, and it was a sleight of hand: there is no question. I mean it was not honest in the way it was presented. But even since that time, with this most controversial bill, what we have done is actually moved away and now we are talking about in this highway bill spending money over a 2-year period but using pay-fors over a 10-year period. What that means is the next time we pass a highway bill under this same mode, we are continuing to run up tremendous debts. These young people who are sitting before us as pages, who come here to learn about how our country operates, want to see, hopefully, Senators acting in a responsible way.

The fact is there will be a lot of focus today on the President's budget, and I know there is a lot of disappointment on both sides of the aisle regarding what that budget says. But the thing we can do in this body over the next week or so as we are looking at this highway bill is to ensure we don't fall into that same trap here in Congress in passing a highway bill that is not paid for, that uses future revenues which we will probably never see because we will flip them out and change them and use them in another way right after this bill is passed.

I thank my colleagues for listening. I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for not more than 15 minutes.

THE BUDGET

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I come to the floor this afternoon before the debate on President Obama's just-submitted budget descends into the arguments over the smaller little details that, quite frankly, are not going to have that great of an effect on our whole debt and deficit issue. What I would like to do is take a look and ask the American people to take a look at the larger picture. I would like to do it with a few charts and graphs.

The first chart I would like to put up really describes, from my standpoint, the root cause of the problem. It really is the size, the scope, all of the rules, all of the regulations, all of the government intrusion into our lives and the cost of government. What this graph depicts is that as of last year the Federal Government was 24 percent of the size of our economy. So 24 cents of every dollar our economy generates flows through the Federal Government. When you add on State and local governments, which are about 16 percent, the total take of government at all levels of the United States now—last year was 39.2 percent. Again, 39 cents of every dollar flows through some form of government.

I do not find government particularly effective or efficient at so many things they do. To make this relative, we are watching what is happening to Greece right now. It is in flames because that social experiment is collapsing. But if you compare the United States in terms of its size of government to European-style Socialist nations, you can see that Norway spends 47 percent of its GDP on government; Greece, which we just mentioned, 50 percent; Italy, which hit a mini debt crisis of its own, 52 percent; and France is 55 percent. Unfortunately, America has arrived at the lower limit, the lower level of European-style socialism. That is not a good metric.

The next chart I want to describe—so many people, I understand, want a balanced approach: revenue and spending reform to address the debt and deficit issue. Listen, I want more revenue too. but I think we need to raise revenue the old-fashioned way—by growing our economy. Everything we do in this country, everything we do here in Washington needs to be targeted toward economic growth.

But I think what this chart describes is the fact that we have a spending problem. It is not that we tax Americans too little; it is because we spend way too much. Ten years ago our Federal Government spent $1.9 trillion. Last year we spent $3.6 trillion. We doubled spending in just 10 years. And, of course, the President's budget that he just unveiled today will spend $3.8 trillion in 2013.

In the argument moving forward, nobody is talking about cutting spending. All we are talking about is reducing the rate of growth in spending. You can tell by the chart. According to President Obama's budget, 10 years in the future, in the year 2022, he is proposing spending $5.8 trillion. Last year's House budget would have spent $4.7 trillion. That is what the argument is about—spending $3.6 trillion last year and increasing it to either $5.8 trillion or $4.7 trillion.

Another way of looking at that is taking a look at 10-year spending numbers. In the nineties—a very successful decade—the Federal Government spent $16 trillion over a 10-year period—$16 trillion. Over the last 10 years, we spent $28 trillion. And, again, the debate moving forward is President Obama, in his just-released budget, wants to spent $47 trillion over the next 10 years. The House budget from last year would have spent $40 trillion. By the way, when you hear about that $6 or $7 trillion of Draconian cuts, that is what we are talking about. All we are talking about is reducing the rate of growth in spending in the size of government.

You have seen an awful lot of charts describing the Nation's debt and how it has exploded. I like this chart because we start it on September 30, 1987, when our entire Federal debt stood at $2.3 trillion. It took us 200 years to incur $2.3 trillion worth of debt. Last year, in the Budget Control Act, we gave the President the authority basically—I didn't, I voted against it, but this body gave the President the authority to increase the debt ceiling by $2.1 trillion. We will blow through that debt in around 2 years. Think of that.

So you can see what is happening. In 2001. we were at $5.8 trillion. In 2008. right before President Obama entered office, we were at $10 trillion. Currently we are at about $15.4 trillion, and in the President's just-released budget, he is proposing adding about $10 trillion to our debt over the next 10 years, to come in at a whopping $25.9 trillion. The question is, Will we really be able to borrow that much or are we going to face the day of reckoning, when world investors take a look at the United States and say: You know, I am not going to loan you any more money. What is more likely to happen is they will say: I will loan you some money but at dramatically higher interest rates. That is what we need to be concerned about. That is what a debt crisis is going to be. Take a look at Greece. Take a look at Italy.

One more chart I want to put up shows the extent of the problem of the unfunded liabilities together with the debt. Now, this is actually last year's chart. We have not been able to get the new one printed yet. But last year the trustees of both Medicare and Social Security published the unfunded liability of those two programs. When you add those unfunded liabilities to the Federal debt and what we owe Federal retirees, the total liability of the United States as reported last year was $99 trillion. The new figure for this year—the accountants in the Federal Government have rejiggered the figures, and now they are claiming it is only $72 trillion. But whichever figure you take, if you compare that to the private net assets of the United States—that is, household assets, small business assets, large business assets that number is $79 trillion. So the Federal Government has made promises and incurred debts that are equal to or exceed the entire net private asset base of the United States. Now, that is the definition of a problem. That is the definition of a huge problem that unfortunately this President and this town are not grappling with. We are not coming to terms with that.

Let me specifically hone in on one of those entitlement programs—Social Security. In 2010 we went net cash negative in Social Security, which means the amount of taxes collected were $51 billion less than the benefits that were paid out. Last year we were $46 billion in the red. If we take a look at this chart, what we see, without reforming the program, without providing the reforms that would actually save Social Security, within the next 24 years, by the year 2035, we will incur a $6 trillion cash deficit in Social Security. Again, when you take a look at the President's budget this year, is that even being addressed?

The House budget addressed Medicare last year, and people like my Congressman from Wisconsin were demonized for doing it. Here you had an individual who had the courage to first of all acknowledge the problem and then put forward a proposal, and he is demonized. Political demagoguery is not going to solve our problem. A serious budget is what we need to solve the problem.

even putting forward a budget—and unfortunately, in this body, the majority leader is saying he will not even bring a budget to the floor for a vote: there is no need to. We are only going to incur $10 trillion more debt in the next 10 years. I want the American people to think about that. I have been involved in business for 33 years. I am an accountant. This is the first time I have been involved with a financial entityand let's face it, America is the largest financial entity in the world—where I have been working with an entity that does not have a budget. That is a national scandal. We need to correct that.

But let me talk about some of the deficit risks, because we are not serious, we are not even addressing, much less-we are not acknowledging. It starts with what I started talking about earlier in terms of not dealing with the debt and deficit issue dramatically increases our risk of higher interest rates, higher interest expense. The CBO reports that for every 1 percent increase in the interest expense—let's face it—times $15 trillion, times 10 years, that would add $1.5 trillion to our debt—$1.5 trillion. Greece—when they hit their debt crisis, their interest rates spiked by 8 percent. If that happened here, it would cost us $1.2 trillion. It would wipe out all discretionary spending. That is the day of reckoning we need to avoid by putting forward serious proposals.

Another risk we are really not talking about is what happens if we do not grow according to the projections the President lays out in his budget or the CBO projects? Well, again you look to the CBO. For every 1 percent we miss our growth targets by, add $3.1 trillion to our debt and deficit over the next 10 years—$3.1 trillion.

Another risk is the true cost of the health care law. Thirty-seven Republican Senators sent a letter to CBO Director Elmendorf pleading with him to please reassess the very unrealistic estimates the CBO made in terms of the number of employees who will lose their employer-sponsored care.

Their estimate says only 1 million. But we have studies that were conducted that say 30 to 50 percent of employers will drop coverage. When that happens, when the employees who lose their employer-sponsored care and get dumped into the exchanges at highly subsidized rates, the cost of ObamaCare will not be $95 billion a year; it will more likely be $½ trillion to $1 trillion a year. Multiply that over 10 years and we can see the depth of risk inherent in the health care law. It needs to be repealed.

The last point I wish to make is a key part of President Obama's supposed deficit reduction in his budget is a tax on millionaires, which, by the way, is defined by couples making over $250,000. That is interesting math right there. Two points: I said earlier we should not enact anything in Washington that would harm economic growth. Increasing taxes will do that. That is what CBO says, and that is what the Federal Reserve Chairman Bernanke says. It just makes common sense. I want any American who would think that is a good idea to ask themselves one question: How many jobs will that tax increase create? How will that tax increase actually help us grow our economy? The answer is, it will not.

There is an interesting study just released on Maryland's millionaires' tax they enacted in 2007. When they passed that tax, they estimated it would raise $330 million. The facts are in. That tax increase only generated $120 milliononly 36 percent of what they originally estimated. President Obama is hoping to raise $1.5 trillion with the millionaires' tax. Maybe it is only $1 trillion; I have not seen the details. Take that number and multiply it times 36 percent, then look at the harm it will cause economic growth and reduce it even further. It simply will not work. It might feel good, but it will do great harm to our economy. To sum it all up, what this country needs is real leadership. We need the President to lead. We need a serious budget. We need the Senate to pass a complete and serious budget for 2013.

With that, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I wish to share some remarks about the President's budget which he submitted today. This is it—the real budget. The President asked that the press pay for their copies this year. Maybe that will save a little money. It is a real document that is submitted every year by every President according to the law.

Although the law also requires the Senate to pass a budget every year, we have violated it for over 1,000 days. In fact, the majority leader, Senator REID, said it would be foolish for him to produce a budget-foolish for our colleagues to produce a budget, and I can only assume he thought it would not be good politics. It would not be foolish for America to have a budget. I will make a commitment that if I have anything to do about it and this Republican conference were to achieve a majority in the Senate next year, we will have a budget. It will change the debt course of America. It will be 10 years. It will be a document that brings debt under control and, to the maximum ex-

Because we are not serious about there. Two points: I said earlier we tent possible, will encourage economic ven putting forward a budget—and un-should not enact anything in Wash-growth.

That is a responsibility that leaders have to deal with now, I believe. The President has produced this budget that claims to reduce the deficit by $4 trillion—I will talk about that—but it does not reduce the deficit $4 trillion. Basically, it doesn't reduce the deficit at all. This is his fourth year as President. This is the last budget of his Presidential term. He has an opportunity to lay out a plan for the future—to suggest what taxes we ought to have, how much spending we should have, where we can save money by reducing spending, what we need to do in the short run, and in a 10-year term, 20year term, and 30-year term, all of that can and should be dealt with. The President, like a Governor or mayor of a city that is in financial trouble, or a State that is struggling financially they have to deal with their debt. They present their proposals, they fight for them before the legislature, they make compromises, when necessary, and that is how they do their business. But because we don't have a constitutional amendment that requires a budget to be balanced, it becomes easier to borrow the money, not cut spending, and continue the deficit course we are on.

I am the ranking Republican on the Budget Committee, and for the few hours we have had the budget, and the few hours we have had over the weekend to see some of the tables, we have reached a number of conclusions that are not good. I would say a couple of things. At the Budget Committee hearing last week, Senator CONRAD-who is the chair of the committee—announced we should have a $5 trillion reduction in spending over 10 years—not 4—and also said, he wishes to see a balanced budget. I think Senator CONRAD is right on both counts. But he has basically been told if he even has a budget in committee this year, it won't be brought up on the floor. So I don't know what we will do, whether we will have a budget markup or not.

But Mr. Bernanke indicated during that same hearing that when you reach debt levels as high as we are today—gross debt being 100 percent of the gross domestic product—the country is at risk, particularly when inevitable shocks in the world occur and you don't have the margin of strength necessary to perhaps ride out those crises.

And we could go into crisis. I happened to see this morning on MSNBC that Mr. Richard Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, said we could have a debt crisis next year. Talking about Greece, he said we could have a Greece-like crisis next year, and he laid out the scenario. This is the Council on Foreign Relations, one of the most prestigious world organizations around.

Here are some indisputable facts about the budget before us. First, there is no $4 trillion deficit reduction. There is not a $4 trillion deficit reduction. I know that is hard to believe. We are talking about a difference of $4 trillion. When the President submits a budget, and we worry about all these accounts, and then we are $4 trillion off, well, it is a hard thing to imagine. But I will explain to you why I say that.

What we know is this: Under the President's budget and the numbers he has provided us, based on his growth projections and other projections that are in it, he projects when 10 years are up—in 2022—we will have added to the total debt of America $11.2 trillion. We will have added that much debt. Every year, hundreds of billions of dollars of debt, with the lowest single year being $575 billion worth of deficits. The debt increases annually each year. So it would be $11.2 trillion higher.

Under the Budget Control Act that passed last summer that had the sequester in it and the reductions in spending—under that—if left unchanged. And that is the current law. This budget deals with what to do now—what to do on top of the current law we have. Under the Budget Control Act, the debt would increase over 11 years by $11.5 trillion—perhaps $270 billion less debt accruing under the President's budget than current law. Well, that is not much.

The budget deficit this year is $1,300 billion. We are talking about $11.5 trillion—that is $11,500 billion. So we are going to reduce that $11,500 billion by $270 billion or so and claim somehow we have changed the debt course of America? It is not true.

The American people are tired of this. It is this kind of talk, this kind of misrepresentation and gimmickry that has gotten us to the point where the Nation is on a fiscally unsustainable path, as every expert has told us. Indeed, we are borrowing 40 cents of every dollar that is spent this year. So we take in $2.5 trillion and we spend $3.8 trillion. That is not an acceptable path, and we have been told that.

We have seen these gimmicks before. I have a bill called the Honest Budget Act that tightens up on a lot of the more common, smaller gimmicks that need to be eliminated. My bill is called the Honest Budget Act. But let me say we have never seen gimmicks this large. They are so large it is hard to believe anyone would attempt to use them, but so large people don't think it is possible the administration would not be completely truthful in asserting them.

