COMMITTEE STATEMENT AND VIEWS

PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

H.R. 24 allows the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a full audit of the Federal Reserve and requires a one-time audit within a year of enactment.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The Federal Reserve System was created by Congress in 1913, and Congress has delegated to it the power, enumerated in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution, to regulate the supply and value of money.¹ The Federal Reserve was designed to be a politically independent body, which economists generally consider has led to better policy outcomes.² The Federal Reserve struggled in its early years to achieve independence from the Executive Branch, in particular the Treasury Department, with respect to monetary policy. Independence from the Executive Branch is an essential safeguard against the manipulation of the money supply for short-term political gain.

However, increasing the transparency and accountability of the Federal Reserve to Congress has become more important in light of the expansion of the Federal Reserve's balance sheet since 2007.³ At that time, the Federal Reserve used arcane, overly broad emergency powers to extend more than $1 trillion dollars to the financial sector during the financial crisis, without Congressional input.⁴ The Federal Reserve picked winners and losers during the financial crisis by providing hundreds of billions of dollars in loans to four select private entities.⁵ In six years, the Federal Reserve expanded its balance sheet multiple times over, from $850 billion in September 2008 to over $4.4 trillion before September 2014.⁶ This expansion occurred primarily through unconventional means of influencing the money supply, such as quantitative easing and the creation of dollar swap lines with the European Central Bank to provide assistance to failing European banks.⁷ Actions such as these can profoundly affect the economic and fiscal health of the United States, and Congress should have greater access to information about them.

Congress's ability to oversee these extraordinary actions has historically been restricted by self-imposed limitations. The Federal Banking Agency Audit Act of 1978 (1978 Act) expanded GAO's audit access to the Federal Reserve's role in banking regulation and payment systems, while specifically prohibiting GAO from auditing activities related to four key areas: 1) transactions for or with a foreign central bank, foreign government or international financing agency; 2) deliberations, decisions, or actions on monetary policy matters, including discount window operations, reserves of member banks, securities credit, interest on deposits, and open market operations; 3) transactions made under the direction of the Federal Open Market Committee; and, 4) any discussions or communications among or between members of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors and officers and employees of the Federal Reserve system related to the above. Before 1978, GAO could only audit the Federal Reserve in its role as fiscal agent of the U.S. Treasury, under GAO's authority to audit the Treasury.

The restrictions that remained in the 1978 law, however, hinder the ability of Congress—and ultimately the American people—to make informed decisions about the Federal Reserve's use of its con-gressionally delegated authority. H.R. 24 lifts these unnecessary restrictions on Congressional access to information about the Federal Reserve, thereby restoring the ability of the Legislative Branch to conduct oversight of the central bank's exercise of its constitutionally delegated authority. The intent of this legislation is to allow Congress to make informed decisions about the Federal Reserve's use of the powers delegated to it by lawmakers by increasing the transparency and accountability of the Federal Reserve to Congress.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

H.R. 24, the Federal Reserve Transparency Act of 2015, was introduced on January 6, 2015, by Representative Thomas Massie (R-KY) and referred to the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform. The Committee considered H.R. 24 at a business meeting on July 24, 2014. The Committee ordered the bill reported favorably by voice vote. On September 16, 2014 the Committee on Financial Services discharged the bill. On September 17, 2014, the House passed the bill on a vote of 33 to 92. No further action was taken in the Senate.

In the 112th Congress, Representative Ron Paul (R-TX) introduced H.R. 459, the Federal Reserve Transparency Act of 2012, on January 26, 2011, which was referred to the Committee and the Committee on Financial Services. JULY 14, 2016.

Hon. JASON CHAFFETZ,
Chairman, Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 24, the Federal Reserve Transparency Act of 2015.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Nathaniel Frentz.

Sincerely,

KEITH HALL.

Enclosure.

H.R. 24—Federal Reserve Transparency Act of 2015

H.R. 24 would amend federal law with respect to audits of the Federal Reserve System by the Government Accountability Office (GAO). The bill would direct GAO to prepare, within 12 months of enactment, an audit of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve banks. The bill also would repeal prohibitions under current law that prevent GAO from auditing the Federal Reserve's monetary policy and any of the Federal Reserve's transactions involving a foreign central bank, the government of a foreign country, or a nonprivate international financing organization. CBO expects that eliminating those prohibitions would lead to future requests from Members of Congress for GAO to conduct additional oversight and analysis of the Federal Reserve System on a periodic basis.

Based on information from GAO about the level of effort required for its previous audit of the Federal Reserve, which was required by the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 24 would cost $5 million over the 2017–2021 period; such spending would be subject to the availability of appropriated funds. That amount would cover the costs to prepare the audit required by the bill as well as future analysis that CBO expects would be requested by the Congress following enactment of the bill.

