Message on Super Bowl LX

February 8, 2026

This Super Bowl Sunday, I send my best wishes to the athletes and coaches of the New England Patriots and the Seattle Seahawks as they take the field and to the millions of Americans gathering across the country to watch these two storied franchises compete on one of the grandest and most legendary stages in all of sports.

As our country proudly marks 250 glorious years of American independence, tonight's game carries special meaning. In many ways, the story of our country's most popular sport mirrors our own American journey. As our Nation industrialized in the early twentieth century, football emerged in working communities and reflected the same values of grit, tenacity, and discipline that defined the American worker. As our country's economy expanded, the game grew along with our Nation's prosperity. And as advances in technology connected Americans from coast to coast, football entered households everywhere, turning Sundays into traditions shared across generations.

Before kickoff this evening, during the playing of our national anthem, we remember the patriots who secured our independence 250 years ago through courage, sacrifice, and an unwavering belief in the cause of liberty. We pause to honor the brave men and women of our Armed Forces who carry that legacy forward, defending and preserving our way of life throughout history and into the future. Their service makes possible the freedoms we hold dear, including the privilege to gather with family and friends on a Sunday night to watch football and the blessing to live in the strongest and freest nation the world has ever known.

Tonight's game is more than just a championship; it's a uniquely American tradition that reflects the distinct passion and perseverance of our country. On the field, players and coaches bring years of hard work, preparation, and commitment to football's biggest night. Across the country, millions of fans come together to cheer on their teams and share in a moment of history. Today every American is a football fan.

Melania and I congratulate both teams on earning their place in Super Bowl LX, and we wish them luck as they compete for the National Football League's iconic Vince Lombardi Trophy. May tonight's game reflect the best of football and the enduring triumph of the American spirit, and may the best team win!