For example, the budget the President submitted for this year claims credit for cuts that occurred last year as part of the budget control process—the $2.1 trillion in Budget Control Act cuts. He claims he is cutting the budget counting those numbers. Those are not the numbers we are operating under today. Those have already been is no $4 trillion deficit reduction. There is not a $4 trillion deficit reduction. I think we have ever seen in terms of know that is hard to believe. We are talking about a difference of $4 trillion are

But there is more. Amazingly, this budget eliminates—erases—the $1.2 trillion in Budget Control Act sequestered spending reductions. We can argue whether they are done in the right way and whether some, particularly Defense, are taking too big a cut under that sequester, but we should not give up on the sequester. We should not acknowledge the sequester is not viable. And to say the $1.2 trillion we agreed to cut less than a year ago is no longer operable and we are going to spend that money and not cut any more is a stunning reversal. It is the kind of thing that validates the charges we hear from the American people: Oh, yes, you promised to cut money in the future—you have a 10year plan to cut spending—but we know what you politicians are going to do 5 years, 3 years, 6 years down the road, when those spending cuts come up. You are going to say, oh, we can't do that. We have constituents who are complaining. We can't cut this or that. And we will put the money back in and the savings will never occur because they are false promises for the future.

People have complained about that, and correctly so. That was part of the tea party movement—a growing disrespect for the integrity of Congress when it makes projections for the future.

But look at this: In August, we agreed to $2.1 trillion in total cuts including $1.2 trillion in the sequester. Less than a year later, the President says, oh, that is too much, we can't do that. We are going to spend $47 trillion in the next 10 years, but we can't cut 1.2, when we are facing the biggest debt crisis the Nation has ever faced? What kind of world are we living in? No wonder we are going broke. And people are out to hide what we are doing. I don't think it is right.

The President says, yes, I am not cutting that $1 trillion, I am going to spend the $1.2 trillion. I am going to spend that, but don't worry, I am raising taxes to pay for it. But his budget prognosticators and commentators and his promoters, in their statements about this budget, claim it reduces the deficit—this tax increase does—by $1.2 trillion. Well, if you increase spending 1.2 and raise taxes an equal amount, you haven't saved any money; you just are not increasing the debt any more than you would have. So we have eliminated the cuts, making spending go up, and then we raise taxes. That is a wash. That is not another $1.2 in savings. That is how they get the $4 trillion. That is a sad state of affairs, to claim credit for that in a way that is not fair.

Then we have the problem with the war cost. I was disappointed at the State of the Union when the President said we are going to spend half of the war savings on highways. Well, I am for highways. I would like to spend more on highways. I am unhappy we have diverted money to general stimulus spending instead of being spent on highways, as was promised. However, the President said we are going to spend half of the savings from the war on highways. But there are no war savings. Congress has treated this war throughout as an emergency. The attack on 9/11 we treated as an emergency. The money was borrowed. Every dollar spent on the war has been borrowed. There is no source of money being paid out to the war so that when the war costs drop you can grab that money and spend it. There is no money there. When the war cost drops, the American people have a right to expect we will borrow less money or that we don't have to borrow as much.

But they are claiming the natural reduction of war spending creates a surplus of money that can be spent. How illogical is that? There is no money in the war budget account. It is all borrowed. There was never any money to be saved in the war account, only less money to be borrowed as the war came down.

Whoever thought the war would continue at $100-plus billion per year? We always expected those costs to come down. It has been a long, difficult process, and I am glad to see we can bring troops home. Hopefully, we are doing it in a way that is not risking the efforts thousands of Americans have given to our country to put us in a position to withdraw successfully. I hope we are not going so fast we will jeopardize that.

Well, what about taxes? The President has been arguing for some time that, well, we can't cut the deficit without tax increases. I know we have to cut spending, but we can't cut the deficit without tax increases. We have to have more tax increases.

First he said he wanted a tax on the rich that would bring in $800 billion. Now, this budget calls for additional taxes of $1,900 billion—$1.9 trillion—in new taxes all across, in a lot of different areas. But at any rate, this is what we are talking about.

In his statement released with his budget, he said there was 2.5 in spending reductions for every $1 of tax increases. We have been talking about, well, what should be the ratio? Some people say: Look, I know you shouldn't have 1-to-1 taxes increased for every spending reduction, but we have to get the deficit down. We have to reduce the deficit. And you Republicans who don't like taxes, we will talk about 4 to 1, $4 in spending cuts for $1 in tax increases. The President said in the spring last year 3 to 1, and that was a figure that was being bandied about.

2.5 to 1? Is it 3 to 1? No. Their statement that it is 2.5 to 1 is utterly untrue.

I remember people telling us if we raise taxes, they would not reduce the deficit. They will spend it. We have heard that over and over again, and that maxim is certainly proved by this budget. The taxes that are in this budget are used to pay for more spending. There are no spending cuts in the budget. The budget calls for $1.5 trillion in increased spending, and the taxes are on top of that. So the taxes are not going to be used to reduce the deficit, just like people have suspected all along that is not an accurate statement. But, indeed, taxes are used to create more spending to create even bigger government.

What about the debt size in its entirety? What are the numbers there? Let's look at this chart. The red is the increase in deficits over the next 10 years as occasioned by the Budget Control Act that is the current law that was passed last August-September, and the President's budget is the dotted

So if we look at what is occurring over the 10-year period, we are starting at $15 trillion in debt today. Where does it end up? It ends up at $26 trillion in debt under the Budget Control Act that saved $2 trillion, supposedly. I guess that would have reduced the total debt from $13.5 trillion to $11.5 trillion. We have made some progress. We all knew that wasn't nearly enough, but it was at least a step. Our Democratic colleagues didn't want to cut any more money, so that was the number reached last year and we agreed we needed to come back and do some more work.

The President's budget, which claims to reduce the growth in our debt by $4 trillion, actually only reduces the growth in debt less than $300 billion, from 11.5 to 11.2. That is not enough. We have had expert after expert tell us we need $4 trillion to $5 trillion to $6 trillion. Many believe we ought to put this country on a path to a balanced budget and stay there, as I do. We can do that. So the numbers I would say, $273 billion, only alters this red line by the slightest amount, not nearly enough to make a difference in the financial markets, not nearly enough to create confidence in the business community the United States has a plan for its future that will work.

Furthermore, the President's plan does not provide any noticeable effective effort to do something about Medicare, Social Security, Medicaid-these programs that are moving every year gradually and inexorably out of control, into default, and will endanger those programs for future generations. I think that is a serious criticism we should make.

Finally, I would note the interest on the debt. What do we pay on the inter-

But what does this budget do? Is it est of the debt? This year this Nation, in 2012, will pay $225 billion in interest on the debt. That is almost half the entire defense budget. But under the plan submitted by the President—and these numbers I am quoting from are in the President's own budget, and I am simply restating the numbers his Office of Management and Budget have determined. Interest in 2022, 10 years from now, will be $850 billion, from $225 billion to $850 billion. The increase in interest alone exceeds the defense budget: $850 billion exceeds any item, including Social Security and Medicare, in our budget today and certainly exceeds the defense budget.

> It would be the fastest growing item in the entire budget because when we run up debt and we go from $15 trillion gross debt to $26 trillion gross debt and we have extraordinarily low interest rates today. They will not hold. Some think they are going up more than the President estimates in his account. But when we add the interest changes and the large amount of additional debt added, it goes from $225 to $850, crowding out spending for a host of programs that we are going to have to deal with. Where are we going to find this $500 billion? By the way, this is 1 year's interest payment, not 10 years. In 1 year we will be paying $850 billion.

> So we take that $500 billion a year and run it on for 10 years and we are talking about $5.7 trillion in interest to be paid over 10 years. What about the next 10 years when it is running $1 trillion a vear in interest as we age and our entitlement programs continue to go into default?

> Mr. John Hinderaker, an analyst and blogger, has suggested that this whole debt we are seeing today and this claim of $4 trillion in savings is why we should never have had the secret negotiations all year. The President has asserted all year that he had a plan to save $4 trillion. I guess this is it. What does it do? Nothing. Does it change the debt course? No. It leads us on a course that is unacceptable. It does not deal with the surging entitlements that indeed count for over half of the spending already in the United States of America. Entitlements like Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security are already nearly 60 percent of the Federal Government's spending. How can we control spending if we don't even talk about those programs? And they are growing faster. The only thing growing faster is the interest on the debt. So we have a deep and serious challenge to bring those programs under control.

> I would just close by saying that our debt course has not been altered. Our debt course is unsustainable. We now are moving to $26 trillion in debt. I remember last year when the Chairman of the Fed, Mr. Bernanke, testified before the committee and said something to this effect: You see those projections of your spending and debt trajectory? And in the outvears, you have these projections and what it is going to be like. Basically, he said: You are not going to get there because you are going to have a debt crisis before that happens, before those years pass.

Mr. Erskine Bowles, the man chosen by President Obama to head the deficit commission, with Alan Simpson, they signed a written statement to the Budget Committee last year, and they said: The course we are on will lead America to the most predictable financial crisis in our history.

So we can clearly see the path we are on. It is a path to financial crisis. We have to realize we cannot continue to put this off, and I find it deeply disappointing that the President of the United States, in his fourth year in office, lays out a plan that does nothing to improve the financial status of our country, does nothing to talk and deal seriously with our entitlement programs.

Indeed, what he has indicated is that anybody else in Congress, whether it is Congressman RYAN in the House Budget Committee or Members of this Senate who have the temerity to make any suggestions about containing and saving Social Security and Medicare, will be attacked by him.

So not only is he not proposing a plan that would help the situation, he is lying in wait to politically go after anybody who seriously proposes changes that can put America on a sound debt course. I don't think that is acceptable. I am deeply disappointed in the budget. I wish it would have been so much better because I truly believe he could have had support from Congress to do some things of a historic nature. They were discussed in some of these secret committee meetings but never came to fruition.

Mr. President. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF ADALBERTO JOSE JORDAN TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE ELEV-ENTH CIRCUIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Adalberto Jose Jordan, of Florida, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Eleventh Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will be 1 hour for debate, equally divided, in the usual form.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided in such a way that the time will run out at 5:30 but divided equally between now and then, between myself or my designee and the Republican leader or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, it pains me, in a way, to have to come and talk about this. This is the eighth time the majority leader has had to file a cloture motion to overcome vet another Republican filibuster of one of President Obama's superbly qualified judicial nominees. I have been here during the time of President Ford, President Carter, President Reagan, President George H.W. Bush, President Clinton, President George W. Bush, and now President Obama. I have been here when the Senate was in Republican control and when it was in Democratic control. Never during all that time have I seen anything where the majority leader has had to file so many cloture motions on superbly qualified judicial nominees, whether it is a Republican or Democratic President.

The nominee we have before us is a former Federal prosecutor and current Federal District Court judge in the Southern District of Florida. Judge Adalberto Jordan is the kind of nominee who in the past would have been confirmed without delay. It probably would have been done on a voice vote shortly after having come out of our committee, rather than having to wait 4 months for Senators to consent to proceed on his nomination.

This nomination has the strong and committed support of the senior Senator from Florida, Mr. Nelson, as well as that of Mr. Rubio, the other Senator from Florida. Not only does he have the support of the two Senators, one a Democratic Senator the other a Republican, but the distinguished Presiding Officer will recall that when we voted on him last October, every single Republican and every single Democrat on the Judiciary Committee voted for him. He came out unanimously. It would be a little bit strange if any of those Senators now switched their votes because there is nothing different today than there was back in October of last fall.

When he was nominated to the District Court by President Clinton in 1999, even while Senate Republicans were pocket filibustering more than 60 of President Clinton's judicial nominees, Judge Jordan was confirmed without delay. It was an overwhelming vote: 93 to 1. Any of us in elective office would like to have had margins such as that.

The needless delay in Judge Jordan's nomination is the latest example of the tactics that have all but paralyzed the Senate confirmation process. They are actually damaging our Federal courts. It should not take 4 months and a cloture motion, which is hard to schedule because of all the other things we have to do, just to proceed to a nomination such as that of Judge Jordan to fill a judicial emergency.

This is not just filling a normal vacancy, it is a judicial emergency on the Eleventh Circuit. This good judge has already demonstrated as a Federal prosecutor and as a district judge his qualities. They need him on the Eleventh Circuit.

It should not take many more months and more cloture motions before the Senate finally votes on the nearly 20 other superbly qualified judicial nominees who have been stalled by Senate Republicans for months while vacancies continue to plague our American courts and delay justice for the American people. At all these courts where they are bottlenecked because there is no judge, the people who have cases in those courts do not say: I am a Republican or I am a Democrat. they say I have an important case to be heard. Why won't the Senate confirm the judge who has been nominated?

On every single one of the judges that are being stalled, every single Democratic Senator has agreed long ago to a vote. The objection on every single one of these judges being held up is because of Republican objections.

Let's talk about Judge Jordan for a moment, why he is so exceptional. When he is confirmed, he will be the first Cuban-born judge to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, which encompasses Florida, Georgia and Alabama. Born in Havana, Cuba, Judge Jordan immigrated to the United States at age six. He went on to graduate summa cum laude from the University of Miami law school. Following law school, he clerked for Judge Thomas Clark on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, the Court to which he is nominated, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor on the U.S. Supreme Court. He then became a Federal prosecutor in the Southern District of Florida, where he served as Deputy Chief and then Chief of the Appellate Division. Judge Jordan has also been a professor. Since 1990, he has taught at his alma mater, the University of Miami School of Law, as well as the Florida International University College of Law.

It is no surprise that the ABA's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary unanimously rated Judge Jordan "well qualified" to serve on the Eleventh Circuit, the highest possible rating from its nonpartisan peer review. Everybody should be down here cheering and supporting this nomination. He should be commended and supported, not filibustered and obstructed. Judge Jordan is a consensus nominee. What has the Senate come to, if somebody such as this man has to go through and overcome a filibuster to be confirmed? At this moment, "Moses the Lawgiver" would have a hard time being confirmed.

I say this because this judge is the kind of consensus nominee I have been urging Senate Republicans to stop stalling. He represents the kind of consensus nominees this President has sent the Senate who have been needlessly and harmfully stalled in the Senate for months and months for no good reason. It needs to stop. Last Thursday, Professor Carl Tobias wrote: "Most troubling has been Republican refusal to vote on noncontroversial, strong nominees—inaction that conflicts with a venerable Senate tradition. When the chamber has eventually voted on nominees, the Senate has overwhelmingly approved many." I expect Judge Jordan to be confirmed with a strong, bipartisan vote, as well. There is no justification for delaying this action over the last 4 months while a judicial emergency vacancy has gone unfilled. There is no justifiable reason for forcing the majority leader to file cloture for the Senate to hold a vote on this qualified consensus nominee. There is no justification for Senate Republicans' refusal to hold votes on nearly 20 Senate nominees who also remain stalled waiting for a vote.

