

successful bidder should have been disqualified for lack of training. Similarly the panel ruled that the successful bidder lacked food preparation experience and, therefore, did not meet the experience requirements for managing a full food service operation.

One panel member dissented.

In ruling on the question of remedy, a majority of the panel determined that Mr. Waldie did not prove under the facts of the case that he was entitled to damages. The panel ruled that had the successful bidder been disqualified, there was another individual with a higher score than Mr. Waldie who would have been chosen as the successful bidder for the Fort McClellan food service operation. The panel noted both the Eleventh Amendment and the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals decision in Georgia Department of Human Resources v. Nash 915 F.2d 1482 (11th Cir. 1990) barring the award of damages.

One panel member dissented.
