Securing the Border

ACTION: Interim final rule (“IFR”) with request for comments.

SUMMARY: On June 3, 2024, the President signed a Proclamation under sections 212(f) and 215(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”), finding that the entry into the United States of certain noncitizens during emergency border circumstances would be detrimental to the interests of the United States, and suspending and limiting the entry of those noncitizens. The Proclamation directed DHS and DOJ to promptly consider issuing regulations addressing the circumstances at the southern border, including any warranted limitations and conditions on asylum eligibility. The Departments are now issuing this IFR.

DATES:
Effective date: This IFR is effective at 12:01 a.m. eastern daylight time on June 5, 2024.

Submission of public comments:
Comments must be submitted on or before July 8, 2024.

The electronic Federal Docket Management System will accept comments prior to midnight eastern time at the end of that day.

ADDRESSES: You may submit comments on this IFR, identified by USCIS Docket No. USCIS–2024–0006, through the Federal eRulemaking Portal: https://www.regulations.gov. Follow the website instructions for submitting comments.

Comments submitted in a manner other than the one listed above, including emails or letters sent to the Departments’ officials, will not be considered comments on the IFR and may not receive a response from the Departments. Please note that the Departments cannot accept any comments that are hand-delivered or couriered. In addition, the Departments cannot accept comments contained on any form of digital media storage devices, such as CDs/DVDs and USB drives. The Departments are not accepting mailed comments at this time.

If you cannot submit your comment by using https://www.regulations.gov, please contact the Regulatory Coordination Division, Office of Policy and Strategy, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, Department of Homeland Security, by telephone at (240) 721–3000 for alternate instructions.

II. Executive Summary

A. Background and Purpose

On June 3, 2024, the President signed a Proclamation under sections 212(f) and 215(a) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182(f) and 1185(a), finding that because the border security and immigration systems of the United States are unduly strained at this time, the entry into the United States of certain categories of noncitizens is detrimental to the security and interests of the United States, and suspending and limiting the entry of such noncitizens. The Proclamation explicitly excepts from its terms certain persons who are not subject to the suspension and limitation. This rule is necessary to respond to the emergency border circumstances discussed in the Proclamation.

The Departments use the term “emergency border circumstances” in this preamble to generally refer to situations in which high levels of encounters at the southern border exceed DHS’s capacity to deliver timely consequences to most individuals who cross irregularly into the United States and cannot establish a legal basis to remain in the United States. As the preamble elsewhere explains, the periods during which the Proclamation is intended to be in effect, when encounters exceed certain thresholds, identify such situations. Hence, the Departments in this preamble use the term “emergency border circumstances” to refer more specifically to the period of time after the date that the Proclamation’s suspension and limitation on entry would commence (as described in section 1 of the Proclamation) until the discontinuation date referenced in section 2(a) of the Proclamation or the date the President revokes the Proclamation (whichever comes first), as well as any subsequent period during which the Proclamation’s suspension and limitation on entry would apply as described in section 2(b) of the Proclamation.2 As the Proclamation and this preamble explain, these circumstances exist despite the Departments’ efforts to address substantial levels of migration, and such circumstances are a direct result of Congress’s failure to update outdated immigration laws and provide needed funding and resources for the efficient operation of the border security and immigration systems.

The Proclamation explains that since 2021, as a result of political and economic conditions globally, there have been substantial levels of migration throughout the Western Hemisphere,3 including record levels at 1 For purposes of this preamble, the Departments use the term “noncitizen” to be synonymous with the term “alien” as it is used in the INA. See INA 101(a)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(3); Burton v. Barr, 590 U.S. 222, 226 n.2 (2020).

2 The Departments have sought to avoid describing “emergency border circumstances” as the time period during which the Proclamation is in effect, because the Departments intend for certain provisions of this rule to remain in effect in the event a court enjoins or otherwise renders inoperable the Proclamation or this rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility.

4 United States Government sources refer to the U.S. border with Mexico by various terms, including “SBW” and “the southern border.” In some instances, these differences are substantive, referring only to portions of the border, while in others they simply reflect different word choices. As defined in section 4(d) of the Proclamation, the term “southern border” includes both the southwest land border (“SWB”) and the southern coastal borders. As defined in section 4(c) of the Proclamation, the term “southwest land border” means all maritime borders in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida; all maritime borders proximate to the SBW, the Gulf of Mexico, and the southern Pacific coast in California; and all maritime borders of the United States Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. The Departments believe that the factual circumstances described herein support applying this IFR to both the SBW and the southern coastal borders, although they recognize that occasionally different variations of this terminology may be used. The Departments further note there are sound reasons for the Proclamation and rule to include maritime borders of the United States Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico; this aspect of the Proclamation and rule help avoid any incentive for maritime migration to such locations. The dangers of such migration, and the operational challenges associated with responding to such maritime migration, are well documented. Government has taken a series of significant steps to strengthen consequences for unlawful or unauthorized entry at the border, while at the same time overseeing the largest expansion of lawful, safe, and orderly pathways and processes for individuals to come to the United States for protection in decades. These steps include:

- Promulgating and implementing the rule titled Circumvention of Lawful Pathways, 88 FR 31314 (May 16, 2023) (“Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule”);
- Deploying more than 500 additional DHS personnel at a time to the SWB to support U.S. Customs and Border Protection (“CBP”) operations and refocusing a significant portion of DHS’s SWB workforce to prioritize migration management above other border security missions;
- Deploying over 1,000 additional Department of Defense (“DOD”) personnel on top of the 2,500 steady state presence to the SWB in May 2023 to further enhance border security; combines 23 separate DHS and DOJ datasets to report on the end-to-end immigration enforcement process. Due to this greater complexity, Lifecycle data generally become available for reporting 90 to 120 days after the end of each quarter. CBP also publishes preliminary data pulled from its operational systems more quickly as part of its regular Monthly Operational Updates. The data in these updates reflect operational realities but change over time as transactional records in the systems of record are cleaned and validated; they are best viewed as initial estimates rather than as final historical records. CBP released an operational update on May 15, 2024, that includes the Component’s official reporting for encounters through the end of April. Based on these data, SWB encounters between POEs fell slightly by six percent between March and April. OHSS analysis of data obtained from CBP, Southwest Land Border Encounters, https://newsroom.state.gov/southwest-land-border-encounters (last accessed May 24, 2024). The preliminary April data are best understood to reflect a continuation of the general pattern described elsewhere in this IFR. Excluding March through April 2020, which was an unusual case because of the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, the average month-over-month change between March and April for 2013 through 2024 is a 2.3 percent increase, with 4 of those 11 years experiencing decreases in April and 7 years experiencing increases.

• Completing approximately 89 percent more immigration court cases in FY 2023 as compared to FY 2019; and
• Increasing the immigration judge ("IJ") corps by 66 percent from FY 2019 to FY 2023, including maximizing the congressionally authorized number in FY 2023 for a total corps of 734.15

The Proclamation further states that although these efforts and other comprehensive measures are having their intended effect—DHS is processing noncitizens for removal in record numbers and record efficiency 16 the border security and immigration systems have not been able to keep pace with the number of individuals arriving at the southern border. Simply put, the Departments do not have adequate resources and tools to deliver timely decisions and consequences to individuals who cross unlawfully and cannot establish a legal basis to remain in the United States, or to provide timely protection to those ultimately found eligible for protection when individuals are arriving at such elevated, historic volumes. This became even more clear in the months following the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order.19 As the Departments resumed widespread processing under title 8 authorities, the insufficiency of both the available statutorily authorized tools and the resources provided to implement them came into stark focus. Despite the expanded ability to impose consequences at the SWB through the Circuit Dewnent of Lawful Pathways rule and comprehensive measures, which led to the highest numbers of returns and removals in more than a decade,20 encounter levels have remained elevated well above historical levels, with December 2023 logging the highest monthly total on record.21 While encounter levels in calendar year 2024 have decreased from these record numbers, there is still a substantial and elevated level of migration, and historically high percentages of migrants are claiming fear and are challenging to remove, as discussed in more detail in Section III.B.1 of this preamble.22 This DHS acknowledges that the enacted FY 2024 DHS budget does appropriate funding sufficient to approximately 2,000 additional Border Patrol agents, bringing the total level indicated by Congress up to 22,000 agents, compared with 19,655 agents for FY 2023. 170 Cong. Rec. H1809–10 (daily ed. Mar. 22, 2024) (Explanatory Statement Regarding H.R. 2882, Further Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2024) ("The agreement includes . . . (funding) to hire 22,000 Border Patrol ‘enforcement agents’.") S6557 (daily ed. Dec. 20, 2022) (Explanatory Statement Regarding H.R. 2617, Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2023) ("The agreement provides funding for 19,855 Border Patrol agents."). However, the FY 2024 appropriations do not fully fund CBP’s existing operational and staffing requirements. Additionally, CBP estimates that it will likely be unable to implement a hiring surge to meaningfully grow its overall staffing levels towards the staffing levels funded by the FY 2024 budget before the conclusion of the current fiscal year. The hiring process requires time and resources to bring additional agents on board. For example, it generally takes more than six months for an applicant to complete the hiring process and report to the U.S. Border Patrol ("USBP") Academy to receive necessary training. See DHS, Statement from Secretary Mayorkas on the President’s Fiscal Year 2025 Budget (Mar. 11, 2024), https://www.dhs.gov/news/2024/03/11/statement-secretary-mayorkas-presidents-fiscal-year-2025-budget-us- department ("However, DHS’s border security and immigration enforcement efforts along the Southwest border desperately require the additional funds requested by the Administration and included in the Senate’s bipartisan border security legislation, which would provide DHS with approximately $1 billion to fund additional personnel, facilities, technology, and other enforcement resources.").

17 See Public Health Determination and Order Regarding Suspending the Right To Introduce Certain Persons From Countries Where a Quarantineable Communicable Disease Exists, 87 FR 19941, 19941–42 (Apr. 6, 2022) (describing the CDC’s recent Title 42 public health Orders, which “suspend[ed] the right of certain persons into the United States from countries or places where the quarantinable communicable disease exists in order to protect the public health from an increased risk of the introduction of the disease into the United States”); 21 CFR 124.1 (in force since 1925). Although the CDC indicated its intention to lift the order on May 23, 2022, ongoing litigation prevented the order from being lifted until it ultimately expired on May 11, 2023. See 88 FR at 31119. The Proclamation further states that although these efforts and other comprehensive measures are having their intended effect—DHS is processing noncitizens for removal in record numbers and record efficiency 16 the border security and immigration systems have not been able to keep pace with the number of individuals arriving at the southern border. Simply put, the Departments do not have adequate resources and tools to deliver timely decisions and consequences to individuals who cross unlawfully and cannot establish a legal basis to remain in the United States, or to provide timely protection to those ultimately found eligible for protection when individuals are arriving at such elevated, historic volumes. This became even more clear in the months following the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order. As the Departments resumed widespread processing under title 8 authorities, the insufficiency of both the available statutorily authorized tools and the resources provided to implement them came into stark focus. Despite the expanded ability to impose consequences at the SWB through the Circuit Dewnent of Lawful Pathways rule and comprehensive measures, which led to the highest numbers of returns and removals in more than a decade, encounter levels have remained elevated well above historical levels, with December 2023 logging the highest monthly total on record. While encounter levels in calendar year 2024 have decreased from these record numbers, there is still a substantial and elevated level of migration, and historically high percentages of migrants are claiming fear and are challenging to remove, as discussed in more detail in Section III.B.1 of this preamble. This substantial migration throughout the hemisphere, combined with inadequate resources and tools to keep pace, limits DHS’s ability to impose timely consequences through expedited removal, the main consequence available at the border under title 8 authorities.

The sustained, high encounter rates the Departments have experienced over the past year have outstripped the Departments’ abilities—based on available resources—to process noncitizens through expedited removal in significant numbers. Due to its funding shortfall, DHS simply lacks sufficient resources, such as sufficient USCIS asylum officers (“AOs”) to conduct fear screenings and sufficient temporary processing facilities, often called “soft-sides,” which limits DHS’s ability to conduct credible fear interviews for individuals in CBP custody and to process and hold individuals in U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) custody during the expedited removal process.23 This mismatch in available resources and encounters creates stress on the border and immigration systems and forces DHS to rely on processing pathways outside of expedited removal—limiting the Departments’ ability to deliver timely consequences to individuals who do not have a legal basis to remain in the United States.24 Individuals who are subject to but cannot be processed under expedited removal due to resource constraints are instead released pending removal proceedings under section 240 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1229a (“section 240 removal proceedings”), before an IJ, a process that can take several years to conclude.25 These immigration court proceedings can be less resource intensive for processing upon initial encounter, because individuals can be released from custody fairly quickly, but are also far less likely to result in swift decisions and swift consequences, and generally require more IJ and ICE attorney time to resolve. Compare INA 235(b)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1), with INA 240, 8 U.S.C. 1229a. Notably, in FY 2023, when the immigration courts had a historic high number of case completions, the number of new cases far outnumbered those completions and led to a larger backlog—likely extending the length of time it will take individuals encountered and referred into section 240 removal proceedings to finish their immigration court process.26

23 “Because ICE has very limited detention capacity and appropriated bedspace has remained relatively static, ICE must carefully prioritize whom it detains. Similar to FY 2022, during FY 2023, Enforcement and Removal Operations’ limited detention capacity was primarily used to house two populations: noncitizens CBP arrested at the Southwest Border and noncitizens with criminal histories [Enforcement and Removal Operations] arrested in the interior.” Fiscal Year 2023 ICE Annual Report 18 (Dec. 29, 2023), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/eoi/iceAnnualReportFY2023.pdf. In FY 2024, ICE was appropriated $5,082,218,000 “for enforcement, detention and removal operations.” Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2024, Public Law 118–47, 138 Stat. 460, 598 (2024). The joint explanatory statement states that the bill provides “$5,082,218,000 for Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) and $335,700,000 for 41,500 beds for the full fiscal year and inflationary adjustments to support current detention facility operations.” H.R. 1706, 118th Cong., H.R. 1707, 118th Cong. (daily ed. Mar. 22, 2024).

24 See CBP, Custody and Transfer Statistics, https://www.cbp.gov/newsroom/stats/custody-and-transfer-statistics (last updated Apr. 12, 2023) (table showing that, under current constraints, the number of individuals processed for expedited removal makes up only a fraction of total processing dispositions, including section 240 proceedings).

said another way, at the current levels of encounters and with current resources, the Departments cannot predictably and swiftly deliver consequences to most noncitizens who cross the border without a lawful basis to remain. This inability to predictably deliver timely decisions and consequences further compounds incentives for migrants to make the dangerous journey to the SWB, regardless of any individual noncitizen’s ultimate likelihood of success on an asylum or protection application.27 Smugglers and transnational criminal organizations (“TCOs”) have exploited this mismatch, further fueling migration by actively advertising to migrants that they are likely to be able to remain in the United States.28

The Departments’ ability to refer and process noncitizens through expedited removal thus continues to be overwhelmed, creating a vicious cycle in which the border security and immigration systems cannot deliver timely decisions and consequences to all the people who are encountered at the SWB and lack a lawful basis to remain in the United States. This, in turn, forces DHS to release individuals into the backlogged immigration court system; for the many cases in that system initiated just prior to or during the COVID–19 pandemic, the process can take several years to result in a final decision or consequence,29 which then incentivizes more people to make the dangerous journey north to take their chances at the SWB.30 The status quo of the broken immigration and asylum system has become a driver for unlawful migration throughout the region and an increasingly lucrative source of income for dangerous TCOs.31 Without countermeasures, those TCOs will continue to grow in strength, likely resulting in even more smuggling operations and undermining democratic governance in the countries where they operate.32 All of these factors, taken together, pose significant threats to the... safety and security of migrants exploited into making the dangerous journey to the SWB and the U.S. communities through which many such migrants transit.

In the absence of congressional action to appropriately resource DHS and EOIR and to reform the outdated statutory framework, the Proclamation and the changes made by this rule are intended to substantially improve the Departments’ ability to deliver timely decisions and consequences to noncitizens who lack a lawful basis to remain. By suspending and limiting entries until 12:01 a.m. eastern time on the date that is 14 calendar days after the Secretary makes a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of less than 1,500 encounters, as defined by the Proclamation, but excluding noncitizens determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE, and by imposing a limitation on asylum eligibility and making other policy changes, the Proclamation and IFR will realign incentives at the southern border.33 The Proclamation and IFR will do this by improving DHS’s ability to place into expedited removal the majority of noncitizens who are amenable to such processing; to avoid large-scale releases of such individuals pending section 240 removal proceedings; and to allow for swift resolution of their cases and, where appropriate, removal.

The Proclamation imposes a suspension and limitation on entry upon certain classes of noncitizens who are encountered while the suspension and limitation is in effect. The Proclamation provides that the suspension and limitation on entry applies beginning at 12:01 a.m. eastern daylight time on June 6, 2024. The suspension and limitation on entry will be discontinued 14 calendar days after the Secretary makes a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of less than 1,500 encounters, as defined by the Proclamation, but excluding noncitizens determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE. Unaccompanied children (“UCs”)34 from non-contiguous countries are not included in calculating the number of encounters. If at any time after such a factual determination the Secretary makes a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of 2,500 encounters or more, the suspension and limitation on entry will apply at 12:01 a.m. eastern time on the next calendar day (or will continue to apply, if the 14-calendar-day period has yet to elapse) until 14 days after the Secretary makes another factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of less than 1,500 encounters or the President revokes the Proclamation, at which time its application will be discontinued once again.

The Proclamation does not apply to the following persons:

(i) any noncitizen national of the United States;
(ii) any lawful permanent resident of the United States;
(iii) any unaccompanied child as defined in section 279(g)(2) of title 6, United States Code;
(iv) any noncitizen who is determined to be a victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons, as defined in section 7102(16) of title 22, United States Code;
(v) any noncitizen who has a valid visa or other lawful permission to seek entry or admission into the United States, or presents at a port of entry pursuant to a pre-scheduled time and place, including:

(A) members of the United States Armed Forces and associated personnel, United States Government employees or contractors, or any person of the Armed Forces and associated personnel, or any government employee or contractor;
(B) noncitizens who hold a valid visa or who have all necessary documents required for admission consistent with the requirements of section 1182(a)(7) of title 8, United States Code, upon arrival at a port of entry;
(C) noncitizens traveling pursuant to the visa waiver program as described in section 217 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1187; and
(D) noncitizens who arrive in the United States at a southwest land border port of entry pursuant to a process the Secretary of Homeland Security determines is appropriate to allow for the safe and orderly entry of noncitizens into the United States;

(vi) any noncitizen who is permitted to enter by the Secretary of Homeland Security, acting through a U.S. Customs and Border Protection immigration officer, based on the totality of the circumstances, including consideration of significant law enforcement, officer and public safety, urgent humanitarian, and public health interests at the time of the entry or encounter that warranted permitting the noncitizen to enter; and

(vii) any noncitizen who is permitted to enter by the Secretary of Homeland Security, acting through a U.S. Customs and Border Protection immigration officer, due to operational considerations at the time of the entry or encounter that warranted permitting the noncitizen to enter.

The President authorized the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Attorney General to issue any instructions, orders, or regulations as may be necessary to implement the Proclamation, including the determination of the exceptions in section 3(b), and directed them to promptly consider issuing any instructions, orders, or regulations as may be necessary to address the circumstances at the southern border, including any additional limitations and conditions on asylum eligibility that they determine are warranted, subject to any exceptions that they determine are warranted.

Consistent with the President’s direction, the Departments have determined that this IFR is necessary to address the situation at the southern border. This IFR aligns the Departments’ border operations and applicable authorities with the Proclamation’s policy and objectives. Specifically, this IFR establishes a limitation on asylum eligibility that applies to certain individuals who enter during emergency border circumstances and revises certain procedures applicable to the expedited removal process to more swiftly apply consequences for irregular migration,35 and remove noncitizens who do not have a legal basis to remain in the United States. Although the Departments are adopting these measures to respond to the emergency situation at the southern border, they are not a substitute for congressional action—which remains the only long-term solution to the challenges the Departments have confronted on the border for more than a decade.

33 Under the Proclamation, the term “encounter” refers to a noncitizen who (i) is physically apprehended by CBP immigration officers within 100 miles of the United States SWB during the 14-day period immediately after entry between POEs; (ii) is physically apprehended by DHS personnel at the southern coastal borders during the 14-day period immediately after entry between POEs; or (iii) is determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE.

34 In this rulemaking, as in the Proclamation, the term “unaccompanied children” or “UCs” has the same meaning as the term “unaccompanied alien child[ren]” under 6 U.S.C. 279(g)(2).

35 In this preamble, “irregular migration” refers to the movement of people into another country without authorization.
removal proceedings”). These adjudications are conducted by IJs within DOJ’s EOIR. See 6 U.S.C. 521; INA 103(g)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1103(g)(1). With limited exceptions, IJs adjudicate asylum, statutory withholding of removal, and CAT protection applications filed by noncitizens during the pendency of section 240 removal proceedings, including asylum applications referred by USCIS to the immigration court. INA 101(b)(4), 8 U.S.C. 1101(b)(4); INA 240(a)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1229a(a)(1); INA 241(b)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3); 8 CFR 1208.2(b), 1240.1(a); see also Dharak v. Sessions, 895 F.3d 532, 536–37 (7th Cir. 2018) (describing affirmative and defensive asylum processes). The Board of Immigration Appeals (“BIA”), also within DOJ’s EOIR, in turn hears appeals from IJ decisions. See 8 CFR 1003.1(a)(1), (b)(3); see also Garland v. Ming Dai, 593 U.S. 357, 366–67 (2021) (describing appeals from IJs to the BIA). And the INA provides that the “determination and ruling by the Attorney General with respect to all questions of law shall be controlling.” INA 103(a)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1103(a)(1). In addition to the separate authorities discussed above, the Attorney General and the Secretary share some authorities.37 Section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158, authorizes the “Secretary of Homeland Security or the Attorney General” to “grant asylum” to a noncitizen “who has applied for asylum in accordance with the requirements and procedures established by” the Secretary or the Attorney General under section 208 if the Secretary or the Attorney General determines that the noncitizen is a “refugee” within the meaning of section 101(a)(42)(A) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A). INA 208(b)(1)(A), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(1)(A). Section 208 thereby authorizes the Secretary and the Attorney General to “establish” “[r]equirements and procedures” to govern asylum applications. Id. The statute further authorizes them to “establish,” “by regulation,” additional limitations and conditions, consistent with “section 208, under which a noncitizen “shall be ineligible for asylum.” INA 208(b)(2)(C); see also INA 208(d)(5)(B), 8 U.S.C. 1158(d)(5)(B) (authorizing the Secretary and the Attorney General to “provide for regulation for any other conditions or limitations on the consideration of an application for asylum not inconsistent with [the INA]”).38 The INA also provides the Secretary and Attorney General authority to publish regulatory amendments governing their respective roles regarding apprehension, inspection and admission, detention and removal, withholding of removal, deferral of removal, and release of noncitizens encountered in the interior of the United States or at or between POEs. See INA 235, 236, 241, 8 U.S.C. 1225, 1226, 1231.

The HSA granted DHS the authority to adjudicate asylum applications and to conduct credible fear interviews, make credible fear determinations in the context of expedited removal, and establish procedures for further consideration of asylum applications after an individual is found to have a credible fear. INA 103(a)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1103(a)(3); INA 235(b)(1)(B), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B); see also 6 U.S.C. 271(b) (providing for the transfer of adjudication of asylum and refugee applications from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to the Director of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, now USCIS). Within DHS, the Secretary has delegated some of those authorities to the Director of USCIS, and AOs conduct credible fear interviews, make credible fear determinations, and determine whether a noncitizen’s asylum application should be granted. See DHS, No. 0150.1, Delegation to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services (June 5, 2003); 8 CFR 208.2(a), 208.9, 208.30.

36 Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment art. 3, Dec. 10, 1984, S. Treaty Doc. No. 100–20 (1986), 1463 U.N.T.S. 85, 114; see also 8 U.S.C. 1231 note (United States Policy With Respect to Involuntary Return of Persons in Danger of Subjection to Torture); 8 CFR 208.16(c)–208.18, 1208.16(c)–1208.18.

37 The HSA further provides, “Nothing in this Act, any amendment made by this Act, or in section 103 of the [INA], as amended . . . shall be construed to limit judicial deference to regulations, adjudications, interpretations, orders, decisions, judgments, or any other actions of the Secretary of Homeland Security or the Attorney General.” Public Law 107–296, 116 Stat. 2135, 2274 (codified at 8 U.S.C. 522).

38 Under the HSA, the references to the “Attorney General” in the INA also encompass the Secretary with respect to statutory authorities vested in the Secretary by the HSA or subsequent legislation, including in relation to immigration proceedings before IBIS. 6 U.S.C. 251, 271(e)(3), (5), 557.
Congress implemented these obligations through the Refugee Act of 1980, Public Law 96–212, 94 Stat. 102 (“Refugee Act”), creating the precursor to what is now known as statutory withholding of removal. The Supreme Court has long recognized that the United States implements its non-refoulement obligations under Article 33 of the Refugee Convention (via the Refugee Protocol) through the statutory withholding of removal provision in section 241(b)(3) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3) (“statutory withholding of removal”), which provides that a noncitizen may not be removed to a country where their life or freedom would be threatened on account of one of the protected grounds listed in Article 33 of the Refugee Convention. See INA 241(b)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3); see also 8 CFR 208.16, 1208.16. The INA also authorizes the Secretary and the Attorney General to implement statutory withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3). See INA 103(a)(1), (3), (g)(1)–(2), 8 U.S.C. 1103(a)(1), (3), (g)(1)–(2).

The Departments also have authority to implement Article 3 of the CAT. The Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (“FARRA”) provides the Departments with the authority to “prescribe regulations to implement the obligations of the United States under Article 3 of the [CAT], subject to any reservations, understandings, declarations, and provisos contained in the United States Senate resolution of ratification of the Convention.” Public Law 105–277, div. G, sec. 2242(b), 112 Stat. 2681, 2681–82 (codified at 8 U.S.C. 1231 note). DHS and DOJ have implemented the obligations of the United States under Article 3 of the CAT in the Code of Federal Regulations, consistent with FARRA. See, e.g., 8 CFR 208.16(c)–208.18, 1208.16(c)–1208.18; Regulations Concerning the Convention Against Torture, 64 FR 8478 (Feb. 19, 1999), amended by 64 FR 13881 (Mar. 23, 1999).

This rule is necessary because, while the Proclamation recognizes that the asylum system has contributed to the border emergency, the Proclamation itself does not and cannot affect noncitizens’ right to apply for asylum, eligibility for asylum, or asylum procedures. That has been the Executive Branch’s consistent position for four decades. That longstanding understanding follows from the text and structure of the governing statutes. Section 212(f) provides that under certain circumstances, the President may “suspend the entry of all aliens or any class of aliens as immigrants or nonimmigrants, or impose on the entry of aliens any restrictions he may deem to be appropriate.” INA 212(f), 8 U.S.C. 1182(f). Although this provision—first enacted in 1952—“grants the President broad discretion,” it “operate[s]” only in its “sphere[ ].” Trump v. Hawaii, 585 U.S. 667, 683–84, 695 (2018). Section 212 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182 (entitled “Inadmissible aliens”), generally “defines the universe of aliens who are admissible” and “sets the boundaries of admissibility into the United States.” Id. at 695. Hence, when section 212(f) authorizes the President to suspend “entry,” it “enable[s] the President to supplement the other grounds of inadmissibility in the INA.” Id. at 684 (citing 212(f) (entitled “Inadmissible aliens.”)).

The asylum statute, first enacted in the Refugee Act of 1980, today provides that “[a]ny alien who is physically present in the United States who arrives in the United States . . . irrespective of such alien’s status, may apply for asylum.” INA 208(a)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1158(a)(1). The right to apply for asylum thus turns on whether a noncitizen is “physically present” or has “arrive[d] in the United States,” id., as those terms are properly understood, and exists regardless of whether a noncitizen is inadmissible. As a result, the power under section 212(f) to suspend “entry” does not authorize the President to override the asylum rights of noncitizens who have already physically entered the United States and who are entitled to an adjudication of eligibility under the applicable statutory and regulatory rules and standards.

Cf., e.g., Sale v. Haitian Ctrs. Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155, 174–77 (1993) (upholding a Coast Guard program of intercepting migrant vessels and returning migrants to their home country, authorized in part by section 212(f), on the basis that statutory rights under the withholding statute did not have “extraterritorial application” to migrants who were not physically present); Hawaii, 585 U.S. at 689, 695 (assuming, without deciding, that section 212(f) “does not allow the President to expressly override particular provisions of the INA,” while emphasizing the particular “sphere[ ]” in which it operates).

In 1984, then-Assistant Attorney General of the Office of Legal Counsel Theodore B. Olson advised that section 212(f) did not authorize the President to override the asylum rights of noncitizens who had hijacked a plane and, as a condition of the plane’s release, been flown to the United States. And in 2018, the Departments reaffirmed that “[a]n alien whose entry is suspended or restricted under . . . a section 212(f) proclamation, but who nonetheless reaches U.S. soil contrary to the President’s determination that the alien should not be in the United States, would remain subject to various procedures under immigration laws,” including “expedited-removal proceedings” where they could “raise any claims for protection.” Aliens Subject to a Bar on Entry Under Certain Presidential Proclamations; Procedures for Protection Claims, 83 FR 59304, 59490 (Nov. 9, 2018). Although Presidents have invoked section 212(f) at least 90 times since 1981, to the Departments’ knowledge, none of those proclamations was intended to affect the right of noncitizens on U.S. soil to apply for, or noncitizens’ statutory eligibility to receive, asylum. See Kelsey Y. Santamaria et al., Cong. Resch. Serv., Presidential Authority to Suspend Entry of Aliens Under 8 U.S.C. 1182(f) (Feb. 21, 2024). At the same time, nothing in the proclamations or the INA have nothing in the proclamations or the INA have anything to say about the Proclamation or the INA have anything to say about the President’s authority to “suspend immigration.” Br. for Appellants at 41–43, Huishu-Huishu v. Mayorkas, 27 F.4th 718 (D.C. Cir. 2022) (No. 21–5200), see Huishu-Huishu, 27 F.4th at 730–31 (determining plaintiffs not likely to succeed on their challenge to the CDC order on the ground that it improperly suspended migrants’ right to apply for asylum). Thus, the health authority under the Public Health Service Act, its grant of authority to allow the CDC to temporarily suspend immigration laws in case of a public health emergency, has no relevance to the interpretation of section 212(f), which is in title 8.

For similar reasons, section 215(a) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1185(a), which the Proclamation also
This rule, as discussed elsewhere, is authorized because Congress has conferred upon the Secretary and the Attorney General express rulemaking power to create new conditions and limitations on asylum eligibility and create certain procedures for adjudicating asylum claims. INA 103(a)(1), (a)(3), (g), 208(b)(1)(A), (b)(2)(C), (d)(5)[B], 8 U.S.C. 1103(a)(1), (a)(3), (g), 1158(b)(1)(A), (b)(2)(C), (d)(5)[B]; INA 235(b)(1)(B)(i)(III), (iv), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(i)(III), (iv).

C. Summary of Provisions of the IFR

This IFR adds provisions at 8 CFR 208.13(g), 208.35, 235.15, 1208.13(g), and 1208.35 that effectuate three key changes to the process for those seeking asylum, statutory withholding of removal, or protection under the CAT during emergency border circumstances giving rise to the suspension and limitation on entry under the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border (“Presidential Proclamation of June 3”):• During emergency border circumstances, persons who enter across the southern border and who are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation will be ineligible for asylum unless they demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist, including if the noncitizen demonstrates that they or a member of their family as described in 8 CFR 208.30(c) with whom they are traveling: (1) faced an acute medical emergency; (2) faced an imminent and extreme threat to life or safety, such as an imminent threat of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder; or (3) satisfied the definition of “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” provided in 8 CFR 214.11. • During emergency border circumstances, rather than asking specific questions of every noncitizen encountered and processed for expedited removal to elicit whether the noncitizen may have a fear of persecution or an intent to apply for asylum, for those who enter across the southern border and are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, DHS will provide general notice regarding the process for seeking asylum, statutory withholding of removal, or protection under the CAT and will refer a noncitizen for a credible fear interview only if the noncitizen manifests a fear of return, expresses an intention to apply for asylum or protection, or expresses a fear of persecution or torture or a fear of return to his or her country or the country of removal. • The limitation on asylum eligibility will be applied duringcredible fear interviews and reviews, and those who enter across the southern border during emergency border circumstances and are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation will receive a negative credible fear determination with respect to their asylum claims unless there is a significant possibility the noncitizen could demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist. Such noncitizens will thereafter be screened for a reasonable probability of persecution because of a protected ground or torture, a higher standard than that applied to noncitizens in a similar posture under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. The “reasonable probability” standard is defined to mean substantially more than a “reasonable possibility” but somewhat less than more likely than not.

As discussed throughout this IFR, these changes are designed to implement the policies and objectives of the Proclamation by enhancing the Departments’ ability to address historic levels of migration and efficiently process migrants arriving at the southern border during emergency border circumstances.

