SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: The administrative judge in Abernathy dismissed the individual right of action (IRA) appeal for lack of jurisdiction, finding that the appellant did not make a protected disclosure because, when he made the disclosure, he was neither an “employee” nor an “applicant,” but rather, a Federal contractor. Of particular relevance in Abernathy is the jurisdictional question of whether, under the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989 (WPA), as amended by the Whistleblower Protection Enhancement Act of 2012 (WPEA), both the disclosure and the subject matter of the disclosure must have occurred after the individual who is seeking corrective action in an IRA appeal became an applicant or employee.

The Board believes that some ambiguity may exist in the language of the statute regarding who is covered by the WPA and WPEA. A starting point for statutory interpretation is the words of the statute itself, which must be examined to determine Congress’s intent and purpose. In construing statutes, their provisions should not be read in isolation; rather, each statute’s section should be construed in connection with every other section so as to produce a harmonious whole. Yee v. Department of the Navy, 121 M.S.P.R. 686 (2014). Because the WPA and WPEA are remedial legislation, the Board will interpret their provisions liberally to embrace all cases fairly within their scope, so as to effectuate the purpose of the Acts. See Fishbein v. Department of Health & Human Services, 102 M.S.P.R. 4 (2006). We now turn to the two statutory provisions in question.

The Board has jurisdiction over whistleblower claims filed pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 1221(a), as amended by WPEA § 101(b)(1)(A). Section 1221(a) provides that:

an employee, former employee, or applicant for employment may, with respect to any personnel action taken, or proposed to be taken, against such employee, former employee, or applicant for employment, as a result of a prohibited personnel practice described in section 2302(b)(8) . . . seek corrective action from [the Board].

5 U.S.C. § 1221(a) (emphasis added).

Section 2302(b)(8) prohibits any employee who has authority to take, direct others to take, recommend, or approve any personnel action to:

(8) take or fail to take, or threaten to take or fail to take, a personnel action with respect to any employee or applicant for employment because of—

(A) any disclosure of information by an employee or applicant which the employee or applicant reasonably believes evidences—

(i) any violation of any law, rule, or regulation, or

(ii) gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety, if such disclosure is not specifically prohibited by law and if such information is not specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or the conduct of foreign affairs; or

(B) any disclosure to the Special Counsel, or to the Inspector General of an agency or another employee designated by the head of the agency to receive such disclosures, of information which the employee or applicant reasonably believes evidences—

(i) any violation (other than a violation of this section) of any law, rule, or regulation, or

(ii) gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety.

The Board has held that, in whistleblower retaliation claims, 5 U.S.C. 1221(a) and 2302(b)(8) should be read together. See Schmittling v. Department of the Army, 92 M.S.P.R. 572 (2002). In construing section 1221(a) with section 2302(b)(8), it is possibly unclear if a request for corrective action under the WPA must concern only actions that occurred while the individual was an employee or applicant for employment. In other words, it is possibly uncertain whether, to constitute a disclosure “by an employee or applicant,” the disclosure of information described in section 2302(b)(8)(A), as well as the subject matter of the disclosure, must have transpired after—and not before—the individual seeking corrective action became “an employee” or “an applicant for employment.”

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (Federal Circuit) addressed this question in three nonprecedential decisions, all of which were decided before the enactment of the WPEA. See Nasuti v. Merit Systems Protection Board, 376 F. App’x 29 (Fed. Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (finding that an
