SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background: The National Institute of Corrections (NIC) has identified six key elements in the effective management of inmate behavior in jails:

Assessing the risks and needs of each inmate at various points during his/her detention;

Assigning inmates to appropriate housing;

Meeting inmates' basic needs;

Defining and conveying expectations for inmate behavior;

Supervising inmates;

Keeping inmates productively occupied.

If a jail fully and properly implements all six elements, it should experience a significant reduction in the negative inmate behavior often experienced in jails, such as vandalism, violence, rule violations, and disrespectful behavior toward staff and other inmates.

The NIC Jails Division offers training and technical assistance on inmate behavior management, but wishes to develop additional tools that will help jails implement the individual elements. This project focuses on keeping inmates productively occupied through the development of a document that provides specific guidance on the development of implementation of inmate activities and programs in jails.

Objectives: The National Institute of Corrections wishes to produce a document that provides jail administrators and staff guidance on how to develop and implement inmate programs, as part of the overall inmate behavior management strategy.

Statement of Work: General Information.

Document Length: The number of pages in the body is to be determined. The document will include appendices and a bibliography.

Document Audience: Jail administrators, program management staff, and line correctional staff. This guide is intended for the use by jails of all sizes.

Use of Document: The document will be a practical guide for the development and implementation of programs in a jail setting.

Document Distribution: NIC expects to distribute the document widely. It will be made available on the NIC Web site and through the NIC Information Center, upon request and free of charge.

Document Content: The document will be a clear and practical guide for jail practitioners on developing, implementing, and evaluating inmate activities and programs in jails. It must account for diversity among jails, in terms of size and resources available.

The document will cover the following, at a minimum:

The benefits of implementing inmate activities and programs in jails related to reducing idle time and negative behavior. The document must cite the available evidence of the relationship between inmate activities and programs and the reduction of negative inmate behavior. This will involve identifying research on this topic and contact with a variety of jails to obtain information on their experience. In some cases, studies may be available. In other cases, only anecdotal evidence may be given. The author will identify, review, and cite both types of evidence.

The role of jail administration and management staff in providing leadership and support for reducing negative inmate behavior through implementation of activities and programs. The author will stress the importance of the jail administrator's demonstrated commitment to this and provide concrete examples of how the administrator can actively demonstrate commitment.

An overview of the range and variety of inmate activities and programs in terms of level of complexity, level of funding required, and types of staff (jail staff, volunteers, non-jail personnel) necessary. This discussion should stress that some level of programs can be implemented in any jail, regardless of size or resource levels, and the document should clearly illustrate this through examples.

Barriers to planning and implementing activities and programs, such as those related to resources, space, equipment, staff support, administrative commitment, and others. The document will also provide suggestions for overcoming barriers, with examples from jails that have experienced this.

Planning for activities and programs, including setting goals, designing activities and programs to achieve goals, and identifying resources needed for program implementation. The document will describe the use of data collection and analysis in determining the need for a given activity or program and setting goals.

Activity and program implementation, with related documentation needed.

Evaluation (assessing both the quality of implementation and success in achieving goals). The document will describe the data collection and analysis necessary for evaluation, and it will describe evaluation processes.

Revision of activities and programs based on evaluation.

Project Description: The awardee will produce a completed document that has received initial editing from a professional editor. NIC will be responsible for the final editing process and document design, but the awardee will remain available during this time to answer questions and to make revisions to the document.

Project Schedule: The list below shows the major activities required to complete the project. Submit a draft of entire document to NIC for review;