III. Discussion of the IFR

A. Current Framework

1. Asylum, Statutory Withholding of Removal, and CAT Protection

Asylum is a discretionary benefit that can be granted by the Secretary or the Attorney General if a noncitizen establishes, among other things, that they have experienced past persecution or have a well-founded fear of future persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. INA 208(b)(1)–(2), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(1)–(2) (providing that, unless subject to a mandatory bar, the Secretary or Attorney General “may” grant asylum to refugees); INA 101(a)(42)(A), 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A) (defining “refugee”). As long as they retain their asylee status, noncitizens who are granted asylum (1) cannot be removed or returned to their country of nationality or, if they have no nationality, their last habitual residence, (2) receive employment authorization incident to their status, (3) may be permitted to travel outside of the United States and return with prior consent, and (4) may seek derivative benefits for their spouses or children. INA 208(c)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1158(c)(1); see Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. 523, 536 (2021) (“[A] grant of asylum permits an alien to remain in the United States and to apply for permanent residency after one year[,]” (emphasis omitted) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); 8 CFR 274a.12(a)(5) (employment authorization incident to asylum status); 8 CFR 223.1(b) (allowing for return to the United States after travel with a requisite travel document for a “person who holds . . . asylum status pursuant to section 208 of the Act”); see also 6 U.S.C. 271(b)(3) (transferring asylum functions to DHS); 6 U.S.C. 557 (providing that references to any other officer shall be deemed to refer to the “Secretary” with respect to any transferred function); INA 208(b)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(3) (derivative asylum status).

Asylum applications are generally classified as “affirmative” or “defensive” applications, depending on the agency with which they are filed. If a noncitizen is physically present in the United States, not detained, and not in section 240 removal proceedings, the noncitizen may file an asylum application with USCIS. These applications are “affirmative” filings. Generally, if the noncitizen is in section 240 removal proceedings before an IJ, the noncitizen may apply for asylum before the IJ as a defense to removal. These applications are “defensive” filings.

Noncitizens are eligible for asylum if they have been persecuted or have a well-founded fear of future persecution in their country of nationality or, if they have no nationality, their last habitual residence, on account of one of five protected grounds and are not subject to a bar to eligibility. See generally INA 208, 8 U.S.C. 1158; INA 101(a)(42), 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42). To be granted asylum, eligible noncitizens must also establish that they merit asylum in the exercise of discretion. Id. Noncitizens who are ineligible for a grant of asylum, or who are denied asylum based on the Attorney General’s or the Secretary’s discretion, may qualify for other forms of protection. An application for asylum submitted by a noncitizen in section 240 removal proceedings is also considered an application for statutory withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3). See 8 CFR 1208.3(b), 1208.13(c)(1); see also 8 CFR 1208.16(c), 1208.17.

Statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection preclude removing a noncitizen to any country where the noncitizen would “more likely than not” face persecution or torture, meaning that the noncitizen’s life or freedom would be threatened because of a protected ground or that the noncitizen would be tortured. 8 CFR 1208.16(b)(2), (c)(2). Thus, if a noncitizen establishes that it is more likely than not that their life or freedom would be threatened because of a protected ground, but is denied asylum for some other reason, the noncitizen nonetheless may be entitled to statutory withholding of removal if it is otherwise barred from that form of protection. INA 241(b)(3)(A), 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3)(A); 8 CFR 208.16, 1208.16. Likewise, a noncitizen who establishes that they more likely than not will face torture in their country of removal will qualify for CAT protection. See 8 CFR 208.16(c), 208.17(a), 1208.16(c), 1208.17(a).

In contrast to the more generous benefits available by attaining asylum, statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection do not: (1) prohibit the Government from removing the noncitizen to a third country where the noncitizen would not face the requisite likelihood of persecution or torture (even in the absence of an agreement with that third country); (2) create a path to lawful permanent resident status; or (3) afford the same ancillary benefits, such as derivative protection for family members. See, e.g., Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. at 536 (“distinguishing withholding-only relief from asylum” on the ground that withholding does not preclude the Government from removing the noncitizen to a third country and does not provide the noncitizen any permanent right to remain in the United States); Matter of A–K–, 24 I&N Dec. 275, 279 (BIA 2007) (stating that “the Act does not permit derivative withholding of removal under any circumstances”); INA 208(b)(3)(A), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(3)(A) (statutory provision allowing asylum status to be granted to accompanying or following-to-join spouse or children of a noncitizen granted asylum; no equivalent statutory or regulatory provision for individuals granted withholding or deferral of removal).

2. Expeditious Removal and Screenings in the Credible Fear Process

In the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (“IIRIRA”), Public Law 104–208, div. C, 110 Stat. 3009, 3009–546, Congress established the expedited removal process. The process is applicable to certain noncitizens present or arriving in the United States (and, in the discretion of the Attorney General or the Secretary, certain other designated classes of noncitizens) who are found to be inadmissible under either section 212(a)(6) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(6)(C), which renders inadmissible noncitizens who make certain material misrepresentations, or section 212(a)(7) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(7), which renders inadmissible noncitizens who lack documentation requirements for admission. INA 235(b)(1)(A)(i), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(A)(i). Upon being subject to expedited removal, such noncitizens may be “removed from the United States without further hearing or review unless the [noncitizen] indicates either an intention to apply for asylum . . . or a fear of persecution.” Id.

Congress created a screening process, known as “credible fear” screening, to identify potentially valid claims for asylum by noncitizens in expedited removal proceedings. The Departments have used the same screening process to identify potentially valid claims for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection. If a noncitizen indicates a fear of persecution or torture, a fear of return, or an intention to apply for asylum during the course of the expedited removal process, DHS refers the noncitizen to a USCIS AO to determine whether the noncitizen has a credible fear of persecution or torture in their country of citizenship or removal. INA 235(b)(1)(A)(i), (B), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(A)(i), (B); see also 8 CFR 235.3(b)(4). A noncitizen has a “credible fear of persecution” if “there is a significant basis for accounting the credibility of the statements made by the alien in support of the alien’s claim and such other facts as are known to the officer, that the alien could establish eligibility for asylum.” INA 235(b)(1)(B)(v), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(v). If the AO determines that the noncitizen does not have a credible fear of persecution or torture, the noncitizen may request that an IJ review that determination. See INA 235(b)(1)(B)(iii)(III), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(iii)(III); 8 CFR 208.30(g). If the AO (or an IJ reviewing the AO’s decision) determines that a noncitizen has a credible fear of persecution or torture, USCIS can refer the noncitizen to an immigration court for adjudication of the noncitizen’s claims in section 240 removal proceedings, 8 CFR 208.30(f), 8 CFR 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(B), and the noncitizen may subsequently file a defensive asylum application with the court during those proceedings, see 8 CFR 1240.1(a)(1)(ii). Alternatively, USCIS can retain jurisdiction over the application for asylum for further consideration in an asylum merits interview. See 8 CFR 208.30(f).

During an asylum merits interview, a positive credible fear determination is treated as the asylum application, and strict timelines thereafter govern the applicant’s case before both USCIS and EOIR. See 8 CFR 208.2(a)(1)(ii), 208.3(a)(2), 208.4(b)(2), 208.9(a)(1), (e)(1)–(2), (g)(2), (l), 1204.17. The AO may grant asylum, subject to review within USCIS, where the noncitizen is eligible and warrants a grant as a matter of discretion. 8 CFR 208.14(b). If the noncitizen is not eligible or does not warrant a grant of asylum as a matter of discretion, the AO refers the application to EOIR. 8 CFR 208.14(c)(1). Where USCIS does not grant asylum, the AO’s decision will also include a determination on eligibility for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection based on the record before USCIS. 8 CFR 208.16(a), (c)(4).

For cases referred to EOIR following an asylum merits interview, the written record of the positive credible fear determination serves as the asylum application, 8 CFR 1240.17(e), and the record the AO developed during the asylum merits interview, as supplemented by the parties, serves as the record before the IJ, 8 CFR 1240.17(c), (f)(2)(i)(A)(1), (f)(2)(ii)(B). The IJ reviews applications for asylum de novo and also reviews applications for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection de novo where USCIS found the noncitizen ineligible for such protection. 8 CFR 1240.17(i)(1).

However, where USCIS found the noncitizen eligible for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection, IJs must give effect to USCIS’s eligibility determination unless DHS demonstrates, through evidence or other testimony that specifically pertains to the noncitizen and was not in the record of proceedings for the asylum merits interview, that the noncitizen is not eligible for such protection. 8 CFR 1240.17(j)(2). With a limited exception, DHS may not appeal the grant of any protection for which the AO determined the noncitizen eligible. Id.

3. Lawful Pathways Condition on Asylum Eligibility

On March 20, 2020, the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (“CDC”) issued an order under 42 U.S.C. 265 and 268 suspending the introduction of certain noncitizens from foreign countries or places where the existence of a communicable disease creates a serious danger of the introduction of such disease into the United States and the danger is so increased by the introduction of persons from the foreign country or place that a temporary suspension of such introduction is necessary to protect the public health. 45 The CDC’s Title 42 public health Order was extended multiple times. 46 While the Title 42 public health Order was in effect, noncitizens who did not have proper travel documents were generally not processed into the United States; they were instead expelled to Mexico or to their home countries under the Order’s authority without being processed under the authorities set forth in title 8 of the United States Code, which includes the INA. Circumvention of Lawful Pathways, 88 FR 11704, 11705 (Feb. 23, 2023) (“Circumvention of Lawful Pathways NPRM”). In early 2023, the President announced that the Administration intended to end the public health emergency on May 11, 2023, which would cause the then-operative Title 42 public health Order to end. See id. at 11708.

As the Departments stated in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, absent further action, the end of the Title 42 public health Order was expected to cause encounters with noncitizens seeking to enter the United States at the SWB to rise to or remain at all-time highs—as high as 11,000 migrants daily. 88 FR at 31331, 31315. And many of these individuals would be entitled to remain in the United States pending resolution of their asylum and protection claims. See INA 235(b)(1)(B)(ii), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(ii) (not allowing for removal of those found to have a credible fear pending further consideration of the asylum claim); see also 88 FR at 31363 (noting that “most non-Mexicans processed for expedited removal under Title 8 would likely establish credible fear and remain in the United States for the foreseeable future”). The Departments thus faced a looming urgent situation: absent policy change, the end of the Title 42 public health Order was expected to result in many more migrants crossing the border and asserting claims of fear or seeking protection, which would in turn exceed the border security and immigration systems’ capacity to process migrants in a safe, expeditious, and orderly way. See 88 FR at 31314. To address this expected increase in the number of migrants at the SWB and adjacent coastal borders seeking to enter the United States without authorization, the Departments promulgated the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. See 88 FR 31314.

The Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, which became effective on its public inspection date, May 11, 2023, id., and applies to those who enter during a two-year period, imposes a rebuttable presumption of asylum ineligibility on certain noncitizens who fail to pursue safe, orderly, and lawful processes for entry into the United States or seek protection in another qualifying country through which they traveled. 8 CFR 208.33(a), 1208.33(a). The rebuttable presumption applies to noncitizens who enter the United States from Mexico at the SWB or adjacent coastal borders without documents sufficient for lawful admission where the entry is: (1) between May 11, 2023, and May 11, 2025; (2) subsequent to the end of implementation of the Title 42 public health Order issued on August 2, 2021, and related prior orders issued pursuant to the authorities in 42 U.S.C. 265 and 268 and the implementing regulation at 42 CFR 71.40; and (3) after the noncitizen traveled through a country other than their country of citizenship, nationality, or, if stateless, last habitual residence, that is a party to the Refugee Convention or Refugee Protocol. 8 CFR 208.33(a)(1), 1208.33(a)(1).

The presumption does not apply to UCs or to noncitizens who availed themselves of or were traveling with a family member who availed themselves of certain safe, orderly, and lawful pathways—specifically those who (1) received appropriate authorization to travel to the United States to seek parole, pursuant to a DHS-approved parole process; (2) presented at a POE pursuant to a pre-scheduled time and place or presented at a POE without a pre-scheduled time and place but who can demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that it was not possible to access or use the DHS scheduling system due to language barrier, illiteracy, significant technical failure, or other ongoing and serious obstacle; or (3) sought asylum or other protection in a country through which the noncitizen traveled and received a final decision denying that application. 8 CFR 208.33(a)(2). Noncitizens may also overcome the presumption by demonstrating by a preponderance of the evidence that “exceptionally compelling circumstances exist.” 8 CFR 208.33(a)(3)(i), 1208.33(a)(3)(i). Such circumstances necessarily exist where, at the time of entry, the noncitizen or a family member with whom the noncitizen is traveling: (1) faced an acute medical emergency; (2) faced an imminent and extreme threat to life or safety, such as an imminent threat of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder; or (3) was a victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons under 8 CFR 214.11(a). 8 CFR 208.33(a)(3)(i)(A)-(C), (ii), 1208.33(a)(3)(i)(A)-(C). A noncitizen presumed ineligible for asylum under the rule may still apply for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection and thus may not be removed to a country where it is more likely than not that they will be persecuted because of a protected ground or tortured.

The condition on asylum eligibility in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule (“Lawful Pathways condition”) applies to asylum applications before USCIS and EOIR. 8 CFR 208.13(f), 1208.13(f). It also applies during credible fear screenings. 8 CFR 208.33(b), 1208.33(b). Noncitizens subject to expedited removal who indicate a fear of persecution or an intention to apply for asylum are currently first screened to assess whether the rebuttable presumption applies and, if so, whether the noncitizen is able to rebut the presumption. 8 CFR 208.33(b). If the AO

46 See Public Health Determination and Order Regarding Suspending the Right to Introduce Certain Persons From Countries Where a Quarantinable Communicable Disease Exists, 87 FR 19941, 19941–42 (Apr. 6, 2022) (describing the CDC’s recent Title 42 public health Orders, which “suspended the right to introduce certain persons into the United States from countries or places where the quarantinable communicable disease exists in order to protect the public health from an increased risk of the introduction of COVID–19”).
See rebuttable presumption and no rebuttal. On the other hand, if the AO determines that the noncitizen has established a reasonable possibility of persecution or torture with respect to the identified country or countries of removal. See 8 CFR 1208.33(b)(1)(ii). If the IJ determines that the noncitizen has made a sufficient showing that the rebuttable presumption does not apply to them or that they can rebut the presumption, and that the noncitizen has established a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum, statutory withholding of removal, or CAT protection, the IJ issues a positive credible fear finding and the case proceeds under existing procedures. See 8 CFR 208.33(b)(2)(vi). If the IJ determines that the noncitizen is covered by the rebuttable presumption and it has not been rebutted, but the noncitizen has established a reasonable possibility of persecution or torture, the IJ issues a positive credible fear finding and DHS will issue an NTA to commence section 240 removal proceedings and may not refer the case to the asylum merits interview process. 8 CFR 208.33(b)(2)(ii).

Where a noncitizen requests review by an IJ, the IJ reviews the negative credible fear finding de novo. See 8 CFR 1208.33(b)(1). If the IJ determines that the noncitizen has made a sufficient showing that the rebuttable presumption does not apply to them or that they can rebut the presumption, and that the noncitizen has established a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum, statutory withholding of removal, or CAT protection, the IJ issues a positive credible fear finding and the case proceeds under existing procedures. See 8 CFR 208.33(b)(2)(vi)(A), 1208.33(b)(2)(i). If the IJ determines that the noncitizen is covered by the rebuttable presumption and it has not been rebutted, but the noncitizen has established a reasonable possibility of persecution or torture, the IJ issues a positive credible fear finding and DHS will issue an NTA to commence section 240 removal proceedings. 8 CFR 208.33(b)(2)(v)(B), 1208.33(b)(2)(ii). And finally, if the IJ issues a negative credible fear determination, the case is returned to DHS for removal of the noncitizen. See 8 CFR 208.33(b)(2)(v)(C).

The makeup of border crossers has significantly changed, expanding from Mexican single adults to single adults and families from the northern Central American countries, and now to single adults and families from throughout the hemisphere (and beyond). Those encountered also have been more likely to seek asylum and other forms of relief or protection, straining the Departments’ capacity to process individuals through expedited removal.50

In the early 2010s, U.S. Border Patrol (“USBP”) encounters at the SWB reached modern lows, averaging fewer than 400,000 per year from 2011 to 2018. 88 FR at 11708. This followed decades during which annual USBP encounters routinely numbered in the millions; however, the overall share of those who were processed for expedited removal and claimed a fear never exceeded 2 percent until 2011. Id. at 11708, 11716. Despite these historically low encounter numbers, the Departments faced significant challenges in 2014 due to an unprecedented surge in migration by UCs and in 2016 due to a surge in family units at the border—demographics that present unique challenges to their vulnerability.51

From FY 2017 to FY 2019, however, encounters between the POEs along the SWB more than doubled, to more than 850,000, and—following a significant drop during the beginning of the COVID–19 pandemic—continued to increase in FY 2021 and FY 2022.52 In FY 2021, USBP encounters between POEs along the SWB reached a level not seen since the early 2000s—over 1.6 million.53 In FY 2022, encounters at the border accounted for roughly 42 percent from FY 2021 through March 2024, including roughly 51 percent of FY 2024 encounters through March 2024. Id.54 For noncitizens encountered at the SWB from FY 2014 to FY 2019 who were placed in expedited removal proceedings, roughly 6 percent of Mexican nationals made fear claims that were referred to USCIS for determination compared to roughly 57 percent of people from northern Central America and 90 percent of all other nationalities. OHSS analysis of Enforcement Lifecycle data as of December 31, 2021; see also Id. at 11708 n.37.

SWB reached a new high-water mark, with total USBP encounters exceeding 2.2 million.54 FY 2023 saw a slight drop, but USBP encounters remained high—over 2.0 million.55 By early 2023, while the Title 42 public health Order was in place, total encounters at the SWB—referring to the number of times U.S. officials encountered noncitizens attempting to cross the SWB without authorization to do so either between or at POEs—had reached all-time highs.56 This dramatic increase in encounters has coincided with a substantial and—setting aside the period of time when the Title 42 public health Order was in effect—persistent increase in the number of noncitizens making fear claims in recent years. See 88 FR at 11716.57 In 2019—prior to the implementation of the Title 42 public health Order—44 percent of noncitizens encountered at the SWB placed in expedited removal proceedings claimed fear, resulting in 98,000 credible fear screenings. Id. The number of fear claims returned to these historically high levels after the Title 42 public health Order ended. From May 2023 through March 2024, approximately 54 percent of noncitizens encountered at and between SWB POEs who were subject to expedited removal claimed fear (approximately 169,000 fear claims out of 315,000 noncitizens processed for expedited removal, excluding cases processed for expedited removal but reprocessed into other dispositions by ICE).58 These high numbers of both encounters and fear claims combine to further compound the significant stress on the immigration system.

Much of this growth in encounters was driven by nationalities that DHS had never before encountered in large numbers at the border—including nationals of countries such as Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Haiti, Nicaragua, Peru, and Venezuela, as well as migrants from Eastern Hemisphere countries.59 Because of this, DHS has had to undertake a focused diplomatic effort, working closely with the Department of State, to enter into commitments with countries to facilitate the return of their nationals. However, despite this concerted effort, it remains difficult for DHS to repatriate nationals of some of these countries who do not establish a legal basis to remain in the United States, including those from the Eastern Hemisphere—substantially limiting DHS’s ability to impose consequences on those nationals.60

Overall, countries other than Mexico and the northern Central American countries of El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras accounted for 43 percent of total SWB encounters from January 2021 to March 2024—including 51 percent of total SWB encounters in FY 2023 and in the first two quarters of FY 2024—up from 10 percent from FY 2014 to December 2020.61 Encounters of Mexican nationals have fallen to 29 percent of total SWB encounters during this time frame—an enormous change from historical trends that has sweeping ramifications for the border and immigration systems, which are detailed below.62

The increase in migration at the SWB is consistent with global and regional trends. Over the past three years, migration around the world has reached levels not seen since World War II.63 The Western Hemisphere is no exception and has been facing historic levels of migration that have severely strained the immigration systems of countries throughout the region.64 There is a growing consensus within the region that this shared challenge cannot be solved without collective action—a consensus reflected by the 22 countries that have supported the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection, which proposes a comprehensive approach to managing migration throughout the region.65
As it prepared for the return to title 8 processing of all noncitizens, DHS led a comprehensive, all-government planning and preparation effort that lasted more than 18 months. This included record deployments of personnel, infrastructure, and resources to support DHS’s frontline personnel at a substantial cost to other DHS operations. This effort also included the development and implementation of policy measures, including the joint DHS and DOJ Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and complementary measures, which were critically important components of DHS preparations to manage the anticipated significant influx of migrants associated with the end of the Title 42 public health Order’s application at the border. And the United States Government’s efforts were complemented by a range of measures taken by foreign partners in the region, such as Mexico’s independent decision to continue to accept the return of certain non-Mexican migrants after May 11, 2023, and campaigns by Colombia and Panama to attack smuggling networks operating in the Darién Gap.

The Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule has strengthened the consequences in place for those who cross the border irregularly and is a critical component of the Government’s regional strategy. DHS has also put in place complementary measures to streamline expedited removal processing to more quickly apply consequences to those who fail to use lawful pathways. These measures include holding noncitizens processed for expedited removal for longer, increasing the pendency of their credible fear interviews, expanding the capacity to train and prepare additional staff temporarily detailed as AOs to conduct credible fear interviews. These measures, combined with existing processes and resources and work with regional and international partners to disrupt irregular migration and smuggling networks, seek to form a comprehensive framework for managing migratory flows to the border—one that seeks to disincentivize noncitizens from putting their lives in the hands of callous smugglers by crossing the SWB between POEs and to incentivize noncitizens to use lawful, safe, and orderly pathways and processes instead.

Without the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and complementary measures, DHS assesses that irregular migration at the border would be substantially higher today. DHS saw evidence of very high levels of irregular migration in the days leading up to the end of the Title 42 public health Order on May 11, 2023. A historic surge in migration culminated with what were then the highest recorded encounter levels in U.S. history over the days immediately preceding May 11, which placed a significant strain on DHS’s operational capacity at the border. Encounters between POEs almost doubled from an average of approximately 4,900 per day the week ending April 11, 2023, to an average of approximately 9,500 per day the week ending May 11, 2023, including an average of approximately 10,000 encounters immediately preceding the termination of the Title 42 public health Order (from May 8 to May 11).

The sharp increase in encounters between POEs during the 30 days preceding May 11 represented the largest month-over-month increase in almost two decades—since January 2004. As a consequence of the elevated flows USBP experienced in the days leading up to the end of the Title 42 public health Order, USBP saw a steep increase in the numbers of noncitizens in custody, leading to significant operational challenges. From May 8 to 11, 2023, USBP’s daily in-custody average was approximately 27,000 noncitizens, with a single-day peak of approximately 28,500 on May 10—well above its holding capacity at that time of approximately 18,500. During this same time frame, eight out of nine SWB sectors were over their holding capacity—with four sectors (El Centro, El Paso, Rio Grande Valley, and Yuma) at more than 50 percent over their holding capacity and one sector (Tucson) at more than two-and-a-half times over its holding capacity.

This record number of encounters between POEs severely strained DHS operations and resources, as well as the resources of other Federal Government agencies, local communities, and nongovernmental organizations (“NGOs”). CBP redirected limited resources from other mission needs—in particular, legitimate travel and trade operations, the volume of which by that time had surpassed pre-pandemic levels—to focus on processing apprehended noncitizens. Overcrowding in CBP facilities increased the potential for health and safety risks to noncitizens, Government personnel, and contract support staff. Such risks were exacerbated by an increase in the average time in custody, which generally occurs when there are large numbers of noncitizens in custody who must be processed. To manage these conditions, USBP sectors redirected personnel from the field to perform tasks for noncitizens in custody, including processing, transporting, and escorting noncitizens. This, in turn, decreased USBP’s ability to respond to noncitizens avoiding detection, other agency calls for assistance, and noncitizens in distress.

The surge in encounters between POEs immediately preceding the end of the Title 42 public health Order also led... to significant challenges for local border communities. For example, in the days leading up to May 11, 2023, local community resources in El Paso, Texas, were quickly overwhelmed as the number of noncitizens arriving in the United States surpassed the city’s capacity. In anticipation of an influx of noncitizens arriving to the city—an influx that ultimately materialized—the city declared a state of emergency, as more than 1,000 noncitizens were sleeping on the sidewalks and left without shelter. Similarly, the cities of Brownsville and Laredo, Texas, declared states of emergency to allow them to seek additional resources to bolster their capacities. The surge in encounters also placed strain on interior cities. In May 2023, for instance, New York’s Governor declared a State Disaster Emergency.

Since their implementation in May 2023, the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and complementary measures have helped DHS to better manage migratory flows. Between May 12, 2023, and March 31, 2024, CBP placed into expedited removal more than 970 individuals encountered at and between POEs each day on average, and USCIS conducted a record number of credible fear interviews (more than 152,000) resulting from such cases. This is more interviews from SWB encounters at and between POEs during the span of ten and a half months than in any full fiscal year prior to 2023, and more than twice as many as the annual average from FY 2010 to FY 2019. On average, since May 12, 2023, USCIS has completed approximately 3,300 cases each week, more than double its average weekly completed cases from FY 2014 to FY 2019. In addition, in FY 2023, IJs conducted over 38,000 credible fear and reasonable fear reviews, the highest figure on record since at least 2000.

These efforts have significantly reduced the median time to process credible fear cases. Since May 12, 2023, the median time to refer noncitizens claiming a fear for credible fear interviews decreased by 77 percent from its historical average, from 13 days in the FY 2014 to FY 2019 pre-pandemic period to 3 days in the four weeks ending March 31, 2024; for those who receive negative fear determinations, the median time from encounter to removal, in the same time frames, decreased by 85 percent from 73 days to 11 days.

The increase in referrals into expedited removal proceedings, combined with the streamlining of the process, has had tangible results. From May 12, 2023, to March 31, 2024, DHS removed more than 662,000 individuals—more removals than in any full fiscal year since 2013 and an indication that the increased efficiencies gained through these measures have enabled DHS to impose immigration consequences when individuals do not establish a legal basis to remain in the United States. Over the first six months immediately following May 12, 2023, DHS saw a significant decrease in border encounters between POEs. After peaking at 9,700 per day in the seven days just before the end of the Title 42 public health Order, daily SWB encounters between POEs decreased by 45 percent to an average of 5,200 per day for the period from May 12, 2023, to November 30, 2023. While this months-long trend included variability over shorter periods, border encounters between POEs remained below the levels projected to occur in the absence of the Historic processing times are based on OHSS Enforcement Lifecycle data as of December 31, 2023; post-May 12 estimates are based on OHSS analysis of operational CBP, ICE, USCIS, and DOJ/EOIR data downloaded from UIP on April 2, 2024. Encounter-to-removal cases include noncitizens removed after being placed in expedited removal proceedings, claiming fear, and receiving a negative fear determination or an administrative closure that is not referred to EOIR. Comparisons to the pandemic period are not relevant because many noncitizens who would have been referred for expedited removal processing were instead expelled under title 42 authority.

Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and complementary measures have yielded demonstrable results, the resources provided to the Departments still have not kept pace with irregular migration. After months of relatively lower encounter levels between POEs following the changes put in place after May 11, 2023, encounter levels increased through the fall of 2023, and December 2023 saw the highest levels of encounters between POEs in history, including a surge in which border encounters between POEs exceeded 10,000 for three consecutive days and averaged more than 8,000 a day for the month. That surge in migration was focused increasingly on western areas of the border—California and Arizona—that had not been the focal point of migration over the prior two years, and in areas that are geographically remote and challenging to respond to. For instance, the Tucson sector’s average full-year encounter total for the pre-pandemic period (FY 2014 to FY 2019) was approximately 62,000; by contrast, in November and December of 2023, the sector recorded approximately 64,000 and 80,000 encounters, respectively. And while the number of encounters between POEs since December 2023 has decreased, consistent with seasonal migration flows and as a result of increased enforcement, they still remain at historically high levels—USBP encounters from January 2024 to March 2024 are just 5 percent below the levels... reached during the same months in 2023,\textsuperscript{103} while some USBP sectors, such as Tucson and San Diego, have seen increases of 83 percent and 62 percent, respectively, from the second quarter of FY 2023, and Tucson is on pace for an all-time high number of annual encounters.\textsuperscript{104}

Since the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order, then, it has become increasingly clear that DHS’s ability to process individuals encountered at the SWB under applicable title 8 authorities—including, critically, to deliver timely consequences to a meaningful proportion of those who do not establish a legal basis to remain in the United States—is significantly limited by the lack of resources and tools available to the Departments. In response to the record high levels of encounters between POEs in December 2023, DHS had to take extraordinary steps to shift personnel and resources to the affected sectors: CBP curtailed or suspended operations at a number of POEs, and, just before December 25, 2023, CBP reassigned 246 officers to support USBP operations. As part of these extraordinary measures: vehicular traffic through the Eagle Pass, Texas, POE was suspended on November 27, 2023; the POE in Lukeville, Arizona, was closed on December 4, 2023; rail operations at POEs in El Paso and Eagle Pass, Texas, were suspended on December 18, 2023;\textsuperscript{105} the Morley Gate POE in Nogales, Arizona, which was closed due to construction and slated to be reopened in November 2023, delayed its reopening;\textsuperscript{106} and operations at Pedestrian West, part of the San Ysidro POE in San Diego, California, were suspended on December 9, 2023.\textsuperscript{107} On January 4, 2024, once the volume of migrants had diminished and CBP officers were able to return to normal duties, port operations in these locations resumed.\textsuperscript{108}

The decision to close POEs was not one taken lightly. The United States Government fully understands the impacts of such closures on local communities on both sides of the border, both socially and economically.\textsuperscript{109} Closing international POEs is a measure of last resort, and one that DHS was compelled to take in order to reassign its resources to support frontline agents in a challenging moment.

In addition to concerted efforts to strengthen and maximize consequences, including through new regulations, the United States Government has engaged intensively with the Government of Mexico to identify coordinated measures both countries could take, as partners, to address irregular migration. During the period before and after the December surge, the United States Government and the Government of Mexico held numerous talks at the highest levels of government to address migration. For example, President Biden and President of Mexico Andrés Manuel López Obrador spoke on December 21, 2023, and February 3, 2024.\textsuperscript{110} During their conversation on December 21, the presidents agreed that additional enforcement actions were urgently needed so that the POEs that were temporarily closed could reopen.\textsuperscript{111} In Departments cannot address all of these factors in one rule, but assess that this rule will significantly increase the ability to deliver timely decisions and timely consequences at the border within current resources, combating perceptions and messaging to the contrary.

Encounters between POEs in January 2024 were substantially lower than December 2023 encounters, consistent with historic seasonal trends, and encounters in January 2022 and January 2023. In February and March 2024, encounter levels increased from the levels in January but remained significantly lower than in December 2023. Overall, from January 1 to March 31, 2024, encounters between POEs were 5 percent lower than during the same months in 2023 and 22 percent lower than those in 2022. However, despite the overall decrease in encounters since December 2023, specific areas of the border—in particular USBP’s San Diego and Tucson Sectors—have experienced localized increases in encounters that have, at times, strained DHS’s holding capacity, adversely impacted local operations, and limited DHS’s ability to swiftly impose consequences on individuals who do not establish a legal basis to remain in the United States. During the last week of April 2024, USBP’s San Diego Sector encountered an average of more than 1,400 migrants each day, including many migrants from countries outside the Western Hemisphere who are more difficult to process. The USBP Tucson Sector is experiencing similar, unprecedented migratory flows and consequent challenges. This high concentration of encounters, including comparatively large numbers of migrants who are hard to remove, in a focused geographic area places particular strain on the immigration enforcement system. This is particularly true in areas of the border—such as San Diego—where infrastructure-related capacity constraints limit DHS’s ability to swiftly impose consequences at the border. These factors resulted in USBP’s main processing facility in San Diego reaching over 200 percent capacity in April 2024, despite a recent expansion of this facility.

Since January 2024, the United States and Mexico have continued to hold regular, high-level conversations, as partners, to continue to deepen their collaboration, identify emerging trends, and coordinate additional steps by both countries to address changing flows. These meetings have informed operational deployments by both governments, including the coordinated response to the shift in migratory flows to the San Diego and Tucson sectors. This extensive ongoing collaboration was reflected by another bilateral engagement between President Biden and President López-Obrador on April 28, 2024, after which the presidents released a joint statement in which they “ordered their national security teams to work together to immediately implement concrete measures to significantly reduce irregular border crossings while protecting human rights.”

Since then, the United States and the Government of Mexico have worked together, cooperatively, to increase enforcement. But these efforts—while significant—are likely to be less effective over time. Smuggling networks are adaptable, responding to changes put in place. Despite their immediate effectiveness, such changes are not enough—and will almost certainly have diminished effect over time. The reality is that the scale of irregular migration over the past two years has strained the funding, personnel, and infrastructure of both countries’ immigration enforcement systems in ways that have, at times, contributed to high encounters between POEs.

2. Need for These Measures

DHS projects that, absent the policy changes being promulgated here, irregular migration will once again increase, and that any disruption in Mexican enforcement will only exacerbate that trend. Without the Proclamation and this rule, the anticipated increase in migration will, in turn, worsen significant strains on resources already experienced by the Departments and communities across the United States.

Current trends and historical data indicate that migration and displacement in the Western Hemisphere will continue to increase as a result of violence, persecution, poverty, human rights abuses, the impacts of climate change, and other factors. The case of migration through the Darién jungle between Colombia and Panama is illustrative. For example, between January and April, 2024, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (“UNHCR”) tracked 139,000 irregular entries, up from 128,000 for the same months in 2023 and a seven-fold increase over migration levels during that period in 2022. The number of migrants crossing the Darién will only further increase the pressure on Mexico at its southern border and on the United States at the SWB.

Past unprecedented migration surges bolster the Departments’ views and the need for this rulemaking. As described in detail in Section III.B.1 of this preamble, migration trends have been steadily increasing in scope and complexity, featuring increasingly varied nationalities and demographic groups. This has been true even as DHS has experienced sustained levels of historically high encounter levels. Over the past two years, an increasing proportion of total CBP encounters at the SWB has been composed of families and UCs, and DHS has seen record flows of migrants from countries outside of northern Central America. These international migration trends are the result of exceedingly complex factors and are shaped by, among other things, family and community networks, labor markets, environmental and security-related push factors, and rapidly evolving criminal smuggling networks. The United States Government is working to address these root causes of migration and to abate adverse effects from unprecedented levels of irregular migration, including through working closely with partner countries across the Western Hemisphere. But these efforts will take time to have significant impacts and will not alleviate the stress that the border security and immigration systems are currently experiencing, as described in the Proclamation.