The filibuster of Judge Jordan is just the current example of Senate Republicans' delaying tactics with respect to President Obama's qualified consensus nominees.

Let me give you a little history and a few facts. As we enter the fourth year of President Obama's administration, we are far behind the pace set by the Senate during President George W. Bush's first term. By the end of 2004. the Senate in those 48 months confirmed 205 district and circuit nominees. One hundred of them were confirmed during the 17 months that I was chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I moved President Bush's judges notwithstanding the fact that 60 of President Clinton's judges had been pocket filibustered. I wanted to change that for the good of the Federal judiciary. I wanted to restore respect in the Senate as well as the Federal judiciary, but nee with 16 years judicial experience, now we have gone back to the same old Republican obstructionism.

The Senate has confirmed only 126 of President Obama's district and circuit nominees, nowhere near the pace there was for President Bush. That leaves 86 judicial vacancies. In fact, the vacancy rate is likely to remain twice what it was in 2004. But I would suggest to this body that the slow pace of confirmation of President Obama's judicial nominees is no accident. It is the result of deliberate obstruction and delays. For the second year in a row, the Senate Republican leadership ignored long-established precedent and refused to schedule any votes before the December recess on the nearly 20 consensus judicial nominees who had been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee. Here we are in the middle of February, fighting to hold a vote on 1 of the 19 nominees who should have been confirmed last year. Fifteen of the nominees stalled by Senate Republicans were reported with the unanimous support of their home state Senators and every Republican and every Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

During President Bush's administration, Republican Senators insisted that filibusters of judicial nominees were unconstitutional. They threatened the "nuclear option" in 2005 to guarantee up-or-down votes for each of President Bush's judicial nominees. Many of them said they would never, ever support the filibuster of a judicial nomination-never. Well, that never lasted. Once President Obama, a Democratic President, came in, the Senate Republicans reversed course. They filibustered President Obama's very first judicial nomination, that of Judge David Hamilton of Indiana, a widely-respected 15-year veteran of the Federal bench who had the support of the most senior and longest-serving Republican in the Senate, Senator LUGAR. The Senate rejected that filibuster and Judge Hamilton was fortunately confirmed. The same Senators who had said solemnly on the floor of the Senate that they would never filibuster a judicial nomination—oh well, we have a new Democratic President, now we ought to filibuster. Come on. You wonder why people are concerned about those who represent them.

In fact, that first filibuster portended what was going to happen, and the partisan delays and opposition have continued. Senate Republicans have required cloture votes even for nominees who ultimately were confirmed unanimously when the Senate finally overcame those filibusters and voted on their nomination. So it was with Judge Barbara Keenan of the Fourth Circuit, who was confirmed 99-0 when the filibuster of her nomination finally ended in 2010, and Judge Denny Chin of the Second Circuit, an outstanding nomiwho was ultimately confirmed 98-0 when the Republican filibuster was overcome after four months of needless Regrettably, Senate Republicans have successfully filibustered the nominations of Goodwin Liu Caitlin Halligan. I have warned that Senate Republicans have imposed a new standard that threatened to make confirmation of any nominee to the D.C. Circuit virtually impossible in the future. At the time, The Washington Post noted: "GOP senators are grasping at straws to block Ms. Halligan's ascension, perhaps in hopes of preserving the vacancy for a Republican president to fill." I urged Senate Republicans to stop playing politics with the D.C. Circuit, and to allow an up-ordown vote on Ms. Halligan after more than 15 months of delay. Regrettably, the nomination of such a highly-qualified public servant, who had the support of law enforcement, appellate advocates, former Supreme Court clerks, academics and practitioners from across the political spectrum, was prevented from an up or down vote.

But I would also say that aside from the gamesmanship involved, this obstruction hurts the whole country. There are currently 86 judicial vacancies across the country. That means nearly 1 out of every 10 Federal judgeships is vacant. The vacancy rate is nearly double what it had been reduced to by this point in the Bush administration when Democrats, showing unprecedented speed, cooperated to bring judicial vacancies down to 46.

It is the American people who pay the price for the Senate's unnecessary and harmful delay in confirming judges to our Federal courts. It is unacceptable for hardworking Americans who are seeking their day in court to find one in 10 of those courts vacant. When an injured plaintiff sues to help cover the cost of medical expenses, that plaintiff should not have to wait for years before a judge hears his or her case. When two small business owners disagree over a contract, they should not have to wait years for a court to resolve their dispute. With 18 more judicial nominees stalled and cloture motions being required for consensus nominees, the Senate is failing in its responsibility, harming our Federal courts and ultimately hurting the American people. If you are one of the people seeking justice in a Federal court—and here is a sign saying: Closed; nobody at home-when you imagine this happening, is it any wonder that only 10 percent of the American people view Congress favorably? Actually with this kind of activity, I am surprised it gets up to 10 percent. I am wondering whether my friends on the other side of the aisle, the Senate Republicans, are intent on bringing the approval rating even lower, into single

Some Senate Republicans are now seeking to excuse these months of delay by blaming President Obama for forcing them to do it. They point to President Obama's recent recess appointments of a Director for the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and members of the National Labor Relations Board. Of course, those appointments were made a few weeks ago. long after the delay of Judge Jordan's nomination began. Moreover, the President took his action because Senate Republicans had refused to vote on those executive nominations and were intent on rendering the government agencies unable to enforce the law and carry out their critical work on behalf of the American people. Some Senate Republicans are doubling down on their obstruction in response. They are apparently extending their blockage against nominees beyond executive branch nominees to these much-needed judicial nominees. This needless obstruction accentuates the burdens on our Federal courts and delays in justice to the American people. We can ill afford these additional delays and protest votes. The Senate needs, instead, to come together to address the needs of hardworking Americans around the country.

Judge Adalberto Jose Jordan is precisely the kind of qualified consensus nominee we need. He is the kind of person we all will say, when the press asks, this is the kind of nominee we need; this would help our country and our judicial system if we had this kind of nominee. But then we filibuster.

When introducing Judge Jordan to the Senate Judiciary Committee last October, Senator RUBIO praised the nominee's knowledge of the law, experience, participation in community, stating that "he looks forward to [Judge Jordan's] appointment." I certainly believe what Senator RUBIO said. I find him to be very truthful in these things. The day we reported him out of the committee unanimously, every single Democratic Senator in this Chamber was ready to go forward with the vote. The only place we had objections was on the Republican side, and that has gone on for 4 months.

I hope we get this cloture vote and the Senate is finally allowed to vote to confirm this nomination. Again, I urge Senate Republicans to stop the destructive delays that plague the confirmation process. The American people deserve Federal courts ready to serve them, not empty benches, not long delays, not partisan games.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask consent that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, I wish to speak today, along with my colleague from Florida. Senator Rubio, about the nomination of Judge Adalberto Jordan. A lot of our folks refer to him as Judge Jordan. He has been nominated to the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals. At this time. when we have a very sizable judicial vacancy rate with a lot of these judicial positions empty, we need to get them filled with qualified judges who are going to rule and rule expeditiously. Confirming Judge Jordan to the Eleventh Circuit, which is one of the busiest in the country, is going to be a good step forward in filling the need for all of these judges.

We have in Florida a long history of bipartisan support for our judicial nominees. That is especially so with my colleague MARCO RUBIO, as we participate with our judicial nominating commission, which the two of us appoint, and they screen and interview the applicants for the vacancies on the district court. As a result, we have nominees who come to us who have already been screened, and it takes the politics out of it. In the case of Judge Jordan, it is a continuation of that bipartisan support even though he did not go through that process. He was selected by the President and is a sitting Federal judge who has an excellent record, and thus we see the bipartisan support.

Judge Jordan received his undergraduate and his law degrees from the University of Miami. After law school, he clerked for Judge Thomas Clark on the Eleventh Circuit. Then he moved on to become a clerk for Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. He continued his legal career in private practice at Steel, Hector & Davis and then became an assistant U.S. attorney in the appellate division of the Southern District of Florida. He began his judicial career in 1999 as a U.S. district court judge for the Southern District of Florida, where he still sits.

Based on his experience, Judge Jordan is extremely qualified for this position. Once confirmed, he will become the first Hispanic judge on the Eleventh Circuit Court. So I urge our colleagues to confirm this nominee without further delay.

I am pleased to be joined by my colleague, Senator Rubio, from the State of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. RUBIO. Mr. President, I thank Senator NELSON for that introduction.

The first thing we have to decide is how to pronounce his last name. Everyone knows whom we are talking about. He has an extraordinary reputation in our community.

I have a few things I wish to add. I have a bias because I also graduated from the University of Miami School of Law, where I have both my law degree and my student loan, so I am grateful to them for that.

He was only 37 years old when he was appointed to the bench. It says a lot that over the years he has garnered a reputation for being fair but also for his intellect. He is highly regarded for his intellect. One will find in legal circles particularly in south Florida that Judge Jordan is somebody for whom people have a tremendous amount of respect, not just for his fairness but for his intellect, his ability to understand complex legal issues. His background is one that would lead a person to that conclusion. He was the chief of the appellate division in the Office of the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District, which is extremely busy, one of the busiest districts in the country for the Justice Department. As Senator NELSON has already pointed out, he spent a year clerking on the U.S. Supreme Court. He also clerked with the Eleventh Circuit, where he now seeks to return and hopefully will return today as one of its judges.

Let me say a couple of things about the Eleventh Circuit. It has two current vacancies—one in Florida and one in Georgia. It is the busiest per judge in the entire country. They have caseloads that range in cases from Florida, Georgia, and Alabama. They include death penalty appeals. It is so overwhelming that they routinely invite cases. So it is critically important that we fill these vacancies, and that is hopefully what we will do today.

There are a couple more points I wish to make about the judge. He continues to be very involved in our community, both through his family and as an individual. He teaches courses at both the University of Miami School of Law and at the Florida International College of Law, which is a new school that started operations a few years ago.

He is an integral part of my community. I can tell my colleagues on both sides of the aisle that, being from south Florida, running in the same circles in which he has run in terms of the legal community, he is highly respected. I think as a nation we are fortunate to have someone such as Judge Jordan, who is willing to bypass the many comforts of private practice and serve his country in a role such as this. I hope that as a body we will confirm him in an overwhelming and bipartisan fashion.

With that, I thank the Chair for this opportunity, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we are considering the nomination of Judge Jordan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Eleventh Circuit. He is going to fill the vacancy that has been created by Judge Susan Black taking senior status.

Looking back, I think the Senate accomplished much last year, passing legislation and confirming a significant number of judicial and executive nominations. I would note that even the majority leader recognized we have done a good job on nominations and have accomplished quite a bit as well.

We could have confirmed more nominees had the President indicated he would respect the practice and precedent on recess appointments. He would not give the Senate that assurance, so a number of nominations could not be confirmed and now remain on the Executive Calendar. As it turned out, the President went on to violate the practice and precedent.

I wish to remind my colleagues and those who might be listening that the Constitution outlines two ways in which the President may make appointments: One is with the advice and consent of the Senate; the other is he may make temporary appointments when a vacancy in one of those offices happens when the Senate is in recess. Given that the Senate was not in recess, it seems clear to me that advice and consent was required but not obtained by the President.

It is for the Senate to determine its own rules and procedures, including designation of when it is in recess, within the constraints of the constitutional provisions found in article I. Consequently, this is not a matter within the purview of the executive branch. In other words, under the Constitution of the United States, the President is in no position to tell the Senate when we adjourn and when we do not adjourn.

These so-called recess appointments break a longstanding tradition. They violate precedents followed as recently as 2008 under President Bush.

This is a matter of concern to my Republican colleagues, as it should be for all Senators. In fact, I am quite puzzled and disappointed by the silence from the other side. This is more than just a policy issue or disagreement on a particular nominee. The underlying concern is a power grab by the President. I would think all Senators would rise to defend the prerogatives of the Senate and the constitutional principles which have been violated by the President. In other words, if the Constitution of the United States says the Senate determines when we are in adjournment, how does the President get the power to do that?

When a President thinks he can do anything the Constitution does not expressly prohibit, the danger arises that his advisers will feel pressure to say the Constitution does not stand in the way.

At that point, a President is no longer a constitutional figure with limited powers, as the Founders intended. Quite to the contrary, the President looks more and more like a King the Constitution was designed to replace. You remember George III. I hope.

Generally, I am willing to give the President's nominees the benefit of the doubt when the nominee on the surface meets the requirements I have previously outlined. But as I have indicated over the past few weeks, we are not operating under normal circumstances. The atmosphere the President has created with his disregard for constitutional principles has made it difficult to give his nominees any benefit of the doubt.

Despite the conditions the President has created, the committee is moving forward with hearings and with markups. As we see, we continue to have floor votes and confirmations. We are making progress.

This will be President Obama's 26th circuit nominee whom we have confirmed. That means over 62 percent of the President's circuit judge nominees have been confirmed. This is the same pace of confirmation for President Bush's circuit nominees at a comparable point in his first term.

Furthermore, President Obama's nominees are moving through the process at a quicker pace. The average time for President Obama's circuit nominees to be confirmed is about 140 days. For President Bush, the average time was quite longer, at 350 days—more than twice as long.

With regard to judicial vacancies, I would note progress has been made. We have made significant reductions in the vacancy rate. I hear some mistakenly state that the vacancy rate is at historic highs. The claim is not true. I would point out that the current vacancy rate is about where it was at the beginning of the Presidency of George W. Bush. In terms of historical highs, I would like to remind my colleagues of some history. When George H.W. Bush assumed the Presidency, the vacancy rate was around 5 percent. During his term, the Democratic majority in the Senate let the vacancy rate rise to 16 percent-nearly double what it is

Those who continue to complain about vacancy rate should also be reminded that for more than half the vacancies, the President has failed to even submit a nomination to the Senate. This has been a pattern throughout this administration. This is the case even for vacancies designated as judicial emergencies. Nineteen of those thirty-three emergency vacancies have no nominee. Furthermore, President Obama is significantly behind in the number of nominations he has made. So it is no surprise he would be a little behind in the confirmations as well. In other words, if the President wants the Senate to move faster, send the nominations up here.

I would like to say a few words about the nominee we will be voting on today. Judge Jordan presently serves as a U.S. district judge for the Southern District of Florida. He was appointed to that court byPresident Clinton in 1999, and was confirmed by the Senate later that year.

He received a bachelor of arts from the University of Miami in 1984, his juris doctorate from the University of Miami School of Law in 1987.

