Scope of WorkBackground and Purpose*

The National Institute of Corrections (NIC) is Federal agency operating with the U.S. Department of Justice. Its mission is to deliver information, training and technical assistance to Federal, state and local correctional agencies that will allow them to improve their programs, services and operations.

In recent years the number of juvenile justice agencies planning and constructing secure facilities to house juvenile has begun to increase. Like any facility designed to detain and/or incarcerate offenders, these buildings are complex structures requiring complex processes and procedures to operate. Once designed and built practitioners are left with the task of ensuring the new facility functions as designed and in a manner that meets its mandates and mission. The transition to or activation of a new facility requires a great deal of planning. Hundreds of policy and administrative decisions involving programs, services and operations are required. These decisions drive thousands of detailed procedures, schedules, inspections, activities, moving and training plans, and the resultant documentation. This training will help prepare practitioners for this major undertaking by presenting options for offender programming supported by experience and research, plus various approaches to the organization of the transition and activation effort.

Design and Implementation

The award recipient will develop a training program for juvenile justice agencies who are planning and constructing new juvenile facilities. This curriculum will be based on a rough agenda previously developed by a work group consisting of juvenile practitioners who have designed and activated facilities, plus resource providers who have worked with, and delivered training specifically addressing the process of transition and activation. The curriculum will include the final agenda, lesson plans and all related training materials. In addition, the recipient will make recommendations regarding potential trainers and program revisions following a pilot presentation.
