SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background

Section 309(a) of the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994 required the FDIC (as well as the other Federal banking agencies and the National Credit Union Administration) to establish an "independent intra-agency appellate process" to review material supervisory determinations.¹ The statute defines the term "independent appellate process" to mean "a review by an agency official who does not directly or indirectly report to the agency official who made the material supervisory determination under review."² In the appeals process, the FDIC is required to ensure that: (1) An IDI's appeal of a material supervisory determination is heard and decided expeditiously; and (2) appropriate safeguards exist for protecting appellants from retaliation by agency examiners.³

In 1995, the FDIC adopted Guidelines for Appeals of Material Supervisory Determinations to implement section 309(a). At that time, the FDIC's Board of Directors established the Supervision Appeals Review Committee (SARC) to consider and decide appeals of material supervisory determinations.⁴ The Board has modified the composition of the SARC over the years, but as of 2021, the SARC included: One inside member of the FDIC's Board of Directors (serving as Chairperson); one deputy or special assistant to each of the other inside Board members; and the General Counsel as a non-voting member.

In January 2021, the FDIC adopted Guidelines that generally replaced the SARC as the final level of review in appellate process with a standalone office within the FDIC, designated the Office of Supervisory Appeals (Office).⁵ This Office was granted delegated authority to consider and resolve appeals of material supervisory determinations, and would be staffed by reviewing officials with bank supervisory or examination experience. After appealing a material supervisory determination to the relevant Division Director, an institution would have the option to appeal to the Office. If a material supervisory determination was appealed to the Office, a three- or five-member panel of reviewing officials would consider the appeal and issue a written decision to the institution. The Guidelines did not provide for additional review beyond the Office.

Restoring Committee Structure

Prior to the establishment of the Office, the FDIC's supervisory appeals process had always provided for Board-level review by including a Board member on the SARC. The FDIC's experience suggests that its longstanding practice of providing Board-level review of material supervisory determinations would better promote independence and accountability in the appellate process. Allowing material supervisory determinations to be appealed to a Board-level committee underscores the significance of an independent review and lends credibility to the process. Furthermore, Board-level review has historically ensured that accountability for the FDIC's supervisory determinations ultimately remains with the agency's Board of Directors, consistent with sound corporate governance principles.

The FDIC also believes that restoring the SARC as the final level of review for supervisory appeals will address staffing concerns that were inherent in the Office structure and may potentially threaten to hinder the effectiveness of the process going forward. The Guidelines provided that the Office
