PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

The bill directs the Secretary of Homeland Security to examine the threat of vehicular terrorism and develop a strategy to improve Department of Homeland Security (DHS) support for the efforts of emergency responders and the private sector to prevent, mitigate and respond to such a threat. The strategy is required to include information sharing activities and training activities as well as any additional activities the Secretary recommends to improve the Department’s support for efforts of emergency response providers and the private sector to prevent, mitigate and respond to such a threat.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Terror groups have urged supporters to carry out attacks using any means necessary, including vehicle ramming. The second edition of Inspire magazine, a terrorist propaganda tool published by now-deceased U.S.-born al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) member Anwar al-Awlaki, included an article promoting the use of a large pickup trucks to target pedestrians. Supporters of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) have repeatedly promoted the use of unsophisticated terror attacks, including the use of vehicles. As recently as February 23, 2018, a pro-ISIS group published a poster promoting vehicle ramming attacks. The poster displays a truck and Arabic and English text stating “Hit Them with a Truck. Kill Them All.”

Terrorists have heeded this direction and have carried out several vehicle-based attacks in the past several years. On the evening of July 14, 2016, a 19-ton cargo truck was deliberately driven into crowds of people celebrating Bastille Day on the Promenade des Anglais in Nice, France, resulting in the deaths of 86 people and the injury of 458 others. On March 22, 2017, a terrorist drove a car into pedestrians on the pavement along the south side of Westminster Bridge and Bridge Street, injuring more than 50 people, five of them fatally. On the afternoon of August 17, 2017, an individual drove a van into pedestrians on La Rambla in Barcelona, Spain, killing thirteen people and injuring at least 130 others.

The radicalized individuals in the United States have also engaged in vehicle ramming attacks. On November 28, 2016, an individual inspired by ISIS drove his vehicle into a crowd of students on the Ohio State University campus, injuring 11 students. Most recently, on October 31, 2017, a person drove a rented pickup truck into cyclists and runners on the Hudson River Park’s bike path in New York City. The vehicle-ramming attack killed eight people and injured eleven others. A flag and a document indicating allegiance to ISIS were found in the truck. However, this terror tactic has not confined itself to one ideological group. On August 12, 2017, a self-proclaimed neo-Nazi drove his car into a crowd of individuals protesting the alt-right demonstrations held at a “Unite the Right” rally in Charlottesville, Virginia. The vehicle ramming attack killed one person and injured 35 others.

The majority of prevention, mitigation and response activities related to vehicle attacks are carried out by first responders and the private sector. DHS has existing resources and programs that can be better utilized to prepare front line personnel in local communities to address this threat. This includes, guidance related to the use of existing grant programs, increased information sharing, promoting suspicious activity reporting, increasing available exercises and training programs, dedicated research and development targeting mitigation measures, and utilizing critical infrastructure protection programs for vehicle ramming prevention.

H.R. 4227, the Vehicular Terrorism Prevention Act would require the Secretary of Homeland Security to submit to Congress, a report detailing what actions DHS is undertaking to combat the threat of vehicular terrorism. The report must include an examination of the current threat level for vehicular terrorism; what DHS is currently doing to guard against vehicular terrorism; how the threat of vehicular terrorism may be mitigated; the extent to which DHS is doing any outreach or training with private sector partners in response to the threat of vehicular terrorism; and, any actions that Congress can take to help DHS mitigate this threat.
