

Intended Use: The instrument is intended to be used in the following experiments:

(1) Using immunocytochemical methods at the ultrastructural level, the normal cellular distribution of known trafficking molecules, and their altered localization in Hermansky-Pudlak Syndrome cell lines will be assessed.

(2) To determine whether transgenic techniques designed to interrupt the cytoskeleton were successful in disrupting the structure of the intermediate filament component of the cytoskeleton.

(3) Circadian transplant studies to confirm that graft efferents actually establish synaptic contacts with host brain regions among animals exhibiting different patterns of behavioral recovery.

(4) Studies on transgenic mouse lines in which the endogenous surfactant protein B (SP-B) gene has been inactivated and replaced with a human transgene encoding a deleted/mutated SP-B proprotein.