The Departments’ views and the need for this rulemaking are further supported by projections developed from ongoing work by DHS’s Office of Homeland Security Statistics ("OHSS"), which leads an interagency working group that produces encounter projections used for operational planning, policy development, and short-term budget planning. OHSS uses a mixed-method approach that combines a statistical predictive model with subject matter expertise intended to provide informed estimates of future migration flow and trends. The mixed-methods approach blends multiple types of models through an ensemble approach of model averaging. The model includes encounter data disaggregated by country and demographic characteristics, data on apprehensions of third-country nationals by Mexican enforcement agencies, and economic data. DHS uses the encounter projection to generate a range of planning models, which can include “low” planning models that are based on the lower bound of the 95 percent forecast interval, “moderate” planning models that are based on the upper bound of the 68 percent forecast interval, and “high” planning models based on the upper bound of the 95 percent forecast interval. These planning models account for changes in effectiveness of current enforcement and lawful migration processes.

Because of the significant time and operational cost it takes to redeploy resources, DHS is generally conservative in its enforcement planning. 88 FR at 31328. As a result, it focuses on its higher planning models as it projects future resource deployments to avoid using more optimistic scenarios that could leave enforcement efforts badly under-resourced. Id. The current internal projection, based on this robust modeling methodology, suggests that encounters may once again reach extremely elevated levels in the weeks to come, averaging in the three months from July to September, 2024, in the range of approximately 3,900 to approximately 6,700 encounters at and between POEs per day, not including an additional 1,450 noncitizens per day who are expected to be encountered at POEs after making appointments through the CBP One app. The Departments believe the policies in this rule are justified in light of high levels of migration that have ultimately proved persistent even in the face of new policies that have resulted in processing migrants with record efficiency, as evidenced by the migration patterns witnessed in December 2023. Current sustained, high encounter rates exceed the border security and immigration systems’ capacity to effectively and safely process, detain, and remove, as appropriate, all migrants who are encountered. This is generally true when considering total encounters across the entire SWB, and even more the case when specific sectors along the border are targeted by smuggling organizations with focused localized surges in encounters—as has been happening since the late fall in Tucson, Arizona, which accounted for 35 percent of SWB encounters between POEs in the second quarter of FY 2024, up from 18 percent in FY 2023 and 13 percent in FY 2022.

Despite the fact that the average of 4,400 daily encounters between POEs in the second quarter of FY 2024 is below the highs experienced in the days immediately preceding the end of the Title 42 public health Order and in December 2023, daily encounter numbers remain sufficiently high—especially in the locations where encounters have been extremely elevated, such as California and Arizona—that the numbers significantly impact the operational flexibility required to process individuals in a timely and consequent manner.

When capacity is strained like this in specific locations along the border, it becomes even more difficult for the Departments to deliver timely decisions and timely consequences. At increased levels of encounters and without a change in policy, most non-Mexicans processed for expedited removal under title 8 would likely establish a credible fear and remain in the United States for the foreseeable future despite the fact that most of them will not ultimately be granted asylum, assuming results are similar to historic rates,\textsuperscript{139} a scenario that would likely continue to incentivize an increasing number of migrants to journey to the United States and further increase the likelihood of sustained high encounter rates.

Even in times with sustained lower encounter volumes, such as between 2011 and 2017, the Departments experienced challenging situations, including the first surge in UCs in 2014, that severely strained the United States Government’s capacity.\textsuperscript{135} Surges in encounters at the southern border—both at and between ports of entry—are now occurring more frequently and at higher magnitudes, and featuring more diverse demographics and nationalities than ever before.\textsuperscript{136} These surges affect more demographics and nationalities than ever before.\textsuperscript{136} These surges affect more

Thus while CBP’s apprehension of 402,000 noncitizens between POEs in the second quarter of FY 2024 is slightly lower than the 424,000 observed in FY 2023 and 518,000 in FY 2022, it is almost four times as high as the pre-pandemic second-quarter average for FY 2014 through FY 2019, and with the exceptions of FY 2022 and FY 2023 the highest second-quarter count recorded since FY 2001. Even with the downturn between January and March, 2024, the high volume of encounters and challenges at the border still mean that most noncitizens processed by USCBP were released from custody into the United States (including noncitizens enrolled in an ICE Alternatives to Detention program and those paroled by the Office of Field Operations). \textsuperscript{134} Since May 12, 2023, 60 percent of non-Mexican noncitizen SWB encounters (at and between POEs) processed for expedited removal who have been referred to EOIR have been referred to EOIR for immigration proceedings. OHSS analysis of data downloaded from UIP on April 2, 2024. But based on historic (pre-pandemic) data, only 18 percent of non-Mexican noncitizens processed for expedited removal that are referred to EOIR result in an individual being granted relief or protection from removal once the case is completed. CBP sectors along the border, disrupt operations more quickly, and affect readiness in other critical areas as DHS diverts resources, including front-line agents, from other urgent tasks and geographic areas.\textsuperscript{137} These actions, in turn, impact other critical mission sets, including processing lawful trade and travel at POEs.\textsuperscript{138} DHS continues to lack the necessary funding and resources to deliver timely consequences to the majority of noncitizens encountered given the increased level of encounters it is experiencing at the SWB.\textsuperscript{139} On August 10, 2023, the Administration submitted to Congress a request for $2.2 billion in supplemental funding for border operations, including $1.4 billion for CBP and $714 million for ICE for border management and enforcement and an additional $416 million for counter-fentanyl efforts.\textsuperscript{140} On October 20, 2023, the Administration submitted to Congress a second request for supplemental funding for DHS that would provide funding to enhance enforcement and processing, procure and operationalize needed technologies, and hire additional personnel.\textsuperscript{141} This funding would further support critical border enforcement efforts, including:

\begin{itemize}
  \item An additional 1,300 Border Patrol Agents to work alongside the 20,200 agents proposed in the President’s FY 2024 budget request, as well as 300 Border Patrol Processing Coordinators and support staff;\textsuperscript{142}
  \item An additional 1,600 AOIs and associated support staff to process migrant claims, which would provide USCIS with the critical resources\textsuperscript{143} needed to expand its current credible fear interview capacity and support timely processing of those placed in expedited removal;
  \item An expansion of detention beds and ICE removal flight funding to sustain the current significantly increased use of expedited removal, provide necessary surge capacity, and allow DHS to process more expeditiously noncitizens who cross the SWB unlawfully and swiftly remove those without a legal basis to remain in the United States.\textsuperscript{144}
\end{itemize}

On January 31, 2024, DHS published a notice in the USCS for Fiscal Year 2024, April 1, 2024, that adjusted the fees to fully recover costs and maintain adequate service. See U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services Fee Schedule and Changes to Certain Other Immigration Benefit Request Requirements, 89 FR 6194, 6194 (Jan. 31, 2024); U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services Fee Schedule and Changes to Certain Other Immigration Benefit Request Requirements; Correction, 89 FR 20101 (Mar. 21, 2024) (making corrections). Because there is no fee required to file an asylum application or for protection screenings, 8 CFR 106.2(a)(28), and because Congress has not provided other funds to pay for the operating expenses of the Asylum Division, fees generated from other immigration applications and petitions must be used to pay for these expenses. See INA 286(m), 8 U.S.C. 1356(m). While the new fee rule does provide for increased funding for the Refugee, Asylum, and International Operations Directorate, keeping pace with USCIS’s protection screening and affirmative asylum workloads requires additional funding, as reflected in the President’s FY 2025 Budget. Raising fees on other applications and petitions to cover the $755 million that would be required to hire and support the additional 1,600 AOIs called for in the President’s 2025 FY Budget would impose a burden on other filers.

In early February 2024, a bipartisan group of Senators proposed reforms of the country’s asylum laws that would have provided new authorities to significantly streamline and speed up immigration enforcement proceedings and adjudications for individuals encountered at the border, including those who are seeking protection, while preserving principles of fairness and humane treatment. Critically, the proposal included nearly $20 billion in additional resources for DHS, DOJ, and other departments to implement those new authorities, including resources for:

- Over 1,500 new CBP personnel, including Border Patrol Agents and CBP Officers;
- Over 4,300 new AOs, as well as USCIS staff to facilitate timely and fair decisions;
- 100 additional IJ teams to help reduce the asylum caseload backlog and adjudicate cases more quickly;
- Shelter and critical services for newcomers in U.S. cities and States; and
- 1,200 new ICE personnel for functions including enforcement and removals.

However, Congress failed to move forward with this bipartisan legislative proposal. It also failed to pass the emergency supplemental funding requests that the Administration submitted. Although Congress did ultimately enact an FY 2024 appropriations bill for DHS, the funding falls significantly short of what DHS requires to deliver timely consequences and avoid large-scale releases pending section 240 removal proceedings. For example, the bill does not provide the resources necessary for DHS to refer the majority of noncitizens encountered by USBP who are amenable to expedited removal into such processing, resulting in large-scale releases pending section 240 removal proceedings based on current encounter numbers. Such releases, in turn, have significant impacts on communities and contribute to future migration by incentivizing potential migrants to travel to the United States with the belief that, even if initially detained, they will ultimately be released to live and work in the United States for long periods of time. Absent the Proclamation and this rule, these harmful results are especially likely given the circumstances described in the Proclamation.

The FY 2024 appropriations provided some additional funding for DHS above its request, including for additional Border Patrol Agents and a higher level of ICE detention beds than was previously appropriated. Although this increase is helpful, there are a number of ways in which the FY 2024 budget falls short of what DHS needs to respond to the current elevated levels of migration. For example, the FY 2024 appropriations failed to fund the salary increase set across the Federal Government by the Office of Management and Budget (“OMB”), effectively reducing salary funding for the entirety of the appropriations-funded DHS workforce. This reduction will limit the availability of overtime to respond to surges in irregular migration and may require difficult operational decisions during the closing months of the fiscal year, which is historically a busier period for such migration. The appropriations also did not provide sufficient funding to maintain the temporary processing facilities needed to hold migrants in custody. Further, the funds for hiring additional personnel were restricted to the current fiscal year rather than being provided as multi-year funds as requested; given the length of the hiring process, DHS will not be able to realize the increases in personnel envisioned by the legislation before the funding expires.

All of these factors, taken together, mean that under the current appropriations law, DHS will, at best, be able only to sustain most of its current operations, resulting in an operating capacity that already experiences strain during times of high migration levels; this will, in turn, reduce DHS’s ability to maximize the delivery of timely consequences for those without a lawful basis to remain. Additionally, DHS will not be able to expand capacity along the border or increase its ability to deliver consequences through referrals in expedited removal. Instead, DHS may actually need to reduce capacity in some key areas, including by closing critical temporary processing facilities and pulling USBP agents away from the frontline to undertake processing and tasks related to custody. Thus, while DHS has made significant progress toward a migration strategy focused on enforcement, deterrence, encouragement of the use of lawful pathways, and diplomacy, a lack of needed resources and tools hampers DHS’s current ability to manage the unprecedented flow of hemispheric migration, and the Immigration-related resource challenges are not unique to front-line border officials. The immigration removal continuum—from apprehension, processing, and inspection to protection interviews and removal—is hampered by a lack of sufficient funding, resources, and tools at every stage.\(^\text{155}\) EOIR is underfunded, without sufficient resources to address the backlog of over 2.78 million cases that were pending in the immigration courts at the end of the first quarter of FY 2024.\(^\text{156}\) This under-resourcing has contributed to the growth of this backlog; in FY 2023, IJs completed more cases than they ever had before in a single year, but more than twice as many cases were received by the immigration courts as were completed.\(^\text{157}\) The FY 2024 budget creates even greater strains on EOIR. EOIR received $844 million this fiscal year,\(^\text{158}\) a cut of $16 million from FY 2023.\(^\text{159}\) EOIR’s budget was also cut $94.3 million from its inflation-adjusted funding requirements (referred to as “Current Services”).\(^\text{160}\) As a result of the significant budgetary gap, EOIR will necessarily be required to reduce the Federal and contract labor force that has been supporting its immigration courts nationwide and cut spending to technological initiatives. Specifically, EOIR has identified a need to cut 200 of its authorized Federal positions and is identifying areas in which it can make cuts to contracts, including those supporting the Office of Information Technology, with the least amount of impact on operations.

Similarly, the USCIS backlog of affirmative asylum cases stands at over 1.16 million and is growing.\(^\text{161}\) USCIS does not have enough AOs to keep pace with the number of individuals who could be referred for credible fear interviews at the border, much less keep pace with the number of individuals who cross unlawfully and counter fentanyl requirements and $9.2 billion for FEMA’s Disaster Relief Fund and Nonprofit Security Grant Program. Notably, the Administration’s border supplemental request includes funding to build capacity in the areas of border security, immigration enforcement, and counter fentanyl. DHS strongly supports the additional $19 billion in funding requested in the FY 2025 budget for the purpose of building and maintaining the Federal labor force that has been supporting its immigration courts nationwide and cut spending to technological initiatives. Specifically, EOIR has identified a need to cut 200 of its authorized Federal positions and is identifying areas in which it can make cuts to contracts, including those supporting the Office of Information Technology, with the least amount of impact on operations.

The TCOs operating in the region, and the migrants they prey upon who intend to make the dangerous journey north, have taken notice of this situation. They understand that when the capacity of DHS to quickly process individuals at the border is strained, DHS is limited in its ability to deliver timely consequences. Because of these resource limitations, individuals are more likely than not to be released to pursue a years-long immigration court process during which, beginning 180 days after applying for asylum, they may be authorized to work.\(^\text{162}\) These smuggling organizations have built a multi-billion-dollar industry, featuring online marketing campaigns to spread misinformation and sophisticated logistics networks designed to quickly funnel migrants to the parts of the border where DHS capacity is lower.\(^\text{163}\)

While the emergency measures instituted by the Proclamation are in effect, the Departments will put in place extraordinary procedures to more quickly process individuals encountered at the southern border, reducing the time noncitizens spend in DHS facilities. The specific measures introduced by this rule are designed to further streamline DHS processes at the border so that DHS can more quickly deliver meaningful consequences to more individuals who cross unlawfully or without authorization within the resource and operational constraints that have limited DHS capacity to date.

Under this rule, while emergency border circumstances persist, the way noncitizens are processed, their eligibility for asylum, and the way in which their eligibility for protection is assessed, will change in three ways. First, during emergency border circumstances, those who enter the United States across the southern border and who are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation will be ineligible for asylum unless they demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist. As discussed in Section III.B.3.a of this preamble, the Departments expect that applying the limitation on asylum eligibility will encourage noncitizens to make an appointment to present at the SWB, take advantage of other lawful migration pathways, or not undertake the dangerous journey north to begin with.

Second, this rule will reduce the time it takes to process individuals placed in expedited removal at the border by changing the way CBP immigration officers identify and refer noncitizens for credible fear interviews. Under current title 8 procedures, noncitizens encountered at the border and processed for expedited removal are provided lengthy advisals regarding the credible fear and asylum process and are asked questions to ascertain whether they may potentially have a fear of persecution or torture.\textsuperscript{164} During emergency border circumstances, DHS will move to a “manifestation of fear” process at the border, detailed below in Section III.B.3.b of this preamble, that will involve general (rather than individual) advisals and require individuals who have a fear of persecution or torture to manifest that fear, verbally, non-verbally, or physically, in order for DHS personnel to refer them for a credible fear interview.\textsuperscript{165} The practical result is that those who are subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility will be considered during credible fear interviews and reviews, and those who are subject to the limitation and are unable to establish a significant possibility of showing exceptionally compelling circumstances will be screened for eligibility for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection under a heightened “reasonable probability of persecution or torture” standard—a higher standard than the “reasonable possibility” standard under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule.

As the Departments described more fully in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, the current asylum system—in which a high number of migrants are initially determined to be eligible to pursue their claims, even though most ultimately are not granted asylum or protection at the merits stage—has contributed to the growing backlog of cases awaiting review by IJs.\textsuperscript{166} The practical result is that those with meritorious claims may have to wait years for their claims to be granted, while individuals who are ultimately denied protection may spend years in the United States before being issued a final order of removal.\textsuperscript{167} As the demographics of border encounters have shifted in recent years to include Mexicans claiming fear at a higher rate, and large numbers of non-Mexicans—who have historically been far more likely to assert fear claims—and as the time required to process and remove noncitizens ineligible for protection has grown (during which individuals may become eligible to apply for employment authorization), the deterrent effect of apprehending noncitizens at the SWB has become more limited.\textsuperscript{168}

The provisions in this rule are intended to be emergency measures that impact the expedited removal process and eligibility for relief or protection only for those who enter the United States across the southern border during emergency border circumstances. Unfortunately, the significant efforts the Departments have made to address such circumstances to date have not been as effective as they could have been had \textsuperscript{167} According to OHSS Persist data, Mexican nationals continued to account for 89 percent of total CBP SWB encounters in FY 2010, with central Americans accounting for 8 percent and all other nationalities accounting for 3 percent. March 2024 OHSS Persist Dataset. Northern Central Americans.\textsuperscript{169} The proportion of total CBP SWB encounters increased to 21 percent by FY 2012 and averaged 48 percent from FY 2014 to FY 2019, the last full year before the start of the COVID–19 pandemic. Id. Nationals from all other countries except Mexico and the northern Central American countries accounted for an average of 5 percent of total CBP SWB encounters from FY 2010 to FY 2013, and for 10 percent of total encounters from FY 2014 to FY 2019. Id. This transition has accelerated since the start of FY 2021, as Mexican nationals accounted for approximately 32 percent of total CBP SWB encounters in FY 2021 through March 2024, including roughly 29 percent in the first six months of FY 2024; northern Central Americans accounted for roughly 25 percent from FY 2021 through March 2024 (20 percent in FY 2024 through March 2024); and all other countries accounted for roughly 42 percent from FY 2021 through March 2024, including roughly 51 percent of FY 2024 encounters through March 2024. Id.

For noncitizens encountered at and between SWB POEs from FY 2014 through FY 2019 who were placed in expedited removal, nearly 6 percent of Mexican nationals made fear claims that were referred to USCIS for determination. OHSS analysis of Enforcement Lifecycle data as of December 31, 2023. In contrast, during the period covered by Section III.B.3.a.iv of this preamble, from May 12, 2023 to March 31, 2024, 29 percent of all Mexican nationals processed for expedited removal at the SWB made fear claims, including 39 percent in February 2024. OHSS analysis of UJPIER Daily Report Data Dashboard as of April 2, 2024.

For noncitizens encountered at and between SWB POEs from FY 2014 through FY 2019, nearly 57 percent of people from northern Central America (i.e., El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras), and close to 90 percent of all other nationalities made fear claims that were referred to USCIS for determination. OHSS analysis of Enforcement Lifecycle data as of December 31, 2023. Of note, according to OHSS analysis of historic CBIP and CBP data, there is a clear correlation since FY 2000 between the increasing time it takes to complete immigration proceedings, which results in a lower share of non-Mexicans, and the growth in non-Mexican encounters at and between SWB POEs. Both trends accelerated in the 2010s, as non-Mexicans became the majority of such encounters, and they have continued through FY 2020, as people from countries other than Mexico and northern Central America now account for the largest numbers of such encounters. OHSS analysis of March 2024 OHSS Persist Dataset.

Congress provided the personnel, infrastructure, technology, and broader reforms that the Departments have requested. Communities all over the United States are being adversely impacted as a result. The goal of these measures is to quickly reduce unlawful and unauthorized entries at the border and to quickly impose decisions and consequences on those who cross our border unlawfully and lack a legal basis to remain.

3. Description of the Rule and Explanation of Regulatory Changes

This rule amends the Departments’ regulations to further the purpose of the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, which suspends and limits entry along the southern border to address the emergency border circumstances outlined in that Proclamation. The rule does so by amending 8 CFR 208.13 and 1208.13 and adding regulatory provisions at 8 CFR 208.35, 235.15, and 1208.35 that (1) limit asylum eligibility for those who enter the United States across the southern border during emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule, are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, and do not establish the existence of exceptionally compelling circumstances; (2) alter the process for advising noncitizens of their rights to seek asylum and for identifying which noncitizens to refer to an AO for credible fear screening during emergency border circumstances; and (3) alter the standard for screening for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection while such circumstances exist.\textsuperscript{169} Below is an explanation of the limitation and each change to the expedited removal and fear screening process. The specific content of each provision and amendment is set forth in detail in Section III.C of this preamble.

a. Limitation on Asylum Eligibility

As discussed above in Sections III.B.1 and 2 of this preamble, irregular migration is continuing to strain the Departments’ ability to timely process, detain, and remove, as appropriate, and \textsuperscript{168} The Departments understand that the President has directed the agencies to promptly consider issuing “any instructions, orders, or regulations as may be necessary to address the circumstances at the southern border.” Such actions may include other measures that are not addressed in this rule, and the Departments have considered and are continuing to consider such other actions. The Departments believe that the changes made in this rule are the most appropriate means to begin addressing the concerns identified in the Proclamation, and the Departments will assess the effectiveness of this rule as they continue to consider other actions to respond to the President’s direction.

thus to swiftly deliver timely decisions and timely consequences to noncitizens at the southern border. This challenge is exacerbated by the sheer number of migrants who invoke credible fear procedures at a POE or when they are encountered between POEs without following the lawful, safe, and orderly processes that DHS has made available. The Departments have implemented the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and complementary measures, but Congress has not provided the resources necessary to timely and effectively process and interview all those who invoke credible fear procedures through the expedited removal process at the southern border, particularly during times in which the country’s border faces an emergency of the magnitude described in the Proclamation. The record numbers of migrants invoking the credible fear procedures at the southern border exacerbate the risk of severe overcrowding in USBP facilities and POEs, and it creates a situation in which large numbers of migrants—only a small proportion of whom are likely to be granted asylum—are not able to be expeditiously removed but are instead referred to backlogged immigration courts. This situation is self-reinforcing: the expectation of a lengthy stay in the United States and the lack of timely consequences for irregular migration encourage more migrants without potentially meritorious claims for asylum to make the dangerous journey to the southern border to invoke credible fear procedures at the southern border and take their chances on being allowed to remain in the country for a lengthy period.

For these reasons, pursuant to section 208(b)(1)(A), (b)(2)(C), (d)(5)(B) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(1)(A), (b)(2)(C), (d)(5)(B), the Departments are adopting a limitation on asylum eligibility for noncitizens who (1) enter the United States across the southern border during emergency border circumstances; (2) are noncitizens who (1) enter the United States across the southern border during emergency border circumstances; and (3) do not establish exceptionally compelling circumstances. See 8 CFR 208.35(a), 208.35(a). Section 3(b) of the Proclamation lists classes of individuals to whom the Proclamation’s suspension and limitation on entry and this limitation on asylum eligibility does not apply; those classes are discussed in Section II.A of this preamble. The exceptionally compelling circumstances exception to this rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility is discussed below in Sections III.B.3.a and III.C.2 of this preamble.

The limitation on asylum eligibility is needed to address the emergency border circumstances outlined in the Proclamation and this rule and responds to the President’s direction to the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Attorney General to promptly consider issuing such instructions, orders, or regulations as may be necessary to address the circumstances at the southern border, including any additional limitations and conditions on asylum eligibility that they determine are warranted, subject to any exceptions that they determine are warranted. Under the circumstances described in the Proclamation, the Departments assess that the limitation on asylum is necessary to help streamline the Departments’ processing of noncitizens, thereby conserving limited resources during the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule and allowing for enough resources to continue to process lawful cross-border trade and travel and noncitizens who present in a safe and orderly manner at a POE.

The Departments have further made the determination to apply the limitation on asylum eligibility to those who enter the United States across the southern border during emergency border circumstances irrespective of whether the noncitizen is encountered during such emergency border circumstances. This will permit a consistent application of the rule to all those who enter across the southern border during such circumstances and are subject to this limitation on asylum eligibility, including those who evade detection at the southern border and are later placed in section 240 removal proceedings, as well as those who affirmatively apply for asylum. The Departments have considered applying the rule’s asylum limitation only to those who enter and are encountered at the southern border during emergency border circumstances. The Departments believe, however, that the rule’s asylum limitation should avoid creating an incentive for noncitizens to take risky measures to evade detection, which would further strain resources dedicated to apprehension at the border.

Additionally, the approach adopted in this rule is consistent with the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, which, with narrow exceptions, applies to all those who enter during the two-year period currently specified in that rule, regardless of whether they are apprehended at or near the border during the 14-day period immediately after entry or within 100 miles of the border. See 8 CFR 208.33(c), 1208.33(d). Moreover, the Departments note that the provisions of §§ 208.35(b) and 235.15 would be applicable only to those who have entered the United States during the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule and are processed for expedited removal. Thus, those provisions would not apply to those who have long since entered the United States. Accordingly, the Departments have determined that it is reasonable to apply this rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility consistent with the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, without regard to the date of encounter or commencement of proceedings.

Even if a noncitizen entered the United States across the southern border during emergency border circumstances and is not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, they may avoid application of the limitation on asylum eligibility if they establish by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist. Such circumstances necessarily exist where the noncitizen demonstrates that, at the time of entry, the noncitizen or a member of the noncitizen’s family as described in 8 CFR 208.30(c) with whom the noncitizen was traveling faced an acute medical emergency; faced an imminent and extreme threat to their life or safety; or was a “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” as defined in 8 CFR 214.11. 1728 CFR 208.35(a)(2)(i), 1208.35(a)(2)(i). Acute medical emergencies would include, but would not be limited to, situations in which someone faces a life-threatening medical emergency or faces acute and grave medical needs that cannot be adequately addressed outside of the United States. Examples of imminent and extreme threats would include imminent threats of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder that the noncitizen faced at the time the noncitizen crossed the southern border, such that they cannot wait for an appointment at a pre-scheduled time and place or until this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility is not in effect for an opportunity to present at a POE without putting their life or well-being at extreme risk; it would not include generalized threats of violence.

The “exceptionally compelling circumstances” exception mirrors the rebuttal circumstance the Departments adopted in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. See 8 CFR 208.33(a)(3)(ii), 1208.33(a)(3)(ii). That exception is adopted here for the reasons articulated for adopting it in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways NPRM and rule and the exception is intended to apply to the same circumstances identified in that NPRM and rule. See, e.g., 88 FR at 11723; 88 FR at 31318, 31338, 31348, 31351, 31380, 31390, 31391–93.

Like the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, this rule recognizes an additional exception that avoids the separation of families. See 8 CFR 208.35(c), 1208.35(c). Those noncitizens who are subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility and who do not establish exceptionally compelling circumstances under 8 CFR 208.35(a)(2)(i) or 1208.35(a)(2)(i) would be able to continue to apply for statutory withholding of removal and protection under the CAT, forms of protection to which the limitation does not apply if placed in section 240 removal proceedings. Unlike asylum, spouses and minor children are not eligible for derivative grants of statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection. Compare INA 208(b)(3)(A), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(3)(A) (“a spouse or child . . . of an alien who is granted asylum under this subsection may, if not otherwise eligible for asylum under this section, be granted the same status as the alien if accompanying, or following to join, such alien”), with INA 241(b)(3), 8 U.S.C. 1221(b)(3) (not providing for derivative statutory withholding of removal), and 8 CFR 1208.16(c) (not providing for derivative CAT protection); see also Sumolang v. Holder, 723 F.3d 1080, 1083 (9th Cir. 2013) (recognizing that the asylum statute allows for derivative beneficiaries of the principal applicant for asylum, but not the withholding of removal statute makes no such allowance). Again, mirroring EOIR’s family unity provision in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, see 8 CFR 1208.33(c), where a principal asylum applicant is eligible for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection and would be granted asylum but for the limitation on eligibility established in this rule, and where an accompanying spouse or child as defined in section 208(b)(3)(A) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(3)(A), does not independently qualify for asylum or other protection from removal or the principal asylum applicant has a spouse or child who would be eligible to follow to join that applicant as described in section 208(b)(3)(A) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(3)(A), the noncitizen shall be excepted from the limitation on eligibility by the JJ if placed in section 240 removal proceedings. 8 CFR 1208.35(c).

The Departments have determined that the possibility of separating the family should be avoided. See E.O. 14011, Establishment of Interagency Task Force on the Reunification of Families, 86 FR 8273, 8273 (Feb. 2, 2021) (“It is the policy of my Administration to respect and value the integrity of families seeking to enter the United States.”).

In the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, the Departments included a family unity provision in EOIR’s regulations but not DHS’s. The Departments did so because they decided at that time that those who an AO concludes are subject to the Lawful Pathways presumption and who are not able to establish an exception or rebut the presumption during a credible fear screening may not be placed into the asylum merits interview process and may instead only be issued an NTA and placed into section 240 removal proceedings. See 88 FR at 11725–26; 88 FR at 31336–37. For purposes of this rule, the Departments have allowed for an asylum merits interview process at the discretion of USCIS that includes USCIS discretion to apply a parallel family unity provision. See 8 CFR 208.35(c). This provision is discretionary to allow USCIS flexibility as it implements the new process. The Departments request comment on whether to adopt a non-discretionary family unity provision for the asylum merits interview process in a final rule.

i. Authority To Impose Additional Limitations on Asylum Eligibility

The Secretary and the Attorney General have authority to adopt this additional limitation on asylum eligibility. Both have long exercised discretion, now expressly authorized by Congress, to create new rules governing the granting of asylum. Where section...
208 of the INA was first enacted as part of the Refugee Act of 1980, it simply provided that the Attorney General “shall establish a procedure” for a noncitizen “to apply for asylum,” and that the noncitizen “may be granted asylum in the discretion of the Attorney General if the Attorney General determines that such [noncitizen] is a refugee within the meaning of section 1101(a)(42)(A).” 8 U.S.C. 1158(a) (1982). In 1980, the Attorney General, in the exercise of that broad statutory discretion, established several mandatory bars to the granting of asylum. See 8 CFR 208.8(f)(1) (1980); Aliens and Nationality; Refugee and Asylum Procedures, 45 FR 37392, 37392 (June 2, 1980). In 1990, the Attorney General substantially amended the asylum regulations, but exercised his discretion to retain the mandatory bars to asylum eligibility related to persecution of others on account of a protected ground, conviction of a particularly serious crime in the United States, firm resettlement in another country, and the existence of reasonable grounds to regard the noncitizen as a danger to the security of the United States. See Aliens and Nationality: Asylum and Withholding of Deportation Procedures, 55 FR 30674, 30678, 30683 (July 27, 1990); see also Yang v. INS, 79 F.3d 932, 936–39 (9th Cir. 1996) (upholding firm-resettlement bar); Komarenko v. INS, 35 F.3d 432, 436 (9th Cir. 1994) (upholding particularly-serious-crime bar), abrogated on other grounds by Abebe v. Mukasey, 554 F.3d 1203 (9th Cir. 2009) (en banc).

In that 1990 rule, the Attorney General added one another limitation that was first discussed in Matter of Chen, 20 I&N Dec. 16 (BIA 1989). 55 FR at 30678. Specifically, although the statute defines a “refugee” and thus allows asylum for a noncitizen based on a showing of past “persecution or a well-founded fear of persecution,” INA 101(a)(42)(A), 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A), by regulation, a showing of past persecution only gives rise to a presumption of a well-founded fear of future persecution, which can be rebutted by showing that circumstances have changed such that the noncitizen no longer has a well-founded fear of future persecution or that the noncitizen can relocate to avoid persecution and under all the circumstances it is reasonable to expect the noncitizen to do so. 8 CFR 208.13(b)(1), 1208.13(b)(1). Where the presumption is rebutted, the adjudicator, “in the exercise of his or her discretion, shall deny the asylum application.” 8 CFR 208.13(b)(1)(i), 1208.13(b)(1)(i). In 1990, Congress added a mandatory statutory bar for those with aggravated felony convictions. Immigration Act of 1990, Public Law 101–649, sec. 515, 104 Stat. 4978, 5053.

With the passage of IIRIRA, Congress added three categorical statutory bars to the ability to apply for asylum for (1) noncitizens who can be removed, pursuant to a bilateral or multilateral agreement, to a third country where they would not be persecuted on account of a specified ground; (2) noncitizens who failed to apply for asylum within one year of arriving in the United States; and (3) noncitizens who have previously applied for asylum and had the application denied. Public Law 104–208, div. C, sec. 604, 110 Stat. 3009, 3009–690 to –691. Congress also adopted six mandatory bars to asylum eligibility that largely reflected the pre-existing, discretionary bars that had been set forth in the Attorney General’s asylum regulations. These bars cover (1) noncitizens who “ordered, incited, assisted, or otherwise participated” in the persecution of others; (2) noncitizens who, having been convicted of a “particularly serious crime,” constitute a danger to the United States; (3) noncitizens for whom there are serious reasons to believe committed a “serious nonpolitical crime outside the United States” before arriving in the United States; (4) noncitizens for whom there are reasonable grounds to regard as a “danger to the security of the United States”; (5) noncitizens who are removable under a set of specified grounds relating to terrorist activity; and (6) noncitizens who were “firmly resettled” in another country prior to arriving in the United States. Id. at 3009–691 (codified at INA 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(A)). Congress further added that aggravated felonies, defined in section 101(a)(43) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(43), would be considered “particularly serious crime[s].” Id. at 3009–692 (codified at INA 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(B)(i)), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(B)(ii). In IIRIRA, Congress also made clear that the Executive Branch may continue to exercise its broad discretion in determining whether to grant asylum by creating additional limitations and conditions on the granting of asylum. The INA provides that the Attorney General and Secretary “may by regulation establish additional limitations and conditions, consistent with [section 208], under which an alien shall be ineligible for asylum.” INA 208(b)(2)(C), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(C); see 6 U.S.C. 552(d); INA 103(a)(1), 8 U.S.C. 1103(a)(1). In addition, while section 208(d)(5) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(d)(5), establishes certain procedures for consideration of asylum applications, Congress specified that the Attorney General and Secretary “may provide by regulation for any other conditions or limitations on the consideration of an application for asylum” so long as those conditions or limitations are “not inconsistent with this chapter.” INA 208(d)(5)(B), 8 U.S.C. 1158(d)(5)(B). In sum, the current statutory framework retains the broad discretion of the Attorney General (and, after the HSA, also the Secretary) to adopt additional limitations on the granting of asylum and procedures for implementing those limitations.

