

Reclamation (Reclamation) intends to prepare a programmatic environmental impact statement (PEIS) for implementing provisions of the legislation authorizing the Yakima River Basin Water Enhancement Project (Enhancement Project). The purpose of the Enhancement Project is to meet the competing needs of the Yakima River basin through improved water conservation and management, and other appropriate means. This may include reducing water diversions by improving conveyance, distribution, and onfarm irrigation facilities; and changing operations, management, and administration of Yakima River basin water. Conserved water will be used to increase instream flows and provide a more stable irrigation supply. The Enhancement Project legislation also authorizes actions on the Yakima Indian Reservation to benefit the members of the Yakima Indian Nation.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background

Federal involvement in the Yakima River basin began in 1905 with authorization of the first facilities of the Yakima Project. The Yakima Project now consists of seven divisions: A storage division consisting of seven reservoirs and six water service divisions with separate diversion, conveyance, and distribution facilities.

The Yakima River basin is highly dependent upon water from the Yakima River and its tributaries to meet a multitude of economic, environmental, and societal needs. The Yakima Project provides the primary facilities for the regulation and use of basin waters.

Congress first authorized a study of the Enhancement Project in 1979. Phase one of the Enhancement Project was implemented in 1984 when Congress authorized the Secretary of the Interior, through Reclamation, to construct fish passage and protective facilities in the Yakima River basin. The work was performed in partnership with the Bonneville Power Administration, the State of Washington, and others under the auspices of the Fish and Wildlife Program of the Northwest Power Planning Council.

The Columbia River Basin Fish and Wildlife Program adopted by the Northwest Power Planning Council in 1982 identified the Yakima River basin as one of the areas with the greatest potential for the production of salmon and steelhead. With the existing project facilities and operational requirements, maintaining a stable irrigation water supply and instream flows for the maintenance and enhancement of salmon and steelhead in the Yakima River basin is difficult to achieve.

In dry years, the water supply available is allocated among the water users pursuant to entitlements set forth in a Federal District Court Judgment of January 31, 1945 (1945 Consent Decree). The 1945 Consent Decree requires reductions in the water supply available to junior water right holders before any reductions to senior right holders. Additionally, a Federal Court directive on November 28, 1980, requiring Reclamation to make releases from Yakima Project reservoirs to assure adequate instream flows for anadromous fish spawning and rearing further reduces the reliability of irrigation water supplies.

Current Activities

The Enhancement Project legislation established the Yakima River Basin Water Conservation Program which is central to balancing the competing demands on the basin's water supply. This voluntary program will reduce demands on the available water supply by promoting conservation measures to improve:

- The efficiency of water delivery and use.
- Instream flows for fish and wildlife.
- The reliability of the irrigation water supply.

The actual measures that will be adopted depend on the preparation of water conservation plans detailing what can be done. Cost effectiveness will be considered and separate NEPA compliance will be completed when recommending water conservation actions for implementation. The water conservation measures will occur in steps over a period of years providing the opportunity to monitor, evaluate, and adjust subsequent measures.

The legislation also directs the Secretary of the Interior to establish a conservation advisory group, in consultation with the State of Washington, the Yakama Indian Nation, the Yakima River basin irrigators, and other interested parties. A charter for the group has been drafted and nominees are being sought.

The legislation was developed by a consortium of local, tribal, State, and Federal entities involved with water resource activities in the basin and is the result of a consensus building effort to structure an acceptable, comprehensive approach to the basin's water problems. An extensive scoping effort will be conducted by mail along with public scoping sessions which will be scheduled at a later date.

Alternative Measures

The PEIS will serve as an umbrella document to ensure that the interaction and cumulative effects of all activities proposed for implementation under Title XII of the Act of October 31, 1994 (Pub. L. 103-434), which authorized the Enhancement Project, are addressed. The provisions and measures for the legislation will set the limits on activities to be evaluated in the PEIS.

Two major alternatives are being considered: action, i.e., implementing the legislation, and no action. The action alternative will be an incremental analysis showing impacts at different levels of implementation of project components. Separate NEPA analyses addressing various alternatives will be conducted for site specific actions not covered in sufficient detail in the PEIS.

Potential Federal Action

Reclamation is seeking funding to implement Public Law 103-434. The draft PEIS is expected to be completed in June of 1996.

Anyone interested in more information concerning the study, or who has information concerning the study or suggestions as to significant environmental issues, should contact Mr. Sweet as provided above.
