

administered the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Small Cities program in the State of New York since the inception of the State CDBG program. Forty-eight states administer their own State CDBG program. At the request of Governor George E. Pataki, New York, the Department has withdrawn the Notice of Funding Availability for Fiscal Year 2000 funding. The Department will continue to retain control of past grants and multi-year grants made prior to Fiscal Year 2000.

In response to requests from local officials throughout the State and concerns that the State may not immediately possess the expertise to manage the program, the Department had originally proposed a transition process designed to permit a smooth and orderly transfer of the program from HUD administration to State control. The proposed process would have allowed the HUD-administered competition to continue as outlined in the NOFA of November 8, 1999, while the State completed all necessary steps to administer the program effectively. HUD had recommended a transition process in order to avoid any disruption in funding to the grantees. New York officials, however, indicated they would prefer HUD to transfer the program without a transition process.

Therefore, through this Notice, HUD withdraws the NOFA inviting applications for the HUD-administered Small Cities program published on November 8, 1999.

Dated: March 6, 2000.

Joseph D'Agosta,

General Deputy Assistant Secretary for Community Planning and Development.
