

currently available to assure adequate worker protection upon this transfer of regulatory responsibility from DOE.

Accordingly, the Memorandum of Understanding between the U.S. Department of Energy and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration is amended by adding an addendum specifying federal OSHA worker safety and health coverage over the phase of operations at the Savannah River Site which DOE has deregulated. This transfer of regulatory responsibility is effective upon signature by the agencies.

Addendum A: Savannah River Site D (Power Generation and Transmission)

Power and steam generation facilities at D-Area, steam transmission lines and power transmission lines throughout the general areas of the Savannah River Site as specifically described in the lease agreement and referenced maps, which have been leased to South Carolina Electric and Gas Company, are not subject to safety orders or other occupational safety or health requirements administered by DOE; Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) requirements are fully applicable to these facilities and to working conditions of employees engaged in operating or maintaining them. Because the South Carolina Department of Labor has determined that SCE&G operations on the Savannah River Site will not be covered under the South Carolina State OSHA Plan, federal OSHA standards and enforcement will apply.

Dated: March 28, 1996.

Joseph A. Dear,
Assistant Secretary of Labor for Occupational Safety and Health.

Dated: March 26, 1996.

Tara O'Toole,
Assistant Secretary of Energy for Environment, Safety and Health.
