LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Copyright Office

37 CFR Parts 201 and 202

[Docket No. 2022–1]

Remitter Payment Options and Deposit Account Requirements

AGENCY: U.S. Copyright Office, Library of Congress.

ACTION: Notice of proposed rulemaking.

SUMMARY: The U.S. Copyright Office is issuing a notice of proposed rulemaking regarding regulations related to remitter payments for Office services and requirements for maintaining a deposit account. Currently, payment options are addressed in various sections of Office regulations, and the method of payment accepted varies depending on the service provided. Additionally, payment methods currently referenced in the regulations may not necessarily reflect the types that the Office can accept or may choose to accept in the future. Amendments in this rulemaking are intended to consolidate regulatory provisions related to payment options and update regulations to articulate current Office practices. The Office also is proposing to simplify requirements for maintaining a deposit account and to clarify procedures related to noncompliant accounts. The Office invites public comments on this proposed rule.

DATES: Written comments must be received no later than 11:59 p.m. Eastern Time on March 7, 2022.

ADDRESSES: For reasons of governmental efficiency, the Copyright Office is using the regulations.gov system for the submission and posting of public comments in this proceeding. All comments are therefore to be submitted electronically through regulations.gov. Specific instructions for submitting comments are available on the Copyright Office website at <http://copyright.gov/rulemaking/remitter-paymentoptions>. If electronic submission of comments is not feasible due to lack of access to a computer and/or the internet, please contact the Office using the contact information below for special instructions.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Megan Efthimiadis, Assistant to the General Counsel, by email at mefthi@copyright.gov or telephone at (202) 707–8350.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

A. Remitter Payments

The Copyright Act provides the Copyright Office with the authority to collect fees for its services, such as registration of a copyright claim and recordation of a transfer of copyright ownership.<sup>1</sup> General fee-setting authority is provided in 17 U.S.C. 708(a), which enumerates ten services for which fees shall be required, along with providing authority “to fix fees for other services.”<sup>2</sup> Several sections of the Copyright Act provide the Copyright Office with explicit authority to collect fees for services not listed in section 708(a), such as designating an agent to receive notifications of claimed infringement<sup>3</sup> and filing a notice of intent to enforce a restored copyright.<sup>4</sup> A number of other fees are set pursuant to the Copyright Office’s general regulatory authority, such as the fee for providing notice to libraries and archives of normal commercial exploitation or availability of a copyrighted work at a reasonable price under 17 U.S.C. 108(h)(2)(B).

The majority of regulations addressing payment methods accepted by the Copyright Office for the fees it charges appear in 37 CFR 201.6; a number of other provisions address payment methods for specific services. Some of the payment options vary depending on the service—for example, the Office accepts payment by “electronic funds transfer, credit or debit card, or deposit account” for online applications for registration,<sup>5</sup> while it accepts payment by “money order, check, bank draft, deposit account,” and most major credit cards for registration of foreign works restored under 17 U.S.C. 104A.<sup>6</sup> Some services may be paid for with cash (only in person); others may not.<sup>7</sup> The different payment methods across provisions can lead to confusion if not spelled out in regulations.

As part of broader modernization efforts, the Office is reviewing its regulations and updating them where necessary to reflect current and anticipated practices.<sup>8</sup> The Office is undertaking this rulemaking as part of those efforts, which the Office anticipates will result in an integrated, unified IT system for its services, including payment processing.

The Office issued a notification of inquiry (“NOI”) on Registration Modernization on October 17, 2018,<sup>9</sup> that invited public comment on a number of issues concerning regulations and practices related to the registration of copyright claims. Among the questions, the Office asked whether it should eliminate “payment options via check or money order” for copyright registration applications.<sup>10</sup> This proposed rule, in part, reflects feedback that the Office received from commenters regarding payment methods. As this notice of proposed rulemaking does not address every issue raised in that notification of inquiry or by commenters, the Office reserves judgment on any matters not expressly discussed herein; no inference should be drawn from the Office’s silence on any particular point. The comments received in response to the notification of inquiry that were not addressed by this proposed rule will continue to be evaluated by the Office as system development progresses.

