

The 43 associated funerary objects are 33 ceramic sherds, five shell, four charred plant fragments, and one lithic flake. This ancestor and their funerary belongings were originally removed during a survey of Basin Bayou West (8WL13) by Lazarus and Burger in 1958, though they were only aware of the cultural items at the time. They were originally curated at the Fort Walton Indian Temple Mound Museum but were transferred in 1981 to the University of Florida-Florida Museum of Natural History (FLMNH). The FLMNH encountered the ancestor amongst faunal remains during a requested systematic osteological review of holdings as part of ongoing NAGPRA efforts. FLMNH notified Eglin AFB of the federal holding with subsequent transfer in August 2024. The site (8WL13) is recognized as primarily an Early Weeden Island burial mound.

Abstract of Information Available

The three associated funerary objects are fragments of dark brown, patterned burial kapa. Two fragments have a pattern of small triangles and one fragment is patterned with thin stripes.

Prior to 1938, Marcia Brown Bishop collected the kapa fragments in Hawai'i. Her catalog indicates they came from a burial cave. In 1938, she deposited the fragments at the Peabody Museum of Salem for an exhibition. In 1966, the museum purchased the items as part of the Marcia Brown [Richards] Bishop Collection. Consultation with representatives of Hui Iwi Kuamo'o indicates these items were used as burial kapa and were likely from Kanupa Cave, based on similarity to other pieces from this site.

The museum has no record of any potentially hazardous substances used to treat any of the human remains or associated funerary objects.