Upon graduating from law school, the nominee clerked for Thomas A. Clark of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit and then for Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. He then began his legal career as an associate attorney with Steel Hector & Davis where he handled first amendment matters and commercial litigation cases.

In 1994, he became an assistant U.S. attorney in the appellate division of the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Florida. He was made deputy chief of the division in 1996, and chief in 1998. The nominee also worked as an adjunct professor of law at the University of Miami School of Law since 1990. He has taught many courses, including a death penalty seminar, federal courts, a judicial inherent power seminar, and a federal criminal practice seminar.

Since becoming a district judge in 1999, he has presided over nearly 200 cases and has sat by designation frequently on the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

The American Bar Association Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary has rated this nominee with a unanimous "Well Qualified" rating. I concur in that rating and will support the nomination.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume legislative session and proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each; further, that the time postcloture count during morning business and any recess or adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Senator from Florida.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Reserving the right to object, and obviously I am not going to object, but I want to say to the Senate that this is an example— 89 to 5—that debate has been cut off on a nomination that has the bipartisan support of Senator Rubio and myself of a judge from Florida. One Senator was holding up the works in that he would not agree to the consent that you dismiss the 30 hours of debate. That is now causing us to delay this action. Is it any wonder, I ask the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that we cannot get things done around here when we see this kind of action even given this kind of bipartisan support of a judge?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I have been here for 37 years. I could not agree more with the distinguished senior Senator from Florida. He notes that 4 months ago, when Judge Adelberto Jordan came out of the Senate Judiciary Committee with every single Republican and every single Democrat voting for him, after the work done by the distinguished senior Senator from Florida and his colleague from Florida, the Senator from Florida, Mr. NELSON, made a commitment that every single Democrat would vote for this Cuban American immediately. Four months later, having had the cloture vote the Senator from Florida just mentionedthere was overwhelming support for him—he is still being held up. This is beneath the Senate of the United States of America. I agree with the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, do we have a unanimous consent request pending after the vote?

mous consent request is pending. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from California.

DELAY OF JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS

Mrs. BOXER, Madam President, I rise because I want to point out to the people of this country who may be watching this proceeding that what has happened tonight on the Senate floor is just ridiculous. Senator BILL NELSON— I think he was restrained, frankly. I know him. He is a very close friendwas restrained in his comments.

One Senator is stopping us from being able to ensure that justice is done, getting a great judge on the bench. It is sad. It is a historic nominee. It is a bipartisan situation with Senators Nelson and Rubio together. but it goes beyond this.

In addition to holding up the Senate and wasting time here-because we can't vote on the judge now; we have to wait until hours and hours go by-what happens after? We are supposed to be on a highway bill, a bill that will protect 1.8 million jobs and create an additional million jobs. Mr. President, 2.8 million jobs are hanging in the balance.

We have obstruction from my friends on the Republican side—and they are my friends. I don't know what they are doing. I don't know whom they think they are helping, but it is not the American people. Whether it is standing in the way of this judge or whether it is stopping this highway bill, they are hurting America. I want to tell them to wake up and smell the roseswe are trying to get out of this recession. This is a jobs bill that is just waiting to happen. We have myself and Senator Inhofe as partners in this effort. We have Senator BAUCUS working with the Republicans in the Finance Committee. We have Senator JOHNSON working in concert with Senator SHELBY on the Banking Committee, On the Commerce Committee, we have a few bumps in the road, but we are going to straighten those out because Senators Hutchison and Rockefeller are working together.

Why is it that we are doing nothing? Is it because Senators on the other side do not want us to move ahead? It is no wonder we have 13 percent approval from the American people. I will tell you, if they did not let our families vote, it would be less. How low can it go? We are going to know.

I have to say we want to get to this highway bill. It also had an 85-to-11 vote to move forward—an 85-to-11 vote to move forward—and guess what the first amendment is. It is not about making sure our highways keep up with the demand. It is not about how we can make sure our transit systems

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A unaniare functional. It is not about how we make our bridges safer. It is about birth control. Excuse me, the first amendment my friends on the other side want to offer is about birth control? I honor my friends' views on birth control. I personally believe, as the vast majority of Americans believe, that it is important women have the ability to have their insurance cover contraception. It saves money, it saves lives, and it reduces abortions by the tens of thousands. It saves insurance companies 15 percent because it avoids so many problems. Fifteen percent of the women who use birth control use it for non-birth-control reasons, such as helping prevent an ovarian cyst from turning into a dangerous situation. They use it to prevent endometriosis. They use it to prevent debilitating pain.

It is a highway bill. I am interested to see what Senator-I have to read again what he is offering. I think it is so broad, it says that anybody in America—any employer can refuse to offer any part of insurance they want if they say it is a religious objection. So let's say you are a Christian Scientist and you run a big organization and don't believe children should get chemotherapy—and we have had those cases. Under the Blunt amendment, I guess you don't have to do it. You just say it is a religious objection. It is so sweeping. My point tonight is to say that such an amendment does not belong on a highway bill. To that end, and I will stop here, we received a letter today: "To the Members of the United States Senate." This is one of the clearest letters I have ever seen. Here is what it savs:

The time is now to pass S. 1813, Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century, the bipartisan highway bill crafted by the Environment and Public Works Committee. Last Thursday 85 Senators voted to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to S. 1813, clearly demonstrating bipartisan support for passing the highway and transit bill. While we are encouraged by the show of support, the undersigned organizations are concerned that progress may be impeded if non-germane amendments are offered as part of the deliberations on this bill.

I love this letter. Listen to what they

The organizations that we represent may hold diverse views on social, energy, and fiscal issues, but we are united in our desire to see immediate action on the Senate's bipartisan highway and transit reauthorization measures.

This is to every Senator.

Senators, please listen carefully.

Therefore, we strongly urge you to abstain from offering nongermane amendments that would impede the passage of this legislation, which is essential to job creation, economic growth and to the long-term stability of vital transportation programs.

I will read who signed this:

AAA, the American Association of State Highway and Transit Officials, the American Bus Association, American Concrete Association, American Council of Engineering Companies, American Highway Users Alliance, American Moving and Storage Association, American Public Transportation Association, American Road and Transportation Builders Association, American Society of Civil Engineers, American Traffic Safety Services Association, American Trucking Associations, Associated General Contractors of America, Associated Equipment Distributors, Association of Equipment Manufacturers, Association of Metropolitan Planning Organizations, Commercial Vehicle Safety Alliance, Governors Highway Safety Association, Intelligent Transportation Society. International Union of Operating Engineers, Motor and Equipment Manufacturers Association, the National Asphalt Pavement Association, the National Association of Development Organizations, the National Construction Alliance II, National Stone, Sand and Gravel Association, Portland Cement Association, and U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Listen, we have to put aside these wedge issues, these "gotcha" issues. We have the equivalent of 10 Super Bowl stadiums filled with unemployed construction workers. We have business after business that is struggling.

This is a bipartisan bill. This will save 1.8 million jobs and create an additional 1 million jobs, and we are talking about birth control amendments, line-item veto amendments, amendments about foreign policy. I have to say to those colleagues of mine, whatever side of the aisle they are on—at this time I only know Republican amendments, but anyone who comes forward with a nongermane amendment and tries to put it on this important bill—let me say this as best I can, either they don't care a hoot about jobs for our people or they just want this economy to tank for political reasons. Because if we don't pass a highway bill—and the authorization ends at the end of March-I am going to be blunt with you. What is going to happen? Our States are going to start shutting down these projects and people will be unemployed and we will see reversal in this very delicate economic recovery.

This is a critical bill, and I am going to be on this floor every single day and I am going to be going on my Facebook and I am going to be going on Twitter and TV and radio everywhere. Why? To say a very simple thing to my colleagues—get out of the way of this jobs bill. Get out of the way. All of America supports it, from the left to the right, to the center and everything in between.

I yield the floor. I thank the Chair.
Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, today I have filed Amendment No. 1536
to the pending surface transportation reauthorization bill. This amendment is also supported by Senator BOXER.

This amendment would change the railcar procurement rules to allow transit systems to contract for delivery of railcars for up to 5 years from the date of delivery of the first railcar.

Current law requires the purchase of buses and railcars to be completed within 5 years of the date the contract is signed, not the date of the first delivery.

So this amendment would give transit operators the chance to sign larger and more cost effective contracts, which in some cases can save substantial money.

The current rules do not make sense for rail operators. They are designed to stimulate competition among manufacturers, and they prevent transit agencies from locking themselves into contracts for outdated buses in a market that is constantly evolving and advancing technologically.

But these rules do not recognize the reality of purchasing and producing railcars.

A light rail system's car designs must maintain a basic design for compatibility reasons, so rules designed to promote innovative design have little benefit.

But by forcing the transit rail agency to buy cars with the same basic design in two orders instead of one, these rules almost certainly increase total costs. It may also lead to the purchase of different models from two different orders, increasing maintenance costs in the future.

For instance, the Bay Area Rapid Transit System, or BART, is replacing its entire fleet of 669 railcars and buying an additional 106 for an expansion project.

BART's railcars have been in use for about 50 years, and they have become too costly to maintain. It is clearly time that they be replaced.

The current 5 year procurement rule, however, would force BART to issue two small procurements, instead of one large one.

BART estimates this will cost taxpayers and transit riders $325 million and they will buy the same number of cars either way.

This amendment would allow transit agencies like BART to sign one single contract, to purchase in bulk, and to save money for strapped systems.

Buying in bulk means cheaper flooring, seats, and all other component parts needed to build a railcar. BART also risks increased prices of component parts between contracts.

This amendment empowers transit systems to apply lessons learned from the airline industry in order to make transit more efficient and less costly.

As BART has pointed out in their letter on this amendment, Southwest Airlines is their model.

Southwest flies only Boeing 737s, making it the lowest cost maintenance system in the country. BART wants a single railcar design, to bring about the same type of savings.

BART hopes to purchase one model and keep their maintenance costs low as well.

The bottom line is this amendment gets Federal rules out of the way of transit agencies that want to use their market power.

It helps transit get the best possible price when purchasing equipment.

It stretches limited Federal dollars much, much further.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and ensure that taxpayers' money is used in an efficient manner. During these critical economic times, every cent of the people's money should be spent wisely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

THE AUTO INDUSTRY

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam President, earlier today I toured Alcoa's Cleveland Works plant. The plant houses an engineering and manufacturing marvel of a 50,000-ton Mesta forging press. It stands 87 feet high; 36 feet below the surface, 51 feet above the surface. The press has enough steel to lay 42 miles of railroad track. That is roughly here to Baltimore or Akron to Cleveland. It is massive, and one of only five heavy closed-die forging presses in the United States. It is officially considered by the Mechanical Engineering Association a national historic engineering landmark.

Its original purpose was to build components for large airplanes during World War II. During the war, we discovered that German aircraft were being built with structural elements that could only be made by large forging processes that we thought had not yet been invented. So only as it could do, our government, through the Air Force, initiated the Heavy Press Program to compete with the Germans and to show that advanced manufacturing matters to our country.

After the war, we brought the Mesta supergiant forging press to America and to Cleveland, where it remains critical to the commercial and defense aerospace industries. It formed the basis of a public-private partnership, it stamps the "Made in America" label on some of the world's most advanced technologies and products.

Today Alcoa is investing $100 million to complete and restart its redesign of the massive press. Alcoa invested in America and it is an investment in Ohio manufacturing. It shows the company's ability to leverage public resources to meet industrial-based needs as well as commercial demands of the market. It is for our national security, and it is for our domestic security to build a middle class. It is an example of how partnerships can still pay dividends six decades later and will do so with continued investment for decades to come.

At the time it was about our national pride and need in times of war. Today it is about creating and retaining jobs. It is about showing that manufacturing is about building and it is about innovation. Manufacturing is about high-tech production, it is sophisticated engineering, it is advanced technologies, and it remains a ticket to the middle-class.

We are finally seeing recognition in Washington that manufacturing is critical to our economic recovery. For 12 years-from 1997 through the 8 Bush years into 2009—we had seen a decline every single year in Ohio manufacturing and in American manufacturing, but for the last 21 months we have seen an increase in manufacturing jobs in America and an increase in manufacturing jobs in Ohio. It started, in part, with the auto rescue where if some conservative politicians in Washington had had their way, they would have allowed the auto industry simply to declare bankruptcy with no ability to finance or restructure the auto industry. Instead, the President, in working with the Senate and working with the House, rescued that industry by investing in that industry.

Today in my State we are seeing thousands of auto jobs in the auto companies, in Chrysler and in GM, jobs that wouldn't have been there if we had not done auto rescue, and we are seeing all kinds of auto supply jobs. For instance, at the Chrysler Jeep plant in Toledo, where 3 years ago only 50 percent of components came from domestic sources, today more than 70 percent come from domestic sources.

plants in Toledo, Today Lordstown, and in Defiance are hiring workers. The Chevy Cruze-one of the hottest selling cars in America—is as close to an all-Ohio car as you can get. The engine is made in Defiance, the transmission is made in Toledo, the bumpers are made in Northwood, the stamping is done in Parma, the steel comes out of Cleveland, the aluminum comes out of Cleveland, part of the sound system comes out of Springboro. and the assembly is in Lordstownthousands and thousands of autoworker jobs, tens of thousands of jobs of auto suppliers supplying the Cruze, supplying Honda, supplying the Jeep plant in Toledo, supplying the Ford plant in Avon Lake.

In the last year alone, Honda and Chrysler and Ford and GM announced multimillion-dollar investments in Ohio alone and, in many cases, around the country. Honda announced it would build and develop its most state-of-theart sports car ever right in Ohio. We see the same jobs creating investments from Chrysler, its Toledo assembly complex, from Ford at the Avon Lake plant, from GM at its Defiance powertrain plant.

As it did when the Nation needed the forging press for aerospace manufacturing, our government did only as it could do; it stepped up to invest in America and the American auto industry. So those who complain about the auto rescue need to read a little history to understand that so often American manufacturing partnered with U.S. taxpayers to make sure these industries were strong and solid and created good-paying jobs to build the middle-class. It is paying off dividends today. It will continue to do so in the future.

I have a unanimous consent request after I speak, that the Senator from Oregon is recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. One more point I wish to make. We must remain vigilant in enforcement of our trade laws. Our progress in autos is at risk of being undercut if we allow China to continue to cheat on trade rules, flaunt its predatory auto trade practices in our faces.

Only 10 years ago, our trade deficit in auto parts with China was only about $1 billion. That has grown 800 percent to about $9 billion to $10 billion. That means more than 1.6 million American jobs are at risk. Our trade deficit with China is continuing to cause difficulty for middle-class Americans. China has begun placing tariffs on American-made automobiles. These massive illegal subsidies are worsened by indirect predatory subsidies such as currency manipulation.

