Purpose and Summary

H.R. 2604, the “Need-Based Educational Aid Act of 2015,” would extend for an additional 7 years an expiring exemption to the antitrust laws, contained in section 568 of the “Improving America’s Schools Act of 1994”, that permits colleges and universities to collaborate on certain financial aid practices. The existing antitrust exemption was created in 1992, has been extended on four separate occasions, and is currently set to expire on September 30, 2015. H.R. 2604 narrows the existing antitrust exemption and extends its expiration to September 30, 2022.

Background and Need for the Legislation

A. GENESIS OF THE ANTITRUST EXEMPTION

Beginning in the mid-1950's, a number of private colleges and universities agreed to award institutional financial aid (i.e., aid from the school's own funds) solely on the basis of demonstrated financial need. These schools also agreed to use common principles to assess each student's financial need. From the 1950's through the late 1980's, this practice continued undisturbed. In 1991, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice (DOJ) brought suit against nine colleges and universities to enjoin this practice.1 In 1991, eight of the schools entered into a consent decree with DOJ.2 One of the schools, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, litigated the issue for some time before ultimately entering into a separate consent decree with DOJ.

In 1992, Congress passed a temporary antitrust exemption authorizing schools to agree to award financial aid on a need-blind basis and to use common principles of need analysis when determining private financial aid awards.3 This temporary exemption specifically prohibited any agreement as to the terms of a financial aid award to any specific student. By its terms, it expired on September 30, 1994.

In 1994, Congress passed another temporary exemption from the antitrust laws.4 This exemption resembled the one passed in 1992, in that it allowed agreements to provide aid on the basis of need only and to use common principles of need analysis. It also prohibited agreements on awards to specific students. Unlike the 1992 exemption, however, it also allowed the use of a common aid application form and the exchange of the student’s financial information through a third party. The law was modeled after the consent decrees entered into between DOJ and the nine universities and colleges. The temporary exemption was set to expire on September 30, 1997. In 1997, Congress passed a law further extending the exemption until September 30, 2001, as attempts to make the exemption permanent were unsuccessful.5 The exemption was extended again in 2001 and 2008.6

Under the existing antitrust exemption, colleges and universities can engage in the following joint practices:

1. agreeing to award financial aid only on the basis of demonstrated financial need;

2 Id.
The universities and colleges that currently utilize the exemption are: Amherst College; Boston College; Claremont McKenna College; College of the Holy Cross; Columbia University; Cornell University; Dartmouth College; Davidson College; Duke University; Georgetown University; Grinnell College; Haverford College; Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Middlebury College; Northwestern University; Pomona College; St. John's College; Swarthmore College; University of Notre Dame; University of Pennsylvania; Vanderbilt University; Wellesley College; and, Williams College.

Furthermore, the common set of principles reached by the participating schools is not binding on those that participate, nor are there prescribed financial aid amounts that are predetermined. Indeed, universities using the common formula offer different, and competitive, financial aid packages to the same student.

Notably, when Congress extended the antitrust exemption in 2001, the relevant legislation included a requirement that the Government Accountability Office (GAO) issue a report determining whether the antitrust exemption impacted the affordability of the colleges and universities. In 2006, GAO published a report finding that the antitrust exemption did not adversely impact the affordability of colleges and universities.

As a result of the continued need by certain schools to utilize the antitrust exemption for joint collaboration on certain financial aid practices, Rep. Lamar Smith (R-TX) and Rep. Henry C. “Hank” Johnson, Jr. (D-GA) introduced H.R. 2604. The legislation recognizes that schools have not utilized the component of the existing antitrust exemption that allows them to share students’ financial information through an independent third party. Accordingly, H.R. 2604 allows that provision of the existing exemption to expire, and only extends provisions for the three other activities for an additional 7 years.

U.S. CONGRESS,

cc: Honorable John Conyers, Jr.
Ranking Member

As ordered reported by the House Committee on the Judiciary on July 8, 2015.

H.R. 2604 would extend—until September 30, 2022—a provision of current law that exempts institutions of higher education from regulation under Federal antitrust laws when awarding need-based student aid. Under current law, the provision expires on September 30, 2015. With this extension, colleges and universities would be able to continue to collaborate, but CBO expects those activities would not affect the workload of any Federal agency. Thus, CBO estimates that implementing the bill would not have a significant effect on the Federal budget. H.R. 2604 would not affect direct spending or revenues; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures do not apply. H.R. 2604 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments. The staff contact for this estimate is Marin Burnett. The estimate was approved by Theresa Gullo, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

Duplication of Federal Programs

No provision of H.R. 2604 establishes or reauthorizes a program of the Federal Government known to be duplicative of another Federal program, a program that was included in any report from the Government Accountability Office to Congress pursuant to section 21 of Public Law 111–139, or a program related to a program identified in the most recent Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance.

Disclosure of Directed Rule Makings

The Committee estimates that H.R. 2604 specifically directs to be completed no specific rule makings within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 551.

Performance Goals and Objectives

The Committee states that pursuant to clause 3(c)(4) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, H.R. 2604 improves and reauthorizes provisions relating to the application of the antitrust laws to the award of need-based educational aid.

Advisory on Earmarks

In accordance with clause 9 of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, H.R. 2604 does not contain any congressional earmarks, limited tax benefits, or limited tariff benefits as defined in clause 9(e), 9(f), or 9(g) of Rule XXI.

Section-by-Section Analysis

The following discussion describes the bill as reported by the Committee.

Section 1. Short Title. Provides that the bill may be referred to as the “Need-Based Educational Aid Act of 2015.”

*Section 2. Changes in Existing Law Made by the Bill, as Reported

In compliance with clause 3(e) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italics,
