II. Background, and Purpose

In the past twelve months, there have been two suspicious activities that required immediate response actions to safeguard the personnel and property of the Base Los Angeles-Long Beach on Terminal Island within the main channel of Los Angeles Harbor (Coast Guard base). To help address this threat in a proactive manner, we are requesting comments on establishing a security zone. This proposed security zone could enable adequate response activities and limit unnecessary introduction of security hazards to U.S. Government property and personnel.

The Coast Guard is considering proposing a security zone extending alongside Terminal Island within the bounds of the Coast Guard Base with a 50-yard radius within the Los Angeles Main Channel in San Pedro Bay, CA. No vessels will be able to loiter or anchor within this area, if established.

We seek your comments on establishment of a proposed security zone and the proposed 50-yard radius.

II. Background, Purpose, and Legal Basis

The U.S. Coast Guard is charged with numerous responsibilities to protect inland and coastal waterways. Missions include maritime law enforcement, search and rescue, marine environmental response, protection of marine sanctuaries, alien migration interdiction, drug interdiction, boating safety, port safety and security, and military support. One of the tools the Coast Guard uses to help execute these missions when encountering a non-compliant vessel is the LA51.

The LA51 is a non-lethal signaling and warning device Coast Guard personnel use during law enforcement operations for getting the attention of vessels which do not respond to orders from the Coast Guard. The LA51 is a two-part (flash bang) ammunition round fired from a 12-gauge military shotgun to produce a visible signal at a range of 100 meters. The explosive pyrotechnic flash is a bright, white light lasting less than one second with a loud report (170 decibels at the source).