That is why I am encouraged by the President's announcement of a new trade enforcement panel. It is borne of the realization that the stakes are too high for our workers and our economy if we don't fight back. We need an all-hands-on-deck approach among the USTR, the State Department, and the Commerce Department to be involved, to be more aggressive, especially by initiating more trade cases.

I know from representing Ohio in the Senate since 2007 what trade enforcement laws do. Trade enforcement by the Commerce Department and the International Trade Commission against China's cheating created jobs in Lorain, OH, in the steel industry; created jobs in Findlay, OH, in the tire industry; created jobs in paper and other industries around the State and resulted in a new steel mill, V&M Star Steel, in Youngstown, OH, where about 1,000 building trades people are building that plant and 500 or 600 steelworkers will be working in that plant that manufactures Oil Country Tubular steel—jobs that would have been in China if the President of the United States and the Commerce Department and the International Trade Commission did not enforce trade laws.

That is why that matters. That is why the new trade enforcement panel that the President is setting up as part of his budget is so very important for the future of our national security and for the future of the middle class and our great country.

THE HIGHWAY BILL

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I rise to address legislation we hope will soon be pending on the floor of the Senate, the Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century Act, better known as the highway bill. This bill is dedicated to rebuilding both our highway and transportation system. It is a critical downpayment on both America's economic recovery and our long-term economic success.

Infrastructure is a doubly effective investment. First, in the short term, infrastructure projects create much needed jobs, particularly now when the construction industry is flat on its back. It is one of the hardest hit sectors in this downturn. So rebuilding and repairing our crumbling roads and bridges is one of the best actions we can take to create jobs.

Second, infrastructure investment supports jobs in the long term. Think of how many businesses in this country rely on America's infrastructure to move their goods to consumers—businesses in every State of our Nation, from our most rural communities to our largest cities; small businesses, the largest corporations, and everything in between.

Creating the infrastructure that gives these businesses the tools they need to grow is an essential ingredient for future job growth. Yet, over the past generation, our commitment to infrastructure funding at the Federal level has not reflected its role as a key to our competitiveness.

China is spending 10 percent of its gross domestic product on infrastructure. Europe is spending 5 percent of its GDP on infrastructure. The number here in America is 2 percent—barely enough to keep our roads and transit systems in repair. There are those here in Washington pushing to cut the investment even further.

This is not a recipe for success in the 21st century, nor should this be a partisan issue. When I go home to Oregon I hear from businesses, large to small, from liberal to conservative, telling me that this transportation bill is a good investment in our future. Likewise, more than 1,000 organizations ranging from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to labor groups to local governments have urged Congress to act without delay and pass this highway bill. It is time for Congress to recognize, as our constituents do, that if we want jobs, if we want growth, if we want competitiveness, this is one of the best investments we can make.

I am very pleased that the committee responsible for this, the Environment and Public Works Committee, was able to pass a strong bill, and it is going to be merged with work done by three other committees, in all cases with bipartisan votes, and they will bring this bill to the floor with significant support on both sides of the aisle. But our work is not going to be done until we pass this bill through this Chamber, until we pass this bill through the House, and until we put it on the President's desk.

This bill is a downpayment on the next phase of our economic growth. It puts construction workers back on the job, creating 1.8 million jobs over the next 2 years. That is a sizable number—1.8 million jobs. That will make a huge difference to construction workers who are still struggling with an unemployment rate of 18 percent—more than twice the national average.

Second, this bill gives States the flexibility to direct more of their own funds, putting more power in the hands of local communities to decide what their most important transportation priorities are.

Finally, it is an investment in the 21st century system that will move us all forward.

Of course, there are always ways that a bill can be stronger, and I will work with my colleagues to bring a number of amendments to the floor. There are, for example, several loopholes in the "Buy American" provisions that we should fix. We already recognize in current law that if we are spending taxpayer dollars to buy materials for American infrastructure projects, it makes no sense to shift those dollars overseas when they could stay in our economy and support growth and jobs right here. All highway and transit projects have requirements to use American-made materials for public infrastructure and transit. But two specific loopholes have enabled States to buy Chinese steel instead of American steel and shift jobs out of the country. First, we should close the freight rail loophole in our "Buy American" laws. The industrial might of this Nation was built on American railroads, made from American steel. As we update and improve that freight rail system, it is only right that those bridges and tracks continue to be made in America.

This summer, construction of a rail bridge in Alaska to a military base was awarded to a Chinese company because the Federal Rail Administration, unlike the Federal Transit and Federal Highway Administrations, doesn't have any "Buy American" provision. An American company was ready to build this bridge but because of this loophole, the contract went to a Chinese company using Chinese steel, paid for with American tax dollars. That is a huge mistake. Let's shut that loophole.

Second, we should close the segmentation loophole. This loophole allows projects to be split into little pieces in order to bypass the requirement for American-made materials. The Bay Bridge in California was split into nine separate projects instead of one bridge project so that Federal funds and, therefore, "Buy American" provisions would only apply to two out of the nine projects. This allowed the bulk of the bridge to be built with Chinese steel and Chinese workers, with American tax dollars. That is a mistake. Even Republican Members of the House know that is a mistake. They have put forward an amendment to close this loophole. Let's close this loophole as well on the Senate side.

In addition to closing these two loopholes, we need to strengthen the bike and pedestrian provisions in this bill. Bike and pedestrian systems are essential components in an integrated transportation system, reducing congestion and reducing pollution in a highly costeffective manner. With gas prices on the rise, many families are looking for increased opportunities to get around on their bikes and on foot. In many communities around the Nation such as Portland and Eugene in my home State of Oregon, and many other cities in Oregon, biking and walking have become a way of life, with families commuting, running errands, and getting around town. When they are able to do that, they decrease the load on the highway system. They reduce the congestion. They reduce the pollution. It is a win-win at every level.

But Federal funding has not kept up with this shift. Just as traffic lights and highway lanes are necessary to make our roads safer and faster for drivers, pedestrians and bikers need basic infrastructure to make their trips safe and efficient. Yet there is no dedicated Federal funding stream for bike and pedestrian infrastructure. This is a growing demand in many communities and States. Despite the fact of decreasing congestion on the roads, it is one of the most cost-effective strategies we could possibly follow. Biking and walking infrastructure costs little, but it has a big bang for the buck. In Portland 2 percent of the city's transportation dollars were spent on biking and walking, but the percentage of commuters traveling by bike went up 140 percent. Imagine if all those bikers were in cars by themselves, as are so many of us who drive to work. Congestion in Portland would have increased instead of staving constant over a 10-year period as it has.

I am supporting an amendment that will retain the current level of funding at 2 percent for bike and pedestrian projects, and I encourage my colleagues to be smart with the Federal dollar and support this amendment.

This bill—the broader highway bill—is a critical investment in our short-term and long-term economic success. Over the next 2 years, it will provide an immediate boost to a struggling construction industry, creating jobs where they are needed most. And over the next generation, it will act as the downpayment we need on infrastructure for our businesses to grow and prosper in the 21st century.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to continue to build support around this bill; indeed, to get this bill to the floor for consideration. While there are some in this Chamber who want to fight social battles by putting unrelated amendments up, there are millions of Americans in need of jobs, there is an infrastructure that needs to be rebuilt, and there are citizens who want us to put aside the games and do the work here so they can do the work back at home.

I yield the floor.

ROMA BRIDGE BUILDING

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, at the end of January, something remarkable happened: Slovak Deputy Prime Minister Rudolf Chmel made a positive statement about Roma. Saying something nice about Europe's largest ethnic minority may not seem newsworthy, but it is and here is why.

The Deputy Prime Minister reacted to an escalation of anti-Roma rhetoric in the runup to Slovakia's March 10 parliamentary elections by calling on political parties not to play the "Roma card." But more than that, he welcomed a landmark decision of the European Court on Human Rights holding that the sterilization of a Slovak Romani woman without her consent had been cruel and inhuman. He welcomed the findings of a Slovak court that concluded Romani children had been placed in segregated schools in eastern Slovakia. And he commended the human rights organization that had helped litigate both these cases.

To say that statements like these are few and far between is an understatement. On the contrary, officials at the highest levels of government frequently perpetuate the worst bigotry against Roma.

For example, after four perpetrators were convicted and sentenced for a racially motivated firebombing that left a Romani toddler burned over 80 percent of her body, Czech President Vaclav Klaus wondered if their 20-plusyear sentences were too harsh. Romanian Foreign Minister Teodor Baconschi suggested that Roma were "physiologically" disposed to crime. Last year, President Silvio Berlusconi warned the electorate of Milan to vote for his party lest their city become a "Gypsyopolis." And French President Nicolas Sarkozy has explicated targeted Roma-from EU countries-for expulsion from France. The common thread in most of this rhetoric is the portrayal of Roma as inherently crimi-

Nearly 20 years ago in the New York Times—Dec. 10, 1993—Vaclav Havel described the treatment of Roma as a litmus test for civil society. Today, Europe is still failing that test miserably. As Hungary's Minister for Social Inclusion Zolton Balog has argued, Roma are worse off today than they were under communism. While a small fraction of Roma have benefited from new opportunities, many more have been the absolute losers in the transition from the command-to-a market economy, and vast numbers live in a kind of poverty that the United Nations Development Programme described as more typically found in sub-Saharan Africa than Europe. Endemic discrimination has propelled economic marginalization downward at an exponential pace, and the past 20 years have been marked by outbreaks of hate crimes and mob violence against Roma that are on the rise again.

In the current environment, those who play with anti-Roma rhetoric are playing with a combustible mix.

In the near term, there is the real prospect that fueling prejudice against Roma will spark interethnic violence. Before Bulgaria's local elections last October, the extremist Ataka party parlayed an incident involving a Romani mafia boss into anti-Romani rioting in some 14 towns and cities. In the Czech Republic, the government has had to mount massive shows of law enforcement to keep anti-Roma mobs from degenerating into all-out pogroms; its worked so far, but at a huge cost.

Significantly, Roma are not always standing by while the likes of the Hungarian Guard mass on their doorsteps; they have sometimes gathered sticks, shovels, scythes, and anything else handy in an old-school defense.

Even without the prospect of violence, there is a longer term threat to many countries with larger Romani populations: if they fail to undertake meaningful integration of Roma, they will find their economies hollowed out from within. More than a decade ago, then-Hungarian Minister of Education Zolton Pokorni said that one out of every three children starting school that year would be Romani. Some economic forecasts now suggest that by 2040, 40 percent of the labor force in Hungary will be Romani. A number of other countries face similar trajectories.

A desperately impoverished, uneducated, and marginalized population will not serve as the backbone of a modern and thriving economy. But several studies have shown that the cost of investing in the integration of Roma—housing, education, and job training and the like—will be more than offset by gains in GNP and tax revenue. In order to undertake those integration policies, somebody has to build popular support for them. And that is where Mr. Chmel comes in.

Until now, most popular discourse about Roma seems predicated on the ostrich-like belief that perhaps they can be made to go away. Few politicians have shown the courage and foresight to reframe public discourse in any way that acknowledges Europe's future will definitely include Roma. Mr. Chmel has taken an important step in that direction. I hope he will inspire others.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

REMEMBERING STEVE APPLETON

• Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, my colleague Senator JIM RISCH joins me today in honoring the life of Steve Appleton. We are deeply saddened by Steve's passing, and we join his wife, Dalynn, their children, family, Micron employees and his many friends in honoring his remarkable life.

For more than three decades, our State was a fortunate beneficiary of Steve's determination and hard work. A year after his 1982 graduation from Boise State University, he joined Micron Technology, Inc., and quickly ascended from working on Micron's hightech assembly line to leading the company as CEO, president and chairman. His talent and energy helped overcome significant challenges and shaped Micron into a multinational world leader in semiconductors. As Kurt Marko, a coworker at Micron, poignantly described him, "Appleton personified Micron's can-do spirit. He, and it, defied the odds."

Steve leaves behind a legacy of hard work, focus, integrity and generosity. He was driven to reach remarkable achievements and was generous in sharing the rewards of that hard work to better our State and future generations of Idahoans. For example, he gave his time and financial resources to help Boise State University develop its College of Engineering; raised funds for scholarships, programs, buildings and projects, including the Appleton Tennis Complex; and established the Micron Foundation. Due to his efforts, our State and Nation will be better equipped to compete globally.

We were honored to have many opportunities to work with Steve over the years. His pragmatic approach was instrumental in achieving remedies needed to better ensure a level playing field for U.S. semiconductor products and address unfair trading practices. No matter the challenges, Steve faced them with optimism and sensibility.

Steve's adventurous spirit was widely known and well documented. His passion for sports and competition contributed to him excelling in tennis, including winning the doubles title at the Big Sky Tennis Championship in 1982. Besides his love of aviation, he also was involved in a number of adventure sports including, off-road car racing, scuba diving, wakeboarding, motocross and more.

Steve Appleton's energy and commitment to Idaho will not be forgotten. He has set an extraordinary example of what hard work and initiative in a free enterprise system can achieve. He helped create thousands of jobs and cemented Idaho's standing in the hightech field. His innovation, drive and forward-thinking approach, as well as his wonderful friendship, will be greatly missed.

RECOGNIZING ARKANSAS HOSPITALS

• Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, it is my distinct privilege to recognize the work of five Arkansas hospitals that were honored by U.S. News and World Report as among the Nation's best hospitals and classified as "high-performing" in a variety of specialties for their outstanding care. These hospitals were judged against almost 5,000 nationwide hospitals and met rigorous standards of medical care, including patient survival and safety, hospital reputation, and care-related factors such as nursing and patient services. The "high-performing" designation is reserved for hospitals that rank in the top 25 percent of each category after further standards are applied. These five hospitals are tremendous assets to my State, and I am pleased to be able to praise their hard work and worldclass medical care on the Senate floor.

The U.S. News 2011-2012 Best Hospitals rankings recognized three hospitals in the Little Rock metropolitan area, which includes Little Rock, North Little Rock, and Conway. The University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences, UAMS, was recognized as a high-performing hospital in four specialty areas: cancer; obstetrics/gynecology; ear/nose/throat, ENT; and nephrology, kidney, Baptist Health Medical Center was named high-performing in the ENT and nephrology specialties, and St. Vincent Infirmary was recognized as high-performing in the ENT and orthopedics specialties.

