(a) APPLICATION.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection shall establish an application process under which a person who lives or does business in a State may, with respect to an area identified by the person in such State that has not been designated by the Bureau as a rural area for purposes of a Federal consumer financial law (as defined under section 1002 of the Consumer Financial Protection Act of 2010), apply for such area to be so designated.

(b) EVALUATION CRITERIA.—When evaluating an application submitted under subsection (a), the Bureau shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) Criteria used by the Director of the Bureau of the Census for classifying geographical areas as rural or urban.

(2) Criteria used by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to designate counties as metropolitan or micropolitan or neither.

(3) Criteria used by the Secretary of Agriculture to determine property eligibility for rural development programs.

(4) The Department of Agriculture rural-urban commuting area codes.

(5) A written opinion provided by the State's bank supervisor, as defined under section 3(r) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(r)).

(6) Population density.

(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—If, at any time prior to the submission of an application under subsection (a), the area subject to review has been designated as nonrural by any Federal agency described under subsection (b) using any of the criteria described under subsection (b), the Bureau shall not be required to consider such designation in its evaluation.

(d) PUBLIC COMMENT PERIOD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after receiving an application submitted under subsection (a), the Bureau shall—

(A) publish such application in the Federal Register; and

(B) make such application available for public comment for not fewer than 90 days.

(2) LIMITATION ON ADDITIONAL APPLICATIONS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to require the Bureau, during the public comment period with respect to an application submitted under subsection (a), to accept an additional application with respect to the area that is the subject of the initial application.

(e) DECISION ON DESIGNATION.—Not later than 90 days after the end of the public comment period under subsection (d)(1) for an application, the Bureau shall—

(1) grant or deny such application, in whole or in part; and

(2) publish such grant or denial in the Federal Register, along with an explanation of what factors the Bureau relied on in making such determination.

(f) SUBSEQUENT APPLICATIONS.—A decision by the Bureau under subsection (e) to deny an application for an area to be designated as a rural area shall not preclude the Bureau from accepting a subsequent application submitted under subsection (a) for such area to be so designated, so long as such subsequent application is made after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date that the Bureau denies the application under subsection (e).

(g) SUNSET.—This section shall cease to have any force or effect after the end of the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 89003. OPERATIONS IN RURAL AREAS.

The Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.) is amended—

(1) in section 129C(b)(2)(E)(iv)(I), by striking ''predominantly''; and

(2) in section 129D(c)(1), by striking ''predominantly''.

And the House agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 22), to authorize funds for Federal-aid highways, highway safety programs, and transit programs, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House amendment struck out that matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment that is a substitute for the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the House amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of the Conference

H.R. 22, Fixing America's Surface Transportation Act (FAST Act) authorizes federal surface transportation programs through fiscal year (FY) 2020. The FAST Act improves our Nation's infrastructure, reforms federal surface transportation programs, refocuses those programs on addressing national priorities, and encourages innovation to make the surface transportation system safer and more efficient.

DIVISION A—SURFACE TRANSPORTATION

TITLE I—FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAYS

Title I of the FAST Act reauthorizes the Federal-aid Highway and highway safety construction programs through FY 2020, establishes new programs to promote the efficient movement of freight and support large-scale projects of national or regional significance, and makes other policy changes and reforms.

Refocuses on National Priorities

The FAST Act focuses on the importance of goods movement to the U.S. economy by establishing a new formula program for highway freight projects, and emphasizes the need to address large-scale projects of national or regional importance by establishing a new competitive grant program, the Nationally Significant Freight and Highway Projects (NSFHP) program. Both programs provide limited eligibility for intermodal and freight rail projects. The Act also modifies the National Highway Freight Network created by the Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century Act (MAP–21), and requires the redesignation of the Network every five years to reflect changes in freight flows, including emerging freight corridors and critical commerce corridors.

The NSFHP program will facilitate the construction of infrastructure projects that are difficult to complete solely using existing federal, state, local, and private funds. Among other purposes, projects supported by this program will reduce the impact of congestion, generate national and regional economic benefits, and facilitate the efficient movement of freight. This program emphasizes the importance of addressing transportation impediments, which significantly slow interstate commerce. Across the country there are significant bottlenecks that could benefit from this program, which would provide substantial grant funding for infrastructure projects.

To address deficient bridges, the FAST Act continues the set-aside for off-system bridges, and expands funding available for on-system bridges located off the National Highway System.

Increases Flexibility

The FAST Act converts the Surface Transportation Program (STP) to a block grant program, maximizing the flexibility of STP for states and local governments. It also increases the amount of STP funding that is distributed to local governments from 50 percent to 55 percent over the life of the bill. The Act provides states and local governments with increased flexibility by rolling the Transportation Alternatives Program into STP, and allowing 50 percent of certain transportation alternatives funding suballocated to local areas to be used on any STP-eligible project.

The FAST Act expands eligibility for the Transportation Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act (TIFIA) program by allowing states to use National Highway Performance Program, STP block grant, and NSFHP funds to pay the subsidy and administrative costs associated with providing TIFIA credit assistance.

Streamlines Reviews, Reduces Bureaucracy, & Increases Transparency

The FAST Act streamlines the environmental review and permitting process to accelerate project approvals. The Act includes important reforms to align environmental reviews for historic properties. In addition, it establishes a new pilot program to allow up to five states to substitute their own environmental laws and regulations for the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) if the state's laws and regulations are at least as stringent as NEPA. The Act also requires an assessment of previous efforts to accelerate the environmental review process, as well as recommendations on additional means of accelerating the project delivery process in a responsible manner.

The FAST Act increases the transparency of the Federal-aid Highway Program by requiring Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) to provide project-level information to Congress and the public. This information permits monitoring of projects for cost overruns and assists Congress in understanding how states are using their Federal-aid Highway funds.

Promotes Innovative Technologies

The FAST Act provides for the deployment of transportation technologies and congestion management tools that support an efficient and safe surface transportation system. It encourages the installation of vehicle-to-infrastructure equipment to reduce congestion and improve safety.

Focus on Highway Safety

The FAST Act increases the focus on roadway safety infrastructure and on the safety needs of pedestrians. In addition, there is an increase in funding to improve the safety of railway-highway grade crossings.

Additional Provisions

The FAST Act removes a requirement which would have required states to collect superfluous data on unpaved and gravel roads. It also bans the use of funding for automated traffic enforcement systems.

Additional Explanatory Language

The conferees intend that a wide range of freight projects be eligible under the new formula and competitive grant programs, including projects that eliminate freight bottlenecks, use new technologies to improve the efficiency of freight movement, and modify highways to provide additional freight capacity, including by physically separating passenger vehicles from commercial trucks.

The conference report expands the flexibility for the use of Congestion Mitigation and Air Quality Improvement Program (CMAQ) funds for rural states and for the use of CMAQ funds for port-related freight operations and vehicle-infrastructure communications equipment.

The conferees intend that none of the amendments made by section 1308 affect the authority of the U.S. Department of Justice related to an approved state's implementation of NEPA that existed prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

Pursuant to section 1403 of the conference report, conferees intend that additional monies deposited into the Highway Trust Fund by subsequent Acts shall automatically be made available for obligation to states, without further action by Congress. These adjustments to contract authority, which will be distributed among authorized programs in the same manner as set forth in the FAST Act, will ensure that any funding that flows into the Highway Trust Fund can immediately be used to fund necessary surface transportation investments.

TITLE II—INNOVATIVE PROJECT FINANCE

Title II of the FAST Act makes additional modifications to improve access to the TIFIA program and expand leveraging opportunities. Specifically, it updates the TIFIA program to enable it to be better utilized by rural areas and more accessible for small projects. This is accomplished by using the leveraging ability of TIFIA to support state infrastructure banks and allowing the U.S. Department of Transportation (USDOT) to set-aside TIFIA funding in order to replace the fees typically collected from TIFIA borrowers to pay for independent financial analysis and outside counsel for rural projects.

The conference report also directs USDOT to establish a streamlined application process for use by an eligible applicant under certain circumstances. It also makes transit-oriented development projects eligible to apply for TIFIA loans and reinstates the ability of a state to capitalize their state infrastructure bank with their federal-aid highway funds for fiscal years 2016 through 2020.

Lastly, the conference report codifies an existing USDOT practice of allowing costs related to highway projects delivered by a public-private partnership that uses an advance construction authorization coupled with the availability payment concession model to be eligible for federal-aid reimbursement.

TITLE III—PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

Title III of the FAST Act reauthorizes the programs of the Federal Transit Administration (FTA) through FY 2020 and includes a number of reforms to improve mobility, streamline capital project construction and acquisition, and increase the safety of public transportation systems across the country.

Invests in Public Transportation

The FAST Act provides stable, robust funding for FTA's state and local partners. The five years of predictable formula funding provided by this Act will enable recipients to better manage their long-term capital assets and address the backlog of state of good repair needs. It also includes funding for new competitive grant programs for buses and bus facilities, innovative transportation coordination, frontline workforce training, and public transportation research activities. Overall, the investments made by this Act will promote greater mobility and access to public transportation services throughout the Nation.

Improves Safety

The FAST Act clarifies FTA's safety authority with respect to the oversight of, and responsibilities for, the safe operation of rail fixed guideway public transportation systems. It also requires the Secretary of Transportation (Secretary) to undertake a review of safety standards and protocols and evaluate the need to establish federal minimum public transportation safety standards. Finally, the Act requires the Secretary to promote workforce safety through a rulemaking process.

Promotes Wise Investments

The FAST Act includes a number of reforms to the rolling stock procurement process in an effort to facilitate more cost-effective investments by public transportation agencies. The conferees are aware that one of the biggest challenges to capital asset acquisition, particularly for small and rural public transportation providers, is the high purchasing costs attributable to the relatively small size of the procurement. The Act addresses current purchasing power issues for smaller public transportation providers by supporting cooperative procurements and leasing.

Additional Explanatory Language

The conference report includes language clarifying the program of interrelated projects under the Capital Investment Grant program. The conferees intend to ensure that project sponsors have the option to seek funding for a program that blends new fixed guideway capital projects, core capacity improvement projects, and small start projects as well as a program of projects that are only new fixed guideway capital projects, core capacity improvement projects, or small start projects.

The conferees note the ongoing efforts of the USDOT in coordination with the U.S. Department of Treasury to advance the Build America Investment Initiative (Initiative). This Initiative is intended to increase infrastructure investment and economic growth by engaging with state and local governments and private sector investors to encourage collaboration, expand the market for public-private partnerships and put federal credit programs to greater use. The conferees encourage the USDOT to utilize all available tools, including the National Surface Transportation and Innovative Finance Bureau and the Expedited Project Delivery for Capital Investment Grants Pilot Program established in section 3005(b) for public transportation infrastructure projects.

Section 3005(b) establishes a program for the expedited project delivery of projects utilizing public-private partnerships. The program streamlines the project delivery process for up to eight grants for new fixed guideway capital projects, core capacity improvement projects, or small start projects. The conferees seek to expedite projects that have a federal interest of less than 25 percent. The conferees intend state and local governments, as well as private investors to complete their due diligence for a project prior to their agreement to commit to the project. This pilot program maintains the Secretary's discretion to determine that the eligible project is a part of an approved transportation plan; that the applicant has the legal, financial, and technical capacity to carry out the project; that the project will be supported by a public-private partnership; that the project is supported by an acceptable degree of local financial commitment; and that the project will be operated by existing public transportation providers. The conferees do not intend for public-private partnerships to be a means to privatization, rather the pilot program is intended to ensure that the FTA has all of the tools necessary to allow public transportation infrastructure projects to more effectively leverage public dollars and encourage private investment through an innovative expedited project delivery method.

The conferees expect that all projects receiving funding through this expedited process enter into revenue service. Therefore, the conference report includes a provision specifying that an applicant must repay all federal funds awarded for the project from all federal funding sources, for all eligible project activities, facilities, and equipment, plus interest and penalty charges allowed by law if a project is not completed. This provision is intended to ensure that all federal interest is protected and returned plus interest if a public-private partnership fails to deliver a project.

Section 3005(b) requires the Secretary to deliver an annual report on expedited project delivery for capital grants. As with full funding grant agreements under section 5309, this pilot program requires each recipient to conduct a before and after study report, with an additional description and analysis of predicted and actual benefits and costs of the innovative project delivery and financing methods.

The conference report includes a provision to promote the local coordination of all transportation services in an area. The purpose of this provision is to ensure that all transportation providers receiving federal assistance coordinate the provision of service to improve mobility for the transportation disadvantaged, achieve service efficiencies, and reduce or eliminate the duplication of transportation services. Section 3006(b) establishes the ''Pilot Program for Innovative Coordinated Access and Mobility'' to provide grants for innovative projects that improve the coordination of transportation services and non-emergency medical transportation, including the deployment of technology. In section 3006(c), the conferees direct the members of the Interagency Transportation Coordinating Council on Access and Mobility (Council) to undertake action to improve local coordination, establish a cost-sharing policy, provide recommendations to Congress on eliminating federal barriers to local coordination, and address recommendations made previously to the Council by the Government Accountability Office (GAO) for member federal agencies.

Section 3011 of the conference report includes a provision to allow rolling stock manufacturers that procure iron and steel produced in the United States, as defined in 49 CFR 661.5(b), to include the cost of that iron and steel in the domestic content calculation made pursuant to section 5323(j)(2)(C), when such iron or steel is used in rolling stock frames and car shells. The conferees intend for this provision to apply to rolling stock frames or car shells, regardless of where they are produced, provided the iron or steel is produced in the United States.

To increase accountability, section 3011 requires the Secretary, upon denial of a Buy America waiver, to issue a written certification that the item is produced in the United States in a sufficient and reasonably available amount, the item is of satisfactory quality, and includes a list of known manufacturers in the United States from which the item can be obtained. This section subsequently requires the Secretary to disclose any waiver denial and subsequent written certification on the website of the USDOT.

The conference report includes a definition of a small purchase to mean a purchase of not more than $150,000 for the application of Buy America requirements in section 5323(j).

Section 3013 provides the Secretary with increased authority to assist public transportation systems with severe safety needs. MAP–21 granted the Secretary permission to take enforcement actions against recipients that are noncompliant with federal transit safety law. The conferees expect the Secretary to utilize this authority to issue directives, require more frequent oversight, impose more frequent reporting requirements, require that formula grant funds be spent to correct safety deficiencies before funds are spent on other projects, withdraw funds from a recipient, and provide direct safety oversight when deemed necessary. In addition, the conferees intend to provide clarification that the FTA's authority extends to each of the states in which a multistate fixed guideway public transportation system operates.

Section 3017 amends FTA's Buses and Bus Facilities grant program to reflect a number of changes. This section allows recipients in a state to pool formula funds to accommodate larger scale procurements. Subsection (b) reinstitutes a competitive grant bus program to address the capital investment needs of public transportation systems across the country. This competitive grant program includes a 10 percent rural set-aside and a limitation that not more than 10 percent of all grant amounts be awarded to a single grantee. States may also submit a statewide application for bus needs to allow the state, rather than the federal government to distribute competitively awarded grant funds.

The conference report also incorporates grants for low or no emission buses and bus facilities, previously included in the research program, into the competitive bus program. The conferees note that these grants are appropriately situated in the bus program and have included language to ensure that any vehicles or facilities financed under this program are ready for full integration into a public transportation system. Additionally, the new low or no emissions buses and bus facilities grant program includes project eligibility for rehabilitating or improving existing public transportation facilities to accommodate low or no emission vehicles to account for such things as retrofitting to include charging stations.

The conferees are aware that one of the biggest challenges to capital asset acquisition, particularly for small and rural public transportation providers, is the high purchasing costs attributable to the relatively small size of the procurement. The conferees intend to address current purchasing power issues for smaller public transportation providers in a variety of ways. First, the conference report includes a provision allowing multiple states and providers to purchase capital assets through cooperative procurements. These procurements allow one state to act as a lead procurement agency in an administrative capacity on behalf of each participant to the contract. These voluntary cooperative procurements will enable providers purchasing similar capital assets to pool their procurement requests, which will increase the size of the request and result in the procurement receiving a more competitive bid from the manufacturers. This provision will not only support the needs of small and rural public transportation providers, but also provide additional purchasing opportunities for large and medium-sized public transportation providers.

In addition, the conference report creates a pilot program to allow up to three geographically diverse nonprofits to host cooperative procurement contracts. These are intended to be separate from the state cooperative purchasing contracts and provide another opportunity for public transportation systems of all sizes to enhance their purchasing options.

Section 3019 of the conference report reduces the barriers for transit agencies to develop and enter into leasing arrangements for public transportation equipment or facilities by removing existing regulatory requirements that have impeded the authority of transit agencies seeking to reduce long-term capital costs. The conference report ensures that the terms of a lease agreement are negotiated by the grantee to best suit their short- and long-term needs.

TITLE IV—HIGHWAY TRAFFIC SAFETY

Title IV of the FAST Act reauthorizes highway traffic safety programs administered by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) through FY 2020 and makes several reforms to existing law to help keep drivers, pedestrians, and our roads safer.

Prioritizes Emerging Safety Needs

The FAST Act enables states to spend more funds on the pressing safety needs unique to their states by reallocating unspent National Priority Safety Program funds and increasing the percentage of such funds that can be flexed to each state's traditional safety programs. It also requires the Secretary to study the feasibility of establishing an impairment standard for drivers under the influence of marijuana and provide recommendations on how to implement such a standard. Finally, the Act requires NHTSA to take additional actions to improve awareness of the dangers of drug impaired driving.

Improves Safety

The FAST Act reforms the Impaired Driving Countermeasures, Distracted Driving, and State Graduated Driver License incentive grants to reduce unreasonable barriers to state eligibility, while strengthening incentives for states to adopt laws and regulations to improve highway safety. It encourages states to increase driver awareness of commercial motor vehicles. Finally, the Act creates a state grant to enhance safety for bicyclists, pedestrians, and other non-motorized users.

Additional Explanatory Language

The conferees are concerned about the dangers posed by unsecured loads on non-commercial vehicles. Federal grant funds for state-run safety campaigns raising awareness about the dangers posed by unsecured loads are currently eligible for funding under State Highway Safety Programs (23 U.S.C. 402). Therefore, the conferees encourage states to address unsecured loads the next time they submit their State Highway Safety Program for approval by the Secretary or through other state initiatives.

The conferees are concerned with the number of deaths due to impaired driving. The conference report includes Senate language to create an incentive grant for states that provide a 24–7 sobriety program available for use within a state.

As a condition of receiving grant funds, NHTSA currently requires states to sign certifications and assurances that they comply with applicable statutes and regulations with regard to maintenance of effort requirements. The conference report provides additional flexibility to allow states to certify compliance with maintenance of effort requirements. Therefore, the conferees expect that NHTSA should reasonably defer to state interpretations and analyses that underpin such certifications.

TITLE V—MOTOR CARRIERS

Title V of the FAST Act reauthorizes the programs of the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) through FY 2020 and includes several reforms to improve truck and bus safety, while reducing regulatory burdens.

Improves Safety

The FAST Act incentivizes the adoption of innovative truck and bus safety technologies and accelerates the implementation of safety regulations required by law. The Act also authorizes a new testing method to detect the use of drugs and alcohol by commercial motor vehicle drivers.

Reduces Regulatory Burdens

The FAST Act reforms the regulatory process by requiring FMCSA to use the best available science and data on various segments of the trucking industry when developing rulemakings and by establishing a process under which the public or the motor carrier industry can petition FMCSA to revise or repeal regulations if they are no longer current, consistent, and uniformly enforced. The Act also consolidates nine existing FMCSA grant programs into four and streamlines program requirements to reduce administrative costs and regulatory burdens on states.

Provides Opportunities for Veterans

The FAST Act awards grant priority to programs that train veterans for careers in the trucking industry and reduces regulatory barriers faced by veterans seeking employment as commercial truck and bus drivers. It also establishes a pilot program for younger veterans and reserve members that received training during their service in the military to drive certain commercial motor vehicles in interstate commerce.

Reform of Compliance, Safety, Accountability Program

The FAST Act requires a thorough review and reform of the current enforcement prioritization program to ensure that FMCSA's Compliance, Safety, Accountability analysis is the most reliable possible for the public and for enforcement purposes. Following reviews by the GAO, the U.S. Department of Transportation Inspector General and various law enforcement organizations, the Act requires that FMCSA analysis of enforcement data be temporarily removed from public websites on the day after enactment, until the agency has completed reforms required by this Act. Enforcement and inspection data reported by states and enforcement agencies will remain available for public view.

Additional Explanatory Language

Section 5101 requires that states grant maximum reciprocity for inspections conducted using a nationally accepted system that allows ready identification of previously inspected commercial motor vehicles. The conferees believe that decals used to meet this requirement should adhere to design and functional requirements as specified by the Secretary. Section 5101 also provides additional flexibility for states to exercise the ''Right of Entry'' requirement provided by the Motor Carrier Safety Assistance Program to ensure that alternate methods for gaining access to motor carriers can be used to satisfy inspection or enforcement requirements.

The FMCSA has informed the conferees and the conferees agree that nothing in section 5402 authorizes the use of hair testing as an alternative to urine tests until the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services establishes federal standards for hair testing.

The conferees intend section 5501 to be carried out to identify delays experienced by commercial motor vehicle drivers, including during the loading and unloading of goods at shipper and receiver facilities. The conferees do not intend this provision to measure productivity at ports.

Section 5515 requires the Administrator of the FMCSA to conduct a study on the safety effects of a motor carrier operator commuting more than 150 minutes. On June 17, 2014, a tractor-trailer struck a van near Cranbury, New Jersey, killing one person and injuring several others. According to the National Transportation Safety Board, the truck driver had been awake more than 24 hours at the time of the crash. In addition, the Georgia-based driver had driven 12 hours overnight to his job in Delaware before starting his shift. The study shall address the prevalence of long commutes in the industry and the impact on safety.

Conferees expect that the implementation of section 5516 will provide the maximum flexibility possible to re-route longer combination vehicles in the affected state to divided highways, highway facilities designed for freight transportation, or along routes that will enhance overall highway safety.

In implementing section 32934 of MAP–21, FMCSA determined that the language in subsection (b), which ensures that federal transportation funds to a state would ''not be terminated, limited, or otherwise interfered with,'' only applied with respect to the exemptions enumerated in subsection (a) and not with respect to any further exemption or other minimum standard imposed by state law or regulation. Section 5518 clarifies that states which enact laws or regulations that exempt or impose other minimum standards beyond those enumerated in subsection (a) for farm vehicles and the drivers of such vehicles will not lose federal transportation funds. FMCSA reviewed this section and informed the conferees that it will be implemented in the manner described above.

TITLE VI—INNOVATION

Title VI of the FAST Act reauthorizes the programs for the research activities of the USDOT through FY 2020 and includes several provisions to promote innovation and the use and deployment of transportation technologies to address various surface transportation needs.

Invests in Innovation

The FAST Act provides dedicated Highway Trust Fund authorizations to carry out research and development, technology deployment, training and education, intelligent transportation systems activities, grants to University Transportation Centers, and to administer the Bureau of Transportation Statistics (BTS).

Emphasizes Technology

The FAST Act ensures that these programs are implemented and Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) are deployed in a technology neutral manner.The Act promotes technology neutral policies that accelerate vehicle and transportation safety research, development and deployment by promoting innovation and competitive market-based outcomes, while using federal funds efficiently and leveraging private sector investment across the automotive, transportation and technology sectors.

Promotes Safety

The FAST Act encourages FHWA and other federal agencies, states, local governments, and stakeholders to examine additional ways that they can safely and expediently drive the adoption, deployment, and delivery of innovative technology and techniques that would enhance the safety and efficiency of the Nation's roadways.

Establishes a Competitive Deployment Program

The FAST Act establishes a competitive advanced transportation and congestion management technologies deployment grant program to promote the use of innovative transportation solutions. The deployment of these technologies will provide Congress and USDOT with valuable real life data and feedback to inform future decision making.

Updates Federal Regulations

The use of transportation technologies by state and local partners is growing, and the FAST Act makes several changes to ensure that federal regulations promote innovation, not stand in its way.

Additional Explanatory Language

The conference report provides for the collection of statistics on port capacity and throughput for the 25 largest ports to be reported annually by the BTS.

The conference report focuses on research for user based alternative revenue mechanisms that preserve a user fee structure to maintain the long-term solvency of the Highway Trust Fund. It is essential that the federal government properly invest in our infrastructure by looking to alternative revenue sources.

The conferees believe that federal, state, and local agencies must be prepared for the future growth and adoption of innovative technologies such as autonomous vehicles and that the ITS program should support research initiatives that are engaged in the research, development, testing, and validation of autonomous vehicle technologies.

Subtitle C of Title V of the Water Resources Reform and Development Act of 2014 (128 Stat. 1332–1345) established the ''Water Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act'' (WIFIA), a program designed to assist a wide array of water resources infrastructure projects intended to attract private capital, along with state and local public capital, alongside federal investment.Section 1445 of the conference report modifies the WIFIA program to ensure both public and private capital have an equal opportunity to participate, thereby ensuring financing is adequately leveraged. Some have expressed concerns that modifying the prohibition on the use of tax exempt debt financing may inadvertently disadvantage private capital being used in financing projects.The conferees would request that as the Environmental Protection Agency and the US Army Corps of Engineers continue to implement the WIFIA program, the agencies include specifications that will ensure private capital has an equal opportunity to engage in the financing of these projects.

TITLE VII—HAZARDOUS MATERIAL TRANSPORTATION

Title VII of the FAST Act strengthens and advances the safe and efficient movement of hazardous materials through a number of reforms and safety improvements. It also authorizes hazardous materials safety and grant programs for fiscal years 2016 through 2020.

Enhances Emergency Preparedness and Response

The FAST Act reforms an underutilized grant program to get more resources to states and Indian tribes for emergency response, while also granting states more power to decide how to spend their planning and training grants to improve emergency response. It helps better leverage training funding for hazardous materials employees and those enforcing hazardous material regulations.

Streamlines Processes and Creates Certainty and Transparency for Industry

The FAST Act accelerates the administrative process and reduces inefficiencies to create certainty for the hazardous materials industry with special permits and approvals. The Act requires a full review of third-party classification labs to ensure the labs can perform such examinations in a manner that meets the hazardous materials regulations. Furthermore, it allows the Pipelines and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration (PHMSA) to respond more effectively during national emergencies. Finally, it requires PHMSA to withdraw a rulemaking on ''wetlines'' consistent with a GAO study recommending that PHMSA collect more data before proceeding further.

Enhances Information Available to First Responders

The FAST Act requires Class I railroads to generate accurate, real-time, electronic train composition information for first responders through agreements with fusion centers and to provide information about certain flammable liquid shipments to State Emergency Response Commissions (SERCs). It prohibits the withholding of train composition information from first responders in the event of an accident, incident, or emergency. The Act requires the USDOT to establish security and confidentiality protections for the release of any information intended for fusion centers, SERCs, or other authorized persons. It also requires a GAO study on the quality of emergency response information carried by train crews

Improves Tank Car Safety Requirements

The FAST Act enhances safety by requiring new tank cars to be equipped with ''thermal blankets,'' mandating all legacy DOT–111 tank cars in flammable liquids service are upgraded to new retrofit standards regardless of the product shipped, and setting minimum requirements for the protection of certain valves. Further, it requires reporting on the industry-wide progress and capacity to modify DOT–111 tank cars. Finally, the Act requires a derailment test and an independent evaluation to investigate braking technology requirements for the movement of trains carrying certain hazardous materials, and it requires the Secretary to determine, fully incorporating the results of the testing and evaluation, whether recent electronically-controlled pneumatic braking system requirements are justified.

TITLE VIII—MULTIMODAL FREIGHT TRANSPORTATION

Title VIII of the FAST Act focuses attention on the importance of multimodal freight transportation as a foundation for the United States to compete in the global economy. The Act establishes a multimodal freight policy and a national multimodal freight strategic plan and designates a National Multimodal Freight Network to assist states in strategically directing resources and informing freight transportation planning.

The FAST Act encourages each state to establish a freight advisory committee comprised of freight stakeholders to provide input on freight projects and funding needs. Further, states will be required to develop a fiscally-constrained freight plan, either independently or incorporated into the broader transportation planning process.

Additional Explanatory Language

The conferees intend for states to solicit input from a broad range of freight stakeholders in adding mileage to the National Multimodal Freight Network, including critical rural freight corridors. The conferees intend for states to take a strong lead in designating facilities for inclusion in the final National Multimodal Freight Network.

The conferees emphasize the importance of the national strategic freight plan, which will now be multimodal in scope, and, among other things, will assess the conditions and performance of the National Multimodal Freight Network, and develop best practices for improving the performance of the Network, including critical commerce corridors and critical urban and rural access to critical freight corridors.

TITLE IX—NATIONAL SURFACE TRANSPORTATION AND INNOVATIVE FINANCE BUREAU

Title IX of the FAST Act establishes the National Surface Transportation and Innovative Finance Bureau (Bureau) within USDOT. The Bureau will serves as a one-stop-shop for states and local governments to receive federal financing or funding assistance, as well as technical assistance, in order to move forward with complex surface transportation projects. The Act directs the Bureau to administer the application process for various credit assistance programs and the NSFHP program; promote innovative financing best practices; reduce uncertainty and delays with environmental reviews and permitting; reduce costs and risks to taxpayers in project delivery; and procurement. The Act also gives the Secretary the authority to consolidate or eliminate different offices within USDOT. These targeted improvements are based on previous congressionally initiated reforms, oversight, and USDOT led pilot projects that seek to reduce project delays and maximize taxpayer funding.

Finally, the FAST Act establishes a Council on Credit and Finance (Council) within USDOT. It requires the Council to review applications for various credit assistance programs and the NSFHP program, as appropriate, and then make recommendations to the Secretary about which applications should receive federal financing or funding assistance.

TITLE X—SPORT FISH RESTORATION AND RECREATIONAL BOATING SAFETY

Title X of the FAST Act reauthorizes expenditure authority for the Dingell-Johnson Sport Fish Restoration Act through FY 2020 and reforms grant programs to reduce administrative costs and increase flexibility for states. The Act also provides parity for the Coast Guard by establishing a set-aside for the Service's administrative expenses.

Additional Explanatory Language

The conferees understand that funds provided under section 10001 are sufficient to pay the salaries and expenses of some, but not all, of the personnel whose duties exclusively involve boating safety, but who are currently funded out of the Service's Operating Expenses account. Under the authority provided by section 10002, the conferees expect the Coast Guard to use any additional funds provided under section 10001 to pay only the salaries and expenses of personnel whose duties exclusively involve boating safety.

The majority of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's (USFWS) grants management work with state fish and wildlife agencies occurs at the regional level. As a result, the conferees direct the USFWS to prioritize the use of administrative funds by regional offices to improve grant administration timeliness and responsiveness to state fish and wildlife agencies.

TITLE XI—RAIL

Title XI of the FAST Act reforms Amtrak to improve its business operations and planning; improves rail infrastructure; strengthens freight and passenger rail safety; accelerates project delivery; and leverages innovative rail financing, including potential private sector capital, by reforming an underutilized loan program.

Authorizations

The FAST Act authorizes fiscally-responsible levels for Amtrak, under a new structure that provides separate funding authorizations for the Northeast Corridor and the National Network. It also authorizes three grant programs to help improve the Nation's rail infrastructure to meet the future needs of freight and passenger movement.

Amtrak Reforms

The FAST Act makes significant reforms to the way Amtrak structures its financial reporting and planning functions. This Act aligns these critical functions along Amtrak's core operating business lines. All of Amtrak's financial, business, and asset activities are required to be organized in a way that supports the corporation's major business lines. These provisions will allow Northeast Corridor net operating revenues to be re-invested into the Corridor's substantial capital investment needs, while ensuring Amtrak has the tools and resources needed to efficiently operate its National Network. The Act also creates a State-Supported Route Committee to encourage a more collaborative relationship between states, Amtrak, and USDOT regarding state-supported routes for which states provide financial resources. Finally, the Act encourages non-federal participation in certain elements of Amtrak's system by creating station development opportunities for the private sector; exploring the potential for new revenue streams through right-of-way development; and facilitating the use of local products on Amtrak routes.

Intercity Passenger Rail Policy

The FAST Act includes provisions to improve the Nation's rail infrastructure and its intercity passenger rail service, while ensuring sound use of taxpayer investments in passenger rail projects. The subtitle authorizes a new Consolidated Rail Infrastructure and Safety Improvements grant program to support a broad array of rail projects and activities, using cost-benefit analysis principles for project selection, and repeals duplicative grant programs. It authorizes a Federal-State Partnership for State of Good Repair grant program designed to improve critical rail assets with a backlog of deferred maintenance, such as Northeast Corridor infrastructure. It also authorizes a Restoration and Enhancement Grant program to assist with, on a competitive basis, the initiation or restoration of routes formerly operated by Amtrak, including the rail service discontinued in the wake of Hurricane Katrina. This program is paired with funding for a Gulf Coast Working Group to study the return of this service.

The Act also includes provisions to enhance collaborative capital planning efforts amongst all Northeast Corridor users. The Act creates competitive opportunities for intercity passenger rail routes and strengthens requirements for large capital projects funded with federal dollars. All grant programs are subject to the grant conditions contained in section 24405 of title 49, United States Code.

Rail Safety

The safe movement of goods and people by rail remains the top rail policy priority of both the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate. The Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) recently reported that fiscal year 2014 was one of the safest years on record, and the agency noted that, since fiscal year 2005, total train accidents have declined by 46 percent, total derailments have declined by 47 percent, and total highway-rail grade crossing incidents have declined by 24 percent. The FAST Act aims to further increase safety.

The FAST Act includes several provisions to improve the safety of highway-rail grade crossings, including grade crossing safety action plans, a private grade crossing study, and an evaluation on the use of locomotive horns at grade crossings. Additionally, the Act includes requirements to strengthen the safety of passenger rail, including locomotive recording devices, speed limit action plans, and locomotive alerters. It also includes a post-accident assessment for the Amtrak accident on May 12, 2015, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The FAST Act also establishes a process for obtaining a public version of a bridge inspection report, such as a summary form. However, it does not require a railroad to provide, or authorize the FRA to provide, any copy of any bridge inspection report prepared in accordance with section 417 of the Rail Safety Improvement Act of 2008 to any state, political subdivision of a state, or other unauthorized persons.

Project Delivery

Moving projects through the federal review process can be challenging given the number of agencies and entities involved. Subtitle E of this title, the Train, Railroad, and Infrastructure Network Act, streamlines the process for approving rail projects without compromising our historic and natural resources. It does so by applying important provisions already in law for other modes of transportation to rail projects. It directs the Secretary to apply to rail—to the greatest extent feasible—the expedited environmental review procedures already used for highways and transit. It also requires the Secretary to engage in a process to identify additional categorical exclusions used in transportation projects and to propose new and existing exclusions for rail. With respect to historic sites, it preserves existing requirements for important historic sites, such as historic stations, while ensuring expedited delivery of critical improvements to rail infrastructure. It ensures that improvements to certain bridges and tunnels over which common-carrier service has been discontinued or railbanked, but not those bridges and tunnels abandoned from the interstate rail network, are not considered a use of a historic site. This will create an improved and more equitable way for the USDOT to manage federal permitting and reviews for all surface transportation programs, regardless of mode.

Financing

Innovative financing programs are a method to advance major infrastructure. The Railroad Rehabilitation Improvement and Financing (RRIF) program is authorized to provide loans and loan guarantees to railroad projects, ranging from short-line railroad equipment to passenger rail facilities. While this program provides attractive low-interest, long-term financing, it has not been extensively utilized, and its inflexible terms and limited consideration of project-finance style lending features limit its utility to large-scale infrastructure projects. Subtitle F of this title, the Railroad Infrastructure Financing Improvement Act (RIFIA), includes several provisions designed to unlock this program by streamlining USDOT's approval processes; mirroring programmatic features similar to the successful TIFIA program to make RRIF a more flexible lender; and making it easier to develop partnerships that combine RRIF loans with other types of financing, including private financing. It also requires the Secretary to pay back the credit risk premium, with interest, to a borrower that has repaid its RRIF loan, regardless of whether the loan is or was included in a cohort. The intent of this provision is for the Secretary to pay back such credit risk premium, with interest, as soon as feasible but not later than three months after the date of enactment. Finally, subtitle F includes language that modifies general authority to provide direct loans under RRIF to include at least one of the eligible applicants in a joint venture.

DIVISION B—COMPREHENSIVE TRANSPORTATION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2015

The Motor Vehicle Safety Title of the conference report includes numerous provisions intended to improve vehicle and roadway safety over the next five years and into the future. The incorporated provisions establish a means of reducing fatalities, injuries, and the associated economic and societal costs resulting from motor vehicle defects and roadway accidents. Specifically, the Title would modernize and improve the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) by improving the vehicle safety recall processes, enhancing agency transparency, and increasing efficiency in current regulatory processes. The Title would also increase accountability among automakers and other stakeholders in the automotive industry, promote entrepreneurship and innovation within the automotive industry, and foster greater attention to vehicle safety issues from both automakers and regulators.

To modernize and enhance transparency at NHTSA, the Title includes good-government provisions that would require the agency to submit an annual agenda to Congress on its activities for the upcoming year and authorizes additional funding for NHTSA's vehicle safety program if the agency implements recommendations made by the Department of Transportation Inspector General to improve the agency's efficacy.

The Title also incentivizes the development and utilization of new crash avoidance technologies that can help reduce the severity of accidents, or prevent accidents altogether. It also directs a study on unattended children warning systems. One section directs NHTSA to update standards related to Tire Pressure Monitoring Systems. This section should not be interpreted as precluding the use of indirect tire pressure monitoring systems or technologies. Both the House and the Senate have been informed that NHTSA has not identified any safety concerns with the indirect systems currently in use in the United States. The Title also requires NHTSA to promulgate a rule for registration of tires sold by independent retailers.

To improve the motor vehicle safety recall process, the Title expands the availability and accessibility of vehicle safety recall information to consumers and establishes a pilot grant program for States to notify consumers of vehicle recalls. These provisions are intended to help improve recall awareness among motorists and encourage quick repair of defective vehicles. In addition to these provisions, the Safety Title incentivizes dealers to check for open recalls at the time of service for all patrons and requires rental car companies to ground vehicles that are subject to an open safety recall until they are fixed. The rental car safety provision contains a rule of construction stating that this section should not be construed to create or increase liability under State and local law for damages related to the commercial loss of use of a recalled rental vehicle pending completion of the recall remedy. To encourage future adoption of direct vehicle notification of open recalls, the Title also includes a study on the feasibility of such technology.

The Safety Title includes a provision addressing regulatory parity between electric and natural gas vehicles. This provision would modify the manner in which the fuel economy of natural gas dual-fueled vehicles is calculated, beginning in 2016, so as to more closely match the way it is done for electric vehicles.

An essential part of improving vehicle and roadway safety is increasing accountability among automotive companies. To that end, the Safety Title extends the time period for automakers to pay for defect remedies from 10 years to 15 years; it extends the period companies must retain safety records from 5 years to 10 years; and increases the maximum cap on civil penalties for violations of motor vehicle safety standards and laws from $35 million to $105 million upon NHTSA's certification that its final rule on civil penalty factors has been completed. These provisions reflect the greater longevity of cars on the road and will prompt NHTSA and automakers to identify safety issues earlier so that recalls can be issued to ensure that motor vehicle owners can have the necessary repairs made as quickly as possible. The Title also broadens a company's recall obligations in the event of bankruptcy and increases corporate responsibility for documents submitted to NHTSA. It also incentivizes industry employees to come forward with original information about possible motor vehicle safety violations by allowing the Secretary of Transportation to pay awards from a portion of recovered sanctions.

Entrepreneurship and experimentation within the manufacturing sector are also essential components to the automotive industry's development. To promote sustained growth and ingenuity within the low-volume manufacturing industry, the Safety Title includes a section that creates a framework for low-volume manufacturers to produce replica vehicles. One section directs the manufacturer of the engine installed within replica vehicles to provide instructions to the EPA Administrator and the vehicle manufacturer explaining how to install the engine and maintain its functionality such that it complies with certain environmental laws and regulations. While the instructions must be submitted to the Administrator, nothing in the legislative language contemplates an approval process by the EPA Administrator. Further, this provision explicitly preserves state registration and licensing authorities over the use of such vehicles.

DIVISION C—FINANCE

Tax Complexity Analysis

Section 4022(b) of the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 (the 'IRS Reform Act') requires the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation (in consultation with the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department) to provide a tax complexity analysis. The complexity analysis is required for all legislation reported by the Senate Committee on Finance, the House Committee on Ways and Means, or any committee of conference if the legislation includes a provision that directly or indirectly amends the Internal Revenue Code and has widespread applicability to individuals or small businesses.

Pursuant to clause 11(a) of rule XXII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation has determined that a complexity analysis is not required under section 4022(b) of the IRS Reform Act because the bill contains no provisions that amend the Code and that have 'widespread applicability' to individuals or small businesses, within the meaning of the rule.

TITLE XXXI—HIGHWAY TRUST FUND AND RELATED TAXES

Extension of Highway Trust Fund Expenditure Authority (sec. 51101 of the Senate amendment, sec. 31101 of the House amendment, sec. 31101 of the conference agreement, and secs. 9503, 9504, and 9508 of the Code)[1]

Present Law Highway Trust Fund Expenditure Provisions In general

Under present law, revenues from the highway excise taxes, as imposed through October 1, 2016, generally are dedicated to the Highway Trust Fund. Dedication of excise tax revenues to the Highway Trust Fund and expenditures from the Highway Trust Fund are governed by the Code.[2] The Code authorizes expenditures (subject to appropriations) from the Highway Trust Fund through December 4, 2015, for the purposes provided in authorizing legislation, as such legislation was in effect on the date of enactment of the Surface Transportation Extension Act of 2015, Part II.

Highway Trust Fund expenditure purposes

The Highway Trust Fund has a separate account for mass transit, the Mass Transit Account.[3] The Highway Trust Fund and the Mass Transit Account are funding sources for specific programs.

Highway Trust Fund expenditure purposes have been revised with each authorization Act enacted since establishment of the Highway Trust Fund in 1956. In general, expenditures authorized under those Acts (as the Acts were in effect on the date of enactment of the most recent such authorizing Act) are specified by the Code as Highway Trust Fund expenditure purposes. The Code provides that the authority to make expenditures from the Highway Trust Fund expires after December 4, 2015. Thus, no Highway Trust Fund expenditures may occur after December 4, 2015, without an amendment to the Code.

Section 9503 of the Code appropriates to the Highway Trust Fund amounts equivalent to the taxes received from the following: the taxes on diesel, gasoline, kerosene and special motor fuel, the tax on tires, the annual heavy vehicle use tax, and the tax on the retail sale of heavy trucks and trailers.[4] Section 9601 provides that amounts appropriated to a trust fund pursuant to sections 9501 through 9511, are to be transferred at least monthly from the General Fund of the Treasury to such trust fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in the Code section appropriating the amounts to such trust fund. The Code requires that proper adjustments be made in amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be transferred.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The expenditure authority for the Highway Trust Fund is extended through September 30, 2021. The Code provisions governing the purposes for which monies in the Highway Trust Fund may be spent are updated to include the reauthorization bill, the DRIVE Act.[5]

Effective date.—The provision is effective on August 1, 2015.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The expenditure authority for the Highway Trust Fund is extended through September 30, 2021. The Code provisions governing the purposes for which monies in the Highway Trust Fund may be spent are updated to include the reauthorization bill, the Surface Transportation and Reauthorization and Reform Act of 2015.[6]

Effective date.—The provision is effective November 21, 2015.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement provides for expenditure authority through September 30, 2020.[7] The Code provisions governing the purposes for which monies in the Highway Trust Fund may be spent are updated to include the conference agreement bill, the FAST Act.

Extension of Highway-Related Taxes (sec. 51102 of the Senate amendment, sec. 31102 of the House amendment, sec. 31102 of the conference agreement, and secs. 4041, 4051, 4071, 4081, 4221, 4481, 4483, and 6412 of the Code)

Present Law Highway Trust Fund Excise Taxes In general

Six separate excise taxes are imposed to finance the Federal Highway Trust Fund program. Three of these taxes are imposed on highway motor fuels. The remaining three are a retail sales tax on heavy highway vehicles, a manufacturers' excise tax on heavy vehicle tires, and an annual use tax on heavy vehicles. A substantial majority of the revenues produced by the Highway Trust Fund excise taxes are derived from the taxes on motor fuels. The annual use tax on heavy vehicles expires October 1, 2017. Except for 4.3 cents per gallon of the Highway Trust Fund fuels tax rates, the remaining taxes are scheduled to expire after October 1, 2016. The 4.3-cents-per-gallon portion of the fuels tax rates is permanent.[8] The six taxes are summarized below.

Highway motor fuels taxes

The Highway Trust Fund motor fuels tax rates are as follows:[9]

Gasoline	18.3 cents per gallon.
Diesel fuel and kerosene	24.3 cents per gallon.
Alternative fuels	18.3 or 24.3 cents per gallon generally.[10]

Non-fuel Highway Trust Fund excise taxes

In addition to the highway motor fuels excise tax revenues, the Highway Trust Fund receives revenues produced by three excise taxes imposed exclusively on heavy highway vehicles or tires. These taxes are:

A 12-percent excise tax imposed on the first retail sale of heavy highway vehicles, tractors, and trailers (generally, trucks having a gross vehicle weight in excess of 33,000 pounds and trailers having such a weight in excess of 26,000 pounds);[11]

An excise tax imposed on highway tires with a rated load capacity exceeding 3,500 pounds, generally at a rate of 0.945 cents per 10 pounds of excess;[12] and

An annual use tax imposed on highway vehicles having a taxable gross weight of 55,000 pounds or more.[13] (The maximum rate for this tax is $550 per year, imposed on vehicles having a taxable gross weight over 75,000 pounds.)

The taxable year for the annual use tax is from July 1st through June 30th of the following year. For the period July 1, 2016, through September 30, 2016, the amount of the annual use tax is reduced by 75 percent.[14]

SENATE AMENDMENT

Present-law taxes are generally extended through September 30, 2023. The heavy vehicle use tax is extended through September 30, 2024.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on October 1, 2016.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

Present-law taxes are generally extended through September 30, 2023. The heavy vehicle use tax is extended through September 30, 2024.

Effective date.—The provision is effective October 1, 2016.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement generally extends present-law taxes through September 30, 2022. The heavy vehicle use tax is extended through September 30, 2023.

Effective date.—The provision is effective October 1, 2016.

Additional Transfers to the Highway Trust Fund (sec. 31201 of the House amendment, sec. 51201 of the Senate amendment, sec. 31201 of the conference agreement, and sec. 9503 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Public Law No. 110–318, ''an Act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to restore the Highway Trust Fund balance'' transferred, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $8,017,000,000 to the Highway Trust Fund effective September 15, 2008. Public Law No. 111–46, ''an Act to restore sums to the Highway Trust Fund and for other purposes,'' transferred, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $7 billion to the Highway Trust Fund effective August 7, 2009. The Hiring Incentives to Restore Employment Act transferred, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $14,700,000,000 to the Highway Trust Fund and $4,800,000,000 to the Mass Transit Account in the Highway Trust Fund.[15] The HIRE Act provisions generally were effective as of March 18, 2010. 	FY 2013	FY 2014
Highway Account	$6.2 billion	$10.4 billion
Mass Transit Account		$2.2 billion

MAP–21 also transferred $2.4 billion from the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund to the Highway Account in the Highway Trust Fund. The Highway and Transportation Funding Act of 2014 transferred $7.765 billion from the General Fund to the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund, $2 billion from the General Fund to the Mass Transit Account of the Highway Trust Fund, and $1 billion from the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund to the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund.[17] Signed into law on July 30, 2015, the Surface Transportation and Veterans Health Care Choice Improvement Act of 2015 transferred $6.068 billion from the General Fund to the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund and $2 billion from the General Fund to the Mass Transit Account of the Highway Trust Fund.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment provides that out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following transfers are to be made from the General Fund to the Highway Trust Fund: $34,401,000,000 to the Highway Account and $11,214,000,000 to the Mass Transit account.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment provides that out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following transfers are to be made from the General Fund to the Highway Trust Fund: $25,976,000,000 to the Highway Account and $9 billion to the Mass Transit account.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement provides that out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following transfers are to be made from the General Fund to the Highway Trust Fund: $51,900,000,000 to the Highway Account and $18,100,000,000 to the Mass Transit account.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Transfer to Highway Trust Fund of Certain Motor Vehicle Safety Penalties (sec. 51202 of the Senate amendment, sec. 31202 of the House amendment, sec. 31202 of the conference agreement, and section 9503 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Present law imposes certain civil penalties related to violations of motor vehicle safety.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The provision deposits the civil penalties related to motor vehicle safety in the Highway Trust Fund instead of in the Treasury's General Fund.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for amounts collected after the date of enactment.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment is the same as the Senate amendment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House amendment and Senate amendment.

Appropriation From Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund (sec. 51203 of the Senate amendment, sec. 31203 of the House amendment, sec. 31203 of the conference agreement, and secs. 9503 and 9508 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Fuels of a type subject to other trust fund excise taxes generally are subject to an add-on excise tax of 0.1-cent-per-gallon to fund the Leaking Underground Storage Tank (''LUST'') Trust Fund.[18] For example, the LUST excise tax applies to gasoline, diesel fuel, kerosene, and most alternative fuels subject to highway and aviation fuels excise taxes, and to fuels subject to the inland waterways fuel excise tax. This excise tax is imposed on both uses and parties subject to the other taxes, and to situations (other than export) in which the fuel otherwise is tax-exempt. For example, off-highway business use of gasoline and off-highway use of diesel fuel and kerosene generally are exempt from highway motor fuels excise tax. Similarly, States and local governments and certain other parties are exempt from such tax. Nonetheless, all such uses and parties are subject to the 0.1-cent-per-gallon LUST excise tax.

Liquefied natural gas, compressed natural gas, and liquefied petroleum gas are exempt from the LUST tax. Additionally, methanol and ethanol fuels produced from coal (including peat) are taxed at a reduced rate of 0.05 cents per gallon.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The provision transfers $100 million on the date of enactment, $100 million on October 1, 2016 and an additional $100 million on October 1, 2017, from the LUST Trust Fund to the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment is the same as the Senate amendment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House amendment and Senate amendment.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

TITLE XXXII—OFFSETS

A. Revocation or denial of passport in case of certain unpaid taxes (sec. 52101 of the Senate amendment, sec. 32102 of the House amendment, sec. 32101 of the conference agreement and secs. 6320 and 6331 and new secs. 7345 and 6103(k)(11) of the Internal Revenue Code)

PRESENT LAW

The administration of passports is the responsibility of the Department of State.[19] The Secretary of State may refuse to issue or renew a passport if the applicant owes child support in excess of $2,500 or owes certain types of Federal debts. The scope of this authority does not extend to rejection or revocation of a passport on the basis of delinquent Federal taxes. Although issuance of a passport does not require a social security number or taxpayer identification number (''TIN''), the applicant is required under the Code to provide such number. Failure to provide a TIN is reported by the State Department to the Internal Revenue Service (''IRS'') and may result in a $500 fine.[20]

Returns and return information are confidential and may not be disclosed by the IRS, other Federal employees, State employees, and certain other individuals having access to such information except as provided in the Code.[21] There are a number of exceptions to the general rule of nondisclosure that authorize disclosure in specifically identified circumstances, including disclosure of information about Federal tax debts for purposes of reviewing an application for a Federal loan[22] and for purposes of enhancing the integrity of the Medicare program.[23]

SENATE AMENDMENT

Under the Senate Amendment, the Secretary of State is required to deny a passport (or renewal of a passport) to a seriously delinquent taxpayer and is permitted to revoke any passport previously issued to such person. In addition to the revocation or denial of passports to delinquent taxpayers, the Secretary of State is authorized to deny an application for a passport if the applicant fails to provide a social security number or provides an incorrect or invalid social security number. With respect to an incorrect or invalid number, the inclusion of an erroneous number is a basis for rejection of the application only if the erroneous number was provided willfully, intentionally, recklessly or negligently. Exceptions to these rules are permitted for emergency or humanitarian circumstances, including the issuance of a passport for short-term use to return to the United States by the delinquent taxpayer.

The provision authorizes limited sharing of information between the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury. If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury the identity of persons who have seriously delinquent Federal tax debts as defined in this provision, the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate is authorized to transmit such certification to the Secretary of State for use in determining whether to issue, renew, or revoke a passport. Applicants whose names are included on the certifications provided to the Secretary of State are ineligible for a passport. The Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury are held harmless with respect to any certification issued pursuant to this provision.

A seriously delinquent tax debt generally includes any outstanding debt for Federal taxes in excess of $50,000, including interest and any penalties, for which a notice of lien or a notice of levy has been filed. This amount is to be adjusted for inflation annually, using calendar year 2014 as a base year, and a cost-of-living adjustment. Even if a tax debt otherwise meets the statutory threshold, it may not be considered seriously delinquent if (1) the debt is being paid in a timely manner pursuant to an installment agreement or offer-in-compromise, or (2) collection action with respect to the debt is suspended because a collection due process hearing or innocent spouse relief has been requested or is pending.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on January 1, 2015.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment is the same as the Senate amendment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The following changes are included in the conference agreement to ensure that there is a mechanism allowing the IRS to correct errors and to take into account actions taken by a taxpayer to come into compliance after procedures has been initiated to inform the Secretary of State that the taxpayer is seriously delinquent. As explained below, these measures include clarification of the definition of a seriously delinquent tax debt, notification requirements, standards under which the Commissioner may reverse the certification of serious delinquency, and limits on authority to delegate the certification process. A limited right to seek injunctive relief by a taxpayer who is wrongly certified as seriously delinquent is also provided.

The provision clarifies the definition of ''seriously delinquent tax debt'' to permit revocation of a passport only after the IRS has followed its examination and collection procedures under current law and the taxpayer's administrative and judicial rights have been exhausted or lapsed.

The provision requires notice to taxpayers regarding the procedures. First, the provision adds the possible loss of a passport to the list of matters required to be included in notices to taxpayer of potential collection activity under sections 6320 or 6331. Second, the provision requires that the Commissioner provide contemporaneous notice to the taxpayer(s) when the Commissioner sends a certification of serious delinquency to the Secretary of the Treasury. Finally, in instances in which the Commissioner decertifies the taxpayer's status as a delinquent taxpayer, he is required to provide notice to the taxpayer contemporaneous with the notice to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The decertification process included in the conference agreement provides a mechanism under which the Commissioner can correct an erroneous certification or end the certification because the debt is no longer seriously delinquent, due to certain events subsequent to the certification. If after certifying the delinquency to the Secretary of the Treasury, (1) the IRS receives full payment of the seriously delinquent tax debt, (2) the taxpayer enters into an installment agreement under section 6159, (3) the IRS accepts an offer in compromise under section 7122, or (4) a spouse files for relief from joint liability, the Commissioner must notify the Secretary that the taxpayer is not seriously delinquent. In each instance, the ''decertification'' is limited to the taxpayer who is the subject of one of the above actions. In the case of a claim for innocent spouse relief, the decertification is only with respect to the spouse claiming relief, not both. The Commissioner must generally decertify within 30 days of the event that requires decertification. The Commissioner must provide the notice of decertification to the Secretary of the Treasury, who must in turn promptly notify the Secretary of State of the decertification. The Secretary of State must delete the certification from the records regarding that taxpayer.

The provision as amended limits the Commissioner's authority to delegate duties under this section. As amended, the authority to certify or decertify a seriously delinquent tax debt is delegable only to the Deputy Commissioner for Services and Enforcement, or to a Division Commissioner (the head of an IRS operating division).

Finally, the amendments to the provision permit limited judicial review of the certification or a failure to reverse a certification.

EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provision as amended is effective upon date of enactment.

B. Reform of rules related to qualified tax collection contracts, and special compliance personnel program (secs. 52102 and 52103 of the Senate amendment, secs. 32106 and 32107 of the House amendment, secs. 32102 and 32103 of the conference agreement, and sec. 6306 of the Code)

Code section 6306 permits the IRS to use private debt collection companies to locate and contact taxpayers owing outstanding tax liabilities of any type[24] and to arrange payment of those taxes by the taxpayers. There must be an assessment pursuant to section 6201 in order for there to be an outstanding tax liability. An assessment is the formal recording of the taxpayer's tax liability that fixes the amount payable. An assessment must be made before the IRS is permitted to commence enforcement actions to collect the amount payable. In general, an assessment is made at the conclusion of all examination and appeals processes within the IRS.[25]

Several steps are involved in the deployment of private debt collection companies. First, the private debt collection company contacts the taxpayer by letter.[26] If the taxpayer's last known address is incorrect, the private debt collection company searches for the correct address. Second, the private debt collection company telephones the taxpayer to request full payment.[27] If the taxpayer cannot pay in full immediately, the private debt collection company offers the taxpayer an installment agreement providing for full payment of the taxes over a period of as long as five years. If the taxpayer is unable to pay the outstanding tax liability in full over a five-year period, the private debt collection company obtains financial information from the taxpayer and will provide this information to the IRS for further processing and action by the IRS. The Code specifies several procedural conditions under which the provision would operate. First, provisions of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act apply to the private debt collection company. Second, taxpayer protections that are statutorily applicable to the IRS are also made statutorily applicable to the private sector debt collection companies. In addition, taxpayer protections that are statutorily applicable to employees of the IRS are made statutorily applicable to employees of private sector debt collection companies. Third, subcontractors are prohibited from having contact with taxpayers, providing quality assurance services, and composing debt collection notices; any other service provided by a subcontractor must receive prior approval from the IRS.

The Code creates a revolving fund from the amounts collected by the private debt collection companies. The private debt collection companies are paid out of this fund. The Code prohibits the payment of fees for all services in excess of 25 percent of the amount collected under a tax collection contract.

The Code provides that up to 25 percent of the amount collected may be used for IRS collection enforcement activities. The law also requires the Treasury Department to provide a biennial report to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means. The report is to include, among other items, a cost benefit analysis, the impact of the debt collection contracts on collection enforcement staff levels in the IRS, and an evaluation of contractor performance. The Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009 (the ''Act''), which made appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2009, included a provision stating that none of the funds made available in the Act could be used to fund or administer section 6306.[28] Around the same time, the IRS announced that the IRS would not renew its contracts with private debt collection agencies.[29]

SENATE AMENDMENT

Qualified tax collection contracts

The provision requires the Secretary to enter into qualified tax collection contracts for the collection of inactive tax receivables. Inactive tax receivables are defined as any tax receivable (1) removed from the active inventory for lack of resources or inability to locate the taxpayer, (2) for which more than 1/3 of the applicable limitations period has lapsed and no IRS employee has been assigned to collect the receivable; or (3) for which, a receivable has been assigned for collection but more than 365 days have passed without interaction with the taxpayer or a third party for purposes of furthering the collection. Tax receivables are defined as any outstanding assessment that the IRS includes in potentially collectible inventory.

The provision designates certain tax receivables as not eligible for collection under qualified tax collection contracts, specifically a contract that: (1) is subject to a pending or active offer-in-compromise or installment agreement; (2) is classified as an innocent spouse case; (3) involves a taxpayer identified by the Secretary as being (a) deceased, (b) under the age of 18, (c) in a designated combat zone, or (d) a victim of identity theft; (4) is currently under examination, litigation, criminal investigation, or levy; or (5) is currently subject to a proper exercise of a right of appeal. The provision grants authority to the Secretary to prescribe procedures for taxpayers in presidentially declared disaster areas to request relief from immediate collection measures under the provision.

The provision requires the Secretary to give priority to private collection contractors and debt collection centers currently approved by the Treasury Department's Bureau of the Fiscal Service (previously the Financial Management Service) on the schedule required under section 3711(g) of title 31 of the United States Code, to the extent appropriate to carry out the purposes of the provision.

The provision adds an additional exception to section 6103 to allow contractors to identify themselves as such and disclose the nature, subject, and reason for the contact. Disclosures are permitted only in situations and under conditions approved by the Secretary.

The provision requires the Secretary to prepare two reports for the House Committee

[24] This provision generally applies to any type of tax imposed under the Internal Revenue Code.

[25] An amount of tax reported as due on the taxpayer's tax return is considered to be self-assessed. If the IRS determines that the assessment or collection of tax will be jeopardized by delay, it has the authority to assess the amount immediately (sec. 6861), subject to several procedural safeguards.

[26] The provision requires that the IRS disclose confidential taxpayer information to the private debt collection company. Section 6103(n) permits disclosure of returns and return information for ''the providing of other services . . . for purposes of tax administration.''

[27] The private debt collection company is not permitted to accept payment directly. Payments are required to be processed by IRS employees.

[29] IR–2009–19, March 5, 2009.

on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance. The first report is required annually and due not later than 90 days after each fiscal year and is required to include: (1) the total number and amount of tax receivables provided to each contractor for collection under this section, (2) the total amounts collected by and installment agreements resulting from the collection efforts of each contractor and the collection costs incurred by the IRS; (3) the impact of such contacts on the total number and amount of unpaid assessments, and on the number and amount of assessments collected by IRS personnel after initial contact by a contractor, (4) the amount of fees retained by the Secretary under subsection (e) and a description of the use of such funds; and (5) a disclosure safeguard report in a form similar to that required under section 6103(p)(5).

The second report is required biannually and is required to include: (i) an independent evaluation of contactor performance; and (ii) a measurement plan that includes a comparison of the best practices used by private debt collectors to the collection techniques used by the IRS and mechanisms to identify and capture information on successful collection techniques used by the contractors that could be adopted by the IRS.

Special compliance personnel program

The provision requires that the amount that, under current law, is to be retained and used by the IRS for collection enforcement activities under section 6306 of the Code be instead used to fund a newly created special compliance personnel program. The provision also requires the Secretary to establish an account for the hiring, training, and employment of special compliance personnel. No other source of funding for the program is permitted, and funds deposited in the special account are restricted to use for the program, including reimbursement of the IRS and other agencies for the cost of administering the qualified debt collection program and all costs associated with employment of special compliance personnel and the retraining and reassignment of other personnel as special compliance personnel. Special compliance personnel are individuals employed by the IRS to serve either as revenue officers performing field collection functions or as persons operating the automated collection system.

The provision requires the Secretary to prepare annually a report for the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance, to be submitted no later than March of each year. In the report, the Secretary is to describe for the preceding fiscal year accounting of all funds received in the account, administrative and program costs, number of special compliance personnel hired and employed as well as actual revenue collected by such personnel. Similar information for the current and following fiscal year, using both actual and estimated amounts, is required

Effective date.—The provision relating to qualified tax collection contracts applies to tax receivables identified by the Secretary after the date of enactment. The requirement to give priority to certain private collection contractors and debt collection centers applies to contracts and agreements entered into within three months after the date of enactment, and the new exception to section 6103 applies to disclosures made after the date of enactment. The requirement of the reports to Congress is effective on the date of enactment.

The provision relating to the special compliance personnel program applies to amounts collected and retained by the Secretary after date of enactment.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment is the same as the Senate amendment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House amendment and the Senate amendment provision. It is intended that the IRS will implement the proposal without delay to facilitate the collection of taxes, which are owed to the Government but are not being actively pursued by the IRS for collection, while protecting taxpayer rights and privacy. To carry out these goals of expeditious tax collection and taxpayer rights, it is intended that the IRS will make it a priority to use collection contractors and debt collection centers currently approved by the Treasury Department.

C. Repeal of Modification of Automatic Extension of Return Due Date for Certain Employee Benefit Plans (sec. 52105(b)(3) of the Senate amendment, sec. 32104 of the conference agreement and secs. 6058 and 6059 of the Code)

An employer that maintains a pension, annuity, stock bonus, profit-sharing or other funded deferred compensation plan (or the plan administrator of the plan) is required to file an annual return containing information required under regulations with respect to the qualification, financial condition, and operation of the plan.[30] The plan administrator of a defined benefit plan subject to the minimum funding requirements[31] is required to file an annual actuarial report.[32] These filing requirements are met by filing an Annual Return/Report of Employee Benefit Plan, Form 5500, and providing the information as required on the form and related instructions.[33] Similarly, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (''ERISA'') requires the administrator of certain pension and welfare benefit plans to file annual reports disclosing certain information to the Department of Labor (''DOL'') and, with respect to some defined benefit plans, to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (''PBGC'').[34] Plan administrators also comply with these ERISA filing requirements by filing Form 5500.

Forms 5500 are filed with DOL, and information from Forms 5500 is shared with the IRS and PBGC.[35] Form 5500 is due by the last day of the seventh month following the close of the plan year.[36] DOL and IRS rules allow the due date to be automatically extended by 2½ months if a request for extension is filed.[37] Thus, in the case of a plan that uses the calendar year as the plan year, the extended due date for Form 5500 is October 15.

Under the Surface Transportation and Veterans Health Care Choice Improvement Act of 2015, in the case of returns for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2015, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to modify appropriate regulations to provide that the maximum extension for the returns of employee benefit plans filing Form 5500 is an automatic 3½-month period ending on November 15 for calendar-year plans.[38]

SENATE AMENDMENT

Under the provision, in the case of returns for any taxable period beginning after December 31, 2015, the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary's delegate is directed to modify appropriate regulations to provide that the maximum extension for the returns of employee benefit plans filing Form 5500 is an automatic 3½-month period beginning on the due date for filing the return, without regard to any extensions.[39]

Effective date.—The provision in the Senate amendment is effective on the date of enactment.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement does not include the Senate amendment provision. The conference agreement repeals the provision in the Surface Transportation and Veterans Health Care Choice Improvement Act of 2015 that provides for an automatic 3½-month extension of the due date for filing Form 5500. Thus, the extended due date for Form 5500 is determined under DOL and IRS rules as in effect before enactment of the Surface Transportation and Veterans Health Care Choice Improvement Act of 2015.

Effective date.—The provision in the conference agreement is effective for returns for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2015.

[31] Sec. 412. Most governmental plans (defined in section 414(d)) and church plans (defined in section 414(e)) are exempt from the minimum funding requirements.

[33] Treas. Reg. secs. 301.6058–1(a) and 301.6059–1. Form 5500 consists of a main form and various schedules, some of which require additional information to be included. The schedules that must be filed and the additional information that must be included with Form 5500 depend on the type and size of plan. A simplified annual reporting form, Annual Return/Report of Small Employee Benefit Plan, Form 5500–SF, is available to certain plans (covering fewer than 100 employees) that are subject to reporting requirements under ERISA and the Code. References herein to Form 5500 include Form 5500–SF.

[34] ERISA secs. 103, 104, and 4065. Most governmental plans and church plans are exempt from ERISA, including the ERISA reporting requirements. ERISA section 3004 requires that, when the IRS and DOL carry out provisions relating to the same subject matter, they must consult with each other and develop rules, regulations, practices and forms designed to reduce duplication of effort, duplication of reporting, and the burden of compliance by plan administrators and employers. Under ERISA section 4065, the PBGC is required to work with the IRS and DOL to combine the annual report to PBGC with reports required to be made to those agencies.

[35] Form 5500 filings are also publicly released in accordance with sec. 6104(b) and Treas. Reg. sec. 301.6104(b)–1 and ERISA secs. 104(a)(1) and 106(a).

[36] Under ERISA section 104(a)(1), the annual report is due within 210 days after the close of the plan year or within such time as provided by regulations to reduce duplicative filings. DOL and IRS regulations provide for filing at the time required by the forms and instructions issued by the agencies. 29 C.F.R. sec. 2520.104a–5(a)(2) and Treas. Reg. secs. 301.6058–1(a)(4) and 301.6059–1(a).

[37] Treas. Reg. sec. 1.6081–11(a). Instructions for Form 5500 also provide for an automatic extension of time to file the Form 5500 until the due date of the Federal income tax return of the employer maintaining the plan if (1) the plan year and the employer's tax year are the same; (2) the employer has been granted an extension of time to file its federal income tax return to a date later than the normal due date for filing the Form 5500; and (3) a copy of the application for extension of time to file the Federal income tax return is maintained with the records of the Form 5500 filer. An extension granted by using this automatic extension procedure cannot be extended beyond a total of 9½ months beyond the close of the plan year.

[39] The provision in the Senate amendment is similar to section 2006(b)(3) of Pub. L. No. 114–41, which was enacted after the Senate amendment was passed by the Senate.

Section 32201—Adjustment for Inflation of Fees for Certain Customs Services

PRESENT LAW

Section 13031 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 establishes certain fees for customs services. These fees are not currently adjusted for inflation.

HOUSE BILL

The House bill provides that the Secretary of Treasury shall annually adjust the fees collected under Section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 and the limitations on fees under paragraphs (2), (3), (5), (6), (8), and (9) of subsection (b), on, to reflect any increase in the average of the Consumer Price Index.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on October 1, 2015.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on October 1, 2015.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment provision with two changes. First, changes to subsection (b) reaffirm Congressional intent that revenue from the adjustments are to be deposited into the Customs User Fee Account, subject to appropriations acts. Second, it sets the first adjustment on April 1, 2016 instead of October 1, 2015.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on April 1, 2016.

Extension of Enterprise Guarantee Fees

SENATE AMENDMENT

Section 52205 of the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 modifies Section 1327(f) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1992 to extend enterprise guarantee fees from October 1, 2021 to October 1, 2025.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 contains no provisions comparable to the Senate position.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The Senate recedes from its position and concurs in the House position.

Section 32202—Limitation on Surplus Funds of Federal Reserve Banks

HOUSE AMENDMENT

Section 32202 of the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 modifies Section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 289) to execute a liquidation of the Federal Reserve surplus account and a remittance of funds to the U.S. Treasury. Section 32202 also dissolves the existence of the surplus account on a go-forward basis. Finally, Section 32202 ensures future net earnings of the Federal Reserve, in excess of dividend paid, are remitted to the U.S. Treasury.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment to H.R. 22 contains no provisions comparable to the House position.

CONFERENCE SUBSTITUTE

The Senate recedes from its position and concurs in the House position with certain modifications. Specifically, the conference substitute retains the Federal Reserve surplus account, but caps it at $10,000,000,000. Any amounts which exceed the cap are remitted to the U.S. Treasury.

Section 32203—Dividends of the Federal Reserve Bank

SENATE AMENDMENT

Section 52203 of the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 modified Section 7(a)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 289(a)(1)(A)) by reducing the interest rate from 6 percent to 1.5 percent on capital paid into the Federal Reserve System by member banks with consolidated assets over $1,000,000,000.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 contains no provisions comparable to the Senate position.

CONFERENCE SUBSTITUTE

The House recedes from its position and concurs in the Senate position with certain modifications. Specifically, the conference substitute retains the 6 percent dividend in current law for Federal Reserve System member banks with consolidated assets of $10,000,000,000 or less, indexed to inflation. For member banks with consolidated assets greater than that amount, the conference substitute replaces the 1.5 percent interest rate with the smaller of: the rate equal to the high yield of the 10-year Treasury note auctioned at the last auction held prior to the payment of a dividend, and 6 percent. Finally, the conference substitute delays the effective date of the modification to January 1, 2016.

Section 32204—Strategic Petroleum Reserve Drawdown and Sale

Drawdown and Sale. Subsection (a) would direct the Department of Energy to draw down and sell 66 million barrels of crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR).

Emergency Protection. Subsection (b) would provide that Secretary shall not draw down and sell crude oil under this section in quantities that would limit the authority to sell petroleum products under section 161(h) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act. This subsection conditions the 66 million barrels of oil authorized to be sold in a) upon the maintenance of a 530 million barrel floor generally in the Reserve. Forthcoming drawdowns previously authorized by the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015 would take precedence.

Increase; Limitation. Subsection (c) would authorize the increase of drawdown and sales under subsection (b) in order to maximize the financial return to the United States taxpayers, but limits the drawdown and sales under this section to a maximum of $6,200,000,000 of revenue to the Treasury.

Sec. 32205—Repeal

Section 32205 would repeal Section 201 of the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015. Section 201 of the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015 required the U.S. Department of Agriculture to renegotiate the Standard Reinsurance Agreement by December 31, 2016, and would have placed a cap on the overall rate of return such that the target rate of return did not exceed 8.9 percent of the retained premium.

Sec. 32301—Interest Overpayments

Section 32301 strikes the requirement that the Office of National Resources Revenue (ONRR) pay interest on overpayments. ONRR, which is part of the Department of the Interior, believes that some lessees overpay deliberately in order to engage in ''banking with ONRR'' and that the ONRR interest rate is in some cases greater than that offered by other interest earning mechanisms. This provision is part of the President's FY 2016 budget. Offset estimate: $300 million.

Section 32401—Budgetary Effects

HOUSE AMENDMENT

The House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 contains no provisions compared to the Senate position.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Section 80001 of the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 provides the budgetary effects to be entered into the PAYGO scorecard maintained pursuant to section 4(d) of the Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010 (Public Law 111–139) shall be determined by the submission printed for the Congressional Record by the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

CONFERENCE SUBSTITUTE

The conference substituteprovides that the budgetary effects of this Act shall not be entered on either PAYGO scorecard maintained pursuant to section 4(d) of the Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010 (Public Law 111–139).

DIVISION D—MISCELLANEOUS

TITLE XLI—FEDERAL PERMITTING IMPROVEMENTS

Title XLI of the conference report seeks to make more efficient the process for federal approval for major infrastructure projects. It creates a council composed of the relevant permitting agencies to establish best practices and model timelines for review, designate individuals within agencies with primary responsibility for coordinating reviews and agency decisions, and shorten the time in which challenges can be made to final decisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

TITLE XLII—ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

Title XLII directs the GAO to study the payments made to vendors of kerosene that is used in noncommercial aviation and submit the results of that study in a report to Congress.

TITLE XLIII—REQUIREMENTS REGARDING RULE MAKINGS

The House amendment includes a provision requiring that for any publication in the Federal Register pertaining to a rule required pursuant to this Act, the agency making the rule shall include the information that the rule is based upon, including data and studies, and indicate how the public can access that information online.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XLIV—PAYMENTS TO CERTIFIED STATES AND INDIAN TRIBES

In the Moving Ahead for Progress in the 21st Century Act (MAP–21), payments based upon Abandoned Mine Land (AML) funds set forth in the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 due to certified states were capped at $15,000,000.00 annually, regardless of the amounts actually due to those certified states. The amounts due the certified states in excess of the $15,000,000.00 were used as offsets for different purposes. In certain instances, the $15,000,000.00 payments were insufficient to meet the amounts certified states were owed by the Federal government. This provision requires payment of those excess funds owed by the Federal government to those certified states, but not paid.

DIVISION E—EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES

Division E reauthorizes and reforms the Export-Import Bank of the United States. There was no disagreement between the Senate amendment and the House amendment.

DIVISION F—ENERGY SECURITY

Sec. 61001—Emergency Preparedness for Energy Supply Disruptions

Section 61001 would include the finding that recent natural disasters have underscored the importance of having resilient oil and natural gas infrastructure and effective ways for industry and government to communicate to address energy supply disruptions. This section also would direct the Secretary of Energy to develop and adopt procedures to enhance communication and coordination between the Department of Energy (DOE), Federal partners, State and local government, and the private sector to improve emergency response and recovery.

Sec. 61002—Resolving Environmental and Grid Reliability Conflicts

Section 61002 would resolve conflicts between orders issued pursuant to the Federal Power Act and compliance with environmental laws and regulations. Administration of section 202(c) has led owners of electric generating units (EGUs) to conclude that they can be forced to choose between complying with an emergency order from DOE under that section or violating an obligation imposed by environmental laws or regulations. Left unresolved, therefore, the current statutory structure presents the potential for conflicting legal mandates that could threaten the reliability of the grid.

To ensure that EGUs and other facilities critical to electric reliability are available for service as needed and to remove the potential for conflict between obligations imposed by law, section 61002 would amend section 202(c) of the FPA to clarify that when a party is under an emergency directive to operate pursuant to section 202(c), it would not be deemed in violation of environmental laws or regulations or subject to civil or criminal liability, or citizen enforcement actions, as a result of actions taken that are necessary to comply with a DOE-issued emergency order. The section further provides that after an initial order, not to exceed 90 days duration, DOE may renew or reissue an order for subsequent 90-day periods as it determines necessary. However, in renewing or reissuing any such order, DOE must consult with the primary federal agency with expertise in the environmental interest protected by a potentially conflicting environmental law and include in such order conditions determined by such agency to be necessary to minimize any adverse environmental impacts that may result from such order, to the extent practicable. DOE may exclude such a condition from the renewed or reissued order if it determines that such condition would prevent the order from adequately addressing the emergency necessitating such order and provides in the order, or otherwise makes publicly available, an explanation of such determination.

Sec. 61003—Critical Electric Infrastructure Security

Section 61003 would establish a new section 215A of the Federal Power Act that would provide the Secretary of Energy with the authority to address grid security emergencies if the President provides a written directive or determination identifying a grid security emergency. The Secretary would be authorized to take emergency measures to protect the bulk power system or defense critical electric infrastructure located in the contiguous 48 States and the District of Columbia, including ordering critical electric infrastructure owners and operators to take appropriate actions, with such measures to expire no later than fifteen days from issuance. The new section 215A would also facilitate the protection and voluntary sharing of critical electric infrastructure information between private sector asset owners and the Federal government by: (1) exempting designated Critical Electric Infrastructure Information from certain Federal and State disclosure laws for a period up to 5 years; (2) requiring FERC to facilitate voluntary information sharing between Federal, State, local and tribal authorities, the Electric Reliability Organization, regional entities, and owners, operators and users of the bulk-power system in the U.S.; and (3) establishing sanctions for the unauthorized disclosure of shared information.

Section 61003 would also codify DOE as the Sector-Specific Agency for cyber security for the energy sector and specify DOE's duties with regard to that role.

Sec. 61004—Strategic Transformer Reserve

Section 61004 would require DOE to submit a plan to Congress evaluating the feasibility of establishing a Strategic Transformer Reserve for the storage, in strategically-located facilities, of spare large power transformers and emergency mobile substations in sufficient numbers to temporarily replace critically damaged large power transformers and substations. Strategically-located spare large power transformers and emergency mobile substations would diminish the vulnerability of the United States to multiple risks facing electric grid reliability, including physical attack, cyber-attack, electromagnetic pulse, geomagnetic disturbances, severe weather, and seismic events.

Sec. 61005—Energy Security Evaluation

Section 61005 would direct the Secretary of Energy, in collaboration with the Secretary of State, to establish U.S. energy security valuation methods to ensure that energy-related actions that significantly affect the supply, distribution, or use of energy are evaluated with respect to their potential impact on energy security, including their impact on consumers and the economy; energy supply, diversity and resiliency; well-functioning and competitive energy markets; United States trade balance; and national security objectives.

DIVISION G—FINANCIAL SERVICES

HOUSE AMENDMENT

Division G (Financial Services) of the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 22 is comprised of 15 titles that provide regulatory relief to facilitate capital formation, ensure greater consumer access to financial products and services, and provide for certain reforms relating to mint operations and housing. The titles within Division G are derived from measures passed by the House on a bipartisan basis in the 114th Congress.

Title LXXI—Improving Access to Capital for Emerging Growth Companies

Title LXXI makes changes related to the treatment of Emerging Growth Companies (EGCs), as defined by the Jumpstart Our Business Startups Act (JOBS Act). Specifically, this title reduces the number of days an EGC must have a confidential registration statement on file with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) before it may conduct a ''road show'' from 21 days to 15 days. Title LXXI also clarifies that an issuer that was an EGC at the time it filed a confidential registration statement but is no longer an EGC will continue to be treated as an EGC through the date of its IPO. Finally, Title LXXI requires the SEC to revise its general instructions on Form S–1 regarding the financial information an issuer must disclose prior to its IPO. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXI by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXII—Disclosure Modernization and Simplification

Title LXXII directs the SEC to simplify its disclosure regime for issuers and investors by permitting issuers to submit a summary page on Form 10–K with cross-references to the content of the report. This title also directs the SEC to revise Regulation S–K to scale disclosure rules for EGCs and smaller issuers, and to eliminate duplicative, outdated, or unnecessary Regulation S–K disclosure requirements for all issuers. Finally, Title LXXII directs the SEC to further study Reg. S–K and engage in rulemaking to implement additional reforms to simplify and modernize Regulation S–K disclosure rules within 360 days of enactment of this title. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXII by voice vote on October 6, 2015.

Title LXXIII—Bullion and Collectible Coin Production Efficiency and Cost Savings

Title LXXIII eliminates a requirement for special packaging of gold investment-grade coins made by the United States Mint, allows the Mint to purchase blanks for silver coins made of standard coinage silver instead of a custom silver alloy, and removes the requirement for an already-completed study leading to the Mint issuing investment-grade coins of palladium. This title also allows for the collector version of the 30th anniversary American Eagle Siler Bullion Coin to be edge-lettered to denote such anniversary. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXIII by voice vote on June 24, 2015.

Title LXXIV—SBIC Advisers Relief

Title LXXIV amends the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 to reduce unnecessary regulatory costs and eliminate duplicative regulation of advisers to Small Business Investment Companies (SBICs). This title preempts state registration requirements of advisers solely advising SBIC funds, allows advisers to venture capital funds to continue to be ''exempt reporting advisers'' if they also advise an SBIC fund, and prevents the inclusion of the assets of an SBIC fund in the SEC registration calculation of assets under management for those advisers that advise private funds in addition to SBIC funds. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXIV by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXV—Eliminate Privacy Notice Confusion

Title LXXV amends the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act to reduce confusion among consumers that can occur when they receive annual privacy notices by clarifying that annual privacy notices are only required when disclosure policies change after the relationship begins, and to the extent an institution shares sensitive personal information with third parties for marketing purposes. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXV by voice vote on April 13, 2015.

Title LXXVI—Reforming Access for Investments in Startup Enterprises

Title LXXVI amends Section 4 of the Securities Act of 1933 to facilitate the sale of company-issued securities by employees of private companies. Under current law, a holder of securities issued in a private placement may resell the securities on a public market after a holding period. However, there is not a legal framework providing for the private resale of such securities. Accordingly, this title establishes a legal framework for such transactions. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXVI by a vote of 404–0 on October 6, 2015.

Title LXXVII—Preservation Enhancement and Savings Opportunity

Title LXXVII amends the Low Income Housing Preservation and Resident Homeownership Act of 1990 (LIHPRHA) to permit property owners (including nonprofits) of multifamily developments subsidized by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to access income derived from such developments provided that the owners adhere to HUD's affordability and compliance standards. This title also provides for certain reforms under LIHPRHA relating to obtaining or refinancing a loan secured by a low-income housing project. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXVII by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXVIII—Tenant Income Verification Relief

Title LXXVIII permits HUD to allow public and assisted housing administrators to verify income once every three years—instead of annually—for low-income tenants that have fixed incomes, such as incomes derived from social security payments. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXVIII by voice vote on March 24, 2015.

Title LXXVIX—Housing Assistance Efficiency

Title LXXVIX amends the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act to allow a private nonprofit organization to administer permanent housing rental assistance provided through the Continuum of Care Program under the Act. This title also requires that the HUD Secretary reallocate, at least once during each fiscal year, any housing assistance provided from the Emergency Solutions Grants Program that is unused or returned, or that becomes available after the minimum allocation requirements under the Act. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXVIX by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXX—Child Support Assistance

Title LXXX amends the Fair Credit Reporting Act to eliminate the requirement that state and local child support agencies and courts notify an obligor ten days before retrieving a consumer report for purposes of determining the appropriate level of child support payments, or enforcing a child support order, award, agreement, or judgment. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXX by voice vote on October 6, 2015.

Title LXXXI—Private Investment in Housing

Title LXXXI authorizes the HUD Secretary to establish a demonstration program under which the Secretary may enter into budget-neutral, performance-based agreements (for up to 12 years each) that result in a reduction in energy or water costs with appropriate entities. Specifically, such agreements shall facilitate energy or water conservation improvements at up to 20,000 residential units in multifamily buildings participating in Section 8 rental assistance programs, supportive housing for the elderly, or supportive housing for people with disabilities. This title mirrors a request by the Administration in its 2015 Budget proposal. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXI by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXXII—Capital Access for Small Community Financial Institutions

Title LXXXII amends the Federal Home Loan Bank Act to allow privately insured credit unions to be eligible for membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank (FHLB) System. In order to be eligible for membership, a privately insured credit union must receive a certification from its state supervisor stating that it is eligible to apply for Federal deposit insurance. Additionally, the private insurer of the credit union must provide a copy of the credit union's annual audit report to the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA) and the Federal Housing Finance Agency. Further, a state supervisor must provide to the NCUA, upon request, the results of any examination and reports concerning a private insurer of credit unions licensed in that state. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXII by voice vote on April 13, 2015.

Title LXXXIII—Small Bank Exam Cycle Reform

Title LXXXIII amends the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to increase the qualifying asset threshold for insured depository institutions eligible for 18-month on-site examination cycles from $500 million to $1 billion. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXIII by a vote of 411–0 on October 6, 2015.

Title LXXXIV—Small Company Simple Registration

Title LXXXIV simplifies the registration process by amending the SEC's Form S–1 registration statement, which is the basic registration form for new securities offerings, to allow smaller reporting companies to incorporate by reference any documents filed with the SEC after the effective date of the Form S–1. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXIV by a vote of 426–0 on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXXV—Holding Company Registration Threshold Equalization

Title LXXXV amends Title VI of the JOBS Act to raise the threshold for mandatory SEC registration of savings and loan companies from 500 shareholders of record to 2,000 shareholders of record (with no limitation on the number of non-accredited investors) and to raise the threshold for a savings and loan company to terminate its registration from 300 to 1,200 shareholders of record. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXV by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment to H.R. 22 contains no provisions comparable to the House position.

CONFERENCE SUBSTITUTE

The Senate recedes from its position and concurs in the House position with certain modifications. Specifically, the conference substitute consists of the above-described fifteen titles, as adopted by the House without further modification, and five additional titles providing for regulatory relief and related financial services reforms. These five titles are the following:

Title LXXXVI—Repeal of Indemnification Requirements

Title LXXXVI amends the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Commodity Exchange Act to repeal the indemnification requirements added by the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act for regulatory authorities to obtain access to swap data. Foreign regulators and regulatory entities have indicated concerns regarding the indemnification requirements of Dodd-Frank. The title removes such requirements so data can be shared with foreign authorities. The title would still require the regulatory agencies requesting the information to agree to certain confidentiality requirements prior to receiving the data. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXVI by voice vote on July 14, 2015.

Title LXXXVII—Treatment of Debt or Equity Instruments of Smaller Institutions

Title LXXXVII amends the Financial Stability Act of 2010 to adjust the date on which consolidated assets are determined for purposes of exempting certain instruments of smaller institutions from capital deductions. The purpose of this title is to provide regulatory relief from the requirements of Section 171 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act to certain bank holding companies with less than $15 billion in assets. The title permits bank holding companies to continue counting hybrid capital instruments issued before May 19, 2010, as Tier 1 capital so long as the company held less than $15 billion in assets as of either December 31, 2009 or March 31, 2010.

Title LXXXIII—State Licensing Efficiency

Title LXXXIII amends the Secure and Fair Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008 (SAFE Act) by directing the Attorney General to provide appropriate state officials responsible for regulating financial service providers with access to criminal history information to the extent that criminal history background checks are required under state law for the licensing of such parties. In 2006, the states, under the auspices of the Conference of State Bank Supervisors (CSBS), developed the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLS). According to CSBS, the NMLS platform was designed to provide ''improved coordination and information sharing among regulators, increased efficiencies for industry, and enhanced consumer protection.'' Congress codified the NMLS in 2008 through the SAFE Act. Title LXXXIII is intended to authorize the NMLS to process criminal background checks for non-depository licensees beyond mortgage loan originators. The House passed legislation identical to the provisions contained in Title LXXXIII by voice vote on October 28, 2015.

Title LXXXIX—Helping Expand Lending Practices in Rural Communities

Title LXXXIX amends the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act to require the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection (Bureau) to create a petition process for interested parties to apply for an area not designated by the Bureau as rural for purposes of federal consumer financial law to be so designated. Under this title, the Bureau is required to publish applications in the Federal Register within 60 days and make them available for public comment for no fewer than 90 days. When evaluating the application, the Bureau would be required to take into consideration:

Criteria used by the U.S. Census Bureau when classifying geographical areas as rural or urban;

Criteria used by the Office of Management and Budget when designating counties as metropolitan or micropolitan or neither;

Criteria used by the Department of Agriculture when determining property eligibility for rural development programs;

The Department of Agriculture rural-urban commuting area codes;

A written opinion of the State banking regulator; and Population density.

Title LXXXIX further requires the Bureau to grant or deny any application within 90 days following the expiration of the comment period. The grant or denial must be published in the Federal Register, along with an explanation of what factors the Bureau relied upon in making the decision.

Title LXXXIX contains a rule of construction providing that the Bureau is not required to consider, in connection with the above-described evaluation, any previous designation of the area as non-rural by certain other Federal agencies. Title LXXXIX also includes a sunset provision providing that the designation review process established under such title shall cease to have force or effect after the end of the two-year period beginning on the date of the title's enactment. In addition, Title LXXXIX amends the Truth in Lending Act to provide the Bureau with authority to treat a balloon loan as a ''qualified mortgage'' if such loan was extended by any creditor operating in rural or underserved areas, even if the creditor does not operate predominantly in such areas. Finally, Title LXXXIX provides expanded authority for the Bureau to exempt creditors serving rural or underserved areas from requirements applicable to escrow and impound accounts relating to certain consumer credit transactions. The House passed legislation substantially similar to the provisions contained in Title LXXXIX by a vote of 401–1 on April 13, 2015.

ADVISORY OF EARMARKS

Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, it shall not be in order to consider in the House of Representative a conference report to accompany a bill or joint resolution unless the joint explanatory statement includes a list of congressional earmarks, limited tax benefits, or limited tariff benefits as defined in clause 9(e), 9(f), and 9(g) of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives or a statement that the proposition contains no congressional earmarks, limited tax benefits, or limited tariff benefits. No provision in the conference report accompanying H.R. 22 includes an earmark, limited tax benefit, or limited tariff benefit under clause 9(e), 9(f), or 9(g) of rule XXI.

From the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, for consideration of the House amendment and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference.

PROVIDING FOR CONGRESSIONAL DISAPPROVAL OF A RULE SUBMITTED BY THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 539, I call up the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 23) providing for congressional disapproval under chapter 8 of title 5, United States Code, of a rule submitted by the Environmental Protection Agency relating to ''Standards of Performance for Greenhouse Gas Emissions from New, Modified, and Reconstructed Stationary Sources: Electric Utility Generating Units'', and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 539, the joint resolution is considered read.

The text of the joint resolution is as follows:

S.J. RES. 23

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Congress disapproves the rule submitted by the Environmental Protection Agency relating to ''Standards of Performance for Greenhouse Gas Emissions from New, Modified, and Reconstructed Stationary Sources: Electric Utility Generating Units'' (published at 80 Fed. Reg. 64510 (October 23, 2015)), and such rule shall have no force or effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution shall be debatable for 1 hour, equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on S.J. Res. 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Today, we will debate resolutions of disapproval under the Congressional Review Act for the two EPA rules regulating greenhouse gas emissions from new and existing electric generating units.

I might say that it is appropriate that we are debating these resolutions today. As we know, the President and other leaders are meeting in France as we speak. They are speaking in generalities; they are not being detailed in their plans. Yet, in America, we are becoming aware more each day of exactly the impact the EPA's regulations are having on the American people.

I remind everyone that Congress was not a part of any of this. The White House did not talk to us about any of this. The clean energy plan comes from the White House and is being implemented by the EPA.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. MULLIN).

Mr. MULLIN. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to encourage Members to support these resolutions.

In 1996, Congress passed and the President signed into law an important tool for ensuring our three branches of government stay true to the vision of our Founding Fathers that was set over 200 years ago. Today, we are here to use this tool to rein in a President who has forgotten that the legislative branch makes the laws and that the executive branch enforces them.

The final rules regarding emissions from new and existing power plants are a clear executive overreach. In issuing these rules, the EPA has acted outside the authority it was granted by Congress in the Clean Air Act.

Electricity generation has always been the responsibility of States, but with these rules the President is threatening communities, businesses, and families by attempting to put the Federal Government in charge. These rules are unworkable, and they put the reliability of our electric grid at risk.

I ask my colleagues to seriously consider the consequences of allowing such clear executive overreach to stand, and I urge them to support this resolution of disapproval.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong opposition to this resolution, and I oppose the other resolution that we will also consider this afternoon.

Once again, Republicans are attempting to stop any action by this administration to reduce carbon emissions, and, once again, the opponents of the EPA's regulations have no constructive alternative to offer that would improve the environmental performance of the electricity sector.

In fact, this week, the House of Representatives will not only consider these two unnecessary, ill-conceived resolutions, but it will also consider an energy bill that is dedicated to rolling back gains that have been made in energy efficiency, grid modernization, and renewable energy.

Mr. Speaker, governments and many of the world's largest private sector companies are gathered in Paris this week. They are putting forward innovative ideas, and they are making commitments to forge a different energy path—one that will prevent us from further overheating the Earth and causing major disruptions to people's lives, their property, and the global economy.

We know that climate change is harming us today through droughts, fires, floods, and storms, and we know that it will endanger our children's future if we don't act now.

Some of the opposition to these resolutions is based on the assertion that they will not solve the world's carbon emissions problems or ensure that we will avoid increased warming and catastrophic climate change, but that is not true. Reducing carbon pollution from the power sector through the implementation of performance standards for new power plants and improving the overall environmental performance of our grid will reduce carbon emissions here in the United States.

By making a commitment to this effort and demonstrating that reducing pollution is consistent with maintaining a reliable, resilient electricity supply, the United States exercises its leadership, giving assurance to other nations to follow our example.

This resolution and its companion will block the EPA and this administration from taking prudent steps to reduce carbon pollution from one of the highest emitting sectors, the power sector.

That is not all. The Congressional Review Act stipulates that the passage of a resolution to block a final rule also bars the Agency from issuing any rules that are substantially similar. So these resolutions prevent any future administration from developing similar rules to control carbon emissions from power plants.

The irony is that this sector already is poised to make many of the changes that are contained within these EPA rules. These changes are being driven by a combination of factors, only one of which is Federal regulation. State policies, changes in the relative price of natural gas and coal, smart grid technologies, consumer demand, and the further expansion of wind and solar generation all are factors that are reshaping the grid and redefining relationships within the electricity sector.

Instead of trying to hold back these forces, we should be helping States, local governments, consumers, grid operators, utilities, and displaced workers to make this transition easier.

Every significant effort to improve air quality through the Clean Air Act regulations has met the same tired, old arguments from the GOP—that it will cost too much, that it will jeopardize the reliability of our electricity system, that we don't have the technology to meet these new standards. Every time these dire predictions by my Republican colleagues are put forward, they have failed to materialize.

We have already had delayed action on climate change, Mr. Speaker, for too long. The EPA's rules to set greenhouse gas emissions standards for new and reconstructed generating units is an essential first step toward a more sustainable energy future. This rule sends a strong signal to the market in favor of technologies that provide improved environmental performance.

These EPA rules—this one and the one that will be mentioned later today—should move forward, and this joint resolution should be defeated. I urge a ''no'' vote on the resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

We are taking this action today to protect the American people. The American people do not expect unelected bureaucrats, acting at the discretion and the direction of the President of the United States, to unilaterally adopt regulations that are questionably illegal.

We have 23 States that are filing lawsuits on the new coal plant rules, and we have 27 States that have already filed lawsuits on the existing electric generating rules. I might add that, in the last 5 years, this administration has spent a total of $77 billion on climate change.

People ask why we have not taken action. This administration has been so extreme, so aggressive—and view this as the number one priority facing mankind—that we don't have enough money to act. Also, there are 61 separate Federal programs under the Obama administration that address climate change.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Indiana (Mrs. BROOKS).

Mrs. BROOKS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, back in October I had the opportunity to attend the Indiana Industrial Energy Consumers annual conference in Indianapolis. There I heard from stakeholders across the energy supply chain about the serious economic and reliability issues emanating from the EPA Clean Power Plan.

For instance, John Hughes with the Electricity Consumers Resource Council presented findings showing that Indiana alone stands to lose 12,500 jobs because of these rules. This comes on top of the previous Obama administration regulations that have severely restricted my State's economic competitiveness and has dramatically increased electricity bills for Hoosiers.

In fact, Indiana's electric rates have gone from the fifth lowest in the Nation in 2003 to the twenty-sixth lowest in 2014. When these rules take effect, electricity rates in my State will continue to climb to the tune of up to 20 percent each year.

As a result, Hoosier manufacturers, who drive more than 30 percent of our economy, will be forced to shutter assembly lines and lay off employees simply to pay their utility bills.

Congress needs to think about the very real consequences of this, even if the EPA and the Obama administration are not thinking about this. The EPA Clean Power Plan means lost jobs, lost economic growth, and higher utility costs for both individuals and businesses.

That is why I strongly support both of the bills before us, which put an end to the executive overreach, protect the American ratepayer, and allow us to truly pursue an all-of-the-above energy strategy that will transform our economy and lay that strong foundation for our energy future.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. JUDY CHU).

Ms. JUDY CHU of California. Mr. Speaker, this week something historic is happening. Leaders from 195 countries are meeting in Paris to discuss a global solution to a global problem: climate change.

There is no denying it anymore. Climate change is real. Human activity is contributing to it. Without action, the results will be catastrophic.

Yet, while the nations of the world gather in agreement and concern, what are the House Republicans doing? They are rejecting science and reversing what progress we have made.

These disapproval resolutions effectively gut EPA's Clean Power Plan and carbon pollution standards for power plants. By attacking the EPA, Republicans are opening the smokestacks to release more of the dangerous emissions we know contribute to global warming. This is reckless.

Not only do these resolutions ignore the warnings of the scientific community by reversing progress, they also block the EPA from issuing any standards in the future that are substantially similar. Republicans must accept that our country is evolving.

In fact, many States are already running on an increasing amount of renewable energy, reducing energy waste, and decreasing carbon pollution. My own State of California has set a goal of 50 percent renewable energy by 2030, and others are developing their own plans to meet pollution reduction targets.

Each new goal towards a cleaner environment only encourages the investments and innovations that will help get us there. That is a benefit to our economy and our world, which is why two-thirds of Americans support a climate change pact.

It is time we listen to our constituents, to the vast majority of scientists and experts, and to the tens of thousands of world leaders, experts, and advocates who are seeking a path toward a sustainable future for our children and grandchildren.

I oppose these resolutions and these reckless attacks on our environment.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I might say that no one on our side of the aisle has denied climate change. I think we still live in a country where we all can express our views and we simply disagree with the President on the urgency of the issue. The President has even told the world that climate change is a more pressing issue to mankind than terrorism.

When we talk to people in the developing world, when we talk to people in Europe and around the globe, representatives come here and they stress to us that they are more concerned about clean water, a job, electricity, health, hygiene, issues like that, than they are about climate change.

Even in the polls here in America, only about 5 percent of the American people view climate change as one of the most pressing issues facing mankind. So that is why we have over 180 separate groups around the country that support these joint resolutions to turn back what President Obama is doing in an extreme and unprecedented way.

I would also just like to read that the Partnership for a Better Energy Future, which is a 181-member coalition, including national as well as State and local organizations in 36 States, writes of EPA's rule for new plants, which is precisely what we are discussing today: The EPA set a regulation so strict that the only technology that meets the requirement for a coal-fired power plant, carbon capture and sequestration is not commercially available.

There is no technology available to meet the stringent emissions standard set by EPA. Yet, China, India, and every other country in the world can build a new coal plant if they decide to do so.

We are not mandating that a plant be built, but we are recognizing the increased need for electricity in America and that it must be affordable and it must be abundant. For us to compete in the global marketplace, we simply want that option, and that is what this is about.

I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CARTER).

Mr. CARTER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S.J. Res. 23, which disapproves of the EPA's carbon standard rules for power plants.

Our country is blessed with an abundance of energy sources. Reliable, affordable, and secured energy is critical to our national security, and a diverse energy portfolio adds to our strength.

While new technologies have allowed us to tap into sustainable sources of energy, we lack the infrastructure to use that energy nationwide. Clean coal, natural gas, and nuclear produce the bulk of America's energy for a reason. They are affordable, reliable, and the most available.

The carbon capture and storage technologies mandated by this rule are not commercially viable. Make no mistake. The EPA is seeking to ban the construction of any new fossil fuel power plants and severely limit the production of the others. With its companion rule on greenhouse gases, the EPA will simultaneously force the closure of many existing power plants.

Until alternative sources of energy are affordable and available from coast to coast, we must ensure that Americans can continue to affordably light and heat their homes. Under this rule, we will be unable to achieve this.

I urge my colleagues to protect families and the economy by supporting this bill.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just have to say, I listened to my colleague from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD), who I respect a great deal. I think he is suggesting that somehow the Republicans on our committee or maybe the leadership in the House do want to address climate change.

Every time that I have tried in the committee to bring up the issue of climate change, nothing has happened. We haven't had a hearing. We haven't had a bill. We haven't had any initiative since I have been on the committee, let alone served as the ranking member, in the last year—any initiative—that would address the issue of climate change.

So when my colleague from Kentucky says, ''Well, we are not denying that this exists. We just don't think it is a priority,'' well, it is not only not a priority. It is not something we have addressed at all in any way anytime the Democrats or myself have tried to raise this issue.

To suggest that it shouldn't be a priority—and maybe that is not what he is saying, but it sounded that way—well, I come from a district where we had Hurricane Sandy that devastated our district. We have droughts in California—we were just discussing it with my California colleagues who will be speaking soon—and all kinds of weather extremes that are causing all kinds of problems—loss of jobs, destruction around the country that has to be made up for later by FEMA and other Federal agencies that come in and spend billions of dollars to try to correct these problems. To suggest that this is not a priority I think is wrong. To suggest that somehow maybe the Republicans are dealing with it is simply not the case.

Again, I know you don't particularly like the President's power plan, but at least he is trying to do something. I don't see the GOP addressing this at all.

I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. TED LIEU).

Mr. TED LIEU of California. Mr. Speaker, I am Congressman TED LIEU from California. I rise in opposition to the Republican resolution opposing the Clean Power Plan.

This is just another example of the Republican majority denying the urgency and severity of carbon pollution. At a time when the entire world is meeting in Paris to address carbon pollution, you now have the Republican majority doing exactly the opposite.

Now, America is an exceptional country, the best in the world. One reason we got here is because we believe in science. We believe in facts.

So if 9 out of 10 doctors said that your child is showing the symptoms of diabetes, would you ignore that and keep feeding your child doughnuts? No. You would go seek treatment.

So listen to 9 out of 10 scientists that are saying carbon pollution is real and it is going to kill us as a species if we don't do anything about it.

If you don't want to listen to those scientists, listen to some of the most conservative companies and organizations in America. Listen to ExxonMobil today. They say carbon pollution is real, it is being caused by humankind, and they support putting a price on carbon emissions.

Listen to the U.S. military. I served in Active Duty, and I am still in the Reserves. I am very proud of our military. They take the world as it is, not as they think it should be, not as they hope it will be, but as it is. They rely on facts and science.

They are telling us carbon pollution is a national security threat and it is going to flood our bases, it is going to cause more extreme weather events, and it is going to make it much worse for humanity if we don't do something about it.

At the end of the day, America is going to lead and the history books are going to say we led the way in saving humanity and dealing with carbon pollution or there will be no history books.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DUNCAN).

Mr. DUNCAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I wish President Obama took the threat of radical Islamic jihadists as seriously as he takes the pseudo science behind the manmade climate change threat.

Folks, these EPA rules affect jobs and they affect the amount of money in the pockets of moms and dads all across this great country. Now, transportation fuel costs are down for moms and dads, but the power to heat and cool their homes, the power to run the engines of the economy—the cost of that power has gone up because of the EPA regulations and rule writing that we have seen.

What does that mean? Well, wholesale electricity prices in South Carolina will spike as high as 13.9 percent. Households will pay as much as $84.19 more a year. Industrial customers will pay as much as $40,200 more a year just in South Carolina. It will cause 11,700 manufacturing jobs to be impacted.

Since 2012, 27 coal mining companies with core operations in West Virginia have filed for bankruptcy protection. But you know what? The TPP trade deal will allow West Virginia coal and Wyoming coal to be shipped to China to be burned. Now, where is the hypocrisy in that?

Let me tell you this: We rely on 24/7, always on, baseload power to run the engines of our society to heat and cool our homes. We can't do that with intermittent solar and wind. You can do that with nuclear, hydro, and fossil-fuel-fired power plants.

Think about the morality of 24/7 baseload power. That means the incubators in the hospitals are there to provide the incubation for the preemie children. That means that you can keep food from spoiling. That means you can heat your homes with some sort of source that doesn't cause pollution inside your home like it does, say, in Latin America or Africa, where they are burning wood or coal.

We have the ability through nuclear, hydro, and through fossil-fuel-fired power plants to provide that 24/7 baseload power. You can't do it with regulations that continue to kill the industry. You can't do it with intermittent energy sources like wind and solar. These regulations and these rules, written because of those regulations, are killing job creation in this country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HULTGREN). Without objection, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) will control the time on behalf of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

There was no objection.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS). She serves as a member of the Subcommittee on Environment and the Economy. She is an outspoken voice for defending the environment and calling for our sound stewardship of the environment.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in unwavering opposition to these resolutions which deny the real effects of climate change and express opposition to our Nation's effort to address it.

These resolutions are particularly embarrassing because they come at a time when the rest of the world is coming together in Paris to identify solutions to climate change. There is overwhelming consensus around the globe that climate change is one of the most critical issues facing our world, not just for the environment, but for human health and for our local economies.

Our climate is changing. Our actions are emitting the greenhouse gasses that are contributing to this problem. Climate change is threatening public health, people's livelihoods, and the very environment that we live in.

While we should be determining a course forward to protect our constituents and safeguard our planet for generations to come, we are instead sending a signal to the rest of the world of willful negligence and disregard. Instead of arguing about whether the climate is changing, which it is, or if we are responsible, which we are, it is high time that we work together to determine solutions.

The new source carbon pollution standards and the Clean Power Plan will not solve all of the problems associated with greenhouse gasses, but it is a necessary step in the right direction. In addition to enacting meaningful change to curb emissions from the power sector, which is the largest source of greenhouse gas emissions in this country, these regulations also send a signal to people across America and across the world that we are working to address this broader issue.

Curbing carbon emissions from new and existing power plants in the country signifies that we are serious about working toward a cleaner, healthier future.

In addition to providing for a healthier environment for current and future generations, these regulations are important for both our public health and our business community alike. EPA's carbon regulations will lead to billions of dollars of public health benefits, potentially averting thousands of premature deaths and tens of thousands of asthma attacks in children.

The private sector has also stressed the need to take action because they understand the long-term costs and benefits. Businesses understand the economic consequences of inaction, that they are severe, and that we need to prepare for climate change today. They know the regulations are projected to create over 300,000 new clean energy jobs.

On the central coast of California, my congressional district, we have seen firsthand how important the jobs associated with the clean energy technologies are. Renewable energy projects in my district have created hundreds of new jobs, and provide enough energy for over 100,000 homes.

Instead, here we are today, debating and voting on resolutions of disapproval that deny these facts and show again the willingness of the majority to bury its head in the sand when faced with the need for action on climate change.

Just a few months ago, we all sat in this Chamber together as the Pope spoke of our world's most pressing challenges. In that speech, he reminded us that it is our moral obligation to respond to climate change. I couldn't agree more. We must band together to enact meaningful and lasting change for our people and our planet. I urge my colleagues to oppose these resolutions.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

One of the great things about having a debate in this body is that we all get to express our different views, and the world benefits when different views can be expressed.

One of the reasons that we brought these resolutions to the House floor today is because of the climate change conference in France going on today. We want the world to know that there is disagreement with the President on this issue, not about the fact that the climate is changing, but about the priority that is being placed on it.

Why should this President penalize America and put us in jeopardy compared to other countries of the world and require us to do more than other countries of the world are doing just so that he can go to France and claim to be the world leader on climate change?

According to the Energy Information Administration, energy-related CO_2 emissions in America will remain below 2005 levels through 2040. Our CO_2 emissions today are roughly the same as they were 20 years ago. America does not have to take a backseat to anyone on addressing climate change. That is the point that we want the world to understand. We are doing a lot. We would like to help other countries do more, but why should we be penalized?

At this time, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, you have heard the facts from the gentleman from Kentucky just now. What we are dealing with here on the other side is an ideology.

Today I rise in support of the two resolutions that work to keep electricity affordable and reliable for Americans. S.J. Res. 23 and S.J. Res. 24 are a response to harmful regulations established by the EPA under the President's Clean Power Plan. The EPA's regulations implement the first-ever caps on carbon emissions, which will result in higher energy costs for American families, businesses, and consumers. Some experts have said that the Clean Power Plan could be the most expensive regulation ever imposed on Americans.

Congress must protect Americans from legacy-driven agendas that trample the rights of our citizens, hurt our economy, and hinder job growth. These two resolutions work to provide protection for existing and future American power plants and safeguard Americans from higher energy costs.

The Senate has already passed this legislation. As the people's House, it is imperative that we vote to protect Americans from these destructive regulations.

I will continue to fight against the EPA's power grab. That is why I strongly support these two pieces of legislation.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for our colleague from Kentucky. However, when he talks about being in disagreement with the President of the United States, I should point out also that he is in disagreement with 97 percent of the scientist community that professes that we need to do something tremendously strong in response to climate change.

In regard to our role in this whole arena, putting ourselves at a competitive disadvantage, one of the responsibilities that befalls the leading nation like the United States is that, in fact, we must be that inspiration that inspires the international community. We have been able to bring some 150 countries to the fold to speak to their efforts of climate change, and we have inspired efforts from major nations like that of China, Brazil, and Mexico so as to begin that process.

When I met in my office with representatives from the EU—I think there were 13 nations represented—they all wanted to know where the giant was on this issue. The world is looking to the United States for its leadership, and that is a role that we should not take lightly, and it is one that we should move forward with in bold fashion.

With that being said, I now yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCNERNEY), who has been an outstanding voice on the Subcommittee on Environment and the Economy.

Mr. MCNERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose S.J. Res. 23 and S.J. Res. 24.

Frankly, this effort to deny climate change reminds me of the 50-plus votes we have taken to try to eliminate the Affordable Care Act.

As a global leader, we must reduce carbon emissions. To simply ignore our responsibility is misguided and will harm generations to come. We can't solve climate change by ourselves, but we must lead and be part of a larger effort.

I know that fossil fuels—and in particular, liquid fuels—will be needed in the years ahead, but we can still move toward a more efficient and sustainable energy system.

For example, I have actually had coal plants in my region shut down, shift to biomass, and become very successful while also benefiting the climate. I would also note that California is again leading the world in efforts to promote cleaner energy with a 50 percent renewable energy goal by 2050.

I represent part of the Central Valley, which has some of the worst air quality in the Nation. While this comes from a variety of sources, it impacts everyone. In an area that is already hurt economically, dirty air affects school- and workdays and disproportionately hurts children and other adults. This makes me more determined than ever to develop green energy.

This vote will again show that most or all House Republicans deny the obvious: climate change is taking place as a result of human activity. I expect that many of my Republican colleagues know and believe that climate change is real and is a long-term threat, and yet we are voting on these two resolutions today.

Lastly, one argument we hear is that the Clean Power Plan is administrative overreach and that it was never authorized by Congress. But this is exactly what the Clean Air Act does. The Supreme Court has ruled that carbon emissions can be regulated by the Clean Air Act.

I urge my colleagues to support our future, reject efforts that increase pollution, and oppose this measure.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining on both sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has 16½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York has 14½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. RATCLIFFE).

Mr. RATCLIFFE. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his leadership on this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, every day Washington hits the American people with more regulations that hurt families, but very few will hurt these families more than President Obama's so-called Clean Power Plan because, according to the U.S. Energy Information Agency, the average electricity cost for a Texas household each year is $1,800, which is already 26 percent higher than the national average. To put this in perspective, almost half of all Texans spend more than 15 percent of their annual household budget on energy costs alone.

To stand up for middle-income families, we have an obligation to fight for policies that will keep energy costs down. Unfortunately, the administration's new regulations do exactly the opposite, which is why I introduced resolutions to combat these regulations immediately after they were announced and garnered the support of cosponsors from 15 different States. Americans across every corner of this country are impacted by this administration's overregulatory zeal, and we have got to do everything we can to stop it.

The facts are clear. These regulations will shut down vital power plants across the country, costing thousands of hardworking Americans their jobs, and in the process driving up electricity costs for every American. To that point, the Electric Reliability Council of Texas anticipates that these regulations will increase retail power prices in Texas by up to 16 percent; and when family budgets are already stretched so thin, they simply can't afford this increase. In developing these regulations, the Obama administration once again has ignored everyday Americans and instead doubled down on its extreme ideological agenda.

Making matters worse, the EPA itself admits that these regulations come at a cost of anywhere between $5.1 billion and $8.4 billion in year 2030 alone.

What are the benefits of these regulations, you may ask? In exchange for crushing American families, losing American jobs at a cost of billions and billions of dollars, what profound effect will these regulations have on our environment?

Well, the scientific experts estimate that these regulations would only reduce the global temperature by one one-hundredth of a degree Fahrenheit and reduce sea levels by a mere two-tenths of 1 millimeter. Mr. Speaker, we simply can't let the Obama administration force Americans to sacrifice so much when even the most optimistic of calculations predict that the return would be negligible at best.

I urge my colleagues to support both pieces of legislation which are so critical to stopping these regulations dead in their tracks.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, there is much talk of the impact the President has on this issue and that it is a one-person force driving this country in a given direction, but a memo has been brought to my attention from Cassandra Carmichael, Executive Director of the National Religious Partnership for the Environment, and the faith-based community, which incorporates several faiths, who have written very strongly about their belief that we need to move forward with climate change action. They are disappointed in the lack of foresight and leadership reflected in these two resolutions. They make it abundantly clear that their communities are on the front lines of issues like health care, disaster relief, refugee resettlement, and development work. These are all issues that are somewhat connected in the external measurements of the fight on climate change.

They also talk about their beliefs that the Clean Power Plan is a solution that they have been advocating for over the course of many years, and that they believe that we can do this by assignment to the individual States, not imposing heavy economic pressure on some of our poorest neighborhoods, and that there is a way to be sound stewards of the environment and at the same time grow our economy.

I believe that it is a very powerful statement that should motivate all of us to think twice about our actions here, that we should move forward in a progressive fashion. They indicate God's creation is sacred and that we are called on to be responsible stewards of the gifts of creation while protecting our vulnerable neighbors. It doesn't get stronger than that.

So with that, I just think it needs to be brought into the discussion that it is not a one-person operation, a one-person show that is drawing us down this certain route of response to climate change but, rather, a large universe of support there that speaks to the wisdom of sound stewardship.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON), who is a passionate voice on behalf of the environment and economic recovery.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to oppose S.J. Res. 23 and 24, which constitute the latest salvo by my friends on the other side of the aisle attacking our Nation's commitment to cut carbon pollution and slow climate change.

Now, I do realize that some of us really don't care whether or not mankind's actions contribute to climate change. Some of us really don't care.

Some of us don't care to consider that 95 percent of scientists recognize that it is man's activities that are contributing to the astronomical rate of climate change that is occurring that has the potential to render our planet uninhabitable by human beings. You can laugh, you can smile, you can joke, but 95 percent of the scientists agree that if we continue along the same path that we are continuing along, it is the demise of humankind itself that is the end result.

Now, some say you can adapt. Well, what we should be adapting to is the reality of the fact that we can change this. We can make things better for our children. That is why 195 progressive-thinking leaders of 195 countries represented in Paris today—right now, as we speak—are working on this very profound issue that affects humankind.

And what are we here in Congress doing? We are trying to scuttle the plans that have been made by this country to try to reduce carbon pollution. We are trying to scuttle it. We are using the argument that it is too costly to the big businesses that are already making billions.

Don't you know that, regardless of the cost to the big businesses, they are going to transfer those costs on down to you and me? Well, I think the health of our babies, the health of our elderly, and our own health is something that most Americans are willing to pay for.

We have got to have leadership in this Congress. We can't allow ourselves to put our heads in the sand and let climate change just rape and pillage the world. 195 world leaders say that we can't do that. That is what they are working on now, today, and we should be supporting that effort.

Unfortunately, we are going in the wrong direction here in this particular body by trying to kill it. I don't know whether or not that is because President Obama represents this country. He has been the most mistreated President during my lifetime, certainly. I don't know whether or not it is the hatred for him that causes people to deny science. But whatever it is, let's get off of it. Let's do the right thing, and let's oppose these two resolutions.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I might say that this is really not a debate about science today. I have said repeatedly and most people have said, yes, we agree the climate is changing, but this is a debate about the solution and about the policies being advanced by this administration. That is why for both rules you have a total of 50 States and a multitude of other entities that have filed lawsuits—because we believe it is illegal. In fact, on the existing rule, which we will discuss in the next hour, EPA changed 30 years of its legal opinions, saying that they could not regulate under 111(d) the way they intend to do it now.

So I have the greatest respect for every Member of this body, and certainly those on the Energy and Power Subcommittee and the Energy and Commerce Committee, but I think it is important that we be able to have the debate. And that is what we are doing: showing how we disagree with the President's policies and his solutions.

I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. HURD), who has been involved on this issue.

Mr. HURD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the two disapproval resolutions that the House will consider today.

Mr. Speaker, many of our bellies are still full from Thanksgiving and now we are thinking about what we are going to buy our loved ones and family for Christmas. Let me tell you what families in Texas do not want for Christmas, and that is higher energy bills. But that is what we are going to get if EPA's proposed rules for new and existing power plants go into effect.

Many families in Texas are already living paycheck to paycheck. They are looking for ways to put a little extra aside so they can have a nice Christmas. But the EPA's rule for power plants will do more than just raise their electricity rates. Higher rates increase the cost of many other products and services that families need to buy.

During this weak economic recovery, families struggling to pay bills or still looking for good-paying jobs simply can't afford for their cost of living to go up. Folks in my district have had enough of this kind of executive overreach by the White House. They have had enough of the excessive red tape that just seems to keep on coming from Federal bureaucracies like the EPA. They know it destroys jobs and economic growth; and in this case, it also puts our national security at risk. This new red tape by the EPA will hamper American energy security, and American energy security is a critical component of American national security.

The EPA's plan is an unnecessary attempt to eliminate reliable and affordable energy. Let's help make sure our families, our veterans, and our senior citizens don't face higher energy bills. I encourage my colleagues to support S.J. Res. 23 and 24.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the policies, I believe that the many, many hearings on the many issues, in a way, provide for a doable, workable plan. But opposition to a policy or just saying ''no'' isn't public policy. It isn't a strong response. It isn't a substantive response. To just disagree with what is being offered here without having viable solutions, without addressing carbon emissions, without speaking to the nuances of greening up our power supplies and growing energy independence, we are failing to respond in an effective manner.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts (Ms. TSONGAS), a very strong voice and progressive voice for the environment, who is strong in her beliefs about climate change.

Ms. TSONGAS. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the misguided resolutions before the House that seek to block the Clean Power Plan and undermine United States global leadership on climate change.

Climate change is no longer an academic question for scientists to ponder. It is a very real crisis that, if left untouched, will cause irreparable harm to current and future generations.

Should the resolutions we are considering today become law, our country would be prevented from taking necessary steps to safeguard our future.

The Clean Power Plan calls for a 32 percent reduction in carbon dioxide emissions below 2005 levels by 2030 and sets individual goals for each State in order to meet this national standard. It is a reasonable, commonsense approach that gives States the flexibility to reduce carbon pollution with strategies that work best in their State while bolstering clean energy investments and economic development.

Efforts to block the Clean Power Plan not only ignore overwhelming scientific consensus—we only have to turn on the radio today to hear it time after time, moment after moment—but they ignore the global consensus that we must take action to address climate change.

Right now, leaders from over 190 countries are gathered in Paris to outline long-term strategies to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and stave off the worst impacts of climate change. While at the summit, President Obama personally met with other heads of state, including the leaders of China and India, to reaffirm their commitment to reducing carbon emissions.

America must be at the forefront and lead by example. We must embrace modern policies that cut emissions, increase the use of renewable energy, reduce our dependence on foreign oil, and encourage the development of innovative green technologies. If we are successful, the economic, security, and environmental benefits to our Nation will be widespread, long-lasting, and significant.

I urge my colleagues to reject these harmful resolutions. The cost of inaction on the critical generational challenge is simply unacceptable and the price of delay too high.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it raises the question once again. As I said, we have been very successful in America under the Clean Air Act. Our CO_2 emissions are as low as they were 20 years ago, and they are projected to be below 2005 levels through 2040. We are making great progress.

So why is the President committing America to being a country that cannot build a new coal-powered plant? We are not saying you should build one, but the President said he is for an all-of-the-above energy policy; yet he is prohibiting, through regulation, the building of a new coal-powered plant because the technology is not available to meet the emissions standards.

You don't think the Chinese would agree to not build a coal plant, do you? They are providing money for Pakistan to build coal plants. They are providing money for India to build coal plants. And even in Europe, with the natural gas prices from Russia so high, they are building new coal plants as they close down some gas plants.

So that is the kind of policy that we are discussing here today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. CRAMER), who has been focused on this issue for his entire congressional career.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding the time and for his leadership.

I might add that, prior to being in Congress, I was focused on the issue for nearly 10 years as a regulator of the energy industry in North Dakota. I served nearly 10 years on the North Dakota Public Service Commission, where I regulated not only the siting of coal plants, the reclamation of coal mines, but the cost of electricity to consumers.

I have to address some of the comments made by the gentleman from Georgia. I am sure they were sincere. I am sure they were well-intentioned.

But to stand here, Mr. Speaker, and lecture us that we are somehow motivated by hatred for the President of the United States is so beneath the dignity of this Chamber, and I am embarrassed for him.

Let me tell you that Barack Obama has the right to his opinion, and he is entitled to have it be different than mine. He perfectly has the right to be wrong even, if he wants to be.

But he doesn't have the right to break the law because he couldn't get a law changed when he had a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate. And that is what we are here to talk about, the violation of the law, as the chairman has pointed to earlier.

I don't even want to deal with the merits of climate change or global warming. I want to deal with the solution.

We have heard today that Republicans don't have a solution. Well, let me tell you about my little rectangular spot in the middle of the North American continent, North Dakota, best known now, of course, for producing a whole bunch of oil.

But long before we produced oil, we produced coal, 30 million tons a year, as a matter of fact. Seventy-nine percent of our electricity is generated by coal. We generate coal-generated electricity for many States in our region.

But we also are one of the seven States that meet all ambient air quality standards as prescribed by the EPA. We have a grade A, perfect, year after year after year for our air by the American Lung Association. The counties that have the greatest concentration of coal-fired power plants get an A grade.

Our utilities have been investing hundreds of millions of dollars over the years in clean coal technologies and scrubbers and everything that we can do to make our environment cleaner.

We live there. We love it. No bureaucrat in Washington, D.C., is going to love the air that we breathe in North Dakota more than those of us who live in North Dakota.

We also enjoy, like other coal-producing States, some of the lowest-priced electricity in the country.

I also would like to point out that, long before it was cool, we were siting wind farms. I sited over 1,000 megawatts of wind farms when I was on the Commission. Now there are nearly 2,000 megawatts of installed wind in North Dakota.

We don't even have a mandate. We don't need to be lectured to by people who don't know a thing about where we live, a thing about our economy. We will do the right thing because it is the right thing. We will do the right thing because it is good for our families.

And, by the way, the rule that we are disapproving, the two rules we are disapproving, disproportionately hurt the poor and the middle income. Do you think it is the poor people that can afford to buy an Energy Star refrigerator at the end of the month? Is it the poor people that can afford to wrap their house in new insulation? Of course not.

We need to pass these resolutions and reject these rules.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The whole effort to make certain that we move forward with carbon emission reduction and the claims that we have dropped since 2005 levels—well, there was a drop in 2008 and 2009 because of the recession, a wind-down of activity, of less use of electricity. But then, again, we had climbed in 2012 and 2013, the last measurements on record.

So we need to be real about this effort. We know that if we do nothing we will see drops by 2040 of only 9 percent, when efforts here to make certain that we can reduce that carbon emission by 80 percent by 2050 are a strong contrast, and the goals here are laudable and noble.

I would also make mention that we have it within our power to provide for issues that, with technology, enable us to respond to these goals. We need to do that. I think we need to set the standards in a way that pronounce our stewardship as very noble for the environment.

Mr. Speaker, I again encourage us to reject these resolutions. I think they set us back. It would nullify opportunities to policy standards that would require stronger response.

We would allow for build-out that provides for additional construction, additional pollution that would accompany that opportunity that would be dangerous to our environment.

It would nullify our efforts to address carbon pollution, so that this is a dangerous thing, and I think it is why the President has indicated that, should they come to his desk, he would veto these measures, and why we are having this debate today while we should be championing the cause in a bipartisan, bicameral way to show the world that we care significantly about carbon emission reduction and that we want to stand as a world leader. That is where we should place ourselves and posit ourselves in that noble dimension.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Mr. TONKO, who does a great job on our committee, and I certainly respect his views.

I wanted to just touch previously on and reiterate why we are here today. The Senate has already passed both of these resolutions by a vote of 52–46 of disapproval of the President's clean energy plan and his regulation relating to new coal-fired plants.

We wanted this on the floor today because we want to send a message to the climate change conference in Paris that in America there is serious disagreement with the extreme policies of this President.

I would like to just point out briefly one of the reasons why we are so upset with this particular resolution about the emission standards for new coal-fired plants if one is going to be built.

EPA went to great detail of setting an emission standard, and they based that standard on four plants. And guess what? None of the three plants in America are even in operation.

In fact, the one in Texas, it looks like it is not going to be built at all. The one in California, DOE has suspended funding for it. The one in Mississippi has already experienced a $4.2 billion cost overrun. And it is close to an oil field for enhanced oil recovery to make it work, but it is not in operation.

The only plant that is operating, on which EPA set this emission standard, is a very small project in Canada that would not have been built without the Canadian Government funding. And it looks like it will never achieve a technical readiness level that would show it is available for commercial demonstration.

So here you have EPA taking this drastic step based on emissions of plants that really are not even in operation.

Why should America be the only country where you cannot build a new coal plant because EPA has set an emission standard that commercially and technically is not feasible?

That is what we are talking about here, just the policy, just the disagreement on the solution. I would urge our Members to support this resolution, and let's send a message to the White House and to those conferees in Paris.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, this week, world leaders are meeting in Paris to address the serious threat of climate change. Across the globe and here at home, there is broad recognition of the need to act decisively to curb the climate crisis that threatens our communities. And yet today we are considering legislation that would allow continued carbon pollution, jeopardizing public health and the environment.

The President's Clean Power Plan limits carbon pollution from new and existing power plants for the first time ever. It is a flexible, meaningful plan that will help states transition to clean energy sources and greater efficiency. It was developed with extensive stakeholder outreach. And it will create jobs, reduce the toxic pollution that is a leading contributor to climate change, and protect public health.

The resolutions on the Floor today would stop this common sense plan and prohibit any similar measure. And Congressional Republicans are not offering any plan to replace it. They continue to deny the problem of climate change, even in the face of overwhelming scientific evidence and the damaging storms, increased flooding, and drought that are already impacting our communities. They are ignoring the warnings from our Department of Defense, who call climate change a threat multiplier throughout the world.

We have the opportunity to lead, to expand opportunities in 21st century energy, and to protect our environment for future generations. The world is watching. We must reject these shameful, regressive resolutions and act to prevent climate change.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the previous question is ordered on the joint resolution.

The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, on that, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

PROVIDING FOR CONGRESSIONAL DISAPPROVAL OF A RULE SUBMITTED BY THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 539, I call up the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 24) providing for congressional disapproval under chapter 8 of title 5, United States Code, of a rule submitted by the Environmental Protection Agency relating to ''Carbon Pollution Emission Guidelines for Existing Stationary Sources: Electric Utility Generating Units'' and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 539, the joint resolution is considered read.

The text of the joint resolution is as follows:

S.J. RES. 24

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Congress disapproves the rule submitted by the Environmental Protection Agency relating to ''Carbon Pollution Emission Guidelines for Existing Stationary Sources: Electric Utility Generating Units'' (published at 80 Fed. Reg. 64662 (October 23, 2015)), and such rule shall have no force or effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution shall be debatable for 1 hour equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on S.J. Res. 24.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, even more sweeping than EPA's new source performance standard for power plant greenhouse gas emissions is the rule governing existing sources. And that is what S.J. Res. 24 is about, and the impact that this rule is going to have on every existing coal plant in America and the impact that it could have on the electricity rates and the impediments that it could establish for future economic growth in America.

I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. OLSON), who is vice chair of the Energy and Power Subcommittee.

Mr. OLSON. I thank the chair and my good friend from Kentucky for the time to speak on this important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, today is a sad day for America when our administration harms our country without a valid reason, and yet that is exactly what President Obama's EPA has done with their clean power rules.

Without input from Congress and with only small, limited public meetings, EPA rammed through new rules to limit CO_2. These rules destroy new coal power in America.

In my home State of Texas, our grid is regulated by ERCOT, 90 percent. They say they lose 4,000 megawatts of power, at a minimum, with the early retirements of coal plants because of the Clean Power Plan. Energy costs for customers may be up by 60 percent by 2030 due to the CPP.

EPA's actions violate the words and the intent of the Clean Air Act, and that is why a majority of States have sued in Federal court to stop its implementation.

EPA's actions have Texans scratching their heads and saying, ''What the heck?'' Why is EPA's CPP tougher on newer coal plants than older ones?

Newer is always cleaner than upgraded, retrofitted older plants. What the heck?

This is all done in the name of climate change. Climate change has happened since God created our Earth. Over 66 million years ago my home State of Texas was under water. Texas, as an ocean, is huge climate change unlikely due to human campfires set at that time.

In September 2014, a high ranking former Obama administration member, the under secretary for science at the Department of Education, Dr. Steven Koonin, wrote this in The Wall Street Journal: ''The climate has always changed and always will.''

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. OLSON. Mr. Speaker, I will quote from Dr. Koonin: ''There isn't a useful consensus at the level of detail relevant to assess human influence on climate change.''

Yet, here we are, fighting for American jobs and commonsense regulations while world leaders are in Paris making promises they can't keep. Enough of the Band-Aids from EPA.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote for S.J. Res. 24 and S.J. Res. 23 and for American jobs.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we are considering two resolutions today that are designed to prevent the Environmental Protection Agency from moving forward with critical regulations to reduce carbon emissions from existing and new power plants.

That previous resolution that was just aired in the House and now this resolution should be called exactly what they are, that being an attack on EPA's Clean Air Act authority. These resolutions would block this administration or any future administration from taking meaningful action to curb carbon emissions from our power plants.

We have ample evidence from more than four decades' worth of clean air regulation that shows that a strong economy and strong environmental and public health protections do indeed go hand in hand. So let's stop promoting this false notion that we cannot improve the air we breathe while simultaneously growing our economy and, yes, creating jobs.

The EPA's Clean Power Plan will promote public health. The EPA estimates that the Clean Power Plan will reduce carbon pollution from the power sector by 32 percent—32 percent—below 2005 levels. There will also be significant reductions in sulfur dioxide and NO_X emissions.

This is a tremendous public health victory. It will avoid thousands of premature deaths and an estimated 90,000 asthma attacks in children in 2030 alone.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the concerns of the individuals, families, and communities that may have their jobs lost or displaced due to this energy transition. We share those concerns.

I agree that these people who have dedicated their lives to providing us with reliable power deserve a lot more than a pink slip, but we do these people no favors by promising job security that the economy will no longer deliver.

Instead of working together to find ways to ease the transition for States and communities that already are challenged by the many changes that are happening in the electric utility sector, we are spending time trying to turn back the clock. It cannot be done.

EPA is a convenient scapegoat here, but the transition that is occurring is driven by much more than EPA regulations. Natural gas—its abundance and low price—is out-competing coal within the utility sector. Power plants are aging.

Even more important, the economy has changed. Many of the older plants are located in areas that once had far more demand for electricity, demand from large manufacturing plants and heavy industry. Those factories have closed or modernized, both resulting in far less electricity use.

There are new technologies. Wind and solar generation is growing, and those renewable energy sources have strong, broad-based, public support.

Other technologies that enable the electric grid to be smarter, more flexible, and more resilient are being deployed now, and more are in development. State policies to encourage energy efficiency and to diversify energy sources are also driving this transition.

As I have said before, Mr. Speaker, was the transition from wire to wireless communication a war on copper? Was the transition to the automobile a war on horses? No, of course not.

EPA's regulations are playing some role in driving the changes we see. That is true. But the Agency is doing what Congress directed it to do on behalf of all Americans: to act in defense of public health and to act in defense of our environment.

Let's put aside the EPA scapegoating and have a real dialogue on our changing power sector and what can be done to support those working in impacted industries. Meanwhile, we are debating these resolutions as our negotiators are in Paris working on an international climate agreement.

The bottom line is there is an overwhelming scientific consensus that climate change is happening and is primarily caused by human activity, particularly the burning of fossil fuels.

Climate change is no longer a problem for future generations. We are already feeling its effects in every corner of our Nation and across the globe, which threaten our economic and our national security.

The Clean Power Plan will play a significant role in the fight against climate change. The United States' action alone won't stop climate change, but action by the rest of the world without the United States' action also will not succeed.

Other countries will have an excuse to delay action as long as the giant, the United States, does as well. This is the dynamic that has prevented us from action in the past. But now we have seen major commitments from the world's largest developed and developing nations.

Mr. Speaker, the Clean Power Plan demonstrates United States leadership and is key to our effort to secure an ambitious and lasting international climate agreement.

We cannot fool ourselves that the Clean Power Plan, an agreement in Paris, or any one action alone will solve all of our climate crises. But these rules will deliver substantial benefits to our society, and they will move us in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to reject these resolutions. Let's work together in a meaningful strategy to address the problems that are emerging from the transition in our own electricity sector while promoting a cleaner, more sustainable Nation and growing significant jobs that are not yet on the radar screen.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUCSHON). He is a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. BUCSHON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S.J. Res. 24, which expresses congressional disapproval under the Congressional Review Act of the EPA's rule on existing power plants. I also support S.J. Res. 23 that was just debated.

According to the EPA's own cost-benefit analysis, these regulations would do very little to impact global temperatures, but these regulations will, without a doubt, be devastating for Hoosier businesses and families that rely on affordable energy. Those hurt the most will be the poor and seniors on a fixed income.

Mr. Speaker, advances in how we produce energy should be achieved through innovation, technology, and efficient business practices, not by unobtainable Federal Government mandates from the EPA.

Mr. Speaker, Indiana disapproves of the EPA's attack on our State's economy and our State's jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to reject this overreach by supporting S.J. Res. 23 and 24.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CONNOLLY), my colleague and friend. He is the cochair of the SEEC Coalition in the House, the Sustainable Energy and Environment Coalition. He is an outstanding leader with SEEC, and he is an outstanding leader for his district and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my dear friend from New York, who is the cochair of the Sustainable Energy and Environment Coalition and does such a superlative job.

I rise to support him in opposing this legislative effort which argues overreach, but what it is really all about is making sure that the government does not protect the public, that we live in a Darwinian world where you apparently take your chances, whether it is asthma, other respiratory illnesses, cancer, and all kinds of other ailments that can affect communities that suffer from this pollution. We, as a country, can do better. We can create jobs, not lose them.

The arguments on the other side have always been that the Clean Air Act costs jobs and raises costs, neither of which are true. We have gotten lots of experience since 1970 with the Clean Air Act. I can tell you that, in my home State of Virginia, electric costs came down. They didn't go up. Jobs got created, not lost.

I end, Mr. Speaker, by reminding us of what His Holiness Pope Francis has argued. When Pope Francis came to the White House, before he spoke to this body, he personally thanked the President for these rules in protecting clean air.

His first encyclical is on climate change, which he believes is one of the most important and imperative moral issues facing mankind today. That is what the Pope has to say about this subject. We ought to heed his words and his moral warning as we debate this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose the legislation and support the amendments with respect to the Clean Air Act.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. BOST).

Mr. BOST. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky and my neighbor across the river.

Mr. Speaker, the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan rule is a dagger aimed at the heart of the coal industry and affordable, American-made energy.

According to recent studies, the regulation will increase electric costs in my home State of Illinois by 27 percent. That is an unbearable burden on working families, seniors, and those people who are on set incomes.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, the mining industry employs thousands of workers in southern Illinois and supports thousands more in union retirees.

I have heard here today on this floor that it doesn't affect jobs. Well, tell that to the people of my district who have watched the coal mines close and who have watched the suffering. These people don't have the opportunity to keep their children working near their own homes. They have to move away.

Mr. Speaker, if this regulation takes effect, the local coal mines that are left and coal generation plants will close down. Our priority must be affordable energy and American jobs.

For this reason, I ask, I beg, and I plead: Vote for S.J. Res. 24.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. CASTOR). She is a member of the Subcommittee on Energy and Power, and that reports to the greater Committee on Energy and Commerce that we both serve. I have witnessed her straightforward thinking and her very strong, passionate response on behalf of climate change.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. I thank the gentleman from New York for his kind words and his leadership on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this resolution that seeks to hamstring America's ability to combat carbon pollution and the impacts of the changing climate.

In Paris today, 195 nations from around the world are meeting to tackle the challenges of the changing climate. I am proud to see that America is leading this effort.

America's willingness to tackle the economic and environmental impacts of climate change is a reflection of our values. We do not cower in the face of difficult circumstances. That is the essence of the United States of America.

□ 1600

Yet that is what this Republican majority in the Congress would have us do—ignore the problem, pretend it doesn't exist, hope it goes away.

Well, we cannot do that. Scientific consensus is clear: The Earth's climate is changing, temperatures are getting warmer, and it is the greenhouse gases that are the primary drivers. Over the long term, the consequences will be very serious and the costs will be very high, indeed, unless we take action.

My neighbors back home in Florida are particularly vulnerable. Florida has more private property at risk from flooding linked to climate change than any other State, an amount that could double in the next 4 years.

Already, local governments and taxpayers are being asked to pay more for stormwater drainage, drinking water initiatives, and beach renourishment.

Extreme weather events will likely cause increases in property insurance and flood insurance.

We just experienced, colleagues, one of the warmest Novembers on record in central Florida. Because of the heat, we had to run our air conditioners a lot longer than we are used to. We are used to turning them off in November, so we are paying more on our electric bills.

For my friends in agriculture, the tomato crop was harvested earlier this year because of the heat, and while the yield was comparable to past years, the size was affected. The increase in the number of days with extreme heat is sure to impact other crops in Florida's economy.

We are not alone. We are going to continue to see the impacts all across America. So we have a challenge before us. We cannot shirk our responsibility to this great country or to future generations.

We must unleash American ingenuity to reduce carbon pollution. So much is already happening. Technology today helps consumers conserve energy and save on their electric bills. Smartphones and smart meters can help you control your thermostat.

Renewable energy, such as solar and wind power, hold great promise and are growing by leaps and bounds. I have seen it at home, where local businesses like IKEA and the big beer distributorship have put solar panels on the roofs of their huge buildings to save on their electric bills.

Roughly 20,000 megawatts of solar capacity is forecasted to come on line over the next 2 years, doubling the country's existing solar capacity.

And industrial energy and heat that was once wasted is being turned into fuel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. TONKO. I yield the gentlewoman an additional 1 minute.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

All of these efforts are creating the jobs of tomorrow in clean energy, in engineering, in energy efficiency and green building.

So, colleagues, I urge you to defeat this resolution. It is largely a symbolic vote. A ''yes'' vote is one to ignore the costs and consequences of the changing climate, but if it passes, it will also be another low point for this Congress, a Congress that has demonstrated time and again an inability to deal with the complicated and thorny problems that face America. I predict that many will come to regret that legacy.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully disagree with the distinguished gentlewoman from Florida who says this is a symbolic vote.

We want this vote to be held because the Senate has already adopted this resolution. We want the House to adopt this resolution while the climate change conference is going on in France so that the world will know that in America there is a disagreement about the extreme power grab that this President is initiating under his clean energy plan.

At this time, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. JOHNSON), who has been a real leader for Ohio in this issue and in the Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman, and I couldn't agree with my chairman more on his comments.

I rise today in strong support of S.J. Res. 24, a joint resolution disapproving of the EPA's regulations targeting existing power plants.

If the administration allows the Clean Power Plan to move forward, countless coal and coal-related jobs across the country will be eliminated, families and small businesses will be forced to pay higher electricity prices, and grid reliability will be seriously jeopardized.

It is estimated that, to comply with the EPA's existing power plant regulations, energy sector expenditures would increase from $220 billion to $292 billion, with retail electricity prices doubling in 40 States. In fact, by 2030, one study predicts Ohio's wholesale electricity prices will increase by 31.2 percent due to this regulation. The regulation will force consumers to absorb a $64 billion cost just to replace the power plants shut down by the rule.

This resolution of disapproval sends a clear message to the President that a majority of the Senate, the House, and America do not approve of higher electricity prices and an unreliable electric grid.

At least 27 States, including Ohio, are now challenging the regulations in court. Ohio EPA Director Craig Butler is correct; it would be irresponsible for the U.S. EPA to force immediate compliance until the legal issues are resolved.

America faces real challenges. ISIS and other terrorist groups are plotting to attack us. We have a staggering national debt that our children and grandchildren will be buried under if we don't address it. We have a Tax Code and regulatory framework that are stifling and strangling innovation and job creation. And our education system isn't keeping pace with those of our rivals.

These are real problems. America's air and water have never been cleaner. For the President to continue his crusade to shut down the coal industry and all the jobs that go with it is shortsighted, foolish, and wrong.

And it won't just be the coal miners who pay for the President's policy on coal, Mr. Speaker. It will be every family and small business who end up paying more for their electricity as a result.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support S.J. Res. 24.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT), a member of the Ways and Means Committee and, more important to this discussion, an outstanding, passionate voice concerning climate change and carbon emission.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress, the Republican propaganda machine is out here pushing a false choice: You either have no regulations or you have no economy. That is what it is. You have to get rid of all the regulations, or you won't have an economy.

Now, that simply is not true. The facts are piling up worldwide that we cannot continue what we are doing.

Now, on the front page of today's Washington Post is a picture of a Chinese city where you can't see a guy riding a bicycle in the street. That is true in Delhi. That is true in Beijing. It is all over the world.

And, unfortunately, climate is all over the world. We can't just have it clean in our neighborhood and have it awful in the rest of the world. We have to think about a larger issue than our own.

I have heard the same arguments that I am hearing today when we said, ''You've got to stop smoking on the airplanes.'' Why, we heard the tobacco boys running in here saying, ''Oh, this is the end of the Earth. There will be nobody smoking tobacco.''

And look what has happened. The air is cleaned up on planes, it is cleaned up in restaurants, it is cleaned up on this floor because we had rules and regulations.

This is a public health problem as much as it is an economic problem. Since I got out of the military in 1968, 76,000 miners have died of black lung disease—76,000. We have appropriated in this House $45 billion in money to those miners because of their problems.

Our ravenous appetite for fossil fuels continues to be a real problem, and it is getting worse. And yet, with all the reckless bills, the Republicans are once again turning a blind eye to these costs. ''They don't mean anything. We want the mine owners to have freedom to do whatever they want and the power companies to do whatever they want. We don't want anybody to tell them you have to clean it up.''

In Seattle, we have a steel plant right in the middle of town. It is run by Nucor. The Nucor Steel rebar plant is right in the middle of the city. It has been cleaned up, and you can do it.

But the coal boys and the power boys, they don't want to spend any money cleaning anything up. They don't want anybody telling them, with regulations, you have to reduce the amount of particulates in the air. So we have this problem that is going on and on and on.

Now, as industry and the industry-bought Republicans fight tooth and nail against any effort to reduce dependence on fossil fuels, they are not just condemning future generations to a world battered by increasing extreme and erratic weather patterns—we are seeing them all over the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TONKO. I yield the gentleman an additional 1 minute.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They are really betraying a generation of Americans who are already reeling from the impact of all of this. Coal miners and the communities they live in are bearing the brunt of this irresponsible action by the coal owners.

We had the same thing in Washington State with the forests. People said, ''You have to keep cutting trees. Cut every tree you can see that is standing anywhere.'' And we said, ''If you do that, you destroy the environment.'' So we stopped, and we helped the loggers find another way to make a living, and they are doing just fine.

Now, if we keep this up and keep resisting and keep exposing the American public, both in the mines and in the cities, to this kind of environment, we are going to pay for it.

It is like that FRAM commercial when I was a kid. The FRAM commercial was you either clean your air filter on your car now or you are going to pay me later by having to have the motor redone.

That is what this is about. We are talking about a President who says, let's put some new FRAM filters in here and see if we can't cut down the pollution and save both the people and the economy.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. SCALISE), the distinguished majority whip.

Mr. SCALISE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Kentucky for yielding and for bringing this legislation to the floor.

I rise in strong support of S.J. Res. 24.

Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about is rejecting this radical plan by President Obama's EPA that is going to actually impact every power plant in this country.

The President has a war on coal. He declared a war on coal years ago, and we are seeing the results of it. The results of it here in America are thousands of good jobs lost, thousands of middle class families that are now unemployed and trying to fight to get back in the middle class. And even more than that, Mr. Speaker, what you see is millions of people across this country paying more for electricity costs because of these regulations.

So what is President Obama's answer? It is to go to Paris and say that the biggest threat to national security is global warming. For goodness' sake, doesn't he see what is going on across the world?

We are here focusing on national security, Mr. Speaker. We are also focusing on energy security, and we are standing up against a radical regulation that is going to increase costs on the most needy in this country.

When you look at the impact, this proposal by President Obama's EPA would have a $29-billion-per-year cost on middle class families. The people that are going to be hit the hardest are low-income families, Mr. Speaker. In Louisiana alone, nearly 1 million middle-and low-income families will be hit by this radical regulation.

At Christmas season, I think families would much rather be spending their hard-earned dollars going and buying Christmas presents for their families instead of seeing a 13-percent increase in their utility bills for a regulation that is not going to do anything to clean the air.

We are already seeing a reduction in carbon emissions because of the American innovation. When some of these European countries signed Kyoto and some of these other accords that are wrecking their economies, we didn't do it. Because we are actually doing better than them without signing an accord because we used great American innovation.

And, instead, the President wants to come behind and bring a regulation that is going to strangle small businesses, it is going to strangle families, and it is going to increase electricity costs on those that can least afford to pay it.

Again, let them keep the money in their own pockets. Let's innovate, let's create jobs in this economy, not use radical regulations to strangle our economy and our middle class. Let's pass this resolution.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), our distinguished ranking member of the Energy and Commerce Committee, who has led a fight for carbon emission and climate change on behalf of the Democrats in the House, and that he may control that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey.

□ 1615

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. JOHNSON).

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague Congressman MCDERMOTT pointed to this picture in today's edition of The Washington Post. This is during the daylight. It is outside. It is in China.

I have been over there about four times, and I can relate to this picture in case nobody has been over there. Anybody who has been over there knows how the environment, the air quality, and people's health are impacted by the lack of regulations that have existed over in China. They have an acute air pollution problem.

The fact is we don't have air pollution like that here in America because we have had regulations promulgated by agencies like the EPA, particularly the EPA, that have resulted in, yes, some increased costs to Americans, but the result of that cost is air quality that does not look like this.

This is worth paying for, and the people will continue to pay. We will continue to pay. I mean, life is not free. It is true, though, that, with companies making so much money these days due to the misbalance in the economy, people are being squeezed.

I hate to ask people to pay more, but I myself cannot live just based on the price that businesses have to pay to make sure that they are not polluting our environment. They should pay, and we have to pay our fair share, too.

The question is: Are we going to be able to save our planet from countries that don't have regulations?

We are going in the opposite direction here. We are talking about doing away with the EPA. Why is it that the first thing my friends on the other side of the aisle and all of their Presidential candidates talk about is getting rid of the EPA?

There is a reason for that. The reason is that they want to protect the ability of polluters to just pollute at will and to continue to make all of the money at the expense of people's health, with our paying them exorbitant amounts for the energy that they are creating.

When are we going to do something about this? If not now, then when? If it is not America that is leading, then who?

They talk about President Obama going to Paris. There are 185 nations being represented in Paris that are working on this problem, which is a profound problem not just for America, but for the world. We all live in this same ship together, and we have got to take care of it.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I will reiterate and make sure that everyone understands that S.J. Res. 24 does not eliminate the EPA. It refers only to the President's existing coal plant rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. WOMACK), who has been very involved in this issue in his career in Congress.

Mr. WOMACK. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky for his leadership on the issue.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S.J. Res. 24 and to echo the sentiments of my colleagues.

There is no question that we are all searching for a brighter future for generations to come. We disagree, however, on how to get there and, in this case, on the effects that our decisions could have on the environment and on the American family in the process.

Frankly, the EPA's Clean Power Plan will result in little to no environmental benefit at the expense of thousands of jobs and countless dollars and hours spent on compliance, all for the sake of an unrelenting government agency's agenda and the desired environmental legacy of this administration. It is as simple as that.

Not only will the Clean Power Plan fail to achieve the results intended, but the administration's very authority to implement it is questionable at best. The letter of the law itself denies the EPA this authority to regulate power plants under section 111(d), something specifically cited under section 112. Twenty-seven States' attorneys general, including our very own Leslie Rutledge in Arkansas, agree and have filed suit in response.

The Constitution clearly states that legislative powers are vested in the Congress. The Clean Power Plan is a clear attempt to take policymaking out of the hands of Congress. That is unacceptable. President Obama's never-ending regulatory overreach has to be stopped.

If the EPA will not halt, Congress must act to prevent this egregious power grab. This resolution will stop the EPA in its tracks and return the power to where it rightfully exists. Maybe then we can all get back to this Nation's historic, all-of-the-above energy policy.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to leave our successors a better future, supporting the two resolutions that have been debated here on the floor today is a really good first step.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the time that remains on both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey has 10½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Kentucky has 16½ minutes remaining.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WEBER).

Mr. WEBER of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of both joint resolutions, which will block the Obama administration's so-called Clean Power Plan, a regulation, I will add, that was never authorized by Congress, that will hurt our economy, lower our standard of living, and have absolutely no impact on the climate.

Mr. Speaker, I often say the things that make America great are the things that America makes. Now, how do we do that? We do that with an affordable, dependable, reliable energy supply.

According to the Electric Reliability Council of Texas, which operates my State's electric grid, energy costs would increase protections by up to 16 percent due to this Clean Power Plan. This will have a disproportionate impact on the poor and on those on fixed incomes. Sadly, most of those folks don't even see it coming.

According to testimony we heard today, Mr. Speaker, in the Science, Space, and Technology Committee, the Clean Power Plan will reduce global temperatures by just .023 degrees Fahrenheit by the year 2100.

Furthermore, the EPA's claimed public health benefits from this regulation are due solely to reductions in air pollutants that are already regulated by the Agency under existing standards. The reduction of carbon dioxide on its own has no public health benefits.

I mentioned that the things that make America great are the way that we have a reliable, affordable power supply. I guess we could say that the EPA stands for an ''energy and power assault.''

Mr. Speaker, the facts are clear. This regulation will hurt our economy, and it will have none of the stated benefits the administration claims. I often say that the EPA seems to stand for ''eventually paralyzing America.''

We must adopt these resolutions of disapproval and hold this administration accountable for its regulatory assault on our economy and on our low-income families. That is how I see it here in America.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I have heard my Republican colleagues say over and over again that the President's Clean Power Plan won't have any impact on air quality and that it won't do anything to improve the environment. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The rule that we are discussing in this joint resolution and that the joint resolution would seek to disapprove establishes State-by-State targets for lowering carbon emissions. When it is implemented, the rule will reduce emissions from the power sector by 32 percent over the next 15 years as compared to emissions in 2005.

The final rule has public health and other benefits of up to $54 billion per year by 2030, and this includes thousands of fewer premature deaths from air pollution and tens of thousands of fewer childhood asthma attacks each year—emphasizing again, thousands of fewer premature deaths from air pollution and tens of thousands of fewer childhood asthma attacks each year.

I keep hearing from my GOP colleagues about the costs. What are the costs to society of air pollution and of people suffering from asthma and of premature deaths and of hospitalizations and of all of the costs? None of these things are calculated by the Republicans in their speeches. They just assume that somehow none of this matters.

Some of my Democratic colleagues have said over and over again that this is sort of a wasted debate because we know that the President has said he is going to veto the bill and that there wouldn't be enough votes in the House or in the Senate to overcome the President's veto.

The theme that you are getting from the Republicans is somehow a clean environment and a good economy don't go together. In fact, the opposite is true.

The fact of the matter is that, ever since the Clean Air Act was implemented years ago, we have seen reductions in air pollution. We have seen people's lives saved. We have seen fewer people suffer from asthma attacks and the other consequences of pollution. At the same time, the economy has improved.

In the Statement of Administration Policy, in which the President says that he will veto this resolution, he specifically says that, since it was enacted in 1970 and amended in 1977 and 1990, each time with strong bipartisan support, the Clean Air Act has improved the Nation's air quality and has protected public health.

Over that same period of time, the economy has tripled in size while emissions of key pollutants have decreased by more than 70 percent. Forty-five years of clean air regulation have shown that a strong economy and strong environmental and public health protections go hand in hand.

I just keep hearing these negative comments from the other side of the aisle. The fact of the matter is, when you reduce air pollution, you eliminate the consequences of people having bad health, of dying, of getting sick.

At the same time, the economy has improved because we have come up with alternatives to the awful pollution that has resulted which this Clean Power Plan is designed to thwart.

Again, I keep hearing my colleagues saying all of these things, but the fact of the matter is you can have clean air, you can have a good environment, and you can have a good economy and grow jobs. That is exactly what this rule that the President has put forward is designed to achieve.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOHO).

Mr. YOHO. I thank my good friend from Kentucky for allowing me to speak.

Mr. Speaker, we are as concerned about our environment and jobs and the economy as anybody else is, and there was a point in time when we needed this. We saw those pictures of China with the red glow and where you couldn't see the bicycle rider. China has got a problem, and they need to address that.

We have addressed that in this country, but it gets to a point at which you cross a line and you can't squeeze any more out of the rock. Back 40 years ago the mercury coming out of the smokestacks of the coal-fired power plants was about 50 pounds of mercury a year. Now it is less than 2 pounds of mercury a year. So how much more can you increase that?

Mr. Speaker, this administration has proven that it is no friend to the hardworking American families across our country or to the power-producing companies that supply power to all Americans.

Instead, this administration is placing added requirements on our Nation's energy producers, requirements that will increase costs to all Americans, affecting those most who can least afford it. It will increase costs, it will decrease the grid's reliability, and it will jeopardize our national security.

As we speak, nations across the world are meeting in Paris to discuss further restrictions on energy producers. As Americans, we do not bow to foreign pressure or influence. America needs to do what is best for America, especially when it is a foreign country that is putting out more than 50 percent of the carbon emitted into the atmosphere.

Instead of limiting our energy production, which, again, hits hardworking Americans especially at the lower economic scales, why don't we use all of the resources that America has been blessed with and take a commonsense approach in making our economy stronger and more competitive rather than in crippling it?

□ 1630

The issue is near and dear to my heart as a Member from Florida who represents five co-ops in my district, and it is what we see.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield an additional 30 seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. YOHO. The EPA's own report says that their new emissions standards will not reduce the CO_2 emissions or improve air quality or human health, but they are going ahead with it anyway to the detriment of American manufacturing jobs and costs to the American taxpayers.