B. Deposit Accounts

The Copyright Office maintains a system of deposit accounts for frequent users of Office services. An individual or entity may establish a deposit account, make contributions to that account, and charge copyright fees against the balance instead of sending separate payments with applications and other requests for services. This process has been valued by deposit account holders, who have found it to be more efficient and less expensive than alternatives, and also to facilitate good recordkeeping and accounting practices—for example, by allowing companies to track and attribute specific payments to specific projects and business units.

Although the Copyright Act does not require the Copyright Office to offer and maintain deposit accounts,<sup>11</sup> the Office has done so as a convenience to high-volume users of its services since 1910.<sup>12</sup> Under current regulations, deposit account holders are required to engage in a minimum of 12 transactions per year and maintain a minimum balance (no less than $450) to hold a deposit account.<sup>13</sup> In addition, the regulations direct the Office to close a deposit account if it is overdrawn twice within any 12-month period and offer deposit account holders the option of automatic replenishment of their account via bank account or credit card.<sup>14</sup>

These existing administrative requirements were created through a final rule that went into effect May 1, 2011.<sup>15</sup> The rule arose from a proceeding that the Copyright Office began on July 14, 2009, to solve problems associated with the suspension of paper registration applications for lack of deposit account funds.<sup>16</sup> The Office had initially proposed to eliminate the ability to pay for paper applications using deposit accounts and to require deposit account holders to file their applications electronically.<sup>17</sup> After considering public comments on the proposal, the Office “was persuaded that mandatory electronic application was not the most appropriate solution to its problem of underfunded paper applications.”<sup>18</sup> The Office explored other options for addressing this problem and subsequently proposed the above account-maintenance requirements.<sup>19</sup> Following favorable public comments, the Office promulgated the current regulations.<sup>20</sup>

The Copyright Office more recently has been reviewing its deposit account regulations as part of its broader modernization efforts.<sup>21</sup> In May 2017, as part of those efforts, the Office sought comments on recordation modernization and solicited public comments on “whether or not to continue allowing remitters to pay through deposit accounts . . . including whether potential users of deposit accounts would be willing to pay a surcharge for the development and maintenance of an automated deposit account system.”<sup>22</sup> All respondents opposed the elimination of deposit accounts.<sup>23</sup>

In October 2018, the Copyright Office sought public comment on issues related to modernization of the registration system.<sup>24</sup> Although the October 17, 2018, NOI did not expressly mention deposit accounts, it sought comment on whether the Office should eliminate “payment options via check or money order.”<sup>25</sup> In answering that question, several respondents reiterated support for deposit accounts.<sup>26</sup>

Through its review, the Office has identified several areas where the current regulations could be improved. As a threshold matter, the Office recognizes that many stakeholders benefit from the ability to maintain deposit accounts, and the Office continues to support their availability.<sup>27</sup> The intent of this proceeding is to ensure that the Office is able to continue to provide deposit accounts in an efficient and cost-effective manner that aligns with user expectations, the overall operations of the Office, and the broader goals of the copyright system.

First, although the regulations prescribe minimum transaction and balance requirements, they do not prescribe any procedure for addressing noncompliant deposit accounts. The Copyright Office has periodically reviewed existing deposit accounts for noncompliance and has an internal procedure for closing noncompliant deposit accounts. The process is designed to provide clear notice to noncompliant deposit account holders and an opportunity to cure within a reasonable time period. Communicating a process through regulations would increase transparency, clarity, and certainty.

Second, the establishment and maintenance of deposit accounts create costs to the Copyright Office above other payment methods. These costs include staff time to establish, maintain, and reconcile accounts and invest excess balances, as well as developing and sustaining internal controls necessary to manage unused deposit account balances (which the Office must hold as a fiduciary for deposit account holders until they use the funds or the Office refunds them).