The 2011–2012 Best Hospitals list included two additional Arkansas facilities providing outstanding care outside of major metro areas: Sparks Regional Medical Center, in Fort Smith, and Washington Regional Medical Center, in Fayetteville. They were two of only 247 hospitals across the Nation recognized for their exceptional care as regional hospitals. Sparks was listed as "high-performing" in the pulmonology specialty and Washington Regional in geriatrics.

I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the achievements of UAMS, Baptist Health, St. Vincent, Sparks Regional, and Washington Regional. I am thankful for the men and women of these five facilities and all the health care professionals across my State. They are constantly striving to provide Arkansans with the best medical care possible, and I am proud of all their hard work. ●

TRIBUTE TO WILMA J. WEBB

• Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. President, today I want to recognize a friend and a great Coloradan the Honorable Wilma J. Webb. Wilma is a transformative leader who has left her indelible mark on the State of Colorado and the character of our country.

On February 16, 2012, the Anti-Defamation League's Mountain States Office will present Wilma with the prestigious 2012 Civil Rights Award. Given all of her work on behalf of the African-American community, it is especially appropriate that Wilma will receive her award during Black History Month. I congratulate her on being the recipient of such an esteemed honor and I applaud her for her remarkable achievements in the struggle for civil rights. Wilma's award presents me with an opportunity to tell the U.S. Senate about her remarkable life and work.

Wilma is a native of the Centennial State, born in Denver and raised in the city's Five Points Neighborhood. She later attended the University of Colorado at Denver, and is an alumna of Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government. As a testament to her dedication to public service in Colorado, Wilma also has received honorary doctoral degrees from the University of Northern Colorado and the Art Institute of Colorado.

By 1980, Wilma had become a state representative in the Colorado General Assembly, where she served for 13 years, distinguishing herself as a trailblazing leader in the State Capitol. Among her achievements, Wilma spearheaded legislation to prevent discrimination in its many forms. For example, Wilma successfully secured the ability of the Colorado Civil Rights Commission and Division to use the power of subpoena in cases of discrimination. The first woman to represent House District 8, she was also a champion for the rights of women and led legislation to make it unlawful to discriminate against women in the workplace or in the pursuit of an education. Wilma fought to help women and minority professionals lead successful businesses Colorado. Additionally, Wilma served as an advocate to end discrimination on the basis of a person's sexual orientation or physical disability.

In the 1980s, the United States was considering a policy of divestment in South Africa because of its abhorrent system known as apartheid. At this time, early in her career as a State Representative, Wilma had the foresight and determination to lead the divestment effort in Colorado. To do so, she carried bills to discourage investment in South Africa until Nelson Mandela was freed from imprisonment on Robben Island and justice was restored to the country's political system. It's a stance that many of us think is common sense now, but we must remember that it took brave leaders like Wilma to be on the forefront of the fight several decades ago.

Wilma's leadership to expand civil rights is laudable, and includes many successful initiatives that make Coloradans proud. She is perhaps most widely known and celebrated for her effort to establish Martin Luther King, Jr. Day as a State holiday in Colorado. Founding the Martin Luther King, Jr. Colorado Holiday Commission along with Mrs. Coretta Scott King and Governor Richard D. Lamm, Wilma committed 18 years to serving as its President and Chairman. The commission, helmed by Wilma, was responsible for organizing the annual "Marade" in the heart of Denver and has served to unite and educate communities across Colorado on the spirit and contributions of Dr. King. The Marade, uniquely named for being both a march and a parade, is one of the largest celebrations of its kind across the country. I have had the distinct privilege of participating in it over the years. In fact, just last month I was in Denver to mark the occasion, and it is among the most important ways we have to celebrate our diverse communities and honor the values to which Dr. King devoted his life. To me. Wilma's visionary leadership in honoring Dr. King's legacy symbolizes our nation's inexorable march toward greater equality and justice for all Americans.

There are many other notable achievements of Wilma Webb. I would like to discuss a few more.

She has been a pioneer on education issues, fighting for a level playing field and full-day kindergarten so that Colorado's children are able to get a quality education. I will note that in President Obama's most recent State of the Union address, he called for a nation-wide effort to establish a mechanism to keep students in school until they are 18 years old or graduate high school. It did not surprise me to learn that Wilma, in her days as a state legislator, carried measures to do the same for Colorado's youth over 20 years ago.

Wilma served as a voice for the community's poor by carrying legislation that supported Colorado's most vulnerable populations, and she successfully advanced provisions that improved the living conditions of both the elderly and troubled youth.

Wilma also developed a prowess tackling thorny budgetary issues. As she rose to become an influential member of the State legislature, she was the first minority woman to earn a prestigious spot on the Joint Budget Committee responsible for guiding Colorado's budget priorities.

Yet Wilma's achievements go beyond what I have mentioned here and are not limited to her time in the General Assembly. Those of us who know Wilma know that her life extends far beyond that.

Wilma was the first African-American woman to be the First Lady of Denver. She stood by her husband, former Mayor Wellington Webb, as an active leader in the affairs of the city and a respected figure within its diverse communities. I know how proud my friend Wellington is of his wife, and vice versa. They are the epitome of a "power couple," but more importantly, a couple devoted to public service.

As First Lady, Wilma was unyielding in her efforts to end drug abuse and consequently devoted much of her time and energy to strengthening Colorado's comprehensive anti-drug abuse programs. These programs, the first of their kind, were enacted as a result of a bill she carried during her days in the Colorado State House.

Wilma was also devoted to resolving the unique issues facing families and youth throughout Denver. As if that did not keep her busy enough, Wilma took on the responsibility of hosting local, national and foreign dignitaries in Denver, and also traveling abroad to over 23 countries to represent Denver and build relationships with worldwide partners. She was instrumental in creating and implementing the Mayor's vision for the arts and played a key role in revitalizing the cultural and artistic vitality of Denver. In one notable example, Wilma founded the Denver Art, Culture and Film Foundation to raise money for public art projects.

And she certainly did not stop after her First Lady of Denver duties were done. Colorado and the Mountain West were fortunate to have Wilma's leadership extend to a new position: she became the U.S. Secretary of Labor's Representative for the Department of Labor's Region VIII. To no one's surprise, Wilma yet again blazed a new trail as the first woman to fill this role, where she had significant budgetary oversight and directed special projects to resolve labor and workforce issues in the West. Her commitment to public service on the Federal level was just as productive as her time working at the State level.

It is clear Wilma has had an extraordinary career. She is warm, she is a visionary leader, she is exceptionally skilled, and she is driven by the desire to do what is right for Coloradans. Yet throughout her years as a leader, she has maintained a strong sense of the importance of family. As a daughter, a wife, a mother and a grandmother, she has been a cornerstone for all those around her. As someone who values the importance of balancing work life with family life, I respect the example that Wilma sets in that regard.

As I conclude, let me say to my colleagues that I am proud—and Coloradans are proud to count Wilma among our numbers. She has earned the 2012 Civil Rights Award through her years of dedication, innovation and persistence in making Colorado a better place. She is a pioneer for civil rights and a forward-thinking public servant who has etched her mark on the lives of Colorado's families, youth and marginalized communities. I commend Wilma for advancing the rights of every Coloradan and for a lifetime of service to others. On behalf of all Coloradans, I extend hearty congratulations on Wilma's well-earned honor. with full confidence that she will continue her groundbreaking work.

BUDGET OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2013—PM 40

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred jointly, pursuant to the order of January 30, 1975 as modified by the order of April 11, 1986; to the Committees on Appropriations; and the Budget:

To the Congress of the United States:

America was built on the idea that anyone who is willing to work hard and play by the rules, can make it if they try—no matter where they started out. By giving every American a fair shot, asking everyone to do their fair share, and ensuring that everyone played by the same rules, we built the great American middle class and made our country a model for the world.

Today, America is still home to the world's best universities, most productive workers, and most innovative companies. But for many Americans, the basic bargain at the heart of the American Dream has eroded.

Long before this recession hit, there was a widespread feeling that hard work had stopped paying off; that fewer and fewer of those who contributed to the success of our economy actually benefited from that success. Those at the very top grew wealthier while everyone else struggled with paychecks that did not keep up with the rising cost of everything from college tuition to groceries. And as a result, too many families found themselves taking on more and more debt just to keep up—often papered over by mounting credit card bills and home equity loans.

Then, in the middle of 2008, the house of cards collapsed. Too many mortgages had been sold to people who could not afford—or even understand—them. Banks had packaged too many risky loans into securities and then sold them to investors who were misled or misinformed about the risks involved. Huge bets had been made and huge bonuses had been paid out with other people's money. And the regulators who were supposed to prevent this crisis either looked the other way or did not have the authority to act.

In the end, this growing debt and irresponsibility helped trigger the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. Combined with new tax cuts and new mandatory programs that had never been paid for, it threw our country into a deep fiscal hole. And millions of hardworking Americans lost their jobs, their homes, and their basic economic security.

Today, we are seeing signs that our economy is on the mend. But we are not out of the woods yet. Instead, we are facing a make-or-break moment for the middle class, and for all those who are fighting to get there. What is at stake is whether or not this will be a country where working people can earn enough to raise a family, build modest savings, own a home, and secure their retirement. This is the defining issue of our time.

This Budget reflects my deep belief that we must rise to meet this moment—both for our economy and for the millions of Americans who have worked so hard to get ahead.

We built this Budget around the idea that our country has always done best when everyone gets a fair shot, everyone does their fair share, and everyone plays by the same rules. It rejects the "you'reon your own" economics that have led to a widening gap between the richest and poorest Americans that undermines both our belief in equal opportunity and the engine of our economic growth. When the middle class is shrinking, and families can no longer afford to buy the goods and services that businesses are selling, it drags down our entire economy. And countries with less inequality tend to have stronger and steadier economic growth over the long run.

The way to rebuild our economy and strengthen the middle class is to make sure that everyone in America gets a fair shot at success. Instead of lowering our standards and our sights, we need to win a race to the top for good jobs that pay well and offer security for the middle class. To succeed and thrive in the global, high-tech economy, we need America to be a place with the highest-skilled, highest-educated workers; the most advanced transportation and communication networks; and the strongest commitment to research and technology in the world. This Budget makes investments that can help America win this race, create good jobs, and lead in the world economy.

And it does so with the understanding that we need an economy that is no longer burdened by years of debt and in which everyone shoulders their fair share to put our fiscal house in order. When I took office 3 years ago, my Administration was left an annual deficit of $1.3 trillion, or 9.2 percent of GDP, and a projected 10-year deficit of more than $8 trillion. These deficits were the result of a previous 8 years of undertaking initiatives, but not paying for them—especially two large tax cuts and a new Medicare prescription drug benefit—as well as the financial crisis and recession that made the fiscal situation worse as revenue decreased and automatic Government outlays increased to counter the downturn.

We have taken many steps to re-establish fiscal responsibility, from instituting a statutory pay-as-you-go rule for spending to going through the budget line by line looking for outdated, ineffective, or duplicative programs to cut or reform. Importantly, we enacted the Affordable Care Act, which will not only provide Americans with more affordable choices and freedom from insurance company abuses, but will also reduce our budget deficits by more than $1 trillion over the next two decades.

As economic growth was beginning to take hold last year, I took further steps to put our Nation on a fiscally sustainable path that would strengthen the foundation of the economy for years to come. In April of 2011, I put forward my Framework for Shared Prosperity and Shared Fiscal Responsibility that built on the 2012 Budget to identify $4 trillion in deficit reduction. During negotiations over extending the debt ceiling in the summer, I presented to congressional Republicans another balanced plan to achieve $4 trillion in deficit reduction. Finally, in September, I sent my Plan for Economic Growth and Deficit Reduction to the Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction, which detailed a way to achieve $3 trillion in deficit reduction on top of the $1 trillion already achieved in the Budget Control Act of 2011 that I signed into law the previous month.

I also made sure that this plan covered the cost of the American Jobs Act—a set of bipartisan, commonsense proposals designed to put more people back to work, put more money in the pockets of the middle class, and do so without adding a dime to the deficit at a time when it was clear that global events were slowing the economic recovery and our ability to create more jobs. Unfortunately, Republicans in Congress blocked both our deficit reduction measures and almost every part of the American Jobs Act for the simple reason that they were unwilling to ask the wealthiest Americans to pay their fair share.

In the year ahead, I will continue to pursue policies that will shore up our economy and our fiscal situation. Together with the deficit reduction I signed into law this past year, this Budget will cut the deficit by $4 trillion over the next decade. This will put the country on a course to a level of deficits below 3 percent of GDP by the end of the decade, and will also allow us to stabilize the Federal debt relative to the size of the economy. To get there, this Budget contains a number of steps to put us on a fiscally sustainable path.

First, this Budget implements the tight discretionary spending caps that I signed into law in the Budget Control Act of 2011. These caps will generate approximately $1 trillion in deficit reduction over the next decade. Building on reductions we already have made. this will result in a cut in discretionary spending of $42 billion since 2010 when higher levels of Federal spending were essential to provide a jumpstart to the economy. Meeting the spending targets in this Budget meant some very difficult choices: reforming, consolidating, or freezing programs where we could; cutting programs that were not effective or essential and even some that were, but are now unaffordable; and precisely targeting our investments. Every department will feel the impact of these reductions as they cut programs or tighten their belts to free up more resources for areas critical to economic growth. And throughout the entire Government, we will continue our efforts to make programs and services work better and cost less: using competition and high standards to get the most from the grants we award; getting rid of excess Federal real estate; and saving billions of dollars by cutting overhead and administrative costs.

Second, this Budget begins the process of implementing my new defense strategy that reconfigures our force to meet the challenges of the coming decade. Over the past 3 years, we have made historic investments in our troops and their capabilities, military families, and veterans. After a decade of war, we are at an inflection point: American troops have left Iraq; we are undergoing a transition in Afghanistan so Afghans can assume more responsibility; and we have debilitated al Qaeda's leadership, putting that terrorist network on the path to defeat.

At the same time, we have to renew our economic strength here at home, which is the foundation of our strength in the world, and that includes putting our fiscal house in order. To ensure that our defense budget is driven by a clear strategy that reflects our national interests, I directed the Secretary of Defense and military leadership to undertake a comprehensive strategic review.

