SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

The Bureau of Labor Statistics' Behavioral Science Research Laboratory (BSRL) conducts cognitive psychological research in design and execution of the data collection process in order to improve the quality of data collected by the Bureau. BSRL conducts research aimed at improving data collection quality by assessing questionnaire and form management and administration, as well as issues which relate to interviewer training and interaction with respondents in the interview process. BSRL staff work closely with the economists and/or program specialists responsible for defining the concepts to be measured by the Bureau's collection programs. Questionnaire and forms are used in the Bureau's surveys.

Questionnaires specify the preferred wording of the questions to be asked, whereas forms specify the data items to be collected. Each possesses distinctive problems, which in many cases can be related to respondent characteristics, survey content, or format of administration. Such problems impede the effectiveness of particular surveys and the mission of the Bureau in general.

II. Current Actions

The purpose of this request for clearance for cognitive and psychological research and development activities by the BSRL is to enhance the quality of the Bureau's data collection procedures and overall data management. The basic goal of the BSRL is to improve through interdisciplinary research the quality of the data collected and published by the BLS. BLS is committed to producing the most accurate and complete data within the highest quality assurance guidelines. With this in mind, the BSRL was created to aid in the effort of not only maintaining, duty also improving the quality of the data collection process.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

The National Commission on Employment and Unemployment Statistics, better known as the Levitan Commission, recommended a variety of changes to the Current Population Survey (CPS) in its 1979 report. For the most part, these recommendations have been incorporated into the CPS, most notably in the complete revision to the survey implemented in January 1994.

In one area, a recommendation of the Levitan Commission has not been implemented. "Gross flows" data show the number of people making transitions from one labor force state (employed, unemployed, not in the labor force) to another from month to month. The Commission recommended that improvements be made to increase the usefulness of the CPS as a longitudinal data set, including improvements to the gross flows data so they can be published on a monthly basis. Because only a subset of CPS data was matchable from month to month, the month-to-month changes in the stocks of people in each labor force state did not match the sum of the flows into and out of each state. While the new survey's improved ability to match respondents between months reduced problems in the gross flows data, there are still problems which prevent monthly publication. In particular, respondents who move out of CPS housing units are not followed in CPS at present and are excluded from the gross flows estimates.