I stand in strong support of S.J. Res. 24.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Again, I listened to the previous speaker. House Republicans keep telling us that greenhouse gas emissions are falling in the United States. The previous speaker suggested that the United States doesn't need to do much more about climate change. That couldn't be more wrong.

U.S. greenhouse gas emissions did fall in 2008 and 2009 during the economic recession. Since that time, our overall emissions have grown. Cumulatively, U.S. emissions grew, not fell, in 2012 and 2013, the two most recent years for which data is available.

What matters really is whether U.S. emissions are on track to decline in the future by the amount needed to prevent dangerous climate change. Scientists say we need to reduce carbon pollution by 80 percent by 2050 to avoid catastrophic climate change. The EPA already predicts that, without any new policies to control carbon pollution, policies like the Clean Power Plan, the U.S. will only see a 2 percent drop in CO_2 emissions by 2040 compared to 2005 levels.

So this data highlights the importance of the Clean Power Plan and the Obama administration's overall push to cut greenhouse gas emissions. To suggest the United States doesn't need to do any more, that is just not the case. We need to do a lot more, and that is what the Clean Power Plan is designed to do.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S.J. Res. 23 and 24, resolutions that would protect my constituents from egregious EPA overreach. This burdensome regulation is projected to raise electric rates in Florida annually between 11 and 15 percent for over 10 years while providing virtually no environmental benefits.

The regulations for existing power plants, commonly called the Clean Power Plan, could have disastrous consequences for the safety, affordability, and reliability of my constituents' electricity. In my district, there are over 200,000 residents who get their electricity from rural electric cooperatives, utilities formed during the Great Depression to serve rural, traditionally underserved areas with electricity.

If the Clean Power Plan continues without serious alterations, it has the potential to negatively affect these underserved areas the most. The Clean Power Plan could close down power plants in rural areas that provide jobs and economic activity.

In Florida, the Seminole Electric Cooperative operates two power plants whose baseload generating units do not meet the emission rate requirements. Their Seminole generating station employs over 300 individuals. If the EPA forces the plant to close prematurely, these jobs are at risk, and rural electric cooperative members, like my constituents, will still have to pay for the closed plant in their rates through 2042 while also paying for a new electricity source.

The Congressional Review Act was created for a reason: to give this body the authority to check the executive branch when it oversteps its bounds and enacts policy against the will of the people.

I urge my colleagues to support these resolutions, both of them, to protect my constituents from needless rate increases and to protect the powers of this institution.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. May I inquire as to the time remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New Jersey has 5½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CARTER).

Mr. CARTER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S.J. Res. 24, which expresses Congress' disapproval of the EPA's carbon emission rule for existing power plants. The administration's unprecedented rule would inhibit our ability to produce affordable and reliable electricity.

A robust energy supply is essential to national security, public health, and the economy, yet the administration continues to wage war on the source of 85 percent of America's energy. Until our energy infrastructure can support widespread use of alternate energy sources, we cannot arbitrarily force the closure of plants that are keeping lights on for millions of Americans.

Implementing this rule would result in the loss of over 125,000 jobs, as well as significantly higher electric bills in 48 States. Forty of these States would see double-digit electricity price increases.

Our Nation is still in a period of economic recovery. Low- and middle-income American families already spend 17 percent of their household budget on electric bills. These families cannot afford to have another costly mandate forced upon them.

Our economy cannot recover, much less compete on a global level, with this many jobs lost. This resolution would prevent this rule from having any effect and would prohibit the EPA from reissuing this rule in a similar form.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill so we can assure Americans are not disadvantaged by another costly regulation.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

In closing, I just want to comment on two issues that keep coming up on the Republican side. One is this notion, which I think the GOP Whip SCALISE talked about, of the President's war on coal. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I agree that the transition away from coal is contributing to job losses in the coal industry, but setting aside these rules will not alter this trend. There are too many other changes occurring in the power sector that are impacting these workers.

Technologies—including distributed generation, smart grid, energy storage, energy efficiency, microgrids, and combined heat and power systems—are maturing and being incorporated at a faster pace. In some areas, they call into question the old grid model that was dominated by large, centralized generation.

Concern for these displaced energy workers should be motivating us to do something to help these people and their communities to transition to other good-paying jobs in new industries. Setting aside this rule is not going to replace the job security that they had in the past.

Instead of wasting time trying to hold back progress and ignore climate change, we should be working together to address this challenge. This rule moves us forward, and it represents our Nation's commitment to addressing a serious global problem that we helped to create.

I constantly hear this about job losses. The fact is that job losses are occurring regardless of anything that the Clean Power Plan would do. Instead of saying job losses, the Republicans should be thinking about ways of trying to help these workers.

The other thing I would mention is I kept hearing from the other side this whole notion that electricity rates, prices, and bills are going to go up.

I include in the RECORD a letter from Public Citizen and a number of other consumers groups.

Re: Consumer Groups Oppose S.J. Res. 23 and S.J. Res. 24.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: We urge you to oppose S.J. Res. 23 and S.J. Res. 24. These resolutions would effectively repeal the EPA Clean Power Plan, which curbs carbon pollution from power plants. Opponents of the Clean Power Plan often argue that they are protecting consumers, but they are mistaken. The Clean Power Plan is good for consumers because it will mitigate climate change and can lower household electricity costs.

The Clean Power Plan will benefit consumers. Climate change poses a severe threat to American consumers and in particular to vulnerable populations. A few of the most salient risks include: higher taxes and market prices to cover the costs of widespread damage to property and infrastructure from extreme weather; diminished quality and higher prices for food and water, heightening food insecurity for America's most vulnerable populations; and increased illness and disease from extreme heat events, reduced air quality, increased food-borne, waterborne, and insect-borne pathogens.

By curbing carbon pollution, the Clean Power Plan will benefit consumers by mitigating these harms.

The Clean Power Plan should lower consumer electricity bills. The Clean Power Plan is likely to lower consumer costs, not raise them, because it will spur improvements in energy efficiency. Although electricity prices may rise modestly under the Plan, consumers will use less electricity. This should result in lower bills overall. The EPA projects that the rule will lower consumer bills by 7.0 to 7.7 percent by 2030. A Public Citizen analysis of the proposed rule found that the EPA's projection of bill reductions was conservative because it overestimated the cost of efficiency programs and underestimated how much progress the states can make on efficiency. These points remain valid with respect to the final rule, for which the EPA's analysis is similar. Consumer costs are likely to decline by more than the agency projects.

We strongly encourage members to support the Clean Power Plan and to oppose the resolutions disapproving it. Thank you for considering our views, and please feel free to contact David Arkush for further information at darkush@citizen.org or (202) 454–5132.

Mr. PALLONE. I would like to just read some sections from the letter. The letter is from Public Citizen and a number of other consumers groups.

They say in the letter that ''the Clean Power Plan will benefit consumers. Climate change poses a severe threat to American consumers and in particular to vulnerable populations . . . The Clean Power Plan should lower consumer electricity bills. The Clean Power Plan is likely to lower consumer costs, not raise them, because it will spur improvements in energy efficiency. Although electricity prices may rise modestly under the Plan, consumers will use less electricity. This should result in lower bills overall. The EPA projects that the rule will lower consumer bills by 7.0 to 7.7 percent by 2030. A Public Citizen analysis of the proposed rule found that the EPA's projection of bill reductions was conservative because it overestimated the cost of efficiency programs and underestimated how much progress the states can make on efficiency. These points remain valid with respect to the final rule, for which the EPA's analysis is similar. Consumers costs are likely to decline by more than the agency projects.''

Again, we keep hearing from the other side of the aisle, oh, electricity bills are going to go up. They are not. They are going to go down. We keep hearing we are going to lose jobs. Well, a lot of those jobs are going to be lost anyway because of the change in the types of generation of electricity. We should be thinking of ways to try to deal with that rather than saying that somehow we are going to stop it, because we are not going to be able to.

I also want to say that I heard the national security argument. We had, in the Energy and Commerce Committee, a minority hearing a couple of months ago at Annapolis. One of the reasons we went there is we know that our military is seriously concerned about the impacts of climate change and sea level rise. When we were there, the superintendent of the Naval Academy was talking about hundreds of millions of dollars that were being spent just at Annapolis to deal with sea level rise at the academy and went on to talk about the impact of climate change on naval operations and so many other things.

Again, I don't want to emphasize the impact on our national security, but it is there. To suggest that somehow there is no impact is simply not true. Climate change is very much in the minds of the admirals and the generals at the Pentagon. They are very worried about the impact and what it is going to mean in terms of our national security and what we have to do to address those concerns over the next few years.

The main thing I wanted to stress, Mr. Speaker, if I could, is that this rule that the Republicans are trying to get rid of provides States with a lot of flexibility to find the best path forward to meet their emission reduction goals. In fact, many States are already implementing policies that are consistent with these regulations.

The fact of the matter is that the EPA spent several years talking to States, talking to stakeholders, and talking to consumers. They have not put together some kind of straightjacket here that says that the States have to implement these reductions in carbon emissions in a certain way. They are giving States a tremendous amount of flexibility. They had a lot of public hearings. They had millions of people who commented on the rule.

Somehow, when you listen to my colleagues here today, they suggest that this rule came out of nowhere without considering all of the economic impacts, without considering the costs. None of that is true. In fact, there were a lot of discussions about the costs and about the economic impact.

The bottom line is that there is every reason to believe that this rule will improve the public health, will improve the lives of Americans in terms of the negative impact that air pollution has on their health, and, in the long run, will improve the economy and lower costs for the consumer.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I certainly want to thank Mr. PALLONE and the great job he does as ranking member of the Energy and Commerce Committee. I am delighted that we have the opportunity to come to the House floor to debate things like S.J. Res. 24.

The Congressional Review Act is an instrument that is available to Congress to try to stop the President when we believe that the President has exceeded his legal authority, and that is precisely why we are here today on S.J. Res. 23 as well as S.J. Res. 24. We believe the President has exceeded his legal authority.

Now, the President in 2013 went to Georgetown University and gave a speech on climate change, and he set out his clean energy plan. I might say that he never consulted with Congress. He never talked to Congress. He never asked for any input from Congress on this issue. That is his prerogative. But the EPA took him at his word, and then they started the process of adopting these final regulations.

We have already talked about the regulation relating to new coal power plants so that America finds itself to be one of the only countries in the world today where you cannot build a new plant.

But right now we are talking about the regulation on existing plants. The reason we have such concern about it is that, first of all, EPA's own legal team, their lawyers, reversed 20 years of legal opinion when they said that they could regulate under 111(d) of the Clean Air Act. Prior to that, they had always made the decision that, on this type of scale, they could not do it under 111(d).

I might also add that Professor Larry Tribe of Harvard Law School, who taught Barack Obama while Barack Obama was a student at Harvard, came to Congress and testified on this clean energy plan that, in his view, it was like tearing up the Constitution. In other words, the President exceeded his legal authority. In other words, it was a power grab.

Now, some people say, well, the end justifies the means. There are a lot of people who feel that way. But we are still a nation of laws. We believe—and not only we believe—every time the EPA has testified about this existing coal plant rule, they have stressed how they have met with the States, they give the States maximum flexibility to try to address this regulation. If that is the case, why have 27 States already filed lawsuits against the EPA and a multitude of other entities as well?

This is even a violation of the Federal Power Act because States, generally speaking, have jurisdiction over electric generation and intrastate distribution. But under this regulation of existing coal plants, EPA will have that authority.

Guess what. Normally, when EPA has a major rule like this, they will give the States 3 years to come up with their State implementation plan. But, in this instance, the rule came out and was finalized in September or October of this year. The States have until September, basically 1 year, to come up with a State implementation plan.

They wanted to finalize this rule so that the President could go and tell the world leaders in France that America was doing more than anyone else, and we already were doing more than anyone else.

With all due great respect to everyone, whether you agree with our position or not, we have the right to express that view. We decided explicitly to bring these resolutions to the floor as the climate change conference is taking place in Paris because we want the world to know that there are differences of opinion between the Congress and the President on this issue and on his clean energy plan.

I would respectfully ask every Member of Congress to vote for this resolution. As we said earlier, the U.S. Senate has already passed both of these resolutions because they are concerned about the President exceeding his legal authority, his power grab, his extreme plan. Even Democrats in the Senate supported these resolutions.

That is all we are trying to do today. We are not debating climate change. We are not debating the science of climate change. But we are debating the President's view on the way you address it and the fact that he is jeopardizing America because he is making us jump through more severe obstacles and hoops than any other country is being asked to do. That is why we are here today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the previous question is ordered on the joint resolution.

The question is on third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on the passage of S.J. Res. 24 will be followed by a 5-minute vote on the passage of S.J. Res. 23.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 242, nays 180, not voting 11, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). There are 2 minutes remaining.

□ 1724

Mr. KATKO changed his vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOTION TO GO TO CONFERENCE ON H.R. 644, TRADE FACILITATION AND TRADE ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2015

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule XXII, and by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I have a motion at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Brady of Texas moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 644, with the House amendment to the Senate amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, is this motion, which makes changes in the fast-track procedures that the House voted on earlier in the year, debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was about to recognize the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY) for 1 hour of debate.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, is that time divided equally, as is normally done on proposals under our rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is debatable under the hour rule.

Mr. DOGGETT. So it can be debated without yielding any time to those of us who are opposed to this motion under the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY) will be recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DOGGETT. Further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOGGETT. Under the new, open, inclusive policies that Speaker RYAN has announced, when was notice of this conference report coming up for a vote tonight first provided to all the Members of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not presented a valid parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will not respond to matters of scheduling.

Mr. DOGGETT. Well, wasn't it about 30 minutes ago?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we need to go to conference and move the Customs bill forward. We will have a motion to instruct and a full hour of debate later this evening.

I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 252, noes 170, not voting 11, as follows:

□ 1748

Mr. BEYER changed his vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. SEWELL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, during the votes held on December 1st, 2015, I was inescapably detained and away handling important matters related to my District and the State of Alabama. If I had been present, I would have voted "no" on Passage of S.J. Res. 24 and "no" on S.J. Res. 23. Also, I would have voted "yes" on the Motion to go to Conference on H.R. 644.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. RUPPERSBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I was not able to vote today for medical reasons.

Had I been present on rollcall vote 646, I would have voted "no."

Had I been present on rollcall vote 647, I would have voted "no."

Had I been present on rollcall vote 648, I would have voted "yes."

Had I been present on rollcall vote 649, I would have voted "yes."

Had I been present on rollcall vote 650, I would have voted "no."

Had I been present on rollcall vote 651, I would have voted "no."

Had I been present on rollcall vote 652, I would have voted "no."

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 8, NORTH AMERICAN ENERGY SECURITY AND INFRASTRUCTURE ACT OF 2015, AND PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1177, STUDENT SUCCESS ACT

Mr. BURGESS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 114–359) on the resolution (H. Res. 542) providing for further consideration of the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, and providing for consideration of the conference report to accompany the bill (S. 1177) to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to ensure that every child achieves, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

NORTH AMERICAN ENERGY SECURITY AND INFRASTRUCTURE ACT OF 2015

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 8.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 539 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 8.

The Chair appoints the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. JENKINS) to preside over the Committee of the Whole.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, with Mr. JENKINS of West Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIR. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered read the first time.

General debate shall not exceed 1 hour equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, today we commence debate on H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015. This bill culminates a multiyear, multi-Congress effort to ensure that folks in Michigan and every corner of the country have access to affordable and reliable energy. It has been nearly a decade since we last considered a broad energy package and a lot—a lot—has changed.

Back then, the energy situation looked downright dire: declining domestic oil and natural gas output, increasing reliance on imports, and energy prices that seemed like they had nowhere to go but up. Remember 7 years ago they were $3.84 a gallon. Manufacturers were leaving and fleeing overseas in pursuit of cheaper energy.

But thankfully, because of breakthrough innovation, a little American ingenuity, and a lot of hard work, we are now experiencing game-changing energy abundance that has, in fact, redefined America's standing at home, as well as around the globe. Now Michigan and many parts of the country are enjoying a welcome manufacturing renaissance thanks to reliable and affordable energy. It is well past time that our laws rooted in energy scarcity caught up to our newfound 21st century reality.

The first order of business is to allow the private sector to expand the Nation's energy infrastructure. The Keystone XL pipeline is certainly one of the most well-known examples of energy infrastructure projects being delayed and ultimately denied, but it is far from the only one.

We have a Federal permitting process that is not designed to expeditiously handle the many projects necessary to bring online the Nation's growing energy output and to meet energy needs of homeowners and businesses. How can it be that in this century we can't get energy to consumers in some parts of the country? We need to fix that problem. This bill does that.

H.R. 8 has several useful provisions to make the approval process more timely for projects such as interstate natural gas pipelines, LNG export facilities, and new hydropower, which we discussed during a hearing with the FERC, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, just today. And I would add that these streamlining provisions were done so in a manner that keeps the environmental and safety protections intact.

Perhaps the biggest changes brought on by our energy abundance are geopolitical. Where we once feared rising dependence on the likes of OPEC, now we can, in fact, control our energy destiny and use our new standing as an energy superpower to help our allies and friends around the world and engage in energy diplomacy. However, this is a new role for the U.S., and we don't have in place the means to act globally on energy policy yet. This bill changes that.

Using the Department of Energy's Quadrennial Energy Review as a guide, this bill begins the process of incorporating energy security and diplomacy considerations into the decision-making process. It also creates forums through which we can coordinate with our North American neighbors, as well as our allies and trading partners around the world, on energy policy.

Unfortunately, the energy news over the last decade hasn't been all that good. Cyber threats and electromagnetic pulses pose a growing and more sophisticated risk to the Nation's electricity system. We need new measures to better address these and other threats to the grid, and this bill, H.R. 8, has a number of important provisions.

I would add that while our energy abundance is a real blessing, it does not in any way reduce the importance of energy efficiency. H.R. 8 again includes a number of updates to energy efficiency policy, including measures to help the Federal Government use energy more wisely, as well as improvements to existing energy efficiency programs that have proven problematic.

A decade ago, no one, no one here, could have imagined where we would be in 2015 and how much the energy script would be flipped in our favor. It is a new day, but now that we are here, it is time to bring our energy policy in line with those new realities. It is time that we put the scarcity mindset in the rearview mirror and say yes to energy and yes to jobs.

I reserve the balance of my time.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON NATURAL RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, November 16, 2015.

Hon. FRED UPTON,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write regarding H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015. This bill contains provisions under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Natural Resources.

I recognize and appreciate your desire to bring this bill before the House of Representatives in an expeditious manner, and accordingly, I will agree that the Committee on Natural Resources will not seek a referral of the bill. I do so with the understanding that this action does not affect the jurisdiction of the Committee on Natural Resources, and that the Committee expressly reserves its authority to seek conferees on any provision within its jurisdiction during any House-Senate conference that may be convened on this, or any similar legislation. I ask that you support any such request.

Finally, I also ask that a copy of this letter and your response be inserted in the Congressional Record during consideration of H.R. 8 on the House floor.

Thank you for your work on this bill, and for your cooperation and consideration on this and many other matters shared by our committees. I look forward to H.R. 8's enactment.

Sincerely,

ROB BISHOP,
Chairman,
Committee on Natural Resources.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, November 16, 2015.

Hon. ROB BISHOP,
Chairman, Committee on Natural Resources, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write regarding H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015. As you noted, this bill contains provisions under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Natural Resources.

I appreciate your willingness to agree that the Committee on Natural Resources be discharged from further consideration of the bill. I agree that this action does not affect the jurisdiction of the Committee on Natural Resources, and that the Committee expressly reserves its authority to seek conferees on any provision within its jurisdiction during any House-Senate conference that may be convened on this, or any similar legislation. I will support any such request.

Finally, I will include a copy of your letter and this response in the Congressional Record during consideration of H.R. 8 on the House floor.

Thank you for your work and cooperation on H.R. 8.

Sincerely,

FRED UPTON,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, November 18, 2015.

Hon. FRED UPTON,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for consulting with the Committee on Foreign Affairs regarding H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015. As a result of those consultations and text edits related to the role that the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Department of State play in energy diplomacy, I agree that the Foreign Affairs Committee may be discharged from further consideration of that bill, so that it may proceed expeditiously to the House floor.

I am writing to confirm our mutual understanding that, by forgoing consideration of H.R. 8, the Foreign Affairs Committee does not waive jurisdiction over the subject matter contained in this, or any other, legislation. I also would appreciate your support for a request by the Foreign Affairs Committee for an appropriate number of conferees to any House-Senate conference involving this bill, should one occur.

I ask that a copy of our exchange of letters on this matter be included in the Congressional Record during floor consideration of H.R. 8. Thank you again for your collaborative leadership on this important legislation.

Sincerely,

EDWARD R. ROYCE,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, November 20, 2015.

Hon. EDWARD R. ROYCE,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN ROYCE: Thank you for your assistance regarding H.R. 8, North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015.

I appreciate your willingness to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from further consideration of H.R. 8 so that it can proceed expeditiously to the House floor. I agree that the Committee on Foreign Affairs does not waive jurisdiction over the subject matter contained in this or any other legislation. In addition, I agree to support a request by the Committee on Foreign Affairs for an appropriate number of conferees to any House-Senate conference involving this bill.

I will place a copy of our exchange of letters on this matter in the Congressional Record during floor consideration of H.R. 8.

Thank you for your work and cooperation on H.R. 8.

Sincerely,

FRED UPTON,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND GOVERNMENT REFORM,
Washington, DC, November 19, 2015.

Hon. FRED UPTON,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write concerning H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015. As you know, the Committee on Energy and Commerce received an original referral and the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform a secondary referral when the bill was introduced on September 16, 2015. I recognize and appreciate your desire to bring this legislation before the House of Representatives in an expeditious manner, and accordingly, the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform will forego committee action on the bill.

The Committee takes this action with our mutual understanding that by foregoing consideration of H.R. 8 at this time, we do not waive any jurisdiction over the subject matter contained in this or similar legislation. Specifically, the Oversight Committee's jurisdiction is primarily triggered by provisions in the bill related to 5 U.S.C. 552, known as the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). I appreciate that our committees have had fruitful discussions regarding these provisions and have come to an agreement related to section 4122 of the reported bill. Negotiations regarding sections 1104, 1105, and 1106, the application of FOIA as it relates to critical electric infrastructure security, the Strategic Transformer Reserve and Cyber Sense, are currently ongoing. I have full confidence that our committees will arrive at a mutually agreeable compromise, which respects the Oversight Committee's interest in narrowing FOIA exemptions, prior to floor consideration of the bill.

I request your support for the appointment of conferees from the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform during any House-Senate conference convened on this or related legislation. Finally, I would ask that a copy of our exchange of letters on this matter be included in the bill report filed by the Committee on Energy and Commerce, as well as in the Congressional Record during floor consideration, to memorialize our understanding

Sincerely,

JASON CHAFFETZ,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, December 1, 2015.

Hon. JASON CHAFFETZ,
Chairman, Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN CHAFFETZ: Thank you for your assistance regarding H.R. 8, North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015. I appreciate your willingness to forego action on the bill in the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform.

I agree that by foregoing consideration of H.R. 8 at this time, the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform does not waive any jurisdiction over the subject matter contained in this or similar legislation. I am confident that our committees will arrive at a mutually agreeable compromise on the ongoing negotiations between our committees prior to floor consideration of the bill.

I will support your request for the appointment of conferees from the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform during any House-Senate conference convened on this or related legislation. In addition, I will include a copy of our exchange of letters on this matter in the Congressional Record during floor consideration of H.R. 8

Sincerely,

FRED UPTON,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE,
Washington, DC, November 24, 2015.

Hon. FRED UPTON,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write concerning H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015, as ordered reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce. There are certain provisions in the legislation that fall within the Rule X jurisdiction of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

In order to expedite this legislation for Floor consideration, the Committee will forgo action on this bill. However, this is conditional on our mutual understanding that forgoing consideration of the bill does not alter or diminish the jurisdiction of the Committee with respect to the appointment of conferees or to any future jurisdictional claim over the subject matters contained in the bill or similar legislation. I request you urge the Speaker to name members of the Committee to any conference committee named to consider such provisions.

Please place a copy of this letter and your response acknowledging our jurisdictional interest into the Congressional Record during consideration of the measure on the House Floor.

Sincerely,

BILL SHUSTER,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, November 24, 2015.

Hon. BILL SHUSTER,
Chairman, Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SHUSTER: Thank you for your letter concerning H.R. 8, North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015, as ordered reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce. As you noted, there are certain provision in the legislation that fall within the Rule X jurisdiction of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

I appreciate your willingness to forgo action on this bill in order to expedite this legislation for Floor consideration. I agree that forgoing consideration of the bill does not alter or diminish the jurisdiction of the Committee with respect to the appointment of conferees or to any future jurisdictional claim over the subject matters contained in the bill or similar legislation. In addition, I will support your request for the Speaker to name members of the Committee to any conference committee named to consider such provisions.

I will place a copy of your letter and this response into the Congressional Record during consideration of the measure on the House Floor.

Sincerely,

FRED UPTON,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE, SPACE, AND TECHNOLOGY,
Washington, DC, December 1, 2015.

Hon. FRED UPTON
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing concerning H.R. 8, the ''North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015,'' which your Committee reported on November 19, 2015.

H.R. 8 contains provisions within the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology's Rule X jurisdiction. As a result of your having consulted with the Committee and in order to expedite this bill for floor consideration, the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology will forego action on the bill. This is being done on the basis of our mutual understanding that doing so will in no way diminish or alter the jurisdiction of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology with respect to the appointment of conferees, or to any future jurisdictional claim over the subject matters contained in the bill or similar legislation.

I would appreciate your response to this letter confirming this understanding, and would request that you include a copy of this letter and your response in the Congressional Record during the floor consideration of this bill. Thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

LAMAR SMITH,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, December 1, 2015.

Hon. LAMAR SMITH,
Chairman, Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SMITH: Thank you for your letter concerning H.R. 8, North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015.

As you noted, H.R. 8 contains provisions within the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology's Rule X jurisdiction. I appreciate your willingness to forego action on the bill in order to expedite this bill for floor consideration. I agree that doing so will in no way diminish or alter the jurisdiction of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology with respect to the appointment of conferees, or to any future jurisdictional claim over the subject matters contained in the bill or similar legislation.

I will place a copy of your letter and this response into the Congressional during the Floor consideration of this bill.

Sincerely,

FRED UPTON,
Chairman.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, when Chairman UPTON and I first talked about energy legislation, I was encouraged that we would be working together to develop a consensus, bipartisan bill. In the tradition of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, that is what we started to do, spending months negotiating over language and finally reporting a bill from subcommittee on a voice vote in July. That bill was modest but bipartisan and was the result of good faith cooperation.

Unfortunately, that effort fell apart. H.R. 8 is not a bipartisan consensus bill. Instead, the House is taking up a backward-looking piece of energy legislation at a time when we need to move forward. H.R. 8 undermines the progress we have made in deploying the sustainable clean energy economy of the future.

Although the title for H.R. 8 suggests we are authorizing improvements in energy infrastructure, the bill provides no funding or initiatives to address some of the significant energy infrastructure issues we are facing.

Meanwhile, the bill has only gotten worse since it left the committee. It was in Upton's manager's amendment that strips out the few good provisions that remained from the committee markup. This so-called energy bill now does nothing for solar, wind, or any other clean energy technology.

On top of that, the Republicans deleted a whole title of the bill written primarily by the subcommittee ranking member, BOBBY RUSH, the 21st Century Workforce Initiative. That title created a new program at DOE to help minorities, women, and veterans find work and build careers in the energy industry. This was something that Republicans praised throughout the committee process. In fact, the Energy Subcommittee chairman even praised the title last night during testimony before the Rules Committee. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the bill before us doesn't have that provision.

What does that say about Republicans' so-called commitment to expanding job opportunities in the energy sector for minorities, women, and those who served our country? Unfortunately, it says all too much, and none of it is good.

□ 1800

H.R. 8 has one central theme binding its titles: an unerring devotion to the energy of the past. Provision after provision favors an energy policy that is dominated by fossil fuels and unnecessary energy use. It is the Republican Party's 19th-century vision for the future of U.S. energy policy in the 21st century.

Needless to say, the administration opposes this bill. If it reaches the President's desk, it will be vetoed. I, too, oppose H.R. 8, and I urge my colleagues to reject this attempt to roll back progress in energy efficiency and clean energy.

I have to say I don't usually pay much attention to comments that come from the media, but I was actually asked a couple of minutes ago to comment on the fact that some of the Republicans have said that this bill is actually something they can take to the Paris conference and talk about in a positive way. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Paris conference is seeking to address climate change and is seeking to move us towards less reliance on greenhouse gases, less reliance on fossil fuels, and more on renewables. Nothing in this bill accomplishes that goal, and it is hard for me to believe that my colleagues on the Republican side could even suggest that, somehow, this is something that they would want to bring up or talk about at the Paris conference.

Again, I can't say anything positive about this bill, and it is unfortunate that we have gotten to the point now at which there is no effort, really, to reach any of the Democrats' concerns.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), the chairman emeritus of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank Chairman UPTON for yielding me the time.

I want to commend him for his leadership on this initiative and for getting it to the floor. This has been a long process, and the gentleman is to be commended for going through the regular order of the subcommittee, of the full committee, and now to floor consideration.

I support H.R. 8, as reported out of committee and as amended in the manager's amendment that the gentleman presented to the Rules Committee.

I have requested—and I think it will be made in order—an amendment to that bill to include a provision that we passed as a stand-alone bill several months ago, H.R. 702, which would repeal the current ban on crude oil exports.

My amendment, if made in order by the Rules Committee—and I hope that it will be—takes what the floor passed with amendments—and we had a number of Republican and Democrat amendments that were added dealing with terrorism, national security, and things of this sort. I am asking that the Rules Committee make in order H.R. 702, as amended, and put it on the floor tomorrow as an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the United States, we currently produce a little over 9 million barrels of oil per day. That makes us number 3 in the world in terms of daily crude oil production, but we are not allowed to export any of that crude oil. We can export refined products and we do export up to 3 or 4 million barrels per day of refined products, but we cannot export crude oil.

If my amendment is accepted by the Rules Committee, made in order, voted on in a positive way by the House, sent to the Senate, and the Senate passes H.R. 8, and it is signed by the President, we could then begin to export our crude oil.

We have the capability to easily produce 15 million barrels a day, and some experts say we could go up to 20. That would be a strategic asset vis-a-vis OPEC, vis-a-vis ISIS, vis-a-vis the Russians, in that we could use our oil in the international oil markets.

It would help our economy, would literally create hundreds of thousands of jobs, and would, surprisingly, minimize or lower gasoline prices here in the United States because more U.S. oil in the world market would lower the world price, which would lower gasoline prices at the pump.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your support. I ask that the Rules Committee make my bipartisan amendment in order, which is cosponsored by Mr. CUELLAR, Mr. CONAWAY, Mr. FLORES, and Mr. MCCAUL, and that we add it to your excellent bill on the floor tomorrow.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO).

Mr. TONKO. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, there is strong—certainly bipartisan—consensus that we need to update and modernize our energy infrastructure. Unfortunately, this bill fails to make meaningful advances in this arena.

It does not advance clean energy. The ''energy efficiency'' title would actually be a setback in reducing consumption and carbon emissions, and climate change is not addressed at all. Whenever possible, this legislation favors suppliers over consumers, consumption over efficiency, and the fossil fuels over renewable energy.

Most disappointingly, this bill could have been bipartisan. The Senate's energy bill, while far from perfect, at least acknowledges that we need to invest real dollars into upgrading our Nation's energy systems.

This bill has no shortage of flaws. I have offered two amendments to address some of these shortcomings. The first would reauthorize the Weatherization Assistance Program and the State Energy Program. These are two existing programs that have operated successfully for years.

The Weatherization Assistance Program supports State-based programs to improve the energy efficiency of the homes of low-income families. The Department of Energy provides grants to the States to deliver these services through local weatherization agencies.

The Weatherization Assistance Program helps those in our communities who do not have the financial resources to make energy efficiency investments on their own: the elderly, the disabled, and other low-income families amongst them who are struggling to make ends meet.

The second amendment would strike section 1101, an unnecessary change to FERC's natural gas pipeline approval process. Nothing has been done to cast FERC's role as the lead agency for siting gas pipelines in doubt, but the majority has used this pretense to make it easier for pipeline companies to have projects approved without extensive public consultation, requiring FERC to make a decision within 90 days regardless of the complexity of the application.

It would also allow for remote surveying instead of on-site inspections. This would allow companies to circumvent property owners' rights when surveying land. My amendment would strike this section to ensure Federal and State regulators have the time necessary to review any and all applications, but these issues are far from my only concerns with this bill.

Energy efficiency has a long history of bipartisanship, but, sadly, this has not continued in this bill.

According to the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy, this bill would actually net cost consumers and cause additional emissions.

Furthermore, the DOE is prevented from providing assistance if it finds that a proposed code does not meet a payback period of 10 years or less. That is a return on investment that does not jibe with reality where 30-year mortgages are often the norm.

The bill repeals a section of the Energy Independence and Security Act which has been used to improve the efficiency of new Federal buildings.

There was an extensive hydropower section included during the full committee markup that was not subject to a hearing despite significantly changing the FERC licensing process.

It does nothing to address the public health and safety hazards created by old, leaky natural gas pipelines.

It does nothing to assist States' efforts to upgrade and modernize their electric grids.

It is silent on the infrastructure maintenance issues associated with the Strategic Petroleum Reserve that the administration identified in the Quadrennial Energy Review.

It has totally failed to recognize the growth in distributed renewable energy, such as wind and solar, and it should come as no surprise that this bill ignores the impact of climate change, which remains a major threat to our energy security, our economy, and human health.

These are just a handful of the serious issues with this bill.

I believe all of us started with the intention of continuing the Energy and Commerce Committee's long tradition of working on comprehensive energy legislation in a bipartisan fashion, but this bill is a far cry from the discussion drafts we actually held hearings on earlier this year. I understand we may not agree on everything, but this legislation fails to capitalize on those areas of agreement in any meaningful way.

This bill's focus is on the past, not on the future. It fails to make the necessary investments in our energy infrastructure to improve safety, public health, and reliability.

It rolls back efforts to improve energy efficiency, does nothing to encourage the expansion of renewable energy, and ignores climate change, as I indicated, altogether. It promotes a future that is economically and environmentally unsustainable.

I then urge my colleagues to reject this bill. We need to go back to the drawing board and craft a bill that actually makes investments and looks forward to America's energy future.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. BISHOP), the chairman of the Natural Resources Committee.

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the United States has become a leader in the area of energy production. But if we are going to maintain that leadership and be a true support for our allies, it requires certain actions that Chairman UPTON and his committee have recognized and have presented to us in this North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act.

This bill actually contains two provisions that were bipartisan provisions that passed in my Natural Resources Committee, both of which will ensure that the flow of energy to our Nation will be facilitated and will continue on in the future.

One, by Mr. MACARTHUR of New Jersey, illustrates the archaic provisions that will never be used to prohibit and use Federal land as a hindrance to pipeline production even if those pipelines are underground and if they are already in established corridors for energy production, especially those going into the northeast of this country. It is an extremely important position and point of view.

Mr. ZINKE of Montana and Mr. SCHRADER of Oregon also have a bipartisan bill that deals with the Electricity Reliability and Forest Protection Act, which would minimize the potential of wildfire risk in the over 100,000 miles of power lines we have going through national forest and Bureau of Land Management properties.

The provisions would require the agencies to actually work to come up with constructive policies and to make timely decisions so that the utilities have the ability to take out hazardous elements, like trees, and so that ratepayers are not going to be on the hook for the liability of a freak forest fire that would come because of Federal inaction.

American energy production has literally changed in less than a decade. There is no reason Federal lands should blockade any kind of pragmatic approach from having these resources moved from the places they are developed to where people can actually benefit from them.

This bill helps people, and it will move our country forward. I appreciate Chairman UPTON's and his committee's leadership. This is an essential one if we are actually going to forge a better future for the United States. I am proud to be down here to support it, and I appreciate adding these two important, bipartisan provisions as part of the overall package.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCNERNEY).

Mr. MCNERNEY. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, it is well past time that Congress update our national energy policy with a framework that includes clean energy technologies, reduces fossil fuel consumption, boosts energy efficiency in residential, commercial, and Federal buildings, and provides the funding necessary to advance our workforce and technological innovation, but, unfortunately, H.R. 8 does not meet these goals.

I do want to thank Chairman UPTON for working with me on several provisions that are intended to improve responses to physical and cyberattacks on the grid, that encourage the development and use of water and energy-efficient technology, that streamline hydropower permitting, and that generally improve the modernization of our electric grid.

Unfortunately, the funding was removed for the electric grid grant program and for carbon capture sequestration, a provision promoting the next generation energy workforce is gone, and language that weakens energy efficiency in buildings has not been fixed.

This is a big disappointment, Mr. Chairman, because throughout most of the process there was real bipartisan cooperation, but in the final stages, the majority fell into partisanship and changed the bill to something most Democrats can't support.

So it is with great disappointment that I oppose H.R. 8, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

□ 1815

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CARTER).

Mr. CARTER of Georgia. Mr. Chair, I rise today in support of H.R. 8, a bill that will help our Nation rise to meet growing energy demands and challenges.

Our energy policy is incompatible with the current state of domestic energy supply and production. The United States is now the world's largest energy producer, but our energy infrastructure is woefully inadequate. We have the innovation and technology to safely expand the electric grid and pipeline systems, but administrative red tape has severely hindered these projects.

As long as natural gas, hydroelectric, and nuclear energy projects continue to languish for years in drawn-out Federal permitting processes, nobody can benefit from the cleaner and more affordable energy these sources can provide.

Not only do we desperately need to expand our energy infrastructure to ensure reliable and affordable energy, but our national security depends on secured energy sources and updated infrastructure to protect against real threats.

Cyber attacks on electric utility systems and electromagnetic pulses are no longer things you only see in movies. These threats are very real and possible, and we need to be prepared. We need to improve energy infrastructure security now, not later.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill so Americans can continue to have access to an affordable, reliable, and secure energy supply.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. WATSON COLEMAN).

Mrs. WATSON COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in adamant opposition to H.R. 8.

I don't have much time, so I can't go into all the terrible provisions included in this legislation. To be clear, there are many.

I do want to address language that would give the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, or FERC, what amounts to fast-tracking power for pipeline approvals.

Setting arbitrary deadlines for the studies, research, and public comment periods for dangerous and volatile pipeline projects, regardless of how complicated the proposal or how sensitive the land these projects cuts through, doesn't give us what my colleagues across the aisle call energy security.

What it will do is put private, public, and protected land, clean water, and our environment at risk.

In my district, where we are already fighting just such a project, my constituents will be the first to tell you just how preposterous a provision of this nature is.

This bill deserves a resounding and unilateral ''no,'' and I hope my colleagues will join me in defeating it.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time is remaining on both sides?

The CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan has 18½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New Jersey has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chair, I rise today to speak about the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act.

With new technology and innovations, the energy industry is growing rapidly, and this important legislation works to maximize America's energy potential.

The United States leads the world in energy production, but, sadly, due to Washington's bureaucratic red tape, projects like updating our pipelines and electric grid have fallen way behind.

This legislation will modernize our energy infrastructure, protect our electricity system, strengthen energy security and diplomacy, and improve energy efficiency.

Bolstering our energy security and making our infrastructure more resilient will, in turn, strengthen our national security and our economy. I support this important legislation because it is the next step in becoming energy-independent. Now is the time to dramatically increase our investment in homegrown American energy.

When I came to Congress, my top priority was growing the economy and creating jobs. Mr. Chairman, this bill will do exactly that. It makes no sense to place restrictions on the abundance of energy potential in America. The United States is an energy superpower, and it is time to step up and lead.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts (Ms. TSONGAS).

Ms. TSONGAS. Mr. Chair, I rise in strong opposition to this legislation and, in particular, a section of the bill that would create an opening to cause irreparable damage to our national parks.

H.R. 8 would establish national energy security corridors to short circuit the approval process for natural gas pipelines that cross our Nation's public lands. In doing so, it eliminates longstanding protections afforded to our national parks and other historically significant areas that were set aside for the very distinct purpose of preserving our Nation's cultural and natural heritage.

This legislation also blocks the public from providing any input on where these natural gas pipeline corridors should be located.

My home State of Massachusetts, like many areas around the country, faces real energy challenges. In my district, a company is proposing to build a new 250-mile natural gas pipeline that crosses three States. I have heard from hundreds of my constituents expressing their concerns with the project, particularly with regard to its route.

Thanks to extensive public review and input, the pipeline route has already been adjusted to minimize some of the environmental impacts, but there are still many outstanding concerns that deserve careful scrutiny to be sure that the route does not adversely impact local farmland, State forests, parks, wildlife management areas, and wetlands.

The significant amount of interest in this proposed pipeline reflects the Commonwealth's longstanding history of preserving natural habitats and protecting open spaces for the public benefit, and we have invested enormous public resources toward these goals. This is also true of the investments that American taxpayers have made in our national parks.

By expediting approval of natural gas pipelines, H.R. 8 would directly erode the National Park Service's ability to meet its core mission of preserving and protecting our Nation's natural, cultural, and historic resources, unimpaired for the use and enjoyment of future generations.

I offered an amendment with my colleague from Virginia (Mr. BEYER) to remove this section from the bill. However, the majority blocked this simple amendment from coming to the floor and receiving an up-or-down vote.

Our national parks belong to all Americans and have been famously called ''America's best idea.'' National parks protect, celebrate, and give access to the many places that have shaped and defined who we are as a people and a country.

Members should have been given the opportunity to vote on whether or not we should protect our national parks from natural gas pipelines.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this legislation.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chair, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MACARTHUR).

Mr. MACARTHUR. Mr. Chair, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act does some important things to move us into the 21st century with our energy policy. It advances modernization, reliability, security, and efficiency in our energy infrastructure.

I want to focus on one section of that bill, title 5, that ''national energy security corridors'' portion. I originally proposed this as a separate bill, and I am pleased to see it as part of this energy act. Simply put, it allows us to move natural gas from the western to the eastern United States.

Let me give you an example of why this matters. A couple of weeks ago, I visited Winteringham Village in Toms River in my district. It is a village comprised almost entirely of seniors, and their average income is slightly over $12,000 a year.

These people are not getting a cost-of-living increase under Social Security, but they most certainly are facing higher energy costs. The reason is simple. While other States, western States, enjoy lower energy costs, States like mine are facing higher energy costs, and the reason is simple. We don't have the energy infrastructure to move gas from the West to the East.

Last winter, on one particular day, the cost of natural gas in New Jersey was $22.35 for a million BTUs. It was $1.50 at the same time in Pennsylvania, one State away from me.

The solution is this ''energy security corridors'' portion of the bill. It requires and empowers the Secretary of the Interior to designate 10 natural gas corridors across Federal lands.

Now, I just heard that it is across national parks. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Federal Government owns much land that is not park land, and this would allow the Secretary of the Interior to designate corridors so we can properly plan our energy needs.

It does a few things for us. It lowers energy costs. It protects the most vulnerable of our citizens. It would require thoughtful planning of where to put pipelines. It would be subject to a full environmental review under NEPA.

It would create jobs. The President of the North American Building Trades Union testified at our hearing that it would not only create jobs in building these corridors, but it would create jobs because of lower energy costs. Lastly, it would increase our security because energy security and national security are inextricably linked.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to have this portion of the bill included, the ''national energy security corridors'' portion. I urge my colleagues to support this entire bill and move our energy policy into the 21st century.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BEYER).

Mr. BEYER. Mr. Chairman, I was disappointed to see the Rules Committee decided to add H.R. 2295, the National Energy Security Corridors Act, to H.R. 8.

There is no doubt that getting natural gas to where it is needed and to lowering electric and heating bills are worthy accomplishments, but we shouldn't accomplish these by steamrolling the concerns of residents who would see new pipelines built in their backyards.

Right now, there are multiple proposals to run natural gas pipelines from West Virginia through the Commonwealth of Virginia to the eastern seaboard. There is the Atlantic coast pipeline, the Mountain Valley pipeline, and more being considered.

Understandably, people who live along the proposed route of these pipelines are concerned. Once a pipeline route is approved by FERC, land can be taken by eminent domain. The companies involved, of course, want to draw the straightest, cheapest route they can. The communities in the way of these routes face huge impacts, environmentally and financially. They deserve a say.

Unfortunately, the legislation provides absolutely no method for the public to have their voice heard when it comes to the location of these corridors. It completely waives the Natural Environmental Policy Act for the corridor designation, shutting out the community's opportunity for public input.

Local governments are only allowed to speak to the extent that they can help identify the most commercially viable, cost-effective acreage. Individual resident concerns or environmental factors don't even come into play.

This is not a productive way forward. This doesn't simplify getting natural gas to the people who need it. This is a way that will lead to more opposition, more lawsuits, and an atmosphere of distrust and resentment

I have another concern. H.R. 8 now contains a provision which will allow pipelines to be permitted across national parks without congressional approval. This is contrary to longstanding U.S. law. Every time we put a pipeline across a park, Congress has been involved.

My many friends in the Appalachian Trail community and the national parks conservation community are deeply worried about Congress abrogating its responsibility to approve such pipeline crossings.

We can't ignore the people and the parks that will be impacted by this bill. I encourage my colleagues to oppose H.R. 8.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This energy bill does nothing for solar, wind, or any other clean energy technology. It does nothing for energy infrastructure either since all funding in the bill was stripped by the GOP.

The bill contains an energy efficiency title that actually results in more energy consumption.

The bill contains provisions that will drive up electricity prices in the Northeast and mid-Atlantic by rigging the markets to prop up old and uneconomical coal and nuclear plants that are losing out in the market to cost-effective natural gas and renewables.

It also has provisions to help gas pipeline companies and hydroelectric licenses that will roll over environmental laws—like the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, the NEPA—and undermine the rights of consumers, tribes, and States.

Of course, the version that will be on the floor will have a couple of bad additions from the Committee on Natural Resources, including the MacArthur ''pipeline through parks'' legislation that would make it easy to run pipelines through Yellowstone, Yosemite, and every other national park.

Mr. Chairman, this is a terrible bill that demonstrates that the Republican Party is solely focused on the energy policies of the past and is committed to throwing up barriers to the development of a clean and sustainable energy future.

Every Democrat should join us and the Obama administration in opposing the bill's passage.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

My Committee on Energy and Commerce colleagues and I worked to create this broad energy bill and modernize our policies.

A generation ago, policymakers were concerned with managing a scarcity of energy resources, but times have changed. We are in the middle of a resurgence of American energy manufacturing. We should manage our surplus of energy resources with clear, straightforward policies that maximize our energy potential.

This bill is a necessary legislative step to ensure our energy infrastructure is robust and continues to create jobs in the years to come. Modern energy challenges demand modern energy policies. We must cut outdated red tape and ensure the energy markets remain nimble and secure.

With H.R. 8, America can continue to take advantage of recent technology advancements and encourage a growing market that yields jobs at home and more influence abroad. The world doesn't want to deal with unstable exporters, such as Russia or Iran, if they don't have to. We should be the secure and reliable trading partner that they can trust and they do trust.

H.R. 8 strengthens international partnerships and reforms processes for energy exports that will pay important dividends for generations to come.

I would like to thank my colleagues on the committee, especially Chairman UPTON, for their work on this very important bill.

This bill will keep energy affordable and ensure reliable electricity for consumers and families across the nation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying I'm pleased that this bill includes several measures I have championed, including bills I've offered relating to energy efficiency and electric vehicles. However, I have to oppose this legislation because H.R. 8 fails to address climate change. In fact, the bill includes several controversial provisions that shift our nation's energy policy into reverse.

I'm very grateful to Chairman UPTON and Subcommittee Chairman WHITFIELD for including my legislation, the Energy Efficient Government Technology Act, in the base text of H.R. 8. This bipartisan, noncontroversial bill which I introduced with Rep. KINZINGER, received 375 votes on the House floor last year. This measure would save taxpayers millions of dollars and would make the federal government a leader in reducing energy use at data centers which can be highly inefficient.

I also appreciate that two amendments I offered at the Energy and Commerce Committee markup of this bill were agreed to by voice vote and are included in the Manager's Amendment. The first would allow federal agencies to offer electric vehicle charging stations to guests and employees, a practice that is not currently allowed. The second would add transparency requirements to ensure that only critical infrastructure information is protected from FOIA requests, and that this designation is periodically reviewed to ensure this authority is not abused. These provisions are incremental but important steps toward promoting innovation and deployment of clean and energy-saving technologies.

Unfortunately, the same cannot be said about the rest of H.R. 8. With historic international climate negotiations currently underway in Paris, this so-called ''comprehensive'' energy bill does not include a single reference to climate change or promotion of renewable resources. This represents the squandering of an opportunity to put in place a 21st century energy policy for our country that promotes clean energy and reduces our dependence on the fossil fuel resources that cause climate change.

H.R. 8 includes several controversial provisions that my colleagues and I opposed at Committee and that are also opposed by the Administration. For example, the bill contains unnecessary provisions to short-circuit the review process for exports of liquefied natural gas (LNG). The current process, which requires the Department of Energy to ensure that all exports are in the public interest of the United States, is working and already has us on track to be the largest LNG exporter in the world within a decade. H.R. 8 also includes provisions that would require a short-sighted view of energy efficiency investments in building codes, and it would repeal the requirement that all new and remodeled federal buildings phase out fossil fuel use by 2030. Lastly, the Manager's Amendment includes a highly controversial bill from the Natural Resources Committee that would limit public review and direct more natural gas pipelines to be built on public lands, including National Parks.

Again, I appreciate the Chairman's willingness to accept my bipartisan additions to this bill, but I cannot support this legislation and I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

The CHAIR. All time for debate has expired.

Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. MACARTHUR) having assumed the chair, Mr.

JENKINS of West Virginia, Chair of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 644, TRADE FACILITATION AND TRADE ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2015

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JENKINS of West Virginia). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ms. Kuster moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the bill, H.R. 644 be instructed to agree to the provisions contained in subtitle A of title VII of the Senate amendment relating to currency manipulation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 2 of rule XXII, the gentlewoman from New Hampshire (Ms. KUSTER) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Hampshire.

Ms. KUSTER. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of my motion that will instruct conferees to include in the conference report language to combat currency manipulation from the Senate-passed version of H.R. 644.

Currency manipulation by foreign governments is one of the greatest challenges we face to creating the type of free and fair trade that will benefit all Americans from top to bottom and help us create more jobs right here at home.

I, like so many others, am highly focused on helping our domestic manufacturers grow and create good, strong, middle class jobs. Since taking office, I have made supporting job creation and economic opportunity my number one priority, and our State's manufacturers play an integral role in that conversation.

Unfortunately, U.S. manufacturers already face so many challenges that make it more difficult to compete with foreign companies. From the lower cost of labor to limited environmental protections, our manufacturers must compete with foreign policies that lead to an uneven playing field.

Unfair currency manipulation makes that competition even more difficult. Currency manipulation is when governments use monetary policy to devalue their currency, which makes their exports cheaper and foreign imports more expensive.

The good news is that we have the most talented workers and the most innovative companies in the world, and we can compete and win despite these challenges.

For example, right in my district in New Hampshire, I visited dozens of new manufacturing companies that are harnessing cutting-edge technologies, like precision manufacturing and healthcare technology, to revitalize the industry and create modern, 21st century jobs for our workers. We must support these American manufacturers by cracking down on unfair advantages overseas that hinder their success.

This motion will help to level the playing field for manufacturers in New Hampshire and across the country by directing the Department of Commerce to slap duties on goods that have unfairly benefited from undervalued currency. This is the only provision in either customs bill that will effectively deter currency manipulation by our trading partners.

Working to address currency devaluation has long enjoyed bipartisan support. In 2010, the House overwhelmingly passed legislation restricting currency manipulation by a vote of 348–79. Earlier this year, the Senate version of this legislation passed 78–20, in large part because of the critical language restricting currency manipulation.

However, the version of this legislation passed by the House does not include the bipartisan provision that so many agree is crucial for limiting the ability of U.S. workers and businesses to compete more fairly with foreign companies and workers.

I strongly support fair and open trade that will spur job creation back here in the United States. When 95 percent of global consumers exist outside the United States, we have to find new markets for our manufacturers and other producers to grow and create more jobs here at home.

But when U.S. manufacturers are already disadvantaged by foreign products that are subsidized by their home currency, it is difficult for them to compete both at home and abroad.

And the impacts of this unfair manipulation are real. The Peterson Institute estimates that, over the past decade, at least 1 million and as many as 5 million jobs have been lost due to currency manipulation.

Additionally, an analysis by the Economic Policy Institute estimates that by eliminating currency manipulation we can reduce our trade deficit by as much as $500 billion, leading to a substantial increase in GDP growth and helping our American economy thrive.

Specifically, New Hampshire could expect to see roughly 13,000 new jobs as a result of an effective policy against currency manipulation.

The status quo is simply not good enough for U.S. workers, and that is why I am offering this motion today.

Our workers are already competing with foreign companies that pay their employees a fraction of what U.S. workers make. We should do whatever we can to help make it less difficult for U.S. companies to compete globally. Adding this currency manipulation language to the bill before us today will give us the best chance to do that.

Please join me in supporting my motion in support of American manufacturers.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 644.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in opposition to the motion to instruct conferees.

There is no question currency manipulation is a real problem, and I and many other Republicans are committed to fighting it. The bill that we are going to conference on includes strong currency provisions, thanks to the hard work of Representative MILLER and members of the Michigan delegation.

In addition, earlier this year, we passed a trade promotion authority legislation that, for the very first time, raised fighting manipulation to a primary negotiating objective and provides the administration more tools to tackle the practice.

However, if the United States begins unilaterally levying tariffs, our trading partners will no doubt do the same, leading to a very dangerous cycle. This would undermine the very purpose of trade agreements: to break down barriers and to open economic freedom. More importantly, this would hurt American competitiveness and hurt our jobs.

I am also concerned that pursuing a unilateral approach could cause the United States to be a target for retaliation by countries like China, harming our businesses and their employees, and risk putting the United States in violation of international obligations and out of WTO compliance.

And the administration agrees.

Earlier this year, Secretary Lew sent a letter to Congress stating that the administration would oppose legislation that would use the countervailing duty process to address currency undervaluation because it would raise questions about consistency with our international obligations and that it would be counterproductive to our ongoing bilateral and multilateral engagement as well as to our efforts to promote greater accountability on currency policies in the context of the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has a unique responsibility as a world reserve currency. This type of measure puts our standing at risk.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, this motion is the next step in fast-track consideration of Asian trade agreements and perhaps other trade agreements.

The fast-trackers know that the only way they can sell this agreement to the American people is to rely on stealth as much as possible to hide the agreement, as they have, for as long as possible; and then, even at the present time, not to give full information about all aspects of this agreement, such as the alleged $18,000 tax cuts being provided foreigners, without indicating what tax cuts are available for Americans or what the effect of these tax cuts might be. And now, today, under this new, more inclusive House that we have heard so much about with the new Speaker, we are provided less than an hour's notice for the fast-trackers to strike again.

In moving to go to conference on a bill to attempt to fix a defective fast-track proposal, they have done so under a procedure that cut off all debate. We were not permitted to say a word about the customs bill as a whole, and the only way that we are able to comment about what is happening here at all is thanks to the gentlewoman from New Hampshire who has offered a nonbinding motion about one of the many questionable provisions in this customs bill. It is a very important provision concerning currency manipulation that allows some foreign trading partners to use their currencies and adjust them to get what they cannot do through normal trade procedures and greatly disadvantage American manufacturers and hurt American jobs.

I applaud the gentlewoman's consideration and offering of that amendment. Even though it will not bind the conference committee, it is a way for the House to speak out about that issue.

But this is not the only flaw that exists in the customs bill. Indeed, the first provision included in this customs bill as passed by the House—ironically, brought up today, as countries with good will are struggling with the issue of how we address climate change in Paris—instructs that no trade agreements can obligate the United States with respect to global warming or climate change.

So the bill that is being sent to conference, as approved in the House, is designed to prevent our acting concerning climate change, which is the great threat—perhaps one of the major national security threats, and certainly the greatest environmental threat of our time. We can see the effects all around us when we are not surrounded by climate change deniers, of which there are many in this House who refuse to accept science and prefer mythology and ideology to science. Hence, this provision in a bill in a trade negotiation that began considering ways to address climate change now has a prohibition against doing it.

A second problem—I am all for trade. I voted for trade or supported trade with most of the countries that are in the Trans-Pacific Partnership. One of those countries, however, believes in turning a blind eye to trading women, trading children, trading indentured workers, and that country is Malaysia.

Until the last couple of months, Malaysia was in a category with North Korea and a handful of other countries as a country that was doing the least and had the worst record when it comes to human trafficking. So the United States Senate approved a provision to address that concern with Malaysia. And when that provision was in the Ways and Means Committee in markup, I specifically asked then-Chairman RYAN to ensure that we had any human trafficking amendment language from the Senate committee in this customs bill or in his TPP bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. DOGGETT. He told me in the course of that hearing that he would oppose truly conforming the House bill with the Senate bill because ''it would make it more difficult to negotiate TPP,'' this Asian trade agreement.

So we put the desire for trade over our principles. I think it is possible to have more trade and support a 21st century trade policy without sacrificing our values as Americans.

What has happened in the meantime is a reclassification of Malaysia, all designed to get the trade there without getting Malaysia to do what it should about human trafficking, which I think is really tragic.

Then there is the third issue addressed in this customs bill, and that is the question of enforcement. Of course, when it comes to protection of the environment, when it comes to standards so that we are not in a race to the bottom with our American workers versus foreign workers, say in Vietnam working for 60 cents an hour, this United States Trade Representative's office has been asleep at the wheel. That is the name of a great Texas swing band, but it is not a very good policy when it comes to enforcing the law. Unfortunately, these enforcement provisions which are part of this customs bill leave it to USTR to proceed as it has in the past.

I think, instead of going to conference, what we should be doing is going back to the drawing board in the committee, looking at the enforcement provisions, and asking why it is that, though it has had responsibility to enforce environmental and labor guarantees, it has not brought successful actions to accomplish either.

And specifically with regard to the environment, in addition to the climate change provisions, one of the most troubling developments as far as both climate and the environment is the question of logging in the Amazon region and other sensitive areas. USTR was charged with seeking audits of that logging and seeing that we acted under agreements that were approved during the Bush administration. It has failed to do so.

So, for one reason after another, going to conference is a mistake. I applaud the motion. I hope it is adopted, but it is tragic that we are moving in this direction.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

People often ask: How do you end the gridlock in Washington? The answer is found in the Constitution. The House of Representatives passes its best idea on how to solve a problem, the Senate does the same, and then you go to a conference committee to try to find common ground and to try to find solutions that advance the principles of both parties to try to solve big problems.

The motion we passed earlier tonight was to start that open and transparent process of going to a conference committee and having representatives of the House and Senate, Republicans and Democrats, come together to try to work out these issues. The underlying bill passed the House and the Senate earlier this summer. There have been a lot of, I think, very healthy discussions between both Chambers and both parties in how we find common ground.

So this motion is to instruct those conferees; but in truth, what we are seeking is that open, transparent, I think, constitutional process where we listen to the ideas of, for example, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), a member of the Ways and Means Committee whom I respect, where we listen to the ideas of Senate Republicans and Democrats and we, again, try to find common ground on a couple of things: one, how do we streamline the time and the cost and efficiency of America trading its goods as we work to sell America throughout the world, working through issues that were raised in trade promotion authority by both parties.

These are legitimate, sincere issues. We have got an opportunity at conference to discuss them. Then, hopefully, we will find common ground and bring that solution back to the House and to the Senate for final approval. This is simply what we are trying to do.

Again, this motion to instruct goes after an issue we all agree on: currency manipulation. The key is to do it the right way so that it doesn't boomerang on America but actually gets to this issue. We are going to have this discussion in the conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding, and congratulations on your motion to instruct.

First, let me just say, in terms of process, I do think it is important that, before there is a motion to go to conference, there be some notification to the minority; because there have been discussions underway about the customs bill for a long time, and no one on our side, including our leadership, was given any notice of the motion to go to conference today. I think that is a mistake, and I hope it won't be repeated. I say that in good faith and with some good cheer. It is a bad precedent, and I hope it won't be followed.

Let me just say a word about currency. We have been working on this for years. We passed several bills through this House directly relating to currency, and it never became law. Instead, there has been interminable talk about doing something. So, finally, there was placed in the Senate bill the proposal of CHUCK SCHUMER. We have an almost similar bill in the House. What is happening here is, I think, that the House bill is going to eliminate the Schumer amendment.

So for all the talk on currency, we are essentially going to be back to where we were and have been for years. There are no teeth in the amendment that was proposed by my colleague from Michigan (Mrs. MILLER). There are no teeth in it. It is kind of all gums. The same is true of the other language in the Senate bill on currency, with all due respect. It just doesn't face up to the issue.

We have proposed some ideas to try to add strength to what has been a weak structure, and essentially what happens now is, instead of further discussions, we are going to conference. I think it is now preordained that the Schumer amendment will be eliminated. It will be left with essentially empty language in terms of real strength to it.

So I congratulate my very distinguished colleague from New Hampshire for not only bringing this up, but for your eloquence. We lost millions of jobs because of currency manipulation by Japan in the nineties and by China thereafter. The estimate is 2, 3, 4 million jobs. What more does this institution want?

Let me just say a couple of words about two other provisions.

The House bill essentially added language to TPA that said that there must be assurance that trade agreements do not require changes to U.S. law or obligate the United States with respect to global warming or climate change.

□ 1900

So here we are going to conference one of the days of the Paris conference, and we face the language in the House that eliminates any meaningful opportunity in trade agreements to address climate change.

It may take me a little longer. I may have to ask for a minute, but I want to say something about our previous action.

We put in May 10 provisions relating to Peru and the Amazon. Why? In part, because it was displacing people who were living there, but also because the Amazon conditions affect the climate throughout the Americas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Ms. KUSTER. I yield an additional 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. And if this language were in place when we did May 10, we would not have been able to have that provision that is part of American law proudly. So we are headed in the wrong direction.

Let me just say a last word about human trafficking. The State Department reports on human trafficking in Malaysia are very clear. The ink could not be darker. That is that there has been massive human trafficking and, essentially, what the House language did was to weaken the proposal of Senator MENENDEZ.

Then the State Department, I think, essentially did not face up to the realities within their own reports and moved Malaysia from tier 3 to tier 2 so that they could continue to be part of the negotiations.

I don't see how people can look in the mirror and not say to themselves that we have to take into account human trafficking.

So I finish with this. There are some positive provisions within the Customs bill, but there are also these very difficult and I think, in some respects, dangerous, in the case of currency, worse-than-innocuous provisions because, in currency, it retreats from the little step of meaning that we were going to take.

So I congratulate the gentlewoman who is such a noble warrior on so many issues for bringing up this motion to instruct, and I urge strong support.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, Customs bills in the past have been positive. They have been useful in trade enforcement packages.

However, the majority in this body has baked into this legislation harmful provisions that make the fast-track law even worse.

It fails to protect Dodd-Frank and financial regulations, consumer safeguards. It stops our trade agreements from doing anything to address immigration. It strips out provisions tackling currency manipulation, an abuse that is costing millions of Americans their jobs.

Don't take my word for it. Listen to the Peterson Institute. Listen to what they have to say, no left-leaning organization. It says that, as a result of currency manipulation, the United States has lost up to 5 million jobs.

Why would we go down this road again? Why wouldn't we make currency manipulation prohibitive, instead of using language that is not even in the bill, but in a forum that they have put together around the TPP that says that countries should refrain from currency manipulation, they should avoid currency manipulation?

Avoid? Refrain? What kind of tough enforcement language is that? It is not.

What do countries do when they manipulate their currency? They drop the cost of their currency. Their goods become cheaper. Our goods are more expensive. We don't sell them abroad.

You know what happened in Mexico with NAFTA. They talked about all the beautiful provisions, all the tariffs dropping, et cetera. When they devalued the peso, it was all gone.

This is without strong, tough—and it won't be strong and tough because of the Senate language. But this is a good faith effort to deal with currency.

But, in fact, the lack of currency enforcement here is going to cause ruination in terms of American jobs and it is going to lower their wages. And already Malaysia has devalued its currency, as has Vietnam.

This agreement bans the United States from making commitments on climate change in trade agreements. My colleagues have spoken about this, provisions that are necessary to ensure that our trade policy does not negate our climate goals.

You have got—what is it?—I don't know—200 countries assembled in Paris to look at how we bring some sanity to climate control and what we do. We have the President there. These efforts are more important now than ever, and we will be able to do nothing about dealing with the issue of climate.

This is a massive step backward for the already weak environmental obligation in our trade agreements. This bill contains no funding support for the enforcement and monitoring of our trade agreements. Lack of enforcement has plagued our trade deals for decades.

Despite environmental rules in the U.S.-Peru free trade agreement, the overwhelming majority of timber from Peru is illegally logged. Despite the labor rules in the Colombia free trade agreement, over 118 Colombian trade unionists have been murdered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BABIN). The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Ms. DELAURO. Within the last week, Vietnam, one of the partners in this agreement, arrested labor activists. 118 Colombian trade unionists were murdered. Vietnam will not allow organized labor, and in the agreement they get a free pass for 5 years while our jobs are just being drained away.

Now the Congress is reviewing the TPP, the largest free trade agreement of its kind in history. It does include countries like Vietnam and Malaysia, where labor and human rights abuses are rampant.

My colleagues have talked about Malaysia and trafficking and forced labor. Where are the values of this Nation when we can take Malaysia that traffics in young girls and say that they have gotten better and they go from a tier 3 country to a tier 2 country just so that they can be part of this agreement?

Where are the values of the United States of America? They are not present here. We can't afford more free trade agreements without adequate enforcement.

Worst of all, this bill weakens protection in so many areas. We are dealing, as I said, in trafficking. It is modern slavery. That is what that is all about.

Democrats have been clamoring for years and years for our government to include enforceable labor standards and enforceable environmental provisions, and it has fallen on deaf ears.

This motion to instruct—and I say to my colleague thank you for doing this—should pass. It will pass tonight or tomorrow, but it really should not go to conference. There are so many flaws in the underlying bill and in the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement as well, and this should not go to conference.

In fact, put a gloss on a piece of legislation that is one of the worst pieces of legislation that has hit this floor of the United States House of Representatives.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I am prepared to close if the gentlewoman from New Hampshire is prepared to do so as well.

The value of a country's currency is a complex issue. It is determined by a number of factors: how much a country saves, how much it invests, the strength of its economy, its trade flows in and out. It is a complex issue.

Where Republicans and Democrats and the White House find common ground is the desire that countries don't manipulate their currency in order to give themselves an unfair trade advantage.

The difference is how best to go about it. And because it is a complex issue, there are some very good ideas on all parties' sides on how best to do that.

This motion essentially says to forget those discussions and don't have Republicans and Democrats from the House and Senate work together through this complex issue and find a common solution. This motion simply says to forget all that. There is only one solution, and we insist upon it. End the discussion.

I don't think that is the right way to go about it. I think, frankly, there are real serious concerns not just from Republicans, but from the White House on insisting on this one solution.

I think our country is better served and those who want to stop currency manipulation are better served by bringing our best ideas together in this conference committee.

That is what I am determined to do. That is what the American public wants us to do, an open, transparent, regular process that brings about the very best solution for America.

That is why I urge a ''no'' vote on this motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to say to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, I think that we do agree to part of this about the danger of currency manipulation and the millions of jobs that are lost here in our country.

That is why I rise this evening to offer this motion to instruct the conferees to include in the conference report language to combat currency manipulation from the Senate-passed version of this bill.

I also want to associate myself with the comments of my colleagues because these are bipartisan issues. I have worked with my colleagues across the aisle on human trafficking, and I know that my colleagues share my values and are appalled at the egregious efforts that have gone down in Malaysia to traffic in young girls.

These are not American values that are being expressed at this historic moment, as countries across the world gather in Paris to protect our society, our whole humankind, from the ravages of climate change.

So, Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to support my motion. I will be asking for a recorded vote.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, America's trade laws only work as well as they are enforced—which is why the Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act is of such vital importance. Both versions of the bill include vital provisions to modernize our customs process and increase enforcement of our trade laws—including my bill to finally end the importation of goods made by child, slave and forced labor after 75 years. It has been five months since H.R. 644 passed both the House and Senate and it is long past time the two versions of the bill be conferenced. In addition to the provision of the Senate bill which was used in the Democratic Motion to Instruct; there exists another, noncontroversial provision to combat currency manipulation in the legislation. Senator BENNET's amendment, which passed the Senate Finance Committee unanimously, has real teeth. The amendment creates enhanced oversight of international exchange rate policy, authorizes specific remedial actions for the U.S. government to pursue against trading partners that fail to adopt appropriate exchange rate policies, and provides the U.S. government with additional tools for strengthening trade enforcement. The language referenced in the Democratic Motion to Instruct is considered a poison pill by many and could threaten the underlying legislation which is vital to updating our trade enforcement laws for the 21st century.

There are a number of vital differences between the House and Senate versions which will meaningfully impact the United States' ability to enforce our trade laws that must be a priority as we move into the conference process. Differences such as the ENFORCE Act, which helps to enforce duty evasion; creating an enforcement and capacity building fund using a portion of penalties paid by foreign trade cheats; holding our trading partners accountable for this uneven enforcement of environmental regulations; and codifying the Interagency Trade Enforcement Center are issues vital and cannot be bogged down. In light of the existence of the Bennet language which I believe substantively moves the ball forward on currency manipulation, while I support the spirit of the Motion to Instruct I believe it is more important that the customs bill not be bogged down by a controversial provision which could potentially lead to retaliation which would hurt Wisconsin's farmers, workers and businesses. Many of these other provisions will ultimately determine my support for the Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act and I hope rather than falling into partisan foxholes we can help move this vital piece of legislation forward in a bipartisan manner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

CLIMATE CHANGE DEBATE NOT SETTLED

(Mr. LAMALFA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMALFA. Mr. Speaker, recently, President Obama declared climate change to be the number one adversary of the United States.

He has proposed wide-ranging regulations to fight this supposed enemy, regulations that not only drastically increase the scope of government but could only irreparably damage our economy. Today, we voted to reject those policies.

While he concentrates on crony capitalism disguised as feel-good policies, our true enemy has grown in strength and struck one of our oldest allies. We know this enemy: a radical form of Islam that has sworn to destroy Western civilization, that abuses and enslaves women, that seeks victory through suicide attacks and terrorizing civilians.

From manufacturing fake data to fit computer temperature models, to manipulated actual temperatures being rounded up to fit the narrative, and the resistance by government entities to reveal their methodology and internal biases show that, indeed, the debate on climate change is far from settled.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for the President to wake up, recognize that no nation should willingly choose to damage its own economy, as he proposes. It is time he recognized the United States' responsibility to the free world and end the self-destructive cycle that his policies would initiate.

RADICAL ISLAMIC TERROR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2015, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. GOHMERT. Mr. Speaker, just to follow up on the eloquent 1-minute speech by my friend, DOUG LAMALFA, that it is extraordinary to think that the President of the United States—some say he is the leader of the free world—would actually say publicly and, even worse, at a conference of world leaders that, in effect, the worst blow we could hit ISIS with is for the leaders to come together on climate change?

It is hard to believe the leader of the free world would make such a statement. Maybe it was just something that was given to him to read and he read, maybe it was in a teleprompter, or maybe he didn't have time to think about what he was saying. Because I have talked to too many people in all parts of the world who have dealt directly with radical Islamist terrorists, and they make clear that radical Islamist terrorists know nothing and respect nothing but power. Incredible. Just incredible.

Growing up, it would have been akin to bullies beating up and taking from smaller students on the playground and the teacher gathering all the students and other teachers together and saying, ''I am going to teach the bullies a lesson by just ignoring them and reading you a lovely story from our library.'' Who wouldn't understand that the next day the bullies would be beating people up again and robbing again? It is incredible.

Such insanity followed a terrible event, a shooting in Colorado Springs. As a judge, a former judge, a former prosecutor, the man that did this needs to be punished. It is wrong, and no one should use any excuse to go in and shoot other people, whether it is an Islamic terrorist or whether it is a deranged, mentally unstable person thinking they have some kind of score to even with people they don't even know, shooting people about whom they know nothing.

This story from November 30, Fox News, about the three people killed in Colorado, FoxNews.com:

''The two civilians killed in Friday's shooting at a Colorado Planned Parenthood clinic were identified by authorities and family members on Sunday.

''Jennifer Markovsky, 35, was accompanying a friend to the Colorado Springs Planned Parenthood clinic when she was killed in the shooting rampage, her father told The Denver Post.

''John Ah-King said she grew up in Hawaii and met her husband, Paul, before the couple moved to Colorado when he was stationed here for the military.

''Ah-King told the Post from his home in Hawaii that Markovsky was a kind-hearted, lovable person with two children.

''The second civilian killed was identified as Ke'Arre Stewart, 29, Amburh Butler, a lifelong friend and family spokeswoman told the Associated Press.

''Butler said that Stewart was accompanying someone to the clinic, and leaves behind two girls, 11 and 5, who live in Texas.

''Stewart served in the Army's Fourth Infantry Division and was deployed to Iraq, where Butler said he would often send her letters describing the horrors he saw on the front lines.

'' 'He would tell me how terrible it was, how many guys he watched die. It was terrible for him,' Butler told the Associated Press. The Army stationed Stewart at Fort Carson in Colorado Springs in 2013 before he was discharged from the military the following year. 'He went someplace where people expect to die, only to come back . . . and be killed.' ''

She also said, ''He was just a standup guy, he would take a bullet for you. He was the most sincere person I'd ever met.''

''Markovsky and Stewart's identities were confirmed by officials, who said a full identification would be provided once autopsies were completed Monday.

''The third victim was Garrett Swasey, who worked as a police officer at the University of Colorado, Colorado Springs, and was called to assist with an active shooter at the nearby clinic.

''Swasey was married with two children and a co-pastor at Hope Chapel, where he was remembered Sunday by parishioners who watched a video of him ice skating.

'' 'We are learning that eyewitnesses confirm that the man who will be charged with the tragic and senseless shooting that resulted in the deaths of three people and injuries to nine others at Planned Parenthood's health center in Colorado Springs was motivated by opposition to safe and legal abortion,' Planned Parenthood Rocky Mountain CEO Vicki Cowart said.''

Well, that is from Vicki Cowart. That does not appear to be official. And it always seems if it works better—for example, I would hope that the President has learned by now that he shouldn't give opinions about shootings until he knows more about them. Don't condemn a policeman when it turns out the policeman was entirely justified because, by doing so, you help stir up and divide this Nation that needs to come together.

So there are so many questions. When I was a prosecutor, when I was a judge, I wanted to know motive. I wanted to know what caused people to do what they did.

We know why Islamic terrorists do what they do. They think that that is contributing to the caliphate. If they happen to die, just as Thomas Jefferson was told—it was reported that Jefferson asked why the Barbary pirates kept attacking American ships when they weren't a threat to that Muslim area. He was reportedly told, ''We believe we go to paradise if we are killed while we are fighting infidels like you.''

So we know what motivates most Islamic terrorists. Either they think they are going to go to paradise—what a surprise they are going to get—or they think they are contributing to bringing the world under a totalitarian domination by one theocrat, like the Ayatollah Khamenei or al-Baghdadi, who is head of ISIS.

So, with that tragedy just in our rearview mirror, unfortunately, once again, the President, in front of a massive group, spoke without thinking about what he was saying.

I don't know whether it was on a teleprompter again and he just hadn't thought about what he was reading to the public, maybe somebody put something in front of him, or maybe he was talking off the cuff and hadn't really thought about what he was saying.

But this article from Alex Griswold, dated today, says, ''While giving a press conference in Paris, President Barack Obama told reporters that the mass shootings that plague the United States just never happen in other countries. 'With respect to Planned Parenthood, obviously, my heart goes out to the families of those impacted,' Obama said in response to a reporter's question. 'I mean, I say this every time we've got one of these mass shootings; this just doesn't happen in other countries.' ''

He is in Paris, France, where they have just buried one of the 130 people, mostly from mass shootings. I mean, they probably just finished the funeral services for the victims of the Islamic terrorists, and the President says in front of the world so insensitively that these shootings, like the three people in Colorado Springs, never happens in any other countries, as he is standing in a country where it just had 130 people killed, mainly in mass shootings.

In fact, the article says that ''the majority of the 130 deaths were in mass shooting attacks, where the ISIS-affiliated terrorists attacked public places with automatic rifles. Nearly one hundred people alone were killed in just one mass shooting at the Bataclan Theater.''

''Earlier this year, Paris was also the victim of a terrorist attack targeting the satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo. The Al Qaeda-affiliated terrorists wielded assault rifles, killing 11 innocent people.'' That was in Paris.

Now, I do realize this article says the 11 people with Charlie Hebdo, the publisher of the magazine, that those 11 people, it says here, were innocent. But, obviously, again, a leader of the United States, our Secretary of State, John Kerry, addressed on video for the world to see this issue and basically was saying we can understand why the Charlie Hebdo people were killed.

I mean, for goodness' sake, those people used the idea that they had the freedom to speak any way they wanted to; and, apparently, radical Islamic terrorists were insulted, even though the President has said repeatedly and John Kerry has said repeatedly and Hillary Clinton has said repeatedly, and continues to say, that these terrorist attacks by radical Islamic terrorists have nothing to do with Islam.

Well, that is a head-scratcher, because if the terrorist attacks on Charlie Hebdo had nothing to do with Islam, then why did John Kerry think there may have been some justification for Islamic terrorists to kill these satirists, these magazine employees, because they said something offensive about Islam? If it wasn't about Islam, then why were the terrorists killing these magazine employees because they said something about Islam? That is a head-scratcher.

And then when we look at what the media is saying about the Colorado Springs shooting and we look at what people in the mainstream media, whether it is ''The View'' or other places, talk about, yeah, Hitler was a Christian. No, he wasn't. And, yeah, McVeigh, was a Christian. Well, I am sure that would be a surprise to him. He seemed to brag late in life about being agnostic. Hitler certainly wasn't a Christian.

So if the President, Hillary Clinton, and John Kerry are right that, gee, we need to worry as much about Christians—actually, our State Department seems to think, in their reports, that we need to worry more about Christians than we do about Islamic terrorists, even though there is no indication that the Colorado Springs shooter was a Christian.

I can absolutely assure you, Mr. Speaker, no matter what he says his religious affiliation is, he certainly was not a Christian, because he certainly was not following the teachings of Christ. The Bible makes clear that we are known by our fruits, and if he has gone in and killed other people in this way, illegally, then he is certainly not following the teachings of Christ. He is not part of the government. There is no justification. There has been no trial.

But it does also raise issues about the effects of the lawlessness of this administration, having had whistleblowers come to me, law-abiding, moral, ethical people you want to know. We have seen that the Justice Department will go after and destroy any honest, moral, ethical whistleblower that may reflect poorly on the administration. We have seen reports of the acting inspector general at Homeland Security changing IG reports. We get word that in the intelligence community reports have been changed from truth to something that would not make the administration look bad, reports now coming out about, and apparently former intelligence leader Flynn talking about this, how the truth that was coming from intelligence in 2012 did not match up with this administration's reelection campaign so they just changed the reports.

I mean, what effect does an administration lying and being lawless have on what traditionally has been a majority law-abiding country? Can it create helplessness, a feeling, or a need that perhaps we need to take the law into our own hands? I would tell anyone that is never justified. You do it through lawful means, through the government. Of course, Thomas Jefferson might say otherwise.

But what effect does it have when the law of the land, the Federal administration governing, ruling over the country, required by the Constitution to follow the laws that have been passed by Congress and signed by other Presidents, this President may not agree with and he just disregards the laws, say, on amnesty, disregards the laws about governing the EPA, so they just make up new regulations, and you just create 79,000 pages of new regulations as if you are a dictator in chief? I mean, if, hypothetically, that were happening, what effect would it have on people who believed in having a law-abiding country when the administration over the country becomes so lawless? It seems surely it would create a feeling of desperation.

What do you do? I have talked to whistleblowers who had that feeling. What do you do? I can't go to the Justice Department with the truth about what is going on because they will prosecute me. They will destroy my family. I will never be able to make a living again. I have seen what they do to whistleblowers who just want the administration to be honest and follow the law. What do you do? Where do you go?

I would submit that the place you go is not to Russia to give away our utmost secrets because that is treason, but it is bound to be mitigating when an administration makes it so tough to just come forward and state the truth.

We found out that this administration had known about General Petraeus' affair for most of a year, but they waited until General Petraeus was in a position to destroy the election possibilities, reelection possibilities for President Obama, and they flowed out about the affair they have known about for most of the year, and he is destroyed. They prosecute him because apparently, as I understand it, he provided a calendar to his biographer and searched as they might for anything that they could hang around his neck of being a lawless activity. As I understand it, they found something in his calendar that could have been said to be classified, so he agreed to plead to that.

And we find out yesterday there apparently have been 1,000, around 1,000 Hillary Clinton emails so far that contain classified information. If Chuck Colson gets a year and a half for having information he is not supposed to, Petraeus' life, his livelihood, is ruined because they are finally able to find something that might have been classified that he pleads guilty to having turned over to his biographer. How long do you get for doing that a thousand times? I am just asking, Mr. Speaker.

But if, let's say, hypothetically, it were true what President Obama, John Kerry, and Hillary Clinton keep saying, that you should not say anything negative about the terrorists who claim to be Islamic and who say, Praise be to Allah, ''Allahu Akbar,'' and then they kill innocent people, you can't say anything that that is related to radical Islam because that only makes matters worse. Well, if they really believe those things they have been saying, and if it were even true, and if Homeland Security is right that we need to worry about evangelical Christians or people that belong in the authority of the United States Constitution, then shouldn't the President, Hillary Clinton, and John Kerry, be worried that they are going to stir up another crusade by besmirching and maligning Christianity and Christians as routinely as they do, saying these Christian terrorists are so bad or pointing out we have got bad Christians, we have got the Crusades?

Well, if Christianity is as big a threat to commit violence as people who say they are Islamic terrorists or jihadists, then I am just asking, Mr. Speaker, wouldn't that indicate that the President, Hillary Clinton, and John Kerry are actually going to be responsible if a Christian goes and does something violent? I mean, using their own logic, if they are out there running down Christians as a threat to violence while saying you can't say anything negative about radical Islam and a Christian has done something wrong, well, if you are saying we stir up radical Islamic terrorists by talking about them, then wouldn't you be responsible if you—generic indefinite ''you''—be responsible for saying bad things about a Christian if a Christian then does something violent? I am just asking, applying the President's own logic or lack thereof.

There is an article from 4 months ago by Kyle Becker that said, after the tragic Charleston shooting that left nine Americans dead, President Obama said the following: ''But let's be clear: At some point, we as a country will have to reckon with the fact that this type of mass violence does not happen in other advanced countries. It doesn't happen in other places with this kind of frequency.''

The President said that 4 months or so ago, and he says it again now, while he is in Paris, where 130 people were just killed in a mass attack.

But this article was written 4 months ago, and it actually charts it. And it reads, ''Since most statistics on mass shootings in the world compare apples and oranges by not correcting for population, let's get a chart that makes sense, shall we?'' Between 2009 and 2013, the author goes through and charts.

The loss of even one life should not be occurring. As someone who has looked a defendant in the eye and has ordered him to be taken and held by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice until he is put to death and has signed the order requiring a multiple-murderer or a kidnapping murderer-torturer be put to death, I know every life matters. Every life matters. Every little baby who is cut up and sold for parts matters.

How about the lawlessness of seeing the Planned Parenthood videos and not only not be offended or finding those grotesque and inhumane but actually having the Department of Justice stand ready to be the criminal defense firm for Planned Parenthood and stand by Planned Parenthood in these alleged horribly egregious violations of humanity? Would that invoke helplessness? It shouldn't invoke anybody to violence, but could it?

According to this article by Kyle Becker, between 2009 through 2013—these are rampage shooting fatalities per 1 million people—Norway had 15.3, Finland had 1.85, Slovakia had 1.47, Israel had 1.38, Switzerland had .75, and the United States had .72.

Even one is too many, and the perpetrator should and must be punished. But if someone has committed crimes in Planned Parenthood, shouldn't we have an administration that believes in enforcing the laws and in at least doing a proper investigation on whether what was said in the videos were true, which certainly indicated orally that there were apparent crimes committed?

Since every life matters, every Black life matters, not just the Black lives that are needlessly taken by a White person, but every Black life matters no matter who takes the life.

This article from the Chicago Tribune reports, ''Holiday toll: 8 killed, 20 wounded over Thanksgiving weekend.'' It seems rather callous.

The article reads, ''Eight people were killed, including a 16-year-old boy, and at least 20 others were wounded in shootings over the Thanksgiving weekend in Chicago, an increase over last year as the number of gunshot victims rose above 2,700 for the year.''

There were 2,700 gunshot victims in Chicago, when Chicago has such strong gun control laws in place? How could that be? Is it possible that having the toughest gun control laws, like Washington, D.C., has had, doesn't stop violent murders?

In fact, is it possible that places that have the strictest gun control have become murder capitals? It certainly appears so in Chicago and in Washington, D.C.

This article from the Chicago Tribune reads:

''Mysean Dunnin, 16, was among the first victims of the long holiday weekend. He was shot in the head a few minutes before midnight just west of Kedzie Avenue on Van Buren Street in East Garfield Park, about a block from his home.

''Police said two people walked up and fired at Dunnin. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

''Four other people were wounded between 3 p.m. Wednesday and 2:30 a.m. Thursday.

''Two men were killed and four others were wounded from 1:20 p.m. on Thanksgiving Day to 3:15 a.m. Friday.

''A 36-year-old man was killed and two people, including a 14-year-old boy, were wounded between Friday afternoon and early Saturday morning.

''The most violent stretch occurred Saturday into Sunday, when three men were fatally shot and at least four other people were wounded.

''Father of three, home for the holidays, dies in Back of the Yards shooting.

''Between Sunday afternoon and early Monday, an eighth person was killed and six other people were wounded.

''The toll during last year's Thanksgiving weekend'' in Chicago ''was 5 killed and 14 wounded. That included a fatal shooting inside the Nordstrom's store on North Michigan Avenue.''

With the President's precious ideas on gun control that certainly his former chief of staff, Rahm Emanuel, would have in place in Chicago since he has such power to effectuate the passage through the city leaders of ordinances for tough gun control, how could this be?

The number of homicides is 444. ''So far this year, there have been at least 2,740 shootings in Chicago, up more than 400 from the same time last year. The number of homicides is 444, an increase of 42 from last year.'' That is tragic.

An article by Charles C.W. Cooke on November 23, 2015, reads, ''Anyone who would use terror as an excuse to subvert the Second Amendment should be tarred and feathered.'' A rather interesting position.

An article from Charlie Spiering of 30 November 2015 reads, ''In his inaugural speech at the COP21 climate change summit in Paris, President Obama acknowledged the terrorist attacks that occurred in the city earlier this month, but warned his fellow leaders not to be distracted from focusing on the looming threat of global warming.''

The President was quoted as saying, ''What greater rejection of those who would tear down our world than marshaling our best efforts to save it.''

Ignoring the violent terrorism that the Islamic jihadists are infecting upon the world and talking about climate change—and, obviously, I mean, most thinking people know it is called ''climate change'' now because ''global warming'' hasn't really been supported for many years now, and, certainly, it is not provable that it was manmade.

I do believe in climate change. We have it four times a year in east Texas, where I live, so I know climate change is a fact. We know that the weather normally works in cycles.

We had a witness before our Natural Resources Committee who knows a great deal about the climate, and I asked him, is it true that planet Earth had to have been warmer during the days of Leif Eriksson's crossing the North Atlantic when the Norse came to Greenland? Is it true that planet Earth was warmer then? It turns out, according to his testimony, the planet was much warmer then.

Now, we don't know what kind of fuel, what kind of carbon emissions those Norse boats were putting into the atmosphere, but I guess you would have to figure those Norse must have really been putting out some pollution from those ships with the sails on them to have created a warmer planet back then than we have now.

Apparently, they were growing crops in places on Greenland where you can't anymore.

My friend Ben Shapiro has an article in the Daily Wire entitled, ''Five Reasons Obama's Climate Change Agenda is Dangerous—'', and part of the words are blacked out after that.

One reason he has highlighted is because ''we have no idea to what extent the Earth is warming.'' And he sets out some data and facts there, resources there or other.

Two, ''We have no clue how much human activity causes climate change,'' and I would add ''if any.''

Of course, we call it ''climate change'' now because the data did not support the ''global warming'' that was being used in a fear-mongering fashion to scare people. By changing from ''global warming'' to ''climate change,'' that would allow them to say in the seventies, as they did, that we are at the beginning of a new ice age and then 30 years later say that we are heading toward cataclysmic global warming that will destroy all life on planet Earth.

Now, after the long pause in warming that seems to be inexplicable to scientists and after the release of private emails and information from the University of East Anglia some years back, it indicated data was being manipulated so that it reflected things that weren't true about so-called global warming or climate change.

Ben Shapiro's third point: ''We have no idea how much climate change impacts human life.'' It has discussions and references there.

Then, the fourth: ''We have no idea what level of de-development would be necessary to maintain our current climate.''

The fifth: ''The solution—destroying carbon-based fuels and capitalism—is the problem.'' He writes, ''The left is in an all-out war with the two greatest forces for fighting poverty in history: cheap, carbon-based energy and capitalism.

□ 2000

''The same people celebrating the end of the Industrial Revolution economic model seem to forget that that economic model, boosted by carbon-based fuels, have led to a massive drop in global poverty; in 1990, 1.9 billion people lived under $1.25 per day, as opposed to 836 million in 2015. That's because of the dominance of capitalism and the increased efficiency of technology. It's certainly not because of governmental environmental regulations.

''Some on the left seem eager to try out their theory that we can maintain our current standard of living while hopping in a time machine back to less usage of carbon, without reference to market efficiencies. This is foolishness. We have time machines; they're called airplanes. Folks on the left ought to fly to countries where people don't have coal or oil or natural gas or free markets, and watch them burn cow chips for heat to see how lovely and natural that lifestyle actually is.

''But President Obama has his goals. How many people will have to suffer or die globally because of them isn't really the issue. After all, to question him would make us 'cynical,' he assures us. If cynicism means saving lives, then perhaps we all ought to be cynical of his world-conquering, unscientific, redistributionist nonsense.''

Going back to February 7, 2015, an article from Christopher Booker from The Telegraph titled ''The fiddling with temperature data is the biggest science scandal ever,'' he said: ''Two weeks ago, under the headline 'How we are being tricked by flawed data on global warming,' I wrote about Paul Homewood, who, on his Notalotof peopleknowthat blog, had checked the published temperature graphs for three weather stations in Paraguay against the temperatures that had originally been recorded. In each instance, the actual trend of 60 years of data had been dramatically reversed, so that a cooling trend was changed to one that showed a marked warming.

''This was only the latest of many examples of a practice long recognised by expert observers around the world—one that raises an ever larger question mark over the entire official surface-temperature record.

''Following my last article, Homewood checked a swathe of other South American weather stations around the original three. In each case he found the same suspicious one-way 'adjustments.' First these were made by the U.S. government's Global Historical Climate Network (GHCN). They were then amplified by two of the main official service records, the Goddard Institute for Space Studies (Giss) and the National Climate Data Center (NCDC), which use the warming trends to estimate temperatures across the vast regions of the Earth where no measurements are taken. Yet these are the very records on which scientists and politicians rely for their belief in 'global warming.'

''Homewood has now turned his attention to the weather stations across much of the Arctic, between Canada (51 degrees W) and the heart of Siberia (87 degrees E). Again, in nearly every case, the same one-way adjustments have been made, to show warming up to 1 degree C or more higher than was indicated by the data that was actually recorded. This has surprised no one more than Traust Jonsson, who was long in charge of climate research for the Iceland met office (and with whom Homewood has been in touch). Jonsson was amazed to see how the new version completely 'disappears' Iceland's 'sea ice years' around 1970, when a period of extreme cooling almost devastated his country's economy.

''One of the first examples of these 'adjustments' was exposed in 2007 by the statistician Steve McIntyre, when he discovered a paper published in 1987 by James Hansen, the scientist (later turned fanatical climate activist) who for many years ran Giss''—or the Goddard Institute for Space Studies—''Hansen's original graph showed temperatures in the Arctic as having been much higher around 1940 than at any time since. But as Homewood reveals in his blog post, 'Temperature adjustments transform Arctic history.''

Wow, Mr. Speaker, I need to read that again. I had not seen that.

''Hansen's original graph showed temperatures in the Arctic as having been much higher around 1940 than at any time since.''

''Homewood's interest in the Arctic is partly because the 'vanishing' of its polar ice (and the polar bears) has become such a poster-child for those trying to persuade us that we are threatened by runaway warming. But he chose that particular stretch of the Arctic because it is where ice is affected by warmer water brought in by cyclical shifts in a major Atlantic current—this last peaked at just the time 75 years ago when Arctic ice retreated even further than it has done recently. The ice-melt is not caused by rising global temperatures at all.

''Of much more serious significance, however, is the way this wholesale manipulation of the official temperature record—for reasons GHCN and Giss have never plausibly explained—has become the real elephant in the room of the greatest and most costly scare the world has known. This really does begin to look like one of the greatest scientific scandals of all time.''

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if it might be possible that there is a mainstream media reporter out there—with the New York Times, Washington Post, ABC, NBC, CBS, CNN, one of those that have lost so many of their viewers and readers—that might someday, against all of the criticism like Galileo got and others received, pick up that mantle and do a true investigation from a mainstream media outlet, facing the belittling and the criticism of all of the Chicken Littles that are in the mainstream media currently and actually gather accurate data, show the fraud, show the wasted money, show the lost lives, show the suffering by running up the price of energy so high, and show just what Christopher Booker talks about as he finished his article. This really does begin to look like one of the greatest scientific scandals of all time.

As the great philosopher Rush Limbaugh once said, ''Follow the money.'' Many others have said it. If you hear someone saying, ''Let's bring Syrian refugees in'' when we know there is no adequate data to be assured of who they are, where they are really from, follow the money. See if they are part of those dividing up the 1 billion-plus dollars being paid to people to bring refugees into the United States.

Well, Mr. Speaker, when this administration goes about driving up the prices of energy as it has, despite its best efforts, gasoline prices came down. The last I saw, they had dropped their approval of production from Federal land to about 40 percent of grants that had been approved during the Bush administration's 8 years.

Less production is being authorized by this administration. They are siccing the EPA now with these new regulations on the oil and gas industry, which will ultimately—if they are successful and Congress isn't able to stop them as we should, the price of gasoline will skyrocket as the President said he wanted coal-produced power to skyrocket.

As one of my senior citizen constituents had told me—I think she said she was 80—she was born in a home that only had a wood-burning stove. Because of the way the cost of energy has gone up, she is worried that she may leave this world in a home that only has a wood-burning stove. The trouble for her is, if this administration has its way, she can't have a wood-burning stove even.

You see the cost of home energy going up as dramatically as this administration has forced it and you realize that doesn't really hurt the rich in America to have higher prices for energy. It does hurt business. It absolutely does. It means they can't give raises because they are spending that money on higher bills. So people are not keeping up with what they should.

Then we found out during this administration the unthinkable occurred, and the President even admitted it on camera. For the first time in the history of this country ever, after this President's policies had been fully implemented for 5 years, 95 percent of the Nation's income went to the top 1 percent.

The President, who had talked so much about helping the middle class and helping the poor, has presided over policies that have made the rich—put them in a position where 95 percent of income is going to the top 1 percent. It had never happened before this President's policies, which have made life difficult for people in America.

I mean not for the people that have all the cronyism, crony capitalism, General Electric and all those friends of the President. I am talking about the distance between the rich and the poor has gotten farther with fewer people in between. That is tragic.

So countries swarm to the global warming conferences. Just watch. Follow the money. They hope to leave with an agreement by the United States that will punish American residents and cause them to have to pay more taxes that will be paid to countries around the world.

Of course, they flock to these global warming climate change conferences because they think the President is going to do what he is hoping to do and start sending checks from the American taxpayers to all of these other countries, places where their policies have stifled growth or they don't have the energy we do. How about sending them some energy? Send them some coal. They will be far better off.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me just remind that you don't have to pay people to hate you. They will do it for free. We don't have to be sending that money overseas.

I yield back the balance of my time.

UKRAINE UNDER SIEGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ABRAHAM). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2015, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, as Western Europe strains with more than 1 million refugees fleeing war in the Middle East and enduring terrible conditions, I rise tonight to address another growing humanitarian crisis in Eastern Europe, in Ukraine.

The free world has experienced time and again what happens when it fails to support innocents caught by fate under the brutal grip of war and oppression. Today that reality looms largely over Europe and surely over Ukraine, a nation of freedom-seeking people under siege outnumbered and outgunned due to Russia's invasion on Ukraine's eastern front. So Europe in the western end as well as the eastern faces major displacement and humanitarian needs not seen since World War II.

Ukrainians are fighting to choose their own path, and surely America, with our moral leadership, can find a way to help the beleaguered people of Ukraine survive the siege and the onset of a bitter winter, with climates that can be unforgiving, with temperatures falling as low or more than 25 degrees below zero.

To not attend to Ukraine now risks Ukraine accessing to the free world. If one looks at the size of Ukraine in Europe, imagine if Ukraine could access to be part of greater Europe. That is all held in abeyance now and also risks millions more potential refugees fleeing from Ukraine to Western Europe for sustenance and more.

I call on the Obama administration to address the growing humanitarian crisis in Europe, not just on the western end, but on the eastern end in Ukraine. This is a challenge that can be met. America has done this before. The humanitarian need in Ukraine is immediate and growing.

I include in the RECORD evidence of this growing crisis by the major religious leaders of Ukraine from all confessions, representing, imagine, nearly 90 percent of the faithful of Ukraine. These denominations include Baptist, Pentecostals, Muslims, Reformed Church, the Lutheran Church, Jewish religious organizations, Evangelicals, the Autocephalous Orthodox Church of Ukraine, the Ukrainian Bible Society, the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church, the Armenian Apostolic Church, the Seventh-Day Adventists, the Christian Evangelical Church. It is a very, very long list.

I am going to read this in the RECORD as well as place it in the RECORD. This was sent to President Obama. A delegation, over this last month, from Ukraine, of its top religious leaders presented the Obama administration with a request. Let me read it.

''We, the undersigned of the All Ukrainian Council of Churches and religious organizations and representing Ukraine's diverse religious community, appeal to you on behalf of the people of Ukraine to help address the humanitarian catastrophe, Mr. President, gripping our country. The needs are enormous, ranging from medical supplies to everyday items, such as food, water, and clothing.''

They don't even ask for new clothing. They are willing to take used shoes from the United States of America.

''While the global news media regularly reports on Russia's war against Ukraine, government reforms and financial challenges, there is rarely any mention of the extraordinary dimensions of the human suffering caused by Moscow's aggression. While Ukraine certainly needs greater military, financial, and political assistance, our focus here, as religious leaders, must be on the humanitarian aspect.

''As you know, according to the United Nations, over 5 million people''—5 million—''including 1.7 million children, are in desperate need of humanitarian assistance.''

I brought a chart to the floor that shows pictures of just a few of these children.

''8,000 people have died and over 17,000 have been injured and wounded. There are over 1,390,000 displaced people, including 174,000 children.''

Here is one child whose only dwelling has been in a bomb shelter since the time of his birth.

''The challenges of this human tragedy are overwhelming. Even the most conservative estimates show that over 65 percent of projected needs have yet to be met—even on the level of pledges.

''As representatives of the interfaith community, we witness on a daily basis the challenges and needs of people suffering because of this war. And with the onset of winter, an already dire situation will only get worse. We pray for their lives and for the future of our country.

''While we are grateful for the assistance provided by the United States Government to date, we know that the need is so much greater. Thus, we appeal to you,'' President Obama, ''to increase assistance and to activate the full potential of the National Guard State Partnership Program and the Partnership for Peace as instruments for alleviating the humanitarian catastrophe. One of the stated goals of the Partnership for Peace is to 'provide a framework for enhanced political and military cooperation for joint multilateral crisis management activities, such as humanitarian assistance and peacekeeping.' Ukraine was the first post-Soviet country to join the Partnership for Peace in 1993.

''In addition to the assistance provided by the US government, we, during our travels throughout the United States, have come to personally witness the great generosity of the American people expressed through numerous spontaneous initiatives to ship medical and humanitarian supplies to Ukraine.

''Time is of the essence, Mr. President.''

They are begging.

''The people of Ukraine need to know that they are not forgotten in their time for need. The instruments anticipated by the National Guard State Partnership and Partnership for Peace programs will allow the American people to more effectively and rapidly access and deliver already available medical and humanitarian supplies to Ukraine—literally within days. We each represent distribution networks''—through their various religious confessions—''that cooperate with each other; we now ask for the resources to meet the growing human needs.

''We pray that God grant you guidance, wisdom and bless you and the great American nation. God bless the United States and Ukraine. Sincerely.''

And I place all their names in the RECORD.

The people of the world must meet this moral imperative. The United Nations has reported that 2.6 million Ukrainians have been displaced by the current conflict in eastern Ukraine—so unnecessary—because of Russia's invasion. A staggering 5 million Ukrainians currently need humanitarian survival assistance.

I met with one religious leader who came to Washington. I said: What are you finding?

He said: Congresswoman, we are in Kharkiv. We need shoes, even used shoes, for the children.

Currently, less than half of those in need receive any assistance at all. If Russian aggression were to trigger a flight of these Ukrainians westward, it would also add to the dangerous, destabilizing stress to Europe's already-stretched refugee services as a result of what is happening with the immigration and refugee resettlement from the Middle East.

The situation in Ukraine is far from contained. According to a recent report by Refugees International, approximately 2 million Ukrainians live close to the cease-fire lines separating Ukrainian and Russian-backed forces.

It is hard to see some of these pictures that are on this chart, but what they basically show are bombed-out buildings, bridges that are completely destroyed, old women living in buildings where there are no roofs or windows in eastern Ukraine, children living in bomb shelters, and people just, unfortunately, killed because of Russian shelling.

A Ukrainian and Russian peace settlement likely will take a while, but another 2 million people are living under control of Russian-backed forces. The basic needs of these civilians go unmet daily. Shockingly, most international aid work has been suspended there, and there are hardly any news stories about this. Aid workers have been ejected from regions that are called Luhansk and Donetsk by the Russian-backed fighters.

Some refugees, torn from their villages and towns, have managed to stay in Ukraine and survive even after being driven from their homes by violence. How they are doing this, I simply don't know. But these internally displaced are overwhelming the already limited resources of Ukraine's local governments, which are already stretched thin by Russia's invasion. These 1.5 million internally displaced Ukrainians lack durable housing or jobs to pay for food or support their families.

Don't forget, with Russia's invasion, the value of their currency has just plummeted. Everything is so much more expensive. How people are making it, I simply don't know.

We often talk about refugees in abstract numbers. But inside these numbers are the stories and faces of individuals. I just wish people could see the eyes of these parents looking into the future that is so uncertain and so daunting.

Ukrainian children in these conflict zones are being born under conditions that most Americans couldn't even imagine, never having lived without the imminent threat of death or loss. Many risk becoming stateless, as they have been unable to receive birth certificates, passports, and school certificates. In looking into the eyes of children, I am again reminded of the urgency of this crisis.

As freedom-loving nations grapple with the Ukrainian crisis, let us recall the nations of the European continent remain America's most enduring allies in liberty. To not measure up to meet the current internal challenge for Europe is to walk away from liberty's call at freedom's edge in our time.

Existing efforts to assist Ukraine's eastern regions face a daunting set of challenges. Roads leading to Ukrainians trapped in separatist-held areas are difficult to navigate. There is a photo here. I mean, they are walking across rubble, down very steep embankments.

Making matters worse, many of these routes are now scarred by the ravages of war. Roads and bridges have been completely destroyed. On roads running through conflict areas, Russian-backed fighters require registration by any humanitarian group seeking access to the region. Can you imagine? Can you imagine what life is like there?

The United Nations is the only aid group allowed to even enter the Russian-controlled areas of Ukraine. Even the U.N. was prevented from delivering aid to eastern Ukraine for 3 months as people suffered. And then on November 9, just a couple weeks ago, the U.N. was finally able to deliver a convoy of nine trucks carrying vital aid to the city of Luhansk, including 10,000 blankets, 10,000 towels, 5,000 buckets, and a similar number of jerricans and plastic sheets, cement and timber for shelter repairs, and other winterization need and domestic items. That was to one town, and it did not completely serve their enormous needs.

As the U.N. agency head for Ukraine said: ''This is a small drop in the ocean of needs . . . in these conflict-affected areas.''

Can you imagine, millions of people displaced but only 10,000 blankets? Millions of people, 10,000 blankets.

Delivery of basic medical supplies also faces obstacles. There is a shortage of medications that treat critical and common diseases.

After his organization was forced out of Donetsk by Russian operatives, Dr. Bart Janssens, director of operations at Doctors Without Borders, said the following: ''We are almost the only organization providing treatment for tuberculosis in prisons, insulin for diabetic patients, and hemodialysis products to treat kidney failure. Thousands of patients suffering from chronic, potentially fatal diseases will now be left with little or no assistance.''

This is the situation Ukraine faces in real time. What will the world do? What will the United States do with so many storehouses of used clothing, used blankets, or anything to help sustain life there?

As temperatures fall across that region, shelter assistance has to be delivered quickly to people living in buildings without windows, without doors, without roofs, and, most often, without heat. Thousands of displaced people need warm blankets, winter clothing, and shoes, as well as coal and heating fuels.

If the free world fails to act, it must prepare for the reality that, come spring, we will discover more elderly who are dead, more who are ill, more children who have fallen into illness and have probably died, simply cut off from assistance, who succumbed to starvation and the cold, needlessly adding to the over 8,000 who have already lost their lives in this Russian-directed invasion.

America, as a nation, has long been one of supporting freedom and economic stability across our world. Let me remind you that in a 1947 speech laying out what would become the Marshall Plan for Europe following World War II's devastation, war-weary America stood the test of liberty.

And one of our greatest Americans, a statesman, a general, and then Secretary of State, General George C. Marshall, observed the dire post-war economic conditions in Europe. And despite America's exhaustion from World War II, he urged American involvement and support of European recovery, noting that:

''It is logical that the United States should do whatever it is able to do to assist in the return of normal economic health in the world, without which there can be no political stability and no assured peace.''

Those words apply to Ukraine today, as they did to Western Europe after World War II.

General Marshall continued, saying, ''Our policy is directed not against any country or doctrine but against hunger, poverty, desperation, and chaos. Its purpose should be the revival of a working economy in the world so as to permit the emergence of political and social conditions in which free institutions can exist.''

He added that struggling nations must take the lead in their own rebuilding and that America's role should be a supporting one.

It was really remarkable to go back and look at the films of the brilliant airlift from World War II and see what this country did. This crisis is not commensurate with what happens after World War II, but we have a model. We know what to do; we know how to do it. Why aren't we doing it?

I include in the RECORD separate statements from three religious leaders who are begging the United States of America and its President to pay particular attention to the humanitarian needs of Ukraine: remarks by Patriarch Filaret, Ukraine Orthodox Church; the Archbishop of Ukraine, Sviatoslav Shevchuk, the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church; and also Rabbi Yaakov Dov Bleich, head of the Jewish faiths that have presence in that country.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE SPEECH BY PATRIARCH FILARET AT THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB ON NOVEMBER 9, 2015

(Translated live from Ukrainian)

Dear Friends, we just met with the staff of President Obama. We have handed him a letter signed by leaders of All-Ukrainian Council of Churches and International Organizations of Ukraine leaders of different religious denominations of Ukraine. First of all, I want to emphasize that the All-Ukrainian Council of Churches represents 85% of Ukraine's residence. So our statement is on behalf of all those people.

What is that letter about? We are discussing how the humanitarian aid that has been collected for the Ukrainian people here in the United States can be delivered to Ukraine. And we are asking President Obama to implement certain provisions of the Partnership for Peace program.

Why are we asking that? Because, today, Ukraine is defending democracy and freedom for the whole world. If Ukraine had accepted Russia's offer and desired to pull it into the Eurasian Union, there would be no war, but Ukraine would have lost its democracy and freedom—it would have become a totalitarian state.

The United States is the leader of democracy and freedom in the world. And, today, Ukrainians are giving their lives for this democracy and freedom. So do Ukrainians deserve such support from the United States and Europe in standing against Russian invasion and totalitarianism? I think Ukraine does deserve that.

This is why we are making this request for help. We are asking to help deliver the humanitarian aid that the people of the United States have already collected. And we are also asking to increase the levels of assistance of multi-sided assistance.

At this time, the war in Eastern Ukraine has not stopped—it only went down in intensity. Putin has diverted the world's attention by going into Syria—this does not mean that he has given up on Ukraine and military warfare may erupt in Ukraine with new strength anytime. So we are asking—please, help. We are giving away our live and you give us the resources, including the humanitarian assistance.

Thank you.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE SPEECH BY MAJOR ARCHBISHOP SVIATOSLAV SHEVCHUK AT THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB ON NOVEMBER 9TH 2015

Dear Friends, I speak on behalf of Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church, which is present in Ukraine and worldwide. I would like to convey to you good news from Ukraine.

First good news is that Ukrainian nation is united as never before in its history. You see that righteous society of Ukraine, The Council of Churches and Religious Organizations, which represent 85% of the citizens of Ukraine, are united. Different religions, different churches, religious denominations, but we are the heart of Ukrainian civil society, and we are together.

The second good news is that we did not have a civil war in Ukraine. We are facing the foreign aggression against Ukraine. And again, that aggression is a catalyst of Ukrainian unity. Seventy percent of the soldiers who are defending free and independent Ukraine are Russian-speakers. And I think this very important sign, that even those who are in the occupied territories, as Rabbi Bleich mentioned, are not supporting war. Even people in Russia will not support a war. It is why Putin is trying to be silent about that the Russian troop and its presence on Ukrainian territory.

The third good news from Ukraine is outstanding solidarity. Today, we have more than two million refugees in Ukraine. But international society, until now, could only help four hundred thousand refugees. But what is happening to the rest? Their Ukrainian fellows are helping them. But our resources are short because economic crisis is striking us in Ukraine. Nevertheless, we are united in our desire to rebuild, to transform Ukraine.

The next good news from Ukraine, we all together are fighting against corruption, because corruption it not only political issue, is a deep moral issue. It is a part of the post-Soviet mentality. But we all together are trying to reform and transform the very heart of Ukraine. To transform the interpersonal relationships, because corruptions strike those kinds of relationships between person in Ukraine. But, nevertheless, we are here to be a voice of the millions who are suffering the biggest humanitarian crisis in Europe after the Second World War.

It is a pity that Ukrainian politicians until now did not declare the state of the humanitarian emergency in Ukraine. Until now we've received an answer that this is a political quest. Nevertheless, Ukraine needs worldwide international support, especially in order to solve the humanitarian situation in our country. So it is why we are here—to speak on behalf of those millions who will suffer terrible winter in few months.

But we have a hope in Ukraine. You know, politicians will come and go, presidents will come and go, all political visions will change, but Ukraine will remain, churches will remain. And today we are building our future fostering the reconciliation and cooperation between the nations.

Thank you very much.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE SPEECH BY RABBI YAAKOV DOV BLEICH AT THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB ON NOVEMBER 9TH 2015

Thanks for coming and for showing some interest in what's going on in Ukraine. It is important for us in Ukraine to know that it's not only politicians that get together and talk about Ukraine, but that it interests civil society too.

First of all, the message comes from a coalition called the Council of Churches and Religious Organizations of Ukraine, which is a very unique organization anywhere in the world probably, where the Heads of all religions in the country get together and work for the benefit of all of the people of the country.

Our message is from civil society, from people to people. We spoke today with politicians because they can do things we can't do. But we can do a lot more than they can. We feel that civil society has an obligation to try help and do what they can. We come together with other NGOs in the United States trying to make things happen, change things. And I want to point something out: the help that we may get paying for transportation of containers of aid that was collected here to send to Ukraine is very very symbolic. The money is not the most important thing.

What is much more symbolic is that the people in the United States care about what's happening in Ukraine, they understand the war.

The need for help in Ukraine is a direct result of a democratic choice, a choice that the people of Ukraine made. They want to be a part of the western family of nations. They want democracy, they want to be free, they want to be a part of Europe, they want to live like people in the West live. Because of that they are suffering, and it's important for people in the United States to know that the front of the war between democracy, democratic life and brutality, communism, putinism, that front is taking place now in Eastern Ukraine. That fight, which is a fight of entire world for democracy, is taking place right there. It's not only a fight for Ukraine, not only a fight for Ukraine's freedom, it's a fight of freedom over putinism. This is our message.

You could see people who are willing to sacrifice themselves for their freedom. People who are sacrificing their lives on the front are not sacrificing for their freedom, they are sacrificing for the freedom of their country, for freedom of their people, for freedom of all peoples throughout the world to have that democratic choice, to choose how they want to live, and to be able to live the way we take for granted here, in the United States.

Today, actually, President Poroshenko signed a decree for organizing a committee for the 75th anniversary of Babij Yar. This is important! We don't have to talk about this now, but a year and a half ago we were still trying to counteract the propaganda that was coming out of Russia about the fascism in Ukraine and the anti-Semitism, which is a bunch of baloney. Basically, we won that war.

People, most people, understand that Ukrainian Government and Ukrainian people today are not fascists and anti-Semites, they are just people who want to live free, democratically, but part of that is that Ukrainian Government also coming through and showing time and again, proving as much as possible, as many times as possible that Ukrainian people are united no matter what ethnicity, no matter what their background, what their religion is. They want to be free, they want to be democratic. Even the Russian-speaking people want to be free. That was part of the failure of Putin in the east that he didn't have the support. He doesn't have the support of the people in Donbas to become a part of Russia. They are not interested in becoming a part of Russia. They want to be free as well. Everyone wants to be free.

Thank you.

Ms. KAPTUR. The United States has more than just a moral and strategic duty to the sovereign people of Ukraine. Twenty years ago, the United States, Ukraine, the Russian Federation, and the United Kingdom came together to sign the Budapest Memorandum.

This agreement reaffirmed the common commitment of those signatory nations ''to respect the independence and sovereignty and the existing borders of Ukraine.'' And in return for that promise of protecting those borders, Ukraine dismantled its vast nuclear weapons complex, the third largest in the world.

With that memorandum in hand, Ukraine did what it promised, but what about the other signatories to that agreement?

Today, the Budapest Memorandum appears to be a hollow promise. It comes as little surprise that Russia would break that promise, but it disappoints me to no end that the free world, led by the United States of America, seems reluctant to honor its promises to take a more effective role as a coalition of nations and civil society organizations to help Ukraine stand on its own in the face of internal carnage perpetrated by Russia.

NATO's Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, General Philip Breedlove, a man who knows an enormous amount about that continent, recently expressed his deep concern that our focus has been pulled away from Russia's proxy invasion of Ukraine. ''Folks have taken their eye off of Ukraine a little bit because of Syria,'' he said.

According to him, the situation is similar to how the world lost focus on the Russian invasion of Crimea, which the United States still considers Ukrainian territory, after Russia invaded eastern Ukraine and triggered the current war.

Fighting in the Donbass region of Ukraine has fluctuated, but skirmishes continue and Ukrainian territory remains under Russian occupation, with no withdrawal in sight.

Congress took initial steps to address Ukraine's need last year, just about a year ago, with the Ukraine Freedom Support Act—legislation we fought hard to pass and which most of our colleagues voted to support. However, conditions continue to worsen.

A report done by the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe acknowledges that the fighting in the east, which began in the spring of 2014, has resulted in extensive damage to schools and medical facilities, leaving the local population increasingly dependent on outside aid. Assistance is needed to meet basic needs and access to clean water, which is a problem already for 1.3 million Ukrainians at a minimum.

Two weeks ago, I sent a letter to Assistant Secretary of State Victoria Nuland to call for the United States to work with the Ukrainian Government and Russia to restore access to humanitarian workers and to allow aid to proceed.

In particular, I identified a need for access to—and this is in working with the religious leaders of Ukraine across confessions for these items—winterization activities, including blankets, quilts, kerosene, heating stoves; direct financial assistance to these religious groups to help them help others; water pumping station equipment to prevent freezing; electrical repair kits and tools; coal; batteries; clothing; and everyday necessities, including medical equipment, basic and specialized medicines, emergency medical kits, shoes, socks, long underwear, coats, mittens, hats; redevelopment assistance, including economic aid and tools as well as equipment to repair homes, bridges, and roads.

They don't even request new material. They just request help. I just think to myself, how much is thrown away in landfills across this country, items that still have good wear and good possibility? How much is thrown away at construction sites? And what we can do to help the people of Ukraine? These items are more than just objects to the people of Ukraine. They are life itself right now.

The people of Ukraine want desperately to stand on their own, access to the European continent, and to govern themselves in the light of liberty. I have seen it in their eyes. Let us help them weather this terrible storm now when they need it most.

My heavens, if the United States of America could lead the Berlin airlift after World War II in those old, tired planes, sending goods to the people of Europe, to the people of Western Europe, and to give them hope and sustenance, you mean to tell me that the America of the 21st century can't figure this out, especially when Congress has put money in the budget of the Department of Defense and the Department of State to carry this out, working in cooperation with organizations across this great land?

Last month, the All-Ukrainian Council of Churches and Religious Organizations, a globally unique coming-together of diverse religious faiths which represent 85 percent of the Ukrainian population, presented President Obama with a letter I referenced earlier, appealing on behalf of the people of Ukraine to help address the humanitarian catastrophe gripping that Nation.

Each is a daily witness to the challenges and needs of the people suffering because of this unnecessary, brutal war, where over 8,000 have already been killed; 17,610 wounded—that was a figure as of October—2.6 million people internally displaced; 5 million in need of aid, including 1.7 million children, and one in five homes of displaced families damaged or destroyed. Surely, the free world can figure this out.

I do have to say a word about this. A few weeks ago, I stood here in Washington with many distinguished Ukrainian leaders, including the First Lady of Ukraine, Maryna Poroshenko; His Holiness, the Patriarch of Kyiv and All Rus'-Ukraine Filaret; and my dear friend and fellow Ukraine Caucus co-chair, Congressman SANDER LEVIN of Michigan, to dedicate a memorial here in our Nation's capital to the 1932–1933 Soviet Union's forced starvation of between 2.5 million and 7.5 million Ukrainians whose names are lost to history forever.

I think America should also consider doing this humanitarian lift to Ukraine because, frankly, no place on Earth suffered more in the last century from brutal tyranny than did Ukraine. Perhaps something is owed to those sacrificial people for what they endured and for the spark of liberty that still breathes so strongly in their hearts and minds.

In marking the brutal tragedy of the forced famine, called the Holodomor, I am reminded of the importance of teaching about the cost of liberty, the need to fight for it, and the legacy of that sacrificial people.

Through this memorial, we seek to better guard against any oppressive regime that would seek to rule over any people, for, at that time, our Nation failed to reveal and respond to that ongoing brutality of forced starvation in Ukraine. Had the free world acted then, we might have changed the fate of millions, but that did not happen.

Let us not repeat the blindness of the past. America must act with dispatch to support the freedom-loving people of Ukraine. Time and again, in moments when the world has found itself at a crossroads, American leadership and action has made the difference.

We must be prepared to join with others in this effort to save the children, to save the families, to save the people of Ukraine, and, in doing so, to let liberty march forward. We must do the right thing for our brothers and sisters in liberty. America must act, and we must act as leaders. Ukraine is waiting. The world is waiting.

I call upon the President of the United States and the Obama administration to do what is necessary and achievable to meet the growing humanitarian crisis in Ukraine, to relieve the unnecessary suffering of their people, and to prevent a gigantic refugee crisis from spilling over and impacting European stability.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COSTELLO), who could not be here tonight for this Special Order, supports these efforts. His formal statement includes the important role that the people of southeastern Pennsylvania have played in keeping a focus on Ukraine and this ongoing tragedy and what the United States of America can do at very little cost to the people here by the mobilization of the hearts of the American people to provide humanitarian assistance to help save Ukraine in our own time and day.

President BARACK OBAMA,

The White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW., Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We, the undersigned of the All Ukrainian Council of Churches and religious organizations, and representing Ukraine's diverse religious community appeal to you on behalf of the people of Ukraine to help address the humanitarian catastrophe gripping our country. The needs are enormous, ranging from medical supplies to everyday items such as food, water, and clothing.

While the global news media regularly reports on Russia's war against Ukraine, government reforms and financial challenges, there is rarely any mention of the extraordinary dimensions of the human suffering caused by Moscow's aggression. While Ukraine certainly needs greater military, financial and political assistance, our focus here must be on the humanitarian aspect.

As you know, according to the UN, over 5 million people, including 1.7 million children are in desperate need of humanitarian assistance. 8,000 people have died and over 17,000 have been injured and wounded. There are over 1,390,000 displaced people, including 174,000 children. The challenges of this human tragedy are overwhelming. Even the most conservative estimates show that over 65% of projected needs have yet to be met—even on the level of pledges.

As representatives of the interfaith community, we witness on a daily basis the challenges and the needs of people suffering because of this war. And with the onset of winter, an already dire situation will only get worse. We pray for their lives and for the future of our country.

While we are grateful for the assistance provided by the United States government to date, we know that the need is so much greater. Thus, we appeal to you to increase assistance and to activate the full potential of the National Guard State Partnership Program and the Partnership for Peace (PfP) as instruments for alleviating the humanitarian catastrophe. One of the stated goals of the PfP is to ''provide a framework for enhanced political and military cooperation for joint multilateral crisis management activities, such as humanitarian assistance and peacekeeping.'' Ukraine was the first post-Soviet country to join the PfP in 1993.

In addition to the assistance provided by the US government, we, during our travels throughout the United States, have come to personally witness the great generosity of the American people expressed through numerous spontaneous initiatives to ship medical and humanitarian supplies to Ukraine.

Time is of the essence, Mr. President. The people of Ukraine need to know that they are not forgotten in their time for need! The instruments anticipated by the National Guard State Partnership and Partnership for Peace programs will allow the American people to more effectively and rapidly access and deliver already available medical and humanitarian supplies to Ukraine—literally within days. We each represent distribution networks that cooperate with each other; we now ask for the resources to meet the growing human needs.

We pray that God grant you guidance, wisdom and bless you and the great American nation. God bless the United States and Ukraine!

Sincerely,

Antoniuk Valery Stepanovich—Chairman of the Union, Senior Bishop, All-Ukrainian Union of Churches of Evangelical Christians—Baptists; Panochko Michael Stepanovich—President of the Union, Senior Bishop, All-Ukrainian Union of Christians of the Evangelical Faith—Pentecostals; Ablaev Emirali—Chairman of the Spiritual Administration of Muslims of Ukraine, Mufti Spiritual Administration of Muslims of Crimea; Ahmad Tamim—Head of the Spiritual Administration of Muslims of Ukraine, Mufti of Zan-Fabian Alexander—Head of the Consistory of the SCRC, Bishop, Transcarpathian Reformed Church; Sergey Mashevskyy—Bishop, German Evangelical Lutheran Church of Ukraine; Yaakov Dov Bleich—President of the Association, Chief Rabbi of Kyiv and Ukraine, Association of Jewish Religious Organizations of Ukraine; Peter Malchuk—Head of the Commission on the Relationship Between State and Church; Raichynets Vasiliy Fedorovich—Senior Pastor, Union of Free Churches of Christians of Evangelical Faith of Ukraine; Macarius (Maletich)—Primate of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church Metropolitan The Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church; Commandant Grigory Ivanovich—President, Ukrainian Bible Society; Sviatoslav (Shevchuk)—Archbishop, The Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church; Marcos (Oganesyan)—Bishop, Ukrainian Diocese of the Armenian Apostolic Church; Vyacheslav Horpynchuk—Bishop, Ukrainian Lutheran Church; Onufry (Berezovsky)—Metropolitan Ukrainian Orthodox Church; Filaret (Denisenko)—Patriarch Filaret, Patriarch of Kyiv and All Rus-Ukraine, Ukrainian Orthodox Church Kiev Patriarchate; Nosov Stanislav Viktorovich—President, The Ukrainian Union Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists; Padun Leonid Nikolaevich—Senior Bishop, Ukrainian Christian Evangelical Church.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, all Members will have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material into the RECORD on the topic of this Special Order.

There was no objection.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COSTELLO of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman from Ohio, Ms. KAPTUR, for organizing this Special Order this evening and bringing this important alliance with Ukraine to the forefront.

The Ukrainian heritage, and its people, play a critical role in the cultural fabric of Southeastern Pennsylvania.

Just this morning, I had the privilege to meet with Ukrainian Ambassador to the United States Valeriy Chaly and reaffirm our support for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and freedom of Ukraine.

Mr. Speaker, our relationship with Ukraine is vital to our national security interest and we must continue to foster strong bilateral relations as Ukraine continues to face threats to its status as a sovereign nation.

So long as Russia continues to pose a destabilizing force at Ukraine's borders and supports rebel groups in Eastern Ukraine, Congress and the Administration must remain steadfast in our support for the Ukrainian people and their freedom.

The Administration must follow through on the commitment set forth in the Ukraine Freedom Support Act of 2014 to provide Ukraine with much-needed military aid, both lethal and non-lethal.

Reportedly, not even half the aid authorized last December has been delivered. Further, a recent article in the Washington Post noted that the quality of the U.S. supplied gear, including Humvees, is ''little more than junk''—there is barely any protection on the windows and doors—while the non-lethal military aid provided to protect Ukraine military forces is obsolete.

Mr. Speaker, this is unacceptable and our allies deserve better.

In an effort to keep our nation safe and to provide assistance to our allies, the National Defense Authorization Act was recently signed into law. This includes an authorization for $300 million in military aid, including lethal, to support Ukraine.

And currently stalled in the House is bill H.R. 955, that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to provide assistance (including training, equipment, lethal weapons of a defensive nature, logistics support, supplies and services) to the military and national security forces of Ukraine through the end of the next fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, I call on my colleagues to act on this legislation in an expeditious manner and bring it to the Floor for a vote.

We cannot let our Ukrainian allies on the frontlines defend their freedom and sovereignty without meaningful support. The Administration must follow through on our word.

Again, I thank Congresswoman KAPTUR for organizing tonight's special order and her unwavering dedication to Ukraine and the Ukrainian-American community.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 611. An act to amend the Safe Drinking Water Act to reauthorize technical assistance to small public water systems, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, December 2, 2015, at 10 a.m. for morning-hour debate.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JAIME HERRERA BEUTLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. HERRERA BEUTLER. Mr. Speaker, the evening of November 30th, I am not recorded on two votes because I was absent due to illness.

If I had been present, I would have voted: Yes, on rollcall 644, to remove the use restrictions on certain land transferred to Rockingham County, Virginia, and for other purposes; and Yes on rollcall 645, the Billy Frank Jr. Tell Your Story Act.

HONORING THE JOHNSON–PHELPS VFW POST ON THEIR 80TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DANIEL LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Johnson-Phelps Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 5220 of Oak Lawn, Illinois, on its 80th anniversary. Through the work of its members, the Johnson-Phelps VFW has made a difference in the lives of countless people and has had a tremendous positive impact on the community. The post is an exemplary organization in the Third District and its members exemplify the unyielding bravery, courage, and perseverance of America's Armed Forces.

In 1945 a group of veterans returning from the Second World War formed the post and named it for Mr. Raymond Johnson and Mr. Leslie Phelps, both killed in action during WWII. Mr. Johnson's and Mr. Phelps' names were chosen from a hat that included the names of all 23 men from the Oak Lawn area that were killed in the war. The current post building was completed in 1951, built in large part by the post's own members. Johnson-Phelps later merged with six other posts in Southwest Chicagoland, the oldest of which was chartered in 1935.

Johnson-Phelps VFW Post 5220 is led today by Commander Richard Bukowski, Sr. Vice Commander Thomas Krone, and Jr. Vice Commander Bryant Reed. Their dedication to serving the community is shown through programs such as the well-known Voice of Democracy and Patriots Pen Scholarship Competitions. They also provide for the public by hosting and sponsoring important events in the community such as Memorial Day and Veterans Day services.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the members of the Johnson-Phelps VFW Post of Oak Lawn, Illinois, for all they have done for our nation and the community over the past 80 years.

HONORING THE 90TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ZONTA CLUB OF KENMORE

HON. BRIAN HIGGINS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I stand before you today to honor the Zonta Club of Kenmore on the occasion of their 90th anniversary. Their service and advocacy is deserving of recognition and gratitude.

Nine decades ago, several Kenmore women met with Marian DeForest; past Chairman of the Confederation of Zonta Clubs, Ellen Bixby; then Vice-President of the Zonta Club of Buffalo, and Florence Fuchs, at the home of Jessie E. Webster on LaSalle Avenue in Kenmore. The Club was formally organized on December 2, 1925 at the home of Mrs. Aurelia Opperman.

On December 7, 1925 the Zonta Club of Kenmore received its charter—Charter #38, with fifteen members. Their first weekly luncheon meeting was held on Wednesday, December 9, 1925 at the Kenmore YWCA. Since its inception, the Zonta Club of Kenmore has dedicated itself to service work and commitment to the community.

In their first year of service work, the members decided to help further the education of a girl or woman in need, to provide her an opportunity to earn a living. Fundraising projects, such as Monster Theater parties at the Kenmore Theater, Annual Stunt Days, book reviews, card parties, bake sales, and rummage sales all helped to accomplish this noble objective.

On April 19, 1975, the Club celebrated their 50th Anniversary at a dinner held at the Packet Inn, in Tonawanda, New York. Some of the organizations that have benefitted from the good efforts of the Zonta Club over the years are the Girl Scouts of America, The American Red Cross, Kenmore Mercy Hospital, and many more.

Today, with a membership of 20 dedicated women, the motto of the Zonta Club of Kenmore is "Small but Mighty."

Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me a few moments to honor and recognize the Zonta Club of Kenmore. I ask that my colleagues join me in congratulating the Zonta Club on these accomplishments and their continuous contributions to the community.

HONORING MARY ELLEN ORMOND ON THE OCCASION OF HER RETIREMENT AFTER 33 YEARS IN THE NEW HAMPSHIRE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

HON. FRANK C. GUINTA

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. GUINTA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my congratulations to Ms. Mary Ellen Ormond on her retirement after 33 years in the New Hampshire Public School System, and thank her for the outstanding work she did during her career.

Ms. Ormond's continuous progression within the education community from her time at Grinnell Elementary School, to her most recent position as superintendent of the Inter-Lakes School District, exemplifies her dedication and professionalism.

The creativity, knowledge, and experience Ms. Ormond brought to classrooms throughout the Granite State has been invaluable, and it's clear she leaves an example of strong leadership for others to emulate in her wake.

It is with great admiration that I congratulate Ms. Ormond on her retirement, and wish her the best on all future endeavors.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF DR. H. GILBERT MILLER

HON. BARBARA COMSTOCK

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mrs. COMSTOCK. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and Congressman ROBERT HURT, I submit these remarks in remembrance of Dr. H. Gilbert Miller, an enthusiastic innovator, a champion of technology, and a good man. We join the Miller family to mourn his loss, which is felt by all who knew him, and celebrate his life, which has left an indelible impact on many in our districts and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Dr. Miller was a visionary—a gifted engineer who spent his career supporting the development and innovation of cutting edge technology into our federal government programs most recently as Chief Technology Officer of Noblis, Inc., a non-profit science, technology, and strategy organization. At Noblis, he was the champion behind the development of the Noblis Innovation and Collaboration Center—the NICC—a place where great minds had room to grow and an incubator for transformative collaborations that yielded innovations and discoveries. Dr. Miller's mission was to help solve the world's toughest big data and analytic challenges by seeding and developing the nation's best minds and supporting their efforts with the power of technology. His leadership brought one of the world's largest and most dynamic supercomputers to Danville, Virginia, for private sector use.

But Dr. Miller's love for technology and innovation went far beyond the walls of Noblis. He was a passionate supporter of STEM educations. Dr. Miller chaired and served on numerous volunteer, educational advisory boards, including most recently as Vice Chairman of the Dean's Advisory Board for the Volgenau School of Engineering at George Mason University and on the advisory board for the Data Analytics Engineering Program at George Mason University. In recognition of his many accomplishments, his leadership role in advancing science and technology at Noblis and in support of Noblis' federal government clients as well as advancing the public-private partnership with the Commonwealth of Virginia, in 2011 Dr. Miller received the CTO Innovator Award from the Northern Virginia Technology Council.

But more than his extensive list of professional accomplishments, Dr. Miller was a loving husband, a caring father and a devoted grandfather. His greatest joy was in spending time with his family. We extend our deepest sympathies to Gil's wife, Dot, and three children Ryan, Matthew, and Kristen, his grandchildren, and the entire Miller family. We hope that they can take comfort in the love they share and the knowledge that they do not walk alone in their grief. We have lost Gil far too soon, but his legacy lives on. Thank you for sharing him and his talents with us. We are forever grateful.

IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 2967 THE VOTING RIGHTS ADVANCEMENT ACT

HON. TERRI A. SEWELL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. SEWELL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of H.R. 2967 the Voting Rights Advancement Act and to recognize today as Restoration Tuesday.

Our sacred right to vote has come under attack in numerous states across the country in the aftermath of the Supreme Court's ruling in Shelby County v. Holder. Many states, including my home state of Alabama, have enacted pernicious and burdensome voter ID laws that have the practical effect of restricting access to the polls for low income and minority voters.

Recently, Alabama closed 31 DMVs, leaving 29 Alabama counties without a DMV. Fifteen of those counties are located in rural Black Belt communities. Driver's licenses are the most popular form of photo identification used to vote. The heart of the problem lies with access. How can Alabama require a photo ID to vote, and then limit access to the most popular form of ID used? It is unconscionable that my constituents will be denied their constitutionally protected right to vote because they do not have access to a valid photo ID.

Despite the Governor's recent decision to reopen these DMVs once a month, critical access to these commonly used forms of photo IDs is still an issue for far too many minorities, senior citizens, and those living in rural communities. The reality is that opening these offices for once a month provides only bare minimum access, and that is unacceptable. Had the preclearance requirements of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 still been in place, Alabama's decision to close these DMVs would have likely had to have been reviewed by the Department of Justice.

In Alabama, the DMV closures occurred under the guise of budgetary concerns. Any budgetary savings are far outweighed by the discriminatory impact these closures will have on my constituents' ability to access the polls. But these types of discriminatory decisions are not exclusive to Alabama. These DMV closures are indicative of a broader and systematic effort that threatens to undermine our most basic right as Americans—the right to vote.

Protecting the right to vote for all Americans, especially those traditionally excluded from the democratic process should be top priority for us all. Every eligible voter must be allowed to cast his or her ballot unhindered by laws that deter participation in our democracy.

As Members of Congress, we must speak up for the voices of the excluded. If we do not act then we risk silencing these voices forever. We must fight to restore the critical protections of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 that were struck down in the Shelby vs Holder case. Now is the time to restore the vote.

CONGRATULATING THE ELDON HIGH SCHOOL CHEERLEADING SQUAD FOR THEIR 2015 MISSOURI CHEERLEADING COACHES ASSOCIATION CLASS 3 STATE CHAMPIONSHIP

HON. BLAINE LUETKEMEYER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. LUETKEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Eldon Mustangs for their first place win in the 2015 Missouri Cheerleading Coaches Association Class 3, Large Division, State Championship.

This cheerleading squad and their coach should be commended for all of their hard work throughout this past year and for bringing home this first place state championship to their school and community.

I ask you to join me in recognizing the Eldon Mustangs for a job well done.

IN OBSERVANCE OF NATIONAL IBD AWARENESS WEEK

HON. ANDER CRENSHAW

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. CRENSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in observance of National IBD Awareness Week, which brings attention to over 1.6 million Americans affected by Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis, collectively known as inflammatory bowel disease, or IBD.

These disorders impact the gastrointestinal tract, the area of the body where digestion takes place. They cause inflammation of the intestine, which leads to ongoing symptoms and complications. There is currently no known cause or cure for IBD, and individuals with IBD may suffer from various symptoms from mild to severe abdominal pain, diarrhea, fever, and intestinal bleeding. The impacts are devastating to both patients and their families.

Unfortunately, IBD can affect anyone, though it is most commonly diagnosed in adolescents and young adults between 15 and 25 years old. And though we still do not have all the answers, there is hope. An increasing number of genes have been identified—over 100 today—that may cause an increase in the risk of developing IBD, confirming that IBD has a strong genetic component. With these discoveries and new technological advances, researchers are working furiously to find cures. Despite this, the unpredictable nature of these painful and debilitating digestive diseases creates a significant burden on the community and economy. Every year, there is more than $1.26 billion in direct and indirect costs to the United States healthcare system due to surgeries and hospitalizations as a result of IBD complications.

This week, patient advocates from the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation of America (CCFA) are marching on Washington to meet with their Representatives and ask them to be a part of the movement and join the bipartisan Crohn's and Colitis Congressional Caucus. I would like to extend a warm welcome to Mr. Michael Osso, as CCFA celebrates the foundation's newest President and CEO. Mr. Osso is taking over from recently retired Mr. Richard Geswell, who in his turn has dedicated 10 years of remarkable leadership and service for patients with IBD. I am confident that Mr. Osso will continue Mr. Geswell's legacy of remarkable vision and drive on the journey forward towards a cure.

As co-chair of the bipartisan Crohn's and Colitis Congressional Caucus, a group of dedicated Members educating the public and other Members of Congress on IBD, I am grateful for the opportunity to raise awareness for IBD as well as improve patients' access to treatments. Let us use this week, IBD Awareness Week, as a call to action for all Americans. Together, with the help of researchers, educators, medical professionals, patients, and families, we can find a cure and end this devastating disease for millions of people around the world. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate CCFA on their efforts to bring awareness to this awful disease and I urge my colleagues to recognize Crohn's and Colitis Awareness Week as a way to build upon our efforts for the IBD patient community and to join the Crohn's and Colitis Congressional Caucus.

HONORING THE LIFE AND LEGACY OF GENERAL JOHN ROGERS GALVIN

HON. SETH MOULTON

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. MOULTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of General John Rogers

Galvin, who died on September 25 of this year at the age of 86.

Born in Wakefield, Massachusetts, General Galvin committed his life and career to defending and serving our country. As a child, he created the Pleasant Street Army to protect his neighborhood during World War II, served four years as an enlisted soldier in the Massachusetts Army National Guard, graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1954, and served two tours in Vietnam as a brigade operations officer and battalion commander.

General Galvin's forty-four year military career culminated in his service as the Supreme Allied Commander in Chief of U.S. European Command and NATO Commander in 1987 during the collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War. During his tenure, General Galvin confronted the breakup of Yugoslavia, provided vital protection to Kurds in northern Iraq during the regime of Saddam Hussein, and transitioned NATO's military strategy from large-scale containment to small-conflict peacekeeping and counterinsurgency.

Following his retirement from the military, General Galvin transitioned to academia, serving as the sixth dean of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University from 1995 to 2000.

He was considered a mentor to many of our country's leading national security and military experts, including a personal mentor of mine, General David Petraeus. General Galvin liked to say the word ''impossible'' does not exist and often advised, ''it doesn't do any good to study all the books on leadership if you haven't studied yourself and know who you are.''

I join the Wakefield community in recognizing General Galvin's achievements that will continue to inspire the next generation of leaders. His legacy lives on through his wife Virginia, his four daughters, and five grandchildren.

HONORING BRUCE C. DOERING

HON. JUDY CHU

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. JUDY CHU of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a dedicated leader in the labor movement and entertainment industry, Bruce C. Doering, on his retirement as the Executive Director of the International Cinematographer's Guild, IATSE Local 600. His retirement marks the end of a remarkable three decades of improving the lives and working conditions for thousands of entertainment industry union members across the United States.

Bruce Doering has been actively involved in the union movement from an early age. As a young steel worker in Chicago, Bruce helped start a union newspaper to expose poor working conditions. He was instrumental in a Chicago Sun Times exposé that led to stronger safety regulations and increased incentive bonuses for employees. In 1985, he went to work for the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees (IATSE) to begin a career that would have a significant influence on a rapidly expanding creative industry.

After initially serving as the Executive Director of Local 659, in Hollywood, Bruce oversaw the merger of three camera unions into a powerful national Cinematographers Guild in 1996. Members are now able to work around the country on projects and still receive their health and retirement benefits. While retirement funds were being slashed around the country, Bruce pushed hard to maintain member eligibility and helped to grow a retirement fund based on a percentage of members' hourly earnings. As a member of the Board of Directors at the Motion Picture Pension and Health Plans since 1986, Bruce has served on numerous committees protecting and enhancing the benefits workers and their families receive.

Bruce's tenacity has helped create more job opportunities for members, and ensured them a path into the middle class. During his tenure, Local 600 expanded its reach considerably into reality television. In 2001, he was in the vanguard of the industry's rapidly changing technology, helping recognize the Digital Imaging Technician classification. After a decade-long fight, unit publicists this year finally won the ability to earn their health and pension benefits across the United States. The Local's political presence has been particularly felt in California, where Bruce led Local 600 campaigns supporting time and a half overtime pay, the doubling of unemployment benefits, and supporting union member voices in politics.

Bruce's success in guiding IATSE Local 600, and his exceptional career as leader in the union movement is a true inspiration for all of us. We thank him for his service, his leadership in the community, and for being a role model for so many.

RECOGNIZING THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LACONIA CHRISTMAS VILLAGE

HON. FRANK C. GUINTA

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. GUINTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 40th anniversary of the Laconia Christmas Village in Laconia, New Hampshire. I am pleased to join with the City of Laconia and its residents in commemorating this wonderful event and holiday tradition for Granite Staters in the Lakes Region of New Hampshire.

This is a great achievement as the annual Christmas Village is organized and run by local volunteers in Laconia, who not only help build the actual village and attractions, but work together to provide all the resources needed to put on this yearly event. The event is free to the public and sees roughly 2,500 children come through to see Santa Claus and receive a Christmas present, and for some children this is their only holiday celebration. Volunteers not only help in the preparation of the event, but help with entertainment, providing refreshments and welcoming families from across the region to the city.

With the goal of providing a family friendly event to usher in the holiday season, these volunteers and the community have come together beautifully to highlight the wonder and merriment of the Christmas season. Joined with the efforts of local volunteers who give their time and resources to make the village a success, this is a testament to the strong sense of community and support this event has had in Laconia over the last 40 years.

I am proud to join with my fellow Granite Staters in recognizing the 40th anniversary of the Laconia Christmas Village, and wish them all the best in their future years.

IN RECOGNITION OF DIONNE WARWICK

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor New Jersey-native and music marvel, Ms. Dionne Warwick. The legendary Ms. Warwick is world renowned not only for her incredible music career, but also for her humanitarian and philanthropic work.

Ms. Warwick is a pillar of American pop music and culture. She began singing in East Orange, New Jersey during her childhood years. Her gospel roots marry well with R&B and pop in a way that transcends culture and race. Ms. Warwick is a five-time Grammy Award-winning singer and the second most-charted female vocalist of all time, with 69 singles on the Billboard Hot 100 charts. She became a superstar with early hits like ''Walk on By'' and ''I Say a Little Prayer,'' and followed them up for decades with hits including ''Do You Know the Way to San Jose,'' ''I'll Never Love This Way Again,'' and ''That's What Friends Are For.''

As a performer, Ms. Warwick delighted audiences all around the world. Her talents received a star on Hollywood's ''Walk of Fame.'' She was also honored by Oprah Winfrey at the 2005 Legends Ball. As an activist, Ms. Warwick has devoted countless hours and supported a number of charities and causes.

Always one to aid those in need, Ms. Warwick advocates on behalf of music education, world hunger, disaster relief, and children's hospitals. She has used her stardom over five decades to raise awareness about major health issues, including AIDS and senior citizen health. For her commitment, President Ronald Reagan and the U.S. Department of Health & Human Services appointed her U.S. Ambassador of Health in 1987. In 2002, she served as Global Ambassador for Health and Ambassador for the United Nations' Food & Agriculture Organization. She is currently working to ensure Medicare covers the best method of administering FDA approved drugs in cataract surgery, a procedure she herself has undergone.

I join all of Dionne Warwick's friends and loved ones in celebrating her many achievements and contributions, and I wish Ms. Warwick—the jewel of New Jersey's 10th Congressional District—a very happy 75th birthday. I have no doubt that Ms. Warwick will continue to use her voice to captivate international audiences, through her music and her dedication to the human condition.

COMMEMORATING WORLD AIDS DAY 2015

HON. JIM McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, December 1st is World AIDS Day. This past weekend Americans celebrated the Thanksgiving holiday. It is a time of reflection and appreciation. Similarly, World AIDS Day is a moment for us to reflect on our past challenges, appreciate the great strides we have made, and acknowledge that serious work remains to eradicate the disease. Congress has played a vital role, and our future success requires continued Congressional action and vigilance.

Today, we can take heart in the knowledge that new HIV infections worldwide have decreased by 35% since 2000. The President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) has been a vanguard effort through which rates of infection have dropped in areas of the world hit the hardest by the epidemic. Its initiatives are critical to saving lives and preventing new infections.

Our efforts abroad are not just about where the disease is located, but also who it impacts. From decreasing mother-to-child transmission and addressing the nuances of co-infections and co-morbidities to confronting the stigmas that undermine prevention and hinder access to life-saving healthcare, we are better positioned to confront the disease in all its stages and improve the quality of life for those living with the disease.

Complementing this effort is our continued march forward on the scientific front. While we have made great strides in drug development, this effort has been hampered by Congress' reluctance to fully support basic research in the sciences through the National Institutes of Health. Furthermore, we must work hard to ensure that treatment is accessible to everyone across the socio-economic spectrum, both domestically and internationally.

I served as a medical officer with the U.S. State Department in sub-Saharan Africa just as the full force of the AIDS epidemic became readily apparent. Infection was, by and large, a death sentence. Today, with anti-viral treatments we can talk about people living with AIDS, but this also reminds us that confronting the disease is more than just biology, but also public health and the social impact of the disease. One of my first accomplishments as a Member of Congress was to work with my colleagues to pass legislation that ensures those with AIDS have access to housing. Today, the Housing Opportunities for People with AIDS program (HOPWA) continues to help ensure that those living with AIDS affordable housing and contributes to the stability needed to promote adherence to treatment regimens.

Today, we see overall declines in infection rates, but we must acknowledge that in some communities, this is not the case. While most sub-Saharan countries of Africa have seen decreases in rates of infection, this has not been the case in Angola and Uganda. Similarly, in the United States we see a geographical shift in rates of infection with the southeastern United States showing higher rates than other parts of the country. If past is precedent, meeting these challenges must start with a strong commitment to education, based in science, and dedicated to empowering communities through knowledge to confront the disease.

As we commemorate World AIDS Day this year, we can draw inspiration from our international response to the AIDS epidemic. Rather than a fearful reaction, ill-equipped because of ignorance, and disengaged because of empty rhetoric, the United States is rising to meet the challenge of an AIDS-free generation; motivated by compassion and the pursuit of wellbeing, armed with science, and committed through the dedication of resources. We can take pride in how far we have come, but our success must not breed a false sense of security. Our work is not done and Congress must provide the resources needed to ensure the United States government maintains its leadership role, both at home and abroad, in the effort to make an AIDS-free generation a reality.

HONORING THE NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION'S CIVIL RIGHTS COMMEMORATION TOUR

HON. TERRI A. SEWELL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. SEWELL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of the National Bar Association's Civil Rights Commemoration Tour during the 60th Commemoration of the Montgomery Bus Boycott. Today, we honor the pivotal role that black lawyers played during the Montgomery Bus Boycott and the Civil Rights Movement.

Sixty years ago, demonstrators in Montgomery boldly challenged the segregated bus system with the help of talented black attorneys who were committed to eradicating social injustices across the State of Alabama. Gifted lawyers like Thurgood Marshall, Fred Gray, Constance Baker Motley, U.W. Clemon and countless other African American attorneys argued and won some of the most pivotal cases of the Civil Rights and Voting Rights Movement. Yet so often we overlook the courageous men and women who bravely defeated the government sanctioned oppression that was Jim Crow in the courtroom. Each of their stories is embedded in the fabric of this nation for they contributed to making America a more fair and just society.

The State of Alabama was home to some of the key black lawyers in the civil rights movement. One of the most impactful lawyers of the Movement was Alabama native, Fred Gray. Attorney Fred Gray came to prominence representing key figures in the Montgomery Bus Boycott including Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Claudette Colvin, and Rosa Parks. He represented Rosa Parks on appeal for her conviction for violating Montgomery's public transit segregation law which ultimately led to the desegregation of buses throughout the City of Montgomery. Attorney Fred Gray later secured a victory in Williams v. Wallace (1963) which protected the Selma to Montgomery marchers. Attorney Fred Gray continues today to provide legal counsel to so many in the fight for social and economic justice. Attorney Fred Gray's indelible legacy paved the way for many other black lawyers including Judge U.W. Clemon, Alabama's first black federal judge and Judge Oscar Adams who was the first African-American Alabama Supreme Court Justice.

Likewise, the National Bar Association has consistently been recognized for its commitment to spearheading efforts to uplift those that are oppressed and disenfranchised. Since its inception in 1924, the National Bar Association has fostered and supported the important role of black lawyers in the fight for equal justice. Today, that legacy continues under the leadership of its President Attorney Benjamin Crump who is a modern-day example of what it means to fight for equality and justice in the courtroom.

As a Member of Congress and a former member of the National Bar Association, I am honored to welcome the association to my district during the 60th commemoration of the Montgomery Bus Boycott. During this special commemoration, we thank the National Bar Association for all of the work it has done and continues to do, and we salute its individual members who are working to make a difference in the lives of everyday Americans.

I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting the significant contributions and achievements to this nation of black lawyers and the National Bar Association during this 60th commemoration of the Montgomery Bus Boycott.

IN HONOR OF BONNIE CARROLL, RECIPIENT OF THE PRESIDENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM FOR HER COMMITMENT TO HEALING FAMILIES OF FALLEN MEMBERS OF THE ARMED SERVICES

HON. BARBARA COMSTOCK

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mrs. COMSTOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize my constituent, Bonnie Carroll, of Loudoun County, Virginia, who received the Presidential Medal of Freedom on November 24th. The Presidential Medal of Freedom is our nation's highest civilian honor, and I am humbled to recognize Mrs. Carroll today.

Mrs. Carroll is a retired major in the United States Air Force Reserve who has dedicated her career to aiding family members of our nation's veterans and service members. Following the death of her husband—Brig. Gen. Tom Charles Carroll, who died in an Army C–12 plane crash in Alaska in 1992—she founded the Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors (TAPS), which seeks to support families who have lost loved ones in the military.

Mrs. Carroll utilized the resources given to her following her husband's death to start this fantastic organization that offers help to so many families who are grieving. As Founder and President, Mrs. Carroll has made it her priority to provide resources to families of fallen service members in their time of need. TAPS runs a peer support network that connects families with others who are grieving across the United States. Since its founding, TAPS has assisted over 50,000 family members.

Mrs. Carroll, we thank you for your stewardship in our community and your lifelong commitment to public service. You have made your nation and the 10th District of Virginia proud. I wish you the best of success in the years to come.

RECOGNIZING MAJOR MATTHEW R. KELLEY

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Major Matthew R. Kelley for his dedication to duty and service as an Army Congressional Fellow and Congressional Budget Liaison for the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Financial Management and Comptroller). Major Kelley will be transitioning from his present assignment to serve in the 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Georgia.

A native of Ekron, Kentucky, Major Kelley was commissioned as an Armor officer after his graduation from the United States Military Academy with a Bachelor of Science degree in Electrical Engineering. He has subsequently earned a Master's degree in Legislative Affairs from the George Washington University.

Matt has served in a broad range of assignments during his Army career. Major Kelley's assignments include Armor Officer Student, United States Army Armor School, Fort Knox; Tank Platoon Leader, Troop Executive Officer, and Task Force Scout Platoon Leader, 1st Squadron, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, Fort Irwin; Instructor, Army Reserve Officer Training Corps at the University of Oregon; Reconnaissance Troop Commander and Headquarters Troop Commander, 4th Squadron, 2d Cavalry Regiment, Vilseck, Germany. Additionally, Major Kelley was deployed in direct support of combat operations in Iraq, from 2005–2006, and Regional Command—South, Afghanistan, from 2010–2011.

In 2013, Matt was selected to be an Army Congressional Fellow for one year, working in a Congressional office on Capitol Hill. Next, in his role as a Congressional Budget Liaison, working closely with the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, Matt ensured the Army's budget positions were well represented and articulated to the Appropriations Committees.

Throughout his career, Major Kelley has positively impacted his soldiers, peers, and superiors. Our country has been enriched by his extraordinary leadership, thoughtful judgment, and exemplary work. I join my colleagues today in honoring his dedication to our nation and invaluable service to the United States Congress as an Army Congressional Budget Liaison.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a genuine pleasure to have worked with Major Matt Kelley over the last two years. On behalf of a grateful nation, I join my colleagues today in recognizing and commending Matt for his service to his country and we wish him, his wife Erin, and children, Grace, Samuel, Jack, and Tommy all the best as they continue their journey in the United States Army.

IN HONOR OF MR. CLAYBON J. EDWARDS

HON. SANFORD D. BISHOP, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. BISHOP of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding public servant, respected businessman, and loving husband, father, and friend, Mr. Claybon J. Edwards. Sadly, Mr. Edwards passed away on Tuesday, November 3, 2015. A funeral service was held on Sunday, November 8, 2015 at 3:00 p.m. at the Peach County High School Auditorium in Fort Valley, Georgia.

Often affectionately referred to as ''Clay,'' Mr. Edwards was born in Fort Valley to Martin and Julia Edwards. In 1950, Mr. Edwards earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration from Morris Brown College in Atlanta, Georgia. Upon graduation, he represented Morris Brown College in a Chicago-based Life Insurance Program sponsored by Supreme Life Insurance Company. The program was established for business administration graduates from Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs). Mr. Edwards then went on to serve our nation honorably in the military for two years.

In 1963, Mr. Edwards joined his father and his brother, A.J., in the family business at Edwards Funeral Home. He attended Worsham College of Mortuary Science of Chicago and then relocated to Fort Valley, where he became a licensed embalmer and funeral director of Georgia.

Later, Edwards Funeral Home was renamed to C.J. Edwards Funeral Home, Inc. and Mr. Edwards became President and CEO. The foundational values of the funeral home did not change, however, and it remained very much a family business. Mr. Edwards' wife, Mary, their daughter, Denise, and son-in-law Anthony, along with Mr. Edwards' sister, Mary Julia, and her daughter Karen, are all involved in the operation of the funeral home. In addition, Mr. Edwards founded Edwards Insurance Agency to add to the business structure.

Mr. Edwards put as much love into serving his community as he did into his businesses. He served numerous organizations, including the NAACP, Alpha Phi Alpha and Sigma Pi Phi fraternities, and various funeral service trade associations. He was also a Deacon at Trinity Baptist Church in Fort Valley, Georgia.

In 1970, Mr. Edwards became the first African American to be elected to serve on the City Council in Fort Valley. He served four terms and served as Mayor Pro Tem for two years.

Claybon Edwards accomplished much in his life but none of this would have been possible without the grace of God and the love and support of his wife of forty-five years, Mary; daughter, Denise; three grandchildren, Sabastian, Samantha, Courtney, and Caitlin; and one great-grandchild, Saniya.

Mr. Speaker, my wife Vivian and I, along with the more than 730,000 people of the Second Congressional District, salute Claybon J. Edwards for his dedicated service to his community. I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join us in extending our deepest sympathies to his family, friends and loved ones during this difficult time. We pray that they will be consoled and comforted by an abiding faith and the Holy Spirit in the days, weeks and months ahead.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MARK TAKAI

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. TAKAI. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, November 30, I was absent from the House due to illness. Due to my absence, I am not recorded on any legislative measures for the day.