The Copyright Office previously proposed establishing fees in connection with the creation and maintenance of deposit accounts,<sup>28</sup> though it ultimately decided against doing so. In 1994, the Office, after noting that “the Copyright Office deposit account system involves substantial benefits to the depositors and substantial costs to the Copyright Office,” proposed a fee of $50 to open a deposit account and an annual maintenance fee of $50 (the average cost of providing the service at the time).<sup>29</sup> Along with the fees, the Office proposed eliminating the minimum 12

<sup>11</sup> The Copyright Act does, however, authorize the Office to “request the Secretary of the Treasury to invest in interest-bearing securities in the United States Treasury any portion of the fees that, as determined by the Register, is not required to meet current Deposit Account demands.” 17 U.S.C. 708(d)(2).

transactions per year requirement.<sup>30</sup> The Office subsequently abandoned implementing any fees following public comment.<sup>31</sup> The Office maintained that position again in 1998, as part of a general fee rulemaking, explaining that “the use of deposit accounts is beneficial both to the holder and the Office.”<sup>32</sup>

Third, the current deposit account regulations allow for automatic replenishment of funds and state that a deposit account that was closed due to a second overdraft within a 12-month period “can be re-opened only if the holder elects to fund it through automatic replenishment.”<sup>33</sup> But the Copyright Office does not have the practical ability to accept automatic replenishment, either as a convenience for replenishment or as a means for re-opening a closed account, via the most commonly used payment methods. Pay.gov—a U.S. Treasury Department system for secure processing of payments to federal government agencies that the Office uses to administer payment for electronic services—currently only allows automatic payments via ACH; it does not permit automatic payments to be made by other payment methods, such as credit cards. Accordingly, the regulations need to be revised to reflect current Office capabilities.

II. Proposed Rule

Having carefully considered the above issues, including relevant public comments in prior proceedings, the Copyright Office now issues a proposed rule amending its regulations regarding remitter payments and deposit accounts and invites further public comment on any aspects of the amended rules.

A. Remitter Payments

The Copyright Office proposes amending its regulations governing remitter payments as follows. First, the Office proposes to consolidate all regulations related to the types of payment methods it will accept for services into a single set of provisions. This will ensure accuracy and consistency in payment methods across the Office’s services, particularly as the Office moves to an integrated enterprise IT system.<sup>34</sup> The rule enumerates the payment methods accepted for three different avenues: Electronic payments, mailed payments, and payments provided in person at the Office’s Public Information Office. Electronic payments must be made through Pay.gov, which accepts most common types of electronic payment methods. For mailed payments, the Office will only accept checks or money orders. The Office will accept checks, money orders, credit card, debit card, and currency for services requested in person, along with electronic payments made via Pay.gov if done by appointment at the Public Information Office kiosk.

Although cash transactions are the costliest transactions to process, the Copyright Office notes that, prior to the pandemic-related suspension of in-person services,<sup>35</sup> the Public Information Office received a not insignificant volume of cash payments,<sup>36</sup> and that eliminating the acceptance of cash might limit access to Office services for some individuals. The Office will continue to explore ways to ensure the widest accessibility of its services while exercising fiscal responsibility, including the possibility of adding a surcharge to cash payments to offset their processing costs and incentivizing payment through less expensive methods.<sup>37</sup>

The Copyright Office proposes simplifying requirements to maintain a deposit account and identifying in regulations the deposit account closure procedures. First, the Office proposes that a deposit account holder no longer be required to engage in a minimum number of transactions per year. The Office proposes to eliminate this requirement for several reasons. For one, as noted above, the rationale that led to the creation of the minimum-transactions requirement—that without a minimum-transaction requirement deposit account holders would neglect account balances and leave “insufficient funds to process a paper application”<sup>38</sup>—has lessened. The percentage of service requests the Office receives by paper, as opposed to electronically, has declined significantly since the requirement was created and is expected to continue to drop;<sup>39</sup> a lower proportion of paper applications reduces the likelihood of deposit account holders overdrawing because the Office’s electronic system will not process a request if a deposit account lacks sufficient funds. Additionally, the imposition of a service charge for a deposit account that falls below the minimum balance, as discussed below, will create additional incentives for deposit account holders to maintain sufficient funds for service requests. Finally, the costs associated with monitoring transaction numbers outweigh any benefit the minimum-transaction requirement provides in reducing overdrafts. For deposit account holders, the elimination of the minimum-transaction requirement should ease their own regulatory burdens.

Second, the Copyright Office proposes imposing a service charge of $25 for each month a deposit account balance is below $450.<sup>40</sup> As pointed out above, this will incentivize deposit account holders to maintain sufficient funds in deposit accounts to avoid overdrafts. The Office notes that the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office currently imposes a similar service charge in connection with its deposit accounts.<sup>41</sup> The Copyright Office will not assess the service charge until the last day of the first full calendar month in which the account balance remains below the minimum balance in order to provide deposit account holders with sufficient opportunity to replenish the account before incurring the charge, and an account with less than $25 at the end of a month will be inactivated by the Office rather than incur the service charge.

