

• Use of performance measures, e.g., quality of transplant outcomes and annual number of transplants performed, in determining the eligibility of transplant centers to receive donor livers.

2. Donation of Organs for Transplantation

The medical need for livers and other human organs for transplantation continues to exceed the number of donor organs by a considerable margin. No organ allocation policies, no matter how well crafted or effectively implemented, can be expected to compensate for serious short-falls in the supply of organs relative to the demand.

a. What are the major impediments to organ donation?

b. How can the Department, organ procurement organizations, hospitals, and other entities improve current efforts to promote organ donation?

c. Where and to what extent are further initiatives necessary to ensure that members of racial and ethnic minority groups are appropriately apprised regarding such matters as the role of organ transplantation within the health-care system, the unique health benefits that can ensue from successful transplantation, the limitations associated with transplant procedures, and the challenges involved in recruiting organ donors?

FEDERAL MARITIME COMMISSION

46 CFR Part 586

[Docket No. 96-20]

Port Restrictions and Requirements in the United States/Japan Trade

AGENCY: Federal Maritime Commission.

ACTION: Notice of proposed rulemaking.

SUMMARY: The Federal Maritime Commission, in response to apparent unfavorable conditions in the foreign oceanborne trade between the United States and Japan, proposes the imposition of fees on liner vessels operated by Japanese carriers calling at United States ports. The effect of the rule will be to adjust or meet unfavorable conditions caused by Japanese port restrictions and requirements by imposing countervailing burdens on Japanese carriers.

DATES: Comments due on or before January 13, 1997.

ADDRESSES: Send comments (original and 15 copies) to: Joseph C. Polking, Secretary, Federal Maritime Commission, 800 North Capitol Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20573, (202) 523-5725.