Had I been present, I would have voted ''yea'' on Roll Call 644, to remove the use restrictions on certain land transferred to Rockingham County, Virginia.

I would have voted ''yea'' on Roll Call 645, the Billy Frank Jr. Tell Your Story Act.

RECOGNIZING GOEUN CHOI, CHRISTIAN HAILE, JASMINE MARTINEZ, CHRISTINA RIMBEY, AND EITAN WOLF

HON. MIKE COFFMAN

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. COFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Goeun Choi, Christian Haile, Jasmine Martinez, Christina Rimbey and Eitan Wolf for their hard work and dedication to the people of Colorado's Sixth District as interns in my Washington, D.C. office for the autumn of the 114th Congress, First Session.

The work of these young men and women has been exemplary and I know they all have bright futures. They served as tour guides, interacted with constituents, and learned a great deal about our nation's legislative process. I was glad to be able to offer this educational opportunity to these five and look forward to seeing them build their careers in public service.

All five of our interns have made plans to continue their education and professional occupations in Washington, D.C. and throughout the United States. I am certain they will succeed in their new roles and wish them all the best in their future endeavors. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to recognize Goeun Choi, Christian Haile, Jasmine Martinez, Christina Rimbey and Eitan Wolf for their service this autumn.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. LOUISE McINTOSH SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained and missed Roll Call vote numbers 644 and 645. Had I been present, I would have voted aye on Roll Call vote numbers 644 and 645.

HONORING ROSA PARKS

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor beloved civil rights activist and ''mother of the Civil Rights Movement,'' Rosa Parks. Sixty years ago today, Rosa Parks was arrested after refusing to give up her seat to a white passenger on a public bus in Montgomery, Alabama.

This single act of civil disobedience unwittingly helped build the foundation for a nationwide movement to end the discriminatory policies of segregation. She empowered thousands of African Americans to come together and launch a boycott of Montgomery buses that lasted 381 days. Thousands of members from the African American community rallied together to carpool, use African American-operated cabs, or even going as far to walk many miles to work. It was a huge success that sent a strong message to those who would choose to discriminate against others.

Rosa Parks endured great personal hardship following her protest. She was fired from her job at a local department store and her husband was retaliated against in his own place of work, losing his job in the process as well. Rosa Parks was ultimately forced to leave Montgomery for Detroit, Michigan where she could begin a new life. However, her suffering would not be in vain and in 1956, the United States Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling that Jim Crow laws were unconstitutional.

Rosa Parks channeled discrimination against her into positive action. She founded the Rosa and Raymond Parks Institute for Self-Development, which is aimed at providing youth with life skills, character development, and education on civil rights history. Her contributions have been widely recognized thereafter. Rosa Parks is the recipient of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's (NAACP) highest award, the Spingarn Medal. She was also awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by President Bill Clinton, and was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal, which is the highest award that United States Congress can bestow on a civilian.

Mr. Speaker, Rosa Parks serves as an inspiration to us all. Her story teaches us how the brave actions of one individual can inspire the actions of an entire generation. Individuals like Rosa Parks light the way and show us exactly how we can achieve the change we so greatly desire. Her actions changed the course of history and her legacy will be remembered far and wide.

RECOGNIZING THE 106TH CHRISTMAS TREE LIGHTING IN PERKASIE BOROUGH

HON. MICHAEL G. FITZPATRICK

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, three years before the lights on the famous Christmas tree in New York City's Rockefeller Center were flipped on, a small town in my district of Pennsylvania began a tradition that has spanned generations and leads the nation.

Since 1909, residents of Perkasie Borough have been gathering together in early December to light the community Christmas tree—a tradition that stands as America's oldest continuous tree lighting.

A town of under 3,000 at the time of its first Christmas celebration, Perkasie has grown steadily while community leaders, elected officials and local residents have kept its unique small town charm and timeless Christmas ritual.

Today, I recognize December 5th as what will be Perkasie's 106th consecutive community Christmas tree lighting and join in the celebration of this enduring holiday tradition.

TRIBUTE TO DUANE HARTE

HON. STEPHEN KNIGHT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of a man who dedicated his life to serving his family and his community: Duane Harte, who passed away on Monday, November 23rd, at the age of 68.

Harte was born in 1947 and moved to the Santa Clarita Valley in 1974, where he and his wife Pauline raised their two daughters. He retired in 1990 as Senior Chief Petty Officer from the U.S. Naval Reserve after 23 years of service and owned a small business called Academy Addressing and Mailing.

Harte's contributions to the Santa Clarita Valley were numerous. He was president of the Santa Clarita Valley Veteran's Memorial Committee and founding president of the SCV Senior Center Charitable Foundation. He was also active in the Friends of Mentryville, SCV Historical Society, was the President of the SCV Veterans Memorial Committee, past chairman of the SCV Chamber of Commerce, SCV Committee on Aging, Newhall Redevelopment Committee, Friends of the Libraries of the SCV, Canyon Theatre Guild Board of Directors, and the Vice-Chairman of the Santa Clarita Parade Committee.

In 2008, Harte was selected to serve as a Parks, Recreation and Community Services Commissioner, where he served until he passed away due to a massive heart attack in his Santa Clarita home.

Harte is survived by his wife of 43 years, Pauline, their two daughters, Donna and Denise, and grandson Evan Alexander.

TRIBUTE TO CARL KLUVER

HON. DAVID YOUNG

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. YOUNG of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and congratulate Mr. Carl Kluver of Shenandoah, Iowa, for receiving his high school diploma.

Two years after leaving the Charter Oak High School in 1942, Carl joined the military to serve his country. It wasn't until October 10th, 2015 that Carl was able to attain his diploma. Carl served our country honorably during World War II aboard the USS Richmond during his time in the U.S. Navy. He never regretted joining the military, but always wished he had finished high school. Carl made it known to his family that he wished he had received his high school diploma, and with the support and encouragement of his grandson he decided it wasn't too late to graduate. Carl's grandson John Olson contacted the Charter Oak-Ute Community School District and inquired about getting a diploma for his grandfather. After explaining the situation to school officials and once the Charter Oak School District verified that Carl had indeed been a student there, a diploma was granted. Surrounded by family, Carl received his diploma, saying, ''It was a great day and one I'll never forget.''

Mr. Speaker, I commend and congratulate Carl for his accomplishments and receiving his high school diploma. I am proud to represent him in the United States Congress for his distinguished service to our country. I ask that my colleagues in the United States House of Representatives join me in congratulating Carl and wishing him nothing but the best moving forward.

RECOGNIZING MR. GEORGE JOSEPH PARNESS

HON. TOM RICE

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. RICE of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the life of Mr. George Joseph Parness, a distinguished American hero, who spent his life improving the lives of others.

George joined the United States Navy just days after Pearl Harbor was bombed. He was ordered to report to the USS Nicholson, and also served aboard the USS LeHardy, the USS President Hayes, the USS Phelps, and the USS Randall. After WWII, George returned home only to eventually reenlist during the Korean Conflict. He served aboard many ships including the USS Achernar.

After returning from war George met his wife, June, and on February 12, 1954, they married. George then went on to work in the newspaper business, served as Mayor of Suffern, New York, and served as Rockland County Legislature. George and his wife then retired to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina.

George will be greatly missed and I ask that we keep his family in our thoughts and prayers.

INTRODUCTION OF THE OBSTETRIC FISTULA PREVENTION, TREATMENT, HOPE, AND DIGNITY RESTORATION ACT OF 2015

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mrs. CAROLYN B. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing comprehensive legislation that both prevents new obstetric fistulas and helps to treat existing ones, helping millions of women around the world regain control of their health and dignity. The Fistula Prevention, Treatment, Hope and Dignity Restoration Act will support a cooperative effort to eradicate a heartbreaking, preventable condition that has been largely eliminated in the developed world.

Childbirth should not leave a woman disabled or ostracized by her family and community. Congress must commit to expanding access to treatment for the more than two million women worldwide who suffer from obstetric fistula and preventing new cases.

Obstetric fistula is a devastating condition that results from prolonged, obstructed labor without proper medical attention. During delivery, the infant's head presses against the woman's pelvis for so long that it creates a hole between the woman's vagina and rectum, leaving her without control of her bladder and/or bowels for the rest of her life if untreated. It also often results in a stillbirth. Mothers with fistulas are abandoned by their husbands and shunned by their families. According to the World Health Organization, there are between 50,000 and 100,000 new cases each year.

Fortunately, obstetric fistula is both treatable and preventable. Ninety percent of cases can be treated with a surgery costing an average of $400. This legislation allows for a comprehensive, three pronged approach of prevention, treatment and reintegration which involves: increasing access to prenatal care, emergency obstetric care, postnatal care, and voluntary family planning; building local capacity and improving national health systems; addressing underlying social and economic inequities, reducing the incidence of child marriage, and increasing access to education; and supporting reintegration and training programs to help women who have undergone treatment return to full and productive lives. These essential investments create a multiplier effect of benefits for women and their communities.

It is also imperative that Congress supports ongoing efforts in the fight to end fistula. Organizations such as UNFPA (the United Nations Population Fund) and USAID are working with partners in a global campaign to prevent and treat fistula with the goal of making the condition rare in areas of the developing world, such as sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia. The legislation also supports coordination through the International Obstetric Fistula Working Group. Support for monitoring, evaluation, and research to measure the impacts of such programs throughout their planning and implementation phases will ensure the most efficient and effective allocation of U.S. foreign assistance dollars.

We are already well aware that promoting women's health is fundamental to ensuring the health of their children and families. With this bill, we can give women around the world hope for a healthy future. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the Obstetric Fistula Prevention, Treatment, Hope, and Dignity Restoration Act.

RECOGNIZING MAYOR BETSY PATERSON UPON HER RETIREMENT

HON. JOE COURTNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. COURTNEY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Mansfield, Connecticut's 16-year mayor, Betsy Paterson upon her retirement. For nearly two decades, Betsy has provided rock-solid leadership for her town and her community, serving the residents of Mansfield with her know-how and forward-thinking initiatives.

Starting in 2007, Betsy led her town through a landmark reinvestment campaign. Working with the Mansfield Downtown Partnership to secure millions in state and federal funding. Betsy and the town embarked on an historic downtown improvement project that delivered to Mansfield residents and to the flagship University of Connecticut located in Storrs, additional open space, economic development and improved transportation. Betsy's leadership leveraged federal infrastructure investment with outstanding private sector development to leave a long-lasting impact on the town's business development and livability and a huge enhancement to UConn's ability to draw the ''best and brightest'' to its mission. Today, Storrs Center serves as an important transportation and economic hub that fuels a lively community and reflects Betsy's vision and determination.

In addition to her Mayoral duties, Betsy has served on the board of the Mansfield Downtown Partnership, as a member of the Presidential Search Committee at the University of Connecticut, and on the Mansfield Democratic Town Committee and the Mansfield Historical Society.

Betsy has been a terrific friend and colleague during her time as Mayor. Although her leadership will be missed in the Mayor's office, I am confident that her deep involvement in the future of Mansfield will not end with her retirement. I ask my colleagues to please join me in thanking Betsy for her lifetime of service to Mansfield and eastern Connecticut.

REMARKS AT AMERICAN ARCHITECTURAL FOUNDATION'S OCULUS AWARD CEREMONY

HON. BETTY McCOLLUM

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, today I had the honor of addressing the American Architectural Foundation's Oculus award ceremony to celebrate leadership in cultural heritage and highlight organizations whose preservation initiatives promote vibrant, sustainable communities. This year's Oculus award was presented to Wiss, Janney, Elstner Associates for their national leadership in historic preservation.

I want to applaud the work of the American Architectural Foundation (AAF) and its president and CEO Ron Bogle. AAF's efforts to make restoration, preservation and protection of our nation's vulnerable historic buildings, collections, artifacts and works of art a national priority is commendable and it's an agenda I fully support.

Mr. Speaker, I submit my remarks from today's Oculus award.

Good afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Ayers, for the kind introduction. I appreciate all that you and your staff are doing to keep Congress working while you are restoring our beautiful Capitol dome. Thank you for your leadership.

I am thrilled to be here today.

The American Architectural Foundation is playing an important role in driving an agenda that places cultural heritage, historic preservation, and architectural restoration at its forefront.

I want to commend the vision and tremendous work of AAF President and CEO Ron Bogle, along with Mr. Thom Minner, Director of AAF's Center for Design and Cultural Heritage. Ron and Thom are working with me to get Congress re-engaged as a partner in protecting and restoring our country's historic treasures, treasures that unite communities and connect the past to the future.

We are here today to honor a company for more than 50 years of accomplishments in historic preservation. Congratulations to Wiss, Janney, Elstner Associates on receiving the 2015 Oculus award.

WJE has a long record of contributing to projects across the U.S. and around the world. They have an office in Minnesota, but I was surprised to learn how often we worked at the same places.

In the early 1970s my first full-time job was in downtown St. Paul in the First National Bank building. Later, WJE worked on the First National Bank building. As a Minnesota state legislator, I spent eight years working in our beautiful Cass Gilbert designed state capitol building. WJE has worked on the capitol. And, one of my proudest accomplishments in Congress has been to help secure the funding for the renovation of St. Paul's historic 1920's era train station—Union Depot. The Depot's $250 million restoration was completed in 2013 and, again, WJE worked on the project.

Again, congratulations WJE on your tremendous record of success.

At the beginning of this year I became the lead Democrat on the Interior-Environment Appropriations Subcommittee. Each year our subcommittee produces a bill that provides over $30 billion to fund the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of the Interior, the U.S. Forest Service, the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities, the Smithsonian museums, and a number of other federal agencies. It is an important portfolio that funds hundreds of millions of acres of federal land, our national parks, tribal nations, and many of America's most important historic sites.

Over the past months my office has been engaged with federal stakeholders and AAF to review the federal government's role in historic preservation. It is absolutely clear that without leadership from Congress and the Obama Administration our nation's most vulnerable treasures are at risk of being lost to time, decay, or neglect. Unfortunately, Congress and the Administration are neglecting our nation's treasures and this political apathy is costing the American people our cultural heritage.

In the 2016 House and Senate Interior-Environment appropriations bills, approximately $61 million is allocated to the Historic Preservation Fund—primarily to support historic preservation offices in states, territories and tribal nations. This amount represents less than half of the $150 million authorized funding level and it is nearly $20 million less than was spent on historic preservation in 2010.

This abandonment of historic preservation runs counter to the desires of our constituents. States, local communities, non-profits, the foundation community, and the private sector want the federal government to be a real partner. All across our country communities come together and identify endangered historic and cultural assets that uniquely reflect local character and identity. It may be a historic building, a church, an archeological site, or a collection representing a moment in a community's history that exemplifies a unique piece of our American history. And, communities are asking for help—both technical and financial—because they want their valued asset to be preserved, protected, and restored for the next generation.

From 1999 to 2010 help was available. During those years, Congress provided modest, but critical funding for a program called Save America's Treasures. $318 million in federal funding was appropriated for SAT grants over twelve years—that is less than $1 per American for a decade of investments. Those grants required a dollar-for-dollar match which leveraged over $400 million in additional funds.

But, since 2011, Congress has not provided a single dollar to Save America's Treasures.

During SAT's twelve years, more than 1,200 grants were awarded to restore 327 historic properties; 247 projects to restore collections, artifacts, artistic works, and documents were funded; and, 341 National Historic Landmarks were preserved.

The treasures saved include: the restoration of Rosa Parks' bus; restoring Little Rock's Central High School; saving Ansel Adam's prints, negatives and equipment; restoring an 18th century South Carolina plantation house; preserving the ruins at Colorado's Mesa Verde National Park; and repairing and preserving the 1812 flag that flew over Fort McHenry that inspired the Star Spangled Banner.

In my Minnesota congressional district, a $150,000 SAT grant matched by community contributions helped to fund a sprinkler system in the longest serving Czech-Slovak Hall in the U.S. built in 1879. This grant saved the Sokol Hall while other ethnic halls have been lost to fire. On Saturday I'll be attending an event at the Sokol Hall and it is a wonderful center of community activity.

SAT has been an example of a public-private partnership that keeps history, culture, identity, and democracy vibrant and sustainable in towns and cities all across America.

In my view SAT grants have acted as venture capital that sparks a community into action. It is an investment that inspires a community and donors to invest time, money, volunteer support—all to the benefit of the project. A good project with an SAT grant becomes a great project. Without that federal support many projects will never get done and national treasures are now being lost forever.

I am passionate about restoring federal funding for SAT because I have a partner that shares my enthusiasm. That partner is the American Architectural Foundation. The National Park Service is SAT's lead federal agency while AAF is SAT's official non-profit partner.

Other federal partners include the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Institute of Museum and Library Services. They all have valuable technical capacity to contribute—if federal funds are made available.

In 2016 our nation will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966. Next year also marks the 100th anniversary of our National Parks. As citizens who care about historic preservation, now is the time to get organized and energized. Working together, we need to get Congress investing once again in Saving America's Treasures.

I am thrilled to be working with AAF and other partners who share the vision that preserving America's past helps to build America's future.

It has been wonderful being here with you. Thank you AAF for the invitation to be here today.

Thank you.

MANNINGTON MILLS ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF BUSINESS IN SOUTH JERSEY

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor today to celebrate the One Hundredth Anniversary of Mannington Mills, Inc. Located in my district in Salem, New Jersey, Mannington Mills is a leader in the manufacturing of residential and commercial flooring.

Mannington Mills has expanded significantly since its founding in 1915, growing from a small roots family business in South Jersey to a global industry leader today. This organization has been very successful in extending their services outside of New Jersey, recently expanding into Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, and Florida where they invested in new facilities that helped to create several hundred new jobs in each state.

The company's many years of success has allowed them to expand internationally as well. In 2012 Mannington Mills acquired Amtico International, a producer of luxury vinyl flooring headquartered in England. This new location provided many more business opportunities and allowed the company to bring its hometown brand overseas.

Mannington Mills' commitment to social responsibility makes this company stand out among others. Chairman of the Board, Keith Campbell is a firm believer in the "Do the Right Thing" philosophy that the company and family has kept with them since they first opened. This has ensured a strong community connection, and only adds to their success.

Over the last century, Mannington Mills has built a reputation of quality products in southern New Jersey and the United States. Ignoring pressure to move out of state, Mannington Mills' unwavering support to the local economy and its employees is a testament to the organization's founding principles that has spanned four generations. The company, family, and employees can take great pride in this remarkable milestone.

My sincere congratulations and best wishes for many more years of success.

IN OPPOSITION TO S.J. RES. 23 AND S.J. RES. 24

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to both resolutions before us today. Congress has a constitutional duty to conduct oversight of the Executive Branch, and the Congressional Review Act is an important tool in our toolbox. However, these resolutions are nothing more than partisan attempts to nullify the EPA's Clean Power Plan, sending a message to countries around the world of political discord in the United States as global climate change negotiations are taking place in Paris.

Climate change is real and it is a threat to the entire world. The first nine months of 2015 were the warmest on record and these higher temperatures have contributed to the drought and wildfires that have ravaged my home state of California over the past five years.

It's also a fact that the costs of failing to address climate change—both human and economic—grow with every year we fail to take action. A recently released United Nations report revealed that in the past two decades weather-related disasters have killed more than 600,000 people and cost trillions of dollars in economic losses. The report cited rising ocean temperatures and melting glaciers as two main drivers of extreme weather events which have increased at an alarming rate. The White House Council on Economic Advisers also calculated that failing to meet our climate goals will cost the U.S. $150 billion per year in reduced economic output. For each decade we ignore climate change, the costs of mitigation increase by 40 percent, which works out to approximately a $500 tax on every American each year, increasing by 40 percent every ten years.

With Congress failing to act on climate change, the Administration is taking strong action which I support. As we speak, representatives from over 190 countries are working to produce a landmark agreement in Paris to cut greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions on a global scale and invest in clean energy technologies. Even before the negotiations began, countries that make up nearly 90 percent of global GHG output submitted pledges to cut their emissions, including major polluters such as China,

India, and the United States. In the U.S., the Clean Power Plan is projected to reduce GHG emissions by 32 percent by 2030.

There is global recognition of the threat of climate change and the two resolutions before the House today would invalidate a key part of our nation's responsibility to reduce global GHG emissions by preventing any future EPA regulation of carbon emissions from power plants. This is a blatantly transparent attempt to influence the Paris negotiations on behalf of the status quo and the special interests in the fossil fuel industry. I believe the mere consideration of these resolutions diminishes U.S. leadership and this institution in the eyes of the world community, and it condemns us to a future of even higher risks.

I urge my colleagues to oppose these resolutions of disapproval.

OUR UNCONSCIONABLE NATIONAL DEBT

HON. MIKE COFFMAN

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. COFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, on January 20, 2009, the day President Obama took office, the national debt was $10,626,877,048,913.08.

Today, it is $18,782,451,267,806.04. We've added $8,155,574,218,892.96 to our debt in 6 years. This is over $8 trillion in debt our nation, our economy, and our children could have avoided with a balanced budget amendment.

RECOGNIZING THE RETIREMENT OF DR. CHARLES MOJOCK, PRESIDENT OF LAKE-SUMTER STATE COLLEGE

HON. DANIEL WEBSTER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. WEBSTER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to recognize a close friend and highly accomplished leader in education, Dr. Charles Mojock, on his upcoming retirement. On December 31, 2015, Dr. Mojock will retire as President of Lake-Sumter State College.

Under Dr. Mojock's leadership, Lake-Sumter State College has transitioned from a community college to a state college, undergone a name change, joined the Central Florida Higher Education Consortium and DirectConnect to UCF, and launched Associate of Science degree programs in Health Information Technology, Computer Information Technology and Environmental Science. During his tenure, Dr. Mojock witnessed the growth and expansion of LSSC with enrollment increasing by 79% from 2002 to 2012. LSSC was recognized among the Top 10% of Community Colleges by the Aspen Institute and was listed as a ''Best Places to Work'' in Lake and Sumter Counties.

Dr. Mojock has served on many boards including the Florida College System Council of Presidents and The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools Commission on Colleges. Dr. Mojock's remarkable service has also been recognized on the national and state levels. He was honored with the Phi Theta Kappa Shirley B. Gordon Award of Distinction and the Lake County Community Service Award.

I am honored to recognize Dr. Mojock, and thank him for his hard work and many contributions to the Central Florida community. After four decades as an educator, his commitment to excellence, leadership and service is to be admired. My sincerest wishes and congratulations to Dr. Mojock and his family on his retirement.

NATIONAL IBD AWARENESS WEEK

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of those affected by Crohn's disease and Ulcerative Colitis, or Inflammatory Bowel Diseases (IBD), in observance of National IBD awareness week.

IBD affects over 1.6 million Americans, and there is no known cause or cure. The unpredictable nature of these painful and debilitating diseases creates a significant burden on the community and the economy with more than $2.2 billion in direct and indirect healthcare costs.

As co-chair of the Crohn's and Colitis Caucus, I am dedicated to educating the American public and other Members on awareness of IBD. We must do all we can to assist research dedicated to finding cures for IBD and improve the quality of life for those affected by these diseases.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize IBD Awareness Week and the millions of Americans suffering from these diseases. I urge my colleagues to join me in observance of National IBD Awareness Week.

HONORING THE LIFE OF LOUIS PARDINI, M.D.

HON. JIM COSTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. COSTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the life of Dr. Louis Pardini of Fresno, California, who recently passed away on November 3, 2015, at the age of 91. He leaves behind his loving family, including Alice, his wife of 65 years, their six sons, 21 grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

Louis Pardini was born in Daly City, California in 1924 to his parents Louis G. and Caroline Payne Pardini. Lou, as many called him, was a man dedicated to medicine and to helping others. He graduated from Saint Ignatius High School in the San Francisco bay area and went on to join the United States Army during World War II, serving as a Medical Corpsman from 1942 to 1946. After his service, Lou attended San Jose State College from 1946 to 1947, and then attended the University of San Francisco from 1947 to 1950, where he earned his Bachelor of Science degree in Biology. From 1950 to 1954, Lou attended Creighton University Medical School in Omaha, Nebraska, where he earned his medical degree.

While attending medical school, Lou married Alice Martin in Santa Cruz, California in 1950, and together they had two sons, Louis and Patrick. After graduating, the family moved to Fresno, California where Lou participated in an internship at Fresno General Hospital from 1954 to 1955, and also served as Chief Resident. On July 1, 1958 Lou began his Internal Medicine practice where he worked until his retirement in October 2013.

Among his many accomplishments, Lou was honored with the Knighthood of Saint Gregory 1965 Conferral of Pontifical Honors. Lou also served on numerous medical organizations throughout his practice and was President of the Fresno County Medical Society Review Board in 1984, and Medical Director of ValuCare Health Plan from 1985 to 1988. Further, he served as President of the medical staff for Saint Agnes Medical Center from, 1981 to 1982, and as a member of the Board of Trustees from 1987 to 1992. He was also a Quality Assurance Committee Member from 1987 to 1996 and Chairman of the Utilization Committee for five years.

It goes without saying that Dr. Louis Pardini was an honorable man with a strong commitment to his family and his patients for whom he served so graciously. He helped many lives through his practice of medicine, and touched many more through his kindness and wisdom. I am honored and humbled to join his family in celebrating the life of this amazing man, who will never be forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect that I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in honoring the life of Louis Pardini. His memory will live on through his family and be remembered by our entire community. We are all better for having known Louis Pardini, a remarkable Californian and Central Valley native.

27TH WORLD AIDS DAY

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in recognition of the 27th World AIDS Day. Each year on December 1, we support those living with HIV/AIDS, commemorate those who have died from HIV/AIDS, and encourage the scientific advances being made in the field.

Globally, there are 36 million people living with HIV and 35 million people have died from HIV and AIDS-related causes since the beginning of the epidemic since the first cases were reported in 1981. Since 70% of HIV cases are reported in sub-Saharan Africa, countries that are hit the hardest by this pandemic often face other infectious diseases, food insecurity, and other problems. While the number of newly infected individuals has declined, and the number of individuals receiving treatment has increased, we must remain vigilant with targeted funding and treatment in these vulnerable regions.

Various Presidential Administrations have responded to the HIV/AIDS epidemic by focusing on specific countries and increasing funding levels. For example, the creation of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) in 2003, which began during the Bush Administration and continued through the Obama Administration, brought new attention to address AIDS, as well as tuberculosis and malaria.

While the global HIV/AIDS pandemic continues to receive steady funding through a robust U.S. and international response, the reaction in Texas for African Americans has been slower. In Dallas County, 43% of those living with HIV are black while only 33% are white. Of newly diagnosed HIV cases, 51% are black while only 22% are white. As for black females in Dallas County, one in 144 black women are already living with HIV and are eight times more likely be become infected than their white or Hispanic counterparts.

Funding to reach and educate individuals on a grassroots level is extremely necessary to fight the types of battles we face with the HIV/AIDS in South Dallas. That is why I have been a strong supporter of the Ryan White CARE Act extension packages each time they reached the House floor. We must place our resources where they will be the most effective. On this World AIDS Day, we need to commit ourselves to eradicating AIDS here at home and globally.

IN RECOGNITION OF WORLD AIDS DAY 2015

HON. SHEILA JACKSON LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Speaker, World AIDS Day affords us an opportunity to reflect on our progress in the fight against the global AIDS pandemic and to rededicate ourselves to ending the disease once and for all.

We have come a long way since the first World AIDS Day in 1988 by dramatically expanding investments in HIV/AIDS prevention, care, treatment, and research.

Strong advocacy has paved the way for the Ryan White Act, the Housing Opportunities for People with AIDS Initiative, growing investments in NIH research, and an end to the ban on federal funds for syringe exchange.

Beyond our borders, our efforts have extended care to millions in the developing world, through increased resources for PEPFAR and the Global Fund.

Our investments have saved lives—preventing millions of new HIV cases, expanding access to improved treatments, and enabling medical advances that help HIV/AIDS patients live longer and healthier.

Here and across the globe, AIDS deaths are on the decline, and studies are pointing the way to new approaches to limit the spread of the disease, with treatment as prevention.

While our efforts have grown, we still only reach half of all people eligible for HIV treatment; and more must be done.

Working together, we must continue to strengthen—not weaken—our national and international efforts to combat AIDS and other infectious diseases.

We must work to achieve the Obama Administration's goal of an AIDS-free generation.

We must honor the memory of those we have lost and act on our hope, optimism, and determination to end the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

We must continue to work with programs and clinics, like the Harris County Hospital District (HCHD), who are treating and caring for patients with HIV/AIDS.

In 1989, HCHD opened Thomas Street Health Center, the first free-standing facility dedicated to outpatient HIV/AIDS care in the nation. The center has become the cornerstone of all HIV/AIDS care available to Harris County residents.

The Thomas Street Health Center has dedicated their services to about 25 percent of Harris County's HIV/AIDS.

Annually, the health center, along with HCHD, serves 4,463 unique patients for about 37,000 patients' visits.

We will continue to fight a tough fight against HIV and AIDS. We will continue to strengthen and support centers like Thomas Street Health Center who work diligently with HIV/AIDS patients.

Our focus on HIV/AIDS prevention and awareness will be to ensure all of our friends, relatives and children live healthy and full lives.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. RODNEY DAVIS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. RODNEY DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, November 30, 2015, I was absent from the House because I was unavoidably detained. Due to my absence, I did not record my vote on the first vote of the day. I would like to reflect how I would have voted had I been present for legislative business.

Had I been present, I would have voted ''aye'' on Roll Call 644.

TRIBUTE TO CARIBOU COFFEE AND EINSTEIN BROS. BAGELS

HON. DAVID YOUNG

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. YOUNG of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Caribou Coffee and Einstein Bros. Bagels for the opening of their new coffee and bagel shop in West Des Moines, Iowa.

Founded in 1992, Caribou Coffee is the second largest company-operated premium coffeehouse in the United States with more than 272 company owned stores. Caribou Coffee provides high quality, handcrafted beverages and food options. Einstein Bros. Bagels is part of the Einstein Noah Restaurant Group, Inc. family, and is a neighborhood bagel shop that's always cooking up new, innovative ways to serve its customers with more than 600 locations in 40 states.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this new business and their staff for the services they provide to the West Des Moines community. I ask that my colleagues in the United States House of Representatives join me in congratulating Caribou Coffee and Einstein Bros. Bagels for their new location. I wish them and their staff nothing but the best moving forward.

RECOGNIZING STEVE GABEL

HON. KEN BUCK

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Mr. Steve Gabel on being selected for induction into the Farm Credit Colorado Agriculture Hall of Fame. This honor is reserved for those who have made a significant contribution to the agricultural industry of Colorado and the United States.

Currently, Mr. Gabel owns Magnum Feedyard, a 22,500-head feedlot in Wiggins, Colorado. He also manages Gabel Cattle, his family-owned cow-calf business. In addition, he is currently a member of the National Cattlemen's Beef Association and president of the Colorado Livestock Association. He previously served for fifteen years as chairman of the Colorado Beef Council.

Mr. Gabel also understands the importance of giving back to his community. He prides himself on volunteering as a Weld County Livestock volunteer judging coach, where he mentors youth on the importance of agriculture. Mr. Gabel has shown true leadership in his industry and community.

On behalf of the 4th Congressional District of Colorado, I extend my best wishes as Mr. Gabel pursues his future endeavors. His passion and dedication to the agricultural industry makes him more than worthy of this distinct recognition. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to recognize Mr. Steve Gabel for his accomplishments.

HONORING MAYOR JIM HAGGERTON OF TUKWILA, WASHINGTON

HON. ADAM SMITH

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Jim Haggerton, Mayor of Tukwila, Washington, on his retirement.

There have been few greater champions for the City of Tukwila than Jim Haggerton. For over four decades, Jim has dedicated himself to bettering his community in many ways. After concluding his service in the U.S. Marine Corps, Jim and his wife, Carol, purchased their home in the McMicken Heights neighborhood in 1972. There, they raised their two children, Terri and Care.

Despite the rigors of a hectic schedule with a young family and a burgeoning career, Jim found time to devote to his city. He served nine years on Tukwila's Planning Commission, helping to guide the city through a period of tremendous growth. He built on this service when he was elected to serve as a Councilmember; a position that he held for thirteen years. Then, in 2007, he was elected as Tukwila's Mayor.

As Mayor, Jim led the successful effort to develop and implement the city's first Strategic Plan, which was notable for its creation of the award-winning Community Connectors program. He also led the negotiations for dozens of major development and public infrastructure projects that have benefited the entire region. These include Jim's efforts to bring transit options to Tukwila, including light and heavy rail. Expanded transit access has accompanied and supported the development of commercial projects that attract commerce from surrounding communities.

In addition to his work at City Hall, Jim has been a tireless advocate for Tukwila in a long list of regional organizations. He has served on the Board of Directors for the Association of Washington Cities, Sound Cities Association, and the Cascade Water Alliance. He also served as the President of the Southcenter Rotary Club and is a member of the American Legion Post 235 in Tukwila.

As Jim passes the baton following his decades of service, he leaves the city on strong footing. Tukwila today has a AA rating from Standard and Poors, despite the challenges posed by the recession and ongoing recovery. Engagement with the community has never been stronger, either. This past year, Tukwila was recognized for its efforts to engage the city's diverse communities in the update of Tukwila's Comprehensive Plan.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor that I recognize Mr. Jim Haggerton for his years of service and his tremendous impact on the City of Tukwila and King County.

RECOGNIZING THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF ROSA PARKS' ACT OF CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, sixty years ago today, Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat on a bus in Montgomery, Alabama. Through a simple act of civil disobedience, she inspired a movement, gained worldwide acclaim, and secured a place in American history.

However, on that cold morning in Montgomery, Mrs. Parks was not creating a legacy—she simply saw a wrong and wanted to right it. She showed us that any person can make a difference if they have the strength of their convictions. By simply sitting down on the bus, she turned an ordinary act into something extraordinary, and inspired thousands in Montgomery—and later across America—to do the same.

But Mrs. Parks is more than just a figure to be revered—she is an example to be upheld. And on days like today, we must ask ourselves whether we honor her with our actions as well as our words.

Because of the work of Mrs. Parks and her contemporaries, our nation is an undeniably different place than it was sixty years ago. Jim Crow is no longer the law of the South. Segregation is no longer legally mandated. An African-American is President and the Congressional Black Caucus counts 43 members.

But there are still too many wrongs that need righting. The current African-American unemployment rate, 9.2%, is twice that of white workers, 4.4%. During the first half of this year, black Americans killed by the police were more than twice as likely to be unarmed as white Americans killed by police. Black children are suspended and expelled from school at three times the rate of white children. Black churches—a longtime refuge for our community—are still the target of violent extremists.

In the face of such injustice, we must be compelled—as Rosa Parks and countless others were in their time—to act.

We know that this will not be an easy fight. We know we must prepare for great sacrifice. There will be violence visited upon us—like the shooting of Black Lives Matter protesters in Minneapolis this past week.

But the price we pay will bring about change—painfully slow at times—that we can pass on to the next generation. We are seeing this in places like South Carolina, where Walter Scott's killer is facing trial. We are seeing it in Chicago, where the police chief is out and Laquan McDonald's killer is being prosecuted. We are seeing it at the U.S. Department of Justice where troubling police practices are receiving deserved scrutiny. We are even seeing it here in Congress, where bipartisan reforms are underway that will address some of the racial disparities in our criminal justice system.

I am humbled to have worked with Mrs. Parks for more than 20 years, and I am fortunate to have been her friend for many more. Today, as we honor the actions that brought her global recognition, I hope we do so in kind—with actions worthy of her memory.

SUPPORTING AID FOR MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES IN UKRAINE

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 1, 2015

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the people of Ukraine, and to highlight the need for additional aid to address post-traumatic stress among the most vulnerable populations. Today, we mark the 24th anniversary of Ukraine's referendum on the Act of Declaration of Independence. That vote was supported by 92% of Ukraine's citizens, and was a monumental event that made the Soviet era history. Now, in 2015, Ukraine and its people are under threat, and the U.S. must do more to support the people of Ukraine during this critical time.

In August, I traveled to Kyiv, which is a magnificent city in a beautiful country. Before my visit, I met with some of the leaders of the Ukrainian community in my district to learn what they had been hearing from friends and relatives in Ukraine and what their concerns were. While in Ukraine, I spoke with Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko, Prime Minister Arseniy Yatsenyuk, and Kyiv Mayor Vitali Klitschko. I also met the Secretary of the National Security Defense Council Oleksandr Valentynovych as well as several nongovernment organizations and members of civil society.

Through these discussions, it became clear to me that we must do more to address the trauma and stress that is caused by the ongoing attacks from Russian-backed separatists in Eastern Ukraine. This year, through USAID, the United States is providing $71 million in aid for economic recovery, humanitarian coordination and logistics, nutrition, sanitation and water, and shelter. This funding has gone to support emergency needs in Ukraine, especially for the protection of refugees, internally displaced persons, and conflict victims. While the United States has been and will continue to be a critical ally to the Ukrainian people, more needs to be done.

According to the Internal Displacement Monitoring Centre there are an estimated 1.4 million internally displaced persons, most from Eastern Ukraine, and 12.6 percent are children. The long term effect of the violence in Eastern Ukraine, especially on mental health for displaced children, can be devastating. I am proud to be working with researchers from Yale University in my district, as well as nongovernmental organizations on the ground in Ukraine to find ways to support and expand training for mental health professionals in Ukraine. As one Ukrainian doctor who participated in a Yale training session last year put it: ''The effects of this violence, if left untreated, are like landmines that will cause damage in our country for decades to come.''

That is why I am calling upon Congress to support the people of Ukraine, particularly those forced from their communities, with professional mental health training and support services in Ukraine. We must do everything in our power to ensure that the most vulnerable Ukrainians are not forgotten.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, December 2, 2015

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PALAZZO).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
December 2, 2015.

I hereby appoint the Honorable STEVEN M. PALAZZO to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

PAUL D. RYAN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MORNING-HOUR DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 6, 2015, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning-hour debate.

The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to 1 hour and each Member other than the majority and minority leaders and the minority whip limited to 5 minutes, but in no event shall debate continue beyond 11:50 a.m.

PERU AND ILLEGAL LOGGING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I have long championed the concept that trade done right requires strong environmental protections as well as enforcement of those commitments.

Many of our most serious environmental challenges, from climate change to deforestation to protecting the oceans from being strip-mined with industrial fishing practices, can only succeed in the context of enforceable international agreements.

Democrats reached an accord with the Bush administration through the May 10 Agreement, which is one tool. The 2008 Lacey Act amendments are another. There are now a host of trade-related tools to fight some of the most egregious environmental challenges.

In the Peru Free Trade Agreement, we were able to include an entire Forest Annex that requires Peru to sustainably manage its forest resources and protect their forests, under penalty of law. The impact of those tools, however, is dependent on our willingness to use things like the Peru Free Trade Agreement.

Recent events present a chance to put those tools to work to fight against illegal logging in Peru, a country where 60 percent of its land is in the Amazon rainforest, and estimates on the rate of illegal logging in that area are as high as 80 percent.

Last week, over 70 shipping containers of what is suspected to be illegally harvested timber from Peru was stopped at the Port of Houston. This action was taken after we received compelling information from OSINFOR, Peru's independent body tasked with oversight of their forests and wildlife resources.

Troublingly, this shipment is linked to a company whose logging practices are already suspect, having been one of 10 companies whose export documents were found fraudulent during Operation Amazonas 2014, an operation carried out in coordination with INTERPOL to investigate illegal logging in Peru.

While it appears as though the timber is under American control, the same bad actor is once again conveying illegally harvested timber out of Peru's Amazon rainforest and to its borders for export.

Thanks to the courageous action of a handful of individuals at OSINFOR—again, Peru's independent agency tasked with overseeing that their timber laws are followed—a shipment of timber likely of illegal origin has been stopped at the border in Peru. As a result, unfortunately, these brave people are being threatened with bodily damage or death.

Given the savage history of these criminals, no doubt lives are in jeopardy. One only has to look last fall at how serious these threats were when Edwin Chota, an environmental activist trying to end the practice of illegal logging, was murdered by criminals that lead such illegal activity. Just 3 days ago, OSINFOR's office was firebombed. Thugs are threatening to storm government offices if OSINFOR does not ease up and go quietly into the night.

Mr. Speaker, this morning, I urge my colleagues to insist that the administration stand up to these criminals, these murderers, and that we will not turn our back on the courageous individuals, but support them in their efforts. We have the tools to do exactly that, thanks to the Peru Free Trade Agreement, as well as the Lacey Act.

The shipment held in Houston should be thoroughly investigated and, if evidence permits, we should bring to bear the full weight of the 2008 Lacey Act amendments by pursuing civil fines, forfeiture of timber and equipment, and criminal penalties, if supported by the evidence. And, frankly, also pushing back on Peru. The shipment held in Peru must also be investigated and the bad actors brought to justice. The Peruvian Government should immediately make clear they stand behind OSINFOR as an independent oversight agency.

At a time when we will be considering the Trans-Pacific Partnership, which has promising protections, it is more important than ever that the administration make sure that they are not merely protections on paper, but protections backed by action. It is time to step up with robust enforcement.

If we are serious about combating climate change, we must not only hold ourselves accountable for following our carbon-cutting commitments, but other countries as well. Peru, for example, has made protection of the Amazon rainforest the centerpiece of its proposed climate proposal.

When unsustainable logging practices contribute to 17 percent of total global carbon emissions annually, it is clear that progress cannot be made on this front and many others if we do not stand up and empower people in Peru and elsewhere who want to do the right thing and fight the illegal trade in timber. The administration has a perfect opportunity to show good faith by acting now.

HONORING CHEF TOM PRITCHARD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. JOLLY) for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember a veteran, a legendary chef, and a man known as the godfather of the Tampa Bay hospitality industry.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a dear friend to so many in the Pinellas County and Tampa Bay community, Mr. Tom Pritchard, executive chef of the Bay Star Restaurant Group. Tom passed away this past week following surgery to ease the effects of Parkinson's disease. He was 74 years old.

Anyone who knew Tom will tell you that he was a storyteller who was larger than life. He had his own unique sense of style and had a way of making anyone he met feel like they had known each other for decades.

Born in Rochester, New York, Tom's first restaurant job came at the age of 14, when he started work shucking oysters for the legendary Guy Lombardo at his East Point House restaurant on Long Island.

After high school, Tom left home for college in Iowa before being drafted by the U.S. Army in 1964. Tom was stationed in Germany for several years before being honorably discharged in 1967.

After serving his country, Tom continued to spend time abroad, living in London, Mexico, Morocco, Scotland, and owning restaurants in France and Spain. Eventually, he moved to Florida, and in the 1990s he partnered with Frank Chivas, a seafood broker who would become a dear and lasting friend of Tom's. The two would open Salt Rock Grill in Indian Shores. Under Tom's guidance and tutelage, Salt Rock's kitchen became a training ground for up-and-coming chefs.

Always quick to help others and share recipes, and with his inventive approach to cooking, Tom became a Florida food legend. One longtime food critic wrote of Tom's generosity: ''`Mentor' is too trite a word for what Tom Pritchard did for literally hundreds of people, young and old, in the kitchen.''

Tom would go on to oversee the kitchens at Island Way Grill and Rumba Island Bar and Grill in Clearwater and Marlin Darlin in Belleair Bluffs—along the way, always helping others. You see, it was Tom's generosity outside the kitchen that defined the man he was.

As one director of a Florida charity wrote this week, Tom set the platinum standard for community support, underwriting substantial food and labor costs annually at benefits for numerous nonprofit organizations, like the Abilities Foundation, Clearwater for Youth, and the Ryan Wells Foundation.

The Abilities Foundation alone raised $3.7 million from 25 years of wine and food tastings thanks to the help of Tom Pritchard and Frank Chivas. Tom and Frank's mere presence at a fundraiser influenced the participation of countless sponsors and attendees.

Tom was always quick to lend his time and talents to benefit programs that helped disabled and other individuals find jobs and live independently. Mr. Speaker, let it be known to all that Tom Pritchard gave more than he took.

Tom was preceded in death by his father, Thomas Alden Pritchard, Sr.; mother, Ruth McCarthy Pritchard; brother, Jeffery Lloyd; and son, Adam D. Ostfeld, who also served his country in the Armed Forces. He is survived by his loving wife of 24 years, Jody D. Hale; her husband, Daniel Hale; sisters, Cynthia A. Tischer, Laurie N. Pritchard; and brother, John C. Pritchard.

Mr. Speaker, the Pinellas County community, the Tampa Bay community, and our culinary and charitable communities throughout Florida lost a treasure with the passing of chef Tom Pritchard.

I urge my colleagues to join me in remembering his contributions and his legacy of helping others and serving our Nation.

HONORING WENDELL PHILLIPS ACADEMY HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DANNY K. DAVIS) for 5 minutes.

Mr. DANNY K. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the remarkable young men of Chicago's Wendell Phillips Academy High School football program, their parents, administrators, coaches, and teachers.

Last Friday, in a stunning 51–7 win against Belleville's Althoff High School, the Wildcats won the 4A title for Public League's first football State crown since the playoffs began in 1974, completing an amazing 13–0 season. The 51 points scored by Phillips set a State title game record.

The game featured record-shattering performances by a host of Wildcat players, including senior quarterback Quayvon Skanes, who rushed for 141 yards and four touchdowns on 13 carries, passed for an additional 44 yards and another touchdown—just to prove that he could throw the ball. Quayvon is headed to the University of Connecticut next year.

Other thrilling performances included Kamari Mosby, who ran for 151 yards and a score; Qadeer Weatherly, who pulled in Quayvon's pass for a 36-yard touchdown; Amir Watts, who returned an Althoff fumble for a 19-yard score; and a 21-yard field goal by Isaac Osei to demonstrate the Wildcats' comprehensive offense.

The Phillips football program, the second largest in the Chicago Public Schools, is a study of the potential and the problems of urban education. With more than 90 student athletes, the varsity team is led by 19 seniors, all of whom are on track to graduate.

In an after-game interview with the Chicago Tribune, Phillips' Coach Troy McAllister noted: ''When we go to practice, we go with footballs. There are no sleds, no chutes, no kicking nets, nothing like that. It goes to what our coaches have done and what these young men can do.

''We have five stipends for coaches. Everywhere else it is 10 to 14. That makes a huge difference, but these young men have bought into what we are trying to accomplish, and they have done something that nobody else has done.''

These young men are not just athletes. They are also proud scholars and are members of a school which last year saw 100 percent of its seniors accepted to college, with more than $5 million in scholarships.

In his after-game interview, Principal Matt Sullivan summed it all up. He said: ''It is fantastic. We want to be the beacon, the shining beacon in the Bronzeville community.''

Mr. Speaker, all of Chicago is thrilled and delighted by the performance of this team. I offer my congratulations to their parents, administrators, coaches, and teachers for going above and beyond the call of duty. I extend my congratulations to each and every one of those young men and wish for them continued success in everything they set out to do in the years to come.

REAFFIRMING STATES' RIGHTS TO IMPOSE ECONOMIC SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSKAM) for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSKAM. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I introduced H. Con. Res. 100, a bipartisan resolution that reaffirms the rights of the 50 States to maintain economic sanctions against Iran.

The Iran Sanctions Act of 2010 encourages and authorizes States to maintain such sanctions, which play a powerful role in preventing U.S. dollars from funding Iran's illicit activity, including its support for terrorism, human rights violations, and imprisonment of innocent Americans.

Thirty States, to date, Mr. Speaker, have imposed sanctions against Iran. Both Democrats and Republicans have worked at the State and local level to enact laws to ensure that State assets are not invested in and State contracts are not awarded to companies that do business with Iran.

As long as Iran continues its outrageous activity abroad, it is our right and it is our duty to make sure that we are not complicit in funding its terrorism, its human rights abuses, and its other activity that is contrary to the U.S. national interests and global stability.

Now, there is some ambiguity and some confusion about State sanctions that are authorized under the so-called Iran deal of this year. This legislation clarifies, it puts an exclamation point, and it reaffirms the legal right of States to maintain these sanctions as enacted into law under the 2010 statute until Iran ends its support of terrorism and reverses its abhorrent human rights violations.

Please join my colleagues Representative TED DEUTCH of Florida, Representative DAN LIPINSKI of Illinois, Representative MIKE POMPEO of Kansas, Representative BRAD SHERMAN of California, and Representative LEE ZELDIN of New York, along with me, in this effort to ensure that the right of States to maintain these important sanctions against Iran prevails.

We can ensure that States have this right and this authority from preventing their resources from funding Iranian terrorism and human rights abuses.

END HUNGER NOW—MONTE'S MARCH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, last week, I had the pleasure of taking part in Monte's March, an annual hunger walk in western Massachusetts. The march started in 2010 and is named after its founder, Monte Belmonte, a local activist and WRSI The River radio host in Northampton.

Over the course of 2 days, we walked 43 miles across western Massachusetts, from Springfield to Northampton to Greenfield, to raise awareness about the very real problem of hunger in our communities and help families in need this holiday season.

We had a great group walking with us this year, led by Monte, and including Andrew Morehouse, the executive director of the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts, University of Massachusetts Amherst Chancellor Kumble Subbaswamy, Northwestern District Attorney David Sullivan, and a host of other local officials and community members.

I want to say a special thanks to my colleagues Congressmen RICHIE NEAL and JOE KENNEDY for joining us along the way and helping to support those in need.

Also joining us on that march were Sean Barry of Four Seasons Liquor in Hadley, Erika Cooper of Tea Guys in Whately, Ben Clark of Clarkdale Fruit Farm in Deerfield, Natalie Blais of UMass Amherst, Steve Fendel from Gill, Marty Dagoberto, Dan Finn from Pioneer Valley Local First, Chia Collins from Northampton, Kristen Elechko, Georgian and Rick Kristek, and many, many, many more.

This year's walk was extra special for me because my son, Patrick, walked the entire route with us both days.

Mr. Speaker, every day, 48 million Americans struggle with hunger, including 15.3 million children. We live in the richest country on Earth and have greater access to food than any previous generation, so the fact that hunger continues to be so widespread in America is absolutely stunning.

Monte's March was started in 2010 to do something about it. This year's walk was the longest and biggest effort yet.

Bright and early last Monday morning, our group of walkers began our march in the Mason Square neighborhood of Springfield. The Mason Square neighborhood is one of those communities in western Massachusetts most in need, with so many families living in poverty and facing food hardship. In fact, childhood poverty rates have been as high as 59 percent in this area alone.

For these families, overcoming hunger is especially challenging because the neighborhood is a ''food desert,'' an area where affordable and healthy food, like fresh fruits and vegetables, are hard to come by. With no full-line supermarket within walking distance for residents to purchase food at affordable prices, we wanted to make sure that the Mason Square neighborhood was front and center in this year's march.

It also gave us the opportunity to thank the Mason Square Health Task Force for their tireless efforts to address hunger and to show our deep appreciation to local feeding programs like St. John's Congregation Church.

We then marched through Springfield, Chicopee, and Holyoke before finishing day one in Northampton. Seventeen miles were behind us, with day two still to go.

We started on Tuesday morning walking through Northampton, then Hadley, and then Amherst, where we stopped at the Amherst Survival Center.

The Amherst Survival Center is an amazing place. Since 1976, they have welcomed everyone who has come through their doors with open arms and a kind word. They help those who are struggling to meet their basic needs. All of their services are free. They run a food pantry, community meal program, drop-in health clinic, job-readiness workshops and job fairs, and a host of other important programs.

After our brief visit, it was back to the pavement, through Sunderland and Deerfield, before finally ending in Greenfield.

We walked a total of 26 miles on day two. Along the way, we felt the incredible support of the western Massachusetts community. People stopped us along the way to add canned food and other donations to our shopping cart. They came out of their homes and their businesses and schools, or they stopped their cars along the side of the road to offer words of encouragement.

Along the way, we helped raise more than $150,000 for The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts, which distributes hundreds of thousands of pounds of food throughout the emergency feeding network in the region.

Mr. Speaker, by the end, we were sore and tired, but we were exhilarated by people's generosity and support. When you add it all up, the outpouring of donations and support from our community will help provide more than 450,000 meals to families in need.

The good news is that hunger is a solvable problem. We just need to muster the political will to help more communities like these in Massachusetts and across the country.

There is not a single congressional district in the United States where hunger isn't an issue affecting the daily lives of kids, families, seniors, or veterans. We all have a stake in this, and with strong grassroots support from communities in all 50 States, just like the ones we visited over 2 days, we have the power to make a real difference and help the 48 million Americans struggling with hunger.

Mr. Speaker, during this holiday season, I urge my colleagues and all Americans to remember those who are struggling with hunger. They are our neighbors or colleagues and our friends.

I want to thank everyone who supported this year's Monte's March and especially want to thank the incredible community partners on the ground for their tireless efforts day in and day out. You inspire us, and we thank you for your service.

FIXING AMERICA'S SURFACE TRANSPORTATION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. CURBELO) for 5 minutes.

Mr. CURBELO of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Fixing America's Surface Transportation Act, or FAST Act. This critical legislation will provide 5 years of fully paid-for transportation projects across the Nation to repair our aging infrastructure.

The FAST Act makes important reforms to highway and vehicle safety and expands public transportation to make Federal investment more cost-effective. It also expands funding available for bridges and roads.

And, most importantly, Mr. Speaker, this bill was done through the regular order process, with transparent amendments considered and all Members having their say.

I would like to highlight several initiatives that are important to my south Florida congressional district included in the FAST Act.

Language was included in this bill that I offered with Representative TITUS to protect our seniors and pedestrians in congested traffic areas. While total traffic crash fatalities are down nearly 25 percent in the last decade, pedestrian deaths are up, hurting children and the elderly most.

This language will encourage States to adopt safe and adequate accommodation standards for roadways and sidewalks when developing future Federal projects.

Also included in the FAST Act is robust funding levels for University Transportation Center programs, with much-welcomed increases over the next 5 years.

One hundred twenty-five universities across the country participate in the UTC program, conducting critical research to develop future transportation technologies. Florida International University, in my district, is a world-recognized leader in accelerated bridge construction, and I am proud to advocate for them and all the UTCs here in Congress.

I also introduced a bill earlier this month with Representative LIPINSKI that was similar to this language and appreciate all the bipartisan support UTCs have received.

Lastly, I would like to thank Chairman GIBBS and Ranking Member NAPOLITANO for their work in the creation of the Water Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act, or WIFIA, in last year's WRRDA legislation. This is a perfect example of good government and will be truly revolutionary in addressing the dire water infrastructure needs throughout the country.

I represent Miami-Dade County, one of the 10 largest water and sewer departments in the Nation, that services 2.3 million people daily. The 14,000 miles of pipeline date back more than 40 years, and repairs are much-needed.

Included in the FAST Act was a fix to the WIFIA program to allow for the use of tax-exempt municipal bonds in these infrastructure projects. Earlier in the year, I introduced a bill with bipartisan support that proposed this fix, and I am grateful it was included in the FAST Act to allow local governments the tools necessary to repair our water systems.

Lastly, I would like to thank Chairman SHUSTER and Ranking Member DEFAZIO and their Senate counterparts for all of their hard work in crafting this important legislation. This final product embodies the essence of bipartisanship, and I am proud to serve on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee.

I urge the House and Senate to pass the FAST Act to strengthen our Nation's transportation networks. I know my neighbors in south Florida, especially those living in Kendall and South Dade, will be very grateful.

SEVENTH ANNUAL SOUTHEAST FLORIDA REGIONAL CLIMATE LEADERSHIP SUMMIT

Mr. CURBELO of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give accolades to Monroe County and the city of Key West for holding their Seventh Annual Southeast Florida Regional Climate Leadership Summit.

For 7 years, they have created a forum for people to come together and discuss the importance of mitigating the effects of climate change. I thank them for their continued efforts and for being leaders on this critical issue that warrants serious attention.

Like me, they believe that humans are a contributing factor to climate change and that our years of living irresponsibly have caught up with us, leaving a blemish on our planet. They have dedicated time to making a positive impact on our world, and I applaud them for their valiant and enduring efforts to see this task through.

To all the attendees of the climate summit in beautiful Key West, thank you for your efforts to make the world a better place. I am confident that if we work together we can do right by future generations and leave them a cleaner, more beautiful planet.

NELSON SOBRINO, STUDENT COUNCIL PRESIDENT

Mr. CURBELO of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize a student in Homestead, Florida, Mr. Nelson Sobrino, and congratulate him on his recent election as student council president of Somerset City Arts Conservatory.

President Nelson, who is 13 years old, ran on a platform of adding additional school spirit days and helping the less fortunate with food during the holiday season.

The story of President Nelson's path to success at such a young age has a lot to admire. In first grade, he was diagnosed with autism. However, Nelson has overcome difficult odds and has not only been a very successful student academically, winning awards like ''Reading Plus'' for Web-based comprehension program, but has excelled socially as well.

His teachers, parents, and fellow students have been a tremendous support network and have greatly contributed to President Nelson's success.

So, President Nelson, I proudly recognize your leadership of the student body of Somerset City Arts and look forward to visiting with you soon.

CLIMATE CHANGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. GARAMENDI) for 5 minutes.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Speaker, today, the world leaders, more than 100, are gathered in Paris to talk about an existential threat to all of us. This is not just the Syria issue, it is not just Iraq, it is not just terrorism, but it is about this planet's ability to continue to sustain life as we know it. It is about climate change.

Here in Washington, it is as though it is a different universe, not the universe in which we live, but a completely different one.

What I want to do is to basically cover this issue today of climate change. Let's start with the underlying problem, the emission of carbon into our atmosphere.

For thousands and thousands of years, the atmospheric carbon has remained below 300 parts per million. This little spike here at the end—this year we reached 400 parts per million, and the consensus of scientists around the world is that this level of carbon will significantly increase the ambient air temperature of the world and the temperatures of the ocean, having a profound effect on the world's ability to sustain itself, like the production of food.

The last 2 years—2014 and this year—are going to be the hottest ever recorded in recent centuries. What does that mean? Well, it means that the ice in Greenland is rapidly melting, as it is in the Arctic Ocean as well as Antarctic. Sea levels are rising and will continue to rise both because of the melting ice and the warmer temperature of the ocean, which causes the water to expand.

All of this is a serious problem for us if we care about the production of food and if we care about our ability to survive. Here in Washington, yesterday, on the floor of this House of Representatives, it was a different universe.

It was not the universe in which we live. It was not the planet on which we live. It was some very, very strange place, because yesterday the majority in the House of Representatives passed two pieces of legislation that would wipe out the Clean Power Act, an effort by the administration to reduce the production of coal energy here in the United States.

Now, there is a problem in the rest of the world with the use of coal, and we still have that problem here in the United States.

In The Washington Post yesterday there was a picture of Beijing, China. You couldn't even see across the street. The article goes on to say that it is principally from the production of coal.

So while we have a chance here in the United States—and we have been at this for many years, reducing the effect of coal and the production of coal both in terms of pollution as well as in terms of its carbon emissions—the House of Representatives, the majority party, yesterday voted to take not a step, but to take a whole mile backwards and eliminate the ability and the effort of this Nation to continue to reduce our consumption of coal and the pollution that is caused from there.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but today, maybe tomorrow, we will be taking up H.R. 8, a bill that would again turn us away from the world problem and the solutions to it and to take a mighty step back into the last century. H.R. 8 is said to be energy security. Well, it is the security of the coal and oil industry to be sure, but not the security of our Nation's ability to survive in a climate-changed environment.

It does, in fact, increase the production and the use of coal. It does, in fact, allow for the export of oil. We want to be energy independent, but this legislation would allow the export of oil without any regulation at all and without any consideration for the American economy or the American automobile user.

We are going in the wrong direction here. We ought to recognize, as 120 leaders in Paris are recognizing today, that we have a serious climate problem. We must address it not with the policies that we are seeing here on the floor of the House of Representatives this week, in complete denial of what is happening around the world.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for us to wake up. It is time for us to be aware of what is happening.

RECOGNIZING AND HONORING THE 35TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MARTYRDOM OF SR. DOROTHY KAZEL, JEAN DONOVAN, SR. ITA FORD, AND SR. MAURA CLARKE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. FORTENBERRY) for 5 minutes.

Mr. FORTENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, with great solemnity and gratitude, today I wish to honor four grace-filled women. Each of them were called to live their faith in the nation that bears their Savior's name. Each worked tirelessly to bring hope, healing, and joy to the poor of El Salvador. Each were bound together in tragedy on December 2, 1980.

Maryknoll Sisters Ita Ford and Maura Clarke, Ursuline Sister Dorothy Kazel, and a young woman named Jean Donovan each traveled different paths to El Salvador. In the words of Sister Dorothy, they were united by a powerful sense of responsibility to ''spread the Gospel to people who needed help.''

They sought to bring peace and comfort to vulnerable persons caught in a maelstrom of political turmoil on the cusp of a brutal 12-year civil war that followed the 1980 murder of newly beatified Archbishop Oscar Romero, who was killed by an assassin's bullet as he said Mass.

Mr. Speaker, Sister Dorothy and Jean had each joined a mission team from the diocese of Cleveland, Ohio. Together they worked to ferry food and medical supplies to the sick and wounded, in whom they saw the face of Christ.

Sister Dorothy had been engaged, but postponed her marriage to test a call to religious life. Jean Donovan wanted to get closer to Christ in the poor, though her friends hoped that she would leave El Salvador.

Reunited with her fiance briefly to attend a friend's wedding in Ireland, Jean actually chose to stay in El Salvador a little bit longer. She was drawn by the beauty and warmth of the Salvadoran people.

Sister Ita and Sister Maura, both from New York and born nearly 10 years apart, had each sought a life of service through the Maryknoll religious sisters. Their paths led through Chile and Nicaragua, respectively, and ultimately to El Salvador, where they each responded to Archbishop Romero's call, a plea for help.

It has been said of Sister Ita that ''her twinkling eyes and her elfin grin would surface irrepressibly, even in the midst of poverty and sorrow.'' Sister Maura, for her part, ''was outstanding in her generosity, always saw the good in others, and could always make those whose lives she touched feel loved.''

Mr. Speaker, all of these women could have left. Instead, they remained in El Salvador to be faithful. Sister Maura said, ''There is a real peace here in spite of many frustrations and the terror around us. God is very present in His seeming absence.''

They gave all that they had to the poor and homeless, whose difficulties were compounded by the counterinsurgency that indiscriminately leveled many innocent lives in its crossfire.

Mr. Speaker, while in college myself, pondering the essence and meaning of things, trying to figure out my own pathway, I heard the news of these women's deaths. The rape and murder of these selfless women greatly disturbed me. I remember going to Mass and, overcoming my own hesitancy, offered a prayer for them during the community's Prayer of the Faithful.

The love that moved these four women to fly into the eye of the hurricane—because they could not bear to see vulnerable people suffer without recourse, without help—profoundly affected me and remains a part of my life today.

As a Member of the United States House of Representatives, I am honored to laud the example of these exceptional heroines. Having met with members of El Salvador's congress, I have witnessed firsthand now the work of reconciliation that is going on, the healing of lives haunted by painful memories.

When I first learned about the decades-long outpouring of love in service, vigils, prayers, and charitable programs that were inspired by the example of these courageous women, I felt moved to actually take some small part in these celebrations, thus this talk today.

In recalling their noble sacrifice, it is my fervent hope that responsible nations throughout this hemisphere will see in the lives of these martyrs of El Salvador a path to genuine prosperity. We can honor them fittingly by embracing the truly needy with integrity, peace, and justice, in genuine mutual solidarity as they live their lives.

HONORING KENTUCKY GOVERNOR STEVE BESHEAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. YARMUTH) for 5 minutes.

Mr. YARMUTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 61st Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, Steve Beshear, whose tenure as Governor comes to a close this week.

Of his many significant accomplishments, none came easily or by happenstance. In fact, national basketball championships for both the Universities of Louisville and Kentucky notwithstanding, it is tough to think of a less enviable time to walk into the Governor's mansion.

Within a year of his taking office, the global economy imploded, creating the worst economic crisis in our lifetimes and leading to unemployment as high as 10.7 percent. The health of our State was dismal, with one in five Kentucky adults carrying no health insurance. Mother Nature didn't do him any favors either. During one 11-month span, three presidential disaster declarations were issued for Louisville alone.

To say you wouldn't want to be the Governor to face those challenges is an understatement. To say you want Steve Beshear to be your Governor addressing those challenges, well, that is just common sense.

Our recovery didn't just happen during the tenure of Steve Beshear. It happened because of Steve Beshear. Because we had a Governor who wasn't concerned with what was popular or politically savvy, he was committed to doing what needed to be done.

He said no to the calls for European-style austerity and instead invested in our Commonwealth—in our people, our infrastructure, and our education—giving Kentucky's economy an immediate jolt and keeping our communities and workforce competitive for the long haul.

The results speak for themselves. Today unemployment is half of what it was during the Great Recession, under 5 percent for the first time since 2001. Site Selection magazine says there is no better State in the Nation for economic development.

Companies are investing in Kentucky like never before, $3.7 billion in investment announced just last year. Kentucky is doing business like never before, with exports of $27.5 billion last year, four times the national average.

Mr. Speaker, we are building like we haven't done in a long time. When I say our infrastructure was crumbling, it is not hyperbole. Bridges were literally falling down. Now they are going up. Leaders have been talking about the need for a new Ohio River bridge in Louisville for nearly 50 years.

But Governor Beshear doesn't talk the talk. He walks the walk. I will be proud to walk with him across the first of two new Ohio River bridges for the first time this weekend.

But it is his stands that he will be most remembered for. If you asked him, Steve will tell you he is just doing what is right. But that takes courage.

Thankfully, Kentucky's Governor has had no shortage of that.

He reinstated an executive order prohibiting LGBT discrimination against government workers, made Kentucky the first State in the Nation to adopt Common Core and the second to adopt New Generation Science Standards.

When it came to medical care, he absolutely refused to play politics with the health of his State. He expanded Medicaid and led the creation of the Nation's most successful health exchange, Kynect, and reduced the number of Kentuckians without health insurance from 20.4 percent to 9 percent, the best improvement in the Nation.

In my district alone, the uninsured rate dropped 81 percent. For the first time, quality, affordable health insurance is a reality for hundreds of thousands of Kentuckians. It is thanks to Steve Beshear.

Of course, he has been working for the people of Kentucky since long before he was a Governor, and he never did it alone. Throughout his decades of public service, he has depended on the strength of another great Kentucky leader, his wife and our first lady, Jane Beshear.

Mr. Speaker, I have been honored to be Steve and Jane's ally these past 8 years and I have been lucky to have them as mine as we worked to revitalize Louisville's manufacturing sector, address our community's infrastructure needs, and make sure Kentucky children, veterans, and working families are taken care of.

Over the past 30 years, Mr. Speaker, I have had the honor of calling Steve Beshear my Attorney General, my Lieutenant Governor, and now my Governor. But, above all, I have been most proud to call him my friend.

In his first inaugural address in 2007, Governor Beshear noted that the path of progress in Kentucky ''will involve new thinking and new ideas. It will require cooperation and patience. And it will demand courage.''

Steve, you successfully embraced those new ideas, you promoted cooperation and patience, and you had the courage not only to serve, but to serve us well. I wish you the very best as you leave public service.

I want to thank you, First Lady Jane Beshear, and your devoted staff for doing the right thing on behalf of the people of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Mr. Speaker, Kentucky is a stronger, more prosperous, and a far healthier place because of the dedication and the work of our Governor Steve Beshear.

THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT MUST BE REAUTHORIZED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DOLD) for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOLD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the Every Student Succeeds Act, which will reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill goes a long way to rectifying the problems that were created by No Child Left Behind. We have seen 14 years now of Federal encroachment on local schools, one-size-fits-all testing, and local school districts that are not allowed to apply local solutions to local problems.

Mr. Speaker, the version of ESEA that is coming to the floor later today will fix these problems. The bill will streamline the annual assessment process and will ensure that our teachers are not required to teach only the material that will be on these tests. It will remove the high stakes from these assessments and will ensure that school districts have the local control over the assessment process.

More importantly, the bill will allow States to develop their own academic content and achievement standards that are designed to suit the needs of their students. Teachers and administrators will be given the freedom to truly educate their students and will be able to innovate and develop real solutions to their problems without fear of a bureaucrat in Washington looking over their shoulder.

Mr. Speaker, though I rise in support of this bill, I must say that I am disappointed that the final version to come out of conference did not include the text of an amendment that I offered that was adopted in H.R. 5, the Student Success Act.

My amendment would have forbidden States from requiring school districts to divert Federal education dollars away from the classroom and into State pension funds to pay off unfunded liabilities of the past.

In my home State of Illinois, the State government is presently requiring school districts that choose to use Federal education dollars to pay teacher salaries to divert over one-third of their Federal education dollars to the State's Teachers' Retirement System to cover past financial mismanagement. This amounts to a Federal bailout of State pension programs at the expense of schools and education. Mr. Speaker, this only happens in Illinois.

So what does this mean for the 10th District of Illinois? In 2014, Wheeling Community Consolidated School District 21 had to send over $140,000 to the State to cover past pension obligations. That is 35 percent of the $400,000 of total Federal dollars that came to Wheeling that Wheeling spent on teachers. If Wheeling had only had to pay the normal pension cost, the current pension obligation, it would have had to have contributed $32,000. That means that Wheeling was forced to divert over $100,000 to the pension system to cover past pension obligations at the expense of teachers in the classroom. At $40,000 per year, this would have enabled them to hire an additional 2½ teachers that could have been educating our children, reducing classroom sizes, and making each of our students receive the individual attention that they need to succeed.

In Waukegan, Illinois, this problem is even worse. Waukegan spent $2.6 million in Federal education dollars on teachers and was forced to divert over $900,000 annually to the State to cover past pension obligations. If the Dold amendment had been law, Waukegan would have had an additional $700,000 to hire more teachers, or in the case of District 60, they would have been able to offer full-day kindergarten. That makes an enormous difference in children's lives—and parents' lives for that matter.

More tragically, because Illinois does not require the same kind of contribution when teacher salaries are paid with State or local dollars, this policy is taking away Federal education dollars from our neediest and most vulnerable children, precisely the students that the ESEA was intended to help.

Mr. Speaker, my amendment would have fixed this problem once and for all and would have ensured that education dollars intended for the students of Wheeling and Waukegan and everywhere else where Federal dollars can make a real difference in our children's lives would have actually gone to help these students.

I will continue to fight on this issue and will continue to work with my colleagues to make sure that the Federal dollars that are given to school districts are not diverted away from the neediest to cover up financial mistakes of the past.

Mr. Speaker, Every Student Succeeds Act is by no means a perfect bill, but it is a significant upgrade and a step forward that goes a long way toward fixing the problems posed by No Child Left Behind.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this bill and ensure that our children's getting the education they deserve is something that we can all count on.

WAR ON COAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SHIMKUS) for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, as we hear talk of bills on the floor and international climate meetings with the world community, I want to bring to my colleagues' attention and to you, Mr. Speaker, the real destruction that is going on in the fossil fuel areas of our Nation, one that I represent, the Illinois coal basin.

I want to start by quoting the mayor of a town named Galatia in two articles from the paper called The Southern. In a November 5 article, he basically says: ''Without the coal mines, we are going to be in dire straits. That's all there is to it.''

The mayor is referring to what we have come to the floor numerous times to talk about, and you actually heard it from my colleague today, the war on coal, the intent by this administration to take coal out of the portfolio of electricity generation—and, really, any other fossil fuel they can get their hands on, whether it be crude oil or whether they will then move to natural gas.

Later on, the mayor, in another article from the same paper, on November 12, says because the New Era Mine in Galatia is now going to close, this closure, '''It impacts everybody,' said David Harrawood, the village's mayor. 'It doesn't just impact coal miners. It impacts trucking businesses, the stores, all their vendors. It's not just one segment. Down here, we're all tied together.' ''

So that is the human toll of the war on coal. The human toll is lost jobs, lost benefits, bankruptcies, which then creates a risk to the promised pension payments to the retirees. It becomes a loss of revenue to the taxing districts, to the counties, to the villages, to the first line responders, support for our schools. It dries up the ability for the local grocery store to operate, the local hardware store, and it is, as the mayor has said, devastating to southern Illinois.

Now, when you hear the debate internationally, it is carbon dioxide, CO_2. In fact, I always talk in the committee about then-Senator Obama and his quote to the San Francisco Chronicle, when he was interviewed by the editorial board, when he was asked about climate and his plan, and here is his quote. You can YouTube it. It is easily accessible. ''So if somebody wants to build a coal-powered plant, they can; it's just that it will bankrupt them.''

That has been the plan since 2008. That has been the plan in the first 4 years of his administration, and that is what he is striving to do, pushing with all his force to not only do here in the United States, but do in an international venue. He is being successful, as we find out in the announcement of the closure of the mine in Galatia.

The total number of coal mines opening each year has fallen to its lowest point in at least a decade. The total number of operating coal mines has hit its lowest point on record, according to the Energy Information Administration, which has records back to 1923. At the beginning of the Obama administration, over half the Nation's electricity came from coal. That number is down to 38 percent as of 2014.

Now remember, coal is the most efficient, the cheapest source of electricity generation and creates a baseload capacity that is very critical to keep the lights on. If you lose the baseload generation and you rely on renewables, you really do risk keeping the lights on, and you assure the Nation of higher costs of electricity.

So that is the war on coal, and that is kind of where we are right now with the administration.

So what has been the response on the floor of the House? What have we done? Well, fortunately, yesterday we took a parliamentary procedure and a process called the Congressional Review Act to address the ability of the administration to try to promulgate regulations without the authority of Congress.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until noon today.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 54 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess.

□ 1200

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at noon.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Patrick J. Conroy, offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, we give You thanks for giving us another day.

Once again, we come to You to ask wisdom, patience, peace, and understanding for the Members of this people's House.

Give them the generosity of heart and the courage of true leadership to work toward a common solution to the many issues facing our Nation.

As true statesmen and -women, may they find the fortitude to make judgments to benefit all Americans at this time and those generations to come.

May all that is done this day be for Your greater honor and glory.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. QUIGLEY) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. QUIGLEY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain up to 15 requests for 1-minute speeches on each side of the aisle.

BORDER SECURITY AND SYRIAN REFUGEES

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I share the concerns of the majority of Americans regarding allowing Syrian refugees into this country. Most important, I am worried that a terrorist could slip through, just like one of the terrorists involved in Paris.

But we also can't lose sight of another vulnerability, a geographical vulnerability, our southern border, because our border is not secure. This President refuses to secure it.

Yesterday, I spoke with the director of the Texas Department of Public Safety, Steve McCraw, and he made it very clear that we are seeing another surge at the border. We are seeing folks from Syria come across. This is troubling and wrong.

The President must secure our border and protect our national security. If he refuses, we in this Congress must stop him by any means possible.

NO POLICY RIDERS

(Mr. QUIGLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, weeks ago, this body avoided a government shutdown by passing the Bipartisan Budget Act. Now we have to pass an omnibus.

Unfortunately, many of our appropriations bills contain divisive policy riders that threaten to create another partisan standoff. There is an appropriate time and place to debate these provisions: in the authorizing committees.

It seems that some Members have learned nothing from the brinksmanship that almost led to a government shutdown. It is hard enough to pass these measures without these divisive, controversial riders. We need to put the unnecessary fighting behind us.

The Bipartisan Budget Act represents a chance for us to return to reasonable compromises and regular order. I call upon my colleagues to follow up on that accomplishment and pass a clean omnibus package.

SMALL BUSINESS SATURDAY

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday marked the fifth annual Small Business Saturday, a day when we recognize the importance of local businesses by shopping at these community businesses.

Saturday's event was particularly meaningful to small businesses in South Carolina, many of which were recovering from the tragic thousand-year flood in October.

In South Carolina, over half of our State's workforce is employed by a small business. Congress must do more to protect these vital job creators from excessive taxes and regulations.

I am grateful to the National Federation of Independent Business, NFIB, along with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, encouraged by the South Carolina Chamber of Commerce, led by Ted Pitts, as well as local Chambers of Blythewood, Chapin, Greater Columbia, Greater Irmo, Cayce-West Columbia, Lake Murray, Lexington, Batesburg-Leesville, Greater Aiken, Barnwell, Orangeburg, Midland Valley, and North Augusta, for their support of small business across the Second District of South Carolina.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and may the President, by his actions, never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism.

VETERANS PROOF OF SERVICE RECORDS SHOULD BE PROVIDED FREE OF CHARGE

(Mr. HIGGINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Defense transfers a veteran's service record to the National Archives 62 years after they are discharged from the military.

100,000 archived records per year are requested—to determine eligibility for a medal, to research one's medical history, or to request a change in discharge status.

The Department of Defense provides records to veterans for free, but once the records are sent to the Archives, veterans are charged $25 to $75 for a copy of their file.

Mr. Speaker, this is unacceptable that a veteran should have to pay the government for proof of their sacrifice and service. What is more, this fee is levied on veterans who are most likely living on a fixed income.

This fee is unnecessary and inexcusable, and I ask my colleagues to support legislation that I am introducing today to eliminate it.

REMEMBERING EZRA SCHWARTZ

(Mrs. WALORSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. WALORSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness and a heavy heart that I rise today to honor and remember 18-year-old Ezra Schwartz, a Massachusetts teenager whose life was tragically taken in Israel last month. Ezra was spending his gap year studying at a yeshiva in Israel and was one of the three people shot and killed last week by a Palestinian terrorist.

The continued violent attacks targeting Israeli civilians are, without qualification or exception, acts of terror and deserve full condemnation. Attacks on innocent civilians, whether they are American, Israeli, or Palestinian, have zero justification, and our response to such terrorism cannot be silence.

My heart and prayers go out to the friends and family of Ezra, and we honor those whose lives have been lost by such hateful actions.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in remembering the young life of Ezra Schwartz.

THE RECENT ATTACK IN COLORADO SPRINGS

(Mr. CICILLINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CICILLINE. Mr. Speaker, last Friday, a Planned Parenthood clinic in Colorado Springs became the target of the 351st mass shooting in the United States this year.

Three people were killed: an Iraq war veteran, a mother of two, and a local police officer. They are now among the more than 12,000 Americans who have died in gun-related incidents since the start of the year.

The shooter in Colorado Springs is reported to have used a semiautomatic, AK–47-style firearm, an assault weapon that has its origins in Stalin's Soviet Army.

This firearm and others like it are weapons of war, not tools for self-defense. They serve no purpose other than to kill. And we can no longer permit the proliferation of and easy access to these weapons in the United States.

That is why, in the coming weeks, I will be introducing legislation that reauthorizes the Assault Weapons Ban. During the 10 years this ban was in effect, localities reported as much as a 72-percent decline in gun crimes involving assault weapons.

Today, 59 percent of American voters support a ban on the purchase of semiautomatic and assault weapons. The only thing that stands in the way is Congress' failure to act. The time for action is now.

HONORING THE LIFE OF JOHN J. PIAZZA, SR., FOUNDER, ARMED FORCES MILITARY MUSEUM

(Mr. JOLLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and recognize a Floridian who has spent the last two decades making sure our veterans and their heroic acts are never forgotten.

I rise today to commend John J. Piazza, Sr., the founder and president of the Armed Forces Military Museum in Largo, Florida.

A veteran himself, Mr. Piazza served from 1955 to 1960 in the U.S. Marine Corps and the Marine Corps Reserve.

In 1998, he founded the Armed Forces Military Museum, exhibiting a personal collection assembled into a mobile museum, with heavy equipment displayed at schools, community events, and the Florida State Fair.

But, in 2008, he was able to fulfill his dream of opening a permanent home for great military memorabilia, vehicles, and equipment, both his own and those donated by those who have served.

Mr. Speaker, today, Mr. Piazza celebrates his birthday, and I urge my colleagues to not only join me in sending him very best wishes but to thank John for his lifelong dedication to honoring the American heroes who have served our Nation and for helping educate the young men and women who today have the opportunity to learn about valor and sacrifice and our Armed Forces in Largo, Florida.

THE DISPLACED JOBS RELIEF ACT OF 2015

(Mr. AGUILAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. AGUILAR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to urge my colleagues to support the Displaced Jobs Relief Act of 2015, a bill I introduced yesterday to help small businesses that have been hurt by foreign competition.

As the Inland Empire of California fights back from the Great Recession, we need to make sure that we use every tool available to help our small businesses recover.

Small businesses were dealt heavy blows in the past decade, both from our weakened economy and from our flawed trade agreements. International trade plays an important role in our economy, but history has taught us that not all agreements are fair. Sometimes they take a toll on local businesses that don't have the ability to handle unfair foreign competition.

That is why I introduced this bill. Trade Adjustment Assistance has played a crucial role in retraining and placing Americans in good-paying jobs for generations. If we increase the availability of funds, we can help protect hardworking Americans from losing business to unfair competition overseas.

My bill would increase the authorization for TAA for businesses up to $50 million for each fiscal year, beginning in 2016 and running through 2021.

Historically, these programs have always authorized $50 million a year, and, in fiscal year 2011, House Republicans cut the levels to $16 million, barely 30 percent of what funding was.

This is an important program that can help businesses in the Inland Empire and across the Nation, and I urge my colleagues to support me and the Displaced Jobs Relief Act for 2015 for the sake of American workers and businesses.

HONORING THE LIFE OF SHERIFF AL ST. LAWRENCE

(Mr. CARTER of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CARTER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember Chatham County Sheriff Al St. Lawrence.

Last Tuesday, Sheriff St. Lawrence died after a long fight with cancer. He was 81 years old. He was a dedicated law enforcement professional for Chatham County for over 50 years, 23 of those years spent as sheriff.

A U.S. Air Force veteran, he joined the Chatham County Police Department in 1959, after leaving the service. He was appointed to the State Peace Officers Standards and Training Council twice. He was named Police Chief of the Year three times during his tenure.

In 1992, he ran for sheriff and won, being reelected five times. In his 20 years as sheriff, he oversaw numerous changes to the department, including the construction of a new jail.

He was a gentleman, a professional, and a mentor. He was a man of few words and believed in personal responsibility. He loved the Sheriff's Department, and he loved the people that worked there.

I commend Sheriff Al St. Lawrence for years of service to his country and to the Chatham County Sheriff Department. We should all strive to achieve the success and admiration that Sheriff St. Lawrence achieved through his years of service.

INJUSTICE FOR LAQUAN McDONALD

(Mr. FOSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, we have seen an uproar over the death of Laquan McDonald, and rightfully so. But, sadly, the injustice for Laquan goes much deeper.

Laquan McDonald suffered more tragedy in his short life than anyone should have to bear. As a child, Laquan was abused at home. He was then handed over to the Department of Children and Family Services, where he was sexually molested, not just once but in two different foster homes.

At 17 years old, Laquan was shot 16 times by an on-duty police officer. Even after death, the injustice continued. It took 400 days before the officer who shot Laquan faced charges.

We should all be ashamed at how our society failed Laquan McDonald.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind my colleagues that Black lives matter, that Laquan McDonald's life matters, and justice matters. We should all be working to ensure that Laquan gets the justice that he has been denied for so long and to end the cycle of poverty, abuse, and injustice that shaped his life.

MEDICAL DEVICE TAX

(Ms. STEFANIK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. STEFANIK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to continue to lead the fight to repeal the medical device tax. This is a tax on revenue rather than profit. It leads to some of the highest corporate tax rates in the world and creates undue harm to an industry that not only creates jobs, but also improves our health and well-being.

A company located in my district, NuMed, employs over 80 people and produces stents and other vascular equipment. The medical device tax prevents NuMed from increasing their budget on research and development by 15 percent.

AngioDynamics, another company in my district, employs 950 people and creates more than 100 different medical devices, including the AngioVac System used to treat blood clots. Recently, one of their executives said, ''The $1 million that AngioDynamics pays in Federal excise taxes on medical device company revenues could instead be used to employ another 10 to 15 people.''

We must repeal this burdensome tax to help create jobs and improve patient outcomes.

THE FEDERAL BUDGET

(Mr. KILDEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, the bipartisan budget agreement signed into law last month helped to avert another manufactured political crisis here in Washington. But our work is not done. If we don't pass a spending bill before December 11, working Americans and seniors will face another dangerous government shutdown.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, Republican leadership continues to threaten this process over radical policy riders like defunding Planned Parenthood. Unfortunately, in his first press conference, the new Speaker could not rule out another Republican government shutdown.

As we face tremendous threats to our national security, we need to set politics aside. Some things in this House have to be exempt from political gamesmanship, and we would certainly think that keeping government open and functioning would be one of the things that we take out of the political conversation.

Mr. Speaker, the American people want us to do our job. Our job is to make sure that this government runs, and we can't do that if we continue to use politics and the threat of a government shutdown to achieve what can't be achieved through the normal legislative process.

Mr. Speaker, we need to do our job.

HONORING JIM HOFFMAN OF WAYNE COUNTY, NEW YORK

(Mr. KATKO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KATKO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor one of Wayne County, New York's most dedicated public servants, Jim Hoffman, and to send him off on a well-deserved retirement.

Jim's esteemed career in public service began when he enlisted in the U.S. Navy as a young man. It continued with his 30 years with the New York State Police, five terms serving as town supervisor in Williamson and 10 years as chairman of the Wayne County Board of Supervisors.

Jim has faithfully served the constituents in the Town of Williamson and all of Wayne County. Under his leadership, Wayne County is certainly a better place to live. He has lowered taxes in Williamson, kept taxes stable across the county, supported our region's vast community of growers and farmers, emerged as a leader in the fight against Plan 2014, and made the Town of Williamson the first in all of New York State to function 100 percent on solar power.

There is no question that Jim's lifetime of service deserves recognition. He has been a great friend, mentor, and confidant throughout my time representing the people of the 24th Congressional District in the House of Representatives. I am so very appreciative for all that he has done for me and for our community.

Jim, congratulations to you on a long and distinguished career. Enjoy your retirement with your children and grandchildren. God bless you.

THE AFGHANISTAN CODEL

(Ms. KUSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. KUSTER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to discuss our country's ongoing efforts in Afghanistan.

Over Thanksgiving, I had the honor to join five of our other colleagues from the House Veterans' Affairs Committee for a trip to spend the holiday with our outstanding service men and women in Kabul, Kandahar, and Bagram Air Force base.

Additionally, we received numerous briefings from senior military, State Department, and intelligence officials. We heard about the multitude of challenges facing the young democracy in Afghanistan, ranging from hard security challenges emanating from the Taliban, al Qaeda, and even ISIL, to societal challenges in a country with 92 percent illiteracy.

This is now primarily an Afghan fight with just over 9,800 American troops remaining in the country. However, the threat of international terrorism and the need to ensure that the country never again becomes a haven for those seeking to target the United States means that we will need to have a presence in Afghanistan for some time to come.

Mr. Speaker, I was encouraged by the dedication of the men and women in uniform who continue to demonstrate their commitment to our mission. I was also encouraged by the resolve demonstrated by Afghan President Ashraf Ghani to reduce corruption and rebuild the economy.

Make no mistake, Afghanistan faces many challenges in the years ahead. But with the help of the United States of America, the international community, the tenacity of the Afghan leaders, and some good luck, the Afghan people can hope for peace and greater prosperity in the future.

RULES OF ENGAGEMENT: NO CLIMATE CASUALTIES

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, bullet holes are still visible in the walls of cafes, and the graves are fresh for those lives that were stolen by ISIS fighters in the streets of Paris. Meanwhile, the President is in Paris talking about his priority—the real threat—climate change.

While America has been unable or unwilling to defeat ISIS, it has been front and center in the war on climate change. Former CIA Director Mike Morrell said: ''And we didn't go after oil wells—actually hitting oil wells that ISIS controls because we didn't want to do environmental damage. . . .''

The President has decided that the threat to the environment is more serious to him than the threat of ISIS terrorism.

Mr. Speaker, oil funds ISIS' murderous reign of terror, but the President's new limited war doctrine has one rule of engagement: no climate casualties.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for bombs to rain down over the ISIS war chest. Stop the flow of the blood oil. Not one more life should be lost because of a negligent and backwards strategy of a limited war based on climate change, an environmental-waged war that promotes not harming the environment over harming people.

And that is just the way it is.

GUN VIOLENCE

(Ms. ESTY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ESTY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday this House rose once again to observe a moment of silence for victims of gun violence, this time for the police officer, the veteran, and the mother of two who were gunned down in Colorado Springs nearly 3 years after 20 schoolchildren and 6 brave educators were shot to death at Sandy Hook Elementary School in my district. It is time for moments of silence to end. It is time for action.

Gun violence is a public health crisis that deserves this House to take action now. That is why we should establish a select committee on gun violence prevention.

We are all understandably concerned about terrorism; yet, this House just yesterday blocked action to prevent terrorists, those on the Terrorist Watchlist, from acquiring deadly weapons to kill Americans.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for this House to truly honor victims of gun violence. I invite my colleagues to join us next week for the 3rd Annual National Vigil to Prevent Gun Violence on Wednesday, December 9. The vigil will be held at St. Mark's Church on Capitol Hill.

Please come and join me. Stand with the families and the victims of gun violence from my district and across the country.

RECIPROCAL DEPOSITS

(Mr. EMMER of Minnesota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EMMER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, to realize their American Dream, many Minnesotans rely on access to financial products like business loans and mortgages. Not only do these financial instruments benefit individuals and families, but they help build healthy communities.

Unfortunately, in some rural and urban areas, outdated regulations threaten the ability of our community banks to offer these important financial products.

Together with Congresswoman GWEN MOORE, I have introduced legislation that will address this problem. H.R. 4116 allows certain community banks to trade large bank deposits over a secure network.

This will enable depositors to do business with local community banks while still maintaining FDIC insurance instead of seeing important and necessary financial capital that could be used for local projects, purchases, and investment leave local communities.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is good for Minnesota. And please forgive my bias, but I happen to believe what is good for Minnesota is good for our country.

FIGHTING FOR WORKING AMERICANS

(Mr. ELLISON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ELLISON. Mr. Speaker, Republicans are willing to shut down government in a battle to protect riders that hurt working-class Americans.

During these budget and appropriation debates, Republicans have fought tooth and nail to cut investments in important programs for working families, yet they are willing to spend billions on tax expenditures for wealthy corporations.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, they want to add riders that gut consumer protections, labor rights, environmental protections, and a woman's right to choose.

A recent poll found that nearly seven in ten Americans agree with the following statement: ''I feel angry because our political system seems to only be working for the insiders with money and power.''

As Members of Congress, I urge colleagues on all sides to come together and heed the American people's wishes and to put their interests up front. We need to make sure that we can pass a budget bill that isn't loaded up with policy riders and more things that would confuse the basic issues.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot abide proposals attacking the National Labor Relations Board and a worker's right to organize. We cannot abide efforts to undermine the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, which is helping Americans meet their financial needs.

Mr. Speaker, we must stand up for the American consumer. I urge all parties to come together to reach these important goals.

RETIREMENT OF CHARLOTTE DIETRICH, POTTER COUNTY PLANNING DIRECTOR

(Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Charlotte Dietrich on her upcoming retirement as planning director of Potter County, located in Pennsylvania's Fifth Congressional District.

Charlotte was promoted to that position in April of 2001 and had previously served as a secretary for Potter County.

In her more than 14 years as planning director, Potter County became the only county in Pennsylvania to have a Wellhead Protection Plan in place for each water authority in the county, mapping each source of water, which is perhaps our most important natural resource.

Additionally, under Charlotte's leadership, the county's planning department worked to address issues surrounding the development of wind power in the county, along with a huge expansion of gas drilling in the Marcellus Shale formation.

A Potter County commissioner recently called Charlotte a born planner. I know those skills have been a great asset for the county in the past decade with so many big changes.

Mr. Speaker, I wish Charlotte the best of luck in retirement.

CONGRATULATING THE UNIVERSITY OF HOUSTON

(Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the University of Houston, one of our Nation's leading public research universities, on its recent string of success inside and outside the classroom.

The University of Houston was designated as a tier 1 research university by the Carnegie Foundation, making it only one of three tier 1 public universities in Texas and one of only three Hispanic-serving institutions that are also tier 1 in the entire country.

For over 90 years, Mr. Speaker, the University of Houston has been providing affordable, world-class education to the people of Houston and Harris County and students throughout the country who come to U of H for its renowned academic programs and professional training.

Our Chancellor Khator is here today in Washington. Thanks to her team and our board of regents for their leadership.

The University of Houston Cougars is one of the top college football teams this season with an 11–1 record, ranked number 17 in the country, and can win the American Athletic Conference and go to a New Year's Day bowl game with a win this weekend.

Mr. Speaker, as a native Houstonian and a graduate of the University of Houston, it makes me proud to see our university succeed and continue to be one of the most important institutions serving our State, city, and our country. Go Cougars.

LET'S GET OUR PRIORITIES STRAIGHT

(Mr. WENSTRUP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WENSTRUP. Mr. Speaker, let's get our priorities straight when it comes to American leadership. Rather than showing leadership in the fight against ISIS or reassuring our allies in this fight, our current administration is still claiming that our greatest threat to national security is, believe it or not, climate change.

I am all about science, but we need to be realistic as well. The biggest threat, according to them, isn't radical Islam, Russia, Iran, or North Korea. It is a couple of degrees Fahrenheit over the next century or so.

And the remedy is costly. At a cost to whom? At a cost to hardworking Americans. Their government mandates mean higher energy costs for families, less energy reliability, higher manufacturing costs, and smaller take-home paychecks.

I know that most Ohio families can't afford this, Mr. Speaker. Coal plants are already shutting down up and down the Ohio River, costing us jobs and reliable energy. We need American leadership that is willing to lead the fight and defeat ISIS.

This week, the House voted to protect American families and consumers from the administration's price hikes. Let's get our priorities straight, Mr. Speaker, and bring the fight to ISIS, not burden Ohio families.

PROTECT AMERICAN FAMILIES

(Mr. DEUTCH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEUTCH. Mr. Speaker, the terrorist attacks in Paris reminded us that ISIS recruits fighters from across the globe and even here at home. Already, the FBI has arrested over 60 Americans connected with ISIS.

The terrorists who attacked Paris got their guns from the black market. But here in the United States, even suspected terrorists are allowed, under Federal law, to freely and legally buy assault weapons, buy guns, and buy explosives.

The GAO reports that, in the last decade, suspects on the FBI's terrorist watch list attempted to buy guns and explosives over 2,200 times. And guess what; 91 percent of the time they succeeded.

Now, I know that the gun lobby opposes any effort to toughen background checks; but can we not, at the very least, agree that this is a matter of national security, that when the FBI has reasonable suspicion that someone is connected to terror, we should stop him from buying weapons of mass murder?

To any of my colleagues on the floor today, is there anyone in Congress who actually believes that you should be able to buy a gun while on the terrorist watch list? Is there anyone in America who believes that?

If you are on the terrorist watch list, you shouldn't buy a gun. Can this body please take this meaningful step to protect American families. Let's put it to a vote, and let's do it before we leave here for the holidays.

HONORING OFFICER LLOYD REED

(Mr. ROTHFUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTHFUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life, legacy, and work of Officer Lloyd Reed, Jr., who will be remembered for his kind and helpful nature. Officer Reed, a St. Clair Township, Pennsylvania, police officer, was tragically shot and killed last Saturday, November 28, while responding to a domestic dispute.

A graduate of Conemaugh Township High School, he was an avid trout fisherman and a NASCAR and, of course, a Steelers fan.

Officer Reed courageously served his community as a law enforcement officer for 25 years before his life was taken. I offer my prayers and deepest condolences to his loved ones: his friends, his colleagues, and his wife.

All men and women who serve to protect us from harm deserve our deepest gratitude and respect. They choose to risk their lives so that the rest of us can lead peaceful, productive, and meaningful lives.

Officer Reed's life and death are a testament to all those who serve honorably as law enforcement officers.

COMMEMORATING THE LIFE AND LEGACY OF CONGRESSWOMAN SHIRLEY CHISHOLM

(Ms. LEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the life and legacy of Congresswoman Shirley Chisolm.

Last week, she posthumously received the Presidential Medal of Freedom, our Nation's highest civilian honor. Congresswoman Chisholm is truly deserving of this honor.

In 1969, she became the first African American woman to serve in Congress. She was the first majority party African American candidate and the first Democratic woman to run for President. She was also a founding member of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Congresswoman Chisholm—or Mrs. C, as we called her—was my mentor and role model. The course of my life changed, when I met Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm, as a student in Mills College. At that time, I was the Black Student Union president, and I had invited her to speak her eloquent speech focused on the power of women and people of color to change the world. As she said: If you don't have a seat at the table, bring a folding chair. She explained why it was important for everyone to get involved in the policymaking process, because too often the voices of women and people of color are unheard.

I know that today many of us, including myself, would not be here. We would not have the privilege to serve in this great body had it not been for Shirley Chisolm. She is truly deserving of our Nation's highest honor.

I would also want to wish Mrs. C a very happy belated birthday. She would have turned 91 on the 20th of November.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY'S FINALIZED RENEWABLE FUEL STANDARD

(Mr. YOUNG of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss the Environmental Protection Agency's finalized Renewable Fuel Standard, otherwise known as the RFS.

The biofuels industry has created good-paying, technical jobs in rural economies, helped lower gas prices for consumers, protected the environment, and reduced reliance on foreign oil.

On Monday of this week, the EPA finalized RFS levels for 2014, 2015, and 2016. While they are a slight improvement from the proposed rule, they still fall short of congressional intent put into law in 2007. Unfortunately, this decision raises questions about the administration's commitment to rural America and domestic biofuels. Despite public assurances to support the biofuels economy, the EPA has done just the opposite.

The disconnect is startling. A reduction in RFS levels increases uncertainty and stifles investment in the advanced biofuels sector. We should all be concerned by the precedent this decision sets for other renewable energy sources. It allows the administration to ignore the facts and the law in order to set a standard of its choosing.

The RFS is working. It is time the EPA started listening to the people impacted by their rules and regulations.

I am committed to supporting the biofuels industry, its producers, its farmers, and its consumers, and to continue fighting against any attempts to undermine it.

EVERY CHILD SUCCEEDS ACT

(Ms. JACKSON LEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak today about what the House will face on educational changes in bringing forward S. 1177, the Every Child Succeeds Act, which takes us away from No Child Left Behind.

I am very delighted that the Jackson Lee amendment offered during the House consideration of the bill dealing with bullying is now in this bill. It is now the law of the land once we pass it. It supports accountability-based programs and activities that are designed to enhance school safety, which may include research-based bullying prevention, cyberbullying prevention, disruption of recruitment activity by groups or individuals involved in violent extremism, and gang prevention programs as well as intervention programs.

CNN had a report just last night, I believe, that talked about the extensiveness of cyberbullying. One in seven students in grades K–12 is either a bully or a victim of it; 90 percent of fourth to eighth grade students report being victims of bullying; 56 percent of students have personally witnessed some type of bullying; 71 percent of students report incidents of bullying as a problem; 15 percent of all students who don't show up for school report they have been bullied; 1 out of 20 students has seen a student with a gun at a school; and 282,000 students are physically attacked in secondary schools each month. This is something that is a key part of education. To be in an education environment where you want to learn and where you are protected is key.

Let me ask everyone to support this legislation. I am delighted that we have been able to come together in particular around this issue of preventing bullying and cyberbullying in our schools.

RECOGNIZING BEST BUDDIES INTERNATIONAL

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to give recognition to Best Buddies International, an organization that assists individuals with developmental and intellectual disabilities to become thriving members of our society. Founded in 1989, Best Buddies International has positively improved the lives of nearly 900,000 individuals.

I am particularly proud of the success of this organization in my home State of Florida, where there are programs like Best Buddies Colleges in which schools like my alma mater of Florida International University and the University of Miami participate.

This program nurtures one-to-one friendships between college students and adults with IDD so that they can be involved in campus life beyond the classroom.

Through this and other worthwhile programs, participants create a bond that can truly last a lifetime while becoming inspirational leaders and living a more independent life.

I would like to extend my best wishes to Best Buddies International as it continues on this noble endeavor and encourages all to get involved and support people with special needs and their families.

AFL–CIO 60TH ANNIVERSARY

(Ms. ADAMS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 60th anniversary of the AFL–CIO.

The AFL–CIO serves as the voice for more than 12 million working Americans throughout our Nation. Through negotiating with employers, the AFL–CIO has fought and won better wages, fair hours, and more friendly family policies for millions of Americans. I fought alongside AFL–CIO for decades, and I will continue to stand with them and our workers.

Thank you to the president of the North Carolina AFL–CIO, James Andrews, to Timothy Rorie with the Central Labor Council, Charlie Hines with the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Essie Hogue with the Union for Government Employees, and more than 30 other members of the North Carolina AFL–CIO executive board. Thank you.

These leaders pour everything they have into fighting for workers in our communities.

For more than 60 years, the AFL–CIO has represented the best in our unions and has given our workers the support they need to stand up for themselves. On this 60th anniversary of the AFL–CIO, let's continue to support our workers by making sure that they have wages that they can live on, fair hours, retirement protections they deserve, and access to health care they need.

TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF HOWARD HENDERSON

(Ms. MCSALLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. MCSALLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the life of Howard Henderson, a man who was cherished by many throughout southern Arizona.

Howard moved to Douglas, Arizona, in 1984, when he became the owner and president of KDAP–FM and KAPR–AM radio stations. He wasted no time making his mark, both on the air and in the community.

Howard hosted ''The Trading Post'' morning show, one of the most popular and listened-to shows in the area. He broadcasted over 1,000 high school games and supported community events, including serving on the local fair board. His on-air personality and active presence in Douglas earned him the nickname, Mr. Wonderful.

I got to know Howard over recent years. Like many, I was touched by his professionalism, his grace, and his dedication to the community.

On November 20, Howard passed away, after battling cancer, at the age of 65. We will miss hearing his voice on the airwaves and seeing his smiling face around Douglas, but we will never forget his impact on southern Arizona.

HONORING JEFFERSON COUNTY SHERIFF'S DEPUTY JERROD RIGDON

(Ms. GRAHAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Jefferson County Sheriff's Deputy Jerrod Rigdon, whose heroic actions saved the life of a Florida State University student in my district.

When Deputy Rigdon arrived at the crash scene on the morning of October 31, the scene was horrific. The car was mangled, and the freshman student inside had life-threatening injuries. His neck was severed, and he was quickly losing blood.

The deputy quickly assessed the scene, worked to stop the bleeding, and called for a helicopter to airlift the victim. Because of his fast response and heroic actions, Billy Fowler, the 18-year-old freshman in the car, is alive today.

I want to thank Deputy Rigdon and all of the north Florida first responders. Thank you for risking your lives to save ours.

PROVIDING FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 8, NORTH AMERICAN ENERGY SECURITY AND INFRASTRUCTURE ACT OF 2015, AND PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1177, STUDENT SUCCESS ACT

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 542 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 542

Resolved, That at any time after adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes. No further general debate shall be in order. In lieu of the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill, it shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule an amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of Rules Committee Print 114-36. That amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. All points of order against that amendment in the nature of a substitute are waived. No amendment to that amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

SEC. 2. Upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (S. 1177) to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to ensure that every child achieves. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the conference report to its adoption without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate; and (2) one motion to recommit if applicable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee). The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. POLIS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 542 provides for a rule to continue consideration of the comprehensive energy legislation on which the House began its work yesterday.

The rule makes in order 38 amendments to be considered on the House floor, 22 of which are sponsored by Democratic Members of the House, 12 of which are sponsored by Republicans, and 4 of which were submitted as bipartisan amendments.

Further, the minority will be afforded the standard motion to recommit—a final opportunity to amend the bill prior to its passage.

H. Res. 542 further provides for a rule to consider the conference report to S. 1177, the Student Success Act, which will move the country's education system beyond No Child Left Behind and return the responsibility of educating our children to local and State authorities, where it appropriately belongs.

As with all conference reports brought before the House, the rule provides that debate on the measure will be conducted under the standing rules of the House and will further provide for a motion to recommit, allowing the minority yet another opportunity to amend the legislation before its final passage.

The amendments that the Rules Committee made in order allow the House to weigh in on a number of important issues within the sphere of energy policy, from crude oil exports, to the Federal Government's policy on fossil fuel usage, to siting and regulatory reforms at the Department of Energy and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

I do wish to highlight an amendment that unfortunately was not made in order, one that I submitted to the Rules Committee, as well, during the markup of H.R. 8 in Energy and Commerce.

It has become clear to me, having worked on the Energy and Commerce Committee over the past 10 years, that the authority given to the Department of Energy to regulate and mandate efficiency standards in consumer products was both initially misguided and ultimately has proven to be cumbersome and unworkable.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been a strong believer in energy efficiency. However, government-mandated efficiency standards have proven to be the wrong approach.

For this reason, I submitted an amendment to repeal the Federal energy conservation standards, which dictate how energy efficient consumer products must be before they can be sold in the United States.

These mandates cover products from light bulbs—and, on this, we have successfully blocked it due to overwhelming public outrage—to ceiling fans, to air conditioners, to heaters, to furnaces. The list goes on and on.

The Federal Government should not be setting these standards. Companies and, more importantly, their customers should be the driving force in this decision. This is about letting the free market drive innovation and technological advances. The government should trust the people to make the right decisions when it comes to the products that they buy.

When the government sets the efficiency standard for a product, that often becomes the ceiling. When the market drives the standard, there is no limit to how fast and how aggressive manufacturers will ultimately be when consumers demand more efficient and better products.

Mr. Speaker, government standards have proven to be unworkable. Every single time the Department of Energy proposes to set a new efficiency standard for any product, manufacturers run to their Members of Congress, asking us to sign letters to the Department of Energy to implore them not to set unworkable standards. It is a predictable occurrence for every rule.

Even in H.R. 8, we are conceding that the Department of Energy is moving in the wrong direction with furnace standards, and Congress has to step in and mitigate. In fact, Congress should be getting out of the way of the relationship between companies and their customers.

How many times during the appropriations process are we asked to vote on amendments blocking the Department of Energy from regulating consumer products because the Federal Government does not understand how to run a business? Instead of that approach, we should be removing the Department of Energy's authority altogether.

The Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution was meant as a limitation on Federal power. The Framers intended that clause to be used to ensure that commerce could flow freely among the several States. It was never intended to allow the Federal Government to micromanage everyday consumer products.

If the clause were truly meant to be that expansive, then the 10th Amendment would be meaningless. There would be no authority left to reserve to the States. This view of the Commerce Clause was reaffirmed most recently by the Supreme Court in the National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius.

The Commerce Clause does not and cannot extend so far as to allow the Federal Government to regulate products that do not pose a risk to health or safety. There is a place for the FDA to regulate safe food and drugs and for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to regulate the safety of cars on the roads, but to give the Federal Government the authority to regulate how efficient a product should be really seems to cross a constitutional line.

Congress has already stepped in to block the Department of Energy from setting efficiency standards for light bulbs—not because Congress gained wisdom. It was because the American people understood clearly that this was government overreach at its worst, and they demanded it be fixed.

But the same can and should be said about every consumer product that the Department of Energy has been given the authority to regulate in the efficiency space. From light bulbs, to furnaces, to air conditioners, to ceiling fans, the Department of Energy should not be telling manufacturers how to make their products.

I also want to say one thing about the amendment to H.R. 8 that was submitted by the Representative from Wyoming (Mrs. LUMMIS), which was also, unfortunately, not made in order.

This amendment was based, in part, on a series of GAO studies that I and Senator MARKEY had commissioned to study the Department of Energy's management of uranium issues and its impact on the domestic uranium mining industry.

It is a critical issue for those of us from Western States. And it is my hope, as this body continues to work to protect that industry from further legally suspect actions by the Department of Energy, that Mrs. LUMMIS' wishes will be achieved.

The education conference report, known as the Every Student Succeeds Act, is a bipartisan compromise to reauthorize and reform our education system.

For the past 13 years, our students and our schools have been struggling to meet the rigorous and often unrealistic demands of No Child Left Behind.

No Child Left Behind attempted to improve school accountability by conditioning increased funding on annual testing requirements and pass rates. One hundred percent of students were supposed to be proficient by 2014, with failing schools being required to restructure under Federal guidelines.

A vote against the Every Student Succeeds Act today is a vote to keep No Child Left Behind in place, to keep the onerous average yearly progress standards in place, and to keep the high-stakes testing in place that so many of our constituents deplore.

This compromise, which was worked out in committee, is a vast improvement. It is not a perfect bill by any stretch, but it is a vast improvement. And, really, for the first time, it moves control back into the hands of States and local districts, where it belongs.

It eliminates the waiver process by repealing the adequate yearly progress Federal accountability system. For years, school boards in my district have been requesting relief from having to obtain waivers from the Department of Education.

This bill will allow local districts to set their own testing requirements and standards to determine whether a student or a school is struggling as well as how to improve.

Common Core incentives are eliminated. Let me repeat that. Common Core incentives are eliminated.

The Federal Government created the Federal education regulations and mandated their adoption by withholding funds from schools. This intervention is another example of the Federal Government's prescribing its best practices over those schools and teachers who, every day, get up and go to work to do their best. They know their students. They know how best to teach them. Under the Every Student Succeeds Act, this stops.

This bill also provides States with new funding flexibility by allowing States to determine how to spend their Federal dollars—on average, 7 percent per year. In my State, this is more than $225 million annually that the State will be able to allocate in the most effective and the most efficient way possible.

This bill is a 4-year authorization. That is an important point. Regardless of how you feel about the current administration, it will not be the current administration in 4 years' time. That will allow the next administration, whoever he or she may be, the opportunity to better evaluate education programs and, my hope is, to continue to reduce the Federal role for our students, schools, and teachers in Texas and throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am glad the gentleman got to education. We heard 9 or 10 minutes about this corporate welfare energy bill, which is not going anywhere, and it is the reason that I don't think there will be any Democrats supporting this rule. But, yes, in this rule is also a wonderful education bill that we are very excited about, and I think we have many Democrats who will want to tell you about it here today. It is exciting to reach this point.

I share the frustration of teachers, of parents, of students across the country with No Child Left Behind. I was on the State Board of Education in Colorado from 2001 to 2007 when we implemented No Child Left Behind. We saw many of the flaws at that time.

We knew the fallacy of the formula for adequate yearly progress, and it was set up in such a way that all schools would eventually fail. We saw the rigid structure that could even inhibit State and district innovation.

□ 1300

I am proud to say today that the bill under this rule is a major step forward. For those who are thinking of opposing it, realize that, in opposing it, you are ensuring that No Child Left Behind will continue exactly as it is.

There is never a perfect alternative. I am sure, if each of us had the opportunity to write our own education bill, we would have 435 different bills.

What we have before us is a good, realistic compromise that can replace No Child Left Behind with a new Federal education law. It is something that is long overdue for the kids of this country, something that will be a boost in morale to teachers and educators in this country, and something that will encourage innovation at the State and district level. I will talk about some of those provisions that do just that.

Just a few weeks ago I met with some teachers and students at Rocky Mountain High School in Fort Collins, Colorado. They expressed their frustration with what has become everyday challenges in K–12 schools and how detached our No Child Left Behind law from 15 years ago is with the realities of education today.

Teachers are spending less time teaching and more time administering high-stakes test or teaching of the test. Students are spending less time learning. As a result, schools have less time to focus on teaching real skills that students need to be ready for college or to be ready for careers in technical education after high school.

Unfortunately, schools across my district and the country have been experiencing the same frustrations as the teachers and students at Rocky Mountain High who I met with a couple weeks ago.

These frustrations are in many ways the result of the outdated education law, No Child Left Behind, which passed in 2001, which was well intentioned, but imposed a one-size-fits-all accountability system, a flawed one at that, on a diverse set of States and districts across our country.

That is why I am so excited to be here on the floor of the House with the opportunity to speak about the new conference report, the new bipartisan, bicameral ESEA Reauthorization, the Every Student Succeeds Act, which passed 39–1 in our conference committee.

I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to join me and the other conferees in replacing No Child Left Behind with Every Student Succeeds Act.

The Every Student Succeeds Act is the result of years of work by both Chambers. Former Ranking Member and former Chair George Miller, former Ranking Member and Chair Buck McKeon, current Chair Mr. KLINE, and Mr. SCOTT have worked tirelessly, along with their staffs, over years to be able to put together something that both Democrats and Republicans can feel good about. Because guess what. We both care about kids. We both care about education. It is not a partisan issue.

Now, we might have our differences about how to improve our schools. Let's put all those good ideas on the table. And they were. And they were voiced. We were able to build and improve deeply upon the highly flawed first version of this bill that the House passed, which would have taken Federal dollars away from the poorest schools and given it to wealthier schools.

The House-passed bill would have completely failed students with disabilities by allowing unlimited students to have no accountability by classifying them as students with disabilities for alternative assessments, sweeping under the rug the tremendous amount of progress that students with disabilities have made since No Child Left Behind.

The first version of the bill didn't establish any accountability for graduation or proficiency rates or any parameters for interventions to ensure that we could improve struggling schools.

Now, when the Every Student Succeeds Act finally passed the House, it barely passed. It passed in a purely partisan manner. No Democrats supported the bill, and many Republicans didn't support the bill.

Now, the silver lining of that is that it allowed the process to move forward. I am proud to say, after months of hard work by the staff and the chair and ranking member, the conference committee has succeeded in reporting out a bill that I believe is better than the Senate bill, better than the House bill, and certainly better than No Child Left Behind.

When the conferees met, several Members offered thoughtful amendments that built upon and improved the conference framework even more. For example, Mr. MESSER offered an amendment that would allow funds to be used to educate teachers about best practices for student data privacy.

I offered a successful amendment that increases dual and concurrent enrollment opportunities for English language learners, something near and dear to my heart as the founder of the New America School charter school network.

The conference committee took the framework and turned it into a robust bill that replaces No Child Left Behind with a system that works better for students, for educators, for families, and for schools.

When ESEA was first passed in 1965, first and foremost, it was seen properly as a critical piece of civil rights legislation. For the first time, the Federal Government was making a commitment that every child, regardless of race, background, or ZIP Code, deserved a great education to prepare them for success.

Any reauthorization of ESEA needs to uphold that same commitment to civil rights that was established in 1965. While the Every Student Succeeds Act isn't perfect, I believe that it upholds that commitment to civil rights that is such an important role for the Federal Government to play.

Most importantly, the Every Student Succeeds Act includes strong accountability provisions that ensure that underimproving schools are identified and improved.

Now, title I in Every Student Succeeds Act has come a long way from the original House bill. The number of Members in the House, including those in the new Democratic coalition and the Tri-Caucus, demanded stronger accountability provisions in the conference report. I am very happy to see that the conference report has delivered.

Specifically, the Every Student Succeeds Act maintains annual statewide assessments, which gives States, districts, teachers, and parents valuable information about how students are performing and the tools they need to improve student performance. This data will be broken down by subgroup, by race, by socioeconomic status, to ensure that no students are swept under the rug.

This bill includes a clear framework for identifying consistently low-performing schools and provides resources and ensures that States intervene to improve them. It fully maintains our promise to parents of students with disabilities, the promise that schools will be accountable to ensure that their child is learning and that the unique learning needs of their children are met.

To be clear, these requirements are not the same top-down, one-size-fits-all accountability provisions of No Child Left Behind. The one-size-fits-all formula of adequate yearly progress is rightfully gone. The accountability provisions in Every Student Succeeds Act creates a framework for States as they create their own meaningful accountability plans.

This means that States can be flexible and innovative to create specific policies that work for them. It is a challenge to States to rise to the occasion in meeting the learning needs of all students while maintaining those Federal rails to ensure that no child is left out.

This bill provides additional flexibility around testing by allowing high-quality, Federally recognized tests to also meet the annual testing requirements in high school. In my district, high schoolers take the Colorado State test, the ACT, and, if necessary, AP or IB exams. That is a lot of testing in the final years of high school.

This new flexibility would mean that a pending application that Colorado has for the ACT to stand in place of the Colorado State test would be specifically allowed in statute under this bill, and I couldn't be more proud of that provision.

This bill also maintains strong support for high-quality charter schools, something that I have made a hallmark of my time here in Congress and have been a coauthor of bills that have passed this body overwhelmingly. That charter school language is reflected in this bill.

The language would improve charter school access and service for all students, give new and innovative charter schools those tools they need to meet their goal of serving at-risk and diverse students that ensure that our limited Federal investment supports the replication and expansion of high-quality, innovative charter schools.

Before I came to Congress, I founded two public charter school networks. I know the freedom to innovate and the flexibility to pursue a unique mission within public education can help charter schools succeed at the highest levels.

This bill also contains a commitment to education technology and innovation. The Investing in Innovation program has also been one of my top priorities in this bill.

In Colorado, the St. Vrain Valley School District, which I represent a good portion of, received a $3.6 million innovation grant to expand programs for at-risk kids in seven schools.

Because of that grant, St. Vrain was able to extend the school year at four elementary schools that serve at-risk kids, target math students at risk of failing at two middle schools that implement the STEM Academy at Skyline High School. I couldn't be more proud of this provision.

Now, this rule also has a corporate welfare giveaway to the oil and gas industry. Thankfully, they are two separate votes. So my colleagues can vote against corporate welfare for the oil and gas industry, one of the most profitable industries on the face of the planet, and vote for kids.

I do encourage my colleagues to vote against the rule, which has the oil and gas corporate welfare bill. If it simply was a straight-up vote on ESEA, I think my Democratic colleagues would join me in supporting the rule. Unfortunately, it is not.

They stuck another bill in there that is an enormous multibillion-dollar giveaway to the most profitable industry on the face of the planet, trying to preserve the fossil fuel industry rather than find a pathway forward to transition toward a lower carbon emission future.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX), a valuable senior member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, Dr. BURGESS, for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, as a child, my family's home didn't have electricity or running water. My parents, while dedicated and hardworking, were poor, with little formal education.

Fortunately, I was pushed by the right people, teachers and administrators, who wouldn't let me settle for less than my best. In the mountains of North Carolina, I learned firsthand the power of education and its vital role in the success of individual Americans.

Unfortunately, today's K–12 education system is failing our students. Decades of Washington's counterproductive mandates and the No Child Left Behind law have resulted in stagnant student achievement, disappointing graduation rates, and high school graduates entering college and the workforce without the knowledge and resources they need to succeed.

Parents and education leaders have lost much of their decisionmaking authority to Washington bureaucrats, and the Secretary of Education has bullied States into adopting the Obama administration's pet policies.

The rule we are debating now would provide for consideration of a conference committee agreement, the Every Student Succeeds Act, reauthorizing and reforming the Elementary and Secondary Education Act that would allow Congress finally to replace the No Child Left Behind.

As a grandmother, educator, and former school board member, I know students are best served when teachers, parents, and administrators are the driving force behind improving education. This agreement does just that by reducing the Federal footprint in the Nation's classrooms and restoring control to the people who know their students best.

The compromise Every Student Succeeds Act gets Washington out of the business of running schools. It protects State and local autonomy by prohibiting the Secretary of Education from coercing States into adopting Common Core or punishing them for abandoning it.

It also would place unprecedented restrictions on the authority of the Secretary of Education, preventing the Secretary from imposing new requirements on States and school districts through executive fiat, as President Obama's Department of Education has done repeatedly over the past 3 years.

The proposal eliminates the burdensome one-size-fits-all accountability system that has done more to tie up States and school districts in red tape than to support local efforts to educate children. It also reduces the size of the Federal education bureaucracy by eliminating ineffective and duplicative Federal programs and requiring the Secretary of Education to reduce the Department's workforce accordingly.

If Congress were to fail to act, States would be forced to choose between the fundamentally flawed policies of No Child Left Behind, which double down on Federal programs, mandates, and spending, and the Obama administration's controversial temporary conditional waiver scheme, which has imposed the administration's preferred policies and heightened the level of uncertainty shared by States and school districts. America's students deserve better.

That is why I am so pleased today's agreement gives States a better chance to succeed by getting Washington out of their way. Our work has been validated by The Wall Street Journal, which stated that the bill would represent the largest devolution of Federal control to the States in a quarter century. It is far better than the status quo that would continue if nothing passes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAVES of Louisiana). The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. BURGESS. I yield an additional 15 seconds to the gentlewoman from North Carolina.

Ms. FOXX. By reversing No Child Left Behind, one-size-fits-all micromanagement of classrooms, Congress is giving parents, teachers, and local education leaders the tools they need to repair a broken education system and help all children reach their potential. It is time to get Washington out of the way.

I encourage my colleagues to support this rule and the underlying conference committee agreement, the Every Student Succeeds Act.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for yielding and for all of the work that he has put in on an important and necessary advancement in our education system.

As he mentioned, the rule we are debating today also incorporates a rule for an energy bill that I wanted to address today because nowhere is the need for a comprehensive energy policy more critical than in my home State of Massachusetts and the entire region of New England.

With recent announced closures of two plants in our region, one coal and one nuclear, we are facing the loss of over 2,000 megawatts of an already antiquated, already overtaxed electric grid. That loss of capacity is already causing the bills of our consumers to skyrocket through a quadrupling of our capacity rates, from $1 billion to over $4 billion.

Those closures and subsequent rate increases underscore our need for a roadmap that puts us on a path toward renewable energy while balancing the reliability and affordability.

□ 1315

The bill before us today does exactly the opposite. It reverses course and renews our investment in outdated energy resources while putting up roadblocks that will halt the innovation our energy infrastructure so desperately needs.

In particular, I am very concerned with section 1110 of the bill, which would require regional grid operators to conduct a reliability analysis each time a rate change is filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Unfortunately, reliability comes at a cost, and the analysis required by section 1110 fails to even consider its impact on ratepayers. It ignores the concerns that I hear across my district every single day. Rate increases mean families can't save, businesses can't grow, local towns can't plan for the future.

That is why I introduced an amendment which would simply add ''at the lowest possible cost'' to the reliability analysis in section 1110. Unfortunately, it was not made in order. It was a simple amendment that would have given much-needed direction and flexibility to each regional operator to determine what its reliability needs are and how much it is going to cost local ratepayers.

The reliability analysis is a clear benefit to fuel types that can be stored and ignores the realities and benefits of other sources of energy, including renewables. The criteria required in this analysis fails to consider regional disparities, such as natural gas resources, local policies, and infrastructure.

If the majority is going to insist on a reliability analysis, at the very least we should consider the impact the analysis would have on energy costs to our constituents.

To say I am disappointed about what this bill has become would be a tremendous understatement. I hope today's vote will send a signal to the majority that this version does not have a viable pathway forward and that our Caucus remains committed to working with them on a bill that does.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BYRNE).

Mr. BYRNE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as a former member of the Alabama State school board, former chancellor of postsecondary education for the State of Alabama, and as a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, I am proud to support this rule and the underlying legislation.

For too long, our Nation's education system has failed under a heavy, top-down system of mandates and requirements set by Washington bureaucrats and special interest groups.

The Every Student Succeeds Act changes that by getting Washington out of the way and empowering our local teachers, principals, and administrators. This legislation achieves these goals by reducing the Federal Government's role in K–12 education and restoring control over education back to the States and local school districts, where it belongs.

The Wall Street Journal editorial board calls this legislation the largest devolution of Federal control to the States in a quarter-century. National Journal notes that the bill marks a rollback of Federal power, while Politico points out that the bill cuts down on the number of education programs.

I hear concerns often from my constituents in southwest Alabama about the Common Core standards. Well, this bill expressly prohibits the Secretary of Education from influencing or coercing States into adopting Common Core. This bill makes clear that it is solely a State's responsibility to set academic standards and pick assessments.

These restrictions on the Federal Secretary of Education are unprecedented and will end the Secretary's ability to influence education policy through executive fiat and conditional waivers.

Some may wonder what the alternative is to this legislation, so let me tell you.

Without this bill, we will continue to allow the Obama administration and the Federal Government to dictate education policy to the States.

Without this bill, the Secretary of Education will continue to use Federal grants and money to coerce States into adopting certain academic standards, like Common Core.

Without this bill, the Federal Department of Education will continue to operate more than 80 programs which are ineffective, duplicative, and unnecessary.

Without this bill, teachers will continue to have their hands tied by policies and assessments put forward by bureaucrats in Washington, D.C.

Washington has no business telling our States and local school districts how to best run their schools. So let's pass the Every Student Succeeds Act. Let's get Washington out of the way, and let's empower our local teachers, parents, and students.

I urge my colleagues to support this rule and to support the Every Student Succeeds Act.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL).

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the ranking member's intellect and integrity, as well as the chairman, in working through this rule.

But it is simply disgraceful that while the President of the United States, our President, was in Paris this week to unite the world against the growing threat of climate change, this House chose to take up this particular legislation that would undermine the transition to cleaner power sources.

These irresponsible bills put the American people at risk by exposing them to the dangers of carbon pollution, further exacerbating the negative impacts of climate change and putting our natural resources in jeopardy.

While some of my friends choose to deny solid scientific evidence, more than 12,000 peer-reviewed scientific studies are in agreement: Climate change is real, and humans are largely responsible by releasing large amounts of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gasses into the atmosphere from burning fossil fuels to produce energy.

But this is the most embarrassing part for our country: that this House is ignoring the scientific and national security community, which has long recognized the national security threat climate change poses for future generations.

The longer term consequences of failing to act to address climate change may add further instability in regions that are already teetering on the edge of crisis. This could impair future access to food and water, damage infrastructure or interrupt commercial activity, and increase competition and tension between countries vying for limited resources.

Now, as this body chooses to ignore our military leaders, we are faced with a choice. We can reject the continued calls to pull fossil fuels from the ground, or we can put our heads in the sand and pretend everything is fine, hunky-dory.

While I may not be a scientist or a military expert, I don't think it is difficult to walk and chew gum at the same time. We can listen to the experts by investing our time and efforts in both short-term and long-term policies to keep the public safe.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule and in support of both bills that this rule will bring to the floor.

I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding me this time. I find myself in very strong agreement with him on every point that he raised in his outstanding opening statement.

In regard to the energy efficiency bill, Mr. Speaker, unemployment is a serious problem in this country, but we have much more underemployment. We have ended up with the best educated waiters and waitresses in the world, as many thousands of college graduates can't find good jobs.

Our environmental rules and regulations and red tape have caused several million good jobs to go to other countries over the last 40 or 50 years. We need more good jobs in this country, Mr. Speaker, and this energy bill will help reduce this movement of jobs to other countries.

But, Mr. Speaker, I rise primarily today to speak in favor of the Every Student Succeeds legislation.

In 2001, I was one of just 45 Members of the House who voted against the No Child Left Behind Federal education law. Just 10 of those 45 remain in the House today: Republican Congressmen SAM JOHNSON, WALTER JONES, JOE PITTS, DANA ROHRABACHER, JIM SENSENBRENNER, PETE SESSIONS, and myself; and Democrats JOHN CONYERS, BOBBY SCOTT, and MAXINE WATERS.

This turned out to be one of the most popular votes I ever cast, especially with teachers.

I have spoken well over a thousand times in schools through the years, and I voted against the bill in 2001 because I felt the teachers, principals, and parents in east Tennessee had enough common sense and intelligence to run their own schools and classrooms and didn't need Washington bureaucrats telling them what to do.

The No Child Left Behind law was a great overreaction to failed schools in some of our Nation's biggest cities, and it needs to be replaced. Today, I rise in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act so we can leave behind the No Child Left Behind law.

As a previous speaker mentioned, the Wall Street Journal on Monday published an editorial calling this bill ''a bipartisan compromise'' that would be ''the largest devolution of Federal control . . . in a quarter-century.''

The paper pointed out that ''it's far better than the status quo which would continue if nothing passes,'' and described the bill as ''a rare opportunity for real reform.''

This bill should please many conservatives because it does away with the Common Core mandate.

This legislation is an example of great work by my own Senator, constituent, and friend, Senator LAMAR ALEXANDER. This bill is just one of many reasons why Senator ALEXANDER is one of the most respected Members of the other body, and I commend him for his efforts to improve our Nation's schools.

I urge all of my colleagues to support these two bills that this rule brings to the floor.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. WELCH), a member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is missing a great opportunity where we have common ground on energy efficiency. Mr. UPTON and Mr. WHITFIELD are great chairmen of the subcommittee and the standing committee and made an honest effort to try to include all of the possible things that we could do on energy efficiency, but we came up short.

The American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy—and that is made up of a lot of private sector companies that are trying to meet the demand that their consumers, corporate consumers, and individuals have to get more bang for their energy dollar by using less and saving more—has said that this bill will not reduce energy consumption in the United States. It will increase it, at a cost of about $20 billion through 2040.

Why are we doing that? Energy efficiency is the area where we agree. There is a lot of contentious debate about climate change; we are not going to resolve that today. But we have bipartisan agreement that we should use less energy. It is good for our customers, and it is good for the economy, and it is good for the environment. We came up short.

Many of the costs in energy efficiency could be saved with building codes language, which Mr. MCKINLEY, an engineer on the Republican side, introduced along with me. That is not in this bill.

There was a number of other bipartisan amendments that could have been offered. One by Mr. KINZINGER, the Smart Building Acceleration Act, should be in the bill. One by Mr. REED, the Smart Manufacturing Leadership Act, should be in the bill.

So energy efficiency, that is the place we can work together, and it is the place where we save money by using less energy and improving our economy and improving the environment as well.

The second area is the renewable fuel standards.

We have a huge debate in this Congress. If you are a corn farmer and you are from that district, the renewable fuel standards work for you because it increases what you get for producing corn.

Everywhere else, you are getting hammered. The cost to farmers who have to pay grain bills is higher. The cost to consumers who have to buy food is higher. The cost to small engine owners who have to get more repairs is higher. And it is bad for the environment.

That has been determined, I think, to be a well-intended flop.

Many of us had amendments that were going to let this Congress vote on the renewable fuel standard. It was denied by the Committee on Rules because the Congressional Budget Office has said that if we actually passed an amendment eliminating the renewable fuel standards, drivers of pickup trucks and cars would get higher gas mileage, and, therefore, there would be less revenue in the transportation bill from the gas tax, and we might have to pay more to farmers as a subsidy.

Now, what is going on here when we can't take a vote on a proposal that would have the effect of saving the driving public money on gas?

You know, I am willing to take that vote. I am willing to take the heat for saving drivers in this country money because they can get better mileage without ethanol in the fuel.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a real effort here on the committee to make progress. My goal is that we keep at it and try to improve this bill as it goes along the legislative path.

□ 1330

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN).

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule, but I would like to speak on some of the positive benefits I see in the education portion of this bill coming down the pike later on today.

First and foremost, I think we are learning a lot, Mr. Speaker, about what it really means to prepare young kids for an education today. And I believe the brain science that is unfolding in our country and the world is helping us better understand exactly how young minds work and how our own brains work. I think it is smart for us to send more power back to the local districts and then support programming that can help kids learn better.

A component of this bill, the Student Support and Academic Enrichment grant program, allows for helping to educate well-rounded kids, allows us to focus on well-rounded education, focus on safe and healthy kids, and gives local school districts an opportunity to invest in programs like the social and emotional learning programs that are going on around this country.

It is an interesting study. A meta-analysis done of about 213 programs with 270,000 kids participating in social and emotional learning programs saw an 11 percentile point increase in test scores. That closes the achievement gap. We have seen a 10 percent increase in prosocial behavior, a 10 percent decrease in antisocial behavior, and a 20 percent swing in the behavior of the kids.

We have great programs, like the MindUP program that Goldie Hawn started, having a tremendous impact around the country.

In my own congressional district, in Warren City Schools, we have the Inner Resilience Social and Emotional Learning program. In one of our schools, we have seen a 60 percent reduction in out-of-school suspensions. That is a 60 percent reduction.

And these programs are having significant benefits. If you look at the qualities that a young person needs, I believe this bill helps us get back to redefining what the common core is. In my estimation, the common core is: Are we teaching kids mental discipline? the ability to be aware? the ability to be focused? the ability to cultivate one of the key components to a successful life, and that is the ability to regulate your own emotional state?

This comes well before science, technology, engineering, and math. Teaching these key, fundamental characteristics—mental discipline, physical discipline, focus, concentration, self-regulation—are key components before you even get to the academic side of things.

The other component in here is creating healthy schools. This gets into the school lunches. This gets into the food that these kids eat. If the student is not getting healthy foods, they are not going to be able to concentrate, they are not going to be able to have a high energy level, they are not going to be able to do well academically.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. To me, self-regulation, awareness, attention, healthy foods, and healthy environment are the building blocks before we even get to the academic component of what happens in the classroom.

I want to thank the committees and the conference committee for putting this together and just recognize that I believe there is a new way of educating our kids emerging here. There is a new common core developing, and that is the mental discipline and the physical health of our young people.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, if we defeat the previous question, I will offer an amendment to the rule to bring up bipartisan legislation that would close a loophole allowing suspected terrorists to legally buy guns. This bill would bar the sale of firearms and explosives to those on the terrorist watch list.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the text of the amendment in the RECORD, along with extraneous material, immediately prior to the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, we have before us today an education bill that is a vast improvement over the status quo. I am proud to say it is a result of the work product between Democrats and Republicans working together to finally replace an outdated educational law with one that makes a lot more sense.

It maintains the original goal of ESEA from 1965—that is, to protect the civil rights of all Americans, to ensure that no school district can sweep under the rug or deny a quality education to any student because of their ethnicity or race or income status—and it allows States and districts the flexibility to meet those needs. It allows States and districts the flexibility to do something, but not the flexibility to do nothing. That is the fine line that Democrats and Republicans have worked together to seek and have accomplished with this bill.

Beginning in 2011, the Department of Education embarked on an unprecedented process of granting annual ESEA waivers to States and some districts. Now, you have heard that waiver process blasted from the other side. Absent that waiver process, under the formula of adequate yearly progress, nearly every State and district would have been labeled a failure. So I hope that my colleagues are grateful for a waiver process that has succeeded in granting waivers not only to my home State of Colorado, but to most States and districts across the country.

Now, of course, the waiver process opened up a Pandora's box. We can all agree it gave too much power to a single Federal agency. Not knowing who the next President is going to be, that should be something that Democrats and Republicans are concerned about.

While President Obama and Secretary Duncan's use of the waiver process allowed States to get out from under a flawed law, we can't necessarily count on the next President to be as generous with the waiver process in the No Child Left Behind, which is why it is completely appropriate and why you see so many Democrats, Republicans, educators, and school board members lining up to say: You know what? We need better statutory guidance, and we need to eliminate the one flawed Federal measurement of adequate yearly progress and replace it with an accountability system that works at the State and district level and maintains the Federal commitment to civil rights for all students.

Now, I personally agree with some of the reforms that resulted from the ESEA waivers, but a complex annual waiver process is at the whim of whoever the chief executive is at a certain time. It is not sound policy over time to improve our public schools.

I am proud to say this bill, ESEA, has broad support from a diverse coalition of stakeholders. It has support from superintendents, teachers, the Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable, the National Center for Learning Disabilities, the National Council of La Raza, Third Way, the STEM Education Coalition, the National Governors Association, and many others who are very well-regarded organizations that support the bill. And just over the past few days, I have heard from constituents who support the Every Student Succeeds Act.

I have spent most of my public career in education. I believe that education is the single most powerful tool for creating opportunity, for ending poverty, for lifting people into the middle class and beyond.

I have served as chairman of the State Board of Education of Colorado. I founded two charter schools. I served as superintendent of a charter school, the New America School. During my time in Congress, I have sat on the House Education and the Workforce Committee. And on a personal note, I have a preschool-age son.

Nothing could be more important for the future of our country than improving our public schools. Education is important to me, just as it is important to thousands of families in my district and parents everywhere. The Every Student Succeeds Act is a good bill that will move our education system forward.

I am proud to support the conference report, though, again, I am opposed to the rule and H.R. 8, the corporate welfare for the oil and gas industry bill, which was, unfortunately, put under the same rule as an education bill that I think many of us can agree on.

I want to talk about some of the specific language around charter schools that I worked hard to include in this bill.

I am proud to say that this version of the bill maintains strong Federal support for new and innovative charter schools as well as allowing for the replication and expansion of public charter school models that we know work for at-risk kids.

It is one of the great things about education. For every challenge we face, for every problem we see in public education, we also see an example of what works: a great teacher in a classroom defying the odds by helping at-risk students achieve; a great school; a great principal; a great site leader who has turned around a low-performing school, improved graduation rates, and made sure that more kids have access to college.

These stories are a reality in districts like Denver Public Schools, Jefferson County Public Schools, Boulder Valley School District, Poudre School District; and in districts across the country, there are examples of what works and what doesn't work.

The truth is that the Federal Government and States need to ensure that districts change what doesn't work, and one of the best ways to do that is to take proven models of success and expand and replicate them. One of those models that can work is public charter schools.

I am proud to say the public charter schools have been embraced in my home State of Colorado. Denver Public Schools, which serves a high percentage of at-risk kids, has over 20 percent of their children choosing to attend public charter schools. Our State also enjoys strong school choice across all public schools and even between districts.

This bill improves upon the charter school language by allowing the grants to be used for expanding and replicating successful models and upping the bar on authorizing practices and ensuring that quality public charter schools are meeting the needs of learners across the country.

Many of these charter schools wouldn't get off the ground without these Federal startup grants because they don't receive any public funds or State funds—in my home State of Colorado, until June of the year they open; in other States, it might be a little bit different. But generally speaking, all of those planning costs and operating costs for that year, until they open, are not compensated because they have no student enrollment at that point.

Believe me, it takes money to get public charter schools off the ground. They raise money from philanthropy. Some school districts who want more public charter schools help seed them, too. And the Federal investment, along with that, will help ensure that these great educators and great ideas have a chance to actually start a public charter school that meets a real learning need in the community.

I couldn't be more proud that those priorities of the All-STAR Act and the charter school bill passed overwhelmingly by this body in two different legislative sessions are reflected in this final bill.

I encourage my colleagues to vote ''no'' and defeat the previous question, to vote ''no'' on the rule, to vote ''yes'' on the education bill, and to vote ''no'' on the corporate welfare for the oil and gas industry bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the amount of time remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has 11¾ minutes remaining.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today's rule provides for further consideration of two important bills affecting the future of this country: the country's energy future and the future of education. They are important bills.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the previous question, vote ''yes'' on the rule, and vote ''yes'' on the underlying bills.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support to S. 1177, which is a sea change that moves the nation's education system away from "No Child Left Behind."

I thank Chairman KLINE, Ranking Member SCOTT, and all the members of the House and Senate Conference Committee for their work in bringing the Every Child Succeeds Act.

As the founding member and Chair of the Congressional Children's Caucus, I am in support of this bill because it places the education of our nation's children first.

I am pleased that the Jackson Lee Amendment offered during the House consideration of this bill intended to fight bullying in education settings is included in S. 1177.

The Jackson Lee Amendment supports accountability-based programs and activities that are designed to enhance school safety, which may include research-based bullying prevention, cyberbullying prevention, and disruption of recruitment activity by groups or individuals involved in violent extremism, and gang prevention programs as well as intervention programs regarding bullying.

Statistics on Bully:

Consider the daily reality for too many of our children who are threatened and hurt daily and will not tell adults about their pain or shame: 1 in 7 Students in Grades K–12 is either a bully or a victim of bullying. 90 percent of 4th to 8th Grade Students report being victims of bullying of some type. 56 percent of students have personally witnessed some type of bullying at school. 71 percent of students report incidents of bullying as a problem at their school. 15 percent of all students who don't show up for school reported being out of fear of being bullied while at school. 1 out of 20 students has seen a student with a gun at school. 282,000 students are physically attacked in secondary schools each month.

Consequences of bullying: 15 percent of all school absenteeism is directly related to fears of being bullied at school. According to bullying statistics, 1 out of every 10 students who drops out of school does so because of repeated bullying. Suicides linked to bullying are the saddest statistic.

The Jackson Lee Amendment also addresses growing concerns regarding violent extremism and student social media use.

As the Ranking Member of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, Homeland Security, and Investigations, as well as a Senior Member of the Homeland Security Committee, I believe that we must address emerging threats where they are, and do so as early as possible.

The Every Student Succeeds Act reflects the core principles for what today's children need to be prepared to succeed.

The bill includes support for students and schools in state accountability plans to create an opportunity for great transparency in making sure the classroom experiences of students will prepare them for higher education or employment opportunities by: (1.) reducing the amount of standardized testing in schools and decoupling high-stakes decision making and statewide standardized tests; and, (2.) ensuring that educators' voices are part of decision making at the federal, state and local levels.

This year marks the 50th anniversary of Congress passing the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA).

It is appropriate that Congress is taking this important bipartisan step in education reform that is drawing broad support from leading organizations, including the following: (1.) National Education Association; (2.) Leadership Conference on Civil Rights; (3.) National Council of La Raza; (4.) Teach for America; (5.) U.S. Chamber of Commerce; and (6.) Business Roundtable.

The bill before the House will move the nation toward an education policy built for success from the classrooms to the workplace.

In 2011, the number of children enrolled in elementary, middle schools and high schools nationally is 54,876,000, which included 38,716,000 in elementary schools and 16,160,000 in high schools.

Access to a great education is the best medicine for our nation's disparities in our economic system and social justice challenges.

A major reason for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act was the unanimous, landmark ruling of the United States Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education, in which the Supreme Court held that education ''is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms.''

A great education lifts all aspirations and opens doors of opportunity for every student in communities across the nation.

Today lifelong learning is an imperative for workers to remain current and viable in the employment market place.

A great education today yield benefits far into the future as it produces inventors, thinkers, artists, and leaders.

It is well past time to correct flaws in the ''No Child Left Behind'' law and focus on facilitating this growth and laying the foundation for student success.

According to a 2011 report by the Brookings Institution's Metropolitan Policy Program, ''The Hidden STEM Economy,'' 26 million jobs, or 20 percent of all occupations, required knowledge in one or more STEM areas.

The same report stressed that fully half of all STEM jobs available to workers without a 4 year degree and these jobs pay on average $53,000 a year, which is 10 percent higher than jobs with similar education requirements.

The economy is changing rapidly and our education system needs the guidance and support provided by H.R. 1177.

I urge all members to join with me in voting in support of H.R. 1177.

The material previously referred to by Mr. POLIS is as follows:

AN AMENDMENT TO H. RES. 542 OFFERED BY MR. POLIS OF COLORADO

At the end of the resolution, add the following new sections:

SEC. 3. Immediately upon adoption of this resolution the Speaker shall, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 1076) to increase public safety by permitting the Attorney General to deny the transfer of a firearm or the issuance of firearms or explosives licenses to a known or suspected dangerous terrorist. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. All points of order against provisions in the bill are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions. If the Committee of the Whole rises and reports that it has come to no resolution on the bill, then on the next legislative day the House shall, immediately after the third daily order of business under clause 1 of rule XIV, resolve into the Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the bill.

SEC. 4. Clause 1(c) of rule XIX shall not apply to the consideration of H.R. 1076.

THE VOTE ON THE PREVIOUS QUESTION: WHAT IT REALLY MEANS

This vote, the vote on whether to order the previous question on a special rule, is not merely a procedural vote. A vote against ordering the previous question is a vote against the Republican majority agenda and a vote to allow the Democratic minority to offer an alternative plan. It is a vote about what the House should be debating.

Mr. Clarence Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives (VI, 308–311), describes the vote on the previous question on the rule as ''a motion to direct or control the consideration of the subject before the House being made by the Member in charge.'' To defeat the previous question is to give the opposition a chance to decide the subject before the House. Cannon cites the Speaker's ruling of January 13, 1920, to the effect that ''the refusal of the House to sustain the demand for the previous question passes the control of the resolution to the opposition'' in order to offer an amendment. On March 15, 1909, a member of the majority party offered a rule resolution. The House defeated the previous question and a member of the opposition rose to a parliamentary inquiry, asking who was entitled to recognition. Speaker Joseph G. Cannon (R–Illinois) said: ''The previous question having been refused, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, who had asked the gentleman to yield to him for an amendment, is entitled to the first recognition.''

The Republican majority may say ''the vote on the previous question is simply a vote on whether to proceed to an immediate vote on adopting the resolution . . . [and] has no substantive legislative or policy implications whatsoever.'' But that is not what they have always said. Listen to the Republican Leadership Manual on the Legislative Process in the United States House of Representatives (6th edition, page 135). Here's how the Republicans describe the previous question vote in their own manual: ''Although it is generally not possible to amend the rule because the majority Member controlling the time will not yield for the purpose of offering an amendment, the same result may be achieved by voting down the previous question on the rule. . . . When the motion for the previous question is defeated, control of the time passes to the Member who led the opposition to ordering the previous question. That Member, because he then controls the time, may offer an amendment to the rule, or yield for the purpose of amendment.''

In Deschler's Procedure in the U.S. House of Representatives, the subchapter titled ''Amending Special Rules'' states: ''a refusal to order the previous question on such a rule [a special rule reported from the Committee on Rules] opens the resolution to amendment and further debate.'' (Chapter 21, section 21.2) Section 21.3 continues: ''Upon rejection of the motion for the previous question on a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules, control shifts to the Member leading the opposition to the previous question, who may offer a proper amendment or motion and who controls the time for debate thereon.''

Clearly, the vote on the previous question on a rule does have substantive policy implications. It is one of the only available tools for those who oppose the Republican majority's agenda and allows those with alternative views the opportunity to offer an alternative plan.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 and clause 9 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on ordering the previous question will be followed by 5-minute votes on the adoption of the resolution, if ordered, and the motion to instruct on H.R. 644.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 243, nays 177, not voting 13, as follows:

So the motion to instruct was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLEISCHMANN). Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees on H.R. 644:

Messrs. BRADY of Texas, REICHERT, TIBERI, LEVIN, and Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California.

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1177, STUDENT SUCCESS ACT

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 542, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1177) to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to ensure that every child achieves, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the conference report is considered read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of November 30, 2015, at page 18686.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the conference report to accompany S. 1177.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in strong support of the conference report to accompany S. 1177, to be known as the Every Student Succeeds Act.

After years of congressional delay and executive overreach, Congress is finally replacing No Child Left Behind. More importantly, we are replacing the old approach to education with a new approach that will help every child in every school receive an excellent education.

For more than a decade, Washington has been micromanaging our classrooms. Federal rules now dictate how States and local communities measure student achievement, fix broken schools, spend taxpayer resources, and hire and fire their teachers.

No Child Left Behind was based on good intentions, but it was also based on the flawed premise that Washington knows what students need to succeed in school.

And what do we have to show for it? Less than half of all fourth and eighth graders are proficient in reading and math. An achievement gap continues to separate poor and minority students from their more affluent peers. In some neighborhoods, children are far more likely to drop out of high school than earn a diploma.

Parents, teachers, superintendents, and other education leaders have been telling us for years that the top-down approach to education is not working. Yet some still believe that more programs, more mandates, and more bureaucrats will help get this right. Well, those days will soon be over.

Today, we turn the page on the failed status quo and turn over to our Nation's parents and our State and local leaders the authority, flexibility, and certainty they need to deliver children an excellent education.

We reached this moment because replacing No Child Left Behind has long been a leading priority for House Republicans. For years, we have fought to improve K–12 education with three basic principles: reducing the Federal role, restoring local control, and empowering parents. The final bill by the House and Senate conference committee reflects these principles.

The bill reduces the Federal role in K–12 education by repealing dozens of ineffective programs which place unprecedented restrictions on the Secretary of Education; eliminating one-size-fits-all schemes around accountability and school improvement, ending the era of high-stakes testing; and preventing this administration and future administrations from coercing or incentivizing States to adopt Common Core.

The bill restores local control by protecting the right of States to opt out of Federal education programs and by delivering new funding flexibility so taxpayer resources are better spent on local priorities.

The conference agreement also returns to States and school districts the responsibility for accountability and school improvement. A set of broad parameters will help taxpayers know that their money is being well spent while ensuring State and local leaders have the authority necessary to run their schools.

The bill also empowers parents by providing moms and dads with the information they need to hold their schools accountable. The conference agreement strengthens school choice by reforming programs that affect charter schools and magnet schools, and it prevents any Federal interference with our Nation's private schools and home schools.

Reducing the Federal role, restoring local control, empowering parents—these are the principles we have fought for because these are the principles that will help give every child a shot at a quality education.

Now, let me be clear. This is not a perfect bill. To make progress, you find common ground. But make no mistake, we compromised on the detail, but we did not compromise on the principles.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are tired of waiting for us to replace a flawed education law. They are tired of the Federal intrusion, of the conditional waivers, and of the Federal coercion. Most importantly, they are tired of seeing their kids being trapped in failing schools.

Let's do the job we were sent here to do. Let's replace No Child Left Behind with new policies that are based on principles we believe in.

For these reasons, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this conference agreement.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am honored to endorse the conference report on S. 1177, the Every Student Succeeds Act.

We have certainly come a long way since we were on the floor debating H.R. 5, the Student Success Act, earlier this year. I had sincere objections to much that was found in H.R. 5, but thanks to the commitment to work together to try to fashion a decent bill with Chairman KLINE and our counterparts in the Senate, Senator ALEXANDER and Senator MURRAY, along with the many long nights from our respective staffs, we found a way to produce a conference report that balances the desire for more localized decisionmaking with the need for Federal oversight to ensure equity for underserved students.

This conference report is the embodiment of what we can do when we work together in Washington—a workable compromise that does not force either side to desert its core beliefs.

Mr. Speaker, the modern Federal role in elementary and secondary education began with the promise in Brown v. Board of Education when a unanimous Supreme Court held that, in 1954, ''it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education'' and that ''such an opportunity is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms.''

Yet, despite the Brown decision, our education system has remained fundamentally unequal. That inequality is virtually guaranteed by the fact that we fund education basically by the real estate tax, guaranteeing that wealthier areas will have more funds than low-income areas.

Across the Nation, gaps in equity persist. These gaps made it impossible to realize the opportunity of an education to all on equal terms because too many schools lacked the basic resources necessary for success. Too many schools failed children year after year.

And these gaps disproportionately affected the politically disconnected: those in poverty, racial minorities, students with disabilities, and English language learners. This was unacceptable.

In 1965, Congress addressed the inequality by passing the first Elementary and Secondary Education Act, ESEA, which provided Federal money to address—and I quote from the original bill—''the special educational needs of children of low-income families and the impact that concentrations of low-income families have on the ability of local educational agencies to support adequate educational programs.''

Simply put, Congress acknowledged that the right to an education is a civil right that knows no State boundaries and that the Federal Government has a role to ensure that all States are fulfilling their promises for all of America's children.

The current iteration of the ESEA, No Child Left Behind, has run its course. It is so broken that the administration currently offers over 40 States waivers from its most unworkable provisions. This has not only created a great amount of uncertainty for students, parents, educators, and communities, but it has also resulted in uneven protections for underserved students and a lack of transparency for our communities.

This conference report improves upon both the current law and the waivers, lives up to the promises of Brown and the intent of the original ESEA, and addresses the key challenges of No Child Left Behind.

First, the Every Student Succeeds Act maintains high standards for all children but allows States to determine those standards in a way that requires those standards to be aligned with college readiness.

The Every Student Succeeds Act requires States to put in place assessment, accountability, and improvement policies that will close the achievement gap but with locally designed, evidence-based strategies that meet the unique needs of students and schools.

The conference report requires the transparent reporting of data to ensure that schools are responsible for not only the achievement of all of their students but also for the equitable allocation of resources to support student learning.

The conference report helps States and school districts reduce the overuse of exclusionary policies by allowing the existing funding to be used for the Youth PROMISE plans, which is an issue I have been working on for many years.

Youth PROMISE plans are comprehensive, evidence-based plans that are designed to address neighborhoods with significant crime, teen pregnancy, and other problems, and they are designed to reinvest savings generated by those plans to keep the plans working in the future.

The conference report recognizes the importance of early learning, a priority of both red and blue States alike, by authorizing a program to assist States in improving the coordination, quality, improvement, and access to pre-K.

Most importantly, while many of these new systems will be created by the States, under the conference report, the Federal Government maintains the ability to make sure that States and localities are living up to their commitments—that all students are being counted and that schools are being held accountable for their achievement.

While this conference report is not the bill that I would have written alone—or that any Member would have written alone, for that matter—I have no doubt that this bipartisan conference report will make a positive difference in the lives of our Nation's children and will live up to the goal of the original ESEA: making an opportunity for an education available to all on equal terms. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes.''

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROKITA), the chairman of the Early Childhood, Elementary, and Secondary Education Subcommittee.

Mr. ROKITA. Mr. Speaker, I recognize Chairman KLINE especially for the work he has done over a long period of time, 7 years or so, bringing this House, this Congress, to where we are today. It truly is leadership at its best.

Mr. Speaker, let's face it. No Child Left Behind's high-stakes testing, which requires every child to be caught up to grade level within 1 year, is simply unworkable, as well-intentioned as it may have been.

Currently, the Secretary of Education, through waivers, can run schools by executive fiat, imposing requirements on State testing standards and conditioning receipt of Federal funds on adopting Common Core standards.

□ 1445

It's time for a positive change, and that change is the Every Student Succeeds Act. This bill, as pointed out here, as The Wall Street Journal puts it, is the largest transfer of Federal control, Mr. Speaker, to the States in 25 years, where this authority and opportunity frankly belongs.

This bill empowers States, and it ends the federally mandated high-stakes testing, which is the core, which is the heart of No Child Left Behind, which is causing all the stress that we see from our teachers, our school administrators, our parents, and especially our students. If it produced the results that we intended, maybe that is one thing. But all it is producing is stress and an unworkable situation.

The people who best know how to test, how long to test, what to test, et cetera, et cetera, are our parents, our teachers, our voters, our taxpayers, our local school administrators. Let them have this responsibility back.

It provides flexibility so voters and taxpayers, through their locally elected officials, can decide for themselves what success looks like. It recognizes that, when it comes to determining academic standards, States, school administrators, and parents know what is best.

It is time we put our children first so we can compete in a global, 21st-century world and win again. It is time we trust parents, teachers, and local education leaders more than we trust Federal bureaucrats in Washington, D.C. This bill is a huge step in that direction.

I urge all of my colleagues, Republican and Democrat, to support it.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. FUDGE), who is the ranking member of the subcommittee that reported this bill.

Ms. FUDGE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thank both the chair and ranking member for their leadership. It has been a privilege to work on this with both of you.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to express my strong support for the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. It is long overdue. For years, our Nation's students, their parents, and teachers have implored Congress to address the flaws in No Child Left Behind.

Today we finally have a bill that addresses many of the most difficult issues. Though not perfect, this bill is a significant improvement over No Child Left Behind.

Education is our Nation's great equalizer. Education opens the doors of opportunity to all of our Nation's children. This year we commemorated the 50th anniversary of President Johnson signing the original ESEA.

Fifty years ago, as part of the Great Society legislation, we passed ESEA as a civil rights law that affirmed the right of every child to a quality education. It further underscored the belief that poverty should not be an obstacle to student success.

The bill before us protects title I funding, ensures equitable allocation of resources to schools. It recognizes the importance of afterschool education and maintains subgroup disaggregation of data for reporting.

Further, the Student Support and Academic Enrichment Grants program is formula based and distributes dollars that fill resource and opportunity gaps based on the need and population.

While ESSA does give States and local districts more flexibility, it does not absolve the Federal Government of its responsibility to protect the civil rights of underserved students. Make no mistake. The Department of Education maintains its authority to oversee implementation of the law and take action against States and districts that aren't honoring the civil rights legacy of the ESEA.

It was my goal that the final bill provide equal educational opportunities for all children, regardless of race, ethnicity, income, language, or disability. I believe the Every Student Succeeds Act achieves this goal by striking a balance in the best interest of all of our Nation's students.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. THOMPSON), a member of the Early Childhood, Elementary, and Secondary Education Subcommittee of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank Chairman KLINE for the opportunity to voice my support for this comprehensive overhaul of No Child Left Behind, which has been a long time in the making.

