The Risk Management Plan Review Access List system of records does not duplicate any existing system of records. The system contains the names, title, position, telephone number, fax number, e-mail address, user ID and password of local, state and federal government officials, qualified researchers and others who are "covered persons" under the Chemical Safety, Site Security and Fuels Regulatory Relief Act (CSISSFRRRA) of 1999, and who have requested Risk Management Plan information under CSISSFRRRA. CSISSFRRRA, an amendment to the Clean Air Act, imposes access restrictions to some portions of risk management plans submitted under the Clean Air Act. Access to the system is restricted to authorized users and is maintained in a secure, password-protected computer system, in secure areas and buildings with physical access controls and environmental controls. The system is maintained by the Office of Emergency Management in the Office of Solid Waste and Emergency Response.

Guidance for Conducting Prospective Ground-Water Studies

AGENCY: Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

ACTION: Notice.

SUMMARY: The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is issuing for public comment guidance for conducting prospective ground-water (PGW) studies. This study, which is required by EPA on a case-by-case basis, is conducted in a controlled setting and provides EPA with data for evaluating the impact of legal pesticide use on ground water quality. The PGW guidance document describes how to conduct a PGW monitoring study, milestones for consulting with EPA, and how to report results to EPA. Data generated from these field studies have proven valuable to EPA scientists and risk managers as they are specifically designed to relate pesticide use indicated on the label to measurements of the pesticide and its degradates in ground water used as a source of drinking water.

II. Background

A. What Action is the Agency Taking?

The PGW study, which is required on a case-by-case basis (40 CFR 158.1300(d) OPPTS Harmonized Guideline 835.7100), is conducted in a controlled setting and provides the Agency with data for evaluating the impact of legal pesticide use on ground water quality. After assessing the overall environmental fate of a pesticide, the Agency may require the pesticide manufacturer (registrant) to conduct a PGW study, with input from EPA on key aspects of the study design. The Agency's assessment is based on a review of laboratory data on mobility and persistence of the compound, estimates of potential exposure, available monitoring and modeling information, and a consideration of the potential for risk from drinking water exposure. Data generated from these field studies have proven valuable to EPA scientists and risk managers as they are specifically designed to relate pesticide use indicated on the label to measurements of the pesticide and its degradates in ground water used as a source of drinking water. The document provides guidance on how to conduct a PGW monitoring study, describes milestones for consulting with EPA, and describes how results should be reported to EPA.

EPA uses the results of PGW monitoring studies to help answer questions such as:

1. Will the pesticide leach in portions of the pesticide use area that are similar to the study area?
2. How do pesticide residues change over time?
3. What measures might be effective in mitigating the pesticide leaching?

Monitoring data generated in these studies provide a time-series of concentrations that can be used in exposure and risk assessments as a reasonable surrogate for pesticide concentrations in drinking water drawn from shallow private wells in agricultural areas. PGW studies have been used to test alternative mitigation strategies for pesticides that have adversely affected ground water quality to determine, for example, if a reduction in application rate or specific irrigation technology will reduce or eliminate the impact. Data from these studies have also been used to develop the EPA regression screening model SCI-GROW, (<http://www.epa.gov/oppefed1/models/water/models4.htm#scigrow>), which is used to estimate screening-level pesticide concentrations in ground water used as a source of drinking water. Currently, the results of these studies are being used to evaluate models of subsurface pesticide transport, and as a basis for model scenarios for estimating pesticide concentrations in shallow ground water.

The original draft guidance for PGW monitoring studies was developed primarily in the early 1990s and has been subjected to substantial public review and comment, including a public workshop sponsored by EPA in 1995 and a Scientific Advisory Panel (SAP) review in 1998. The comments received during the workshop and SAP meeting provided valuable suggestions from both a technical and practical perspective and were used to revise this guidance document and to address other issues identified in the Agency's review of studies conducted for the registration of over 50 pesticides. EPA incorporated comments solicited from industry, academia, and consultants into the revised guidance document. The recommendations in the guidance document also represent the Agency's substantial experience, over the last decade, in developing and articulating effective procedures for collecting high quality data on pesticide movement into ground water.

B. What is the Agency's Authority for Taking this Action?

The Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA), section 3.
