PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

H.R. 189, the “Servicemember Foreclosure Protections Extension Act of 2015,” was ordered to be favorably reported to the full House on February 12, 2015, by voice vote. H.R. 189 was introduced on January 7, 2015, by Representative Alan Grayson of Florida. H.R. 189 would extend through December 31, 2016, the one-year period after a servicemember’s military service that the servicemember is protected from any sale, foreclosure, or seizure of their property without a court order or waiver agreement signed by the servicemember.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) provides financial services protections such as interest rate relief and foreclosure protection for military personnel serving on active duty.

Current law protects against foreclosure and eviction for military personnel for one-year post-active military service to allow servicemembers and military families sufficient time to get on their feet, and to avoid the stress of potentially losing their home as the servicemember transitions from active duty to civilian life. Some servicemembers, particularly those leaving active-duty and re-acclimating to civilian life, continue to face financial challenges that are likely to continue for the foreseeable future.

Providing protections to servicemembers dates back to the enactment of the Soldiers’ and Sailors’ Civil Relief Act of 1918 and the Soldiers’ and Sailors’ Civil Relief Act of 1940 (SSCRA). In 2003, the SCRA was enacted to “restate, clarify, and revise [the SSCRA].”¹

The SCRA provides for a stay of proceedings that seek to enforce an obligation on real or personal property owned by the servicemember prior to such military service, and protection against sale, foreclosure, or seizure of such property for a period of one year following a servicemember’s period of military service.² Thus, if a servicemember is unable to make payments on the loan due to military service, the provision prevents the vendor from exercising any right or option under the contract to rescind or terminate, to resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment due, or to breach the terms, except by action in a court of competent jurisdiction, until one year after the term of active duty terminates.

Initially, the period of protection afforded servicemembers facing foreclosure was 90 days. The protection was extended to 9 months³ and then one year.⁴ The authority to provide protection for one year has been of limited duration, and has been extended a number of times, most recently at the end of the 113th Congress.⁵

The current one-year protection from foreclosure will expire at the end of 2015 and revert back to the 90 day protection under the SCRA. H.R. 189 would amend P.L. 112–154, 126 Stat. 1208 to extend the one-year protection for an additional year (December 31, 2016, and January 1, 2017).

Hon. JEFF MILLER,

H.R. 189—Servicemember Foreclosure Protections Extension Act of 2015

H.R. 189 would enhance certain protections for veterans with home mortgages. CBO estimates that any change in direct spending under the bill would be insignificant.

Under current law, veterans may receive a judicial stay of foreclosure proceedings on loans that were originated before they entered the military. Those veterans are currently eligible to obtain a stay during the one-year period after they leave military service;

however, that period of eligibility will be shortened to nine months beginning on January 1, 2016. H.R. 189 would retain the one-year period of eligibility through December 31, 2016. (The duration of the stay of proceedings itself is determined by the courts.)

Some of the loans that would be affected by that foreclosure protection are guaranteed by the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) or the Federal Housing Administration (FHA). Under its home loan program, VA pays lenders up to 25 percent of the outstanding loan debt in the event that the borrower defaults. Unpaid interest can be added to the guaranteed debt, within certain limits. FHA provides a similar guarantee on mortgages it insures, compensating lenders for up to 100 percent of the loss.

Delaying foreclosure on borrowers who default would lengthen the period during which unpaid interest would accrue, increasing the indebtedness of the borrower. If the loan is eventually terminated, the claim filed by the lender would be larger by the amount of the additional interest, and the subsequent claim payment from VA or FHA would rise as a result. Those larger claim payments would raise the costs of both agencies.

Loans that could be affected by the bill would be those that were originated prior to enactment of H.R. 189. Changes to the cost of extant mortgages would be treated as loan modifications and the increased costs would be recorded as direct spending when the modifications became effective—that is, at the start of calendar year 2016, when the eligibility period for the benefit would be shortened under current law.

CBO expects that only a small number of veterans would have loans guaranteed by VA or FHA and would obtain a stay of foreclosure in 2016 as a result of the three additional months of eligibility that H.R. 189 would provide. The bill would apply only to mortgages that were entered into before joining the military. Most veterans enter the military between the ages of 18 and 22, a stage in life when few people have mortgages. Thus, CBO believes it is highly unlikely that such veterans would be responsible for federally guaranteed loans before they entered military service.

Furthermore, CBO estimates that the average additional indebtedness per borrower as a result of the forbearance is small—about $3,000. Therefore, any increase in direct spending would be insignificant. Because enacting H.R. 189 would affect direct spending, pay-as-you-go procedures apply. Enacting H.R. 189 would not affect revenues.

By extending through December 31, 2016, the one-year period of eligibility for veterans to receive a judicial stay of foreclosure proceedings, the bill would impose intergovernmental and private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA). The cost of the mandates would be any loss of income by public and private entities, such as mortgage lenders, that could otherwise enforce an obligation, sale, foreclosure or seizure of the property without the extension. CBO expects the number of veterans who face foreclosure within one year of separation to be small. CBO further expects that few additional mortgage lenders would be affected by the extension and that the size of their claims would be small. Consequently, CBO estimates that the costs of the mandates would fall below the annual thresholds established in UMRA for intergovernmental and private-sector mandates. (Adjusted for inflation, those thresholds are $77 million and $154 million in 2015, respectively.)

The CBO staff contacts for this estimate are David Newman (for federal costs), Jon Sperl (for state and local effects), and Paige Piper/Bach (for private-sector effects). This estimate was approved by Theresa Gullo, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

Pursuant to section 3(i) of H. Res. 5, 114th Cong. (2015), the Committee estimates that H.R. 189 does not require directed rule making.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE LEGISLATION

Section 1—Short title

Section 1 would establish the short title of H.R. 189 as the "Servicemember Foreclosure Protections Extension Act of 2015."

Section 2—Temporary extension of extended period of protections for members of uniformed services relating to mortgages, mortgage foreclosure, and eviction

Section 2 would extend current authorities provided in P.L. 112–154 to December 31, 2016 and January 1, 2017.