As a member of the House Education and the Workforce Committee, I can attest to this conference report being the product of many years of hard work. I am happy to have been a conferee for the Every Student Succeeds Act, which, through a bipartisan agreement, provides more flexibility for our States, school districts, educators, parents, and students.

The Every Student Succeeds Act will establish a more appropriate Federal role in education by ending the era of mandated high-stakes testing, limiting the power of the Secretary of Education to dictate cookie-cutter standards, repealing dozens of ineffective and duplicative programs, and ensuring resources are delivered to where they are most effective and necessary.

I am especially grateful to the conferees for their adoption of an amendment that will instruct the Department of Education to finally study the fairness of the current title I formulas used to offset the effects of poverty upon young learners.

ESEA, which is celebrating its 50th anniversary, was created to provide each student an equal opportunity under the law. But, unfortunately, we are still not targeting those areas with the highest concentration of poverty.

I am hopeful that we can continue to embrace the spirit of ESEA and ensure that we are always working in the direction of providing great educational opportunities for all children.

I want to thank my friend, my colleague, and my chairman, JOHN KLINE, for his leadership to accomplish this historical education reform.

I urge my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. COURTNEY).

Mr. COURTNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation. It has been 13 long years since ESEA was rewritten. As we have heard from prior speakers, there are many problems that have been identified with No Child Left Behind, which we have heard from across the board in terms of parents, educators, administrators, and in terms of the need to update and revise this legislation.

What we also know is that the American economy has changed over the last 13 years and so has the world economy. One of the biggest problems that employers have today is the lack of individuals with degrees in science, technology, engineering, and math, STEM technology.

The good news is that this bill upgrades the K–12 system to give kids the tools that they are going to need to succeed with these jobs, which now are growing three times as fast as non-STEM jobs. The good news is it provides incomes twice as large as non-STEM jobs.

So what the bill does is it creates a STEM master teacher core, provides professional development training to STEM educators, greater access for thousands of school districts to Federal funding to support STEM programs, including partnerships with nonprofits.

It encourages alternative certification programs to allow more STEM teachers to come from industry and will retain and provide promising STEM teachers with differential pay. This is what our school systems need and this is what our kids need to have the tools to succeed in the future.

It is a great achievement that the chairman and the ranking member defied all the conventional wisdom to get this bill to move forward. It is almost like Pope Francis created some aura that you capitalized on. I mean that sincerely.

This is an incredible achievement to break through the barriers that have prevented us from coming together as an institution to really fix what in many respects is the most important issue, which is creating a future for the kids and our grandchildren.

I urge strong support of this legislation.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Connecticut for mentioning Pope Francis and not mentioning ladies basketball.

I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. ROE), the chair of the Health, Employment, Labor, and Pensions Subcommittee of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman and ranking member for doing the Herculean work on this bill, Every Student Succeeds Act, and the conference report. Many, many, many hours and many Congresses could not make this happen. They did. My hat is off to them.

When I go home to Tennessee and talk to the teachers, students, administrators, and the parents, what do I hear? There is too much Federal control, too many forms to fill out, we are teaching to the test, the students are frustrated, the teachers are frustrated.

Just go sit in front of a group of teachers and ask them: Would you be a teacher again? I promise you that over half of them will hold up their hand and say: No. I wouldn't be a teacher again.

That is terrible. We have to make an environment where the educators are enjoying what they do.

For the most part, I think teachers have one of the most important jobs in this country. I am a product of the public education system, 23 years. If I hadn't had great teachers, I would not have had the opportunity to be a doctor and I wouldn't have had the opportunity to serve in the U.S. Congress. So I am forever grateful.

What do we do? What do they say? They say: Look, this adequate yearly progress we are being judged on, these tests, as far as our students moving along, the Common Core—I hear that all the time at home—we don't need a national school board telling us what to teach in our community.

We heard them. Both sides of the aisle heard them and said: Okay. What we will do is we will push that control back down to the local level and you decide what is your curriculum, but you are going to be held accountable for how your student outcomes are. If you have students and minorities, we will be able to ferret those out and improve those students' outcomes.

We have eliminated or altered 49 different programs into a flexibility grant that will make it easier for the administrators to run their school systems. I think the main thing we want to do at the end of the day is that we want to create an environment where our students have the best opportunity in the world to achieve because they are now competing on a world basis.

For that reason, I think this bill does that. I encourage my colleagues to vote for this.

I am proud to stand on the House floor today in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act. Everywhere I go in my district, I hear from teachers, parents, administrators and students, who all tell me that we need to return control to the local level. Just as a one-size-fits-all approach doesn't work for health care reform, it will not work for education. Each state, school district and student are different, and local administrators, teachers and parents—not the federal government—should make decisions based on what's best for their students.

There are a lot of good reasons for conservatives to support this bill, because on virtually every account it reduces the federal government's ability to control state and local education. This bill replaces the national accountability system with a state-led one, ensuring local leaders' voice is heard. It also eliminates duplicative, expensive and unnecessary programs and replaces them with a Local Academic Flexible Grant, providing funding for school systems to better serve and support their students.

Perhaps most importantly, conservatives can feel good about supporting this because of how far it goes in stopping the federal government's intrusion into academic standards and curriculum, and in particular the adoption of the Common Core State Standards Initiative. While these standards were developed in a process that began as a state-led initiative, in recent years concern has increased as the Department of Education has been coercing states into adopting these standards as a condition of getting education waivers and grants. The bill would take away the Department's ability to require Common Core as a condition of federal grants, which ensures the decision on whether or not to adopt Common Core will truly be left up to the states—as it should be. If you claim to be concerned about or opposed to Common Core, then you must support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, a lot of people ask me, why does it matter whether we agree on education policy? Well, on my way home after work just the other evening, I met a boy at the grocery stow who was looking for some items on the shelves. He asked me for help in locating crushed pineapples because he told me he couldn't read the words. So I helped him and we found the crushed pineapples. But it hit me—this is why we want to invest in education. We have to have a system that ensures that boy and thousands of other kids just like him are given the opportunity to succeed in life, and that starts with a good education. We have a great opportunity to start helping that child by agreeing to this bill, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to make that happen.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. WILSON), a former educator herself.

Ms. WILSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I stand in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act. I want to thank Chairmen ALEXANDER and KLINE and Ranking Members MURRAY and SCOTT for their yearlong work on this bill.

At its heart, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act is a civil rights law based on a simple, yet powerful, promise made to all American children. It is a promise that, no matter where you live, what you look like, or what resources you have, you deserve a quality education.

Unfortunately, No Child Left Behind's one-size-fits-all approach derailed the fulfillment of this promise by creating an untenable environment of excessive, high-stakes testing that undermines educators' ability to serve their students.

While not perfect, the Every Student Succeeds Act is a substantial improvement that takes us one step closer to delivering on the promise of a quality education.

ESSA will provide schools with the resources and guidelines they need to deliver on this promise by directing resources to the children most in need and allowing school districts the flexibility to use title IV funds in a way that best works for their students.

As someone who has dedicated my life to dropout prevention, I am overjoyed to see this bill includes my amendment allowing title IV funds to be used for dropout prevention and reentry programs. But this is just the first step for our children.

It is the champions of our children's education—the teachers, the parents, the principals, and the mentors—who will create an environment of learning. That environment will ensure that our children's hearts and minds are positively shaped by our collective wisdom, our support, and our love.

I want to thank the teachers and parents across our Nation and especially in Florida for their work and commitment.

I urge my colleagues to support this conference report and stand united for a single purpose: our children.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. GUTHRIE), a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act.

As a father of three children who have attended public schools, I know the importance of allowing those who know our students best to be the decisionmakers.

I want to thank everybody who is involved in educating our children. My wife and I certainly appreciate those who have sacrificed so much time to take care of our children.

Since coming to Congress, I have heard from parents, teachers, school board members, and school leaders that No Child Left Behind is not producing the results our children need.

□ 1500

States and local school districts need flexibility to deliver a quality education to our students. This agreement does just that. It gets the Federal Government out of our classrooms and puts the decisionmaking back in the hands of our State and local leaders.

This agreement prevents the Secretary from legislating through executive fiat. It prohibits the Secretary from adding new requirements through regulations and from adding new requirements as a condition of approval of a State plan.

As a Member of the House Committee on Education and the Workforce and a conferee on this agreement, I am pleased with the determination of my colleagues in this Congress to move beyond the failed policies of No Child Left Behind. Our children deserve a quality education, and this bill is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to thank the chairman and the ranking member and those in the Senate for all their hard work. I know the staff from both sides, people that we get to work with every day who work hard for the people of this country and who have worked hard for our children. I appreciate the hard work they have done in bringing this agreement to where we are today.

I urge my colleagues to support this conference agreement.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. TAKANO).

Mr. TAKANO. I thank the gentleman from Virginia for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, as a former public schoolteacher for 24 years, I am proud to rise in support of this bill, which will improve our schools, offer more support to teachers, and, most importantly, provide more students the education they deserve.

Having served in the classroom during the implementation of No Child Left Behind, I can say without hesitation that our current education system needs a reset.

While well-intentioned, No Child Left Behind created a punitive approach to education policy that punishes underperforming schools instead of helping them to improve. That rigid, test-driven approach to accountability, combined with heavyhanded intervention from the Federal Government, has failed to close the achievement gaps in our country.

This reauthorization replaces our test-and-punish system with a more flexible test-and-reveal approach that returns decisionmaking to States and school districts. It will empower educators who best understand their students' needs to develop new ways to meet local challenges.

I am also pleased this bill increases overall education funding and ensures States are maintaining their investments in schools.

As a teacher, I might not give this bill an A-plus, but it is a solid bipartisan compromise, and it is an overdue replacement for a status quo that we all know is unacceptable. For that reason, I give this bill a passing grade.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. MESSER), another member of the committee.

Mr. MESSER. Mr. Speaker, I have not heard from one parent, student, or teacher who likes No Child Left Behind. Despite what may have been the best of intentions, its one-size-fits-all mandates led to Federal Government micromanagement in the classroom, overtested kids, and anxiety-ridden teachers, but, sadly, no significant improvement in student outcomes.

That is why virtually everyone wants to repeal No Child Left Behind. Today we have an opportunity to do just that by supporting the Every Student Succeeds Act. It is a new approach to the Federal role in education. If you read it, there is a lot to like in the bill.

By voting for this bill, we can end Federal Common Core mandates and stop the march towards a Federal curriculum. We can end high-stakes testing and abolish the unworkable adequate yearly progress metrics. Best of all, we can give power over education back to the people we trust: the parents, the teachers, and the local school administrators who are best positioned to make good decisions for our kids.

Access to a quality education is the gateway to opportunity in modern America. We still have a long way to go before we can make sure every child has that kind of access, but the Every Student Succeeds Act is a big step in the right direction.

I urge my colleagues for their support.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), the Democratic whip.

Mr. HOYER. I thank Mr. SCOTT for yielding. I want to thank Mr. KLINE, the chairman of the committee, and Ranking Member SCOTT for their work on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, Frederick Douglass was born a slave on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He became one of the great leaders in our country. Obviously, he worked hard with Abraham Lincoln to see the issuing of the Emancipation Proclamation. He said this: ''It is easier to build strong children than to repair broken men.''

This bill is about investment in the future, investment in children. Investing in elementary and secondary education is one of the most consequential acts we will undertake in this House. The impact of our investments in education will be felt long after we are gone. It will have a significant bearing on the future well-being of our economy and our democracy.

I want to thank Chairman KLINE and Ranking Member SCOTT, as well as Senators LAMAR ALEXANDER and PATTY MURRAY, the chair and ranking member of the Senate HELP Committee, for their extraordinary efforts on this bill.

This is a bipartisan bill. We worked together. Frankly, we had a little trouble working together here, but they worked together there, and then we worked together here. It is turning out well.

My friend indicated that he would not give this bill an A-plus. I was trying to reflect on any bill that I have ever voted on that I would give an A-plus to. It is not a perfect bill, but it represents a reasonable compromise that will strengthen elementary and secondary education in this country, provide certainty going forward, and help prepare the next generation of students—no matter who they are, how they learn, or where they live—for success in college, in their careers, in their vocations, and as future innovators and entrepreneurs in our economy.

I am particularly proud—and I thank Mr. SCOTT, and I thank also the two Senate leaders, as well as Mr. KLINE—that this conference report includes the Full-Service Community Schools program, which I have championed for several years.

My wife, Judy, was an early childhood educator and administrator in Prince George's County, Maryland. She died over 18 years ago. It is from her, however, that I first learned of the potential of full-service community schools, and our State has very successfully created a network of schools using this integrated approach named in her memory.

There will be 52 Judy Centers around our State for 3- and 4-year-olds. Some of them are privately funded, they are so popular, some publicly funded, and some in partnership. These Judy Centers enable low-income families with very young children to access a range of critical services all in one place. When starting kindergarten, children whose families participated in Judy Center programs performed better than those whose families did not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOLD). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield an additional 30 seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. HOYER. Judy Centers are helping to close that gap.

In closing, I urge my colleagues to vote for this bill because it is a step forward. It is an indication, as well, that we can work in a bipartisan fashion to the benefit of the people we represent. I urge my colleagues to vote for this conference report.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. CURBELO), a member of the committee.

Mr. CURBELO of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Every Student Succeeds Act. I want to thank my colleagues on the Committee on Education and the Workforce for their tireless efforts to improve K–12 education for all students, especially Chairman KLINE, Chairman ROKITA, and Ranking Members SCOTT and FUDGE.

Throughout this process, we have identified the successes and failures of

No Child Left Behind. This agreement allows us to capture the spirit of that last ESEA reauthorization: education is the great civil rights issue of our time, and every child in this country can learn, no matter the color of their skin, the ZIP Code they live in, the language their parents speak, or their income level.

We also learned from the failures of No Child Left Behind that led to an overly rigid, one-size-fits-all accountability system, inevitably giving the Federal Government an outsized role in public education. That is why the legislation before us today returns decisionmaking authority to States and local school districts, empowering communities and giving America's teachers the respect they deserve.

I am especially pleased that the bill we are considering today includes my amendment, which will ensure that children learning English are counted without being counted out, and that the teachers and schools who serve them are given more time to help these students succeed.

As a former member of the Miami-Dade County School Board, I am proud to have been a part of this process as a conferee. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bipartisan compromise. This agreement promotes school choice, empowers local leaders, and, most importantly, puts children, not Washington bureaucrats, at the center of America's education system.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, could you advise us how much time is still available on both sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has 13½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Minnesota has 14½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. BONAMICI).

Ms. BONAMICI. Mr. Speaker, the students, educators, parents, and school board members I have spoken with over the years have been waiting for this day, and I am glad we are finally reaching agreement on a new education law, and we are going to leave behind No Child Left Behind.

It was a well-intentioned law. Its goal was to create more equitable education for children across the country, but it resulted in too much emphasis on one-size-fits-all mandates and interventions, and the adequate yearly progress requirements caused too much focus on high-stakes testing. Change is long overdue.

The Every Student Succeeds Act returns flexibility to States and school districts to design interventions that address the specific needs of their schools. Importantly, it has States use multiple measures of academic progress in their accountability systems so no schools will be punished for the performance of students on a single exam. They can focus on addressing resource inequalities and improving school climate and delivering access to advanced coursework and rich curricula.

After hearing frequent concerns from students and teachers about the need for fewer, better assessments, I am pleased that the Every Student Succeeds Act includes a bipartisan provision I authored with Congressman RYAN COSTELLO to help school districts eliminate unnecessary testing.

The bill also improves STEM learning by encouraging the incorporation of art, music, and design. A well-rounded education that teaches our students to think creatively is good for their futures and good for the innovation economy.

The Every Student Succeeds Act has States set high standards for students. It requires States and school districts to intervene in schools where students have poor academic outcomes and where subgroups of students, such as English learners, low-income students, or students of color, lag behind their peers.

The law we are voting on today is true to the legacy of the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act and its goal of closing achievement gaps and promoting equitable opportunities and outcomes for students.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Chairman KLINE and Chairman ALEXANDER and Ranking Members SCOTT and MURRAY and their very hardworking staffs for their commitment to this bipartisan accomplishment.

I support the Every Student Succeeds Act and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, in an effort to balance the speakers on each side, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. POCAN).

Mr. POCAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman not only for yielding, but for his and Chairman KLINE's hard work on this bill.

I rise today in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act. Defending public education is one of the reasons that I came to Congress. For years, we have witnessed a negative impact on public education, from underfunding our schools to stripping teachers of their rights to collectively bargain for fair pay and conditions, like in my home State of Wisconsin.

□ 1515

At the same time, punitive policies which limit teachers' and administrators' abilities to manage their classrooms have further hampered student achievement. It is past time we renew the promise of an ESEA which has students' best interests at heart.

I meet with teachers and administrators from Wisconsin's Second Congressional District regularly and was stunned when I was told that one-third of a school's staff turned over last year because schools lack the financial support and autonomy they need to give students the educational experience they deserve. Teachers are being asked to do more with less, and it is coming at the expense of our kids' education.

While this bill is not perfect, I am pleased that we are finally discussing a bill today that aims to put students first and trusts our teachers, who dedicate their careers to education. This bill trusts and empowers teachers to ensure their voices are heard on the Federal, State, and local level, while increasing teacher quality and professional development and reducing the burden of testing in schools.

These are good improvements, Mr. Speaker, good for our Nation's children. And that is why I support this bill.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BISHOP), another member of the committee.

Mr. BISHOP of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would too like to voice my appreciation to Chairman KLINE and the ranking member for their hard work on this legislation.

I am a father of three children in the K–12 education system in my hometown. And I think all of us would agree here that we have a moral obligation to ensure the best possible educational environment for our children.

Unfortunately, the past 25 years have seen student achievement actually go down. We can blame that on a lot of things. There is plenty of blame to go around. But the best question that we can ask today is: What is Congress going to do about it?

And the answer, I believe, begins with the Every Student Succeeds Act. It is a bipartisan bill that helps to limit the role of Federal bureaucrats, restore local control, and empower parents.

The Wall Street Journal has called this ''the largest shift of Federal control to the States in a quarter-century.'' And they are precisely correct. It gives more flexibility back to local school districts and gives States the right to set their own standards. So if a State wants out of Common Core, they would have the option to do that.

What is more, parents can get information on local school performance so they can do what is best for their children. And when it comes to holding schools accountable, State and local leaders will get that responsibility back, as they should.

But, above all, this bill replaces the No Child Left Behind Act. I think we can all agree that our current system is broken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. BISHOP of Michigan. So let's make a difference here today and adopt a smart public policy. Do it for our children. Make sure that they have an excellent education.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the Every Student Succeeds Act.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts (Ms. CLARK).

Ms. CLARK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I thank Chairman KLINE and Ranking Member SCOTT for their leadership on this bill and for proving that Congress can listen to our educators, administrators, and communities and put the needs of our students first.

We all know that a great country deserves great schools. And I am pleased to join champions of education in both Chambers, both sides of the aisle, in supporting this blueprint for schools that invites every child to participate, no matter a child's income, race, ZIP Code, or disability.

This bill helps fulfill the unrealized promise of No Child Left Behind by protecting resources for schools in underserved communities. It provides accountability and equality of access while reducing reliance on high-stakes tests. It creates opportunities for our most vulnerable students—homeless and foster youth—who have suffered abuse and those who have experienced trauma. And, for the first time, we have a bill that invests in early learning through Preschool Development Grants.

This legislation brings us closer to ensuring that every child gets a fair shot at their dream.

I thank my colleagues for their work and commitment to our country's children and to our economic future.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. ADAMS).

Ms. ADAMS. I thank the gentleman from Virginia for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 played a major role in ensuring all students have access to quality education. Because of this legislation, over the past 50 years, we have made remarkable progress in closing the achievement gap that plagues many low-income students. However, we still have a lot of work to do.

The last reauthorization, No Child Left Behind, was signed into law in 2002 and hasn't been updated since. In that time, we have seen many changes in our education system and the needs of our students and educators, in addition to the unintended consequences of No Child Left Behind.

So I am proud today that we are finally moving forward with a bipartisan bill that keeps the best interests of American students and educators in mind. The Every Student Succeeds Act is a true embodiment of what a stronger reauthorized Elementary and Secondary Education Act should look like.

This legislation upholds the key principles of equal access to education for all, rich or poor, and upholds accountability systems that ensure success. From promoting access to early education to supporting our neediest students and our teachers and investing in STEM education, this legislation puts our students first and helps to close achievement gaps.

Our children are our future. Educating them shouldn't be a Democrat or a Republican issue. So I urge all of my colleagues to support our students by supporting this critical bipartisan legislation.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the chairman as well as the ranking member for their hard work on this bill. Thank you for getting us to this important day.

Today, I rise in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act. This bicameral legislation improves K–12 education by repealing No Child Left Behind and scales back Washington's role in education by restoring authority to those who know our students best.

As we have seen, the current top-down approach is not working. The arms of Washington have extended far too long into the classroom. We need a change; American students deserve a change. And the Every Student Succeeds Act is a powerful step forward in reforming our educational system.

This legislation stops Federal micromanagement of local schools, gets rid of unnecessary programs, downsizes the Federal education bureaucracy, places new restrictions on the authority of the Secretary of Education, and, most importantly, restores control back to the local level, letting States and school districts address the needs of our students.

Teachers, school officials, and parents have an ear to the ground each day. They know what our schoolchildren need to succeed. This is what I hear every time I am in the district. Washington bureaucrats do not belong in the classroom.

I am proud to support this legislation that gives students the tools they need for a successful future. I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the conference report.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining on both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has 7 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Minnesota has 11½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DESAULNIER).

Mr. DESAULNIER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say what a pleasure it is to be here to support the Every Student Succeeds Act, having spent much of my first year in the district going to school districts and schools.

And I will be able to go back in the coming weeks and say that we have this bipartisan compromise through the hard work of Chairman KLINE and Ranking Member SCOTT and Chairman ALEXANDER and Ranking Member MURRAY. So I congratulate and thank them for their hard work.

I am also pleased to see that a number of priorities I share with my Democratic and Republican colleagues were included in the final version of the landmark bill.

The conference report for Every Student Succeeds Act sets national education standards that ensure all American students, regardless of geography, socioeconomic status, race, or gender, receive a quality education.

Included in the bill are several measures that I am proud to have worked on with colleagues which are meant to protect students. I am pleased that a number of them, such as promoting efficient and effective Head Start programs, protecting student athletes from concussions, and providing students with academic and extracurricular support beyond the normal school day, which we know is important, were included.

While the concussion-related provisions of the bill are an important first step, it does not go far enough to combat the devastating physical and neurological impacts of brain injuries like those we recently heard about sustained by Hall of Fame football player Frank Gifford. There is a demonstrated need for increased vigilance and improved education on this important topic, and I look forward to working with my colleagues on this and other issues.

Again, I want to thank the chairman and the ranking member, and I urge all my colleagues to support this very important piece of legislation.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. POLIS).

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, when ESEA was first signed in 1965, it was a critical piece of civil rights legislation. In fact, when President Lyndon Johnson signed the bill, he said it bridges the gap between helplessness and hope for millions of students affected by it.

The bill before us today maintains President Johnson's commitment to the achievement of every child, regardless of race, socioeconomic background, or ZIP Code.

Many of my colleagues have talked about the new flexibility provided in the bill. Well, that is true, but it is flexibility to meet the learning needs of every kid, not the flexibility to fail.

Flexibility does not mean freedom from responsibility. States are accountable for the achievement of each and every child under this bill, and I am confident that President Obama wouldn't sign any bill that doesn't maintain strong civil rights protections. And I would never support a bill that would allow students to be swept under the rug.

This bill upholds the spirit of the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act. I am proud to support it today and support innovative solutions to improve the opportunities for learning that every child in our country has.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, a lot has been said about the work being done in this committee. I think it is important to point out that the chair and I didn't do all this work. His staff, Senator MURRAY's staff, and Senator ALEXANDER's staff worked hard.

I would like to read the names of some of the members of my staff that worked on this legislation, starting with Denise Forte, Brian Kennedy, Jacque Chevalier, Helen Pajcic, Christian Haines, Kevin McDermott, Alex Payne, Kiara Pesante, Arika Trim, Rayna Reid, Michael Taylor, Austin Barbera, and Veronique Pluviose.

Also, House Legislation Council staff Anna Shpak, Susan Fleishman, and Brendan Gallagher worked hard on this legislation; and Congressional Research Service staff Becky Skinner and Jody Feder.

I would like to mention those names as hardworking members that have brought about all of this bipartisan cooperation.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), the distinguished Democratic leader.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman for yielding and for his extraordinary leadership as the new ranking member on the Education and the Workforce Committee, bringing with him all of his commitment to education in our country as well as his knowledge of the connection of young people to our justice system and how to provide opportunities for them in the safest possible way. I thank Mr. SCOTT for his great leadership.

We are all very, very proud of you. I know your predecessor in this role, Mr. George Miller, would be as well.

□ 1530

I thank you, Chairman KLINE, for your leadership as well and for enabling this bipartisan legislation to come to the floor. I salute the chairman and ranking member in the Senate as well.

Fifty years ago our Nation took a bold and historic step forward for educational opportunity, for the strength of our economy, and for the health of our democracy, which is based on an informed electorate, enacting the ESEA.

Today the Elementary and Secondary Education Act stands as one of the landmark victories in both the struggle for civil rights and the War on Poverty.

At the bill signing in 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson, himself a former teacher, explained: ''No law I have signed or will ever sign means more to the future of America.'' President Johnson added: ''Education is the only valid passport from poverty.''

In addition to what it returns to the individual and enables that person to reach his or her aspirations, education brings much to our economy. In fact, nothing brings more to the Treasury of our country than investments in education, from early childhood education, K–12, which we are addressing today, higher education, postsecondary education, lifetime learning.

Indeed, the ESEA's commitment to expanding education access, especially to our most vulnerable students, has proven essential to bridging the gap between poverty and possibility for generations of Americans.

Yet, for the first time in our Nation's history, more than half of the students attending public school live in poverty. To close the opportunity gap, we must close the education gap that limits the future of so many children and communities.

Today we are thankful to be passing a bipartisan agreement that will strengthen the education of all of our children. It helps States to improve low-performing schools and empowers teachers and administrators with better training and support.

It targets funding to the most at-risk and needy students, with enhanced title I investments. It provides vital resources for English language learners and homeless youth.

It amplifies the voices of educators and parents, what we have always wanted, schools, a place where children can learn, teachers can teach, and parents can participate. It replaces high-stakes testing with State and local district flexibility.

We are bolstering our commitment to strong STEM, arts, and early education for children in every ZIP code.

In our area and other parts of the country, we call STEM STEAM, Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts, and Mathematics, all of that reinforced in this legislation.

With these improvements in the ESEA authorization before us, it is no wonder that this agreement is supported by a far-ranging coalition, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable, the National Governors Association, the Leadership Conference of Civil and Human Rights, AFT and NEA, two leading teachers unions, the National Center for Learning Disabilities, and many more.

We all agree that education is a national security issue. President Eisenhower taught us that. It is also an economic issue. It is one of the most pressing civil rights issues of our time.

With this legislation, we help ensure that access to high-quality education is the right of every student.

I urge my colleagues to join me in passing this strong bipartisan reauthorization of the historic ESEA, the Every Student Succeeds Act.

Once again I thank the distinguished chairman, Mr. KLINE, and our ranking member, of whom we are very, very, proud as well, Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

As has already been pointed out, this bill does not include everything everybody wanted. But the civil rights and education community both support the legislation because of the significant civil rights implications in the bill. This will go a long way in giving equal opportunity in education.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD a long list of education and civil rights organizations that have endorsed the bill.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chair for his cooperation and hard work, and I urge our Members to support the bill.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I want to start by thanking my colleagues on the committee in the House and in the Senate, particularly the Ranking Member, Mr. SCOTT, Senators ALEXANDER and MURRAY, and their staffs. We would absolutely not be here today without their hard work.

Today is a big day. We have an important opportunity to approve a bill that will replace No Child Left Behind with new policies that reduce the Federal role, restore local control, and empower parents, three principles that will help every child in every school receive a quality education.

This effort began in earnest almost 5 years ago. It was February 10, 2011, when the Education and the Workforce Committee held its first hearing under the new Republican majority to examine the challenges and opportunities facing K–12 classrooms.

Since that first hearing, we have held dozens of hearings and multiple markups and spent many hours on the floor considering amendments and debating competing ideas for improving education. All of those efforts are reflected in the final bill we have today.

Behind all of that hard work was a team of dedicated staff. They put in long hours and sacrificed a great deal to draft the House and Senate proposals, move them through our respective committees and chambers, and then went to work developing this bipartisan, bicameral bill we are discussing today.

My friend and colleague, the ranking member, Mr. SCOTT, talked about members of his staff and what a fantastic job they have done, and I know from many reports that they put in an awful lot of hours.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, this process has been underway for so long that some staff who started this journey with us have now moved on to other endeavors: former staffers, including James Bergeron, Alex Sollberger, Casey Buboltz, Heather Couri, Dan Shorts, Matt Frame, Angelyn Shapiro, and Barrett Karr.

And then there are those who are with us today and many who have been a part of this effort from the beginning. I wish I had time to recognize everybody, but I have a few minutes and am going to recognize quite a few of them: Republican staff members on our committee, including Janelle Belland, Krisann Pearce, Lauren Aronson, Dominique McKay, Lauren Reddington, Sheariah Yousefi, James Forester, Kathlyn Ehl, Leslie Tatum, Mandy Schaumburg, Brian Newell.

Of course, I would like to recognize the Republican Staff Director, Juliane Sullivan, who always leads the team with patience, skill, and determination; Amy Jones, our education policy staff director, who was a firm, yet fair, negotiator throughout the entire process.

And last, but certainly not least, our senior education policy advisor is Brad Thomas, sitting here patiently beside me today. According to our most recent estimates, Brad has spent more than 60 straight days here at the office working out the details of this final bill. We could not have done it without his knowledge, expertise, and dedication.

Brad, we are grateful for your service.

Again, because of the hard work of both Republican and Democrat staff on the Education and the Workforce Committee, as well as the staff of Senators MURRAY and ALEXANDER, we will soon have a new education law that helps every child in every school receive an excellent education.

I would remind all of my colleagues that, when we come in to vote a little later this afternoon, it is a binary choice. You can vote for this new direction, give our children a better opportunity, or you can vote to keep No Child Left Behind the law of the land. It is an either-or choice.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the conference report to accompany S. 1177.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DANNY K. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I support the Every Student Succeeds Act. It preserves critical civil rights protections for students, maintains the historic commitment to low-income children and communities, and strikes a delicate balance between federal accountability and state flexibility to meet local needs. I thank Ranking Member BOBBY SCOTT and Chairman KLINE—as well as the former Committee leaders George Miller and Buck McKeon—for their leadership. This is not a perfect bill, but it is a good bill. It represents an improvement over the current waiver process and over the outdated, one-size-fits-all, punitive No Child Left Behind law. I especially am proud that the bill includes multiple provisions that I have championed for years.

Foremost, the bill maintains federal accountability in public education. The Elementary and Secondary Education Act at its heart is a civil rights law, and, as such, it is essential that the federal government provide oversight to ensure equal educational opportunity under the law. Although the bill transfers considerable power to the states to oversee their improvement and limits some Secretarial authority, it requires states to take action in every school in which any group of students is consistently underperforming under the state's accountability system, in all high school dropout factories where one-third or more of students fail to graduate, and in the lowest-performing 5 percent of schools.

The bill enhances transparency into the educational success of vulnerable students. Many years ago, I wanted to know how African American boys were doing in school only to learn that we did not know because we did not collect student data in a way to answer that question. I have fought to change this because we cannot develop educational interventions to help students—especially vulnerable students—if we lack a clear understanding of how various groups of students are learning. This bill requires reporting of outcomes and indicators by important student characteristics to inform our understanding of student learning and direct interventions.

Further, the bill adds to the our understanding of student experiences by including critical information about discipline practices, including rate of suspensions, expulsions, referrals to law enforcement, and school-related arrests. Given that African Americans—especially African-American boys—disproportionately experience harsh discipline that contributes to the school-to-prison pipeline, clear information about actual practice is key. Importantly, the bill also discourages the overuse of exclusionary and dangerous discipline practices by requiring state plans to describe how they will improve learning by decreasing such practices. Similarly, the Every Student Succeeds Act promises to improve the school environment for students by decreasing bullying. For over a decade I have led a bill to direct greater federal resources to promote bullying-free learning environments. In addition to requiring states and districts to report incidents of discipline, bullying, and harassment, the bill provides funding for states and localities to implement evidenced-based positive behavioral interventions and supports and other successful approaches that improve behavior, reduce harsh discipline, and decrease bullying and harassment so that teachers can teach and students can learn.

The bill addresses key educational challenges for foster youth for which I have advocated, including: ensuring that foster youth can remain in their current school when they enter care or change placements when doing so is in their best interest; allowing immediate enrollment in a new school, prompt access to educational records, and assistance in transferring and recovering credits to remain on track for graduation; assuring a point of contact for foster youth within the education system when such a contact exists in the corresponding child welfare agency; requiring school districts and child welfare agencies to work together to ensure funding for transportation exists to allow students to remain in their schools of origin and to remove negative effects of unreliable transportation; and mandating that the Department of Education and Health and Human Services report on the progress made in and remaining barriers to addressing educational stability. Further, the bill requires states and localities to report on the student outcomes of foster youth and homeless youth to better understand their educational attainment.

The bill provides critical protections for students with disabilities that I have promoted, such as advancing high learning standards for students with the most significant disabilities. It caps the use of alternative, less-rigorous tests for students with the most significant cognitive disabilities at one percent of all students and prohibits states from counting lesser credentials as a regular high school diploma.

The bill does many additional important things. It invests in teachers by improving professional supports, recognizing that states and localities are better-suited to implement teacher evaluations than federal officials, and requiring collaboration with teachers and the prohibition on overturning existing collective bargaining agreements if states voluntarily develop teacher evaluation programs. It helps improve equitable distribution of resources among school districts, promotes responsible testing policies that reduce over-testing and discourage the use of tests for high-stakes decisions, expands early childhood education, increases federal investment in education, and maintains the historic and necessary state financial commitment to education.

This bill does raise concerns and the need for vigilance. With the greater responsibility given to states, there is a heightened need for monitoring by the federal government, advocates, and the civil rights community to ensure that critical supports go to the schools and students in need to close achievement gaps and improve learning.

This is not a perfect bill, but it is a good bill that advances educational opportunity. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting its passage.

Mr. BARLETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today to support the Every Student Succeeds Act.

This bipartisan bill will end the unworkable, one-size-fits all No Child Left Behind Act and give control of our kids' education back to our states, local school districts, teachers, and parents. I have always believed that educational decisions are best left to the people who are closest to the students, and that means moving power out of Washington, D.C. and back into our own communities.

It restores state and local control by allowing states to opt out of federal education programs, protecting states' abilities to control their own standards and assessments, and providing school districts with more funding flexibility.

It empowers parents by preventing federal interference in private and home schools, promoting school choice by strengthening charter and magnet schools, and allowing funds in eligible school districts to follow students to the schools they actually attend.

And, it includes unprecedented restrictions on the Secretary of Education's authority, and prevents the federal government from requiring or coercing states to adopt the Common Core curriculum.

Most importantly, it reauthorizes the 21st Century Community Learning Centers (21st CCLC) program as a separate and directed federal funding stream under Title IV.

The 21st CCLC program is the only federal funding source for our nation's afterschool programs, which students and working families across America rely on each and every day. In my district in Pennsylvania, the program provides 49 percent of total funding for SHINE, or ''Schools and Homes In Education,'' a successful afterschool educational program in Carbon and Luzerne counties.

I have worked on SHINE for many years back home with my friend, state Senator John Yudichak—a Democrat—because helping our kids succeed should always be a bipartisan cause. And, we have succeeded in making it one today.

Afterschool programs like SHINE are known to improve academic achievement, increase school attendance, and engage families in education. They also keep our kids safe resulting in lower incidences of drug-use and violence.

Where I'm from in Pennsylvania, this is extremely important. Gangs have become a big and persistent problem in some of our neighborhoods.

In the end, this is truly a banner day for the school children of northeastern Pennsylvania and across the country. SHINE and countless other afterschool programs have touched so many families and given kids education opportunities they otherwise would not have had.

I know these programs help families and I can assure my constituents that I will continue to advocate and support afterschool programs here in Congress both now and in the future.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support for the Every Student Succeeds Act. This bill is a much-needed improvement to No Child Left Behind (NCLB). The fundamental purpose of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) was created to ensure that disadvantaged children are provided a high-quality education that allows them to compete on a level playing field with their more-advantaged peers. I believe this bill is a step in the right direction.

I believe No Child Left Behind (NCLB) is flawed and must be reformed. Reauthorization presents a tremendous opportunity to make much-needed improvements and brings our education system into the 21st century.

For too many years, Congress has stalled in updating the standards for our nation's students. I applaud the efforts of this body for working across the aisle to make sure that every student has the tools they need to succeed.

The Every Student Succeeds Act strengthens critical programs and uses funds for the promotion of innovation, increased access to STEM education, arts education, literacy, community involvement in schools, teacher quality, and other important programs.

This conference authorizes the Preschool Development Grants program that will supplement existing funds to improve coordination, quality and access for early childhood education.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Every Student Succeeds Act and support reauthorization that restores our nation's commitment to providing equal opportunity for all students regardless of their background and protect our country's students including the most vulnerable, which was the intention of this landmark civil rights law.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act to finally address serious flaws in federal education law and reject the old ''one-size-fits-all'' approach while continuing to hold states and schools accountable for the learning of every child. I thank Ranking Member BOBBY SCOTT for his tireless efforts to support students in underserved communities and close the achievement gap.

Today's bill provides needed flexibility in the classroom while maintaining ''guardrails'' to make sure that all students have the opportunity to succeed. It scales back the singular focus on high-stakes testing with a broader and more representative accountability system that will help identify and address gaps. It includes evidence-based interventions for schools where students aren't learning or aren't graduating. And it targets resources to the students who need them most.

The bill allows for funding for critical supports, including mental health, drug and violence prevention, and Youth PROMISE plans. There are resources for a well-rounded education, including arts, geography, history, and foreign language. Dedicated funding is preserved for Promise Neighborhoods and Full-Service Community Schools to coordinate services for children and families, and for afterschool programs to provide out-of-school time opportunities. It will be critical to provide adequate funding for these priorities through the appropriations process.

The Every Student Succeeds Act includes important funding for early childhood education programs that help provide a strong start for children. I strongly support efforts to provide universal pre-K, and today's bill is a good step to improving coordination of early learning opportunities. Today's bill is not perfect, but it is a strong compromise and a critical improvement over current law. As Congress has worked to rewrite this law, I am grateful to the teachers, parents, administrators, school board members, students, and many others in Maryland schools who have shared their experiences and input with me. I look forward to continuing to work with them to ensure that this legislation is implemented and funded in a way that works for our schools and students.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA), a reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) of 1965. The ESEA was a landmark civil rights bill that boosted the academic achievement of low-income and minority students, and I am pleased to see its much-needed reauthorization, following its previous reauthorization in the 2001 No Child Left Behind Act. I must acknowledge, however, that the ESSA is not a perfect bill. For example, this bill does not require student data to be disaggregated for Asian American and Pacific Islander subgroups, and does not require states to act if federal resources are given inequitably to schools.

However, the bill is a significant improvement over the No Child Left Behind Act and the ESEA reauthorization that passed out of the House earlier this year. For example, I was heartened to see that the bill includes academic standards that will prepare students for college and careers, requirements for states to intervene in schools in need of government support, removal of No Child Left Behind's most punitive provisions, and increased monitoring, regulation, and focus on the unique needs of English Language Learners. These provisions are critical to helping underserved students achieve academic and lifelong success.

I was also pleased to see that the ESSA includes strong language to address violence in our schools and communities. For example, it maintains dedicated funding for afterschool programs and makes violence prevention and trauma support efforts eligible for federal funds, provisions which Congresswoman KAREN BASS and I urged in a letter to education leaders last month.

For these reasons, I am proud to stand in support of this bipartisan legislation in order to improve the quality of education received by our country's most vulnerable students.

Mr. ROKITA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to offer the following Joint Statement of Legislative Intent on the Conference Report to accompany S. 1177, the Every Student Succeeds Act, on behalf of myself and Mr. JOHN KLINE, Chairman of the Education and the Workforce Committee.

JOINT STATEMENT OF LEGISLATIVE INTENT ON CONFERENCE REPORT TO ACCOMPANY S. 1177, THE EVERY STUDENT SUCCEEDS ACT

Like our colleagues, we support this conference report because we believe states and school districts should be left to set their own education priorities. The House-passed bill included strong prohibitions that clearly did just that. The conference report maintains strong, unprecedented prohibitions on the Secretary of Education. For example,

Section 1111(e) clearly states the Secretary may not add any requirements or criteria outside the scope of this act, and further says the Secretary may not ''be in excess of statutory authority given to the Secretary.'' This section goes on to lay out specific terms the Secretary cannot prescribe, sets clear limits on the guidance the Secretary may offer, and also clearly states that the Secretary is prohibited from defining terms that are inconsistent with or outside the scope of this Act.

Then there are provisions in Titles I and VIII that ensure standards and curriculum are left to the discretion of states without federal control or mandates, and the same is true for assessments.

Finally, the conference report also includes a Sense of Congress that states and local educational agencies retain the right and responsibility of determining educational curriculum, programs of instruction, and assessments.

The conference report makes it clear the Secretary is not to put any undue limits on the ability of states to determine their accountability systems, their standards, or what tests they give their students. The clear intent and legislative language of this report devolves authority over education decisions back to the states and severely limits the Secretary's ability to interfere in any way.

Ensuring a limited role for the U.S. Secretary of Education was a critically important priority throughout the reauthorization process and this agreement meets that priority.

For example, the Secretary may not limit the ability of states to determine how the measures of student performance are weighted within state accountability systems. The Secretary also cannot prescribe school support and improvement strategies, or any aspect of a state's teacher evaluation system, or the methodology used to differentiate schools in a state.

Also, the Secretary may not create new policy by creatively defining terms in the law. Let us say definitively, as the Chairman of the Education and the Workforce Committee and Subcommittee Chairman of the subcommittee of jurisdiction, this new law reins in the Secretary and ensures state and local education officials make the decisions about their schools under this new law.

Over the past few years, the Secretary has exceeded his authority by placing conditions on waivers to states and local educational agencies. The conference report prevents the Secretary from applying any new conditions on waivers or the state plans required in the law by including language that clearly states the Secretary may not add any new conditions for the approval of waivers or state plans that are outside the scope of the law. In plain English, this means if the law does not give the Secretary the authority to require something, then he may not unilaterally create an ability to do that.

We are glad to be able to support a bill that will return control to states, where it should always be, and appreciate the strong support of colleagues as well.

Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA), which seeks to replace the broken No Child Left Behind law. While I still have concerns with some provisions in this legislation, I believe this bill will serve our children better than the status quo. For example, the current waiver system has allowed states to ignore schools that are failing students. That is unacceptable and cannot continue.

I am concerned by the lack of federal oversight in implementing and enforcing many provisions of this bill. For example, states are left to determine how and when to intervene in schools that are failing children. We must guarantee that there is substantial federal role in ensuring states meet their obligations. Further, we must guarantee state and district implementation boards are inclusive, diverse, and adequately represent students of all needs and circumstances.

Despite shortcomings in the bill, I was pleased to see that states will now be required to collect and report data on incidences of bullying and harassment in school—an issue I have been working on for many years. It is a small, but powerful step in ensuring all children feel safe at school.

I voted for this bill because No Child Left Behind is simply not working. In four years, I look forward to revisiting reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act to achieve an even more effective long-term policy.

Ms. BONAMICI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act. This legislation represents a significant bipartisan achievement and one that is long overdue.

For 14 years, our nation's public schools have operated under a well-intentioned but flawed education law, the No Child Left Behind Act. This law set aspirational goals for student learning, and it helped call attention to persistent achievement gaps between groups of students. But No Child Left Behind's rigid measure of academic achievement—that is, the requirement that schools demonstrate adequately yearly progress—and the law's one-size-fits-all interventions for low-performing schools proved to be unworkable.

The unfortunate consequences of No Child Left Behind's inflexible requirements have plagued schools in northwest Oregon and in communities across the country. As states were forced to demonstrate leaps in student achievement, an era of high-stakes testing took much of the joy out of teaching and learning. The drive for higher test scores pressured many schools to narrow their curricular offerings. Schools shifted resources away from arts and music, history, and foreign languages to bolster the tested subjects.

This is the day that students, teachers, school board members, and families across the country have been waiting for—Congress has finally reached an agreement to leave behind No Child Left Behind.

The Every Student Succeeds Act is not perfect legislation, but reaching a bipartisan agreement requires compromise. For example, the bill eliminates or consolidates nearly 50 education programs. Although some of these programs were unfunded, merging the others creates genuine concerns about some states disinvesting in current priorities, like physical education, and spending the money elsewhere. The bill maintains the Secretary of Education's authority to hold states accountable to the law, but it also places new restrictions on the Secretary that raise questions about the federal government's ability to act.

The Every Student Succeeds Act provides a great deal of discretion to states and school districts to improve schools where students are underperforming. Certainly returning control to states and school districts is welcome. Local school boards, superintendents, and educators are best equipped to design school improvement activities that will be effective in their communities. Yet the bill could have done more to make sure that schools make timely improvements when subgroups of students, such as English learners, students of color, low-income students, and students of disabilities, continue to lag behind their peers.

Despite these concerns, the Every Student Succeeds Act represents a significant improvement for our nation's students and schools. The bill authorizes increased funding, which is especially important because more than half of our country's public school students now come from low-income households. The bill rejects a proposal to make Title I funding ''portable,'' which would have diverted funding from communities with high concentrations of poverty to affluent school districts. And the bill includes a maintenance-of-effort requirement to help make sure states are adequately funding their schools.

The Every Student Succeeds Act also eliminates No Child Left Behind's federal accountability system and directs states to design systems for identifying schools in need of additional support. Importantly, the bill puts in place meaningful requirements for the accountability systems designed by states, including a requirement that state systems give substantial consideration to academic achievement and trigger action in any school where subgroups of students are underperforming. In this way, the Every Student Succeeds Act remains true to the civil rights legacy of the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act. The law will continue to require states to identify achievement gaps between groups of students and target resources to schools that need more support to close achievement gaps.

Importantly, the bill also reduces testing and the high stakes associated with statewide exams. The bill requires states to evaluate schools using multiple measures of student learning, so schools will not be held accountable for test scores alone. Additionally, the Every Student Succeeds Act establishes a pilot program for some states to develop alternative assessment systems. I am particularly pleased that the bill includes language from the Support Making Assessments Reliable and Timely (SMART) Act, bipartisan legislation I authored to help reduce testing. This provision gives resources to districts to eliminate the unnecessary or duplicative assessments that proliferated under No Child Left Behind. This provision also helps districts make better use of assessments by speeding the delivery of assessment results to educators, students, and families and by giving educators more time to plan in response to assessment data.

The Every Student Succeeds Act includes support for well-rounded education. I worked to include a provision in this section to make clear that schools can use federal resources to integrate arts and music into STEM courses. STEAM education, which combines arts and music with STEM subjects, educates both halves of students' brains; it teaches them to think creatively while they develop technical skills. Highly-skilled students who are also able to develop one-of-a-kind solutions to problems will excel in an economy that values innovation.

Overall, the Every Student Succeeds Act strengthens our nation's system of public education. The bill correctly recognizes that teachers and principals are skilled professionals who know what is best for their students. At the same time, the bill puts in place commonsense requirements to improve achievement among students who have historically been underserved by public education. In other words, the bill strikes the appropriate balance of returning decision making to states and local communities without diluting the federal government's role in upholding our country's promise to deliver equal educational opportunities and outcomes to all students.

I would like to thank Chairman KLINE, Ranking Member SCOTT, Chairman ALEXANDER, and Ranking Member MURRAY for their tremendous leadership on this bill. The Every Student Succeeds Act is moving forward with strong bipartisan, bicameral support because these leaders were willing to find common ground for the good of our country's students and educators.

I have visited schools throughout my district and spoken with educators and students in urban and rural communities. In each community I visit, I am reminded of the urgency of efforts to end the test-and-punish culture created by No Child Left Behind. It is a great honor to be able to support the Every Student Succeeds Act to chart a better path forward for our country's educators and students. I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in supporting the bill.

Ms. JUDY CHU of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concerns with S. 1177—the Every Student Succeeds Act. I cast my vote in favor of the Every Student Succeeds Act because I believe it is an improvement from No Child Left Behind (NCLB), our nation's current law. However, I strongly believe this legislation falls short in many areas—specifically resource equity, federal authority, and data disaggregation for Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) students.

While I am pleased that S. 1177 requires schools where students are consistently struggling to report on resource inequities, it does not hold states accountable for these inequities. States with dramatic investment disparities will be required only to identify gaps, not necessarily to close them.

Additionally, this legislation significantly limits its secretarial authority by relinquishing much of the responsibility for monitoring and enforcing protections for vulnerable students from the federal government to the states. History shows us that strong federal oversight compelled states to identify and address achievement gaps faced by minority and low-income students. Without this strong oversight, I am concerned that these vulnerable groups will once again fall through the cracks.

Finally, I am very disappointed that S. 1177 does not require that data collected and reported on AAPI students be disaggregated by ethnic subgroups. As the Chair of the Congressional Asian Pacific American Caucus (CAPAC), I have worked to combat the so-called ''model minority myth,'' which leads people to believe that AAPI students are all high-achieving and successful. In reality, the AAPI population includes over 40 distinct ethnic groups who speak over 100 different languages. However, this diversity in experience and success is often masked when data is not disaggregated by AAPI subgroups. As a result, many AAPI students fail to receive resources that would help them succeed academically.

I believe that S. 1177 is an improvement over the patchwork system our country is currently operating under in the wake of NCLB, but it falls short on the promise to serve all of our children. I will continue to work to ensure that every child, regardless of economic background, race, gender, sexual orientation, family history, or ability receives a free, high-quality education that enables them to achieve the American Dream.

Mrs. WATSON COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA). It has been 14 years since the last reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, and we have desperately needed an update to this critical law. The 2001 No Child Left Behind Act included unworkable provisions and led to the proliferation of high-stakes testing. In order to manage the impact of the law's strict provisions, the federal government has granted waivers to 40 states, resulting in unpredictability and unequal application of the law. The ESSA will correct our previous mistakes by maintaining high standards while giving states and local school districts greater flexibility in achieving them with evidence-based strategies.

At its core, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act is a civil rights law that reflects our society's consensus that every state and school district must provide a quality education to all children. In order to fulfill this promise, we must have sufficient information to measure inequities in educational achievement for all groups, and we must ensure states and local governments are taking the steps necessary to close those achievement gaps. For that reason, I am very concerned that the ESSA lacks data disaggregation for Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) students. The AAPI community is extremely diverse with over 48 distinct ethnic groups that face varying challenges in educational achievement. The lack of data disaggregation will prevent us from determining what gaps exist and how best to address them.

Additionally, I am concerned by the lack of key provisions from the Safe Schools Improvement Act and the Student Non-Discrimination Act. I have cosponsored these important pieces of legislation because more must be done to address the harmful effects of bullying and discrimination, particularly for LGBT students. No child should be denied a quality education due to his or her race, ethnicity, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, or socioeconomic status. This bill takes important steps in the right direction, but the lack of AAPI data disaggregation and important LGBT protections shows there is much work to be done to achieve this goal. I look forward to working with my colleagues to address these flaws.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as I've stated before, this conference report is not the bill I would have written on my own. It is a product of compromise, but a product that did not require either side to compromise on our core beliefs. A core belief of mine—and a core belief of my caucus—is that Congress deems authority to the executive branch to interpret, implement, and enforce federal law. That is the foundational tenet of administrative law.

Although some provisions included in the conference report seek to limit the regulatory power of the Department of Education, nothing in this conference report will inhibit or impede the Secretary's authority—as granted by the Constitution—to interpret, implement, and enforce compliance with the Federal law, including the Secretary's authority to promulgate regulations that clarify and interpret vague statutory terms. Those provisions were carefully negotiated between the Chair and me.

The Every Student Succeeds Act provides states with new flexibility to design systems that hold schools accountable for improving student outcomes, but the Federal government is ultimately responsible for protecting the civil rights of all students. To fulfill that responsibility, the Secretary of Education will maintain regulatory, oversight, and enforcement authority sufficient to fully implement this new law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 22, SURFACE TRANSPORTATION REAUTHORIZATION AND REFORM ACT OF 2015

Mr. WOODALL, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 114–360) on the resolution (H. Res. 546) providing for consideration of the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 22) to authorize funds for Federal-aid highways, highway safety programs, and transit programs, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

NORTH AMERICAN ENERGY SECURITY AND INFRASTRUCTURE ACT OF 2015

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 8.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. POLIQUIN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 542 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 8.

Will the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DOLD) kindly take the chair.

□ 1541

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, with Mr. DOLD (Acting Chair) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Acting CHAIR. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Tuesday, December 1, 2015, all time for general debate pursuant to House Resolution 539 had expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 542, no further general debate shall be in order.

In lieu of the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce, printed in the bill, it shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule an amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of Rules Committee Print 114–36. That amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 8

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

TITLE I—MODERNIZING AND PROTECTING INFRASTRUCTURE

Subtitle A—Energy Delivery, Reliability, and Security

Sec. 1101. FERC process coordination.
Sec. 1102. Resolving environmental and grid reliability conflicts.
Sec. 1103. Emergency preparedness for energy supply disruptions.
Sec. 1104. Critical electric infrastructure security.
Sec. 1105. Strategic Transformer Reserve.
Sec. 1106. Cyber Sense.
Sec. 1107. State coverage and consideration of PURPA standards for electric utilities.
Sec. 1108. Reliability analysis for certain rules that affect electric generating facilities.
Sec. 1109. Carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies.
Sec. 1110. Reliability and performance assurance in Regional Transmission Organizations.

Subtitle B—Energy Security and Infrastructure Modernization

Sec. 1201. Energy Security and Infrastructure Modernization Fund.

Subtitle C—Hydropower Regulatory Modernization

Sec. 1301. Hydroelectric production and efficiency incentives.
Sec. 1302. Protection of private property rights in hydropower licensing.
Sec. 1303. Extension of time for FERC project involving W. Kerr Scott Dam.
Sec. 1304. Hydropower licensing and process improvements.
Sec. 1305. Judicial review of delayed Federal authorizations.
Sec. 1306. Licensing study improvements.
Sec. 1307. Closed-loop pumped storage projects.
Sec. 1308. License amendment improvements.
Sec. 1309. Promoting hydropower development at existing nonpowered dams.

TITLE II—21ST CENTURY WORKFORCE

Sec. 2001. Energy and manufacturing workforce development.

TITLE III—ENERGY SECURITY AND DIPLOMACY

Sec. 3001. Sense of Congress.
Sec. 3002. Energy security valuation.
Sec. 3003. North American energy security plan.
Sec. 3004. Collective energy security.
Sec. 3005. Strategic Petroleum Reserve mission readiness plan.
Sec. 3006. Authorization to export natural gas.

TITLE IV—ENERGY EFFICIENCY AND ACCOUNTABILITY

Subtitle A—Energy Efficiency

CHAPTER 1—FEDERAL AGENCY ENERGY EFFICIENCY

Sec. 4111. Energy-efficient and energy-saving information technologies.
Sec. 4112. Energy efficient data centers.
Sec. 4113. Report on energy and water savings potential from thermal insulation.
Sec. 4114. Federal purchase requirement.
Sec. 4115. Energy performance requirement for Federal buildings.
Sec. 4116. Federal building energy efficiency performance standards; certification system and level for Federal buildings.
Sec. 4117. Operation of battery recharging stations in parking areas used by Federal employees.

CHAPTER 2—ENERGY EFFICIENT TECHNOLOGY AND MANUFACTURING

Sec. 4121. Inclusion of Smart Grid capability on Energy Guide labels.
Sec. 4122. Voluntary verification programs for air conditioning, furnace, boiler, heat pump, and water heater products.
Sec. 4123. Facilitating consensus furnace standards.
Sec. 4124. Future of Industry program.
Sec. 4125. No warranty for certain certified Energy Star products.
Sec. 4126. Clarification to effective date for regional standards.
Sec. 4127. Internet of Things report.

CHAPTER 3—ENERGY PERFORMANCE CONTRACTING

Sec. 4131. Use of energy and water efficiency measures in Federal buildings.

CHAPTER 4—SCHOOL BUILDINGS

Sec. 4141. Coordination of energy retrofitting assistance for schools.

CHAPTER 5—BUILDING ENERGY CODES

Sec. 4151. Greater energy efficiency in building codes.
Sec. 4152. Voluntary nature of building asset rating program.

CHAPTER 6—EPCA TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

Sec. 4161. Modifying product definitions.
Sec. 4162. Clarifying rulemaking procedures.

CHAPTER 7—ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY

Sec. 4171. Smart energy and water efficiency pilot program.
Sec. 4172. WaterSense.

Subtitle B—Accountability

CHAPTER 1—MARKET MANIPULATION, ENFORCEMENT, AND COMPLIANCE

Sec. 4211. FERC Office of Compliance Assistance and Public Participation.

CHAPTER 2—MARKET REFORMS

Sec. 4221. GAO study on wholesale electricity markets.
Sec. 4222. Clarification of facility merger authorization.

CHAPTER 3—CODE MAINTENANCE

Sec. 4231. Repeal of off-highway motor vehicles study.
Sec. 4232. Repeal of methanol study.
Sec. 4233. Repeal of residential energy efficiency standards study.
Sec. 4234. Repeal of weatherization study.

Sec. 4235. Repeal of report to Congress.
Sec. 4236. Repeal of report by General Services Administration.
Sec. 4237. Repeal of intergovernmental energy management planning and coordination workshops.
Sec. 4238. Repeal of Inspector General audit survey and President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency report to Congress.
Sec. 4239. Repeal of procurement and identification of energy efficient products program.
Sec. 4240. Repeal of national action plan for demand response.
Sec. 4241. Repeal of national coal policy study.
Sec. 4242. Repeal of study on compliance problem of small electric utility systems.
Sec. 4243. Repeal of study of socioeconomic impacts of increased coal production and other energy development.
Sec. 4244. Repeal of study of the use of petroleum and natural gas in combustors.
Sec. 4245. Repeal of submission of reports.
Sec. 4246. Repeal of electric utility conservation plan.
Sec. 4247. Technical amendment to Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978.
Sec. 4248. Emergency energy conservation repeals.
Sec. 4249. Repeal of State utility regulatory assistance.
Sec. 4250. Repeal of survey of energy saving potential.
Sec. 4251. Repeal of photovoltaic energy program.
Sec. 4252. Repeal of energy auditor training and certification.

CHAPTER 4—USE OF EXISTING FUNDS

Sec. 4261. Use of existing funds.

TITLE V—NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY CORRIDORS

Sec. 5001. Short title.
Sec. 5002. Designation of National Energy Security Corridors on Federal lands.
Sec. 5003. Notification requirement.

TITLE VI—ELECTRICITY RELIABILITY AND FOREST PROTECTION

Sec. 6001. Short title.
Sec. 6002. Vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance on Federal lands containing electric transmission and distribution facilities.

TITLE I—MODERNIZING AND PROTECTING INFRASTRUCTURE

Subtitle A—Energy Delivery, Reliability, and Security

SEC. 1101. FERC PROCESS COORDINATION.

Section 15 of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717n) is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (b)(2) to read as follows:

''(2) OTHER AGENCIES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Each Federal and State agency considering an aspect of an application for Federal authorization shall cooperate with the Commission and comply with the deadlines established by the Commission.

''(B) IDENTIFICATION.—The Commission shall identify, as early as practicable after it is notified by a prospective applicant of a potential project requiring Commission authorization, any Federal or State agency, local government, or Indian tribe that may consider an aspect of an application for that Federal authorization.

''(C) NOTIFICATION.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall notify any agency identified under subparagraph (B) of the opportunity to cooperate or participate in the review process.

''(ii) DEADLINE.—A notification issued under clause (i) shall establish a deadline by which a response to the notification shall be submitted, which may be extended by the Commission for good cause.'';

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) by striking ''and'' at the end of subparagraph (A);

(ii) by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C); and

(iii) by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

''(B) set deadlines for all such Federal authorizations; and'';

(B) by striking paragraph (2); and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

''(2) DEADLINE FOR FEDERAL AUTHORIZATIONS.—A final decision on a Federal authorization is due no later than 90 days after the Commission issues its final environmental document, unless a schedule is otherwise established by Federal law.

''(3) CONCURRENT REVIEWS.—Each Federal and State agency considering an aspect of an application for a Federal authorization shall—

''(A) carry out the obligations of that agency under applicable law concurrently, and in conjunction, with the review required by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.), unless doing so would impair the ability of the agency to conduct needed analysis or otherwise carry out those obligations;

''(B) formulate and implement administrative, policy, and procedural mechanisms to enable the agency to ensure completion of required Federal authorizations no later than 90 days after the Commission issues its final environmental document; and

''(C) transmit to the Commission a statement—

''(i) acknowledging receipt of the schedule established under paragraph (1); and

''(ii) setting forth the plan formulated under subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

''(4) ISSUE IDENTIFICATION AND RESOLUTION.—

''(A) IDENTIFICATION.—Federal and State agencies that may consider an aspect of an application for Federal authorization shall identify, as early as possible, any issues of concern that may delay or prevent an agency from working with the Commission to resolve such issues and granting such authorization.

''(B) ISSUE RESOLUTION.—The Commission may forward any issue of concern identified under subparagraph (A) to the heads of the relevant agencies (including, in the case of a failure by the State agency, the Federal agency overseeing the delegated authority) for resolution.

''(5) FAILURE TO MEET SCHEDULE.—If a Federal or State agency does not complete a proceeding for an approval that is required for a Federal authorization in accordance with the schedule established by the Commission under paragraph (1)—

''(A) the applicant may pursue remedies under section 19(d); and

''(B) the head of the relevant Federal agency (including, in the case of a failure by a State agency, the Federal agency overseeing the delegated authority) shall notify Congress and the Commission of such failure and set forth a recommended implementation plan to ensure completion of the proceeding for an approval.'';

(3) by redesignating subsections (d) through (f) as subsections (g) through (i), respectively; and

(4) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsections:

''(d) REMOTE SURVEYS.—If a Federal or State agency considering an aspect of an application for Federal authorization requires the applicant to submit environmental data, the agency shall consider any such data gathered by aerial or other remote means that the applicant submits. The agency may grant a conditional approval for Federal authorization, conditioned on the verification of such data by subsequent onsite inspection.

''(e) APPLICATION PROCESSING.—The Commission, and Federal and State agencies, may allow an applicant seeking Federal authorization to fund a third-party contractor to assist in reviewing the application.

''(f) ACCOUNTABILITY, TRANSPARENCY, EFFICIENCY.—For applications requiring multiple Federal authorizations, the Commission, with input from any Federal or State agency considering an aspect of an application, shall track and make available to the public on the Commission's website information related to the actions required to complete permitting, reviews, and other actions required. Such information shall include the following:

''(1) The schedule established by the Commission under subsection (c)(1).

''(2) A list of all the actions required by each applicable agency to complete permitting, reviews, and other actions necessary to obtain a final decision on the Federal authorization.

''(3) The expected completion date for each such action.

''(4) A point of contact at the agency accountable for each such action.

''(5) In the event that an action is still pending as of the expected date of completion, a brief explanation of the reasons for the delay.''.

SEC. 1102. RESOLVING ENVIRONMENTAL AND GRID RELIABILITY CONFLICTS.

(a) COMPLIANCE WITH OR VIOLATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL LAWS WHILE UNDER EMERGENCY ORDER.—Section 202(c) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824a(c)) is amended—

(1) by inserting ''(1)'' after ''(c)''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) With respect to an order issued under this subsection that may result in a conflict with a requirement of any Federal, State, or local environmental law or regulation, the Commission shall ensure that such order requires generation, delivery, interchange, or transmission of electric energy only during hours necessary to meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and, to the maximum extent practicable, is consistent with any applicable Federal, State, or local environmental law or regulation and minimizes any adverse environmental impacts.

''(3) To the extent any omission or action taken by a party, that is necessary to comply with an order issued under this subsection, including any omission or action taken to voluntarily comply with such order, results in noncompliance with, or causes such party to not comply with, any Federal, State, or local environmental law or regulation, such omission or action shall not be considered a violation of such environmental law or regulation, or subject such party to any requirement, civil or criminal liability, or a citizen suit under such environmental law or regulation.

''(4)(A) An order issued under this subsection that may result in a conflict with a requirement of any Federal, State, or local environmental law or regulation shall expire not later than 90 days after it is issued. The Commission may renew or reissue such order pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2) for subsequent periods, not to exceed 90 days for each period, as the Commission determines necessary to meet the emergency and serve the public interest.

''(B) In renewing or reissuing an order under subparagraph (A), the Commission shall consult with the primary Federal agency with expertise in the environmental interest protected by such law or regulation, and shall include in any such renewed or reissued order such conditions as such Federal agency determines necessary to minimize any adverse environmental impacts to the extent practicable. The conditions, if any, submitted by such Federal agency shall be made available to the public. The Commission may exclude such a condition from the renewed or reissued order if it determines that such condition would prevent the order from adequately addressing the emergency necessitating such order and provides in the order, or otherwise makes publicly available, an explanation of such determination.

''(5) If an order issued under this subsection is subsequently stayed, modified, or set aside by a court pursuant to section 313 or any other provision of law, any omission or action previously taken by a party that was necessary to comply with the order while the order was in effect, including any omission or action taken to voluntarily comply with the order, shall remain subject to paragraph (3).''.

(b) TEMPORARY CONNECTION OR CONSTRUCTION BY MUNICIPALITIES.—Section 202(d) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824a(d)) is amended by inserting ''or municipality'' before ''engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy''.

SEC. 1103. EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS FOR ENERGY SUPPLY DISRUPTIONS.

(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that recent natural disasters have underscored the importance of having resilient oil and natural gas infrastructure and effective ways for industry and government to communicate to address energy supply disruptions.

(b) AUTHORIZATION FOR ACTIVITIES TO ENHANCE EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS FOR NATURAL DISASTERS.—The Secretary of Energy shall develop and adopt procedures to—

(1) improve communication and coordination between the Department of Energy's energy response team, Federal partners, and industry;

(2) leverage the Energy Information Administration's subject matter expertise within the Department's energy response team to improve supply chain situation assessments;

(3) establish company liaisons and direct communication with the Department's energy response team to improve situation assessments;

(4) streamline and enhance processes for obtaining temporary regulatory relief to speed up emergency response and recovery;

(5) facilitate and increase engagement among States, the oil and natural gas industry, and the Department in developing State and local energy assurance plans;

(6) establish routine education and training programs for key government emergency response positions with the Department and States; and

(7) involve States and the oil and natural gas industry in comprehensive drill and exercise programs.

(c) COOPERATION.—The activities carried out under subsection (b) shall include collaborative efforts with State and local government officials and the private sector.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall submit to Congress a report describing the effectiveness of the activities authorized under this section.

SEC. 1104. CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE SECURITY.

(a) CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE SECURITY.—Part II of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824 et seq.) is amended by adding after section 215 the following new section:

''SEC. 215A. CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE SECURITY.

''(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

''(1) BULK-POWER SYSTEM; ELECTRIC RELIABILITY ORGANIZATION; REGIONAL ENTITY.—The terms 'bulk-power system', 'Electric Reliability Organization', and 'regional entity' have the meanings given such terms in paragraphs (1), (2), and (7) of section 215(a), respectively.

''(2) CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE.—The term 'critical electric infrastructure' means a system or asset of the bulk-power system, whether physical or virtual, the incapacity or destruction of which would negatively affect national security, economic security, public health or safety, or any combination of such matters.

''(3) CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—The term 'critical electric infrastructure information' means information related to critical electric infrastructure, or proposed critical electrical infrastructure, generated by or provided to the Commission or other Federal agency, other than classified national security information, that is designated as critical electric infrastructure information by the Commission under subsection (d)(2). Such term includes information that qualifies as critical energy infrastructure information under the Commission's regulations.

''(4) DEFENSE CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE.—The term 'defense critical electric infrastructure' means any electric infrastructure located in the United States (including the territories) that serves a facility designated by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c), but is not owned or operated by the owner or operator of such facility.

''(5) ELECTROMAGNETIC PULSE.—The term 'electromagnetic pulse' means 1 or more pulses of electromagnetic energy emitted by a device capable of disabling or disrupting operation of, or destroying, electronic devices or communications networks, including hardware, software, and data, by means of such a pulse.

''(6) GEOMAGNETIC STORM.—The term 'geomagnetic storm' means a temporary disturbance of the Earth's magnetic field resulting from solar activity.

''(7) GRID SECURITY EMERGENCY.—The term 'grid security emergency' means the occurrence or imminent danger of—

''(A)(i) a malicious act using electronic communication or an electromagnetic pulse, or a geomagnetic storm event, that could disrupt the operation of those electronic devices or communications networks, including hardware, software, and data, that are essential to the reliability of critical electric infrastructure or of defense critical electric infrastructure; and

''(ii) disruption of the operation of such devices or networks, with significant adverse effects on the reliability of critical electric infrastructure or of defense critical electric infrastructure, as a result of such act or event; or

''(B)(i) a direct physical attack on critical electric infrastructure or on defense critical electric infrastructure; and

''(ii) significant adverse effects on the reliability of critical electric infrastructure or of defense critical electric infrastructure as a result of such physical attack.

''(8) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Energy.

''(b) AUTHORITY TO ADDRESS GRID SECURITY EMERGENCY.—

''(1) AUTHORITY.—Whenever the President issues and provides to the Secretary a written directive or determination identifying a grid security emergency, the Secretary may, with or without notice, hearing, or report, issue such orders for emergency measures as are necessary in the judgment of the Secretary to protect or restore the reliability of critical electric infrastructure or of defense critical electric infrastructure during such emergency. As soon as practicable but not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall, after notice and opportunity for comment, establish rules of procedure that ensure that such authority can be exercised expeditiously.

''(2) NOTIFICATION OF CONGRESS.—Whenever the President issues and provides to the Secretary a written directive or determination under paragraph (1), the President shall promptly notify congressional committees of relevant jurisdiction, including the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, of the contents of, and justification for, such directive or determination.

''(3) CONSULTATION.—Before issuing an order for emergency measures under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall, to the extent practicable in light of the nature of the grid security emergency and the urgency of the need for action, consult with appropriate governmental authorities in Canada and Mexico, entities described in paragraph (4), the Electricity Sub-sector Coordinating Council, the Commission, and other appropriate Federal agencies regarding implementation of such emergency measures.

''(4) APPLICATION.—An order for emergency measures under this subsection may apply to—

''(A) the Electric Reliability Organization;

''(B) a regional entity; or

''(C) any owner, user, or operator of critical electric infrastructure or of defense critical electric infrastructure within the United States.

''(5) EXPIRATION AND REISSUANCE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), an order for emergency measures issued under paragraph (1) shall expire no later than 15 days after its issuance.

''(B) EXTENSIONS.—The Secretary may reissue an order for emergency measures issued under paragraph (1) for subsequent periods, not to exceed 15 days for each such period, provided that the President, for each such period, issues and provides to the Secretary a written directive or determination that the grid security emergency identified under paragraph (1) continues to exist or that the emergency measure continues to be required.

''(6) COST RECOVERY.—

''(A) CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE.—If the Commission determines that owners, operators, or users of critical electric infrastructure have incurred substantial costs to comply with an order for emergency measures issued under this subsection and that such costs were prudently incurred and cannot reasonably be recovered through regulated rates or market prices for the electric energy or services sold by such owners, operators, or users, the Commission shall, consistent with the requirements of section 205, after notice and an opportunity for comment, establish a mechanism that permits such owners, operators, or users to recover such costs.

''(B) DEFENSE CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE.—To the extent the owner or operator of defense critical electric infrastructure is required to take emergency measures pursuant to an order issued under this subsection, the owners or operators of a critical defense facility or facilities designated by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c) that rely upon such infrastructure shall bear the full incremental costs of the measures.

''(7) TEMPORARY ACCESS TO CLASSIFIED INFORMATION.—The Secretary, and other appropriate Federal agencies, shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with their obligations to protect classified information, provide temporary access to classified information related to a grid security emergency for which emergency measures are issued under paragraph (1) to key personnel of any entity subject to such emergency measures to enable optimum communication between the entity and the Secretary and other appropriate Federal agencies regarding the grid security emergency.

''(c) DESIGNATION OF CRITICAL DEFENSE FACILITIES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary, in consultation with other appropriate Federal agencies and appropriate owners, users, or operators of infrastructure that may be defense critical electric infrastructure, shall identify and designate facilities located in the United States (including the territories) that are—

''(1) critical to the defense of the United States; and

''(2) vulnerable to a disruption of the supply of electric energy provided to such facility by an external provider.

The Secretary may, in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies and appropriate owners, users, or operators of defense critical electric infrastructure, periodically revise the list of designated facilities as necessary.

''(d) PROTECTION AND SHARING OF CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—

''(1) PROTECTION OF CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—Critical electric infrastructure information—

''(A) shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552(b)(3) of title 5, United States Code; and

''(B) shall not be made available by any Federal, State, political subdivision or tribal authority pursuant to any Federal, State, political subdivision or tribal law requiring public disclosure of information or records.

''(2) DESIGNATION AND SHARING OF CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE INFORMATION.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission, in consultation with the Secretary of Energy, shall promulgate such regulations and issue such orders as necessary to—

''(A) designate information as critical electric infrastructure information;

''(B) prohibit the unauthorized disclosure of critical electric infrastructure information;

''(C) ensure there are appropriate sanctions in place for Commissioners, officers, employees, or agents of the Commission who knowingly and willfully disclose critical electric infrastructure information in a manner that is not authorized under this section; and

''(D) taking into account standards of the Electric Reliability Organization, facilitate voluntary sharing of critical electric infrastructure information with, between, and by—

''(i) Federal, State, political subdivision, and tribal authorities;

''(ii) the Electric Reliability Organization;

''(iii) regional entities;

''(iv) information sharing and analysis centers established pursuant to Presidential Decision Directive 63;

''(v) owners, operators, and users of critical electric infrastructure in the United States; and

''(vi) other entities determined appropriate by the Commission.

''(3) CONSIDERATIONS.—In promulgating regulations and issuing orders under paragraph (2), the Commission shall take into consideration the role of State commissions in reviewing the prudence and cost of investments, determining the rates and terms of conditions for electric services, and ensuring the safety and reliability of the bulk-power system and distribution facilities within their respective jurisdictions.

''(4) PROTOCOLS.—The Commission shall, in consultation with Canadian and Mexican authorities, develop protocols for the voluntary sharing of critical electric infrastructure information with Canadian and Mexican authorities and owners, operators, and users of the bulk-power system outside the United States.

''(5) NO REQUIRED SHARING OF INFORMATION.—Nothing in this section shall require a person or entity in possession of critical electric infrastructure information to share such information with Federal, State, political subdivision, or tribal authorities, or any other person or entity.

''(6) SUBMISSION OF INFORMATION TO CONGRESS.—Nothing in this section shall permit or authorize the withholding of information from Congress, any committee or subcommittee thereof, or the Comptroller General.

''(7) DISCLOSURE OF NONPROTECTED INFORMATION.—In implementing this section, the Commission shall protect from disclosure only the minimum amount of information necessary to protect the security and reliability of the bulk-power system and distribution facilities. The Commission shall segregate critical electric infrastructure information within documents and electronic communications, wherever feasible, to facilitate disclosure of information that is not designated as critical electric infrastructure information.

''(8) DURATION OF DESIGNATION.—Information may not be designated as critical electric infrastructure information for longer than 5 years, unless specifically re-designated by the Commission.

''(9) REMOVAL OF DESIGNATION.—The Commission shall remove the designation of critical electric infrastructure information, in whole or in part, from a document or electronic communication if the Commission determines that the unauthorized disclosure of such information could no longer be used to impair the security or reliability of the bulk-power system or distribution facilities.

''(10) JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DESIGNATIONS.—Notwithstanding section 313(b), any determination by the Commission concerning the designation of critical electric infrastructure information under this subsection shall be subject to review under chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, except that such review shall be brought in the district court of the United States in the district in which the complainant resides, or has his principal place of business, or in the District of Columbia. In such a case the court shall examine in camera the contents of documents or electronic communications that are the subject of the determination under review to determine whether such documents or any part thereof were improperly designated or not designated as critical electric infrastructure information.

''(e) SECURITY CLEARANCES.—The Secretary shall facilitate and, to the extent practicable, expedite the acquisition of adequate security clearances by key personnel of any entity subject to the requirements of this section, to enable optimum communication with Federal agencies regarding threats to the security of the critical electric infrastructure. The Secretary, the Commission, and other appropriate Federal agencies shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with their obligations to protect classified and critical electric infrastructure information, share timely actionable information regarding grid security with appropriate key personnel of owners, operators, and users of the critical electric infrastructure.

''(f) CLARIFICATIONS OF LIABILITY.—

''(1) COMPLIANCE WITH OR VIOLATION OF THIS ACT.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), to the extent any action or omission taken by an entity that is necessary to comply with an order for emergency measures issued under subsection (b)(1), including any action or omission taken to voluntarily comply with such order, results in noncompliance with, or causes such entity not to comply with any rule, order, regulation, or provision of this Act, including any reliability standard approved by the Commission pursuant to section 215, such action or omission shall not be considered a violation of such rule, order, regulation, or provision.

''(2) RELATION TO SECTION 202(c).—Except as provided in paragraph (4), an action or omission taken by an owner, operator, or user of critical electric infrastructure or of defense critical electric infrastructure to comply with an order for emergency measures issued under subsection (b)(1) shall be treated as an action or omission taken to comply with an order issued under section 202(c) for purposes of such section.

''(3) SHARING OR RECEIPT OF INFORMATION.—No cause of action shall lie or be maintained in any Federal or State court for the sharing or receipt of information under, and that is conducted in accordance with, subsection (d).

''(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require dismissal of a cause of action against an entity that, in the course of complying with an order for emergency measures issued under subsection (b)(1) by taking an action or omission for which they would be liable but for paragraph (1) or (2), takes such action or omission in a grossly negligent manner.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) JURISDICTION.—Section 201(b)(2) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824(b)(2)) is amended by inserting ''215A,'' after ''215,'' each place it appears.

(2) PUBLIC UTILITY.—Section 201(e) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824(e)) is amended by inserting ''215A,'' after ''215,''.

SEC. 1105. STRATEGIC TRANSFORMER RESERVE.

(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that the storage of strategically located spare large power transformers and emergency mobile substations will reduce the vulnerability of the United States to multiple risks facing electric grid reliability, including physical attack, cyber attack, electromagnetic pulse, geomagnetic disturbances, severe weather, and seismic events.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) BULK-POWER SYSTEM.—The term ''bulk-power system'' has the meaning given such term in section 215(a) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824o(a)).

(2) CRITICALLY DAMAGED LARGE POWER TRANSFORMER.—The term ''critically damaged large power transformer'' means a large power transformer that—

(A) has sustained extensive damage such that—

(i) repair or refurbishment is not economically viable; or

(ii) the extensive time to repair or refurbish the large power transformer would create an extended period of instability in the bulk-power system; and

(B) prior to sustaining such damage, was part of the bulk-power system.

(3) CRITICAL ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE.—The term ''critical electric infrastructure'' has the meaning given that term in section 215A of the Federal Power Act.

(4) ELECTRIC RELIABILITY ORGANIZATION.—The term ''Electric Reliability Organization'' has the meaning given such term in section 215(a) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824o(a)).

(5) EMERGENCY MOBILE SUBSTATION.—The term ''emergency mobile substation'' means a mobile substation or mobile transformer that is—

(A) assembled and permanently mounted on a trailer that is capable of highway travel and meets relevant Department of Transportation regulations; and

(B) intended for express deployment and capable of being rapidly placed into service.

(6) LARGE POWER TRANSFORMER.—The term ''large power transformer'' means a power transformer with a maximum nameplate rating of 100 megavolt-amperes or higher, including related critical equipment, that is, or is intended to be, a part of the bulk-power system.

(7) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Energy.

(8) SPARE LARGE POWER TRANSFORMER.—The term ''spare large power transformer'' means a large power transformer that is stored within the Strategic Transformer Reserve to be available to temporarily replace a critically damaged large power transformer.

(c) STRATEGIC TRANSFORMER RESERVE PLAN.—

(1) PLAN.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, acting through the Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability, shall, in consultation with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the Electricity Sub-sector Coordinating Council, the Electric Reliability Organization, and owners and operators of critical electric infrastructure and defense and military installations, prepare and submit to Congress a plan to establish a Strategic Transformer Reserve for the storage, in strategically located facilities, of spare large power transformers and emergency mobile substations in sufficient numbers to temporarily replace critically damaged large power transformers and substations that are critical electric infrastructure or serve defense and military installations.

(2) INCLUSIONS.—The Strategic Transformer Reserve plan shall include a description of—

(A) the appropriate number and type of spare large power transformers necessary to provide or restore sufficient resiliency to the bulk-power system, critical electric infrastructure, and defense and military installations to mitigate significant impacts to the electric grid resulting from—

(i) physical attack;

(ii) cyber attack;

(iii) electromagnetic pulse attack;

(iv) geomagnetic disturbances;

(v) severe weather; or

(vi) seismic events;

(B) other critical electric grid equipment for which an inventory of spare equipment, including emergency mobile substations, is necessary to provide or restore sufficient resiliency to the bulk-power system, critical electric infrastructure, and defense and military installations;

(C) the degree to which utility sector actions or initiatives, including individual utility ownership of spare equipment, joint ownership of spare equipment inventory, sharing agreements, or other spare equipment reserves or arrangements, satisfy the needs identified under subparagraphs (A) and (B);

(D) the potential locations for, and feasibility and appropriate number of, strategic storage locations for reserve equipment, including consideration of—

(i) the physical security of such locations;

(ii) the protection of the confidentiality of such locations; and

(iii) the proximity of such locations to sites of potentially critically damaged large power transformers and substations that are critical electric infrastructure or serve defense and military installations, so as to enable efficient delivery of equipment to such sites;

(E) the necessary degree of flexibility of spare large power transformers to be included in the Strategic Transformer Reserve to conform to different substation configurations, including consideration of transformer—

(i) power and voltage rating for each winding;

(ii) overload requirements;

(iii) impedance between windings;

(iv) configuration of windings; and

(v) tap requirements;

(F) an estimate of the direct cost of the Strategic Transformer Reserve, as proposed, including—

(i) the cost of storage facilities;

(ii) the cost of the equipment; and

(iii) management, maintenance, and operation costs;

(G) the funding options available to establish, stock, manage, and maintain the Strategic Transformer Reserve, including consideration of fees on owners and operators of bulk-power system facilities, critical electric infrastructure, and defense and military installations relying on the Strategic Transformer Reserve, use of Federal appropriations, and public-private cost-sharing options;

(H) the ease and speed of transportation, installation, and energization of spare large power transformers to be included in the Strategic Transformer Reserve, including consideration of factors such as—

(i) transformer transportation weight;

(ii) transformer size;

(iii) topology of critical substations;

(iv) availability of appropriate transformer mounting pads;

(v) flexibility of the spare large power transformers as described in subparagraph (E); and

(vi) ability to rapidly transition a spare large power transformer from storage to energization;

(I) eligibility criteria for withdrawal of equipment from the Strategic Transformer Reserve;

(J) the process by which owners or operators of critically damaged large power transformers or substations that are critical electric infrastructure or serve defense and military installations may apply for a withdrawal from the Strategic Transformer Reserve;

(K) the process by which equipment withdrawn from the Strategic Transformer Reserve is returned to the Strategic Transformer Reserve or is replaced;

(L) possible fees to be paid by users of equipment withdrawn from the Strategic Transformer Reserve;

(M) possible fees to be paid by owners and operators of large power transformers and substations that are critical electric infrastructure or serve defense and military installations to cover operating costs of the Strategic Transformer Reserve;

(N) the domestic and international large power transformer supply chain;

(O) the potential reliability, cost, and operational benefits of including emergency mobile substations in any Strategic Transformer Reserve established under this section; and

(P) other considerations for designing, constructing, stocking, funding, and managing the Strategic Transformer Reserve.

(d) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary may establish a Strategic Transformer Reserve in accordance with the plan prepared pursuant to subsection (c) after the date that is 6 months after the date on which such plan is submitted to Congress.

(e) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—Any information included in the Strategic Transformer Reserve plan, or shared in the preparation and development of such plan, the disclosure of which could cause harm to critical electric infrastructure, shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552(b)(3) of title 5, United States Code, and any State, tribal, or local law requiring disclosure of information or records.

SEC. 1106. CYBER SENSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Energy shall establish a voluntary Cyber Sense program to identify and promote cyber-secure products intended for use in the bulk-power system, as defined in section 215(a) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824o(a)).

(b) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary of Energy shall—

(1) establish a Cyber Sense testing process to identify products and technologies intended for use in the bulk-power system, including products relating to industrial control systems, such as supervisory control and data acquisition systems;

(2) for products tested and identified under the Cyber Sense program, establish and maintain cybersecurity vulnerability reporting processes and a related database;

(3) promulgate regulations regarding vulnerability reporting processes for products tested and identified under the Cyber Sense program;

(4) provide technical assistance to utilities, product manufacturers, and other electric sector stakeholders to develop solutions to mitigate identified vulnerabilities in products tested and identified under the Cyber Sense program;

(5) biennially review products tested and identified under the Cyber Sense program for vulnerabilities and provide analysis with respect to how such products respond to and mitigate cyber threats;

(6) develop procurement guidance for utilities for products tested and identified under the Cyber Sense program;

(7) provide reasonable notice to the public, and solicit comments from the public, prior to establishing or revising the Cyber Sense testing process;

(8) oversee Cyber Sense testing carried out by third parties; and

(9) consider incentives to encourage the use in the bulk-power system of products tested and identified under the Cyber Sense program.

(c) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—Any vulnerability reported pursuant to regulations promulgated under subsection (b)(3), the disclosure of which could cause harm to critical electric infrastructure (as defined in section 215A of the Federal Power Act), shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552(b)(3) of title 5, United States Code, and any State, tribal, or local law requiring disclosure of information or records.

(d) FEDERAL GOVERNMENT LIABILITY.—Consistent with other voluntary Federal Government certification programs, nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the commencement of an action against the United States Government with respect to the testing and identification of a product under the Cyber Sense program.

SEC. 1107. STATE COVERAGE AND CONSIDERATION OF PURPA STANDARDS FOR ELECTRIC UTILITIES.

(a) STATE CONSIDERATION OF RESILIENCY AND ADVANCED ENERGY ANALYTICS TECHNOLOGIES AND RELIABLE GENERATION.—

(1) CONSIDERATION.—Section 111(d) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2621(d)) is amended by adding the following at the end:

''(20) IMPROVING THE RESILIENCE OF ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Each electric utility shall develop a plan to use resiliency-related technologies, upgrades, measures, and other approaches designed to improve the resilience of electric infrastructure, mitigate power outages, continue delivery of vital services, and maintain the flow of power to facilities critical to public health, safety, and welfare, to the extent practicable using the most current data, metrics, and frameworks related to current and future threats, including physical and cyber attacks, electromagnetic pulse attacks, geomagnetic disturbances, seismic events, and severe weather and other environmental stressors.

''(B) RESILIENCY-RELATED TECHNOLOGIES.—For purposes of this paragraph, examples of resiliency-related technologies, upgrades, measures, and other approaches include—

''(i) hardening, or other enhanced protection, of utility poles, wiring, cabling, and other distribution components, facilities, or structures;

''(ii) advanced grid technologies capable of isolating or repairing problems remotely, such as advanced metering infrastructure, high-tech sensors, grid monitoring and control systems, and remote reconfiguration and redundancy systems;

''(iii) cybersecurity products and components;

''(iv) distributed generation, including back-up generation to power critical facilities and essential services, and related integration components, such as advanced inverter technology;

''(v) microgrid systems, including hybrid microgrid systems for isolated communities;

''(vi) combined heat and power;

''(vii) waste heat resources;

''(viii) non-grid-scale energy storage technologies;

''(ix) wiring, cabling, and other distribution components, including submersible distribution components, and enclosures;

''(x) electronically controlled reclosers and similar technologies for power restoration, including emergency mobile substations, as defined in section 1105 of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015;

''(xi) advanced energy analytics technology, such as Internet-based and cloud-based computing solutions and subscription licensing models;

''(xii) measures that enhance resilience through planning, preparation, response, and recovery activities;

''(xiii) operational capabilities to enhance resilience through rapid response recovery; and

''(xiv) measures to ensure availability of key critical components through contracts, cooperative agreements, stockpiling and prepositioning, or other measures.

''(C) RATE RECOVERY.—Each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority) shall consider authorizing each such electric utility to recover any capital, operating expenditure, or other costs of the electric utility related to the procurement, deployment, or use of resiliency-related technologies, including a reasonable rate of return on the capital expenditures of the electric utility for the procurement, deployment, or use of resiliency-related technologies.

''(21) PROMOTING INVESTMENTS IN ADVANCED ENERGY ANALYTICS TECHNOLOGY.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Each electric utility shall develop and implement a plan for deploying advanced energy analytics technology.

''(B) RATE RECOVERY.—Each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority) shall consider confirming and clarifying, if necessary, that each such electric utility is authorized to recover the costs of the electric utility relating to the procurement, deployment, or use of advanced energy analytics technology, including a reasonable rate of return on all such costs incurred by the electric utility for the procurement, deployment, or use of advanced energy analytics technology, provided such technology is used by the electric utility for purposes of realizing operational efficiencies, cost savings, enhanced energy management and customer engagement, improvements in system reliability, safety, and cybersecurity, or other benefits to ratepayers.

''(C) ADVANCED ENERGY ANALYTICS TECHNOLOGY.—For purposes of this paragraph, examples of advanced energy analytics technology include Internet-based and cloud-based computing solutions and subscription licensing models, including software as a service that uses cyber-physical systems to allow the correlation of data aggregated from appropriate data sources and smart grid sensor networks, employs analytics and machine learning, or employs other advanced computing solutions and models.

''(22) ASSURING ELECTRIC RELIABILITY WITH RELIABLE GENERATION.—

''(A) ASSURANCE OF ELECTRIC RELIABILITY.—Each electric utility shall adopt or modify policies to ensure that such electric utility incorporates reliable generation into its integrated resource plan to assure the availability of electric energy over a 10-year planning period.

''(B) RELIABLE GENERATION.—For purposes of this paragraph, 'reliable generation' means electric generation facilities with reliability attributes that include—

''(i)(I) possession of adequate fuel on-site to enable operation for an extended period of time;

''(II) the operational ability to generate electric energy from more than one source; or

''(III) fuel certainty, through firm contractual obligations, that ensures adequate fuel supply to enable operation, for an extended period of time, for the duration of an emergency or severe weather conditions;

''(ii) operational characteristics that enable the generation of electric energy for the duration of an emergency or severe weather conditions; and

''(iii) unless procured through other procurement mechanisms, essential reliability services, including frequency support and regulation services.

''(23) SUBSIDIZATION OF CUSTOMER-SIDE TECHNOLOGY.—

''(A) CONSIDERATION.—To the extent that a State regulatory authority may require or allow rates charged by any electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority to electric consumers that do not use a customer-side technology to include any cost, fee, or charge that directly or indirectly cross-subsidizes the deployment, construction, maintenance, or operation of that customer-side technology, such authority shall evaluate whether subsidizing the deployment, construction, maintenance, or operation of a customer-side technology would—

''(i) result in benefits predominately enjoyed by only the users of that customer-side technology;

''(ii) shift costs of a customer-side technology to electricity consumers that do not use that customer-side technology, particularly where disparate economic or resource conditions exist among the electricity consumers cross-subsidizing the costumer-side technology;

''(iii) negatively affect resource utilization, fuel diversity, or grid security;

''(iv) provide any unfair competitive advantage to market the customer-side technology; and

''(v) be necessary to fulfill an obligation to serve electric consumers.

''(B) PUBLIC NOTICE.—Each State regulatory authority shall make available to the public the evaluation completed under subparagraph (A) at least 90 days prior to any proceedings in which such authority considers the cross-subsidization of a customer-side technology.

''(C) CUSTOMER-SIDE TECHNOLOGY.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'customer-side technology' means a device connected to the electricity distribution system—

''(i) at, or on the customer side of, the meter; or

''(ii) that, if owned or operated by or on behalf of an electric utility, would otherwise be at, or on the customer side of, the meter.''.

(2) COMPLIANCE.—

(A) TIME LIMITATIONS.—Section 112(b) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(7)(A) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this paragraph, each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority) and each nonregulated electric utility, as applicable, shall commence the consideration referred to in section 111, or set a hearing date for consideration, with respect to the standards established by paragraphs (20), (22), and (23) of section 111(d).

''(B) Not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority) and each nonregulated electric utility, as applicable, shall complete the consideration, and shall make the determination, referred to in section 111 with respect to each standard established by paragraphs (20), (22), and (23) of section 111(d).

''(8)(A) Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this paragraph, each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority) and each nonregulated electric utility shall commence the consideration referred to in section 111, or set a hearing date for consideration, with respect to the standard established by paragraph (21) of section 111(d).

''(B) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this paragraph, each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which it has ratemaking authority) and each nonregulated electric utility shall complete the consideration, and shall make the determination, referred to in section 111 with respect to the standard established by paragraph (21) of section 111(d).''.

(B) FAILURE TO COMPLY.—Section 112(c) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622(c)) is amended by adding the following at the end: ''In the case of the standards established by paragraphs (20) through (23) of section 111(d), the reference contained in this subsection to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of such paragraphs.''.

(C) PRIOR STATE ACTIONS.—Section 112 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(g) PRIOR STATE ACTIONS.—Subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall not apply to a standard established by paragraph (20), (21), (22), or (23) of section 111(d) in the case of any electric utility in a State if—

''(1) before the date of enactment of this subsection, the State has implemented for such utility the standard concerned (or a comparable standard);

''(2) the State regulatory authority for such State or relevant nonregulated electric utility has conducted a proceeding to consider implementation of the standard concerned (or a comparable standard) for such utility during the 3-year period ending on the date of enactment of this subsection; or

''(3) the State legislature has voted on the implementation of the standard concerned (or a comparable standard) for such utility during the 3-year period ending on the date of enactment of this subsection.''.

(b) COVERAGE FOR COMPETITIVE MARKETS.—Section 102 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2612) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d) COVERAGE FOR COMPETITIVE MARKETS.—The requirements of this title do not apply to the operations of an electric utility, or to proceedings respecting such operations, to the extent that such operations or proceedings, or any portion thereof, relate to the competitive sale of retail electric energy that is unbundled or separated from the regulated provision or sale of distribution service.''.

SEC. 1108. RELIABILITY ANALYSIS FOR CERTAIN RULES THAT AFFECT ELECTRIC GENERATING FACILITIES.

(a) APPLICABILITY.—This section shall apply with respect to any proposed or final covered rule issued by a Federal agency for which compliance with the rule may impact an electric utility generating unit or units, including by resulting in closure or interruption to operations of such a unit or units.

(b) RELIABILITY ANALYSIS.—

(1) ANALYSIS OF RULES.—The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, in consultation with the Electric Reliability Organization, shall conduct an independent reliability analysis of a proposed or final covered rule under this section to evaluate the anticipated effects of implementation and enforcement of the rule on—

(A) electric reliability and resource adequacy;
(B) the electricity generation portfolio of the United States;
(C) the operation of wholesale electricity markets; and
(D) energy delivery and infrastructure, including electric transmission facilities and natural gas pipelines.

(2) RELEVANT INFORMATION.—

(A) MATERIALS FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES.—A Federal agency shall provide to the Commission materials and information relevant to the analysis required under paragraph (1) for a rule, including relevant data, modeling, and resource adequacy and reliability assessments, prepared or relied upon by such agency in developing the rule.

(B) ANALYSES FROM OTHER ENTITIES.—The Electric Reliability Organization, regional entities, regional transmission organizations, independent system operators, and other reliability coordinators and planning authorities shall timely conduct analyses and provide such information as may be reasonably requested by the Commission.

(3) NOTICE.—A Federal agency shall provide to the Commission notice of the issuance of any proposed or final covered rule not later than 15 days after the date of such issuance.

(c) PROPOSED RULES.—Not later than 150 days after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a proposed rule described in subsection (a), the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall make available to the public an analysis of the proposed rule conducted in accordance with subsection (b), and any relevant special assessment or seasonal or long-term reliability assessment completed by the Electric Reliability Organization.

(d) FINAL RULES.—

(1) INCLUSION.—A final rule described in subsection (a) shall include, if available at the time of issuance, a copy of the analysis conducted pursuant to subsection (c) of the rule as proposed.

(2) ANALYSIS.—Not later than 120 days after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a final rule described in subsection (a), the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission shall make available to the public an analysis of the final rule conducted in accordance with subsection (b), and any relevant special assessment or seasonal or long-term reliability assessment completed by the Electric Reliability Organization.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ELECTRIC RELIABILITY ORGANIZATION.—The term ''Electric Reliability Organization'' has the meaning given to such term in section 215(a) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824o(a)).

(2) FEDERAL AGENCY.—The term ''Federal agency'' means an agency, as that term is defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code.

(3) COVERED RULE.—The term ''covered rule'' means a proposed or final rule that is estimated by the Federal agency issuing the rule, or the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, to result in an annual effect on the economy of $1,000,000,000 or more.

SEC. 1109. CARBON CAPTURE, UTILIZATION, AND SEQUESTRATION TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO THE ENERGY POLICY ACT OF 2005.—

(1) FOSSIL ENERGY.—Section 961(a) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 16291(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(8) Improving the conversion, use, and storage of carbon dioxide produced from fossil fuels.''.

(2) COAL AND RELATED TECHNOLOGIES PROGRAM.—Section 962(b)(1) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 16292(b)(1)) is amended—

(A) by striking ''during each of calendar years 2008, 2010, 2012, and 2016, and during each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 2021,'' and inserting ''during each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 2016,'';

(B) by inserting ''allow for large-scale demonstration and'' after ''technologies that would''; and

(C) by inserting ''commercial use,'' after ''use of coal for''.

(b) INCREASED ACCOUNTABILITY WITH RESPECT TO CARBON CAPTURE, UTILIZATION, AND SEQUESTRATION PROJECTS.—

(1) DOE EVALUATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Energy (in this subsection referred to as the ''Secretary'') shall, in accordance with this subsection, annually conduct an evaluation, and make recommendations, with respect to each project conducted by the Secretary for research, development, demonstration, or deployment of carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies (also known as carbon capture and storage and utilization technologies).

(B) SCOPE.—For purposes of this subsection, a project includes any contract, lease, cooperative agreement, or other similar transaction with a public agency or private organization or person, entered into or performed, or any payment made, by the Secretary for research, development, demonstration, or deployment of carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies.

(2) REQUIREMENTS FOR EVALUATION.—In conducting an evaluation of a project under this subsection, the Secretary shall—

(A) examine if the project has made advancements toward achieving any specific goal of the project with respect to a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology; and

(B) evaluate and determine if the project has made significant progress in advancing a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology.

(3) RECOMMENDATIONS.—For each evaluation of a project conducted under this subsection, if the Secretary determines that—

(A) significant progress in advancing a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology has been made, the Secretary shall assess the funding of the project and make a recommendation as to whether increased funding is necessary to advance the project; or

(B) significant progress in advancing a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology has not been made, the Secretary shall—

(i) assess the funding of the project and make a recommendation as to whether increased funding is necessary to advance the project;

(ii) assess and determine if the project has reached its full potential; and

(iii) make a recommendation as to whether the project should continue.

(4) REPORTS.—

(A) REPORT ON EVALUATIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 2 years thereafter, the Secretary shall—

(i) issue a report on the evaluations conducted and recommendations made during the previous year pursuant to this subsection; and

(ii) make each such report available on the Internet website of the Department of Energy.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 3 years thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the Subcommittee on Energy and Power of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate a report on—

(i) the evaluations conducted and recommendations made during the previous 3 years pursuant to this subsection; and

(ii) the progress of the Department of Energy in advancing carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies, including progress in achieving the Department of Energy's goal of having an array of advanced carbon capture and sequestration technologies ready by 2020 for large-scale demonstration.

SEC. 1110. RELIABILITY AND PERFORMANCE ASSURANCE IN REGIONAL TRANSMISSION ORGANIZATIONS.

Part II of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824 et seq.), as amended by section 1104, is further amended by adding after section 215A the following new section:

''SEC. 215B. RELIABILITY AND PERFORMANCE ASSURANCE IN REGIONAL TRANSMISSION ORGANIZATIONS.

''(a) EXISTING CAPACITY MARKETS.—

''(1) ANALYSIS CONCERNING CAPACITY MARKET DESIGN.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, each Regional Transmission Organization, and each Independent System Operator, that operates a capacity market, or a comparable market intended to ensure the procurement and availability of sufficient future electric energy resources, that is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, shall provide to the Commission an analysis of how the structure of such market meets the following criteria:

''(A) The structure of such market utilizes competitive market forces to the extent practicable in procuring capacity resources.

''(B) Consistent with subparagraph (A), the structure of such market includes resource-neutral performance criteria that ensure the procurement of sufficient capacity from physical generation facilities that have reliability attributes that include—

''(i)(I) possession of adequate fuel on-site to enable operation for an extended period of time;

''(II) the operational ability to generate electric energy from more than one fuel source; or

''(III) fuel certainty, through firm contractual obligations, that ensures adequate fuel supply to enable operation, for an extended period of time, for the duration of an emergency or severe weather conditions;

''(ii) operational characteristics that enable the generation of electric energy for the duration of an emergency or severe weather conditions; and

''(iii) unless procured through other markets or procurement mechanisms, essential reliability services, including frequency support and regulation services.

''(2) COMMISSION EVALUATION AND REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall make publicly available, and submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce in the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources in the Senate, a report containing—

''(A) evaluation of whether the structure of each market addressed in an analysis submitted pursuant to paragraph (1) meets the criteria under such paragraph, based on the analysis; and

''(B) to the extent a market so addressed does not meet such criteria, any recommendations with respect to the procurement of sufficient capacity, as described in paragraph (1)(B).

''(b) COMMISSION EVALUATION AND REPORT FOR NEW SCHEDULES.—

''(1) INCLUSION OF ANALYSIS IN FILING.—Except as provided in subsection (a)(2), whenever a Regional Transmission Organization or Independent System Operator files a new schedule under section 205 to establish a market described in subsection (a)(1), or that substantially modifies the capacity market design of a market described in subsection (a)(1), the Regional Transmission Organization or Independent System Operator shall include in any such filing the analysis required by subsection (a)(1).

''(2) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—Not later than 180 days of receiving an analysis under paragraph (1), the Commission shall make publicly available, and submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce in the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources in the Senate, a report containing—

''(A) an evaluation of whether the structure of the market addressed in the analysis meets the criteria under subsection (a)(1), based on the analysis; and

''(B) to the extent the market does not meet such criteria, any recommendations with respect to the procurement of sufficient capacity, as described in subsection (a)(1)(B).

''(c) EFFECT ON EXISTING APPROVALS.—Nothing in this section shall be considered to—

''(1) require a modification of the Commission's approval of the capacity market design approved pursuant to docket numbers ER15–623–000, EL15–29–000, EL14–52–000, and ER14–2419–000; or

''(2) provide grounds for the Commission to grant rehearing or otherwise modify orders issued in those dockets.''.

Subtitle B—Energy Security and Infrastructure Modernization

SEC. 1201. ENERGY SECURITY AND INFRASTRUCTURE MODERNIZATION FUND.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Energy Security and Infrastructure Modernization Fund (referred to in this section as the ''Fund''), consisting of—

(1) collections deposited in the Fund under subsection (c); and

(2) amounts otherwise appropriated to the Fund.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the Fund is—

(1) to provide for the construction, maintenance, repair, and replacement of Strategic Petroleum Reserve facilities; and

(2) for carrying out non-Strategic Petroleum Reserve projects needed to enhance the energy security of the United States by increasing the resilience, reliability, safety, and security of energy supply, transmission, storage, or distribution infrastructure.

(c) COLLECTION AND DEPOSIT OF SALE PROCEEDS IN FUND.—

(1) DRAWDOWN AND SALE.—Notwithstanding section 161 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6241), to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts, the Secretary of Energy shall draw down and sell crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve in amounts as authorized under subsection (e), except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3). Amounts received for a sale under this subsection shall be deposited into the Fund during the fiscal year in which the sale occurs. Such amounts shall remain available in the Fund without fiscal year limitation.

(2) EMERGENCY PROTECTION.—The Secretary shall not draw down and sell crude oil under this subsection in amounts that would limit the authority to sell petroleum products under section 161(h) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6241(h)) in the full amount authorized by that subsection.

(3) INVESTMENT PROTECTION.—The Secretary shall not draw down and sell crude oil under this subsection at a price lower than the average price paid for oil in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

(d) AUTHORIZED USES OF FUND.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in the Fund may be used for, or may be credited as offsetting collections for amounts used for, carrying out the programs described in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

(2) PROGRAM TO MODERNIZE THE STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE.—

(A) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(i) The Strategic Petroleum Reserve is one of the Nation's most valuable energy security assets.

(ii) The age and condition of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve have diminished its value as a Federal energy security asset.

(iii) Global oil markets and the location and amount of United States oil production and refining capacity have dramatically changed in the 40 years since the establishment of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

(iv) Maximizing the energy security value of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve requires a modernized infrastructure that meets the drawdown and distribution needs of changed domestic and international oil and refining market conditions.

(B) REAFFIRMATION OF POLICY.—Congress reaffirms the continuing strategic importance and need for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve as found and declared in section 151 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6231).

(C) PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Energy shall establish a Strategic Petroleum Reserve modernization program to protect the United States economy from the impacts of emergency petroleum product supply disruptions. The program shall include—

(i) operational improvements to extend the useful life of surface and subsurface infrastructure;

(ii) maintenance of cavern storage integrity; and

(iii) addition of infrastructure and facilities to maximize the drawdown and incremental distribution capacity of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

(3) PROGRAM TO ENHANCE SAFETY, PERFORMANCE, AND RESILIENCE OF NATURAL GAS DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS.—

(A) PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Energy shall establish a grant program to provide financial assistance to States to offset the incremental rate increases paid by eligible households resulting from the implementation of State-approved infrastructure replacement, repair, and maintenance programs designed to accelerate the necessary replacement, repair, or maintenance of natural gas distribution systems.

(B) DATE OF ELIGIBILITY.—Awards may be provided under this paragraph to offset rate increases described in subsection (a) occurring on or after July 1, 2015.

(C) PRIORITIZATION.—The Secretary shall collaborate with States to prioritize the distribution of grants made under this paragraph. At a minimum, the Secretary shall consider prioritizing the distribution of grants to States which have—

(i) authorized or adopted enhanced infrastructure replacement programs or innovative rate recovery mechanisms, such as infrastructure cost trackers and riders, infrastructure base rate surcharges, deferred regulatory asset programs, and earnings stability mechanisms; and

(ii) a viable means for delivering financial assistance to eligible households.

(D) DEFINITION.—In this paragraph, the term ''eligible household'' means a household that is eligible to receive payments under section 8624(b)(2) of title 42, United States Code.

(4) PROGRAM TO ENHANCE ELECTRIC INFRASTRUCTURE RESILIENCE, RELIABILITY, AND ENERGY SECURITY.—

(A) PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall establish a competitive grant program to provide grants to States, units of local government, and Indian tribe economic development entities to enhance energy security through measures for electricity delivery infrastructure hardening and enhanced resilience and reliability.

(B) PURPOSE OF GRANTS.—The Secretary may make grants on a competitive basis to enable broader use of resiliency-related technologies, upgrades, and institutional measures and practices designed to—

(i) improve the resilience, reliability, and security of electricity delivery infrastructure;

(ii) improve preparedness and restoration time to mitigate power disturbances resulting from physical and cyber attacks, electromagnetic pulse attacks, geomagnetic disturbances, seismic events, and severe weather and other environmental stressors;

(iii) continue delivery of power to facilities critical to public health, safety, and welfare, including hospitals, assisted living facilities, and schools;

(iv) continue delivery of power to electricity-dependent essential services, including fueling stations and pumps, wastewater and sewage treatment facilities, gas pipeline infrastructure, communications systems, transportation services and systems, and services provided by emergency first responders; and

(v) enhance regional grid resilience and the resilience of electricity-dependent regional infrastructure.

(C) EXAMPLES.—Resiliency-related technologies, upgrades, and measures with respect to which grants may be made under this paragraph include—

(i) hardening, or other enhanced protection, of utility poles, wiring, cabling, and other distribution components, facilities, or structures;

(ii) advanced grid technologies capable of isolating or repairing problems remotely, such as advanced metering infrastructure, high-tech sensors, grid monitoring and control systems, and remote reconfiguration and redundancy systems;

(iii) cybersecurity products and components;

(iv) distributed generation, including back-up generation to power critical facilities and essential services, and related integration components, such as advanced inverter technology;

(v) microgrid systems, including hybrid microgrid systems for isolated communities;

(vi) combined heat and power;

(vii) waste heat resources;

(viii) non-grid-scale energy storage technologies;

(ix) wiring, cabling, and other distribution components, including submersible distribution components, and enclosures;

(x) electronically controlled reclosers and similar technologies for power restoration, including emergency mobile substations, as defined in section 1105 of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015;

(xi) advanced energy analytics technology, such as Internet-based and cloud-based computing solutions and subscription licensing models;

(xii) measures that enhance resilience through planning, preparation, response, and recovery activities;

(xiii) operational capabilities to enhance resilience through rapid response recovery; and

(xiv) measures to ensure availability of key critical components through contracts, cooperative agreements, stockpiling and prepositioning, or other measures.

(D) IMPLEMENTATION.—Specific projects or programs established, or to be established, pursuant to awards provided under this paragraph shall be implemented through the States by public and publicly regulated entities on a cost-shared basis.

(E) COOPERATION.—In carrying out projects or programs established, or to be established, pursuant to awards provided under this paragraph, award recipients shall cooperate, as applicable, with—

(i) State public utility commissions;

(ii) State energy offices;

(iii) electric infrastructure owners and operators; and

(iv) other entities responsible for maintaining electric reliability.

(F) DATA AND METRICS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—To the extent practicable, award recipients shall utilize the most current data, metrics, and frameworks related to—

(I) electricity delivery infrastructure hardening and enhancing resilience and reliability; and

(II) current and future threats, including physical and cyber attacks, electromagnetic pulse, geomagnetic disturbances, seismic events, and severe weather and other environmental stressors.

(ii) METRICS.—Award recipients shall demonstrate to the Secretary with measurable and verifiable data how the deployment of resiliency-related technologies, upgrades, and technologies achieve improvements in the resiliency and recovery of electricity delivery infrastructure and related services, including a comparison of data collected before and after deployment. Metrics for demonstrating improvements in resiliency and recovery may include—

(I) power quality during power disturbances when delivered power does not meet power quality requirements of the customer;

(II) duration of customer interruptions;

(III) number of customers impacted;

(IV) cost impacts, including business and other economic losses;

(V) impacts on electricity-dependent essential services and critical facilities; and

(VI) societal impacts.

(iii) FURTHERING ENERGY ASSURANCE PLANS.—Award recipients shall demonstrate to the Secretary how projects or programs established, or to be established, pursuant to awards provided under this paragraph further applicable State and local energy assurance plans.

(G) MATCHING CONTRIBUTIONS.—The Secretary may not make a grant under this paragraph unless the applicant agrees to make available non-Federal contributions (which may include in-kind contributions) in an amount not less than 50 percent of the Federal contribution.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated (and drawdowns and sales under subsection (c) in an equal amount are authorized)—

(1) for carrying out subsection (d)(2), $500,000,000 for the period encompassing fiscal years 2017 through 2020;

(2) for carrying out subsection (d)(3), $100,000,000 for the period encompassing fiscal years 2017 through 2020, of which not more than 5 percent may be used for administrative expenses; and

(3) for carrying out subsection (d)(4), $250,000,000 for the period encompassing fiscal years 2017 through 2020, of which not more than 5 percent may be used for administrative expenses.

(f) TRANSMISSION OF DEPARTMENT BUDGET REQUESTS.—The Secretary of Energy shall prepare and submit in the Department's annual budget request to Congress—

(1) an itemization of the amounts of funds necessary to carry out subsection (d); and

(2) a designation of any activities thereunder for which a multiyear budget authority would be appropriate.

(g) SUNSET.—The authority of the Secretary to drawdown and sell crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve under this section shall expire at the end of fiscal year 2020.

Subtitle C—Hydropower Regulatory Modernization

SEC. 1301. HYDROELECTRIC PRODUCTION AND EFFICIENCY INCENTIVES.

(a) HYDROELECTRIC PRODUCTION INCENTIVES.—Section 242 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C.15881) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c), by striking ''10'' and inserting ''20'';

(2) in subsection (f), by striking ''20'' and inserting ''30''; and

(3) in subsection (g), by striking ''each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2015'' and inserting ''each of fiscal years 2016 through 2025''.

(b) HYDROELECTRIC EFFICIENCY IMPROVEMENT.—Section 243(c) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15882(c)) is amended by striking ''each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2015'' and inserting ''each of fiscal years 2016 through 2025''.

SEC. 1302. PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY RIGHTS IN HYDROPOWER LICENSING.

(a) LICENCES.—Section 4(e) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 797(e)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and'' after ''recreational opportunities,''; and

(2) by inserting '', and minimizing infringement on the useful exercise and enjoyment of property rights held by nonlicensees'' after ''aspects of environmental quality''.

(b) PRIVATE LANDOWNERSHIP.—Section 10 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 803) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1), by inserting '', including minimizing infringement on the useful exercise and enjoyment of property rights held by nonlicensees'' after ''section 4(e)''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(k) PRIVATE LANDOWNERSHIP.—In developing any recreational resource within the project boundary, the licensee shall consider private landownership as a means to encourage and facilitate—

''(1) private investment; and

''(2) increased tourism and recreational use.''.

SEC. 1303. EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FERC PROJECT INVOLVING W. KERR SCOTT DAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the time period specified in section 13 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 806) that would otherwise apply to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission project numbered 12642, the Commission may, at the request of the licensee for the project, and after reasonable notice, in accordance with the good faith, due diligence, and public interest requirements of that section and the Commission's procedures under that section, extend the time period during which the licensee is required to commence the construction of the project for up to 3 consecutive 2-year periods from the date of the expiration of the extension originally issued by the Commission.

(b) REINSTATEMENT OF EXPIRED LICENSE.—If the period required for commencement of construction of the project described in subsection (a) has expired prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission may reinstate the license effective as of the date of its expiration and the first extension authorized under subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of such expiration.

SEC. 1304. HYDROPOWER LICENSING AND PROCESS IMPROVEMENTS.

Part I of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 792 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 34. HYDROPOWER LICENSING AND PROCESS IMPROVEMENTS.

''(a) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term 'Federal authorization'—

''(1) means any authorization required under Federal law with respect to an application for a license, license amendment, or exemption under this part; and

''(2) includes any permits, special use authorizations, certifications, opinions, or other approvals as may be required under Federal law to approve or implement the license, license amendment, or exemption under this part.

''(b) DESIGNATION AS LEAD AGENCY.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall act as the lead agency for the purposes of coordinating all applicable Federal authorizations and for the purposes of complying with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

''(2) OTHER AGENCIES AND INDIAN TRIBES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Each Federal, State, and local government agency and Indian tribe considering an aspect of an application for Federal authorization shall coordinate with the Commission and comply with the deadline established in the schedule developed for the project in accordance with the rule issued by the Commission under subsection (c).

''(B) IDENTIFICATION.—The Commission shall identify, as early as practicable after it is notified by the applicant of a project or facility requiring Commission action under this part, any Federal or State agency, local government, or Indian tribe that may consider an aspect of an application for a Federal authorization.

''(C) NOTIFICATION.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall notify any agency and Indian tribe identified under subparagraph (B) of the opportunity to participate in the process of reviewing an aspect of an application for a Federal authorization.

''(ii) DEADLINE.—Each agency and Indian tribe receiving a notice under clause (i) shall submit a response acknowledging receipt of the notice to the Commission within 30 days of receipt of such notice and request.

''(D) ISSUE IDENTIFICATION AND RESOLUTION.—

''(i) IDENTIFICATION OF ISSUES.—Federal, State, and local government agencies and Indian tribes that may consider an aspect of an application for Federal authorization shall identify, as early as possible, and share with the Commission and the applicant, any issues of concern identified during the pendency of the Commission's action under this part relating to any Federal authorization that may delay or prevent the granting of such authorization, including any issues that may prevent the agency or Indian tribe from meeting the schedule established for the project in accordance with the rule issued by the Commission under subsection (c).

''(ii) ISSUE RESOLUTION.—The Commission may forward any issue of concern identified under clause (i) to the heads of the relevant State and Federal agencies (including, in the case of scheduling concerns identified by a State or local government agency or Indian tribe, the Federal agency overseeing the delegated authority, or the Secretary of the Interior with regard to scheduling concerns identified by an Indian tribe) for resolution. The Commission and any relevant agency shall enter into a memorandum of understanding to facilitate interagency coordination and resolution of such issues of concern, as appropriate.

''(c) SCHEDULE.—

''(1) COMMISSION RULEMAKING TO ESTABLISH PROCESS TO SET SCHEDULE.—Within 180 days of the date of enactment of this section the Commission shall, in consultation with the appropriate Federal agencies, issue a rule, after providing for notice and public comment, establishing a process for setting a schedule following the filing of an application under this part for the review and disposition of each Federal authorization.

''(2) ELEMENTS OF SCHEDULING RULE.—In issuing a rule under this subsection, the Commission shall ensure that the schedule for each Federal authorization—

''(A) includes deadlines for actions by—

''(i) any Federal or State agency, local government, or Indian tribe that may consider an aspect of an application for the Federal authorization;

''(ii) the applicant;

''(iii) the Commission; and

''(iv) other participants in a proceeding;

''(B) is developed in consultation with the applicant and any agency and Indian tribe that submits a response under subsection (b)(2)(C)(ii);

''(C) provides an opportunity for any Federal or State agency, local government, or Indian tribe that may consider an aspect of an application for the applicable Federal authorization to identify and resolve issues of concern, as provided in subsection (b)(2)(D);

''(D) complies with applicable schedules established under Federal and State law;

''(E) ensures expeditious completion of all proceedings required under Federal and State law, to the extent practicable; and

''(F) facilitates completion of Federal and State agency studies, reviews, and any other procedures required prior to, or concurrent with, the preparation of the Commission's environmental document required under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

''(d) TRANSMISSION OF FINAL SCHEDULE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For each application for a license, license amendment, or exemption under this part, the Commission shall establish a schedule in accordance with the rule issued by the Commission under subsection (c). The Commission shall publicly notice and transmit the final schedule to the applicant and each agency and Indian tribe identified under subsection (b)(2)(B).

''(2) RESPONSE.—Each agency and Indian tribe receiving a schedule under this subsection shall acknowledge receipt of such schedule in writing to the Commission within 30 days.

''(e) ADHERENCE TO SCHEDULE.—All applicants, other licensing participants, and agencies and tribes considering an aspect of an application for a Federal authorization shall meet the deadlines set forth in the schedule established pursuant to subsection (d)(1).

''(f) APPLICATION PROCESSING.—The Commission, Federal, State, and local government agencies, and Indian tribes may allow an applicant seeking a Federal authorization to fund a third-party contractor selected by such agency or tribe to assist in reviewing the application. All costs of an agency or tribe incurred pursuant to direct funding by the applicant, including all costs associated with the third party contractor, shall not be considered costs of the United States for the administration of this part under section 10(e).

''(g) COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION ON SCOPE OF ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW.—For the purposes of coordinating Federal authorizations for each project, the Commission shall consult with and make a recommendation to agencies and Indian tribes receiving a schedule under subsection (d) on the scope of the environmental review for all Federal authorizations for such project. Each Federal and State agency and Indian tribe shall give due consideration and may give deference to the Commission's recommendations, to the extent appropriate under Federal law.

''(h) FAILURE TO MEET SCHEDULE.—A Federal, State, or local government agency or Indian tribe that anticipates that it will be unable to complete its disposition of a Federal authorization by the deadline set forth in the schedule established under subsection (d)(1) may file for an extension as provided under section 313(b)(2).

''(i) CONSOLIDATED RECORD.—The Commission shall, with the cooperation of Federal, State, and local government agencies and Indian tribes, maintain a complete consolidated record of all decisions made or actions taken by the Commission or by a Federal administrative agency or officer (or State or local government agency or officer or Indian tribe acting under delegated Federal authority) with respect to any Federal authorization. Such record shall constitute the record for judicial review under section 313(b).''.

SEC. 1305. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DELAYED FEDERAL AUTHORIZATIONS.

Section 313(b) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 825l(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''(b) Any party'' and inserting the following:

''(b) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Any party''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) DELAY OF A FEDERAL AUTHORIZATION.—Any Federal, State, or local government agency or Indian tribe that will not complete its disposition of a Federal authorization by the deadline set forth in the schedule by the Commission under section 34 may file for an extension in the United States court of appeals for any circuit wherein the project or proposed project is located, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Such petition shall be filed not later than 30 days prior to such deadline. The court shall only grant an extension if the agency or tribe demonstrates, based on the record maintained under section 34, that it otherwise complied with the requirements of section 34 and that complying with the schedule set by the Commission would have prevented the agency or tribe from complying with applicable Federal or State law. If the court grants the extension, the court shall set a reasonable schedule and deadline, not to exceed 90 days, for the agency to act on remand. If the court denies the extension, or if an agency or tribe does not file for an extension as provided in this subsection and does not complete its disposition of a Federal authorization by the applicable deadline, the Commission and applicant may move forward with the proposed action.''.

SEC. 1306. LICENSING STUDY IMPROVEMENTS.

Part I of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 792 et seq.), as amended by section 1304, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 35. LICENSING STUDY IMPROVEMENTS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—To facilitate the timely and efficient completion of the license proceedings under this part, the Commission shall, in consultation with applicable Federal and State agencies and interested members of the public—

''(1) compile current and accepted best practices in performing studies required in such license proceedings, including methodologies and the design of studies to assess the full range of environmental impacts of a project that reflect the most recent peer-reviewed science;

''(2) compile a comprehensive collection of studies and data accessible to the public that could be used to inform license proceedings under this part; and

''(3) encourage license applicants, agencies, and Indian tribes to develop and use, for the purpose of fostering timely and efficient consideration of license applications, a limited number of open-source methodologies and tools applicable across a wide array of projects, including water balance models and streamflow analyses.

''(b) USE OF STUDIES.—To the extent practicable, the Commission and other Federal, State, and local government agencies and Indian tribes considering an aspect of an application for Federal authorization shall use current, accepted science toward studies and data in support of their actions. Any participant in a proceeding with respect to a Federal authorization shall demonstrate a study requested by the party is not duplicative of current, existing studies that are applicable to the project.

''(c) BASIN-WIDE OR REGIONAL REVIEW.—The Commission shall establish a program to develop comprehensive plans, at the request of project applicants, on a regional or basin-wide scale, in consultation with the applicants, appropriate Federal agencies, and affected States, local governments, and Indian tribes, in basins or regions with respect to which there are more than one project or application for a project. Upon such a request, the Commission, in consultation with the applicants, such Federal agencies, and affected States, local governments, and Indian tribes, may conduct or commission regional or basin-wide environmental studies, with the participation of at least 2 applicants. Any study conducted under this subsection shall apply only to a project with respect to which the applicant participates.''.

SEC. 1307. CLOSED-LOOP PUMPED STORAGE PROJECTS.

Part I of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 792 et seq.), as amended by section 1306, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 36. CLOSED-LOOP PUMPED STORAGE PROJECTS.

''(a) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, a closed-loop pumped storage project is a project—

''(1) in which the upper and lower reservoirs do not impound or directly withdraw water from navigable waters; or

''(2) that is not continuously connected to a naturally flowing water feature.

''(b) IN GENERAL.—As provided in this section, the Commission may issue and amend licenses and preliminary permits, as appropriate, for closed-loop pumped storage projects.

''(c) DAM SAFETY.—Before issuing any license for a closed-loop pumped storage project, the Commission shall assess the safety of existing dams and other structures related to the project (including possible consequences associated with failure of such structures).

''(d) LICENSE CONDITIONS.—With respect to a closed-loop pumped storage project, the authority of the Commission to impose conditions on a license under sections 4(e), 10(a), 10(g), and 10(j) shall not apply, and any condition included in or applicable to a closed-loop pumped storage project licensed under this section, including any condition or other requirement of a Federal authorization, shall be limited to those that are—

''(1) necessary to protect public safety; or

''(2) reasonable, economically feasible, and essential to prevent loss of or damage to, or to mitigate adverse effects on, fish and wildlife resources directly caused by the construction and operation of the project, as compared to the environmental baseline existing at the time the Commission completes its environmental review.

''(e) TRANSFERS.—Notwithstanding section 5, and regardless of whether the holder of a preliminary permit for a closed-loop pumped storage project claimed municipal preference under section 7(a) when obtaining the permit, the Commission may, to facilitate development of a closed-loop pumped storage project—

''(1) add entities as joint permittees following issuance of a preliminary permit; and

''(2) transfer a license in part to one or more nonmunicipal entities as co-licensees with a municipality.''.

SEC. 1308. LICENSE AMENDMENT IMPROVEMENTS.

Part I of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 792 et seq.), as amended by section 1307, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 37. LICENSE AMENDMENT IMPROVEMENTS.

''(a) QUALIFYING PROJECT UPGRADES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—As provided in this section, the Commission may approve an application for an amendment to a license issued under this part for a qualifying project upgrade.

''(2) APPLICATION.—A licensee filing an application for an amendment to a project license under this section shall include in such application information sufficient to demonstrate that the proposed change to the project described in the application is a qualifying project upgrade.

''(3) INITIAL DETERMINATION.—Not later than 15 days after receipt of an application under paragraph (2), the Commission shall make an initial determination as to whether the proposed change to the project described in the application for a license amendment is a qualifying project upgrade. The Commission shall publish its initial determination and issue notice of the application filed under paragraph (2). Such notice shall solicit public comment on the initial determination within 45 days.

''(4) PUBLIC COMMENT ON QUALIFYING CRITERIA.—The Commission shall accept public comment regarding whether a proposed license amendment is for a qualifying project upgrade for a period of 45 days beginning on the date of publication of a public notice described in paragraph (3), and shall—

''(A) if no entity contests whether the proposed license amendment is for a qualifying project upgrade during such comment period, immediately publish a notice stating that the initial determination has not been contested; or

''(B) if an entity contests whether the proposed license amendment is for a qualifying project upgrade during the comment period, issue a written determination in accordance with paragraph (5).

''(5) WRITTEN DETERMINATION.—If an entity contests whether the proposed license amendment is for a qualifying project upgrade during the comment period under paragraph (4), the Commission shall, not later than 30 days after the date of publication of the public notice of the initial determination under paragraph (3), issue a written determination as to whether the proposed license amendment is for a qualifying project upgrade.

''(6) PUBLIC COMMENT ON AMENDMENT APPLICATION.—If no entity contests whether the proposed license amendment is for a qualifying project upgrade during the comment period under paragraph (4) or the Commission issues a written determination under paragraph (5) that a proposed license amendment is a qualifying project upgrade, the Commission shall—

''(A) during the 60-day period beginning on the date of publication of a notice under paragraph (4)(A) or the date on which the Commission issues the written determination under paragraph (5), as applicable, solicit comments from each Federal, State, and local government agency and Indian tribe considering an aspect of an application for Federal authorization (as defined in section 34) with respect to the proposed license amendment, as well as other interested agencies, Indian tribes, and members of the public; and

''(B) during the 90-day period beginning on the date of publication of a notice under paragraph (4)(A) or the date on which the Commission issues the written determination under paragraph (5), as applicable, consult with—

''(i) appropriate Federal agencies and the State agency exercising administrative control over the fish and wildlife resources, and water quality and supply, of the State in which the qualifying project upgrade is located;

''(ii) any Federal department supervising any public lands or reservations occupied by the qualifying project upgrade; and

''(iii) any Indian tribe affected by the qualifying project upgrade.

''(7) FEDERAL AUTHORIZATIONS.—The schedule established by the Commission under section 34 for any project upgrade under this subsection shall require final disposition on all necessary Federal authorizations (as defined in section 34), other than final action by the Commission, by not later than 120 days after the date on which the Commission issues a notice under paragraph (4)(A) or a written determination under paragraph (5), as applicable.

''(8) COMMISSION ACTION.—Not later than 150 days after the date on which the Commission issues a notice under paragraph (4)(A) or a written determination under paragraph (5), as applicable, the Commission shall take final action on the license amendment application.

''(9) LICENSE AMENDMENT CONDITIONS.—Any condition included in or applicable to a license amendment approved under this subsection, including any condition or other requirement of a Federal authorization, shall be limited to those that are—

''(A) necessary to protect public safety; or

''(B) reasonable, economically feasible, and essential to prevent loss of or damage to, or to mitigate adverse effects on, fish and wildlife resources, water supply, and water quality that are directly caused by the construction and operation of the qualifying project upgrade, as compared to the environmental baseline existing at the time the Commission approves the application for the license amendment.

''(10) PROPOSED LICENSE AMENDMENTS THAT ARE NOT QUALIFYING PROJECT UPGRADES.—If the Commission determines under paragraph (3) or (5) that a proposed license amendment is not for a qualifying project upgrade, the procedures under paragraphs (6) through (9) shall not apply to the application.

''(11) RULEMAKING.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, issue a rule to implement this subsection.

''(12) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection:

''(A) QUALIFYING PROJECT UPGRADE.—The term 'qualifying project upgrade' means a change to a project licensed under this part that meets the qualifying criteria, as determined by the Commission.

''(B) QUALIFYING CRITERIA.—The term 'qualifying criteria' means, with respect to a project license under this part, a change to the project that—

''(i) if carried out, would be unlikely to adversely affect any species listed as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 or result in the destruction or adverse modification of critical habitat, as determined in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior or Secretary of Commerce, as appropriate, in accordance with section 7 of the Endangered Species Act of 1973;

''(ii) is consistent with any applicable comprehensive plan under section 10(a)(2);

''(iii) includes only changes to project lands, waters, or operations that, in the judgment of the Commission, would result in only insignificant or minimal cumulative adverse environmental effects;

''(iv) would be unlikely to adversely affect water quality and water supply; and

''(v) proposes to implement—

''(I) capacity increases, efficiency improvements, or other enhancements to hydropower generation at the licensed project;

''(II) environmental protection, mitigation, or enhancement measures to benefit fish and wildlife resources or other natural and cultural resources; or

''(III) improvements to public recreation at the licensed project.

''(b) AMENDMENT APPROVAL PROCESSES.—

''(1) RULE.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, issue a rule establishing new standards and procedures for license amendment applications under this part. In issuing such rule, the Commission shall seek to develop the most efficient and expedient process, consultation, and review requirements, commensurate with the scope of different categories of proposed license amendments. Such rule shall account for differences in environmental effects across a wide range of categories of license amendment applications.

''(2) CAPACITY.—In issuing a rule under this subsection, the Commission shall take into consideration that a change in generating or hydraulic capacity may indicate the potential environmental effects of a proposed amendment but is not determinative of such effects.

''(3) PROCESS OPTIONS.—In issuing a rule under this subsection, the Commission shall take into consideration the range of process options available under the Commission's regulations for new and original license applications and adapt such options to amendment applications, where appropriate.''.

SEC. 1309. PROMOTING HYDROPOWER DEVELOPMENT AT EXISTING NONPOWERED DAMS.

Part I of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 792 et seq.), as amended by section 1308, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 38. PROMOTING HYDROPOWER DEVELOPMENT AT EXISTING NONPOWERED DAMS.

''(a) EXEMPTIONS FOR QUALIFYING FACILITIES.—

''(1) EXEMPTION QUALIFICATIONS.—Subject to the requirements of this subsection, the Commission may grant an exemption in whole or in part from the requirements of this part, including any license requirements contained in this part, to any facility the Commission determines is a qualifying facility.

''(2) CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL AND STATE AGENCIES.—In granting any exemption under this subsection, the Commission shall consult with—

''(A) the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Marine Fisheries Service, and the State agency exercising administrative control over the fish and wildlife resources of the State in which the facility will be located, in the manner provided by the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act;

''(B) any Federal department supervising any public lands or reservations occupied by the project; and

''(C) any Indian tribe affected by the project.

''(3) EXEMPTION CONDITIONS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall include in any exemption granted under this subsection only such terms and conditions that the Commission determines are—

''(i) necessary to protect public safety; or

''(ii) reasonable, economically feasible, and essential to prevent loss of or damage to, or to mitigate adverse effects on, fish and wildlife resources directly caused by the construction and operation of the qualifying facility, as compared to the environmental baseline existing at the time the Commission grants the exemption.

''(B) NO CHANGES TO RELEASE REGIME.—No Federal authorization required with respect to a qualifying facility described in paragraph (1), including an exemption granted by the Commission under this subsection, may include any condition or other requirement that results in any material change to the storage, control, withdrawal, diversion, release, or flow operations of the associated qualifying nonpowered dam.

''(4) ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW.—The Commission's environmental review under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 of a proposed exemption under this subsection shall consist only of an environmental assessment, unless the Commission determines, by rule or order, that the Commission's obligations under such Act for granting exemptions under this subsection can be met through a categorical exclusion.

''(5) VIOLATION OF TERMS OF EXEMPTION.—Any violation of a term or condition of any exemption granted under this subsection shall be treated as a violation of a rule or order of the Commission under this Act.

''(6) ANNUAL CHARGES FOR ENHANCEMENT ACTIVITIES.—Exemptees under this subsection for any facility located at a non-Federal dam shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the Commission for the purpose of funding environmental enhancement projects in watersheds in which facilities exempted under this subsection are located. Such annual charges shall be equivalent to the annual charges for use of a Government dam under section 10(e), unless the Commission determines, by rule, that a lower charge is appropriate to protect exemptees' investment in the project or avoid increasing the price to consumers of power due to such charges. The proceeds of charges made by the Commission under this paragraph shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts. Subject to annual appropriation Acts, such proceeds shall be available to Federal and State fish and wildlife agencies for purposes of carrying out specific environmental enhancement projects in watersheds in which one or more facilities exempted under this subsection are located. Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall establish rules, after notice and opportunity for public comment, for the collection and administration of annual charges under this paragraph.

''(7) EFFECT OF JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of the Commission over any qualifying facility exempted under this subsection shall extend only to the qualifying facility exempted and any associated primary transmission line, and shall not extend to any conduit, dam, impoundment, shoreline or other land, or any other project work associated with the qualifying facility exempted under this subsection.

''(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

''(1) FEDERAL AUTHORIZATION.—The term 'Federal authorization' has the same meaning as provided in section 34.

''(2) QUALIFYING CRITERIA.—The term 'qualifying criteria' means, with respect to a facility—

''(A) as of the date of enactment of this section, the facility is not licensed under, or exempted from the license requirements contained in, this part;

''(B) the facility will be associated with a qualifying nonpowered dam;

''(C) the facility will be constructed, operated, and maintained for the generation of electric power;

''(D) the facility will use for such generation any withdrawals, diversions, releases, or flows from the associated qualifying nonpowered dam, including its associated impoundment or other infrastructure; and

''(E) the operation of the facility will not result in any material change to the storage, control, withdrawal, diversion, release, or flow operations of the associated qualifying nonpowered dam.

''(3) QUALIFYING FACILITY.—The term 'qualifying facility' means a facility that is determined under this section to meet the qualifying criteria.

''(4) QUALIFYING NONPOWERED DAM.—The term 'qualifying nonpowered dam' means any dam, dike, embankment, or other barrier—

''(A) the construction of which was completed on or before the date of enactment of this section;

''(B) that is operated for the control, release, or distribution of water for agricultural, municipal, navigational, industrial, commercial, environmental, recreational, aesthetic, or flood control purposes;

''(C) that, as of the date of enactment of this section, is not equipped with hydropower generating works that are licensed under, or exempted from the license requirements contained in, this part; and

''(D) that, in the case of a non-Federal dam, has been certified by an independent consultant approved by the Commission as complying with the Commission's dam safety requirements.''.

TITLE II—21ST CENTURY WORKFORCE

SEC. 2001. ENERGY AND MANUFACTURING WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Energy (in this section referred to as the ''Secretary'') shall establish and carry out a comprehensive program to improve education and training for energy and manufacturing-related jobs in order to increase the number of skilled workers trained to work in energy and manufacturing-related fields, including by—

(1) encouraging underrepresented groups, including religious and ethnic minorities, women, veterans, individuals with disabilities, and socioeconomically disadvantaged individuals to enter into the science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (in this section referred to as ''STEM'') fields;

(2) encouraging the Nation's education system to equip students with the skills, mentorships, training, and technical expertise necessary to fill the employment opportunities vital to managing and operating the Nation's energy and manufacturing industries;

(3) providing students and other candidates for employment with the necessary skills and certifications for skilled, semiskilled, and highly skilled energy and manufacturing-related jobs; and

(4) strengthening and more fully engaging Department of Energy programs and labs in carrying out the Department's Minorities in Energy Initiative.

(b) PRIORITY.—The Secretary shall make educating and training underrepresented groups for energy and manufacturing-related jobs a national priority under the program established under subsection (a).

(c) DIRECT ASSISTANCE.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall provide direct assistance (including financial assistance awards, technical expertise, wraparound services, career coaching, mentorships, internships, and partnerships) to schools, community colleges, workforce development organizations, nonprofit organizations, labor organizations, apprenticeship programs, and minority serving institutions. The Secretary shall distribute direct assistance in a manner proportional to energy and manufacturing industry needs and demand for jobs, consistent with information obtained under subsections (e)(3) and (i).

(d) CLEARINGHOUSE.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall establish a clearinghouse to—

(1) maintain and update information and resources on training and workforce development programs for energy and manufacturing-related jobs, including job training and workforce development programs available to assist displaced and unemployed energy and manufacturing workers transitioning to new employment; and

(2) act as a resource, and provide guidance, for schools, community colleges, universities (including minority serving institutions), workforce development programs, labor-management organizations, and industry organizations that would like to develop and implement energy and manufacturing-related training programs.

(e) COLLABORATION.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary—

(1) shall collaborate with schools, community colleges, universities (including minority serving institutions), workforce-training organizations, national laboratories, unions, State energy offices, workforce investment boards, and the energy and manufacturing industries;

(2) shall encourage and foster collaboration, mentorships, and partnerships among organizations (including unions, industry, schools, community colleges, workforce-development organizations, and colleges and universities) that currently provide effective job training programs in the energy and manufacturing fields and institutions (including schools, community colleges, workforce development programs, and colleges and universities) that seek to establish these types of programs in order to share best practices and approaches that best suit local, State, and national needs; and

(3) shall collaborate with the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of the Census, and the energy and manufacturing industries to develop a comprehensive and detailed understanding of the energy and manufacturing workforce needs and opportunities by State and by region, and publish an annual report on energy and manufacturing job creation by the sectors enumerated in subsection (i).

(f) GUIDELINES FOR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary, in collaboration with the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the National Science Foundation, and industry shall develop voluntary guidelines and best practices for educational institutions of all levels, including for elementary and secondary schools and community colleges and for undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate university programs, to help provide graduates with the skills necessary to work in energy and manufacturing-related jobs.

(2) INPUT.—The Secretary shall solicit input from the oil, gas, coal, renewable, nuclear, utility, energy-intensive and advanced manufacturing, and pipeline industries in developing guidelines under paragraph (1).

(3) ENERGY AND MANUFACTURING EFFICIENCY AND CONSERVATION INITIATIVES.—The guidelines developed under paragraph (1) shall include grade-specific guidelines for teaching energy and manufacturing efficiency and conservation initiatives to educate students and families.

(4) STEM EDUCATION.—The guidelines developed under paragraph (1) shall promote STEM education as it relates to job opportunities in energy and manufacturing-related fields of study in schools, community colleges, and universities nationally.

(g) OUTREACH TO MINORITY SERVING INSTITUTIONS.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

(1) give special consideration to increasing outreach to minority serving institutions (including historically black colleges and universities, predominantly black institutions, Hispanic serving institutions, and tribal institutions);

(2) make resources available to minority serving institutions with the objective of increasing the number of skilled minorities and women trained to go into the energy and manufacturing sectors;

(3) encourage industry to improve the opportunities for students of minority serving institutions to participate in industry internships and cooperative work/study programs; and

(4) partner with the Department of Energy laboratories to increase underrepresented groups' participation in internships, fellowships, traineeships, and employment at all Department of Energy laboratories.

(h) OUTREACH TO DISPLACED AND UNEMPLOYED ENERGY AND MANUFACTURING WORKERS.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

(1) give special consideration to increasing outreach to employers and job trainers preparing displaced and unemployed energy and manufacturing workers for emerging energy and manufacturing jobs;

(2) make resources available to institutions serving displaced and unemployed energy and manufacturing workers with the objective of training individuals to re-enter the energy and manufacturing workforce;

(3) encourage the energy and manufacturing industries to improve opportunities for displaced and unemployed energy and manufacturing workers to participate in internships and cooperative work/study programs; and

(4) work closely with the energy and manufacturing industries to identify energy and manufacturing operations, such as coal-fired power plants and coal mines, scheduled for closure and to provide early intervention assistance to workers employed at such energy and manufacturing operations by—

(A) giving special consideration to employers and job trainers preparing such workers for emerging energy and manufacturing jobs;

(B) making resources available to institutions serving such workers with the objective of training them to re-enter the energy and manufacturing workforce; and

(C) encouraging the energy and manufacturing industries to improve opportunities for such workers to participate in internships and cooperative work-study programs.

(i) GUIDELINES TO DEVELOP SKILLS FOR AN ENERGY AND MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY WORKFORCE.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall collaborate with representatives from the energy and manufacturing industries (including the oil, gas, coal, nuclear, utility, pipeline, renewable, petrochemical, manufacturing, and electrical construction sectors) to identify the areas of highest need in each sector and to develop guidelines for the skills necessary to develop a workforce trained to go into the following sectors of the energy and manufacturing sectors:

(1) Energy efficiency industry, including work in energy efficiency, conservation, weatherization, or retrofitting, or as inspectors or auditors.

(2) Pipeline industry, including work in pipeline construction and maintenance or work as engineers or technical advisors.

(3) Utility industry, including work in the generation, transmission, and distribution of electricity and natural gas, such as utility technicians, operators, lineworkers, engineers, scientists, and information technology specialists.

(4) Alternative fuels, including work in biofuel development and production.

(5) Nuclear industry, including work as scientists, engineers, technicians, mathematicians, or security personnel.

(6) Oil and gas industry, including work as scientists, engineers, technicians, mathematicians, petrochemical engineers, or geologists.

(7) Renewable industry, including work in the development, manufacturing, and production of renewable energy sources (such as solar, hydropower, wind, or geothermal energy).

(8) Coal industry, including work as coal miners, engineers, developers and manufacturers of state-of-the-art coal facilities, technology vendors, coal transportation workers and operators, or mining equipment vendors.

(9) Manufacturing industry, including work as operations technicians, operations and design in additive manufacturing, 3–D printing, advanced composites, and advanced aluminum and other metal alloys, industrial energy efficiency management systems, including power electronics, and other innovative technologies.

(10) Chemical manufacturing industry, including work in construction (such as welders, pipefitters, and tool and die makers) or as instrument and electrical technicians, machinists, chemical process operators, chemical engineers, quality and safety professionals, and reliability engineers.

(j) ENROLLMENT IN TRAINING AND APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS.—In carrying out the program established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall work with industry, organized labor, and community-based workforce organizations to help identify students and other candidates, including from underrepresented communities such as minorities, women, and veterans, to enroll into training and apprenticeship programs for energy and manufacturing-related jobs.

TITLE III—ENERGY SECURITY AND DIPLOMACY

SEC. 3001. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) North America's energy revolution has significantly enhanced energy security in the United States, and fundamentally changed the Nation's energy future from that of scarcity to abundance.

(2) North America's energy abundance has increased global energy supplies and reduced the price of energy for consumers in the United States and abroad.

(3) Allies and trading partners of the United States, including in Europe and Asia, are seeking stable and affordable energy supplies from North America to enhance their energy security.

(4) The United States has an opportunity to improve its energy security and promote greater stability and affordability of energy supplies for its allies and trading partners through a more integrated, secure, and competitive North American energy system.

(5) The United States also has an opportunity to promote such objectives by supporting the free flow of energy commodities and more open, transparent, and competitive global energy markets, and through greater Federal agency coordination relating to regulations or agency actions that significantly affect the supply, distribution, or use of energy.

SEC. 3002. ENERGY SECURITY VALUATION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ENERGY SECURITY VALUATION METHODS.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, in collaboration with the Secretary of State, shall develop and transmit, after public notice and comment, to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report that develops recommended United States energy security valuation methods. In developing the report, the Secretaries may consider the recommendations of the Administration's Quadrennial Energy Review released on April 21, 2015. The report shall—

(1) evaluate and define United States energy security to reflect modern domestic and global energy markets and the collective needs of the United States and its allies and partners;

(2) identify transparent and uniform or coordinated procedures and criteria to ensure that energy-related actions that significantly affect the supply, distribution, or use of energy are evaluated with respect to their potential impact on energy security, including their impact on—

(A) consumers and the economy;

(B) energy supply diversity and resiliency;

(C) well-functioning and competitive energy markets;

(D) United States trade balance; and

(E) national security objectives; and

(3) include a recommended implementation strategy that identifies and aims to ensure that the procedures and criteria referred to in paragraph (2) are—

(A) evaluated consistently across the Federal Government; and

(B) weighed appropriately and balanced with environmental considerations required by Federal law.

(b) PARTICIPATION.—In developing the report referred to in subsection (a), the Secretaries may consult with relevant Federal, State, private sector, and international participants, as appropriate and consistent with applicable law.

SEC. 3003. NORTH AMERICAN ENERGY SECURITY PLAN.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, in collaboration with the Secretary of State, shall develop and transmit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate the plan described in subsection (b).

(b) PURPOSE.—The plan referred to in subsection (a) shall include—

(1) a recommended framework and implementation strategy to—

(A) improve planning and coordination with Canada and Mexico to enhance energy integration, strengthen North American energy security, and promote efficiencies in the exploration, production, storage, supply, distribution, marketing, pricing, and regulation of North American energy resources; and

(B) address—

(i) North American energy public data, statistics, and mapping collaboration;

(ii) responsible and sustainable best practices for the development of unconventional oil and natural gas; and

(iii) modern, resilient energy infrastructure for North America, including physical infrastructure as well as institutional infrastructure such as policies, regulations, and practices relating to energy development; and

(2) a recommended framework and implementation strategy to improve collaboration with Caribbean and Central American partners on energy security, including actions to support—

(A) more open, transparent, and competitive energy markets;

(B) regulatory capacity building;

(C) improvements to energy transmission and storage; and

(D) improvements to the performance of energy infrastructure and efficiency.

(c) PARTICIPATION.—In developing the plan referred to in subsection (a), the Secretaries may consult with other Federal, State, private sector, and international participants, as appropriate and consistent with applicable law.

SEC. 3004. COLLECTIVE ENERGY SECURITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of State shall collaborate to strengthen domestic energy security and the energy security of the allies and trading partners of the United States, including through actions that support or facilitate—

(1) energy diplomacy;

(2) the delivery of United States assistance, including energy resources and technologies, to prevent or mitigate an energy security crisis;

(3) the development of environmentally and commercially sustainable energy resources;

(4) open, transparent, and competitive energy markets; and

(5) regulatory capacity building.

(b) ENERGY SECURITY FORUMS.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, in collaboration with the Secretary of State, shall convene not less than 2 forums to promote the collective energy security of the United States and its allies and trading partners. The forums shall include participation by the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of State. In addition, an invitation shall be extended to—

(1) appropriate representatives of foreign governments that are allies or trading partners of the United States; and

(2) independent experts and industry representatives.

(c) REQUIREMENTS.—The forums shall—

(1) consist of at least one Trans-Atlantic and one Trans-Pacific energy security forum;

(2) be designed to foster dialogue among government officials, independent experts, and industry representatives regarding—

(A) the current state of global energy markets;

(B) trade and investment issues relevant to energy; and

(C) barriers to more open, competitive, and transparent energy markets; and

(3) be recorded and made publicly available on the Department of Energy's website, including, not later than 30 days after each forum, publication on the website any significant outcomes.

(d) NOTIFICATION.—At least 30 days before each of the forums referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary of Energy shall send a notification regarding the forum to—

(1) the chair and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

SEC. 3005. STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE MISSION READINESS PLAN.

Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall conduct a long-range strategic review of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve and develop and transmit to Congress a plan that includes an analysis and implementation schedule that—

(1) specifies near-term and long-term roles of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve relative to United States energy security and economic goals and objectives;

(2) describes existing legal authorities governing the policies, configuration, and capabilities of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve;

(3) identifies Strategic Petroleum Reserve configuration and performance capabilities and recommends an action plan to achieve the optimal—

(A) capacity, location, and composition of petroleum products in the Reserve; and

(B) storage and distributional capabilities; and

(4) estimates the resources required to attain and maintain the Strategic Petroleum Reserve's long-term sustainability and operational effectiveness.

SEC. 3006. AUTHORIZATION TO EXPORT NATURAL GAS.

(a) DECISION DEADLINE.—For proposals that must also obtain authorization from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission or the United States Maritime Administration to site, construct, expand, or operate LNG export facilities, the Department of Energy shall issue a final decision on any application for the authorization to export natural gas under section 3 of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717b) not later than 30 days after the later of—

(1) the conclusion of the review to site, construct, expand, or operate the LNG facilities required by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.); or

(2) the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) CONCLUSION OF REVIEW.—For purposes of subsection (a), review required by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 shall be considered concluded—

(1) for a project requiring an Environmental Impact Statement, 30 days after publication of a Final Environmental Impact Statement;

(2) for a project for which an Environmental Assessment has been prepared, 30 days after publication by the Department of Energy of a Finding of No Significant Impact; and

(3) upon a determination by the lead agency that an application is eligible for a categorical exclusion pursuant to National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 implementing regulations.

(c) PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF EXPORT DESTINATIONS.—Section 3 of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717b) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(g) PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF LNG EXPORT DESTINATIONS.—As a condition for approval of any authorization to export LNG, the Secretary of Energy shall require the applicant to publicly disclose the specific destination or destinations of any such authorized LNG exports.''.

TITLE IV—ENERGY EFFICIENCY AND ACCOUNTABILITY

Subtitle A—Energy Efficiency

CHAPTER 1—FEDERAL AGENCY ENERGY EFFICIENCY

SEC. 4111. ENERGY-EFFICIENT AND ENERGY-SAVING INFORMATION TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Subtitle C of title V of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (Public Law 110–140; 121 Stat. 1661) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 530. ENERGY-EFFICIENT AND ENERGY-SAVING INFORMATION TECHNOLOGIES.

''(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

''(1) DIRECTOR.—The term 'Director' means the Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

''(2) INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY.—The term 'information technology' has the meaning given that term in section 11101 of title 40, United States Code.

''(b) DEVELOPMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION STRATEGY.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, each Federal agency shall coordinate with the Director, the Secretary, and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to develop an implementation strategy (that includes best practices and measurement and verification techniques) for the maintenance, purchase, and use by the Federal agency of energy-efficient and energy-saving information technologies, taking into consideration the performance goals established under subsection (d).

''(c) ADMINISTRATION.—In developing an implementation strategy under subsection (b), each Federal agency shall consider—

''(1) advanced metering infrastructure;

''(2) energy-efficient data center strategies and methods of increasing asset and infrastructure utilization;

''(3) advanced power management tools;

''(4) building information modeling, including building energy management;

''(5) secure telework and travel substitution tools; and

''(6) mechanisms to ensure that the agency realizes the energy cost savings brought about through increased efficiency and utilization.

''(d) PERFORMANCE GOALS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Director, in consultation with the Secretary, shall establish performance goals for evaluating the efforts of Federal agencies in improving the maintenance, purchase, and use of energy-efficient and energy-saving information technology.

''(2) BEST PRACTICES.—The Chief Information Officers Council established under section 3603 of title 44, United States Code, shall recommend best practices for the attainment of the performance goals, which shall include Federal agency consideration of, to the extent applicable by law, the use of—

''(A) energy savings performance contracting; and

''(B) utility energy services contracting.

''(e) REPORTS.—

''(1) AGENCY REPORTS.—Each Federal agency shall include in the report of the agency under section 527 a description of the efforts and results of the agency under this section.

''(2) OMB GOVERNMENT EFFICIENCY REPORTS AND SCORECARDS.—Effective beginning not later than October 1, 2017, the Director shall include in the annual report and scorecard of the Director required under section 528 a description of the efforts and results of Federal agencies under this section.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 529 the following:

''Sec. 530. Energy-efficient and energy-saving information technologies.''.

SEC. 4112. ENERGY EFFICIENT DATA CENTERS.

Section 453 of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17112) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(2)(D)(iv), by striking ''determined by the organization'' and inserting ''proposed by the stakeholders'';

(2) by striking subsection (b)(3); and

(3) by striking subsections (c) through (g) and inserting the following:

''(c) STAKEHOLDER INVOLVEMENT.—The Secretary and the Administrator shall carry out subsection (b) in collaboration with the information technology industry and other key stakeholders, with the goal of producing results that accurately reflect the most relevant and useful information available. In such collaboration, the Secretary and the Administrator shall pay particular attention to organizations that—

''(1) have members with expertise in energy efficiency and in the development, operation, and functionality of data centers, information technology equipment, and software, such as representatives of hardware manufacturers, data center operators, and facility managers;

''(2) obtain and address input from Department of Energy National Laboratories or any college, university, research institution, industry association, company, or public interest group with applicable expertise;

''(3) follow—

''(A) commonly accepted procedures for the development of specifications; and

''(B) accredited standards development processes; and

''(4) have a mission to promote energy efficiency for data centers and information technology.

''(d) MEASUREMENTS AND SPECIFICATIONS.—The Secretary and the Administrator shall consider and assess the adequacy of the specifications, measurements, best practices, and benchmarks described in subsection (b) for use by the Federal Energy Management Program, the Energy Star Program, and other efficiency programs of the Department of Energy or the Environmental Protection Agency.

''(e) STUDY.—The Secretary, in collaboration with the Administrator, shall, not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015, make available to the public an update to the Report to Congress on Server and Data Center Energy Efficiency published on August 2, 2007, under section 1 of Public Law 109–431 (120 Stat. 2920), that provides—

''(1) a comparison and gap analysis of the estimates and projections contained in the original report with new data regarding the period from 2008 through 2015;

''(2) an analysis considering the impact of information technologies, including virtualization and cloud computing, in the public and private sectors;

''(3) an evaluation of the impact of the combination of cloud platforms, mobile devices, social media, and big data on data center energy usage;

''(4) an evaluation of water usage in data centers and recommendations for reductions in such water usage; and

''(5) updated projections and recommendations for best practices through fiscal year 2020.

''(f) DATA CENTER ENERGY PRACTITIONER PROGRAM.—The Secretary, in collaboration with key stakeholders and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall maintain a data center energy practitioner program that leads to the certification of energy practitioners qualified to evaluate the energy usage and efficiency opportunities in Federal data centers. Each Federal agency shall consider having the data centers of the agency evaluated every 4 years, in accordance with section 543(f) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8253), by energy practitioners certified pursuant to such program.