Third, the proposed rules provide for the inactivation of accounts in two circumstances. One is when an account has had no activity for 24 months. Though the Office proposes to eliminate the minimum-transactions requirement, providing for inactivation when an account goes unused for such a prolonged period will reduce the costs <sup>39</sup> In the fourth quarter of FY2011, paper registration applications amounted to about 16% of all applications. See Annual Report of the Register of Copyrights, Fiscal Year Ending September 30, 2011, at 22. Currently, they amount to less than 1% of all applications. See Registration Processing Times, U.S. Copyright Office, <https://www.copyright.gov/registration/docs/processing-times-faqs.pdf> (last visited Jan. 4, 2022).

<sup>40</sup> Deposit Account balances will be reviewed and recorded at the end of the final day of each month.

<sup>41</sup> See 37 CFR 2.6(b)(11); see also Deposit Account Rules and Information, U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, <https://www.uspto.gov/learning-and-resources/fees-and-payment/deposit-account-rules-and-information> (last visited Jan. 4, 2022).

<sup>37</sup> The Office already has a model for this: Fees for registration applications submitted via paper are higher than the fees for electronic applications. See 37 CFR 201.3.

associated with maintaining unused accounts. The other circumstance is after several unsuccessful attempts to contact the deposit account holder. Undeliverable accounts create burdens for the Copyright Office, and these procedures will alleviate them.

Fourth, the rules spell out the Copyright Office's procedures for closing noncompliant deposit accounts, including the circumstances for closure and the process for returning any remaining funds to the deposit account holder. Currently, the Office's closure procedures are not explicitly set out in regulations. Adding them will provide additional transparency, clarity, and certainty regarding Office deposit account policies.

Finally, the Copyright Office is eliminating references to automatic replenishment of deposit accounts. At this time, Pay.gov lacks the ability to provide such automatic replenishment.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: Section 403 of the John S. McCain III, Daniel K.

Akaka, and Samuel R. Johnson VA Maintaining Internal Systems and Strengthening Integrated Outside Network Act of 2018 (Pub. L. 115–182, hereafter referred to as the MISSION Act) mandated the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) create a pilot program to establish additional medical residency positions authorized under section 7302 of title 38 United States Code (U.S.C.) (note to 38 U.S.C. 7302) at certain covered facilities. This proposed rule would establish substantive and procedural requirements to allow VA to administer this pilot program in a manner consistent with section 403 of the MISSION Act.

Section 7302(e)(1) of title 38 United States Code (U.S.C.) permits VA to both establish medical residency programs in VA facilities and ensure that such established programs have a sufficient number of residents. Section 403 of the MISSION Act created a note to section 7302 to expand VA’s authority to establish medical residency positions in covered facilities to include non-VA facilities such as health care facilities of the Department of Defense and Indian Health Service. Section 403 of the MISSION Act further provides parameters for VA to determine those covered facilities in which residents will be placed. For instance, section 403 requires VA to consider certain factors to determine whether there is a clinical need for providers in areas where residents would be placed. Section 403 also requires prioritized placement of residents under the pilot program in Indian Health Service facilities, Indian tribal or tribal organization facilities, certain underserved VA facilities, or other covered facilities. Section 403 additionally authorizes VA to pay resident stipends and benefits regardless of whether such residents are assigned to a VA facility, and requires VA to pay certain startup costs of new residency programs (such as curriculum development and faculty salaries) if residents are placed in such programs under the pilot program. The authority for the pilot was initially scheduled to expire on August 7, 2024; however, it was subsequently extended to August 7, 2031, under section 5107 of Public Law 116–169.

Before detailing the regulations we propose to implement this mandated pilot program, we provide a brief summary of VA’s administration of its Graduate Medical Education (GME) programming under 38 U.S.C. 7302(e), to establish a basic understanding of VA’s understand of the conduct of GME programming in general. Under section 7302(e)(1), VA establishes new medical residency programs in VA facilities and
