

ahead of held limit orders at prices equal or superior to the limit orders applies to limit orders that are priced more than $0.01 away from the current inside spread. Thus, the basic prohibition on trading ahead of a customer limit order at a price equal or superior to the limit order without filling the limit order applies to all limit orders in OTCBB securities covered by Rule 6541. The amount of required price improvement for limit orders priced at or inside the current inside spread remained the lesser of $0.01 or one-half of the current inside spread. The pilots are currently scheduled to expire on December 15, 2002.⁹

Nasdaq has concluded that it is in investors' best interest to establish limit order protection requirements on a permanent basis for all securities quoted on the OTCBB. Nasdaq believes that limit order protection provides substantial protection to small investors by ensuring that members consider those orders when executing their own orders. In addition, Nasdaq believes that limit order protection prevents the isolation of customer limit orders that could otherwise occur when a member trades for its own account and a customer order fails to receive an execution. Nasdaq believes that the rule bolsters investors' confidence in the fairness of the market as a whole.

Nasdaq's Department of Economic Research ("ER") closely analyzed the impact of the Manning pilot on relevant aspects of the operation of the OTCBB. Nasdaq sought to ensure that the potential negative effects on the trading of OTCBB securities do not offset the positive effects of limit order protection. ER studied the following areas: impact on trading, market maker quoting activity, and spread behavior. To determine the impact of the pilot on trading activity, the study analyzed total volume, number of trades, and number of riskless principal trades (as a proxy for customer limit orders executed). ER studied changes to the number of market makers, quote updates, and bid/ask midpoint to determine that the pilot had no statistically significant impact on market maker quoting behavior. Finally, ER looked at a variety of spread statistics (quoted, effective, relative, relative effective). Overall, ER found no material negative implications on the measurable market quality of the OTCBB.

⁹ On January 14, 2002, and again on July 16, 2002, Nasdaq filed to extend the pilot programs. See Securities Exchange Act Release No. 45276 (January 14, 2002), 67 FR 2936 (January 22, 2002) (SR-NASD-2002-06); Securities Exchange Act Release 46248 (July 24, 2002), 67 FR 49727 (July 31, 2002) (SR-NASD-2002-95).

Based upon this study and its experience with the operation of the Manning rule in securities listed on Nasdaq, Nasdaq has concluded that limit order protection is a necessary and appropriate rule in the OTCBB marketplace. Nasdaq believes that it is a highly visible investor protection advancement that is consistent with the maintenance of a viable, liquid market. Nasdaq believes that the pilot program has effectively demonstrated that limit order protection is not detrimental to trading of less-liquid, low priced securities on the OTCBB. Accordingly, Nasdaq is extending limit order protection to all securities on the OTCBB.