''(g) OPEN DATA INITIATIVE.—The Secretary, in collaboration with key stakeholders and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall establish an open data initiative for Federal data center energy usage data, with the purpose of making such data available and accessible in a manner that encourages further data center innovation, optimization, and consolidation. In establishing the initiative, the Secretary shall consider the use of the online Data Center Maturity Model.

''(h) INTERNATIONAL SPECIFICATIONS AND METRICS.—The Secretary, in collaboration with key stakeholders, shall actively participate in efforts to harmonize global specifications and metrics for data center energy and water efficiency.

''(i) DATA CENTER UTILIZATION METRIC.—The Secretary, in collaboration with key stakeholders, shall facilitate the development of an efficiency metric that measures the energy efficiency of a data center (including equipment and facilities).

''(j) PROTECTION OF PROPRIETARY INFORMATION.—The Secretary and the Administrator shall not disclose any proprietary information or trade secrets provided by any individual or company for the purposes of carrying out this section or the programs and initiatives established under this section.''.

SEC. 4113. REPORT ON ENERGY AND WATER SAVINGS POTENTIAL FROM THERMAL INSULATION.

(a) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies and relevant stakeholders, shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report on the impact of thermal insulation on both energy and water use systems for potable hot and chilled water in Federal buildings, and the return on investment of installing such insulation.

(b) CONTENTS.—The report shall include—

(1) an analysis based on the cost of municipal or regional water for delivered water and the avoided cost of new water; and

(2) a summary of energy and water savings, including short-term and long-term (20 years) projections of such savings.

SEC. 4114. FEDERAL PURCHASE REQUIREMENT.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—Section 203(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15852(b)) is amended by striking paragraph (2) and inserting the following:

''(2) RENEWABLE ENERGY.—The term 'renewable energy' means electric energy, or thermal energy if resulting from a thermal energy project placed in service after December 31, 2014, generated from, or avoided by, solar, wind, biomass, landfill gas, ocean (including tidal, wave, current, and thermal), geothermal, municipal solid waste (in accordance with subsection (e)), qualified waste heat resource, or new hydroelectric generation capacity achieved from increased efficiency or additions of new capacity at an existing hydroelectric project.

''(3) QUALIFIED WASTE HEAT RESOURCE.—The term 'qualified waste heat resource' means—

''(A) exhaust heat or flared gas from any industrial process;

''(B) waste gas or industrial tail gas that would otherwise be flared, incinerated, or vented;

''(C) a pressure drop in any gas for an industrial or commercial process; or

''(D) such other forms of waste heat as the Secretary determines appropriate.''.

(b) PAPER RECYCLING.—Section 203 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15852) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(e) PAPER RECYCLING.—

''(1) SEPARATE COLLECTION.—For purposes of this section, any Federal agency may consider electric energy generation purchased from a facility to be renewable energy if the municipal solid waste used by the facility to generate the electricity is—

''(A) separately collected (within the meaning of section 246.101(z) of title 40, Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on the date of enactment of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015) from paper that is commonly recycled; and

''(B) processed in a way that keeps paper that is commonly recycled segregated from non-recyclable solid waste.

''(2) INCIDENTAL INCLUSION.—Municipal solid waste used to generate electric energy that meets the conditions described in paragraph (1) shall be considered renewable energy even if the municipal solid waste contains incidental commonly recycled paper.

''(3) NO EFFECT ON EXISTING PROCESSES.—Nothing in paragraph (1) shall be interpreted to require a State or political subdivision of a State, directly or indirectly, to change the systems, processes, or equipment it uses to collect, treat, dispose of, or otherwise use municipal solid waste, within the meaning of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6901 et seq.), nor require a change to the regulations that implement subtitle D of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6941 et seq.).''.

SEC. 4115. ENERGY PERFORMANCE REQUIREMENT FOR FEDERAL BUILDINGS.

Section 543 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8253) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (a) and inserting the following:

''(a) ENERGY PERFORMANCE REQUIREMENT FOR FEDERAL BUILDINGS.—

''(1) REQUIREMENT.—Subject to paragraph (2), each agency shall apply energy conservation measures to, and shall improve the design for the construction of, the Federal buildings of the agency (including each industrial or laboratory facility) so that the energy consumption per gross square foot of the Federal buildings of the agency in fiscal years 2006 through 2017 is reduced, as compared with the energy consumption per gross square foot of the Federal buildings of the agency in fiscal year 2003, by the percentage specified in the following table:

''Fiscal Year	Percentage Reduction
2006	2
2007	4
2008	9
2009	12
2010	15
2011	18
2012	21
2013	24
2014	27
2015	30
2016	33
2017	36.

''(2) EXCLUSION FOR BUILDINGS WITH ENERGY INTENSIVE ACTIVITIES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—An agency may exclude from the requirements of paragraph (1) any building (including the associated energy consumption and gross square footage) in which energy intensive activities are carried out.

''(B) REPORTS.—Each agency shall identify and list in each report made under section 548(a) the buildings designated by the agency for exclusion under subparagraph (A).

''(3) REVIEW.—Not later than December 31, 2017, the Secretary shall—

''(A) review the results of the implementation of the energy performance requirements established under paragraph (1); and

''(B) based on the review conducted under subparagraph (A), submit to Congress a report that addresses the feasibility of requiring each agency to apply energy conservation measures to, and improve the design for the construction of, the Federal buildings of the agency (including each industrial or laboratory facility) so that the energy consumption per gross square foot of the Federal buildings of the agency in each of fiscal years 2018 through 2030 is reduced, as compared with the energy consumption per gross square foot of the Federal buildings of the agency in the prior fiscal year, by 3 percent.''; and

(2) in subsection (f)—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) by redesignating subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G) as subparagraphs (F), (G), and (H), respectively; and

(ii) by inserting after subparagraph (D) the following:

''(E) ONGOING COMMISSIONING.—The term 'ongoing commissioning' means an ongoing process of commissioning using monitored data, the primary goal of which is to ensure continuous optimum performance of a facility, in accordance with design or operating needs, over the useful life of the facility, while meeting facility occupancy requirements.'';

(B) in paragraph (2), by adding at the end the following:

''(C) ENERGY MANAGEMENT SYSTEM.—An energy manager designated under subparagraph (A) shall consider use of a system to manage energy use at the facility and certification of the facility in accordance with the International Organization for Standardization standard numbered 50001 and entitled 'Energy Management Systems'.'';

(C) by striking paragraphs (3) and (4) and inserting the following:

''(3) ENERGY AND WATER EVALUATIONS AND COMMISSIONING.—

''(A) EVALUATIONS.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), effective beginning on the date that is 180 days after the date of enactment of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015, and annually thereafter, each energy manager shall complete, for each calendar year, a comprehensive energy and water evaluation and recommissioning or retrocommissioning for approximately 25 percent of the facilities of that energy manager's agency that meet the criteria under paragraph (2)(B) in a manner that ensures that an evaluation of each facility is completed at least once every 4 years.

''(B) EXCEPTIONS.—An evaluation and recommissioning or recommissioning shall not be required under subparagraph (A) with respect to a facility that—''(i) has had a comprehensive energy and water evaluation during the 8-year period preceding the date of the evaluation;

''(ii)(I) has been commissioned, recommissioned, or retrocommissioned during the 10-year period preceding the date of the evaluation; or

''(II) is under ongoing commissioning, recommissioning, or retrocommissioning;

''(iii) has not had a major change in function or use since the previous evaluation and commissioning, recommissioning, or retrocommissioning;

''(iv) has been benchmarked with public disclosure under paragraph (8) within the year preceding the evaluation; and

''(v)(I) based on the benchmarking, has achieved at a facility level the most recent cumulative energy savings target under subsection (a) compared to the earlier of—

''(aa) the date of the most recent evaluation; or

''(bb) the date—

''(AA) of the most recent commissioning, recommissioning, or retrocommissioning; or

''(BB) on which ongoing commissioning, recommissioning, or retrocommissioning began; or

''(II) has a long-term contract in place guaranteeing energy savings at least as great as the energy savings target under subclause (I).

''(4) IMPLEMENTATION OF IDENTIFIED ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY MEASURES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years after the date of completion of each evaluation under paragraph (3), each energy manager may—

''(i) implement any energy- or water-saving measure that the Federal agency identified in the evaluation conducted under paragraph (3) that is life-cycle cost effective; and

''(ii) bundle individual measures of varying paybacks together into combined projects.

''(B) MEASURES NOT IMPLEMENTED.—Each energy manager, as part of the certification system under paragraph (7) and using guidelines developed by the Secretary, shall provide an explanation regarding any life-cycle cost-effective measures described in subparagraph (A)(i) that have not been implemented.''; and

(D) in paragraph (7)(C), by adding at the end the following:

''(iii) SUMMARY REPORT.—The Secretary shall make publicly available a report that summarizes the information tracked under subparagraph (B)(i) by each agency and, as applicable, by each type of measure.''.

SEC. 4116. FEDERAL BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY PERFORMANCE STANDARDS; CERTIFICATION SYSTEM AND LEVEL FOR FEDERAL BUILDINGS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—Section 303 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6832) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (6), by striking ''to be constructed'' and inserting ''constructed or altered''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(17) MAJOR RENOVATION.—The term 'major renovation' means a modification of building energy systems sufficiently extensive that the whole building can meet energy standards for new buildings, based on criteria to be established by the Secretary through notice and comment rulemaking.''.

(b) FEDERAL BUILDING EFFICIENCY STANDARDS.—Section 305 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6834) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(3)—

(A) by striking ''(3)(A) Not later than'' and all that follows through the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting the following:

''(3) REVISED FEDERAL BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY PERFORMANCE STANDARDS; CERTIFICATION FOR GREEN BUILDINGS.—

''(A) REVISED FEDERAL BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY PERFORMANCE STANDARDS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015, the Secretary shall establish, by rule, revised Federal building energy efficiency performance standards that require that—

''(I) new Federal buildings and alterations and additions to existing Federal buildings—

''(aa) meet or exceed the most recent revision of the IECC (in the case of residential buildings) or ASHRAE Standard 90.1 (in the case of commercial buildings) as of the date of enactment of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015; and

''(bb) meet or exceed the energy provisions of State and local building codes applicable to the building, if the codes are more stringent than the IECC or ASHRAE Standard 90.1, as applicable;

''(II) unless demonstrated not to be life-cycle cost effective for new Federal buildings and Federal buildings with major renovations—

''(aa) the buildings be designed to achieve energy consumption levels that are at least 30 percent below the levels established in the version of the ASHRAE Standard or the IECC, as appropriate, that is applied under subclause (I)(aa), including updates under subparagraph (B); and

''(bb) sustainable design principles are applied to the location, siting, design, and construction of all new Federal buildings and replacement Federal buildings;

''(III) if water is used to achieve energy efficiency, water conservation technologies shall be applied to the extent that the technologies are life-cycle cost effective; and

''(IV) if life-cycle cost effective, as compared to other reasonably available technologies, not less than 30 percent of the hot water demand for each new Federal building or Federal building undergoing a major renovation be met through the installation and use of solar hot water heaters.

''(ii) LIMITATION.—Clause (i)(I) shall not apply to unaltered portions of existing Federal buildings and systems that have been added to or altered.

''(B) UPDATES.—Not later than 1 year after the date of approval of each subsequent revision of ASHRAE Standard 90.1 or the IECC, as appropriate, the Secretary shall determine whether the revised standards established under subparagraph (A) should be updated to reflect the revisions, based on the energy savings and lifecycle cost effectiveness of the revisions.'';

(B) in subparagraph (C), by striking ''(C) In the budget request'' and inserting the following:

''(C) BUDGET REQUEST.—In the budget request''; and

(C) in subparagraph (D)—

(i) by striking ''(D) Not later than'' and all that follows through the end of the first sentence of clause (i)(III) and inserting the following:

''(D) CERTIFICATION FOR GREEN BUILDINGS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—'';

(ii) by striking clause (ii);

(iii) in clause (iii), by striking ''(iii) In identifying'' and inserting the following:

''(ii) CONSIDERATIONS.—In identifying'';

(iv) in clause (iv)—

(I) by striking ''(iv) At least once'' and inserting the following:

''(iii) STUDY.—At least once''; and

(II) by striking ''clause (iii)'' and inserting ''clause (ii)'';

(v) in clause (v)—

(I) by striking ''(v) The Secretary may'' and inserting the following:

''(iv) INTERNAL CERTIFICATION PROCESSES.—The Secretary may''; and

(II) by striking ''clause (i)(III)'' each place it appears and inserting ''clause (i)'';

(vi) in clause (vi)—

(I) by striking ''(vi) With respect'' and inserting the following:

''(v) PRIVATIZED MILITARY HOUSING.—With respect''; and

(II) by striking ''develop alternative criteria to those established by subclauses (I) and (III) of clause (i) that achieve an equivalent result in terms of energy savings, sustainable design, and'' and inserting ''develop alternative certification systems and levels than the systems and levels identified under clause (i) that achieve an equivalent result in terms of''; and

(vii) in clause (vii), by striking ''(vii) In addition to'' and inserting the following:

''(vi) WATER CONSERVATION TECHNOLOGIES.—In addition to''; and

(2) by striking subsections (c) and (d) and inserting the following:

''(c) PERIODIC REVIEW.—The Secretary shall—

''(1) every 5 years, review the Federal building energy standards established under this section; and

''(2) on completion of a review under paragraph (1), if the Secretary determines that significant energy savings would result, upgrade the standards to include all new energy efficiency and renewable energy measures that are technologically feasible and economically justified.''.

SEC. 4117. OPERATION OF BATTERY RECHARGING STATIONS IN PARKING AREAS USED BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The head of any office of the Federal Government which owns or operates a parking area for the use of its employees (either directly or indirectly through a contractor) may install, construct, operate, and maintain on a reimbursable basis a battery recharging station in such area for the use of privately owned vehicles of employees of the office and others who are authorized to park in such area.

(2) USE OF VENDORS.—The head of an office may carry out paragraph (1) through a contract with a vendor, under such terms and conditions (including terms relating to the allocation between the office and the vendor of the costs of carrying out the contract) as the head of the office and the vendor may agree to.

(b) IMPOSITION OF FEES TO COVER COSTS.—

(1) FEES.—The head of an office of the Federal Government which operates and maintains a battery recharging station under this section shall charge fees to the individuals who use the station in such amount as is necessary to ensure that office recovers all of the costs it incurs in installing, constructing, operating, and maintaining the station.

(2) DEPOSIT AND AVAILABILITY OF FEES.—Any fees collected by the head of an office under this subsection shall be—

(A) deposited monthly in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriations account for salaries and expenses of the office; and

(B) available for obligation without further appropriation during—

(i) the fiscal year collected; and

(ii) the fiscal year following the fiscal year collected.

(c) NO EFFECT ON EXISTING PROGRAMS FOR HOUSE AND SENATE.—Nothing in this section may be construed to affect the installation, construction, operation, or maintenance of battery recharging stations by the Architect of the Capitol—

(1) under Public Law 112–170 (2 U.S.C. 2171), relating to employees of the House of Representatives and individuals authorized to park in any parking area under the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives on the Capitol Grounds; or

(2) under Public Law 112–167 (2 U.S.C. 2170), relating to employees of the Senate and individuals authorized to park in any parking area under the jurisdiction of the Senate on the Capitol Grounds.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall apply with respect to fiscal year 2016 and each succeeding fiscal year.

CHAPTER 2—ENERGY EFFICIENT TECHNOLOGY AND MANUFACTURING

SEC. 4121. INCLUSION OF SMART GRID CAPABILITY ON ENERGY GUIDE LABELS.

Section 324(a)(2) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6294(a)(2)) is amended by adding the following at the end:

''(J) SMART GRID CAPABILITY ON ENERGY GUIDE LABELS.—

''(i) RULE.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, the Commission shall initiate a rulemaking to consider making a special note in a prominent manner on any Energy Guide label for any product that includes Smart Grid capability that—

''(I) Smart Grid capability is a feature of that product;

''(II) the use and value of that feature depend on the Smart Grid capability of the utility system in which the product is installed and the active utilization of that feature by the customer; and

''(III) on a utility system with Smart Grid capability, the use of the product's Smart Grid capability could reduce the customer's cost of the product's annual operation as a result of the incremental energy and electricity cost savings that would result from the customer taking full advantage of such Smart Grid capability.

''(ii) DEADLINE.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, the Commission shall complete the rulemaking initiated under clause (i).''.

SEC. 4122. VOLUNTARY VERIFICATION PROGRAMS FOR AIR CONDITIONING, FURNACE, BOILER, HEAT PUMP, AND WATER HEATER PRODUCTS.

Section 326(b) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6296(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(6) VOLUNTARY VERIFICATION PROGRAMS FOR AIR CONDITIONING, FURNACE, BOILER, HEAT PUMP, AND WATER HEATER PRODUCTS.—

''(A) RELIANCE ON VOLUNTARY PROGRAMS.—For the purpose of verifying compliance with energy conservation standards established under sections 325 and 342 for covered products described in paragraphs (3), (4), (5), (9), and (11) of section 322(a) and covered equipment described in subparagraphs (B), (C), (D), (F), (I), (J), and (K) of section 340(1), the Secretary shall rely on testing conducted by recognized voluntary verification programs that are recognized by the Secretary in accordance with subparagraph (B).

''(B) RECOGNITION OF VOLUNTARY VERIFICATION PROGRAMS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Secretary shall initiate a negotiated rulemaking in accordance with subchapter III of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code (commonly known as the 'Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1990') to develop criteria that have consensus support for achieving recognition by the Secretary as an approved voluntary verification program. Any subsequent amendment to such criteria may be made only pursuant to a subsequent negotiated rulemaking in accordance with subchapter III of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

''(ii) MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS.—The criteria developed under clause (i) shall, at a minimum, ensure that a voluntary verification program—

''(I) is nationally recognized;

''(II) is operated by a third party and not directly operated by a program participant;

''(III) satisfies any applicable elements of—

''(aa) International Organization for Standardization standard numbered 17025; and

''(bb) any other relevant International Organization for Standardization standards identified and agreed to through the negotiated rulemaking under clause (i);

''(IV) at least annually tests independently obtained products following the test procedures established under this title to verify the certified rating of a representative sample of products and equipment within the scope of the program;

''(V) maintains a publicly available list of all ratings of products subject to verification;

''(VI) requires the changing of the performance rating or removal of the product or equipment from the program if testing determines that the performance rating does not meet the levels the manufacturer has certified to the Secretary;

''(VII) requires new program participants to substantiate ratings through test data generated in accordance with Department of Energy regulations;

''(VIII) allows for challenge testing of products and equipment within the scope of the program;

''(IX) requires program participants to disclose the performance rating of all covered products and equipment within the scope of the program for the covered product or equipment;

''(X) provides to the Secretary—

''(aa) an annual report of all test results, the contents of which shall be determined through the negotiated rulemaking process under clause (i); and

''(bb) test reports, on the request of the Secretary, that note any instructions specified by the manufacturer or the representative of the manufacturer for the purpose of conducting the verification testing, to be exempted from disclosure under section 552(b)(4) of title 5, United States Code; and

''(XI) satisfies any additional requirements or standards that the Secretary shall establish consistent with this subparagraph.

''(iii) CESSATION OF RECOGNITION.—The Secretary may only cease recognition of a voluntary verification program as an approved program described in subparagraph (A) upon a finding that the program is not meeting its obligations for compliance through program review criteria developed during the negotiated rulemaking conducted under subparagraph (B).

''(C) ADMINISTRATION.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall not require—

''(I) manufacturers to participate in a recognized voluntary verification program described in subparagraph (A); or

''(II) participating manufacturers to provide information that has already been provided to the Secretary.

''(ii) LIST OF COVERED PRODUCTS.—The Secretary may maintain a publicly available list of covered products and equipment that distinguishes between products that are and are not covered products and equipment verified through a recognized voluntary verification program described in subparagraph (A).

''(iii) PERIODIC VERIFICATION TESTING.—The Secretary—

''(I) shall not subject products or equipment that have been verification tested under a recognized voluntary verification program described in subparagraph (A) to periodic verification testing to verify the accuracy of the certified performance rating of the products or equipment; but

''(II) may require testing of products or equipment described in subclause (I)—

''(aa) if the testing is necessary—

''(AA) to assess the overall performance of a voluntary verification program;

''(BB) to address specific performance issues;

''(CC) for use in updating test procedures and standards; or

''(DD) for other purposes consistent with this title; or

''(bb) if such testing is agreed to during the negotiated rulemaking conducted under subparagraph (B).

''(D) EFFECT ON OTHER AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this paragraph limits the authority of the Secretary to enforce compliance with any law.''.

SEC. 4123. FACILITATING CONSENSUS FURNACE STANDARDS.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(A) acting pursuant to the requirements of section 325 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6295), the Secretary of Energy is considering amending the energy conservation standards applicable to residential nonweatherized gas furnaces and mobile home gas furnaces;

(B) numerous stakeholders, representing manufacturers, distributors, and installers of residential nonweatherized gas furnaces and mobile home furnaces, natural gas utilities, home builders, multifamily property owners, and energy efficiency, environmental, and consumer advocates have begun negotiations in an attempt to agree on a consensus recommendation to the Secretary on levels for such standards that will meet the statutory criteria; and

(C) the stakeholders believe these negotiations are likely to result in a consensus recommendation, but several of the stakeholders do not support suspending the current rulemaking.

(2) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to provide the stakeholders described in paragraph (1) with an opportunity to continue negotiations for a limited time period to facilitate the proposal for adoption of standards that enjoy consensus support, while not delaying the current rulemaking except to the extent necessary to provide such opportunity.

(b) OPPORTUNITY FOR A NEGOTIATED FURNACE STANDARD.—Section 325(f)(4) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6295(f)(4)) is amended by adding after subparagraph (D) the following:

''(E)(i) Unless the Secretary has published such a notice prior to the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall publish, not later than October 31, 2015, a supplemental notice of proposed rulemaking or a notice of data availability updating the proposed rule entitled 'Energy Conservation Program for Consumer Products: Energy Conservation Standards for Residential Furnaces' and published in the Federal Register on March 12, 2015 (80 Fed. Reg. 13119), to provide notice and an opportunity for comment on—

''(I) dividing nonweatherized gas furnaces into two or more product classes with separate energy conservation standards based on capacity; and

''(II) any other matters the Secretary determines appropriate.

''(ii) On receipt of a statement that is submitted on or before January 1, 2016, jointly by interested persons that are fairly representative of relevant points of view, that contains recommended standards for nonweatherized gas furnaces and mobile home gas furnaces that are consistent with the requirements of this part (except that the date on which such standards will apply may be earlier or later than the date required under this part), the Secretary shall evaluate the standards proposed in the joint statement for consistency with the requirements of subsection (o), and shall publish notice of the potential adoption of the standards proposed in the joint statement, modified as necessary to ensure consistency with subsection (o). The Secretary shall solicit public comment for a period of at least 30 days with respect to such notice.

''(iii) Not later than July 31, 2016, but not before July 1, 2016, the Secretary shall publish a final rule containing a determination of whether the standards for nonweatherized gas furnaces and mobile home gas furnaces should be amended. Such rule shall contain any such amendments to the standards.''.

SEC. 4124. FUTURE OF INDUSTRY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 452 of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17111) is amended by striking the section heading and inserting the following: ''FUTURE OF INDUSTRY PROGRAM''.

(b) DEFINITION OF ENERGY SERVICE PROVIDER.—Section 452(a) of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17111(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (5) as paragraphs (4) through (6), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (2):

''(3) ENERGY SERVICE PROVIDER.—The term 'energy service provider' means any business providing technology or services to improve the energy efficiency, water efficiency, power factor, or load management of a manufacturing site or other industrial process in an energy-intensive industry, or any utility operating under a utility energy service project.''.

(c) INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND ASSESSMENT CENTERS.—Section 452(e) of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17111(e)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (5) as subparagraphs (A) through (E), respectively, and indenting appropriately;

(2) by striking ''The Secretary'' and inserting the following:

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary'';

(3) in subparagraph (A) (as redesignated by paragraph (1)), by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: '', including assessments of sustainable manufacturing goals and the implementation of information technology advancements for supply chain analysis, logistics, system monitoring, industrial and manufacturing processes, and other purposes''; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) COORDINATION.—To increase the value and capabilities of the industrial research and assessment centers, the centers shall—

''(A) coordinate with Manufacturing Extension Partnership Centers of the National Institute of Standards and Technology;

''(B) coordinate with the Building Technologies Office of the Department of Energy to provide building assessment services to manufacturers;

''(C) increase partnerships with the National Laboratories of the Department of Energy to leverage the expertise and technologies of the National Laboratories for national industrial and manufacturing needs; and

''(D) increase partnerships with energy service providers and technology providers to leverage private sector expertise and accelerate deployment of new and existing technologies and processes for energy efficiency, power factor, and load management.

''(3) OUTREACH.—The Secretary shall provide funding for—

''(A) outreach activities by the industrial research and assessment centers to inform small- and medium-sized manufacturers of the information, technologies, and services available; and

''(B) coordination activities by each industrial research and assessment center to leverage efforts with—

''(i) Federal and State efforts;

''(ii) the efforts of utilities and energy service providers;

''(iii) the efforts of regional energy efficiency organizations; and

''(iv) the efforts of other industrial research and assessment centers.

''(4) SMALL BUSINESS LOANS.—The Administrator of the Small Business Administration shall, to the maximum extent practicable, expedite consideration of applications from eligible small business concerns for loans under the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631 et seq.) to implement recommendations of industrial research and assessment centers established under paragraph (1).''.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The item relating to section 452 in the table of contents for the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 is amended to read as follows:

''Sec. 452. Future of Industry program.''.

SEC. 4125. NO WARRANTY FOR CERTAIN CERTIFIED ENERGY STAR PRODUCTS.

Section 324A of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6294a) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(e) NO WARRANTY.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Any disclosure relating to participation of a product in the Energy Star program shall not create an express or implied warranty or give rise to any private claims or rights of action under State or Federal law relating to the disqualification of that product from Energy Star if—

''(A) the product has been certified by a certification body recognized by the Energy Star program;

''(B) the Administrator has approved corrective measures, including a determination of whether or not consumer compensation is appropriate; and

''(C) the responsible party has fully complied with all approved corrective measures.

''(2) CONSTRUAL.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require the Administrator to modify any procedure or take any other action.''.

SEC. 4126. CLARIFICATION TO EFFECTIVE DATE FOR REGIONAL STANDARDS.

Section 325(o)(6)(E)(ii) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6295(o)(6)(E)(ii)) is amended by striking ''installed'' and inserting ''manufactured or imported into the United States''.

SEC. 4127. INTERNET OF THINGS REPORT.

The Secretary of Energy shall, not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate on the efforts made to take advantage of, and promote, the utilization of advanced technologies such as Internet of Things end-to-end platform solutions to provide real-time actionable analytics and enable predictive maintenance and asset management to improve energy efficiency wherever feasible. In doing so, the Secretary shall look to encourage and utilize Internet of Things energy management solutions that have security tightly integrated into the hardware and software from the outset. The Secretary shall also encourage the use of Internet of Things solutions that enable seamless connectivity and that are interoperable, open standards-based, and built on a repeatable foundation for ease of scalability.

CHAPTER 3—ENERGY PERFORMANCE CONTRACTING

SEC. 4131. USE OF ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY MEASURES IN FEDERAL BUILDINGS.

(a) REPORTS.—Section 548(b) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8258(b)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(5) the status of each agency's energy savings performance contracts and utility energy service contracts, the investment value of such contracts, the guaranteed energy savings for the previous year as compared to the actual energy savings for the previous year, the plan for entering into such contracts in the coming year, and information explaining why any previously submitted plans for such contracts were not implemented.''.

(b) FEDERAL ENERGY MANAGEMENT DEFINITIONS.—Section 551(4) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8259(4)) is amended by striking ''or retrofit activities'' and inserting ''retrofit activities, or energy consuming devices and required support structures''.

(c) AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS.—Section 801(a)(2)(F) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8287(a)(2)(F)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking ''or'' at the end;

(2) in clause (ii), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; or''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

''(iii) limit the recognition of operation and maintenance savings associated with systems modernized or replaced with the implementation of energy conservation measures, water conservation measures, or any series of energy conservation measures and water conservation measures.''.

(d) MISCELLANEOUS AUTHORITY.—Section 801(a)(2) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8287(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(H) MISCELLANEOUS AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a Federal agency may sell or transfer energy savings and apply the proceeds of such sale or transfer to fund a contract under this title.''.

(e) PAYMENT OF COSTS.—Section 802 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8287a) is amended by striking ''(and related operation and maintenance expenses)'' and inserting '', including related operations and maintenance expenses''.

(f) ENERGY SAVINGS PERFORMANCE CONTRACTS DEFINITIONS.—Section 804(2) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8287c(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking ''federally owned building or buildings or other federally owned facilities'' and inserting ''Federal building (as defined in section 551 (42 U.S.C. 8259))'' each place it appears;

(2) in subparagraph (C), by striking ''; and'' and inserting a semicolon;

(3) in subparagraph (D), by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

''(E) the use, sale, or transfer of energy incentives, rebates, or credits (including renewable energy credits) from Federal, State, or local governments or utilities; and

''(F) any revenue generated from a reduction in energy or water use, more efficient waste recycling, or additional energy generated from more efficient equipment.''.

CHAPTER 4—SCHOOL BUILDINGS

SEC. 4141. COORDINATION OF ENERGY RETROFITTING ASSISTANCE FOR SCHOOLS.

Section 392 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6371a) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(e) COORDINATION OF ENERGY RETROFITTING ASSISTANCE FOR SCHOOLS.—

''(1) DEFINITION OF SCHOOL.—Notwithstanding section 391(6), for the purposes of this subsection, the term 'school' means—

''(A) an elementary school or secondary school (as defined in section 9101 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7801));

''(B) an institution of higher education (as defined in section 102(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1002(a)));

''(C) a school of the defense dependents' education system under the Defense Dependents' Education Act of 1978 (20 U.S.C. 921 et seq.) or established under section 2164 of title 10, United States Code;

''(D) a school operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs;

''(E) a tribally controlled school (as defined in section 5212 of the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988 (25 U.S.C. 2511)); and

''(F) a Tribal College or University (as defined in section 316(b) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1059c(b))).

''(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF CLEARINGHOUSE.—The Secretary, acting through the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy, shall establish a clearinghouse to disseminate information regarding available Federal programs and financing mechanisms that may be used to help initiate, develop, and finance energy efficiency, distributed generation, and energy retrofitting projects for schools.

''(3) REQUIREMENTS.—In carrying out paragraph (2), the Secretary shall—

''(A) consult with appropriate Federal agencies to develop a list of Federal programs and financing mechanisms that are, or may be, used for the purposes described in paragraph (2); and

''(B) coordinate with appropriate Federal agencies to develop a collaborative education and outreach effort to streamline communications and promote available Federal programs and financing mechanisms described in subparagraph (A), which may include the development and maintenance of a single online resource that includes contact information for relevant technical assistance in the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy that States, local education agencies, and schools may use to effectively access and use such Federal programs and financing mechanisms.''.

CHAPTER 5—BUILDING ENERGY CODES

SEC. 4151. GREATER ENERGY EFFICIENCY IN BUILDING CODES.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—Section 303 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6832), as amended by section 4116, is further amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (14) and inserting the following:

''(14) MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODE.—The term 'model building energy code' means a voluntary building energy code or standard developed and updated through a consensus process among interested persons, such as the IECC or ASHRAE Standard 90.1 or a code used by other appropriate organizations regarding which the Secretary has issued a determination that buildings subject to it would achieve greater energy efficiency than under a previously developed code.''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(18) ASHRAE STANDARD 90.1.—The term 'ASHRAE Standard 90.1' means the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air-Conditioning Engineers ANSI/ASHRAE/IES Standard 90/1 Energy Standard for Buildings Except Low-Rise Residential Buildings.

''(19) COST-EFFECTIVE.—The term 'cost-effective' means having a simple payback of 10 years or less.

''(20) IECC.—The term 'IECC' means the International Energy Conservation Code as published by the International Code Council.

''(21) INDIAN TRIBE.—The term 'Indian tribe' has the meaning given the term in section 4 of the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act of 1996 (25 U.S.C. 4103).

''(22) SIMPLE PAYBACK.—The term 'simple payback' means the time in years that is required for energy savings to exceed the incremental first cost of a new requirement or code.

''(23) TECHNICALLY FEASIBLE.—The term 'technically feasible' means capable of being achieved, based on widely available appliances, equipment, technologies, materials, and construction practices.''.

(b) STATE BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY CODES.—Section 304 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6833) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 304. UPDATING STATE BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY CODES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide technical assistance, as described in subsection (e), for the purposes of—

''(1) implementation of building energy codes by States, Indian tribes, and, as appropriate, by local governments, that are technically feasible and cost-effective; and

''(2) supporting full compliance with the State, tribal, and local codes.

''(b) STATE AND INDIAN TRIBE CERTIFICATION OF BUILDING ENERGY CODE UPDATES.—

''(1) REVIEW AND UPDATING OF CODES BY EACH STATE AND INDIAN TRIBE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 3 years after the date on which a model building energy code is published, each State or Indian tribe shall certify whether or not the State or Indian tribe, respectively, has reviewed and updated the energy provisions of the building code of the State or Indian tribe, respectively.

''(B) DEMONSTRATION.—The certification shall include a statement of whether or not the energy savings for the code provisions that are in effect throughout the State or Indian tribal territory meet or exceed—

''(i) the energy savings of the most recently published model building energy code; or

''(ii) the targets established under section 307(b)(2).

''(C) NO MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODE UPDATE.—If a model building energy code is not updated by a target date established under section 307(b)(2)(D), each State or Indian tribe shall, not later than 3 years after the specified date, certify whether or not the State or Indian tribe, respectively, has reviewed and updated the energy provisions of the building code of the State or Indian tribe, respectively, to meet or exceed the target in section 307(b)(2).

''(2) VALIDATION BY SECRETARY.—Not later than 90 days after a State or Indian tribe certification under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall—

''(A) determine whether the code provisions of the State or Indian tribe, respectively, meet the criteria specified in paragraph (1);

''(B) determine whether the certification submitted by the State or Indian tribe, respectively, is complete; and

''(C) if the requirements of subparagraph (B) are satisfied, validate the certification.

''(3) LIMITATION.—Nothing in this section shall be interpreted to require a State or Indian tribe to adopt any building code or provision within a code.

''(c) IMPROVEMENTS IN COMPLIANCE WITH BUILDING ENERGY CODES.—

''(1) REQUIREMENT.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 3 years after the date of a certification under subsection (b), each State and Indian tribe shall certify whether or not the State or Indian tribe, respectively, has—

''(i) achieved full compliance under paragraph (3) with the applicable certified State or Indian tribe building energy code or with the associated model building energy code; or

''(ii) made significant progress under paragraph (4) toward achieving compliance with the applicable certified State or Indian tribe building energy code or with the associated model building energy code.

''(B) REPEAT CERTIFICATIONS.—If the State or Indian tribe certifies progress toward achieving compliance, the State or Indian tribe shall repeat the certification until the State or Indian tribe certifies that the State or Indian tribe has achieved full compliance.

''(2) MEASUREMENT OF COMPLIANCE.—A certification under paragraph (1) shall include documentation of the rate of compliance based on—

''(A) inspections of a random sample of the buildings covered by the code in the preceding year; or

''(B) an alternative method that yields an accurate measure of compliance.

''(3) ACHIEVEMENT OF COMPLIANCE.—A State or Indian tribe shall be considered to achieve full compliance under paragraph (1) if—

''(A) at least 90 percent of building space covered by the code in the preceding year substantially meets all the requirements of the applicable code specified in paragraph (1), or achieves equivalent or greater energy savings level; or

''(B) the estimated excess energy use of buildings that did not meet the applicable code specified in paragraph (1) in the preceding year, compared to a baseline of comparable buildings that meet this code, is not more than 5 percent of the estimated energy use of all buildings covered by this code during the preceding year.

''(4) SIGNIFICANT PROGRESS TOWARD ACHIEVEMENT OF COMPLIANCE.—A State or Indian tribe shall be considered to have made significant progress toward achieving compliance for purposes of paragraph (1) if the State or Indian tribe—

''(A) has developed and is implementing a plan for achieving compliance during the 8-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this paragraph, including annual targets for compliance and active training and enforcement programs; and

''(B) has met the most recent target under subparagraph (A).

''(5) VALIDATION BY SECRETARY.—Not later than 90 days after a State or Indian tribe certification under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall—

''(A) determine whether the State or Indian tribe has demonstrated meeting the criteria of this subsection, including accurate measurement of compliance;

''(B) determine whether the certification submitted by the State or Indian tribe is complete; and

''(C) if the requirements of subparagraph (B) are satisfied, validate the certification.

''(6) LIMITATION.—Nothing in this section shall be interpreted to require a State or Indian tribe to adopt any building code or provision within a code.

''(d) STATES OR INDIAN TRIBES THAT DO NOT ACHIEVE COMPLIANCE.—

''(1) REPORTING.—A State or Indian tribe that has not made a certification required under subsection (b) or (c) by the applicable deadline shall submit to the Secretary a report on the status of the State or Indian tribe with respect to meeting the requirements and submitting the certification.

''(2) STATE SOVEREIGNTY.—Nothing in this section shall be interpreted to require a State or Indian tribe to adopt any building code or provision within a code.

''(3) LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—In any State or Indian tribe for which the Secretary has not validated a certification under subsection (b) or (c), a local government may be eligible for Federal support by meeting the certification requirements of subsections (b) and (c).

''(4) ANNUAL REPORTS BY SECRETARY.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall annually submit to Congress, and publish in the Federal Register, a report on—

''(i) the status of model building energy codes;

''(ii) the status of code adoption and compliance in the States and Indian tribes;

''(iii) implementation of this section; and

''(iv) improvements in energy savings over time as a result of the targets established under section 307(b)(2).

''(B) IMPACTS.—The report shall include estimates of impacts of past action under this section, and potential impacts of further action, on—

''(i) upfront financial and construction costs, cost benefits and returns (using a return on investment analysis), and lifetime energy use for buildings;

''(ii) resulting energy costs to individuals and businesses; and

''(iii) resulting overall annual building ownership and operating costs.

''(e) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TO STATES AND INDIAN TRIBES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, upon request, provide technical assistance to States and Indian tribes to implement the goals and requirements of this section—

''(A) to implement State residential and commercial building energy codes; and

''(B) to document the rate of compliance with a building energy code.

''(2) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The assistance shall include, as requested by the State or Indian tribe, technical assistance in—

''(A) evaluating the energy savings of building energy codes;

''(B) assessing the economic considerations, referenced in section 307(b)(4), of implementing building energy codes;

''(C) building energy analysis and design tools;

''(D) energy simulation models;

''(E) building demonstrations;

''(F) developing the definitions of energy use intensity and building types for use in model building energy codes to evaluate the efficiency impacts of the model building energy codes; and

''(G) complying with a performance-based pathway referenced in the model code.

''(3) EXCLUSION.—For purposes of this section, 'technical assistance' shall not include actions that promote or discourage the adoption of a particular building energy code, code provision, or energy savings target to a State or Indian tribe.

''(4) INFORMATION QUALITY AND TRANSPARENCY.—For purposes of this section, information provided by the Secretary, attendant to any technical assistance provided to a State or Indian tribe, is 'influential information' and shall satisfy the guidelines established by the Office of Management and Budget and published at 67 Federal Register 8,452 (Feb. 22, 2002).

''(f) FEDERAL SUPPORT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide support to States and Indian tribes—

''(A) to implement the reporting requirements of this section; and

''(B) to implement residential and commercial building energy codes, including increasing and verifying compliance with the codes and training of State, tribal, and local building code officials to implement and enforce the codes.

''(2) EXCLUSION.—Support shall not be given to support adoption and implementation of model building energy codes for which the Secretary has made a determination under section 307(g)(1)(C) that the code is not cost-effective.

''(3) TRAINING.—Support shall be offered to States to train State and local building code officials to implement and enforce codes described in paragraph (1)(B).

''(4) LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—States may work under this subsection with local governments that implement and enforce codes described in paragraph (1)(B).

''(g) VOLUNTARY PROGRAMS TO EXCEED MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide technical assistance, as described in subsection (e), for the development of voluntary programs that exceed the model building energy codes for residential and commercial buildings for use as—

''(A) voluntary incentive programs adopted by local, tribal, or State governments; and

''(B) nonbinding guidelines for energy-efficient building design.

''(2) TARGETS.—The voluntary programs described in paragraph (1) shall be designed—

''(A) to achieve substantial energy savings compared to the model building energy codes; and

''(B) to meet targets under section 307(b), if available, up to 3 to 6 years in advance of the target years.

''(h) STUDIES.—

''(1) GAO STUDY.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study of the impacts of updating the national model building energy codes for residential and commercial buildings. In conducting the study, the Comptroller General shall consider and report, at a minimum—

''(i) the actual energy consumption savings stemming from updated energy codes compared to the energy consumption savings predicted during code development;

''(ii) the actual consumer cost savings stemming from updated energy codes compared to predicted consumer cost savings; and

''(iii) an accounting of expenditures of the Federal funds under each program authorized by this title.

''(B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act of 2015, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit a report to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives including the study findings and conclusions.

''(2) FEASIBILITY STUDY.—The Secretary, in consultation with building science experts from the National Laboratories and institutions of higher education, designers and builders of energy-efficient residential and commercial buildings, code officials, and other stakeholders, shall undertake a study of the feasibility, impact, economics, and merit of—

''(A) code improvements that would require that buildings be designed, sited, and constructed in a manner that makes the buildings more adaptable in the future to become zero-net-energy after initial construction, as advances are achieved in energy-saving technologies;

''(B) code procedures to incorporate a ten-year payback, not just first-year energy use, in trade-offs and performance calculations; and

''(C) legislative options for increasing energy savings from building energy codes, including additional incentives for effective State and local verification of compliance with and enforcement of a code.

''(3) ENERGY DATA IN MULTITENANT BUILDINGS.—The Secretary, in consultation with appropriate representatives of the utility, utility regulatory, building ownership, and other stakeholders, shall—

''(A) undertake a study of best practices regarding delivery of aggregated energy consumption information to owners and managers of residential and commercial buildings with multiple tenants and uses; and

''(B) consider the development of a memorandum of understanding between and among affected stakeholders to reduce barriers to the delivery of aggregated energy consumption information to such owners and managers.

''(i) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.—Nothing in this section or section 307 supersedes or modifies the application of sections 321 through 346 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6291 et seq.).

''(j) FUNDING LIMITATIONS.—No Federal funds shall be—

''(1) used to support actions by the Secretary, or States, to promote or discourage the adoption of a particular building energy code, code provision, or energy saving target to a State or Indian tribe; or

''(2) provided to private third parties or nongovernmental organizations to engage in such activities.''.

(c) FEDERAL BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY STANDARDS.—Section 305 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6834) is amended by striking ''voluntary building energy code'' in subsections (a)(2)(B) and (b) and inserting ''model building energy code''.

(d) MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODES.—

(1) AMENDMENT.—Section 307 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6836) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 307. SUPPORT FOR MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide technical assistance, as described in subsection (c), for updating of model building energy codes.

''(b) TARGETS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide technical assistance, for updating the model building energy codes.

''(2) TARGETS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide technical assistance to States, Indian tribes, local governments, nationally recognized code and standards developers, and other interested parties for updating of model building energy codes by establishing one or more aggregate energy savings targets through rulemaking in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, to achieve the purposes of this section.

''(B) SEPARATE TARGETS.—Separate targets may be established for commercial and residential buildings.

''(C) BASELINES.—The baseline for updating model building energy codes shall be the 2009 IECC for residential buildings and ASHRAE Standard 90.1–2010 for commercial buildings.

''(D) SPECIFIC YEARS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Targets for specific years shall be established and revised by the Secretary through rulemaking in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, and coordinated with nationally recognized code and standards developers at a level that—

''(I) is at the maximum level of energy efficiency that is technically feasible and cost effective, while accounting for the economic considerations under paragraph (4); and

''(II) promotes the achievement of commercial and residential high performance buildings through high performance energy efficiency (within the meaning of section 401 of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17061)).

''(ii) INITIAL TARGETS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this clause, the Secretary shall establish initial targets under this subparagraph.

''(iii) DIFFERENT TARGET YEARS.—Subject to clause (i), prior to the applicable year, the Secretary may set a later target year for any of the model building energy codes described in subparagraph (A) if the Secretary determines that a target cannot be met.

''(E) SMALL BUSINESS.—When establishing targets under this paragraph through rulemaking, the Secretary shall ensure compliance with the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act of 1996 (5 U.S.C. 601 note; Public Law 104–121) for any indirect economic effect on small entities that is reasonably foreseeable and a result of such rule.

''(3) APPLIANCE STANDARDS AND OTHER FACTORS AFFECTING BUILDING ENERGY USE.—In establishing energy savings targets under paragraph (2), the Secretary shall develop and adjust the targets in recognition of potential savings and costs relating to—

''(A) efficiency gains made in appliances, lighting, windows, insulation, and building envelope sealing;

''(B) advancement of distributed generation and on-site renewable power generation technologies;

''(C) equipment improvements for heating, cooling, and ventilation systems and water heating systems;

''(D) building management systems and smart grid technologies to reduce energy use; and

''(E) other technologies, practices, and building systems regarding building plug load and other energy uses.

In developing and adjusting the targets, the Secretary shall use climate zone weighted averages for equipment efficiency for heating, cooling, ventilation, and water heating systems, using equipment that is actually installed.

''(4) ECONOMIC CONSIDERATIONS.—In establishing and revising energy savings targets under paragraph (2), the Secretary shall consider the economic feasibility of achieving the proposed targets established under this section and the potential costs and savings for consumers and building owners, by conducting a return on investment analysis, using a simple payback methodology over a 3-, 5-, and 7-year period. The Secretary shall not propose or provide technical or financial assistance for any code, provision in the code, or energy target, or amendment thereto, that has a payback greater than 10 years.

''(c) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TO MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODE-SETTING AND STANDARD DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATIONS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, on a timely basis, provide technical assistance to model building energy code-setting and standard development organizations consistent with the goals of this section.

''(2) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The assistance shall include, as requested by the organizations, technical assistance in—

''(A) evaluating the energy savings of building energy codes;

''(B) assessing the economic considerations, under subsection (b)(4), of code or standards proposals or revisions;

''(C) building energy analysis and design tools;

''(D) energy simulation models;

''(E) building demonstrations;

''(F) developing definitions of energy use intensity and building types for use in model building energy codes to evaluate the efficiency impacts of the model building energy codes;

''(G) developing a performance-based pathway for compliance;

''(H) developing model building energy codes by Indian tribes in accordance with tribal law; and

''(I) code development meetings, including through direct Federal employee participation in committee meetings, hearings and online communication, voting, and presenting research and technical or economic analyses during such meetings.

''(3) EXCLUSION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2)(I), for purposes of this section, 'technical assistance' shall not include actions that promote or discourage the adoption of a particular building energy code, code provision, or energy savings target.

''(4) INFORMATION QUALITY AND TRANSPARENCY.—For purposes of this section, information provided by the Secretary, attendant to development of any energy savings targets, is influential information and shall satisfy the guidelines established by the Office of Management and Budget and published at 67 Federal Register 8,452 (Feb. 22, 2002).

''(d) AMENDMENT PROPOSALS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may submit timely model building energy code amendment proposals that are technically feasible, cost-effective, and technology-neutral to the model building energy code-setting and standard development organizations, with supporting evidence, sufficient to enable the model building energy codes to meet the targets established under subsection (b)(2).

''(2) PROCESS AND FACTORS.—All amendment proposals submitted by the Secretary shall be published in the Federal Register and made available on the Department of Energy website 90 days prior to any submittal to a code development body, and shall be subject to a public comment period of not less than 60 days. Information provided by the Secretary, attendant to submission of any amendment proposals, is influential information and shall satisfy the guidelines established by the Office of Management and Budget and published at 67 Federal Register 8,452 (Feb. 22, 2002). When calculating the costs and benefits of an amendment, the Secretary shall use climate zone weighted averages for equipment efficiency for heating, cooling, ventilation, and water heating systems, using equipment that is actually installed.

''(e) ANALYSIS METHODOLOGY.—The Secretary shall make publicly available the entire calculation methodology (including input assumptions and data) used by the Secretary to estimate the energy savings of code or standard proposals and revisions.

''(f) METHODOLOGY DEVELOPMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a methodology for evaluating cost effectiveness of energy code changes in multifamily buildings that incorporates economic parameters representative of typical multifamily buildings.

''(g) DETERMINATION.—

''(1) REVISION OF MODEL BUILDING ENERGY CODES.—If the provisions of the IECC or ASHRAE Standard 90.1 regarding building energy use are revised, the Secretary shall make a preliminary determination not later than 90 days after the date of the revision, and a final determination not later than 15 months after the date of the revision, on whether or not the revision—

''(A) improves energy efficiency in buildings compared to the existing IECC or ASHRAE Standard 90.1, as applicable;

''(B) meets the applicable targets under subsection (b)(2); and

''(C) is technically feasible and cost-effective.

''(2) CODES OR STANDARDS NOT MEETING CRITERIA.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary makes a preliminary determination under paragraph (1)(B) that a revised IECC or ASHRAE Standard 90.1 does not meet the targets established under subsection (b)(2), is not technically feasible, or is not cost-effective, the Secretary may at the same time provide technical assistance, as described in subsection (c), to the International Code Council or ASHRAE, as applicable, with proposed changes that would result in a model building energy code or standard that meets the criteria, and with supporting evidence. Proposed changes submitted by the Secretary shall be published in the Federal Register and made available on the Department of Energy website 90 days prior to any submittal to a code development body, and shall be subject to a public comment period of not less than 60 days. Information provided by the Secretary, attendant to submission of any amendment proposals, is influential information and shall satisfy the guidelines established by the Office of Management and Budget and published at 67 Federal Register 8,452 (Feb. 22, 2002).

''(B) INCORPORATION OF CHANGES.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—On receipt of the technical assistance, as described in subsection (c), the International Code Council or ASHRAE, as applicable, shall, prior to the Secretary making a final determination under paragraph (1), have an additional 270 days to accept or reject the proposed changes made by the Secretary to the model building energy code or standard.

''(ii) FINAL DETERMINATION.—A final determination under paragraph (1) shall be on the final revised model building energy code or standard.

''(h) ADMINISTRATION.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall—

''(1) publish notice of targets, amendment proposals and supporting analysis and determinations under this section in the Federal Register to provide an explanation of and the basis for such actions, including any supporting modeling, data, assumptions, protocols, and cost-benefit analysis, including return on investment;

''(2) provide an opportunity for public comment on targets and supporting analysis and determinations under this section, in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code; and

''(3) provide an opportunity for public comment on amendment proposals.

''(i) VOLUNTARY CODES AND STANDARDS.—Not withstanding any other provision of this section, any model building code or standard established under this section shall not be binding on a State, local government, or Indian tribe as a matter of Federal law.''.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The item relating to section 307 in the table of contents for the Energy Conservation and Production Act is amended to read as follows:

''Sec. 307. Support for model building energy codes.''.

SEC. 4152. VOLUNTARY NATURE OF BUILDING ASSET RATING PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any program of the Secretary of Energy that may enable the owner of a commercial building or a residential building to obtain a rating, score, or label regarding the actual or anticipated energy usage or performance of a building shall be made available on a voluntary, optional, and market-driven basis.

(b) DISCLAIMER AS TO REGULATORY INTENT.—Information disseminated by the Secretary of Energy regarding the program described in subsection (a), including any information made available by the Secretary on a website, shall include language plainly stating that such program is not developed or intended to be the basis for a regulatory program by a Federal, State, local, or municipal government body.

CHAPTER 6—EPCA TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

SEC. 4161. MODIFYING PRODUCT DEFINITIONS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO MODIFY DEFINITIONS.—

(1) COVERED PRODUCTS.—Section 322 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6292) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(c) MODIFYING DEFINITIONS OF COVERED PRODUCTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For any covered product for which a definition is provided in section 321, the Secretary may, by rule, unless prohibited herein, modify such definition in order to—

''(A) address significant changes in the product or the market occurring since the definition was established; and

''(B) better enable improvements in the energy efficiency of the product as part of an energy using system.

''(2) ANTIBACKSLIDING EXEMPTION.—Section 325(o)(1) shall not apply to adjustments to covered product definitions made pursuant to this subsection.

''(3) PROCEDURE FOR MODIFYING DEFINITION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Notice of any adjustment to the definition of a covered product and an explanation of the reasons therefor shall be published in the Federal Register and opportunity provided for public comment.

''(B) CONSENSUS REQUIRED.—Any amendment to the definition of a covered product under this subsection must have consensus support, as reflected in—

''(i) the outcome of negotiations conducted in accordance with the subchapter III of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code (commonly known as the 'Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1990'); or

''(ii) the Secretary's receipt of a statement that is submitted jointly by interested persons that are fairly representative of relevant points of view (including representatives of manufacturers of covered products, States, and efficiency advocates), as determined by the Secretary, which contains a recommended modified definition for a covered product.

''(4) EFFECT OF A MODIFIED DEFINITION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—For any type or class of consumer product which becomes a covered product pursuant to this subsection—

''(i) the Secretary may establish test procedures for such type or class of covered product pursuant to section 323 and energy conservation standards pursuant to section 325(l);

''(ii) the Commission may prescribe labeling rules pursuant to section 324 if the Commission determines that labeling in accordance with that section is technologically and economically feasible and likely to assist consumers in making purchasing decisions;

''(iii) section 327 shall begin to apply to such type or class of covered product in accordance with section 325(ii)(1); and

''(iv) standards previously promulgated under section 325 shall not apply to such type or class of product.

''(B) APPLICABILITY.—For any type or class of consumer product which ceases to be a covered product pursuant to this subsection, the provisions of this part shall no longer apply to the type or class of consumer product.''.

(2) COVERED EQUIPMENT.—Section 341 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6312) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d) MODIFYING DEFINITIONS OF COVERED EQUIPMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For any covered equipment for which a definition is provided in section 340, the Secretary may, by rule, unless prohibited herein, modify such definition in order to—

''(A) address significant changes in the product or the market occurring since the definition was established; and

''(B) better enable improvements in the energy efficiency of the equipment as part of an energy using system.

''(2) ANTIBACKSLIDING EXEMPTION.—Section 325(o)(1) shall not apply to adjustments to covered equipment definitions made pursuant to this subsection.

''(3) PROCEDURE FOR MODIFYING DEFINITION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Notice of any adjustment to the definition of a type of covered equipment and an explanation of the reasons therefor shall be published in the Federal Register and opportunity provided for public comment.

''(B) CONSENSUS REQUIRED.—Any amendment to the definition of a type of covered equipment under this subsection must have consensus support, as reflected in—

''(i) the outcome of negotiations conducted in accordance with the subchapter III of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code (commonly known as the 'Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1990'); or

''(ii) the Secretary's receipt of a statement that is submitted jointly by interested persons that are fairly representative of relevant points of view (including representatives of manufacturers of covered equipment, States, and efficiency advocates), as determined by the Secretary, which contains a recommended modified definition for a type of covered equipment.

''(4) EFFECT OF A MODIFIED DEFINITION.—

''(A) For any type or class of equipment which becomes covered equipment pursuant to this subsection—

''(i) the Secretary may establish test procedures for such type or class of covered equipment pursuant to section 343 and energy conservation standards pursuant to section 325(l);

''(ii) the Secretary may prescribe labeling rules pursuant to section 344 if the Secretary determines that labeling in accordance with that section is technologically and economically feasible and likely to assist purchasers in making purchasing decisions;

''(iii) section 327 shall begin to apply to such type or class of covered equipment in accordance with section 325(ii)(1); and

''(iv) standards previously promulgated under section 325, 342, or 346 shall not apply to such type or class of covered equipment.

''(B) For any type or class of equipment which ceases to be covered equipment pursuant to this subsection the provisions of this part shall no longer apply to the type or class of equipment.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS PROVIDING FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

(1) Section 336 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6306) is amended by striking ''section 323,'' each place it appears and inserting ''section 322, 323,''; and

(2) Section 345(a)(1) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6316(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) the references to sections 322, 323, 324, and 325 of this Act shall be considered as references to sections 341, 343, 344, and 342 of this Act, respectively;''.

SEC. 4162. CLARIFYING RULEMAKING PROCEDURES.

(a) COVERED PRODUCTS.—Section 325(p) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6295(p)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) as paragraphs (2), (3), (5), and (6), respectively;

(2) by inserting before paragraph (2) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection) the following:

''(1) The Secretary shall provide an opportunity for public input prior to the issuance of a proposed rule, seeking information—

''(A) identifying and commenting on design options;

''(B) on the existence of and opportunities for voluntary nonregulatory actions; and

''(C) identifying significant subgroups of consumers and manufacturers that merit analysis.'';

(3) in paragraph (3) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection)—

(A) in subparagraph (C), by striking ''and'' after ''adequate;'';

(B) in subparagraph (D), by striking ''standard.'' and inserting ''standard;''; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

''(E) whether the technical and economic analytical assumptions, methods, and models used to justify the standard to be prescribed are—

''(i) justified; and

''(ii) available and accessible for public review, analysis, and use; and

''(F) the cumulative regulatory impacts on the manufacturers of the product, taking into account—

''(i) other government standards affecting energy use; and

''(ii) other energy conservation standards affecting the same manufacturers.''; and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (3) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection) the following:

''(4) RESTRICTION ON TEST PROCEDURE AMENDMENTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Any proposed energy conservation standards rule shall be based on the final test procedure which shall be used to determine compliance, and the public comment period on the proposed standards shall conclude no sooner than 180 days after the date of publication of a final rule revising the test procedure.

''(B) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary may propose or prescribe an amendment to the test procedures issued pursuant to section 323 for any type or class of covered product after the issuance of a notice of proposed rulemaking to prescribe an amended or new energy conservation standard for that type or class of covered product, but before the issuance of a final rule prescribing any such standard, if—

''(i) the amendments to the test procedure have consensus support achieved through a rulemaking conducted in accordance with the subchapter III of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code (commonly known as the 'Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1990'); or

''(ii) the Secretary receives a statement that is submitted jointly by interested persons that are fairly representative of relevant points of view (including representatives of manufacturers of the type or class of covered product, States, and efficiency advocates), as determined by the Secretary, which contains a recommendation that a supplemental notice of proposed rulemaking is not necessary for the type or class of covered product.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 345(b)(1) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6316(b)(1)) is amended by striking ''section 325(p)(4),'' and inserting ''section 325(p)(3), (4), and (6),''.

CHAPTER 7—ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY

SEC. 4171. SMART ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY PILOT PROGRAM.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—The term ''eligible entity'' means—

(A) a utility;

(B) a municipality;

(C) a water district; and

(D) any other authority that provides water, wastewater, or water reuse services.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Energy.

(3) SMART ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY PILOT PROGRAM.—The term ''smart energy and water efficiency pilot program'' or ''pilot program'' means the pilot program established under subsection (b).

(b) SMART ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY PILOT PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish and carry out a smart energy and water efficiency management pilot program in accordance with this section.

(2) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the smart energy and water efficiency pilot program is to award grants to eligible entities to demonstrate advanced and innovative technology-based solutions that will—

(A) increase and improve the energy efficiency of water, wastewater, and water reuse systems to help communities across the United States make significant progress in conserving water, saving energy, and reducing costs;

(B) support the implementation of innovative processes and the installation of advanced automated systems that provide real-time data on energy and water; and

(C) improve energy and water conservation, water quality, and predictive maintenance of energy and water systems, through the use of Internet-connected technologies, including sensors, intelligent gateways, and security embedded in hardware.

(3) PROJECT SELECTION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make competitive, merit-reviewed grants under the pilot program to not less than 3, but not more than 5, eligible entities.

(B) SELECTION CRITERIA.—In selecting an eligible entity to receive a grant under the pilot program, the Secretary shall consider—

(i) energy and cost savings anticipated to result from the project;

(ii) the innovative nature, commercial viability, and reliability of the technology to be used;

(iii) the degree to which the project integrates next-generation sensors, software, hardware, analytics, and management tools;

(iv) the anticipated cost effectiveness of the pilot project in terms of energy efficiency savings, water savings or reuse, and infrastructure costs averted;

(v) whether the technology can be deployed in a variety of geographic regions and the degree to which the technology can be implemented on a smaller or larger scale, including whether the technology can be implemented by each type of eligible entity;

(vi) whether the technology has been successfully deployed elsewhere;

(vii) whether the technology is sourced from a manufacturer based in the United States; and

(viii) whether the project will be completed in 5 years or less.

(C) APPLICATIONS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), an eligible entity seeking a grant under the pilot program shall submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary determines to be necessary.

(ii) CONTENTS.—An application under clause (i) shall, at a minimum, include—

(I) a description of the project;

(II) a description of the technology to be used in the project;

(III) the anticipated results, including energy and water savings, of the project;

(IV) a comprehensive budget for the project;

(V) the names of the project lead organization and any partners;

(VI) the number of users to be served by the project; and

(VII) any other information that the Secretary determines to be necessary to complete the review and selection of a grant recipient.

(4) ADMINISTRATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 300 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall select grant recipients under this section.

(B) EVALUATIONS.—The Secretary shall annually carry out an evaluation of each project for which a grant is provided under this section that—

(i) evaluates the progress and impact of the project; and

(ii) assesses the degree to which the project is meeting the goals of the pilot program.

(C) TECHNICAL AND POLICY ASSISTANCE.—On the request of a grant recipient, the Secretary shall provide technical and policy assistance to the grant recipient to carry out the project.

(D) BEST PRACTICES.—The Secretary shall make available to the public—

(i) a copy of each evaluation carried out under subparagraph (B); and

(ii) a description of any best practices identified by the Secretary as a result of those evaluations.

(E) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report containing the results of each evaluation carried out under subparagraph (B).

(c) FUNDING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To carry out this section, the Secretary shall use not more than $15,000,000 of amounts made available to the Secretary.

(2) PRIORITIZATION.—In funding activities under this section, the Secretary shall prioritize funding in the following manner:

(A) The Secretary shall first use any unobligated amounts made available to the Secretary to carry out the activities of the Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy Office.

(B) After any amounts described in subparagraph (A) have been used, the Secretary shall then use any unobligated amounts (other than those described in subparagraph (A)) made available to the Secretary.

SEC. 4172. WATERSENSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6201 et seq.) is amended by adding after section 324A the following:

''SEC. 324B. WATERSENSE.

''(a) WATERSENSE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established within the Environmental Protection Agency a voluntary program, to be entitled 'WaterSense', to identify water efficient products, buildings, landscapes, facilities, processes, and services that sensibly—

''(A) reduce water use;

''(B) reduce the strain on public and community water systems and wastewater and stormwater infrastructure;

''(C) conserve energy used to pump, heat, transport, and treat water; and

''(D) preserve water resources for future generations, through voluntary labeling of, or other forms of communications about, products, buildings, landscapes, facilities, processes, and services while still meeting strict performance criteria.

''(2) DUTIES.—The Administrator, coordinating as appropriate with the Secretary of Energy, shall—

''(A) establish—

''(i) a WaterSense label to be used for items meeting the certification criteria established in this section; and

''(ii) the procedure, including the methods and means, by which an item may be certified to display the WaterSense label;

''(B) conduct a public awareness education campaign regarding the WaterSense label;

''(C) preserve the integrity of the WaterSense label by—

''(i) establishing and maintaining feasible performance criteria so that products, buildings, landscapes, facilities, processes, and services labeled with the WaterSense label perform as well or better than less water-efficient counterparts;

''(ii) overseeing WaterSense certifications made by third parties;

''(iii) using testing protocols, from the appropriate, applicable, and relevant consensus standards, for the purpose of determining standards compliance; and

''(iv) auditing the use of the WaterSense label in the marketplace and preventing cases of misuse; and

''(D) not more often than every six years, review and, if appropriate, update WaterSense criteria for the defined categories of water-efficient product, building, landscape, process, or service, including—

''(i) providing reasonable notice to interested parties and the public of any such changes, including effective dates, and an explanation of the changes;

''(ii) soliciting comments from interested parties and the public prior to any such changes;

''(iii) as appropriate, responding to comments submitted by interested parties and the public; and

''(iv) providing an appropriate transition time prior to the applicable effective date of any such changes, taking into account the timing necessary for the manufacture, marketing, training, and distribution of the specific water-efficient product, building, landscape, process, or service category being addressed.

''(b) USE OF SCIENCE.—In carrying out this section, and, to the degree that an agency action is based on science, the Administrator shall use—

''(1) the best available peer-reviewed science and supporting studies conducted in accordance with sound and objective scientific practices; and

''(2) data collected by accepted methods or best available methods (if the reliability of the method and the nature of the decision justify use of the data).

''(c) DISTINCTION OF AUTHORITIES.—In setting or maintaining standards for Energy Star pursuant to section 324A, and WaterSense under this section, the Secretary and Administrator shall coordinate to prevent duplicative or conflicting requirements among the respective programs.

''(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

''(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

''(2) FEASIBLE.—The term 'feasible' means feasible with the use of the best technology, treatment techniques, and other means that the Administrator finds, after examination for efficacy under field conditions and not solely under laboratory conditions, are available (taking cost into consideration).

''(3) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Energy.

''(4) WATER-EFFICIENT PRODUCT, BUILDING, LANDSCAPE, PROCESS, OR SERVICE.—The term 'water-efficient product, building, landscape, process, or service' means a product, building, landscape, process, or service for a residence or a commercial or institutional building, or its landscape, that is rated for water efficiency and performance, the covered categories of which are—

''(A) irrigation technologies and services;

''(B) point-of-use water treatment devices;

''(C) plumbing products;

''(D) reuse and recycling technologies;

''(E) landscaping and gardening products, including moisture control or water enhancing technologies;

''(F) xeriscaping and other landscape conversions that reduce water use; and

''(G) new water efficient homes certified under the WaterSense program.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (Public Law 94–163; 42 U.S.C. 6201 et seq.) is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 324A the following new item:

''Sec. 324B. WaterSense.''.

Subtitle B—Accountability

CHAPTER 1—MARKET MANIPULATION, ENFORCEMENT, AND COMPLIANCE

SEC. 4211. FERC OFFICE OF COMPLIANCE ASSISTANCE AND PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.

Section 319 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 825q–1) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 319. OFFICE OF COMPLIANCE ASSISTANCE AND PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.

''(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Commission an Office of Compliance Assistance and Public Participation (referred to in this section as the 'Office'). The Office shall be headed by a Director.

''(b) DUTIES OF DIRECTOR.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Office shall promote improved compliance with Commission rules and orders by—

''(A) making recommendations to the Commission regarding—

''(i) the protection of consumers;

''(ii) market integrity and support for the development of responsible market behavior;

''(iii) the application of Commission rules and orders in a manner that ensures that—

''(I) rates and charges for, or in connection with, the transmission or sale of electric energy subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission shall be just and reasonable and not unduly discriminatory or preferential; and

''(II) markets for such transmission and sale of electric energy are not impaired and consumers are not damaged; and

''(iv) the impact of existing and proposed Commission rules and orders on small entities, as defined in section 601 of title 5, United States Code (commonly known as the Regulatory Flexibility Act);

''(B) providing entities subject to regulation by the Commission the opportunity to obtain timely guidance for compliance with Commission rules and orders; and

''(C) providing information to the Commission and Congress to inform policy with respect to energy issues under the jurisdiction of the Commission.

''(2) REPORTS AND GUIDANCE.—The Director shall, as the Director determines appropriate, issue reports and guidance to the Commission and to entities subject to regulation by the Commission, regarding market practices, proposing improvements in Commission monitoring of market practices, and addressing potential improvements to both industry and Commission practices.

''(3) OUTREACH.—The Director shall promote improved compliance with Commission rules and orders through outreach, publications, and, where appropriate, direct communication with entities regulated by the Commission.''.

CHAPTER 2—MARKET REFORMS

SEC. 4221. GAO STUDY ON WHOLESALE ELECTRICITY MARKETS.

(a) STUDY AND REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate a report describing the results of a study of whether and how the current market rules, practices, and structures of each regional transmission entity produce rates that are just and reasonable by—

(1) facilitating fuel diversity, the availability of generation resources during emergency and severe weather conditions, resource adequacy, and reliability, including the cost-effective retention and development of needed generation;

(2) promoting the equitable treatment of business models, including different utility types, the integration of diverse generation resources, and advanced grid technologies;

(3) identifying and addressing regulatory barriers to entry, market-distorting incentives, and artificial constraints on competition;

(4) providing transparency regarding dispatch decisions, including the need for out-of-market actions and payments, and the accuracy of day-ahead unit commitments;

(5) facilitating the development of necessary natural gas pipeline and electric transmission infrastructure;

(6) ensuring fairness and transparency in governance structures and stakeholder processes, including meaningful participation by both voting and nonvoting stakeholder representatives;

(7) ensuring the proper alignment of the energy and transmission markets by including both energy and financial transmission rights in the day-ahead markets;

(8) facilitating the ability of load-serving entities to self-supply their service territory load;

(9) considering, as appropriate, State and local resource planning; and

(10) mitigating, to the extent practicable, the disruptive effects of tariff revisions on the economic decisionmaking of market participants.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) LOAD-SERVING ENTITY.—The term ''load-serving entity'' has the meaning given that term in section 217 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824q).

(2) REGIONAL TRANSMISSION ENTITY.—The term ''regional transmission entity'' means a Regional Transmission Organization or an Independent System Operator, as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 796).

SEC. 4222. CLARIFICATION OF FACILITY MERGER AUTHORIZATION.

Section 203(a)(1)(B) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824b(a)(1)(B)) is amended by striking ''such facilities or any part thereof'' and inserting ''such facilities, or any part thereof, of a value in excess of $10,000,000''.

CHAPTER 3—CODE MAINTENANCE

SEC. 4231. REPEAL OF OFF-HIGHWAY MOTOR VEHICLES STUDY.

(a) REPEAL.—Part I of title III of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6373) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (Public Law 94–163; 89 Stat. 871) is amended—

(1) by striking the item relating to part I of title III; and

(2) by striking the item relating to section 385.

SEC. 4232. REPEAL OF METHANOL STUDY.

Section 400EE of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6374d) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (a); and

(2) by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (a) and (b), respectively.

SEC. 4233. REPEAL OF RESIDENTIAL ENERGY EFFICIENCY STANDARDS STUDY.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 253 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8232) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (Public Law 95–619; 92 Stat. 3206) is amended by striking the item relating to section 253.

SEC. 4234. REPEAL OF WEATHERIZATION STUDY.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 254 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8233) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (Public Law 95–619; 92 Stat. 3206) is amended by striking the item relating to section 254.

SEC. 4235. REPEAL OF REPORT TO CONGRESS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 273 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8236b) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (Public Law 95–619; 92 Stat. 3206) is amended by striking the item relating to section 273.

SEC. 4236. REPEAL OF REPORT BY GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 154 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 8262a) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table of contents for the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–486; 106 Stat. 2776) is amended by striking the item relating to section 154.

(2) Section 159 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 8262e) is amended by striking subsection (c).

SEC. 4237. REPEAL OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL ENERGY MANAGEMENT PLANNING AND COORDINATION WORKSHOPS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 156 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 8262b) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–486; 106 Stat. 2776) is amended by striking the item relating to section 156.

SEC. 4238. REPEAL OF INSPECTOR GENERAL AUDIT SURVEY AND PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL ON INTEGRITY AND EFFICIENCY REPORT TO CONGRESS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 160 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 8262f) is amended by striking the section designation and heading and all that follows through ''(c) INSPECTOR GENERAL REVIEW.—Each Inspector General'' and inserting the following:

''SEC. 160. INSPECTOR GENERAL REVIEW.

''Each Inspector General''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–486; 106 Stat. 2776) is amended by striking the item relating to section 160 and inserting the following:

''Sec. 160. Inspector General review.''.

SEC. 4239. REPEAL OF PROCUREMENT AND IDENTIFICATION OF ENERGY EFFICIENT PRODUCTS PROGRAM.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 161 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 8262g) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Policy Act of 1992 (Public Law 102–486; 106 Stat. 2776) is amended by striking the item relating to section 161.

SEC. 4240. REPEAL OF NATIONAL ACTION PLAN FOR DEMAND RESPONSE.

(a) REPEAL.—Part 5 of title V of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8279) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (Public Law 95–619; 92 Stat. 3206; 121 Stat. 1665) is amended—

(1) by striking the item relating to part 5 of title V; and

(2) by striking the item relating to section 571.

SEC. 4241. REPEAL OF NATIONAL COAL POLICY STUDY.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 741 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8451) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 741.

SEC. 4242. REPEAL OF STUDY ON COMPLIANCE PROBLEM OF SMALL ELECTRIC UTILITY SYSTEMS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 744 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8454) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 744.

SEC. 4243. REPEAL OF STUDY OF SOCIO-ECONOMIC IMPACTS OF INCREASED COAL PRODUCTION AND OTHER ENERGY DEVELOPMENT.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 746 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8456) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 746.

SEC. 4244. REPEAL OF STUDY OF THE USE OF PETROLEUM AND NATURAL GAS IN COMBUSTORS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 747 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8457) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 747.

SEC. 4245. REPEAL OF SUBMISSION OF REPORTS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 807 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8483) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 807.

SEC. 4246. REPEAL OF ELECTRIC UTILITY CONSERVATION PLAN.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 808 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8484) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 808.

(2) REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION.—Section 712 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8422) is amended—

(A) by striking ''(a) GENERALLY.—''; and

(B) by striking subsection (b).

SEC. 4247. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT TO POWERPLANT AND INDUSTRIAL FUEL USE ACT OF 1978.

The table of contents for the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (Public Law 95–620; 92 Stat. 3289) is amended by striking the item relating to section 742.

SEC. 4248. EMERGENCY ENERGY CONSERVATION REPEALS.

(a) REPEALS.—

(1) Section 201 of the Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979 (42 U.S.C. 8501) is amended—

(A) in the section heading, by striking ''FINDINGS AND'';

(B) by striking subsection (a); and

(C) by striking ''(b) PURPOSES.—''.

(2) Section 221 of the Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979 (42 U.S.C. 8521) is repealed.

(3) Section 222 of the Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979 (42 U.S.C. 8522) is repealed.

(4) Section 241 of the Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979 (42 U.S.C. 8531) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979 (Public Law 96–102; 93 Stat. 749) is amended—

(1) by striking the item relating to section 201 and inserting the following:

''Sec. 201. Purposes.''; and

(2) by striking the items relating to sections 221, 222, and 241.

SEC. 4249. REPEAL OF STATE UTILITY REGULATORY ASSISTANCE.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 207 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6807) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Conservation and Production Act (Public Law 94–385; 90 Stat. 1125) is amended by striking the item relating to section 207.

SEC. 4250. REPEAL OF SURVEY OF ENERGY SAVING POTENTIAL.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 550 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8258b) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table of contents for the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (Public Law 95–619; 92 Stat. 3206; 106 Stat. 2851) is amended by striking the item relating to section 550.

(2) Section 543(d)(2) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8253(d)(2)) is amended by striking '', incorporating any relevant information obtained from the survey conducted pursuant to section 550''.

SEC. 4251. REPEAL OF PHOTOVOLTAIC ENERGY PROGRAM.

(a) REPEAL.—Part 4 of title V of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 8271 et seq.) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of contents for the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (Public Law 95–619; 92 Stat. 3206) is amended—

(1) by striking the item relating to part 4 of title V; and

(2) by striking the items relating to sections 561 through 570.

SEC. 4252. REPEAL OF ENERGY AUDITOR TRAINING AND CERTIFICATION.

(a) REPEAL.—Subtitle F of title V of the Energy Security Act (42 U.S.C. 8285 et seq.) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Security Act (Public Law 96–294; 94 Stat. 611) is amended by striking the items relating to subtitle F of title V.

CHAPTER 4—USE OF EXISTING FUNDS

SEC. 4261. USE OF EXISTING FUNDS.

Amounts required for carrying out this Act, other than section 1201, shall be derived from amounts appropriated under authority provided by previously enacted law.

TITLE V—NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY CORRIDORS

SEC. 5001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''National Energy Security Corridors Act''.

SEC. 5002. DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY CORRIDORS ON FEDERAL LANDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 185) is amended as follows:

(1) In subsection (b)—

(A) by striking ''(b)(1) For the purposes of this section 'Federal lands' means'' and inserting the following:

''(b)(1) For the purposes of this section 'Federal lands'—

''(A) except as provided in subparagraph (B), means'';

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (1) and inserting ''; and'' and by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following:

''(B) for purposes of granting an application for a natural gas pipeline right-of-way, means all lands owned by the United States except—

''(i) such lands held in trust for an Indian or Indian tribe; and

''(ii) lands on the Outer Continental Shelf.''.

(2) By redesignating subsection (b), as so amended, as subsection (z), and transferring such subsection to appear after subsection (y) of that section.

(3) By inserting after subsection (a) the following:

''(b) NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY CORRIDORS.—

''(1) DESIGNATION.—In addition to other authorities under this section, the Secretary shall—

''(A) identify and designate suitable Federal lands as National Energy Security Corridors (in this subsection referred to as a 'Corridor'), which shall be used for construction, operation, and maintenance of natural gas transmission facilities; and

''(B) incorporate such Corridors upon designation into the relevant agency land use and resource management plans or equivalent plans.

''(2) CONSIDERATIONS.—In evaluating Federal lands for designation as a National Energy Security Corridor, the Secretary shall—

''(A) employ the principle of multiple use to ensure route decisions balance national energy security needs with existing land use principles;

''(B) seek input from other Federal counterparts, State, local, and tribal governments, and affected utility and pipeline industries to determine the best suitable, most cost-effective, and commercially viable acreage for natural gas transmission facilities;

''(C) focus on transmission routes that improve domestic energy security through increasing reliability, relieving congestion, reducing natural gas prices, and meeting growing demand for natural gas; and

''(D) take into account technological innovations that reduce the need for surface disturbance.

''(3) PROCEDURES.—The Secretary shall establish procedures to expedite and approve applications for rights-of-way for natural gas pipelines across National Energy Security Corridors, that—

''(A) ensure a transparent process for review of applications for rights-of-way on such corridors;

''(B) require an approval time of not more than 1 year after the date of receipt of an application for a right-of-way; and

''(C) require, upon receipt of such an application, notice to the applicant of a predictable timeline for consideration of the application, that clearly delineates important milestones in the process of such consideration.

''(4) STATE INPUT.—

''(A) REQUESTS AUTHORIZED.—The Governor of a State may submit requests to the Secretary of the Interior to designate Corridors on Federal land in that State.

''(B) CONSIDERATION OF REQUESTS.—After receiving such a request, the Secretary shall respond in writing, within 30 days—

''(i) acknowledging receipt of the request; and

''(ii) setting forth a timeline in which the Secretary shall grant, deny, or modify such request and state the reasons for doing so.

''(5) SPATIAL DISTRIBUTION OF CORRIDORS.—In implementing this subsection, the Secretary shall coordinate with other Federal Departments to—

''(A) minimize the proliferation of duplicative natural gas pipeline rights-of-way on Federal lands where feasible;

''(B) ensure Corridors can connect effectively across Federal lands; and

''(C) utilize input from utility and pipeline industries submitting applications for rights-of-way to site corridors in economically feasible areas that reduce impacts, to the extent practicable, on local communities.

''(6) NOT A MAJOR FEDERAL ACTION.—Designation of a Corridor under this subsection, and incorporation of Corridors into agency plans under paragraph (1)(B), shall not be treated as a major Federal action for purpose of section 102 of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332).

''(7) NO LIMIT ON NUMBER OR LENGTH OF CORRIDORS.—Nothing in this subsection limits the number or physical dimensions of Corridors that the Secretary may designate under this subsection.

''(8) OTHER AUTHORITY NOT AFFECTED.—Nothing in this subsection affects the authority of the Secretary to issue rights-of-way on Federal land that is not located in a Corridor designated under this subsection.

''(9) NEPA CLARIFICATION.—All applications for rights-of-way for natural gas transmission facilities across Corridors designated under this subsection shall be subject to the environmental protections outlined in subsection (h).''.

(b) APPLICATIONS RECEIVED BEFORE DESIGNATION OF CORRIDORS.—Any application for a right-of-way under section 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 185) that is received by the Secretary of the Interior before designation of National Energy Security Corridors under the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall be reviewed and acted upon independently by the Secretary without regard to the process for such designation.

(c) DEADLINE.—Within 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall designate at least 10 National Energy Security Corridors under the amendment made by subsection (a) in contiguous States referred to in section 368(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15926(b)).

SEC. 5003. NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENT.

The Secretary of the Interior shall promptly notify the Committee on Natural Resources of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate of each instance in which any agency or official of the Department of the Interior fails to comply with any schedule established under section 15(c) of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717n(c)).

TITLE VI—ELECTRICITY RELIABILITY AND FOREST PROTECTION

SEC. 6001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Electricity Reliability and Forest Protection Act''.

SEC. 6002. VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE ON FEDERAL LANDS CONTAINING ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION AND DISTRIBUTION FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title V of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1761 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

''SEC. 512. VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION, AND MAINTENANCE RELATING TO ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION AND DISTRIBUTION FACILITY RIGHTS-OF-WAY.

''(a) GENERAL DIRECTION.—In order to enhance the reliability of the electricity grid and reduce the threat of wildfires to and from electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way and related facilities and adjacent property, the Secretary, with respect to public lands and other lands under the jurisdiction of the Secretary, and the Secretary of Agriculture, with respect to National Forest System lands, shall provide direction to ensure that all existing and future rights-of-way, however established (including by grant, special use authorization, and easement), for electrical transmission and distribution facilities on such lands include provisions for utility vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance activities that, while consistent with applicable law—

''(1) are developed in consultation with the holder of the right-of-way;

''(2) enable the owner or operator of a facility to operate and maintain the facility in good working order and to comply with Federal, State and local electric system reliability and fire safety requirements, including reliability standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation and plans to meet such reliability standards;

''(3) minimize the need for case-by-case or annual approvals for—

''(A) routine vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance activities within existing electrical transmission and distribution rights-of-way; and

''(B) utility vegetation management activities that are necessary to control hazard trees within or adjacent to electrical transmission and distribution rights-of-way; and

''(4) when review is required, provide for expedited review and approval of utility vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance activities, especially activities requiring prompt action to avoid an adverse impact on human safety or electric reliability to avoid fire hazards.

''(b) VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE PLANS.—

''(1) DEVELOPMENT AND SUBMISSION.—Consistent with subsection (a), the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide owners and operators of electric transmission and distribution facilities located on lands described in such subsection with the option to develop and submit a vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan, that at each owner or operator's transmission discretion may cover some or all of the owner or operator's transmission and distribution rights-of-way on Federal lands, for approval to the Secretary with jurisdiction over the lands. A plan under this paragraph shall enable the owner or operator of a facility, at a minimum, to comply with applicable Federal, State, and local electric system reliability and fire safety requirements, as provided in subsection (a)(2). The Secretaries shall not have the authority to modify those requirements.

''(2) REVIEW AND APPROVAL PROCESS.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly develop a consolidated and coordinated process for review and approval of—

''(A) vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plans submitted under paragraph (1) that—

''(i) assures prompt review and approval not to exceed 90 days;

''(ii) includes timelines and benchmarks for agency comments to submitted plans and final approval of such plans;

''(iii) is consistent with applicable law; and

''(iv) minimizes the costs of the process to the reviewing agency and the entity submitting the plans; and

''(B) amendments to the plans in a prompt manner if changed conditions necessitate a modification to a plan.

''(3) NOTIFICATION.—The review and approval process under paragraph (2) shall—

''(A) include notification by the agency of any changed conditions that warrant a modification to a plan;

''(B) provide an opportunity for the owner or operator to submit a proposed plan amendment to address directly the changed condition; and

''(C) allow the owner or operator to continue to implement those elements of the approved plan that do not directly and adversely affect the condition precipitating the need for modification.

''(4) CATEGORICAL EXCLUSION PROCESS.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall apply his or her categorical exclusion process under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) to plans developed under this subsection on existing transmission and distribution rights-of-way under this subsection.

''(5) IMPLEMENTATION.—A plan approved under this subsection shall become part of the authorization governing the covered right-of-way and hazard trees adjacent to the right-of-way. If a vegetation management plan is proposed for an existing transmission and distribution facility concurrent with the siting of a new transmission or distribution facility, necessary reviews shall be completed as part of the siting process or sooner. Once the plan is approved, the owner or operator shall provide the agency with only a notification of activities anticipated to be undertaken in the coming year, a description of those activities, and certification that the activities are in accordance with the plan.

''(6) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection:

''(A) VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE PLAN.—The term 'vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan' means a plan that—

''(i) is prepared by the owner or operator of one or more electrical transmission or distribution facilities to cover one or more electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way; and

''(ii) provides for the long-term, cost-effective, efficient and timely management of facilities and vegetation within the width of the right-of-way and adjacent Federal lands to enhance electricity reliability, promote public safety, and avoid fire hazards.

''(B) OWNER OR OPERATOR.—The terms 'owner' and 'operator' include contractors or other agents engaged by the owner or operator of a facility.

''(C) HAZARD TREE.—The term 'hazard tree' means any tree inside the right-of-way or located outside the right-of-way that has been found by the either the owner or operator of a transmission or distribution facility, or the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture, to be likely to fail and cause a high risk of injury, damage, or disruption within 10 feet or less of an electric power line or related structure if it fell.

''(c) RESPONSE TO EMERGENCY CONDITIONS.—If vegetation on Federal lands within, or hazard trees on Federal lands adjacent to, an electrical transmission or distribution right-of-way granted by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture has contacted or is in imminent danger of contacting one or more electric transmission or distribution lines, the owner or operator of the transmission or distribution lines—

''(1) may prune or remove the vegetation to avoid the disruption of electric service and risk of fire; and

''(2) shall notify the appropriate local agent of the relevant Secretary not later than 24 hours after such removal.

''(d) COMPLIANCE WITH APPLICABLE RELIABILITY AND SAFETY STANDARDS.—If vegetation on Federal lands within or adjacent to an electrical transmission or distribution right-of-way under the jurisdiction of each Secretary does not meet clearance requirements under standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation, or by State and local authorities, and the Secretary having jurisdiction over the lands has failed to act to allow a transmission or distribution facility owner or operator to conduct vegetation management activities within 3 business days after receiving a request to allow such activities, the owner or operator may, after notifying the Secretary, conduct such vegetation management activities to meet those clearance requirements.

''(e) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary or Secretary of Agriculture shall report requests and actions made under subsections (c) and (d) annually on each Secretary's website.

''(f) LIABILITY.—An owner or operator of a transmission or distribution facility shall not be held liable for wildfire damage, loss or injury, including the cost of fire suppression, if—

''(1) the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture fails to allow the owner or operator to operate consistently with an approved vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan on Federal lands under the relevant Secretary's jurisdiction within or adjacent to a right-of-way to comply with Federal, State or local electric system reliability and fire safety standards, including standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation; or

''(2) the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture fails to allow the owner or operator of the transmission or distribution facility to perform appropriate vegetation management activities in response to an identified hazard tree as defined under subsection (b)(6), or a tree in imminent danger of contacting the owner's or operator's transmission or distribution facility.

''(g) TRAINING AND GUIDANCE.—In consultation with the electric utility industry, the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture are encouraged to develop a program to train personnel of the Department of the Interior and the Forest Service involved in vegetation management decisions relating to transmission and distribution facilities to ensure that such personnel—

''(1) understand electric system reliability and fire safety requirements, including reliability standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation;

''(2) assist owners and operators of transmission and distribution facilities to comply with applicable electric reliability and fire safety requirements; and

''(3) encourage and assist willing owners and operators of transmission and distribution facilities to incorporate on a voluntary basis vegetation management practices to enhance habitats and forage for pollinators and for other wildlife so long as the practices are compatible with the integrated vegetation management practices necessary for reliability and safety.

''(h) IMPLEMENTATION.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall—

''(1) not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this section, prescribe regulations, or amend existing regulations, to implement this section; and

''(2) not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this section, finalize regulations, or amend existing regulations, to implement this section.

''(i) EXISTING VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE PLANS.—Nothing in this section requires an owner or operator to develop and submit a vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan if one has already been approved by the Secretary or Secretary of Agriculture before the date of the enactment of this section.''.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1761 et seq.), is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 511 the following new item:

''Sec. 512. Vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation, and maintenance relating to electric transmission and distribution facility rights-of-way.''.

The Acting CHAIR. No amendment to that amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in House Report 114–359. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question.

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MR. UPTON

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amend the table of contents to read as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

TITLE I—MODERNIZING AND PROTECTING INFRASTRUCTURE

Subtitle A—Energy Delivery, Reliability, and Security

Sec. 1101. FERC process coordination.
Sec. 1102. Resolving environmental and grid reliability conflicts.
Sec. 1103. Emergency preparedness for energy supply disruptions.
Sec. 1104. Critical electric infrastructure security.
Sec. 1105. Strategic Transformer Reserve.
Sec. 1106. Cyber Sense.
Sec. 1107. State coverage and consideration of PURPA standards for electric utilities.
Sec. 1108. Reliability analysis for certain rules that affect electric generating facilities.
Sec. 1109. Increased accountability with respect to carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration projects.
Sec. 1110. Reliability and performance assurance in Regional Transmission Organizations.
Sec. 1111. Designation of National Energy Security Corridors on Federal lands.
Sec. 1112. Vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance on Federal lands containing electric transmission and distribution facilities.

Subtitle B—Hydropower Regulatory Modernization

Sec. 1201. Protection of private property rights in hydropower licensing.
Sec. 1202. Extension of time for FERC project involving W. Kerr Scott Dam.
Sec. 1203. Hydropower licensing and process improvements.
Sec. 1204. Judicial review of delayed Federal authorizations.
Sec. 1205. Licensing study improvements.
Sec. 1206. Closed-loop pumped storage projects.
Sec. 1207. License amendment improvements.
Sec. 1208. Promoting hydropower development at existing nonpowered dams.

TITLE II—ENERGY SECURITY AND DIPLOMACY

Sec. 2001. Sense of Congress.
Sec. 2002. Energy security valuation.
Sec. 2003. North American energy security plan.
Sec. 2004. Collective energy security.
Sec. 2005. Authorization to export natural gas.

TITLE III—ENERGY EFFICIENCY AND ACCOUNTABILITY

Subtitle A—Energy Efficiency

CHAPTER 1—FEDERAL AGENCY ENERGY EFFICIENCY

Sec. 3111. Energy-efficient and energy-saving information technologies.
Sec. 3112. Energy efficient data centers.
Sec. 3113. Report on energy and water savings potential from thermal insulation.
Sec. 3114. Federal purchase requirement.
Sec. 3115. Energy performance requirement for Federal buildings.
Sec. 3116. Federal building energy efficiency performance standards; certification system and level for Federal buildings.
Sec. 3117. Operation of battery recharging stations in parking areas used by Federal employees.

CHAPTER 2—ENERGY EFFICIENT TECHNOLOGY AND MANUFACTURING

Sec. 3121. Inclusion of Smart Grid capability on Energy Guide labels.
Sec. 3122. Voluntary verification programs for air conditioning, furnace, boiler, heat pump, and water heater products.
Sec. 3123. Facilitating consensus furnace standards.
Sec. 3124. No warranty for certain certified Energy Star products.
Sec. 3125. Clarification to effective date for regional standards.
Sec. 3126. Internet of Things report.

CHAPTER 3—SCHOOL BUILDINGS

Sec. 3131. Coordination of energy retrofitting assistance for schools.

CHAPTER 4—BUILDING ENERGY CODES

Sec. 3141. Greater energy efficiency in building codes.
Sec. 3142. Voluntary nature of building asset rating program.

CHAPTER 5—EPCA TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

Sec. 3151. Modifying product definitions.
Sec. 3152. Clarifying rulemaking procedures.

CHAPTER 6—ENERGY AND WATER EFFICIENCY

Sec. 3161. Smart energy and water efficiency pilot program.
Sec. 3162. WaterSense.

Subtitle B—Accountability

CHAPTER 1—MARKET MANIPULATION, ENFORCEMENT, AND COMPLIANCE

Sec. 3211. FERC Office of Compliance Assistance and Public Participation.

CHAPTER 2—MARKET REFORMS

Sec. 3221. GAO study on wholesale electricity markets.
Sec. 3222. Clarification of facility merger authorization.

CHAPTER 3—CODE MAINTENANCE

Sec. 3231. Repeal of off-highway motor vehicles study.
Sec. 3232. Repeal of methanol study.
Sec. 3233. Repeal of residential energy efficiency standards study.
Sec. 3234. Repeal of weatherization study.
Sec. 3235. Repeal of report to Congress.
Sec. 3236. Repeal of report by General Services Administration.
Sec. 3237. Repeal of intergovernmental energy management planning and coordination workshops.
Sec. 3238. Repeal of Inspector General audit survey and President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency report to Congress.
Sec. 3239. Repeal of procurement and identification of energy efficient products program.
Sec. 3240. Repeal of national action plan for demand response.
Sec. 3241. Repeal of national coal policy study.
Sec. 3242. Repeal of study on compliance problem of small electric utility systems.
Sec. 3243. Repeal of study of socioeconomic impacts of increased coal production and other energy development.
Sec. 3244. Repeal of study of the use of petroleum and natural gas in combustors.
Sec. 3245. Repeal of submission of reports.
Sec. 3246. Repeal of electric utility conservation plan.
Sec. 3247. Technical amendment to Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978.
Sec. 3248. Emergency energy conservation repeals.
Sec. 3249. Repeal of State utility regulatory assistance.
Sec. 3250. Repeal of survey of energy saving potential.
Sec. 3251. Repeal of photovoltaic energy program.
Sec. 3252. Repeal of energy auditor training and certification.

CHAPTER 4—USE OF EXISTING FUNDS

Sec. 3261. Use of existing funds.

Page 25, strike lines 1 though 11 and insert the following:

''(7) DISCLOSURE OF PROTECTED INFORMATION.—In implementing this section, the Commission shall segregate critical electric infrastructure information or information that reasonably could be expected to lead to the disclosure of the critical electric infrastructure information within documents and electronic communications, wherever feasible, to facilitate disclosure of information that is not designated as critical electric infrastructure information.

Beginning on page 36, strike line 21 and all that follows through page 37, line 3 and insert the following:

(e) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—Any information included in the Strategic Transformer Reserve plan, or shared in the preparation and development of such plan, the disclosure of which the agency reasonably foresees would cause harm to critical electric infrastructure, shall be deemed to be critical electric infrastructure information for purposes of section 215A(d) of the Federal Power Act.

Beginning on page 38, strike line 20 and all that follows through page 39, line 2 and insert the following:

(c) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—Any vulnerability reported pursuant to regulations promulgated under subsection (b)(3), the disclosure of which the agency reasonably foresees would cause harm to critical electric infrastructure (as defined in section 215A of the Federal Power Act), shall be deemed to be critical electric infrastructure information for purposes of section 215A(d) of the Federal Power Act.

Amend section 1109 to read as follows:

SEC. 1109. INCREASED ACCOUNTABILITY WITH RESPECT TO CARBON CAPTURE, UTILIZATION, AND SEQUESTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) DOE EVALUATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Energy (in this section referred to as the ''Secretary'') shall, in accordance with this section, annually conduct an evaluation, and make recommendations, with respect to each project conducted by the Secretary for research, development, demonstration, or deployment of carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies (also known as carbon capture and storage and utilization technologies).

(2) SCOPE.—For purposes of this section, a project includes any contract, lease, cooperative agreement, or other similar transaction with a public agency or private organization or person, entered into or performed, or any payment made, by the Secretary for research, development, demonstration, or deployment of carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies.

(b) REQUIREMENTS FOR EVALUATION.—In conducting an evaluation of a project under this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) examine if the project has made advancements toward achieving any specific goal of the project with respect to a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology; and

(2) evaluate and determine if the project has made significant progress in advancing a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology.

(c) RECOMMENDATIONS.—For each evaluation of a project conducted under this section, if the Secretary determines that—

(1) significant progress in advancing a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology has been made, the Secretary shall assess the funding of the project and make a recommendation as to whether increased funding is necessary to advance the project; or

(2) significant progress in advancing a carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technology has not been made, the Secretary shall—

(A) assess the funding of the project and make a recommendation as to whether increased funding is necessary to advance the project;

(B) assess and determine if the project has reached its full potential; and

(C) make a recommendation as to whether the project should continue.

(d) REPORTS.—

(1) REPORT ON EVALUATIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 2 years thereafter, the Secretary shall—

(A) issue a report on the evaluations conducted and recommendations made during the previous year pursuant to this section; and

(B) make each such report available on the Internet website of the Department of Energy.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 3 years thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the Subcommittee on Energy and Power of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on—

(A) the evaluations conducted and recommendations made during the previous 3 years pursuant to this section; and

(B) the progress of the Department of Energy in advancing carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration technologies, including progress in achieving the Department of Energy's goal of having an array of advanced carbon capture and sequestration technologies ready by 2020 for large-scale demonstration.

Insert after section 1110 the following:

SEC. 1111. DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY CORRIDORS ON FEDERAL LANDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 185) is amended as follows:

(1) In subsection (b)—

(A) by striking ''(b)(1) For the purposes of this section 'Federal lands' means'' and inserting the following:

''(b)(1) For the purposes of this section 'Federal lands'—

''(A) except as provided in subparagraph (B), means'';

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (1) and inserting ''; and'' and by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following:

''(B) for purposes of granting an application for a natural gas pipeline right-of-way, means all lands owned by the United States except—

''(i) such lands held in trust for an Indian or Indian tribe; and

''(ii) lands on the Outer Continental Shelf.''.

(2) By redesignating subsection (b), as so amended, as subsection (z), and transferring such subsection to appear after subsection (y) of that section.

(3) By inserting after subsection (a) the following:

''(b) NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY CORRIDORS.—

''(1) DESIGNATION.—In addition to other authorities under this section, the Secretary shall—

''(A) identify and designate suitable Federal lands as National Energy Security Corridors (in this subsection referred to as a 'Corridor'), which shall be used for construction, operation, and maintenance of natural gas transmission facilities; and

''(B) incorporate such Corridors upon designation into the relevant agency land use and resource management plans or equivalent plans.

''(2) CONSIDERATIONS.—In evaluating Federal lands for designation as a National Energy Security Corridor, the Secretary shall—

''(A) employ the principle of multiple use to ensure route decisions balance national energy security needs with existing land use principles;

''(B) seek input from other Federal counterparts, State, local, and tribal governments, and affected utility and pipeline industries to determine the best suitable, most cost-effective, and commercially viable acreage for natural gas transmission facilities;

''(C) focus on transmission routes that improve domestic energy security through increasing reliability, relieving congestion, reducing natural gas prices, and meeting growing demand for natural gas; and

''(D) take into account technological innovations that reduce the need for surface disturbance.

''(3) PROCEDURES.—The Secretary shall establish procedures to expedite and approve applications for rights-of-way for natural gas pipelines across National Energy Security Corridors, that—

''(A) ensure a transparent process for review of applications for rights-of-way on such corridors;

''(B) require an approval time of not more than 1 year after the date of receipt of an application for a right-of-way; and

''(C) require, upon receipt of such an application, notice to the applicant of a predictable timeline for consideration of the application, that clearly delineates important milestones in the process of such consideration.

''(4) STATE INPUT.—

''(A) REQUESTS AUTHORIZED.—The Governor of a State may submit requests to the Secretary of the Interior to designate Corridors on Federal land in that State.

''(B) CONSIDERATION OF REQUESTS.—After receiving such a request, the Secretary shall respond in writing, within 30 days—

''(i) acknowledging receipt of the request; and

''(ii) setting forth a timeline in which the Secretary shall grant, deny, or modify such request and state the reasons for doing so.

''(5) SPATIAL DISTRIBUTION OF CORRIDORS.—In implementing this subsection, the Secretary shall coordinate with other Federal Departments to—

''(A) minimize the proliferation of duplicative natural gas pipeline rights-of-way on Federal lands where feasible;

''(B) ensure Corridors can connect effectively across Federal lands; and

''(C) utilize input from utility and pipeline industries submitting applications for rights-of-way to site corridors in economically feasible areas that reduce impacts, to the extent practicable, on local communities.

''(6) NOT A MAJOR FEDERAL ACTION.—Designation of a Corridor under this subsection, and incorporation of Corridors into agency plans under paragraph (1)(B), shall not be treated as a major Federal action for purpose of section 102 of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332).

''(7) NO LIMIT ON NUMBER OR LENGTH OF CORRIDORS.—Nothing in this subsection limits the number or physical dimensions of Corridors that the Secretary may designate under this subsection.

''(8) OTHER AUTHORITY NOT AFFECTED.—Nothing in this subsection affects the authority of the Secretary to issue rights-of-way on Federal land that is not located in a Corridor designated under this subsection.

''(9) NEPA CLARIFICATION.—All applications for rights-of-way for natural gas transmission facilities across Corridors designated under this subsection shall be subject to the environmental protections outlined in subsection (h).''.

(b) APPLICATIONS RECEIVED BEFORE DESIGNATION OF CORRIDORS.—Any application for a right-of-way under section 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 185) that is received by the Secretary of the Interior before designation of National Energy Security Corridors under the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall be reviewed and acted upon independently by the Secretary without regard to the process for such designation.

(c) DEADLINE.—Within 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall designate at least 10 National Energy Security Corridors under the amendment made by subsection (a) in States referred to in section 368(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15926(b)).

SEC. 1112. VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE ON FEDERAL LANDS CONTAINING ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION AND DISTRIBUTION FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title V of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1761 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

''SEC. 512. VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE RELATING TO ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION AND DISTRIBUTION FACILITY RIGHTS-OF-WAY.

''(a) GENERAL DIRECTION.—In order to enhance the reliability of the electric grid and reduce the threat of wildfires to and from electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way and related facilities and adjacent property, the Secretary, with respect to public lands and other lands under the jurisdiction of the Secretary, and the Secretary of Agriculture, with respect to National Forest System lands, shall provide direction to ensure that all existing and future rights-of-way, however established (including by grant, special use authorization, and easement), for electric transmission and distribution facilities on such lands include provisions for utility vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance activities that, while consistent with applicable law—

''(1) are developed in consultation with the holder of the right-of-way;

''(2) enable the owner or operator of an electric transmission and distribution facility to operate and maintain the facility in good working order and to comply with Federal, State, and local electric system reliability and fire safety requirements, including reliability standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation and plans to meet such reliability standards;

''(3) minimize the need for case-by-case or annual approvals for—

''(A) routine vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance activities within existing electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way; and

''(B) utility vegetation management activities that are necessary to control hazard trees within or adjacent to electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way; and

''(4) when review is required, provide for expedited review and approval of utility vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance activities, especially activities requiring prompt action to avoid an adverse impact on human safety or electric reliability to avoid fire hazards.

''(b) VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE PLANS.—

''(1) DEVELOPMENT AND SUBMISSION.—Consistent with subsection (a), the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide owners and operators of electric transmission and distribution facilities located on lands described in such subsection with the option to develop and submit a vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan, that at each owner or operator's discretion may cover some or all of the owner or operator's electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way on Federal lands, for approval to the Secretary with jurisdiction over the lands. A plan under this paragraph shall enable the owner or operator of an electric transmission and distribution facility, at a minimum, to comply with applicable Federal, State, and local electric system reliability and fire safety requirements, as provided in subsection (a)(2). The Secretaries shall not have the authority to modify those requirements.

''(2) REVIEW AND APPROVAL PROCESS.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly develop a consolidated and coordinated process for review and approval of—

''(A) vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plans submitted under paragraph (1) that—

''(i) assures prompt review and approval not to exceed 90 days;

''(ii) includes timelines and benchmarks for agency comments on submitted plans and final approval of such plans;

''(iii) is consistent with applicable law; and

''(iv) minimizes the costs of the process to the reviewing agency and the entity submitting the plans; and

''(B) amendments to the plans in a prompt manner if changed conditions necessitate a modification to a plan.

''(3) NOTIFICATION.—The review and approval process under paragraph (2) shall—

''(A) include notification by the agency of any changed conditions that warrant a modification to a plan;

''(B) provide an opportunity for the owner or operator to submit a proposed plan amendment to address directly the changed condition; and

''(C) allow the owner or operator to continue to implement those elements of the approved plan that do not directly and adversely affect the condition precipitating the need for modification.

''(4) CATEGORICAL EXCLUSION PROCESS.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall apply his or her categorical exclusion process under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) to plans developed under this subsection on existing electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way under this subsection.

''(5) IMPLEMENTATION.—A plan approved under this subsection shall become part of the authorization governing the covered right-of-way and hazard trees adjacent to the right-of-way. If a vegetation management plan is proposed for an existing electric transmission and distribution facility concurrent with the siting of a new electric transmission or distribution facility, necessary reviews shall be completed as part of the siting process or sooner. Once the plan is approved, the owner or operator shall provide the agency with only a notification of activities anticipated to be undertaken in the coming year, a description of those activities, and certification that the activities are in accordance with the plan.

''(c) RESPONSE TO EMERGENCY CONDITIONS.—If vegetation on Federal lands within, or hazard trees on Federal lands adjacent to, an electric transmission or distribution right-of-way granted by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture has contacted or is in imminent danger of contacting one or more electric transmission or distribution lines, the owner or operator of the electric transmission or distribution lines—

''(1) may prune or remove the vegetation to avoid the disruption of electric service and risk of fire; and

''(2) shall notify the appropriate local agent of the relevant Secretary not later than 24 hours after such removal.

''(d) COMPLIANCE WITH APPLICABLE RELIABILITY AND SAFETY STANDARDS.—If vegetation on Federal lands within or adjacent to an electric transmission or distribution right-of-way under the jurisdiction of each Secretary does not meet clearance requirements under standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation, or by State and local authorities, and the Secretary having jurisdiction over the lands has failed to act to allow an electric transmission or distribution facility owner or operator to conduct vegetation management activities within 3 business days after receiving a request to allow such activities, the owner or operator may, after notifying the Secretary, conduct such vegetation management activities to meet those clearance requirements.

''(e) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary or Secretary of Agriculture shall report requests and actions made under subsections (c) and (d) annually on each Secretary's website.

''(f) LIABILITY.—An owner or operator of an electric transmission or distribution facility shall not be held liable for wildfire damage, loss, or injury, including the cost of fire suppression, if—

''(1) the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture fails to allow the owner or operator to operate consistently with an approved vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan on Federal lands under the relevant Secretary's jurisdiction within or adjacent to a right-of-way to comply with Federal, State, or local electric system reliability and fire safety standards, including standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation; or

''(2) the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture fails to allow the owner or operator of the electric transmission or distribution facility to perform appropriate vegetation management activities in response to an identified hazard tree, or a tree in imminent danger of contacting the owner's or operator's electric transmission or distribution facility.

''(g) TRAINING AND GUIDANCE.—In consultation with the electric utility industry, the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture are encouraged to develop a program to train personnel of the Department of the Interior and the Forest Service involved in vegetation management decisions relating to electric transmission and distribution facilities to ensure that such personnel—

''(1) understand electric system reliability and fire safety requirements, including reliability standards established by the North American Electric Reliability Corporation;

''(2) assist owners and operators of electric transmission and distribution facilities to comply with applicable electric reliability and fire safety requirements; and

''(3) encourage and assist willing owners and operators of electric transmission and distribution facilities to incorporate on a voluntary basis vegetation management practices to enhance habitats and forage for pollinators and for other wildlife so long as the practices are compatible with the integrated vegetation management practices necessary for reliability and safety.

''(h) IMPLEMENTATION.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall—

''(1) not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this section, propose regulations, or amended existing regulations, to implement this section; and

''(2) not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this section, finalize regulations, or amended existing regulations, to implement this section.

''(i) EXISTING VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE PLANS.—Nothing in this section requires an owner or operator to develop and submit a vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan if one has already been approved by the Secretary or Secretary of Agriculture before the date of the enactment of this section.

''(j) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

''(1) HAZARD TREE.—The term 'hazard tree' means any tree inside the right-of-way or located outside the right-of-way that has been found by the either the owner or operator of an electric transmission or distribution facility, or the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture, to be likely to fail and cause a high risk of injury, damage, or disruption within 10 feet of an electric power line or related structure if it fell.

''(2) OWNER OR OPERATOR.—The terms 'owner' and 'operator' include contractors or other agents engaged by the owner or operator of an electric transmission and distribution facility.

''(3) VEGETATION MANAGEMENT, FACILITY INSPECTION, AND OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE PLAN.—The term 'vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance plan' means a plan that—

''(A) is prepared by the owner or operator of one or more electric transmission or distribution facilities to cover one or more electric transmission and distribution rights-of-way; and

''(B) provides for the long-term, cost-effective, efficient, and timely management of facilities and vegetation within the width of the right-of-way and adjacent Federal lands to enhance electric reliability, promote public safety, and avoid fire hazards.''.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1761 et seq.), is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 511 the following new item:

''Sec. 512. Vegetation management, facility inspection, and operation and maintenance relating to electric transmission and distribution facility rights-of-way.''.

Strike titles V and VI.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

□ 1545

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment strikes a number of provisions, some of which have already been enacted into law, and makes technical and conforming changes to the reported text of H.R. 8, H.R. 2295, and H.R. 2358. So the overall bill, I would say, H.R. 8, is a broad, bipartisan bill. It seeks to maximize America's energy potential, and it seeks to update and modernize outdated policies rooted in an era of energy scarcity to reflect today's era of energy abundance. I think that this is a good amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, how in the world did we get to this point? How did we get to the point of the majority party bringing forth this highly partisan, backwards-looking, does-more-harm-than-good so-called energy bill after all the time and all the effort that was put forth by both sides to come up with a bipartisan compromise?

Mr. Chairman, after working together for the majority of this year, literally moments before the full Energy and Commerce Committee was set to mark up this bill, the rug was pulled out from under the minority side, and the Republicans turned their collective back on the legislative compromise.

We were informed that the majority had reneged on its prior commitments, and what was initially supposed to be an infrastructure bill would contain no actual funding for any infrastructure projects—not one red cent.

In addition to reneging on a promise to fund a grid modernization program and a pipeline replacement program that would have benefited low-income consumers, the majority has also stripped the one provision of the bill that received widespread praise and support from both sides of the aisle.

The 21st Century Workforce title that my office had authored has been stripped from this awful excuse for a comprehensive energy bill.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that all of the care and support that my Republican colleagues professed to have for helping minorities, women, and veterans find good-paying energy jobs and careers has somehow not only dissipated, but has totally disappeared.

It would appear, Mr. Chairman, that due to the apathy and indifference of a few highly privileged desk jockey elitists from the Heritage Foundation, helping to improve the plight of millions of disadvantaged Americans who have been historically underserved and underemployed within the energy sector is now considered to be, to use their very words, ''wasteful, ineffective, and inefficient.''

So, what we are left, Mr. Chairman, with is this: What aspects of this bill can we take back to our constituents? What aspects of this bill can we tell our constituents with a straight face will help them improve their lives?

All this bill does, Mr. Chairman, is attempt to strip away oversight and roll back regulations in order to help industry game the system and increase its profit at the expense of the American people. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a sham, and it will actually take the Nation's energy policy backwards, all the way back.

Mr. Chairman, the 21st Century Workforce amendment represented a win for industry, a win for our communities, and a win for Americans all. Deleting this very provision that was unanimously approved in committee speaks volumes about the majority's commitment to minorities, to women, and to veterans. This bill, H.R. 8, leaves women behind, it leaves minorities behind, it leaves veterans behind, it leaves low-income communities behind, and it leaves America behind.

Mr. Chairman, for this reason, I oppose the bill.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a favorable vote on the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 2 OFFERED BY MR. TONKO

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 2 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 4, line 5, through page 10, line 3, strike section 1101.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment simply strikes section 1101 of the underlying bill. The section is a solution in search of a problem. The section's purported goal is to reinforce the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's role as the lead agency for siting interstate natural gas pipelines; however, I do not think there is any doubt over FERC's role in pipeline siting approval.

In reality, this section is designed to further expedite permitting for natural gas pipelines. But there is very little evidence that this process needs expediting, which ultimately would restrict States and other Federal agencies' ability to review projects and the public's ability to comment on them.

Mr. Chairman, the GAO looked at the approval process for pipelines by FERC and found 95 percent are approved within 2 years. When it takes longer, it is because the project is large or controversial due to taking of private property, traversing State or Federal land, or requiring placement of compression stations and other operation equipment in an area close to existing infrastructure or communities.

Even the industry agrees that pipeline approvals are happening. In October, Pipelines Digest, an industry publication, wrote:

Through April 30 of this year, FERC certified and placed in service almost twice as many natural gas projects and more than doubled the miles of pipeline that were put in service and certified through the same date in 2014.

We are building new pipelines. There is no problem that needs fixing. So what evidence is there that the certification process needs to be further tilted in favor of pipeline companies at the expense of environmental review and public comment? I would say there isn't any. Yet, Mr. Chairman, this section would require FERC to decide on a pipeline application within 90 days after the Commission issues its final environmental document, regardless of the complexity of the application.

It would also allow FERC to consider environmental data collected by aerial or other remote surveys instead of onsite inspections. This would enable pipeline companies to circumvent property owners' rights when surveying land, all in hopes of speeding up projects.

The siting of natural gas pipelines is complicated and can be controversial. I know this well since there are a number of projects currently being developed in or near the district I represent. I hear from my constituents about these projects regularly. They are very concerned, and they feel like they are being left out of this process. They are concerned about the safety and about the noise, air, and water pollution from the construction and operation of the pipeline's associated facilities. The pipeline companies do not have a problem. The public does.

We know that these types of projects, no matter how beneficial to the public interest, can be controversial. Someone is always unhappy about the selected route or placement of these facilities. But we need to do a better job of bringing the public along, and these provisions do the opposite.

Mr. Chairman, the public has a right to be part of large projects that impact their communities. Does that take extra time? Yes. Is it less convenient for the company? Yes. But these pipelines will be in service for many decades. If it is worth doing, it is worth doing right. So I see no reason why we should be expediting projects if we cannot be sure they can be built in a safe and environmentally friendly manner.

We need to ensure State and Federal regulators are given the time needed to carefully review applications for the construction of natural gas pipelines and to ensure that the landowners and the general public have the ability to participate meaningfully in the siting process. This section undermines that process.

I urge support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. WATSON COLEMAN) for a brief statement.

Mrs. WATSON COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Tonko amendment and strongly urge its adoption.

Section 1101 of this misguided energy bill includes a critical provision that I would like to highlight. This language would allow big energy companies to use aerial and remote surveying to circumvent key FERC environmental reviews.

This troubling provision flies in the face of the rights of local governments and even private landowners to make decisions about the use of their own property. This provision allows Big Energy to bypass more comprehensive and appropriate on-the-ground surveys to assess the environmental impacts of energy infrastructure.

Mr. Chairman, there is one such project that New Jerseyans know all too well—the PennEast pipeline. PennEast is the proposed 108-mile natural gas pipeline that would run from Pennsylvania, across the Delaware River, and terminate in Hopewell Township in my district. If built, this pipeline would threaten some of the most environmentally sensitive areas in the Delaware River Basin, farmland, watersheds, and uninterrupted natural areas.

Virtually every local government along the PennEast route has officially lodged their opposition or disapproval. Concerned citizens have packed scoping meetings to make their voices heard to stop this pipeline. These are diverse communities across two States represented by Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle. Areas I represent, like Mercer County and Hopewell, and scores of private property owners have exercised their right to deny PennEast access to their property to carry out their surveys.

Mr. Chairman, my constituents sent me to Congress to fight for the environment and to stand up against ill-conceived projects such as this one.

Mr. TONKO. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment. Section 1101 makes important improvements to FERC's process for reviewing interstate natural gas pipelines.

As we all know, the demand for natural gas is growing, which requires new and modernized pipeline infrastructure. It has got to happen.

Unfortunately, the permitting process is becoming increasingly complex and challenging. Rate hikes hit the families and businesses that can least afford it the hardest, the most vulnerable. So we have worked very diligently to find some agreement on this provision. We have held hearings, received technical assistance from FERC, and accepted many of their recommendations.

Section 1101 would authorize concurrent permitting reviews, require more transparency through the process, and allow for the use of new survey technology for citing pipelines.

Just yesterday, Mr. Chairman, in a hearing before the House Energy and Commerce Committee, FERC Chairman Bay acknowledged the need for new pipeline capacity and signaled his support for the enhanced transparency provisions and the regulatory dashboard that is required by section 1101.

So this amendment, if passed, would strike a commonsense approach to introduce greater public transparency and accountability for Federal and State permitting agencies, and therefore I would ask for a ''no'' vote on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chair, I rise in opposition of The North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act (H.R. 8). This bill would reverse America's progress on energy efficiency and energy security. In a time when we need a forward-looking comprehensive energy policy that preserves the environment and provides sustainable energy to American consumers, we cannot afford to reverse course.

The North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act would cripple ongoing efforts to curb energy use and promote energy efficiency. This bill removes the effective provisions of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 which require federal buildings to reduce fossil fuel-generated energy. Additionally this bill would make it much harder for the Department of Energy to provide assistance for building code development at the national, state, and local level.

Instead of making needed investments in our energy infrastructure, H.R. 8 continues to protect big oil and gas companies by attacking newer environmental standards and procedures. Section 1101 of this bill makes extremely hazardous changes to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission natural gas pipeline permitting process undermining environmental protections and land owners' rights. This section would force FERC to decide on pipeline applications within 90 days even in cases of extremely complex proposed projects. Additionally, it would undermine land owners' rights by allowing oil and gas companies to use aerial or remote surveys for environmental data instead of actual surveying the land.

As the Ranking Member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on the Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies, I am disappointed that H.R. 8 would make it easier for oil and gas companies to get approval for pipelines through our nation's most treasured areas, our national parks. It also threatens protections in the Endangered Species Act, the Clean Water Act, and the Federal Power Act by allowing the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to override conditions placed on hydropower project licenses by state and federal agencies that serve to protect wildlife from the potential impacts.

President Obama has stated that he will veto this legislation should it come to his desk because H.R. 8 sidesteps important environmental procedures and actually increases energy consumption and consumer costs. According to the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy, H.R. 8 would actually cost American citizens nearly $20 billion dollars through 2040. Instead of this misguided legislation, I support President Obama's ''All-of-the-Above'' energy strategy for our country which includes a combination of fossil fuels, renewable energy, and energy efficiency.

I am committed to advancing America's energy policy by moving away from depending on fossil fuels and towards clean and renewable sources of energy. For these reasons, I will vote against the backward path of H.R. 8, The North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 3 OFFERED BY MR. PETERS

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 3 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 12, line 23, insert ''and energy storage'' after ''infrastructure''.

Page 13, line 19, insert ''the energy storage industry,'' after ''natural gas industry,''.

Page 14, line 1, insert '', the energy storage industry,'' after ''States''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from California (Mr. PETERS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, my amendment to the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act will directly enhance reliable energy security when our communities are most vulnerable during natural disasters. My amendment simply adds energy storage as a form of energy that the Department of Energy should consider to improve emergency preparedness.

□ 1600

The bill in its current form only addresses the need to have resilient oil and natural gas infrastructure, which we certainly should all support.

Energy storage encompasses technologies capable of storing previously generated electric energy and releasing that energy at a later time. It can include various types of batteries, capacitors, fuel cells, and more and has the potential to improve electric power grids, enable growth in renewable electricity generation, and provide alternatives to oil-based fuels in the Nation's transportation sector.

Grid-level energy storage is on track to reach 40 gigawatts in capacity by 2022, a hundredfold increase from 2013.

And natural disasters are becoming more and more common. Over the last 4 years, the Federal Government has spent more than $136 billion on relief for hurricanes, tornados, droughts, wildfires, and other weather-related events.

We know that for every dollar we invest in preparedness and resiliency we save $4 in cleanup and restoration, not to mention the lives that would be saved—something we cannot put a dollar value on.

Building up community resiliency by including energy storage in preparation plans will save lives and save money.

In San Diego, our utilities, including SDG&E, are testing and developing energy storage to accommodate renewable energy, which makes up 33 percent of its power.

Our school districts, including Poway Unified School District, are adding large-scale battery storage to their campuses that go beyond California's energy efficiency guidelines to save money as heat waves and temperatures continue to spike.

And our companies and universities, including UCSD, are part of the California State public-private partnership, CalCharge, that is developing the next generation of energy storage.

Ensuring that we are better able to withstand extreme weather events with added energy storage is just common sense. Including energy storage in this bill is a smart, forward-thinking step to equip States and localities with the tools they need both in advance and in the aftermath of natural disasters.

I ask my colleagues to support the amendment, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR (Mr. WOMACK). The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment. I think that it is a good amendment. It includes energy storage as a form of energy that DOE should consider to enhance emergency preparedness for energy supply disruptions during natural disasters.

It improves the bill, and I compliment the gentleman.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman.

Thank you for your very hard work on this bill. I appreciate your consideration on inclusion of my amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. PETERS).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4 OFFERED BY MR. FRANKS OF ARIZONA

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 4 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 17, after line 12, insert the following:

''(8) GRID SECURITY VULNERABILITY.—The term 'grid security vulnerability' means a weakness that, in the event of a malicious act using an electromagnetic pulse, would pose a substantial risk of disruption to the operation of those electrical or electronic devices or communications networks, including hardware, software, and data, that are essential to the reliability of the bulk-power system.

Page 26, after line 14, insert the following:

''(e) MEASURES TO ADDRESS GRID SECURITY VULNERABILITIES.—

''(1) COMMISSION AUTHORITY.—

''(A) RELIABILITY STANDARDS.—If the Commission, in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies, identifies a grid security vulnerability that the Commission determines has not adequately been addressed through a reliability standard developed and approved under section 215, the Commission shall, after notice and opportunity for comment and after consultation with the Secretary, other appropriate Federal agencies, and appropriate governmental authorities in Canada and Mexico, issue an order directing the Electric Reliability Organization to submit to the Commission for approval under section 215, not later than 30 days after the issuance of such order, a reliability standard requiring implementation, by any owner, operator, or user of the bulk-power system in the United States, of measures to protect the bulk-power system against such vulnerability. Any such standard shall include a protection plan, including automated hardware-based solutions. The Commission shall approve a reliability standard submitted pursuant to this subparagraph, unless the Commission determines that such reliability standard does not adequately protect against such vulnerability or otherwise does not satisfy the requirements of section 215.

''(B) MEASURES TO ADDRESS GRID SECURITY VULNERABILITIES.—If the Commission, after notice and opportunity for comment and after consultation with the Secretary, other appropriate Federal agencies, and appropriate governmental authorities in Canada and Mexico, determines that the reliability standard submitted by the Electric Reliability Organization to address a grid security vulnerability identified under subparagraph (A) does not adequately protect the bulk-power system against such vulnerability, the Commission shall promulgate a rule or issue an order requiring implementation, by any owner, operator, or user of the bulk-power system in the United States, of measures to protect the bulk-power system against such vulnerability. Any such rule or order shall include a protection plan, including automated hardware-based solutions. Before promulgating a rule or issuing an order under this subparagraph, the Commission shall, to the extent practicable in light of the urgency of the need for action to address the grid security vulnerability, request and consider recommendations from the Electric Reliability Organization regarding such rule or order. The Commission may establish an appropriate deadline for the submission of such recommendations.

''(2) RESCISSION.—The Commission shall approve a reliability standard developed under section 215 that addresses a grid security vulnerability that is the subject of a rule or order under paragraph (1)(B), unless the Commission determines that such reliability standard does not adequately protect against such vulnerability or otherwise does not satisfy the requirements of section 215. Upon such approval, the Commission shall rescind the rule promulgated or order issued under paragraph (1)(B) addressing such vulnerability, effective upon the effective date of the newly approved reliability standard.

''(3) GEOMAGNETIC STORMS AND ELECTROMAGNETIC PULSE.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall, after notice and an opportunity for comment and after consultation with the Secretary and other appropriate Federal agencies, issue an order directing the Electric Reliability Organization to submit to the Commission for approval under section 215, not later than 6 months after the issuance of such order, reliability standards adequate to protect the bulk-power system from any reasonably foreseeable geomagnetic storm or electromagnetic pulse event. The Commission's order shall specify the nature and magnitude of the reasonably foreseeable events against which such standards must protect. Such standards shall appropriately balance the risks to the bulk-power system associated with such events, including any regional variation in such risks, the costs of mitigating such risks, and the priorities and timing associated with implementation. If the Commission determines that the reliability standards submitted by the Electric Reliability Organization pursuant to this paragraph are inadequate, the Commission shall promulgate a rule or issue an order adequate to protect the bulk-power system from geomagnetic storms or electromagnetic pulse as required under paragraph (1)(B).

''(4) LARGE TRANSFORMER AVAILABILITY.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall, after notice and an opportunity for comment and after consultation with the Secretary and other appropriate Federal agencies, issue an order directing the Electric Reliability Organization to submit to the Commission for approval under section 215, not later than 1 year after the issuance of such order, reliability standards addressing availability of large transformers. Such standards shall require entities that own or operate large transformers to ensure, individually or jointly, adequate availability of large transformers to promptly restore the reliable operation of the bulk-power system in the event that any such transformer is destroyed or disabled as a result of a geomagnetic storm event or electromagnetic pulse event. The Commission's order shall specify the nature and magnitude of the reasonably foreseeable events that shall provide the basis for such standards. Such standards shall—

''(A) provide entities subject to the standards with the option of meeting such standards individually or jointly; and

''(B) appropriately balance the risks associated with a reasonably foreseeable event, including any regional variation in such risks, and the costs of ensuring adequate availability of spare transformers.

''(5) CERTAIN FEDERAL ENTITIES.—For the 11-year period commencing on the date of enactment of this section, the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Bonneville Power Administration shall be exempt from any requirement under this subsection.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FRANKS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I want first to thank the chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. SESSIONS, for making this amendment in order, along with his committee members.

And I want to sincerely thank the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, Mr. UPTON, for his support for the amendment and also just for the entire effort on his part in other committees of jurisdiction to move this underlying and critically important bill forward.

Mr. Chairman, our national security and the reliability of our electric grid are inextricably related. Without the grid, telecommunications no longer operate, transportation of every kind is profoundly affected, sewage and water treatment facilities stop, and a safe and continuous food supply is interrupted.

Contemporary society, Mr. Chairman, is not structured nor does it have the means to provide for the needs of nearly 300 million Americans without electricity. The current strategy for recovery from a failure of the electric grid leaves us ill-prepared to respond effectively to a significant manmade or naturally occurring electromagnetic pulse event that would potentially result in damage to vast numbers of the critical electric grid components nearly simultaneously or over an unprecedented geographic scale.

Mr. Chairman, the negative impacts on U.S. electric infrastructure are potentially catastrophic in a major EMP or severe space weather event unless practical steps are taken to provide protection for critical elements of the electric system.

Nearly a dozen studies, including those by DOD, DOE, the Army War College, the National Academy of Sciences, and the bipartisan Electromagnetic Pulse Commission have all come to the same conclusion: The United States bulk power grid is critically vulnerable to severe space weather and electromagnetic pulse, and this represents a profound danger to this Nation.

We have now spent billions of dollars hardening our critical defense assets against electromagnetic pulse. However, the Department of Defense depends upon the unprotected civilian grid within the continual United States for 99 percent of their electricity needs without which they cannot effect their mission.

Some of America's most enlightened national security experts, as well as many of our enemies or potential enemies, consider a well-executed weaponized electromagnetic pulse against America to be a ''kill shot'' against America.

It is astonishing that our civilian grid remains fundamentally unprotected against a severe EMP, and for it to remain so is an open invitation to our enemies to exploit this dangerous vulnerability.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment amends section 215 of the Federal Power Act by creating a protocol for cooperation between industry and government in the development, promulgation, and implementation of standards and processes that are necessary to address the current shortcomings and vulnerabilities of the electric grid from a major EMP event.

This base bill does indeed provide for such protocols for the protection of the grid but only in a ''grid security emergency,'' defined in the bill as the actual occurrence of the EMP event or the imminent danger of one, and only after the President issues a written directive declaring such an emergency.

Mr. Chairman, that is akin to having a parachute that opens on impact. The nature of this threat is such that if there is a true emergency it may be too late to effectively respond. My amendment is critical because it proactively encourages cooperation on a solution to our vulnerability before it is deemed an emergency.

Mr. Chairman, finally, I would just say that we live in a time where the vulnerabilities to our electric grid, our most critical infrastructure, are big enough to be seen and still small enough to be addressed. This is our moment.

I appeal to my colleagues to support this vital amendment to protect Americans and our national security from this dangerous threat.

Mr. UPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. I would just say to the gentleman, I agree with what you have to say, that the electromagnetic pulse, EMP, and geomagnetic disturbances really do pose a real threat to the grid.

I think your amendment is constructive. It moves the bill forward. I have a few small concerns, but it is a good amendment, and I certainly intend to vote for it.

Mr. FRANKS of Arizona. I thank the chairman more than I know how to say, and I hope that it comes to fruition as it should.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment, although I am not opposed to it.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment aims to address the threat of electromagnetic pulses and geomagnetic storms on the Nation's electric grid.

While I agree that we should protect our Nation's electric grid, I don't agree that we should only focus on these high-impact, low-frequency events. There are many other threats, Mr. Chairman, to the grid that deserve just as much focus.

The Franks amendment may undermine current FERC authority in the process for developing consistent technical standards for grid security already in place under Federal law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FRANKS).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 5 OFFERED BY MR. POLIQUIN

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 5 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. POLIQUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 45, line 8, insert ''(which may not be required to be for a period longer than one year)'' after ''contractual obligations''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Maine (Mr. POLIQUIN) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. POLIQUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the great State of Maine is blessed with natural resources. We have 3,000 miles of breathtaking coastline. We have healthy fisheries. We have an abundance of inland waterways, rivers, streams, lakes, and ponds, and we have an abundance of water as a result. We have potatoes and broccoli in our farming communities, and our landscape is dotted with small organic farms that continue to grow. And, most importantly, or as importantly, Maine is right in the middle of the country's wood basket.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when you cut a strand of trees, one can leave behind the branches and the bark for that matter to decompose and become part of the carbon cycle, or that bark and branches and chips can be collected and transported to paper mills to burn energy or to burn to create energy to run the machinery to create paper, or they can be trucked to power plants to produce electricity.

Now, when this happens, it is the same carbon footprint if that biomass decays on the forest floor or if it is burned in a paper mill or an electric generating station.

This creates jobs, Mr. Chairman, for loggers and truckers, and also we help fuel our State economy and our Nation's economy by using this renewable, green, abundant, safe, homegrown biomass.

Many States, Mr. Chairman, have shifted away from foreign importation of oil for all kinds of reasons, not the least of which is national security. And, today, throughout our country, we are using more natural gas and oil developed here in our country, in America—also nuclear power, hydro, and biomass.

Today, Mr. Chairman, Federal regulations allow electric utilities to determine the reliability of the source of fuel they are burning to create electricity. Part of that reliability equation is the length of a contract to deliver that fuel source to the power plant.

If the reliability of that fuel source is not up to snuff, then that fuel source would result in electricity generated by that power plant not having full access to the power grid and not being able to sell its product, electricity, to the economy.

Some sources of fuel, like coal, for example, Mr. Chairman, are usually sold in 2- or 3-year contracts. The reason for that is because coal today is mostly used to generate electricity.

However, biomass is different. We can use branches and wood chips and bark and biomass that includes other organic materials to create pellets that are burned in wood stoves or to create mulch that gardeners use or also to create plywood and other materials. As a result, Mr. Chairman, biomass as a fuel source is usually sold in 1-year increments.

This bill, H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act, where I am offering an amendment, Mr. Chairman, is a small technical amendment but a very important one, because what it does is it puts all fuel sources on a level playing field, able to compete in the market, such that biomass—a green, renewable, environmentally friendly, homegrown source of fuel for our electric generators—is not penalized.

This is good for the economy, Mr. Chairman. It is good for job creation. It strengthens our national security because it diversifies the fuel sources that we need to fuel and power our electric generators that are used in creating jobs and creating products throughout our country.

As a result, Mr. Chairman, I ask everybody in this Chamber, Republicans and Democrats, today to support this commonsense amendment to help our State, to help our country, to help our economy, and to help our families live better lives.

□ 1615

Mr. UPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POLIQUIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to my colleagues that this amendment clarifies that electric plants can be considered reliable without having to enter into supply contracts that are greater than a year.

I think that it is a good amendment, and we are willing to accept it.

Mr. POLIQUIN. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine's amendment adds further specificity to the criteria defining fuel certainty, one of the three requirements that defines reliable generation in section 1107 of the bill.

The amendment to the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act, or PURPA, is already too prescriptive, in my view. The amendments in this legislation to capacity markets under the Federal Power Act in section 1110 and to PURPA in section 1107 are an attempt at micromanaging grid decisions.

I am not certain what the gentleman from Maine's amendment would be other than to ensure that no electric generation facility need enter into a contract with a fuel supplier that was any longer than 1 year.

I realize some problems have arisen in the New England capacity market, but I doubt this is the best way to address those problems.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine (Mr. POLIQUIN).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 6 OFFERED BY MR. VEASEY

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 6 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. VEASEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 58, after line 22, insert the following new subparagraph:

(C) ADDITIONAL REPORT.—The Secretary of Energy shall transmit to Congress a report on the potential commercial use of carbon capture, utilization, and storage technologies (including enhanced oil recovery), its potential effects on the economy and gross domestic product (GDP), and its contributions to the United States greenhouse gas emission reduction goals if widely utilized at major carbon dioxide-emitting power plants.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. VEASEY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. VEASEY. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to offer an amendment that would require the Department of Energy to submit a report to Congress related to carbon capture, utilization, and sequestration, known as CCUS technologies.

This report would explore the potential effects that the commercial utilization of CCUS technologies would have on the Nation's economy and our gross domestic product. It would also examine what these technologies could contribute to our efforts to reach our greenhouse gas emission reduction goals.

My amendment is intended to supplement the CCUS evaluation report that is required by the underlying legislation. I am confident that this study's finding will provide concrete evidence that CCUS represents a way to benefit the economy and the environment while meeting our Nation's energy needs.

CCUS is a combination of technologies that allows industries to capture carbon, or CO_2, emissions for transport or storage before they are emitted into the atmosphere. These technologies have the potential to allow for the continued use of industries while decreasing the amount of CO_2 released into the environment.

America's recent energy boom has shown us that fossil fuels will continue to make up a sizable portion of our Nation's energy portfolio. So, as we continue to pursue an all-of-the-above energy policy, we must also be sure that we use these resources in an environmentally responsible fashion. Carbon capture technologies do achieve that goal. That is evident in the wide range of support it receives from industry as well as from environmental groups.

However, though much is understood about the various aspects of CCUS, commercial or large-scale deployment has not been achieved, and that is for a variety of different reasons. The absence of commercial projects has led to a fractured understanding of its widespread economic and environmental benefits.

So it is important for us to understand the potential economic benefits CCUS could hold for consumers and stakeholders if we continue to urge the Department of Energy to increase its investments in the research and development of these technologies.

The results of this study would also provide industry stakeholders and likely investors with concrete data to make those economic decisions.

Finally, as America continues to participate in the global effort to address climate change, we must also understand what CCUS can contribute to our emission reduction goals. By considering long-term climate mitigation needs, this study could provide reason for the Department of Energy to continue to support CCUS technologies even if a DOE-supported project does not immediately succeed.

These technologies have a variety of possible applications, from oil recovery and so on, and it is time that we really understood how a large-scale deployment of this technology would benefit our country. So I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. But I support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment requires the Department of Energy to submit a report to Congress on the potential effects that the commercial utilization of carbon capture and sequestration could have on the economy, energy infrastructure, and greenhouse gas emission goals.

I support the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. VEASEY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 7 OFFERED BY MR. MCKINLEY

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 7 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

In subtitle A of title I, add at the end the following new section:

SEC. 1111. ETHANE STORAGE STUDY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with other relevant agencies and stakeholders, shall conduct a study on the feasibility of establishing an ethane storage and distribution hub in the United States.

(b) CONTENTS.—The study conducted under subsection (a) shall include—

(1) an examination of—

(A) potential locations;

(B) economic feasibility;

(C) economic benefits;

(D) geological storage capacity capabilities;

(E) above ground storage capabilities;

(F) infrastructure needs; and

(G) other markets and trading hubs, particularly related to ethane; and

(2) identification of potential additional benefits to energy security.

(c) PUBLICATION OF RESULTS.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretaries of Energy and Commerce shall publish the results of the study conducted under subsection (a) on the websites of the Departments of Energy and Commerce, respectively, and shall submit such results to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Energy and Natural Resources and Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MCKINLEY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I applaud the work of Chairman UPTON and his staff in their bringing this crucial energy bill to the floor, and I want to thank them for that.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment, which directs the Department of Energy and the Department of Commerce to conduct a study on the feasibility of establishing one or more ethane storage and distribution hubs in the United States. This study will also examine the potential benefits that an ethane storage hub would have on our Nation's energy security.

The extraction of natural gas from shale gas formations has increased dramatically over the last 15 years, and ethane is the largest component of that shale gas. Most of the ethane production is used in the petrochemical sector in order to make ethylene, a major component used in the feedstock for manufacturing.

Yet, while the ethane supply continues to grow, the lack of infrastructure and storage inhibits its potential for America's manufacturing economy. Establishing ethane storage and distribution hubs could bring about new markets for these stranded liquids and allow America's shale formations to achieve their full potential as critical national energy assets.

A revamped storage and distribution infrastructure will make our economy less vulnerable to potential unanticipated disruptions and will reduce transportation costs.

Furthermore, the results of this study and decentralization of ethane activity could encourage investment in manufacturing and the expansion of the petrochemical industry all across America.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment for a study.

Mr. UPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCKINLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a good amendment. It directs the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with other relevant agencies and stakeholders, to conduct a study on the feasibility of establishing an ethane storage and distribution hub in the U.S.

The gentleman and I have talked about it over the last number of months. I think it is a good amendment, and it adds to the bill, so I support the amendment.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MCKINLEY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 8 OFFERED BY MRS. ELLMERS OF NORTH CAROLINA

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 8 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mrs. ELLMERS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of subtitle A of title I, add the following:

SEC. 11___. STATEMENT OF POLICY ON GRID MODERNIZATION.

It is the policy of the United States to promote and advance—

(1) the modernization of the energy delivery infrastructure of the United States, and bolster the reliability, affordability, diversity, efficiency, security, and resiliency of domestic energy supplies, through advanced grid technologies;

(2) the modernization of the electric grid to enable a robust multi-directional power flow that leverages centralized energy resources and distributed energy resources, enables robust retail transactions, and facilitates the alignment of business and regulatory models to achieve a grid that optimizes the entire electric delivery system;

(3) relevant research and development in advanced grid technologies, including—

(A) energy storage;

(B) predictive tools and requisite real-time data to enable the dynamic optimization of grid operations;

(C) power electronics, including smart inverters, that ease the challenge of intermittent renewable resources and distributed generation;

(D) real-time data and situational awareness tools and systems; and

(E) tools to increase data security, physical security, and cybersecurity awareness and protection;

(4) the leadership of the United States in basic and applied sciences to develop a systems approach to innovation and development of cyber-secure advanced grid technologies, architectures, and control paradigms capable of managing diverse supplies and loads;

(5) the safeguarding of the critical energy delivery infrastructure of the United States and the enhanced resilience of the infrastructure to all hazards, including—

(A) severe weather events;

(B) cyber and physical threats; and

(C) other factors that affect energy delivery;

(6) the coordination of goals, investments to optimize the grid, and other measures for energy efficiency, advanced grid technologies, interoperability, and demand response-side management resources;

(7) partnerships with States and the private sector—

(A) to facilitate advanced grid capabilities and strategies; and

(B) to provide technical assistance, tools, or other related information necessary to enhance grid integration, particularly in connection with the development at the State and local levels of strategic energy, energy surety and assurance, and emergency preparedness, response, and restoration planning;

(8) the deployment of information and communications technologies at all levels of the electric system;

(9) opportunities to provide consumers with timely information and advanced control options;

(10) sophisticated or advanced control options to integrate distributed energy resources and associated ancillary services;

(11) open-source communications, database architectures, and common information model standards, guidelines, and protocols that enable interoperability to maximize efficiency gains and associated benefits among—

(A) the grid;

(B) energy and building management systems; and

(C) residential, commercial, and industrial equipment;

(12) private sector investment in the energy delivery infrastructure of the United States through targeted demonstration and validation of advanced grid technologies; and

(13) establishment of common valuation methods and tools for cost-benefit analysis of grid integration paradigms.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. ELLMERS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from North Carolina.

Mrs. ELLMERS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of this bipartisan amendment.

I join my colleague, Congressman JERRY MCNERNEY of California. Together, we chair the Grid Innovation Caucus with the belief that we need to have a bold and ambitious vision for modernizing our Nation's electric grid.

Our current electric infrastructure resembles that of the original grid built over 100 years ago. New technology has given us the opportunity to transform a 20th century grid into a 21st century grid, and my home State of North Carolina is helping to lead the way. In fact, North Carolina is the second-leading State in grid innovation technology development behind California.

There is a need to bring our electric grid and the entire electric system up to date in order to meet the changing demands of our digital economy. This amendment is simply a statement of policy and a blueprint for what we want our future grid to consist of and how we want it to perform. By adopting this amendment, we begin to develop a concrete plan to further secure our grid.

This is a conversation that needs to happen now, and this energy package moves the debate forward. Technology has given us the ability to further secure our grid from physical and cyber threats as well as increase the efficiency, reliability, and redundancy of this vital component.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCNERNEY).

Mr. MCNERNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague from North Carolina for yielding and for her work on the Grid Innovation Caucus, which is one example of bipartisan cooperation for the good of the Nation.

I also join my colleague Mrs. ELLMERS in offering this bipartisan amendment, which would establish a statement on grid modernization policy. This will establish a clear vision to achieve the future grid.

The grid is the core of our Nation's effort to transition to clean energy sources. That said, our current electric grid has much the same technology that was in place for the last 100 years. We need to improve and upgrade the grid to meet the 21st century demands and the demands of the digital economy.

The future grid must be reliable, secure, resilient, and affordable while integrating a range of resources and devices, including intermittent renewable energy, storage, and electric vehicles.

Having a national grid modernization policy, or vision, will help achieve these objectives while maintaining the secure, safe, reliable, and affordable power for which our Nation is known.

I thank my colleague, who is the co-chair of the Grid Innovation Caucus, and I urge a ''yes'' vote on the amendment.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the gentlewoman's amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment, and I congratulate the two on its being a bipartisan amendment. This makes a strong policy on grid modernization. I appreciate their work, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. ELLMERS).

The amendment was agreed to.

□ 1630

AMENDMENT NO. 9, AS MODIFIED, OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON LEE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 9 printed in House Report 114–359.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Chair, I offer amendment No. 9, and I ask unanimous consent that it be modified in the form I have placed at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment, as modified, and report the modification.

The text of the amendment, as modified, is as follows:

At the end of subtitle A of title I, add the following:

SEC. 11___. GRID RESILIENCE REPORT.

Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall submit to the Congress a report on methods to increase electric grid resilience with respect to all threats, including cyber attacks, vandalism, terrorism, and severe weather.

The Acting CHAIR. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the amendment is modified.

There was no objection.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Let me express my appreciation to Chairman UPTON and Ranking Member PALLONE and the Rules Committee for allowing this amendment to come to the floor. Let me thank Chairman SESSIONS and Ranking Member SLAUGHTER of the Rules Committee as well.

As I begin, let me acknowledge that I think we have a collective commitment and need to continue to assess the electric grid. According to a Department of Energy report on the economic benefits of increasing the electric grid resilience, the electric grid in the State of Texas is highly vulnerable to severe weather, cyber attacks, vandalism, and terrorism. Mr. Chairman, Texas is only an example.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Senate Committee on Veteran Affairs & Military Installations that has come to my attention and the House Committee on Defense and Veterans' Affairs to take note of the vulnerability. I use this letter from the State to only say that other States are in the same category.

That is why the Jackson Lee amendment is very relevant, because it requires a report to be promulgated upon our Nation's preparedness for challenges in energy as it pertains to cyber attacks, vandalism, terrorism, and severe weather.

I sit on the Homeland Security Committee's Cybersecurity, Infrastructure Protection, and Security Technologies Subcommittee, and we see every day vulnerabilities to the cybersecurity or the infrastructure. The importance of this amendment was underscored, as I indicated, in a letter that I received.

My amendment offers the option of the utilization of geothermal power, in addition to other renewable strategies, to address some of the energy insecurities faced by this Nation. In today's world of natural and manmade disasters in the energy sector, seeking and implementing complementary alternative measures, such as that proposed in my amendment, will help address some of the insecurity issues triggered by these disasters.

The natural disasters suffered in many of our home States, whether it is tornados or hurricanes, we know that the grid is an important survival asset for the Nation.

According to the DOE report, the average yearly cost of power outages from severe weather in the U.S. is between $18 billion to $33 billion. Cold weather in a number of States caused two emergencies that knocked out 9,355 megawatts.

These events warn us that key infrastructure facilities along the Gulf Coast and many other places continue to stress our grid. Thus, this amendment seeks to facilitate the United States' exploration of possibilities, strategies, and utilities of promoting energy infrastructure.

I would ask my colleagues to join me in ensuring through this report that we are in front of it, if we can be, to strengthen our electric grid, to look for alternatives, to be ahead of cybersecurity attacks, vandalism, weather conditions, and assure the American public that they do have a resilient system that will last during times of great disaster.

I ask my colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. Chair, let me express my appreciation to Chairman UPTON and Ranking Member PALLONE for their leadership and commitment to American energy infrastructure development, security, independence and economic growth.

I also wish to thank Chairman SESSIONS, Ranking Member SLAUGHTER, and the members of the Rules Committee for making in order Jackson Lee Amendment Number 9.

Mr. Chair, thank you for the opportunity to explain my amendment, which provides:

GRID RESILIENCE REPORT

Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall submit to Congress a report on methods to increase electric grid resilience with respect to all threats, including cyber attacks, vandalism, terrorism, and severe weather.

According to a Department of Energy Report on the Economic Benefits of Increasing Electric Grid Resilience, the electrical grid in the state of Texas is highly vulnerable to severe weather, cyber attacks, vandalism and terrorism.

This is why Jackson Lee Amendment Number 9 is very relevant because it requires a report to be promulgated on our nation's preparedness for challenges in energy, as pertains to cyber attacks, vandalism, terrorism and severe weather.

The importance of this Amendment was underscored in a letter addressed to me and other members of the Texas Delegation from the Texas Senate Veterans Affairs and Military Installations Committee and the Texas House Defense and Veteran's Affairs Committee.

My Amendment offers the option of the utilization of geothermal power in addition to other renewable strategies to address some of the energy insecurities faced by my home state of Texas and by our nation as a whole.

Across the nation from New Orleans to Georgia to New Jersey, we have all seen the devastation natural and man-made disasters have wrought on the livelihood of Americans.

In today's world of natural and man-made disasters in the energy sector, seeking and implementing complementary alternative measures such as that proposed in my Amendment will help address some of the insecurity issues triggered by these disasters.

The natural disaster suffered in my home state of Texas is an example that underscores the imperative of a well informed report corroborated by data and facts.

Here are the recent facts: According to a DOE report, the average yearly cost of power outages from severe weather in the U.S. is between $18–$33 billion; Cold weather in Texas caused a level two emergency that knocked out 9,355 MW of power that drastically increased wholesale electricity prices 100 times the normal rate in January 2014; Additionally, in 2014 alone, there were approximately eight major power outages in the Corpus Christi area, three of which affected nearby Navy bases.

These events warn us that key infrastructure facilities along the gulf coast operate 24/7 365 days a year, with ongoing powerful power demands, and there is a need for enormous and capable energy security infrastructures, prepared to handle natural and man-made disasters.

Thus, this Amendment seeks to facilitate the United State's exploration of the possibilities, strategies and the utility of promoting energy infrastructures.

Indeed, part of what I hope will be the result of the report requested by my Amendment are the timelines, actions and plans for bolstering energy security and infrastructure development in our nation.

Already we can see some of the potential dividends of investing in infrastructures that foster the utilization of our geothermal resources to promote energy security and efficiency.

A prime example is my home state of Texas.

Indeed, according to reports, Texas' geothermal resources can complement both offsite wind and solar projects and leverage the earth's constant heat in gulf coast pressurized zones and eliminate dependency on external fuel sources.

For example, the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL) published a study in 2012 that determined a minimum of 2,500 Megawatts to the power of 3 (MW_3) of geothermal potential within the gulf coast region.

For those of us in the Gulf Coast, our geothermal can serve as an unlimited resource which can provide relief to facilities in need of clean, stable power and set a new standard for sustainability.

Additionally, geothermal resource can be instrumental in fostering our nation's renewable energy, while adding military value to our defense installations.

For all of these reasons, I urge my colleagues to join me and support Jackson Lee Amendment Number 9.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, I supported the amendment before it was revised. I support the amendment as revised.

This amendment directs the Secretary of Energy to submit to the House and Senate Energy Committees a report on methods to increase electric grid resilience with respect to all threats, including cyber attacks, vandalism, terrorism, and severe weather. Actually, as amended, it requires it submit to the Congress versus the specific committees.

I think it is a fine amendment, and I support it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I want to also lend my support to the legislation on grid resiliency. I think it is very important. I appreciate the gentlewoman putting it forward.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Chairman, I include in the RECORD this letter from the Senate Committee on Veteran Affairs & Military Installations of the State of Texas and the House Committee on Defense and Veterans' Affairs.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON VETERAN AFFAIRS & MILITARY INSTALLATIONS AND HOUSE COMMITTEE ON DEFENSE AND VETERANS' AFFAIRS,

November 12, 2015.

DEAR HONORABLE JACKSON LEE: On behalf of the Texas Senate Committee on Veteran Affairs and Military Installations and the House Committee on Defense and Veterans' Affairs, we are writing to ask for your support for the development of geothermal energy along the Gulf Coast to provide onsite power and increased energy independence to critical infrastructure facilities that include Military bases such as Naval Air Station (NAS) Corpus Christi, Naval Air Station Kingsville, and the Ports of Corpus Christi and Brownsville.

The August 2013 Report of Economic Benefits of Increasing Electric Grid Resilience authored by the Department of Energy determined that in addition to cyber-attacks, vandalism, and terrorism, the electrical grid is highly vulnerable to severe weather. The average yearly cost of power outages from severe weather in the U.S. is between $18-$33 billion. Cold weather in Texas caused a level two emergency that knocked out 9,355 MW of power that drastically increased wholesale electricity prices 100 times the normal rate in January 2014. Additionally in 2014, there were approximately eight major power outages in the Corpus Christi area, three of which affected the nearby Navy bases. Key infrastructure facilities along the gulf coast operate 24/7/365 and their ongoing power demands are enormous; however, the need for cleaner and more cost effective renewables is also increasing.

The National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL), who supports the military's renewable energy goal, published a study in April 2012 that determined a minimum of 2,500 MW of geothermal power potential within the gulf coast region and more recent review by geothermal energy developers have doubled that estimate. Our committees were briefed recently on a conceptual plan to generate as much as 10MW of geothermal power within a 2-acre area at NAS Corpus Christi and up to 5MW at NAS Kingsville. The Corpus Christi Army Depot who is a tenant on NAS Corpus Christi is also considering a plan through its Energy Service Company (ESCO) to utilize geothermal power with a MicroGrid on-site to enhance its energy security in case of power outage. This MicroGrid would complement other offsite renewable power sent from the local grid.

From a regulatory stand-point, the Energy Act of 2005, Presidential Executive Orders 13423 and 13513, and the Department of the Navy's own Renewable Energy Security Goals established by Navy Secretary Ray Mabus in October 2012 are some of the other drivers that are encouraging the military's use of any geographically available onsite renewable sources by 2015 and 2020 respectively. The Navy's 2012 report only considered 1.2MW Solar PV for on-site generation at NAS Corpus Christi; however we understand their renewable energy team has acknowledged Geothermal is an option that has still not been implemented.

Texas' Geothermal resources can complement both off-site wind and solar projects and leverage the earth's constant heat in gulf coast geopressured zones and eliminate dependency on external fuel sources. This unlimited resource will provide relief to facilities in need of clean, stable power and set a new standard for sustainability while fostering renewable energy growth in Texas and adding military value to our defense installations.

As Chairs of the Texas military affairs committees, we ask for your support and advocacy of this approach to military leaders in Washington D.C. It will improve military value for our defense installations, create new jobs in the energy sector, and benefit the State of Texas as a whole. If you would like more information on the potential projects in Texas, please feel free to contact staff of either Committee.

Sincerely,

SENATOR DONNA CAMPBELL,
CHAIR,
Senate Veteran Affairs & Military Installations Committee.

REPRESENTATIVE SUSAN L. KING, CHAIR,
House Defense & Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Chairman, let me conclude by simply saying I thank both Mr. UPTON and Mr. PALLONE for joining in the unanimous consent to revise the amendment simply to say that this report on increasing methods to increase the electric grid resilience with respect to all threats, including cyber attacks, vandalism, terrorism, severe weather, will go to the Congress. I thank them very much.

I ask my colleagues to support the Jackson Lee amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE).

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 10 OFFERED BY MR. KILDEE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 10 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of subtitle A of title I, add the following:

SEC. 11___. GAO REPORT ON IMPROVING NATIONAL RESPONSE CENTER.

The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study of ways in which the capabilities of the National Response Center could be improved.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chair, the National Response Center is a joint operation between the U.S. Coast Guard, the EPA, and other agencies. It is the sole Federal point of contact for reporting hazardous substance releases and oil spills.

Essentially, it is our Nation's 911 for dangerous spills, staffed by the Coast Guard 24 hours a day, passing on reports to relevant national response teams.

Those teams then go to the site of a spill, assess the situation, determine the best way to mitigate exposure, and quickly clean up the spill. Often it is the Coast Guard being called upon to clean up a spill when it involves surface water.

Back in March I visited a Coast Guard station in my district to learn more about their operations. While I was there, we talked quite a bit about a serious deficiency in their capabilities, a deficiency that came to light during one of the greatest environmental disasters that our State has faced, and the chairman is quite aware of this.

In 2010, there was a large spill on the Kalamazoo River. It was the largest inland oil spill in the history of the U.S., in fact. The Coast Guard was called upon to help with those cleanup efforts.

When they arrived, however, they learned that the equipment that they had brought to the spill was for one type of oil—the oil that they believed to have been involved in this particular incident—but the oil in the Kalamazoo River was an entirely different type and consistency than what they had expected, and it required a different cleanup method.

Valuable time was lost as the Coast Guard actually had to return back to their station, hours away, to get the right equipment. Meanwhile, this spill continued into this river.

The terrible scope of the spill could have been much more easily mitigated had the National Response Center possessed the basic information regarding the contents of that particular pipeline so they could pass the information on to the Coast Guard to address the spill when it occurred.

Currently, these response teams are often flying blind as they head out to spills. Without this important information, the likelihood of much more serious damage, such as what we saw in 2010 in the Kalamazoo River, is much higher.

So I have been talking with lots of folks, including the people within the Coast Guard, about ways to improve their ability to address and respond to this type of spill.

The amendment that I have offered would simply require the GAO to conduct a study of ways in which the capabilities of the National Response Center could be improved, including providing additional information on the contents of these pipelines.

It would be an independent study that could then guide policymakers in improving the National Response Center, providing them the tools they need in the 21st century.

