PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

On September 7, 2018, Representative Mia Love introduced H.R. 6751, the “Banking Transparency for Sanctioned Persons Act of 2018”. This legislation would require the Secretary of the Treasury to submit a semi-annual report to Congress regarding financial services benefitting state sponsors of terrorism and certain sanctioned persons. The Treasury Secretary shall submit the report to Congress in an unclassified form but the report may include a classified annex. This report would include:

- A copy of any license issued by the Secretary that authorizes a financial institution to provide financial services benefitting a state sponsor of terrorism (Iran, North Korea, Syria, and Sudan); and
- A list of any foreign financial institutions that knowingly conducts significant transactions for a person that 1) is owned or controlled, or acting on behalf of, the government of a state sponsor of terrorism; or 2) is sanctioned pursuant to the Sergei Magnitsky Act (Sec. 404 of P.L. 112–208), the Global Magnitsky Act (Subtitle F of title XII of P.L. 114–328), or Executive Order 13818, which provide for U.S. sanctions against human rights abusers and corrupt foreign officials.

The Treasury Secretary may waive this bill’s reporting requirement with respect to a foreign financial institution upon receiving credible assurances that such an institution will no longer conduct significant transactions for the sanctioned persons covered by the legislation. The Secretary may also waive the requirement upon notifying Congress that a waiver is important to the national interest, with an explanation of the Secretary's reasoning.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Under current law, the Department of the Treasury, through its Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC), may issue licenses authorizing U.S. persons to engage in transactions that would otherwise be prohibited. Such prohibitions may be general in nature, such as a country-level embargo, or refer narrowly to sanctioned persons "designated" by Treasury.

Licenses may be issued on a variety of grounds, from humanitarian reasons (e.g. natural disaster relief) to specific foreign policy-related objectives. While the rationale behind particular OFAC licenses may be met with support or opposition, H.R. 6751 simply requires an administration to inform Congress that certain financial services-related licenses have in fact been approved. Without this knowledge, Congress is limited in its ability to oversee an administration's execution of sanctions, be they related to terrorism, human rights abuses, or corruption.

While U.S. entities are generally prohibited from dealing with any sanctioned person, foreign financial institutions may be able to engage in business with such persons without penalty, provided that the U.S. has not imposed "secondary sanctions" on foreign banks. Given Congress's interest in understanding sanctioned persons' ability to access financial services globally, H.R. 6751 requires the Treasury Secretary to list foreign institutions undertaking this business. The reporting requirement also signals to foreign banks that Congress will have insights into their dealings with serious human rights abusers and corrupt officials, which may inform future legislation by answering the following questions:

- Are designated persons evading the consequences of U.S. sanctions?
- Could the U.S. exert diplomatic pressure more effectively to shut off sanctioned persons' access to financial services abroad?
- Are certain foreign countries undermining U.S. efforts to combat corruption and human rights atrocities, or failing to adhere to their own international obligations (e.g. United Nations Security Council resolutions)?
- If Congress or the Executive branch were to consider secondary sanctions on foreign financial institutions, how should those sanctions be effectively designed, and what might the unintended consequences be, if any?

The sanctioned persons encompassed by H.R. 6751 include those designated for gross violations of human rights and official acts of corruption. Particular examples include:

- Ramzan Kadyrov, head of the Chechen Republic, who has been sanctioned for involvement in extra-judicial killings and disappearances in Russia.
- Aung Kyaw Zaw, a Burmese commander whose subordinates have been implicated in the ethnic cleansing of Burma's Rohingya minority.

- Felix Ramon Bautista Rosario, a senator from the Dominican Republic who has reportedly engaged in significant acts of corruption in both the Dominican Republic and Haiti.
- Hing Bun Hieng, commander of Cambodia's Prime Minister Bodyguard Unit, who has been involved in multiple attacks on unarmed Cambodians, including an incident where a U.S. citizen received shrapnel wounds.
