

regime identified in Table 1 below is both appropriate and needed for the individual DBEs. As a matter of policy, EPA believes testing of the individual components is preferable to testing mixtures of the DBEs, although EPA would consider favorably a testing regime for the DBEs that included mixture testing, provided the individual components were also tested. EPA also invites the submission of additional testing proposals (beyond the testing described in the following Table 1) that address inter-species differences in metabolism, dosimetry or mode of toxic action for use in improving the extrapolation of DBE-induced toxicity in animal experiments to adverse effects that may occur in humans at relevant exposure levels.
