Summary of Comments and Objections
Mallinckrodt's Comments

Mallinckrodt, a manufacturer of bulk cocaine, intends to show that registration of Roxane as an importer of cocaine would be contrary to 21 U.S.C. § 952(a) because there is no emergency in which domestic supplies of cocaine are inadequate and because competition among domestic manufacturers of cocaine either is adequate or could be rendered adequate by registration of additional domestic manufacturers. Mallinckrodt argues that supply and competition are adequate. In support of its argument that supply is adequate, Mallinckrodt asserts that it is able to supply the entire licit United States cocaine market and that the quality, reliability, and quantity of foreign sources of raw materials varies considerably. In support of its argument that competition is sufficient, Mallinckrodt asserts that the domestic market for cocaine is very small and is flat or declining, and that even if competition were inadequate, it could be rendered adequate by the registration of additional domestic manufacturers. Mallinckrodt also argues that because it could meet the market needs for cocaine, allowing the importation of cocaine would needlessly increase the risk of diversion, foster international commerce in cocaine, and result in an increased demand on DEA's regulatory resources.

Stepan's Comments

Stepan, an importer of coca leaf and manufacturer of cocaine, states that it is concerned that the importation of finished cocaine raises a question whether adequate controls will exist to prevent its diversion. Stepan further asserts that importation would raise issues of quality and sponsorship that do not exist in the current arrangement, whereby Stepan manufacturers cocaine in accordance with long-standing, approved, and controlled processes. Finally, Stepan asserts that there is no shortage of domestic manufacturing capability or facilities.