I presented the results of the review, reflecting my guidance and the full support of our Nation's military leadership, at the Pentagon on January 5. There are several key elements to this new strategy. To sustain a global reach, we will strengthen our presence in the Asia Pacific region and continue vigilance in the Middle East. We will invest in critical partnerships and alliances, including NATO, which has demonstrated time and again-most recently in Libya—that it is a force multiplier. Looking past Iraq and Afghanistan to future threats, the military no longer will be sized for large-scale, prolonged stability operations. The Department of Defense will focus modernization on emerging threats and sustaining efforts to get rid of outdated Cold War-era systems so that we can invest in the capabilities we need for the future, including intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance capabilities. My Administration will continue to enhance capabilities related to counterterrorism and countering weapons of mass destruction, and we will also maintain the ability to operate in environments where adversaries try to deny us access. And, we will keep faith with those who serve by giving priority to our wounded warriors, servicemembers' mental health, and the wellbeing of military families.

Adapting our forces to this new strategy will entail investing in high-priority programs, such as unmanned surveillance aircraft and upgraded tactical vehicles. It will mean terminating unnecessary and lower-priority programs such as the C-27 airlift aircraft and a new weather satellite and maintaining programs such as the Joint Strike Fighter at a reduced level. All told, reductions in the growth of defense spending will save $487 billion over the next 10 years. In addition, the end of ourmilitary activities in Iraq and the wind-down of operations in Afghanistan will mean that the country will spend 24 percent less on overseas contingency operations (OCO) this year than it did last year, saving $30 billion. I also am proposing a multi-year cap on OCO spending so that we fully realize the dividends of this change in pol-

Third, I believe that in our country, everyone must shoulder their fair share—especially those who have benefited the most from our economy. In the United States of America, a teacher, a nurse, or a construction worker who earns $50,000 a year should not pay taxes at a higher rate than somebody making $50 million. That is wrong. It is wrong for Warren Buffett's secretary to pay a higher tax rate than Warren Buffett. This is not about class warfare; this is about the Nation's welfare. This is about making fair choices that benefit not just the people who have done fantastically well over the last few decades, but that also benefit the middle class, those fighting to get into the middle class, and the economy as a whole.

In the Budget, I reiterate my opposition to permanently extending the Bush tax cuts for families making more than $250,000 a year and my opposition to a more generous estate tax than we had in 2009 benefiting only the very largest estates. These policies were unfair and unaffordable when they were passed, and they remain so today. I will push for their expiration in the coming year. I also propose to eliminate special tax breaks for oil and gas companies; preferred treatment for the purchase of corporate jets; tax rules that give a larger percentage deduction to the wealthiest two percent than to middle-class families for itemized deductions; and a loophole that allows some of the wealthiest money managers in the country to pay only 15 percent tax on the millions of dollars they earn. And I support tax reform that observes the "Buffett Rule" that no household making more than $1 million annually should pay a smaller share of its income taxes than middle-class families pay.

Fourth, to build on the work we have done to reduce health care costs through the Affordable Care Act. I am proposing more than $360 billion in reforms to Medicare. Medicaid, and other health programs over 10 years. The goal of these reforms is to make these critical programs more effective and efficient, and help make sure our health care system rewards high-quality medicine. What it does not do-and what I will not support—are efforts to turn Medicare into a voucher or Medicaid into a block grant. Doing so would weaken both programs and break the promise that we have made to American seniors, people with disabilities, and low-income families—a promise I am committed to keeping.

Finally, to address other looming, long-term challenges to our fiscal health, I have put forward a wide range of mandatory savings. These include reductions in agricultural subsidies, changes in Federal employee retirement and health benefits, reforms to the unemployment insurance system and the Postal Service, and new efforts to provide a better return to taxpayers from mineral development. Drawn from the plan I presented to the Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction, these mandatory proposals would save $217 billion over the next decade.

Reining in our deficits is not an end in and of itself. It is a necessary step to rebuilding a strong foundation so our economy can grow and create good jobs. That is our ultimate goal. And as we tighten our belts by cutting, consolidating, and reforming programs, we also must invest in the areas that will be critical to giving every American a fair shot at success and creating an economy that is built to last.

That starts with taking action now to strengthen our economy and boost job creation. We need to finish the work we started last year by extending the payroll tax cut and unemployment benefits for the rest of this year. We also need to take additional measures to put more people back to work. That is why I introduced the American Jobs Act last year and why I will continue to put forward many of the ideas it contained, as well as additional measures, to put people back to work by rebuilding our infrastructure, providing businesses tax incentives to invest and hire, and giving States aid to rehire teachers and first responders.

We also know that education and lifelong learning will be critical for anyone trying to compete for the jobs of the future. That is why I will continue to make education a national mission. What one learns will have a big impact on what he or she earns: the unemployment rate for Americans with a college degree or more is only about half the national average, and the incomes of college graduates are twice as high as those without a high school diploma.

When I took office, I set the goal for America to have the highest proportion of college graduates in the world by 2020. To reach that goal, we increased the maximum annual Pell Grant by more than $900 to help nearly 10 million needy students afford a college education. The 2013 Budget continues that commitment and provides the necessary resources to sustain the maximum award of $5,635. In this Budget, I also propose a series of new proposals to help families with the costs of college including making permanent the American Opportunity Tax Credit, a partially refundable tax credit worth up to $10,000 per student over 4 years of college, and rewarding colleges and universities that act responsibly in setting tuition, providing the best value, and serving needy students well.

To help our students graduate with the skills they will need for the jobs of the future, we are continuing our effort to prepare 100,000 science and math teachers over the next decade. To improve our elementary and secondary schools, we are continuing our commitment to the Race to the Top initiative that rewards the most innovative and effective ways to raise standards, recruit and retain good teachers, and raise student achievement. My Budget invests $850 million in this effort, Reining in our deficits is not an end which already has been expanded to and of itself. It is a necessary step to cover early learning and individual building a strong foundation so our school districts.

And to prepare our workers for the jobs of tomorrow, we need to turn our unemployment system into a re-employment system. That includes giving more community colleges the resources they need to become community career centers—places that teach skills that businesses are looking for right now, from data management to high-tech manufacturing.

Once our students and workers gain the skills they need for the jobs of the future, we also need to make sure those jobs end up in America. In today's high-tech, global economy, that means the United States must be the best place in the world to take an idea from the drawing board to the factory floor to the store shelves. In this Budget, we are sustaining our level of investment in non-defense research and development (R&D) even as overall spending declines, thereby keeping us on track to double R&D funding in the key R&D agencies. We are supporting research at the National Institutes of Health that will accelerate the translation of new discoveries in biomedical science into new therapies and cures, along with initiatives at the Food and Drug Administration that will speed the approval of new medicines. We make important investments in the science and research needed to tackle the most important environmental challenges of our time, and we are investing in fields as varied as cyber-security, nano-technology, and advanced manufacturing. This Budget also puts an emphasis on the basic research that leads to the breakthroughs of tomorrow, which increasingly is no longer being conducted by the private sector, as well as helping inventors bring their innovations from laboratory to market.

This Budget reflects the importance of safeguarding our environment while strengthening our economy. We do not have to choose between having clean air and clean water and growing the economy. By conserving iconic American landscapes, restoring significant ecosystems from the Everglades to the Great Lakes, and achieving measurable improvements in water and air quality, we are working with communities to protect the natural resources that serve as the engines of their local economies.

Moreover, this Budget continues my Administration's commitment to developing America's diverse, clean sources of energy. The Budget eliminates unwarranted tax breaks for oil companies, while extending key tax incentives to spur investment in clean energy manufacturing and renewable energy production. The Budget also invests in R&D to catalyze the next generation of clean energy technologies. These investments will help us achieve our goal of doubling the share of electricity from clean energy sources by 2035. By promoting American leadership in advanced vehicle manufacturing, including funding to encourage greater use of natural gas in the transportation sector, the Budget will help us reach our goal of reducing oil imports by one-third by 2025 and position the United States to become the first country to have one million electric vehicles on the road by 2015. We also are working to decrease the amount of energy used by commercial and industrial buildings by 20 percent to complement our ongoing efforts to improving the efficiency of the residential sector. And we will work with the private sector, utilities, and States to increase the energy productivity of American industries while investing in the innovative processes and materials that can dramatically reduce energy use.

It is also time for government to do its part to help make it easier for entrepreneurs, inventors, and workers to grow their businesses and thrive in the global economy. I am calling on Congress to immediately begin work on corporate tax reform that will close loopholes, lower the overall rate, encourage investment here at home, simplify taxes for America's small businesses, and not add a dime to the deficit. Moreover, to further assist these companies, we need a comprehensive reorganization of the parts of the Federal Government that help businesses grow and sell their products abroad. If given consolidation authority—which Presidents had for most of the 20th century—I will propose to consolidate six agencies into one Department, saving money, and making it easier for all companies—especially small businesses—get the help they need to thrive in the world economy.

Finally, this Budget advances the national security interests of the United States, including the security of the American people, the prosperity and trade that creates American jobs, and support for universal values around the world. It increases funding for the diplomatic efforts that strengthen the alliances and partnerships that improve international cooperation in meeting shared challenges, open new markets to American exports, and promote development. It invests in the intelligence and homeland security capabilities to detect, prevent, and defend against terrorist attacks against our country.

As we implement our new defense strategy, my Administration will invest in the systems and capabilities we need so that our Armed Forces are configured to meet the challenges of the coming decade. We will continue to invest in improving global health and food security so that we address the root causes of conflict and security threats. And we will keep faith with our men and women in uniform, their families, and veterans who have served their Nation.

These proposals will take us a long way towards strengthening the middle class and giving families the sense of security they have been missing for too long. But in the end, building an economy that works for everyone will require all of us to take responsibility. Parents will need to take greater responsibility for their children's education. Homeowners will have to take more responsibility when it comes to buying a house or taking out a loan. Businesses will have to take responsibility for doing right by their workers and our country. And those of us in public service will need to keep finding ways to make government more efficient and more effective.

Understanding and honoring the obligations we have to ourselves and each other is what has made this country great. We look out for each other, pull together, and do our part. But Americans also deserve to know that their hard work will be rewarded.

This Budget is a step in the right direction. And I hope it will help serve as a roadmap for how we can grow the economy, create jobs, and give Americans everywhere the security they deserve.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Ms. MIKULSKI):

S. 2102. A bill to provide the authority to monitor and defend against cyber threats, to improve the sharing of cybersecurity information, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act of 2012, which will improve the sharing of cyber threat and cybersecurity information in the private sector and with the federal government.

We all know that the cyber threat is perhaps the number one threat to our Nation at this time. It is significant that just last month, at the Senate Intelligence Committee's hearing on Worldwide Threats, the U.S. Intelligence Community's official statement equated cyber threats to terrorism and proliferation as the highest priority threats to our security.

An unclassified report by the Intelligence Community made public in November 2011 said cyber intrusions against U.S. companies cost untold billions of dollars annually and named China and Russia as aggressive and persistent cyber thieves.

One of the main obstacles to better U.S. cybersecurity is that a combination of existing law, the threat of litigation, and standard business practices prevent or deter the private sector from sharing information about the cyber threats they face and the losses of information and money they suffer.

We know there have been multi-million dollar cyber thefts from the Royal Bank of Scotland, Citibank, and other financial institutions. But companies like these are reticent about making public these cyber attacks because that could further damage their bottom line.

Even cyber security companies like RSA and national security agencies like the Federal Bureau of Investigation fall victim to malicious cyber activity, but the lessons learned from those attacks are generally not shared with others that face the same threat.

Finally, cyber criminals violate our privacy by hacking into the computers in our homes. They steal passwords for our bank accounts, access our private information, and turn our computers into launching points for further attacks.

These cyber intrusions affect Americans in substantial and real ways, and the threat is only growing. After reviewing the intelligence for many years on the cyber threat, it is clear to me that foreign nations and non-state actors are already causing major damage to our economy. I am also convinced that these bad actors are capable of causing potentially catastrophic loss of life and economic damage by opening a dam, crashing our financial system, or bringing down the electric grid.

For these reasons, I am very pleased that Majority Leader Reid is bringing comprehensive cybersecurity legislation to the Senate Floor after the President's Day Recess.

For 2 years, Leader REID has worked with the Chairmen and Ranking Members of all the committees of jurisdiction on cybersecurity to produce this legislation, and Senators ROCKE-FELLER, COLLINS, LIEBERMAN and SNOWE in particular are to be commended for their extensive efforts in this area.

As the Chairman of the Intelligence Committee, I am particularly interested in legislation to address the need for better information sharing.

The intelligence committees in the Senate and House have been working to improve information sharing on counterterrorism since the terrorist attacks of September 11. The urgency in the cyber arena is just as important, but is, if anything, more difficult, as we must coordinate and protect the sharing of information that will go to a far greater number of entities, both public and private.

Unfortunately, the private sector entities that operate the critical networks that control financial markets, power plants, dams, and communications are prevented in very real ways from sharing information to warn each other of cyber threats. Barriers to such sharing include perceived financial and reputational risks; legal barriers in electronic surveillance laws; liability concerns that arise from potential lawsuits; and lack of one Federal agency in charge of cyber information sharing.

The bill I am introducing today will allow for more information sharing by providing clear authority to share cyber threat information and by reducing legal barriers to private entities ability to work with each other and with the federal government to share cybersecurity information, in a manner that upholds privacy and civil liberties.

Participation in information sharing in this bill would be voluntary for companies, but any company that does share threat information will be protected for doing so, and the information would be subject to strict privacy controls.

I also want to be very clear that this bill does not give law enforcement or the Intelligence Community any new authorities for conducting surveillance.

In an op-ed published in the Wall Street Journal on January 27, 2012, former Director of National Intelligence Mike McConnell, former Secretary of Homeland Security Michael Chertoff, and former Deputy Secretary of Defense Bill Lynn said that the Intelligence Community needs to make cyber threat information available to other parts of the government and to commercial entities to maximize our cyber defenses.

The Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act of 2012 would do just that.

Specifically, this legislation requires the Federal government to designate a single focal point for cybersecurity information sharing. The bill refers to this focal point as a "Cybersecurity Exchange" because with cybersecurity, it's not enough for entities to operate as "centers" or "task forces" that only receive information; they must also serve as a hub for appropriately distributing and exchanging cyber threat information. The bill also requires the government to reduce bureaucratic obstacles to sharing so that the government can be a more effective partner for the private sector.

The bill establishes procedures for the government to share classified cybersecurity threat information with certified private sector entities. Generally, only government contractors can receive a security clearance, but other companies, such as Internet Service Providers, need to receive classified threat information in order to protect against attacks. This bill makes them eligible to receive security clearances for that purpose. Those companies would be under the same restrictions to protect classified information as the government.

The bill removes legal and policy barriers to information sharing by affirmatively authorizing private sector entities to monitor and defend their own networks and to share cyber information.

