Proposed Project

Formative Evaluation of Adults' and Children's Views Related to Promotion of Healthy Food Choices—New—National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion (NCCDPHP), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

Background and Brief Description: In FY 2004, Congress directed the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to conduct formative research on the attitudes of children and parents' regarding nutrition behavior. The FY 04 Appropriation Language instructs CDC to research parents' and children's viewpoints on "the characteristics of effective marketing of foods to children to promote healthy food choices." Upon completion, a report detailing CDC's findings will be submitted to the appropriate Congressional Committees.

In response, CDC has contracted with the Academy for Educational Development (AED) to conduct focus groups to identify key audience concepts around food choices and to develop and test concepts and messages aimed at increasing healthy food choices among children and youth. For the research to be useful to Congress and to the nation's public health agenda, a thorough understanding of a child's attitude toward healthy food choices at varied developmental stages, and the barriers and motivations for adopting and sustaining those choices is essential. Also important is a thorough understanding of those who can influence the health behaviors of children and youth. This research will facilitate the development of messages, strategies, and tactics that resonate with children, youth, parents, and other influencers.

The focus groups will be conducted in three phases: Phase One will address "tweens" (ages 9–13) and parents of tweens; Phase 2 will focus on children 6–8 years old and their parents, and Phase 3 will conduct groups with parents of children under 6 years old. The research will begin with tweens. Current market literature and opinion-leaders both strongly suggest that tweens are highly influential in their parents' nutrition decisions, as well as those made by their younger siblings.

For each phase, 36 focus groups will be conducted; thus, three phases will amount to 108 total focus groups. In Phases 1 and 2, focus groups will involve both young people and their parents or key caregivers. In this way, CDC can gain insight into both parents' and children's views, as well as the dynamics of family shared decision-making around food choices and attitudes toward healthy eating patterns. For Phase 3, 36 focus groups about the toddler/young child set (ages 1–5) will be held with their parents and other important influencers such as educators, primary caregivers, and health care providers.

All focus group recruiting will incorporate appropriate representation of diverse ethnic groups, and the groups will be held in several cities to ensure broad geographic representation.

The intent of this audience research is to solicit input and feedback from potential audiences. The information gathered will be used to develop, refine, and modify messages and strategies to increase healthy food choices by children and parents. There is no cost to participants other than their time.
