The CCHC Zinc Fingers of the Retroviral Nucleocapsid Protein Comprises a New Target Useful in Identification and Evaluation of Anti-HIV Therapeutics

L Henderson, L Arthur, W Rice, and A Rein (NCI)
Serial No. 08/379,420 filed January 27, 1995

HIV-1 contains domains known as "CCHC zinc fingers" in the retroviral nucleocapsid (NC) protein. Nucleocapsid CCHC zinc fingers are highly conserved throughout nearly all retroviruses, and are sequences of 14 amino acids with four invariant residues, Cys(X)₂Cys(X)₄His(X)₄Cys, that chelate zinc and perform essential functions in viral infectivity. HIV-1 NC has two CCHC zinc fingers, both of which are necessary for infectivity. Many compounds that disrupt the CCHC zinc fingers also inactivate HIV-1 by preventing the initiation of reverse transcription and by blocking production of infectious virus from previously infected cells by disruption of Gag processing. Compounds with this activity may be useful for developing new types of antiretroviral drugs. The invention concerns antiretroviral compounds that disrupt the CCHC zinc fingers and assays for identifying such compounds. The invariant nature of retroviral zinc fingers extends the usefulness of these compounds to other retroviruses. Thus these assays are also useful for screening compounds effective against adult T cell leukemia, tropical spastic paraparesis caused by HTLV-1 and HTLV-II, feline leukemia virus, feline immunodeficiency virus, equine infectious virus, and lentivirus infections in other animals. This invention is available for licensing on an exclusive or non-exclusive basis.