In addition, based on information provided by the Federal Reserve and GAO about the costs of similar proposals regarding oversight of the Federal Reserve, CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 24 would increase costs to the Federal Reserve and thus decrease federal revenues by less than $500,000 in each year of the 2017–2026 period and by $3 million in total over that period. That estimate of reduced revenue reflects higher costs to the Federal Reserve System associated with coordination of the initial audit and future GAO oversight and analysis following enactment of H.R. 24. Because enacting H.R. 24 would reduce revenues, pay-as-you-go procedures apply. CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 24 would not affect direct spending.

CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 24 would not increase net direct spending or on-budget deficits by more than $5 billion in any of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2027.

H.R. 24 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

The CBO staff contact for the estimate is Nathaniel Frentz. The estimate was approved by H. Samuel Papenfuss, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis, and Mark Booth, Unit Chief, Revenue Estimating.

The assignment of responsibility for the performance of any function that the Board determines to delegate shall be a function of the Chairman. The Board shall, upon the vote of one member, review action taken at a delegated level within such time and in such manner as the Board shall by rule prescribe. The Board of Governors may not delegate to a Federal reserve bank its functions for the establishment of policies for the supervision and regulation of depository institution holding companies and other financial firms supervised by the Board of Governors.

(l) To employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, or other employees as may be deemed necessary to conduct the business of the board. MINORITY VIEWS

The United States Federal Reserve System is an independent central bank, and its monetary policy actions are not subject to approval by other entities. This independence is critical to the ability of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve to pursue monetary policies it considers most responsive to the nation's current economic conditions and most likely to fulfill its dual mandate of promoting maximum employment and stable prices.

The Federal Banking Agency Audit Act of 1978 established that the Federal Reserve System may be audited by the Government Accountability Office (GAO), and regular audits have been conducted since that date. However, that Act included protections now codified in 31 U.S.C. 714(b) to ensure that the Federal Reserve's monetary policymaking remains independent from outside political influence.

In 2010, the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act expanded the types of audits GAO may conduct of the Federal Reserve, as well as the data that regularly must be disclosed to the public by the Federal Reserve.

For example, the Dodd-Frank Act required GAO to audit the emergency financial assistance provided by the Federal Reserve during the financial crisis. The Act also added a new subsection (f) to 31 U.S.C. 714 which opens the transactions and discount window operations authorized under section 11(s) of the Federal Reserve Act to audit so GAO can assess their operational integrity and internal controls, the effectiveness of security and collateral policies, the fairness to all institutions of such transactions, and the policies governing the use of third-party contractors engaged to manage such transactions.

The Dodd-Frank Act required the Federal Reserve to post on its website all GAO reports, annual financial statements, reports to Congress, and any other information "necessary or helpful to the public in understanding the accounting, financial reporting and internal controls of the Board and Federal Reserve banks."

In addition, the Dodd-Frank Act required the Federal Reserve to release information regarding borrowers and counterparties participating in emergency credit facilities, discount lending programs, and open market operations, including the names of the parties, the amount borrowed by or transferred to the participant or counterparty, the interest rate or discount and the collateral pledged. The information must be released within one year of the termination of a credit facility, and within two years of a discount lending transaction or open market operation.

The Dodd-Frank Act was carefully crafted to expand transparency surrounding the Federal Reserve's operations without impeding its ability to carry out the critical responsibility of independently setting our nation's monetary policy.

H.R. 24 would significantly alter this balance by permanently repealing the provisions in 31 U.S.C. 714(b). GAO would be permitted to audit the Federal Reserve's transactions with foreign central banks and transactions conducted under the direction of the Federal Open Market Committee. GAO also would be able to audit the Federal Reserve's internal deliberations on monetary policy matters, as well as discussions or communications Members of the Board have with each other and with staff of the Federal Reserve System regarding monetary policy.

There is significant concern that opening the Federal Reserve's monetary policy deliberations to GAO audit in this way—including audits conducted without any significant elapse of time from the point of decision—could influence how such deliberations are conducted and potentially even the policies that are chosen, thus degrading the independence of the Federal Reserve.

If all restrictions on GAO's ability to audit the Federal Reserve's deliberative processes are removed, Members of Congress could actively seek to influence the Federal Reserve's deliberations by the types and subjects of audits they request of GAO. Members of Congress could also seek to obtain the materials GAO assesses when performing its audits, including documents related to the Federal Reserve's deliberations.

The Committee passed similar legislation in the 112th and 113th Congresses (H.R. 459 and H.R. 24), but has still held no hearings on this legislation and has heard from no witnesses regarding its potential consequences. Moving forward on this bill without calling a single witness from the Federal Reserve may result in many unforeseen and potentially damaging consequences.

ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS,
Ranking Member.