Previous Attorneys General and Secretaries have since invoked their authorities under section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158, to establish eligibility bars beyond those required by the statute itself. See, e.g., Asylum Procedures, 65 FR 76121, 76126 (Dec. 6, 2000) (requiring consideration of the applicant’s ability to relocate safely in his or her home country in assessing asylum eligibility); Aliens Subject to a Bar on Entry Under Certain Presidential Proclamations: Procedures for Protection Claims, 83 FR 55934 (Nov. 9, 2018) (“Proclamation Bar IFR”) (limit on eligibility for applicants subject to certain presidential proclamations); 175 Asylum Eligibility and Procedural Modifications, 85 FR 82260 (Dec. 17, 2020) (“TCT Bar final rule”) (limit on eligibility for certain noncitizens who failed to apply for protection while in a third country through which they transited en route to the United States); 176 Procedures for Asylum and Bars to Asylum Eligibility, 85 FR 67202 (Oct. 21, 2020) (limits on eligibility for noncitizens convicted of certain criminal offenses); 177 Inspection and Expedited Removal of Aliens; Detention and Removal of Aliens; Conduct of 174 There is a narrow exception to this mandatory discretionary ground for denial, called “humanitarian asylum,” where the noncitizen establishes “compelling reasons for being unwilling or unable to return to the [noncitizen’s] country arising out of the severity of...past persecution” or “that there is a reasonable possibility that [the non-citizen] may suffer other serious harm upon removal to [the noncitizen’s] country.” 8 CFR 208.13(b)(1)(ii), 1208.13(b)(1)(ii).

176 See E. Bay Sanctuary Council v. Barr, 539 F. Supp. 3d 663 (N.D. Cal. 2021) (preliminarily enjoining the TCT Bar final rule).

177 See Pangea Legal Servs. v. U.S. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 501 F. Supp. 3d 792, 827 (N.D. Cal. 2020) (granting temporary restraining order against operation of the rule and ordering defendants to show cause why the rule should not be preliminarily enjoined).
Sanctuary Covenant v. INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182(f). In East Bay proclamation under section 212(f) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(C), relating to suspensions as asylum eligibility adopted pursuant to regulations. The Departments acknowledge prior judicial decisions addressing a different limit on asylum eligibility for those noncitizens established during these emergency situations when it is essential that noncitizens use such pathways to ensure the United States Government’s ability to manage the border. And even during these situations, AOIs and IJs have the authority to except noncitizens from the rule’s asylum limitation where the noncitizens establish that an exceptionally compelling circumstance exists. See 8 CFR 208.35(a)(2)(i), 1208.35(a)(2)(ii). For example, a noncitizen may be excepted from the limitation on asylum eligibility if they experienced an acute medical emergency at the time of entry regardless of where that entry occurred. Other exceptionally compelling circumstances include, but are not limited to, if the noncitizen demonstrates that, at the time of entry, the noncitizen or a member of their family as described in 8 CFR 208.30(c) with whom the noncitizen was traveling faced an imminent and extreme threat to their life or safety or was a “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” as defined in 8 CFR 214.11. 8 CFR 208.35(a)(2)(ii)(B)–(C). 1208.35(a)(2)(ii)(B)–(C). Indeed, the rule’s exceptionally compelling circumstances exception is identical to the grounds that would rebut the presumption of asylum ineligibility under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, which has been allowed to continue in effect despite litigation challenging its validity. See E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Biden, No. 23–16032, 2023 WL 11662094, at *1 (9th Cir. Aug. 3, 2023) (staying order vacating Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule pending appeal).

Furthermore, this rule does not impact the same concerns as the prior categorical bar based on “manner of entry” because it applies only to individuals who enter during emergency border circumstances and would not treat solely the manner of entry as dispositive in determining eligibility even during such circumstances, given that the rule applies both at and between POEs and in light of the exceptions available under section 3(b) of the Proclamation and for exceptionally compelling circumstances under 8 CFR 208.35(a)(2) and 1208.35(a)(2). Moreover, the Departments disagree with important aspects of the reasoning that the district court and Ninth Circuit relied upon in East Bay III. The Departments argued in East Bay III that section 208(a)(1) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(a)(1), by its plain terms requires only that a noncitizen be permitted to “apply” for asylum, regardless of their manner of entry. It does not require that a noncitizen be eligible to be granted asylum, regardless of their manner of entry. Indeed, the BIA has long taken account of a noncitizen’s manner of entry in determining whether to grant asylum. See Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. 467, 473 (BIA 1987) (holding that “manner of entry . . . is a proper and relevant discretionary factor to consider in adjudicating asylum applications”). The court in East Bay III rejected this argument, stating that “[e]xplicitly authorizing a refugee to file an asylum application because he arrived between ports of entry and then summarily denying the application for the same reason borders on absurdity.” 993 F.3d at 670 (emphasis omitted), but the statute draws a clear distinction between the two. Section 208(a) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(a), governs who may “apply for asylum” and includes several categorical bars, such as the bar for applications for noncitizens present in the country for more than one year. INA 208(a)(1), 208(b), 8 U.S.C. 1158(a)(1), (2)(B); see INA 241(a)(5), 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(5). Section 208(b) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b), in turn, governs who is eligible to be granted asylum. Specifically, section 208(b)(1)(A) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(1)(A), provides that the Attorney General or the Secretary “may grant asylum to an alien who has applied.” INA 208(b)(2), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2), then specifies six categories of noncitizens to whom “[p]aragraph (1)’ (i.e., the discretionary authority to grant asylum to an applicant) ‘shall not apply.’ Any noncitizen falling within one of those categories may apply for asylum under section 208(a)(1) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(a)(1), but is categorically ineligible

174 The Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule was vacated by East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Biden, 993 F.3d 640 (9th Cir. 2021) (“East Bay III”), the Ninth Circuit affirmed a preliminary injunction against the Proclamation Bar IFR, which categorically rendered certain noncitizens ineligible for asylum if they entered the United States in violation of a presidential proclamation or other presidential order suspending or limiting the entry of noncitizens along the southern border. The relevant presidential proclamation in that case suspended entry of all migrants along the southern border except those who entered at a POE. See id. at 659. The court held that the Proclamation Bar IFR was inconsistent with section 208(a) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(a), which provides that any migrant “who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the United States (whether or not at a designated port of arrival and including an alien who is brought to the United States after having been interdicted in international or United States waters), irrespective of such alien’s status, may apply for asylum.” Id. at 670.175

175 The court also held that the Proclamation Bar IFR likely did not properly fall under the good cause or foreign affairs exceptions to notice-and-comment rulemaking under 5 U.S.C. 553(a)(1) and (b)(8). See East Bay III, 993 F.3d at 676–77.
to receive it under section 208(b) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b).

The broad preemptive sweep that the Ninth Circuit attributed to section 208(a)(1) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(a)(1), also fails to account for the discretionary nature of asylum. No noncitizen ever has a right to be granted asylum. The ultimate “decision whether asylum should be granted to an eligible alien is committed to the Attorney General’s [and the Secretary’s] discretion.” INS v. Aguirre-Aguirre, 526 U.S. 415, 420 (1999). The East Bay III court did not dispute that manner of entry is a permissible consideration in determining whether to exercise that discretion to grant asylum in individual cases. 99 F.3d at 671; see also Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. at 473; Fook Hong Mak v. INS, 435 F.2d 728, 730 (2d Cir. 1970) (Friendly, J.) (upholding the INS’s authority to “determine [certain conduct to be so inimical to the statutory scheme that all persons who have engaged in it shall be ineligible for favorable consideration”).

The Ninth Circuit also suggested that a regulation categorically barring asylum based on manner of entry is inconsistent with the United States’ commitments under the Refugee Protocol, in which the United States adhered to specified provisions of the Refugee Convention. See 993 F.3d at 972–75. Even accepting East Bay III’s reasoning on this point, that reasoning is limited to a categorical eligibility bar premised on manner of entry; this IFR does not implicate the same concerns as the prior categorical bar on “manner of entry” for the reasons identified above. In any event, the East Bay III court’s conclusion was incorrect. The United States’ non-refoulement obligation under Article 33 of the Refugee Convention is implemented by statute with section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(3)(A), for mandatory withholding of removal. This rule specifically preserves the availability of that protection from removal. The INA’s provision in section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158, for the discretionary granting of asylum instead aligns with Article 34 of the Refugee Convention, which is precatory and does not require any signatory to actually grant asylum to all those who are eligible. See, e.g., INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 440–41 (1987). The East Bay III court also misread Article 31(1) of the Refugee Convention, which permits only to “penalties” imposed “on account of . . . illegal entry or presence” on refugees who, among other criteria, are “coming directly from a territory where” they face persecution. See, e.g., Singh v. Nelson, 623 F. Supp. 545, 560–61 & n.14 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (quoting the Refugee Convention). And a bar to the granting of the discretionary relief of asylum is not a penalty under Article 31(1), especially given that the noncitizen remains eligible to apply for statutory withholding of removal, which implements U.S. non-refoulement obligations under the Refugee Protocol. See Mejia v. Sessions, 866 F.3d 573, 588 (4th Cir. 2017); Cazau v. U.S. Att’y Gen., 856 F.3d 249, 257 n.16 (3d Cir. 2017).

iii. Litigation Other Limitations

The Departments also acknowledge other prior precedent concerning the scope of the Departments’ statutory rulemaking authority under section 208(b)(2)(C) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(C). Specifically, when reviewing the TCT Bar final rule, the Ninth Circuit in East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Garland, 994 F.3d 962 (9th Cir. 2020) (“East Bay I”), held that a new condition on asylum eligibility under section 208(b)(2)(C) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(C), must “further[] the purpose” of another provision in section 208 to be “consistent with” it. 994 F.3d at 977, 977–80. The Departments disagree. A requirement that additional asylum limitations can only “further[] the purpose” of the existing exceptions by either targeting threats to the nation or promoting the purposes the Ninth Circuit identified in the safe-third-country or firm-resettlement bars, id. at 977, is irreconcilable with the statute’s meaning and conflicts with its history. Not only has Congress adopted asylum bars that do not further the purpose the Ninth Circuit identified—e.g., the one-year filing deadline and the bar on successive applications—it has granted to the Departments the broad discretion to add more such bars. The Ninth Circuit’s approach is also inconsistent with Trump v. Hawaii, 585 U.S. 667, 690–91 (2018) (INA’s express provisions governing entry “did not implicitly foreclose the Executive from imposing tighter restrictions,” even if restrictions addressed a subject that is “similar” to one that Congress “already touch[ed] on”). The statutory asylum bars likewise do not foreclose imposing further conditions, even if those conditions address subjects similar to those already in the asylum statute. See, e.g., INA 241a(5), 8 U.S.C. 1231a(5) (barring from asylum those whose orders of removal have been reinstated regardless whether they have asylum claims stemming from events that occurred after the original order of removal); see R–S–C v. Napolitano, 711 F. App’x. 517, 1176, 1184 (10th Cir. 2017) (reconciling the reinstatement provision’s bar on asylum with section 208’s allowing noncitizens to apply for asylum regardless of manner of entry).

Regardless, this rule is consistent with section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158, as a limitation on asylum eligibility. The President has determined that, under certain emergency border circumstances, entries must be suspended and limited because in such circumstances the border security and immigration systems lack capacity to deliver timely decisions and timely consequences, which threatens to constitute a prior unconstitutional bar. And in light of such circumstances and their pernicious effects, the Departments have determined that special procedures must be used to quickly process the influx of noncitizens, including those seeking asylum. Those determinations do not conflict with the text or structure of section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158, and are consistent with (and an appropriate exercise of the Departments’ authority under) that provision. Nothing more is required for the rule to constitute a valid exercise of authority under section 208(b)(2)(C) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(C).

Moreover, this rule’s propriety is reinforced by the statutory bars on asylum Congress has enacted. Just as Congress has chosen to promote systemic efficiency by prohibiting asylum applications filed more than one year after entry and by generally prohibiting noncitizents from pursuing successive asylum applications, INA 208(a)(2)(B)–(C), 8 U.S.C. 1158(a)(2)(B)–(C), the rule further promotes efficiency by limiting asylum in certain situations where the strains on the immigration system are at their peak. Congress did 180 The Departments’ interpretation of the phrase “consistent with” is supported by judicial interpretation of the term in other contexts. The D.C. Circuit, for example, has cautioned against construing “consistent with” too narrowly in a Clean Air Act case. Envtl. Def. Fund, Inc. v. EPA, 82 F.3d 451, 457 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (per curiam), amended by 92 F.3d 1209 (D.C. Cir. 1996). The court emphasized that this “flexible statutory language” does not require “exact correspondence” but only congruity or compatibility and underscored that the phrase’s ambiguity warranted deference to the agency’s policy. Id. Other courts have adopted the same understanding of “consistent with.” See, e.g., Jimenez-Rodriguez v. Garland, 996 F.3d 190, 198 (4th Cir. 2021) (“The phrase ‘consistent with’ does not require ‘exact correspondence’ but only congruity or compatibility.”); (quoting Nuclear Energy Inst., Inc. v. EPA, 373 F.3d 1251, 1269 (D.C. Cir. 2004)); Nat’l Wildlife Fed’n v. Sec’y of U.S. Dep’t of Transp., 960 F.3d 872, 878 (6th Cir. 2020). (The phrase ‘consistent with’ cannot bear the weight that the Federation places on it. Response plans are consistent with the contingency plans if they ‘show no noteworthy opposing, conflicting, inharmonious, or contradictory qualities’—in other words, if the documents put together are ‘not self- contradictory. Consistency does not mean exact, point-by-point correspondence.’) (cleaned up).

not foreclose the Departments from likewise taking systemic considerations into account when exercising their discretion to add conditions or limitations on eligibility. Indeed, the ultimate consideration when determining whether someone warrants a grant of relief as a matter of discretion is whether granting relief “appears in the best interests of the country.” Matter of Marin, 16 I&N Dec. 581, 584 (BIA 1978), a point Congress was aware of when it amended the INA in 1996, see id. (best interests standard preceded 1996 amendments by nearly two decades). The Departments find that the rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility furthers the efficiency aims of the asylum statute and is in the best interests of the United States because it allows the Departments to deliver timely decisions and timely consequences in order to address the emergency border circumstances discussed in the Proclamation and this rule.

Consistent with the best-interest standard, the BIA has long held a noncitizen’s “circumvention of orderly refugee procedures” to be relevant to whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted. Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. at 473. And the BIA has specifically considered as relevant factors the noncitizen’s “manner of entry or attempted entry.” Id. Although the rule places greater weight on these factors under certain emergency circumstances, this decades-old precedent establishes that the Department’s discretion cannot be preempted by requiring the Department to consider an additional factor, i.e., the manner of entry.

The Departments acknowledge that Matter of Pula did not consider a noncitizen’s arrival at a POE to weigh against a discretionary grant of asylum. See 19 I&N Dec. at 473. But Matter of Pula also did not involve circumstances in which the country’s border faced an emergency of a magnitude comparable to the emergency border circumstances described by the Proclamation and this rule, where even arrivals at POEs significantly contribute to the Departments’ inability to process migrants and deliver timely decisions and timely consequences to those without a lawful basis to remain. Given the emergency border circumstances described by the Proclamation and the President’s direction in section 3(d) of the Proclamation to promptly consider issuing any instructions, orders, or regulations as may be necessary to address the situation at the southern border; and given the strain on operations and resources that high volumes of new arrivals create, such that consequences cannot be appropriately delivered; the Departments believe that the rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility should apply to noncitizens who enter the United States across the southern border, including at a POE during the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule, unless an exception applies. In Matter of Pula, the BIA explained that a noncitizen’s “circumvention of orderly refugee procedures,” including their “manner of entry or attempted entry,” is a relevant factor for asylum, 19 I&N Dec. at 473–74, and this rule merely takes such circumvention into account. Because the Proclamation contains an exception for arrivals at a pre-scheduled place under a process approved by the Secretary, this rule’s limitation on asylum will also not apply to such arrivals. One of the mechanisms by which a noncitizen may arrive at a POE with a pre-scheduled time to appear is through the CBP One app. Use of the CBP One app creates efficiencies that enable CBP to safely and humanely expand its ability to process noncitizens at POEs, including those who may be seeking asylum. See 88 FR at 11719. Indeed, without CBP One, noncitizens could have longer wait times for processing at the POE depending on daily operational constraints and circumstances. See 88 FR at 31342. During emergency border circumstances, use of the CBP One app is especially critical because it allows DHS to maximize the use of its limited resources. See, e.g., id. at 31317–18 (explaining the benefits of having noncitizens pre-schedule appointments using the CBP One app). The CBP One app and other lawful pathways that the United States Government has made available to those seeking to enter the United States, including to seek asylum or protection, are intended to allow for orderly processing. Therefore, those who “circumvent orderly refugee procedures,” consistent with Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. at 474, during emergency border circumstances without meeting one of the recognized exceptions will be ineligible for asylum.181

For the reasons discussed above, the East Bay cases dealt with different limitations on asylum and involved different factual circumstances and, hence are distinguishable from this rule.182 Moreover, the Departments respectfully disagree with some of the substantive holdings of the Ninth Circuit and the district court as described above. The Secretary and the Attorney General permissibly may determine that, during emergency border circumstances, it is in the “best interests of the country,” Matter of Marin, 16 I&N Dec. at 584, to limit asylum eligibility for those who enter in violation of the Proclamation, which, in turn, will allow the Departments to allocate their limited resources to prioritize processing noncitizens who do not enter in violation of it. Nothing in section 208 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158, forecloses that view, and securing the best interests of the country is a reasonable policy goal under section 208 and thus “consistent with” it. INA 208(b)(2)(C), 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(C); see Yang, 79 F.3d at 939 (observing that “it is precisely to cope with the unexpected that Congress deferred to the experience and expertise of the Attorney General in fashioning section 208”); see also id. at 935 (“We must reject the argument that the regulation [establishing a categorical discretionary bar to asylum eligibility] exceeds the authority of the Attorney General if we find that the regulation has a ‘reasonable foundation’ that is, if it rationally pursues a purpose that it is lawful for the 181 As the BIA further explained with respect to the asylum statute as it existed at the time, “[a] careful reading of the language of [section 208(a)(1)] reveals that the phrase ‘irrespective of such alien’s status’ modifies only the word ‘alien.’” Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. at 473. The BIA explained that the phrase is to ensure that the procedure established by the Attorney General for asylum applications includes provisions for adjudicating applications from any alien present in the United States or at a land or port of entry, ‘irrespective of such alien’s status.’” Id. (collecting cases). Congress accordingly made clear that noncitizens like stowaways, who, at the time the Refugee Act was passed, could not avail themselves of our immigration laws, would be eligible at least to apply for asylum “irrespective of [their] status.” Id. “Thus, while section 208(c) does not provide that an asylum application be accepted from an alien ‘irrespective of such alien’s status,’ no language in that section precludes the consideration of the alien’s status in granting or denying the application in the exercise of discretion.” Id. 182 The Departments have considered the July 25, 2023 district court decision vacating the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. See E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Biden, 683 F. Supp. 3d 1025 (N.D. Cal. 2023). That decision applied the holdings of the other East Bay decisions generally, and the Departments do not see a need to address it separately except to note that as of publication the court’s vacatur remains stayed pending appeal in the Ninth Circuit, and thus the rule is in effect. See E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Biden, No. 23–16032, 2023 WL 11662094, at *1 (9th Cir. Aug. 3, 2023).

[immigration agencies] to seek.”” (quoting Reno, 507 U.S. at 309)). Beyond the clear statutory text, settled principles of administrative law dictate that the Departments may adopt generally applicable eligibility requirements. Those principles establish that it is permissible for agencies to establish general rules or guidelines in lieu of case-by-case assessments, so long as those rules or guidelines are not inconsistent with the statute, and that principle is especially salient here as asylum is inherently discretionary in nature. See Lopez, 531 U.S. at 243–44 (rejecting the argument that the Bureau of Prisons was required to make “case-by-case assessments” of eligibility for sentence reductions and explaining that an agency “is not required continually to revisit ‘issues that may be established fairly and efficiently in a single rulemaking’” (quoting Heckler v. Campbell, 461 U.S. 458, 467 (1983))); Reno, 507 U.S. at 313–14 (holding that a statute requiring “individualized determination[s]” does not prevent immigration authorities from using “reasonable presumptions and generic rules” (quotation marks omitted)); Fook Hong Mak, 435 F. 2d at 730 (upholding INS’s authority to “determine” certain conduct to be so inimical to the statutory scheme that all persons who have engaged in it shall be ineligible for favorable consideration) and observing that there is no legal principle forbidding an agency that is “vested with discretionary power” from determining that it will not use that power “in favor of a particular class on a case-by-case basis”); see also Singh, 623 F. Supp. at 556 (“attempting to discourage people from entering the United States without permission . . . provides a rational basis for distinguishing among categories of illegal aliens”); Matter of Salim, 18 I & N Dec. 311, 315–16 (BIA 1982) (before illegal aliens’’); 18 I & N Matter of Salim, distinguishing among categories of United States without permission . . . see also Singh, a case-by-case basis’’); determining that it will not use that discretion for certain categories of applicants for asylee and refugee adjustment of status under section 209(c) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1159(c) (citing cases); Cisneros v. Lynch, 834 F.3d 857, 863–64 (7th Cir. 2016) (rejecting 8 CFR 1212.7(d), which established strong presumption against a favorable exercise of discretion for waivers under section 212(b) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182(b), for certain classes of noncitizens, even if a few could meet the heightened discretionary standard (citing cases)).

The Departments recognize that in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule they declined to adopt on a permanent basis the Proclamation Bar IFR because it conflicted with the tailored approach in that rule and because barring all noncitizens who enter between POEs along the SWB was not the proper approach under the circumstances the Departments then faced. See 88 FR at 31432. The Departments continue to believe that the approach taken in the Proclamation Bar IFR conflicts with the tailored approach of the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule as well as the tailored approach in this rule, which borrows heavily from the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. The Proclamation Bar IFR contained no exceptions and was open-ended, allowing for implementation of any future proclamations or orders regardless of their terms. See 83 FR at 55952. In contrast, like the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, this rule is narrowly tailored to address the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and the rule and includes exceptions to account for circumstances in which waiting for an end to the suspension and limitation on entry and the limitation on asylum eligibility is not possible. And by relating the rule to a specific proclamation and the circumstances described therein, the Departments have been able to tailor its provisions to the terms of the Proclamation and the circumstances under which it is applied.

Finally, the Departments acknowledge that, unlike the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, neither the Proclamation nor this rule excepts Mexican nationals. See 8 CFR 208.33(a)(1)(iii), 1208.33(a)(1)(iii) (providing that the Lawful Pathways rebuttable presumption of asylum eligibility applies only to those who enter the United States along the SWB after transiting through a third country). Traveling through a third country is a key part of the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule because one lawful pathway for obtaining protection is applying for protection in a third country. See 8 CFR 208.33(a)(2)(ii)(C), 1208.33(a)(2)(ii)(C). The Departments recognize that some Mexican nationals seek asylum and protection in the United States. Indeed, since 2021, DHS has seen a sharp increase in total SWB encounters of Mexican nationals, from a pre-pandemic (FY 2014 through FY 2019) average of approximately 239,000 to more than 717,000 in FY 2023. Of note, this increase in encounters has been accompanied by a sharp increase in referrals for credible fear interviews of Mexican nationals in expedited removal. The percentage of Mexican nationals processed for expedited removal who claimed a fear of return averaged 6 percent in the pre-pandemic period (FY 2014 through FY 2019), and never exceeded 7 percent for any fiscal year. But 29 percent of all Mexican nationals processed for expedited removal at the SWB from May 12, 2023, to March 31, 2024, made fear claims, including 39 percent in February 2024. Because of this sharp increase from the historical average, the Departments believe that applying this rule to Mexican nationals will result in faster processing of a significant number of Mexican noncitizens and thereby significantly advance this rule’s overarching goal of alleviating the strain on the border security and immigration systems while entry is suspended and limited under the Proclamation. At the same time, the Departments continue to believe that, if encounters decrease to levels under which the systems do not experience the substantial strains they currently experience while the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule remains in effect, the application of that rule only to those noncitizens who travel through a third country en route to the United States appropriately accounts for the goals of encouraging migrants to seek protection in other countries or to use safe, orderly, and lawful pathways to enter the United States, ensuring the border security and immigration systems can efficiently process noncitizens, and affording asylum and other protection to those seeking it who establish their eligibility.

Under this rule, Mexican nationals will still be eligible for asylum in some circumstances—they may present at a POE pursuant to a pre-scheduled appointment, or, if they are unable to wait in Mexico while scheduling an appointment, they may be able to establish an exceptionally compelling circumstances under the Proclamation or exceptionally compelling circumstances under the rule. Even if they are not able to do so, the rule does not preclude eligibility for... statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection, and they will be able to seek such protection. In the absence of an exception, however, Mexican nationals should be ineligible for asylum under the rule because, during the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule, it is important to deter irregular entry by all noncitizens regardless of country of origin. And the above data make clear that additional incentives are necessary to encourage Mexican nationals to pursue the available lawful, safe, and orderly pathways, rather than entering the country unlawfully.

v. Application During Credible Fear Screenings and Reviews

The limitation on asylum eligibility adopted here applies during merits adjudications, see 8 CFR 208.13(g), 1208.13(g), but will most frequently be relevant for noncitizens who are subject to expedited removal under section 235(b)(1) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1). Noncitizens in expedited removal are subject to removal “without further hearing or review” unless they indicate an intention to apply for asylum or fear of persecution. INA 235(b)(1)(A)(i), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(A)(i). Noncitizens in expedited removal who indicate an intention to apply for asylum or fear of persecution are referred to an AO for an interview to determine if they have a credible fear of persecution and should accordingly remain in proceedings for further consideration of the application. INA 235(b)(1)(A)(i), (b)(1)(B)(i), (ii), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(A)(i), (b)(1)(B)(i), (ii). In addition, AOs consider whether a noncitizen in expedited removal may be eligible for statutory withholding of removal or for CAT protection. See 8 CFR 208.30(e)(2), (3).

This rule instructs AOs and IJs to apply the limitation it adopts during credible fear screenings and reviews. 8 CFR 208.35(b), 1208.35(b). Under the rule, when screening for asylum eligibility, the AO and IJ must determine whether there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen would be able to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that they were not subject to the rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility or that they will be able to establish by a preponderance of the evidence exceptionally compelling circumstances. For the reasons noted in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, the Departments expect that noncitizens rarely would be found excepted from the limitation on asylum for credible fear purposes and subordinate fear would be found not to be excepted at the merits stage. See 88 FR at 31380–81.

The Departments recognize that in the recent past they changed course regarding whether to apply bars and conditions and limitations on asylum eligibility during credible fear screenings by rescinding provisions that would have applied the mandatory asylum bars during credible fear screenings. See 87 FR at 18135. In the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways NPRM, the Departments explained their reasoning for nevertheless applying that condition on asylum eligibility during credible fear screenings, stating that the rebuttable presumption would be less difficult to apply than other bars, limitations, or conditions because the facts regarding the presumption’s applicability, exceptions, and rebuttal circumstances would generally be straightforward to apply. 88 FR at 11744–45. Indeed, the Departments have applied the presumption effectively in credible fear screenings for the time in which the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule has been in effect. 88 FR at 11767.

The limitation adopted here is in many ways parallel to the Lawful Pathways rebuttable presumption—specifically, it borrows from the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule’s rebuttal circumstances—although it is more straightforward because it does not include the Lawful Pathways rebuttable presumption’s exceptions for those who applied and were denied asylum or other protection in a third country and those who were unable to schedule an appointment through the CBP One App for certain reasons. See 8 CFR 208.33(a)(2)(ii)(B)–(C), 1208.33(a)(2)(ii)(B)–(C). Given the Departments’ experience with implementing the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, the Departments are confident that the limitation and exceptions established here will be just as straightforward to apply as the similar provisions are for the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule.

b. Manifestation of Fear

This rule also alters certain aspects of the expedited removal process for individuals who enter across the southern border during emergency border circumstances and are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation. When an immigration officer inspects a noncitizen at a POE or between POEs and determines that the noncitizen is inadmissible and will be subject to expedited removal, current regulations require the immigration officer to take certain steps before ordering the noncitizen removed from the United States. See 8 CFR 235.3(b).

This process takes approximately two hours per individual in USBP custody. In particular, the immigration officer conducts an inspection, including taking biometrics; running background checks; collecting biographic information, citizenship, and place and manner of entry; and advising the noncitizen of the charges against them. 8 CFR 235.3(b)(2)(i). The noncitizen has an opportunity to provide a response. Id. The officer must also read (or have read through an interpreter, if appropriate) the information contained in the Form I–867A, Record of Sworn Statement in Proceedings under Section 235(b)(1) of the Act, which advises the noncitizen of their ability to seek protection in the United States. Id. The examining immigration officer must also read the noncitizen the questions on the Form I–867B, Jurat for Record of Sworn Statement in Proceedings under Section 235(b)(1) of the Act, which asks, among other things, whether the noncitizen has any fear of return or would be harmed if returned. Id. After the noncitizen has provided answers to the questions on Form I–867B, the immigration officer records the answers, and the noncitizen then reads the statement (or has the statement read to them) and signs the statement. Id. On average, USBP agents spend about 20 to 30 minutes of the inspection period completing both the Form I–867A and the Form I–867B.

Finally, a noncitizen who indicates a fear of return or an intention to seek asylum is served with and acknowledges receipt of a Form M–444, which includes more detailed information about the credible fear process. 8 CFR 235.3(b)(4)(i).

Instead of this current process, DHS is adding a new provision at 8 CFR 235.3(b)(4)(i) to allow officers for determining whether a noncitizen who enters across the southern border and is not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation during the emergency circumstances giving rise to the Proclamation’s suspension and limitation on entry should be referred to an AO for a credible fear interview. These procedures apply during emergency border circumstances. See 8 CFR 235.15(a). Under the new rule, immigration officers will conduct an immigration inspection and, where the noncitizen will be subject to expedited removal, will advise the noncitizen of the removal charges against them and provide an opportunity to respond, consistent with existing practice and regulations outlined above. 8 CFR 235.3(b)(2)(i). However, the immigration officer will not complete either the Form I–867A or Form I–867B or a sworn statement. Moreover, the officer will not be required to provide individualized advisals on asylum or ask the noncitizen questions related to whether they have a fear. See 8 CFR 235.15(b)(4). Under the rule, the immigration officer will instead refer the noncitizen to an AO for a credible fear interview only if the noncitizen manifests a fear of return, expresses an intention to apply for asylum, expresses a fear of persecution or torture, or expresses a fear of return to the noncitizen’s country or country of removal. See id. This manifestation can occur at any time in the process and can be expressed verbally, non-verbally, or physically. 187 In such situations, the immigration officer will not proceed further with the removal and will comply with the existing regulations, policies, and procedures. Including as outlined in 8 CFR 235.3(b)(4), regarding processing and referring noncitizens for credible fear interviews. At the time that a noncitizen is referred for a credible fear interview, they will receive additional information about the credible fear process that has the same substantive information as in the current process, but without the requirement that such information be provided on a particular form.

DHS is making these changes to address the emergency circumstances at the southern border discussed in the 187 By these terms, DHS intends to include a wide range of human communication and behavior, such that “non-verbally” could include things like noises or sounds without any words, while physical manifestations could include behaviors, with or without sound, such as shaking, crying, or signs of abuse. See U.S. State Dep’t, Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, Fact Sheet: U.S. Commemorations Pledges, Fact Sheet, Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (June 24, 2013), https://2009-2017.state.gov/j/prm/releases/ factsheets/2013/211674.htm. A noncitizen could thus manifest a fear of returning to a previous location without using actual words to state that they are specifically afraid of return to their home country or country of removal.

Article 3 of the Convention, to mean “if it is more likely than not that he would be tortured.”” (quoting the Senate resolution of ratification)). The CAT similarly does not prescribe screening requirements. As such, the United States has broad discretion in what procedures are appropriate to implement, through domestic law, to satisfy its non-refoulement obligations.192

The United States implements its obligations under the Refugee Protocol and the CAT through the INA and related rulemaking, and it provides specified procedures—including in the expedited removal process described above—for seeking asylum or other protection in the United States. The process outlined in this rule temporarily affords immigration officers the ability to refer noncitizens to an AO for a credible fear interview if the noncitizen manifests a fear of return, expresses an intention to apply for asylum, expresses a fear of persecution or torture, or expresses a fear of return to the noncitizen’s country or country of removal. The Departments have concluded that the manifestation standard is consistent with their obligations (1) not to return noncitizens to countries where they would be persecuted; and (2) not to return noncitizens to countries where it is more likely than not that they would be tortured.193

In addition to changing to a “manifestation” standard, CBP is implementing operational changes to generally inform noncitizens subject to expedited removal that, if they have a fear of return, they should inform an immigration officer, and they will be referred to an AO for consideration of their fear claim. DHS believes that these operational changes and notice provisions, as implemented, are consistent with the notice provision in section 235(b)(1)(B)(iv) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv).194 Moreover, CBP will provide immigration officers with information on how to apply the manifestation standard, including that manifestation may occur verbally, non-verbally, or physically.

