

either directly through the use of margin of exposure (MOE) analysis or through using uncertainty (safety) factors in calculating a dose level that poses no appreciable risk to humans. Due to the low expected toxicity of polybutylene, a safety factor analysis is not required for assessing the risk. For the same reasons the additional safety factor is unnecessary.

F. International Tolerances

Miller Chemical and Fertilizer Corporation is not aware of any country requiring a tolerance for polybutylene having a number average molecular weight of 1,330. Nor have there been any CODEX maximum residue levels (MRLs) established for any food crops at this time.

II. Background

Under FIFRA section 18, EPA can authorize the use of a pesticide when emergency conditions exist. Authorizations (commonly called emergency exemptions) are granted to State and Federal agencies and are of four types:

1. A "specific exemption" authorizes use of a pesticide against specific pests on a limited acreage in a particular State. Most emergency exemptions are specific exemptions.

2. "Quarantine" and "public health" exemptions are a particular form of specific exemption issued for quarantine or public health purposes. These are rarely requested.

3. A "crisis exemption" is initiated by a State or Federal agency (and is confirmed by EPA) when there is insufficient time to request and obtain EPA permission for use of a pesticide in an emergency.

EPA may deny an emergency exemption: If the State or Federal agency cannot demonstrate that an emergency exists, if the use poses unacceptable risks to the environment, or if EPA cannot reach a conclusion that the proposed pesticide use is likely to result in "a reasonable certainty of no harm" to human health, including exposure of residues of the pesticide to infants and children.

If the emergency use of the pesticide on a food or feed commodity would result in pesticide chemical residues, EPA establishes a time-limited tolerance meeting the "reasonable certainty of no harm standard" of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FFDCA).

In this document: EPA identifies the State or Federal agency granted the exemption or denial, the type of exemption, the pesticide authorized and the pests, the crop or use for which authorized, number of acres (if applicable), and the duration of the exemption. EPA also gives the Federal Register citation for the time-limited tolerance, if any.

Denial. On 9/30/00 EPA denied the use of fenbuconazole on citrus (except grapefruit) to control greasy spot disease. This request was denied because the information submitted by the Applicant did not support the claims of an urgent and non-routine (emergency) condition. Nor did the available information show that significant economic losses would occur. In contrast to grapefruit, the other citrus crops are not as susceptible to greasy spot disease, their prices are stable, and only 4-10% of the total production is marketed as fresh produce. Additionally, the information given does not demonstrate that losses of the magnitude estimated for grapefruit are likely to occur in the other citrus crops. Contact: (Andrea Conrath)

Denial. On 3/30/00 EPA denied the use of fenoxypyr-p-ethyl on rice to control Barnyardgrass and other annual weeds. This request was denied based upon the Agency's inability, at this time, to reach a "reasonable certainty of no harm" finding regarding health effects which may result if this use were to occur, an inability to assess ecological effects of the proposed use, and finally that the Agency did not conclude that this emergency situation required use of multiple products to attain adequate control of the pest situation. EPA did allow emergency use of an alternative chemical under provisions of section 18. Contact: (David Deegan).

This request was denied based upon the Agency's inability, at this time, to reach a "reasonable certainty of no harm" finding regarding health effects which may result if this use were to occur, an inability to assess ecological effects of the proposed use, and finally that the Agency did not conclude that this emergency situation required use of multiple products to attain adequate control of the pest situation. EPA did allow emergency use of an alternative chemical under provisions of section 18. Contact: (David Deegan).

On 4/20/00 EPA denied the use of tebufenozide on rice to control fall armyworms. This request was denied because the situation is routine, not urgent, and growers are not likely to suffer from significant economic losses. The State provided no data that demonstrate that currently registered alternatives do not effectively control fall armyworms on rice. Contact: (Barbara Madden).

On 5/12/00 EPA denied the use of anthraquinone on rice to control red-winged blackbirds. This request was denied because the current data base is insufficient to support any food uses of this chemical and the situation does not meet Agency criteria for an emergency exemption. Contact: (Libby Pemberton).

On 9/20/00 EPA denied the use of chlorfenapyr on cotton to control beet armyworm. This request was denied based upon the Agency's inability, at this time, to make the required finding that the use would not cause unreasonable adverse effects on the environment. Additionally, since EPA cannot register this use and the Registrant has withdrawn its application for registration of chlorfenapyr on cotton, adequate progress toward registration is not being made. Contact: (Andrea Conrath).

Crisis. On 11/23/99, for the use of metaldehyde on cargo holds in military vessels to control snails. The state exercised its crisis authority on behalf of the Department of Defense, which discovered snails that had entered its vessels and had infested machinery in the cargo holds. The crisis situation was declared in order to avoid contamination of foreign ports with what would be non-indigenous organisms. While the state first declared crisis on 11/23/99, the use of metaldehyde did not commence until 12/20/99, due to the need of the armed forces to jointly approve the action and to contract with personnel to accomplish the pesticide application(s). Therefore, on 12/17/99, North Carolina amended its crisis declaration to allow the pesticide use to occur between the dates of 12/20/99 and 1/3/00. This program ended on 1/3/00.
