

included as materials designated "hazardous" by the Secretary, this discrepancy subjects interstate carriers to undue burdens and creates myriad obstacles to uniform regulation of transportation of those materials in interstate commerce. Here, the overly broad State designation of "hazardous" materials potentially subjects common carriers to a multitude of different regulations because each State could have different standards requiring additional packaging requirements, labeling, storage, and documentation for a host of substances based upon the designation of "hazardous" material adopted by each individual State.

Subjecting the railroad and other interstate carriers to different designations in each State disrupts the congressional purpose of promoting uniform regulation of the safe transportation of hazardous materials under HMTA. RSPA should therefore issue a determination preempting the enforcement of M.G.L.A. c. 21K, section 1, and c. section 21E, section 2, as they apply to transportation in interstate commerce, because the designations contained in these statutes are not authorized by Federal law, and create multiple obstacles to the uniform enforcement of HMTA and unduly burdens interstate transportation of hazardous materials.

49 CFR 107.203(b)(5): Statement of How the State Regulations Affect the Applicant

The designation of "hazardous" contained State laws such as Mass. Gen. Laws Ann. c. 21K, section 1 and c. 21E, section 2, subjects the applicant to overly broad and disjointed regulation of transportation in interstate commerce by potentially requiring the applicant to adhere to markedly different regulations in each State in which it operates. Accordingly, subjecting the applicant to the different "hazardous materials" regulations and requirements of each State in which it operates would unduly burden interstate transport of materials by railroad in interstate commerce.