Upon implementation of this rule, signs will be posted in areas of CBP facilities where individuals are most likely to see those signs. The signs will provide clear direction to individuals that, in addition to being able to inform the inspecting immigration officers of urgent medical or other concerns, they should inform the inspecting immigration officer if they have a fear of return, and that, if they do, they will be referred for a screening. These signs will be in the languages spoken by the most common nationalities encountered by CBP and thus will likely be understood by those described in the Proclamation and likely subject to the provisions of this rule.195

Moreover, in CBP’s large capacity facilities—where the vast majority of individuals subject to expedited removal undergo processing—a short video explaining the importance of raising urgent medical concerns, a need for food or water, or fear of return will be shown on a loop in the processing areas and will also be available in those languages most commonly spoken by those noncitizens encountered by CBP who may be described in the

192 Although neither the Refugee Convention nor the Refugee Protocol nor the CAT includes specific screening requirements, the United States is bound not to return noncitizens from the United States to countries where they would be tortured, or, with limited exceptions, to countries where they would be persecuted on account of a protected ground. As discussed in detail above in Section III.A.1 of this preamble, the United States implements its non-refoulement obligations under Article 33 of the Refugee Convention (via the Refugee Protocol) through the statutory withholding of removal provision in section 241(b)(3) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3), not through the asylum provisions at section 206 of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1158. And the United States implements its obligations under the CAT through regulations. See FARRA, Pub. L. 105–277, sec. 242, 112 Stat. 2681, 2631–822 (8 U.S.C. 1231 note); 8 CFR 208.16(c), 208.17, 208.18, 1208.16(c), 1208.17, 1208.18.

193 136 Cong. Rec. 36198 (1990) (recording the Senate debate to the ratification of the CAT, subject to certain reservations, understandings, and declarations, including that the phrase in Article 3 of the CAT, “‘where there are subjective grounds such as those referred to in the notification of the CAT, subject to certain reservations,’” is understood to mean “‘if it is more likely than not that he would be tortured’ “); see also Pieree, 502 F.3d at 115.

194 DHS acknowledges that an argument could be made that the requirement includes specific screening requirements. See 28 U.S.C. 235(b)(1)(B)(iv) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv), which states that DHS “shall provide information concerning the asylum interview . . . to aliens who may be eligible,” is not limited only to noncitizens who are eligible for a credible fear interview, but instead applies to noncitizens who are suspected of qualifying for expedited removal and “may” be eligible for an interview. In all events, DHS is providing information to noncitizens who are being processed for expedited removal about their right to seek asylum and protection in the United States. As explained below, DHS is posting signs on display for all noncitizens in CBP custody and including the information provided on the signs. As explained below, DHS is posting signs on display for all noncitizens in CBP custody and including the information provided on the signs. 195 Currently, these large capacity facilities hold the vast majority of individuals in CBP custody. Although the videos will not be shown at smaller facilities, including small POEs and Border Patrol stations, these facilities house very few noncitizens who are subject to the asylum limitation. These small facilities will still post the relevant signs in the processing areas. And at these small facilities, resources are such that immigration officers will be able to devote a great deal of attention to observing individuals, including for any manifestations of fear or any indication that an individual requires assistance from a translator or reading assistance to understand the information provided at the facility, including the information provided on the signs. Immigration officers at these facilities are trained to provide such assistance as needed and will continue to do so under this rule.

198 These videos and signs will be presented in a manner that is consistent with how CBP provides other important notifications to individuals in its facilities. CBP utilizes posters for other critical information, such as ensuring that individuals are on the lookout for those who may commit suicide, advising all children in custody of the amenities available to them (e.g., food, water, medical care, blankets, and hygiene products), communicating its zero tolerance regarding sexual assault, and conveying critical information about oversight by the Office of Inspector General. CBP also has a video targeted towards UCs explaining the process that they will go through. These signs and videos are similarly posted in the DHS's experience, based on the nature of CBP facilities and the utility of the existing signs, is that short, concise, and simple notifications are effective. This is because CBP holds individuals only for as long as it takes to complete inspection and processing, including conducting any basic medical screenings and making arrangements for transfer out of CBP custody. Particularly for those who are apprehended by USBP between POEs, noncitizens will go through a number of steps during their time in a CBP facility, including completion of processing paperwork, fingerprinting, and being interviewed by an inspecting immigration officer. In many USBP facilities, these steps occur at the same time as the facility provides showers and hygiene products, medical evaluations, and food and water. Given that noncitizens may move through other areas of the facility and do not remain in custody for a long period of time, DHS regularly places important signs in both the processing areas and the detention areas of its facilities, which are the locations where noncitizens spend time while being inspected or while in CBP custody; DHS is confident that noncitizens see these existing signs and that the new signs added as part of this rule are also likely to be seen. DHS has determined that more complicated videos and signs are less effective for conveying important information.

DHS acknowledges that these procedures represent a departure from the justification that the former Immigration and Naturalization Service (“INS”) provided, in 1997, when it adopted the current procedures in 8 CFR 235(b)(2)(i). At the time, INS explained that adopting these procedures would “ensure that bona fide asylum claimants are given every opportunity to assert their claim[s],” and that it was including the requirement that immigration officers must provide advisals about the credible fear process and ask questions about fear as “safeguards” to “protect noncitizens spending time in a CBP facility, including evaluations, and food and water. Given that noncitizens may move through other areas of the facility and do not remain in custody for a long period of time, DHS has determined that it is reasonable to change the procedures here.

When the existing regulations were adopted in 1997, the situation at the border was different. In 1998 (the first full year that statistics concerning the expedited removal process were available), approximately 80,000 noncitizens were processed for expedited removal. In that same year, AOIs conducted fewer than 3,000 credible fear interviews and IJs reviewed numbered around 100. Additionally, at that time, expedited removal was applied only to “arriving aliens,” noncitizens processed at a POE, not noncitizens encountered between POEs. Expedited removal was not extended to certain noncitizens encountered after entering between POEs until 2004. See Designating Aliens for Exempted Removal, 69 FR 48877 (Aug. 11, 2004) (extending expedited removal to noncitizens encountered within 100 air miles of the border and within 14 days of entry). At that time, USBP apprehended approximately 1.1 million noncitizens between POEs annually. The numbers have changed significantly since that time. In FY 2023, USBP apprehended more than 2 million noncitizens between POEs along the SWB. In February 2024, USBP processed more than 33,000 individuals for expedited removal, and USBP processed more than 28,000 in March 2024. Since May 2023, USCIS has completed about 3,300 credible fear interviews per week of individuals encountered at and between SWB POEs, and in FY 2023, IJs reviewed over 34,000 credible fear decisions. These high levels of encounters and credible fear referrals impose a significant burden on the expedited removal process and have strained DHS and EOIR resources, substantially impairing the Departments’ ability to deliver timely decisions and timely consequences. At a processing time of approximately 2 hours per person, USBP agents spent approximately 56,000 hours—the equivalent of approximately 2,333 calendar days—processing the approximately 28,000 expedited removal cases in March 2024 under the current process. High numbers, such as those giving rise to the Proclamation and this rule, increase the likelihood that USBP facilities will become quickly overcrowded. This type of crowding in USBP facilities creates health and safety concerns for noncitizens and Government personnel.

Additionally, compared to 1997, today’s high levels of migration impose a severe strain on the credible fear process. AOIs and IJs must devote substantial resources to credible fear interviews and reviews. Despite the strengthened consequences in place at the SWB through the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and the supplementary measures that have led to record returns and removals, encounter levels and credible fear referrals are exceeding the capacity on April 2, 2024.

the expedited removal process.\footnote{213} Therefore, DHS has determined that a different approach is needed here. The manifestation standard in the new rule is designed to reasonably help meet these challenges during emergency border circumstances. It is intended to help immigration officers process noncitizens more expeditiously, while still affording opportunities for those seeking protection to do so.

DHS acknowledges that, by implementing a manifestation standard in the circumstances outlined in this rule, it is appropriately eliminating the requirement to provide individualized advisals and ask affirmative questions via Forms I–867A and B. DHS has determined that, in light of the circumstances giving rise to the Proclamation and this rule, it is critical to have a system in place that more effectively and efficiently identifies those who may have a fear of return or indicate an intention to seek asylum. DHS is making the decision to use the manifestation standard consistent with the standards outlined above, and for the reasons outlined below. At bottom, based on DHS’s long experience inspecting and interviewing individuals, DHS has determined that a manifestation approach is the most appropriate way to address emergency border circumstances while still sufficiently affording the ability to seek protection. Specifically, DHS makes this determination based on its significant experience relating to the inspection of individuals seeking entry and admission into the United States. DHS immigration officers have expertise observing and inspecting individuals, as they consistently encounter and inspect large numbers of people every day. In FY 2019, prior to COVID–19, for example, the approximately 28,000 officers of CBP’s Office of Field Operations\footnote{214} processed more than 1.1 million people at POEs every day.\footnote{215} USBP’s 20,000 agents\footnote{216} encountered more than 2 million people on the SWB in FY 2023.\footnote{217}

In addition, DHS, including through its predecessor agencies, has been implementing the expedited removal provisions since 1997. It therefore has nearly 30 years of experience completing the Form I–867A advisals and asking the questions on Form I–867B.\footnote{218} Based on this experience, it is DHS’s determination that, when individuals are asked affirmative questions, such as those on Form I–867B, individuals are more likely to respond in the affirmative, even if they do not in fact have a fear of return or intention of seeking asylum. Moreover, based on this experience, DHS concludes that providing noncitizens with specific advisals on fear claims, particularly given the emergency context of this rule and because few if any other advisals are provided, would be suggestive and prompt many individuals to respond in the affirmative even if they do not have any actual fear or intention to seek asylum. For this reason, as well, DHS has made the determination, based on its experience and expertise inspecting noncitizens, to temporarily adjust its approach to individualized advisals and questions about fear.

As part of this approach, DHS is temporarily forgoing asking the fear questions on Form I–867B with respect to noncitizens who (1) are described in \S 208.13(g), (2) are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, and (3) are processed for expedited removal. DHS anticipates that this approach will likely lead to a higher proportion of those referred having colorable claims for protection. Based on the expertise of DHS in administering Form I–867B, it has determined that affirmative questions are suggestive and account for part of the high rates of referrals and screen-ins that do not ultimately result in a grant of asylum or protection.\footnote{219} DHS believes that those noncitizens who indicate a fear of return on their own, in the absence of suggestive questions, are more likely to be urgently seeking protection. Indeed, it is DHS’s experience and assessment that asking questions is likely to lead individuals to answer yes, even if they do not actually have a fear of persecution or torture.\footnote{220} DHS acknowledges that there are mixed opinions on this point and that this may not be the case for all individuals, such that questioning may be helpful in order for some individuals to feel comfortable articulating a fear.\footnote{221} DHS recognizes that the manifestation standard, as with any other screening standard, could result in some noncitizens with meritorious claims not being referred to a credible fear interview. However, in light of the emergency border circumstances facing the Departments and addressed by the Proclamation and this rule, DHS believes the standard is appropriate and necessary. During emergency border circumstances, it is critical for the Departments to devote their screening and processing resources to those urgently seeking protection while quickly removing those who are not. DHS believes that the manifestation standard, rather than affirmative questioning, better achieves this balance in emergency border circumstances.

This is also reflected in the behavioral science concept of “acquiescence,” in which individuals tend to “consistently agree to questionnaire items irrespective of item directionality.” Shane Costello & John Roodenburg, Acquiescence Response Bias—Yielding and Higher Education, 32 Australian Ed. & Dev. Psych. 105, 105 (2015). Studies have shown that this bias is higher amongst those with lower education levels and from countries that score higher on scales of corruption or collectivism. See, e.g., Beatrice Ramstedt, Daniel Danner & Michael Bosnjak, Acquiescence Response Styles: A Multilevel Model Explaining Individual-Level and Country-Level Differences, 107 Personality & Individual Differences 199 (2019); Stephen J. & Margaret E. Roberts, Acquiescence Bias Inflates Estimates of Conspiratorial Beliefs and Political Misperceptions, 31 Pol. Analysis 575 (2023).

Additionally, DHS is eliminating the requirement that officers and agents read the individualized advisals on Form I–867A. DHS plans to replace these advisals with a generalized notice—for all individuals in CBP facilities—of the ability to raise a claim of fear of persecution or torture. DHS is making this change based on its experience suggesting that, like with the Form I–867B questions, individualized Form I–867A advisals would be suggestive and would likely lead many individuals to claim a fear of return when they otherwise would not, particularly given the emergency context of this rule and because there are few if any other advisals provided. Based on its experience, DHS determines that receiving these advisals on their own is also suggestive.222 Thus, in the context of inspecting individuals who (1) are described in § 208.13(g), (2) are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, and (3) are processed for expedited removal, DHS has determined not to require the provision of such suggestive advisals. DHS acknowledges that, like with the Form I–867B questions, there are studies that show that such advisals make it more likely that a noncitizen will indicate a fear of return.223 However, based on DHS’s experience, the nature of the emergency border circumstances facing the Departments, and the statutory requirements, DHS has determined that the approach taken here—eliminating the requirement to provide individualized advisals but providing signage and videos—is appropriate.224

Indeed, DHS notes that the manifestation standard has been used in other urgent and challenging situations to identify noncitizens with fear claims. This standard has long been used by the United States Coast Guard, a DHS component, to determine whether an at-sea protection screening interview is required for migrants intercepted at sea.225 This standard was also adopted by the United States Government to screen family units during the pendency of the Title 42 public health Order, when the Government was similarly dealing with urgent, exigent circumstances—the global pandemic—while still allowing noncitizens an opportunity to seek protection.226

DHS believes that the manifestation standard is reasonably designed to identify meritorious claims even if a noncitizen does not expressly articulate a fear of return. Manifestations may be verbal, non-verbal, or physical.227 A manifestation of fear may present with non-verbal or physical cues, through behaviors such as shaking, crying, fleeing, or changes in tone of voice, or through physical injuries consistent with abuse.228 An individual who may not be comfortable answering a question about whether they have a fear of return may nevertheless manifest that fear through an unconscious behavior, which can be observed by the inspecting immigration officer, and the individual may then be referred for a fear screening. DHS acknowledges that, in some cases, these behaviors may reflect circumstances other than a fear of return—for instance, a noncitizen who has just arrived at the border may be physically tired, cold, hungry, and disoriented, which may present similarly to manifestation of fear. In such cases, DHS immigration officers will use their expertise and training to determine whether the noncitizen is manifesting a fear. If there is any doubt, however, immigration officers will be instructed to err on the side of caution and refer the noncitizen to an AO for a credible fear interview.

Moreover, DHS will provide immigration officers with information on how to apply the standard, which will build on their existing training and experience. Indeed, as noted above, CBP immigration officers (both USBP agents and CBP officers) have extensive experience interviewing and observing individuals. As a result of their experience and training, they have skills and expertise in interacting with individuals and observing human behavior and in determining appropriate follow up steps with regards to any behaviors or indicators of concern. For instance, upon encountering a group of individuals who purport to be a family, USBP agents will observe the individuals to determine whether they evidence typical familial behavior or whether there are any concerns about the validity of the asserted familial relationship or the safety of any children in the group. Agents and officers are also trained on identifying potential trafficking victims or victims of crimes and are trained on appropriate follow up action. Additionally, agents and officers frequently encounter individuals who may be vulnerable, including those in physical or medical distress or in need of humanitarian care, as well as those who may be seeking protection in the United States. Agents and officers can similarly use such skills and experiences to identify any manifestations of fear. Agents and officers will also receive information on how to apply the manifestation standard, including that manifestation may occur verbally, non-verbally, or physically.

222 DHS considered whether to provide a short, individualized advisal to inform noncitizens of their ability to seek asylum, in addition to these signs and videos. But DHS determined that such a short, individualized advisal would be unlikely to convey information more effectively than the signs and videos that CBP already intends to use as a general notification, and that even a short advisal would take undue time to administer. Moreover, CBP assesses that the signs and videos providing general notification of the ability to seek asylum are less suggestive than short, individualized advisals would be.

223 See, e.g., USCRIF Report at 16–18.

224 DHS reviewed whether to provide a short, individualized advisal to inform noncitizens of their ability to seek asylum, in addition to these signs and videos. But DHS determined that such a short, individualized advisal would be unlikely to convey information more effectively than the signs and videos that CBP already intends to use as a general notification, and that even a short advisal would take undue time to administer. identify noncitizens with potential fear or asylum claims under a manifestation approach. Therefore, DHS believes that this rule remains consistent with the need to “safeguard[]” the rights of asylum seekers. See 62 FR at 10319. Because an immigration officer’s observation of whether a noncitizen manifests a fear—rather than a noncitizen’s answers to affirmative questions regarding asylum—will lead to a referral to an AO for a fear screening, this standard may result in a greater proportion of those referred to an AO being individuals with meritorious claims.

Additionally, the manifestation standard in the rule will enable DHS to streamline the process, allowing it to process noncitizens in a more expeditious manner during the emergency border circumstances identified in the Proclamation and this rule. In particular, DHS anticipates that omitting the requirement to complete Form I–867A and I–867B will save about 20 to 30 minutes per noncitizen, providing DHS with—based on the number of cases in March 2024—approximately 14,000 extra personnel hours per month. This increased efficiency is critical for processing noncitizens in an expeditious way, and thus will better ensure that, given the immense challenges of irregular migration at the southern border, DHS’s limited resources are used most effectively while still affording opportunities for noncitizens to seek asylum or protection. Indeed, this is particularly critical in the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and the rule. As discussed above, given the number of noncitizens and the time it takes to process them during periods of heightened encounters, expediting the process is critical for avoiding overcrowding and ensuring safe conditions for those in custody.

For all of these reasons, DHS believes that the “manifestation of fear” standard, as explained in the rule, will enable immigration officers to effectively identify noncitizens who require credible fear interviews while streamlining the process. During the emergency circumstances described in the Proclamation and the rule, it is important for immigration officers to expeditiously process and swiftly apply consequences to noncitizens while still affording access to protection. Here, the Departments are currently facing such emergency circumstances, as explained above in Sections III.B.1 and 2 of this preamble. DHS believes that the approach taken in the rule is the most appropriate one in light of the situation at the southern border, as explained in this rule and as discussed in the Proclamation, balancing the need to protect those who may wish to seek protection in the United States against an urgent need to use DHS resources effectively.

c. Raising the Standard for Protection Screening

Under this rule, if the AO determines that, in light of the limitation on asylum eligibility under 8 CFR 208.35(a), there is not a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish eligibility for asylum, see INA 235(b)(1)(B)(v), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(v), the AO will enter a negative credible fear determination with respect to the noncitizen’s asylum claim. See 8 CFR 208.35(b)(1)(i). The AO will then assess whether the noncitizen has established a reasonable probability of persecution (meaning a reasonable probability of being persecuted because of their race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion) or torture, with respect to the designated country or countries of removal identified pursuant to section 241(b)(2) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(2). See 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(i). Likewise, when reviewing a negative credible fear determination, where the IJ concludes that there is not a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish eligibility for asylum in light of the limitation on asylum eligibility, the IJ will assess whether the noncitizen has established a reasonable probability of persecution because of a protected ground or torture. See 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(ii).

The Departments have some discretion to articulate the screening standard for claims for statutory withholding of removal and protection under the CAT. As the Departments observed previously, “Congress clearly expressed its intent that the ‘significant possibility’ standard be used to screen for asylum eligibility but did not express any clear intent as to which standard should apply to other applications.” 88 FR at 11742. In addition, “the legislative history regarding the credible fear screening process references only asylum.” Id. at 11743. By contrast, section 241(b)(3) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b)(3), and FARRA section 2242 are silent as to what screening procedures are to be employed, while the INA elsewhere confers broad discretionary authority to establish rules and procedures for implementing those provisions, see, e.g., INA 103(a)(3), (g)(2), 8 U.S.C. 1103(a)(3), (g)(2).

Moreover, in past rules applying a “reasonable possibility” screening standard to claims for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection, the Departments have noted that such a screening standard is used “in other contexts where noncitizens would also be ineligible for asylum.” 88 FR at 11743 (citing 8 CFR 208.31(c), (e)); see also, e.g., Procedures for Asylum and Withholding of Removal; Credible Fear and Reasonable Fear Review, 85 FR 36204, 36270 (June 15, 2020) (referencing “the established framework for considering whether to grant statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection in the reasonable fear context”). Under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, “[i]f a noncitizen is subject to the lawful pathways condition on eligibility for asylum and not excepted and cannot rebut the presumption of the condition’s applicability, there would not be a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish eligibility for asylum.” 88 FR at 11742. For those noncitizens, the Departments implemented a “reasonable possibility of persecution or torture” screening standard for statutory withholding of removal and protection under the CAT. See 8 CFR 208.33(b)(2)(ii), 1208.33(b)(2)(ii). The Departments similarly believe that those who enter across the southern border during the emergency border circumstances identified in the Proclamation and this rule and who are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, do not establish an enumerated exception, and are unable to establish a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum should be screened for protection under a higher screening standard.

The Departments’ experience with the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule has validated the Departments’ choice to use an elevated screening standard to narrowly focus limited resources on those who are likely to be persecuted or tortured and to remove those who are unlikely to establish eligibility for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection. Under that rule, which uses a “reasonable possibility of persecution or torture” screening standard for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection claims, the Departments have processed record numbers of noncitizens through expedited removal and have seen a significant decrease in the rate at which noncitizens receive positive credible fear determinations, showing greater operational efficiencies. Between May 12, 2023, and March 31, 2024, USCIS completed more than 152,000 credible fear interviews resulting from SWB expedited removal cases—this is more than twice as many interviews during the span of ten and a half months than the 75,000 interviews resulting from SWB encounters that USCIS averaged each year from FY 2014 to FY 2019. Between May 12, 2023, and March 31, 2024, 52 percent (approximately 57,000) of those who were subject to the rule’s presumption were able to establish a credible fear of persecution or torture under the “reasonable possibility” standard, compared to an 83 percent credible fear screen-in rate in the pre-pandemic period of 2014 to 2019. From 2014 through 2019, of SWB expedited removal cases with positive fear determinations, less than 25 percent of EOIR case completions ultimately resulted in a grant of protection or relief.

Screening under the “reasonable possibility” standard has allowed the Departments to screen out and swiftly remove additional noncitizens whose claims are unlikely to succeed at the merits stage. Although fewer noncitizens are screened in under the “reasonable possibility” standard applied in the context of the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, that screen-in rate remains significantly higher than the grant rate for ultimate merits adjudication for SWB expedited removal cases that existed prior to the rule. Under the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule, the Departments’ limited resources must be focused on processing those who are most likely to be persecuted or tortured if removed, and overall border security and immigration systems efficiencies outweigh any challenges related to training on a new screening standard and a possible marginal increase in interview length resulting from the application of a new standard in screening interviews. Likewise, the benefits of this rule, which is consistent with all statutory and regulatory requirements and the United States’ international law obligations, outweigh any potential marginal increase in the likelihood that a meritorious case would fail under the raised screening standard. Swiftly removing noncitizens without meritorious claims is critical to deterring noncitizens from seeking entry under the belief that they will be released and able to remain in the United States for a significant period. See, e.g., 88 FR at 31324 (discussing the success of the CHNV parole processes as being in part due to imposing consequences for failing to use a lawful pathway, namely swift removal); 88 FR at 11713 (noting that in the 60 days immediately following DHS’s resumption of routine repatriation flights to Guatemala and Honduras, average daily encounters fell by 38 percent for Guatemala and 42 percent for Honduras.

To allow for swift removals in the case of those noncitizens who the Departments are confident are unlikely to meet their ultimate burden to establish eligibility for statutory withholding of removal or protection under the CAT, the Departments have decided to raise the screening standard to “reasonable probability of persecution or torture” during the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule. The Departments define this “reasonable probability” standard as “substantially more than a reasonable possibility, but somewhat less than more likely than not.” 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(i), 1208.35(b)(2)(ii). Under this standard, a noncitizen would be screened in if they provide credible testimony and set forth a credible claim with sufficient specificity for an AO or IJ to be persuaded that there is a reasonable probability that the noncitizen would be persecuted or tortured so as to qualify for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection in an ultimate merits adjudication.

The Departments view the difference between the “reasonable possibility” standard and the new “reasonable probability” standard as being that the new standard requires a greater specificity of the claim in the noncitizen’s testimony before the AO or the IJ. In particular, although claims based on general fears of return may at times be found to meet the “reasonable possibility” standard where evidence in the record of country conditions 234 OHSS analysis of data downloaded from UIP on April 2, 2024. At this time, data on EOIR’s grant rate under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule is not available because only a small number of cases processed under that rule have been completed. From May 12 through November 30, 2023 (the most recent data for which fully linked records are available), a total of 61,000 SWB expedited removal cases have been referred to EOIR for section 240 removal proceedings, including 1,400 with case completions (2.2 percent). In addition, cases that are already completed are a biased sample of all future completions because in years since FY 2014, the median processing time for cases resulting in relief or other protection from removal has been, on average, about six times longer than the median processing time for cases resulting in removal orders, so reporting on the small data set of already completed cases would yield a relief rate that is artificially low. For example, over the past five years, the number of employment authorization documents (EADs) approved for individuals with pending asylum cases that have passed the 180-day mark increased from 55,000 in FY 2012 to 270,000 in FY 2016, and further to 278,000 in just the first six months of FY 2017. This high and growing level of EAD grants may suggest that, as processing times have grown, so too have incentives to file claims as a means of obtaining work authorization and protection from deportation, without a sound underlying claim to humanitarian protection.”).

239 Credible testimony alone is sufficient in a creditable fear screening, and AOs are trained to ask questions to elicit testimony to assist the noncitizen in meeting their burden with testimony alone. Although testimony alone could certainly meet the burden, it is not required that the burden be met solely through testimony. And even though corroborating evidence is not required, AOs will consider any additional evidence the noncitizen presents. Additionally, AOs are trained to conduct interviews of individuals with persecution or non-persecution-related injuries, traumas, or conditions that may impact their ability to provide testimony for themselves.
indicates instances of persecution or torture within the country, such claims are less likely to be sufficient under the “reasonable probability” standard when the noncitizen cannot provide greater detail in their statements and information as to the basis for their individual claim.

The Departments frequently see such general claims of fear that lack specificity at both the screening and merits stage. However, generalized fear of persecution is ultimately not sufficient to establish a claim. See Sharma v. Garland, 9 F.4th 1052, 1060 (9th Cir. 2023) (“[A]lternative country conditions are not sufficient evidence of past persecution, for the obvious reason that ‘[t]o establish past persecution, an applicant must show that he as individually targeted on account of a protected ground rather than simply the victim of generalized violence.’ ” (quoting Hussain v. Rosen, 965 F.3d 634, 646 (9th Cir. 2012)); Prasad v. INS, 101 F.3d 614, 617 (9th Cir. 1996) (stating that to establish past persecution, it is not sufficient to show [the applicant] was merely subject to the general dangers attending a civil war or domestic unrest”); Al Fara v. Gonzales, 404 F.3d 733, 740 (3d Cir. 2005) (“[G]enerally harsh conditions shared by many other persons do not amount to persecution. . . . [H]arm resulting from country-wide civil strife is not persecution on account of an enumerated statutory factor.” (quotation marks omitted)); see also Debab v. INS, 163 F.3d 21, 27 (1st Cir. 1998) (citing cases).

Moreover, to establish ultimate eligibility for CAT protection, the noncitizen must demonstrate an individualized risk of torture—not a general possibility of it. See Escobar-Hernandez v. Barr, 940 F.3d 1358, 1362 (10th Cir. 2019) (“[P]ervasives violence in an applicant’s country generally is insufficient to demonstrate the applicant is more likely than not to be tortured upon returning there.”); Bernard v. Sessions, 881 F.3d 1042, 1047 (7th Cir. 2018) (“Evidence of generalized violence is not enough; the IJ must conclude that there is a substantial risk that the petitioner will be targeted specifically.”); Lorzano-Zuniga v. Lynch, 832 F.3d 822, 830–31 (7th Cir. 2016) (“[G]eneralized violence or danger within a country is not sufficient to make a claim that it is more likely than not that a petitioner would be tortured upon return to his home country.”); Alvizures-Gomes v. Lynch, 830 F.3d 49, 55 (1st Cir. 2016) (country reports documenting overall corruption and ineffectiveness of Guatemalan authorities “do not relieve [the applicant] of the obligation to point to specific evidence indicating that he, personally, faces a risk of torture because of these alleged shortcomings”); Delgado-Ortiz v. Holder, 600 F.3d 1148, 1152 (9th Cir. 2010) (“Petitioners’ generalized evidence of violence and crime in Mexico is not particular to Petitioners and is insufficient to meet th[e] standard [for eligibility for CAT protection].”).

Under the “reasonable possibility” standard, a noncitizen presenting a claim based on general civil strife is sometimes found to pass the screening stage even where they provide only general testimony about their fear of harm. For example, a noncitizen may meet the “reasonable possibility” standard where he expresses a fear of being killed by the government upon his return to his native country, United States Government reports indicate the country may engage in human rights abuses, and the noncitizen has been involved in anti-government political activism for years, even absent specific information or individualized threat against the noncitizen or any other individuals who have been threatened or harmed. But to meet the “reasonable probability” standard, the noncitizen would either need to explain with some specificity why he thinks he, in particular, is likely to be harmed, or the record would have to reflect some specific information regarding the treatment of anti-government political activists similarly situated to the applicant. Such claims are assessed on a case-by-case basis. As an example, however, were the noncitizen to credibly state that he knew, and to provide details about, people who are similarly situated to him who have been killed, harmed, or credibly threatened, that testimony may be sufficient to meet the “reasonable probability” standard because it provides more specificity as to why the noncitizen believes he would be harmed. The Departments believe that the “reasonable probability” standard, by requiring additional specificity, will better identify claims that are likely to be meritorious in a full adjudication while screening out those whose claims are not likely to prevail.240

240 Although the Departments believe the standard will better identify claims that are likely to be meritorious, for now the Departments do not seek to apply the “reasonable probability” standard outside the context of this rule—that is, to those who do not establish a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum because of the limitation on asylum eligibility or, if the limitation is rendered inoperative by court order, to those who are ineligible for asylum under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, see 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(i) and (3), 1208.35(b)(2)(ii) and (4)—because in this rule the Departments are addressing emergency border circumstances rather than regulating to change the status quo. The Departments may consider such changes in future rulemaking.

The Departments are confident that AOs and IJs can apply this heightened standard effectively to identify those who are likely to have viable claims on the merits while mitigating the possibility that those with a viable claim would be screened out. The level of specificity and certainty that the “reasonable probability” standard requires remains lower than the ultimate merits standard, and AOs and IJs have the training and experience necessary to elicit the information required to determine whether a case is sufficiently specific to meet the “reasonable probability” standard.241

This is particularly the case because, in implementing such training, USCIS expects to adapt existing training, including on the ultimate merits standard, to prepare AOs on the “reasonable probability” screening standard, since the way evidence is evaluated remains the same, save for the degree of specificity required. AOs especially have significant training in non-adversarial interview techniques and are required to elicit testimony from the noncitizen—in effect, to help the noncitizen meet their burden through testimony alone.242 If upon such questioning a noncitizen is unable to provide specific facts that lead the AO or IJ to believe that the noncitizen would be able to meet their burden with more opportunity to prepare, such claims are unlikely to prevail at the merits stage.

Moreover, this heightened screening standard targets information—specificity based on the noncitizen’s own knowledge—that should generally be available at the screening stage. A noncitizen at the screening stage generally would have information regarding their fear of harm such as whom they are afraid of and why, and an AO will elicit information regarding the claim that either is sufficiently specific to satisfy the heightened screening standard or is not. Credible 242 USCIS, RAIO Directorate—Office Training: Interviewing—Introduction to the Non-Adversarial Interview (Dec. 20, 2019). As discussed in a previous rule, AOs have experience in “country conditions and legal issues, as well as nondocumentary interviewing techniques,” and they have “ready access to country conditions experts, Procedures for Credible Fear Screening and Consideration of Asylum, Withholding of Removal, and CAT Protection Claims by Asylum Officers, 86 FR 46906, 46918 (Aug. 20, 2021).

testimony alone can satisfy the noncitizen's burden and is sometimes the only available evidence of persecution or torture. See, e.g., Matter of Mogharrabi, 19 I&N Dec. 439, 443 (BIA 1987). In most cases, noncitizens would have such information at the screening stage, and the Departments expect—and logic suggests—that such information could be shared through testimony. Instances of past harm or those that inform a future fear of return that caused a noncitizen to seek protection generally occur before entry and would not be expected to develop after the fact of entry or after the screening stage. Hence, the Departments believe that this standard will screen out claims that are likely to fail at the merits stage and poses only a minimal risk of screening out claims that could ultimately succeed. For example, if a noncitizen does not know who harmed or would harm them or why, in the Departments' experience, AOs and IJs will often be able to determine—depending on the facts of the case—that it is unlikely that the noncitizen will be able to provide answers to those critical questions at the merits stage. In addition, AOs and IJs also receive training in, and have substantial experience weighing, country conditions, which will further help them assess whether and under what circumstances the lack of specificity in a noncitizen's testimony indicates that they have little prospect of meeting their ultimate burden.\(^{243}\) For example, it may be the case that where a noncitizen expresses only generalized fear of harm based on their ethnicity, but country conditions confirm serious, ongoing harm in the form of widespread, systematic persecutory acts by government institutions targeting individuals who are similarly situated to the noncitizen, adjudicators will rely on that information to deem the "reasonable probability" standard satisfied.

