

Rationale for Finding

The initial finding relies on two determinations: that there is a significant adverse impact on the depleted stocks; and that the significant impact is due to the practices of the purse seine fishery. For the reasons briefly outlined below, NMFS has determined that there is insufficient evidence to conclude that intentional deployment on or encirclement of dolphins with purse seine nets is having a significant adverse impact on any depleted dolphin stock in the ETP. Because of this initial finding, the "dolphin safe" labeling standard specified in paragraph (h)(1) of the DPCIA will change on the effective date of the final regulations to implement the IDCPA.

While the rate of recovery of the dolphin stocks may be lower than expected, there is insufficient information to conclude that there has been a significant adverse impact on the depleted stocks. Additionally, observed dolphin mortality is extremely low. The numbers of dolphins currently killed by the purse seine fishery is in the low thousands, as opposed to the hundreds of thousands in the early 1970s. Furthermore, the total annual mortality of all dolphins in the ETP due to the purse seine fishery is capped at 5,000 by a binding international agreement. The dramatic reduction in dolphin mortality over the past 12 years can be attributed to continued cooperation in the International Dolphin Conservation Program through the auspices of the IATTC. The current low level of observed dolphin mortalities in the ETP tuna purse seine fishery creates an expectation that the fishery will not prevent the depleted populations from recovering.

Finally, there is no solid evidence in any of the scientific studies to date that links the apparent failure of dolphin stocks to recover at the rate expected based on historical data to the current tuna purse seine fishery practices. The Report to Congress does not provide evidence that the ETP tuna purse seine fishery is the cause of the apparent failure of the northeastern offshore spotted dolphin and eastern spinner dolphin stocks to recover as expected; nor does it dismiss the fishery as a possible cause. Due to the large disparity in population abundance estimates of coastal spotted dolphins in the late 1980s versus 1998, it is difficult to evaluate whether the coastal spotted dolphin population in the ETP has been affected by the ETP tuna purse seine fishery. As mandated under the IDCPA, NMFS will continue to conduct IDCPA research on population abundance and stress of dolphins affected by the ETP tuna purse seine fishery. The final finding will be made between July 1, 2001, and December 31, 2002.