The National Response Center receives over 6,000 calls per year across the country on all different sorts of spills. Giving the National Response Center the tools they need in order to respond to these incidents as quickly as possible with the right information is critical not only to protecting public health, but in preventing long-term damage to the environment.

Of course, coming from Michigan—in the district that I represent, the Great Lakes, I have 77 miles of shoreline—we are particularly concerned about surface water spills, and this information is absolutely critical. Forty million people depend on the Great Lakes for drinking water. We want to ensure that those who are charged with responding to accidents, such as the one we saw in Michigan, have all the information and tools available to them.

I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, I support the amendment. I want to say to my friend from the great State of Michigan that this is obviously an issue that is close to both of our hearts.

I want to go back. When I was first elected a few years ago, one of the first bills that I saw enacted into law was an oil spill response team for the Great Lakes. It was actually a visit, I think, now to your district, Bay City, back then, which had a fairly significant oil spill. We found out that the Coast Guard was totally unprepared. My amendment was added, I want to say, to a highway bill to get it done.

When we had the oil spill on the Kalamazoo River in Calhoun County a few years ago, we looked at that. We actually passed the Upton-Dingell—not the DEBBIE DINGELL, but the John Dingell—bill on pipeline safety, which I want to say passed this body with more than 400 votes.

It did a lot of good things, including one that was very important, which was, when there is an oil spill, it had to be reported to PHMSA within an hour versus on a timely basis. That was a big change.

Now that we expect the passage tomorrow of the highway bill, Chairman SHUSTER and myself will be working again to reauthorize the pipeline safety bill. I am led to believe that we will be prepared to start early next year to bring a bill to the floor. I look forward to your support.

□ 1645

Anything that we can do to improve the current system is a good thing, which is why I strongly support your amendment today.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank the chairman for his good work on this. I look forward to working with him again on additional pipeline safety measures as they come to the floor. I appreciate his support for my amendment.

I believe in quitting while I am ahead. With that, unless the ranking member would like time, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE).

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting CHAIR. The Chair understands that amendment No. 11 will not be offered.

AMENDMENT NO. 12 OFFERED BY MR. GARAMENDI

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 12 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 118, line 2, insert ''transportation,'' after ''distribution,''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from California (Mr. GARAMENDI) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to figure out who would be opposed to this amendment, so maybe I will just talk my few minutes and go from there.

The bill deals with energy, and I am trying to figure out, let's see, energy that goes along in wires would be electrical energy. If it is coal, it is probably on a truck or a train. If it is oil or gas, it is on a pipeline or maybe in a truck, maybe in a boat or barge.

But this bill doesn't speak to the transportation of energy, so this amendment is extraordinarily important because it really says that, if you are going to study energy, you better study how you are going to get it to wherever it needs to go. This amendment, being such an important amendment, and so long—let's see, transportation. Wow, not even 15 letters. That is all it does. It simply adds the word ''transportation'' to the study section of this bill, requiring the Department of Energy, as it studies energy, to study how it gets from here to there. That is it.

Now, I can go on for another 4 minutes or so, but after doing so, it won't make any difference because we really need to study energy and figure out how it gets to where it needs to go. That is the amendment. Add the word ''transportation'' in it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition but speak in support of the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment adds inclusion of the energy transportation to the list of considerations for the energy security valuation report. Section 3002 requires the Secretary of Energy to establish transparent and uniform procedures and criteria to ensure that energy-related actions that significantly affect the supply, distribution, or use of energy are evaluated with respect to their potential impact on energy security, including their impact on the consumer and the economy and energy supply and diversity.

I think it is a good amendment. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Chairman, I came in prepared for a brawl, and all I get is acceptance of an amendment. I think I will go with that and say thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the extraordinary wisdom that apparently we both seem to have.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. GARAMENDI).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 13 OFFERED BY MR. MCKINLEY

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 13 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of title III, add the following new section:

SEC. 3007. ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW FOR ENERGY EXPORT FACILITIES.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including any other provision of this Act and any amendment made by this Act, to the extent that the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) applies to the issuance of a permit for the construction, operation, or maintenance of a facility for the export of bulk commodities, no such permit may be denied until each applicable Federal agency has completed all reviews required for the facility under such Act.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MCKINLEY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, again, I applaud the committee, and particularly the staff, for the hard work they have done in putting together this comprehensive piece of legislation on energy. It has been long overdue to have that energy bill, so I am delighted it is here on the floor.

I rise today in support of an amendment which is cosponsored by my colleague from Montana, Congressman ZINKE. This amendment will ensure that no permit for a coal export facility can be denied until all reviews required under the National Environmental Policy Act, known as NEPA, have been completed.

The NEPA review process is critical to ensure that the communities can provide input on any proposed project, and it allows the developer the opportunity to work with the citizens of a community and the regulatory agency to address any concerns that may arise. Denying a permit request for a coal export facility before the NEPA process is complete would send a precedent that indicates that those voices of affected parties don't matter and diminish the value of the NEPA process.

This amendment will ensure that a regulatory agency must first take into consideration the merits of the project, voices of the people, their thoughts, concerns, and the findings of the NEPA report before acting on a permit and simply not advancing an anticoal ideology.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, time after time, Democratic Members have come to the floor to strike bad NEPA language from bills, only to be voted down by Republicans who use streamlining as a euphemism for letting polluters do whatever they want. Now they expect us to believe that they are sincere about keeping NEPA strong in one perverse scenario in which they think it could help them. Well, I don't think that passes the smell test. What is more, the amendment undermines the treaty rights of the Lummi Nation and jeopardizes the sovereignty of all tribes with rights to natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, tomorrow we will be here on the House floor to vote on the conference report for a highway bill which includes, over the opposition of many Democrats, sweeping exemptions from the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act. I have no doubt that both of the sponsors of this amendment support those exemptions and will vote to pass the bill without a second thought about the fact that it short-circuits NEPA review for many, many infrastructure projects.

I am shocked to see them standing here with straight faces arguing that, when it benefits them and their friends in the coal industry, the NEPA process should be thorough and complete. It is a level of audacity that I think is almost laughable.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''no'' on this damaging and disingenuous amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Montana (Mr. ZINKE).

Mr. ZINKE. Mr. Chairman, to clarify, this amendment does not violate treaty rights, and to suggest it does is disingenuous and false.

This is about fairness. It is not about two tribes. It is about fairness of a process. It would be unprecedented for the Army Corps of Engineers to bypass the EIS to make a decision, and that is what this amendment does.

It is not about coal. It is not about commodities, nor is it about treaty rights because, quite frankly, the Crow Tribe in Montana has treaty rights, too. This is not to pit one poor nation against a rich nation. It is about simple fairness.

It would be unprecedented for the Army Corps of Engineers or any government body to give judgment before the process is complete, and that is what we are asking for. The EIS is the process that needs to be done.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MCKINLEY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 14 OFFERED BY MR. GENE GREEN OF TEXAS

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 14 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of title III, insert the following new section:

SEC. 3007. AUTHORIZATION OF CROSS-BORDER INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS.

(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that the United States should establish a more uniform, transparent, and modern process for the construction, connection, operation, and maintenance of pipelines and electric transmission facilities for the import and export of liquid products, including water and petroleum, and natural gas and the transmission of electricity to and from Canada and Mexico.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS AT THE NATIONAL BOUNDARY OF THE UNITED STATES.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—No person may construct, connect, operate, or maintain a cross-border segment of a pipeline or electric transmission facility for the import or export of liquid products or natural gas, or the transmission of electricity, to or from Canada or Mexico without obtaining a certificate of crossing for such construction, connection, operation, or maintenance under this subsection.

(2) CERTIFICATE OF CROSSING.—

(A) ISSUANCE.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 120 days after final action is taken under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) with respect to a cross-border segment described in paragraph (1), the relevant official identified under subparagraph (B), in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies, shall issue a certificate of crossing for the cross-border segment unless the relevant official finds that the construction, connection, operation, or maintenance of the cross-border segment is not in the public interest of the United States.

(ii) NATURAL GAS.—For the purposes of natural gas pipelines, a finding with respect to the public interest under section 3(a) of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717b(a)) shall serve as a finding under clause (i) of this subparagraph.

(B) RELEVANT OFFICIAL.—The relevant official referred to in subparagraph (A) is—

(i) the Secretary of State with respect to liquid pipelines;

(ii) the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with respect to natural gas pipelines; and

(iii) the Secretary of Energy with respect to electric transmission facilities.

(C) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT FOR ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.—The Secretary of Energy shall require, as a condition of issuing a certificate of crossing for an electric transmission facility, that the cross-border segment be constructed, connected, operated, or maintained consistent with all applicable policies and standards of—

(i) the Electric Reliability Organization and the applicable regional entity; and

(ii) any Regional Transmission Organization or Independent System Operator with operational or functional control over the cross-border segment of the electric transmission facility.

(3) MODIFICATIONS TO EXISTING PROJECTS.—No certificate of crossing shall be required under this subsection for a change in ownership, volume expansion, downstream or upstream interconnection, or adjustment to maintain flow (such as a reduction or increase in the number of pump or compressor stations) with respect to a liquid or natural gas pipeline or electric transmission facility unless such modification would result in a significant impact at the national boundary.

(4) EFFECT OF OTHER LAWS.—Nothing in this subsection shall affect the application of any other Federal statute (including the Natural Gas Act and the Energy Policy and Conservation Act) to a project for which a certificate of crossing is sought under this subsection.

(c) IMPORTATION OR EXPORTATION OF NATURAL GAS TO CANADA AND MEXICO.—Section 3(c) of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717b(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''In the case of an application for the importation or exportation of natural gas to or from Canada or Mexico, the Commission shall grant the application not later than 30 days after the date of receipt of the complete application.''.

(d) TRANSMISSION OF ELECTRIC ENERGY TO CANADA AND MEXICO.—

(1) REPEAL OF REQUIREMENT TO SECURE ORDER.—Section 202(e) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824a(e)) is repealed.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) STATE REGULATIONS.—Section 202(f) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824a(f)) is amended by striking ''insofar as such State regulation does not conflict with the exercise of the Commission's powers under or relating to subsection 202(e)''.

(B) SEASONAL DIVERSITY ELECTRICITY EXCHANGE.—Section 602(b) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 824a–4(b)) is amended by striking ''the Commission has conducted hearings and made the findings required under section 202(e) of the Federal Power Act'' and all that follows through the period at the end and inserting ''the Secretary has conducted hearings and finds that the proposed transmission facilities would not impair the sufficiency of electric supply within the United States or would not impede or tend to impede the coordination in the public interest of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary''.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE; RULEMAKING DEADLINES.—

(1) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsections (b) through (d), and the amendments made by such subsections, shall take effect on January 20, 2017.

(2) RULEMAKING DEADLINES.—Each relevant official described in subsection (b)(2)(B) shall—

(A) not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register notice of a proposed rulemaking to carry out the applicable requirements of subsection (b); and

(B) not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register a final rule to carry out the applicable requirements of subsection (b).

(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

(1) the term ''cross-border segment'' means the portion of a liquid or natural gas pipeline or electric transmission facility that is located at the national boundary of the United States with either Canada or Mexico;

(2) the terms ''Electric Reliability Organization'' and ''regional entity'' have the meanings given those terms in section 215 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824o);

(3) the terms ''Independent System Operator'' and ''Regional Transmission Organization'' have the meanings given those terms in section 3 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 796);

(4) the term ''liquid'' includes water, petroleum, petroleum product, and any other substance that flows through a pipeline other than natural gas; and

(5) the term ''natural gas'' has the meaning given that term in section 2 of the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717a).

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GENE GREEN) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of an amendment that would create regulatory certainty with our neighbors, Canada and Mexico.

The Presidential permitting process dates back many administrations. Beginning in the administration of Ulysses S. Grant, the executive branch has taken steps to ensure our cross-border infrastructure between Canada and Mexico was constructed.

These past administrations and, indeed, the current administration have been forced to use executive orders because Congress has failed to act. Congress has a duty to regulate the commerce of the United States, and cross-border energy infrastructure projects fall well within that space.

We need to create a system with our neighbors, Mexico and Canada, to truly create a North American energy market, and that is what this amendment would do. We can't build infrastructure in this country or in this continent based on who sits in the White House.

There are 11 cross-border projects awaiting a decision now by the Department of State and the President, including electricity wires and water pipelines.

It is Congress' responsibility to create regulatory rules by which infrastructure is constructed. As a reminder of this, tomorrow we will pass the conference report to the FAST Act. The FAST Act is a multiyear transportation bill that shows our determination to build infrastructure for the 21st century. Now we must build on that success and focus on our energy infrastructure.

This amendment would create a regulatory process at the Department of State, Department of Energy, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to permit cross-border infrastructure. This is no different than building roads, bridges, or railways.

The Department of Transportation coordinates with Federal, State, and local agencies to ensure the project is completed and the environment protected. We will do the same thing with pipes and wires. We need to build electric transmission lines and pipelines to move resources from where they are to where they are needed.

The amendment complies with the National Environmental Policy Act and requires a full environmental review of any cross-border facility, including analysis of the climate change impacts. The entire length of the pipeline or electric transmission line will be reviewed for environmental impacts.

This amendment is about the future and how to meet the 21st century demands that our country needs. We should embrace the changes taking place in North America and harmonize our policies with those of our neighbors both to the north and south.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment makes an end run around the National Environmental Policy Act. The amendment would simply eliminate any meaningful review of the environmental impact of large trans-boundary infrastructure projects by redefining and significantly narrowing the scope of NEPA's environmental review.

While a traditional NEPA review looks at the impacts of an entire project, this amendment restricts NEPA review only to that small portion that physically crosses the border, and that defies common sense. We are talking about massive projects that are more than just at border crossing.

When we approve a trans-boundary pipeline or transmission line, we are approving multibillion-dollar infrastructures that may stretch hundreds of miles and will last for decades. They cross through private property, water bodies, farms, sensitive lands, and over aquifers. They carry substances that can catch fire or spill and pollute the environment, and they have profound implications for climate change.

To understand the potential environmental impact of an energy project, we need to look at the project as a whole. To ignore the potential environmental or safety risks for every part of the project except the tiny sliver of land at the national boundary makes no sense.

Imagine going to the doctor if you are feeling sick, and the doctor gives you a clean bill of health after looking only at your elbow. That is what this amendment does by redefining the scope of NEPA's inquiry to only encompass the step across the border. It makes the process of environmental review essentially meaningless, and no meaningful review means no opportunity to mitigate potential harm to public health, public safety, or the environment.

Mr. Chairman, NEPA provides policymakers with a critical tool to understand potential impacts and consider lower impact alternatives. NEPA doesn't dictate the outcome or, by itself, impose any constraints on projects.

□ 1700

Fundamentally, it requires us to look before we leap, and that is just basic common sense. We should not be punching loopholes in this law.

But the amendment doesn't just stop there. It also creates a rebuttable presumption that every cross-border project is in the public interest, tipping the scale in favor of their approval. And that is a subtle but significant change. Coupled with the small portion of projects being reviewed, the amendment makes it virtually impossible to ever prove that a project is not in the public interest.

Proponents of this amendment argue that a new process is necessary for reviewing and approving cross-border projects, but if Congress is going to establish new permitting rules through legislation, it should do so in a thoughtful and balanced way. Instead, this amendment creates a process that rubber stamps projects and eliminates meaningful environmental review and public participation.

Frankly, this amendment is just another attempt to bring TransCanada's Keystone XL pipeline back from the grave. The President has already rejected their application, and we have wasted enough time on this Canadian pipe dream.

The Keystone XL pipeline is a lose-lose proposition for energy security, a lose-lose for safe climate and a healthy environment. And we shouldn't be trying to create a weaker approval process to provide a new pathway for its approval.

Adoption of this amendment will undoubtedly benefit TransCanada and other multinational oil companies but will not help the American people that we are here to represent.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my good friend from New Jersey is actually incorrect. This amendment passed the House last session and didn't pass in the Senate. But it does have the NEPA process throughout, whether it is a pipeline or transmission line, from literally not just the border but also to the destination.

And it is not just Keystone. We have natural gas pipelines being built from Texas to Mexico. Twenty years from now, we will need those pipelines reversed to bring natural gas from Mexico to my chemical industries. That is what this amendment is about.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON), the chair of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, the Green amendment is very similar to the bill that I introduced last Congress and, as we know, did pass the House with some bipartisan support.

This amendment establishes a straightforward and predictable procedure to permit cross-border pipelines and electric transmission facilities.

It is not Keystone. We are over that battle. It is time to move beyond that. But we want certainty in these things.

This is an important amendment. In order for the U.S. to fully benefit from our energy abundance, we have to encourage rather than obstruct trade with our good neighbors, particularly the Canadians, as well as the Mexicans—an energy policy that works.

Let's do this. The amendment is a good one.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I just want to encourage Members to support the amendment. We need to bring our country and our trading partners on the north and south border together on energy issues. I encourage an ''aye'' vote.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GENE GREEN).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be postponed.

The Acting CHAIR. The Chair understands that amendment No. 15 will not be offered.

AMENDMENT NO. 16 OFFERED BY MR. TAKANO

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 16 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. TAKANO. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 133, after line 19, insert the following new section (and redesignate the subsequent sections accordingly):

SEC. 4114. BATTERY STORAGE REPORT.

Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall transmit to Congress a report on the potential of battery energy storage that answers the following questions:

(1) How do existing Federal standards impact the development and deployment of battery storage systems?

(2) What are the benefits of using existing battery storage technology, and what challenges exist to their widespread use? What are some examples of existing battery storage projects providing these benefits?

(3) What potential impact could large-scale battery storage and behind-the-meter battery storage have on renewable energy utilization?

(4) What is the potential of battery technology for grid-scale use nationwide? What is the potential impact of battery technology on the national grid capabilities?

(5) How much economic activity associated with large-scale and behind-the-meter battery storage technology is located in the United States? How many jobs do these industries account for?

(6) What policies other than the Renewable Energy Investment Tax Credit have research and available data shown to promote renewable energy use and storage technology deployment by State and local governments or private end-users?

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from California (Mr. TAKANO) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. TAKANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of this bipartisan amendment which brings us one step closer to realizing the enormous potential of battery energy storage.

This technology is capable of transforming our energy landscape by storing power in times of excess production and releasing power in times of excess demand. It can make our grid more reliable and secure. It can save consumers money by replacing costly gas-powered peaker stations.

And, perhaps most importantly, it is compatible with any source of energy. Its compatibility with multiple power sources means we aren't picking winners and losers. Rather, we are increasing our capacity to use all sources of energy.

Battery energy storage is particularly promising in its ability to unlock the power of renewables, leading to a cleaner, more sustainable energy portfolio.

Even as the cost of renewable energy sources drops closer to that of fossil fuels, the viability of wind and solar power is limited by inconsistency. Put simply, the wind doesn't always blow and the sun doesn't always shine. Battery energy storage offers a solution to this challenge.

This week at the climate summit in Paris, we have heard about the importance of innovation in reaching our environmental goals. Battery storage is exactly the type of revolutionary technology that will help get us there, creating new jobs and economic growth in the process.

A GAO report on large-scale battery storage will help us make informed decisions about accelerating its growth while signaling our commitment to supporting the next chapter in America's energy infrastructure.

I am thankful to be joined by Mr. COLLINS of New York as well as my good friend Mr. HONDA of California.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition, although I am not opposed to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment.

I would note Mr. COLLINS is a member of our committee. He is a cosponsor of the amendment.

It is a good amendment. It needs to be included as part of this. I would urge my colleagues to vote ''yes.''

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAKANO. I thank the chairman for supporting this bipartisan amendment. I am honored to have that support. I encourage its adoption.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. TAKANO).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 17 OFFERED BY MR. BEYER

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 17 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. BEYER. Mr. Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Strike page 147, line 9, through page 149, line 6.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BEYER) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BEYER. Mr. Chair, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chair, my amendment preserves section 433.

H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act, deliberately removes the energy usage goals for Federal buildings.

In 2007, under the Energy Independence and Security Act, our last energy infrastructure overhaul bill, a provision was included that set a goal for new Federal buildings to have net-zero energy usage by 2030. This naturally also meant the Federal Government would have a corresponding goal of reducing fossil-fuel-generated electricity consumption in its buildings.

This provision was forward-thinking. The Federal Government will lead by example in the transition to less-polluting buildings and show what the next generation of infrastructure should look like.

Now is not the time to roll back this goal and abandon our leadership. When people mention how H.R. 8 would take us back to a 19th century economy, this is one clear example they can point to.

Commercial and residential buildings account for 39 percent of the Nation's carbon emissions. To ignore this source of pollution at a time when we are trying to keep temperatures from rising less than 2 degrees centigrade isn't just negligent, it ignores our responsibility to be a good steward of the Earth and leave it in good condition for generations to come.

With the Federal Government as the largest consumer of energy in the U.S., we must be the leader. This effort is under attack because of outdated feasibility concerns—concerns which have already been addressed. Last year, the Department of Energy proposed a rule that charts a path forward to reach the 2030 goal that is both technically possible and plausible.

I also want to address some myths about section 433. Some have characterized it as ''a ban on the Federal Government using energy from fossil fuel,'' but the law does no such thing. In fact, at no point does this provision in the current law require zero fossil fuel use for any building designed or renovated before 2030.

And despite objections from my friends at the American Gas Association, the Department of Energy actually proposed carve-outs for onsite natural gas usage in highly efficient combined heat and power systems. Natural gas may actually be an important part of the solution of getting to net-zero energy usage.

Requiring Federal buildings to meet aggressive energy targets not only reduces taxpayer costs through energy savings, it also reduces our dependence on foreign oil and leverages the government's large purchasing power to bring new technologies and materials to the marketplace. If we eliminate section 433, it could cost American consumers $700 million in savings over the next 25 years.

According to the American Institute of Architects, not only are the current targets achievable, but some buildings are already meeting the 2030 goals right now. The EU has adopted a similar goal but with a shorter time horizon.

Mr. Chair, during my 4 years in Switzerland, we cut the carbon footprint of the U.S. Embassy in half and reduced the carbon footprint of our home to zero.

In 2013, Walgreens opened a net-zero energy retail space in Evanston, Illinois. In 2015, a True Value hardware store was the first net-zero retail store in New York State.

Within the Federal Government, our military has also taken a lead on this important effort and used the goal as a means to reduce costs and increase energy security. From 2007 to 2013, the Federal Government reduced its annual energy usage by 7 percent while we continue to grow.

We must continue to encourage these energy reduction efforts. We learned a long time ago in business that if we don't have a goal we never get there. We have to have a target that we can all work to meet.

I urge my colleagues to support my amendment to reinstate the energy usage goals for Federal buildings.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, with all due regard to the gentleman who is offering this amendment, I rise to oppose the amendment, which would reinstate the provisions of section 433 which prohibit the use of fossil fuels in new and modified Federal buildings after the year 2030.

Now, it is true that the Department of Energy is trying to thread a needle through regulations that might allow fossil fuels to be used in new and modified Federal buildings after 2030. But we know the reality is that every environmental group in the country will file a lawsuit against that regulation when it comes out if it is interpreted in any way that fossil fuels might be used.

I am really shocked that people would be opposed to our wanting to use fossil fuels after the year 2030. We are not mandating that they be used, but everyone that comes to this floor, and particularly President Obama when he goes anywhere, talk about an all-of-the-above energy policy, and yet the 2007 Energy Policy Act prohibits fossil fuel use in new and modified Federal buildings after the year 2030.

Our base bill does not mandate the use. It simply says, basically, that the government will be able to do it if it is necessary. So why should the Federal Government not allow the opportunity to use any fossil fuel after 2030?

We already have a Federal debt approaching $20 trillion. Natural gas prices are pretty low right now, but let's say they go up. Let's say that renewables go up, that for some reason maybe using coal is more economical, and using a ultra-supercritical facility.

We know that the President does not want to build any new coal-powered plants because regulations now prohibit that. We think it is important that we have an all-of-the-above energy policy. Our base bill allows that even in government buildings.

And so, for that reason, I would respectfully oppose the gentleman's amendment and ask that Members vote against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BEYER).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 18 OFFERED BY MR. PETERS

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 18 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 1 of subtitle A of title IV, add the following:

SEC. _____. REPORT ON ENERGY SAVINGS AND GREENHOUSE GAS EMISSIONS REDUCTION FROM CONVERSION OF CAPTURED METHANE TO ENERGY.

(a) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with appropriate Federal agencies and relevant stakeholders, shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report on the impact of captured methane converted for energy and power generation on Federal lands, Federal buildings, and relevant municipalities that use such generation, and the return on investment and reduction in greenhouse gas emissions of utilizing such power generation.

(b) CONTENTS.—The report shall include—

(1) a summary of energy performance and savings resulting from the utilization of such power generation, including short-term and long-term (20 years) projections of such savings; and

(2) an analysis of the reduction in greenhouse emissions resulting from the utilization of such power generation.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from California (Mr. PETERS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, my amendment to the North American Security and Infrastructure Act requires the Secretary of Energy to submit a report to Congress on the impact of captured methane converted for energy and power generation on Federal lands, buildings, and relevant municipalities.

□ 1715

The report would include a summary of energy performance and savings from using this power generation source and an analysis of the reduction in greenhouse gas emissions.

In my district in San Diego, we are putting innovative solutions to work to reduce methane emissions and create energy at the same time. At the Point Loma Wastewater Treatment Plant, methane is collected and fuels two continuously running generators. Using the methane produced onsite, the wastewater treatment plant has not only become energy self-sufficient, but is also able to sell excess power that it generates to the local energy grid, enhancing grid reliability and energy efficiency.

Another positive example of converting captured methane to energy is at landfills. In the United States, we have over 1,900 landfills, and they are the third largest source of methane emissions in the United States. This pollution threatens air quality and the public health of communities located close to the landfills themselves.

In San Diego, the Miramar Landfill spans over 1,500 acres and has been operating since 1959. Some years ago, the city, the Navy, and the private sector worked together and installed a methane-capture and energy conversion plant to supply the neighboring Marine Corps Air Station Miramar with 13.4 megawatts of energy. This plant supplies half of the base's energy, allowing it to operate as a 911 base in case of an emergency or power outage. The technology also reduced the emission of pollutants from the Miramar Landfill by 75 percent.

My amendment will simply assess how capturing methane and using it to generate energy reduces emissions, puts America on the path to a lower carbon, renewable energy future, and shares best practices among facilities that might be able to participate. So I ask my colleagues to support the amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment, even though I am not opposed to it.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Again, I support the amendment. We have no objection to the amendment. I think that it is worthwhile, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERS. Again, I thank the chairman very much for his hard work and for his willingness to support this amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. PETERS).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 19 OFFERED BY MS. SCHAKOWSKY

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 19 printed in House Report 114–359.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Strike section 4125.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would preserve an existing consumer right that has been on the books for many years, but section 4125 of this legislation would prevent consumers from pursuing breach of warranty claims against product manufacturers that inaccurately claim Energy Star compliance. As I said, in doing so, it would eliminate an existing consumer right.

While I see no justification for this change, I see the motive. The Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers, which represents 95 percent of U.S. home appliances and has endorsed this provision, wants to avoid liability.

Consumers pay a premium for Energy Star products. But they don't pay extra because they have a sense of charity; they do it because they have been promised the Energy Star appliances will enable reduced energy usage and lower operation costs. In fact, Energy Star products promise a 10 to 25 percent energy efficiency improvement as compared to Federal minimum standards. So when a manufacturer falsely claims to be Energy Star compliant, consumers are left with a more expensive product without any of the promised benefits. It amounts, really, to fraud.

In the past, manufacturers—including AHAM, the association, members Samsung, LG, and Whirlpool—have falsely claimed that their products meet Energy Star specifications. Consumers have mobilized to be compensated for those false claims, and they deserve that right. My amendment would enable them to retain it.

AHAM claims that my amendment would ''discourage robust participation'' in the Energy Star program. And frankly, I don't see that as a problem. If manufacturers can't stand by their claims of Energy Star compliance, then they shouldn't participate in the program.

Those manufacturers that continue to make Energy Star products will reap the rewards, including higher consumer demand and bigger profits, and that is a win for consumers, honest manufacturers, and the Energy Star program.

So I ask my colleagues, please, to support this amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the amendment to strike section 4125 of the bill, which is language that Representative WELCH and I have coauthored over the past two Congresses with bipartisan support. It was developed with a cross section of interests, including efficiency and consumer advocates, manufacturers, and the EPA.

By rejecting this amendment and keeping our language, we have an opportunity to encourage manufacturers to continue participation in the Energy Star program.

Energy Star is a highly successful, voluntary program. Consumers, manufacturers, and the government all win under Energy Star. The program was designed to be low-cost and low-compliance to incentivize participation by manufacturers, and the language included in this bill is needed to continue to incentivize participation.

For a product to be branded with the Energy Star logo, it must meet certain energy-saving guidelines. Manufacturers who choose to participate in this voluntary program make the necessary investments needed to increase the energy efficiency of their products.

In order to ensure their products maintain the required levels of efficiency, the Department of Energy performs off-the-shelf testing. If a product fails to meet the standard, that product is disqualified and then publicly listed on the Energy Star Web site. Immediately following a product's disqualification listing, the manufacturer and the EPA will then work to resolve the cause for disqualification.

It is important to note that our language does not prevent lawsuits from being filed; it just requires that a suit be filed before a product is disqualified from Energy Star.

If a product has been disqualified from the program by EPA, the EPA is best positioned to determine consumer impact and if such impact requires any action on the part of the manufacturer.

The EPA process is swift compared to legal proceedings, which could take years. If the focus is really on consumer reimbursement, shouldn't those fighting for consumer rights prefer the EPA disqualification process over class action litigation?

In the EPA disqualification process, the entire reimbursement goes to the consumer, versus a legal proceeding, where legal fees can consume large amounts of the award.

Energy Star has promoted economic expansion and job growth for participating manufacturers across the Nation. In defeating this amendment, we have an opportunity to continue to encourage participation by manufacturers instead of discouraging participation.

This section has the support of the National Association of Manufacturers, the Alliance to Save Energy, the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy, and the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask to reject the amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time I have remaining.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentlewoman from Illinois has 2½ minutes remaining.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, all this would be fine if it weren't the case that we have members of the Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers that actually have falsely claimed that their products meet Energy Star specifications. And nothing in the remedy actually says that the consumer will have the right to reclaim their money that they spent on the washer or the dryer or the appliance that was bought because they thought that they would both save energy and, over time, that they would save money as well.

As I said earlier, this rule, this law, has been in place for many years. It does not interfere with the fact that this is a voluntary program, that the companies decide if they want to participate in Energy Star to be an Energy Star product, but it does say they have to keep their promise. And they have to keep their promise not just to the EPA or to some regulatory framework; they have to keep their promise to the individual consumer who has actually laid out the bucks to buy that product.

This provides an opportunity for that consumer to be able to reclaim a product if it is found not to meet the Energy Star promise that they made of 10 to 25 percent energy efficiency improvements.

So it seems to me, why would this body go about the business of taking away a consumer right? I thought we were supposed to be in the business of trying to figure out how we are going to adequately protect consumers not in the generic sense, but in the individual sense. That is the kind of protection that we have had, and that is the kind of protection I believe that we should maintain; and this section, put in at the behest of the industry, makes no sense. I think it weights toward the manufacturers and away from the consumers something that we all want to achieve, which is more energy efficiency.

Mr. Chairman, I am very disappointed, as someone who has been a consumer advocate for a very long time in many ways, especially in terms of truth in products, truth in labeling, that we ought to be able to rely on that Energy Star label to know that it is going to give us the energy efficiency that we paid for and that, if it doesn't, we do have a remedy. Those remedies tend to make the manufacturers even more honest. I hope we will get some support.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, again, I would urge defeat of the amendment because we want to make sure that manufacturers are still encouraged to participate in the Energy Star program, which has been highly successful.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Illinois will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 20 OFFERED BY MRS. BROOKS OF INDIANA

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 20 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mrs. BROOKS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 2 of subtitle A of title IV, insert the following:

SEC. 4128. ENERGY SAVINGS FROM LUBRICATING OIL.

Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, in cooperation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Director of Management and Budget, shall—

(1) review and update the report prepared pursuant to section 1838 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005;

(2) after consultation with relevant Federal, State, and local agencies and affected industry and stakeholder groups, update data that was used in preparing that report; and

(3) prepare and submit to Congress a coordinated Federal strategy to increase the beneficial reuse of used lubricating oil, that—

(A) is consistent with national policy as established pursuant to section 2 of the Used Oil Recycling Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-463); and

(B) addresses measures needed to—

(i) increase the responsible collection of used oil;

(ii) disseminate public information concerning sustainable reuse options for used oil; and

(iii) promote sustainable reuse of used oil by Federal agencies, recipients of Federal grant funds, entities contracting with the Federal Government, and the general public.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from Indiana (Mrs. BROOKS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mrs. BROOKS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is very simple and straightforward. It calls on the Department of Energy, working together with the Environmental Protection Agency and the Office of Management and Budget, to take another look at what is now 20-year-old data about how used oil is managed in the United States and to develop comprehensive strategies to increase recycling used oil as part of a national strategy to save energy and reduce pollution.

Right now, there are options for disposal of motor oil commonly used in trucks and cars. The worst option is for that oil to be simply discarded, leading to contaminants polluting our air and water. If properly collected, the oil can be burned once for use as low-cost fuel.

However, the best option uses modern technology which now exists to collect and sustainably recycle used oil. These refining techniques can now produce a product that is the quality equivalent to fresh virgin base oils. So this option also maximizes the benefits by conserving most of the energy needed to make oil while cutting emissions of carbon and other harmful pollutants.

Re-refining can turn what used to be a waste product into an infinitely renewable resource. And not only does this re-refined oil meet government and industry specifications, but it is also cost-competitive, reduces waste, and reduces emissions.

Earlier studies done by DOE as well as our national labs show that used motor oil is a valuable and reusable energy resource.

As the motor sports capital of the world—Indianapolis, that is—it is no surprise that Indiana has traditionally been a leader in recycling and re-refining oil. We have two major used oil refineries in Indiana employing almost 1,000 people, and our State has a proud tradition of utilizing this product and promoting its technology.

□ 1730

Re-refined oil is already being actively used by DOD and other Federal agencies, public and commercial fleets, and average consumers with great success. However, far too little of our used oil is recycled in this way. So my amendment is intended to increase conservation and sustainable reuse.

The last major Federal study was called for in the Energy Policy Act of 2005. That study was issued in 2006, but relied on data that was then 10 years old. Now that data is 20 years old.

My amendment will require the DOE to update that data so that we know how much oil is available and how much is actually being reused and re-refined. Data from 20 years ago showed that the United States was well behind other developed and even some developing countries in terms of sustainable reuse.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will also provide for the development of policies that can significantly increase both the collection rate and sustainable reuse of this valuable resource

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment calls on the Department of Energy to review and update the data use for a 9-year-old Federal study on oil recycling. It is a good amendment. It promotes recycling of used lubricating oil to save energy, minimize disposal into landfills, and improves public information concerning sustainable reuse options.

It is a good amendment. I would like to see it adopted.

Mrs. BROOKS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Indiana (Mrs. BROOKS).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 21 OFFERED BY MR. UPTON

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 21 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, as the designee of the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. ELLMERS), I offer amendment No. 21.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 2 of subtitle A of title IV, add the following:

SEC. _____. DEFINITION OF EXTERNAL POWER SUPPLY.

Section 321(36)(A) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6291(36)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking the subparagraph designation and all that follows through ''The term'' and inserting the following:

''(A) EXTERNAL POWER SUPPLY.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The term''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(ii) EXCLUSION.—The term 'external power supply' does not include a power supply circuit, driver, or device that is designed exclusively to be connected to, and power—

''(I) light-emitting diodes providing illumination; or

''(II) organic light-emitting diodes providing illumination.''.

SEC. _____. STANDARDS FOR POWER SUPPLY CIRCUITS CONNECTED TO LEDS OR OLEDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 325(u) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6295(u)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(6) POWER SUPPLY CIRCUITS CONNECTED TO LEDS OR OLEDS.—Notwithstanding the exclusion described in section 321(36)(A)(ii), the Secretary may prescribe, in accordance with subsections (o) and (p) and section 322(b), an energy conservation standard for a power supply circuit, driver, or device that is designed primarily to be connected to, and power, light-emitting diodes or organic light-emitting diodes providing illumination.''.

(b) ENERGY CONSERVATION STANDARDS.—Section 346 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6317) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(g) ENERGY CONSERVATION STANDARD FOR POWER SUPPLY CIRCUITS CONNECTED TO LEDS OR OLEDS.—Not earlier than 1 year after applicable testing requirements are prescribed under section 343, the Secretary may prescribe an energy conservation standard for a power supply circuit, driver, or device that is designed primarily to be connected to, and power, light-emitting diodes or organic light-emitting diodes providing illumination.''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I won't take the full 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this in lieu of Mrs. ELLMERS. It is a simple, technical fix to DOE's external power supply rule. I am not aware of any opposition.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. ELLMERS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this bipartisan and commonsense amendment that would provide certainty to manufacturers and resolve this DOE rule.

I would also like to thank my colleagues DEGETTE, POMPEO and DENT for working with me on this issue.

This problem stems from an overly broad interpretation of a provision within the Energy Policy Act of 2005 in which Congress directed DOE to set energy efficiency standards for External Power Supplies.

DOE is now attempting to regulate a product that was not in the marketplace at the time Congress directed the department to set External Power Supple Standards.

Because of DOE's interpretation, other products—such as LED Drivers not intended for regulation—are now a facing regulation under the EPS rule.

This problem is, sadly, just another example of DOE expanding the scope of their rulemakings and capturing products that were not intended by Congress.

Thankfully, my amendment resolves the problem for this technology and prevents it from being included in other broad rulemakings.

The lighting industry is already strenuously regulated for energy efficiency, accounting for 20 percent of DOE's total efficiency regulations.

Regulations like this have had a negative impact of 750 million dollars to U.S. lighting manufacturers.

This regulation will only stifle innovation, ultimately leading to less energy efficient products and higher energy prices for consumers.

Manufacturers cannot operate in an uncertain marketplace and without Congressional action, this rule will unintentionally threaten thousands of jobs.

In North Carolina alone this industry provides over 3,000 jobs.

I urge my colleagues to join this bipartisan effort.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 22 OFFERED BY MR. TONKO

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 22 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

In chapter 2 of subtitle A of title IV, add at the end the following new section:

SEC. 4128. WEATHERIZATION ASSISTANCE AND STATE ENERGY PROGRAMS.

(a) REAUTHORIZATION OF WEATHERIZATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—Section 422 of the Energy Conservation and Production Act (42 U.S.C. 6872) is amended by striking ''appropriated—'' and all that follows through the period at the end and inserting ''appropriated $450,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2016 through 2020.''.

(b) REAUTHORIZATION OF STATE ENERGY PROGRAMS.—Section 365(f) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6325(f)) is amended by striking ''$125,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2007 through 2012'' and inserting ''$75,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2016 through 2020''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, my amendment reauthorizes two existing programs, the Weatherization Assistance Program and the State Energy Program.

Both of these programs have been operating successfully for many years. The Federal dollars delivered through these programs leverage additional funding from our States and the private sector. These programs address real problems. They are effective, and they create and sustain jobs.

As we heard during debate yesterday, H.R. 8 does very little to advance energy efficiency, an issue that has enjoyed strong, bipartisan support in the past. In fact, some provisions are more likely to be a setback to efficiency standards. While this bill contains plenty of benefits for energy suppliers, there is very little in there designed to address the needs of average Americans.

The Weatherization Assistance Program supports State-based programs to improve the energy efficiency of the homes of low-income families. The Department of Energy provides grants to the States, United States territories, and tribal governments to deliver these services through local weatherization agencies. The weatherization measures used include air sealing, wall and attic insulation, duct sealing, and furnace repair and replacement.

Mr. Chairman, the benefits of weatherization are well known and result in a reduced energy bill for many years into the future. Insulating our walls and our roofs, for example, can provide savings for the lifetime of a house. Other measures, such as making heating or cooling equipment more efficient, can provide savings for more than a decade.

Since 1976, the Weatherization Assistance Program has helped improve the lives of more than 7 million families by reducing their electricity bills. The program provides energy efficiency services to thousands of homes every year, reducing average costs by more than $400 per household in annual utility bills.

Investments in energy efficiency pay for themselves over time, but the upfront costs can be significant, and when a family's budget is severely limited, those costs are simply too high.

The Weatherization Assistance Program helps those in our communities who do not have the financial resources to make energy efficiency investments on their own. That includes our elderly, our disabled, and our low-income families.

These vulnerable households are often on fixed incomes and are the most susceptible to volatile changes in electricity prices. They are particularly vulnerable to spikes in electricity bills during heat waves or cold weather due to poor insulation or inefficient appliances.

A sudden increase in expenses is difficult to manage for many of our families. Low-income families already spend a disproportionate amount of their income on energy costs.

Mr. Chairman, the State Energy Program provides funding to the States to support the work of their energy offices. It ensures that each State will have basic funding available to support its programs.

These offices play a role in helping States define the least costly ways to meet State goals for energy efficiency, for air quality, for fuel diversity, and for energy security.

According to a study by the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, the State Energy Program often leverages, for every 1 Federal dollar, $10.71 in State and private funds. That is a great return on investment.

Congress reauthorized these programs back in 2007 for a 5-year period at about $1 billion per year for Weatherization and $125 million per year for the State Energy Program.

My amendment authorizes the Weatherization Assistance Program for another 5 years, but at lower levels—$450 million per year—and the State Energy Program is authorized for 5 years at $75 million per year.

These are robust authorization levels for certain. While I believe these programs should be appropriated even more funding, this amendment authorizes them at lower levels to be more in tune with today's fiscal constraints.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to support my amendment and to help to extend the benefits of energy efficiency to our families so that more families can be supported by local jobs, businesses, and certainly contractors that do this extremely important work.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I do so to oppose the amendment because, as we all know, this amendment reauthorizes the Federal Weatherization Assistance Program at $2.2 billion through 2020 and the State Energy Program at $375 million through 2020.

But our feeling is that it is not needed because the Department of Energy's Weatherization Assistance Program is already extremely well funded.

I support weatherization, as I think most of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle do, but Congress has been funding the program at or near the Department's requested levels.

So this is, in essence, billions above in new spending on an existing program that the Department of Energy has not requested.

I would note that the 2009 stimulus bill included an extra $5 billion to the Department of Energy for weatherization, roughly 17 times what was originally appropriated for that year.

Furthermore, using experiments considered the gold standard for evidence, researchers from UC Berkeley, MIT, and the University of Chicago recently released a report on a first-of-its-kind field test of the Federal Weatherization Assistance Program.

The study found that the costs of energy efficiency investments were about double the actual savings, that model-projected savings are 2½ times the actual savings, and that, even when accounting for the broader societal benefits of energy efficiency investments, the costs will substantially outweigh the benefits. The average rate of return is a minus 9½ percent annually.

So, Mr. Chairman, the overall legislation today that is before us is extremely specific in authorizing budget-neutral spending for energy security efforts only. Authorizing additional money—beyond requested amounts—as this Weatherization amendment does, does not have the offset.

Therefore, I would ask my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, certainly the numbers here speak to the most vulnerable in our society. There are waiting lists that I know exist in States. There are more things we can do for energy efficiency's sake for our most stressed family budgets.

This is a situation where energy costs, as a wedge of the pie for our poor families for their household budgets, is far greater a slice than it is for the average residents of this country. This is a hardhearted approach taken to our elderly, to our low-income families, and to the disabled.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that our goal here should be to be as resourceful as possible with our energy mix across this country. Anytime we can reduce consumption we are doing a big thing for all ratepayers. The statements show a missing of the focus that is needed.

Finally, to the study, it was a one-State, one-utility study. It was not peer reviewed. It was flawed. It did not really suggest to show the real issues out there for this program.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 23 OFFERED BY MS. CASTOR OF FLORIDA

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 23 printed in House Report 114–359.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

In subtitle A of title IV, add at the end the following new chapter:

CHAPTER 8—LOCAL ENERGY SUPPLY AND RESILIENCY

SEC. 4181. DEFINITIONS.

In this chapter:

(1) COMBINED HEAT AND POWER SYSTEM.—The term ''combined heat and power system'' means generation of electric energy and heat in a single, integrated system that meets the efficiency criteria in clauses (ii) and (iii) of section 48(c)(3)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, under which heat that is conventionally rejected is recovered and used to meet thermal energy requirements.

(2) DEMAND RESPONSE.—The term ''demand response'' means changes in electric usage by electric utility customers from the normal consumption patterns of the customers in response to—

(A) changes in the price of electricity over time; or

(B) incentive payments designed to induce lower electricity use at times of high wholesale market prices or when system reliability is jeopardized.

(3) DISTRIBUTED ENERGY.—The term ''distributed energy'' means energy sources and systems that—

(A) produce electric or thermal energy close to the point of use using renewable energy resources or waste thermal energy;

(B) generate electricity using a combined heat and power system;

(C) distribute electricity in microgrids;

(D) store electric or thermal energy; or

(E) distribute thermal energy or transfer thermal energy to building heating and cooling systems through a district energy system.

(4) DISTRICT ENERGY SYSTEM.—The term ''district energy system'' means a system that provides thermal energy to buildings and other energy consumers from 1 or more plants to individual buildings to provide space heating, air conditioning, domestic hot water, industrial process energy, and other end uses.

(5) ISLANDING.—The term ''islanding'' means a distributed generator or energy storage device continuing to power a location in the absence of electric power from the primary source.

(6) LOAN.—The term ''loan'' has the meaning given the term ''direct loan'' in section 502 of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990 (2 U.S.C. 661a).

(7) MICROGRID.—The term ''microgrid'' means an integrated energy system consisting of interconnected loads and distributed energy resources, including generators and energy storage devices, within clearly defined electrical boundaries that—

(A) acts as a single controllable entity with respect to the grid; and

(B) can connect and disconnect from the grid to operate in both grid-connected mode and island mode.

(8) RENEWABLE ENERGY SOURCE.—The term ''renewable energy source'' includes—

(A) biomass;

(B) geothermal energy;

(C) hydropower;

(D) landfill gas;

(E) municipal solid waste;

(F) ocean (including tidal, wave, current, and thermal) energy;

(G) organic waste;

(H) photosynthetic processes;

(I) photovoltaic energy;

(J) solar energy; and

(K) wind.

(9) RENEWABLE THERMAL ENERGY.—The term ''renewable thermal energy'' means heating or cooling energy derived from a renewable energy resource.

(10) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Energy.

(11) THERMAL ENERGY.—The term ''thermal energy'' means—

(A) heating energy in the form of hot water or steam that is used to provide space heating, domestic hot water, or process heat; or

(B) cooling energy in the form of chilled water, ice, or other media that is used to provide air conditioning, or process cooling.

(12) WASTE THERMAL ENERGY.—The term ''waste thermal energy'' means energy that—

(A) is contained in—

(i) exhaust gases, exhaust steam, condenser water, jacket cooling heat, or lubricating oil in power generation systems;

(ii) exhaust heat, hot liquids, or flared gas from any industrial process;

(iii) waste gas or industrial tail gas that would otherwise be flared, incinerated, or vented;

(iv) a pressure drop in any gas, excluding any pressure drop to a condenser that subsequently vents the resulting heat;

(v) condenser water from chilled water or refrigeration plants; or

(vi) any other form of waste energy, as determined by the Secretary; and

(B)(i) in the case of an existing facility, is not being used; or

(ii) in the case of a new facility, is not conventionally used in comparable systems.

SEC. 4182. DISTRIBUTED ENERGY LOAN PROGRAM.

(a) LOAN PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of this subsection and subsections (b) and (c), the Secretary shall establish a program to provide to eligible entities—

(A) loans for the deployment of distributed energy systems in a specific project; and

(B) loans to provide funding for programs to finance the deployment of multiple distributed energy systems through a revolving loan fund, credit enhancement program, or other financial assistance program.

(2) ELIGIBILITY.—Entities eligible to receive a loan under paragraph (1) include—

(A) a State, territory, or possession of the United States;

(B) a State energy office;

(C) a tribal organization (as defined in section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b));

(D) an institution of higher education (as defined in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001)); and

(E) an electric utility, including—

(i) a rural electric cooperative;

(ii) a municipally owned electric utility; and

(iii) an investor-owned utility.

(3) SELECTION REQUIREMENTS.—In selecting eligible entities to receive loans under this section, the Secretary shall, to the maximum extent practicable, ensure—

(A) regional diversity among eligible entities to receive loans under this section, including participation by rural States and small States; and

(B) that specific projects selected for loans—

(i) expand on the existing technology deployment program of the Department of Energy; and

(ii) are designed to achieve 1 or more of the objectives described in paragraph (4).

(4) OBJECTIVES.—Each deployment selected for a loan under paragraph (1) shall include 1 or more of the following objectives:

(A) Improved security and resiliency of energy supply in the event of disruptions caused by extreme weather events, grid equipment or software failure, or terrorist acts.

(B) Implementation of distributed energy in order to increase use of local renewable energy resources and waste thermal energy sources.

(C) Enhanced feasibility of microgrids, demand response, or islanding;

(D) Enhanced management of peak loads for consumers and the grid.

(E) Enhanced reliability in rural areas, including high energy cost rural areas.

(5) RESTRICTION ON USE OF FUNDS.—Any eligible entity that receives a loan under paragraph (1) may only use the loan to fund programs relating to the deployment of distributed energy systems.

(b) LOAN TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—

(1) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in providing a loan under this section, the Secretary shall provide the loan on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with this section.

(2) SPECIFIC APPROPRIATION.—No loan shall be made unless an appropriation for the full amount of the loan has been specifically provided for that purpose.

(3) REPAYMENT.—No loan shall be made unless the Secretary determines that there is reasonable prospect of repayment of the principal and interest by the borrower of the loan.

(4) INTEREST RATE.—A loan provided under this section shall bear interest at a fixed rate that is equal or approximately equal, in the determination of the Secretary, to the interest rate for Treasury securities of comparable maturity.

(5) TERM.—The term of the loan shall require full repayment over a period not to exceed the lesser of—

(A) 20 years; or

(B) 90 percent of the projected useful life of the physical asset to be financed by the loan (as determined by the Secretary).

(6) USE OF PAYMENTS.—Payments of principal and interest on the loan shall—

(A) be retained by the Secretary to support energy research and development activities; and

(B) remain available until expended, subject to such conditions as are contained in annual appropriations Acts.

(7) NO PENALTY ON EARLY REPAYMENT.—The Secretary may not assess any penalty for early repayment of a loan provided under this section.

(8) RETURN OF UNUSED PORTION.—In order to receive a loan under this section, an eligible entity shall agree to return to the general fund of the Treasury any portion of the loan amount that is unused by the eligible entity within a reasonable period of time after the date of the disbursement of the loan, as determined by the Secretary.

(9) COMPARABLE WAGE RATES.—Each laborer and mechanic employed by a contractor or subcontractor in performance of construction work financed, in whole or in part, by the loan shall be paid wages at rates not less than the rates prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with subchapter IV of chapter 31 of title 40, United States Code.

(c) RULES AND PROCEDURES; DISBURSEMENT OF LOANS.—

(1) RULES AND PROCEDURES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall adopt rules and procedures for carrying out the loan program under subsection (a).

(2) DISBURSEMENT OF LOANS.—Not later than 1 year after the date on which the rules and procedures under paragraph (1) are established, the Secretary shall disburse the initial loans provided under this section.

(d) REPORTS.—Not later than 2 years after the date of receipt of the loan, and annually thereafter for the term of the loan, an eligible entity that receives a loan under this section shall submit to the Secretary a report describing the performance of each program and activity carried out using the loan, including itemized loan performance data.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section such sums as are necessary.

SEC. 4183. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a technical assistance and grant program (referred to in this section as the ''program'')—

(A) to disseminate information and provide technical assistance directly to eligible entities so the eligible entities can identify, evaluate, plan, and design distributed energy systems; and

(B) to make grants to eligible entities so that the eligible entities may contract to obtain technical assistance to identify, evaluate, plan, and design distributed energy systems.

(2) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The technical assistance described in paragraph (1) shall include assistance with 1 or more of the following activities relating to distributed energy systems:

(A) Identification of opportunities to use distributed energy systems.

(B) Assessment of technical and economic characteristics.

(C) Utility interconnection.

(D) Permitting and siting issues.

(E) Business planning and financial analysis.

(F) Engineering design.

(3) INFORMATION DISSEMINATION.—The information disseminated under paragraph (1)(A) shall include—

(A) information relating to the topics described in paragraph (2), including case studies of successful examples;

(B) computer software and databases for assessment, design, and operation and maintenance of distributed energy systems; and

(C) public databases that track the operation and deployment of existing and planned distributed energy systems.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—Any nonprofit or for-profit entity shall be eligible to receive technical assistance and grants under the program.

(c) APPLICATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—An eligible entity desiring technical assistance or grants under the program shall submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

(2) APPLICATION PROCESS.—The Secretary shall seek applications for technical assistance and grants under the program—

(A) on a competitive basis; and

(B) on a periodic basis, but not less frequently than once every 12 months.

(3) PRIORITIES.—In selecting eligible entities for technical assistance and grants under the program, the Secretary shall give priority to eligible entities with projects that have the greatest potential for—

(A) facilitating the use of renewable energy resources;

(B) strengthening the reliability and resiliency of energy infrastructure to the impact of extreme weather events, power grid failures, and interruptions in supply of fossil fuels;

(C) improving the feasibility of microgrids or islanding, particularly in rural areas, including high energy cost rural areas;

(D) minimizing environmental impact, including regulated air pollutants and greenhouse gas emissions; and

(E) maximizing local job creation.

(d) GRANTS.—On application by an eligible entity, the Secretary may award grants to the eligible entity to provide funds to cover not more than—

(1) 100 percent of the costs of the initial assessment to identify opportunities;

(2) 75 percent of the cost of feasibility studies to assess the potential for the implementation;

(3) 60 percent of the cost of guidance on overcoming barriers to implementation, including financial, contracting, siting, and permitting issues; and

(4) 45 percent of the cost of detailed engineering.

(e) RULES AND PROCEDURES.—

(1) RULES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall adopt rules and procedures for carrying out the program.

(2) GRANTS.—Not later than 120 days after the date of issuance of the rules and procedures for the program, the Secretary shall issue grants under this chapter.

(f) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress and make available to the public—

(1) not less frequently than once every 2 years, a report describing the performance of the program under this section, including a synthesis and analysis of the information provided in the reports submitted to the Secretary under section 4181(c); and

(2) on termination of the program under this section, an assessment of the success of, and education provided by, the measures carried out by eligible entities during the term of the program.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $250,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2016 through 2020, to remain available until expended.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. CASTOR) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my amendment focuses on thermal energy and combined heat power, which are essential to a smart energy future for our country, but they are often overlooked components of our national energy supply.

In the United States, up to 36 percent of the total energy produced is lost from power plants, industrial facilities, and buildings in the form of waste heat. My amendment will help industry, universities, hospitals, and others capture that waste heat and use renewables for heating, cooling, and power generation.

Now, I want to read the definition of what is included in renewables so that everyone is aware: biomass, geothermal, hydropower, landfill gas, municipal solid waste, ocean energy, organic waste, photosynthetic processes, photovoltaic energy, solar energy, and wind.

What is happening across America are businesses and nonprofits are getting really smart about this wasted energy and they are putting it back into their facilities to save energy and save money.

The overall resilience and cost savings that can be achieved through combined heat and power and distributed energy systems is proven every day, but it was especially proven during Superstorm Sandy and other natural disasters.

During Superstorm Sandy, businesses and nonprofits, such as hospitals and universities, were able to keep the lights on and actually had heat and water in the aftermath of the storm because they have these self-contained, energy-efficient waste heat projects.

Mr. Chairman, we have also heard testimony in the Energy and Power Subcommittee extensively on the importance in the future of these smaller, distributed, locally based energy systems.

I have also seen it in my hometown in Tampa, where St. Joseph's Hospital burns the medical waste, turns it into waste heat, and they are now saving $200,000 a year on their energy bills where they can keep the lights on. They don't have to pay that out to the power company. That can go back into the care of patients.

Mr. Chairman, what my amendment proposes to do is to help overcome the financing hurdles that will be key in implementing this highly efficient and resilient energy infrastructure.

My amendment would establish an initiative to provide cost-shared funding for technical assistance for feasibility studies and engineering, and it would enable qualifying energy infrastructure projects to access lower interest debt financing through a loan guarantee program.

Industrial competitiveness will be enhanced because these businesses will be able to develop new revenue streams, reduce energy costs, reduce emissions, and enhance energy supply resiliency.

We have got to plan ahead here in America. We have got to be smarter. According to a joint DOE and EPA study, roughly 65 gigawatts of technical potential remain in the Nation's hospitals, universities, wastewater treatment plants, and other critical infrastructure.

□ 1745

My amendment will help to reduce the up-front capital cost of installing these locally based energy-efficient systems. These systems have proven themselves, and we should encourage them.

So I respectfully request that the House act with an eye towards the future. Take this modest but very important step to help unleash American innovation. We know how to do this. We can do this. Let's give our businesses, our universities, and hospitals an incentive to put waste energy to work and at the same time save some money.

I urge an ''aye'' vote on my amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would establish a DOE loan program to support distributed generation. While I support some of the goals in this amendment—distributed generation, microgrids, combined heat and power—I cannot support a new loan guarantee program given the failures this administration has had in issuing loans. I remember one called Solyndra a long time ago.

In any event, this amendment is too broad. Locally grown energy may make some sense in some circumstances but not in others. There are often economic reasons to use nonlocal energy sources and to use them on a larger scale than distributed generation.

Moreover, this provision is duplicative of other DOE programs as well as tax incentives and State programs that encourage the use of distributed renewable energy.

Circumstances do vary across regions, so States should decide whether and how to encourage distributed generation. The Federal Government shouldn't be picking winners and losers.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''no.''

I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for supporting some of the goals contained in the amendment.

This is not an open-ended loan program. This is very modest, only authorized for $250 million. The appropriators will probably scale that back.

But what it does is it allows our hospitals, universities, and other industrial users across the country some upfront technical assistance that will save them a lot of money and a lot of energy on the down side. This modest investment will have a great payoff for taxpayers and for industrial users, our hospitals, and universities.

I have seen it work right in my district. I know it worked during Superstorm Sandy. We have to think with an eye to the future and act that way.

I request an ''aye'' vote on this amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. CASTOR).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Florida will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 24 OFFERED BY MR. POLIS

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 24 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

In subtitle A of title IV, add at the end the following new chapter:

CHAPTER 8—SURFACE ESTATE OWNER NOTIFICATION

SEC. 4181. SURFACE ESTATE OWNER NOTIFICATION.

The Secretary of the Interior shall—

(1) notify surface estate owners and all owners of land located within 1 mile of a proposed oil or gas lease tract in writing at least 45 days in advance of lease sales;

(2) within 10 working days after a lease is issued, notify surface estate owners and all owners of land located within 1 mile of a lease tract, regarding the identity of the lessee;

(3) notify surface estate owners and all owners of land located within 1 mile of a lease tract in writing within 10 working days concerning any subsequent decisions regarding the lease, such as modifying or waiving stipulations and approving rights-of-way; and

(4) notify surface estate owners and all owners of land located within 1 mile of a lease tract, within 5 business days after issuance of a drilling permit under a lease.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. POLIS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to explain how in many States, including my home State of Colorado, landowners—if you live in a home, you own your property, you bought it—you are not necessarily and in most cases, in fact, you are not also the owner of the minerals beneath your land. That is called a split estate.

Many, in fact most, surface estates in my State were split from their subsurface or mineral rights—severed. And Congress rewrote the rules of the Homestead Act to maintain ownership over minerals even as they gave away western lands for development.

So, again, what that means is we have suburban subdevelopments, people's homes—people live in their homes—and the Federal Government owns the mineral rights under those homes. Along with that comes the right to extract those minerals.

Unfortunately, what fails to be present in the Homestead Act is protections and notification requirements for the people who live there, the homeowners. So, in some cases, in Colorado and elsewhere, landholders and homeowners don't even know that there has been a lease or a drill permit on their land where they own the surface rights.

Literally, one day an oil company can drive up to the property and construct a horizontal drill in the middle of your backyard without notification. So you can imagine the result—harm and loss of cattle or crops, infrastructure on the property—not knowing what is occurring.

And, really, it has been amazing to see the ability of the extraction industry to operate without having to address the legitimate concerns of surface owners.

Now, my bill doesn't change all of that, and, frankly, I would like to go a lot further and will in other legislative efforts. This amendment is really a commonsense effort that is a critical first step to right those wrongs.

It would simply require that the BLM notify a landowner sitting above mineral rights that they plan to put out for bid, award, lease, or sale a drilling permit on that land.

The BLM will argue that there are notification requirements. What that means is it might be posted on a Web site or in the Federal Register. Well, I guarantee you that Mr. or Mrs. Smith in a suburban subdevelopment are not eagerly checking the Federal Register every day. They are not even generally aware that there are mineral rights under their property, nor should they have to be. They should simply get a letter in the mail saying what is happening if and when there is going to be mineral development on their property.

And I think that is a simple, commonsense step that would protect American taxpayers from undue, unreasonable burdens placed upon them and protect property rights. I really hope it is not controversial and that we can adopt this amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAMBORN. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAMBORN. Mr. Chairman, I want to let my colleague from Colorado know that this is an unnecessary amendment, so I would ask Members to oppose it.

There already is a lot of built-in notification that does take place. I don't know if my colleague is aware of this or not, but when an expression of interest for leasing is made, the BLM requires that all of the surface owners, wherever this expression of interest for leasing applies to, are notified by mail.

Secondly, before a permit is issued, there is another notification to the surface owners of wherever that lease is located.

Thirdly, under the NEPA process, before the leases are even issued, the public is notified. I know this amendment talks about notifying everyone within 1 mile. The public notification is a lot broader than just 1 mile, so, actually, current law does more than what this amendment calls for.

But there are two different steps, in addition to the public notice, where the surface landowner actually is notified by mail by a good faith effort required by the Bureau of Land Management for Federal lands.

On top of all that, Mr. Chairman, I ask opposition for this amendment because it is poorly written. It is ambiguous as to whether it is only applying to Federal lands or is broader and would include tribal lands, private lands, and things way out of the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management.

But, in any case, even if it would just apply to the Federal lands, it is unnecessary. Because of the different steps that are required under the language of this amendment, it would add a lot of paperwork and red tape and really not accomplish anything more than what is already clearly accomplished two or three times under existing law.

For all those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I ask that we oppose this amendment. I know it is well-intentioned, but the law already takes care of this. This amendment, besides being poorly written, would add a lot of time and paperwork and red tape to the process right now.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Chairman, I wish that this amendment weren't necessary. There are hundreds, if not thousands, of homeowners in Colorado who fail to be notified by the BLM.

Now, there is a good faith effort requirement, but there is no system in place to ensure that the person gets a notification. So, in effect, what happens is the agency will sign off, ''We made a good faith effort, couldn't find who the property owner was,'' and it is posted in the Federal Register or in a newspaper in an ad that the homeowner is extremely unlikely to ever see.

What we are simply saying is have a step to implement this directive that already exists. Give this meaning; give this teeth. Make sure that homeowners are actually notified in the mail, that there is an effort to actually find out who they are, and not just a bureaucratic signoff that we don't know who they are and, therefore, they are never going to find out until trucks drive onto their property.

It is a real problem, and there is a real simple, commonsense solution. I urge my colleagues to adopt it.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAMBORN. Mr. Chairman, just to finish this, I would say that this is an unnecessary amendment because there are already two, if not three, different times that the notice to the surface owner already takes place: once to the public at large, twice to the surface owner in particular.

Secondly, this is poorly written. I am afraid that it does not just refer strictly to Federal lands that the BLM controls, but this could apply to tribal lands and private lands. So it makes a mess in that regard.

And, thirdly, it goes 1 mile away. The current law does refer to the surface owner and accomplishes the things that the proponent of the amendment wants to accomplish, so it is unnecessary.

For those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I urge opposition to this amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Chairman, I respect my good friend and colleague from Colorado.

Part of the goal of this amendment is to ensure that the full area of disruption receives notification. So where you have a suburban subdevelopment, it is one thing for the owner under which the activity is occurring to get notice.

But keep in mind the activity also has an impact certainly within a mile radius of that activity in terms of loud noises, trucks, et cetera. Families may choose to leave town; others may choose to stick it out and make sure they are prepared for whatever activity will occur, when it occurs.

But, clearly, if there are notification aspects in the current law, which there are, they are insufficient, because I come before you telling you that there are homeowners in Colorado who have no prior word of extraction activity on their land until, literally, they see it occurring. They see trucks, they see people. They go out, they say, ''What are you doing?'' and they say, ''We are getting ready to drill.''

This happens in my State. This amendment would make sure that, more than a good faith effort that is simply signed off on by some bureaucrat and therefore waived, there is a real effort of implementation. We give full rulemaking authority to the BLM to actually come up with a system for notifying homeowners and adjacent property owners about extraction work that is occurring for the mineral rights that occur under where they live.

I hope that this is a basis of common sense from which we can build a concept of homeowner protections and surface owner rights to balance the rights that the mineral owners have. Certainly, transparency and notification is a simple one and an easy one for the BLM to implement. That is all the amendment would do.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes.''

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. POLIS).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 25 OFFERED BY MR. BARTON

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 25 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE VII—CHANGING CRUDE OIL MARKET CONDITIONS

SEC. 7001. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The United States has enjoyed a renaissance in energy production, establishing the United States as the world's leading oil producer.

(2) By authorizing crude oil exports, the Congress can spur domestic energy production, create and preserve jobs, help maintain and strengthen our independent shipping fleet that is essential to national defense, and generate State and Federal revenues.

(3) An energy-secure United States that is a net exporter of energy has the potential to transform the security environment around the world, notably in Europe and the Middle East.

(4) For our European allies and Israel, the presence of more United States oil in the market will offer more secure supply options, which will strengthen United States strategic alliances and help curtail the use of energy as a political weapon.

(5) The 60-ship Maritime Security Fleet is a vital element of our military's strategic sealift and global response capability. It assures United States-flag ships and United States crews will be available to support the United States military when it needs to mobilize to protect our allies, and is the most prudent and economical solution to meet current and projected sealift requirements for the United States.

(6) The Maritime Security Fleet program provides a labor base of skilled American mariners who are available to crew the United States Government-owned strategic sealift fleet, as well as the United States commercial fleet, in both peace and war.

(7) The United States has reduced its oil consumption over the past decade, and increasing investment in clean energy technology and energy efficiency will lower energy prices, reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and increase national security.

SEC. 7002. REPEAL.

Section 103 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6212) and the item relating thereto in the table of contents of that Act are repealed.

SEC. 7003. NATIONAL POLICY ON OIL EXPORT RESTRICTIONS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, to promote the efficient exploration, production, storage, supply, marketing, pricing, and regulation of energy resources, including fossil fuels, no official of the Federal Government shall impose or enforce any restriction on the export of crude oil.

SEC. 7004. STUDIES.

(a) GREENHOUSE GAS EMISSIONS.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall conduct, and transmit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate the results of, a study on the net greenhouse gas emissions that will result from the repeal of the crude oil export ban under section 7002.

(b) CRUDE OIL EXPORT STUDY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Department of Commerce, in consultation with the Department of Energy, and other departments as appropriate, shall conduct a study of the State and national implications of lifting the crude oil export ban with respect to consumers and the economy.

(2) CONTENTS.—The study conducted under paragraph (1) shall include an analysis of—

(A) the economic impact that exporting crude oil will have on the economy of the United States;

(B) the economic impact that exporting crude oil will have on consumers, taking into account impacts on energy prices;

(C) the economic impact that exporting crude oil will have on domestic manufacturing, taking into account impacts on employment; and

(D) the economic impact that exporting crude oil will have on the refining sector, taking into account impacts on employment.

(3) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Bureau of Industry and Security shall submit to Congress a report containing the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

SEC. 7005. SAVINGS CLAUSE.

Nothing in this title limits the authority of the President under the Constitution, the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.), part B of title II of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6271 et seq.), the Trading With the Enemy Act (50 U.S.C. App. 1 et seq.), or any other provision of law that imposes sanctions on a foreign person or foreign government (including any provision of law that prohibits or restricts United States persons from engaging in a transaction with a sanctioned person or government), including a foreign government that is designated as a state sponsor of terrorism, to prohibit exports.

SEC. 7006. PARTNERSHIPS WITH MINORITY SERVING INSTITUTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Department of Energy shall continue to develop and broaden partnerships with minority serving institutions, including Hispanic Serving Institutions (HSI) and Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) in the areas of oil and gas exploration, production, midstream, and refining.

(b) PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIPS.—The Department of Energy shall encourage public-private partnerships between the energy sector and minority serving institutions, including Hispanic Serving Institutions and Historically Black Colleges and Universities.

SEC. 7007. REPORT.

Not later than 10 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly transmit to Congress a report that reviews the impact of lifting the oil export ban under this title as it relates to promoting United States energy and national security.

SEC. 7008. REPORT TO CONGRESS.

Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly transmit to Congress a report analyzing how lifting the ban on crude oil exports will help create opportunities for veterans and women in the United States, while promoting energy and national security.

SEC. 7009. PROHIBITION ON EXPORTS OF CRUDE OIL, REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS, AND PETROCHEMICAL PRODUCTS TO THE ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF IRAN.

Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the export of crude oil, refined petroleum products, and petrochemical products by or through any entity or person, wherever located, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to any entity or person located in, subject to the jurisdiction of, or sponsored by the Islamic Republic of Iran.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself, Mr. CUELLAR, Mr. FLORES, Mr. CONAWAY, and Mr. MCCAUL.

This amendment is almost identical to H.R. 702, which passed the House floor on a strong bipartisan basis several months ago with 261 votes, I believe, in favor of it.

This is necessary because, while we had hoped that H.R. 702 would be brought up in the other body as a stand-alone bill, it doesn't appear that is going to happen this session, so we want to try to put this on another vehicle that the Senate may yet bring up.

I will also point out that there are a number of larger bills in play, and there is a possibility we will try to attach it to those also.

In any event, this amendment is true to the bill that was brought up on the House floor. It is identical, with two exceptions:

One, it does not have the maritime provision to provide some additional funding for our maritime merchant marine fleet because that was not germane—not because we don't support it, but it was not germane.

And, two, we had a requirement that we do a study of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. That is no longer necessary because that part of the bill has become law.

□ 1800

Other than that, all of the amendments that were offered and accepted on both sides are in this amendment that is before us today.

We are the third largest oil producer in the world. We have the capability to significantly increase our production, but under current law, Mr. Chairman, that is not possible because it is prohibited by a law that was passed in 1975. The gist of this bill is that it would repeal that ban and allow American crude oil to be put out on the world market, just like our refined oil products are today.

I ask everybody who voted for it before to vote for it again, and for those of you who didn't see the light the last time, we are going to give you a second chance tonight to vote for it.

I want to see if there is anybody willing to stand up and be in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Chairman, ever since I got involved in public policy, which was about 40 years ago, this Nation has been crying for energy independence.

I remember my very first campaign in 1974, during the oil energy crisis, when there was all around the world no oil available and no gas available, and we wanted to be energy independent. We are actually getting close to it; although, we continue to import 25 percent of our crude oil, but maybe we are on the cusp of being energy independent.

So what does Big Oil want to do? It is not good enough that they should be the wealthiest of all corporations in America and the world. They want to take our precious and almost energy independent oil and export it.

Where is it going to go? Where is the market? China, for sure, wants oil. They are going to need to double their import of oil. So where is Big Oil going to go with our precious natural resource that we have for at least the last 40 years been trying to use to achieve energy independence?

Why would my good friend from Texas give away to Big Oil our energy independence? Why would we do that?

By the way, the 1975 law does not prohibit. It puts the hand of the government—the President and the Secretary of Commerce—on the spigot, and if it is not in America's interest to export, they can shut the spigot down. There is no such protection in this. The only hand on the spigot for the export of oil is Big Oil. There is $30 billion a year of additional revenue for Big Oil—as if they don't already have enough.

What about the rest of the Nation? Shouldn't this natural resource asset of America's be shared? It could be. Control the spigot to the benefit of the people at the gas pump. My farmers need chemicals and fertilizer coming from the oil industry. They need the pipes—they need all of the material—and they need the diesel. Oh, we can forget about the farmers. After all, Big Oil wants to ship our precious natural resource—oil—overseas, probably to China.

So why don't we put a control on this, and if it is not in the public interest, don't do it? $8.7 billion of refining infrastructure will not be built as a result of this export. Whose jobs are those? They are the American middle class', which, apparently, all of us want to protect and enhance. Those are middle class jobs. $8.7 billion of infrastructure is not going to be built in our refineries.

This is not a big deal. After all, Big Oil wants it. It is no big deal that we would take, as we move towards energy independence, the one product that is available that could diminish the 25 percent oil we currently import. No. We are simply going to ship it offshore. For whose benefit? Are the American mariners going to benefit from that? No. Are the American shipbuilders going to benefit from that? No, not at all. Who is going to benefit? Some in the oil patch will benefit for sure, and, certainly, the Big Oil companies will benefit; but will the American consumer at the gasoline pump benefit?

I have seen the studies. You can design a study that will show it, but it means nothing. Remember this: $30 billion of oil a year is going to leave this country. For whose benefit? For Big Oil? It is not for the person at the gas pump. It is not for the farmer who is buying the diesel. It is not for the farmer who wants to buy the fertilizer. Give it away. Let them have it—as if they don't already have enough. For a century, Big Oil has been subsidized by the American public. Enough already.

I don't think this is a good idea. I don't think it is a good idea to take our crude oil and allow it to be shipped overseas with absolutely no restrictions whatsoever. You want a strong vote on this? Then make it a strong ''no'' vote.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTON. I will put the gentleman from California down as being undecided on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from College Station, Texas (Mr. FLORES).

Mr. FLORES. Mr. Chair, I rise in strong support of this amendment, which would strengthen our Nation's energy, its security, its jobs, and its economy.

We have heard some interesting rhetoric tonight, but here are the facts. This amendment results in five key benefits to our country:

First, it benefits the American consumer with resulting overall lower energy prices. This particularly benefits lower-income and lower middle-income Americans, providing greater economic security for those hard-working families;

Two, it benefits American producers and allows them to further reinvest in our domestic energy infrastructure, furthering our energy security and good-paying American jobs. Most of those companies are small, independent oil and gas companies, not the major companies that were just talked about;

Three, it benefits our geopolitical standing and strengthens ties with our global friends and allies, and it hurts those countries like Russia, Iran, and Venezuela, which are opposed to American interests;

Four, it benefits the downstream refining community as lower prices will stimulate volume demand for their refined products. This gives them more financial capital to hire skilled American workers and to reinvest in their operations;

Five, it helps cure our trade imbalances.

These are five critical reasons as to why everybody wins if we lift the ban.

The Acting CHAIR. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTON. I yield the gentleman an additional 15 seconds.

Mr. FLORES. Mr. Chairman, I thank Mr. BARTON for his work on this important amendment. I also thank the chairman for his support.

I strongly encourage my colleagues to support the amendment and the underlying bill.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Texas has 1¾ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California has yielded back the balance of his time.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time. I don't see any other speakers on our side.

Let me simply say that this amendment is about jobs for America. There is only one commodity that we prohibit, by law, from being exported, and it is crude oil. We don't prohibit cotton; we don't prohibit corn; we don't prohibit ethanol; we don't prohibit automobiles; we don't prohibit video games or movies. We only prohibit crude oil. That is number one.

Number two, since the oil prices have precipitously fallen in the last 13 or 14 months, we have lost over 250,000 jobs in the United States. Those aren't just oil patch jobs. Those are truck driver jobs; they are warehouse jobs; they are computer programmer jobs; they are restaurant jobs. You name it; those are real jobs. It is estimated, Mr. Chairman, that we are losing as many as 1,000 jobs a week right now. If we repeal this antiquated law, we can put some of those people back to work.

We can put American-made oil in the world marketplace. It makes no sense to let Iran export oil, but we can't let American oil be put on the world market. We don't know who is going to buy the oil, but we do know that the money we will receive from it is going to come back to the United States. It is going to create jobs, and it is going to help our economy. It is going to be good for every American in every State of the 50 States in the Union. Vote for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chair, I rise in opposition to the crude oil export amendment.

In the past 10 years, the United States has undergone an energy revolution.

But due to our success in places like Texas, North Dakota and Colorado the price of oil has fallen from $100 per barrel to $40.

Gasoline prices have fallen from almost $4 per gallon to less than $2.

All of this has benefitted our economy and the consumer.

I support crude oil exports.

But I want to protect our domestic manufacturing jobs, including refining.

We have the resource, we should use as much as possible here at home and sell what is left.

The crude oil export ban has been in place since 1975.

In the 1970s, the United States put the ban in place to protect our national interests.

That's more than 40 years of legislative history.

Before we do away with that history, we should make sure we have a policy that will make sense for the next 40 years and perhaps beyond.

Crude oil is a valuable national resource and the government should have some oversight as to where and when we send crude overseas.

I was hoping we could craft language that would create a process at the Bureau of Industry and Security, within the Department of Commerce, that would establish an authorization and reporting requirements for crude oil.

We should have some basic requirements at the Department of Commerce to oversee crude.

Unlike LNG, crude is a raw commodity and raw crude doesn't have value added.

If exporting crude is the right policy, then let's do it correctly.

Let's maximize the benefits for the United States.

Let's make sure U.S. crude doesn't end up in the hands of North Korea or any of our other foes.

The Department of Commerce has approved every application to export oil in the last five years.

Now, I agree that the Department could approve permits more efficiently but that's something we can legislate.

That's a "fix" I can support and believe would help our upstream producers.

Unfortunately, we were unable to find that compromise.

I do not want to oppose this language but without changes it is not in the best interest of our country.

The time to address exports is now but we cannot just open the tap and hope for the best.

I do not want the United States to become a resource nation.

I look forward to working on this issue again and hope that a reasonable, commonsense approach can be reached.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be postponed.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE ACTING CHAIR

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on those amendments printed in House Report 114–359 on which further proceedings were postponed, in the following order:

Amendment No. 1 by Mr. UPTON of Michigan.

Amendment No. 2 by Mr. TONKO of New York.

Amendment No. 14 by Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas.

Amendment No. 17 by Mr. BEYER of Virginia.

Amendment No. 19 by Ms. SCHAKOWSKY of Illinois.

Amendment No. 22 by Mr. TONKO of New York.

Amendment No. 23 by Ms. CASTOR of Florida.

Amendment No. 24 by Mr. POLIS of Colorado.

Amendment No. 25 by Mr. BARTON of Texas.

The Chair will reduce to 2 minutes the minimum time for any electronic vote after the first vote in this series.

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MR. UPTON

The Acting CHAIR. The unfinished business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the ayes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

The Clerk redesignated the amendment.

RECORDED VOTE

The Acting CHAIR. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 246, noes 177, not voting 10, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE ACTING CHAIR

The Acting CHAIR (during the vote). There is 1 minute remaining.

□ 1910

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mrs.

BLACK) having assumed the chair, Mr. FLEISCHMANN, Acting Chair of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY COMMITTEE ON RULES REGARDING AMENDMENT PROCESS FOR H.R. 2310, RED RIVER PRIVATE PROPERTY PROTECTION ACT

(Mr. SESSIONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam Speaker, today the Rules Committee issued a Dear Colleague letter outlining the amendment process for H.R. 2310, the Red River Private Property Protection Act. An amendment deadline has been set for Monday, December 7, 2015, at 12:00 p.m. Amendments should be drafted to the text as reported by the Committee on Natural Resources and is posted on the Rules Committee Web site. Please feel free to contact me or my staff with any questions.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1177, STUDENT SUCCESS ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, 5-minute voting will continue.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the question on adoption of the conference report on the bill (S. 1177) to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to ensure that every child achieves, on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

This is a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 359, nays 64, not voting 10, as follows:

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. YOUNG of Iowa). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

NORTH AMERICAN ENERGY SECURITY AND INFRASTRUCTURE ACT OF 2015

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 542 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 8.

Will the gentlewoman from Tennessee (Mrs. BLACK) kindly resume the chair.

□ 1921

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, with Mrs. BLACK (Acting Chair) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Acting CHAIR. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today, amendment No. 25 printed in House Report 114–359 offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON) had been disposed of.

AMENDMENT NO. 26 OFFERED BY MR. CRAMER

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 26 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. CRAMER. Madam Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE ___—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. _____. VOLUNTARY VEGETATION MANAGEMENT OUTSIDE RIGHTS-OF-WAY.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize an owner or operator of an electric transmission or distribution facility to manage vegetation selectively within 150 feet of the exterior boundary of the right-of-way near structures for selective thinning and fuel reduction.

(b) STATUS OF REMOVED VEGETATION.—Any vegetation removed pursuant to this section shall be the property of the United States and not available for sale by the owner or operator.

(c) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—An owner or operator of an electric transmission or distribution facility shall not be held liable for wildlife damage, loss, or injury, including the cost of fire suppression, resulting from activities carried out pursuant to subsection (a) except in the case of harm resulting from the owner or operator's gross negligence or criminal misconduct.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. CRAMER) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. CRAMER. Madam Chair, this amendment simply authorizes the voluntary—and I stress voluntary—vegetation management within 150 feet of the exterior boundary of the right-of-way near structures on U.S. Forest Service land.

As a former energy regulator and a utility commissioner, I know there are many threats to power lines running across this country. Most of the time, this comes down to vegetation, as odd as it might seem, but especially in areas where there are a lot of trees and that are remote areas hard to get to.

Off-right-of-way vegetation management on these lands are the responsibility of the United States Forest Service. But for any number of reasons, they aren't conducting this critical work to ensure the reliability of our electricity.

Utility companies don't want to do the work off their right-of-way due to the lack of clarity in their legal liability or a strict liability standard. This amendment provides that legal certainty and holds utilities accountable for gross negligence or criminal misconduct.

Lastly, Madam Chair, it is important to note that this amendment demonstrates that this is not—and I stress is not—a backdoor to logging and prevents the sale of the vegetation by the utility and clarifies it shall be the property of the United States.

Madam Chair, I would also emphasize that the Edison Electric Institute and the American Public Power Association support this amendment.

Mr. UPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Chair, I want to stress that this authorizes voluntary vegetation management within 150 feet of the exterior boundary of the right-of-way, prevents the sale of vegetation, and limits legal liability. I think it is a good amendment.

Madam Chair, I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. CRAMER. Madam Chair, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, the manager's amendment to H.R. 8 already includes a provision which would hand over management of vast swaths of U.S. public lands to private corporations and other utility providers under the guise of preventing forest fires.

This provision was inserted in the dead of night, and the full House won't get to vote on it. This is a terrible way to treat our public lands.

As if this weren't enough, this amendment would go even further, allowing electric utilities to clear-cut a football field-length swath of national forest adjacent to transmission rights-of-way.

It would also shift liability for fire damage caused by transmission infrastructure from the utilities to the American taxpayers, and that is just not right.

The Forest Service and the BLM are already working with utilities to improve right-of-way maintenance, and both agencies testified before the Natural Resources Committee that prior agency approval is not necessary for emergency vegetation maintenance work.

Mr. HUFFMAN offered a commonsense amendment at markup which would have required proactive planning by utilities in coordination with land managers to identify and address potential fire threats, but every Republican voted against it. Instead, they are supporting legislation which would lead to less responsible stewardship of the American people's forests.

According to the National Interagency Fire Center, power lines were responsible for causing only 0.03 percent of forest fires in past 5 years.

Madam Chair, if Republicans were serious about preventing and fighting forest fires, they would work with us to adequately fund the Forest Service and fix the problem of fire borrowing, which last year burned up 52 percent of the agency's budget.

But this isn't about solving a problem. This is about control. It is regrettable that House Republicans seek to give away the people's land to private interests. It is outrageous that this would happen.

Madam Chair, I urge a ''no'' vote on the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CRAMER. Madam Chair, I just want to correct a couple of the statements made sincerely by the opposition to this. I want to be clear that the cost of this is borne not by the taxpayers, but by the utilities themselves. The reason that they are not able to do it now, of course, is because of a lack of clarity and the liability. So this simply clears that part of it up.

Again, I want to get back to I was a regulator for nearly 10 years. Some people may remember not so many years ago a major rolling brownout that led to blackouts in the northeastern part of this country.

All of that was caused by trees growing into transmission lines. It has a cascading effect. And, yes, if it is a large forest, those trees growing into transmission lines can also create forest fires.

This is a very basic approach. Most of the arguments that the gentleman raised are to the underlying bill, not to this amendment. This amendment is very straightforward.

I urge a ''yes'' vote.

Madam Chair, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. CRAMER).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 27 OFFERED BY MR. DUFFY

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 27 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. DUFFY. Madam Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. 7001. ASSESSMENT OF REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall ensure that the requirements described in subsection (b) are satisfied.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator shall satisfy—

(1) section 4 of Executive Order 12866 (5 U.S.C. 601 note) (relating to regulatory planning and review) and Executive Order 13563 (5 U.S.C. 601 note) (relating to improving regulation and regulatory review) (or any successor Executive order establishing requirements applicable to the uniform reporting of regulatory and deregulatory agendas);

(2) section 602 of title 5, United States Code;

(3) section 8 of Executive Order 13132 (5 U.S.C. 601 note) (relating to federalism); and

(4) section 202(a) of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995 (2 U.S.C. 1532(a)).

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. DUFFY) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUFFY. Madam Chair, today I rise to talk about a commonsense amendment, an amendment that takes aim at excessive bureaucratic rulemaking at the EPA.

□ 1930

The EPA has long been known to issue onerous and costly rules with little regard to the impact on American businesses and the families who run those businesses.

According to some estimates, 17 of the EPA's major rules implemented between 2000 and 2013 have imposed an annual economic impact of $90 billion—a $90 billion annual impact per year, which means real jobs and a real impact on our economy.

Adding to the frustration, the EPA often ignores longstanding executive orders that require them to improve their own regulatory coordination planning and reviews. These executive orders were issued under the Clinton and Obama administrations, two administrations that have a very positive outlook towards the EPA. By no stretch of the imagination do we consider them conservatives.

These orders require departments, but not independent regulatory agencies like the EPA, to follow certain guidelines when it comes to major rules that would have a dramatic impact on State, local, or tribal government, or private sector expenditures in the aggregate of more than $100 million a year. So those are big rules that have big impacts.

The mercury rule put forward by the EPA is a prime example of that. It was going to cost $10 billion. This summer, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down that rule because the EPA unreasonably failed to consider the cost. My amendment would require the EPA to actually follow existing requirements to improve regulatory planning, coordination, and reviews.

American families and businesses can't afford the EPA to continue with duplicative and overreaching regulations. The EPA should have to follow the same rules that other departments in American government must follow.

Mr. UPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. I just want to say to the Chair and colleagues, this amendment requires the EPA to satisfy regulatory planning review requirements established by both the Clinton and Obama administrations.

I think the amendment is a good one, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. DUFFY. Madam Chair, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I rise in opposition to this amendment which would require EPA to satisfy within 30 days certain regulatory requirements included in three executive orders in two sections of the U.S. Code. This amendment is a solution in search of a problem.

EPA, in carrying out its responsibilities to write regulations as required by various statutes—for example, the Clean Air Act and the Clean Water Act—already complies with the EPA's specific responsibilities included in the three executive orders and two sections cited in this amendment.

I say ''EPA'' specifically because some of these laws and executive orders impose ongoing obligations on these agencies and place responsibility on parties other than the EPA—for example, the Vice President and the Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs within the Office of Management and Budget. In such cases, it will not be possible for EPA to ''ensure that the requirements of subsection (b) are satisfied,'' as the amendment requires.

In addition, some matters, such as the publication of the Regulatory Flexibility Agenda in the Federal Register, as cited in section 602 of title 5 of the U.S. Code, are handled by the General Services Administration on behalf of other Federal agencies and are therefore similarly outside of the EPA's control.

Moreover, Madam Chair, this amendment has the potential to lead to confusion in the future because it requires the EPA also to satisfy requirements in any successor executive orders that may establish requirements applicable to the uniform reporting of regulatory and deregulatory agendas.

What happens if these successor executive orders are not consistent with the current ones? Then we have a situation where EPA is forced to comply with competing executive orders, leading to unnecessary confusion.

Let's avoid this possibility by defeating this amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DUFFY. Madam Chair, some of my friends across the aisle's arguments are: Don't let the people know. Let's not be transparent. Let's have the EPA implement rules with no comment, no transparency, and no input from the American people.

That is not what our Founders envisioned. They envisioned a form of government where it was transparent and we all had a say in the process. These aren't radical ideas. This is common sense.

Listen, a quote: ''Regulations shall be adopted through a process that involves public participation.'' That wasn't from Ronald Reagan or George Bush. That was Barack Obama.

''Each agency, where feasible and appropriate, shall seek the views of those who are likely to be affected.'' Not Ronald Reagan, not George Bush, but Barack Obama.

This stuff makes sense. Open the process up, let the American people see the impact and the rules that are being proposed, just like in every other government agency. The EPA shouldn't get special treatment.

Transparency, good government, American involvement from the people in the process is what this amendment is about. I encourage all of my colleagues to support good government and a great amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, let me just say that this process with the EPA is very transparent, they do consider costs, and I disagree with the gentleman.

I urge opposition to this amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DUFFY. Madam Chair, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. DUFFY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 28 OFFERED BY MR. GOSAR

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 28 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. GOSAR. Madam Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. 7001. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) COVERED CIVIL ACTION.—The term ''covered civil action'' means a civil action containing a claim under section 702 of title 5, United States Code, regarding agency action (as defined for the purposes of that section) affecting a covered energy project on Federal land.

(2) COVERED ENERGY PROJECT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''covered energy project'' means—

(i) the leasing of Federal land for the exploration, development, production, processing, or transmission of oil, natural gas, coal, geothermal, hydroelectric, biomass, solar, or any other source of energy; and

(ii) any action under the lease.

(B) EXCLUSION.—The term ''covered energy project'' does not include any dispute between the parties to a lease regarding the obligations under the lease, including any alleged breach of the lease.

SEC. 7002. EXCLUSIVE VENUE FOR CERTAIN CIVIL ACTIONS RELATING TO COVERED ENERGY PROJECTS.

Venue for any covered civil action shall lie in the United States district court in which the covered energy project or lease exists or is proposed.

SEC. 7003. TIMELY FILING.

To ensure timely redress by the courts, a covered civil action shall be filed not later than the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the final Federal agency action to which the covered civil action relates.

SEC. 7004. EXPEDITION IN HEARING AND DETERMINING THE ACTION.

The court shall endeavor to hear and determine any covered civil action as expeditiously as practicable.

SEC. 7005. LIMITATION ON INJUNCTION AND PROSPECTIVE RELIEF.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In a covered civil action, a court shall not grant or approve any prospective relief unless the court finds that the relief—

(1) is narrowly drawn;

(2) extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of a legal requirement; and

(3) is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation.

(b) DURATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A court shall limit the duration of preliminary injunctions to halt covered energy projects to not more than 60 days, unless the court finds clear reasons to extend the injunction.

(2) ADMINISTRATION.—In the case of an extension, the extension shall—

(A) only be in 30-day increments; and

(B) require action by the court to renew the injunction.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 504 of title 5 and 2412 of title 28, United States Code (commonly known as the ''Equal Access to Justice Act''), shall not apply to a covered civil action.

(b) COURT COSTS.—A party to a covered civil action shall not receive payment from the Federal Government for the attorneys' fees, expenses, or other court costs incurred by the party.

SEC. 7006. LEGAL STANDING.

A challenger that files an appeal with the Department of the Interior Board of Land Appeals shall meet the same standing requirements as a challenger before a United States district court.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. GOSAR) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. GOSAR. Madam Chair, I rise today to offer a commonsense amendment to H.R. 8. The Gosar-Bridenstine-Yoho amendment ensures timely review for legal challenges of energy projects and limits attorneys' fees for such challenges in order to discourage frivolous lawsuits and foster American energy production.

This amendment will streamline the process and encourage production of natural gas, hydropower, clean coal, geothermal, solar, oil, biomass, and all other sources of energy that are produced on Federal lands.

Specifically, this amendment requires that U.S. district courts hear and determine covered civil action challenges as expeditiously as practical and that all covered actions be filed within 90 days of the final Federal agency action.

This amendment is a responsible, commonsense step that a government accountable to the people should take to show proper stewardship of the public's dollar, time, and resources. If you support transparency and cutting red tape that is holding up energy development, then you should support this amendment.

Just this week, the House passed legislation unanimously in the form of H.R. 3279, the Open Book on Equal Access to Justice Act. This bipartisan bill tracks how much money is paid out under the Equal Access to Justice Act, EAJA, and from which agencies. This legislation was necessary because, while Congress used to track such information, these practices were stopped in 1995.

The Gosar-Bridenstine-Yoho amendment improves on this excellent bipartisan work by limiting attorney fees and frivolous lawsuits against covered energy products, including renewables.

While no one knows the exact cost of EAJA payouts, as they have occurred untracked and in the dark for 20 years, the Government Accountability Office last reported in 2009 that special interest Washington, D.C., lawyers were billing the Federal Government at exorbitant rates, as high as $750 an hour.

It seems only appropriate that H.R. 3279 should be signed into law, those reporting requirements should kick in, and our amendment should be adopted before the Federal Government squanders more taxpayer money paying out D.C. trial attorneys who specialize in holding up American energy production.

House Natural Resources Chairman ROB BISHOP supports our commonsense amendment.

Our amendment is endorsed by the Americans for Limited Government; the American Petroleum Institute; Anglers United, Inc.; Arizona Builders Alliance; the Arizona Farm Bureau; Arizona Liberty; Arizona Pork Council; AZ BASS Nation; the Bass Federation; Concerned Citizens for America; Gavel Resources; Grand Canyon State Electric Cooperative Association; the Rural Public Lands County Council; Shake, Rattle and Troll Radio; Sulfur Springs Valley Electric Cooperative; the Yuma County Chamber of Commerce; and countless citizens around the country who are tired of red tape and bureaucracy holding up American energy production.

I thank the chair and ranking member for their tireless efforts on the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act, and I strongly support H.R. 8.

I urge my colleagues to support the Gosar-Bridenstine-Yoho amendment.

Mr. UPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSAR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Chair, I thank the gentleman for the amendment.

We have talked to the Natural Resources Committee staff. Obviously, that is something that Chairman BISHOP supports.

This amendment does ensure the timely review for legal challenges of energy projects. It is a worthy amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GOSAR. Madam Chair, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Madam Chair, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Madam Chair, I rise in opposition to the amendment to H.R. 8.

This amendment is another example of pro-corporate, anti-environmental legislation designed by large corporations to restrict access to the courts for the average citizen.

The Gosar amendment ignores separation of powers by telling the Federal courts how to do their job, restricting the type of relief a court can grant, and penalizing successful challenges brought under the Equal Access to Justice Act. This, in turn, limits access to legal relief for those challenging government decisions.

Let's say you are a farmer or a rancher or a landowner and you live adjacent to Federal land that is being leased out to an energy company for fracking and you are worried about what is going to happen to your drinking water, you are worried about the price of your house, and you are worried about the health of your children. Well, this amendment will greatly interfere with your ability to challenge the decision of the Federal agency granting the permit. It will tie the hands of the courts in terms of deciding the case in a fair and just way.

For nearly 70 years, the Administrative Procedure Act, or APA, has served as the foundation for administrative agency action and ensures that agency action taking place in the rulemaking process is fair, efficient, and flexible enough to accommodate the myriad of agency actions it governs along with the challenges of daily life.

Judicial review of agency action is a hallmark of the APA, and it is critical to ensuring that government action does not harm or adversely affect the public. The Gosar amendment would discard decades of wisdom and jurisprudence preserving the right of judicial review.

First, it would reduce the statute of limitations for judicial review of agency action under the APA to 90 days. This is down from 6 years for most claims brought against the United States in cases involving onshore and offshore energy leasing, development, and transmission on Federal lands.

This razor-thin window for review would effectively immunize government action involving energy projects from public accountability, allowing those agencies to opt out of our civil justice system.

Second, the amendment limits a judicial stay of final agency action by requiring courts to only consider whether relief would be the least intrusive or narrowly drawn relief possible to correct a violation.

Courts, however, typically consider other things, such as where the public interest lies. This sweeping limitation would dramatically interfere with the courts' ability to provide relief, tilting the outcome against the public interest.

Lastly, this amendment slams the door to the courthouse by prohibiting access to funds under the Equal Access to Justice Act. By enacting the Equal Access to Justice Act, Congress recognized that individuals and organizations should not be deterred from challenging unjustified governmental action simply because it costs too much.

For three decades, veterans, seniors, persons with disabilities, small businesses, and nonprofit organizations from across the ideological spectrum have relied upon the Equal Access to Justice Act to challenge illegal government action. This amendment would cripple the rights of those concerned or opposed to an energy project by preventing those who cannot afford to litigate a case against a big corporation from recovering fees, expenses, and court costs when they win.

It is time for this Congress to stand up for everyday Americans. I urge my colleagues to stand for the rights of the individual and local communities and oppose this misguided amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1945

Mr. GOSAR. Madam Chair, this amendment is simple. Either you are with American energy producers, or you are with overpaid, high-priced Washington, D.C., attorneys and extremist special interest groups that are holding up American energy production.

This amendment still allows the public to seek assistance in Federal court and actually encourages that an up-or-down review of their legal challenges occur in a more timely manner.

This amendment does not affect NEPA or environmental requirements whatsoever. All American energy producers will still have to go through the full environmental review and permitting process. As I mentioned earlier with regard to previous amendments, that process takes an average of 1,709 days to complete, and it allows public input from all Americans.

Madam Chair, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Madam Chair, you are with American people—farmers, ranchers, landowners, just regular, ordinary people—or you are with the Big Business corporations that are seeking to rape and pillage, on occasion, the land without any drawback of having to be taken into the courthouse to deal with what they have done or with what they are about to do.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSAR. Madam Chair, as I stated earlier, the amendment encourages an all-of-the-above energy strategy and has specific language that ensures the amendment applies to solar, natural gas, hydropower, clean coal, geothermal, oil, biomass, and any other source of energy that is produced on Federal lands. It actually embraces and supports those folks out there in America; so I ask all of our folks to vote for the Gosar-Bridenstine-Yoho amendment.

Madam Chair, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. GOSAR).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 29 OFFERED BY MR. UPTON

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 29 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Chair, as the designee of EVAN JENKINS, I offer amendment No. 29.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. 7001. STUDY TO IDENTIFY LEGAL AND REGULATORY BARRIERS THAT DELAY, PROHIBIT, OR IMPEDE THE EXPORT OF NATURAL ENERGY RESOURCES.

Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Commerce shall jointly transmit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Natural Resources of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, the results of a study to—

(1) identify legal and regulatory barriers that delay, prohibit, or impede the export of natural energy resources, including government and technical (physical or market) barriers that hinder coal, natural gas, oil, and other energy exports; and

(2) estimate the economic impacts of such barriers.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Madam Chair, this amendment requires the Department of Energy and the Department of Commerce to conduct a study regarding the legal and regulatory barriers that delay, prohibit, or impede the export of natural energy resources.

This amendment instructs the Department of Energy and the Department of Commerce to conduct this study to figure out which regulatory barriers may be prohibiting, delaying, or hindering the export of America's natural resources, like coal and natural gas, which come in the form of permitting requirements, the threat of litigation, regulatory red tape, market forces, and more.

I urge my colleagues to support it.

Madam Chair, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I rise in opposition to this amendment, which would require the Department of Energy and the Department of Commerce to conduct a study on the legal and regulatory provisions that delay or prohibit the export of natural energy resources.

This is another example, Madam Chair, of an amendment in search of a problem. The majority is, once again, making hyperbolic claims about the Federal Government blocking energy exports, but this is simply not true.

To cite the example of LNG exports, the Department of Energy currently conducts a public interest review of all applications to export LNG to a country without a free trade agreement with the United States. The DOE has established a record of acting expeditiously, and it has acted on all applications that have completed the NEPA process. To date, the DOE has approved nine final authorizations on seven projects. So, to imply there is a barrier in this case is simply not true.

Further, any so-called barrier usually has a specific purpose: for example, taking the time to ensure that public health is protected, that safety and environmental concerns are adequately evaluated, that the export of our natural resources is actually in the national interest, and that consumers are not adversely impacted.

Finally, the amendment doesn't define ''barrier.'' So would other agencies' regulations, promulgated under other statutory authority, constitute a barrier? I am also not sure that the DOE and the Department of Commerce even have the appropriate expertise to assess these barriers.

For these reasons, Madam Chair, I oppose this amendment as its being an unnecessary and vaguely defined study, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 30 OFFERED BY MR. ROUZER

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 30 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. ROUZER. Madam Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE ___—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. _____. REPEAL OF RULE FOR NEW RESIDENTIAL WOOD HEATERS.

The final rule entitled ''Standards of Performance for New Residential Wood Heaters, New Residential Hydronic Heaters and Forced-Air Furnaces'' published at 80 Fed. Reg. 13672 (March 16, 2015) shall have no force or effect and shall be treated as if such rule had never been issued.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ROUZER) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ROUZER. Madam Chair, I rise today to offer an amendment to the North American Energy Security and Infrastructure Act.

In early March of this year, the EPA published a final rule establishing new regulations for wood heaters. Manufacturers and consumers across the country are concerned about the negative impact of these new regulations. In essence, these new requirements will increase the cost to the point that wood heaters may very well be priced out of the marketplace. The best case scenario is that consumers will be paying more. Now, Madam Chair, neither is a good outcome.

According to reports, 10 percent of U.S. households still choose wood heaters to keep their energy costs as low as possible. The number of households that rely on wood as their primary heating source—get this—rose by nearly one-third from 2005 to 2012.

It is important to note that several States have worked to protect their residents from the consequences of these new regulations. Wisconsin, Missouri, Michigan, Virginia, and my home State of North Carolina have all introduced or have passed legislation that prohibits their respective environmental agencies from enforcing these burdensome, unnecessary regulations. The reason is that they know the costs of additional regulations are always passed down to the consumers.

Simply put, the Federal Government has no business telling private citizens how they should heat their homes.

Think about all of the folks in the Midwest and the Northeast who are going to need and want a wood heater. After all, this is America. If you want to have the opportunity to buy a wood heater, you ought to have that opportunity. It shouldn't be priced out of the market.

Madam Chair, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina.

Madam Chair, the EPA has decided that 12 million wood-burning stoves in 2.4 million households across America need to be regulated.

Back in the Eighth District of Missouri, about 30,000 households use wood heat to warm their homes. Census data shows that households heating with wood grew 34 percent between 2000 and 2010 and that low- and middle-income households are much more likely to use wood as a primary heating fuel. A given home in my district is five times more likely to be heated with wood than is the national average.

Constituents I talk with daily are sick of this administration's war on rural America. Rules like these disproportionately hurt rural areas, which use much more wood heat than do urban or suburban environments: 57 percent of households that primarily use wood for heat are in rural areas; 40 percent are in the suburbs; and only 3 percent are in urban areas. Times are already tough enough back home. Folks should not be punished for their self-reliance and their forethought to take advantage of an abundant, eco-friendly fuel like wood.

I urge my colleagues to join me in eliminating this rule and keeping affordable energy available to folks who need it the most.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, I claim the time in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Chair, this amendment will delay the implementation of the EPA's important standards for residential wood heaters—finalized in February 2015—that will help improve air quality, especially in communities where people burn wood for heat.

The EPA updated these standards because the Clean Air Act requires the EPA to set new source performance standards for categories of stationary sources of pollution that cause or significantly contribute to air pollution that may endanger public health or welfare, and the law requires the EPA to review these standards every 8 years.

The EPA issued the first NSPS for residential wood heaters in 1988. The Agency amended the standards once in 1998 to prohibit the sale of wood heaters to consumers if the manufacturer had used an invalid test to obtain EPA certification that the heater met NSPS requirements. The 1998 amendments did not change the emission limits in the original rule. This means the standards for wood heaters have not been updated in nearly 30 years.

The EPA's standards reflect significant outreach to the public and interested stakeholders, including consultation with State, local, and tribal governments and a Small Business Advocacy Review Panel.

The new standards will provide tremendous health benefits by cutting harmful air pollution, including particle pollution, carbon monoxide, and air toxics. Particle pollution causes a range of adverse health effects, including asthma, heart attacks, and stroke.

The EPA estimates that the benefits of these standards will be up to $7.6 billion annually. Put another way, for every dollar spent to manufacture cleaner wood heaters, we will see up to $165 in health benefits. So blocking this rule is fiscally irresponsible.

Some may claim that this rule will require people who use wood heaters to replace the models they currently use, but this standard applies only to the new manufacturing of wood heaters. It does not require people to replace the heaters they have already purchased. Let me repeat that. The EPA is not going into anyone's home and forcing one to replace a heater one currently has. The final rule also has a gradual 5-year phase-in to allow manufacturers time to adapt.

If this amendment were to become law and if the EPA is unable to implement these standards, manufacturers will be able to continue producing outdated wood heaters that pose risks to our air quality and to our health.

The EPA's rule is a reasonable one that is long overdue. It has important benefits, and it should be allowed to be implemented; so I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROUZER. Mr. Chairman, this is a commonsense amendment that has been put forward in order to address an onerous, unnecessary rule. My question is: What are we going to try to regulate next—fireplaces? It is next on the list, it seems to me.

I ask for the support of this amendment, and I thank my colleague from Missouri for being here to offer his words of support for the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I urge opposition to the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR (Mr. WOODALL). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ROUZER).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 31 OFFERED BY MS. CASTOR OF FLORIDA

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 31 printed in House Report 114–359.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. 7001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Promoting Renewable Energy with Shared Solar Act of 2015''.

SEC. 7002. PROVISION OF INTERCONNECTION SERVICE AND NET BILLING SERVICE FOR COMMUNITY SOLAR FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 111(d) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2621(d)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(20) COMMUNITY SOLAR FACILITIES.—

''(A) DEFINITIONS.—In this paragraph:

''(i) COMMUNITY SOLAR FACILITY.—The term 'community solar facility' means a solar photovoltaic system that—

''(I) allocates electricity to multiple individual electric consumers of an electric utility;

''(II) has a nameplate rating of 2 megawatts or less; and

''(III) is—

''(aa) owned by the electric utility, jointly owned, or third-party-owned;

''(bb) connected to a local distribution facility of the electric utility; and

''(cc) located on or off the property of a consumer of the electricity.

''(ii) INTERCONNECTION SERVICE.—The term 'interconnection service' means a service provided by an electric utility to an electric consumer, in accordance with the standards described in paragraph (15), through which a community solar facility is connected to an applicable local distribution facility.

''(iii) NET BILLING SERVICE.—The term 'net billing service' means a service provided by an electric utility to an electric consumer through which electric energy generated for that electric consumer from a community solar facility may be used to offset electric energy provided by the electric utility to the electric consumer during the applicable billing period.

''(B) REQUIREMENT.—On receipt of a request of an electric consumer served by the electric utility, each electric utility shall make available to the electric consumer interconnection service and net billing service for a community solar facility.''.

(b) COMPLIANCE.—

(1) TIME LIMITATIONS.—Section 112(b) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(7)(A) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this paragraph, each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which the State has ratemaking authority) and each nonregulated utility shall commence consideration under section 111, or set a hearing date for consideration, with respect to the standard established by paragraph (20) of section 111(d).

''(B) Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this paragraph, each State regulatory authority (with respect to each electric utility for which the State has ratemaking authority), and each nonregulated electric utility shall complete the consideration and make the determination under section 111 with respect to the standard established by paragraph (20) of section 111(d).''.

(2) FAILURE TO COMPLY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 112(c) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622(c)) is amended—

(i) by striking ''such paragraph (14)'' and all that follows through ''paragraphs (16)'' and inserting ''such paragraph (14). In the case of the standard established by paragraph (15) of section 111(d), the reference contained in this subsection to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of that paragraph (15). In the case of the standards established by paragraphs (16)''; and

(ii) by adding at the end the following: ''In the case of the standard established by paragraph (20) of section 111(d), the reference contained in this subsection to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of that paragraph (20).''.

(B) TECHNICAL CORRECTION.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Section 1254(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (Public Law 109–58; 119 Stat. 971) is amended by striking paragraph (2).

(ii) TREATMENT.—The amendment made by paragraph (2) of section 1254(b) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (Public Law 109–58; 119 Stat. 971) (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act) is void, and section 112(d) of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622(d)) shall be in effect as if those amendments had not been enacted.

(3) PRIOR STATE ACTIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 112 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2622) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(g) PRIOR STATE ACTIONS.—Subsections (b) and (c) shall not apply to the standard established by paragraph (20) of section 111(d) in the case of any electric utility in a State if, before the date of enactment of this subsection—

''(1) the State has implemented for the electric utility the standard (or a comparable standard);

''(2) the State regulatory authority for the State or the relevant nonregulated electric utility has conducted a proceeding to consider implementation of the standard (or a comparable standard) for the electric utility; or

''(3) the State legislature has voted on the implementation of the standard (or a comparable standard) for the electric utility.''.

(B) CROSS-REFERENCE.—Section 124 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policy Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2634) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''In the case of the standard established by paragraph (20) of section 111(d), the reference contained in this subsection to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of that paragraph (20).''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. CASTOR) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida.

□ 2000

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a great opportunity to put solar power within reach of more families and small businesses across America. It amends the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 under which Congress directs States to consider adopting certain regulatory policies.

My amendment directs States to consider solar projects up to 2 megawatts in size to be connected to their power distribution system and that utilities allow the electricity produced by the community solar facility to be credited directly to each of the consumers that owns a share of the system, thus offsetting the cost of the electricity that would normally be billed by the utility to the customer.

Currently, 14 States and the District of Columbia have shared renewable policies in place. My amendment would encourage other States to consider implementing new policies to promote community solar projects.

Mr. Chair, 49 percent of households are currently unable to host a photovoltaic system because they do not own their building. They are renters or they do not have access to sufficient roof space, like high-rise buildings or multifamily buildings, or they live in buildings with too much shade or insufficient roof space to host such a photovoltaic system.

It is also estimated that 48 percent of businesses are unable to host a solar array. So by opening the market to these customers, shared solar could represent as much as half of the distributed photovoltaic market in 2020, adding an additional 5.5 to 11 gigawatts of solar capacity across our country.

One good example is what is happening in central Florida. The Orlando Utilities Commission has developed central Florida's first community solar farm. The community solar farm gives Orlando residential and small business customers access to sustainable, maintenance-free solar energy without the hassles and costs associated with installing panels on their home or businesses.

The 400-kilowatt array produces an average of 540,000 kilowatts annually, which is enough energy to meet the power needs of about 40 homes. This has great promise. It has great potential for families and small businesses that we all represent across the country.

I would urge an ''aye'' vote.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment requires States to consider electric utilities to allow community solar projects of up to 2 megawatts to connect to the electric grid. We do know that community solar is an exciting new technology that many communities and customers are seriously considering.

I could say that I support the gentlewoman's community solar goals, but there are some concerns with the amendment. Namely, as drafted, it could violate some State electric service laws, while also potentially being redundant of Federal standards currently imposed on States.

But because it is not a mandate and uses PURPA for States to consider, which they are free to consider or reject, we can accept the gentlewoman's amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. CASTOR of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee for recognizing the great promise and great potential for solar power for families and small businesses across the country. I thank him for urging an ''aye'' vote.

I also urge an ''aye'' vote on the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. CASTOR).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 32 OFFERED BY MR. DESAULNIER

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 32 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. DESAULNIER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. 7001. STUDY OF VOLATILITY OF CRUDE OIL.

Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall transmit to Congress the results of a study to determine the maximum level of volatility that is consistent with the safest practicable shipment of crude oil by rail.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from California (Mr. DESAULNIER) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. DESAULNIER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment requires the Department of Energy to study and report to Congress within 1 year the maximum level of volatility that is safe for transporting crude oil by rail.

This commonsense improvement to the bill is a first step in addressing concerns of residents in districts like mine that, while it is heavily industrialized, is also urbanized. The area that I represent has five oil refineries and two destination facilities for oil by rail.

In 2008, oil traffic had increased over 5,000 percent along rail routes leading from production zones in America to refineries and hubs along both coasts. As traffic increases, so does the risk of derailments to communities. Bakken crude oil is considered more volatile than other types of crude and has important safety implications for all of us.

The Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration has issued safety alerts warning that crude oil being transported from this region may be more flammable than traditional heavy crude oil. In fact, heavy volatile crude oil from this region has been compared to jet fuel with flammable vapors that can ignite after a derailment.

Several communities along rail lines have been forced to evacuate or sustain significant property and environmental damage after derailment. Unfortunately, there have been instances of severe injuries and some deaths resulting from these accidents.

While the Obama administration has taken important steps to improve tank car standards, more must be done to ensure that Americans living near railways are safe. This amendment requires DOE to determine the acceptable volatility for the safe transportation of oil by rail.

I would urge my colleagues to support this commonsense amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition, but I support the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, this amendment requires the Department of Energy to study the maximum level of volatility that is consistent with the safest practical shipment of crude oil by rail. Every one of us here wants the safe transportation of all of our natural resources. Rail transport is getting larger and larger. We need to make sure that it is safe.

I think it is a worthy amendment. I would urge all my colleagues to support the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DESAULNIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the DeSaulnier-Lowey-Garamendi amendment. At the outset, I want to thank my friend, the distinguished chairman, for your wisdom in supporting this very important amendment.

This year derailments in North Dakota, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia endangered lives, destroyed homes, and jeopardized waterways.

We must protect those who live near America's extensive rails, including my constituents in Rockland County, New York, where every week as many as 30 trains carry highly volatile Bakken crude oil past homes, schools, and businesses.

In 2013, a freight train pulling 99 oil tanker cars collided with a truck in West Nyack, averting disaster because the cars were empty. This was not an isolated incident. Vehicles are frequently struck on train tracks that carry crude oil. Just last month a freight train collided with a car in Congers. We cannot afford to risk a ''next time.''

We need scientific information to determine what volatility levels of crude oil can be safely shipped, which would be provided if this amendment passed, to protect those living near railways from the dangers associated with a crude oil derailment.

I urge support of this amendment. I thank my colleague, Mr. DESAULNIER, and our chair again. It looks like we are going to see some important action on this very critical issue.

Mr. DESAULNIER. Mr. Chair, I thank the chairman, the staff, and Mrs. LOWEY.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. DESAULNIER).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 33 OFFERED BY MR. DEUTCH

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 33 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. DEUTCH. Mr. Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—MARINE HYDROKINETIC

SEC. 7001. DEFINITION OF MARINE AND HYDROKINETIC RENEWABLE ENERGY.

Section 632 of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17211) is amended in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by striking ''electrical''.

SEC. 7002. MARINE AND HYDROKINETIC RENEWABLE ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

Section 633 of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17212) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 633. MARINE AND HYDROKINETIC RENEWABLE ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

''The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, shall carry out a program of research, development, demonstration, and commercial application to accelerate the introduction of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy production into the United States energy supply, giving priority to fostering accelerated research, development, and commercialization of technology, including—

''(1) to assist technology development to improve the components, processes, and systems used for power generation from marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy resources;

''(2) to establish critical testing infrastructure necessary—

''(A) to cost effectively and efficiently test and prove the efficacy of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy devices; and

''(B) to accelerate the technological readiness and commercialization of those devices;

''(3) to support efforts to increase the efficiency of energy conversion, lower the cost, increase the use, improve the reliability, and demonstrate the applicability of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy technologies by participating in demonstration projects;

''(4) to investigate variability issues and the efficient and reliable integration of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy with the utility grid;

''(5) to identify and study critical short- and long-term needs to create a sustainable marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy supply chain based in the United States;

''(6) to increase the reliability and survivability of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy technologies;

''(7) to verify the performance, reliability, maintainability, and cost of new marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy device designs and system components in an operating environment;

''(8) to coordinate and avoid duplication of activities across programs of the Department and other applicable Federal agencies, including National Laboratories, and to coordinate public-private collaboration in all programs under this section;

''(9) to identify opportunities for joint research and development programs and development of economies of scale between—

''(A) marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy technologies; and

''(B) other renewable energy and fossil energy programs, offshore oil and gas production activities, and activities of the Department of Defense; and

''(10) to support in-water technology development with international partners using existing cooperative procedures (including memoranda of understanding)—

''(A) to allow cooperative funding and other support of value to be exchanged and leveraged; and

''(B) to encourage international research centers and international companies to participate in the development of water technology in the United States and to encourage United States research centers and United States companies to participate in water technology projects abroad.''.

SEC. 7003. NATIONAL MARINE RENEWABLE ENERGY RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, AND DEMONSTRATION CENTERS.

Section 634(b) of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17213(b)) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) PURPOSES.—A Center (in coordination with the Department and National Laboratories) shall—

''(1) advance research, development, demonstration, and commercial application of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy technologies;

''(2) support in-water testing and demonstration of marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy technologies, including facilities capable of testing—

''(A) marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy systems of various technology readiness levels and scales;

''(B) a variety of technologies in multiple test berths at a single location; and

''(C) arrays of technology devices; and

''(3) serve as information clearinghouses for the marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy industry by collecting and disseminating information on best practices in all areas relating to developing and managing marine and hydrokinetic renewable energy resources and energy systems.''.

SEC. 7004. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 636 of the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 (42 U.S.C. 17215) is amended by striking ''2008 through 2012'' and inserting ''2016 through 2019''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DEUTCH) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. DEUTCH. Mr. Chair, H.R. 8, the North American Energy Security Infrastructure Act, was crafted to support the modernization of our Nation's energy infrastructure and the promotion of energy efficiency.

The Deutch-Takai amendment builds on this legislation by supporting further development of one of our Nation's clean, renewable energy sources, marine and hydrokinetic energy.

This amendment reauthorizes the Department of Energy's marine and hydrokinetic research, development, and demonstration programs. This amendment would support the innovative work done by institutions across the country, including Florida Atlantic University in my district. I am so proud that FAU has been a leader in hydrokinetic energy, harnessing the clean power of our oceans to bring America one step closer to energy independence.

FAU's research being done along our pristine coasts in Broward County has already shown the tremendous potential of hydrokinetic energy to produce reliable energy without endangering our beaches or oceans.

These national marine renewable energy research, development, and demonstration centers will serve as information clearinghouses for the marine and hydrokinetic energy industry by providing best practices information on developing and managing these projects so that others can learn from the work being done nationwide and grow this important energy source.

Marine and hydrokinetic energy projects generate energy from waves, currents, such as the gulf stream, and tides in the ocean and estuary or tidal areas. They also can generate energy from free-flowing water in rivers, lakes, or streams.

Marine and hydrokinetic energy projects generate power without the use of a dam or the impoundment of water. Accordingly, the projects have minimal, if any, impact on the surrounding environment.

The ocean waves, currents, and tides are a massive resource that have the potential to produce continuous clean energy. In fact, harnessing only 15 percent of the energy from U.S. coastal waves would produce as much electricity as we currently produce from conventional hydroelectric dams.

Moreover, it has been estimated that the amount of energy that could be produced from waves, currents, and tides along the U.S. coast could provide power to approximately 67 million homes. With more than 50 percent of our Nation's population currently living within 50 miles of coastline, harnessing the energy of ocean waves, currents, and tides and transmitting the energy to our cities and neighborhoods is cost effective and practical.

The Department of Energy has estimated that hydrokinetic energy could provide up to 25 percent of our Nation's power. The agency estimates that California, Washington, and Oregon could have up to 20 percent of their electricity requirements generated from waves, while Hawaii and Alaska could have nearly all of their energy needs provided by marine hydrokinetic energy.

Currently, this still young and developing form of energy technology is in the process of being commercialized.

In Maine, hydrokinetic devices that harness energy from the tides near Cobscook Bay have been connected to the electric grid and provide enough power for 25 to 30 homes. In Hawaii, a hydrokinetic device has become the first to be connected to the electric grid that harnesses energy from waves.

These are the beginning steps toward commercializing this energy form, and it will enable them to become more widespread and provide power to the grids in our cities and communities.

Importantly, this amendment will improve the efficiency of regulations impacting the licensing of marine and hydrokinetic projects. The amendment would provide clarity on the regulations that need to be satisfied for projects seeking a license and the agencies involved in reviewing the licensing process so that innovative projects don't get caught up in needless bureaucracy.

Marine and hydrokinetic will provide a continuous and a clean source of energy. This amendment would support and promote continued investment in research and development of hydrokinetic projects that work to harness power from ocean waves, currents, and tides, as well as our Nation's rivers, lakes, and streams. It would also improve the regulatory barriers that slow the licensing process for these projects.

Marine and hydrokinetic energy is a source of energy we need to continue to develop, improve, and connect to the grid to provide our cities and communities with the electricity that they need.

I thank my colleague from Hawaii, Congressman TAKAI, for all of his work in support of marine and hydrokinetic power and for his support of this amendment.

I strongly urge support for the Deutch-Takai amendment.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, I would say that I am convinced that this is a good amendment, and I will be in support of the amendment.

We have many Members, particularly CATHY MCMORRIS RODGERS on our committee, who are strong supporters of hydropower.

□ 2015

This amendment promotes the research, development, and demonstration of marine hydrokinetic energy technologies and improves the regulatory process for such programs. As such, we support the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DEUTCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DEUTCH).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 34 OFFERED BY MR. GRAYSON

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 34 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. GRAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE ____—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. ____. SMART METER PRIVACY RIGHTS.

(a) ELECTRICAL CORPORATION OR GAS CORPORATIONS.—

(1) For purposes of this section, ''electrical or gas consumption data'' means data about a customer's electrical or natural gas usage that is made available as part of an advanced metering infrastructure, and includes the name, account number, or residence of the customer.

(2)(A) An electrical corporation or gas corporation shall not share, disclose, or otherwise make accessible to any third party a customer's electrical or gas consumption data, except as provided in subsection (a) (5) or upon the consent of the customer.

(B) An electrical corporation or gas corporation shall not sell a customer's electrical or gas consumption data or any other personally identifiable information for any purpose.

(C) The electrical corporation or gas corporation or its contractors shall not provide an incentive or discount to the customer for accessing the customer's electrical or gas consumption data without the prior consent of the customer.

(D) An electrical or gas corporation that utilizes an advanced metering infrastructure that allows a customer to access the customer's electrical and gas consumption data shall ensure that the customer has an option to access that data without being required to agree to the sharing of his or her personally identifiable information, including electrical or gas consumption data, with a third party.

(3) If an electrical corporation or gas corporation contracts with a third party for a service that allows a customer to monitor his or her electricity or gas usage, and that third party uses the data for a secondary commercial purpose, the contract between the electrical corporation or gas corporation and the third party shall provide that the third party prominently discloses that secondary commercial purpose to the customer.

(4) An electrical corporation or gas corporation shall use reasonable security procedures and practices to protect a customer's unencrypted electrical or gas consumption data from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure.

(5)(A) Nothing in this section shall preclude an electrical corporation or gas corporation from using customer aggregate electrical or gas consumption data for analysis, reporting, or program management if all information has been removed regarding the individual identity of a customer.

(B) Nothing in this section shall preclude an electrical corporation or gas corporation from disclosing a customer's electrical or gas consumption data to a third party for system, grid, or operational needs, or the implementation of demand response, energy management, or energy efficiency programs, provided that, for contracts entered into after January 1, 2016, the utility has required by contract that the third party implement and maintain reasonable security procedures and practices appropriate to the nature of the information, to protect the personal information from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure, and prohibits the use of the data for a secondary commercial purpose not related to the primary purpose of the contract without the customer's consent.

(C) Nothing in this section shall preclude an electrical corporation or gas corporation from disclosing electrical or gas consumption data as required or permitted under State or Federal law or by an order of a State public utility commission.

(6) If a customer chooses to disclose his or her electrical or gas consumption data to a third party that is unaffiliated with, and has no other business relationship with, the electrical or gas corporation, the electrical or gas corporation shall not be responsible for the security of that data, or its use or misuse.

(b) LOCAL PUBLICLY OWNED ELECTRIC UTILITIES.—

(1) For purposes of this section, ''electrical consumption data'' means data about a customer's electrical usage that is made available as part of an advanced metering infrastructure, and includes the name, account number, or residence of the customer.

(2)(A) A local publicly owned electric utility shall not share, disclose, or otherwise make accessible to any third party a customer's electrical consumption data, except as provided in subsection (b) (5) or upon the consent of the customer.

(B) A local publicly owned electric utility shall not sell a customer's electrical consumption data or any other personally identifiable information for any purpose.

(C) The local publicly owned electric utility or its contractors shall not provide an incentive or discount to the customer for accessing the customer's electrical consumption data without the prior consent of the customer.

(D) A local publicly owned electric utility that utilizes an advanced metering infrastructure that allows a customer to access the customer's electrical consumption data shall ensure that the customer has an option to access that data without being required to agree to the sharing of his or her personally identifiable information, including electrical consumption data, with a third party.

(3) If a local publicly owned electric utility contracts with a third party for a service that allows a customer to monitor his or her electricity usage, and that third party uses the data for a secondary commercial purpose, the contract between the local publicly owned electric utility and the third party shall provide that the third party prominently discloses that secondary commercial purpose to the customer.

(4) A local publicly owned electric utility shall use reasonable security procedures and practices to protect a customer's unencrypted electrical consumption data from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure, and prohibits the use of the data for a secondary commercial purpose not related to the primary purpose of the contract without the customer's consent.

(5)(A) Nothing in this section shall preclude a local publicly owned electric utility from using customer aggregate electrical consumption data for analysis, reporting, or program management if all information has been removed regarding the individual identity of a customer.

(B) Nothing in this section shall preclude a local publicly owned electric utility from disclosing a customer's electrical consumption data to a third party for system, grid, or operational needs, or the implementation of demand response, energy management, or energy efficiency programs, provided, for contracts entered into after January 1, 2016, that the utility has required by contract that the third party implement and maintain reasonable security procedures and practices appropriate to the nature of the information, to protect the personal information from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure.

(C) Nothing in this section shall preclude a local publicly owned electric utility from disclosing electrical consumption data as required under State or Federal law.

(6) If a customer chooses to disclose his or her electrical consumption data to a third party that is unaffiliated with, and has no other business relationship with, the local publicly owned electric utility, the utility shall not be responsible for the security of that data, or its use or misuse.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GRAYSON) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GRAYSON. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would establish minimum privacy standards for smart meters on people's homes which are part of the smart electric grid.

According to the U.S. Energy Information Administration, as of 2013, nearly 52 million smart meters have already been installed in the United States. This amendment would prohibit locally publicly owned electric utilities, electrical corporations, or gas companies from sharing, disclosing, or otherwise making accessible to any third party a customer's electrical or gas consumption data.

It would also require these utilities to use reasonable security procedures and practices to protect the customer's unencrypted electrical and gas consumption data from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. And I will use my time to support the amendment.

This amendment does establish minimum privacy standards for smart meters. I think it is a smart amendment, brilliant, and it needs to be adopted.

I encourage my colleagues to support it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GRAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GRAYSON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 35 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON LEE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 35 printed in House Report 114–359.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE ___OTHER MATTERS

SEC. _____. YOUTH ENERGY ENTERPRISE COMPETITION.

The Secretaries of Energy and Commerce shall jointly establish an energy enterprise competition to encourage youth to propose solutions to the energy challenges of the United States and to promote youth interest in careers in science, technology, engineering, and math, especially as those fields relate to energy.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. I just want to take a moment, Mr. Chairman, as we have been debating important energy issues on the floor of the House, to offer my deepest sympathy to the families who have lost loved ones in San Bernardino and hope that we will come together as a country and find solutions to this terrible tragedy.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to introduce this amendment because it talks about the goodness of this Nation and the wonderment of our youth. My amendment particularly is called the Youth Energy Enterprise Competition. It asks the Secretaries of Energy and Commerce to jointly establish an energy enterprise competition to encourage youth to propose solutions to the energy challenges of the United States and to promote youth interests and careers in science, technology, engineering, and math, especially those fields that relate to energy.

As a member of the United States Congress, I have had the privilege of being on the Congressional Award Board that provides medals to young people across the country for their public service, for their volunteerism. I can see when they come to Washington the excitement and the future of this Nation.

I truly believe that the future of this Nation is in energy independence. Economic growth, national security, expanding opportunities, and diversifying the energy sector workforce are critical issues we must invest our time and talent in.

Across America, colleges, community colleges, high schools, and middle schools are talking about science, technology, engineering, and math. We are trying to introduce our children to the wonders of science, technology, engineering, and math.

I do it by introducing my young people to NASA, NASA Johnson, inviting them down to the space center and watching their eyes open in amazement, or my annual Toys for the Kids effort, a big Christmas party, and the most popular entity is the astronaut and the space exhibit. So I know it is in our children.

My amendment is consistent with the administration's commitment to promoting our national economic and homeland security interests and empowering our youth. It asks the Secretaries of the Energy and Commerce Departments to develop a challenge so that our young people can compete with their ideas about the energy challenges of America.

It is a good approach to getting ideas to those of us who are policymakers or maybe even to the world of the energy industry, from those in Silicon Valley—and when I say that, dealing with high tech—to the hard-nosed energy in our Midwest, and certainly down to Houston, Texas, where we are dealing with LNG, natural gas, and oil and looking for new ways to produce that product in a safe and environmentally secure way.

I think this competition will bring forth new ideas, excited young people, maybe starting from elementary or middle school, certainly working with young people in high school and rewarding them for their talent.

Mr. Chairman, this is a number of pictures from my district. One exhibits a community garden but really is teaching young people about soil and the idea of how you raise trees and dealing with the science of farming. Then you have them also dealing with a drone, knowing the technology of that and using it in a good way.

I have faith in America's youth, and I believe that this amendment will help us bring to the forefront their talent and bright new ideas to make this Nation the kind of strong and powerful nation that we know it is but, more importantly, using the genius of our youth to face the 21st century energy challenges.

I ask my colleagues to support my amendment.

Mr. Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

It is listed in the Committee Report as Jackson Lee #35.

Let me express my appreciation to Chairman UPTON and Ranking Member PALLONE for their leadership and commitment to American energy infrastructure development, security, independence and economic growth.

I also wish to thank Chairman SESSIONS, Ranking Member SLAUGHTER, and the members of the Rules Committee for making in order Jackson Lee Amendment #35.

Mr. Chair, thank you for the opportunity to explain my amendment, which provides:

YOUTH ENERGY ENTERPRISE COMPETITION

The Secretaries of Energy and Commerce shall jointly establish an energy enterprise competition to encourage youth to propose solutions to the energy challenges of the United States and to promote youth interest in careers in science, technology, engineering, and math, especially, as those fields relate to energy.

Mr. Chair, American energy independence, economic growth, national security, and expanding opportunities and diversifying the energy sector workforce are critical issues we must invest our time and talent in.

But we can diversify the energy sector only if we encourage our youth to be interested in energy related fields, which will position our nation as the leader in the 21st century.

H.R. 8 seeks to continue to modernize energy infrastructure, help our nation build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, promote energy efficiency and government accountability.

As the Member of Congress from Houston, the energy capital of the nation, I am always looking to support energy policies that not only make our nation more energy independent and create jobs but one that also invests in the future of America: our youth.

According to the Department of Education, 16 percent of American high school seniors are proficient in math and interested in a STEM career.

We need to improve on getting more youth interested in and excited about careers in STEM.

My Amendment seeks to inspire youth and create opportunities for youth to become excited about careers in the energy industry and to pursue energy related educational degrees in the STEM industry.

The Administration and our nation as a whole must remain committed to inspiring, educating and equipping the next generation of Googles, Amazons, Twitters and Facebooks of the energy sector.

In today's world, one only need look at all the technology we need to get by in our day to day dealings to understand the impact of STEM on our lives.

Toddlers now have hand-held tablets to watch their cartoons such as Pepper the Pig and Thomas the Train, owing to innovation in technology and exposure to technology.

Similarly, in the science, technology, engineering and math fields as it relates to energy, young people can be the solution to some of the challenges faced by our nation, but only through preparedness.

Indeed, educating our youth in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (STEM) fields is central to U.S. economic competitiveness and growth.

According to a PEW Research Report, countries like Hong Kong, Singapore and Taiwan are leading the way in the globe in educating and preparing their youth in STEM.

My Amendment seeks to propel U.S. youth so that they surpass their peers in the global community.

Specifically, this Amendment directs the Secretaries of Energy and Commerce to jointly establish an energy enterprise competition to encourage youth to propose solutions to the energy challenges of the United States and to promote youth interest in careers in science, technology, engineering, and math, especially as those fields relate to energy.

We need to prepare tomorrow's leaders for the competitive world of energy independence, security and infrastructure building.

Part of our long-term strategy ought to be to stimulate and promote innovation among young people to meet tomorrow's sure demand for adequate supply of a qualified workforce in the STEM fields, specifically as it relates to energy.

Mr. Chair, my Amendment will create the space and nurture the platform to develop our young people's ability to think deeply about the energy challenges of our nation and the role they can play in coming up with solutions.

A youth energy enterprise competition can be the breeding ground for future innovators, educators, researchers, and leaders in the energy sector who can solve the most pressing challenges facing our nation and our world, both today and tomorrow.

For all these reasons, I urge my colleagues to join me and support Jackson Lee Amendment #35.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. But there is no way I could oppose this amendment, let me just say from the beginning.

This amendment directs the Secretaries of Energy and Commerce to jointly establish an energy enterprise competition to promote youth interest in careers in science, technology, engineering, and math, especially as those fields related to energy.

I heard from one of my heroes today, Dean Kamen, probably the best inventor of our time. He has, on his own, started just a wonderful program employing hundreds of thousands of youth all around the country, all around the world, a competition called FIRST Robotics, to really get high school and middle school students invested in looking at the science of so many different things in competitions that I participated in.

My Governor, Rick Snyder, who was in town tonight, was honored as I think the number one guy in the Nation earlier this year in Michigan. We are going to have the national competition in Detroit, I want to say, in 2 years. But I have been at the regional competition for this, and where kids and mentors and companies are invested, this is the future of science in so many different things.

This is a great amendment. I would urge all my colleagues to vote for it. I know that, as I look at my friendship with Dean Kamen, he will probably never talk to me again if I oppose the amendment. It is a great amendment. It should have been done as part of our committee mark.

I look forward to working with the Education committees and appropriators to make sure that it is funded. It is a good thing. I would urge all my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan. I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank my colleague from Texas for coming up with such a great program for young people. Listening to her and her sense of optimism about the future, I think that is what we need to encourage with our young people. I was so pleased to see that the chairman of our committee also supports it.

I would like to lend my support and urge the amendment's adoption.

Ms. JACKSON LEE. If I may, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank Mr. UPTON for his enthusiasm.

Dean Kamen is a hero of all of us. As I said, the greatest joy that I have seen in my young people when I invite them out is going to NASA Johnson out in Houston and, as well, when I bring the astronauts either to their schools or, more importantly, when NASA goes out to the schools. But when I have this big Christmas party, Santa Claus comes, but I will tell you that the astronauts are enormously popular.

I want to thank Mr. PALLONE, as well, for being committed to the energy and the dreaming and the inspiration and talent of our young people. That is what this amendment is about. I hope we can work together to find the funding but, more importantly, to get our young people engaged. I think they will have a lot of answers.

I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 36 OFFERED BY MS. MENG

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 36 printed in House Report 114–359.

Ms. MENG. Mr. Chair, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE ___—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. _____. MODERNIZATION OF TERMS RELATING TO MINORITIES.

(a) OFFICE OF MINORITY ECONOMIC IMPACT.—Section 211(f)(1) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7141(f)(1)) is amended by striking ''a Negro, Puerto Rican, American Indian, Eskimo, Oriental, or Aleut or is a Spanish speaking individual of Spanish descent'' and inserting ''Asian American, African American, Hispanic, Puerto Rican, Native American, or an Alaska Native''.

(b) MINORITY BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.—Section 106(f)(2) of the Local Public Works Capital Development and Investment Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6705(f)(2)) is amended by striking ''Negroes, Spanish-speaking, Orientals, Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts'' and inserting ''Asian American, African American, Hispanic, Native American, or Alaska Natives''.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. MENG) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. MENG. Mr. Chair, this bipartisan amendment is simple. It seeks to strike the term ''Oriental'' from Federal law in the last two remaining instances it is used to refer to a person within the Federal law.

I thank my colleague and my friend, Chairman ROYCE, for cosponsoring this amendment with me.

Mr. Chair, in the same way, I would not want either of my children to be referred to as ''Oriental'' by their teacher at school, I hope we can all agree that the term ''Oriental'' no longer deserves a place in Federal law.

Toward that end, this amendment strikes the offensive term from 42 U.S.C. 7141 and 42 U.S.C. 6705, two sections of Federal law written in the 1970s that fall under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Congress once found it appropriate to pass laws such as the Chinese Exclusion Act and the Geary Act, but we also found it appropriate to repeal them. Times change. What is acceptable changes, and this Congress more often than not yields to that change.

Mr. Chair, I call on my colleagues to join me in striking the legal use of outdated terms that many in the community would find offensive. I thank the Committee on Rules for making this amendment in order. I thank the chairman for allowing me time to speak on what is an important issue to my district, and I thank, again, Mr. ROYCE for his support and his cosponsorship of this amendment.

I urge support for the amendment.

Mr. Chair, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition, but again, I strongly support this amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chair, I am delighted that Ms. MENG brought this to our attention. Mr. ROYCE is a very dear friend. I know we all share the same thoughts. I also want to just thank PETE SESSIONS, chairman of the Committee on Rules, for making this amendment in order. I would urge all my colleagues to support the amendment and appreciate it being offered tonight.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. MENG. Mr. Chair, I thank the gentleman for his kind words.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Chair, I rise today to speak in support of the amendment to H.R. 8 introduced by my colleague, the Gentlewoman from New York, Representative MENG.

Racism and discrimination has no place in America today. We are a nation of immigrants that is proud of its diversity.

And when we get the chance, we should correct the mistakes of the past. That is what this amendment is about. The Federal Code still contains language on ethnicity that is antiquated and inappropriate. Our society has progressed a great deal in the last 100 years. It is time for us to do the same to our Federal Code.

This amendment eliminates outdated, disrespectful terms from federal law and replaces them with terms, such as ''Asian American,'' ''Alaska Natives,'' and ''Hispanic,'' that are more appropriate for our times and in keeping with our values.

Deleting inappropriate terms from usage in the U.S. Code is a simple means of demonstrating respect for our nation's diversity, and it will have no effect on the underlying federal laws.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. MENG).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 37 OFFERED BY MR. PALLONE

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 37 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 7001. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall not take effect until the Energy Information Administration has analyzed and published a report on the carbon impacts of the provisions of this Act.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, despite original efforts to pass a bipartisan bill to address some of our energy infrastructure needs, H.R. 8 has become an attempt by the Republican Party to create backward-facing legislation that replaces many good provisions with legislation that would continue to reward polluters and contribute to our climate change issue.

□ 2030

In yesterday's debate on the CRAs, we heard time and again that climate change is not a priority for Republicans because they are more concerned with the economy and jobs.

Unlike the rhetoric that they would have us believe, a good economy and sound environmental policies are not mutually exclusive. We have actually experienced a boost in the economy under the Clean Air Act.

However, climate change is having a real effect on our communities, from more frequent extreme weather events, like Hurricane Sandy, to the extreme drought in California, to the floods experienced in Florida. The emotional and economic tolls of these events have been great and will continue to increase the longer this Congress ignores these pressing issues.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot continue to ignore climate change and disseminate misinformation. We are putting ourselves on a track towards irreparable damage.

Climate change and energy are inexorably linked. Each are a facet of the other. Energy is the source of 84 percent of U.S. greenhouse gas emissions, and any energy bill has a large impact on the direction of energy investment.

To that end, it is critical that legislation that is focused on developing U.S. energy policy move the country on the right path by helping to reduce carbon pollution, not to increase it. It is imperative that U.S. energy policy promote clean forms of energy and help make all energy use more efficient.

A necessary step to understanding its potential impact on emissions is to have the energy bill scored before it is enacted, and my amendment would do just that. The energy bill would be submitted to the Energy Information Administration, who would determine the overall short- and long-term impacts of the bill on U.S. greenhouse gas emissions: the Climate Pollution Score. The bill should not be enacted until such an analysis is complete.

Mr. Chairman, we know that the higher levels of greenhouse gases will continue to perturb our climate and impact public health. The responsible choice is to ensure that we are not contributing to the problem.

As Members of this Congress, it is our responsibility to protect the interests of Americans, which includes protecting Americans from the devastating effects of climate change while we still can. This amendment will allow us to do just that by giving us necessary information to analyze the effects of this legislation.

So I strongly urge my colleagues to vote to protect Americans by voting for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition.

The Acting CHAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. This amendment, as properly stated, would provide that the bill should not take effect until the Energy Information Administration has done a study and prepared a report on the carbon impacts of the provision.

So, in essence, it would delay implementation of the bill indefinitely. And we believe that that would be a diversion, as the focus of this bill is to modernize our energy infrastructure and ensure access to affordable, reliable energy in a strong economy as fast as we can.

An economy based on reliable, affordable energy provides the means for the prosperity for future generations and the economic strength to respond and adapt to future challenges. It is particularly true when it comes to risks of climate change, whether natural or man-influenced.

The bill promotes technological innovation; the development of resilient, efficient energy infrastructure; and a strong economy to withstand climate events, regardless of the causes. Delaying the measures in this bill denies the public a direct path to a stronger, more resilient energy infrastructure and greater economic growth.

Because of those reasons, I would urge my colleagues to vote against my friend's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The score that I am asking for that would be done by the Energy Information Administration would not indefinitely delay the bill. They have the ability to do the scoring.

This is an independent agency within the Energy Department that was created on a bipartisan basis. It is nonpartisan. It collects energy data for the United States. And once the score was attributed, the bill could move forward.

But the point is we need to know what the impact is going to be on the environment, on air pollution, and on climate change.

I think that my concern, of course, is that this legislation was scored negatively, and that is the reason why I think we need to have a score. It is certainly not going to delay the bill indefinitely, as was suggested by the chairman.

I urge a vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey will be postponed.

AMENDMENT NO. 38 OFFERED BY MR. NORCROSS

The Acting CHAIR. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 38 printed in House Report 114–359.

Mr. NORCROSS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Acting CHAIR. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of title III, add the following new section:

SEC. 3007. REPORT ON SMART METER SECURITY CONCERNS.

Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall transmit to Congress a report on the weaknesses in currently available smart meters' security architecture and features, including an absence of event logging, as described in the Government Accountability Office testimony entitled ''Critical Infrastructure Protection: Cybersecurity of the Nation's Electricity Grid Requires Continued Attention'' on October 21, 2015.

The Acting CHAIR. Pursuant to House Resolution 542, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. NORCROSS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. NORCROSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First of all, I appreciate the chairman and ranking member bringing this bill to us.

As we know and the title indicates, this is about energy security. Well, my amendment is very simple and direct. We are urging and specifically directing that the Secretary of Energy study the potential cybersecurity weakness in smart meters and to report back on this in 1 year.

So the first question is: What is a smart meter? For the consumer, it is that little box outside your air conditioner or by the panel. It provides savings to the consumer, and to the utility provider, it is about providing that secure, reliable electricity at a competitive price.

But these meters were designed back before the world as we know it today. Now we have to think of things very differently and think of them before they happen.

So what are the risks? A GAO official revealed the vulnerability in these smart meters. There are approximately 40 million to 50 million of these meters that are already installed in hospitals, churches, homes, and in industry that could potentially be a target for hackers. That is why we should be concerned.

The CIA report spoke about that malicious activity against IT systems and power systems overseas. Our society has become so reliant on the very electricity that we are standing under today that those who would do damage to our country might have a vulnerability here. And we need to act before they do. This is why I bring this amendment forward.

I started out as an electrician many years ago, so I understand the power side of it. I sit on the Emerging Threats Subcommittee. I hear those threats each and every day. We have to make sure that we keep our homes, our businesses, and, most importantly, our military safe.

We are talking about damaged equipment and potentially massive blackouts, not just like the ones we had in New York almost a decade ago but potentially taking down our entire grid.

Smart meters are now part of the fabric of what we do day in and day out. This amendment very carefully identifies those vulnerabilities. I would urge members to support this.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition, but I support the amendment.

The Acting CHAIR. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. This is the second smart amendment that is part of this. Both are good. We adopted the Grayson amendment a little while ago. It was a good amendment.

This amendment directs the Secretary of Energy to study weaknesses in the security architecture of certain smart meters currently available and promulgate regulations to mitigate those weaknesses.

We want every home to be safe, absolutely. We need to take all those steps, whether it be people's individual billing, whatever it might be. It is a good amendment. As I told Mr. GRAYSON, it is brilliant, smart.

I appreciate the gentleman's amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NORCROSS. I certainly appreciate the support. This is just one of many items that we have to look forward to before those who want to do us harm. So I appreciate it, and I urge the passing of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIR. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. NORCROSS).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN) having assumed the chair, Mr. WOODALL, Acting Chair of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8) to modernize energy infrastructure, build a 21st century energy and manufacturing workforce, bolster America's energy security and diplomacy, and promote energy efficiency and government accountability, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SYRIAN REFUGEES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODALL). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2015, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. GOHMERT. Mr. Speaker, although there are apparently those in the media that think it is fun to belittle people who express their great sympathy, thoughts, and prayers for the victims and their families out in San Bernardino, California, right now, those of us who care do extend our thoughts and prayers for those people.

We don't know quite yet who the perpetrators were. I think this is important, as we have been talking about Syrian refugees quite a bit the last few weeks, and the President's intention to bring Syrian refugees into this country.

Our friend, Senator JEFF SESSIONS, provided a list of 12 vetted refugees from areas where we actually had material, where we had information. Unlike the Syrian refugees, the FBI and Homeland Security felt they had plenty of information to vet these individuals, did vet them, thoroughly checked them out, and then brought them into the country.

This article from Neil Munro is dated November 24, 2015. He mentions:

''Senator Jeff Sessions is out with a list of 12 vetted refugees who quickly joined jihad plots to attack the United States.

''He's spotlighting the refugees-turned-jihadis because he's trying to prod GOP leaders into halting Congress' normal practice of giving the President huge leeway to import foreign migrants and refugees into the United States.''

It goes on: ''Obama says the new refugees will be vetted. But top security officials say the Syrians can't be vetted because the U.S. doesn't know what they were doing in Syria before they applied for refugee status.''

□ 2045

The article goes on:

''Besides, many of the jihad attempts in the United States are launched by the children of Muslim refugees and migrants. That list include the two Chechen brothers who bombed the Boston Marathon, and Anwar al-Awlaki who was killed by a U.S. missile strike when he fled to Yemen after the 9/11 atrocity. That means the Americans' federal government is actively importing national-security problems that will eventually cost billions of dollars to manage, but cannot be eliminated.''

And this list only covers 2015. There may be many more from 2015. There are certainly many more from prior years.

But here are just some of the individuals that this administration completely vetted, made sure they were not a threat to the United States and our people, and, yet, brought them in only to find they were and are terrorists.

On January 29, 2015, in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, a Federal warrant was unsealed for the arrest of Liban Haji Mohamed—a native of Somalia who sources indicate came to the United States as a refugee, adjusted to lawful permanent resident status, and subsequently and applied for and received citizenship.

''Mohamed is believed to have left the U.S. on July 5, 2012, with the intent to join Al-Shabaab in East Africa. Mohamed previously lived in the metro D.C. area and worked as a cab driver, and is believed to have snuck across the border to Mexico after being placed on the no-fly list. Carl Ghattas, Special Agent in Charge of the FBI's Washington, D.C. Field Office, emphasized the importance of locating Mohamed: 'Because he has knowledge of the Washington, D.C., area's infrastructure such as shopping areas, Metro, airports, and government buildings, this makes him an asset to his terrorist associates who might plot attacks on U.S. soil.' '' One refugee.

Second refugee: On February 5, 2015, a native of Somalia came to the United States as a refugee. And this was done under the Bush administration. Abdinassir Mohamud Ibrahim came at the age of 22, in 2007, and then was later adjusted to lawful permanent resident status.

But, on February 5, he was sentenced to 15 years in federal prison for conspiring to provide material support to Al-Shabaab, a designated foreign terrorist organization. He lied on his application for citizenship, lied on his request for refugee status, and falsely claimed—these are what he was convicted of and charged with—falsely claiming that he was a member of the minority Awer clan in Somalia and subject to persecution by the majority Hawiye clan. However, Ibrahim was actually a member of the clan that was the persecutor and not the persecuted. That was Mr. Abdinassir Mohamud Ibrahim.

Also, in Missouri, Abdullah Ramo Pazara, a native of Bosnia, came to the United States as a refugee, completely vetted, adjusted to lawful permanent resident status, was made a citizen in 2013, 5 years into the President's administration.

He has been named in an indictment with five other individuals as a terrorist. He is thought to be dead, but the others listed provided material support to Pazara who allegedly left the United States to go to Syria and fight with ISIS just 11 days after becoming a U.S. citizen.

Then there is also Ramiz Zijad Hodzic. A native of Bosnia, he is a purported Bosnian war hero who came to the United States as a refugee. He is charged with conspiring to provide material support and resources to terrorists and providing material support to terrorists.

You also have this year Sedina Unkic Hodzic, wife of Ramiz Zijad Hodzic, also a native of Bosnia. She came to the U.S. as a refugee. She is charged this year with conspiring to provide material support and resources to terrorists and providing support to terrorists.

Then you have Armin Harcevic. He came to the United States as a refugee from Bosnia and subsequently had that adjusted to lawful permanent resident status. He is charged with providing material support to terrorists. He collected money from third parties and wired it and his own funds to terrorists.

Then you also have Nihad Rosic, a native of Bosnia, who sources indicate came to the United States as a refugee. He applied for and was granted citizenship and has been charged with conspiring to provide material support and actually providing material support to terrorists.

He is a truck driver and a former mixed martial arts fighter. He previously had been charged with endangering the welfare of a child after punching a woman in the face while she held a child. In a separate incident, he was charged with assault after allegedly beating his girlfriend. But, apparently, nothing came of those charges until he was charged with supporting terrorism.

Mediha Medy Salkicevic, a native of Bosnia, came to the United States as a refugee, applied for and was granted citizenship, was also charged with conspiring to provide material support and resources to terrorists and providing that support to terrorists.

Salkicevic was formerly an employee with a cargo company that deals with items coming in and out of Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, another refugee alleged by this administration to now be a terrorist.

Jasminka Ramic, a native of Bosnia, came as a refugee, applied for and was made a citizen, was charged with conspiring to provide material support and resources to terrorists and providing that support to terrorists by this administration.

You have got Abdurahman Yasin Daud, born in a refugee camp in Kenya. He came to the United States as a refugee when he was a child and was subsequently adjusted to a lawful permanent resident, has been charged with conspiracy to attempt to provide material support to ISIS. He and another individual are alleged to have driven from Minnesota to San Diego to attempt to get passports, cross the border in Mexico, and fly to Syria.

Also, this year you have Guled Ali Omar, born in a Kenyan refugee camp. He came to the United States as a refugee. The United States gave him citizenship. This administration has charged him with conspiracy and attempting to provide material support to ISIS.

Another one of his brothers, Mohamed Ali Omar, was convicted in March of threatening Federal agents when they came to the residence to interview Guled Omar.

The U.S. Attorney for the District of Minnesota said that Omar ''never stopped plotting'' and had previously attempted to leave the United States, another one of the refugees turned U.S. citizen, all the while, at least part of the time, a terrorist.

And then also this year, in August, a native of Uzbekistan, Fazliddin Kurbanov, came as a refugee in 2009, was found guilty on charges he conspired and attempted to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization and possessed an unregistered destructive device.

U.S. Assistant Attorney General John Carlin stated that he conspired to provide material support to the Islamic movement of Uzbekistan and procured bomb-making materials in the interest of perpetrating a terrorist attack on American soil.

According to press reports, Kurbanov began his life as a Muslim, supposedly faced persecution when his family converted to Christianity and came to the United States with his family as a refugee, and, as it turned out, he is Islamic and radicalized.

So it is interesting. This administration assures us we have nothing to fear, nothing to be concerned about. I am not afraid, but I am concerned about the oath that every one of us take.

We are supposed to provide for the common defense in this country. It is an obligation we have. I think it is the most important obligation we have. We are supposed to protect the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

As Andrew McCarthy pointed out this past week in one of his articles on National Review Online, it should be important not merely to check to see if we have any information about an individual wanting to come here as a refugee or gaining a visa, however they intend to come, illegally, as millions have, more are every day.

It would be important to ask not simply is this person a terrorist right now, but it would also be important to ask: Are you one of the two-thirds or so that have been reported to be in the United States or wanting to come into the United States as a Muslim who believes that Shari'ah law should replace the Constitution?

Because, if those reports are accurate, that two-thirds of the Muslims here believe Shari'ah should replace the Constitution, and they are immigrants and they become citizens, then it means that they absolutely perjured themselves in their oath.

That should be grounds for revoking their citizenship. And if it can't be used as such, we need to make sure it is used as such by what we do here in Congress.

In the meantime, we have heard Ben Rhodes and so many others say: Oh, yeah. No. The FBI, Homeland Security, are going to be able to vet everybody really well.

FBI Director Comey has made clear publicly—regardless of what he said privately, that does not change anything he said publicly. Publicly he has made clear: Yeah. We will vet them. But when you tell us their names, we have nothing to either verify or disprove what they have said.

We have got nothing. We don't have any records from Syria. We don't know if they are even from Syria. We don't know. We don't have the information to vet them.

FBI had more information to vet people coming from Iraq, and we know that they missed a couple of terrorists that were in Kentucky that were allowed in. I think it was 2009. And it turns out they just missed that their fingerprints—at least one of them—was on an IED in Iraq. The guy is a terrorist.

□ 2100

So despite what this administration tries to assuage, the borders are open. We have Syrian refugees that the President is bringing into the United States, even when Governors say: We understand you can't vet these people, so you are not bringing them into our States.

I see this afternoon that the Governor of my State, Greg Abbott, has sued the administration because the administration has made clear: We don't care what you think, we don't care that you are Governor of your State, and we don't care about the 10th Amendment. We say we are putting Syrian refugees in Texas, and there is nothing you can do about that.

Mr. Speaker, that kind of reminds me of the kind of things that King George and his bureaucrats used to say before the Revolution. When King George decided he would put his British soldiers anywhere he wanted to and there was nothing the people here could do about it, he would put them in their houses. He didn't care what it did to their property values. He didn't care anything about that. We don't need a revolution. We just need to have Congress hold the President accountable for his administration's lawlessness.

Mr. Speaker, the President has got to secure our borders. He is putting American lives at risk every day. He is putting American lives further at risk since we know now we routinely have people that are completely vetted by the FBI, Homeland Security, and it turns out they are terrorists. The Tsarnaev brothers, even after Russia warned the CIA and the FBI that this guy, this older brother, has been radicalized, the FBI talked to him. He said: I am not radicalized. It is not his exact words. You talk to his mother, she said: No, he is a good boy. And then he went and killed people at the Boston Marathon with his brother.

If we can't even stop people when we are alerted that they are terrorists, how in the world does this President and this administration think they are going to keep the American people safe?

The report here, December 1, Tom LoBianco with CNN, said: ''President Barack Obama's former top military intelligence official said Tuesday that the White House ignored reports prefacing the rise of ISIS in 2011 and 2012 because they did not fit their reelection 'narrative.'

'''I think they did not meet a narrative the White House needed. And I'll be very candid with you, they just didn't,' retired Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn, the former head of the Defense Intelligence Agency . . . 'I think the narrative was that al Qaeda was on the run, and Osama bin Laden was dead . . . they're dead and these guys are, we've beaten them,' Flynn said, but the problem was that despite how many terrorist leaders they killed they 'continue to just multiply.'

