

Administration of Joseph R. Biden, Jr., 2024

Remarks Prior to a Meeting With Prime Minister Fumio Kishida of Japan and President Ferdinand R. "Bongbong" Marcos, Jr., of the Philippines

April 11, 2024

President Biden. Mr. President, Mr. Prime Minister, today we mark a historic moment: the first-ever leaders summit between the United States, Japan, and the Philippines. And it's truly an honor to have you both here as we begin this new era of a partnership.

As you've heard me say before, a great deal of history in our world will be written in the Indo-Pacific over the coming years and the three—as the three allies, three steadfast partners, and three proud democracies representing a half a billion people. And today we commit to writing that story and a future together, to building an Indo-Pacific that is free, open, prosperous, and secure for all.

This afternoon we'll discuss a few key areas where our nations are deepening ties. First, technology and clean energy. We're securing our semiconductor supply chain—from securing our semiconductor supply chain, to expanding trusted telecommunications in the Philippines, to building the clean energy workforce, to expanding our cooperation across the entire board.

Second, we are deepening our maritime and security ties. This is something I know you've discussed with Vice President Harris during her travel to the Indo-Pacific. And I want to be clear: The United States defense commitments to Japan and to the Philippines are ironclad. They're ironclad.

As I've said before, any attack on Philippine aircraft, vessels, or armed forces in the South China Sea would invoke our mutual defense treaty.

Finally, I'm proud to announce we're launching an economic corridor in the Philippines as part of the G-7's Partnership for Global Infrastructure and Investment. This is the first corridor in the Indo-Pacific. It means more jobs for people across the entire region. It means more investment in sectors critical to our future: clean energy, ports, railroads, agriculture, and much more.

I'm looking forward to discussing all this with all of you. But, first, Mr. President, I'm going to hand it over to you.

President Marcos.

President Marcos. Thank you very much, Mr. President. And, once again, allow me to thank you for hosting us—Prime Minister Kishida and myself—in the White House for this very important agreement, which we are going to formalize today.

We meet today as friends and partners, bound by a shared vision and pursuit of a peaceful, stable, and prosperous Indo-Pacific. It is a partnership born not out of convenience, nor of expediency, but as a natural progression of a deepening relation and robust cooperation amongst our three countries, linked by a profound respect for democracy, good governance, and the rule of law.

Today's historic summit is a culmination of several preparatory engagements between our Foreign Ministries, our National Security Advisers, and our Vice Ministers, as well as the conduct of trilateral maritime exercises and joint development cooperation.

But this meeting can be just a beginning. Facing the complex challenges of our time requires concerted efforts on everyone's part, a dedication to a common purpose, and an unwavering commitment to the rules-based international order.

This is a meeting that looks ahead. As we deepen our ties and enhance our coordination, we seek to identify ways of growing our economies and making them more resilient, climate-proofing our cities and our societies, sustaining our development progress, and forging a peaceful world—world for the next generation.

Today's summit is an opportunity to define the future that we want and how we intend to achieve it together.

Thank you. And I wish us all a successful meeting.

President Biden. Thank you.

Mr. Prime Minister, the floor is yours.

Prime Minister Kishida. I very much appreciate that we are having the first-ever Japan-U.S.-Philippines summit. And I would like to extend my deep gratitude to President Biden for your leadership. And, President Marcos, we met last year in December, and what a pleasure it is to see you once again.

In the midst of compound crisis faced by the global community, multilayered cooperation between allies and likeminded countries is essential if we are to maintain and bolster a free and open international order based on the rule of law.

Today's meeting will make history as an occasion that significantly pushed forward such initiative. Japan, the U.S., and the Philippines are maritime nations connected by the Pacific Ocean and are natural partners. We share fundamental values and principles and have supported regional economic development.

In order to secure peace and prosperity in the Indo-Pacific, I hope to reaffirm our intention to further strengthen trilateral cooperation and to present the specific way forward through today's meeting.

Thank you.

President Biden. Thank you very much, Mr. President and Mr. Prime Minister.

To put it simply, when we stand as one, we're able to forge a better future for all. And that's what this new trilat is all about, in my view: building a better future for people across the Indo-Pacific and, quite frankly, beyond—around the world.

So thank you both for being here. And I look forward to this first summit and many more in the years ahead.

And, as we say goodbye to the press, we'll wait a minute here, and we'll get moving.
