

Park Service is the responsible federal agency.

The document proposes a plan and rationale for addressing national historic site issues and concerns, resource preservation and visitor service needs.

Since 1965, Saint-Gaudens NHS has remained virtually unchanged in appearance. In 1990 the National Park Service began a long-range planning effort to determine the future needs of the site. That effort looked at site interpretation, staffing, collections preservation, and administrative, maintenance, and visitor facilities needs. Because this is a long-range plan, funding for implementation of the proposed actions will occur over an extended period of time, perhaps as much as 20 years.

The plan outlines a two-phased program that addresses each of the areas of concern while minimizing impacts on historic structures and landscape. The first phase focuses on rehabilitating and modestly expanding existing structures to address site needs, minimizing new construction and its associated impacts on the historic landscape. The second phase, a much longer range vision, provides for growth onto two adjacent properties, providing additional interpretive potential and upgraded administrative and security facilities in existing structures. It also provides the visitor with a much greater understanding of Saint-Gaudens, the milieu in which he lived, and the sculpture process, and also provides greater coverage of the Cornish Art Colony.

The General Management Plan/Final Environmental Impact Statement incorporates public and agency comments received during the public review period of the draft document which occurred from May 12 to July 10, 1995. Copies of the General Management Plan/Final Environmental Impact Statement are available for review by contacting the Superintendent, Saint-Gaudens National Historic Site. Any comments on this plan or the environmental impact statement must be received by the Superintendent before July 14, 1996.