''Obama has been criticized by opponents for referring to ISIS as the 'JV squad' and apparently underestimating the group's threat.''

Well, Mr. Speaker, since we know the President has underestimated ISIS as a threat, clearly underestimated them, and there is no clear strategy to deal with them, what makes us think that this administration is going to do a better job of vetting potential terrorists coming into this country and underestimating them the way they have so many other refugees that have been brought into the country?

Another article from Jim Hoft, December 2, 2015, quoting the President: ''Yes. He really said this.

'''You go down to Miami and when it's flooding in high tide on a sunny day, the fish are swimming through the middle of the streets.'''

The Wall Street Journal reported the same thing, the same quote. But The Wall Street Journal reported: ''We go down to Miami with some frequency and have never seen any such thing. And believe us, we know how to troll.''

But the President can find fish in the streets of Miami that nobody else seems to see, but he can't seem to notice how wide open our border is, what a threat to our security it is, and what a threat refugees are who we cannot determine who they are, where they came from, what they did, if they kill people, if they are terrorists. He didn't see any of that.

There was a report from today, 4:20 actually, from Adam Kredo from freebeacon.com: ''More than 179,000 illegal immigrants convicted of committing crimes, including violent ones, continue to roam free across the United States, with reports indicating that these illegal immigrants commit new crimes 'every day,' according to lawmakers and the director of the Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency, also known as ICE.

''Sarah Saldana, ICE's director, disclosed to Congress on Wednesday that the agency is apprehending and removing fewer illegal immigrants than in past years.

''Somewhere around 179,029 'undocumented criminals with final orders of removal' from the United States currently remain at large across the country and are essentially untraceable, according to Sen. Chuck Grassley, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who disclosed these numbers during a Wednesday hearing.

''The total number of criminal illegal immigrants in the United States is in the millions.

''Illegal immigrant criminals are known to be committing new crimes 'every day,' according to Sen. Jeff Sessions, another member of the committee.

''Focus on the threat of criminal illegal aliens comes amid a wider national debate on immigration to the United States and the threat posed by potential terrorists and other criminals.

''The Washington Free Beacon disclosed in August that the Obama administration had been keeping secret the release of violent criminal illegal immigrants and only began notifying local law enforcement agencies about this within the last several months.

''The administration is continuing a policy of hiding information about this issue, as ''several administration officials informed the committee they were unable to testify because the hearing wasn't 'in response to a particular crisis,'' Grassley said.

''Saldana revealed at the hearing that somewhere between 30,000 and 40,000 illegal immigrants previously convicted of crimes have been released from custody in recent years due to legal restrictions on how long the agency can detain an individual.''

Here is a quote from Saldana. She said: '''Whether it's a result of protracted appeals or refusal of a country to accept its nationals back, this decision accounts for somewhere between 30,000 and 40,000 convicted criminal alien releases in recent years,' . . . noting that the number has dropped over time.

''Lawmakers remain concerned that the Obama administration is dragging its feet when it comes to taking action to deport criminal illegal immigrants. While President Obama has vowed that this would be a priority for his administration, these criminals continue to be released into the United States.

'''Many criminals remain in our communities,' Grassley said. 'When will enough be enough? Even those with violent criminal histories aren't being removed as promised . . . American citizens are paying the price while law enforcement officers are instructed to look the other way.'

''There have been 'thousands of victims' of crimes committed by illegal immigrants and 'many of the agency's own officers are unable to do the job they signed up to do,' Grassley said.

''The Obama administration is removing fewer total illegal immigrants from the United States than it was just a few years ago, according to Senator Sessions.

'''Not only are total removals down, but the number of removals of criminal aliens from the interior of the United States, the so-called priority, has decreased significantly,' he said. 'The reason for this decrease is not because there are fewer criminal aliens in the U.S. today than just a few years ago, there are hundreds of thousands of known criminal aliens in the United States.'

'''New crimes are committed every day by criminal aliens, so while we're not seeing a decrease in crimes committed across this country, we are seeing a decrease in removals of criminal aliens,' Sessions said.

''This cannot be blamed on a lack of financial resources, Sessions said, as Congress has increased funding. Still, deportations have plummeted and the administration is 'doing substantially less with substantially more.'

'''Our goal should be to keep 100 percent of all criminal aliens out of the United States. . . . There's nothing wrong or controversial about such a policy.'

''Saldana confirmed that 'overall apprehensions on the border are declining' and the agency's 'removal numbers are lower than they have been in recent years.'

''However, she maintained that the administration is removing 'at a greater proportion' dangerous criminals.

''Of the 235,000 deportations, 59 percent of them were convicted criminals, according to Saldana . . . Yet she said, 'there are also times when despite our best efforts' criminal illegal immigrants 'get released from our custody.'''

An article today from Dianne Solis, Tom Benning, and Brandi Grissom:

''The State of Texas is suing the federal government and the International Rescue Committee, after the New York-based aid agency announced plans to resettle Syrian refugees in Dallas later this week over the strong and repeated objections of Gov. Greg Abbott.

''The State Health and Human Services Commission, filed on Wednesday the suit in U.S. District Court, saying those groups worked to resettle 'refugees in Texas without consulting with Texas or working in close cooperation with the Commission.'

''The agency, citing 'reasonable concerns about the safety and security of the citizenry of the State of Texas' is seeking a temporary retraining order.

'''We have been working diligently with the International Rescue Committee to find a solution that ensures the safety and security for all Texans, but we have reached an impasse and will now let the courts decide.'''

That is Health and Human Services spokesman Bryan Black.

Tonight at 6:30, I got this article from Tanya Somanader, President Obama on the shooting in San Bernardino. Here is the transcript of the President's comments. This is in an interview with CBS that President Obama spoke about the ongoing situation in California—going on right now—and the unacceptable pattern of mass shootings the U.S. is facing.

Mr. Speaker, let me just parenthetically insert before reading his quote, we don't know who these shooters are yet. We don't know. We don't know their reason for doing what they did. I mean, some on the left have already tried to report that it was right by a Planned Parenthood facility when that was a mile away, trying to do whatever they can to try to avert responsibility—any responsibility—that the administration has. We have seen Kathryn's Law come about because Kathryn was shot in California in a sanctuary city that protected people who were illegally in this country and criminals like the one that shot Kathryn. And this administration protects sanctuary cities and lets them continue to just ignore Federal law. The lawlessness of this administration seems to know no bounds. If lawlessness breeds lawlessness, then the lawlessness of this administration has put this country in severe jeopardy.

□ 2115

But here is what the President said, part of his quote from this evening, about the shooting in California. And I am quoting the President.

''And for those who are concerned about terrorism, some may be aware of the fact that we have a no-fly list where people can't get on planes, but those same people who we don't allow to fly could go into a store right now in the United States and buy a firearm, and there's nothing that we can do to stop them. That's a law that needs to be changed.''

The President, the entire time he has been in office, has tried to subvert the Second Amendment to our United States Constitution and our Bill of Rights. He has tried every which way he can, whether using Social Security laws or all kinds of ways, to take away Americans' Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms.

As we see that the administration has been knowingly allowing criminals into this country illegally and allowing refugees to come into this country that were terrorists and even finding out, getting word that there were people who have become terrorists and not taking action to stop the death that followed, how dare anyone allow people to come into the United States illegally, knowing that there are some criminals coming in with people that are coming in illegally, knowing that there are criminals in the United States that this administration has allowed to be released after they have committed crimes.

And then coming to the point now today where he says, you American citizens are going to have to give up your Second Amendment rights to keep and bear arms because I have allowed so many people who are terrorists in here and we don't want terrorists to get guns. That is an outrage. It should not be allowed to stand against any kind of legitimate reasoning.

You can't bring people into this country that are a threat to the country and then, because all these people are here and they might get a gun, you are going to keep law-abiding people from getting guns. That is wrong, and it has to be stopped.

I hope and pray our Congress will stand up and stop the lawlessness and say, we are not letting you bring more refugees into this country that will have some terrorists within their group, as you have already done, and then tell us we have to give up our constitutional rights because you brought terrorists into the country that may want to go buy a gun. Shame on you.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN). Members are advised to avoid engaging in personalities toward the President.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

SENATE—Wednesday, December 2, 2015

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. HATCH).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O Lord, our God, merciful and holy, clear away from our lives anything that would hinder Your providential purposes.

Enter the hearts of our Senators, guiding them with Your truth. May Your truth fill them with hope and faith even when they seem surrounded by exasperating experiences. Supply them with what they need to persist and endure in spite of obstacles. Lord, provide them with creative thoughts and energy to accomplish Your will on Earth, even as it is done in Heaven. Give them the integrity to say what they mean and mean what they say.

We pray in Your great Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The President pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). The majority leader is recognized.

OBAMACARE

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, ObamaCare is a direct attack on the middle class of our country. It is a partisan law that puts ideology before people, that hurts many of the very Americans it was supposed to help. It resulted in millions of cancellation notices for hard-working Americans who had plans they liked and who had done nothing wrong. It raised premiums, it raised copays, and it raised deductibles and taxes for Americans who were already struggling. It restricted choice and access to doctors and hospitals for patients in need.

We see the pain and the hurt of this law all across the country. We see it where we live. In my home State of Kentucky, health costs have spiked. ObamaCare first caused tens of thousands of Kentuckians to lose the health care plans they were promised they could keep during the first year of implementation, then victimized 50,000 more when the Commonwealth's much-vaunted ObamaCare co-op completely collapsed. ObamaCare has also contributed to Kentucky hospitals being forced to cut jobs, reduce wages, and even shut down altogether.

Some in Washington may have cheered when a Democratic administration in Frankfort poured one-quarter of a billion dollars of tax money into Kentucky's ObamaCare exchange or when our Democratic Governor confidently declared it an ''undisputed fact''—this is what he said: an ''undisputed fact''—that ObamaCare's Medicare expansion had added 12,000 jobs to Kentucky's economy. But like so much of ObamaCare, it was just another broken promise. Those jobs numbers were not an undisputed fact at all; they were just projections, and they failed to ever materialize. Health care jobs have actually declined in Kentucky. They did not go up; they declined.

Today, few of those ObamaCare cheerleaders are cheering anymore. Nearly 80 percent of Kentucky's enrollees were simply shoehorned into an already-broken Medicaid system, and many of the remaining 20 percent found themselves stuck with unaffordable ObamaCare coverage.

Listen to what this mom from Breckinridge County wrote to say:

My family is being pushed out of the middle class by the Obamacare law. How can we pay almost $1,200 a month on health insurance?

Listen to what this father of two boys from Owensboro wrote to tell me:

Before the Affordable Care Act, we paid around $100 bi-weekly for the family plan. That has now increased to $235 during the same timeframe. It seems these days there is no incentive to work. We are punished for working hard and trying to provide for our children while others are encouraged to not further themselves because if they do they would be in our particular situation. What happened to being rewarded for working hard in America? What happened to the American dream?

This Kentucky dad is not the only one wondering this; Americans across the country continue to demand a better way forward. Americans made that clear last November. Kentuckians made that doubly clear again last month.

This is simply the reality. Democrats cannot deny it. They cannot deny it. They can try to deny it. Democrats can again dismiss Americans' real-life experience as lies. Democrats can continue to lecture Americans about their supposed inability to understand just how great ObamaCare has been for them. But Americans are intimately familiar with the painful reality of ObamaCare.

Americans want a fresh start. Americans want to see Washington build a bridge away from ObamaCare and toward better care for them. That is what the bill before us would do. It is something every Senator should support, Republicans and Democrats alike. Democrats may have forced this law on the middle class. Democrats may own the pain they have caused across the country, especially in States like Kentucky. But it is not too late for our Democratic colleagues to work with us to build a bridge to better care. This is their chance and President Obama's chance to begin to make amends for the pain and the hurt they have caused.

For all of the broken promises, for all of the higher costs, for all of the failures, this is America's chance to turn the page and write a new and more hopeful beginning. This is our chance to work toward a healthier and more prosperous future, with true reform that moves beyond the failures of a broken law.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE NEW CONGRESS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, on another matter, in the past few days I have noted some of the achievements of a new Congress that is back to work on the side of the American people. We have passed bills no one ever thought Washington could touch. We have made reforms that have previously languished for years without result. Even more remarkably, we have often done so on a bipartisanship basis.

Consider just the bills I have mentioned already:

A landmark, bipartisan education bill that would take decisionmaking away from distant Federal bureaucrats in order to empower parents and teachers instead. The pundits said we would never pass it. We did, 81 to 17.

A breakthrough, bipartisan highway bill that would finally provide States and local governments the kind of certainty they need to focus on longer term road and bridge projects. After years of short-term extensions, this long-term highway bill passed the new Senate 65 to 34.

A milestone, bipartisan cyber security bill that would protect the personal information of people we represent by defeating cyber attacks through the sharing of information. The issue languished in previous Congresses, but this Senate passed it with 74 votes.

Today, I would like to mention another important bill this new Congress has passed. It is hard for many Americans to believe that human trafficking—modern-day slavery—can happen where they live, but it does right here in our country. It happens in all 50 of our States. In Kentucky alone, the Commonwealth has been able to identify more than 100 victims since they began keeping relevant records in 2013. This kind of abuse often begins around the age of 13 or 14.

The victims of modern slavery deserve a voice. They deserve justice. After years of inaction, the new Congress was determined to give them both. Of course, there was an unforeseen impediment, to put it mildly, to getting this bill done, but success was possible because the new majority kept its focus on facts, on substance, and on good policy for the people who have always remained our focus throughout the debate, the victims of modern slavery.

The bill we ultimately passed with strong bipartisan support, the Justice for Victims of Trafficking Act, represents a vital ray of hope for the countless victims of modern slavery who need our help. Victims groups and advocates told us that this human rights legislation would provide unprecedented support to domestic victims of trafficking. They urged the Congress to pass it. We did. The President signed it into law as well. It proves that with unwavering compassion and unbowed determination—something Senator CORNYN knows a thing or two about—justice can prevail. I am grateful to him and so many other Senators for working so hard to ensure that it ultimately did.

The Justice for Victims of Trafficking Act was another important step forward for our country. It is another example of what we can achieve in a new Congress that is back to work for the American people.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—H.R. 427

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I understand there is a bill at the desk due a second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 427) to amend chapter 8 of title 5, United States Code, to provide that major rules of the executive branch shall have no force or effect unless a joint resolution of approval is enacted into law.

Mr. MCCONNELL. In order to place the bill on the calendar under the provisions of rule XIV, I object to further proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

WORK OF THE SENATE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Republican leader comes to the floor virtually every day and talks about this great new Senate.

He talked about the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. We tried to do that many times. It was blocked by Republicans. That is why it was not done before.

Highways. We tried valiantly to do something on highways, but all we could ever get, because of the obstruction of the Republicans, was short-term extensions.

Cyber security. My friend the Republican leader comes to the floor and talks about, we got cyber security done. We got it done. It is not a great bill. It is better than nothing. But we tried for years—5 years. Every time we tried, it was blocked by Republicans.

One of the newspapers here has a Pinocchio check. They look at the facts and analyze them, and they can give up to four Pinocchios, meaning people simply did not tell the truth.

So I want to remind everybody here that I am happy to participate in getting something done with the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, led by, on our side, the senior Senator from Washington. We were able to get that done because of her good work and others. It was not because we did not try before. We could not get it done before because of the obstruction of the Republicans.

This is the most unproductive Senate in the history of the country, and there are facts and figures to show that. So we are not going to be awarding Pinocchios here based on the statements of my friend the Republican leader, but everyone should understand there are different ways of presenting the facts. It is always best to present facts that are accurate. He said, for example, that bills—TSA, highways, and cyber—languished in the Senate. That is true, because of Republican filibusters. We tried to pass those bills in the last two Congresses. They were blocked by Republicans. We are now helping pass legislation, and that is our job. The job of Republicans was to oppose everything President Obama wanted, and that is, in fact, what was done.

OBAMACARE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, on ObamaCare, one newspaper reports:

Fewer Patients Have Been Dying From Hospital Errors Since ObamaCare Started.

Report says about 87,000 lives have been saved since 2010.

This is as a result of that legislation. I am not going to read the whole article.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article to which I just referred.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Huffington Post, Dec. 1, 2015]

FEWER PATIENTS HAVE BEEN DYING FROM HOSPITAL ERRORS SINCE OBAMACARE STARTED

(By Jonathan Cohn)

Hospitals have cut down on deadly medical errors, saving around 87,000 lives since 2010, according to a new government report.

Pinning down the precise reasons for this change is difficult, to say nothing of predicting whether the decline will continue. Improvement has slowed in just the last year, the report suggests. But many analysts think government initiatives within the Affordable Care Act have played a significant role in the progress so far.

In short, Obamacare may literally be saving lives.

The new report comes from Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, which is part of the Department of Health and Human Services and is something like an in-house think tank dedicated to making medical care safer and more effective. Since 2010, the agency has been tracking the incidence of common and frequently fatal medical errors, which include everything from a nurse accidentally giving a patient the wrong medication to a doctor inserting an intravenous line in a way that leads to a blood-borne infection.

On Tuesday, the agency announced its latest findings on these ''hospital-acquired conditions,'' based on preliminary data from 2014. For every 1,000 patients admitted to and then discharged from a hospital, the agency found, roughy 121 of them developed such a condition. That rate is unchanged from last year, but it is down 17 percent from 2010, when it was about 145 out of every 1,000 patients.

Based on the existing research about what happens to patients who get sick in the hospital and what it costs to treat them afterwards, that decline works out to roughly 87,000 lives saved and $19.8 billion not spent on extra medical care, according to the report.

''The progress is historic,'' David Blumenthal, president of the Commonwealth Fund, told The Huffington Post.

''We have never demonstrated a comparable decline in the history of the U.S. health system,'' added Blumenthal, a physician and researcher who also served in the Obama administration.

Broadly speaking, the progress is the result of a crusade that dates back at least to 1990s, when the Institute of Medicine released ''To Err Is Human,'' a seminal report suggesting that nearly 100,000 people were dying each year because of preventable medical mistakes. Over time, researchers learned more about why these errors were so common and started developing methods for avoiding them. Probably the most famous of these was the introduction of checklists, like the ones that airplane pilots use before takeoff, for making surgery safer.

But getting hospitals to adopt these methods was difficult, despite the best efforts of some private-sector organizations, in part because existing financial incentives did not reward hospitals for improving quality. If anything, the opposite was true. Hospitals made money for every new treatment and a patient who got sick in the hospital needed more care, rather than less.

A major goal of the Affordable Care Act was to reduce and eventually eliminate these incentives for poor quality care, while rewarding the hospitals that getter better results. Today, for example, Medicare pays less to institutions with high rates of hospital-acquired infection, injury and readmission—in other words, large numbers of patients returning to the hospital for treatment shortly after discharge. That's because of a series of penalties the health care law created in 2010, which started affecting hospital revenue three years later. And under an initiative called Partnership for Patients, the federal government provides extra funding to hospitals that agree to monitor patient safety and implement schemes for improving quality.

Experts can't be sure about the impact of these reforms, in part because previous studies showed that errors were declining even before 2010, albeit at a slower rate. And the new initiatives raise plenty of serious criticisms—whether from hospital officials saying they are cumbersome to implement or from researchers who think the underlying data is unreliable.

But after the agency published last year's results, showing the steep decline in errors, a wide array of experts said the law's new incentives were influencing hospital behavior—and that, as a result, patients were getting better care. Lucian Leape, a professor at the Harvard School of Public Health and a pioneer in the patient safety movement, told Politifact, ''I think these data reliable, and the ACA (Affordable Care Act) deserves credit.''

The real cautionary note in Tuesday's report may be what it says about the future. If this year's preliminary data holds up, and the error rate for 2014 is truly no lower than it was for 2013, that would suggest progress had stalled—with infections and injuries lower than before, but not as low as they could be.

''On the positive side, there has been no backsliding, so hospitals are, in the lingo of quality improvement, 'holding the gains,''' Blumenthal said. ''But from the standpoint of public policy and given our obligation to eliminate preventable problems, we would should aim to see continued reductions in rates.''

HHS officials on Tuesday offered similar thoughts. At a conference in Baltimore focusing on health care quality, an announcement of the new data drew large applause. But Patrick Conway, chief medical officer at the federal government's Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, warned his audience not to be complacent. ''The goal is to get to zero'' errors, he said. ''We've made significant progress. Now the question is how you accelerate that.''

Mr. REID. Mr. President, among other things, this article says: ''Hospitals have cut down on deadly medical errors, saving around 87,000 lives since 2010, according to a new government report.''

I am not going to read the whole thing, but it is part of the RECORD.

The article also says:

Many analysts think government initiatives within the Affordable Care Act have played a significant role in the progress so far.

In short, ObamaCare may literally be saving lives.

The new report comes from Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality. . . . On Tuesday, the agency announced its latest findings on these ''hospital-acquired conditions''. . . . That rate is unchanged from last year, but it is down 17 percent from 2010, when it was about 145 out of every 1,000 patients.

That is not the case anymore.

Continuing:

That decline works out to roughly 87,000 lives saved and $19.8 billion not spent on extra medical care, according to the report. . . . A major goal of the Affordable Care Act was to reduce and eventually eliminate these incentives for poor quality care, while rewarding the hospitals that get better results. Today, for example, Medicare pays less to institutions with high rates of hospital-acquired infection, injury and readmission—in other words, large numbers of patients returning to the hospital for treatment shortly after discharge. . . . And under an initiative called Partnership for Patients, the federal government provides extra funding to hospitals that agree to monitor patient safety and implement schemes for improving quality.

So to my friend who continually berates ObamaCare, we have before us today and tomorrow an effort to show how wasteful the time is trying to wipe out ObamaCare. The House has voted 46 times. The Republicans, of course, have lost every time. In the Senate, I think it has been 16 times or 17 times trying to repeal ObamaCare. Each time, it failed, as it will fail in the next day or two.

RHETORIC OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

Mr. REID. Mr. President, when Americans elect leaders, they do so in good faith. Our constituents want us to govern responsibly and work to embody American values. Both elected officials and candidates must realize that our words have deep meaning and can influence people far and wide. That is why I am very disappointed that instead of talking about issues important to the middle class, the Republicans have turned to the politics of hatred and division.

It seems no one is safe from this Republican vitriol. Republicans demagogue women seeking health care through Planned Parenthood. Republican candidates use women, infants, and children seeking refuge from terrorism to fearmonger. Muslim Americans, immigrants, and even Americans exercising their constitutional rights in support of the Black Lives Matter movement are all subject to Republican insults and slander.

Over and over again, Republican candidates have resorted to hatred instead of appealing to the highest sensibilities of the American people. We all know that on race and other controversial issues, Republicans have long practiced subtle bigotry, but Republicans now simply say out loud the many things at which they used to merely hint.

Words have power, and when spoken by influential leaders, they infiltrate every corner of our society.

In the wake of last week's murderous attack at a Planned Parenthood health center in Colorado, a leading conservative activist said:

It really is surprising more Planned Parenthood facilities and abortionists are not being targeted.

Given the public light shed on the atrocities committed by Planned Parenthood and both the government and media's turning a blind eye to it . . . it really should be surprising that Americans convicted of the need to stop the murder of children have not taken the law into their own hands.

That is what the quote says.

We know how exaggerated, untruthful, and unfair the film was that was put together as some B-grade movie and that has so maligned Planned Parenthood. One out of every five American women will go to Planned Parenthood during her lifetime. It is the only health care that women have in many parts of America. Is that the kind of language you want to encourage in the United States of America, that there should be more violence in these health clinics? Certainly not, but it is all too common in the Republican Party of today.

Instead of recognizing the concerns of communities riddled by decades of police brutality and racial injustice, Republicans have vilified the Black Lives Matter movement, which has been drawing attention to these disturbing inequities. Rush Limbaugh has gone so far as labeling protesters a ''hate group'' for trying to bring equality to our criminal justice system.

Just a few weeks ago, supporters of the Republican Presidential hopeful Donald Trump attacked a Black Lives Matter protester on video at a rally. Instead of condemning the violence displayed by his supporters, Donald Trump encouraged it. When asked about the incident, Trump said, referring to the protester, ''Maybe he should have been roughed up.'' That is stunning. A Republican candidate for President of the United States urged violence to silence his critics.

Last week, four masked men with apparent White supremacist ties opened fire on Black Lives Matter protestors in Minneapolis.

I am amazed that the junior Senator from Texas had the audacity to say earlier this week that ''the overwhelming majority of violent criminals are Democrats.'' And the article he quoted has been said to have been quoted improperly. That is really quite stunning, that someone with the academic background of the junior Senator from Texas cannot read a simple report. ''The overwhelming majority of violent criminals are Democrats.'' Think about that. Fanning the flames of intolerance is un-American. We are better than this.

I am disappointed that Republicans who should know better are not speaking out against this vile rhetoric. According to the New York Times, ''Some of the highest-ranking Republicans in Congress and some of the party's wealthiest and most generous donors have balked at trying to take down Mr. Trump because they fear a public feud with the insult-spewing media figure.'' That is a sad reflection on one of America's major political parties.

The Republican Party once claimed to stand for American leadership in the world, but as millions of Syrians have fled their country, seeking refuge from death and destruction, Republicans have instead used the humanitarian crisis as an opportunity to spread fear and animosity. Republican Presidential candidate Ben Carson described the Syrian refugees as ''rabid dogs.'' Mike Huckabee referred to the Syrian refugees as a bag of poisonous peanuts. Even more disturbing is the junior Senator from Texas, who went so far as to suggest a religious test for accepting refugees fleeing violence and oppression. He only wants to accept Christians.

The Republican Party used to claim to stand for religious freedom, but they are now just pretending. Ben Carson doesn't think Muslims should be allowed to become President. The junior Senator from Florida, also a Republican Presidential candidate, speaks of a ''clash of civilizations.'' Those are buzz words meaning a crusade against Islam. He is saying that ISIS extremists are representative of an entire religion.

It doesn't stop there. Republicans have targeted immigrants also—not just people who are seeking refuge, not just refugees, but also immigrants. The Republican Party wants to paint all immigrants as murderers and rapists. Congressman STEVE KING says all immigrants are drug traffickers. Republicans only talk about deporting families. Senator RUBIO, the Republican establishment favorite, walked away from his single positive legislative accomplishment—comprehensive immigration reform—to please the party's extreme anti-immigrant base. He has gone from supporting citizenship for undocumented immigrants to wanting to deport DREAMers. And even Jeb Bush speaks of ''anchor babies.''

With the way our democracy is structured, there will always be disagreement about the best way elected officials can serve our Nation, but as we debate and disagree, we must do so responsibly.

President Bill Clinton once said that those of us with influence must be mindful of our words because they fall ''on the serious and delirious alike.'' The venom Republicans continue to spew has consequences. History will judge those who stand idle as fear and animosity become the platform of an American political party.

The simple fact is that Republicans are running on a platform of hate, and every Republican who fails to speak out against the hateful, dangerous rhetoric being spewed by their party is complicit.

For the moral character of our Nation, we must demand that the Republicans return to the values on which our country was founded.

Mr. President, Senator MCCONNELL and I have finished our remarks. Would the Chair announce the business of the day.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

RESTORING AMERICANS' HEALTHCARE FREEDOM RECONCILIATION ACT OF 2015

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 3762, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3762) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 2002 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2016.

Pending:

McConnell amendment No. 2874, in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time spent in quorum calls requested during Senate consideration of H.R. 3762 be equally divided and come off of the reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the Senate's consideration of H.R. 3762, the majority and Democratic managers of the reconciliation bill, while seated or standing at the managers' desks, be permitted to deliver floor remarks, retrieve, review, and edit documents, and send email and other data communications from text displayed on wireless personal digital assistant devices and tablet devices. I further ask unanimous consent that the use of calculators be permitted on the floor during consideration of the budget resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. For the information of Senators, this UC does not alter the existing traditions that prohibit the use of such devices in the Chamber by Senators in general, officers, and staff. It also does not allow the use of videos or pictures, the transmitting of sound, even through earpieces, for any purposes, the use of telephones or other devices for voice communications, any laptop computers, any detachable keyboards, the use of desktop computers or any other larger devices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, earlier this year, Congress approved its first balanced 10-year budget since 2001. In addition to helping make our government more efficient, effective, and accountable, this balanced budget resolution contained reconciliation instructions to provide for the repeal of Obamacare and pave the way for real health care reforms to strengthen the doctor-patient relationship; expand choices; lower health care costs; and improve access to quality, affordable, innovative health care.

These instructions focused on the key congressional committees with jurisdiction over Obamacare—the Senate Finance Committee; Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee; House Energy and Commerce Committee; House Education and the Workforce Committee; and the House Ways and Means Committee.

Our friends in the House passed their repeal bill in October and November, which repealed key parts of Obamacare, including the individual and employer mandates, the Cadillac tax, and the medical device tax, which is pending here today.

As most everyone knows, while the House and Senate are known collectively as Congress, they both have very different rules. This is why it is important to ensure that the House-passed repeal bill is in line with Senate rules and procedures.

The reconciliation process is governed by a combination of statutory rules, budget resolution provisions, precedents—and the interpretations of all these applicable standards ensure that any legislation which says it qualifies for reconciliation does actually do so.

The repeal bill passed by the House, H.R. 3762, contained material that qualified the bill in the House as meeting the conditions for reconciliation. The provisions were marked up and reported out of the three House reconciled committees, combined together by the House Budget Committee, improved upon by the House Rules Committee, and acted on by the full House of Representatives.

The Obamacare repeal bill approved by the House contains provisions which fall in the jurisdiction of the Senate Finance and HELP Committees and satisfies the Senate reconciliation instruction by reducing the deficit well over $1 billion.

However, while the House bill does qualify as meeting the essential standards necessary for reconciliation in the Senate, it is not immune from the Senate-specific requirements under the Byrd rule, which is the reason for the McConnell amendment offered earlier.

The Byrd rule was crafted in an effort to ensure that matter inside a reconciliation bill has at its core a budgetary effect. The Byrd rule and the reconciliation instruction work together to evaluate the material inside H.R. 3762 for its consideration in the Senate.

Working with the committees reconciled in the Senate, Leader MCCONNELL and his leadership team, the House Budget Committee, the Senate Parliamentarian and her staff, the staff of the minority and the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Committee on Taxation, H.R. 3762 has been exhaustively examined, debated, and had decisions rendered as to how to evaluate it from a reconciliation and Byrd rule perspective.

I think it is important for all Senators to understand what has been done to address those challenges to ensure that the House bill's provisions are not vulnerable to a variety of Byrd rule challenges.

In H.R. 3762, section 1 contains both a short title and a table of contents that have no score and therefore do not qualify as reconciliation material. The McConnell substitute amendment does not contain section 1.

Obamacare mandated that businesses with more than 50 employees automatically enroll their employees in Obamacare, the so-called auto-enrollment provision. H.R. 3762 eliminated that mandate. Subsequent to House passage, the administration struck a spending deal with Congress, which used the repeal of the auto-enrollment provision as an offset. Since that provision is now law, it does not score for purposes of reconciliation and was Byrdable. The House removed that language when it engrossed the bill and sent it to the Senate last month. It is no longer in the House bill and is not addressed in the McConnell amendment.

Obamacare created a fund, the so-called Prevention and Public Health Fund, which has been used for a variety of purposes since 2010. The House bill in section 101 repealed that fund and rescinded its unobligated balances. The McConnell amendment does the same.

In section 102 of H.R. 3762, a deficit reduction provision for Medicaid was included, creating a new class of prohibited entities for which Medicaid reimbursement is barred. While the House language qualifies for reconciliation consideration in the Senate, the McConnell amendment makes even clearer how the language is to apply to Medicaid, not any Federal spending. As well, it clarifies the tests applied to entities to determine whether or not they fall into the prohibited class.

Section 103 of the House bill created new resources for community health center programs, and the McConnell amendment contains the same language.

Obamacare imposed mandates to purchase health care insurance on both individuals and employers. Sections 201 and 202 of the House bill repealed those mandates.

Unfortunately, this language does not qualify under the Byrd rule in the Senate. In the judgement of the Parliamentarian, the policy impact of these repeals outweighs their fiscal impact. As well, there is technical and conforming language in both sections 201 and 202 of the House bill that do not score and therefore are inappropriate for reconciliation in the Senate.

As a result, the McConnell amendment addresses the mandates but in a different way. Rather than containing language that repeals them, the McConnell amendment repeals the penalties, which Obamacare instituted to punish those who wanted the freedom to choose in the health care insurance market.

Obamacare imposed a tax on medical devices, which section 203 of H.R. 3762 repealed. The McConnell amendment does the same without the conforming and clerical amendments in this section that the House bill contains. Clerical and conforming amendments do not score and so do not qualify for consideration under the Byrd rule.

Obamacare imposed a tax on high-quality health insurance, the so-called Cadillac tax. H.R. 3762 repealed that tax, but the repeal contained technical and conforming language that violates the Byrd rule. As well, according to CBO, the House language created a possible deficit sometime well after the reconciliation window, which is another violation of the Byrd rule.

To address these problems, the McConnell amendment removes the technical and conforming language that violates the Byrd rule and sunsets the Cadillac tax repeal at the end of 2024.

The McConnell amendment also contains an additional policy.

Working in concert with the Senate Finance Committee, the McConnell amendment contains reconciliation-compliant language to recapture excess exchange subsidies that have been paid but which were not supposed to go out the door. Over 10 years, this will have a significant deficit reduction impact.

The pending McConnell amendment, then, addresses the Byrd rule challenges contained within the House bill. It has a deficit reduction impact equal to the House-passed bill. It is reconciliation compliant. It will be the pending language to which amendments should be drafted and offered during consideration of the repeal bill.

The Budget Act calls for a submission for the RECORD of Byrdable material contained in the reconciliation bill, and I will ask that the list of Byrdable material in H.R. 3762 be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, pursuant to section 313(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I submit for the RECORD a list of material considered to be extraneous to H.R. 3762, the Restoring Americans' Healthcare Freedom Reconciliation Act of 2015. The inclusion or exclusion of a provision on this list does not constitute a determination of extraneousness by the Presiding Officer of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent the list be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Section	Subject	Violation	Rationale
1	Short Title, Table of Contents	313(b)(1)(A)	No budgetary effect
	Title I—Committee on Energy and Commerce
102(a) lines 15–16	Federal Payments to States	313(b)(1)(A)	No budgetary effect [1]
	Title III—Committee on Ways and Means
201	Repeal of individual mandate	313(b)(1)(D)	Budgetary effects are merely incidental
202	Repeal of Employer Mandate	313(b)(1)(D)	Budgetary effects are merely incidental
204(b)	Tax on Employee Health Insurance Premiums—Reporting Requirement	313(b)(1)(A)	No budgetary effect
204(c)	Tax on Employee Health Insurance Premiums—Clerical Amendment	313(b)(1)(A)	No budgetary effect

[1] This matter contains citations in error. Permissible if corrected.

Mr. ENZI. I also ask unanimous consent that two scores from CBO be printed in the RECORD: a score of H.R. 3762 as received in the Senate and a score of the McConnell amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On October 23, 2015, the House passed H.R. 3762 (see https://www.congress.gov/114/bills/hr3762/BILLS-114hr3762eh.pdf). That bill removed subtitle B of H.R. 3762 as reported by the House Committee on the Budget on October 16, 2015, which would have repealed the Independent Payment Advisory Board. Additionally, the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015 (Public Law 114–74) was enacted on November 2, 2015, and included a provision identical to title I of this legislation. This estimate differs from CBO and JCT's prior estimate of H.R. 3762 as reported by the House Committee on the Budget (see https://www.cbo.gov/publication/50918) as a result of these two legislative actions.

[a] For outlays, a positive number indicates an increase (adding to the deficit) and a negative number indicates a decrease (reducing the deficit); for revenues, a positive number indicates an increase (reducing the deficit) and a negative number indicates a decrease (adding to the deficit); for the deficit, a positive number indicates an increase and a negative number indicates a reduction.

[b] The Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015 (P.L. 114–74) was enacted on November 2, 2015. Title VI of that law includes a provision identical to title I of this legislation. Therefore, CBO estimates that title I would have no effect relative to current law.

[c] CBO previously estimated additional effects of combining the repeal of the auto-enrollment requirement for large employers with the repeal of the individual and employer mandates. Because the former is now current law (see P.L. 114–74), that interaction effect is included in our estimate of the repeal of the individual and employer mandates.

[d] Excluding macroeconomic feedback, all off-budget effects would come from changes in revenues. (The payroll taxes for Social Security are classified as off-budget.) Off-budget effects from macroeconomic feedback include changes in Social Security spending and revenues.

[e] An explanation of these estimates of macroeconomic feedback can be found in the cost estimate for H.R. 3762 as reported by the House Committee on the Budget on October 16, 2015. The effects of the changes proposed in the legislation analyzed here are quite similar to the effects estimated previously. As a result, CBO and JCT's estimated economic effects and macroeconomic feedback to the budget are not appreciably changed from that previous analysis.

[f] Including macroeconomic effects, CBO and JCT estimate that enacting the legislation would not increase net direct spending by more than $5 billion in any of the first three consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2026; however, the agencies are not able to determine whether enacting the legislation would increase net direct spending by more than $5 billion in the fourth 10-year period. The agencies estimate that enacting the legislation would increase on- budget deficits by more than $5 billion in one or more of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2026. Excluding macroeconomic feedback, the agencies estimate that enacting the legislation would not increase net direct spending by more than $5 billion in any of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2026, and would increase on-budget deficits by more than $5 billion in one or more of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2026.

This amendment triggers the requirement for a macroeconomic analysis. However, because of the very short time available to prepare this estimate, CBO and JCT have determined that it is not practicable to provide that analysis at this time.

[a] For outlays, a positive number indicates an increase (adding to the deficit) and a negative number indicates a decrease (reducing the deficit); for revenues, A positive number indicates an increase (reducing the deficit) and a negative number indicates a decrease (adding to the deficit); for the deficit, a positive number indicates an increase and a negative number indicates a reduction.

[b] Excluding macroeconomic feedback, all Off-Budget effects would come from changes in revenues. (The payroll taxes for Social Security are classified as off-budget.)

[c] Excluding macroeconomic feedback, the agencies estimate that enacting title I or title II would not increase net direct spending or on-budget deficits in any year after 2025 or in any of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2026.

Mr. ENZI. I think Members are looking forward to an open and spirited debate about the future of America's health care system and the importance of restoring the trust of hard-working taxpayers.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 2876 TO AMENDMENT NO. 2874

(Purpose: To ensure that this Act does not increase the number of uninsured women or increase the number of unintended pregnancies by establishing a women's health care and clinic security and safety fund)

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 2876.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington [Mrs. MURRAY] proposes an amendment numbered 2876 to amendment No. 2874.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under ''Text of Amendments.'')

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COTTON).

The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I think we can all agree there is a lot of work that needs to be done in this Congress—priorities such as continuing to improve health care for our families, creating jobs, boosting wages, expanding economic security for workers, and making higher education more affordable and accessible, just to name a few. Unfortunately, instead of working with Democrats to focus on those challenges—the ones that families face every day—far too many Republicans have doubled down on a favorite pastime—attacking women's health and rights in order to pander to their extreme base.

I am very proud to be on the floor today with many of my Democratic colleagues to say enough is enough and to make clear that even as Republicans try to take women's health backwards, we are going to push harder in the other direction for continued progress on women's access to health care and constitutionally protected reproductive rights.

This year alone, according to NARAL Pro-Choice America, more than 40 bills have been introduced in this Congress that would undermine a woman's constitutionally protected right to make her own choices about her own body. The House and Senate have voted a total of 17 times—17 times—on legislation to undermine women's health care and rights. That is right. In the year 2015—in the year 2015 alone—Republicans in Congress have introduced over 40 bills and held 17 votes on whether Congress should roll back women's rights. That is completely unacceptable. The bill we are debating here on the floor today would defund Planned Parenthood, and that is just more of the same. It is another effort to force through extreme policies under a fast-track process.

A vote on the bill before us today is a vote on whether a young woman should be able to go to the provider she trusts to get birth control, whether cancer screenings should be more or less available to women across the country, and whether the 2.7 million men and women who visit Planned Parenthood each year should continue to get health care services they rely on.

Over the last few months of Republican political attacks on Planned Parenthood and women's health, I have been proud to stand with women nationwide who are making their voices heard and fighting for their right to make their own health care decisions—women such as Shannon, who lives in Tumwater, WA, and says the care she received at Planned Parenthood as a young woman protected her ability to have children and that today she has Planned Parenthood to thank for her little girl; women such as Breanne from Seattle, who went to Planned Parenthood as an uninsured student, where providers caught abnormal cell growth on her cervix wall before—before—it could turn into cancer; and the women and advocates at the Planned Parenthood Center in Pullman, WA, who, after their building was damaged in an arson attack, came together as a community and established a pop-up clinic to make sure that women and families could continue to get the care they needed.

I know many of us here today are thinking of those who are suffering and who lost loved ones as a result of the tragic violence in Colorado Springs last week. People across the country—men and women—have had enough of extremism and violence, including at Planned Parenthood health care centers. When a woman seeks health care—constitutionally protected health care—she should not have to feel threatened in any way. A doctor in a women's health clinic should not have to worry about wearing a bulletproof vest under her lab coat. Women's health care should not be controversial, much less a cause for violence in the 21st century. Women and their families have had enough.

I have heard from so many women and men who are tired of women's health being undermined, being threatened, and being used as a political football here in Washington, DC. Who can believe that in the 21st century a Presidential candidate would claim that expanding access to birth control is as easy as setting up a few more vending machines in men's bathrooms? These women and men across the country are speaking up and saying ''not on our watch'' to those who want to turn back the clock on women's health and women's rights. I am going to continue, along with my colleagues, to bring their voices and their stories and their fight to the Senate floor.

As we all know, this is a tired political effort to dismantle the Affordable Care Act and take Planned Parenthood down with it. It is at a dead end. But if Republicans are going to try to cut off women's access to health care, I am going to make sure they hear about it and that people across this country know exactly where Democrats stand—with women. That is why I am very proud to be introducing this amendment today that would strike the harmful language defunding Planned Parenthood from this legislation and replace it—replace it—with a new fund to support women's health care and clinic safety.

There is so much more we need to do to improve women's health care in this country today, from strengthening the women's health care workforce to expanding access to constitutionally protected reproductive health care to raising awareness about violence against women—so much more. This fund that is part of this amendment would offer an opportunity to make progress on goals such as these and more to support women's health providers and clinics at a time when they need it most. Critically, it would show women and families that their constitutional rights, that their safety and their health care should come before tea party political pandering, not the other way around. By the way, this amendment is fully paid for by the Buffett rule.

Democrats are going to keep standing up for women and encouraging Republicans to focus on the real challenges that families face, rather than their political attacks that their tea party base is so focused on. I urge my colleagues to join me in standing against this harmful effort to defund Planned Parenthood and delivering a clear message, again, to Republicans in Congress who want to play politics with women's health—not on our watch.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

AMENDMENT NO. 2875 TO AMENDMENT NO. 2874

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment in order to call up my amendment No. 2875.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNSON] proposes an amendment numbered 2875 to amendment No. 2874.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to ensure that individuals can keep their health insurance coverage)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. AMENDMENT TO THE PATIENT PROTECTION AND AFFORDABLE CARE ACT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part 2 of subtitle C of title I of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (42 U.S.C. 18011 et seq.) is amended by striking section 1251 and inserting the following:

''SEC. 1251. FREEDOM TO MAINTAIN EXISTING COVERAGE.

''(a) NO CHANGES TO EXISTING COVERAGE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this Act (or an amendment made by this Act) shall be construed to require that an individual terminate coverage under a group health plan or health insurance coverage in which such individual was enrolled during any part of the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on December 31, 2013.

''(2) CONTINUATION OF COVERAGE.—With respect to a group health plan or health insurance coverage in which an individual was enrolled during any part of the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on December 31, 2013, this subtitle and subtitle A (and the amendments made by such subtitles) shall not apply to such plan or coverage, regardless of whether the individual renews such coverage.

''(b) ALLOWANCE FOR FAMILY MEMBERS TO JOIN CURRENT COVERAGE.—With respect to a group health plan or health insurance coverage in which an individual was enrolled during any part of the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on December 31, 2013, and which is renewed, family members of such individual shall be permitted to enroll in such plan or coverage if such enrollment is permitted under the terms of the plan in effect as of such date of enrollment.

''(c) ALLOWANCE FOR NEW EMPLOYEES TO JOIN CURRENT PLAN.—A group health plan that provides coverage during any part of the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on December 31, 2013, may provide for the enrolling of new employees (and their families) in such plan, and this subtitle and subtitle A (and the amendments made by such subtitles) shall not apply with respect to such plan and such new employees (and their families).

''(d) EFFECT ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—In the case of health insurance coverage maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and one or more employers that was ratified before December 31, 2013, the provisions of this subtitle and subtitle A (and the amendments made by such subtitles) shall not apply until the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the coverage terminates. Any coverage amendment made pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement relating to the coverage which amends the coverage solely to conform to any requirement added by this subtitle or subtitle A (or amendments) shall not be treated as a termination of such collective bargaining agreement.

''(e) DEFINITION.—In this title, the term 'grandfathered health plan' means any group health plan or health insurance coverage to which this section applies.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect as if included in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (Public Law 111–148).

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, at a townhall meeting in Green Bay, WI, on June 11, 2009, President Obama was trying to sell his health care law, and this is the claim he made. This is the quote, and this is the promise he made to the American public. He said:

No matter how we reform health care, I intend to keep this promise: If you like your doctor, you'll be able to keep your doctor; if you like your health care plan, you'll be able to keep your health care plan.

Less than a week later, in remarks to the American Medical Association, the Nation's largest association of medical doctors, the President said:

I know that there are millions of Americans who are content with their health care coverage—they like their plan and, most importantly, they value the relationship with their doctor. They trust you. And that means that no matter how we reform health care, we will keep this promise to the American people: If you like your doctor, you will be able to keep your doctor, period. If you like your health care plan, you'll be able to keep your health care plan, period. No one will take that away, no matter what.

Now, a number of years have passed since President Obama made that promise. It wasn't just those two times that President Obama made that promise either. I think it has been documented that he made that promise to the American people over 30 times. Other supporters of the bill repeated that promise. It was a promise. It was a promise to the American public. It was a promise he knew would not be kept. It was a promise about which the supporters of the bill knew there was no way under ObamaCare that people would be able to keep their health care plan, that they would become able to keep and maintain the relationship with the doctor they trusted, knew, and had faith in.

President Obama called it a promise. PolitiFact had another name for it. PolitiFact, in 2013, termed that promise its ''Lie of the Year.'' Think of that. The President of the United States was trying to sell a massive restructuring of a health care system—and that is what he was trying to do. He was trying to sell it. He was marketing a bill, a law, a concept, and in order to market that concept, President Obama and other supporters of the bill repeatedly made a promise that PolitiFact termed the ''Lie of the Year'' of 2013.

I come from the private sector. It is incumbent on people in the private sector, when they are selling products to consumers, to tell the truth about the product. If you don't, you will be accused of consumer fraud. You can be sued. You can probably be sued out of existence. Imagine how the trial bar would treat a businessperson who tried to sell a product by making a promise that turned out to be 2013's ''Lie of the Year.'' I don't believe that business would be in business today.

ObamaCare, at its heart, is a massive consumer fraud—a massive consumer fraud. So the purpose of my amendment has the purpose of a piece of legislation I introduced in 2013—the same thing. It is designed to honor the promise that President Obama made and that he did not keep—the promise that was made under ObamaCare that was not kept.

The bill I introduced in 2013 was simply titled ''If You Like Your Health Care Plan, You Can Keep it Act.'' What is rather unique about my piece of legislation is that it used the exact same wording of ObamaCare. ObamaCare actually did have a section in it called a grandfather clause that purported to allow people to keep their health care and allowed them to maintain their relationship with their doctor if they liked their health care plan and their doctor. The problem is it was a grandfather clause that allowed you to keep your plan as long as you completely changed it. So what my bill in 2013 did was it just said: Listen, you can actually keep your health care plan and you don't have to change it.

That is what my amendment does today. It restores that promise—the promise of President Obama and the supporters of ObamaCare. Let me use the real name: The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. Of the Orwellian-named laws that have been passed through this Chamber, this is probably the most Orwellian because the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act did neither, because that promise was not kept. It was a lie. Patients weren't protected. They lost their health care plan. We have all received letters from constituents, often heartbreaking letters. There was a couple in Wisconsin, they both had cancer. He is recovering from prostate cancer. She had stage IV lung cancer. They had health care in the State high-risk pool. They could afford it. It worked for them. They lost it because of ObamaCare. They called our office panicked—panicked—because they couldn't log on to healthcare.gov. They tried almost 40 times. They lost their health care plan. That promise was broken. I don't hear supporters of the law pointing to those individuals.

So my amendment would restore the promise that if you had health care that you liked in 2013, insurance companies can offer those same plans again. They were far more affordable—far more affordable. As I just stated with that one little example, patient protection in the Affordable Care Act didn't protect patients, and it certainly hasn't been more affordable. We have also received hundreds of letters from people whose premiums have doubled, their out-of-pocket maximum has doubled and tripled. They can't even afford to use the health care they were able to secure because it has become so expensive. The reality of ObamaCare is it has been a miserable failure, and the promises made under it literally were abject lies. That is the reality. That is the very sad fact.

I encourage all my colleagues to unanimously support the promise President Obama and the law's supporters made and vote for my amendment, which would allow Americans, if they like their health care plan, if they like their doctor, they actually will be able to keep it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thoroughly support the right of my colleague to his opinion, but we have never had more people insured in modern history because of ObamaCare. It doesn't mean it is perfect, but let me tell you—I don't know what my colleague's constituents tell him, but I will tell you what mine do. They say thank you. Thank you for the fact that I can get insurance. Thank you for the fact that I can get it even if I have a heart condition. Thank you for the fact that my child can stay on my policy until he is 26 years old. Thank you. Thank you. Thank you. Thank you for the lifesaving preventive care I get. Thank you. Thank you for the cheaper prescription drugs.

So people live in a different universe, I guess, but I prefer to stick with the facts, and the facts are millions and millions and millions of Americans now have the peace of mind of being insured. They don't become a burden on their families, they don't become a burden on the emergency room, and they don't become a burden on their communities. I thank President Obama for his courage. We can fix what is wrong with ObamaCare, but time and time again—more than 50 times—they tried to repeal it, the GOP, and they are going to try again, and they are going to fail again. Secretly, I think they hope they fail because they have nothing—nothing—to replace it with. It is kind of a joke. Nothing. Oh, let's just open up the free market. Well, folks, we tried that forever. ObamaCare isn't government care. It is insurance exchanges, and it is Medicaid expansion in those States that wish to have it. I have to tell you, in those States who have it, the people are very happy.

AMENDMENT NO. 2876

I rise not only to respond to that attack on health care that we have heard again for the 90th time from the other side, I really rise to thank Senator MURRAY. I thank her again for her unbelievable leadership in protecting women's health. Beyond that, she is a leader in protecting children's health, men's health, families' health, and our seniors' health. Today what she is doing is very important. She is saying to the Republicans: We don't like the fact that you are defunding a health care organization that serves 3 million Americans every year with lifesaving health care, preventive health care, STD testing, breast cancer exams, and these 3 million Americans want us to stand and fight for them. That is what Senator MURRAY is doing today, and I am proud to be by her side.

What she is simply saying is, no, we are not going to defund Planned Parenthood. She is going to strike that out of this bill they have put forward, but also we are going to pay for an expansion of women's health care because we know all you have is your health. Just ask people who may have everything else in the world, but somebody gets cancer, somebody gets a heart attack, somebody gets a stroke, someone in the family is diagnosed with Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, their whole world is turned upside down.

So what do my friends on the other side do? They strike funding from an organization that has more respect in this country than their party or my political party or this Congress has. Well, it would be easy to beat the reputation of this Congress, but the vast majority of the American people understand the role of Planned Parenthood.

So I strongly support this amendment, and I want to reiterate something Senator MURRAY said. Republicans have introduced more than 40 bills to take away women's health care in this Congress—40 bills—40 bills. And then they say: Oh, no, we are not conducting a war on women. Yes, you are. Yes, you are. When you want to turn the clock back to the days when women died from back-alley abortions, you are conducting a war on women. By the way, if you don't believe a woman should have the right to choose, I respect you. Take that ideology to your own family, of course, but don't tell everyone in America they have to think the way you think. I don't tell them they have to think the way I think. If I have a constituent who says: Senator, I have a certain belief and it means no abortion, I say: God bless you, of course. But if you don't have that belief and you do believe in Roe v. Wade—which most of the people in this country do, where a woman should have the right to choose early in her pregnancy without government interference—if you do believe in that, and that is the law of the land, then you should have that right.

May I ask that there be quiet? Thank you. This is a very serious point—a very serious point.

I have to say, you have now, over on the other side, in the House, a new special committee which is going to continue the witch hunt on Planned Parenthood. Why do they need a new committee? They have several committees. I served proudly in the House for 10 years. There are so many committees that have jurisdiction over health, health care, science, and the rest. If you want to repeal Roe v. Wade, if you want to take away a woman's right to choose, then have the courage to introduce an amendment and do it—just do it. The last time it was done, it failed, here, but if that is what you want to do, I respect you. Come on down and say you think abortion should be a crime, subject to jail time for women, for doctors. Go ahead. Do it. Do it. I will debate you.

I was thinking the other day, the GOP has changed—the Grand Old Party that I knew. The first President George Bush was on the board of Planned Parenthood—was on the board of Planned Parenthood. I was on the board of Planned Parenthood in the 1970s. I was one of the few Democrats. This was a bipartisan issue, women's health, reproductive freedom. It was not a partisan issue. So the Grand Old Party has changed from the GOP. I call them the POP, the ''party of the past.'' They are the party of the past. Not only do they want to reverse Roe v. Wade, but they don't have the courage to come down and do it directly. Oh, no, they defund Planned Parenthood. Come on. I wasn't born yesterday. It is obvious, and I know what this is all about: take away the clinics, take away the health care, take away women's right to choose. It is happening all over the country. If you don't like Roe v. Wade, come down and try to overturn it here.

OK. Now, fetal tissue research. There are organizations all over this country that do make fetal tissue available to save lives—to save lives. How long has this been in place? It was under Ronald Reagan, when he was President, that he set up this special committee that was headed by a pro-life judge, an anti-choice judge. They studied this and said it is very important to do it—very important to do it.

In 1993, Congress voted to federally fund fetal tissue research. If you don't like fetal tissue research, if you think we ought to stop it, come down with a bill, introduce it, and we will argue it. If you don't want to do fetal tissue research, if you don't think it is good to find cures for Parkinson's, Alzheimer's, you come down and put the bill in the hopper. Oh, no, they don't want to do that. They just want to conduct a witch hunt on one of the organizations that help make fetal tissue research possible, and this after—this after they had the head of Planned Parenthood before the Congress for 4 or 5 hours straight, only topped by what they did to former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. I think she was there 11 hours. So after all those hours that Cecile Richards—and they asked her what she was paid to do her work. I never heard them ask anybody else what they get paid. As it turned out, she was on the low scale of what equivalent jobs are. That is not the point. They harassed her for hours—hours—and their rhetoric was not good.

What we say matters. What we say matters. When I say I respect people who feel they would never allow their child or their wife to have an abortion, I respect that, but if somebody else says we agree with Roe v. Wade that in the early stages it ought to be an option for women and their family, I respect them. I don't demonize one side, but the other side does over and over again. I have stood on this floor for many years now, frankly, with my colleague PATTY MURRAY and my colleague DIANNE FEINSTEIN, and we have heard mostly men come down and lecture us about how it is terrible. Roe v. Wade should never be the law of the land. There should be no abortion, and the rest of it. That is their right. I do not believe it is their right to take away funding from an organization that serves 3 million Americans a year and saves lives.

So while Republicans—the party of the past—have put in 40 bills to take away a woman's right to choose, essentially, we say today, through the Murray amendment, we are looking at the future, we are looking with clear eyes, we are looking at our people, and we support people who go to Planned Parenthood for their health care, and we are going to vote—and I pray we win this vote—to strip out this attack on Planned Parenthood. We are here to say: Stop this assault on women's health care. It is wrong. It is absolutely wrong.

I want to put it into context. I said that Planned Parenthood serves 3 million people. I want to give even more specifics. Four hundred thousand women receive their Pap tests to protect themselves against cervical cancer. They want to stop that funding. They want to take away services from 400,000 women. They say: Oh, no, we really don't. They will go other places. They will go to little health care centers.

Excuse me. I have those health care system centers—more than anybody. They are overworked, overloaded, and they support Planned Parenthood. They are attacking 500,000 women who get breast exams, and if a doctor finds a lump, they refer them for a mammogram. They go after women and men who have nowhere else to turn for their most basic health care. We have been down this road before.

A few months ago in this very Senate, we defeated the Republicans' attempt to defund Planned Parenthood, but they are back again with the same old, same old party of the past attitude. They are attacking Planned Parenthood because Planned Parenthood has a host of services, 97 percent of which have nothing to do with abortion. If you don't want to have abortion legal, you want to make it a crime, you want to put doctors in jail, you want to put women in jail, then come down here and put something in a bill form, repeal Roe v. Wade, and criminalize abortion.

I am old enough to remember when it was a crime. Let me tell you something. There are graves all over this country with women who died from back-alley abortions and botched abortions. They never said it was from that because then they would have died as a criminal. We are not going to go back to those days. The party of the past is not winning on this. They are not going to win, because President Obama is going to veto this bill. Maybe this next Senate will have a pro-choice Senate for a change.

In 2011, Republicans threatened to shut down the entire Government of the United States of America if Planned Parenthood wasn't defunded. Remember, 97 percent of what Planned Parenthood does has nothing to do with abortion, but Planned Parenthood is in their line of attack and they haven't stopped. The rhetoric matters. What they say matters.

In fact, these attacks go back to 1916 when Planned Parenthood's founder was arrested because she was providing birth control information to poor people. Imagine, a woman was arrested for explaining to some people how they could prevent unwanted pregnancies—arrested. I admit that we have come a long way, but these people want to take us back. Yes, a woman was arrested for advocating birth control. Now you have Republicans right in this Senate and in this Congress who say that women shouldn't have access to free birth control.

If they don't want to take birth control, fine. Don't; it is fine with me. I respect it. If you don't think your family should ever have an abortion, I am with you all the way on your right. That is your right. But this is America. We don't have Big Government think. We don't have Big Government telling you what to think about your own body or what your religion should be.

This is a major issue. I always thought the old GOP was the party of independence. We have our views, but people have a right to think the way they want to think. No, that is the old GOP. This is the new POP, the party of the past.

Let me say this. This is sad. This is the 21st century. We should be working together to ensure that every family has access to legal health care. If you want to make something illegal, have the courage to come down here and say it is illegal. Don't start defunding organizations that give women health care. Also, stop the demonizing rhetoric. One candidate for President on the Republican side called people who were prochoice barbarians, and he happens to be a Senator. He called us barbarians.

What we say matters. Political witch hunts are wrong. What we say matters. Special committees set up to demonize an organization like Planned Parenthood—that is wrong. I wrote to Speaker RYAN. I asked him to disband the latest House committee that was set up. It is costing taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars for a special committee when they have a slew of committees that have jurisdiction over health care and over science and fetal tissue research. It is a political witch hunt being paid for by taxpayers after they hauled the President of Planned Parenthood before them and had her sit there for hour after hour.

The American people have to wake up to this. That is why I am taking all of this time. This isn't a small matter of supporting PATTY MURRAY's amendment, which is so important. It is a very simple amendment. We are going to stop them from defunding Planned Parenthood, and we are actually going to increase spending on women's health. I can assure you that when you catch breast cancer early, it pays dividends, first and foremost to the woman and her family—she is going to live—and second of all, to the taxpayers. They don't have to treat cancer with expensive drugs and surgeries. The same is true when you catch cervical cancer.

When my friend suggests that we spend more on health care to prevent these problems, she is doing something right for the taxpayers. Let's be clear. There is a dangerous climate out there for Planned Parenthood, and it is going to be exacerbated today. Since 1977, there have been 11 murders, 17 attempted murders, 42 bombings, and 186 arsons against abortion clinics and providers for doing something that is legal. Anything we say that promotes this kind of terrorism and violence—anything we say that results in this—we should never say. We need to protect medical personnel and staff who put their lives on the line every day working in these clinics, and we should protect the patients who rely on them.

As my colleague said, imagine a doctor, a nurse having to wear protective gear under their uniform. The Women's Health Care and Clinic Security and Safety Fund that my friend is proposing is very important. It is a very important vote. It will provide compensation for health providers who provide the full spectrum of comprehensive women's health care services, and it will enhance safety at clinics.

The great Ted Kennedy and I worked on the FACE Act. That was his bill. The FACE Act was meant to protect patients and doctors at clinics. All those years ago—I was a young, new Senator then, and he asked if I would be his lieutenant and help him get the bill through.

We got the bill through, but I think what Senator MURRAY is doing today is responding to the violence, the increased violence, the atmosphere of fear that we see at these clinics. Her amendment also requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to work in coordination with the Attorney General's National Task Force on Violence Against Health Care Providers to submit an annual report to Congress identifying the best practices to ensure the security and safety of clinics, providers, facilities, and staff. We cannot waste another minute on yet another vicious, wrongheaded assault on women's health.

As I said, if you don't want women to have the right to choose, then have the courage to come down here and take it away. But don't do it through the back door by attacking an organization that provides health care to 3 million people every year. If you don't want fetal tissue research that has been legal for a very long time—since 1993 we have had government funding. If you don't like it, if you don't think it is helping find cures for diseases, come down here and stop it. Don't attack an organization that is involved in that activity legally. If you want to take us back to pre-1973 when women died in back alleys, have the courage to come down here and make your case. Believe me, we will take you on, but do it because that is what you want. Don't hide behind attacking these organizations. That is a phony way to approach something. Approach it straight ahead.

We have fought this fight before. We have won this fight before. They wanted to shut down the government. We said: Go ahead; try it. And we beat them.

They are doing it again. I have to say, this isn't about me. This isn't about Senator MURRAY. This isn't about any individual Senator on the other side.

We are here for a little time in history. In America, we don't go back. I say to the party of the past: We don't go back in America. We go forward. We don't take away rights. We expand rights. We don't have Big Government telling people what to do in the privacy of their own homes, their own bedrooms, their own lives. We let them make the decision, as long as it is legal. We are going to fight to make sure men and women across this country continue to get the services they need. We are going to make sure that Planned Parenthood is still there for the millions of women and families who depend on it.

I strongly support the Murray amendment. I compliment her for putting it together. I hope we get a good vote—maybe even a majority vote—and make a strong statement for this Senate that we stand with the 3 million people who rely on Planned Parenthood, and we stand for health care.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. President, I have been able to sit in and listen to the debate today about bringing forward a bill that will do two simple things: remove funding from the single largest provider of abortions in the country, an organization that has recently sold the body parts of children to the highest bidder. Also, we would deal with one of the main issues that I face every single day in my State, as people struggle under the harmful effects every day of the Affordable Care Act, which has proven to be neither affordable nor caring to many people in my State.

Let me say some of the things that I have heard recently—that this is all about going after women's health. As a very proud husband of a very beautiful lady and a proud dad of two beautiful daughters and as a son of a breast cancer survivor, this has nothing to do with going after women's health, nor demonizing women, nor the war on women, nor all the other accusations that I have recently heard. This is not about protecting what I have heard called a lifesaving health care organization where 325,000 children died in it last year. This is about a simple thing: children.

In the past, back in the old days, they used to identify tissue as just tissue. The wart on your skin and other tissues in your body were expendable, and it was just tissue, so why does it matter? In the past people used to think that way, but now science is able to look inside the womb and is able to count 10 fingers and 10 toes on a child and watch a child suck its thumb. Scientists can look inside and take a sample and see that that child has different DNA than the mom and dad. We are now able to look inside the womb and see a unique fingerprint that is different from the mom and dad's fingerprint. We understand something different now because in the past there was a belief that it was just tissue, but now we understand it is not tissue. It is a child. As Americans we believe in a simple thing: life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It has been what we have been all about from the beginning. This is not some attack on women's health. These are millions of voices rising up around the Nation and saying: We are better than this as a nation.

Why would we continue to supplement the death of children? Why would we do that? Can we be better than that? In the days ahead, I firmly believe we are on the right side of history, those of us who stand up for children and for those who cannot speak for themselves. The most innocent and vulnerable in our society need our protection. Just because they are small and just because you can't see them doesn't mean they are not valuable and can be thrown away. These are children we are talking about—little girls, little boys—and we think it is important that someone in this country speaks out for them.

I have heard of late that those of us who speak for life should be quieter because there are irrational people in the country who would attack a Planned Parenthood clinic. I just have to reinforce this point: No one who speaks for life goes and takes a life. No one who speaks for the lives of children runs out and takes the life of an adult and says that is justifiable. It is not justifiable. It is horrific. But just like those individuals who speak tenaciously against religion shouldn't be silenced because there was a shooting in a church, saying people who are antifaith should suddenly have no voice in America because some irrational person shoots someone in a church, the same is true that individuals who speak out for the lives of children shouldn't suddenly be silenced by being screamed down because an insane person does a shooting in a clinic. Both of them are wrong.

It is reasonable for us to ask a simple question: Can we, as a nation, start a conversation again about children with 10 fingers and 10 toes and unique DNA with life and promise? Can someone speak out for them? I think we can.

This conversation today is also about the Affordable Care Act, its promises, and what has actually occurred. There is no question we have major health care delivery issues in America. There is no question we have major insurance issues in America. It has been that way for a while, and it needs desperate resolution.

My State, like many other States, started stepping into this. A Democratic Governor from my State led the way with our legislature in 2004 to pass something called Insure Oklahoma and start the process in our State, asking: What can we do to try to help the most vulnerable in our State? How can we help provide some supplement to another plan?

We received waivers around Medicaid and started working through a process both for those who are employed and not employed to help provide that safety net for those individuals. It was a very successful plan until the Affordable Care Act was passed, and then the waivers were removed from our State and those individuals under that plan lost their plan and had to change to another one. In fact, I had some of those individuals approach me and say: I know this is a plan that is provided by our State so it will be grandfathered into the Affordable Care Act, won't it? I had to tell them: No, it will not. We have been denied on that.

It is remarkable to me, as we deal with these two topics side by side, how some of the opponents of life can say: We want freedom of choice and Big Government out of our lives, but when we get to health care delivery, the bigger the government, the better. We want less choice. We don't want States to have the option to do that. We don't want businesses to be able to choose how they are going to do that. We don't want individuals to be able to have that choice. We want Big Government to step into people's lives and their health care delivery and tell them how it is going to be done. It is fascinating to me to be able to see those two issues juxtaposed all of a sudden—get government out of our lives but get more government into our health care.

Now what do we do?

In 2010, President Obama made this statement in his State of the Union Address:

> By the time I'm finished speaking tonight, more Americans will have lost their health insurance. Millions will lose it this year. Our deficit will grow. Premiums will go up. Copays will go up. Patients will be denied the care they need. Small business owners will continue to drop coverage altogether. I will not walk away from these Americans and neither should the people in this Chamber.

It is an interesting statement based on what actually occurred then after the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act was actually passed, which is another issue to me. It is interesting to me how now this is really called ObamaCare or the Affordable Care Act. Almost no one calls it the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, when that was originally its name, and now for some reason patient protection has been dropped from our vernacular when this bill is discussed.

So he made the statement that more Americans will have lost their health insurance. I have already referenced how we had thousands of Oklahomans lose their health care coverage as soon as the Affordable Care Act went into place because they were on Insure Oklahoma. That coverage was lost for them. We now have fewer options in Oklahoma for health care.

Blue Cross Blue Shield began notifying 40,000 Oklahomans it will no longer offer the Blue Choice provider network to individuals. CommunityCare of Oklahoma, a Tulsa-based company offering health maintenance organization plans, has notified the Federal Government it plans to drop out of the Affordable Care Act market. GlobalHealth, another Tulsa-based HMO insurer, said it has already notified Oklahomans it is leaving the Affordable Care Act market. Assurant Health, a Wisconsin company that has also covered Oklahomans, has now notified the government it is leaving the health care coverage area. UnitedHealthcare, the new participant in Oklahoma's Affordable Care Act market, has not announced the details of the plans it will offer, but State officials said its rates will be competitive. That will be interesting because next year the rates in Oklahoma will go up, on average, 35 percent. That is not some projected number. That is the actual number that rates will increase in my State—35 percent.

It is interesting to me that yesterday on this same floor I heard arguments back and forth about the cost-of-living increase and the need for individuals who are in a vulnerable position and are receiving Social Security—need that help for a cost-of-living increase. I completely understand the dynamic of that, but at the same time individuals who would support a cost-of-living increase for Social Security recipients don't seem to bat an eye when people in my State have health insurance increases of 35 percent next year. Do you know how difficult it is to cover a 35-percent health care premium increase?

While the President was speaking in 2010, he said that the premiums will go up. Under the plan he put into place, the premiums will dramatically go up in my State in 2016. The President said while speaking in 2010: ''The copays will go up unless we don't do something.''

The editorial board of the great Oklahoma newspaper, The Oklahoman, on November 30, said:

> Numerous reports have noted that policies sold through ObamaCare exchanges increasingly rely on very high deductibles with limited provider networks. For someone with a major illness such as cancer, these policies are still beneficial. But for relatively healthy people, the deductibles are so high that there's little functional difference between being uninsured and insured when it comes to an impact on one's personal finances.

I cannot tell you the number of Oklahomans I have talked to who have said this one thing to me: I have insurance because the law requires me to do it, but it is so expensive I cannot use it. So I literally pay for something because I am forced to, but I can't actually use it on a day-to-day basis because the copays are so high.

I hear the same thing from doctors and hospitals. Hospitals were told that their charity care would go down because everyone will be forced to have insurance. Here is what I actually hear from the hospitals in Oklahoma: Their charity care has gone up, all of them. Their charity care and their writeoff have gone up because now those individuals walk into those hospitals and say: I have insurance. But when they get the bill and realize how high their payment will be, they say: I cannot pay it. So the charity care at hospitals has actually gone up.

This is from a statement President Obama made in 2010: ''Patients will be denied the care that they need.'' Well, let me give you an example. On June 4 of this year, there was a highlight of Kaylen Richter, a 4-year-old who was denied coverage under the marketplace for a prescription she needed for her asthma. We have a loss of choice and a loss of competition in my State. Instead of more options, we have fewer options.

Doctors' offices are selling out because physicians can't seem to make ends meet. There are so many requirements on them, they are selling their private practice and going into larger hospital practices. Hospitals are actually having to take in diagnostic facilities. Hospitals are taking care of individual physician practices. Hospitals are combining with other hospitals.

Instead of greater competition, we see a smaller number of hospitals and a smaller number of entities. Instead, hospitals and entities are becoming larger and larger to be able to sustain that. We have even seen that nationally in the insurance market. Because of what is happening in the Affordable Care Act, it is pushing out insurance around the country. Remember the great statement: It is not government-controlled health care, it is insurance. Right now, Anthem, Cigna, Aetna, and Humana are all going through a combining process, where those four insurance companies that are national, large-scale companies realize they cannot make it under the Affordable Care Act and are merging into one giant company to see if they can make it as a giant company, resulting in fewer options, fewer choices, and centrally controlled health care.

How do we turn this back? I will tell you in some ways, you can't. The Democrats and President, who have passed this, have succeeded in permanently changing health care in America.

Those individual physicians who used to practice individual medicine all over the country and have now merged into larger hospitals, you don't undo that. Those individuals who were going to go into medical school but chose not to now, you don't undo that for a generation. These insurance companies that combined into large groups, you don't undo that. The diagnostic facilities that are going out of business and merging with large hospitals, you don't just quickly undo that. They have succeeded at permanently changing health care delivery in America.

The challenge now is, How do we help in the days ahead? What do we do? I will say that some things can be done. We can continue to provide greater options, but the first thing we can do is stop the hemorrhaging. First, do no harm. First, engage and try to help the people who are affected by this.

I have offered an amendment in this bill that deals with something called the health care compact. It allows individual States that want to be able to manage their health care to be able to manage the health care in their State. This may seem like a crazy idea except it is already done in every single State right now. Every single State already has a Medicaid process, has a health care authority, and has already made decisions which are severely limited by Federal regulations, but that structure is already in place to take care of the most vulnerable in our Nation.

The health care compact would allow States to be able to broaden their authorities and to be able to do what needs to be done in order to take care of the individuals in their State, as my State has tried so hard to do with Insure Oklahoma and other options to be made available to people in my State that are being forbidden by the Federal Government. This would open that back up and would allow that competition.

I can assure you that every time I speak to smaller rural hospitals in my State, they cannot get the attention of CMS and the Federal Government because they are small and rural and people in DC don't know where they are located and they don't have a big enough lobbying voice. They are just another one of those community hospitals out there. That doesn't happen if they are interacting with people in my State. Because those health care parameters are being set by people in Oklahoma City and our State capitol, they know every small rural hospital and the dynamics and difficulties there. They are not last in line. They are a part of the family.

Allowing individual States to be able to make health care decisions through a health care compact that actually allows that State to be able to manage health care in their State is a tremendous asset. My State, along with eight other States, has asked for that. It is not an unfair request. It is something we should make available to States that choose to do that.

Will every State choose to do that? No. Some States will probably want the Federal Government to be able to manage their health care. Those States are free to do that, but for States that want to be able to have that choice, allow them to have the freedom to do that. If they have the structure in place to fulfill the needs within their State, why would we forbid it? Why in the world would we say that those of us in Washington, DC, know and care more for Oklahomans than Oklahomans? When the folks in Washington, DC, say: No, we care more about that State and those people in that State rather than the people of that State, I think they are misguided. This can be done differently.

What are we up against? We are up against real people who face real issues. It has been incredibly difficult for them to be able to walk through the ObamaCare transition. This is not about patient protection, and it has been far from affordable as prices continue to go up.

Let me read one story from my State. It is from a lady who lives in a rural area in my State, which has been one of the toughest areas. The Affordable Care Act assumes everyone lives in New York City or some metropolitan area. Welcome to the rest of America. Not everyone lives in big, urban settings. This is one of those folks. She lives in a rural area, not too far, but a good distance, from Oklahoma City.

She said she sold some land recently—and by the way, she is on a health care exchange. She sold some land recently, which we do in rural America. That made her income go up significantly for that 1 year—one land sale. She said the marketplace doesn't see it as a 1-year thing, so they take all the information about her subsidies on that before taxes. So it raised her premium from $43 to $400. She said she is going to try to figure out a way to be able to manage that.

Then she says this: Why does she have to pay so much for a plan that is not even usable in her area? No one will take her insurance, and providers are dropping it because they are not getting paid. She has to travel now all the way to Oklahoma City so she can find care at all. All she is looking for is an affordable option and providers in her area that will actually take it. It is one thing to say it provides an option. It is another thing to say people can actually access that option.

We can do better as Americans. This is a conversation we should have. Let's have it. Let's talk about a better way to be able to do this. This is not about fixing something. This is about a transition that is happening in health care in America that needs to be corrected. We can never go back to where we were. There has been too much permanent damage in the system. Now it is a matter of what can be done that is best for people—not what is best for the Federal Government but what is best for the people of our States. Let's do it.

I encourage the adoption of my amendment, and I encourage the adoption of this reconciliation package that is before our Nation and this body in the days ahead.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I have a few remarks to respond to my colleague's remarks, and then I ask—I am not going to be long—to be immediately followed by Senator BLUMENTHAL.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. President, I would have objection to that request if I am not able to respond to the comments she makes.

Mrs. BOXER. OK, I will just yield to the Senator from Connecticut for a question, and I will give him his time that way.

My colleague from Oklahoma came down, and, first of all, he talks about ObamaCare and forgets the fact that there are millions and millions and millions of Americans who now have insurance, the same kind of insurance he has as a Senator and I have as a Senator. He forgets the fact, No. 1, that we have seen more people insured than in modern history. He conveniently forgets that fact. He forgets the fact that there are no limits on coverage. Insurance companies can't cancel a person's health insurance.

He talks about children with great eloquence—and I am sure he is a fantastic parent—but he forgets that 17 million children with pre-existing conditions are insured, which is a pretty important point.

I really have to take offense to some of the remarks of my colleague. He makes an eloquent point about States' rights. He finishes his argument about ObamaCare saying: Don't have the Federal Government tell my State what to do. Well, in essence, ObamaCare doesn't do that. We have an exchange. But, yes, we do require people to get insurance. That is true, and that comes from the plan of a Republican Governor named Mitt Romney. Then he says: Leave my State alone. Then he wants to take away a woman's right to choose an abortion. He wants to do that. He thinks the Federal Government should do that. So he makes an eloquent point about States' rights, but he, as a Senator who doesn't believe in abortion—and that is his total right, and I respect it and I defend it—basically says he wants to decide for everybody in the country that they shouldn't be able to have an abortion because he doesn't approve of that. What makes his opinion more important than mine? There are dozens—it isn't. This is America. We all have different views about when life begins, about Roe v. Wade. Yet he stands here and uses rhetoric that I say is irresponsible. That is my opinion. It is my opinion, not his.

Now, the Senator started off his discussion by saying the truth, that he has a beautiful wife and a beautiful family. Well, I want the Senator to know I have a handsome husband and a beautiful family. So he has a beautiful wife and a beautiful family, and I have a handsome husband and a beautiful family. What the heck does that have to do with anything else? We are both parents. I am a grandparent. I gave birth. What does that have to do with this conversation? The fact of the matter is it is not about your beautiful family or my beautiful family. It is about the beautiful families out there who, A, need insurance, and B, will make their own decision in America about when life begins, and who will make their own decision in America as to whether they support Roe v. Wade.

Then my friend says that someone in his family survived cancer—and thank God. I have had friends who have survived it, and I have friends who have died from it and family members as well.

This conversation has nothing to do with our lives personally. It has to do with the other lives that we impact when we say we are going to take away health care from 3 million Americans who get it from Planned Parenthood.

Now, my friend lectures us. He has done this before. He and I have gone at this before. It is fine. He talks about his deep feelings about how he is against abortion at any stage. Then why doesn't he come to the floor, after all his rhetoric—I listened to it and I am offended by it, frankly—why doesn't he come down here and right a wrong that says it is a crime to have an abortion and you should go to jail. That is what he is basically saying, if we listen to his rhetoric, the words he used. No, he doesn't do that. I checked his legislative record. He just wants to defund organizations that are operating under complete legality—under Roe v. Wade, the law of the land.

Abortion has been legal since 1973. The Senator doesn't agree with it. I have total respect for that. But if you think it is a crime, then go ahead, instead of coming here and giving these speeches about those of us who happen to believe it is up to a woman to decide these issues. He is really basically saying we are advocating a crime, and that is offensive. I would never say that to my friend, never. And then, of course, the whole party over there is attacking an organization that is operating legally under the law. Ninety-seven percent of what they do is breast cancer screenings, STD screenings, cervical cancer screenings—saving peoples' lives. I have met them. I have looked them in the eye. I know what I am talking about.

So if you don't think that 3 percent of the work Planned Parenthood does—which is absolutely connected to reproductive health, the 3 percent—then come down and say it is a crime. But I bet none of my friends would do that, because if I went to my people and I said Republicans think you should go to jail if you have an abortion or go to jail if you take a contraception—some of them feel that way, not all of them—they would really be in trouble at the polls.

When you make these verbal attacks on people who don't agree with you, sir, your words matter. Your words matter. They have an impact. You are here because you are eloquent. Your words have an impact, and if what you want to have happen is to put people in jail for performing a legal procedure, come down here and do that, but don't come down here and say what you think is a crime and then say, therefore, we are going to defund an organization that is operating illegally.

Now, my friend from the other side of the aisle may not like it, but 3 million people count on Planned Parenthood, and his approach is an attack on those 3 million people. More than—I don't know how many people live in Oklahoma, but I would assume it is fewer than that, perhaps.

This obsession in repealing ObamaCare, despite the fact that it is helping so many people, is of epic proportions. We have seen a repeal in the House of Representatives 52 times.

I wonder if my friend from Connecticut wanted me to yield for a question or if he is going to wait.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. I will wait.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, just to sum it all up, it is offensive to hear someone describe what is the law of the land as a criminal act. It is offensive, to describe it as a crime. But more than that, if that is what you believe—and I respect your right to believe it—then come up here and do what you are doing. Overturn Roe v. Wade. Tell the women of America they have no right to choose anymore. If that is what you want to do, go ahead and do it. If you want to make it a crime, make it a crime. That is honest. What is dishonest is to attack an organization that is acting within the law, which is helping 3 million people, and I would say that is what this debate is about.

I just hope the Murray amendment passes today. It will send a strong signal. And if it doesn't pass, we know this bill is going to be vetoed, because this President understands that this government is not the be all and end all. We are not the moral voice of the universe. We are not. People don't even like us as an institution. Let them make up their own minds in their own homes, with their own God, with their own family. I support them, whatever their decision is. Whether they are pro-choice, whether they are anti-choice, I will fight for their right to decide for themselves, but I will not force my view on somebody else. That is what being pro-choice means, that you are willing to understand that there are different positions. I don't have every answer, and the Senator from Oklahoma doesn't have every answer. It is called humility. I don't have the answer. I will trust my constituents to make that decision.

I hope that we will stop this attack on Planned Parenthood. If this is really about a woman's right to choose, let's have that debate. If you want to call it a crime, which I have heard on this floor, then put your bill out there. Tell people they are committing a crime. Put them in jail. Do that. We will have the debate, and we will win that debate, but don't go after organizations that are acting completely within the law.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I yield such time as the Senator from Oklahoma needs to respond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SULLIVAN). Senators are reminded that they will refer to each other in the third person.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LANKFORD. Thank you, Mr. President.

That was actually the first thing I was going to say, that we refer back to Senate rules that we are to address the Presiding Officer rather than each other, and I appreciate the Presiding Officer acknowledging that, according to Senate rules.

My simple statement today was not intended to be offensive. In fact, I think if I went back through the transcript of what I said—I am looking for what was offensive rhetoric that was stated multiple times by the Senator from California. As I try to think back through what was offensive rhetoric, my saying that children have ten fingers and ten toes, unique DNA, and a unique fingerprint doesn't seem to be offensive. I think also if I went through the legislative record, I never talked about criminalizing anything. I heard multiple times through a conversation on the floor that I was criminalizing, criminalizing, criminalizing. I was actually speaking out for millions of children each year that die and saying: Would we not want to reconsider the new science that has been available in America for decades now, to look inside the womb and see ten fingers and ten toes and unique DNA and a fingerprint that is different from the mom or the dad, and to understand that we have a basic principle as Americans to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? That is a unique value.

Even the Supreme Court, when they ruled on Roe v. Wade, talked about viability. Current science continues to press on what is viable. A friend of mine delivered last year a little girl that was 14 ounces. That little girl is a healthy little girl now over 1 year old, continuing and doing fine. In 1973 that child would not have been viable. She is very much a child. She is beautiful.

As for this whole conversation about millions of people losing insurance if ObamaCare goes away and don't I care about millions of people and insurance, the issue is not millions of people being covered. There are other ways to be able to help millions of Americans. As I acknowledged when I spoke, there are real issues in health care delivery in America and there are significant issues that continue to this day. My simple statement was that those issues get larger and larger, and my concern is that while individuals would stand up and say we have millions of people covered, they ignore a 35-percent increase of premiums in my State. They ignore the reality of a growing copay in my State and that people are forced by law to buy a product they cannot actually afford to use. My simple statement is this: Can we not acknowledge—not that there are not millions of people not newly covered—that we have millions of people now that have a coverage that they cannot use and cannot afford to keep yet they are compelled by law to do it. In fact, they become criminals if they don't buy the health care coverage required by law. These are real issues and they really do need dialogue. Good civil dialogue will help us work these things out—and centering in on the facts.

With that, I yield back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 2876

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, I want to thank my colleagues from Oklahoma and California for this exchange of views, and most particularly I want to thank my colleague from the State of Washington for the amendment that she has offered that would, in effect, remove or eliminate a harmful provision in the budget reconciliation bill, a provision that would eliminate funding for Planned Parenthood and other providers of reproductive health services for women. Very importantly, it would also establish a fund to assist the Department of Justice in monitoring and combating violent opposition to women seeking access to lawful reproductive health services.

We can have a broad and comprehensive debate on a great many of the subjects that are related to the amendment offered by Senator MURRAY, but the simple fact is that funding for Planned Parenthood helps with women's health care. It provides services such as cancer screening, birth control, and STI testing and treatment that simply are inaccessible and unavailable to those women anywhere else. For all the talk about alternatives to Planned Parenthood, the women who receive services through Planned Parenthood have nowhere else to go in so many instances. In the majority of the care provided by Planned Parenthood, cancer screenings, birth control, and STI testing and treatment result in pregnancies that are wanted and intended and produce healthy children, as opposed to pregnancies that are unintended and unwanted, which certainly in this body and in America generally, no one wants to see.

So I hope that we have common ground here, that an organization such as Planned Parenthood, which does so much good, and the men and women of Planned Parenthood, who have so much courage and fortitude in the face of threats and intimidation that confront them every day, should be supported, not demeaned or dismissed. Their funding should be enhanced, not diminished. So far as enforcement is concerned, the Department of Justice should be doing more and doing better. It should be provided with those funds that will assist in combatting and monitoring the violent opposition to women who are seeking services. We have seen in just the past few days the impact of that violence, tragically, in death and injury in Colorado. But that tragedy is simply the tip of ongoing and apparently unceasing threats and intimidation at many of those clinics and health care services around the country. So I say with sadness—not anger but grief—in seeing the horrific impact of this violence, that the services are necessary, health care should be supported, and violent opposition should be monitored and prosecuted wherever it occurs.

Today I pay tribute to clinicians, professionals, volunteers, escorts, and all those who support Planned Parenthood and who continue their work in the face of the dangers that confront them day in and day out. I hope my colleagues will support me in endorsing Senator MURRAY's amendment so we can ensure women continue to have access to these necessary basic health care services.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. At the end of the year, Mr. President, when there is so much to do, I think it is particularly important for this body to try to find common ground on difficult issues, to try to be bipartisan. I mentioned it yesterday, but literally 24 hours ago, I joined with the senior Senator from Iowa, Mr. GRASSLEY, on a bipartisan effort to deal with this enormous challenge of making sure that when we have breakthrough cures for serious illnesses here in our country, Americans are going to be able to afford them. Senator GRASSLEY and I teamed up for 18 months, reviewed 20,000 documents, did an exhaustive inquiry into the new drugs that have come out to deal with hepatitis C, and they are extraordinary drugs. The question is, Will Americans be able to pay for them? Senator GRASSLEY and I thought it was very important to do it because this is what the future is going to be about.

I know the distinguished Senator's son is very interested in these health issues. As we try to get cures for Alzheimer's, diabetes, heart disease, and the question of hepatitis C, it is wonderful to have the cure. The question is, Is it going to be beyond the reach of the people? Senator GRASSLEY and I, for over 18 months, worked painstakingly in a bipartisan kind of way, and it has been very well received. So 24 hours ago we were talking about that, and what I am so troubled about this morning is that when we need bipartisanship more than ever, we are looking at a partisan reconciliation bill that, in my view, will undermine women's health care in this country by denying funding to Planned Parenthood.

My view is that to take away health care choices from American women that have nothing to do with abortion—particularly after the horrific act last week in Colorado—is just an act of legislative malpractice that is beneath the Senate.

I note that it is going to get a veto if it hits the President's desk. My hope is that this body will not let it get that far.

It is long past time, in my view, to end the ongoing campaign to undermine the fundamental right of all women to make their own reproductive choices and access affordable high quality health care. Millions of American women, including tens of thousands in my home State of Oregon, turn to Planned Parenthood for the routine health care services that this bill puts at risk. I have read this list on the floor before, but it appears not to be sinking in. So let me repeat it. This bill, for millions of women, could eliminate access to pregnancy testing, possibly gone; and birth control, possibly gone; prenatal services, possibly gone; HIV tests, possibly gone; cancer screenings, possibly gone; vaccinations, possibly gone; testing and treatment for sexually transmitted infections, possibly gone; basic physical exams, possibly gone; treatment for chronic conditions, possibly gone; pediatric care, possibly gone; hospital and specialist referrals, possibly gone; adoption referrals, possibly gone; and nutrition programs, possibly gone. When you wipe out Planned Parenthood's funding, you dramatically curb access for women in this country to health care services that have absolutely nothing to do with abortion. I know that there is a smear campaign out there that says that is not the case, but it is.

Senator MURRAY and I have a proposal that has taken a different tack. Our amendment says that instead of putting women's health care at risk, let's do more to guarantee that women in Oregon and Washington and Alaska and across the country get the high quality care they need. Let's help our health care clinics treat more women, and let's help them keep their patients safe when they walk through that door. The proposal that Senator MURRAY and I have put forward, in my view, is worthy of support from Democrats and Republicans. That has always been the case.

I have enjoyed talking to my new colleague from Alaska, and we talked about what has happened to this question of the Senate's historically bipartisan approach, which is why I spent some time talking about how proud I was to team up yesterday with the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa, Mr. GRASSLEY, on this question of making sure that when there are breakthrough blockbuster cures, people can actually afford them and can actually get them. Those kinds of issues, along with women's health, ought to be a bipartisan cause. It has historically been a bipartisan cause. My hope is that my new colleague from Alaska, the distinguished Presiding Officer of the Senate, is going to continue that as we talk about that kind of historical approach where we try to find common ground on issues such as women's health care.

I also wish to note, colleagues, the reconciliation bill involves the Senate Finance Committee. Chairman HATCH, of course, chairs the committee; I am the ranking member. We have a significant role with respect to these public health programs, and we have tried to work in a bipartisan way. But this reconciliation bill is a rejection of bipartisanship. It is going to pump more noise into the echo chamber, but my view is it is going to drive the parties further apart in this effort that I look forward to talking to our new colleague about, which is how we are going to get people together to work in a bipartisan way for improving women's health care.

When you create such a vitriolic fever pitch, there are obviously real consequences. To me, the politics of hostility and extremism help spark a culture of violence. And amid that dangerous and toxic culture, a man walked into a Planned Parenthood clinic determined to do enormous harm. In my view, it attacks women's health. It is an attack on the American public, and it cannot be tolerated. It must be fought and resisted at every opportunity.

At a moment when the Senate has a long list of issues to wrap up before the year's end and many serious challenges to face, my view is that we ought to be in the business of trying to solve problems, not create more of them. It is not as if there is a shortage of things that have to be addressed; we have plenty of stuff. So why in the world would we want to reject the Senate's long tradition of bipartisanship and take a very partisan turn with this reconciliation bill?

I hope my colleagues will support the Murray-Wyden amendment when we vote on it, end the campaign against women's health, and do everything we can to restore the historic tradition of this body working in a bipartisan way on women's health.

Without going into too much of the history when I was thinking about coming over and thinking about the tradition of the Senate, one of the first things that happened when I came to the Senate is I had the opportunity to work with our former colleague Senator Snowe of Maine, who was a champion of exactly these kinds of issues: choices for women and improvements in women's health care.

We can have all of that again—men and women working together in the Senate on behalf of the States that sent us to support improvements in women's health. To do that this week you have to support the Murray-Wyden amendment.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I support the reconciliation bill that is before us. It will do the job. It will end the Affordable Care Act that the American people rightly have opposed, and it will put us in a position to repeal this monstrosity of a 1,700-page bill that was jammed through Congress in the last hours before Christmas Eve in 2009.

I remember that day very well. It was a strict party-line vote and was passed despite the objections of the American people. It resulted in quite a number of people who voted for it not being in the Senate or the House again, and it remains a decisive issue for our country.

Six years ago, the American people did not favor this legislation, they resisted it. But the Democratic leadership and President Obama determined they were going to pass it, no matter what the people said. They were going to get this done, and they rammed it through on Christmas Eve of 2009, even though Scott Brown was elected a month later in Massachusetts on a campaign to kill the bill. Had he been here at that time, there would have been only 59 votes, insufficient votes to shut off debate, and the bill would not have passed. He won in Massachusetts—one of our most liberal States—on a campaign that said: I will be the vote that kills this legislation. So I want to say first and foremost that the American people knew this wouldn't work. They opposed it from the beginning, they opposed the philosophy of it, and they knew we were going to have a mess on our hands.

Now we have a majority of Republicans in both Houses. There are 54 Republican Senators in the Senate. We are going to move this reconciliation bill, and it will end the effectiveness of ObamaCare. But we know the President will veto it.

I will just say this, colleagues. This is a historic moment. This is a moment of great importance nearly 6 years after this bill passed. You can be sure the people who pushed it to passage were absolutely confident that although the people opposed it then, they would get used to it, they would go along with it, and it could never be repealed. But that has not happened. The voters have elected Members of Congress to oppose this legislation. The polling data shows continued strong opposition to this legislation. What we are going to do is establish that the elected Congress, a majority in both Houses, opposes this terrible law and we will vote to end this incredible piece of legislation.

We knew it was bad, but there was no way we could have understood what was in all of those pages. Health care is utterly complex. It is so different in every state from Wyoming, Alabama, New York, Massachusetts, and California, and even cities within the States—it is all different. So, a one-sized-fits-all approach dictated by the federal government simply will not work.

The Federal Government cannot run anything very well, frankly. We absolutely do not need to be involving ourselves in and dominating health care in America. That is not the way to get better health care for our people.

It was obvious from the beginning that we were going to have high costs and difficulties, but it actually rolled out with more difficulty than people could have imagined, starting with the failed computer systems. We had Democrats and Republicans concerned over how it was being carried out. It was bad from the beginning, and things are not getting any better.

One of the most dramatic promises the President of the United States made to the American people was in September of 2009. In pushing for this legislation, he said:

The plan I'm announcing tonight would meet three basic goals. . . . it will slow the growth of health care costs for our families, our businesses, and our government.

Well, that has not happened. In fact, health care costs for the insured in America are surging. In Alabama we are seeing 28 percent increases in premiums. I am going to read some letters from people who say what has happened to their insurance premiums and how incredibly high the deductibles are. No one has written my office to tell me that their healthcare costs have decreased.

President Obama went so far at one point to promise that his health care plan would ''bring down premiums by $2,500 for the typical family.''

The American people didn't buy that. They have heard these kinds of big government schemes before. They want to go to their doctors. They were pretty confident in their plans, and they were worried about costs, so this promise meant a lot to them. The President of the United States had said that costs were going to come down. That meant a lot, but they were skeptical. Their instinct, though, was correct because it hasn't happened, and health care costs have continued to go up.

The administration has acknowledged that many consumers will see noticeable premium increases—and indeed we have—when buying health care on the ObamaCare exchanges in 2016. According to Health and Human Services' own data—government's agency—premiums would increase by an average of 7.5 percent for the benchmark silver plans in 2016 in 37 States using the exchanges, which includes Alabama. But, the rates for the benchmark plan in Alabama will increase by even more than that in 2016—by 12.6 percent.

For 2016, Blue Cross Blue Shield of Alabama, the largest insurer in the State, reported an increase of 28 percent for individual plans and 13.8 percent for small group plans. These are huge costs. Currently, Blue Cross Blue Shield plans on the Obamacare exchange cover about 174,000 Alabamans. This is real money for a lot of people.

BCBS initially proposed to increase the premiums for the platinum plans, the highest coverage, by 71 percent but later reported a final increase of 28 percent. We saw the same trend with the gold plans—BCBS initially requested a 53 percent increase, but it was finally reduced to 28 percent.

UnitedHealthcare, the second largest insurer in the State and one of the largest in the country, reported an average increase of 24.5 percent. This amounts to real money out of the pockets of real Americans.

So, it is clear that the healthcare law is fundamentally raising costs, reducing choice, and is opposed by the American people.

In June of 2009, President Obama stated:

If you like your health care plan, you will be able to keep your health care plan. Period.

That meant a lot to people. A lot of people said: Well, if they do all that—but if I can keep my plan, I am not too worried about it, as long as I can keep my plan.

Did that turn out to be true? No, it did not. By the end of 2013, the Associated Press reported that 4.7 million Americans received cancellation notices for their insurance plans due to the Affordable Care Act.

In 2013, PolitiFact defined the ''Lie of the Year'' as President Obama's promise that ''If you like your health care plan, you can keep it.''

They just said it. Costs are going down, and you can keep your health care plan if you want to. They continued to say that, and they were able to get the law through Congress. But even then, the polling data showed the American people did not support this plan. Scott Brown of Massachusetts ran on it in the liberal State of Massachusetts. He said: Elect me, and I will be the vote that kills it. But, they got it done before he could take office.

Under this so-called ''affordable act,'' we have higher premiums and higher deductibles. Great Scott, I am amazed at how high the deductibles have become. This is a communication from an individual in the Birmingham area. He wrote to me in June of this year:

I am an owner of a small 10 person CPA firm in Vestavia. In our group plan offered by BCBS, for our family of 5 our BCBS health insurance went up by $6k a year last year and we are facing more increases this year from BCBS. In our case, this puts our family spending right at $24,000 a year on health insurance. We are blessed enough that we don't qualify for a subsidy and our new policy has less coverage much higher deductibles and more out of pocket costs than ever before. But that said, we are currently spending 18% of our family's AGI on health insurance premiums.

He is not happy.

Another individual from Mobile, AL, writes me:

First year premiums 300 per month, last year 405 dollars per month and now for 2016 premium to be 1562 per month. I am being penalized for having worked all my life and having a retirement and income that puts me in an area with no subsidy. The premium is more than what I get from Social Security. This is going to put me into a area where we decide, my wife and I, on whether or not to get insurance.

This is from a Ph.D., who wrote:

For the first time, in 2011, my medical insurance premiums exceeded my mortgage, and they have continued to climb ever since. I now pay over $1,400 a month for mediocre coverage, and it's breaking us. . . . We need a new approach that is market driven and consumer oriented, an approach that doesn't penalize people for failure to participate in the market through a cleverly disguised fine designed to coerce participation from the free citizens of these United States.

Another individual in the Montgomery area wrote:

We just received notification at my place of employment that our health insurance premiums are going [up] at least 25 percent this year and possibly 40 percent next year. As the controller here, with 100 employees, we cannot afford these increases. We have already seen our benefits reduced to try to keep the costs lower but if we keep on at this rate we will be paying even more for less coverage.

That is the real world. And I feel strongly that this is happening out there all over our country.

What I want to say to those who are frustrated, who think nothing can be done, that is not so. What will be demonstrated today is that the majority of both Houses of Congress has the ability to pass legislation that will essentially eliminate this plan and require a complete overhaul of our health care system. We have the votes to do it. Yes, it will be vetoed by the President of the United States. He has rejected any and all improvements ever since the bill was passed. He has fought virtually everything that would make the bill better. No changes can be made in this legislation. But he won't be President forever. We are going to have another President soon. That is a fact. And this new President can sign a reconciliation bill. We will then be able to improve health care in America, to use common sense and not create a government bureaucracy of monumental proportions, and to actually serve the people we represent. We can enable them to have the type of health care policies that they need, at prices they can afford, and help people in need, in the same way we do today. But, we will eliminate this entire government takeover of healthcare.

Several years ago, when asked if he believed in a single-payer plan for health care in America, Senator REID, the Democratic leader, said: Yes, yes, absolutely yes. I raised that in the Committee on the Budget, and we had two Democratic members say: I, too, believe in a single payer for health care in America. One said: I will acknowledge the health care law is not workable today, and the only way to really make it work is to go to a single payer—in other words, a government-dominated health care system in America. I don't think that is the right way to go. The American people don't think that is the right way to go. They oppose that now, they opposed it steadfastly throughout, and they are being proven correct. It is not working. The promises made for it were wrong then and are being proven wrong every month that goes by.

Mr. President, this is an important vote. Don't let anyone suggest it is not. It is a definitional vote: Do you want to fix the broken health care system or do you want to just continue it with no real reform? That is the choice.

I hope we will have bipartisan support for making this kind of change. I hope and believe that if this legislation is vetoed by this President, we will have a new President in not too many months who will sign such legislation and allow us then to create the kind of positive health care system the people of this country deserve.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I want to say that it has been interesting to hear the debate. It has touched on a lot of things that are close to my heart and that I know are close to a lot of other people's hearts, which is getting health care to more people—health care that is affordable, health care that wasn't available before—and also, frankly, making sure we don't have attacks continue on an organization called Planned Parenthood that delivers lifesaving health care to 3 million Americans each and every year.

There are a couple of points I would like to make. In a very strong debate I had with the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. LANKFORD, I stated that I was offended because I believed that—Mr. President, I will go through you. The Senator basically said that those of us who are pro-choice are essentially supporting a crime against children, and he took issue with that and said he didn't. Well, I want to place in the RECORD his exact words, if I might.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. This is from the transcript. After talking about abortion, he says:

Why would we continue to supplement the death of children?

''Why would we continue to supplement the death of children?'' As I read the English language, that would be an accessory to a crime. So I stand by my words. And I would say again, if the issue is whether abortion should be legal, that is a fair issue. And I think if people feel it is a crime, then they ought to come down here with their legislation to put women in jail. I think that debate would be important. But they shouldn't attack an organization that is legal—Planned Parenthood—that is living within the law, and 97 percent of what they do has nothing to do with choice, and the other 3 percent is totally legal.

The GOP has tried to repeal ObamaCare dozens of times. This is another time. I do agree we have to fix certain aspects of the Affordable Care Act, ObamaCare. Absolutely. In my State, it is a raging success. In California, I want you to know we have 40 million people, so this is a very big test case. We are like the fifth or sixth largest country when it comes to the economy. We have seen the uninsured rates in California drop from 17.2 percent in 2013 to 12.4 percent today—in 2014. We have seen more than 4 million previously uninsured Californians get some sort of health care coverage. And I can say that, yes, we have to make sure the competition works. What we have in place is not a single-payer law. We have in place an exchange where private companies come in. The competition is important, and if it isn't robust, there are going to be these increases. So I think it is very important. For the people who can't afford to get insurance off Covered California, which is our exchange, we have seen 3.5 million more Californians enroll in Medi-Cal thanks to the Medicaid expansion.

Also, in this country, 30 million women with health insurance are able to access contraception without any cost-sharing. That is very, very important because I would hope we would agree that unintended pregnancies are not what we want regardless of whether we are pro-choice or anti-choice. That is important for planning pregnancies. In 2013 women across this country saved more than $483 million in out-of-pocket costs for birth control.

I know there is concern about ObamaCare that continues and rages on. I think the question is, Do we want to make it work better—of course there are things we can do to make it work better—or do we want to go back to the days when if you had high blood pressure or diabetes, you couldn't get a policy?

I remember so clearly constituents grabbing me by the arm and saying: My son was born with a disability. I can't get coverage. What am I going to do?

People went broke. People lost their homes and they lost their savings before the Affordable Care Act.

As I say, nothing is perfect, nobody is perfect—not each of us, that is for sure—and the Affordable Care Act is not perfect. We need to fix it, but what we have heard over and over again from the other side is not a legitimate point; it is just an attack, a screaming attack against ObamaCare—the Affordable Care Act—and there is nothing in its stead. We have said to the other side: Let us know. Well, the reason there is nothing in its stead is the underlying form of ObamaCare—the Affordable Care Act—is a Republican idea, and it is that everybody needs to get health care, and it was based on Mitt Romney's plan that he put into effect in Massachusetts.

So I could go on and on about the amazing results of the Affordable Care Act. I mean, I have had people come up and say: Oh my God, my child can stay on my policy until age 26. That is amazing. I have cancer, and I used to have a limit on what my insurance would pay. Now those limits are off because of ObamaCare.

So whether it is preexisting conditions, or kicking a child off, or getting sick and then finding out, guess what, that is it for you, I don't want to go back to those bad old days. I am willing to sit down with anyone of good will and fix the parts of ObamaCare that aren't working. That is fine. But, again, what we see constantly is this trying to completely torpedo—and in this case by taking away the funds. In the case of Planned Parenthood, it is just: We do not like the underlying women's health reproductive laws, so we are going after the face of women's health—Planned Parenthood. That is an attack on women.

What we are seeing from the other side is an attack on women, an attack on reproductive health care, an attack on the Affordable Care Act—ObamaCare—which, although not perfect, is saving families, saving lives. This is important.

I hope we will support the Murray amendment today. If that passes, then Planned Parenthood will still be funded. If it fails, the President is going to veto this bill, and we will have enough votes to sustain that. But this is an exercise that is unfortunate because it is an attack on an organization that is doing everything under the law, everything that is legal. They had the president of Planned Parenthood sit for hour after hour after hour after hour, haranguing her—haranguing her—a woman who really, in many ways, is working to save lives because when you discover breast cancer early—I think the Chair would agree with me—it is so treatable and so curable. If you find STDs, you can treat them. If you find cervical cancer in an early stage, you can save a life. That is what they are doing.

As my friend Senator WYDEN said—he is the ranking member of the Committee on Finance and a champion for women's health and health in general—the fact is, 97 percent of what Planned Parenthood does are these screenings, these important screenings. This is basic health care—making sure someone's blood pressure is OK. There are so many people who go there for their first line of health care. The fact that they are in women's reproductive health care—3 percent of their work entails that. It is legal. It is legal. It has been legal since 1973.

I say to my friends on both sides who don't like it, if you don't like it, come down here and try to change the law. Make it a crime. Do what you want. We will fight you. We will beat you. But that would be honest. What isn't honest is attacking an organization that has been in place for almost 100 years and the rhetoric associated with it.

We have seen across this country—I am not talking about Colorado because the facts aren't in—an increase in threats to doctors, nurses, patients, and clinics. We have seen real problems. So what we say matters. What we do matters. I want to thank my friend, who has worked so hard on this. I am so strongly supporting the Murray-Wyden amendment. I think it is absolutely critical. What I love about it is you expand access to health care, but you pay for it. That is really important.

So let's come together over party lines. Let's support that amendment, and let's defeat this attack on the Affordable Care Act, which, yes, we can make better. But to toss it out or to make it unworkable with cuts that we see in these reconciliation bills would be a blow to tens of millions of Americans.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. ERNST). The Senator from Wisconsin.

AMENDMENT NO. 2875

Mr. JOHNSON. Madam President, I was listening to the good Senator from California use a couple words, obviously, calling the health care law the ''Affordable Care Act.'' To use the full name, the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act is a real Orwellian name. She used the word ''amazing'' about the act.

She also accused Republicans of attacking women. Let me read an email I received from a 60-year-old woman in Spooner, WI, who describes an attack on her by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. The email reads:

I am a 60-year-old married female and have maintained an individual health insurance policy since retiring from teaching in June of 2012. Prior to the implementation of the Affordable Care Act, my monthly premium was $276.16 a month. On December 1, 2014, the premium increased by 23 percent to $339.68 to comply with the coverages of the Public Health Service act. That is a 23 percent increase. In August 2015, I received notification that my insurance plan was no longer available, and in order to comply with the Affordable Care Act I would have to have new coverage effective December 1, 2015, with an annual premium of $661.94, a 95 percent increase.

Let me just review that. Prior to the Affordable Care Act, this 60-year-old woman in Spooner, WI, a retired teacher, was paying $276 per month for her health care, and she lost her health care plan. She could no longer buy that plan. Another plan was going to cost $661.94—a 95-percent increase in 1 year.

Today, October 31, 2015, I received notification that the ACA requires all coverage to renew on January 1st of every year, and that effective January 1, 2016, the premium would be $786.68, an increase over the December premium which would be in effect for only 1 month of 19 percent.

So she summarizes:

The increase in my premium between November 2014 and January 2016 is $510, a 185 percent increase.

She asked the very legitimate question of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. She asked: ''How is this affordable?'' Of course, the answer is, it is not, and she was not protected. She goes on:

I have worked since I was age 16, and I have maintained my own health insurance either through my employer or individually. Now at age 60 I find that I can no longer afford the $9,440 annual premium for my health insurance. My husband and I are not wealthy. We have always lived modestly and saved as much as possible so we could live comfortably in our retirement. Now we are penalized for that savings, because our combined incomes, my husband is on Social Security and has income from a 401(k), we do not qualify for any financial assistance.

She ends with a pretty simple sentence, a pretty simple request—a request that I am going to try to honor today. She says: ''Please work to repeal this unfair act.''

Let me review this one more time—again, the results, the attacks, the assault on our freedom caused by ObamaCare, the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. This 60-year-old woman from Spooner, WI, prior to ObamaCare was paying $276 per month for her insurance. She could afford it. She liked her health care plan. She probably liked her doctors. Next year, she will be paying $786 per month, a 185-percent increase—actually 2.3 times higher than what she was paying prior to the Affordable Care Act. Again, she lost coverage she liked. That has been the result of ObamaCare for far too many Americans.

So having listened to the Senator from California talk about how Republicans are attacking women, I think this email from a real person who has been damaged, harmed by ObamaCare in Spooner, WI—I would say the attack on women has come from the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

Earlier this morning I offered my amendment, and I would like to thank Senator CORY GARDNER from Colorado for helping me offer it. It is a pretty simple amendment. It was modeled under the bill I introduced in 2013, the If You Like Your Health Plan, You Can Keep it Act. We have a similar type of amendment. It is designed to protect women who are under attack by ObamaCare, such as this 60-year-old woman from Spooner, WI, to restore their freedom—their choice—to be able to buy the health care they could afford, that suited their needs, that paid for medicine and health care with the doctor they trusted.

That is what ObamaCare has taken away from the American public, from this 60-year-old woman from Spooner, WI. It has taken away that freedom. It has taken away that choice. It has cost her dearly. It has been an attack on that woman from Spooner, WI. That is the reality. I don't care how much lipstick you try to put on the pig we call ObamaCare, the reality of the situation is it has done great harm to real people, and it is past time—well past time—that we repeal it. I will be pleased to vote yes in honor of her request to please work to repair or to repeal this unfair act.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, I congratulate the Senator from Wisconsin for his amendment. I look forward to voting on it, this afternoon, I understand.

This is actually the promise that President Obama made: If you like the coverage you have, if you like your health insurance, you can keep it. But, in fact, we know that has not proven to be true.

I know when the Senator from Wisconsin ran for the Senate, one of the primary motivating factors was his own experience with his own daughter. I have heard him tell that story time and again. I know he feels strongly about it, as well as he feels strongly about his constituents who have been harmed as a result of this law, which has not performed as advertised.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CORNYN. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator mentioned my daughter, who, by the way, just blessed us with a granddaughter just 3 weeks ago. It is a very short story, if the Senator doesn't mind me telling it. It did motivate me to run. I think it illustrates how damaging ObamaCare has been and could be in the future.

Our daughter Carey was born 32 years ago with a very serious congenital heart defect. Her aorta and pulmonary artery were reversed. The first day of life, there was an incredibly dedicated, incredibly skilled medical professional—a doctor who President Obama just weeks before had accused of looking to fee schedules—not that individual doctor but doctors in general—to see what they would be willing to charge to take out a set of tonsils or amputate a foot to make a few more bucks. That charge is so offensive on so many levels because those doctors came in on her first day of life at 1:30 in the morning and saved Carey's life.

Then, 8 months later, when her heart was the size of a small plum, and with 7 hours of open-heart surgery, a team of incredibly dedicated medical professionals in 7 hours of open-heart surgery rebaffled the upper chamber of her heart. Her heart operates backwards today, but she is 32 years old. She is actually a nurse practitioner, practicing in the same hospital where her life was saved. Now she is a new mom, and she made me a new granddad.

Our health care system wasn't perfect prior to ObamaCare, but it was still a marvel. I am so concerned about the loss of freedom. My wife and I just went to renew our health insurance policy. We are buying it in Wisconsin. We can't buy a policy that will pay for care outside of the network. Our freedoms are being restricted. If I had that health care today, would I be able to go to the specialist outside of our network and get that first-class care that saved my daughter's life? I am not so sure. That is why it is vital that we repeal ObamaCare and, at a minimum, vote for this amendment so that if you actually do like your health care plan, this amendment allows you to keep it.

I appreciate the Senator for yielding and allowing me to tell that story.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, I appreciate getting to hear that story again. I have heard that story a number of times from the Senator from Wisconsin. I think it shows how special this effort is to try to get people the health care they want at a price they can afford and how ObamaCare has done just the opposite. Rather than being part of this false narrative about a war on women, there are a lot of women and young girls who have been harmed by ObamaCare, which has been a disaster.

Of course, I remember being here on Christmas Eve, 7 a.m., 2009, when our Democratic colleagues, then in the majority, had 60 votes and they passed ObamaCare without a single Republican vote. I think that was a terrible mistake. It was a terrible mistake to take something as important to most Americans or virtually to every American—their health care—and totally reform the health care system in a partisan way and one that could not be sustained. Indeed, we have seen in the 5 years since that time that our country's health care system is in complete disarray.

We have all read the headlines that describe the double-digit premium increases and the skyrocketing deductibles that make people wonder why they should buy health insurance in the first place. I guess the answer to that is this: If you don't, under ObamaCare you are going to get penalized. That is the individual mandate that President Obama at one point said he was opposed to when he ran for President in 2008, although I guess he came to love it.

But that is the way the government operates when it mandates what you do. It takes away from your freedom, as the Senator from Wisconsin said, but it also uses coercion and financial penalties to force you to do something you wouldn't naturally do because it is not good for you or your family. You are being forced to buy coverage you don't need at a price you can't afford. So the only way the government makes this function—to the extent it has functioned—is out of coercion, out of penalizing the American people and forcing them to buy something they don't want. So it is no surprise that such a massive program of Federal overreach comes with a major pricetag. This is something that we haven't talked about enough.

In order to pay for ObamaCare, the Congressional Budget Office estimates it will cost taxpayers more than $116 billion a year—$116 billion. Over the next 10 years, that pricetag totals more than $1 trillion in new taxes. Now, I know for most of us we can't even conceive of what that number must be, but that is big. That is huge. It is a huge burden on American taxpayers and hard-working families. One reason people are struggling to pay the premiums for their ObamaCare coverage is because over the last 7 years wages have been basically stagnant. Our economy has been bouncing along the bottom, just barely out of range of a recession. So people are finding their cost of living going up—their price for food, their price for health care. Perhaps the only good news in the last few years has been that the price of gasoline has come down because of unrelated reasons. But people are struggling to make ends meet, hard-working middle-class families who previously had been thriving in this economy.

The bottom line is that ObamaCare has left the American people paying more for their medical needs while reducing access and weakening coverage. The people I work for back home are adamant they want this to stop. So that is the vote we will have tomorrow—to stop this huge government overreach that does not serve the interests of the people whom presumably it was designed to protect and to provide access for.

The phone calls and letters and social media posts and face-to-face meetings that I have had in Texas over the last 5 years tell me how ObamaCare has hurt, not helped, hard-working Texans. Last month I received even more letters from my constituents who are exasperated about their health care plans. I heard from Texans who have lost their doctors and their insurance plans for the same reason that the Senator from Wisconsin mentioned. They no longer covered certain specialties that are outside the network, and that is because they have had to try to find a way to economize. What they have done is they have restricted access to doctors and hospitals.

Then there are the rising premiums. Because of the mandates, you are being forced to buy coverage that you don't need. For example, healthy men are being forced to purchase maternity care. It makes no sense. Young, healthy individuals are being forced to buy coverage to subsidize older Americans.

Then there is the matter of the deductibles. If there is one story that I have heard after another, it is from hospitals in Texas, saying that people are admitted to our hospital but they have such a high deductible, it is as if they are self-insured. Many of them can't afford to the pay the deductibles, so we have to eat it. We have to find a way to provide them health care because we know they won't able to pay their bill, particularly if it is not within the deductible.

One constituent wrote:

> We were happy with our insurance, but we didn't get to keep it. We were happy with our doctors, but we didn't keep them.

The same constituent said, ''Our plans to retire early have been sidetracked by the unaffordable cost of healthcare.''

I have also heard from folks who have lost their employer-provided health insurance and are now forced to pay double their previous rate.

One of my constituents wrote:

> Like many other companies [mine] dumped its retired employee medical benefits and said go get your own health care insurance. . . . [Before, it] was only $150 a month. Now, under ObamaCare our [insurance] will cost us $366 a month!

That may not seem like a lot of money to a lot of people, but if you are a retired person and you are on fixed income and if you made plans for your future—including your health care—to see your health care premiums more than double is a big deal.

The same person continued: ''I know where you stand on this issue, but wanted you to see another example of how terrible the problem is.''

That is a good word for it: ''terrible.''

I have also heard from other folks back home who are forced to spend countless hours of time and energy researching new plans because their previous insurance was canceled. The President and his allies in this takeover of America's health care system have said to some people who liked their health coverage that it wasn't good enough, so they basically made it illegal to continue to sell it.

One of my constituents wrote and said:

I have to spend my valuable time researching yet again, a plan that meets my healthcare needs and possibly stays within my budget. . . . where is the affordable in the Affordable Care Act?

That is another good question. I think it is useful to understand that ObamaCare is not a topic that Texans or most Americans are simply indifferent about. People care strongly about making this law a thing of the past. My constituents overwhelmingly want this law repealed and replaced with more choices where people can buy the health care they need at a price they can afford. That does not seem like a lot to ask.

With the increasing reports from across the country about how ObamaCare is hurting American families, there should be no doubt about this vote. Although, I predict this will be a party-line vote where all of our Democratic friends who supported ObamaCare are sticking with it to the very end. But it is unsustainable. It will not work. What we would be more productive in doing is trying to work together to come up with what the alternative would be that would provide people more affordable care and the coverage they need.

The American people have made crystal clear—last November, in particular, when they put Republican majorities in both Chambers of Congress—that they want us to do something about this ill-advised, misguided law. I look forward to delivering on our promise to vote to repeal ObamaCare tomorrow evening before we adjourn for the week.

This legislation we are currently considering would eliminate more than $1 trillion in tax increases and will likely save the American people hundreds of billions of dollars in future spending. This is a time when our national debt is $18 trillion plus. All we are doing is adding more and more debt to future generations who someday are going to have to pay it back. Maybe my generation will not be around long enough to have to pay that bill, but the next generation and beyond will.

By repealing ObamaCare, we can craft a better way to provide health care options that actually work for every American at an affordable price. I look forward to getting this bill passed and hopefully providing relief to millions of Americans who are burdened by ObamaCare.

I wish to close by saying a good word about the chairman of the Budget Committee who has been a counselor, adviser, and navigator of sorts to many of us in this challenging procedural exercise known as budget reconciliation. I am incredibly grateful, not only for the good work he did in assisting us in passing the first budget that we have passed since 2009—that is pretty important—but now shepherding us through this very difficult process and helping us as the new majority to keep our promise to the American people to repeal ObamaCare. When we do that and we vote to pass this repeal of ObamaCare tomorrow evening, it will be in large part because of the invaluable contributions made by the chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from Wyoming, and his able staff. This has been a team effort. There is no doubt about it, but he has been a leader of that team effort.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PARIS CLIMATE CHANGE SUMMIT

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, as the ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, my highest priority is America's security. Let me share with my colleagues how the climate change summit that is taking place in Paris affects global and U.S. security. Climate change is a global problem. Global problems require global solutions. As negotiators from over 180 nations gather in Paris, I think it is important that the Senate take note of this historic moment—when all countries, developed and developing, are finally coming together to tackle the global threat of climate change. The achievement of a new international agreement under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in Paris is our chance to ensure that future generations have the opportunity to enjoy a safer, healthier, and more prosperous world. Time is running out for us to act.

As world leaders gather to find cooperative solutions to combating climate change, I am reminded of the message of Pope Francis's Climate Change Encyclical and the environmental crisis facing our planet. Let me quote from Pope Francis.

The urgent challenge to protect our common home includes a concern to bring the whole human family together to seek a sustainable and integral development, for we know that things can change. . . . I urgently appeal, for a new dialogue about how we are shaping the future of our planet. We need a conversation which includes everyone, since the environmental challenge we are undergoing, and its human roots, concern and affect us all. . . . Climate change is a global problem with grave implications: environmental, social, economic, political, and for the distribution of goods. It represents one of the principal challenges facing humanity in our day.

Pope Francis is correct. World leaders are heeding the Holy See's call for collective action, and for the first time in history, we are on the cusp of reaching an agreement where all countries will commit to doing their fair share to lower greenhouse gases. Now, 187 nations representing 97 percent of the global carbon emitters have already submitted plans to lower or limit their carbon pollution.

U.S. diplomatic leadership helped spur countries like China, Brazil, Mexico, South Africa, and others, some of which were previously reluctant to pledge any action on reducing emissions or to make serious commitments to curb greenhouse pollution. To underscore these commitments, some developing countries are also contributing to the international climate finance mechanisms that will help the world's most vulnerable populations adapt to the world's worst impacts of climate change. China alone has pledged more than $3 billion to this effort.

Now that the United States has finally persuaded the broadest possible group of countries to take actions against climate change, it is no longer true to argue that the United States shouldn't reduce its emissions because developing countries refuse to follow suit. We have gotten them all to act. Paris is the best chance we have of forging an agreement where all countries pledge to lower their carbon emissions.

U.S. leadership brought us to where we are today, and now the United States must seize the opportunity for a truly global agreement to address climate change. The United States voluntarily submitted its carbon reduction goals very early in the process. Our deliberative early action, which included an explanation of the national policies that will result in the achievements of our mission reduction goals, spurred more than 180 countries to do the same.

China, for example, committed to lower its carbon emissions per unit of GDP by 60 percent to 65 percent below 2005 levels and increase renewable energy to account for 20 percent of its electricity generation by 2030. This will require China to build an additional 800 to 1,000 gigawatts of nonfossil electric generation, which is close to the entire installed capacity of all powerplants in the United States.

The global outpouring of support for cooperation is a true testament to the strength of U.S. global leadership on climate change. Optimism and global cooperation in these efforts are at an all-time high, and that is largely due to constructive U.S. engagement. If we want to lock in this progress, we must support a strong and ambitious agreement in Paris.

These initial pledges will not put an end to global warming, but they are a strong first step that sets the international community on a path to limit the rise of temperature by 2 degrees Celsius by 2100. Continuing on our current trajectory would result in a projected warming of 3.6 degrees Celsius by the end of this century. But with the pledges currently on the table in Paris, we can lower this to 2.7 degrees—more than halfway to the 2 degree goal.

More importantly, however, these Paris pledges are only the first wave of action. Actions coming out of Paris will give us a lasting framework whereby countries can update their pledges over time to ensure that they meet their global goal of 2 degrees Celsius.

By implementing their initial commitments and making further investments in clean energy, cheaper renewable fuels will allow for even more ambitious carbon reductions in the future. The Paris agreement alone will not end the threat of climate change, but it is a solid first step—one that includes countries at every stage of economic development.

The private sector has also come out to voice its support for this ambitious agreement in Paris. Already 154 U.S. companies, representing $4.2 trillion in annual revenue, operating in all 50 States, and employing 11 million Americans, have signed the American Business Act on Climate Pledge and are voicing their support for a positive outcome in Paris. It is not just governments. It is also the private sector, which we desperately need for Paris to be successful.

The Paris agreement will help send a strong market signal for clean, renewable energy worldwide, and that long-term certainty is exactly what investors need. If we don't embrace the clean energy revolution that the world is poised to leap forward into, then our competitors will. It will be the doubters and the deniers who will be blamed for the United States' descent from a global leader in clean energy technology innovation.

U.S. deployment of clean energy and technologies has grown exponentially in recent years. Renewable energy generation has experienced the fastest growth of all generation sectors. Since 2008, the cost of clean energy technologies has dropped dramatically, fostering this growth. For example, with wind energy, as of 2014, there were more than 65,000 megawatts of utility-scale wind power deployed across 39 States—enough to generate electricity for more than 16 million households. In solar energy, by 2014 the total capacity of the utility-scale solar PV reached 9.7 gigawatts with 99 percent of these installations occurring after 2008. This trend has continued with 15 percent of all electric generation capacity brought online from January to September 2015 arising from the utility-scale PV.

There is almost limitless growth potential in clean energy. The United States has traditionally led the world in energy technology development for more than a century. U.S. energy innovations brought power and light to the world, and that continued spirit of leadership is powering the global clean energy revolution. Strong outcomes in the international agreement that is coming together at COP21 Paris will be a catalyst in the clean energy revolution. The world is looking to the United States for continued leadership.

This week's announcement of the new Mission Innovation Initiative led by the U.S. Department of Energy and Secretary Moniz, which includes 19 other nations, is a gleaming example of U.S. clean energy diplomacy, sending another strong signal of U.S. cooperation and commitments to growing job and investment opportunities in the United States while providing global clean energy solutions that will allow developing global communities to bypass cheap and dirty power and thrive through deployment of affordable clean energy solutions. It will be U.S. technology helping the global community produce energy in a more cost-effective and cleaner way, thereby creating more jobs in the United States.

Climate change affects us all. The people of Maryland understand that. Those who live on Smith Island in the Chesapeake Bay are seeing their island disappear due to the more frequent storms we are experiencing and the health of the Chesapeake Bay.

Climate change is also a world stability issue. Climate refugees are a real concern for regional and U.S. security, so this is a national security imperative. The solution is COP21 Paris. Two percent Celsius goals will dramatically improve the environmental health of the planet, thereby helping us with our national security. It will give us energy security because we have renewables that are a lot easier to get to and are more plentiful than the fossil fuels. Health energy security will enable us to no longer be dependent on circumstances that occur in other parts of the world. And, yes, we will also create more jobs, particularly by the use of U.S. innovations.

The Paris agreement will serve as an important role in transitioning the world toward more renewable energy which will serve as a source of American job growth and innovation and put America back in control of our own energy future.

Paris is our best opportunity to avoid the most devastating impact of climate change. We need an agreement to ensure that all countries do their fair share to address this problem. In order to lock in years of U.S. leadership, we need an agreement to maintain the clean energy revolution that is so critical to job creation here at home and protecting our Nation's energy security, but most importantly, we need an agreement to make sure we avoid the most catastrophic impacts of climate change that threaten the rights of our children and our grandchildren to pursue a healthy, safe, and prosperous life.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

AMENDMENT NO. 2875

Mr. WYDEN. Madam President, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has offered an amendment dealing with the Affordable Care Act. I have been talking to the staff of both the Finance Committee and the Budget Committee, and frankly it is a real head-scratcher because it appears that our colleague from Wisconsin is seeking to bring back the so-called grandfathered health plans that existed between 2010 and the end of 2013. We are still trying to sort through this, but at this point it looks to me like something of a health care Frankenstein. It seeks to bring the dead back to life by having all those plans that were grandfathered on December 31, 2013, and died on that date magically brought back to life by the Senator from Wisconsin. Many of the plans that were in existence on December 31, 2013, don't exist anymore. Plans continually change. Plans also changed in 2014, and they changed again in the beginning of 2015.

I am a U.S. Senator who believes very strongly in the role of the marketplace in American health care, but it seems to me that the amendment by the Senator from Wisconsin, as it is written, distorts marketplace forces. Knowing the Senator from Wisconsin as I do, I can't believe that would be his intent. We have been reviewing this amendment, and our understanding is that this amendment reflects an approach to private insurance that is not the way private insurance in America works.

I again come back to my desire to work with colleagues on both sides of the aisle and to work in a bipartisan fashion on health care. That is what the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee did over an 18-month period when he was working with me on pharmaceutical issues. Yesterday, we issued an exhaustive report together that was bipartisan. What we were seeking to do was to make sure that the wonderful cures that are going to be coming to America to address horrendous illnesses will also be ones that will be affordable and accessible.

The important point is that this is bipartisan, and that is the way the big health care issues have historically been dealt with. But I don't see how you can turn back the clock on the health insurance market and somehow bring a dead period back to life. Plans change. That is the nature of the private insurance market. That is the way private insurance in America works.

I am sure we are going to have some more conversations about that, but I do want colleagues to know that at this point, I will have to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin because I just don't see how we are going to take, as I said, health plans that died and bring them back to life.

With that, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERTS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS. Madam President, for the first time in 5 years, Congress has enacted a full budget that balances. Under our previous leadership, we only passed one budget. We have to look all the way back to 2001 to find the last time Congress passed a balanced 10-year budget.

It is vitally important that we go through the regular budgeting process to ensure we are being efficient and effective when spending hard-working taxpayers' dollars.

Now that we have a final budget framework, we can have the opportunity to adjust spending and make policy changes to rein in the excesses of this administration. The first step in this is the consideration of the budget reconciliation bill.

We have before us a budget bill that not only reduces the Federal deficit, but it does so by dismantling many of the key provisions of the President's health care law known as ObamaCare. We are more than 5 years into its implementation; however, many of the same problems that those of us who were here during the original debate warned of are still causing harm to consumers, and new issues continue to arise. We continue, unfortunately, to see higher costs, less choice for individuals, and higher taxes.

Prior to open enrollment starting, CMS released the ''2016 Marketplace Affordability Snapshot.'' This shows that across the 37 States that use the Federal marketplace, Kansas included, the cost of the second lowest silver plan, or the benchmark plan, will increase on average 7.5 percent as of next year. That number is more than double for Kansas. On average, they are facing a 16-percent increase in the benchmark plan. I would assume the same thing will happen in Iowa, the State of the distinguished Presiding Officer. This is not the promised reduction in premiums the President promised. This is simply not affordable.

Madison from Overland Park, KS, recently wrote to me about her family's struggles. She said:

> Yet again our rates are going up to the point where we cannot afford our health insurance that I have had since before 2008. Out of network hospital and doctors limit my ability to provide for my children the health care they need.

Madison, you certainly hit the nail on the head.

Even if you can afford the increased premiums to maintain coverage, the high deductibles may make it nearly impossible for you to utilize the health services under your plan or your doctors are no longer in your network, thereby limiting your ability to keep the doctor you liked—another broken promise from the President.

Another local problem of concern for me was the announcement that one of the insurance companies that provided coverage on the exchange in Kansans will no longer be offering plans as of next year. This impacts nearly half of all Kansans enrolled through the marketplace who now will again have to find a new plan and possibly new providers.

We need to repeal this law—a law that includes more than $1 trillion in new taxes over the next 10 years. For Kansas households, the economic impact is an average tax increase of $876 a year.

We need to eliminate the individual and employer mandates. The employer mandate is stifling job creation, it is reducing workers' hours, and it is a disincentive for businesses to grow and expand.

Jeff from Kansas City contacted me about this one and the effect the law is having on his manufacturing business. He said:

> Without an exemption [from the employer mandate] I will be forced to cut my staff below 50 or let ObamaCare simply put me out of business in the year 2016. Taking the penalty by not offering health care to my staff is the least expensive option in 2016 and will still put me in the red.

These are not the options our job creators should be stuck contemplating—reducing staff or facing closure.

The individual mandate tax is set to increase on January 1. Individuals opting not to purchase or those not able to afford to purchase insurance next year will now face a penalty of $695 or 2.5 percent of household income, whichever is higher. Again, let me point out, whichever is higher not lower.

Removing this penalty will not only provide financial relief for these individuals, but it will restore the individual freedom of all Americans to choose whether to purchase the government-approved insurance. We need to repeal the so-called Cadillac tax, which if left in effect will lead to reduced benefits and increased costs for employers. We also need to remove the medicine cabinet tax—that is the medicine cabinet tax—a new requirement that people must obtain a prescription to purchase over-the-counter medication—the things we should not need a prescription for—with funds from people's flexible spending accounts.

This reconciliation bill eliminates many of the core provisions—the foundations, so to speak—of ObamaCare, and without a strong foundation of mandates and taxes to finance this massive overhaul, we can then turn to beginning to fix health care. I emphasize fix health care, not ObamaCare.

We need to give peace of mind to the families hurt by ObamaCare. The relief provided by this package does just that. I urge my colleagues to support this bill so we can then provide freedom to all Americans from the mandates of this law and give us an opportunity to pursue more patient-centered reforms that will improve access as well as lower costs for patients.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

EXPRESSING CONDOLENCES TO THE FAMILIES OF THOSE AFFECTED BY THE SHOOTING IN COLORADO SPRINGS

Ms. HIRONO. Madam President, before I begin my remarks, I wish to take a moment to express my condolences to the families of those affected by last week's shooting in Colorado Springs, including the family of Jennifer Markovsky. Jennifer grew up in Waianae, HI. She was killed this past Friday at a Planned Parenthood clinic in Colorado in a senseless act of violence. I spoke recently to Jennifer's husband Paul to express my condolences to him, their two young children, her parents, and her ohana.

Madam President, I wish to speak on an issue of grave importance to all women of the United States; that is, the Republican efforts to defund Planned Parenthood. One of my first forays into politics happened when as a young woman I wrote to my elected officials and asked them about their views on a woman's right to choose. At that time—1970—Hawaii was considering a bill that would legalize abortion. In fact, Hawaii became the first State to do so for our residents.

Choice to me is not something that should be restricted, whether it is the right to choose to end a pregnancy or the right to access birth control. Having control over one's health care decisions is a fundamental right. When a woman has access to a full range of health care services, she has control over her life and her future. Access to birth control and other reproductive options means that women have real control over their economic and personal security.

This latest attack on women's reproductive rights by defunding Planned Parenthood is a misguided attempt to demonize Planned Parenthood. There is currently no Federal funding for abortion services—a policy that already hinders the ability of lower income women to access a full range of reproductive options. Some States such as Hawaii recognize how fundamentally unfair this is and provide State funding for abortion services.

Limiting the ability of women to access health care services at Planned Parenthood clinics across the country is just one part of the Republican anti-women agenda. They refuse to fund day care, family leave or early childhood education. In fact, one Republican health care proposal would allow insurance companies to eliminate maternity care. What is going on here? On the one hand Republicans want to deny women access to reproductive care, on the other they also want to punish women for having children by not funding programs that support families.

I repeat, Federal law already prohibits family planning funding from being used for abortion services by anyone, including by Planned Parenthood. So the measure before us today does nothing more than deny millions of women across the country access to birth control and other health care services that are not only not prohibited but which are perfectly legal.

The real work of Planned Parenthood is preventive health care services. Birth control, STD screenings, and well women exams are the bulk of services provided by Planned Parenthood and its affiliates. Defunding Planned Parenthood will unjustly punish women who have access to no other health care providers for their basic health care needs.

The harm caused by defunding Planned Parenthood is brushed aside by my colleagues. They will argue that they have provided additional funding to community health centers to make up for the loss of funding for Planned Parenthood. This is a red herring. This very limited additional funding will not and cannot replace Planned Parenthood clinics and their important role as a safety net provided for millions of women across the country.

Defunding Planned Parenthood is nothing more than an attempt by some in Congress to pander to a fringe base. The fact is, the majority of Americans support Planned Parenthood and support health care services for women. The continuing efforts to defund Planned Parenthood are false proxies for banning abortion—that is calling a spade a spade—and all that will happen is that women's health care will be put at risk.

These attacks on Planned Parenthood must end. So let's stop wasting time undermining women's health care and get back to the real business at hand. Let's fund the government. Let's give middle-class families and small businesses tax relief. Let's pass bills to invest in our infrastructure and our children's education. These are all things we need to do in the next week that will actually make a difference—a positive difference—in the lives of millions of Americans.

I ask my colleagues to join me in rejecting this extremely partisan measure before us and move on to the real business of the Senate.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TILLIS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, for those of us who were seeking office for the Senate in 2010, one of the primary issues we were engaged with and heard from tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of our citizens about was the concern over the passage of the Affordable Care Act, now called ObamaCare and now also called the Unaffordable Care Act. That was the bill that was jammed through the Senate on Christmas Eve without one Republican vote. Republicans were denied that vote because the Democratic Party controlled both the executive branch and the legislative branch, with numbers that put them in a position where they could jam anything through that they wanted without any offsets, without any amendments, without any changes, without any improvements, without any input from the other party.

I think we have learned through history that when one party has total control and passes legislation, it doesn't represent what the American people want. They want debate. They want adjustments. They want the other side of the story to be told. Then they want their representatives to be able to come to a kind of consensus in terms of how we would deal with, yes, an important issue called health care for the American people.

Were there needed improvements in our health care system that had to be addressed? Yes, there were. There was consensus—almost—on both sides of the aisle, Republicans and Democrats, that changes could be made, but the way the American people wanted that done was for us to represent their views, to look at all the options, to have some balance, which is generally how major programs that need to be addressed successfully can be addressed successfully.

Welfare reform is an example. Under President Clinton, it was a bipartisan effort, with both parties recognizing that changes needed to be made to a system that wasn't working as well as it could. By working together in a bipartisan way, we ended up with a very effective and efficient new system compared to the old system. That was not the case with ObamaCare.

So throughout the 2010 period of time, when I was campaigning for office, I heard the stories from Hoosiers all across the State—big cities, small cities, rural coffee shops, factories, including employers and employees, and I heard their concerns about how this would play out.

We were promised by the President that we didn't have to worry about losing our health insurance and that if we liked our current plan, we could hang onto it. That turned out to be totally false. We were also promised by the President that this would not cost one penny to the American taxpayer. Now we have the contrast to what this program has cost and will cost over a 10-year period of time, and it comes close to $1 trillion. So one penny compared to $1 trillion—there is a pretty good gap between those numbers. Those were the taxes that were inserted into the Affordable Care Act, or ObamaCare, on the American people that were supposed to cover the cost of up to $1 trillion over a 10-year period of time.

We were told by the President that if we liked our current plan, the premiums would not go up, the premiums would not increase at all, period. Trust me. Take it to the bank. Obviously, that has not been true. We have now seen the rolling out of this done in a way that only the Federal Government could screw it up. Only the Federal Government could fail after spending an extraordinary amount of money—well over a billion to roll out this thing in a totally dysfunctional way.

Today, we continue to hear from our constituents about failed promises, about higher premiums, extraordinarily higher copayments, about how people have not been able to keep the doctor they had, and they are paying taxes to cover something that simply has not worked.

It has been a tortuous process to get to the point where we have the opportunity of not being blocked by the other side. We have an opportunity now that will occur tomorrow to finally get an up-or-down vote on a reconciliation bill that essentially is designed to repeal ObamaCare. There have been many alternatives out there that have been tried, tested, and true in terms of how we can deal with our health care system. We are not just simply walking away, leaving people in a lurch. We are simply saying this whole thing needs to be repealed so we can build a much better way of providing health care for our citizens, and this is the opportunity.

There will be all kinds of amendments. There will be gotcha amendments. I dare you to vote for that. They will be irrelevant to the final issue of what we are doing and what we are voting on. It will be clear to the American people that this is a vote strictly on the repeal of ObamaCare. You are either for it or against it. Come down here and defend it if you like it, if it has worked in your State. I haven't really heard any people coming down and singing its praises. But come down to the floor and say this is why we need it, this is why it is good, and refute what we say here. But I think it is pretty hard. I don't think I heard anybody come down and defend the statement that if you like your health care plan, you can keep it; that it won't cost you a penny, and that your premiums won't rise. We simply know that is not the case. So this is the moment.

We will be able to make our yea be yea and our nay be nay, and the American people will know exactly where we stand, and I believe we will have the votes to pass this in the Senate, as we will have a vote to pass it in the House of Representatives. It will then go to the President, and the President then will know where the Congress stands and where the American people stand, if he doesn't know already.

I would like to mention one aspect of it that has a pretty astounding negative impact on my State, and that is the imposition of a gross sales tax on the sale of medical devices. My State is one of the leading States in the Nation of medical device manufacturers. This tax is levied on their gross sales, not on their profits. In that sense, those small companies that are trying to develop something that will improve people's lives or save people's lives through medical device research and development and then ultimately market it have struggled because through the development process they have to pay a 2.3 percent tax on everything they sell, even if they are not yet making a profit. It has been devastating in terms of employment, in terms of research and development in this cutting edge business and manufacturing that is saving lives and improving the lives of people. So critical to this vote is the medical device tax, which is denying people the opportunity to produce medical devices that save people's lives and enhance their lives.

We have more than 300 FDA-registered medical device manufacturers in Indiana. It is boosting our State's economy and producing technologies that are changing and saving lives, but since the implementation, these companies have had to lay off workers and shelf plans to expand and build new facilities. One major manufacturer had lined up five new plants in Indiana for a significant increase in employment, a significant increase in research and development and production of medical devices, simply to cover the costs they now had to pay on the tax for previous sales of their other products. It is an egregious tax that has affected many companies in the State of Indiana.

In conclusion, how ironic it is that ObamaCare, which President Obama said would increase health care coverage, is actually a barrier to improving lives. So it is long past time for Washington to stop punishing the medical device industry and innovators in Indiana and across this country.

I want to conclude by saying ObamaCare, a poorly written and poorly executed health care plan, is not working for the overwhelming majority of Hoosiers in my State and the majority of Americans. Remember when the then Speaker of the House said: Well, we really don't know what is in this plan; we will have to pass it before we know what is in it. We now know what is in it. We now know what the impact has been. I have been on this floor for hours over the past 5 years talking about real-life examples of impacts of this Unaffordable Health Care Act on Hoosiers. I have given personal testimonies that have been given to me by people. I have heard the horror stories of people losing their insurance, of their premiums skyrocketing, of their deductible putting them in a position where they are not able to afford health care and praying every day that someone in the family won't get sick because they can't even afford the deductible before they get the coverage. This poorly written and poorly executed health care law is not working, and the law's continued unpopularity is a testament to what it has meant for most American families: rising premiums, higher costs, decreased choices, and a poor health care process. All the innovation and things that we could have done had we worked through a normal process on this are sitting on the shelf.

The time is now. It is an opportunity we have been waiting for now going on 6 years. So when we have that vote tomorrow—and despite all the chatter and despite all the attempts to define it as something other than what it is—the real vote comes down to whether you want to continue government-run health care or you want to look for a better model.

With that, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. FISCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. FISCHER. Mr. President, we are on the verge of fulfilling a promise that we made to the American people. They selected a new majority here in the Senate to repeal ObamaCare. In Nebraska, words and promises still mean something. They are not taken lightly. Trust me; Nebraskans will let you know when you aren't keeping your word.

Since the first day I took office, I have heard from Nebraskans about how this law is making it harder, not easier, for them to get health care. Nearly 20,000 people have contacted my office, and they have expressed their concerns about this law to me. They face a new reality and struggle to afford premiums for plans requiring thousands in out-of-pocket expenses. I have come to the floor many times to share these stories from Nebraskans, and unfortunately, these stories continue to come in.

Vivian from Saunders County in the State wrote regarding the deductible on her ObamaCare plan, which is so high that her husband, who is a cancer survivor, is forgoing regular checkups. They simply cannot afford the costs.

Kevin from Chappell, NE, shared his experience with struggling to afford the expensive premium while still facing a $10,000 deductible. He wants answers for why his family is being forced to buy a plan that includes services they just don't need.

Ann from Lincoln shared with me her struggle to get coverage for herself and her two children. After jumping through bureaucratic hoops to get health care coverage, she is now forced to buy an insurance plan that will take 25 percent of her income. That is a quarter of her income.

Some could argue that these are only anecdotes—a small snapshot of what is happening in the State—but let's look at how premiums have changed in Nebraska since this law was passed. Next year, many Nebraskans will see double-digit increases in their health care costs. In 2014, some Nebraskans saw their premiums go up over 100 percent. Why are we still debating whether this law has been a success?

The President has said: ''If you like your plan, you can keep it.'' We have all heard that. Nebraskans were promised they could keep the plans they liked. Well, tell that to the thousands of people in Nebraska who have lost coverage when Nebraska's co-op failed last year. They were blindsided on Christmas Eve with news that they had to choose a new coverage. Now many more Americans are facing this same challenge as over half of the country's co-ops have failed.

Democrats have said this law would help the American people. Americans were promised more. They were promised lower costs for health care. We were promised a $2,500 decrease in insurance costs. Well, clearly that is not the case. This is a mess, and it didn't have to happen.

It is now our duty to fix it. I am proud that Republicans are taking the lead. We are showing the American people our commitment in repealing this law. We can do better. We can provide patient-centered health care. We can let people decide what kind of coverage they need. We can let people take their insurance with them when they move across State lines. We do that with car insurance. But the first step is to end this—a law that costs families more money and doesn't meet their needs.

So I ask, for the sake of all Americans, it is time to take that next step. We need to step up. We need to fix it.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. President, I want to address an amendment that I have for the ObamaCare repeal bill we will be voting on, possibly soon. It is a simple amendment. I think it is an important one, and it addresses part of the $1.2 trillion in tax increases that are embedded throughout ObamaCare. This, in particular, is a tax increase on middle-class Americans who are battling with catastrophic health care challenges and costs. So I think it was a particularly ill-conceived tax increase and I want us to repeal it.

This is what the tax increase was about. Prior to ObamaCare, if a family had out-of-pocket medical expenses that exceeded 7.5 percent of their income, they could deduct from their taxable income any cost above 7.5 percent of their income. ObamaCare raised that threshold to 10 percent, and that has very real consequences. There was an exception for senior citizens, but that exception expires in 2016, and this tax increase on middle-class Americans makes it harder for families who are trying to deal with, to battle some kind of very problematic health situation they are in. It could be a chronic disease. It could be a catastrophic event.

Let me be specific with an example. Prior to ObamaCare, if a family who earned $50,000, for instance, had extraordinary medical costs, for whatever reason, that were, say, $4,500—so 9 percent of their income—that is a huge medical bill for a family who earns $50,000, obviously. Well, at least prior to ObamaCare, they could deduct $750 of it. That portion which exceeded the 7.5 percent of their income was deductible. Under ObamaCare, they can't deduct any of it. They get no deduction.

So think about what we are doing. We are saying that a middle-class, working-class family with unusually, extraordinarily high medical bills should lose the opportunity they have historically had to at least get a modest deduction to help soften the blow of the catastrophic health crisis they are dealing with. I think this is a terrible idea—to hit these folks with this tax increase—especially at a time when they are dealing with these very difficult circumstances or they wouldn't get the deduction anyway.

So I think it was a bad idea and one of many bad ideas in ObamaCare. What my amendment would do is simply restore that deduction to where it was before ObamaCare. It would restore the ability to deduct that extraordinary health care cost when it exceeds 7.5 percent of income rather than having to hit the 10-percent hurdle ObamaCare created.

By the way, I should point out that this is totally a tax increase on middle-class families. The IRS quantified this. They determined that 86 percent of the taxpayers who claim this deduction—86 percent—earn less than $100,000. This isn't a tax deduction for rich people. This is a tax deduction for ordinary Americans who are going through very difficult times.

Having the ability to take this deduction is more important now than it has ever been because ObamaCare has done so much to drive up people's costs. That is not just I saying this. A November 15 New York Times headline read: ''Many Say High Deductibles Make Their Health Law Insurance All but Useless.'' That is the New York Times.

High deductibles are one of the main contributing factors to people having high out-of-pocket costs. So ObamaCare has driven these plans into these high deductibles, thereby forcing people to lay out more cash and at the same time they are saying: Oh, but you can't deduct it like you used to be able to.

On November 2 CNBC reported that ''ObamaCare's cheapest plans just got more expensive.'' There are deductibles that are soaring to over $12,000, out-of-pocket maximums that are near $14,000. People are incurring out-of-pocket expenses like never before, and they are getting hit with the fact they can no longer take the kind of deduction they used to.

This was a bad idea in the first place. It is a tax increase on those who can least afford it—people who are sick, people who are undergoing maybe a terrible accident, some other disaster that caused them to incur these expenses. It could apply to someone who has long-term care expenses for a relative in a nursing home. It could be the special education expenses for a handicapped child. It could be a mom undergoing reconstructive surgery after a mastectomy. It could be a couple seeking to conceive a child needing fertility treatment. There are any number of circumstances for which I don't think we should be punishing people in this fashion.

My amendment would simply, as I said, restore the tax deduction to the threshold we had before ObamaCare and I would urge its adoption.

As I mentioned, I think this medical expense deduction issue is just one flaw of ObamaCare. It is important, but it is a narrow aspect of an unbelievably flawed bill. It is hard to know where to begin with the flaws of ObamaCare, but I would suggest several big categories of problems: The first is higher costs; the second, I would suggest, is the loss of employment; and the third, which is indisputable, is the loss of freedom.

I think higher costs are undeniable. The President promised us that average premiums would fall, they would fall by $2,500 in fact. He was confident enough to give us a figure, and of course the exact opposite is what has actually occurred. ObamaCare premiums have gone up dramatically. In my State of Pennsylvania, premiums are up, for next year alone, 11 percent. That is after several years of increases prior to an 11-percent increase. Whom do you know who has gotten an 11-percent pay raise? I don't know anybody. That is not what is happening. Yet their expenses are going up because of ObamaCare. Deductibles are rising at the same time. So not only does it cost more to buy the insurance, but the insurance covers less.

I have gotten letters from literally thousands of Pennsylvanians explaining their personal circumstances. One letter came from the DiBello family of Montgomery County and says that before ObamaCare they paid $662 a month for a health insurance plan for their family and they had a $6,000 deductible. They were happy with their plan. They were promised if they were happy with their plan they could keep their plan. We all heard that promise. How many times was that promise made? That promise was made to the DiBello family. The only slightly unfortunate problem here is everybody knew it was untrue, including the people making the promise because the legislation explicitly forbids whole categories of plans. How could you keep your plan if it is being banned by the Federal law?

Unfortunately, the DiBello family experienced that. So the plan they are buying that goes into effect in 2016, instead of a $662 monthly premium, they are going to have to pay $1,141, and instead of a $6,000 deductible, they are going to have a $12,800 deductible.

You almost have to wonder what is your insurance paying for if the deductible is that high, but that is what ObamaCare has done to the DiBello family of Montgomery County, PA, and let me assure you they are but one of thousands and thousands of families I have heard from across Pennsylvania who are experiencing similar real difficulties.

I mentioned jobs as another category of problem that ObamaCare has created. Again, I think it is completely irrefutable. We know if you as an employer hire a 50th employee, you are suddenly subject to all the mandates of ObamaCare. That means the costs of health insurance for your workforce go through the roof. It creates a huge incentive not to hire the 50th employee. That is a terrible incentive to have, especially at a time when we have too few people working and we have inadequate wages. Yet this provision guarantees that it will be more difficult to get a job with a company that has 40-some employees.

In addition, ObamaCare puts pressure on employers to cut back on hours for workers because you are deemed to be a full-time worker if you work 30 hours or more. One way to deal with that is to have people work less than 30 hours. The problem is, employees want 40 hours. They want a normal workweek. But they can't get it because of the costs ObamaCare triggers if they were to have it.

Third is the loss of freedom. Again, that is completely irrefutable. If you had a plan you were happy with, if you had a plan that worked for you and your family, if it was the right mix of benefits, premiums, and deductibles for you and you wanted to keep that plan, well, good luck—you can only keep it if the government approves of it. So now we don't have the freedom to have the health insurance plan we want. We are forced to buy the health insurance plan the government dictates we should have whether we like it or not. What an egregious affront to the personal freedom of Americans to decide what is right for them and their families.

The last thing I want to point out is a very fundamental structural flaw in the model of ObamaCare—yet another reason why this needs to be repealed—and that is, this bill was designed with the idea that young and healthy people would buy health insurance through ObamaCare at an inflated price. Of course, in addition to dictating what is in a health care plan, ObamaCare dictates pricing as well. The theory was, what we will do is we will have all these expensive mandates, but we will force this category of people who tend to be younger and healthier—we will force them to pay more than it costs to actually insure them, and that is how we will subsidize coverage for people who are older and need more health care. There is only one small problem with that; that is, the younger and healthier people figured out pretty quickly that they are being forced to buy a product that doesn't suit their needs very well and they are forced to pay more than it is worth. So guess what. They are not doing it. And ObamaCare is falling short by millions on the number of these younger, healthier people their model depended on.

What is the result of that? Insurance companies are left insuring a population that therefore tends to be older and sicker. That costs more. When insurance companies lose many millions of dollars, which is what they have been doing, they go back to ''We have to raise premiums even further.'' That creates an even more powerful incentive for younger and healthier people not to buy the product. What started off as overpriced is now even more overpriced for them. This is known in insurance terms as a death spiral, this downward spiral whereby it becomes impossible to have a viable continuation of these insurance policies, because, increasingly, the only people who will buy them are the people who are very sick, and people who are relatively healthy are priced out of the market.

This explains why half of all insurance co-ops in America have already folded. Many seem to be heading in the same direction. A year from now, I doubt there will be many co-ops remaining. This also explains why, increasingly, insurance companies are simply saying: We are going to have to consider getting out of this market altogether. We are going to have to consider simply not participating in ObamaCare.

What does that mean for Pennsylvania families? It means they are going to be out of choices. If there are no insurance plans being offered through this exchange because the whole dynamic doesn't work, then how are my constituents going to get health insurance? This is the problem when the government steps in and tries to take control over an industry—in this case, something so important and so personal as our health care.

This is a fatally flawed piece of legislation. Americans have been living through its disastrous consequences in the form of losing the health care plans that they want, that they valued, that they chose; experiencing much higher premiums, higher out-of-pocket costs, and higher taxes on the costs they do incur; and fewer jobs and less hours for those who are employed. Now, in addition to all this, we see what I think is the relatively early stages of this death spiral that is going to result in probably a pretty massive exodus from this market.

It is long overdue that we repeal this legislation. I am very glad we will be able to consider this over the next day or so. I urge support for my amendment, which would restore the ability of people facing catastrophic costs to have the deduction they were able to have before ObamaCare, and I urge adoption of this repeal legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PERDUE. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about a massive expansion of government that was fundamentally flawed from the start: the Affordable Care Act, better known as ObamaCare.

In the past 100 years, we have had three supermajorities, all Democratic. The first gave us the New Deal; the second, the Great Society; and the third gave us ObamaCare and Dodd-Frank. In many ways, these progressive, sweeping government spending programs have failed the very people they claim to champion: the working men and women of America. Together, they come at a massive expense to taxpayers and still continue to add to the Nation's debt crisis.

Right now, this law is saddling Americans with more than $1.2 trillion of new taxes over the next 10 years. In my State alone, ObamaCare is costing taxpayers over $2.7 billion over the next decade. The Senate's actions this week will help reverse the harmful effects of ObamaCare and remove the law's burdensome taxes on American families.

When I am back home in Georgia, one of the most frequent and sobering concerns I hear about is the insidious, negative impact of ObamaCare—whether it is reduced hours, increased premiums, increased deductibles, or just the mere fact that they can't get the doctor they want. I hear this more than any other complaint about what is going on in Washington today.

By enacting this law, President Obama and Washington put our health care system—almost one-sixth of our total economy—under government control, and the consequences are disastrous. ObamaCare has driven up the cost of health care. In addition, premium costs and deductible costs are also up, precluding many Americans from even applying for coverage. The law has eliminated health care choices, forced rural hospitals out of business, created a doctor shortage, and failed to live up to the expectations promised to the American people by the Obama administration.

First, Georgians are seeing their health care costs double. Just this week a headline on the front page of the Atlanta-Journal Constitution read ''Health care costs on the rise in 2016'' and ''Some Affordable Care Act plans seeing double-digit hikes.'' The article went on to describe the peril of a Georgia family who plans to cancel their insurance plan because it is no longer affordable for them. And this family is not alone. As we just heard in the prior speech, deductibles have risen to a point now where people can't afford the health care plan that was picked for them.

In Georgia, premium increases are expected to range from 27 to 29 percent for Alliant Health individual policyholders, and the problem could only get worse as more insurance companies exit the ObamaCare exchange program. And deductibles are increasing seven times as fast as wages are increasing.

Last week, UnitedHealth Group—the largest health insurance company in the country—announced it is considering dropping out of ObamaCare because it is losing so much money and the marketplace doesn't appear to be sustaining itself. As a matter of fact, yesterday, UnitedHealth CEO Stephen Hemsley even admitted that joining the ObamaCare exchange was ''for us a bad decision.'' He went on to say, ''We did not believe it would form this slowly, be this porous, or become this severe.''

