

kit listing, which is available via the internet to prospective buyers. These kit evaluations inform prospective applicants that they could be eligible for an experimental amateur-built airworthiness certificate if they completed their aircraft in compliance with the FAA-evaluated assembly and instruction manuals and fabricated and constructed the aircraft in compliance with 14 CFR part 21, § 21.191(g).

The method of determining what constitutes the major portion of construction has undergone several changes since the rule was first codified. When FAA staff developed the commonly used form 8000-38, "Fabrication and Assembly Operation Checklist", to calculate major portion, the intent was that a single check mark in a column on the form would identify who did the task. Some manufacturers and FAA representatives calculate major portion by using a "task-based" accounting mechanism that incorporates a "dual-check" system whereby an amateur-builder may be given shared credit even if that person does not complete 50% of the task. When this is used in practice, the kit manufacturer and amateur-builder share credit on the Form 8000-38. It was not envisioned that credit for a task would be offered to an amateur-builder simply assisting in the fabrication and assembly, as is happening today in some cases.

The FAA will resume amateur-built kit evaluations after issuing final policy changes. Prior to publishing the final policy, FAA will solicit comments on draft policy, internal orders and advisory circulars through a notice in the Federal Register.