AOs, supervisory AOs, and IJs receive training and have experience applying asylum, statutory withholding of removal, and CAT protection screening standards and in applying and reviewing decisions related to the ultimate asylum (for USCIS and EOIR) and statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection (for EOIR) merits standards, so they are well-suited to be able to identify in a screening whether the information the noncitizen has provided is sufficiently specific to lead them to believe that the noncitizen may be able to establish eligibility at the merits stage.\(^{244}\) Moreover, all credible fear determinations must be concurred upon by a supervisory AO before they become final to ensure quality and consistency and will be subject to de novo II review if requested by the noncitizen. See 8 CFR 235.3(b)(7), 235.15(b)(2)(i)(B), 1208.35(b).

Although AOs, supervisory AOs, and IJs will have to be trained on applying the new "reasonable probability of persecution or torture" standard, the standard as explained above is not a significant departure from the types of analyses AOs, supervisory AOs, and IJs conduct on a daily basis. Rather, it is a matter of degree—to meet the "reasonable probability of persecution or torture" standard, the noncitizen must present more specificity than is required to meet the "reasonable possibility of persecution or torture" standard, but not so much as to establish ultimate eligibility for protection. Indeed, to meet the ultimate standard, noncitizens may still be required to provide more evidence—whether testimonial or documentary.

The Departments do not believe that applying the "reasonable probability of persecution or torture" standard will increase the time required for credible fear interviews by any great margin. AOs generally ask similar questions to elicit information from noncitizens during screening interviews regardless of the standard they will apply to the information elicited. The difference will be whether the information provided as a result of those questions reaches the required level of specificity. That said, there may be cases where an AO believes that the noncitizen may be able to meet the "reasonable probability of persecution or torture" standard after answering a few additional questions. But even if there is a marginal increase in the length of some interviews, the Departments believe that the interest in swift removal of those unlikely to establish eligibility for protection during emergency border circumstances outweighs the risk of some interviews taking longer.\(^{245}\) This is because a higher standard will be more likely to create a deterrent: Those less likely to establish eligibility for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection will be swiftly removed rather than being released and waiting years for a hearing, or in some cases, absconding and remaining in the United States unlawfully. And this deterrent effect could lead to lower encounter levels as noncitizens and smugglers realize that the process is functioning as intended.

\(^{245}\) In Section III.B.3.b of this preamble, the Departments conclude that there is a need to streamline immigration officers' processing of noncitizens through expedited removal while the Proclamation's suspension and limitation on entry is in effect. That reasoning is not inconsistent with the reasoning here. Because AOs' interview only a subset of noncitizens processed through expedited removal, the Departments believe at most a portion of those noncitizens' credible fear interviews may be longer, and, as noted, any marginal increase in the time it takes to conduct some interviews is offset by improved efficiency and avoiding erroneous screen-ins, which result in noncitizens being added to the backlog of immigration cases and being released into and remaining in the United States for a significant period of time.
more effectively.\textsuperscript{246} Screening out those unlikely to establish eligibility for protection has the added benefit of saving United States Government resources overall because fewer noncitizens who are unlikely to establish eligibility for protection will be placed into section 240 removal proceedings before EOIR, which as of the end of December 2023 had a backlog of more than 2.7 million cases.\textsuperscript{247}

In developing this rule, the Departments considered the possibility that the application of different screening standards to “the same or a closely related set of facts” might result in inefficiencies. See 87 FR at 18091; see also 88 FR at 11746. The Departments note, however, that under this rule, that is unlikely to be the case. The facts relevant to whether a noncitizen is subject to the rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility will only rarely be relevant to the inquiry into whether the noncitizen has a fear of persecution or torture. For example, whether the noncitizen faced an acute medical emergency that exceptions them from the rule under 8 CFR 208.35(a)(2)(i)(A) or 1208.35(a)(2)(i)(A) will not likely be relevant to whether the noncitizen has a fear of persecution or torture in their designated country of removal and so only the “reasonable probability” standard will be applied to the facts relevant to their persecution or torture claim. And where a noncitizen meets such an exception, they will continue to be eligible to pursue asylum in addition to any claim of persecution or torture, and those claims will all be considered only under the “significant possibility” standard. Similarly, whether a noncitizen faced an imminent and extreme threat to life and safety that excludes them from the rule under 8 CFR 208.35(a)(2)(i)(B) or 1208.35(a)(2)(i)(B) will involve an evaluation of the discrete set of circumstances at the time of the noncitizen’s arrival at the border, and will not likely be relevant to whether the noncitizen has a fear of persecution or torture in their designated country of removal. The question of an imminent threat relates to the situation immediately prior to the noncitizen’s entry into the United States, rather than necessarily any fear of persecution or torture. Thus, the Departments do not believe there will generally be a need to apply multiple standards to the same set of facts.

d. The Scope of This Rule

The Departments have decided to tie the application of this IFR, including the limitation on asylum eligibility, to emergency border circumstances. The suspension and limitation on entry applies beginning at 12:01 a.m. eastern time on June 5, 2024. The suspension and limitation on entry will be discontinued 14 calendar days after the Secretary makes a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of less than 1,500 encounters, as defined by the Proclamation, but excluding noncitizens determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE. If encounters increase again (including during the 14-calendar-day period), the suspension and limitation will apply again (or continue to apply, as applicable) after the Secretary makes a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of more than 2,500 encounters, as defined by the Proclamation, but excluding noncitizens determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE. These thresholds are consistent with those set forth in sections 2(a) and (b) of the Proclamation.\textsuperscript{248} In order to maximize the consequences for those who cross unlawfully or without authorization, DHS endeavors to deliver consequences swiftly to the highest proportion of individuals who fail to establish a legal basis to remain the United States. This includes, subject to available resources, referring the maximum number of eligible individuals possible into expedited removal to quickly adjudicate their claims. However, as described below, DHS has been limited in its ability to do so as a result of capacity and resource constraints. The number of people who can be processed for expedited removal is dependent on the Departments’ resources and can be impacted by several factors, including limited detention beds and holding capacity;\textsuperscript{249} the presence or absence of sufficient AOs to conduct credible fear interviews for all those who claim a fear or indicate an intent to apply for asylum; the availability of IJs to review negative fear findings; and the ability to repatriate individuals ordered removed in a timely manner—an option that is not always available because, among other things, it relies on independent decisions made by foreign governments.

Sustained high encounter rates threaten to overwhelm the Departments’ ability to effectively process, detain, and remove the migrants encountered, as appropriate, in a timely manner. See 88 FR at 31316. The President has determined that the suspension and limitation on entry is necessary to manage encounter levels. The Departments have determined that emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule necessitate this rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility and changes to the referral process and screening standard because, in such circumstances, DHS lacks the capacity to deliver timely consequences, and absent this rule, must resort to large-scale releases of noncitizens pending section 240 removal proceedings, which leads to significant harms and threatens to incentivize further migration by individuals who recognize the \textsuperscript{246} See Muzaffar Chishti et al., At the Breaking Point: Rethinking the U.S. Immigration Court System, Migration Pol’y Inst., at 11 (2023), https://www.migrationpolicy.org/sites/default/files/publications/mpi-courts-report-2023_final.pdf (“In the case of noncitizens arriving at the U.S.-Mexico border without authorization to enter, years-long delays create incentives to file frivolous asylum claims that further perpetuate delays for those eligible for protection, undermining the integrity of the asylum system and border enforcement.”); Doris Meissner, Paye Hipzman, & T. Alexander Aleinikoff, The U.S. Asylum System in Crisis: Charting a Way Forward, Migration Pol’y Inst., at 9 (2018), https://www.migrationpolicy.org/sites/default/files/publications/AsylumSystemInCrisis-Final.pdf (“Incentives to misuse the asylum process may also be reemerging. For example, over the past five years, the number of employment authorization documents (EADs) approved for individuals with pending asylum cases that have passed the 180-day mark increased from 55,000 in FY 2012 to 270,000 in FY 2016, and further to 278,000 in just the first six months of FY 2017. The high level of EAD grants may suggest that, as processing times have grown, too have incentives to file claims as a means of obtaining work authorization and protection from deportation, without a sound underlying claim to humanitarian protection.”).

\textsuperscript{248} The 14-day waiting period prior to a discontinuation provides time for the Departments to complete processing of noncitizens encountered during emergency border circumstances and to confirm that a downward trend in encounters is sustained. The absence of a similar waiting period prior to a reactivation reflects the operational exigencies in a circumstance in which there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of more than 2,500 encounters is necessary to avoid a surge to the border in advance of a reactivation. As the Departments have explained, the preliminary data pulled from DHS’s operational systems have not undergone a full validation process. See supra note 5. But a rapid policy and operational response to emergency border circumstances requires relying on this more recent data when making factual determinations consistent with sections 2(a) and (b) of the Proclamation. Hence, the data used to make these factual determinations may differ somewhat from the more definitive numbers that ultimately emerge from DHS’s full validation process.

The Departments have determined that the 1,500-encounter threshold is a reasonable proxy for when the border security and immigration system is no longer over capacity and the measures drafted in this rule are not necessary to deal with such circumstances.

At the outset, it is important to put the threshold in context. From FY 2000 to FY 2008, USBP encounters between POEs averaged approximately 3,000 per day, routinely including monthly averages over 3,500 for a few months most springs.252 The vast majority (94 percent) of individuals encountered by USBP during this period were Mexican nationals, and very few of those who were processed for expedited removal claimed a fear of return or an intention to seek asylum during that process—fewer than one percent of all
CBP SWB encounters.253 As a result,
DHS and its predecessor agency were able to swiftly remove or voluntarily return the vast majority of those

252 See Section III.B.2 of this preamble. The Departments acknowledge that, despite the protection preserved by the rule and the available exceptions adopted by this rule will result in the denial of some asylum claims that otherwise may have been granted and, as with all screening mechanisms, there is some risk that a case that might otherwise warrant protection might not proceed to a merits adjudication. However, in light of the emergency circumstances facing the Departments and addressed in the Proclamation and this rule, the Departments believe these measures are appropriate and necessary. And given the Departments’ experience with asylum and protection screenings and adjudications, the Departments believe that these provisions will produce accurate outcomes, although the Departments believe the rule continues to be justified even if that expectation turns out to be misplaced in close cases.

pandemic. The global COVID–19 pandemic briefly interrupted this trend, which has continued after the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order in May 2023. Between May 12, 2023, and the end of March 2024, DHS processed a record number of individuals through expedited removal as it sought to maximize the consequences at the border, and 54 percent of noncitizens processed for expedited removal indicated a fear of persecution or intent to seek asylum. As part of DHS’s comprehensive effort to impose strengthened consequences at the border after the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order, USCIS reassigned a significant number of AOs to conduct credible fear interviews, which resulted in USCIS completing a record number of such interviews. In fact, USCIS conducted more interviews from SWB encounters during the span of ten and a half months after the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order than in any full fiscal year prior to 2023, and twice as many as the annual average from FY 2010 to FY 2019.

As DHS transitioned from the enforcement of the Title 42 public health Order at the border to full use of its title 8 authorities after May 11, 2023, DHS’s capacity constraints—and the impact of those constraints on DHS’s ability to impose consequences on noncitizens who cross unlawfully or without authorization—have come increasingly into focus. Given these real resource constraints, DHS has had to make hard choices about whom it can prioritize for detention or refer into expedited removal. As a result of a lack of sufficient holding spaces, detention beds, and AOs, DHS has only been able to refer certain noncitizens into expedited removal—which, as detailed above, is the most efficient tool available under title 8 authorities to impose swift consequences for irregular migration. This means that DHS cannot impose consequences swiftly or predictably on most people encountered at the border, feeding the narrative pushed by smugglers that irregular migrants will be able to stay in the United States.

The expedited removal process requires the outlay of significant Government resources. When a noncitizen in expedited removal indicates an intention to seek asylum or a fear of persecution, rather than being swiftly removed, they are referred to an AO for a credible fear interview and may seek review of any negative screening by an IJ—all of which takes time and Government resources. As described in further detail above, DHS has made significant process enhancements to reduce the overall time it takes for individuals to proceed through this process. However, the availability of sufficient numbers of AOs to conduct credible fear interviews is critical to DHS’s ability to quickly adjudicate fear claims and deliver consequences to those who do not have a credible fear of persecution or torture.

As described above, Congress has failed to provide the additional resources requested for USCIS that would have increased the number of AOs that are available to conduct credible fear interviews for SWB cases. This reality, combined with increases in encounters at the border, and increases in the proportion of noncitizens processed for expedited removal who claim fear of return, means that DHS cannot impose consequences swiftly or predictably on most people whom DHS encounters. Due to its resource constraints, the majority of individuals USBP encountered since May 11, 2023, were ultimately placed in section 240 removal proceedings-monthly-tables, undercutting the effectiveness of the previous measures that have been implemented. This reality contributes to the vicious cycle described above in which increasing numbers of releases lead to increased migration, fueled by the narrative, pushed by smugglers, that migrants who are encountered at the border will be allowed to remain and work in the United States for long periods of time.

As a result of the changes to the nationalities and demographics being encountered at the border, and the associated increase in the rate of claiming fear by individuals encountered, the amount of resources required to deliver consequences quickly through referrals into expedited removal for the vast majority of individuals who claimed a fear in 2000 (when DHS’s predecessor agency averaged 3,000 to 7,000 daily encounters between POEs) or in 2010 (when DHS averaged 1,000 to 2,000 daily encounters between POEs) was far lower than the amount of resources required to manage the same number of encounters today.

Of course, as noted above, DHS has been experiencing much higher encounter levels, and simply does not have the resources it would need to place into expedited removal the majority of those encountered by USBP who are amenable to such processing. Similarly, DHS has never had the resources to detain every individual encountered at the border through the pendency of their immigration removal proceedings—even during FY 2009 through FY 2020, when average encounters between POEs on the SWB were 1,200 a day. Encounters between POEs on the SWB are now more than triple that level, resulting in overcrowded USBP facilities, an immigration detention system that has regularly been at capacity, and an asylum system that has been crippled by enormous backlogs and cannot deliver timely decisions.

have the capacity to process individuals through expedited removal or detain noncitizens to await their proceedings, releasing individuals into the interior of the United States is generally the only option that is left.\textsuperscript{271} The need to release individuals at the border has increased over time and peaked during surges. By contrast, when encounters (excluding UCs from non-contiguous countries and noncitizens determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE) are below 1,500 per day, DHS will be able to refer most individuals it encounters into expedited removal and deliver a swift consequence to the majority of individuals it encounters who do not establish a legal basis to remain in the United States—in the form of a return or removal. Given limited congressional appropriations and agency funding levels, DHS has a finite capacity to deliver such consequences at the border, which is reflected in the number of individuals that can be processed through expedited removal on any given day. As detailed above, DHS over the past year has significantly streamlined the expedited removal process and has set records in terms of individuals placed in expedited removal by CBP at the SWB and credible fear interviews conducted by AOs. Given current resources, however, and in the absence of congressional action, there is a limit on how many people can be put through the process—and that limit directly informs the 1,500 threshold.

From May 12, 2023, through March 2024, USBP has referred a daily average of over 900 individuals encountered at the SWB into the expedited removal process.\textsuperscript{272} During the same period, about 17 percent of individuals encountered between POEs voluntarily returned to Mexico, had their removal orders reinstated at the border, or were subject to administrative removal pursuant to INA 238(b), 8 U.S.C. 1228(b).\textsuperscript{273} Thus at the 1,500-encounter level and assuming a similar level of voluntary repatriations and reinstatements, DHS would be able to refer for expedited removal more than 70 percent of the individuals who are not quickly repatriated.\textsuperscript{274} As discussed previously, of those individuals encountered by USBP and placed into expedited removal from May 12, 2023 to March 31, 2024, 65 percent have been quickly removable—either because they do not claim a fear, or because they are found not to have a credible fear and are ordered removed.\textsuperscript{275} This means that, at 1,500 daily encounters between POEs, and assuming similar fear claim rates, DHS would be able to quickly remove the majority of the people it processes at the border on any given day who have no legal basis to remain in the United States.\textsuperscript{276} Simply put, at 1,500 daily encounters, DHS would be able to swiftly deliver a consequence to enough individuals to meaningfully impact migratory decisions and deter unlawful entries. DHS would also be able to minimize releases of those who are amenable to expedited removal or transfer them to ICE custody pending immigration proceedings. By contrast, above 2,500 encounters—the level at which the Proclamation and the rule would again apply—DHS’s ability to impose such consequences is significantly lower and decreases rapidly as encounters increase beyond that level. At the 2,500-encounter level and assuming a similar level of voluntary repatriations and reinstatements described above, DHS would be able to place just 43 percent of the individuals who are not quickly repatriated into expedited removal—significantly less than the 70 percent under the 1,500-encounter threshold.\textsuperscript{277} This would, in turn, lead to a significant degradation of DHS’s ability to impose consequences at the border for individuals who do not establish a legal basis to remain in the United States; with DHS only able to quickly remove or return substantially less than half of the individuals it encounters.\textsuperscript{278} Moreover, the percentage of people who can be referred to expedited removal and ultimately be quickly removed if they do not establish a legal basis to remain decreases rapidly as encounters increase beyond 2,500 given the baseline constraints outlined above. This difficulty in imposing swift consequences on individuals without a legal basis to remain in the United States during periods of elevated repatriation pursuant to an expedited removal order or withdrawal, yielding a total of about 830 repatriations (sums do not add due to rounding), or 50 percent of encounters.

\textsuperscript{271} Consistent with the Departments’ conclusion in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, the Departments believe the emergency border circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule cannot be addressed by relying on the programmatic use of its contiguous territory return authority at section 235(b)(2)(C) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(2)(C), due to resource constraints and authority at section 235(b)(2)(C) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(2)(C). This difficulty in imposing swift consequences on individuals without a legal basis to remain in the United States during periods of elevated repatriation pursuant to an expedited removal order or withdrawal, yielding a total of about 830 repatriations (sums do not add due to rounding), or 50 percent of encounters.

273 Based on comprehensive CBP processing dispositions for single adults, family units, and UCs from contiguous countries encountered May 12, 2023 to March 31, 2024; data downloaded from UIP on April 2, 2024.

274 At 1,500 single adult, family unit, and UC from contiguous countries encounters between POEs per day and with 17 percent of such encounters voluntarily returning to Mexico or subject to reinstatement of a removal order or administrative removal, 1,250 encounters would not be subject to rapid repatriation, including 1,240 who would potentially be amenable to expedited removal. Further, assuming that CBP could process 900 people for expedited removal, the agency would have the ability to place 72 percent of people not subject to rapid repatriation and 73 percent of potentially amenable single adults and family units into expedited removal. OHSS analysis of data downloaded from UIP on April 2, 2024. Applying the rule even more broadly based on a lower threshold would also raise countervailing considerations, see supra note 250, and so the Departments have struck the balance reflected in the rule.

275 OHSS analysis of data downloaded from UIP on April 2, 2024.

276 At 1,500 encounters of single adults, family units, and UCs from contiguous countries per day and assuming similar shares of encounters accept voluntary return or are subject to reinstatement of removal or administrative removal, about 420 people would be repatriated out of these dispositions. Further, assuming 900 encounters would be processed for expedited removal, and that 65 percent of expedited removal encounters would be quickly removable, about 590 would be repatriated pursuant to an expedited removal order or withdrawal, yielding a total of about 1,010 repatriations (sums do not add due to rounding), or 40 percent of encounters.
encounters is borne out by both recent experience, which is detailed in Sections III.B.1 and 2 of this preamble, and by historical data. DHS historical data also clearly show the dichotomy between the outcomes for individuals processed at the border at the 1,500- and 2,500-encounter levels. DHS data show that releases from CBP custody as a share of encounters have generally been highest during periods of sustained high-encounter levels, and lowest when encounters have been at 1,500 or below. For example, from FY 2013 through FY 2019, months with average daily USBP encounters of fewer than 1,500 per day resulted in a minimal level of releases due to capacity constraints at the border. During the 2013 to 2019 pre-pandemic period, USBP encounters only exceeded 1,500 per day for a sustained period from October 2018 to August 2019. During that 7-year stretch, months in which daily encounters were between 1,500 and 2,500 resulted in an average of 210 individuals released each day, while months in which daily encounters exceeded 2,500 resulted in approximately 1,300 releases each day with CBP releasing as many as 46 percent of the individuals it processed pending section 240 removal proceedings.

It is important to note, however, the demographics and nationalities encountered at the border significantly impact DHS’s ability to impose timely consequences and the number of people who are ultimately released by CBP pending section 240 removal proceedings. This is especially true for periods when CBP has encountered more UCs, family units, or individuals from countries to which it is difficult to effectuate removals. During the 2013 to 2019 time frame—which forms the basis for the analysis in the preceding paragraph—the vast majority of encounters at the border were from Mexico, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras—countries that are comparatively easy to return people to. Today, a much higher proportion of SWB encounters are from other countries that are comparatively much more difficult to return people to, including record numbers from the Eastern Hemisphere. At the same time, the proportion of encounters involving family units and UCs, although still high, is lower today than it was during periods of high numbers of encounters and releases in FY 2019. Although shifting demographics affect the Departments’ capacity to deliver timely decisions and timely consequences at varying levels of encounters, it remains clear that with the challenging demographics being encountered today, DHS would have the ability to deliver a timely consequence to the majority of people it processes at the border when encounters are below 1,500—supporting the decision to suspend the application of the rule when DHS reaches that level of encounters over a 7-day average. Likewise, as discussed above, the Departments have concluded that it is reasonable to apply the rule when encounter levels rise above a 7-day average of 2,500 due to the sharp decrease in their ability to swiftly impose meaningful consequences at the border once encounters exceed that level.

Lastly, it is important to note that using a single threshold—for example, 1,500 encounters—to activate or deactivate the measures in this rule would pose significant challenges and not be operationally viable. Having a single threshold would likely lead to scenarios where the rule would be regularly activated and deactivated as the 7-day average rose above and below 1,500, which would have significant operational impacts for CBP, ICE, and USCIS, and be confusing for government personnel, migrants, and other key stakeholders. For example, the Departments will need to notify and provide guidance to their personnel to apply the provisions of this rule in connection with each activation and deactivation. These actions represent a burden on staff time and resources that would have negative operational impacts if activation or deactivation happened regularly. CBP and ICE will also face scenarios in which they would have many people in their custody some of whom would be subject to and others of whom would not be subject to the provisions of this rule, and CBP and ICE will need to keep track of which individuals needed to be processed under which procedures—something that could become extraordinarily complex and unwieldy if the rule were to be activated and deactivated regularly. Legal service providers and migrants would similarly face a great deal of confusion about when the provisions of this rule were in effect based upon a single threshold of 1,500 encounters to activate or deactivate the measures in this rule. The burden of tracking, identifying, and applying different standards that change back and forth over a matter of days is significantly more complex for USCIS personnel as they consider protection claims.

For all of these reasons, it is important to ensure that there is a clear division between the levels at which the rule is deactivated and when it is activated. And to ensure that stakeholders are aware of when the rule is deactivated and activated, DHS will notify the public about Secretarial determinations of the encounter levels described in sections 2(a) and 2(b) of the Proclamation. As noted above, the 2,500-encounter level is a good proxy for when DHS’s ability to quickly impose consequences at the border for individuals who do not establish a legal basis to remain is becoming so degraded that it is likely to further incentivize additional unlawful crossings. It also has the benefit of increasing the time that would elapse between deactivations and activations, allowing DHS to ensure that its personnel are not having to constantly switch back and forth between different procedures.

The exclusion of those determined to be inadmissible at a SWB POE from the 1,500- and 2,500-encounter thresholds is also reasonable in light of recent policy decisions, processing experience, and operational needs. Since May 12, 2023, SWB daily POE encounters have averaged 1,650—largely because DHS has been incentivizing individuals to present at POEs in a safe, orderly manner. This number has stayed relatively constant compared to the number of encounters between POEs, which have varied widely, from a low of 2,554 on May 21, 2023, to a high of 10,822 on December 18, 2023. The predictability in the number of POE encounters, paired with the processing efficiencies gained by the widespread use of the CBP One app, improves CBP’s ability to manage encounters at POEs. The vast majority of noncitizens who present at a SWB POE have done so after having registered with the CBP One app. 287 Because such individuals have registered with the CBP One app, CBP can process these individuals more efficiently and in a more orderly way than individuals encountered between POEs. 288 This is a critical element of our strategy to encourage the use of safe, orderly, and lawful pathways, as described above, to incentivize noncitizens to seek out lawful pathways instead of attempting to cross into the United States irregularly. CBP officers will determine the most appropriate processing disposition on a case-by-case basis, although DHS expects to generally issue such individuals an NTA for removal proceedings under section 240 of the INA.

In short, DHS has assessed that the emergency border circumstances that are described by the Proclamation and this rule—and that the President has concluded warrant the step of suspending and limiting entry—reasonably capture the capacity of the border security and immigration systems to deliver consequences in a timely manner to individuals who cross unlawfully or without authorization. Thus, the Departments have determined to tie the application of the rule’s provisions to the date that the Proclamation takes effect, and to include a mechanism to temporarily halt the application of the rule’s provisions when encounters between POEs reach 1,500 and to restart the application of its provisions if they once again rise above 2,500. Because the Departments intend for certain provisions of this rule to remain in effect in the event a court enjoins or otherwise renders inoperable the Proclamation, the Departments intend for the Secretary of Homeland Security to continue to make the factual determinations regarding the 1,500 and 2,500 thresholds described in this rule and in sections 2(a) and 2(b) of the Proclamation, even if the Proclamation is enjoined, in order to provide continuity during emergency border circumstances. Lastly, the Proclamation may be revoked by the President upon a determination that it is no longer needed. 289

C. Section-by-Section Description of Amendments

1. 8 CFR 208.13 and 1208.13

DHS and DOJ are adding a paragraph (g) to the end of 8 CFR 208.13 and 1208.13, respectively. Establishing asylum eligibility, to explain when a noncitizen is potentially subject to this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility and credible fear screening procedures and how this limitation and its associated procedures interact with the Proclamation and rule and provides important exceptions that continue to incentivize the use of safe, orderly, and lawful pathways, such as those who arrive in the United States at a southwest land border POE pursuant to a process approved by the Secretary of Homeland Security. 290

Paragraph (a)(2) contains provisions regarding an exception to the limitation on asylum eligibility that aligns with the means for rebutting the presumption of asylum ineligibility in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. See 8 CFR 208.33(a)(3)(i), 1208.33(a)(3)(i). The exception applies if the noncitizen, or the noncitizen’s family member as described in § 208.30(c) with whom the noncitizen is traveling, demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence exceptionally compelling circumstances, including that, at the time of entry, the noncitizen or a member of the noncitizen’s family as described in § 208.30(c) with whom the noncitizen is traveling:

- Faced an acute medical emergency;
- Faced an imminent and extreme threat to life or safety, such as an imminent threat of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder; or
- Satisfied the definition of “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” provided in 8 CFR 214.11.

Paragraph (a)(2)(i) makes clear that where a noncitizen establishes one of the above, they shall necessarily have established exceptionally compelling circumstances. This exception for exceptionally compelling circumstances limits the potential adverse effects of the limitation on asylum eligibility on certain particularly vulnerable populations, and family members with whom they are traveling, without undermining the key policy imperative to disincentivize irregular migration during a time when encounters are above certain benchmarks. 291 Paragraph (a)(2)(ii) deems those who have established exceptionally compelling circumstances for purposes of this asylum limitation or who are described in the provisions of the Proclamation as being excepted from its suspension and limitation on entry as having established exceptionally compelling circumstances for purposes of the Lawful Pathways condition. This provision is intended to simplify administration of this asylum limitation while it and the Circumvention of 289 The Departments have not sought to apply the rule even after any revocation of the Proclamation by the President, because the Departments expect that any such revocation would only follow consultation with the Departments regarding the policy and operational implications of such an action. Moreover, a decision by the President would reflect important changed circumstances, and the Departments would want to take into account those changed circumstances in assessing the appropriate policy as to the issues covered by this rule.

291 See, e.g., 88 FR at 31325 (“These exceptions and opportunities for rebuttal are meant to ensure that migrants who are particularly vulnerable, who are in imminent danger, or who could not access the lawful pathways provided are not made ineligible for asylum by operation of the rebuttable presumption. Those who are not excepted from and are unable to rebut the presumption of ineligibility may still pursue statutory withholding of removal and protection under the CAT.”).
Lawful Pathways rule are both operative.

Paragraph (b) prescribes procedures for considering the limitation on asylum eligibility during the credible fear screening process and for applying the “reasonable probability” standard in the event the Proclamation or the limitation on asylum eligibility are rendered inapplicable by court order. Under paragraph (b)(1), the AO will first determine whether there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen is eligible for asylum in light of the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a). The paragraph sets forth three possible procedural scenarios depending on the AO’s findings. First, where the AO determines that the noncitizen is subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a)—including that there is not a significant possibility, see INA 235(b)(1)(B)(iii), 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(1)(B)(iii), second, where the AO determines that the noncitizen is not subject to this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility because there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish that they are described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation—and that there is not a significant possibility that they could establish an exception to the limitation under paragraph (a)(2), the AO will enter a negative credible fear determination with respect to the noncitizen’s asylum claim and continue to consider the noncitizen for potential eligibility for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection under the procedures in paragraph (b)(2), as described below. See 8 CFR 208.35(b)(1)(i). Second, where the AO determines that the noncitizen is not subject to this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility because there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish that they are not described in § 208.13(g), the AO will follow the procedures for credible fear interviews relating to the Lawful Pathways condition in § 208.33(b). See id. 208.35(b)(1)(i). This provides that those noncitizens who are not subject to the Proclamation because they did not enter during emergency border circumstances are processed under the provisions governing the Lawful Pathways condition—and under § 208.33(b)(1)(i), if the noncitizen is not subject to that condition, they will be screened for a significant possibility of eligibility for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection consistent with § 208.30. Third, where the AO determines that the noncitizen is not subject to this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility because there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish either that they are described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation or exceptionally compelling circumstances exist under paragraph (a)(2), the AO will conduct the screening consistent with 8 CFR 208.30. See id. 208.35(b)(1)(i). If the AO determines that the noncitizen is subject to paragraph (a) and cannot establish a significant possibility that they will be able to establish exceptionally compelling circumstances by a preponderance of the evidence under paragraph (a)(2), the AO will then assess whether the noncitizen has established a reasonable probability of persecution (meaning a reasonable probability of being persecuted because of their race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion) or torture, with respect to the designated country or countries of removal identified pursuant to section 241(b) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1231(b). See 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(i). As noted above, for purposes of this section, reasonable probability means substantially more than a reasonable possibility, but somewhat less than more likely than not, that the noncitizen would be persecuted because of his or her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion, or tortured, with respect to the designated country or countries of removal. See id.

If the noncitizen establishes a reasonable probability of persecution or torture with respect to the designated country or countries of removal, DHS will issue a positive credible fear determination and follow the procedures in § 208.30(f). See id. 208.35(b)(2)(ii). Under § 208.30(f), USCIS may issue an NTA for removal proceedings. or, in its discretion, retain the application for an asylum merits interview pursuant to § 208.2(a)(1)(ii). Under the regulations governing the asylum merits interview process, where USCIS exercises its discretion to retain jurisdiction over an application for asylum of a noncitizen found to have a credible fear of persecution or torture pursuant to § 208.30(f), the written record of the positive credible fear determination is treated as the asylum application. 8 CFR 208.3(a)(2). Under this IFR, however, noncitizens who are subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under § 208.35(a), and fail to show a significant possibility of being able to establish an exception by a preponderance of the evidence at the credible fear interview, will receive a negative credible fear determination with respect to their application for asylum, pursuant to § 208.35(b)(1)(i), but could go on to receive a positive credible fear determination with respect to a potential claim for statutory withholding of removal or protection under the CAT at the reasonable probability of persecution or torture standard. See id. 208.35(b)(2). In the event that USCIS were to exercise its discretion to place such a case into the asylum merits interview process, the credible fear record in that case would have found the applicant unable to establish eligibility for asylum under § 208.35(a) and the positive determination would be based only on a potential statutory withholding of removal or protection under the CAT claim. USCIS may thus need supplementary information to constitute an application for asylum, as the asylum claim may not have been fully explored in the credible fear record given that the AO determined the applicant would have been ineligible for asylum based on the rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility. Therefore, § 208.35(b)(2)(ii) allows USCIS to require a noncitizen who received a negative credible fear determination with respect to their application for asylum pursuant to § 208.35(b)(1)(i), but whose application is nonetheless retained by USCIS for asylum merits interview proceedings, to submit an asylum application to USCIS within 30 days of service of the positive credible fear determination, to ensure that there is a record of their potential asylum claim to serve as a substantive asylum application. For purposes of the filing and receipt date, the date of service of the positive credible fear determination will continue to serve as the date of filing pursuant to § 208.3(a)(2); however, if USCIS requires the submission of an asylum application, the timelines laid out in § 208.9(a)(1) and § 208.9(e)(2) may be delayed up to 15 days, considering the need to allow extra time for the submission of an asylum application to USCIS following service of the positive credible fear determination. See id. 208.35(b)(2)(ii). Under this IFR, if the applicant does not submit the
If the noncitizen fails to establish a reasonable probability of persecution or torture with respect to all designated countries of removal, the AO will provide the noncitizen with a written notice of decision and inquire whether the noncitizen wishes to have an IJ review the negative credible fear determination. See id. 208.35(b)(2)(iii). If the noncitizen indicates on the Record of Negative Fear that they request IJ review of the adverse finding, see id. 208.35(b)(2)(iv), the AO will serve the noncitizen with a Notice of Referral to Immigration Judge, see id. 208.35(b)(2)(v). See 88 FR at 11747; 88 FR at 31423. The record of determination includes copies of the Notice of Referral to Immigration Judge, the AO’s notes, the summary of the material facts, and other materials upon which the AO based their determination regarding the applicability of the condition on asylum eligibility (which, in cases where the limitation on asylum eligibility created by this IFR applies, includes materials showing the relevant known entry date), will be provided to the IJ with the negative determination. See 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(v). The IJ would then review the case consistent with § 1208.35, described below. If, following IJ review, the IJ makes a positive credible fear determination under § 1208.35(b)(2)(iii) or § 1208.35(b)(4), the case will proceed under § 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(B). See id. 208.35(b)(2)(v)(A). The IJ may vacate the Notice and Order of Expedited Removal and refer the case back to DHS for further proceedings consistent with 8 CFR 1208.2(a)(1)(ii). See id. 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)[B]. Alternatively, DHS may refer the case to section 240 removal proceedings, during which time the noncitizen may file an application for asylum, statutory withholding of removal, and CAT protection in accordance with § 1208.4(b)(3)(i). See id. 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(B).