Washington cannot overlook this warning. Like my wife Bonnie and me, many people have already had their plans canceled—no matter what the administration said. They said: If you like your policy, you can keep your policy; if you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor. I can personally tell you that did not happen. A lot of people have lost access to their preferred doctors or were forced into insurance plans that cost more, not less—dramatically more. If UnitedHealth Group—the largest player in this space—exits, Americans will only have less choice, not more.

Aside from driving up health care costs and limiting insurance options, ObamaCare is forcing rural hospitals out of business as well. Since 2010 alone, five rural hospitals in Georgia have closed, and there is a possibility for more in the immediate future. Across the country, more than 50 rural hospitals—this is incredible—have closed just since 2010, and more than 280 are in danger of shutting down. Each closure eliminates local jobs and Americans' access to health care.

Additionally, given the growing aging population, ObamaCare is contributing to a dangerous doctor shortage. The Association of American Medical Colleges is predicting a shortage of as many as 90,000 doctors by 2025.

Another survey by the Physicians Foundation found that 81 percent of doctors describe themselves as either overextended or at full capacity, and 44 percent have said they plan to cut back on the number of patients they see. They may even retire and/or work part time. This further reduces access for people who need medical care.

Finally, the Obama administration's promise of greater access to health insurance has proven to be totally misleading. In fact, now almost half of health insurance co-ops created under ObamaCare have collapsed due to their failing financial performance. This has resulted in hundreds of thousands of Americans scrambling to find sustainable health insurance for their families, and the ones who do find it can't afford the deductibles that, as we said, have risen dramatically.

President Obama promised that his massive restructuring of the health care industry would give more people insurance. In reality, the law continues to disrupt Americans' health care at every turn, while failing to cover anywhere near as many people as its supporters predicted.

I am counted as one who signed up for ObamaCare. I didn't have a choice. My plan was canceled. My access to my doctor was eliminated. I had no choice. But I am counted, as a statistic, as one who signed up for it.

Make no mistake—our health care system needs to change. But one thing is clear: ObamaCare is ill-conceived law and is hurting people and our economy. It must be fully repealed and replaced. Georgians and Americans want access to affordable health care options and transportability across State lines. People want to keep their health care decisions between themselves and their doctors and not have to go through a bureaucrat.

These are commonsense health care policies we can debate now that would lower costs, increase accessibility and transportability, and restore the sacred doctor-patient relationship. It won't be easy, but it is achievable. We need to start debating replacement plans now. There are alternatives to Washington taking over our health care system, almost 17 percent of our economy.

Today, for the sake of our kids and our grandkids, we are taking a very important step to repeal ObamaCare and stop government-mandated insurance. We are also removing Washington's tax on the very medical devices patients and doctors rely on to deliver quality care.

It is quite clear that this law was flawed from the very beginning. The Web site failed, access went down, deductibles went up, and premiums are still skyrocketing. The Obama administration is in total denial, and they misled the American people and failed to live up to the promises made during campaigns and afterward. What further evidence do we need to realize this law—this sweeping expansion of the Federal Government that pushes more tax dollars to Washington—is not working?

In order to solve our debt crisis, we absolutely must fix this health care crisis, which is why the Senate is eliminating ObamaCare's fines on individuals and businesses and finally sending this broken law back to the President's desk.

Today is a momentous day. This week we will actually have this vote. I urge my colleagues to put partisanship aside and do what is right for the people of America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT). The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks, the Senators from Connecticut and Ohio be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO FRED SEARS

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I rise to recognize a close friend from Delaware, Fred Sears, a community leader and a passionate advocate for all in our community, a man whose name is synonymous with business leadership and public service in my home State of Delaware and a man I am proud to call my friend. Fred is known statewide for his generosity, his enthusiasm, and his business acumen. For decades, his impact has been felt by elected officials, nonprofit, community leaders, and countless Delawareans of all backgrounds and careers. He is a true leader, an authentic champion of the community, and the embodiment of what service means in Delaware.

Fred Sears is a Delawarean through and through. He was born blocks away from his boyhood home at what was then called Wilmington Hospital, and he grew up across the river from Brandywine Zoo. This Delaware native attended Mt. Pleasant Elementary, Aldred I. DuPont Junior High, and Wilmington Friends for high school. Fred went on to earn a business degree from the University of Delaware. He had a great deal of fun, including a truly memorable spring break trip to the Bahamas with JOE BIDEN, his classmate and friend.

After graduating from UD in 1964, Fred began a nearly 40-year career in banking. Fresh out of college, Fred was scheduled to interview for a job with the Bank of Delaware but accidentally walked into Delaware Trust instead. Fortunately, Delaware Trust was also hiring. After starting as a management trainee, he rose to become the institution's first vice president of business development. From there, Fred went on to later work at Wilmington Trust, then Beneficial National Bank, and ultimately Commerce Bank, where he was Delaware market president.

While Fred was widely known as a leader in our financial services industry, he found many other ways to serve our community as well. Early in his career, Mayor Tom Maloney asked his friend Fred to take a leave of absence from Delaware Trust to serve as the city's director of finance and then later as director of economic development. Fred not only fulfilled those two roles terrifically, but decided afterward to run for an at-large city council seat in 1976. Fred won and went on to serve two full terms.

Many of us in younger generations in politics after Fred's elected service have called on his wisdom, his insight, and his ability to bring people together as we had important decisions to make. Fred served on the transition teams of Wilmington Mayor James Sills, Delaware Gov. Ruth Ann Minner, and cochaired my transition team after I was elected New Castle county executive in 2004.

For many of us, decades of success in finance, business, and politics might be the hallmark of a complete and successful career, but for Fred these experiences were just a few of the ways he fulfilled a lifelong passion for service in our State of Neighbors.

Just over 13 years ago, while Fred was at Commerce Bank, our mutual friend Jim Gilliam, Jr., called Fred one day and said to him: I have a job for you. After some convincing, Fred accepted the job. Since then, he has served admirably at the helm of one of the most important organizations in Delaware—the Delaware Community Foundation. The DCF plays an integral role in my home State, helping local nonprofits direct philanthropy to Delaware's most worthy causes and encouraging long-term charitable giving to improve our State. Since Fred began as CEO in 2002, the DCF has tripled its long-term charitable funds. It built its assets to $285 million. Dozens of nonprofits and community funds have flourished under Fred's leadership. He and his team and their astute financial guidance continues to generate the funding that enables them to serve. Fred didn't join the DCF, though, just to raise money and to be important and recognized; rather, he sought to improve the entire philanthropic community and the quality of community life in Delaware. His success in doing so reflects his values and his vision.

Fred is a true leader: honest, insightful, thoughtful, creative, positive, and confident. Fred possesses that rare quality, the ability to inspire others. He has used his passion for service to motivate the next generation of great leaders in our State. Take one of Fred's many initiatives called the Next Generation. It is one he is most proud of and justifiably so. Next Gen takes groups of civic-minded young professionals, with limited or no experience in philanthropy, and with just the right amount of guidance and encouragement, helps mold them into nonprofit board leaders. Since 2004, Next Gen's chapters up and down the State have helped direct over $300,000 in grants to community needs all over my home State of Delaware.

My good friend Tony Allen, who also calls Fred a mentor and a friend and a brother, tells a story of how Fred helped establish the African American Empowerment Fund. The fund today is known as the Council on Urban Empowerment, and it promotes philanthropy that supports educational, social, and economic empowerment of African-American Delawareans. As Tony notes, Fred didn't just help establish the fund, he wasn't just one of its first donors, he attended every meeting of the group.

In 2010, Tony introduced Fred when Fred Sears was set to receive an award for nonprofit leadership. As Tony put it then, while patience is a virtue, impatience is a weapon—and Fred can be appropriately impatient. Fred doesn't demur to what others would call insurmountable tasks or taboo topics of conversation. He takes every opportunity to constructively push the status quo. Tony is absolutely right. Given that legacy of leadership, it is no surprise Fred has been honored by countless organizations for his business and community efforts. He has received the Lifetime Achievement in Philanthropy Award from the Association of Fundraising Professionals. He has been given a Distinguished Service Award by the Wilmington Rotary Club. He has been deemed a Superstar in Business by the Delaware State Chamber of Commerce and was named Citizen of the Year by the Delmarva Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

Those awards and merits are certainly a reflection of Fred's values and his many successes, but those of us who have had the privilege to work closely with Fred and to know him know that his commitment to service shines most brightly in the hundreds of interactions he has with Delawareans every day, whether he is offering ideas or advice or saying a quick hello.

We know that even though Fred is leaving the Delaware Community Foundation, he will undoubtedly continue to serve the community he loves. In fact, Fred just accepted an appointment from Governor Markell to chair Delaware's Expenditure Review Commission, suggesting Fred has no intention of taking retirement literally.

In a testament to Fred's thoughtfulness, leadership, and sense of compassion, just a day after the passing of our beloved friend Beau Biden earlier this year, Fred spoke to the Bidens and offered to help the family establish an organization in Beau's name. That idea became the Beau Biden Foundation for the Protection of Children. Two days after it was launched, they had already raised over $125,000.

If this is all there was to Fred's story, it would be a remarkable one, but there is even more to Fred as a businessman, philanthropist, and a person. If you speak to those who have been around him the longest, they will tell you his true passion is his family: his wife JoAnn, his son Graham, his daughter-in-law Kathryn, his son Jason, his daughter-in-law Jen, and his treasured grandchildren, Kylie, Paxton, and Charlie. I have no doubt Fred's retirement means he will be spending a lot more time as Pop Pop to his three treasures, becoming even more of a fixture at their frequent school functions and baseball and soccer games.

Fred's friends and family will also tell you how much he adored his mother Marjorie, visiting her daily at Stonegates until her passing, and how much he cares for his father-in-law today. They will tell you that Fred loves dancing, snappy suspenders, and vinyl records.

Fred's friend Tom Shopa will tell you about Fred's passion for golf and how for decades he has kept track of all of his golf scores, the number of putts he made, the weather that day—recording every single detail just as his father did.

Friends and colleagues will tell you that they hear Fred say thank you dozens of times every day. Today I pause for a moment on the floor of this great institution to say thank you to Fred. Thank you for giving your time and talents, over decades, to more than 40 community nonprofit organizations, for serving on countless boards from Christiana Care to Rodel Foundation, from the Wilmington Housing Partnership to the United Way. Thank you for your decades of service to Wilmington and Delaware, for your lifelong commitment to family, friends, and community.

Fred, as our friend Tony Allen puts it, everyone in Delaware is better off because of your efforts. Thank you, Fred Sears, and congratulations on many jobs well done. I eagerly look forward to seeing where your so-called retirement will take you next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I am on the floor to speak to the debate that is happening now on reconciliation, specifically, the fact that we are here for the 16th time in the Senate debating the repeal of all or significant parts of the Affordable Care Act, and stack that on top of the 50 to 60 times this has been debated—the repeal of all or major parts of the Affordable Care Act—in the House of Representatives. As many of us have said over and over, we think the debate over repeal is over and that we should, A, accept the success of the Affordable Care Act and, B, to the extent that there need to be changes made, do it on a bipartisan basis—find the ways we can work together to try to perfect a law that is by and large working.

The data only tells one story. I want to review it for a moment because if you hear many of my Republican colleagues talk, they act in the absence and in the denial of the overwhelming evidence that tells you the Affordable Care Act is working. There are 17 million Americans who have insurance today who didn't have it before the Affordable Care Act. They have gotten it either through these exchanges, these private health care exchanges with a tax credit from the Federal Government or they have gotten it through Medicaid expansion.

We have reduced the number of people without health care insurance in this country by 30 percent in the few first few years of implementation. That is with many States doing everything they can to undermine the act. That is with many States refusing to accept the expansion of Medicaid coverage that could make that number even greater than 17 million or 30 percent.

In my State of Connecticut, where we have been aggressively trying to implement the Affordable Care Act, we have actually reduced the number of people without insurance by 50 percent. The total numbers in Connecticut are pretty extraordinary, given the short amount of time we have had and given the fact that in Connecticut we had a pretty robust Medicaid Program to begin with.

Overall costs to the Federal Government are under control for the first time in many of our lifetimes. The average medical rate of inflation to the Federal Government is about 2 or 3 percent. The overall rate of medical inflation is the lowest since 1960. That is because the Affordable Care Act is transitioning payments away from volume-based payments, rewarding you for the more medicine you practice, to outcomes-based payments, rewarding you for keeping your patients healthy.

Quality is getting better. You look at a broad array of metrics. Things such as hospital readmission rates or hospital acquired infections are all going down. Let's be clear, the Affordable Care Act was not designed to fix every single problem in the health care system. There are still going to be problems, there are still going to be anecdotal failures, but if you are working to undermine the act in your State, you are going to have more problems with your health care system.

When I hear my colleagues come down to the floor of the Senate and complain about hospitals closing in their State, when their State is actively rejecting Federal money that would help expand Medicaid and provide more people walking into hospitals with reimbursement attached to them, there is more than a hint of irony to that complaint. If you want your health care system to work, then implement the Affordable Care Act.

AMENDMENT NO. 2875

Senator JOHNSON is offering an amendment which could be of particular harm to the people in my State and in neighboring States. His amendment would allow for plans that don't comport with minimum coverage requirements of the Affordable Care Act to continue to be offered.

Before I relinquish the floor, I wish to speak for a moment about this particular amendment. There is a little boy named Kyle from Simsbury, CT, whom I have talked about before on the floor. Kyle requires injections that cost about $3,000 per dose, and he has to take them three to four times a week for the treatment of a blood disorder. Because his previous insurance plan had an annual lifetime limit, his treatment threatened to bankrupt his family. That fear is no longer a reality for his family because the Affordable Care Act says if you want to offer an insurance plan in this country, it has to be a fair plan. It can't have annual or lifetime limits, and it can't charge you more because you are a woman. It has to cover basic medical necessities, such as maternity coverage.

The requirement of having insurance plans provide actual insurance that doesn't discriminate against a person based on their medical history or gender not only allows people to have access to health care they didn't have before, but it has given millions of families like Kyle's family peace of mind.

The Johnson amendment would take that peace of mind away from millions of families by allowing for plans to go back on the market throughout the country—plans that would cap coverage on an annual or lifetime basis and that could once again discriminate against you based on your gender or medical history.

There may be a lot of parts of the Affordable Care Act that people support or don't support. But the one thing that the people of all parties have generally supported is the idea that we should put patients and consumers back in charge of their health care, instead of the old days when the insurance companies were in charge and would tell you that you have insurance, but then halfway through the year, just because you used a lot of it, yank it away from you.

There are a number of reasons why we should reject this specific amendment, but on behalf of the millions of families like Kyle's out there that don't want to go back to a world in which their insurance companies could take away their coverage just because they needed it more than other families, their stories alone are example enough to reject this amendment.

I hope that we can move on from this debate and try to work together—Republicans and Democrats—to perfect the Affordable Care Act and that we can get beyond this perpetual, ongoing, never-ending debate about repeal. Specifically, with respect to the Johnson amendment, let's think about all of those families that have been jerked around by insurance companies for far too long and need relief that the Affordable Care Act has given them.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I wish to add to the comments of Senator MURPHY in opposition to that amendment. I wish to also to point out that one of the previous speakers bemoaned the number of hospitals that have closed in his State over the last 10 years. I bemoan them too. I also know that more of those hospitals would have closed if the Affordable Care Act hadn't passed. More of those hospitals would have closed if, in States like mine, the Governor didn't expand Medicaid.

We know that in States where rural hospitals have closed—particularly if there was a Republican Governor—the hospital association and many, many, many health care providers of all kinds, including nurses, physical therapists, and others, asked the Governor of that State to expand Medicaid so these hospitals could stay in business and keep serving rural people. This issue is not just about the rural poor people in South Carolina, but rural middle-class people who had insurance and were paying, but those hospitals couldn't stay open because they didn't have the revenues coming in. If Governors from those States had actually expanded Medicaid—as was the intent of the Affordable Care Act—instead of scoring political points, many of those hospitals would not have had to close.

I thank Senator MURPHY for his efforts.

Mr. President, I come to the floor to talk about an amendment that I will not offer at this time but will probably offer later today about Medicaid—again, to help perfect the Affordable Care Act.

Since the passage of the health law, Medicaid expansion has helped 600,000 Ohioans—many for the first time in their lives—in my State have health coverage just because of Medicaid's expansion. That is why the amendment I will offer will permanently extend the Medicaid expansion Federal matching rate at 100 percent. Some Governors—I think a bit disingenuously, but at least they are saying it—didn't expand Medicaid because the States will eventually have to pay up to 10 percent, even though the State gets all kinds of economic benefits, not to mention the humanitarian concerns that it addresses. Nonetheless, my amendment will make it 100 percent—no more excuses, first of all, to refuse to expand Medicaid.

At a time when some are looking to halt support for Medicaid, we should be increasing that support. Since its enactment in 1965, Medicaid served as a lifeline for millions of Americans ranging from children and pregnant women to seniors who almost certainly would otherwise not afford nursing home care without it.

Thanks to the Affordable Care Act—while my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are attempting to dismantle it—States now have the option to expand Medicaid the way Governor Kasich, the Republican Governor of my State did, including nonelderly adults without children. Thirty States, including the District of Columbia and, as I said, my State of Ohio, have taken up Medicaid expansion, and it has obviously mattered to a whole lot of people.

Federal Medical Assistance Percentages, which determine how much the Federal Government will pay for covered services in the State Medicaid programs, were increased for States that chose to expand their Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act. Under the health law, States that expand their Medicaid programs receive an enhanced Federal reimbursement for the costs incurred by newly eligible enrollees. That matching rate will phase down from 100 percent to 90 percent in 2020.

My amendment would make the enhanced FMAP, the Medicaid expansion reimbursement, permanent. It is paid for by closing corporate tax loopholes. States that have expanded Medicaid have experienced significant drops in the number of uninsured. They have realized budget savings and cut the cost of uncompensated care for hospitals.

The number of hospitals I have visited recently, including the hospital in which I was born, Medcentral in Mansfield, are bringing in more patients who are paying because of Medicaid and the Affordable Care Act and fewer patients for which they are uncompensated, thereby having to cut costs a little bit less and making that hospital easier to manage. Too often hospitals have to cut patient services when they have to cut their costs.

We should continue to support States that have done right and expanded access. We can do this by maintaining their current FMAP rates. This policy will provide States with financial security. It will free up State Medicaid budgets to address other Medicaid needs, such as increased access to mental health services or the higher costs of prescription drugs. With millions of Americans falling into the coverage gap in nonexpansion States—those couple of dozen States that have refused to expand Medicaid even though the Federal Government pays for almost all of it—this policy is likely to help encourage expansion of Medicaid in those States.

As I said, Ohio is one of the first States to accept Federal funds. I thank Governor Kasich, the Republican Governor of Ohio, for doing that. Without expansion, Ohioans would have fallen through the cracks by making too much for traditional Medicaid but too little to qualify for subsidies in the insurance marketplace. Now these individuals, including 600,000 in Ohio, have affordable coverage.

I don't understand how people who represent my State in the House or Senate can vote to repeal the Affordable Care Act when they have 600,000 people in Ohio who have insurance—and that is just the Medicaid part—let alone the hundreds of thousands of others. How can they vote to take away their insurance? Do they know those people? Do they ever look those people in the eye and say: Sorry; I am scoring a political point. I will vote against the Affordable Care Act. Sorry; you are going to lose your insurance, but maybe we will do something down the road to help you.

Under these new provisions, 24,000 Medicaid enrollees in Ohio are being treated for cancer. These include Ohioans like Pamela Harris, the mother of four children. She had no health insurance before the State expanded Medicaid—again giving credit to Republican Governor Kasich—and she found herself having to choose between paying for utility bills or medication. After her first stroke, Ms. Harris was unable to afford followup care and physical therapy, but when she survived her second stroke, her recovery was much better. Why? Because she was eligible for health insurance through Ohio's Medicaid expansion.

There are so many reasons to do this. Mr. President, 2015 marks the 50th anniversary of Medicaid. We should be strengthening the program that provides good quality health insurance to millions of Americans, including hundreds of thousands of people in Wyoming, Tennessee, South Carolina, and my State of Ohio. We should do that and not vote to take it away.

I will offer the amendment later.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to speak on behalf of millions of Americans who are very grateful they have health care now under the Affordable Care Act that they didn't have a few years ago.

Looking back over the years, I am reminded of the steps forward that we, as Americans, have taken, starting with Medicare and Medicaid, and how we have helped to lift a generation of seniors out of poverty and ill health because of lack of insurance and not having access to prescription drugs. The majority of Medicaid coverage, about 80 percent, is for seniors in nursing homes.

We are moving forward again and putting in place the ability of people to see a doctor and get the medical care that they need. With the Affordable Care Act, we took the next important step for over 17 million Americans. Moms and dads don't have to go to bed at night anymore and say: Please, God. Don't let the kids get sick. They know they will be able to take their child to a doctor. They know they are going to be able to get coverage and won't get dropped if they get sick, which was happening in too many cases before the Affordable Care Act. Women now know that just simply being a woman is not a preexisting condition, where we were paying twice as much for basic insurance or blocked from certain kinds of care.

I will never forget the debate in the Finance Committee when we included an amendment of mine for comprehensive preventive care, including maternity care for women, and a colleague asked: Why should we cover maternity care? He didn't need maternity care. I reminded him that his mom did, and I reminded him of the importance of maternity care for women and children and those of us who are now adults. So that is now a part of the Affordable Care Act.

Young people are now able to stay on their parents' insurance while looking for a full-time job after they graduate from college. Slowing the growth of insurance premiums is what we still need to do. That is what we should be focusing on today together—to continue to be laser focused in that area as well.

Now, 17.6 million Americans have health insurance coverage. Under the reconciliation bill—the budget bill in front of us—the rug is going to be pulled out from all of them, from millions of Americans. Passing this reconciliation bill will dismantle the framework, the structure for health care for millions of Americans—men and women and children.

It also will do something else. Instead of celebrating health care services that we have had for years—nearly 100 years of preventive health care services—through Planned Parenthood providing essential health services to men and women, particularly in areas that don't have services, such as in rural parts of my State as well as around the country—instead of strengthening those services, what we see is an effort to actually eliminate preventive health care services for women. It seems one more time women's health care is attacked. It takes on all kinds of different forms, but it always ends up with the same thing—challenges to women's health care.

So I am urging my colleagues to vote no on this Republican budget proposal that guts health care for families, that would strip funding for preventive health care, for family planning, and for other preventive health care. Millions will lose their coverage if this passes.

Instead of focusing on this bill, which is essentially something that we know is going to be vetoed by the President of the United States—he is not going to allow that health care coverage to be taken away; he is not going to allow preventive health care services to be taken away. We know what the outcome is really going to be. So this is really a political exercise. I understand that people want to say that they voted to eliminate the Affordable Care Act, to take away health insurance for people, and to stop funding for Planned Parenthood and other preventive health care services. But we all know where it is going to end. First of all, I can't believe that people think it is a good idea to do that, but maybe other States are different than Michigan, where people want to have health care for themselves and their families.

We have in front of us a whole other range of things that are very important to do right now. There is a major effort on a transportation bill that is, in fact—rather than being partisan and divisive as this budget reconciliation is—bipartisan, and we need to move that as soon as possible.

We are working on budget issues and tax policy and other areas where we can work together. The list is long of things the American people want us to get done.

We need to be tackling the affordability of college so that more people have the ability to work hard, get good grades, get accepted to school, and go to college. Instead, here we are debating whether people should have health care in the United States of America.

The bottom line is that according to the nonpartisan budget office, this bill on the whole would increase premiums by roughly 20 percent above what would be expected under current law. So on top of everything, including over 16 million people losing their health insurance, everybody is going to see their rates go up. Merry Christmas, happy Hanukkah, happy New Year—20-percent, on average, increase in premiums.

This reconciliation bill makes no sense. It is bad for the American people. It is bad for women. We ought to be focused on things that actually improve quality of life and continue to improve health care and bring down costs for all Americans.

I hope we will reject this bill and move on to things that make a lot more sense, certainly for families in Michigan and across the country.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOOMEY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. President, I have listened carefully to the Presiding Officer's comments earlier and the comments of others who have talked about the importance of passing this bill and drawing focus again to the health care plan that is just not working. It is not working. The State exchanges are failing. They are sort of fleeing to a bigger Federal exchange, and the insurance companies are fleeing the Federal exchange as well as the State exchanges. They are moving out of the family market. They are moving out of the individual market.

The biggest health insurance company announced recently that they were likely to abandon this particular process next year. The plan where the insurance companies that had a profit would use some of that profit to offset the loss of other companies isn't working because, as others have well explained, the incentive for young, healthy people to be part of this plan is just not there. The premiums are too high, and the deductibles are too high.

There is no reason to be part of this, and there should be nothing new here. The failures of this plan were almost guaranteed when the House and Senate, under the control of our friends on the other side, decided they were going to pass the bill the Senate passed when there were 60 Democrats here to vote for a bill. It doesn't matter how flawed that bill was. It doesn't matter how many problems were in that bill. It is the only thing we can do, and we are going to do it, and in doing it, we are going to interject a government between not only a whole lot of the economy but between people and their health care.

I have said on this floor before and many other places that somebody told me one time that when everybody in your family is well, you have lots of problems; when somebody in your family is sick, you have one problem.

When the Federal Government decides they are going to help families in ways that families don't want that help, when the Federal Government decides they are going to interject themselves between families and their doctors, families and their health care, families and their insurance company choices, you can't really expect good things to happen.

The anticipation not too long ago was that on the individual exchange, where you go get your own insurance for yourself, there would be 20 million people signed up by the end of last year. When that projection was made, I think there were 14 million Americans on the exchange. Not too many weeks ago, they were back down to 9 million, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services said a better and more realistic goal for the end of 2016 would be 10 million people—exactly half of the number the administration thought would be there 6 months ago. What would be wrong that would cause that to happen? How could you be that far off in how you thought Americans and American families were going to respond to this? You could be that far off by just not listening.

For the first year of implementation of this plan, I came to the floor week after week after week, and week after week after week, I had letters, calls, and emails from Missourians talking about how this was impacting the lives of their families. I have told those stories on this floor before, so I won't tell them again today, but there are hundreds of them multiplied by thousands if you talk to anybody who has talked to anybody about this system.

Interestingly, those calls, letters, emails, and contacts appear to be coming back because people have now decided that this is not as bad as they thought it was; it is worse than they thought it was. The problems aren't as great as they had feared; they are worse than they had feared.

In 2013, Lance called our office. He was very concerned. He liked his coverage. The President said you could keep your coverage, but his coverage didn't conform to the new standards the Federal Government has suddenly decided you needed to have no matter what you thought and the Federal Government has decided you needed to pay for no matter whether or not you could pay for it. So he was told: You can't keep that policy. Well, like so many other things in this law, he was pretty quickly then told: Well, no, we figured out a way that for a year or so, you can keep your policy. So Lance was going to keep the policy, but he found out that for any number of reasons related to this big change in health care, the policy he wanted to keep was $150 more a month than he had been paying for it and the deductible increased by $7,500. So, like a lot of other people, he would have loved to have kept the policy he had before, but none of it made any sense for him anymore.

I received a letter just a few days ago from a friend of mine who runs a business in Kimberling City. In that letter, she mentioned they were 3 or 4 employees short of 50 employees. As employers, they didn't have to do this, but they had always provided group health and life. They wanted to do that again, but in her letter, she said that the prices have skyrocketed and the way companies now feel as though they have to aggregate their employees is much different than it used to be, particularly for older employees, if you are over 47.

Here are some numbers she gave me in that letter. If you are over 52, the increase this year over last year was $2,128. That is the annual increase. That is not the annual premium; that is the annual increase, $2,128.76. If you are 58, the annual increase was $4,599.60. Again, that is not the cost of the policy; that is the increase this year over last year. And if you were 61, the increase was $5,680.20.

This is a company that for years has done everything it could to provide this as a benefit. One, it is clearly a benefit they have a hard time affording, and suddenly it is a benefit that creates a huge obstacle for older workers. Where everybody used to be rated the same, they would rate your group, now they want to rate the individuals in your group.

In our State, in Missouri, the average premium has increased by more than 10 percent. In Kansas City, the increase is 20 percent. The silver plan—not the best plan and not the worst plan—is 13 percent higher. The bronze plan, which sort of meets the minimum standards the administration says you have to have or pay the penalty, is 16 percent higher. That is just 1 year, and this is just your insurance. It is not your higher utility bill that is higher because of another government regulation; it is not your higher this or your higher that; this is just your higher cost of not having to pay the penalty.

Just the other day, Health and Human Services said for the first time ever, the average deductible is over $2,000. There is a little merit to having some of your own money invested in your own health care as you make these decisions, but the average is over $2,000. Many families are now seeing a $5,000 individual deductible with a maximum of two family members, if you happen to have two people sick in the same year. Those same families may be paying $500, $600, $800 a month or more for insurance, so you have your insurance costs approaching $1,000 a month and your deductible of $10,000. For most families, that is just like not having insurance at all. You are writing this check every month hoping nobody gets sick. If you get sick, you might have to write another $10,000 check or more. As a matter of fact, I just mentioned that Lance had the policy where his deductible went up $7,500 as his premium was going up $150.

I spent a lot of time with the hospital community in our State. Over and over again, I said: OK, what is your fastest growing column of bad debt? Over and over again, the answer is people with health insurance. People with health insurance are the fastest growing column of bad debt because the health insurance has a deductible that family can't pay. If the deductible had been $500, you had that discussion: Well, we can do $200 of that, and maybe your mom and dad could help us with half of the other $300, and somebody else would help with the other $150, and we will pay it. But if it is a $5,000 deductible, many families just say: We are never going to pay—we can't pay $5,000. And so the health care provider writes that off.

They are also taxing health savings accounts and flexible savings accounts, which are other tools people were using and using pretty effectively to have that money for a deductible, to have that money to offset things they didn't want to insure against.

This is a system that is simply designed to fail, and there is no news here. There is no news here. Every time I came to this floor to talk about this—and that was many, many times—I explained why the system would fail. Some of the press in my State—at least I remember one column that said: Senator BLUNT is spending way too much time talking about the weaknesses of ObamaCare. This is everybody's health and 60 percent of the economy. It is pretty hard to spend too much time talking about those things.

The other thing we constantly hear is that there were no alternatives. Let me quickly list those, and I am going to then yield the floor to others.

The things that could have been done and still could be done, things that were proposed even though we constantly hear ''Well, there were no other ideas out there''—there were lots of ideas out there. Expand health savings accounts. Let those accounts be used for long-term care or long-term care insurance. Let small businesses join as a group. Let young adults stay on the policy longer. Liability reform, fair tax treatment, and buying across State lines are the kinds of things that could happen. Prohibit policy cancellation. Use what were very strong high-risk pools—expand those so that people with preexisting conditions could never be shut out of the insurance market. All of that fell on deaf ears, and now all we hear is that there were no other ideas, this is the only idea. This is a plan that is not working.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on this bill that puts the responsibility right back where it belongs—on the President's desk.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, you just heard my colleague from Missouri talk about many of the things that could be used to replace ObamaCare. There were a lot of ideas that make sense when it comes to health care in this country, that put patients and consumers more in charge of their health care decisions, and that create more competition and allow market forces out there to work to drive health care prices down, which is the exact opposite of what we have with ObamaCare.

For those who suggest there aren't other ideas out there, you just heard the Senator from Missouri go through a quite lengthy list of ideas that could be incorporated into a replacement for what has been a disastrous piece of legislation for the American people. The reason for that is because after 5 years now, one thing has become abundantly clear; that is, ObamaCare just isn't working. It flat isn't working. It is not lowering premiums, it is not reducing health care costs, and it is not protecting access to doctors or hospitals.

Instead, Americans are paying more for their premiums. The average cost of a family health care plan has risen to $17,545 a year up from $13,770 in 2010. That is nearly $4,000 a year in additional costs that the typical family in this country is having to contend with.

In addition to paying higher premiums, Americans with job-based insurance are also facing increased deductibles. The situation is also bad on the ObamaCare exchanges. Premiums on the exchanges will rise once again this year, with many Americans facing rate increases in the double digits.

Then there are the tax increases Americans are facing as a result of the law. While the Obama administration did its best to hide the true costs of the law, the truth is ObamaCare implements almost a dozen new taxes to the tune of $1 trillion. American families are going to face an average of $20,000 more in taxes over the next 10 years thanks to ObamaCare.

Now, I could go on. I could talk about the failing co-ops, the failed exchanges, the taxpayer dollars the law has wasted and much, much more. But today I would like to take just a few minutes to talk about the people behind those statistics—the individual Americans who are struggling under the tremendous burden ObamaCare has imposed. Over the past 5 years I have received numerous letters from constituents sharing the pain ObamaCare has caused them. I want to highlight just a few of the most recent.

I had a constituent of mine from Hill City, SD, write to tell me:

> My premium is going from $624.16 a month to $1,054.42 per month, an increase of 68.93 percent. My wife's premium is going from $655.70 to $1,083.41 per month, an increase of 65.23 percent. I was under the assumption that the new Affordable Health Care Act was to be just that, affordable. How can a yearly bill of $25,653.96 be affordable to a retired couple?

That is from a constituent in Hill City, SD. Another constituent in Aberdeen, SD, wrote to share a similar story:

> We just received our rate increase for our family health insurance. We have been paying $1,283.81 a month and the $557.45 increase will bring it up to $1,841.26. This amount has gone from 26 percent to 37 percent of our income. . . . After having insurance coverage for the past 38 years, we are faced with dropping coverage, which is ironic since that is not the purpose of the Affordable Care Act. We are considering dropping insurance and facing the penalty just so we can continue to live in our house, pay the bills, and buy groceries.

Another constituent from Redfield, SD, wrote to tell me:

> My current monthly premium is $863.12. The monthly change in my premium is $470.67, making my monthly premium a hefty sum of $1,333.79. I think this is outrageous.

Again, this is from a constituent in Redfield, SD. She continues to say:

> I know I am not the only one facing such enormous premium increases. My son, who is married and has two small children, received notice that his monthly premium will increase $495, making his monthly premium $1,571.

Well, unfortunately, she and her son are far from the only ones to face such enormous premium increases. A constituent in Sioux Falls, SD, is facing a 50-percent premium increase. The premium of a Deadwood constituent is increasing by 47 percent. A constituent in Milbank is facing a 62-percent premium increase. As I mentioned above, a constituent in Hill City is facing an increase of almost 69 percent.

More than one constituent has written to tell me that his health insurance costs more than his mortgage payment—more than a mortgage payment. One constituent told me she and her husband would have to pay 60 percent of their income to insure themselves and their four children—60 percent of their income. Think about that. If any more evidence was needed to demonstrate ObamaCare has failed, that should be sufficient.

The Affordable Care Act may have been a well-intentioned law, but it has failed to achieve its objective. Not only has it failed to make health care more affordable, but it has actually driven up health care prices to unthinkable levels for far too many Americans. South Dakota families cannot afford 50-percent premium increases or health insurance payments that are double their mortgage payments. No family can afford that—no family anyplace in the country.

It is time for Democrats to stop defending this broken law and to work with Republicans to repeal it and to begin building a bridge to real health care reform for hard-working families across the country. The legislation before us today would do just that. It would give us that opportunity to move away from a health care plan that has failed, that has led to higher premiums and higher deductibles and higher copays and higher out-of-pocket costs and constructed networks where you can't get access to the same providers you perhaps could in the past. So the whole idea that if you like your health care, you can keep it is just not reflected in reality for most Americans.

The promises that were made have been broken. This health care law is a failed law. We can do much better by the American people, if we have that opportunity, but it starts with repealing this bad law and starting over and putting in place a health care system for this country that creates more affordable, more accessible health care for more Americans. I hope our colleagues here in the Senate will join together on both sides of the aisle and repeal this bad law.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the ObamaCare legislation we are dealing with today and in an effort to repeal. I join my colleagues in calling on the President to work with us to reform this very badly written law.

By any objective measure, the President's health care law is a disaster. Six years ago, at Christmastime, I was here on this floor as we held the final debate and held the final vote, after nearly a year of trying to stop this legislation from being forced into law. Unfortunately, it was passed in the most partisan and misguided way on a straight party-line vote after virtually every serious effort to amend it and repair it had been rejected outright.

Since that time, the American people have felt the impact of the law. Thirty of the Senators who forced it through this Chamber no longer serve in the Senate any more. I don't believe this legislation could pass again were it brought before us. Those of us who fought over it at that time raised a number of concerns and warned the American people that this proposal would result in widespread dislocation of the American health care economy, that it would increase taxes on nearly everyone, force people from health insurance plans and doctors whom they have and whom they like, push up premiums and out-of-pocket expenses, cut Medicare services, and, finally, undermine the employer-based health insurance program and market that so many people and families rely upon.

Unfortunately, time and again, we have been proven right. In truth, today we see that the situation is much worse than even we said it would be. The President not only managed to mangle the 2013 rollout of the ObamaCare exchanges, but he repeatedly has delayed key parts of the law because of the entirely predictable problems that have arisen and made selective interpretations of the law necessary to advance the administration's political interests.

The President, or a top administrative official, stated 37 times: ''If you like your health care plan, you can keep it.'' These included numerous national townhalls and weekly Presidential addresses. This statement proved to be PolitiFact's 2013 ''Lie of the Year.''

Since those statements, millions of cancellation notices have been sent out to Americans across this country, including over 100,000 in Idaho alone in 2013, rendering meaningless the President's oft-repeated pledge.

In January, CBO updated its estimate of the effects of the health care law, indicating that over 10 million individuals will lose their employer-based health care coverage by 2021. Further, CBO estimates the law will leave 31 million people uninsured, up from its original 2011 forecast of 23 million people.

We are also learning that the health care Consumer Operated and Oriented Plan Program—the CO-OP program—is failing nationally, despite receiving over $2 billion in taxpayer bailouts. Today, over half—12 of the original 23 public co-ops—have failed. Between October 9 and October 16, 4 co-ops announced they would not offer health insurance in 2016, leaving 176,000 patients scrambling to find a new plan.

The President is also annually faced with the reality of rising premiums and out-of-pocket expenses for health insurance plans. What is his line of argument? He again tries to lower expectations, saying that these costs are not as bad as they initially were projected to be, even though they are still going up.

Throughout the 2008 Presidential campaign, then-Senator Barack Obama repeatedly promised that his health care plan would bring down premiums by as much as $2,500 for the typical family. As President, he continued to make this claim, even after studies demonstrated that the opposite would occur. The truth was that the opposite did occur. Health care premiums have skyrocketed.

For the most recent open enrollment period, the average premium increase for the midlevel silver plans on the Federal exchange is 7.5 percent, more than triple last year's increase. In Idaho, which operates a State exchange, the average premium increase for a Blue Cross of Idaho plan is 23 percent. The average premium for a Regence BlueShield of Idaho plan is 10 percent. And the average premium increase for a SelectHealth plan is 14 percent. This is after year after year of increasing health care premiums.

What is the justification from the insurers? This is the first year prices are based on post-ObamaCare patients, enrollments costs, and mandates. Premiums are skyrocketing.

There are better solutions. To address the increasing costs and decreasing choices, the bill we have before us today eliminates the individual and employer mandates so Americans can once again choose the plan that fits their health care and budget needs.

It also repeals the taxes on employer contributions to flexible spending accounts and expands the availability of health savings accounts, FSAs, and health reimbursement accounts. These accounts are central to a consumer-driven health care system.

But it is not just premiums that are increasing. People are facing higher deductibles and copays as well, sometimes thousands of dollars higher than before. For the lowest cost ObamaCare plans in 2016, deductibles have increased by 10.6 percent for individuals and 10 percent for families.

Let me give just a couple of examples from constituents in Idaho. Daniel from Meridian, ID, recently contacted my office to explain why he and his family are uninsured for the first time in their lives. Daniel is employed and the sole provider for his family. His employer offers health coverage, but the estimated cost of premiums for his family would be over $900 per month. He chose to purchase insurance from the exchange but decided the coverage was not worth a $500-per-month premium and an $8,000 deductible. That is right, an $8,000 deductible.

Daniel is not the only constituent who has contacted my office about the so-called family glitch—an unfortunate but not uncommon flaw in ObamaCare that has left millions of Americans families uninsured.

Bill from Boise, ID, is a small business owner. He purchases his own health insurance and provides coverage to his 45 employees. He saw his premiums increase by 7 percent in 2014, by 12 percent in 2015, and was recently notified by his insurance company that premiums will increase by 25.6 percent in 2016. Bill says these increases, in addition to other regulations and mandates coming from the government, will likely cause small businesses to close their doors.

Lane from Melba, ID, experienced his premiums increase to over $900 per month for his family. Even without preexisting conditions, his plan includes a $3,500 deductible. These cost increases come as individuals are paying more in taxes also as a result of ObamaCare.

People may recall that at the time of the debate, the President stated again and again:

> I can make a firm pledge . . . no family making less than $250,000 will see their taxes increase . . . not your income taxes, not your payroll taxes, not your capital gains taxes, not any of your taxes. . . . You will not see any of your taxes increase one single dime.

Well, when we debated the bill we pointed out that there was over $1 trillion—maybe close to $1.5 trillion—of new taxes, most of which were going to fall squarely on the middle class. Yet, during consideration of ObamaCare, the nonpartisan Joint Committee on Taxation sent me a letter confirming that there were at least seven specific tax increases in the bill which would raise taxes on middle-income American families.

According to CBO, ObamaCare will cost taxpayers more than $116 billion a year in taxes. The average American household can expect to pay more than $20,000 in new taxes over the next 10 years. In Idaho, my constituents will pay $360 million more in taxes over the next decade, or $6,055 per household.

The legislation we are considering today will solve this problem as well. It will eliminate more than $1 trillion in tax increases and save more than $500 billion in spending. And for all of the additional burdens, mandates, and costs, consumers are finding narrower insurance networks and limited plan offerings. In its recent Notice of Benefit and Payment Parameters for 2017, CMS actually stated that an excessive number of health plan options makes consumers less likely to make any plan selection and that standardized options are needed to provide consumers the opportunity to make simpler comparisons. This means these standardizations will once again mandate that insurers offer consumers fewer options.

To sum up, millions of Americans are being forced from plans they like and the doctors and hospitals they know. They face higher premiums and higher deductibles and out-of-pocket expenses, they navigate one of the least customer-friendly Web sites ever designed, they are obligated to share personal and sensitive financial information through a network that hackers have called a gold mine for thieves—and, which is managed by the IRS—and, in return, they are paying higher taxes and seeing Medicare benefits cut.

It is time that we in Congress place on the President's desk a solution, a repeal of these onerous and misguided health care policies and a reform of our health care system that will help move us to achieve the true objectives that Americans are asking for—helping to get a proper health care delivery system with a market-based delivery foundation that will help to reduce costs, increase the quality of care, and expand access to care across this country. We know we can do it. But we know now very clearly that ObamaCare is not the solution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to finish my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this week marks another milestone in the long, sordid history of the so-called Affordable Care Act.

It has been roughly 5½ years since this law, cobbled together with spit and baling wire, went into effect. In a few weeks, we will reach the 6-year anniversary of the initial Senate passage of the legislation that would eventually become ObamaCare. Many of us remember those days well because we were here when it happened. Others who were here back then are no longer serving in Congress, and, in many cases, as a direct result of how they voted at the time. Still, for those of us who remain, I expect that this week—as we debate and hope to pass legislation to repeal the most harmful elements of ObamaCare—will bring back a flood of memories. It already has for me.

We all remember the absurd promises that were made by the President and his allies to try to win over the American public: If you like your health insurance, you can keep it; the bill will bring health care costs down; only rich people and evil corporations will see their taxes go up—and so on and so forth.

We all remember the deals cut behind closed doors to bring reluctant Democratic Senators on board. A number of those deals ended being so notorious that they even got nicknames: the ''Cornhusker kickback,'' the ''Louisiana purchase,'' the ''Bay State boondoggle,'' and ''Gatorade.'' We all remember a sitting Speaker of the House arguing with a straight face that Congress would have to pass the health care law before the American people could know what was in it.

More than anything, we all remember a Senate majority—a super majority, as some called it at the time—that was so committed to giving their President a political win that they forced a massive, poorly drafted bill through the Senate without a single Republican vote. They didn't need any Republican votes to pass it, and they sure weren't looking for any. Instead, they threw together a massive overhaul of a huge portion of the U.S. economy and forced it on the American people on a strictly partisan basis—not only here but also in the House.

I will tell you something else that I personally remember from that time. I remember sitting here on the floor shortly before the final cloture vote during the Senate's consideration of the bill and listening to our distinguished majority leader, who was at the time the minority leader. It was December 21, 2009. It was late, nearly 1 o'clock in the morning, and the good Senator stood up and offered some dire warnings for those who supported the bill. After detailing many of the problems the bill would cause—predictions that have all come true, by the way—Senator MCCONNELL said:

> I understand the pressure our friends on the other side are feeling, and I don't doubt for a moment their sincerity. But my message tonight is this: The impact of this vote will long outlive this one frantic snowy weekend in Washington. Mark my words: This legislation will reshape our Nation. . . .

And he was right. That legislation—now a law—has in many ways reshaped our Nation, including some ways that I am not even sure Senator MCCONNELL could have predicted that night.

Yes, it has had a disastrous impact on our health care system. I will have more to say about that in a moment. But, in my view, it has also eroded the public's confidence in our institutions and undermined the ability of our government to function well. By passing this law—forcing it through Congress on a purely partisan basis—its proponents sent a clear message that partisanship trumped good judgment and the will of the voters.

After running a masterful election campaign, President Obama came into office in 2009 riding a wave of goodwill and promises to usher in an era of ''post-partisanship''—whatever that was supposed to mean—and allow us to transcend ideology to focus on good government and pragmatic solutions. Yet his biggest campaign promise, the top priority of his first term and his signature domestic achievement, ObamaCare, was the result of the largest exercise in naked partisanship in our Nation's history.

By any estimation, the debate and passage of ObamaCare deepened our Nation's partisan divide and drove more voters—on both ends of the spectrum—into deeper and more entrenched partisan and ideological positions. It made people more cynical and less trusting of our government and its leaders. It gave additional credence to the perception that politics and governing in America are more about tribalism and conflict than about providing real solutions to the problems plaguing our citizens.

Can anyone seriously argue that our Nation is less partisan or less divided now than it was prior to the passage of ObamaCare? I would like to see anyone try to make that claim with a straight face.

Sadly, that is not all. The damage wrought by ObamaCare extends well beyond our Nation's political discourse and into our governing institutions themselves. Most notably, we have had an administration so committed to ObamaCare that it has, on numerous occasions, exceeded its constitutional authority in order to preserve it.

The examples of overreach and abuse of power have been well documented. The Obama administration has unilaterally moved deadlines set by the statute that they found to be inconvenient. They have rewritten provisions in the law to give favors and carve-outs to political supporters. They have selectively enforced other provisions in order to give more teeth to their regulations. And that is just the tip of the iceberg.

Make no mistake. President Obama's penchant for Executive overreach extends well beyond the implementation of the Affordable Care Act. But clearly, many of the most egregious examples of abuse on the part of this administration were undertaken to preserve a poorly constructed health system that simply could not work the way the law was drafted. Simply put, ObamaCare has led directly to a weakening of our constitutional order and an erosion of the separation of powers. Given all of these negative consequences, the question ultimately becomes this: Has it been worth it?

Don't get me wrong. In my opinion, all these terrible aftereffects would, by themselves, be enough justification to undo what was done in this Chamber nearly 6 years ago. Still, if the law was working—if it was having a positive overall impact on our health care system—proponents might have something to hang their hat on when it comes to this law. Indeed, if the American people now had better, more affordable health care, supporters of ObamaCare could at least try to argue that all of these other problems have been in service of some noble cause. Of course, we know the law is not working. The American people do not have better, more affordable health care under ObamaCare. Instead, the parade of horribles that began the day the law was enacted has extended beyond our politics, beyond our institutions, and into the lives and livelihoods of everyday Americans.

The system created by the Affordable Care Act—so-called Affordable Care Act—was based largely on the premise that the government could impose drastic new regulations on the individual health insurance market without dramatically increasing the cost of insurance because younger, healthier consumers would be drawn into the market, bringing down costs for everyone else. This claim was obviously fiction. Republicans argued at the time that without serious effort to reduce costs overall, this prized demographic group would stay out of the market, and premiums would skyrocket due to the various mandates and regulations. We now know that we were right. Younger and healthier patients are, by the millions, choosing to forego health insurance and pay fines rather than enter into the individual insurance market. According to most surveys, many of these individuals are choosing to go uninsured because, even with the benefit of ObamaCare premium subsidies, they cannot afford the cost of insurance.

As a result, premiums are going up all over the country. Premium spikes in the double digits have been increasingly common in the current enrollment period. My own home State of Utah has seen premiums go up in this enrollment period by an average 22 percent, which will undoubtedly wreak havoc on family budgets and local businesses. Other States have it even worse, with premiums spiking as much as 25 percent, 30 percent or, in the case of a State such as South Dakota, 63 percent.

Even with increased premiums, insurers are having a harder time doing business in a number of markets, leading providers to exit the various exchanges where patients buy insurance with the aid of ObamaCare subsidies. Just a few weeks ago, in fact, we saw reports that the largest health insurance company in the Nation—UnitedHealth Group—was considering withdrawing from the exchanges entirely. The result will inevitably mean fewer insurers, which means fewer choices and even higher premiums for consumers. It is no wonder, therefore, that next year's enrollment estimates for the exchanges are down dramatically. And, as enrollment drops, all of this—the costs, the reduced options, and the overall state of care—will get even worse in the individual health insurance market.

This downward spiral is all the more maddening when we consider that the President promised the American people that his law would actually reduce the cost of health insurance in the United States.

I am not done yet. There are other problems worth discussing here today. There is, for example, ObamaCare's massive Medicaid expansion. In virtually every case, when the proponents of ObamaCare cite numbers of newly insured individuals under the law, most of the increase can be attributed to the Medicaid expansion. Let's be clear. Medicaid is one of the most poorly constructed programs in all of government. It is extremely costly at the Federal level and even more so at the State level, where it is not uncommon for the program to take up as much as one-fourth to one-third of a State's financial resources. Even with all that cost, it is, in terms of available providers and services, one of the worst, if not the worst health insurance options in the country.

Some of us in Congress have been working for years to reform the structure of the Medicaid Program in order to reduce costs, improve the program, and preserve it for those who are in need. The Affordable Care Act did not fix these problems; it made them worse. Under ObamaCare, Medicaid is more expensive to taxpayers and an even larger burden on the States. With dramatically increased enrollment, Medicaid reform is likely to be even more difficult in the future.

Why anyone would brag about adding enrollees to an insolvent government health program that provides the lowest standard of service in the country with the fewest provider options is beyond me. I suppose those tasked with claiming ObamaCare is a success have to cite positive figures wherever they can dig them up.

The Affordable Care Act also increased taxes dramatically. It raised taxes on drug companies and medical device manufacturers, which have been passed directly to middle-income and lower income consumers because that is what happens when you increase taxes on businesses that produce goods and services. It includes a tax on the so-called Cadillac insurance plans, which proponents claim would only impact rich employees of very large corporations. Of course, the tax was structured in a way that guarantees that in the not too distant future, millions of middle-class Americans will be hit by the tax and see their insurance costs go up even further.

All told, there have been about $1 trillion in new taxes under ObamaCare. While the President and his allies may claim these taxes hold the middle class harmless, the facts tell a different story. That story, of course, isn't just now coming to light. Many of us on the Republican side have been talking about these issues from the very beginning.

I can go on and on. For example, the Affordable Care Act, with its various mandates, also increased costs to employers around the country, resulting in fewer new hires and reduced opportunities for many existing employees.

Many small businesses now choose not to expand in order to avoid reaching the number of employees that will trigger new requirements. At the same time, because the law perversely defines a full-time employee as one working a minimum of 30 hours, other companies are avoiding the triggers by cutting back on workers' hours.

All of these developments—every single one of them—were predicted way back in 2009 when the law was being debated. The President told us we were wrong. His supporters in Congress did the same. They ignored the obvious warnings, and now the American people, as well as small businesses and job creators, are paying the price.

These issues and many others are why Republicans have spent more than 5 years fighting against ObamaCare. We have introduced bills to repeal the whole law, others to repeal just the most harmful elements. I personally have introduced bills to repeal the individual mandate, the employer mandate, and the medical device tax. On the Senate Finance Committee, we have conducted rigorous oversight on numerous aspects of the law and the implementation of various programs. Other committees have done the same within their jurisdictions. Virtually all of us have supported efforts to challenge elements of the law in court.

While we have differed on tactics from time to time, Republicans have been united in our desire to repeal and replace this misguided attempt at health care reform. Some of us have even come up with specific ideas on how to replace ObamaCare. For example, earlier this year, Senator BURR, Chairman FRED UPTON from the House, and I released the latest draft of the Patient CARE Act, a legislative proposal that would fix many of the things the authors of ObamaCare got horribly wrong.

Most notably, as a number of health care experts have concluded, our proposal would actually reduce health care costs. As we all know, rising costs are the single biggest problem plaguing our health care system. Yet the President's health law did virtually nothing to address this issue. Unlike the poorly named Affordable Care Act, the Patient CARE Act would actually make health care more affordable throughout the United States.

At the beginning of this year, Republicans assumed the majority in the Senate, having committed—even promised in some cases—to work to repeal this so-called Affordable Care Act. This week, with the bill now before us, we will take a major step toward delivering on those promises. The legislation we are now debating would send the broadest possible ObamaCare repeal to the President's desk.

As the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, I am pleased to have joined with my colleagues—the distinguished chairman of the Budget and HELP Committees, as well as the Senate Republican leadership—to lead this latest fight against ObamaCare. This bill would repeal many of the worst parts of ObamaCare. Among other things, it would repeal the individual mandate, the employer mandate, the medical device tax, and the Cadillac tax. All of these different parts of ObamaCare have contributed in one way or another to the long, slow death march we have witnessed over the past 5 years. All of them would be dealt with under this legislation.

The legislation would address another contentious debate: the one dealing with Planned Parenthood. The debate over Planned Parenthood has perplexed Congress and divided our country for years as many people have expressed ever more opposition to providing such a controversial organization—and I am being generous with that label—with taxpayer funds. As we all know, this debate reached a boiling point earlier this year.

The reconciliation package before us would prohibit Federal payments to Planned Parenthood and direct more funds to the Federal community health center program, putting an end to the Federal Government's entanglements with Planned Parenthood while alleviating legitimate concerns about funding for women's health. This is yet another reason to support this legislation.

As I said, the debate we are having this week is an important milestone in the history of ObamaCare, maybe even the most important milestone yet. But we need to be realistic. While this bill is an important step, it stands no real chance of becoming law. For that to happen, we are going to have to see even more changes. But that doesn't mean our efforts here are for nothing. This bill may not result in new law, but it will give the American people a fresh accounting of where each of us stands when it comes to ObamaCare.

It is funny, Republicans have taken some flack—not a lot but some—for referring to the Affordable Care Act as ''ObamaCare'' or ''the President's health care law.'' The President, for his part, hasn't shied away from these labels, but I have read a few pundits who think these terms are specifically intended to undermine the legitimacy of a statute duly passed by Congress. In some respects, I suppose that might be true. After all, even though we constantly refer to the law as ''ObamaCare,'' it is not as though President Obama passed it himself. He was aided and abetted by his allies in Congress.

While it may be useful shorthand to attach the President's name to it, I don't think the American people have forgotten the others who helped bring this terrible law to pass. President Obama will forever own the Affordable Care Act, that is for sure. People will likely always refer to it as ''ObamaCare.'' But those in Congress who drafted and voted for the law will own it too.

When President Obama vetoes this legislation, as we all expect he will, he will take ownership of the Affordable Care Act—not that he hasn't in the past—along with its many failures and gross inadequacies all over again. I think the same can be said for any of our colleagues who vote against repealing the worst elements of the law this week.

I hope my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will think about that as this debate moves forward and that they will consider voting with us to send this repeal to the President's desk. I think it would be a very wise move on their part.

This isn't going away even if the President does veto this bill. I hope he doesn't, but if he intends to do it, it would be a breath of fresh air for our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to help us to have a veto-proof majority to tell the President once and for all that this bill is not what we want in America.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. President, I come to the Senate floor today to talk about the broken promises of ObamaCare and the negative impacts this poorly written law have had on my State of Colorado. While there have been many broken promises of ObamaCare, there have been three major broken promises that are the center of focus for hundreds of thousands of Coloradans.

I want to start with broken promise No. 1. If you like your plan, you can keep it. The President said over 35 times that Americans shouldn't worry about ObamaCare because if you like your plan, then you can keep it. And it wasn't just the President; time after time, supporters of ObamaCare came to the floor of the House or the Senate or before townhalls in their States or districts and repeated those words: If you like your plan, you can keep it. In fact, these words were used to justify the reason they supported ObamaCare in the first place.

Coloradans quickly learned this promise was far from the truth. In late 2013, roughly 335,000 insurance policies in Colorado were canceled because of ObamaCare. These cancellations also affected my family health care plan. Unfortunately, the cancellations in 2013 were the very beginning. In January of 2014, the Colorado Division of Insurance canceled an additional 249,000 plans because those plans didn't meet the requirements of ObamaCare.

The President said: If you like your plan, you can keep it. Supporters in Congress said: If you like your plan, you can keep it. But what he meant was, as long as the government approves of your plan, you can keep it.

In 2015, an additional 190,000 plans were canceled. In total, according to the Congressional Research Service, over 750,000 health insurance perhaps plans in Colorado were canceled between 2013 and 2015.

The fact-checking organization PolitiFact said this promise was ''impossible to keep'' and went on to deem President Obama's promise that if you like your health care plan, you can keep it the ''Lie of the Year'' for 2013.

Supporters of ObamaCare will tell you that it is OK that this happened because these 750,000 individuals must have had inferior health insurance and that the government knows best. You see, that is the exact problem with government. That is the arrogance of government and the arrogance of ObamaCare—that people in the government, bureaucrats and others, believe they know better than the American consumers what is best for them. They believe it is OK to cancel 750,000 policies because they must have been bad, so go ahead and cancel them. They will also say that it is all right because there are additional plans they can choose from. But that wasn't the promise of ObamaCare.

Broken promise No. 1: If you like your health care plan, you can keep it.

Broken promise No. 2: ObamaCare will reduce the costs for families, businesses, and our government.

Remember, when ObamaCare was passed, they said the family would save $2,500 a year relatively soon after its passage. Unfortunately, Coloradans have felt that broken promise as well. It is a broken promise that hit their pocketbooks and has broken the bank as well. For example, take the Western Slope of Colorado. I have a chart here. According to the Colorado Division of Insurance, individual insurance premiums for 2016 on the Western Slope of Colorado will rise by an additional average of 25.8 percent.

There are people across America who are familiar with Colorado's Western Slope. These are the incredible mountain vistas, our forests, our national parks, our ski resorts.

They received a 25.8-percent increase in their health care costs this year. That is far from the promise of lowering the health care costs that ObamaCare was passed with. No one can afford these high prices. In fact, in 2013 one of my Democratic colleagues in the Colorado delegation even tried to exempt one of the wealthiest counties in Colorado from ObamaCare, citing that health insurance premiums would be too expensive. Let me say that again. A Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, a Democrat, tried to exempt portions of his district from ObamaCare because it was making his constituents pay too much for their insurance. Here is a quote:

> We will be encouraging a waiver. It will be difficult for Summit County residents to become insured. For the vast majority, it's too high a price to pay.

It doesn't matter whether you live in the Eastern Plains, Fort Collins, or the Western Slope, ObamaCare has simply made it more costly. Plans are getting more expensive, and promises are being broken.

Broken promise No. 3: President Obama promised greater competition in the marketplace through consumer-run co-ops. Yet over 80,000 Coloradans are feeling the impacts of this broken promise. To date, 12 out of 23 co-ops created by ObamaCare have been shut down across the United States, including the co-op in Colorado, which failed in October of this year.

Nationwide, the failed co-ops were loaned over $1 billion, which came from the hard-working taxpayers of this country. That taxpayer money was supposed to help get these co-ops off the ground, but now with these failures, that taxpayer money is at risk of never being paid back to the people of this country, and the health care of nearly 700,000 individuals across the United States is in jeopardy.

ObamaCare allowed policies to be offered that were never actuarially sound because they assumed there would be a bailout by the government to help make them actuarially sound. By banking on a bailout, they sold the American people a bill of goods.

Today we have a path forward that is turning away from the failed health care law that has been built on broken promises. The first step of this path forward is to repeal ObamaCare, and I urge my colleagues to support the repeal of ObamaCare that we will be voting on this week. Repealing ObamaCare will clear the way for a replacement plan and will put our country's health care on the right track.

First, we have to restore the ability of individuals to choose what is best for themselves instead of having Big Government choose for them. Coloradans don't want Dr. Congress. They want to keep the doctor they were promised they could keep in the first place. The best way to do this is to ensure that people get to keep the health plans that they want, and that is why I am working with Senator RON JOHNSON from Wisconsin on his amendment that simply says that if you like your health care plan, you can keep it.

I heard from countless individuals in Colorado who lost the plans they liked and wanted to keep. They were certainly promised they could keep them, and just because ObamaCare can't fulfill the promise that it was sold under doesn't mean we shouldn't do our jobs to make that promise a reality. The amendment Senator JOHNSON and I have offered would allow individuals to continue receiving health coverage on plans that would otherwise be canceled because of ObamaCare.

Second, we must ensure that taxpayer dollars are used responsibly. I filed an amendment that will help recover taxpayer money that was loaned to the failed co-ops. More than $1 billion in Federal loans were awarded to these failed co-ops. Congress has a duty to spend taxpayer dollars responsibly, and this amendment will ensure just that.

Lastly, we must make sure individuals have certainty in the health coverage they choose. My final amendment will make certain that co-ops can't rely on bailouts when they are calculating insurance premiums, setting false expectations for consumers. Several co-ops counted on these bailout provisions to keep premiums artificially low. Because these premiums were artificially low and since many co-ops were planning on receiving the bailout, many could no longer cover their expenses. Allowing co-ops to rely on a bailout was irresponsible and has resulted in nearly 700,000 individuals nationwide whose health coverage is now uncertain.

It is time to act. It is time to take the path forward. It is time to repeal ObamaCare, which is simply one big broken promise after another. This path to repeal ObamaCare will allow us to replace ObamaCare and will have fewer health care regulations for businesses and individuals. It will put us on a path forward for individual freedoms and a more prosperous America.

I yield back my time.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARDNER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

OMNIBUS APPROPRIATIONS BILL AND POLICY RIDERS

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, we are about to consider a big appropriations bill all wrapped up into one called an Omnibus appropriations bill. I think it will be a good bill. But here we go again, trying to attach all kinds of goodies to it.

Now, with just a few days left of funding before the U.S. Government spending authority and appropriations expire—to the best of my recollection that is about 9½ days away—we have to get something done. But what is happening is that the special interests are coming out of the woodwork, and they are hard at work to sneak sweetheart deals into what is a must-pass piece of legislation—the funding to keep the Government of the United States functioning. So these special interests that are suddenly popping up and sneaking around the corner don't have to get the votes to get it passed through their regular order for whatever their particular interest is. They want it so their interests are riders on the appropriations bill, and everybody has to vote for it with their special interests because if we don't, the government shuts down, which is obviously an unacceptable alternative.

These handouts to special interests are known as appropriations riders. Most ordinary Americans don't know that this stuff is going on.

Well, based on the appropriations bill that we saw earlier this year, we know that many of these riders could work their way in. For example, some people, particularly in the banking community, don't like some of the restrictions. In September of 2008, when we nearly had a financial meltdown as a result of Lehman Brothers going down, there was a big financial death spiral going on. A lot of excesses happened during that time in the bailout so that Wall Street would not go under, and there was legislation to correct some of those excesses. It is known by the name of the two authors, Senator Dodd and Congressman Frank. There are going to be people trying to put in a rollback of some of those provisions, but I hope some of our colleagues will remember what those were put in for, so that we don't have the likelihood of having another financial death spiral like that which almost occurred.

I hope we remember the picture in our minds of the Republican Secretary of the Treasury at the end of the George Bush administration, begging the leadership of Congress to pass the troubled assets relief bill to keep the financial integrity of the U.S. Government. There were a lot of excesses, including excessive executive salaries that came from that.

We know all about what happened to that supersized insurance company called AIG. I don't think Americans would want these kinds of things put on a necessary funding bill for the United States Government.

I will give another example. Another policy rider is to prohibit the United States from working with other countries to address climate change. This Senator has been in the middle of it because Miami Beach is ground zero on climate change. The measurements over the last 40 years are an additional 5 to 8 inches that the sea level has risen at the seasonal high tide. The streets of Miami Beach are flooded. It is a real problem.

There are some, such as Senator INHOFE, who don't believe it. So we can have that debate. I am respectful of Senator INHOFE and of his position, although I think we can easily refute it with scientific evidence, but we ought to have that debate. Don't sneak it in on a rider on a must-pass, gargantuan appropriations bill in order to keep the government functioning.

There are other riders that are being discussed that are bad for the safety of families and making our highways more dangerous. For example, we picked up that some of the appropriators have suggested to continue the delay of the important implementation of safety laws, such as how long does it take for a trucker to become tired if they have to work longer and longer hours, and is that a safety concern. As the ranking member of the Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction, we work on these issues. We debate them. Don't go trying to sneak something in under the rug in an appropriations bill regarding safety for surface transportation. We just hammered that out in a conference committee on the highway bill. The highway bill is a lot more than just highways and bridges; it is surface transportation. It includes safety measures as well for all modes of surface transportation.

Let me give an example of another rider that is out there lurking. There are some who want to take all of the additional fees—when someone buys a ticket to fly on an airline, a person ought to have the opportunity of knowing what all those fees are, and on a person's airline ticket that one buys from the airline, one usually does. But there are others who want to sell those airline tickets—not the airlines—and not disclose all of those fees. Yet the consumers are the ones who are paying for it. They are trying to sneak in under the rug another provision that would become law on an unrelated appropriations bill.

So I just wanted to add my voice to the others who are speaking this afternoon. Let's put the American people first, and let's use what we hear about all the time: Regular order. Let the committee system work to hammer out what ought to be in the bills instead of, at the eleventh hour of the 59th minute as we have to fund the government, trying to sneak something in, in the dead of night, in order to scratch the itch of someone's special interest.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lead a colloquy with Senators BURR, ISAKSON, CASSIDY, and SCOTT for up to 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, today we are talking about repealing Obamacare and moving in a completely different direction toward more choices and lower costs for Americans as they search for their health care plans.

I came to the floor yesterday and brought back a memory from 5½ years ago of the President's health care summit, nationally televised all day long at the Blair House, with 36 Members of Congress and the President of the United States. I had a chance, leading off for the Republican speakers that day, to say respectfully to President Obama: Mr. President, this health care plan of yours is going to impose a huge Medicaid unfunded mandate on State budgets, which will raise tuitions and take money from other State programs. It will take money out of Medicare and spend it on something else. It will increase taxes, it will raise premiums, and it will cost jobs. Unfortunately, that all turned out to be true.

The Senator from Georgia, Mr. ISAKSON, was there, as I was, on that Christmas Eve. It was a cold night when the Democrats had, for a few months, 60 votes, and they rammed through Obamacare in the middle of the night with all Democratic votes, no Republican votes, with us warning what would happen.

Now, I say to Senator ISAKSON, the premiums in Georgia, I believe will go up 29 percent for some plans.

Mr. ISAKSON. That is correct.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And I wonder if the Senator has been hearing from some of his constituents about their premium increases.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, let me confirm what the Senator from Tennessee just said about that cold night on Christmas Eve 6 years ago when the administration was promising lower premiums, better benefits, and that ObamaCare was going to be the solution for the problems of American families.

As the Senator from Tennessee said, I have gotten letters, as has he. Every Member has gotten letters from people who are having higher premiums, bigger deductibles, and fewer benefits. Let me give an example. A family in Roswell, GA, wrote me, a family of five. They had just been notified that their premium was going from $849 a month to $1,075 a month, a $300 increase, with a deductible of $11,900, an increase of $6,900 in their deductible. The mother, who had a family history of breast cancer, was denied mammograms because of her age, and a young daughter who had a precancerous mole removed was refused reimbursement.

So here is an increase in premiums, a reduction in benefits, and an increase in their deductible. It doesn't make any sense, but it is all because of the mandates of the ObamaCare law.

Secondly, a young couple in Smyrna, GA, wanted to plan for their retirement and start saving early in their early years of productivity. They recently received a notice from their insurance company that their premium was going from $607 a month to $1,379 a month—over a 100-percent increase. Where is that money coming from? They are having to reduce their savings for retirement just to pay the ObamaCare premium and get less of a benefit because their deductible is going from $2,000 to $4,000.

The promise of lower cost health care and better benefits was exactly wrong and what the American people were promised was wrong. I am proud that Mr. ENZI, the Senator from Tennessee, and others who have led this reconciliation vote to repeal ObamaCare have done so. It is time the American people got the truth—better coverage, lower costs, but do it the old-fashioned way with a private competitive system.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his leadership on the HELP Committee on which all of us serve.

One of the newer members of the HELP Committee brings a lot of expertise: Senator CASSIDY from Louisiana. He wasn't there, at least not in the Senate, on the night Obamacare passed, but he has written forcefully about the fact that while premiums have been going up, something else was going down, and that is family incomes because of the 30-hour work week. Senator CASSIDY had an article in Forbes magazine in 2014 that pointed out the impact of the 30-hour work week in Obamacare and how that was hurting working families.

Mr. CASSIDY. I say to Senator ALEXANDER, one of the ironies of this is that it was promoted as a way to help lower income families make ends meet better. But if you require employers to provide insurance to low-wage workers, the predictable response of an employer who has thin margins is to actually convert those full-time workers to part-time workers. This doesn't happen for the CEO or for the CEO's lieutenants, and it doesn't happen for middle management. The folks it happens most to are those lower paid workers.

I once went grocery shopping in Baton Rouge, and a woman rung me up. The next day my wife sent me to another store to get something else at another store. The same woman was ringing me up. I said: I just saw you at that store, but now I see you at this store. She said—I am paraphrasing—my first employer reduced my hours, so now I have had to take a second job to make ends meet.

Now, that is the personal story. But what the labor statistics show is that since the recession has technically ended, the hours worked per week have recovered for higher income workers, but as for the lower income workers, they have continued to suffer. The most vulnerable have been the most affected in terms of hours worked, but it is not just the most vulnerable, it is also the middle class.

The New York Times wrote an article 2 weeks ago. The headline says it all: ''Many Say High Deductibles Make Their Health Law Insurance All But Useless.'' They quote a gentleman, David Reines from New Jersey. He is 60 years old. He said:

> The deductible, $3,000 a year, makes it impossible to actually go to the doctor. . . . We have insurance, but can't afford to use it.

So it is the middle-income worker who also has a policy which previously would have allowed him or her to go to the doctor. Now they can't because the way ObamaCare is so structured is that it is too expensive for that out-of-pocket first exposure.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What the Senator is saying, if I hear him right, is that in the worst of circumstances, the effect of Obamacare on some of the people he is talking with means they are working less hours, so they have less money. Their insurance premium is higher, and so is their deductible. That is the effect.

Mr. CASSIDY. When it comes to insurance premiums, you can't make this up.

This is a fellow from Homewood, LA. His first name is Mark; we scratched out his last name. This is his letter from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana informing him that his policy, which had previously been $207 per month, was going up in 2016 to $961 per month. His policy, which had been roughly $2,400 a year, is going up to $11,500 a year. And this is because of the Affordable Care Act—the Unaffordable Care Act.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The essential problem with Obamacare for people who buy individual insurance, it seems to me, I say to Senator ISAKSON, is that Washington tells you what insurance to buy.

I think of a woman named Emilie in Middle Tennessee who has lupus and who had a policy she could afford. It had modest benefits and it didn't cost very much, but it fit her needs, but Obamacare canceled that policy. When she went online to find another policy under Obamacare, her costs went up from $100 to $400 a month. I guess the Senator has heard stories like that as well in Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. All the time, because what happened with ObamaCare is the following: People who had insurance they could afford and who had bought coverage they needed were forced to buy coverage they didn't need because of the mandates in ObamaCare in terms of what had to be included. So it forced more coverage that you didn't need, which raised the premiums you paid. So you end up paying more and getting less, and it was the mandates of ObamaCare that did it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Senator CASSIDY, of course, has a unique perspective on this as a practicing physician. I think he still practices some—as much as he can within the Senate rules—but he sees patients regularly. I ask Senator CASSIDY, what was the effect of this new health care law 5½ years ago on the ability of patients to choose their own physicians?

Mr. CASSIDY. The way the market has responded, in order to make insurance affordable despite the mandates, is there are so-called narrow networks. So someone signs up for the most affordable policy they can get. It turns out that the doctor they previously saw is not on this plan. So the narrow network is going to be just a small set of doctors. The specialists may be in another town; one hospital, not all hospitals. And patients are unfamiliar with this. They did not expect it. But that was their only affordable option. The mandates have driven up the costs so much.

By the way, going back to the letter you got about the mandated benefits, in my recent campaign, I had a woman walk up to me, and she said: My name is Tina, and I am angry. I had a hysterectomy. I am 56 years old and I have no children. My husband and I are paying $500 more per month for insurance, which we cannot afford, and I am paying for pediatric dentistry, and I am paying for obstetrical services.

She had had a hysterectomy, was 56 years old, and had no children.

Another woman—she was 58 and her husband was 57—told me: The only reason I would need obstetrical services, which I am forced to buy, is if my name is Sarah and my husband is Abraham, but that is not the case.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Senator ISAKSON, before he came to the Senate, was a small businessman in Georgia.

Probably the largest employer in our country is the hospitality industry—restaurants, hotels, that sort of thing, employing many young people, many minority people. I met with a number of restaurant owners, who told me after Obamacare passed that because of the costs of that insurance to the company, their goal would be to reduce the number of employees from 90 to 70. So Obamacare costs jobs. Did the Senator have that kind of experience in Georgia as well?

Mr. ISAKSON. Not only did it cost jobs, but it forced many people who had full-time jobs into part-time jobs because of the mandates. Small business got hurt and their employees got hurt.

The mandates of ObamaCare for coverage, the mandates for taxation, and the mandates for deductibles all contributed to the increasing costs of ObamaCare and made health care more out of reach than more accessible.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Memphis is proud of the fact that it is a center for medical device innovation. Some of the leading medical device companies in the world are located in Memphis, TN. The Obamacare bill—part of its trillion dollars in new taxes included a medical device tax which put an especially onerous tax on the gross income of medical devices companies, causing the President in Costa Rica to put up signs saying ''Welcome to Costa Rica'' to medical device companies.

I wonder if in Louisiana or Georgia you had any experience with the impact of the medical device tax on your constituents?

Mr. CASSIDY. There is a fellow who started a medical device startup in

New Orleans, and he was saying that he had an offer to move his business to Panama because a major portion of his market is overseas.

So the medical device tax is, of course, a tax upon the gross of a business. If he moves overseas to Panama, taking those jobs with him, and continues to sell internationally and not pay tax on that but is taxed only on that which he brings back to the United States, then he is obviously reducing his tax burden. Those are high-paying, white-collar jobs in New Orleans, a city recovering from Katrina. If the power to tax is the power to destroy, this tax has the power to destroy the ability of this gentleman to continue to expand in New Orleans.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I say to Senator ISAKSON, I recall one of the most vigorous debates we had 5½ years ago was first the President saying: We won't touch Medicare. Next thing you know, they took $700 billion out of Medicare to spend on new programs, at a time when the Medicare trustees, whose job it is to tell us things like this, said: The program is going to go broke unless we do something about it. We were saying: If you are going to take money away from grandma's Medicare, you better spend it on grandma. But they didn't. It impacted Medicare recipients in Georgia, Tennessee, and Louisiana.

Mr. ISAKSON. Well, the President basically robbed Peter to pay Paul. He robbed the beneficiaries of Medicare benefits and then took the money and spent it on somebody else. So the person who had the benefits didn't have the benefits any longer.

The problem with this entire deal is it was a charade. Promises were made that if you like your policy, you can keep it. That turned out to be wrong. Premiums were going to go down. That turned out to be wrong. If you couldn't get insurance, you would be able to get insurance. Well, that ended up being true in part, but it became something known as a bronze policy. Do you know what a bronze policy is? It was a policy that gave you coverage, but the deductible was so big, you couldn't get to the coverage. So every time there was a promise, it was a broken promise, an increased cost, and less accessibility to coverage.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, how much time remains in our colloquy?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Six minutes remaining.

We have heard a lot in the news about co-ops. Co-ops were an invention of Obamacare that were designed to provide health care to many Americans. I know that in South Carolina, for example—closure of these co-ops for 67,000 South Carolinians and 27,000 Tennesseans—means that suddenly they have to find new coverage. I wonder if either in Louisiana or Georgia, you have had any experience with the new co-ops in Obamacare?

Mr. CASSIDY. Louisiana's co-op failed. It attempted to lower costs with a skinny network, but ultimately it still could not compete.

If I may point out, we have talked about how the low-wage worker has had her opportunity diminished by the law. We discussed how the middle-class family, who oftentimes had insurance they were told they could keep, lost it, and now they have a deductible of $3,000, which they say makes the insurance something they cannot afford. We are speaking about the U.S. taxpayer. The U.S. taxpayer has put billions of dollars toward these co-ops. There is some evidence that the administration continued to put money into them even when they knew they were going to fail, and yet now they are failing—over half and supposedly more slated to do so. It isn't just the low-wage worker and the middle-class family; it is all the taxpayers who have taken a hit for promises made but promises broken.

Mr. ALEXANDER. During the debate 5½ years ago at the health care summit at the Blair House, our Democratic friends said: Well, when are you Republicans going to come up with a big, comprehensive plan? My answer to them was: If you are waiting for Senator MCCONNELL to roll a wheelbarrow onto the Senate floor with a 2,700 page McConnell-care bill, you are going to be waiting until the sky turns purple because we don't believe in that. We don't think we are wise enough in Washington, DC, to write a comprehensive plan for everything about the American health care for all the people in this country.

Instead, what we proposed to do—and we proposed it over and over again—was to move step by step in a different direction toward more choices, more freedom, and lower costs. In fact, I counted it up, and 173 times in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the year 2009, we Republicans laid out our plans step by step toward those causes, steps like the step Senator SCOTT from South Carolina took in a bipartisan way just this year to give States the ability to set the rates for the kind of insurance small businesses could buy and avoid an 18-percent increase in premiums. Those are the kinds of steps we would take in a different direction to give the American people those options.

Our time for the colloquy has expired. I thank the Senator from Georgia, Mr. ISAKSON, and the Senator from Louisiana, Mr. CASSIDY. We Republicans said 5½ years ago that premiums would go up, taxes would go up, jobs would be lost, and that State budgets would be burdened by Medicaid, and all that turned out to be true, unfortunately.

The President said: If you like your plan, you can keep it. That turned out to be untrue, unfortunately.

We are prepared to go in a different direction—more choices, more freedom, lower costs—but first, this week we are going to repeal Obamacare, which has caused such problems for the American people, and then we will head in a different direction.

I thank the Presiding Officer.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold that request?

Mr. ISAKSON. I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. President.

I ask unanimous consent to conduct a colloquy with my colleagues from Massachusetts and Florida for roughly the next 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPROPRIATIONS BILLS AND POLICY RIDERS

Mr. MERKLEY. Mr. President, 7 years ago Wall Street imploded, sending us into a recession that we hadn't seen since the Great Depression. While our economy has slowly bounced back, the memory of that crisis is still fresh in the minds of many Americans, millions of whom lost their jobs, millions of whom lost their homes, and millions of whom lost their retirement savings.

Nobody wants to repeat the financial collapse, the bailouts, the recession. Indeed, we have spent the last 6 years digging out of a hole. Despite this, Republican colleagues at this very moment are holding meetings and preparing policy riders to gut the reforms that shut down the Wall Street casino. They are working to open up that casino again, to the great detriment of families across this country. Their goal is to add poison pill policy riders to the fiscal year 2016 appropriation bills that may well be consolidated into an omnibus.

That is why I am here on the floor with my colleagues from Rhode Island and Massachusetts. Our colleague, Senator BILL NELSON from Florida, spoke earlier about these issues. We are here to say no to these policy riders that are seeking to reopen the Wall Street casino and put American families at peril.

To start things off, I turn to my colleague from Rhode Island, who has brought great expertise and diligence to this conversation over the responsible regulations, the ones that serve like the traffic signals that enable traffic to move slowly so they don't end up in auto wrecks, but they don't shut it down—the responsible regulations that will keep us from having another crash doing great damage to American families.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Oregon for his leadership on this issue, and I thank my colleagues who are going to join us later.

I am joining them in urging all of our colleagues in the Senate not to roll back the protections that are in place due to the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010.

Let me remind everyone where we have come from. When we passed the Wall Street reform act, the Dodd-Frank act, we were in the most painful financial crisis since the Great Depression. The Dow Jones dropped from roughly 13,700 points in July of 2007 to 7,235 points by March of 2009, about a 47 percent drop in wealth as indicated by the stock market. It was a huge, huge hit. The line at that time was: What is happening to your 401(k) plan?

Well, we have come back, and one of the reasons we have come back is because Dodd-Frank has now provided safer rules of the road for financial institutions.

Back then and going forward, we lost 8.6 million jobs from January of 2008 until January of 2010. There were 8 million jobs lost primarily because Wall Street lost its way, frankly. The unemployment rate doubled from 5 percent in January of 2008 to 10 percent in October of 2009. In that period of time, roughly from July 2007 to November of 2014, nearly 7.5 million families lost their homes.

These are sobering numbers. Behind each of these numbers is an individual or family—our constituents, who suffered real and serious damages. Again, this was traceable almost directly back to excesses on Wall Street, which we consciously tried to correct in the Dodd-Frank act, and it has provided a solid foundation for economic recovery. Slow as it has been, we are coming back.

What happened was that these families lost their retirements—wiped out. It was not only the financial loss but the sheer psychological trauma of being either retired or on the edge of retirement and suddenly it was all gone. It has left a lasting impression.

People have lost jobs, as I have indicated. It was a huge loss of jobs. Some have never gotten back into the market or gotten a job at the level they had before.

Then, of course, there were the foreclosures, thousands and thousands of Americans losing their homes. Without their homes, some of our constituents lost their whole sense of belonging to the community and their ability to find a new job because they were just battling a day at a time for shelter and for subsistence. These were real issues, and we seem to have forgotten all of that. We seem to have forgotten that Wall Street—without sound regulations, strong regulation—will find its way off the path and into this type of difficulty.

We all know people who suffered these losses, and we all are committed that they won't suffer them again. But that commitment requires us to follow through on the Dodd-Frank act, the Wall Street reform act.

In that legislation, I worked very closely with Senator WARREN to create the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. It is just one of the examples of the efforts in that bill that actually protected our constituents, not theoretically but practically. They have been protected from tricky people who were giving them mortgages they couldn't afford, engaging in illegal servicing and foreclosure practices in the mortgage industry, steering consumers into excessive loans they couldn't afford—and the person doing the steering knew they couldn't afford them—but those tricky people took the money and literally ran, and we have tried to stop them.

Because of the efforts of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, $11.2 billion in relief has been given to families throughout this country; $11 billion has been given to individuals and families all across this country. This is an example not of theoretical legalistic procedures but of practical help for people. That is the direct result of Dodd-Frank, and some of the proposals that we are hearing about would undo that.

In the process of creating the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, I am particularly proud of working with colleagues to create the Office of Servicemember Affairs within the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to serve as a watchdog for our military personnel. Under the leadership of Holly Petraeus, it has done a remarkable job. More than $90 million has been returned to servicemembers and their families from unscrupulous companies that preyed upon our military families deliberately—understanding the vulnerability of families that are in transit because of deployments and other things. Another example, the Military Lending Act, which has capped annual interest rates for military personnel, has been enforced through the efforts of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau.

This has not only helped these families, but it has helped this Nation. It has helped our military readiness. I can tell you that basically a long time ago, I had the privilege of commanding soldiers, paratroopers in the 82nd, and it is hard to be a good soldier when you worry about whether your family is going to be able to make it through the week or the month to get your next paycheck. This is real help, and it is the result of Dodd-Frank. No, many things are the result of Dodd-Frank.

So why do we want to roll back these reforms? You ask people, and they will say: Well, it is burdensome, and they are hurting these financial institutions; you know, it is just so hard to operate a financial institution today.

Then you take a look at the stock performance of these institutions, the American global systemically important banks and even our regional banks. These institutions have seen their stock prices increase from July 2010 at least by 31 percent and in some cases as high as 114 percent. That is the market saying to these institutions and to all of us that they are in good shape. They are in great shape. They are not being burdened by financial regulations. They are not being overwhelmed. They are profit centers. They are doing great. Name other companies that have increased their value so much. One reason is because everyone is confident there is a stable, sound, rigorous regulatory structure that is ensuring that banks will not go off the cliff as they did in 2007 and 2008 when their stock prices collapsed.

So if you look at that, if you look at the markets, they are not complaining about Dodd-Frank. The markets are looking to say: That is where the money should go. That is what you should invest in.

So if you look at that growth and then draw a contrast between what has happened to average American families—they haven't seen that kind of wage growth. I don't know many working families who have seen a 31 percent increase in their income or a 114 percent increase in their income, but we have to do better with respect to our working families.

One thing we have to do is make sure that we keep in place protections that were built into the Dodd-Frank act.

There are always ways you can improve legislation, and there are a myriad of technical corrections that could be done, but to disguise some of these proposals as technical corrections is not appropriate.

I think also, frankly, if we are going to be sensible, sound, and thoughtful about technical corrections, let's go ahead and do it the way it should be done, the way Dodd-Frank was done. I was on the banking committee. We had hearings. We had a markup. We had, in fact, several markups until we got it right. Then we brought it to the floor, we had a vigorous debate, and we amended the bill. Then we took that bill to conference, then we had it changed in conference, and then we sent it to the President for his signature.

So if we are going to do corrections to improve the Dodd-Frank bill, let's do it the way we did it originally, not finding a convenient vehicle—a highway bill, an appropriations bill, any other bill—and sticking them in as sort of ''take it or leave it''—you have to do this or you lose highway funding or you lose funding for our schools, for education, for national defense.

I would hope that we can move forward in regular order and make corrections where necessary, but certainly let's not use these waning days of this session to undermine the Dodd-Frank Act with some of the proposals I have heard.

With that, I yield back to my colleague, the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MERKLEY. I thank my colleague from Rhode Island for his comments and insights.

Now we are going to turn to the Senator from Massachusetts. We will be delighted to hear her thoughts on this challenge of taking serious issues related to the Wall Street casino, a system that brought down the prospects for so many American families, and how there is the consideration of restoring the Wall Street casino in the dark of night by policy riders being attached to other bills.

Ms. WARREN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator MERKLEY, Senator NELSON, and Senator REED on the floor today. I thank Senator MERKLEY for pulling us together.

We are here to say no—no to the industry lobbyists, no to their friends in Congress who are threatening a government shutdown if we won't roll back rules that protect consumers and protect the safety of our financial system.

It is a pretty neat trick. The lobbyists probably know they can't get a rollback of financial regulations passed out in the open where the American people can actually see what is happening and see which Senators and which Representatives voted to gut the rules that protect working families. So instead they tack rollbacks onto must-pass legislation, such as the upcoming government funding bill, to give their friends in Congress a lot of cover for voting yes.

It is cynical. It is cynical and it is corrupt, but it usually works. Just last year, Citigroup lobbyists wrote a provision to blast a hole in Dodd-Frank. The part of the law that was blown up was called—and I am quoting the title—''Prohibition Against Federal Government Bailouts of Swaps Entities.'' The idea behind the rule was pretty simple. If a big bank wanted to engage in certain kinds of risky deals, such as the credit default swaps that had been at the heart of the 2008 crisis, they had to bear all of that risk themselves instead of passing it along to taxpayers.

Now the big banks wanted that rule repealed, and the only way to do it was to put it on a bill that had to pass or the government would shut down, and that is exactly what they did.

For 1 year, Congressman ELIJAH CUMMINGS and I worked to document the impact of that Citigroup amendment, and we finally got what we needed. The FDIC estimates that the provision written by Citigroup lobbyists last year that allows a few big banks to put taxpayers on the hook for risky swaps has an estimated value of almost $10 trillion. And who is gobbling up that $10 trillion of risk? It is three huge banks: Citigroup, JPMorgan Chase, and Bank of America. It is three banks, nearly $10 billion, and $10 trillion is a lot of risky business. These banks will happily suck down the profits when their high-stakes bets work out, and they will just as happily turn to the taxpayers to bail them out if there is a problem. All of this is because the lobbyists persuaded Congress to do just one little favor in a must-pass bill.

Now, a year after the Citigroup amendment, there are rumors of new giveaways in the upcoming funding bill: rollbacks that would make it harder for the government to stop the next AIG from taking down the entire economy, rollbacks that would exempt many of the 40 largest banks in the country from tougher oversight, rollbacks that would undermine the consumer agency's rules to clean up mortgage- and auto-lending markets, rollbacks that would stop the agency from protecting consumers rights if they are cheated on credit cards or checking accounts, rollbacks that would allow financial advisers to continue lining their own pockets while robbing retirees of billions of dollars.

Why are these rollbacks at the top of Congress's agenda? Are constituents flooding the phone lines begging their Senators to weaken the rules for financial institutions? Are they writing in by the thousands insisting that their Senators make it easier for people to get cheated?

Of course not—survey after survey has shown that hardworking Americans want stronger regulation of Wall Street and more accountability for CEOs who break the law.

But like so many things around here, this process isn't about doing what hard-working Americans want. It is about pleasing the rich and powerful who are lined up for special favors.

I know some of my Democratic colleagues are frustrated by all of the gridlock in Washington. They say: Wall Street accountability is important, but I just want to get something done around here for a change; so let's go along with the Republicans and the special interests. Well, yes, I want to get something done too. Who doesn't? But I didn't come here to carry water for Wall Street and a bunch of special interests.

If Republicans think it is time to talk about financial reform, then let's put it on the table. If the industry wants to push rollbacks, then I want to make it easier to send bankers to jail when they launder money or cheat consumers. If the industry wants to chip away at financial oversight, then I want to have a serious conversation on the record about breaking up the biggest banks. If they are too scared to have that conversation out in the open, then Senators shouldn't be handing out special favors behind closed doors.

The upcoming debate about a government funding bill is going to boil down to one question: Whose side are you on? Are you on the side of working families who got punched in the gut and want stronger rules for Wall Street or are you on the side of the giant financial institutions that broke the economy, got bailed out, and are once again trying to call the shots on Capitol Hill? Well, me, I am with the families, and I am ready to say no to the bank CEOs, no to the industry lobbyists, and no to all of their buddies here in Congress.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to Senator MERKLEY.

Mr. MERKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who has brought so much personal research in the course of her career and passion and insight to this battle and who put forward the idea of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to provide oversight of these predatory practices and who has been such a watchdog about these practices.

I would just ask her before she leaves the floor, why is it that this discussion is happening right now, in terms of policy riders on must-pass spending bills, rather than happening in the light of day with a committee hearing—a banking committee hearing—where this can be fully discussed and debated?

Ms. WARREN. Well, the Senator raises the right question, but I think it is pretty obvious. If these proposals were debated out in public, where everyone in America could see and hear them, they wouldn't pass. People don't want to line up to vote for fewer restrictions on Wall Street. They do not want to line up to vote for more opportunities to cheat American families. So, instead, the idea is just tack it on something else that is going to move through. Then the question is, Will people vote to keep the government open? And that gives a lot of people in Congress who want to help the big financial institutions a lot of cover, and that is fundamentally wrong.

Mr. MERKLEY. One of the things we have a lot of concern about is making sure that predatory mortgages don't return. They were a key product in helping drive the collapse in 2007–2008. We are concerned those could return if the ability of the CFPB to regulate them is diminished by changing the government structure of the CFPB or shutting down the funds that enable it to operate. Would that be a good idea or a bad idea?

Ms. WARREN. You know, the CFPB works. It works to help protect America's families. It works to help level the playing field. Already that agency has been up and operational for just a little over 4 years, and it has forced the biggest financial institutions in this country to return more than $11 billion directly to families they cheated. It has handled more than 750,000 complaints against big financial institutions, against payday lenders, and against college loan services that are cheating people and that are tricking people.

So what is the response? Well, it is helping the American people, but it is costing a handful of the biggest financial institutions in this country real money, and they are trying to find a way to make sure the consumer agency doesn't do its job. They want to find a way to weaken that agency, to tie that agency down, and to keep that agency from leveling the playing field for American families.

Mr. MERKLEY. I know my colleague and I have talked about this—the number increases. I will say something like the CFPB has returned $3 billion, and my colleague will say: Oh, Senator, it is now $5 billion. And when I say it is $5 billion, my colleague will remind me it is now $8 billion. And here we are at $12 billion?

Ms. WARREN. I think it is $11 billion.

Mr. MERKLEY. So $11 billion in returns. I believe that number includes real cash returned to individuals but does not include the vast savings that have come from families who were never cheated in the first place.

Ms. WARREN. I think one of the most important parts of this is the consumer agency said—when credit card companies, for example, got caught cheating people, it said to those credit card companies: Look, you have people's addresses to be able to cheat them. Now you have people's addresses to send them checks to pay them back.

It is as the Senator said. It was like a warning shot to everyone else out there cheating consumers. It said that this agency is on the level. This agency is tough. So I think there are millions of Americans who don't get cheated, who don't get tricked in one scam or another because we have a real watchdog out there—someone who is on the side of the American family.

Mr. MERKLEY. I thank my colleague so much for presenting this idea before she came to the U.S. Senate and for helping—well, stepping in to be the initial Director, getting it up and running, and now being here to make sure we defend its ability to provide fairer financial products for America's families—products that enable families to build their wealth rather than having wealth-stripping scams hurt and destroy the finances of American families.

Ms. WARREN. I only want to add that I am grateful for all the work my colleague has done on behalf of American consumers and all the work he did to get the consumer agency through Congress and now to protect it when the big banks were coming after it.

So I thank my colleague Senator MERKLEY for all he did.

Mr. MERKLEY. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, as we have heard from this colloquy—and I appreciate that BILL NELSON was here earlier, the Senator from Florida, to discuss his insights on these dark-of-night policy riders designed to restore the Wall Street casino and cheat American families. I appreciate the comments he brought to this and that JACK REED, the senior Senator from Rhode Island, has brought forward and ELIZABETH WARREN, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, each of whom made important points. So I will be brief because they have laid out most of the issues I will try to echo.

The key point is the debate over changing the rules for these powerful financial institutions should be debated in the open, in front of the TV cameras, in front of the American people, not in secret negotiation rooms and not in the dark of night, which is happening at this very moment, because a lot is at stake.

We found from before that when regulations were stripped away and the Wall Street casino went wild, we ended up with a crash that destroyed the finances of millions of families, many of whom will never recover. They lost their homes, their dreams of homeownership. That has been shattered, and they are not going to get it back. They lost their job and have been derailed and will never get back on track. They lost their retirement savings, and they will never be able to rebuild them. In fact, that golden vision of retirement may be something they feel they will never be able to be a part of—that chapter of their life will never come.

So a tremendous amount is at stake, and these dark-of-night negotiations to repeal, to undermine, to delay the shutdown of the Wall Street casinos are just wrong. Let us have the debate in the committee where it belongs. This is critical for working families everywhere in the country and certainly in my home State.

Let me mention one of the riders, which is to take and allow the Volcker rule to be voided for some of the financial institutions. What is the Volcker rule? The Volcker rule shut down the Wall Street casino. It said banks cannot bet with taxpayer-insured deposits. If a group wants to make big bets on the future of interest rates or monetary exchanges or the quality of mortgages and so forth, they must do so with private wealth funds, where the only persons at stake are those who have invested in the fund. Don't do it with taxpayer-insured banks. That is one example.

A second example is that we need to keep the quality mortgages we have now so they do not return to being a predatory instrument. We had a legalized kickback scheme, and that structure meant mortgage originators were paid for steering families from a prime mortgage that would build their wealth into a subprime mortgage with an exploding interest rate which would destroy their wealth. We ended those kickbacks. Let us not let that happen again.

Let us not undermine the role of the Financial Stability Oversight Council. When we had this dramatic massive increase in subprime loans, starting in 2003 and going through 2007, nobody was watching. We need to have someone say: Look at that surge in subprimes. And because of that surge, what is going on? Is this creating a bubble? Is this a big bet that is going to go bust? Is this going to destroy families?

We actually had an agency that was responsible for controlling these predatory practices. It was the Federal Reserve, but the Federal Reserve, full of sophisticated economists, said: Well, we want to talk monetary policy. That is what we do up in the penthouse of the Federal Reserve building. So they put consumer protection down in the basement and they locked the door and threw away the key and said: You know, we have that responsibility, but we just aren't going to do anything about it, and they let predatory schemes run wild and destroy millions of American families.

Now we have an organization—the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau—that is the watchdog making sure the disclosures and the structures are fair and square for American families so we can build the success of those families. You cannot be for the success of American families and be for these secret, dark-of-night measures designed to destroy the effort to rein in this Wall Street casino.

I hope we will see a return to regular order, the type of regular order my colleague from Rhode Island talked about, the type of light-of-day committee discussions my colleague from Massachusetts talked about because this is so important to our future and the success of American families. Let's make sure we work together to build the wealth and success through fair financial practices, not special favors done for very powerful institutions that are designed to exploit and operate as predatory measures to strip the wealth of American families.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of repealing ObamaCare and replacing it with a step-by-step approach that restores choice and competition to consumers. The problems with ObamaCare are legion and have often been reported in the media and identified on the floor of the Senate.

I know we have all heard from our constituents. Hundreds of thousands have written and called all of our offices and, as a matter of fact, I will read one of the letters that came into my office—or at least part of it. It is addressed to me and starts out saying:

I'm sure I'm not the first one to contact you about rising health insurance deductibles. I have had this job for 3 years. The first 2 years my company plan had a $3,000 yearly deductible with no copay.

So he had a $3,000 yearly deductible with no copay. He continues:

Last year, it went to $4,000 with a 20 percent copay.

Again, it goes from $3,000 to $4,000 in annual deductible and it goes from no copay to a 20-percent copay.

This coming year, 2016, it will go to $6,700 with a 20-percent copay.

So in just 3 years it goes from a $3,000 yearly deductible with no copay to $6,700—more than double—with a 20-percent copay.

He goes on:

Even before my current job, I had a Blue Cross North Dakota policy that had a $2,000 deductible and a very fair monthly premium. I have always had good health insurance. Now I have an essentially worthless policy.

I had bone cancer in my pelvis 1½ years ago. Had to go to Mayo and have my left pelvis removed. I have spent the last 18 months learning to walk again. Doctors weren't able to reconstruct it.

I will have twice yearly follow up cancer screenings for the next several years. These follow ups cost about $3500.00 each. So I spend $7000.00 a year, which is all of my deductible.

He goes on:

What are you doing to make changes to this health care act?

He clearly identified what consumers across the country are experiencing. This is just one example. I have many more, as do all of the Members of this body.

As bad as ObamaCare is for them, it is going to get worse. In 2016, consumers will see significantly higher premiums yet again. Premiums for the lowest cost silver plan will increase by 13 percent, and the lowest cost bronze plan will rise by 16 percent on average.

That is not all. The inaptly named Affordable Care Act has led to higher out-of-pocket costs for older, middle, and lower income Americans as well. Today, the average deductible is more than $2,000 and for some it exceeds $6,000, discouraging people from seeking necessary care.

The law is also resulting in fewer choices. Employers are already reducing benefits for many family members. By 2018, more than half of employers plan to significantly reduce benefits for employees' children and spouses.

While many are seeing higher premiums and deductibles with fewer choices, ObamaCare has created dozens of new taxes that ultimately are passed down to small businesses and consumers. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that ObamaCare will increase taxes by $1.2 trillion over the next decade.

The result is fewer jobs. Simply put, employers are already cutting jobs or reducing hours to part time to avoid the higher costs of ObamaCare.

I do believe there is a consensus across the Nation that we need health care reform, but ObamaCare is not the answer. Americans want commonsense reforms—reforms that truly are affordable and that truly do empower patients to make their own choices. In the short run, we need to pass budget reconciliation legislation that repeals ObamaCare, and, in particular, the individual and employer mandates. In the long run, we need to take a step-by-step approach to put individuals, families, and businesses on a path to better reforms. The right approach to health care reform empowers people to make their own choices in selecting health care providers and insurers that is patient centered and respects the relationship between doctor and patient. The way to accomplish that is with a market-based plan that creates more competition and reduces health care costs.

Here is what we could do: To foster competition and reduce health care costs, we can do things like expand tax-free health savings accounts, flexible savings accounts, and Archer medical savings accounts to encourage individuals to save for future health care needs. Combined with high-deductible, low-premium policies, people will be able to meet their immediate health care needs and still be protected in the event of costly, serious illness.

We should provide portable health care plans so that individuals and families don't experience gaps in coverage when they change jobs. These plans could be given favorable tax treatment. For example, they could be treated as tax-preferred accounts so that dollars towards premiums could receive tax-exempt treatment. We should allow health care policies to be sold across State lines. This would result in more choices, more competition, and reduced costs for customers. We should give States more flexibility to manage Medicaid for low-income individuals and families. We should ensure affordable health care options are available to those in need and certainly those patients with preexisting conditions. That means bolstering State high-risk pools to make sure everyone has an opportunity to be covered.

ObamaCare is far from being the panacea it was promoted to be. The sticker shock hasn't faded. On the budget reconciliation we now have a real opportunity to turn the page on a failed experiment so that we can take steps toward replacing it with something the American people want.

I urge my colleagues to get behind the effort so we can start that process.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

GMO LABELING

Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, I want to talk a little bit today about food, transparency, and consumers' rights to know what is in their food.

As many folks in this body know, in my real life I am a farmer. I get to see exactly where my food comes from. Last month, I spent some time butchering and processing beef, knowing exactly where that came from. I like that. But not all Americans have the ability to know where their food comes from.

A few months ago, in July, the House passed a bill called the Safe and Accurate Food Labeling Act. It couldn't be anything more different from that, by the way. It basically denies Americans the right to know what is in their food by prohibiting the Federal Government, States, and municipalities from imposing any labeling standards that deal with genetically modified food.

I come from a State where transparency is very important. It makes our government work better. For the Federal Government in this case to undermine States and municipalities and not allow the consumer to know what is in their food—it is exactly the wrong step to take.

So why am I bringing this subject up today? I am bringing it up today because, quite frankly, there is some talk about air dropping an amendment that would allow the DARK Act to go into effect. It is not a bill we have debated on the floor to my knowledge. I don't know that it has even been heard in committee. But the bottom line is that this is bad policy.

The arguments would be that it is confusing; it is going to be expensive. That is bunk. Consumers are smart. They pay attention to what they eat. If you give them the ability to choose and the ability to know what is in their food, they will make the decision—which is their decision to make—on what they are going to feed their family and what mothers are going to feed their children.

It goes against everything this country stands for about letting people know we do have a great food system in this country. So let's be proud of it. Let's label it. Let's talk about what is in it. Let's let consumers have the choice. Consumers are smart, and they will absolutely make a choice that is best for their family.

Food is very important. Food, in my opinion, is medicine. If you know what you are eating, you will have a healthier family. If you pay attention to these kinds of things, your health care costs will go down.

The truth is that other countries require GMO labeling—countries like Russia, China, Saudi Arabia—not exactly countries that we would think would be very helpful to their consumers or transparent. But they think it is important to label it. We ought to here in this country too.

Big Money is coming in here saying: We don't want the consumers to know if they have GMO products in food; we want consumers to be ignorant. That is not something this body should do. Let's give consumers the information they deserve. Let's allow this labeling to move forward, as Vermont has already done. Other States like Maine and Connecticut also are taking steps in that direction.

The bottom line is, to put in an amendment that stops States or municipalities from requiring labeling is a step in the wrong direction. It is not fair to consumers, and, quite frankly, it is not fair to the folks who produce food in this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I want to talk a little about the legislation before us to repeal and replace ObamaCare, otherwise known as the Affordable Care Act.

When I travel around my home State of Ohio, I hear about a couple things a lot. One is the tough job market and flat wages, which makes it difficult to get ahead. The other is—and it is related—escalated health care costs. People are seeing in their lives that it is tough to find that job, and if they do have a job, they are finding their wages aren't going up as they would normally expect. Unfortunately, when we look nationally this is true. Wages on average are not just flat; they are slightly down. In other words, they have declined, which is not typical. On the other hand, expenses are up, and the biggest expense: health care.

So the middle-class squeeze is very real. It is affecting the people I represent as they see, again, unusually low wages, not the growth that we normally expect on the one hand, and on the other hand higher expenses, with health care taking the lead in those expenses.

Today in the Senate and tomorrow, as we debate this and vote on it, we have a chance to move the ball forward and show people that at least a majority in the Congress agree we ought to address this issue—the health care issue, of course—and try to stop the incredibly fast increase in premiums, deductibles, copays. Families, small businesses are getting hit hard. Also, we can help give the economy a shot in the arm by coming up with smarter ways to deal with health care.

This vote will show there are some in Congress who are listening and have some answers. Our job is to do what is right, and that is to pass this legislation to repeal and replace ObamaCare, to give us a chance to get rid of some of the most detrimental aspects of it that are eliminating jobs, that are pushing health care costs higher and higher.

The legislation—the Affordable Care Act—was sold as actually reducing costs. It was sold under false pretenses.

Specifically, the President said it would bring down premiums. He talked about it going down $2,500 on average per family. No; in fact, premiums are going up.

We were told Americans would be able to keep their insurance. Of course, millions have lost their health care insurance.

We were told that if you have a doctor whom you like, you can keep your doctor. Of course, a lot of people are now being told that under their new plan, they can't keep the doctor they have had.

We were told the Affordable Care Act could keep our economy strong, that it would grow jobs, create jobs. Instead, again, it has made things worse. If we look at the economy and what has happened, a lot of the issue is that people have given up looking for work. The so-called labor force participation rate is the lowest it has been since the 1970s—over 30 years. Some of that, again, is because we have this weak economy. Some of that is because a lot of the jobs that are available are part-time jobs, and the Affordable Care Act encourages part-time work, as we will talk about in a second.

So the results are in. We have seen it. We have seen that ObamaCare, with its mandates and centralized control, its top-down approach, has made it more difficult to get a job and has increased health care costs for families and small businesses—not the right way to provide quality health care for the people I represent in Ohio.

I hear stories every day. Sometimes they come in through our Web site, sometimes people call, sometimes I just run into people, and they tell me their stories. I got one this morning. We have our weekly Buckeye coffee, where we bring in people who are here in Washington from around Ohio to talk to us about their issues. I ran into a small business owner, very typical—a manufacturer in this case. He said: ROB, my margins are between 2 and 3 percent. In other words, that is what my profit is, and yet I am seeing my health care costs go up by double digits every year. It just doesn't work. I can't make ends meet. I am having to pass this along, either to my employees with higher premiums, higher deductibles, higher copays, or to try to pass them on to my customers. But I am in a very competitive market and I can't really do that. That could mean having to lay some people off, downsize the business.

Take another small business owner who wrote to me recently who said this is going to hurt his business. He said he is going to have to tell his 35 employees their insurance will be canceled and that the cheapest replacement policies would include a 35-percent increase in premiums as well as a 33-percent increase in deductibles. This is another small business in Ohio.

Take the father of five who saw the cost of his family's insurance double under the Affordable Care Act or the man who saw his $100 deductible go to $4,000. Does that sound familiar? There are probably some people listening tonight who had that same experience where their deductible goes up so high, it is almost like you don't have insurance. This guy said he saw his deductible soar to $4,000 while his premiums went up to $1,000 a month.

Batavia is in Clermont County, OH, right near my home. Recently, a woman from Batavia wrote to me and said:

> I am a single mother. I pay for my own health insurance. I am active and fit. I have cycled over 4000 miles this year. I am seldom sick. In the three years that I've paid for my own insurance, I went to the doctor once for illness. My rate was $146 [a] month. In September, I received a letter from Anthem saying my plan does not meet the requirements of the Affordable Care Act and will be discontinued. I was offered the same coverage for $350 per month.

This is a real problem for this single mom, but it is for families all over Ohio. I am concerned about the impact on those families, concerned about the impact on our small businesses. I am also concerned about the indirect impact on employees who work for those small businesses.

We talked earlier about the fact that there is more and more part-time work and that jobs are hard to come by in Ohio. More and more small businesses in Ohio are becoming what they call 49ers or 29ers. Forty-niner refers to the fact that employers sometimes feel they have no choice but to freeze their growth, and they are hiring at 49 employees rather than 50 employees because when you hit 50, you come up with new requirements and mandates under ObamaCare.

Others have tried to reduce the hours their employees work. If you work less than 30 hours a week, you are not covered by the mandates under ObamaCare. So some employers have reduced hours from 40 hours to 29 hours. Those are the 29ers. That is one reason full-time work is harder to come by.

It is no surprise to me that the underemployment figure—those working part time but wanting to return to work full time—has been on the rise. When you see the jobs numbers coming out every month, look at the number of people who are part time rather than full time. It is concerning. Some of this has to be driven by what is happening with the Affordable Care Act. I am certainly hearing about it. I am certainly hearing about it from people on the ground, real-world situations. It is sad.

This morning I talked to Todd, the president of a small manufacturing company, and he talked about a double-digit increase in his health care expenses. Mike from Westlake wrote to me and said:

> I own a small business. Our health insurance rates for single employees under 30 went from $198 per month last year to $560 per month this year. That's a 260% increase thanks to ObamaCare! This bill is going to put small businesses out of business.

This one is from Tim in Canton. He said:

The ACA fees being charged to us are $3,250 per year for 11 covered employees, which will be passed on to them. We are paying for the insurance premium increase of $15,186 by reducing our year-end bonus program. We also are offering an even higher deductible plan than we have now. (I will take the higher plan to lower the overall cost to soften the blow for my staff).

This is an interesting one because it is what I hear around Ohio. They are discontinuing their bonus program because of this. Other companies say we are discontinuing a research project. Others say we are discontinuing our match on our 401(k). Others say we are just plain cutting back; in other words, not hiring as many people as they would have.

It is happening out there. I know some economists have debates on this issue, but I hope they are talking to people in the real world who are being affected by this Affordable Care Act, the top-down approach, the mandates, and the inflexibility.

Not only are these small businesses affected by these new mandates, but a lot of them are now subject to one of the new taxes included in the Affordable Care Act. I think there are 21 new taxes in the Affordable Care Act. One of them is a tax on medical devices. This is an industry that is very important to Ohio and to our country. We have had a competitive edge in medical devices. We have a lot of great innovators in this country, including my home State of Ohio. We have been able to not only create some great opportunities in this country but we are exporting medical devices around the world. It is hard to overstate the impact the industry has on our State of Ohio and the ripple effect through our communities.

Over the past decade, we have added about 370 new bioscience and medical device companies in Ohio alone. It has been a growth area. These companies have brought high-paying jobs. I am told that for every one job, they create another 2.3 additional jobs. I visited a lot of these companies around the State of Ohio. I have been to companies in Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Columbus. Recently, I visited Zimmer Surgical, which is a company that employs about 300 workers in Dover, OH. They expressed the same concern I have heard at all these other companies I talk about, which is that this new tax under the Affordable Care Act makes it hard for them to be able to compete.

It is a very interesting tax. Normally you would have a tax on profits. If a company makes money, it pays taxes on those earnings and those profits. This is a tax on revenue, whether there is profit or not. It is an excise tax. Since this tax has taken effect, the companies I am talking about have seen a decrease in their operating margins. They are resulting in fewer jobs, they tell me, and less investment in the United States. Again, a lot of them say they are cutting back on research because they cannot afford to do the research they used to do because of the excise tax on their revenue—again, not on their profits, the money they are making, but just their revenue. That means their seed corn, as they call it, is being cut back.

I talked about the great innovation and the fact that this has been a cutting-edge industry for us in Ohio and around the country. The seed corn is research. That is what makes America a cutting-edge country in terms of these great medical device companies. A bunch of them are cutting back on research and that concerns me. Some have gone overseas. Some have moved their research overseas, even though they stayed headquartered in the United States.

If this tax continues, some have told me that they will be forced to close down manufacturing facilities. At a time when we need, more than ever, more made-in-America products in innovation, the medical technology industry is one where we are a leader on the world stage, and we should not be coming up with this kind of burdensome tax. That is why I am so glad that on this legislation that we will vote on tomorrow or the next day, that we will have the opportunity to repeal the medical device tax. By the way, there is a bipartisan consensus around that, I think. I know a lot of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have talked about the need for us to do that as well.

If we do not do that, we are going to find out we have lost ground. Again, this goes to our economy. One thing that concerned me was that the founder of Zimmer Surgical in Dover, OH, told me that had this tax been in place when he started his company, he doesn't think he ever would have made it off the ground. I talked earlier about the number of new startups. This is going to keep some of those startups from taking root in the first place and creating those jobs and opportunities.

Repealing a job-killing medical device tax, therefore, is a great step forward to promote policies to get Americans back to work. Even though we need to repeal these top-down mandates we talked about and get rid of some of these taxes that are so onerous on workers and hurt our economy, I don't think we should go back to the pre-Affordable Care Act status quo. I don't think it is enough to say we should repeal this bad law. I think we also should say: Let's come up with a better way to deal with health care costs. Health care costs are going to be a big problem unless we deal with them in a much more sensible way than the Affordable Care Act does. I think real reform is needed. It must be patient-centered. In other words, it must be about the patient giving them the incentive to be able to save costs by focusing on prevention and wellness, focused on their families, focused on what they need for themselves and family rather than these mandates that say you can't have this insurance policy you had for years, as this young woman in Clermont County told me who has seen her premiums go up so dramatically. She had a policy she was very happy with. Let people have the policies they want for themselves and their families.

Let's have less government and bureaucracy and more focus on patients. Let's be sure it is responsible in terms of keeping the tax burden down and does not kill jobs as the medical device tax does. ObamaCare should be repealed. It should be repealed and replaced with a system that actually works. The failures to ObamaCare actually point the way as to how we can do that. As I said, patient-centered, costs should be the focus. There are steps we can take—and take them today—to remove some of the shackles of government regulations from the market and help make health insurance and health care less expensive. We should start by allowing health care to be sold across State lines. Let's be sure we can compete, and the people who live in Cincinnati, OH, can get health care across the river in Kentucky or across the border in Indiana. It makes no sense. Some people live in Indiana and work in Ohio and vice versa or work in Kentucky and live in Ohio and they only get health care in the place where they live.

We should be able to look for our health care in New York or California. Whatever works best for our family. Make these companies compete for our business. We should take commonsense steps to rein in the staggering costs of frivolous lawsuits. This could save billions and billions of dollars in our health care system. There is a CBO estimate of the cost to the Federal Government that could be saved alone. It is tens of billions of dollars, but the medical profession will tell you it is more like hundreds of billions of dollars as it applies to all of us. That will help to make health care more affordable.

We should cover more Americans by creating a healthy, vibrant individual health care market, giving people a tax incentive to purchase health care insurance comparable by the incentives they receive at their employer-provided plan. Why shouldn't they have that same opportunity in the individual market that is part of the way you cover more people?

The sad truth about ObamaCare is that the coverage numbers are very disappointing, even to those who strongly supported the bill. Why? Because what has happened is that some people have gotten coverage, but others have lost coverage. The estimates by the Congressional Budget Office are that still 10 years after this legislation is in place there will be something like 30 million Americans without coverage.

We can do it and do it in a more cost-effective way and be sure people do have the opportunity to have access to quality health care. The bill we have before us this week will take that first step at removing the shackles of government regulation and put the country on the path forward to real health care reform. Not only does the legislation remove the mandates ObamaCare placed on individuals and businesses to purchase insurance, but it also rolls back some of the new programs, while giving the new President, the next President, and the new Congress, the next Congress, the time to be able to enact alternative reforms that will ensure all families have access to quality, affordable health care. It has to be a top priority to actually come up with not just repealing what is there but replacing it with something that makes more sense for families in Ohio and around the country.

I look forward to this vote and this debate because it gives us an opportunity to send to the President sensible legislation that gets rid of so many of the detrimental impacts of ObamaCare and sets us down the path of debating about what that future ought to be.

Some Democrats have said: Why are you doing this—because the President said he will veto it. I would ask them to look at what the majority of the American people are saying, which is that they do not believe the Affordable Care Act is the right way to go. I guess I would look at the fact that the majority in the Senate may feel that way as well. We should represent those folks back home. Because the President doesn't support it doesn't mean we shouldn't act and do what is right. Every President who served in this great country has had the opportunity to veto legislation coming from Congress. It doesn't mean Congress shouldn't send them legislation. I hope the President will not veto it. He probably will. It doesn't mean the Senate shouldn't act. I am glad we are acting.

I stand ready to work with my colleagues going forward on both sides of the aisle to enact real reforms that do provide the people I represent and people all around this great country the access to the quality care they deserve.

Mr. President, I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for those who are keeping score, this is the 17th time that the Senate will be asked by the Republicans to vote to end ObamaCare, and they have added to this to defund Planned Parenthood. As one individual said the other day, here is a breakthrough press release: President Barack Obama is not going to end ObamaCare. That seems pretty obvious. So this is a political exercise. It doesn't solve the problems of America. It doesn't even address the problems of America.

The Affordable Care Act finds health insurance for 17 million Americans. We have reduced the number of uninsured Americans by 45 percent with this bill. The Republicans have opposed it from the start, never providing a single vote in support, never willing to sit down after it was passed to talk about changes that would make it even stronger or better. They want to end it. It is ObamaCare. It has the President's name on it—enough said for many of them. They want it to go away.

The reality is if it goes away, so does health insurance protection for millions of Americans. So you would expect that the Grand Old Party, the Republican Party, would have an alternative for us, right? Wrong. They have never come forward with any alternative that would provide coverage for these millions of Americans and the others who should have health insurance coverage as well. It just tells you that they are prepared to go back to the bad old days before ObamaCare and the Affordable Care Act.

Remember those days? Remember when a health insurance company could say to you: Sorry, you happen to have a sick child in your family, and we are not going to give you health insurance. Preexisting conditions were enough to say no, and if they said yes, it was at a premium that an average family couldn't even consider. We ended that discrimination against families and sick children. We ended it.

The Republicans today want to go back to those good old days when health insurance companies could turn you down in a New York minute and say: There will be no health insurance for you or your kids. They want to go back to those good old days. They are wrong.

They want to go back to the days when a family's health insurance plan wouldn't cover the graduate from college until he reached the age of 26. That is what the Affordable Care Act does. It says that a family can keep that youngster—young man or woman—on their health insurance plan for their family while they are looking for a job, serving an internship or have a part-time opportunity.

I will tell you, as a father who has raised three children, I can remember those days after college when those kids didn't have coverage, and I used to ask them about that. I asked my daughter, Jennifer: Do you have health insurance now? She said: Dad, I don't need it; I feel just fine. That is not what a father wants to hear. The Republicans want to return to those good old days when those young men and women, after just having graduated from college, had to buy their own health insurance and couldn't stay on the family plan.

What about senior citizens with prescription drugs? The Affordable Care Act, which they want to repeal, helped seniors pay for their prescription drugs. They want to go back to the bad old days when seniors had a gap in coverage and had to go to their life savings to buy lifesaving prescription drugs. Those are the good old days that the Republicans want to return to. Well, those days weren't so good, and they certainly shouldn't return.

We have seen for the last 5 years the slowest rate of increase in health care costs in the last several decades. We have slowed down that rate of growth. We can do better. We should work together to do better on a bipartisan basis.

But instead, we are faced with a 17th vote by Republicans in the Senate to eliminate ObamaCare, to return to the old days of discrimination because of preexisting conditions and to take your kids who have graduated from college off your family health insurance plan. That is what they want to go back to.

America is not going to let that happen. Thank goodness this President won't let that happen. But we are going to waste several days on the floor of the Senate while they go through speeches that have been carefully rehearsed and delivered 17 different times with the same ultimate result, and nothing is going to happen. Instead, they should join us in a bipartisan effort to make the Affordable Care Act even stronger, fairer, and to help people have affordability and access to health insurance.

SHOOTING IN SAN BERNARDINO

Mr. President, earlier today there was a mass shooting in San Bernardino, CA. News reports are saying that up to three heavily armed gunmen attacked a social services center that helps developmentally disabled people and their families in the community.

Preliminary reports say that there have been 14 people killed and 14 wounded, although we don't know the exact number yet. There are videos of wounded people actually lying in the streets. The suspects apparently fled the scene in a black SUV, and a manhunt is underway.

This story is horrific, but it is also horribly familiar. There have been over 350 mass shootings in America this year. On average, 297 Americans are shot every single day, 89 fatally. Listen to this grim and sad statistic: There have been over 50 school shootings this year in America.

Our thoughts and prayers are with the victims and first responders in San Bernardino. But they and all the victims across our country deserve more than our thoughts and prayers. They deserve action. It is time for Congress—in a level-headed, commonsense moment—to vote on and pass legislation to protect innocent people across America from this horrific gun violence.

SYRIAN REFUGEES

Mr. President, I don't know if it was George Washington who said—although I think he is given the credit—when describing this institution of the Senate: It is the saucer that cools the tea.

I served in the House for 14 years and was proud to do it. We were elected every 2 years. It was a more volatile atmosphere because we were constantly running for reelection. The Senate is a different institution, with 6-year terms and a little more reflection, I hope, in what we do. I hope that we take the time that is necessary to exercise our constitutional opportunity here and think things over clearly and not react emotionally.

Well, it was about 2 weeks ago when the House of Representatives took action on the Syrian refugees and passed a measure that would give what they called a pause to receiving Syrian refugees in the United States. It was a heated moment. It was after the terrible tragedies that occurred in Paris and Beirut, and there were concerns about ISIL and the spread of their terrorist ways around the world. It was an emotional moment that really needs some reflection.

The simple fact of the matter is this. Over the last 4 years, during the course of the Syrian war, the United States has received about 2,000 refugees from Syria into our country. It is an elaborate, lengthy process.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have an article from last weekend's New York Times, which outlines all of the steps that need to be taken in order for a Syrian refugee to enter the United States, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Nov. 20, 2015]

WHY IT TAKES TWO YEARS FOR SYRIAN REFUGEES TO ENTER THE U.S.

(By Haeyoun Park and Larry Buchanan)

Syrians must pass many layers of security checks before being admitted to the United States, a process that can take two years or longer. In most cases, the refugees do not enter the United States until the very end. They are also subject to an additional layer of checks beyond those for refugees of other nationalities; after the Paris attacks, the House voted to further tighten screening procedures. Since 2011, the United States has admitted fewer than 2,000 Syrian refugees.

1. Registration with the United Nations.

2. Interview with the United Nations.

3. Refugee status granted by the United Nations.

4. Referral for resettlement in the United States. The United Nations decides if the person fits the definition of a refugee and whether to refer the person to a country for resettlement. Only the most vulnerable are referred, accounting for fewer than 1 percent of refugees worldwide. Some people spend years waiting in refugee camps.

5. Interview with State Department contractors.

6. First background check.

7. Higher-level background check for some.

8. Another background check. The refugee's name is run through law enforcement and intelligence databases for terrorist or criminal history. Some go through a higher-level clearance before they can continue. A third background check was introduced in 2008 for Iraqis but has since been expanded to all refugees ages 14 to 65.

9. First fingerprint screening; photo taken.

10. Second fingerprint screening.

11. Third fingerprint screening. The refugee's fingerprints are screened against F.B.I. and Homeland Security databases, which contain watch list information and past immigration encounters, including if the refugee previously applied for a visa at a United States embassy. Fingerprints are also checked against those collected by the Defense Department during operations in Iraq.

12. Case reviewed at United States immigration headquarters.

13. Some cases referred for additional review. Syrian applicants must undergo these two additional steps. Each is reviewed by a United States Citizenship and Immigration Services refugee specialist. Cases with ''national security indicators'' are given to the Homeland Security Department's fraud detection unit.

14. Extensive, in-person interview with Homeland Security officer. Most of the interviews with Syrian refugees have been done in Amman, Jordan and in Istanbul.

15. Homeland Security approval is required. If the House bill becomes law, the director of the F.B.I., the Homeland Security secretary and the director of national intelligence would be required to confirm that the applicant poses no threat.

16. Screening for contagious diseases.

17. Cultural orientation class.

18. Matched with an American resettlement agency.

19. Multi-agency security check before leaving for the United States. Because of the long amount of time between the initial screening and departure, officials conduct a final check before the refugee leaves for the United States.

20. Final security check at an American airport.

Sources: State Department; Department of Homeland Security; Center for American Progress; U.S. Committee for Refugees and Immigrants.

Mr. DURBIN. It starts with registration with the United Nations, interview with the United Nations, refugee status granted by the United Nations, referral for resettlement in the United States, interview with State Department contractors, the first background check, higher level background checks, another background check, fingerprint screening with a photo taken, the second fingerprint screening, the third fingerprint screening, the case reviewed by U.S. immigration headquarters and then in some cases referred for additional review, extensive in-person interviews with Homeland Security officers, and then—and only then—could Homeland Security approval be required. At that point the potential refugee is screened for contagious diseases, goes through a cultural orientation class, matched with an American resettlement agency, goes through a multiagency security check before leaving to enter the United States, and then faces a final security check when they arrive at an American airport.

I am entering this into the RECORD because those who are suggesting that we are taking Syrian refugees without appropriate screening are not aware of the reality. It is a process that takes 18 to 24 months, and in the 4 years we have accepted about 2,000 Syrian refugees, not a single one has been found to be involved in a terrorist activity.

We accept about 70,000 refugees in the United States each year, and I am glad that we do because for some people in some parts of the world, it is the only place they can turn to.

The public reaction against the House action that bars Syrian refugees is interesting. There was a Congressman, and I don't know him personally, but his name is Congressman STEVE RUSSELL of Oklahoma.

This is according to the POLITICO article:

He voted for the bill with serious reservations but in the hopes of affecting the debate as it moved ahead. If the existing bill were to come before the House again, ''I would vote against it,'' Russell said. ''I think it creates impossible barriers to refugees.''

Just 2 weeks ago, he voted for it, but he has thought it over. Why? This article says:

For Russell, the issue is personal. One of his close friends is an American citizen who was trying to get his mother out of Syria. The mother died this past summer before she could leave that war-torn country. Out of respect for his friend's privacy, [Congressman] Russell [of Oklahoma], a retired Army lieutenant colonel, declined to offer specifics, including exactly what happened to the woman. But he said: ''I'm certain had he been able to get her to the United States, she would still be alive.''

[Congressman] Russell urged [his fellow] Republicans in the Senate to think carefully before supporting the House bill, saying they should not get refugees confused with the broader issue of immigration. He pointed out that in the past the U.S. has denied entry to people in need of help, including Jews [who were] fleeing the Nazis [in Europe during World War II].

''We have had dark periods when we have done this in the past,'' he said. ''History never judges it kindly—never.''

That was a quote by Congressman RUSSELL, a Republican from the State of Oklahoma.

I think it is important to note, too, that ''in a letter to lawmakers released [yesterday], a group of national security experts, including figures prominent in Republican circles such as former Secretary of State [Henry] Kissinger, retired Gen. David Petraeus and former Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, urged [us] to stop the House bill.''

''Refugees are victims, not perpetrators of terrorism,'' the signatories wrote. ''Categorically refusing to take them only feeds the narrative of [the Islamic State] that there is a war between Islam and the West, that Muslims are not welcome in the United States and Europe, and that the [Islamic State] caliphate is their true home.''

Perhaps the saucer is cooling the tea, and perhaps the Senate will have the good sense not to follow the action of the House of Representatives in passing this provision.

I have two other items to add to the RECORD before I yield the floor to my colleagues who have gathered here today.

The first is an article that comes out of the city of Chicago, which I am honored to represent. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicagoist.com, Dec. 1, 2015]

MEET THE NUNS WHO ARE PREPARING THEIR WEST RIDGE HOME TO TAKE IN SYRIAN REFUGEES

(By Tony Boylan)

Three nuns living in West Ridge plan to take in a Syrian refugee family not just with the blessing of their local community, but at its urging.

Despite Illinois Gov. Bruce Rauner's decision last month to join a number of other state governors in vowing to make it tougher for Syrian refugees to resettle in the U.S. in the wake of a recent terrorist attack on Paris, these women are preparing their home to make life a little easier for a refugee family.

The sisters, part of the Society of Helpers, live in a historic home once owned by the Dr. Scholl's Family with a finished basement they in the process of turning into a family apartment. The Society is an international order with progressive values based on the teachings of St. Ignatius. In other words, they get their hands dirty working with lots of issues other people of faith aren't always quick to embrace; the homeless, addicts, teenage mothers, domestic violence and those most in need of support and assistance.

From their mission statement: ''As contemplatives in action, we don't just pray for social justice and for peace—we make it our life's work.''

Putting their faith in action, the sisters moved swiftly to ready themselves to provide shelter to a refugee family they think could be with them as soon as January. Political leaders can debate and demagogue on the issue all they'd like, but the sisters don't care about that. Their faith declares what it declares, they say, and offering help is their faith.

''We would rather not make our decision on fear, we would rather make our decision on compassion,'' said Sister Mary Ellen Moore, a registered psychologist and one of three nuns who lives in the house. ''We were certainly disappointed in Gov. Rauner's statement on this issue. That kind of mentality if frightening and we know what it's led to in Europe and in other places in the past. It's really very sad.''

The plan predates the attacks in Paris, which have somehow been blamed on refugees—the same people trying to flee the horrific powers behind the carnage. The nuns and the members of St. Gertrude's parish in Edgewater took to heart the Pope's call for every congregation in America to help ease the international crisis and find a way to accommodate refugees.

The sisters do find it important to note that this isn't an entirely free ride. Refugee families from Syria, or anywhere else, are required as part of their status to obtain work almost immediately after getting settled. Catholic Charities will assist them with that. The family will also be asked to contribute something for electricity and other utilities in due time, and after a store of donated food is exhausted, the family will rely on its own income and some help from charity for food.

In this case, though, a family couldn't ask for hosts more qualified and prepared to help them assimilate. And the sisters think the multicultural nature of their neighborhood—near Devon Avenue and Loyola University—will be helpful.

Members of the parish, where the sisters attend church, but have no official attachment, almost immediately began collecting donations of money, furniture, bedding, kitchen supplies, and all the mundane things a family starting over with nothing might need to get by. (There still is a need for everything except clothing, which will wait until they know who is coming and can collect items appropriate to ages and size. Any help is appreciated and can be donated through either the Society of Helpers Facebook Page or website.

It's not as if the parishioners or sisters are entering into this without thinking through any potential risks. It's just that they know the risks are being wildly overstated and their mission is clear.

A letter written by parishioner John Neafsey was circulated among church members recently read, in part:

''Security concerns are understandable in the aftermath of the Paris attacks. But our understanding is that there is already a thorough and lengthy screening process in place for checking the backgrounds of refugees (agreed upon between the UNHCR and host countries, including the U.S.) prior to approving them for resettlement to the United States. We believe that an arbitrary refusal to allow Syrian refugees to come to our state is unnecessary, unfair, and un-Christian. This would needlessly scapegoat and penalize innocent men, women, and children who are fleeing violence and persecution. It deprives them of the chance to get a new start in a safe place where they are welcome. The motto of our parish is 'All Are Welcome.' For us, ''all'' includes Syrian refugees, whether they are Christian or Muslim.''

While neither the church members nor the sisters want this matter to be political, they understand the climate that has been created.

''It's very sad people just jump to judgement because people are different,'' said Sr. Jean Kielty, Director of the House of Good Shepherd and a social worker who has aided the homeless for a quarter century. She shares the house with Sister Mary Ellen, Sister Anna Maria Baldauf, and their dogs, Mocha and Snowball.

''This is just a different kind of homelessness—a more tragic one.''

There is a one ramification Sister Jean is concerned about, though: ''I'm not sure if my family will come visit me anymore.''

Here's a little more information about the nuns behind this initiative and the residence where they are providing a basement apartment to a refugee family next year:

JEAN KIELTY, SH

As a social worker, Jean's ministry has focused on addressing homelessness in the Chicagoland area for more than 25 years. She has served as Director of Interim Housing with Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Chicago and is currently the Executive Program Director of the House of Good Shepherd. Jean is the founder and current chairperson of the board for Casa Esperanza, a transitional housing program for women and their children located in South Chicago. Jean is one of three leaders of the U.S. Province of the Society of Helpers and resides in her West Ridge home with two other Helpers and their dogs.

MARY ELLEN MOORE, SH, PH.D.

Mary Ellen is a registered psychologist and co-founder of Claret Center in Hyde Park that offers psychotherapy, workshops, and professional development that support wholeness in mind, body, and spirit. In addition to her advisory role at Claret Center, Mary Ellen provides psychotherapy and supervision to clients and students and is the director of training for the practicum at ''The Circle,'' a Helpers-sponsored resource center for Latina immigrant women in Brighton Park. Mary Ellen served served two previous terms as the Helpers' U.S. Provincial from 1985–1995 and another term from 2008–2014.

THE MILLER HOUSE

This West Ridge modified Georgian Colonial Revival was built by the Hutchins Brothers in 1911. In 1923, the Hutchins family sold the home to Frank Scholl, brother of Dr. William M. Scholl who founded the company Dr. Scholl's. Frank joined the business in 1910 and oversaw European operations. Featured on the 1996 Annual Fall House Tour and the 2013 Annual House Tour, this historical home boasts 5000 square feet with 5 bedrooms, 5.5 bathrooms and related living quarters.

Although this ''large home'' has undergone changes with each of the five previous owners, it maintains many qualities of its original historic charm. The Society of Helpers purchased the home in 2014, planning to utilize its space to welcome other Helpers visiting from around the world. They were thrilled to be able to offer the related living quarters to a Syrian refugee family when their parish, St. Gertrude, and Catholic Charities provided an opportunity to present a family in need of a safe home.

Mr. DURBIN. The article talks about a house in West Ridge, Chicago. It is a place where an order of Catholic nuns called the Society of Helpers has a house that they have turned into a refuge for homeless people. They have announced that they are going to accept Syrian refugees into their home so that the refugees know they will have a safe place to stay in the United States.

Sister Mary Ellen Moore, a registered psychologist and one of the nuns who lives in the house, said:

We would rather not make our decision on fear, we would rather make it on compassion . . . We were certainly disappointed in Gov. Rauner's statement on this issue. That kind of mentality is frightening and we know what it's led to in Europe and other places in the past. It's really very sad.

The people of France, after these horrific terrorist incidents, announced that they are going to accept 30,000 Syrian refugees. The people of Canada, after the terrible incident in Paris, announced virtually the same thing. And what has been the response of the United States and the House of Representatives? It has been an irrational response of fear.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter, which comes from a group called HIAS, and has the headline ''1000 Rabbis in Support of Welcoming Refugees'' be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From hias.org, Dec. 1, 2015]

1,000 RABBIS IN SUPPORT OF WELCOMING REFUGEES

We, Rabbis from across the country, call on our elected officials to exercise moral leadership for the protection of the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program.

Since its founding, the United States has offered refuge and protection to the world's most vulnerable. Time and time again, those refugees were Jews. Whether they were fleeing pogroms in Tzarist Russia, the horrors of the Holocaust or persecution in Soviet Russia or Iran, our relatives and friends found safety on these shores.

We are therefore alarmed to see so many politicians declaring their opposition to welcoming refugees.

Last month's heartbreaking attacks in Paris and Beirut are being cited as reasons to deny entry to people who are themselves victims of terror. And in those comments, we, as Jewish leaders, see one of the darker moments of our history repeating itself.

In 1939, the United States refused to let the S.S. St. Louis dock in our country, sending over 900 Jewish refugees back to Europe, where many died in concentration camps. That moment was a stain on the history of our country—a tragic decision made in a political climate of deep fear, suspicion and antisemitism. The Washington Post released public opinion polling from the early 1940's, showing that the majority of U.S. citizens did not want to welcome Jewish refugees to this country in those years.

In 1939, our country could not tell the difference between an actual enemy and the victims of an enemy. In 2015, let us not make the same mistake.

We therefore urge our elected officials to support refugee resettlement and to oppose any measures that would actually or effectively halt resettlement or prohibit or restrict funding for any groups of refugees.

As Rabbis, we take seriously the biblical mandate to ''welcome the stranger.'' We call on our elected officials to uphold the great legacy of a country that welcomes refugees.

Mr. DURBIN. I will close by reading just a portion of this letter that was handed to me this morning by this group that represents these Jewish rabbis all across the United States, from virtually every State in the Union.

It says:

We, Rabbis from across the country, call on our elected officials to exercise moral leadership for the protection of the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program.

Since its founding, the United States has offered refuge and protection to the world's most vulnerable. Time and time again, those refugees were Jews. Whether fleeing the pogroms in Tzarist Russia, the horrors of the Holocaust or persecution in Soviet Russia or Iran, our relatives and friends found safety on these shores.

We are therefore alarmed to see so many politicians declaring their opposition to welcoming refugees.

Last month's heartbreaking attacks in Paris and Beirut are being cited as reasons to deny entry to people who are themselves victims of terror. And in those comments, we, as Jewish leaders, see one of the darker moments of our history repeating itself.

They go on to talk about the United States turning away the SS St. Louis in 1939, and 900 Jews were sent back to Europe. The Holocaust Museum tells us that 200 of them perished in the Holocaust because the United States refused to accept them as refugees.

They end by saying:

As Rabbis, we take seriously the biblical mandate to ''welcome the stranger.'' We call on our elected officials to uphold the great legacy of a country that welcomes refugees.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. ERNST). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, before we get too wrapped up with our concern for the Syrian refugees, let's keep in mind that this administration doesn't have a policy in the Middle East today and hasn't had one since it came into office. It doesn't have a policy in Syria. They don't know where we are. He has drawn a line in the sand and just ignored his commitments. We wouldn't have all of these Syrian refugees if we had a policy in the first place.

Secondly, it was this administration's own Director of National Intelligence, James Clapper, who said that it is a fact that the refugees who come in from Syria could very well be bringing terrorists into the United States, and I think we need to consider that and consider our citizens before we consider some of the others. There are other options. We could have no-fly zones and have refugees settled in their own country, and that would be a lot safer for America and a lot cheaper.

Anyway, that is not why I am here.

President Obama made a lot of points to the American people in 2010 about how ObamaCare would improve health care for everyone. He said it would lower costs, it would expand access, and it would make health care more affordable for everyone. Yet, 5 years after this law's passage, ObamaCare has only increased premiums and increased deductibles, cut down employee work hours, and threatened the religious liberty of many employers who are providing needed jobs in a slow economy.

Since Obama's disastrous rollout, I have listened to heartbreaking accounts of how ObamaCare has negatively impacted middle-class Oklahoma families. I go back every weekend and I talk to these people. Their budgets are taking the hardest hits. The longer this law has been on the books, the worse the stories have become.

Oklahoman Fred Imel's premium is going from $1,100 a month to $1,700 a month. In fact, it was just announced that next year Oklahomans will see an average increase of 35.7 percent in premium prices, which is the highest in the Nation. That is why I am concerned about this. We have an opportunity, actually, tomorrow to act on something that can change all of this.

In addition, BlueCross BlueShield notified 40,000 Oklahomans earlier this year that they will no longer offer their current plans and that policyholders would be forced to move to other plans in the two other networks in the State. Both plan options have fewer participating doctors, hospitals, and other providers. In other words, access to care is going down for these people, all the while costs are going up.

At the same time, many other insurance companies are dropping out of the Affordable Care Act market altogether, leaving Oklahomans with even fewer choices, not more, as President Obama promised back in 2010. In fact, nationwide, ObamaCare offers, on average, 34 percent fewer providers than health care networks outside the exchanges.

But ObamaCare isn't delivering bad news just to Oklahoma. Across the Nation, federally backed co-ops are going under due to ObamaCare. On October 16, the Wall Street Journal had an article that said that these cooperatives are ''collapsing at such a rapid clip that some co-ops and small insurers are forming a coalition to consider legal action to try to change health-law provisions they blame for their financial distress.''

Twelve out of the 23 ObamaCare established co-ops have gone under. More than half of them have gone under, leaving more than 500,000 currently insured Americans to find new insurance once again or face a steep penalty from the Federal Government. These co-ops also received over $1 billion in taxpayer loans from the Federal Government, most of which will never get repaid. So it is really worse economically for this country.

Since the beginning of this Congress, I have sponsored 12 bills to dismantle and fully repeal ObamaCare, and my colleagues and I are committed to maintaining our promise to repeal and replace ObamaCare. This reconciliation bill is a step in that direction. The House passed reconciliation on October 23 with a vote of 240 to 189.

This bill repeals the major components of ObamaCare, including the individual and employer mandate. It also repeals the medical device tax and the Cadillac tax, which is a tax placed on certain high-value, employer-sponsored insurance plans.

The Senate reconciliation bill also takes repeal of ObamaCare a lot further by repealing $1 trillion in ObamaCare taxes and fully repealing the Medicare expansion and all ObamaCare subsidies by 2018.

Importantly, the reconciliation bill also prohibits Federal funding for Planned Parenthood and instead uses that money that is saved by that repeal to increase funding for community health care centers. We hear people talk about health care for woman who are going to be hurt if we get rid of Planned Parenthood, yet we have more than 9,000—9,000—community health centers. These facilities are better equipped to provide women with the health care they need when compared to only 700 Planned Parenthood facilities. So keep in mind that there are 700 Planned Parenthood facilities and 9,000 community health centers, so they actually have the opportunity to get better care.

This issue is of particular importance given the sting videos that were released over the last few months showing the lengths Planned Parenthood affiliates have gone to profit from the sale of fetal tissue following abortions.

Planned Parenthood is a private institution that largely serves urban areas. While abortion may not be the only service they provide, it is what they are primarily known for. Everybody knows that. Whether they have broken the law or not, the taxpayer money they currently receive would be better directed toward the community health centers, which, on a ratio of 12 to 1, would be able to help with women's services.

Life is one of the single most important issues we consider here in the Senate, and I am proud of what we have already done this year. A few months ago, a majority of Senators voted to defund Planned Parenthood. That vote has already taken place. A majority of us here—although the tally did not pass the 60-vote threshold that was necessary to break a filibuster, it did show that more than a majority of Senators support ending subsidies to the largest abortion provider in America.

More important than the Senate's views of this, a majority of the American people support protecting life of the unborn. Every survey demonstrates that very clearly. When I go back home, people say: Why is it that if this is something the American people want, this taking of life continues?

The American people support it, and it is very important to me and my constituents that we do everything possible to protect the sanctity of life. That is among the top reasons why it is necessary to vote for this reconciliation bill. We have the chance to end the Federal financing of the institution that has chopped up babies and negotiated the most profitable price for their organs. There is no moral gray area here.

Let me tell my colleagues something about Oklahoma. I am going to tell my colleagues about how immoral and abrasive ObamaCare has been. In my State of Oklahoma—I was in the State senate back in 1970. I had a good friend then whose name is David Green. He developed a business in his garage—this was in 1970—where he made picture frames. He had only one employee, and then he started growing. Over a period of time, he has grown to where he now has Hobby Lobby. Hobby Lobby has 600 stores, 23,000 employees, and it started in a garage in 1970.

David Green is a real Jesus guy. He loves the Lord. He has his own principles, his own morality, and his employees do too. So ObamaCare came along and required a contraceptive type of pill taken after fertilization that is very similar—it is a type of abortion, in the eyes of this man. Well, he refused to force his employees to do that.

ObamaCare—the Federal Government—came along and they sued him and they—no, they were fining him $1 million a day—$1 million a day for refusing to take human life. He filed a suit. Now, keep in mind, $1 million a day. He went to district court, and he won the case by a close decision over ObamaCare. Then they appealed the case to the circuit court. He won there, and he won ultimately in the U.S. Supreme Court by a split vote of 5 to 4. Here is a guy who is willing to risk $1 million a day because he knew what was morally right. This is something that actually happened.

I will tell my colleagues, we have to get rid of ObamaCare and get out of the abortion business. We will have that chance tomorrow.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. LEE. Madam President, nearly 6 years ago this body was on the verge of passing the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. Today the Senate is poised to repeal that insultingly misnamed law.

Back in the winter of 2009, of course, we still had yet to pass the bill to see what was in it, although one didn't need a Ph.D. in economics to foresee that the Affordable Care Act would be a mess. It wasn't just conservatives and Republicans raising concerns; every sensible observer saw the obvious flaws and the inevitable disasters embedded in the rickety, ideological scheme congressional Democrats were foisting on the American people in an exercise of unprecedented partisanship.

Six years later, the Democratic Party's dream of ObamaCare has become the American people's nightmare. For the past 5 years, the American people have lived with and have suffered through the chaos and dysfunction wrought by ObamaCare's assault on American health care. At every step along the way, opposition to the law has grown stronger and calls for its repeal by the American people have grown louder, which brings us here today.

Last year Republicans running for Congress promised to repeal ObamaCare as a first step toward replacing it with real health care and real insurance reform. It was largely on the basis of this pledge that the American people elected to put the GOP in charge of both the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate. The bill we are scheduled to vote on later this week brings us as close to fulfilling that promise as is possible under the Senate rules, pursuant to the instructions from the budget resolution that Congress passed just a few months ago.

I applaud the majority leader for his steadfast leadership over the past several days and weeks, and I commend the Senate Budget Committee for its tireless efforts, as Republicans have worked together to craft a reconciliation package that doesn't just tinker around the edges of ObamaCare but lays the groundwork for ObamaCare to be erased from the books altogether. This is the only responsible step for Congress to take because by the law's own standards, according to the promises of the ideologues who imposed it on an unwilling country, ObamaCare has been a failure.

As its name suggests, the overriding objective and promise of the Affordable Care Act was to make health care more affordable for Americans. Yet, nearly 5 years after its passage, no one seriously claims the law has made it easier or more affordable for the American people to access the health care services they need. Facts are not optional, and the facts prove that quality, affordable health care is harder to find in America today than it was 6 years ago, especially for low- and middle-income Americans.

With so much political and ideological capital invested in propping up and defending ObamaCare, President Obama and his allies here in Congress are forced to simply try to skirt the facts. Take, for instance, the left's favorite half-truth—the notion that ObamaCare has succeeded because there are fewer uninsured Americans today than before the Affordable Care Act was signed in the law. But the other salient fact routinely omitted by the President and congressional Democrats is that the vast majority of the newly insured receive their coverage through Medicaid. The reason ObamaCare supporters have made a habit of ignoring this fact is obvious: For 50 years, Medicaid has served as the preeminent case study of how not to run a health insurance program. Medicaid's abysmal track record of failing our most vulnerable populations will only get worse as millions of new, able-bodied adults join the program.

Then there is the fact that in 2016, insurance premiums are set to continue their steep ascent toward unaffordability. That goes for insurance plans on the ObamaCare exchanges as well as commercial plans purchased in the private market.

ObamaCare supporters have long promised that rising premiums would be at worst a brief detour on the centrally planned road to affordable health care, but as it turns out the iron laws of economics have once again triumphed over ideological wishful thinking. According to a survey of commercial insurance brokers conducted by Morgan Stanley, the average rate hike in 2016 for individual insurance plans will be 12.6 percent—slightly higher than the 11.2-percent increase last year—and the increase in small group rates will be 13.5 percent, up from a hike of 11.7 percent last year. So this creep continues. It keeps getting worse for the American people.

The outlook for insurance plans on the ObamaCare exchanges is just as bleak. Last month the Department of Health and Human Services announced that insurance premiums will rise an additional 7.5 percent next year in the 37 States using the notoriously defective and flawed healthcare.gov, and that is just the average, which obscures the more dramatic premium increases for residents in several States in particular, such as Oklahoma and Alaska, both of which are projected to see their ObamaCare premiums spike more than 30 percent next year.

Compounding the continued acceleration of premium hikes is the simultaneous increase in deductibles and the narrowing of choices that patients face in the health care market. In my home State of Utah, for instance, the residents of 20 out of my State's 29 counties are limited to only one health insurance plan option.

This toxic combination of rising health care costs and limited health care choices has already had serious consequences, especially for low- and middle-income Americans who are most severely affected by the law and who are the least capable of dealing with adverse consequences. According to a recent Gallup poll, nearly one in three Americans report that they or a family member have postponed or delayed medical treatment within the past year because of the cost, and they are more likely to have done so for a serious medical condition than for a medical condition deemed nonserious. What is even more remarkable is that the proportion of Americans who delay medical treatment because of the cost has remained basically unchanged for the last decade, even as the number of Americans with insurance coverage has increased. It is not just patients who have found ObamaCare to be too expensive. Insurance providers are coming to the same conclusion. To date, half of the 23 cooperatives created by ObamaCare collapsed despite receiving billions of dollars of taxpayer subsidies. The shuttering of the once-celebrated ObamaCare co-ops is not just a sign of the law's unsustainability, it is also a major source of the stress and anxiety that millions of Americans are experiencing as a result of this unfortunate law.

Just ask the hundreds of thousands of Utahans who recently found out that Arches Health Plan, a co-op that served roughly one-quarter of the State's exchange enrollees could not afford to stay in business next year. The announcement came only 5 days before open enrollment began this fall, leaving families across Utah scrambling to find a new plan and hoping they can afford it—like so many before them, the collateral damage of the President's repeated broken promise that if you like your health care plan, you can keep it.

Then there was the recent warning from United Healthcare. United is the Nation's largest health insurance provider. It was supposed to be big enough and with enough efficiencies built into its operations to absorb the new costs associated with doing business within the ObamaCare regulatory framework. Yet just a few weeks ago, United announced that the financial realities of its ObamaCare plans may soon force the insurance giant to stop offering insurance plans through the public exchanges.

The Affordable Care Act has been described by some of its supporters as a train wreck. It certainly looks that way as we watch hard truths and economic realities unravel the coalition of insurers that were once great champions of ObamaCare, but when you think about it, the term ''train wreck'' isn't quite the right metaphor to describe the calamity that is the Affordable Care Act. It misses the crucial point. Train wrecks are accidents, aberrations, anomalies. The failures of ObamaCare were no such thing. They were entirely predictable. We knew they were coming, despite the President's repeated assurances to the contrary.

There was nothing unexpected about the collapse of a national health care pseudo market, governed by a perverse set of incentives and exemptions that encouraged young and healthy individuals to stay out of the health insurance market. Now, nearly 5 years after its passage, there is no denying the manifest failures of ObamaCare. The only question left is, What are we going to do about it?

For the Democratic Party, the answer is—as we have come to expect—more of the same. Shield the ramshackle architecture and bloated bureaucracy of ObamaCare from any meaningful reform, and whenever possible double down—more ill-conceived and costly regulations, more Federal micromanagement of the health decisions of individuals, families, doctors, hospitals, and insurance companies, more price controls, all peddled using the same hackneyed promises and proclamations of compassion and fairness that have nearly drowned out any honest discourse during the past 6 years regarding health care.

ObamaCare has given the American people a preview of this approach to health care policy, and they have emphatically rejected it, which is why the Senate will soon vote to repeal the Affordable Care Act, but just saying no is not by itself enough.

Conservatives and Republicans must also offer the country a health care reform agenda to be for, something they can support affirmatively, proactively. Already there are a number of conservative leaders in Congress who have developed reform plans that would replace ObamaCare's cumbersome, bureaucratic, and expensive health care system with one that is flexible, decentralized, and affordable. We must build on these plans and advance legislation that empowers patients and families—not distant, coercive, powerful bureaucracies—to decide how they want to spend their health care dollars, and that encourages innovation and investment across all health care sectors. Repealing the Affordable Care Act is the first step in that process—the beginning, not the end of our road to building a market-based, patient-centered health care system in America.

I look forward to joining my colleagues in voting to repeal ObamaCare and entering this new phase of health care reform. I thank my colleagues who cooperated and worked together in developing this bill that I wholeheartedly support.

Thank you, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. DAINES. Madam President, last year when I decided to run for Montana's open Senate seat, I promised the people of Montana I would work tirelessly to repeal ObamaCare. I am upholding that promise. Tomorrow the Senate will vote to repeal President Obama's broken health care law because for many Montana families the President's health care law hasn't been what it was promised to be.

Too many Montanans have seen their work hours cut, have been forced off the plans they liked, and were told they couldn't see the doctors they trusted. Health care premiums are not as affordable for Americans as President Obama claimed they would be. We are seeing premiums rising once again. In Montana, folks who are purchasing plans from the ObamaCare exchanges are getting hit with double-digit rate increases. More than 40,000 Montanans are expected to receive notices that their insurance rates have increased by double digits—an average of 34 percent for some plans. To put that into perspective, that is another $1,000 a year for a 40-year-old on one of Montana's silver plans.

Some Montanans have been hit with even higher rate increases. Take Cindy from Missoula, MT, who received a letter from her health insurance company that her premiums were increasing by 40 percent. Unfortunately, these rate hikes are the predictable result of forcing a partisan piece of legislation through Congress without transparent consideration or bipartisan input. Sadly, those impacted the hardest by these steep rate increases are often those who can least afford it.

Americans need access to affordable care, but ObamaCare not only takes uninsured Americans in the wrong direction, it is failing to reliably provide the basic coverage Americans deserve. Look no further than the health co-op system established under ObamaCare. All but one lost money in the last year—all but one. More than half have collapsed, forcing more than 700,000 Americans to find new health insurance options.

In 2007, President Obama said himself that by the end of his first term ObamaCare would ''cover every American and cut the cost of a typical family's premium by up to $2,500 a year.''

Montanans haven't seen their premiums decreased by $2,500 a year. It is not even close. Montanans are forced once again off the health care plans they liked and away from the doctors they trusted because when Washington, DC, bureaucrats take over a health care system, inevitably prices go up and the quality of care goes down. That is exactly what we have seen happen with ObamaCare. After more than 5 years of this Obama experiment, it is clear ObamaCare isn't working.

I grew up in Montana. Spending time outdoors is an important way of life for us back home. I was fly fishing before Brad Pitt made it cool in the movie ''A River Runs Through It.'' When you are in one of Montana's blue-ribbon streams and your fishing line gets tangled up, you have a couple different options. Sometimes you can take some time to untangle it and make another cast, but other times, your line gets so tangled up and knotted up that the best option is to cut the line and start over. It is time to cut the line on President Obama's failed health care law and tie on a new fly. That is what the Senate is going to do this week.

This bill dismantles President Obama's bungled health care law. It also puts our States on a glide path away from ObamaCare. It will build a bridge to replace this broken law with State-led solutions that put patients back in the center of the health care equation and return the health care decisions to Americans, to families, to their doctors and away from a bunch of DC bureaucrats. When we pass this historic legislation tomorrow, it will be the first time an ObamaCare repeal bill will be on President Obama's desk for his signature. He is going to have to decide whether to put the American people first or if he will continue imposing fines and substandard care on the hard-working people of this country.

Even if the President rejects the will of the American people and vetoes this bill, I will continue working to protect Montanans from rising health care costs, and I will keep working to ensure that all Americans receive the quality health care they deserve.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate be in a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUDGETARY REVISIONS

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, section 4305 of S. Con. Res. 11, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2016, allows the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee to revise the allocations, aggregates, and levels in the budget resolution for legislation related to health care reform. The authority to adjust is contingent on the legislation not increasing the deficit over either the period of the total of fiscal years 2016–2020 or the period of the total of fiscal years 2016–2025.

I find that Senate amendment 2874 fulfills the conditions of deficit neutrality found in sec. 4305 of S. Con. Res. 11. Accordingly, I am revising the allocations to the Committee on Finance; the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, HELP; and the budgetary aggregates to account for the budget effects of the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that the accompanying tables, which provide details about the adjustment, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:
