

The sexual health of women with intellectual disabilities is particularly ignored in terms of screening for breast and cervical cancer.ⁱⁱⁱ An abundance of research indicates the lack of disability competency and interdisciplinary training among medical professionals contributes to the health disparities of people with disabilities across the nation.^{iv}

While some medical schools in the US do provide disability competency training, the overwhelming majority do not. Standard, comprehensive disability clinical-care education and training of medical, nursing, and other healthcare professionals is essential for a better educated healthcare workforce trained with an understanding of disability as a natural part of the human condition versus conditions that must be avoided, prevented or fixed. Comprehensive disability clinical-care competency should be woven into the curricula requirements of all US undergraduate medical, nursing, healthcare professional, and allied health professional education, as well as postgraduate residency and fellowship programs that are conducted in over 1,100 teaching hospitals.

II. Issues for Consideration and Request for Information

With respect to the status of disability clinical care and competency training within the US, NCD invites comments based on the questions below. Please explain your answers and provide references and data, if possible.

1. What are the challenges and obstacles for schools within the US to adopt and incorporate an appropriate disability clinical care curriculum over the course of their students' training?
2. What is the connection between clinical confidence and changes in behavior and attitudes among healthcare providers?
3. What are the transferable skills that clinicians can learn from "disability competency training" to apply to all

4. What are the existing curriculum resources that can be adopted and incorporated into current provider training?

5. What are examples of existing curriculum or standards of learning inclusive of disability clinical care/competency training that could be consulted for development of new required standards of learning across medical schools; and/or adopted wholesale as part of a program's education of medical professionals?
