MINORITY VIEWS

[To accompany H.J. Res. 66]

The Committee on Financial Services, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 66) disapproving the rule submitted by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau relating to “Small Business Lending Under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (Regulation B)”, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without amendment and recommends that the joint resolution do pass.

PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

Introduced on July 14, 2023, by Representative Roger Williams, H.J. Res 66, a joint resolution disapproving the rule submitted by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau relating to “Small Business Lending Under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (Regulation B)”, would rescind the CFPB’s final rule, implementing Section 1071 of the Dodd-Frank Act, to mandate the collection and reporting of demographic data on small business loan applicants.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

On March 30, 2023, the CFPB issued a final rule to implement Section 1071 of the Dodd-Frank Act, “Small Business Data Collection.”¹ The final rule will expand data collection requirements for financial institutions in the small business lending market. Under the rule, any lender who originates at least 100 loans in each of the two preceding calendar years to small businesses with a gross revenue of up to $5 million from the previous fiscal year will be required to collect certain data related to borrowers' demographic information.² Lenders will be required to report on as many as 81 data fields,³ including application and credit information as well as an applicant's minority-owned business status, women-owned business status, LGBTQI+-owned business status, and information on ethnicity, race, and sex of the principal owners.⁴ The CFPB will implement the rule in phases: (1) Lenders who originate at least 2,500 small business loans annually must collect data beginning on October 1, 2024; (2) Lenders who originate at least 500 loans annually must collect data beginning April 1, 2025; and (3) Lenders who originate at least 100 loans annually must collect data beginning January 1, 2026.⁵

The CFPB incorporated some industry feedback into the final rule. The changes include removing the requirement for lenders to make their own determinations of an applicant's race or ethnicity, or any other demographic information; and not requiring loans reportable under the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) to be reported under the new rule. However, covered entities subject to the final rule remain concerned with the short timeframe to create sufficient compliance systems; the ability of the CFPB to protect small businesses' data; and the consequences of increased compliance burden on the availability of and access to affordable small business credit.

On October 26, 2023, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas issued a nationwide injunction prohibiting the CFPB from implementing or enforcing its final rule on Small Business Lending under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (Regulation B).⁶ The District Court explained that, given the Fifth Circuit's opinion on the unconstitutionality of the CFPB's funding structure, implementation of the Small Business Lending Rule should be enjoined pending the Supreme Court's decision.⁷ The District Court further directed the CFPB to extend the time for compliance should the Supreme Court reverse the Fifth Circuit's decision.

The District Court did not independently consider the funding argument previously held unconstitutional by the Fifth Circuit.

Pursuant to clause 3(c)(6) of rule XIII, the following hearing was used to develop H.J. Res. 66: The Committee on Financial Services held a hearing on June 14, 2023, titled “The Semi-Annual Report of the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection.”

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE LEGISLATION

This joint resolution states that Congress disapproves the rule submitted by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau relating to “Small Business Lending Under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (Regulation B)” (88 Fed. Reg. 35150), and such rule shall have no force or effect.

MINORITY VIEWS

This resolution would nullify the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's (CFPB) recently finalized small business lending rule, implementing Section 1071 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank). Section 1071 was led by Ranking Member Waters and Rep. Velázquez. The CFPB rule implementing this section seeks to: provide transparency in an opaque lending marketplace; promote competition among lenders that would drive down costs; and provide new lending opportunities for small businesses, especially women-owned, LGBTQ-owned businesses and businesses owned by people of color. The passage of this Congressional Review Act resolution would not only reverse this rule, it would further restrict the CFPB's ability to issue any future rules to promote small business lending market transparency.

The CFPB finalized its rule implementing Section 1071 in March 2023.¹ The rule requires lenders to collect and report information about the small business credit applications they receive, including geographic and demographic data (that's self-reported by business owners on a voluntary basis), lending decisions, and the price of credit. The rule will work in tandem with the Community Reinvestment Act, which requires certain financial institutions to meet the needs of the communities they serve. The increased transparency will benefit small businesses, family farms, financial institutions, and the broader economy. Since its finalization, Section 1071 has come under attack in both district courts and Congress. In May 2023, plaintiffs filed a lawsuit in a Texas federal district court challenging the validity of the rule and a motion seeking a preliminary injunction.² Community lenders and small business advocates alike have underlined the importance of CFPB's small lending rules to creating a more transparent and fair marketplace for lenders and small businesses.³

The CFPB's 1071 rule is expected to result in increased lending to underserved businesses, including farms, as was observed in the implementation of similar sunshine statutes like the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA). HMDA data has helped regulators to identify discriminatory practices, like modern-day redlining. Congress drafted Section 1071 of Dodd-Frank following the 2008 financial crisis to provide similar transparency to the small business lending market. In the early days of the pandemic, we saw how the biggest banks prioritized their concierge clients in the first round of the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP), leaving millions of small businesses, especially those owned by women and people of color, out of the program. Recent research from the Fed found that Black-owned small businesses were 9% less likely to receive a PPP loan compared to White-owned firms. Make no mistake, if we had this CFPB small business data rule in place before the pandemic, we would have had much more data on who was receiving support and who wasn't, and who was lending to diverse small businesses and who wasn't. Going forward, Congress would be better positioned and equipped with data to craft legislation to more fairly support small business lending.

CFPB's 1071 rule is an important step towards transparency and fairness in small business lending. We appreciate that the CFPB is phasing this rule in, giving community banks and credit unions adequate time to prepare to comply with the rule. The arguments that this rule will stop small business lending are a red herring. Again, financial institutions have complied with HMDA for decades, and yet they continue to make mortgage loans. Greater transparency will promote competition and ensure that all businesses have a fair chance to thrive. We must protect the financial needs of small businesses and hold financial institutions accountable for their lending practices.

During the markup, Rep. Casten opened a parliamentary inquiry about the resolution and noted that this resolution does not comply with typical Congressional Review Act procedures for fast-track consideration in the Senate because H.J. Res. 66 was introduced on May 31st, but the papers for the rule that it seeks to overturn was not referred to the Senate Banking Committee until June 12th. According to information staff received from the Senate Parliamentarian's office and Congressional Research Service, even if the House were to pass H.J. Res. 66, the Senate would be unable to take up the measure under fast-track consideration. While we strongly oppose this measure, it would add insult to injury for the House to take valuable floor time to pass H.J. Res. 66, only to have to take additional floor time to pass a different measure approved by the Senate for the measure to advance to the President's desk.
