

The applicants plan to backpack into Barwick Valley by foot from the Victoria Valley and will camp there for a 2–3 day period.

Location: McMurdo Station, Ross Island, Antarctica.

Dates: October 20, 1976–February 15, 1998.

2. Applicant: Frederick W. Taylor, Sr., Institute for Geophysics, The University of Texas at Austin, 4412 Spicewood Springs Road, #600, Austin, TX 78759–8500. Permit Application: 98–015

Activity for Which Permit is Requested

Enter Specially Protected Area

The applicant requests to enter the Byers Peninsula, Specially Protected Area (SPA #3), in order to install a Global Positioning System (GPS) to obtain data by passive electronic recording. The Global Positioning System (GPS) will be used to measure horizontal tectonic motion of the Snow Island-Livingston Island—King George Island block relative to the Antarctic Peninsula and relative to sites in South America. The floor of the Bransfield Strait is spreading causing an increase in the distance between this block and the Antarctic Peninsula at an unknown rate. There are other active tectonic boundaries between the Shetland Islands and South America across which rates of motion are also not known. The rates of ongoing motion of the Snow Island to the King George block and the role it plays in the interactions of small tectonic plates lying between South America and Antarctica are essential to understanding regional tectonic relationships.

The applicant plans to camp at the site for a 3–4 day period over the next several years. All items will be removed from the site, except for a GPS marker, the six anchor bolts and the witness post. By returning to each site two or more times over the next several years, the applicant can remeasure distances between sites, determine how much the distances have changed, and calculate rates and directions of motion for small and large tectonic plates in the region.

Location: Byers Peninsula, Livingston Island, Antarctic Peninsula.

Dates: December 1, 1997–December 31, 2000.

Permit Officer, Office of Polar Programs.