By creating a robust privacy compliance regime to ensure that information in the Federal government's hands is protected. Just as the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, the Privacy Act, and many other statutes place conditions on the government's ability to use information it receives, this bill would limit the government's ability to use private sector cyber information for approved cybersecurity purposes only.

And also by providing appropriate liability protections for companies that share cyber information under the terms of the bill. A company that shares threat information with a cybersecurity exchange or with other private sector entities is protected under this bill from litigation for having done so. Many companies have told us that the threat of litigation deters them from sharing details about cyber attacks they have faced. In order to assist other companies and the government to protect against those attacks in the future, that information needs to be shared and acted upon.

I look forward to the consideration of this bill and the rest of the cyber legislative package that will be taken up by the Senate soon.

The Department of the Interior, which endorsed this legislation, "clearly said the tsunami demonstrates the risk for the tribe and its citizens, and the need to move housing and infrastructure inland."

> Now, with the 1-year anniversary of this tragedy less than 1 month away, we have finally done our job. With the passage of this bill tonight, the Quileute Tribe can finally begin to move out of the flood zone. I thank Congressman NORM DICKS for his help in making this a reality.

> The Quileute Tribe has been struggling with the natural perils of this land since their reservation was created in 1889. The river that runs through the reservation has been moving constantly over the last century, causing more erosion and flooding problems. The one road that connects the lower village to the higher ground is often flooded, making it even more challenging to deal with this particular area in case of a tsunami.

> The Quileute struggle to move out of the flood zone has gone on for many years, but tonight, with the passage of this legislation, the Quileute Tribe can now move to higher grounds and a safer means to provide for their members. This is an important victory to give the Quileute Tribe and those on the reservation peace of mind.

> I thank Senator Barrasso and Senator Akaka for helping this legislation move out of the Indian Affairs Committee and Senator BINGAMAN and Senator Murkowski for helping it move out of the ENR Committee. To the tribal chairs—Bonita Cleveland and now Tony Foster-thank you for coming to Washington, DC, and explaining how important this legislation is. I also thank the National Park Service and the National Park Service Director. Thank you for your help in getting this legislation passed. I also thank Senator Murray for her cosponsorship of this important legislation.

> It is important in times such as these that Congress does act, that we break gridlock and move forward. For the Quileute Tribe—a tribe that gained much national notoriety in a recent movie series—what is really important is not that notoriety but the fact that today people have come together to help them move to safer grounds.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. MARSHA BLACKBURN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, February 13, 2012

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, whether you find yourself sitting on the Dock of the Bay, with Sweet Caroline, Takin' It to the Streets, or talking to the Son of a Preacher Man, chances are you've heard the soulful and intense blasts of the Memphis Horns. Music is the very rhythm of our culture, and in the Tennessee 7th, we champion the sounds and cultural treasures of our community. I rise today to honor one great treasure: The Memphis Horns.

Each from simple but musically enriched beginnings, Wayne Jackson and Andrew Love were more than the trumpet and the saxophone behind the Memphis Horns. Playing at the beginning for the greats: Elvis, Otis Redding, Aretha Franklin, the Horns made a name for themselves as the blended tones of Memphis. From the 1960s on, the Horns played for anyone who needed that unique shot of Memphis soul. Including The Doobie Brothers, Peter Gabriel, U2, Jimmy Buffett, B.B. King, and Willie Nelson, The Memphis Horns are the very notes of the south.

When they first came together to form their sound, Love and Jackson wondered what they would do each year when the tour stopped. As they released their final project, the Memphis Horns need never to worry what they will do next. As members of the Musicians' Hall of Fame winner, their place is noted in America's history. As one of the great sounds of Memphis, their place is secure in America's hearts. Their legacy is a permanent part of our musical soul and their unique sound and uplifting notes will be trumpeted for a great long while. I ask my colleagues to join with me and celebrate the quintessential Memphis Horns as they receive the Lifetime Achievement Award.

RECOGNIZING THE IMPORTANCE OF DIABETES AWARENESS AND PREVENTION

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES  $Monday,\ February\ 13,\ 2012$

Ms. BUERKLE. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to call attention to type I diabetes, a disease that is plaguing the citizens of our great Nation. This disease strikes not only our youths, but the ailment is affecting much more of our population. In the last 30 years, the number of people known to have diabetes in the United States has quadrupled to more than 26 million. Another 7 million Americans are estimated to have undiagnosed diabetes.

Bringing awareness to type I diabetes not only combats a devastating illness, but it also saves the country money. Accounting for hundreds of billions of dollars in healthcare expenses, diabetes is also responsible for almost a third of all Medicare costs.

Mr. Speaker, type I diabetes is a problem this country cannot ignore. Today, I ask my colleagues and all Americans to join me in increasing diabetes awareness in our communities and throughout the Nation.

RECOGNIZING THE LIFE OF WHITNEY HOUSTON

HON, LAURA RICHARDSON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, February 13, 2012

Ms. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sadness and heavy heart that I rise today to pay tribute to Whitney Houston, a woman whose extraordinary voice touched the heart of America.

Ms. Houston died on Saturday, February 11, 2012 in Beverly Hills. She was 48 years old.

Ms. Houston's musical career began in 1985, when her debut album, Whitney Houston, was released and she became an instant musical sensation. She produced some of the most memorable music of her generation, including her signature hit, "I Will Always Love You."

Whitney Houston was one of the biggest names in the music industry and her accomplishments as a singer are many. In 2009, the Guinness World Records cited her as the most-awarded female act of all time. Her awards include two Emmy Awards, six Grammy Awards, 30 Billboard Music Awards, and 22 American Music Awards, among a total of 415 career awards in her lifetime. Houston was also one of the world's best-selling music artists, having sold over 200 million albums and singles worldwide.

She will always be remembered as one of the greatest voices who ever graced the Earth. To have heard the voice of Whitney Houston was to have witnessed singing perfection. My heart goes out to her daughter, Bobbi Kristina, and all of her family and friends who are mourning the loss of this remarkable woman.

Mr. Speaker, where do broken hearts go? Millions of hearts broke at the news that with her passing, we lost one of the greatest gifts of all; the pure joy we felt whenever Whitney sang one of those songs that made us get up and want to dance with somebody.

Yes, we almost had it all. Whitney Houston left us too soon, but her remarkable voice will live in our hearts as one moment in time we will never forget.

I request a moment of silence in her honor and memory.

HON. MADELEINE Z. BORDALLO

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, February 13, 2012

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Hayato "Jack" Yoshino for his years of leadership and contributions to the people of Guam as the President of P.H.R. Ken Asset Management Inc. (Ken Corporation) on Guam.

Mr. Yoshino graduated from Hitotsubashi University of Japan, and, in 1980, began his career at one of Japan's largest trading companies. He later ventured into the real estate profession where he made substantial investments in hotels, offices, and housing in the United States mainland. He joined Ken Corporation in 2002 and moved to Guam where he worked to familiarize himself with the island's unique real estate and tourism markets.

Four years later, Mr. Yoshino was appointed President of Ken Corporation and was entrusted with overseeing several premier hotel brands on Guam and Saipan, including the Hilton Guam Resort & Spa, Hyatt Regency Guam, Hotel Nikko Guam, Pacific Islands Club Guam, Sheraton Laguna Guam Resort, Country Club of the Pacific in Guam, and Aqua Resort Club in Saipan. During his tenure as president, Mr. Yoshino implemented major branding initiatives which introduced hotel guests and tourists to the island's culture, cuisine, and people. And in the midst of economic uncertainty following the March 2011 earthquakes and tsunamis in Japan, Mr. Yoshino worked to sustain the operations at each of the corporation's properties.

Mr. Yoshino devoted his time and expertise to developing Guam's visitor industry and local community. In 2009, Mr. Yoshino became a member of the Guam Visitors Bureau Board of Directors and was elected chairman of the Existing Markets Committee. In this capacity, he worked closely with industry leaders to promote Guam as a world-class destination for visitors traveling from the Philippines, North America, Micronesia, and Taiwan. He is an active member of the Guam Chamber of Commerce, the Chinese Chamber of Commerce, and the SKAL Club of Guam, an international association of tourism professionals. Among other contributions to our community, Mr. Yoshino took an interest in public safety and donated equipment to the Guam Police Department.

I join our community in recognizing Mr. Yoshino for his leadership, his service to our community, and for his work in promoting our island's unique history and culture. On behalf of the people of Guam, I extend my heartfelt appreciation for Mr. Yoshino's generosity, and I wish him the best in his future endeavors.

RECOGNIZING THE INNOVATION AND HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE BOEING 787 DREAMLINER

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, February 13, 2012

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the production and delivery of the first Boeing 787 Dreamliner airplanes and to congratulate everyone at The Boeing Company on this milestone in aviation history.

The roots of today's Boeing Company were five companies founded by visionaries whose names are forever etched in the history of aviation. William Boeing (The Boeing Airplane Co.), Donald Douglas (Douglas Aircraft Co.), James McDonnell (McDonnell Aircraft Corp.), James "Dutch" Kindelberger (North American Aviation), and Howard Hughes, Jr. (Hughes Aircraft) pioneered aviation design, provided our nation with a critical component of military superiority and ushered in the modern era of air travel.

The Boeing 787 Dreamliner builds on the legacy and combined knowledge derived from those early pioneers but takes innovation to new levels. The Dreamliner departs from traditional metal construction with greater use of composite materials than any previous aircraft. Improvements in engine technologies take fuel efficiencies a step further to give the Dreamliner both the range and speed of larger aircraft.

The Dreamliner has used advanced technologies to improve the flying experience beyond exterior design and engine performance. Higher cabin humidity levels, larger passenger windows and monitoring systems that coordinate with land-based computers are a few other examples of Dreamliner innovations.

With final assembly in Boeing's Washington plant, Dreamliner subassembly occurs in locations throughout the United States and across the globe. Named an "Aircraft of Legend," the Dreamliner is an example of American innovation and technological leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the debut of the Boeing 787 Dreamliner and in congratulating everyone at Boeing and their subcontractors who have been involved in its design, construction and delivery.

HONORING THE GREATER ROCH-ESTER AREA PARTNERSHIP FOR THE ELDERLY ON ITS TWEN-TIETH ANNIVERSARY

HON. TOM REED

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, February 13, 2012

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Greater Rochester Area Partnership for the Elderly. For twenty years, this community organization has directly and indirectly enhanced and enriched the lives of senior citizens in Western New York State. It brings together professionals, volunteers, and students who work with the aged in order to improve to ensure contemporary education, quality and implementation of services and support provided to senior citizens. The result is a better life for senior citizens. We celebrate the milestone of twenty years of effective service and advocacy and look forward to many more. It is with great pride that we recognize the achievements of the Greater Rochester Area Partnership for the Elderly and the dedicated professionals who advance the cause of quality of life for our senior citizens.

HONORING THE MUSICAL ACCOM-PLISHMENTS OF THE POSSUM

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 13, 2012

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, music is in the very fiber of our being, and we are proud to continually showcase the sounds that call Tennessee "home." From the serious songs of the darkest moments to the lighthearted tunes of the breeze, George Jones is one of the staples of country music. I rise today to celebrate the many chart-topping hits, the award-winning duets, and the musical accomplishments of The Possum.

It seems as if each of the past several decades have been marked by a George Jones hit. In the 1950s, it was Billboard's No. 4 "Why Baby Why." In the '60s, his singles consistently hit the Top 10. 1973 brought us the Number 1 single "We're Gonna Hold On." 1980 brought music fans what many call one of greatest country records of all time, "He Stopped Loving Her Today." He rounded out the 20th century with the powerful ballad "Choices," reminding us all of the humanity and redemption found in community. With 13 Number 1 hits, 30 Top 5s, the prized duet partner of James Taylor, Merle Haggard, Ray Charles, Randy Travis, Alan Jackson, and Garth Brooks, Jones's unique country music sound is beloved the world over.

Inducted into the Country Music Hall of fame in 1992, chosen as a Kennedy Center Honors recipient in 2008, and presented with the Lifetime Achievement Award in 2012, George Jones certainly has the laurels of a seasoned country music star. But you won't find him resting on those, nor will you hear his countless fans telling others of his awards. His fans and his peers speak of his fidelity to the music, to the sound, to the hard work of finding and singing the right notes of the soul.

RECOGNIZING THE IMPORTANCE OF MARRIAGE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES  $Monday,\ February\ 13,\ 2012$

Ms. BUERKLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize National Marriage Week 2012. As our country faces challenging times, the value of a strong family is undeniable. Marriage is the foundation of family and economic prosperity in our nation. National Marriage Week reminds us of the importance of maintaining marriage as a sacred union. As the definition of marriage continues to be debated, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in protecting the institution of traditional marriage as the centerpiece of the family.

IN HONOR OF DON CORNELIUS LEGENDARY CREATOR AND HOST OF "SOUL TRAIN"

HON. LAURA RICHARDSON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 13, 2012

Ms. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor, remember and celebrate the life of Don Cornelius, the legendary creator and host of "Soul Train," the ground-breaking television program that helped define my generation and revolutionized the way Americans—and millions of others around the world—learned, experienced, and loved soul music. Don Cornelius passed away on February 2, at the age of 75.

"Soul Train," which he hosted from 1971 to 1993, exposed African American recording artists and groups to national audiences and boosted the reach and popularity of every artist who appeared on the show. The list reads like a who's who of musical giants: Michael Jackson and the Jackson 5; James Brown, the "Godfather of Soul," Aretha Franklin, Gladys Knight and the Pips; the Temptations, the Supremes, Earth, Wind, and Fire; Marvin Gaye; Al Green; Chaka Khan, and the mighty, mighty Dells.

Don Cornelius joined the Marines and was stationed in South Korea during the height of the Cold War. He later became a television journalist reporting on civil rights and urban issues. This background prepared him to conceive and make real "Soul Train," which succeeded in using the love of good music to help bridge racial and social divisions in our country.

As one of the millions of young girls who tuned in every week to "Soul Train" to sing and dance along with that week's musical guests, I want to express my heartfelt thanks to Don Cornelius for the sheer joy and happiness he brought to so many people and for "Soul Train" 's positive impact in bringing people of diverse backgrounds together around their shared love of good music and dance.

We will always remember "Soul Train," the iconic television show best known for its flamboyant colors, striking fashion, great music, revolutionary dance moves, and the famous "Soul Train Line."

Don Cornelius lived a consequential life. He made a difference. And for that, I conclude by wishing him, as he always concluded each "Soul Train" show by wishing us, as always, "love, peace and soul!"
