SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

Adverse drug events (ADEs) have been defined by the Institute of Medicine as "an injury resulting from medical intervention related to a drug." This broad term encompasses harms that occur during medical care that are directly caused by the drug and can include, but are not limited to, medication errors, adverse drug reactions, allergic reactions, and overdoses. ADEs can occur in any health care setting, including both inpatient and outpatient settings and even more likely to occur during patient transitions from one health care setting to another. ADEs are the single largest contributor to hospital-related complications within hospitals and account for over 3.5 million physician office visits, approximately 1 million emergency department (ED) visits, and an estimated 125,000 hospital admissions every year.

For these reasons, the reduction of ADEs is a top priority for the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). Multiple Operating and Staff Divisions within HHS have been working to reduce the incidence and prevalence of adverse drug events for years. To further these efforts, in 2012, a Cross-Federal Steering Committee for Adverse Drug Event Prevention was established. The Steering Committee was charged with developing a comprehensive strategy to significantly reduce adverse drug events within the three drug classes which account for a significant proportion of all ADEs: anticoagulants, diabetes agents, and opioids. The draft Action Plan focuses on four main opportunities for federal engagement: surveillance, prevention, incentives and oversight, and research.

The draft Action Plan identifies current federal activity across both inpatient and outpatient settings, as well as transitions of care, that are related to these four opportunities, with a focus on the three drug classes associated with high levels of harm. It also highlights opportunities to advance these efforts through cross-federal partnerships and coordinated resources.

The release of the plan is only the beginning of a coordinated process that will result in stakeholders who are more engaged, aware, and knowledgeable of issues regarding the safe use of prescribed medications to prevent ADEs. Although the initial phase of the Action Plan reflects primarily the efforts and resources of federal agencies, the draft Action Plan was developed with the expectation and understanding that outlining ADE prevention goals and, more importantly, actually achieving

ADE reductions and improving patient safety can be considered neither complete nor feasible without further engagement of professional organizations representing medical, nursing, pharmacy, and other allied health professionals, academia, patient and consumer representatives, and other private sector stakeholders. For this reason, every opportunity to ensure that feedback of and engagement with these entities will be sought through the public release of the draft Action Plan. Through coordinated federal partnerships, as well as public and private sector collaborations and aligned approaches, we can improve the quality and safety of health care, reduce health care costs, and improve the health and quality of life of millions of people in the United States.

II. Information Request

The Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion, on behalf of the HHS Steering Committee for Adverse Drug Event Prevention, requests input on the revised draft National Action Plan for Adverse Drug Event Prevention.

III. Potential Responders

Responders may submit other forms of electronic materials to demonstrate or exhibit concepts of their written responses, however, we request that comments are identified by section, subsection, and page number so they may be addressed accordingly.