If the IJ makes a negative credible fear determination, however, the case will be returned to DHS for removal of the noncitizen. See id. 208.35(b)(2)(v)(B). Consistent with the purpose of the expedited removal process and this IFR, there would be no appeal from the IJ’s decision and DHS would not accept requests for reconsideration. See id. USCIS may, however, in its sole discretion, reconsider a negative determination. See id.; 88 FR at 11747; 88 FR at 31418–19.

Paragraph (b)(3) applies in the event that the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) is rendered inoperative by court order. In such circumstance, those who enter during emergency border circumstances and who are found not to have a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum because of the Lawful Pathways condition will not be subject to asylum eligibility for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection under the “reasonable probability” screening standard. This will ensure continued applicability of that standard during emergency border circumstances, even absent the rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility. The Departments acknowledge that under this approach, not all who would have been subject to the higher screening standard if the limitation remained in force would be subject to it in the event of an injunction—i.e., those who do not travel through a country other than their country of citizenship, nationality, or, if stateless, last habitual residence; those excepted from the Lawful Pathways condition under the exceptions at 8 CFR 208.33(a)(2)(ii)(A) and (C); those excepted from the Lawful Pathways condition because they present at a POE without a pre-scheduled time and place and demonstrate that it was not possible to access or use the DHS scheduling system due to language barrier, illiteracy, significant technical failure, or other ongoing and serious obstacle; and those who enter across the maritime borders covered by the Proclamation that are not covered by the Lawful Pathways condition. The Departments have adopted a somewhat narrower scope for the standard to avoid a circumstance where AOs and IJs would be required to analyze both the applicability of the Lawful Pathways condition and then also whether the noncitizen would otherwise be subject to the rule’s limitation—which could complicate and increase the time required to conduct credible fear screenings. The Departments believe the approach adopted strikes the right balance between the interest in applying the screening standard to those to whom it would otherwise apply and administrability in the event the limitation on asylum eligibility is rendered inoperative by court order. The Departments request comment on whether to expressly expand this provision to also apply to those who are found not to have a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum because they are barred from asylum due to a mandatory bar to asylum eligibility if the rule Application of Certain Mandatory Bars in Fear Screenings, 89 FR 41347 (May 13, 2024), is finalized.

Paragraph (c) contains a family unity provision that parallels and serves the same purposes as the DOJ family unity provision in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. See 8 CFR 1208.33(c). The paragraph specifies that a noncitizen who would be eligible for asylum but for the limitation on eligibility set forth in the IFR will be required to apply for asylum, statutory withholding of removal, and CAT protection under the standard applicable to the IFR. This provision to also apply to those who are found not to have a significant possibility of eligibility for asylum because they are barred from asylum due to a mandatory bar to asylum eligibility if the rule Application of Certain Mandatory Bars in Fear Screenings, 89 FR 41347 (May 13, 2024), is finalized.

Paragraph (d) mirrors 8 CFR 208.33(c) and 1208.33(d) and specifies the ongoing applicability of the limitation on asylum eligibility by providing that it shall apply to “any asylum application” that is filed by a covered noncitizen “regardless of when the application is filed and adjudicated.” Id. 208.35(d)(1). The Departments have excepted from this ongoing application of the limitation on asylum eligibility certain noncitizens who enter the United States during emergency border circumstances while under the age of 18 and who later seek asylum as principal applicants so long as the asylum application is filed after the period of time described in § 208.13(g) during which the noncitizen entered. See id. 208.35(d)(2). Commenters on the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule raised concerns about the impact of that rule on children who arrive as part of a family unit and who are thus subject to the decision-making of their parents. 88 FR at 31320. The Departments decided to adopt a provision excepting such children from that rule in certain circumstances after the two-year period ends. See 8 CFR 208.33(c)(2), 1208.33(d)(2). The Departments recognized that children who enter with their families are generally traveling due to their parents’ decision-making. 88 FR at 31320. The Departments believe that these considerations are also relevant to this rule and have decided to adopt a similar approach as that adopted in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule.

The Departments considered whether to except family units, or children who are part of family units, from the limitation on asylum eligibility entirely. The Departments decline to adopt such an approach. Excepting all family units that include minor children could incentivize families who otherwise would not make the dangerous journey and cross unlawfully to do so. And excepting only the child could inadvertently lead to the separation of a family in many cases because every child would have to be treated separately from their family during the credible fear screening, as they would not be subject to the limitation but their parents could be. Although accompanied children remain subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility generally, the Departments have determined that the limitation should not apply to them in any application for asylum they file after the relevant period, but only if they apply as a principal (as opposed to a derivative) applicant.

The Departments also considered applying a specific calendar date to this provision, similar to the approach taken by the Departments in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule.294 The Departments determined that such a provision would be challenging to implement because the Departments have not identified a date certain upon which emergency border circumstances are expected to disincontinue. The Departments believe that the key purpose of an asylum application waiting period—protecting against any perceived incentive for family units to migrate irregularly—is adequately served by a requirement that the applicable period of emergency border circumstances is no longer in place at the time of application. For that same reason, the Departments do not believe it is necessary to make this exception unavailable during any period of emergency border circumstances; instead, this exception will be available after the end of the emergency border circumstance during which the applicant entered. Because noncitizens will not know in advance when the emergency border circumstance will end, and when another emergency border circumstance might occur, the approach adopted in the rule addresses noncitizens’ incentives without restricting this exception more than is necessary.

The Departments believe this approach balances the interest in ensuring the limitation has an impact on behavior, while at the same time recognizing the special circumstance of children who enter in a manner that triggers the limitation, likely without intending to do so or being able to form an understanding of the consequences. Specifically, if the Departments were to extend this exception to children who filed as a derivative, the Departments would risk incentivizing families to seek to prolong their proceedings to file their asylum applications after the end of the circumstances leading to the suspension and limitation on entry, undermining the Departments’ interest in efficient adjudications. In addition, any family that did so would be able to avoid the applicability of the limitation entirely, by virtue of the rule’s family unity provision. The Departments have decided not to include such a broad exception, in light of the urgent need to gain efficiencies in the expedited removal process and dissuade entry during the circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule.

Finally, the rule is including a severability clause in this provision. See 8 CFR 208.35(e). If any provision of this section, § 235.15, or the Proclamation is held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, DHS intends that the provision be construed so as to continue to give the maximum effect to the provision permitted by law, unless such holding is that the provision is wholly invalid and unenforceable, in which event the provision should be severed from the remainder of this section and the holding should not affect the remainder of this section or the application of the provision to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances. Indeed, in this rule, the Departments have sought to avoid describing “emergency border circumstances” as the time period during which the Proclamation is in effect, because the Departments intend for certain provisions of this rule to remain in effect in the event a court enjoins or otherwise renders inoperable the Proclamation or this rule’s limitation on asylum eligibility. This approach is consistent with the nature of the rule as an emergency measure and reflects DHS’s determination that the limitation on asylum eligibility will improve the border security and immigration systems’ capacity to safely process migrants during the circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule. For example, even in the absence of the limitation on asylum eligibility, as expressly set forth in paragraph (b)(3), the Department intends that the “reasonable probability” standard be used for screening for eligibility for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection for those who would have been subject to the limitation on asylum if they are otherwise unable to establish a credible fear of persecution for asylum purposes, including but not limited to because they are subject to the Lawful Pathways rebuttable presumption. Similarly, even in the absence of the new provision at 8 CFR 235.15 discussed below, the changes made in § 208.35 are expected to prove helpful in the emergency circumstances described by the Proclamation and the rule. See id. 208.35(e).

3. 8 CFR 1208.35

Like DHS’s addition to 8 CFR part 208, DOJ is adding to 8 CFR part 1208, Procedures for Asylum and Withholding of Removal, a new subpart D, Eligibility for Aliens Who Enter the United States During Emergency Border Circumstances. Within subpart D, DOJ is adding a new § 1208.35, Limitation on asylum eligibility and credible fear procedures for those who enter the United States during emergency border circumstances. This section sets forth a new limitation on asylum eligibility and procedures related to IJ review of credible fear determinations in expedited removal proceedings during emergency border circumstances. This provision applies notwithstanding any contrary provision in EOIR’s regulations. Section 1208.35 consists of the following provisions:

Paragraph (a) mirrors new § 208.35(a), discussed above.

Paragraph (b) provides procedures for credible fear determinations. Under these procedures, when a noncitizen has requested IJ review of an AO’s negative credible fear determination, the IJ will evaluate the case de novo, taking into account the credibility of the statements made by the noncitizen in support of the noncitizen’s claim and such other facts as are known to the IJ. See 8 CFR 1208.35(b)(1). The paragraph sets forth three possible procedural scenarios depending on the IJ’s determinations. First, where the IJ determines that the noncitizen is not subject to this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility because there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish that they are not described in §1208.13(g), the IJ will follow the procedures for credible fear interviews relating to the Lawful Pathways condition in §1208.33(b). See id. 1208.35(b)(2)(i).295 This provides that those noncitizens who did not enter during emergency border circumstances are processed under the provisions governing the Lawful Pathways condition—and under §1208.33(b)(2)(i), if the noncitizen is not subject to that condition they will be screened for a significant possibility of eligibility for statutory withholding of removal or CAT protection consistent with §1208.30. Second, where the IJ determines that the noncitizen is not subject to this IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility because there is a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish either that they are described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation or exceptionally compelling circumstances exist under paragraph (a)(2), the IJ will follow the procedures in 8 CFR 1208.30. See id. 1208.35(b)(2)(ii). Third, where the IJ determines that the IFR’s limitation on asylum eligibility applies—including that there is not a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish an exception under section 3(b) of the Proclamation—and that there is not a significant possibility that the noncitizen could establish an exception under paragraphs (a)(2) of the limitation, the IJ will apply the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule’s procedures set forth in § 1208.33(b)(2)(ii), except that the IJ will apply a “reasonable probability” standard to parallel the standard adopted by DHS. See id. 1208.35(b)(2)(iii).

Paragraph (b)(4), mirrors new § 208.35(b)(3), discussed above. Paragraph (c) contains a family unity provision that parallels and serves the same purposes as the family unity provision in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. See id. 1208.33(c)(1)(i). The paragraph specifies that a noncitizen who would be eligible for asylum but for the limitation on eligibility set forth in the IFR, the condition set forth in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, or both, may meet the family unity exception where the other requirements are met.

Paragraph (d) mirrors new § 208.35(d), discussed above.

Paragraph (e) contains a severability provision that serves a similar purpose to the provision in §208.35(e) described above. If any provision of this section or the Proclamation is held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, DOJ intends that the provision be construed so as to continue to give the maximum effect to the provision permitted by law, unless such holding is that the provision is wholly invalid and unenforceable, in which event the provision should be severed from the remainder of this section and the holding should not affect the remainder of this section or the application of the provision to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances. This approach is consistent with the nature of the rule as an emergency measure and reflects DOJ’s determination that the limitation on asylum eligibility will improve the border security and immigration systems’ capacity to safely process migrants during the circumstances described in the Proclamation and this rule. For example, as set forth explicitly in paragraph (b)(4), even in the absence of the limitation on asylum eligibility, the Department intends that the “reasonable probability” standard be used for screening for eligibility for statutory withholding of removal and CAT protection for those who would have been subject to the limitation on asylum if they are otherwise unable to establish a credible fear of persecution for asylum purposes, including but not limited to because they are subject to the Lawful Pathways rebuttable presumption. See id. 1208.35(e).

4. 8 CFR 235.15

DHS is adding to 8 CFR part 235, Inspection of Persons Applying for Admission, a new §235.15, Inadmissible aliens and expedited removal during emergency border circumstances. New 8 CFR 235.15 will further streamline aspects of the expedited removal process by effectively replacing paragraphs (b)(2)(i) and (b)(4)(i) of 8 CFR 235.3 for those individuals described in §235.3(b)(i) or (ii) and who are described in §208.13(g) but not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation. See 8 CFR 235.15. The changes would not affect implementation of 8 CFR 235.3(b)(4)(ii) or any other portion of 8 CFR 235.3. See id. The changes are as follows.

First, under 8 CFR 235.3(b)(2)(i), the record of proceeding includes a sworn statement using Form I–867AB, Record of Sworn Statement in Proceedings under Section 235(b)(1) of the Act. Under the existing regulations, the examining immigration officer reads (or has read) to the noncitizen all information contained on Form I–867A. Following questioning and recording of the noncitizen’s statement regarding identity, alienage, and inadmissibility, the examining immigration officer records the noncitizen’s response to the questions contained on Form I–867B, and has the noncitizen read (or has read to the noncitizen) the statement, and the noncitizen signs and initials each page of the statement and each correction, if any.

DHS is adding a new 8 CFR 235.15(b)(2)(i) to apply to certain noncitizens instead of this current process during emergency border circumstances. Under this procedure, Forms I–867A and I–867B will no longer be mandated in such circumstances. Instead, the immigration officer shall advise the individual of the charges against them on the Form I–860 and give him or her an opportunity to respond to those charges. See 8 CFR 235.15(b)(2)(i)(B). This provision does not require that the response be done through a sworn statement. See id. Consistent with current regulations, however, the inspecting officer must obtain supervisory concurrence of an expedited removal order in accordance with §235.3(b)(7). Id. Moreover, consistent with current regulations, the examining immigration official shall serve the noncitizen with Form I–860, and the noncitizen shall be required to sign the form acknowledging receipt. Id. The new 8 CFR 235.15(b)(2)(i) no longer mandates that the signature occur on the reverse, but preserves the requirement that the noncitizen be required to sign, allowing greater flexibility for location of signature blocks on the document. See id. 235.3(b)(2)(i). The new provision maintains the requirement that interpretative assistance shall be used if necessary to communicate with the noncitizen. Id. 235.3(b)(2)(i)(B). The new 8 CFR 235.15(b)(2)(i) also allows for greater flexibility regarding how DHS records the information that supports the finding that the noncitizen is inadmissible and subject to expedited removal. This operational flexibility is consistent with the President’s determination that emergency border circumstances are present such that the suspension and limitation on entry is warranted.

295 As explained above regarding AOs, the discussion in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule regarding how AOs would apply the limitation on asylum eligibility at issue there is consistent with the statutory “significant possibility” standard, see 88 FR at 31380, is equally applicable to IJs’ application of the limitation on asylum eligibility created by this IFR. As explained above in Section III.B.3.a of this preamble, IJs will rarely have grounds to reach a different result from the CBP immigration officers as to the application of the Proclamation or its exceptions.
Second, under 8 CFR 235.3(b)(4), if a noncitizen subject to the expedited removal provisions indicates an intention to apply for asylum, or expresses a fear of persecution or torture, or a fear of return to his or her country, the inspecting officer does not proceed further with removal of the noncitizen until the noncitizen has been referred for an interview by an AO in accordance with 8 CFR 208.30.

Instead of this current process, DHS is adding a new 8 CFR 235.15(b)(4), applicable to those who (1) are described in § 208.13(g), (2) are not described in section (3)(b) of the Proclamation, and (3) are processed for expedited removal. Under this provision the immigration officer would refer the noncitizen to an AO if the noncitizen manifests a fear of return or noncitizen to an AO if the noncitizen expedited removal. Under this provision the immigration officer would refer the noncitizen to an AO if the noncitizen manifests a fear of return or expression of proposed rule making in the Federal Register and, after such notice, “gave interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views, or arguments.” 5 U.S.C. 553(b) and (c). The APA further provides that the required publication or service of a substantive rule shall be made not less than 30 days before its effective date, except in certain circumstances. Id. 553(d). Consistent with the APA, the Departments have not invoked these procedures because (1) this rule is not a foreign affairs function of the United States and thus is excepted from such requirements, id. 553(a)(1), and (2) the Departments have found good cause to proceed with an immediately effective interim final rule, id. 553(a)(1), 553(d)(3), for the reasons explained below. At the same time, the Departments seek and welcome post-promulgation comments on this IFR.

1. Foreign Affairs

This rule is excepted from the APA’s notice-and-comment and delayed-effective-date requirements because it involves a “foreign affairs function of the United States.” 5 U.S.C. 553(a)(1). Courts have held that this exception applies when the rule in question “is clearly and directly involved in a foreign affairs function.” 296 In addition, although the text of the APA does not require an agency invoking this exception to show that such procedures may result in “definitely undesirable international consequences,” some courts have required such a showing. Rajah v. Mukasey, 544 F.3d 427, 437 (2d Cir. 2008) (quotation marks omitted). This rule satisfies both standards. The United States’ border management strategy is predicated on the belief that migration is a shared responsibility among all countries in the region—a fact reflected in the intensive and concerted diplomatic outreach on migration issues that DHS and the Department of State have made with partners throughout the Western Hemisphere. This strategy includes the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection, which was joined by leaders during the Summit of the Americas on June 10, 2022, and has been endorsed by 22 countries. 297

Under the umbrella of this framework, the United States has been working closely with its foreign partners to manage the unprecedented levels of migration that countries throughout the region have recently been experiencing, including on efforts to: expand access to, and increase, lawful pathways, such as the Safe Mobility Office initiative; 298 conduct joint enforcement efforts, such as the Darién Campaign with Colombia and Panama and the mirrored patrols 299 with the Government of Mexico along Ass’n of Expres. & Imgs. v. United States, 751 F.2d 1239, 1249 [Fed. Cir. 1985] (holding that the exception applies where a rule is “linked intimately with the Government’s overall political agenda concerning relations with another country”).

297 See, e.g., Rajah, 544 F.3d at 437 (“There are at least three definitely undesirable international consequences that would follow from notice and comment rulemaking. First, sensitive foreign intelligence might be revealed in the course of explaining why some of a particular nation’s citizens are regarded as a threat. Second, relations with other countries might be impaired if the government were to conduct and resolve a public debate over why some citizens of particular countries were a potential danger to our security. Third, the process would be slow and cumbersome, diminishing our ability to collect intelligence regarding, and enhance defenses in anticipation of, a potential attack by foreign terrorists.”); see also Yassin v. Crosland, 618 F. Supp. 1390, 1399 (9th Cir. 1980) (“For the foreign affairs exception to apply, the public rulemaking provisions should provoke definitely undesirable international consequences.”). our shared border;301 and share information, technical assistance, and best practices.302 The United States and endorsing countries continue to progress and expand upon our shared commitments made under this framework.303 This international coordination has yielded important results. A number of foreign partners, including Mexico, Panama, and Colombia, announced significantly enhanced efforts to enforce their borders in the days leading up to the end of the Title 42 public health Order.304 The governments recognized that the United States was taking measures to strengthen border enforcement, specifically through application of the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule along with other complementary measures, and committed to taking their own actions to address irregular migratory flows in the region.305 Additionally, immediately prior to the transition from DHS processing under the Title 42 public health Order to processing under title 8 authorities, the Government of Mexico announced that it had independently decided to accept the return into Mexico of nationals from CHNV countries under title 8 processes.306 However, in the intervening months, Mexico and other partners’ resources have been significantly strained by sustained high encounter levels, and at different times our partners has been disrupted, leading to surges at our own border.307

In public messaging, the Government of Mexico linked its decision to accept return into Mexico of CHNV nationals to the success of the CHNV parole processes framework under the Title 42 public health Order,308 which combined expansion of lawful pathways and processes for nationals of these countries with a meaningful consequence framework, and which reduced irregular border crossings.309 Sustaining and, as appropriate, ramping up efforts to improve border security and stem arrivals to the southern border is a critical element of the United States’ ongoing diplomatic approach to migration management with partners in the region. This has been a key component of our diplomacy, as regional partner countries have regularly encouraged DHS to take steps to address migratory flows, including by channeling intending migrants into expanded lawful pathways and processes. For example, following the development of the parole process for Venezuelans announced in October 2022—an approach that was subsequently expanded to include processes for Cuban, Haitian, and Nicaraguan nationals in January 2023—regional partners urged the United States to continue building on this approach, which imposed consequences for irregular migration alongside the availability of a lawful, safe, and orderly process for migrants to travel directly to the United States.310 Following the announcement of the Venezuela parole process in October 2022 and the subsequent announcement of the Cuba, Haiti, and Nicaragua parole processes in January 2023, migration flows through the region and the U.S.-Mexico border slowed. See 88 FR at 31317 (“DHS estimates that the drop in CHNV encounters in January through March was almost four times as large as the number of people permitted entry under the parole processes.”)

The United States has continued to build on this historic expansion of lawful pathways and processes, which include the humanitarian parole processes for CHNV nationals;311 efforts to expand labor pathways and dedicate a set number of visas to nationals of countries in the hemisphere;312 the implementation of new Family Reunification Parole (“FRP”) processes for certain nationals of Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras; and the modernization of FRP processes for certain nationals of Cuba and Haiti.313

Concurrently, the Governments of Colombia and Panama have made significant efforts to combat smuggling networks operating on both sides of the Darién Gap. 314 The Government of Mexico has likewise increased enforcement along its southern border and the transit routes north. 315 These enforcement campaigns have been implemented at substantial cost for those governments and, as with United States Government actions, reflect our shared regional responsibility to manage migration. 316

Given the particular challenges facing the United States and its regional partners at this moment, the Departments assess that it is critical that the United States continue to lead the way in responding to ever-changing and increasing migratory flows, and that this regulatory effort and the Presidential Proclamation—and the strong consequences they will impose at the border—will send an important message to the region that the United States is prepared to put in place appropriate measures to prepare for and, if necessary, respond to ongoing migratory challenges.

In addition to this IFR’s clear and direct involvement in foreign affairs, the Departments believe that conducting a notice-and-comment process and providing a delayed effective date on this rule likely would lead to a surge to the border before the Departments could finalize the rule, which would adversely impact the United States’ foreign policy priorities. Prior to the end of the Title 42 public health Order, regional partners expressed great concern about the misperception that the end of the Order would mean an open U.S. border and result in a surge of irregular migration flowing through their countries as migrants sought to enter the United States. See 88 FR at 31444. One foreign partner, for example, expressed the strong concern that the formation of caravans during the spring of 2022 was spurred by rumors—and the subsequent official announcement—of the anticipated end of the Title 42 public health Order. See id. This view is consistent with the views of other regional partner countries that have repeatedly emphasized the ways in which U.S. policy announcements have a direct and immediate impact on migratory flows through their countries. See id. Such effects are precisely the kind of “definitely undesirable international consequences” that the Departments seek to avoid.

The surge about which many foreign leaders were concerned happened sooner than expected. In the weeks leading up to the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order, hemispheric migration spiked. Entries into the Darién jungle by migrants who had been in Colombia began increasing in the months leading up to May 12, 2023, from a little more than 24,600 in January 2023, to more than 40,000 in April 2023 immediately before the Order lifted. 317 And as described more fully above, total CBP encounters at the SWB increased to then-record levels in the days immediately preceding May 12, 2023, a situation that was fueled by noncitizens seeking to enter the United States before new policies were put into effect, as well as by smuggling organizations that disseminated misinformation. 318 The scale of regional migration in those weeks strained the immigration processes of all the affected countries, including those of the United States.

As noted above, the United States saw a similar scale of migration at the end of 2023. The surge in December 2023 led the United States Government and the Government of Mexico to hold a series of engagements at the highest levels—including between the countries’ Presidents and Cabinet Members—to address the shared challenge of migration confronting both countries. 319 These conversations included commitments by both governments to continue to expand efforts to coordinate enforcement actions on both sides of the border. 320 January, February, and March are typically slower months, but since these engagements, and the joint operational actions that resulted, there has been a decrease in USCBP encounters at the border, as discussed in Section III.B.1 of this preamble.

The record-breaking hemispheric migration throughout the region has deeply affected governments from South America all the way to the U.S.-Mexico border. Panama has been encountering record numbers of migrants transiting one of the most dangerous smuggling corridors on the planet, the Darién jungle. 321 Colombia, Peru, and Ecuador have hosted around 3 million, 322 over 1.5 million, 323 and more than 475,000, respectively, while Costa Rica has recently hosted hundreds of Nicaraguans. 325 Mexico has received record-breaking numbers of asylum applications in addition to the enforcement efforts it is undertaking. As described more fully above, DHS’s internal projections suggest that SWB encounters may once again reach extremely elevated levels in the weeks to come, averaging in the range of approximately 3,900 to approximately 6,700 encounters at and between POEs per day from July to September, not including an additional 1,450 noncitizens per day who are expected to be encountered at POEs after making appointments though the CBP One app. Regional migration trends support these projections. For example, between January and April 2024, UNHCR tracked 139,000 irregular entries, up from 128,000 for the same months in 2023 and a seven-fold increase over that period in 2022.

Moreover, as noted above, the Government of Mexico has been receiving record-breaking numbers of asylum applications—reflecting the large number of migrants currently in Mexico.

The weeks leading up to May 12, 2023, demonstrated that when migrants anticipate major changes in border policy, there is the potential to ignite a rush to the border to arrive before the changes take effect. Any delay between announcement of this rule and its implementation through notice and comment would almost certainly trigger a surge in migration that would undermine the principal goal of this entire effort: to reduce migratory flows to our border, and throughout the region.

The Departments believe that the emergency measures being taken here are needed to help address this regional challenge, and that any decrease in migration that results will help relieve the strain not just on the U.S.-Mexico border but on countries throughout the hemisphere. The actions the United States is taking in this regulation demonstrate a commitment to addressing irregular migration in the region, even as foreign partners have been taking actions themselves that are aligned with a shared interest in reducing migration. The IFR changes key procedures to significantly streamline and strengthen the consequences delivered for unlawful or unauthorized entry at the southern border. The actions the Departments are taking are directly responsive to the shared challenge the United States and its regional partners are confronting and, equally important, it is critical to implement these actions without a lengthy period of advance notice before the actions go into effect.

2. Good Cause

The Departments have also found good cause to forego the APA’s notice-and-comment and delayed-effectively-date procedures. See 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B), (d)(3). Such procedures are impracticable because the delays associated with such procedures would unduly postpone implementation of a policy that is urgently needed to avert significant public harm. Such procedures are likewise contrary to the public interest because an advance announcement of this rule would seriously undermine a key goal of the policy: It would incentivize even more irregular migration by those seeking to enter the United States before the rule would take effect.

First, the “impracticable” prong of the good cause exception “excuses notice and comment in emergency situations . . . or where delay could result in serious harm.” Findings of impracticability are “inevitably context-dependent,” and when reviewing such findings, courts generally consider, among other factors, the harms that might have resulted while the agency completed standard rulemaking procedures and the agency’s diligence in addressing the problem it seeks to address.

The critical need to immediately implement more effective border management measures is described at length in the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, and in Section III.B of this preamble. Despite the strengthened consequences in place at the SWB, including the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule and other measures, the United States Government continues to contend with exceptionally high levels of irregular migration along the southern border, including record-high total US-IP encounter levels on the SWB as recently as December 2023. DHS’s ability to manage this increase in encounters has been significantly challenged by the substantial number of noncitizens processed for expedited removal and expressing a fear of return or an intent to seek asylum; rather than being swiftly removed, these noncitizens are referred to an AO for a credible fear interview and can seek IJ review of an AO’s negative credible fear determination, which requires additional time and resources.

A finding of impracticability must be based on more than a false statement, see, e.g., Tri-Cty. Tel. Ass’n, Inc. v. FCC, 999 F.3d 714, 720 (D.C. Cir. 2021) (“[T]his is not a case of unjustified agency delay. The Commission did act earlier . . . and [the agency needed to act again . . . ].”).
Without adequate resources and tools to keep pace, the Departments cannot deliver timely decisions and timely consequences to all noncitizens encountered at the SWB who do not establish a lawful basis to remain. Instead, DHS is forced to place many of these individuals into the backlogged immigration court system, a process that can take several years to result in a decision or consequence. Even then, it can take weeks, months, or years to execute a removal order depending upon the facts of the individual case. Quite simply, these historic levels of encounters and fear claims, combined with limited resources and tools to manage them, create a vicious cycle: The expectation of a lengthy stay in the United States and the inability to impose consequences for irregular migration close in time to entry inspires more people to make the dangerous journey north to take their chances at the border. The USCIS affirmative asylum backlog has reached almost 1.2 million cases and is growing. At the end of the first quarter of FY 2024, there were over 2.7 million cases pending in the immigration courts. During FY 2023, IJs completed more cases than they ever had before in a single year, but more than twice as many cases were received by the immigration courts as were completed.

Absent changes promulgated in this rule, recent encounter trends both in the region and at our southern border indicate a risk of further exceeding the Departments’ capacity to effectively process, detain, and remove, as appropriate, the noncitizens encountered, and exacerbating perceived incentives to migrate now. As noted above, DHS’s current internal projections suggest that total encounters will average in the range of 3,900 to approximately 6,700 encounters at and between POEs per day from July to September, not including an additional 1,450 noncitizens per day who are expected to be encountered at POEs after making appointments though the CBP One app. Even at the low end of such projections, such a volume of encounters would likely result in thousands of migrants per day being referred to section 240 removal proceedings; their cases would further exacerbate the immigration court backlog and perceived incentives to migrate irregularly, and would take many years to complete. Such harms would be mitigated by the additional measures put in place by this rule. If implementation of the rule is delayed, by contrast, the harms of such an increase would be immediate and substantial, even if such an increase would only last for the months needed to complete a very rapid notice-and-comment rulemaking. Thus, it is impracticable to delay the measures in this rule for even a few months to allow for notice and an opportunity to comment and a delayed effective date. In the interim, the heightened levels of migration and forced displacement that have resulted in the President’s determination to apply the suspension and limitation on entry and the Departments adopting the provisions in this rule would further strain resources, risk overcrowding in USBP stations and border POEs in ways that pose significant health and safety concerns, and create a situation in which large numbers of migrants—only a small proportion of whom are likely to be granted asylum or other protection—would be encouraged to put their lives in the hands of dangerous organizations to make the journey north based on a perceived lack of immediate consequences. The Departments must immediately safeguard their ability to enforce our Nation’s immigration laws in a timely way and at the scale necessary with respect to those who seek to enter without complying with our laws. This rule does just that. Furthermore, current trends in migration, including through the Darién jungle between Colombia and Panama, indicate that a significant increase in encounters may be imminent. Between January and April 2024, UNHCR tracked 139,000 irregular entries, up from 128,000 for the same months in 2023 and a seven-fold increase over that period in 2022. And the Departments believe that most of those migrants are on their way to seek entry into the United States. Based on historical trends, the Departments expect that many of these migrants may already be proximate to the SWB, giving the Departments insufficient time to seek public comment and delay the effective date of this rule without immediate and substantial harm to U.S. interests. Indeed, as of May 2024, CBP estimates that there are more than 40,000 non-Mexican migrants in northern Mexico, proximate to the SWB, in addition to more than 100,000 such migrants in central and southern Mexico. These numbers show that a very large number of migrants would likely have the ability and the incentive to travel to the U.S. border, and the Departments assess that announcing this rule in advance would likely yield the type of surges described in connection with prior changes in significant border policies affecting the availability of asylum for large numbers of migrants. For these reasons, consistent with the President’s judgment, and given the emergency circumstances facing the Departments, the Departments assess that it would be impracticable to delay the policies set forth in this rule to allow time to complete notice-and-comment rulemaking or delay the rule’s effective date.

Second, under the “contrary to the public interest” prong of the good cause exception, it has long been recognized that agencies may use the good cause exception, and need not take public comment in advance, where significant public harm would result from the notice-and-comment process. If, for example, a proposed notice of a coming price increase would immediately produce market dislocations and lead to serious shortages, advance notice need not be given. A number of cases follow this logic in the context of economic regulation. The same logic applies here, where the Departments are responding to exceedingly serious challenges at the border, and advance announcement of this response—which will increase the Departments’ ability to swiftly process and remove, as appropriate, more noncitizens who enter the United States irregularly—would significantly increase the incentive, on the part of migrants and others (such as smugglers), to engage in actions that would compound those very challenges. For the same reasons, “the [need for] immediate implementation” outweighs the “principles” underlying the requirement for a 30-day delay in the effective date, justifying the Departments’ finding of good cause to forego it. The Departments’ experience has been that in some circumstances when official public announcements have been made regarding significant upcoming changes in immigration laws and procedures that would impact how individuals are processed at the border, such as changes that restrict access to immigration benefits to those attempting to enter the United States along the U.S.-Mexico land border, there have been dramatic increases in the numbers of noncitizens who enter or attempt to enter the United States—including, most recently, in the days preceding the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order in May 2023. This is not only because, generally, would-be migrants respond to real and perceived incentives created by border management and immigration policies, such that many choose to seek entry under a border processing regime they think is preferable, prior to the implementation of a new system, including increasing the speed of their transit north in an effort to arrive before the implementation of any such measure. Additionally, smugglers routinely prey on migrants by spreading rumors, misrepresenting facts, or creating a sense of urgency to induce migrants to make the journey by overemphasizing the significance of recent or upcoming policy developments, among other tactics, and do so particularly when there is a change announced in U.S. policy, as highlighted by the many examples described below.

The acuteness of such concerns is borne out by the facts. An influx of migrants occurred in the days following the November 15, 2022, court decision that, had it not been stayed on December 19, 2022, would have resulted in the lifting of the Title 42 public health Order effective December 21, 2022. Leading up to the Order’s expected termination date, migrants gathered in various parts of Mexico, including along the SWB, waiting to cross the border once the Title 42 public health Order was lifted. According to internal Government sources, smugglers were also expanding their messaging and recruitment efforts, using the expected lifting of the Title 42 public health Order to claim that the border was open, thereby seeking to persuade would-be migrants to participate in expensive and dangerous human smuggling schemes. 88 FR at 31315. In that one-month period following the court decision, total CBP encounter rates jumped from an average of 7,800 per week (in mid-November) to over 9,100 per week (in mid-December), a change not predicted by normal seasonal effects.

Similarly, on February 28, 2020, the Ninth Circuit lifted a stay of a nationwide injunction of the Migrant Protection Protocols (‘‘MPP’’), a program implementing the Secretary’s contiguous return authority under section 235(b)(2)(C) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1225(b)(2)(C). 354 Almost immediately, hundreds of migrants began massing at POEs across the southern border and attempting to immediately enter the United States, creating a severe safety hazard that forced CBP to temporarily close POEs in whole or in part.355 Many others requested immediate entry into the country through their counsel, while others attempted to illegally cross the southern border between the POEs. 356 Absent immediate and resource-intensive action taken by CBP, the number of migrants gathered at the border, whether at or between the POEs, could have increased dramatically, especially considering there were approximately 25,000 noncitizens who were in removal proceedings pursuant to MPP without scheduled court appearances, as well as others in Mexico who could have become aware of CBP’s operational limitations and sought to exploit them. 357 And while CBP officers took action to resolve the sudden influx of migrants at multiple POEs and prevent further deterioration of the situation at the border, in doing so they were diverted away from other critical responsibilities of protecting national security, detecting and confisicating illicit materials, and guarding efficient trade and travel. 358

This same phenomenon occurred in the days leading up to the end of the Title 42 public health Order on May 12, 2023, when DHS saw a historic surge in migration as smugglers falsely advertised that those arriving before the Order ended and the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule took effect would be allowed to remain in the United States. 359 This surge culminated with what were then the highest recorded USBP encounter levels in U.S. history over the days immediately preceding May 12, which placed significant strain on DHS’s operational capacity at the border. 360 Encounters between POEs (which excludes arrival of inadmissible individuals scheduled through the CBP One app, who appear at POEs) almost doubled from an average of approximately 4,900 per day the week ending April 11, 2023, to an average of approximately 9,500 per day the week ending May 11, 2023, including an average of approximately 10,000 daily encounters immediately preceding the termination of the public health Order (from May 8 to May 11). 361 The sharp increase in USBP encounters during the 30 days preceding May 12 represented the largest month-over-month increase in almost two decades—since January 2004. 362 Meanwhile, the current backlogs and inefficiencies in our border security and immigration systems render DHS unable to effect removals and apply consequences on a sufficient scale to deter migration by those whose claims may not ultimately succeed. 363 This, too, serves as an incentive for migrants to take a chance. And sudden influxes, which result in part from smugglers’ deliberate actions, overload scarce United States Government resources dedicated to border security that, as reflected above, are already stretched extremely thin. 364 This rule is specifically designed to allow the United States Government to deliver consequences more swiftly, and with a reduced resource burden, during such an influx.

In a more manageable steady-state environment, when encounters surge in specific sectors, DHS manages its detention capacity using the other tools at its disposal, such as lateral decompression flights and similar efforts. 365 But the increase in SWB encounters preceding the end of the Title 42 public health Order and the increase in border encounters that occurred in December 2022 were far-reaching across multiple sectors of the SWB and significantly greater than what

DHS resources and operations are designed to handle. They raised detention capacity concerns anew. At that point, DHS faced an urgent situation, including a significant risk of overcrowding in its facilities. Given the nature of its facilities, increased numbers and times in custody increase the likelihood that USBP facilities will become quickly overcrowded. 366 Crowding, particularly given the way that USBP facilities are necessarily designed, increases the potential risk of health and safety concerns for noncitizens and Government personnel. 367

The Departments assess that there would be a significant risk of such an urgent situation occurring if they undertook notice-and-comment procedures for this rule or delayed its effective date. As demonstrated by the Departments’ experience with the end of the Title 42 public health Order and MPP, significant shifts in U.S. border policies lead to an increase in migrants coming to the SWB that risks overwhelming the Departments’ resources and operations. This rule is likewise a significant shift in U.S. border policy that affects the vast majority of noncitizens arriving at the southern border who do not have documents sufficient for lawful admission—a shift that may be viewed as similar to the end of the Title 42 public health Order and MPP. In addition, unlike the Lawful Pathways rebuttable presumption, the limitation on asylum eligibility in this rule would affect Mexican migrants, which may provide an additional perceived incentive for such migrants—who constitute a large and geographically proximate potential population—to rush to the border during a notice-and-comment period. Finally, such a surge in migration would come at a time when our border security and immigration systems’ resources are already stretched thin and severely backlogged. 368

Conversely, as noted above, smugglers also massed that the border would be open starting on May 12. See Valero Gonzalez, Migrants cross US border in final hours before Title 42 expires, AP News (May 11, 2023), https://apnews.com/article/immigration-border-title-42-mexico-asylum-82c23970d24257502041b9e7f515b321. Therefore, the Departments believe that a gap between when this rule is made public and when it becomes effective would create the same incentive for migrants to come to the United States before the rule takes effect.

The Departments’ determination here is consistent with past practice. For example, in the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule, the Departments undertook a notice-and-comment rulemaking while the Title 42 public health Order remained in effect, but invoked the good cause exception (as well as the foreign affairs exception) to bypass a delayed effective date that would have resulted in a gap between the end of the Title 42 public health Order and the implementation of the rule. See 88 FR at 31445–47. The Departments noted that such a gap “would likely result in a significant further increase in irregular migration,” and that such an increase, “exacerbated by an influx of migrants from countries such as Venezuela, Nicaragua, and Cuba, with limited removal options, and coupled with DHS’s limited options for processing, detaining, or quickly removing such migrants, would unduly impede DHS’s ability to fulfill its critical and varied missions.” Id. at 31445.

Similarly, when implementing the parole process for Venezuelans, DHS implemented the process without prior public procedures, and witnessed a drastic reduction in irregular migration by Venezuelans. The process by which eligible Venezuelans could receive advance travel authorization to present at a POE was accompanied by a policy that those who entered the United States outside this process or who entered Mexico illegally after the date of announcement would be ineligible for parole under this process, and was conditioned on Mexico continuing to accept the expulsion or removal of Venezuelan nationals seeking to irregularly enter the United States between POEs. See 87 FR at 63508. Thus, had the parole process been announced prior to a lengthy notice-and-comment period, it likely would have resulted in thousands of Venezuelan nationals attempting to cross the United States and Mexican borders before the ineligibility criteria went into effect, and before the United States was able to return Venezuelan nationals to Mexico in large numbers.

DHS also concluded in January 2017 that it was imperative to give immediate effect to a rule designating Cuban nationals arriving by air as eligible for expedited removal because “[p]reliminary notice and comment would . . . endanger[] human life and hav[e] a potential destabilizing effect in the region.” DHS cited the prospect that “publication of the rule as a proposed rule, which would signal a significant change in policy while permitting continuation of the exception for Cuban nationals, could lead to a surge in migration of Cuban nationals seeking to travel to and enter the United States during the period between the publication of a proposed and a final rule.” DHS found that “[s]uch a surge would threaten national security and public safety by diverting valuable Government resources from counterterrorism and homeland security responsibilities,” “could also have a destabilizing effect on the region, thus weakening the security of the United States and threatening its international relations,” and “could result in significant loss of human life.”

Given the urgent circumstances facing the Departments, the delays associated with requiring a notice-and-comment process for this rule would be contrary to the public interest because an advance announcement of the rule would incentivize even more irregular migration by those seeking to enter the United States before the IFR would take effect.

Executive Order 12866 ("Regulatory Planning and Review", as amended by Executive Order 14094 ("Modernizing Regulatory Review"), and Executive Order 13563 ("Improving Regulation and Regulatory Review"), directs agencies to assess the costs, benefits, and transfers of available alternatives, and, if regulation is necessary, to select regulatory approaches that maximize net benefits, including potential economic, environmental, public health and safety effects, distributive impacts, and equity. Executive Order 13563 emphasizes the importance of quantifying both costs and benefits, reducing costs, harmonizing rules, and promoting flexibility.

The Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs ("OIRA") of OMB reviewed this IFR as a significant regulatory action under Executive Order 12866, as amended by Executive Order 14094. The estimated effects of the rule are described and summarized qualitatively below. Consistent with OMB Circular A–4, the Departments assessed the impacts of this rule against a baseline. The baseline used for this analysis is the “no action” baseline, or what the world would be like absent the rule. For purposes of this analysis, the Departments assumed that the no-action baseline involved continued application of the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule.

The expected effect of this rule, as discussed above, is primarily to reduce incentives for irregular migration and illegal smuggling activity. As a result, the primary effects of this rule will be felt by noncitizens outside of the United States. In addition, for those who are present in the United States and described in the Proclamation, the rule will likely decrease the number of asylum grants and likely reduce the amount of time that noncitizens who are ineligible for asylum and who lack a reasonable probability of establishing eligibility for protection from persecution or torture would remain in the United States. Noncitizens, however, can avoid the limitation on asylum under this rule if they meet an exception to the rule’s limitation or to the Proclamation, including by presenting at a POE pursuant to a pre-scheduled time and place or by showing exceptionally compelling circumstances. Moreover, noncitizens who in credible fear screenings establish
The benefits of the rule are expected to include reductions in strains on limited Federal Government immigration processing and enforcement resources; preservation of the Departments’ continued ability to safely, humanely, and effectively enforce and administer the immigration laws; and a reduction in the role of exploitative TCOs and smugglers. Some of these benefits accrue to noncitizens whose ability to receive timely decisions on their claims might otherwise be hampered by the severe strain that further surges in irregular migration would impose on the Departments.

The direct costs of the rule are borne by noncitizens and the Departments. To the extent that any noncitizens are made ineligible for asylum by virtue of the rule but would have received asylum in the absence of this rule, such an outcome would entail the denial of asylum and its attendant benefits, although such persons may continue to be eligible for statutory withholding of removal and withholding under the CAT. Unlike asylees, noncitizens granted these more limited forms of protection do not have a path to citizenship and cannot petition for certain family members to join them in the United States. Such noncitizens may also be required to apply for work authorization more frequently than an asylee would. As discussed in this preamble, the rule’s manifestation of fear and reasonable probability standards may also engender a risk that some noncitizens with meritorious claims may not be referred for credible fear interviews or to removal proceedings to seek protection. In these cases, there may be costs to noncitizens that result from their removal.

The rule may also require additional time for AOs and IJs, during credible fear screenings and reviews, respectively, to inquire into the applicability of the rule and the noncitizen’s fear claim. Similarly, the rule will require additional time for IJs during section 240 removal proceedings. However, as discussed throughout this preamble, the rule is expected to result in significantly reduced irregular migration. Accordingly, the Departments expect the additional time spent by AOs and IJs on implementation of the rule to be mitigated by a comparatively smaller number of credible fear interviews. AOs and IJs would otherwise have been required to handle in the absence of the rule.

Other entities may also incur some indirect, downstream costs as a result of the rule. The nature and scale of such effects will vary by entity and should be considered relative to the baseline condition that would exist in the absence of this rule, which as noted above is the continued application of the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule. As compared to the baseline condition, this rule is expected to reduce irregular migration. The Departments welcome comments on the effects described above to inform analysis in a final rule.

C. Regulatory Flexibility Act

The Regulatory Flexibility Act (“RFA”), as amended by the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement and Fairness Act of 1996, requires an agency to prepare and make available to the public a final regulatory flexibility analysis that describes the effect of a rule on small entities (i.e., small businesses, small organizations, and small governmental jurisdictions) when the agency was required “to publish a general notice of proposed rulemaking” prior to issuing the final rule. See 5 U.S.C. 604(a). Because this IFR is being issued without a prior proposal, on the grounds set forth above, a regulatory flexibility analysis is not required under the RFA.

D. Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

The Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995 (“UMRA”) is intended, among other things, to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on State, local, and Tribal governments. Title II of the UMRA requires each Federal agency to prepare a written statement assessing the effects of any Federal mandate in a proposed rule, or final rule for which the agency published a proposed rule, that includes any Federal mandate that may result in a $100 million or more expenditure adjusted annually for inflation) in any one year by State, local, and Tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector. The term “Federal mandate” means a Federal intergovernmental mandate or a Federal private sector mandate. See 2 U.S.C. 658(6), 1502(1). A “Federal intergovernmental mandate,” in turn, is a provision that would impose an enforceable duty upon State, local, or Tribal governments (except as a condition of Federal assistance or a duty arising from participation in a voluntary Federal program). See id. 658(5). And the term “Federal private sector mandate” refers to a provision that would impose an enforceable duty upon the private sector (except as a condition of Federal assistance or a duty arising from participation in a voluntary Federal program). See id. 658(7).

This IFR is not subject to the UMRA because the Departments did not publish a proposed rule prior to this action. In addition, this rule does not contain a Federal mandate, because it does not impose any enforceable duty upon any other level of government or private sector entity. Any downstream effects on such entities would arise solely due to an entity’s voluntary choices, and the voluntary choices of others, and would not be a consequence of an enforceable duty imposed by this rule. Similarly, any costs or transfer effects on State and local governments would not result from a Federal mandate as that term is defined under UMRA. The requirements of title II of the UMRA, therefore, do not apply, and the Departments have not prepared a statement under the UMRA.

E. Congressional Review Act

OMB has determined that this rule does not meet the criteria set forth in 5 U.S.C. 804(2). The rule will be submitted to Congress and the Government Accountability Office consistent with the Congressional Review Act’s requirements no later than its effective date.

F. Executive Order 13132 (Federalism)

This rule would not have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the National Government and the States, or on the distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. Therefore, in accordance with section 6 of Executive Order 13132, it is determined that this rule does not have sufficient federalism implications to warrant the preparation of a federalism summary impact statement.

G. Executive Order 12988 (Civil Justice Reform)

This IFR meets the applicable standards set forth in sections 3(a) and 3(b)(2) of Executive Order 12988.

H. Family Assessment

The Departments have reviewed this rule in line with the requirements of section 654 of the Treasury and General Government Appropriations Act, 1999, enacted as part of the Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1999. The Departments have reviewed the criteria specified in section 654(c)(1), by evaluating whether this regulatory action (1) impacts the stability or safety of the family, particularly in terms of marital commitment; (2) impacts the authority of parents in the education, nurture, and supervision of their children; (3) helps the family perform its functions; (4) affects disposable income or poverty of families and children; (5) only financially impacts families, if at all, to the extent such impacts are justified; (6) may be carried out by State or local governments or by the family; or (7) establishes a policy concerning the relationship between the behavior and personal responsibility of youth and the norms of society. If the agency determines a regulation may negatively affect family well-being, then the agency must provide an adequate rationale for its implementation.

The Departments have determined that the implementation of this rule will not impose a negative impact on family well-being or the autonomy or integrity of the family as an institution.

I. Executive Order 13175 (Consultation and Coordination With Indian Tribal Governments)

This rule would not have Tribal implications under Executive Order 13175, Consultation and Coordination with Indian Tribal Governments, because it would not have a substantial direct effect on one or more Indian Tribes, on the relationship between the Federal Government and Indian Tribes, or on the distribution of power and responsibilities between the Federal Government and Indian Tribes.

J. National Environmental Policy Act

DHS and its components analyze actions to determine whether the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 ("NEPA"), 42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq., applies to these actions and, if so, what level of NEPA review is required. 42 U.S.C. 4336. DHS’s Directive 023–01, Revision 01 and Instruction Manual 023–01–001–01, Revision 01 ("Instruction Manual 023–01") establish the procedures that DHS uses to comply with NEPA and the Council on Environmental Quality ("CEQ") regulations for implementing NEPA, 40 CFR parts 1500 through 1508. Federal agencies may establish categorical exclusions for categories of actions they determine normally do not significantly affect the quality of the human environment and, therefore, do not require the preparation of an Environmental Assessment or Environmental Impact Statement. 42 U.S.C. 4336(e)(1); 40 CFR 1501.4, 1507.3(e)(2)(ii), 1508.1(d). DHS has established categorical exclusions, which are listed in Appendix A of its Instruction Manual 023–01. Under DHS’s NEPA implementing procedures, for an action to be categorically excluded, it must satisfy each of the following three conditions: (1) the entire action clearly fits within one or more of the categorical exclusions; (2) the action is not a piece of a larger action; and (3) no extraordinary circumstances exist that create the potential for a significant environmental effect.376

The IFR effectuates the following three changes to the process for those seeking asylum, withholding of removal, or protection under the CAT during emergency border circumstances:

- For those who enter across the southern border during emergency border circumstances and are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation, rather than asking specific questions of every noncitizen encountered and processed for expedited removal to elicit whether the noncitizen may have a fear of persecution or an intent to apply for asylum, DHS will provide general notice regarding the processes for seeking asylum, withholding of removal, and protection under the CAT, and will only refer a noncitizen for credible fear screenings if the noncitizen manifests a fear of return, or expresses an intention to apply for asylum or protection, expresses a fear of persecution or torture, or expresses a fear of return to his or her country or the country of removal.

- During emergency border circumstances, persons who enter the United States through the southern border and who are not described in paragraph 3(b) of the Proclamation will be ineligible for asylum unless they demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist, including if the noncitizen demonstrates that they or a member of their family as described in 8 CFR 208.30(c) with whom they are traveling: (1) faced an acute medical emergency; (2) faced an imminent and extreme threat to life or safety, such as an imminent threat of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder; or (3) satisfied the definition of “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” provided in 8 CFR 214.11.

- The limitation on asylum eligibility will be applied during credible fear interviews and reviews, and those who enter across the southern border during emergency border circumstances and who are not described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation and do not establish exceptionally compelling circumstances will receive a negative credible fear determination with respect to asylum and will thereafter be screened for a reasonable probability of persecution because of a protected ground or torture, a higher standard than that applied to noncitizens in a similar posture under the Circumvention of Lawful Pathways rule.

Given the nature of the IFR, it is categorically excluded from DHS’s NEPA implementing procedures, as it satisfies all three relevant conditions. First, the Departments have determined that the IFR fits clearly within categorical exclusions A3(a) and (d) of DHS’s Instruction Manual 023–01, Appendix A, for the promulgation of rules of a “strictly administrative or procedural nature” and rules that “interpret or amend an existing regulation without changing its environmental effect,” respectively. The IFR changes certain administrative procedures relating to the processing of certain noncitizens during emergency border circumstances, and does not result in a change in environmental effect. Second, this IFR is a standalone rule and is not part of any larger action. Third, the Departments are not aware of any extraordinary circumstances that would cause a significant environmental impact. Therefore, this IFR is categorically excluded, and no further NEPA analysis or documentation is required. DOJ is adopting the DHS determination that this IFR is categorically excluded under A3(a) and A3(d) of DHS’s Instruction Manual 023–01, Appendix A, because the IFR’s asylum limitation and the reasonable probability standard will be applied by EOIR in substantially the same manner as it will be applied by DHS. See 40 CFR 1506.3(d) (setting forth the ability of an agency to adopt another agency’s categorical exclusion determination).

K. Paperwork Reduction Act

This IFR does not adopt new, or revisions to existing, “collection[s] of information” as that term is defined under the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995, Public Law 104–13, 109 Stat. 163, § 208.35 Limitation on asylum eligibility and credible fear procedures for those who enter the United States during emergency border circumstances.

Notwithstanding any contrary section of this part, including §§ 208.2, 208.13, 208.30, and 208.33—

(a) Limitation on eligibility. (1) Applicability. An alien who is described in § 208.13(g) and who is not described in section 3(b) of the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, is ineligible for asylum.

(ii) Exceptions. (i) This limitation on eligibility does not apply if the alien demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist, including if the alien, or the alien’s family member as described in § 208.30(c) with whom the alien is traveling, demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that, at the time of entry, the alien or a member of the alien’s family as described in § 208.30(c) with whom the alien is traveling:

(A) Faced an acute medical emergency;

(B) Faced an imminent and extreme threat to life or safety, such as an imminent threat of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder; or

(C) Satisfied the definition of “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” provided in § 214.11 of this chapter.

(ii) An alien who demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence any of the circumstances in paragraph (a)(2)(i) of this section shall necessarily establish exceptionally compelling circumstances.

(iii) An alien described in section 3(b) of the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, or who establishes exceptionally compelling circumstances under paragraph (a)(2)(i) of this section has established exceptionally compelling circumstances under § 208.33(a)(3).

(b) Application in credible fear determinations. (1) Initial determination. The asylum officer shall first determine whether the alien is subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section.

(i) Where the asylum officer determines that the alien is subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section, then the asylum officer shall enter a negative credible fear determination with respect to the alien’s asylum claim and continue to consider the alien’s claim under paragraph (b)(2) of this section.

(ii) Where the asylum officer determines that the alien is not subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section because the alien is not described in § 208.13(g), the asylum officer shall follow the procedures in § 208.33(b).

(iii) Where the asylum officer determines that the alien is not subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section because the alien is described in section 3(b) of the Proclamation or is excepted from the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a)(2) of this section, the asylum officer shall follow the procedures in § 208.30.

(2) Protection eligibility screening. (i) In cases in which the asylum officer enters a negative credible fear determination under paragraph (b)(1)(i) or (b)(3) of this section, the asylum officer will assess the alien under the procedures set forth in § 208.33(b)(2)(i) except that the asylum officer will apply a reasonable probability standard. For purposes of this section, reasonable probability means substantially more than a reasonable possibility, but somewhat less than more likely than not, that the alien would be persecuted because of his or her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion, or tortured, with respect to the designated country or countries of removal.

(ii) In cases described in paragraph (b)(2)(i) or (b)(3) of this section, if the alien establishes a reasonable probability of persecution or torture with respect to the designated country or countries of removal, the Department will issue a positive credible fear determination and follow the procedures in § 208.30(f). For any case in which USCIS retains jurisdiction over the application for asylum pursuant to § 208.2(a)(1)(ii) for further consideration in an interview pursuant to § 208.9, USCIS may require aliens who received a negative credible fear determination with respect to their asylum claim under paragraph (b)(1)(i) of this section to submit a Form I–589, Application for Asylum and for Withholding of Removal, together with any additional supporting evidence in accordance with the instructions on the form, to USCIS within 30 days from the date of service of the positive credible fear determination. The date of service of the positive credible fear determination remains the date of filing and receipt of the asylum application under § 208.3(a)(2); however, for any case in which USCIS requires the alien to submit a Form I–589, it may extend the timelines in §208.9(a)(1) and (e)(2) by up to 15 days. If USCIS requires the alien to submit a Form I–589 and the alien fails to do so within the applicable timeline, USCIS shall issue a Form I–862, Notice to Appear.

(iii) In cases described in paragraph (b)(2)(i) or (b)(3) of this section, if the alien fails to establish a reasonable probability of persecution or torture with respect to all designated countries of removal, the asylum officer will provide the alien with a written notice of decision and inquire whether the alien wishes to have an immigration judge review the negative credible fear determinations.

(iv) The alien must indicate whether he or she desires such review on a Record of Negative Fear Finding and Request for Review by Immigration Judge.

(v) Only if the alien requests such review by so indicating on the Record of Negative Fear shall the asylum officer serve the alien with a Notice of Referral to Immigration Judge. The record of determination, including copies of the Notice of Referral to Immigration Judge, the asylum officer’s notes, the summary of the material facts, and other materials upon which the determination was based shall be provided to the immigration judge with the negative determination. Immigration judges will evaluate the case as provided in 8 CFR 1208.35(b). The case shall then proceed as set forth in paragraphs (b)(2)(i)(A) and (B) of this section.

(A) Where the immigration judge issues a positive credible fear determination under 8 CFR 1208.35(b)(2)(iii) or (b)(4), the case shall proceed under 8 CFR 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(B).

(B) Where the immigration judge issues a negative credible fear determination, the case shall be returned to the Department for removal of the alien. No appeal shall lie from the immigration judge's decision and no request for reconsideration may be submitted to USCIS. Nevertheless, USCIS may, in its sole discretion, reconsider a negative determination.

(3) Procedures in the absence of the limitation on asylum eligibility. If the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section is held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, then during the period(s) described in §208.13(g), the asylum officer shall, as applicable, apply a reasonable probability screening standard for any protection screening under §208.33(b)(2).

(c) Family unity in the asylum merits process. In cases where the Department retains jurisdiction over the application for asylum pursuant to §208.2(a)(1),(ii), where a principal asylum applicant is found eligible for withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3) of the Act or withholding of removal under §208.16(c)(2) and would be granted asylum but for the limitation on asylum in paragraph (a)(1) of this section or §208.33(a), or both, and where an accompanying spouse or child as defined in section 208(b)(3)(A) of the Act does not independently qualify for asylum or other protection from removal or the principal asylum applicant has a spouse or child who would be eligible to follow to join that applicant as set forth in paragraph (b)(3)(A) of the Act, the asylum officer may deem the principal applicant to have established exceptionally compelling circumstances under paragraph (c)(2)(i) of this section and §208.33(a)(3)(i).

(d) Continuing applicability of limitation on eligibility. (1) Subject to paragraph (d)(2) of this section, the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section shall apply to any asylum application filed by an alien who entered the United States during the time and in the manner described in §208.13(g) and who is not covered by an exception in paragraph (d)(2) of this section, regardless of when the application is filed and adjudicated.

(2) The limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section shall not apply to an alien who was under the age of 18 at the time of the alien’s entry, if—

(i) The alien is applying for asylum as a principal applicant; and

(ii) The asylum application is filed after the period of time in §208.13(g) during which the alien entered.

(e) Severability. The Department intends that in the event that any provision of this section, §235.15, or the President’s Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, is held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, the provisions of this section and §235.15 should be construed so as to continue to give the maximum effect to those provisions permitted by law, unless such holding is that a provision is wholly invalid and unenforceable, in which event the provision should be severed from the remainder of this section and the holding should not affect the remainder of this section or the application of the provisions to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances.

PART 235—INSPECTION OF PERSONS APPLYING FOR ADMISSION

4. The authority citation for part 235 continues to read as follows:

5. Add §235.15 to read as follows:

§235.15 Inadmissible aliens and expedited removal during emergency border circumstances.

(a) Applicability. Notwithstanding §§235.3(b)(2) and 235.3(b)(4)(ii) (but not §235.3(b)(4)(i)), the provisions of this section apply to any alien described in §235.3(b)(1)(i) through (ii) if the alien is described in §208.13(g) and is not described in section 3(b) of the President’s Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border.

(b) Expedited removal. (1) [Reserved]

(2) Determination of inadmissibility—(i) Record of proceeding. (A) A noncitizen who is arriving in the United States, or other alien as designated pursuant to §235.3(b)(1)(ii), who is determined to be inadmissible under section 212(a)(6)(C) or 212(a)(7) of the Act (except an alien for whom documentary requirements are waived under §211.1(b)(3) or §212.1 of this chapter) shall be ordered removed from the United States in accordance with section 235(b)(1) of the Act. In every case in which the expedited removal provisions will be applied and before removing an alien from the United States pursuant to this section, the examining immigration officer shall create a record of the facts of the case and statements made by the alien.

(B) The examining immigration officer shall advise the alien of the charges against him or her on Form I–860, Notice and Order of Expedited Removal, and the alien shall be given an opportunity to respond to those charges. After obtaining supervisory concurrence in accordance with §235.3(b)(7), the examining immigration official shall serve the alien with Form I–860 and the alien shall sign the form acknowledging receipt. Interpretative assistance shall be used if necessary to communicate with the alien.

(ii) [Reserved]

(iii) [Reserved]

(3) [Reserved]

(4) Claim of asylum or fear of persecution or torture. (i) If an alien subject to the expedited removal provisions manifests a fear of return, or expresses an intention to apply for asylum or protection, expresses a fear of persecution or torture, or expresses a fear of return to his or her country or the country of removal, the inspecting officer shall not proceed further with removal of the alien until the alien has been referred for an interview by an asylum officer in accordance with part 208 of this chapter.

(A) The inspecting immigration officer shall document whether the alien has manifested or affirmatively expressed such intention, fear, or concern.

(B) The referring officer shall provide the alien with a written disclosure describing the purpose of the referral and the credible fear interview process; the right to consult with others prior to the interview and any review thereof at no expense to the United States Government; the right to request a review by an immigration judge of the asylum officer’s credible fear determination; and the consequences of failure to establish a credible fear of persecution or torture.

(ii) [Reserved]

(iii) Where the immigration judge determines the alien is not subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section because the alien is not described in §1208.13(g), the immigration judge shall follow the procedures in §1208.33(b).

(iii) Where the immigration judge determines that the alien is subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section, the immigration judge shall assess the alien’s claim and such other facts as are necessary to determine whether the alien is subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section.

Paragraph (g) of §1208.13 establishes asylum eligibility for an alien who entered the United States across the southern border (as that term is described in section 4(d) of the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border) between the dates described in section 1 of such Proclamation and section 2(a) of such Proclamation (or the revocation of such Proclamation, whichever is earlier), or between the dates described in section 2(b) of such Proclamation and section 2(a) of such Proclamation (or the revocation of such Proclamation, whichever is earlier) refer to the provisions on asylum eligibility described in §1208.35.

Notwithstanding any contrary section of this chapter, including §§1003.42, 1208.2, 1208.13, 1208.30, and 1208.33—

(a) Limitation. (1) Applicability. An alien who is described in §1208.13(g) and who is not described in section 3(b) of the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, is ineligible for asylum.

(ii) Exceptions. (i) This limitation on eligibility does not apply if the alien demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that exceptionally compelling circumstances exist, including if the alien, or the alien’s family member as described in 8 CFR 208.30(c) with whom the alien is traveling, demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that, at the time of entry, the alien or a member of the alien’s family as described in §208.30(c) with whom the alien is traveling:

(A) Faced an acute medical emergency;

(B) Faced an imminent and extreme threat to life or safety, such as an imminent threat of rape, kidnapping, torture, or murder;

(C) Satisfied the definition of “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons” provided in §214.11 of this title.

(ii) An alien who demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence any of the circumstances in paragraph (a)(2)(i) of this section shall necessarily establish exceptionally compelling circumstances.

(iii) An alien described in section 3(b) of the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, or who establishes exceptionally compelling circumstances under paragraph (a)(2)(i) of this section has established exceptionally compelling circumstances under §1208.33(a)(3).

(b) Application in credible fear determinations. (1) Where an asylum officer has issued a negative credible fear determination pursuant to 8 CFR 208.35(b), and the alien has requested immigration judge review of that credible fear determination, the immigration judge shall evaluate the case de novo, as specified in paragraph (b)(2) of this section. In doing so, the immigration judge shall take into account the credibility of the statements made by the alien in support of the alien’s claim and such other facts as are known to the immigration judge.

(ii) Where the immigration judge determines that the alien is not subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section because the alien is described in §1208.13(g), the immigration judge shall follow the procedures in §1208.33(b).

(iii) Where the immigration judge determines that the alien is subject to the limitation on asylum eligibility under paragraph (a) of this section, the immigration judge shall assess the alien under the procedures set forth in §1208.33(b)(2)(ii) except that the immigration judge shall apply a reasonable probability standard. For purposes of this section, reasonable probability means substantially more than a reasonable possibility, but somewhat less than more likely than not, that the alien would be persecuted because of his or her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion, or tortured, with respect to the designated country or countries of removal.

(3) Following the immigration judge’s determination, the case will proceed as indicated in 8 CFR 208.35(b)(2)(v)(A) and (B).

(4) If the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section is held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, then during the period(s) described in § 1208.13(g), the immigration judge shall, as applicable, apply a reasonable probability screening standard for any protection screening under § 1208.33(b)(2)(ii).

(c) Family unity and removal proceedings. In removal proceedings under section 240 of the Act, where a principal asylum applicant is found eligible for withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3) of the Act or withholding of removal under § 1208.16(c)(2) and would be granted asylum but for the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section or § 1208.33(a), or both, and where an accompanying spouse or child as defined in section 208(b)(3)(A) of the Act does not independently qualify for asylum or other protection from removal or the principal asylum applicant has a spouse or child who would be eligible to follow to join that applicant as described in section 208(b)(3)(A) of the Act, the alien shall be deemed to have established exceptionally compelling circumstances under paragraph (a)(2)(i) of this section and § 1208.33(a)(3)(i).

(d) Continuing applicability of limitation on eligibility. (1) Subject to paragraph (d)(2) of this section, the limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section shall apply to any asylum application filed by an alien who entered the United States during the time and in the manner described in § 1208.13(g) and who is not covered by an exception in paragraph (d)(2) of this section, regardless of when the application is filed and adjudicated.

(2) The limitation on asylum eligibility in paragraph (a) of this section shall not apply to an alien who was under the age of 18 at the time of the alien’s entry, if—

(i) The alien is applying for asylum as a principal applicant; and

(ii) The asylum application is filed after the period of time in 1208.13(g) during which the alien entered.

(e) Severability. The Department intends that in the event that any provision of this section or the Presidential Proclamation of June 3, 2024, Securing the Border, is held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, the provisions of this section should be construed so as to continue to give the maximum effect to those provisions permitted by law, unless such holding is that a provision is wholly invalid and unenforceable, in which event the provision should be severed from the remainder of this section and the holding shall not affect the remainder of this section or the application of the provision to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances.
