Abstract of Information Available

Human remains representing, at least, one individual have been identified. No associated funerary objects are present. The remains were excavated from the Trenner Site (8PI2250) in Pinellas County, FL, in 2009 under the supervision of Jeff Moates, then the Director of the Central and West Central Regions of the Florida Public Archaeology Network (FPAN) (hosted by the University of South Florida). FPAN had been asked to assist with investigations being conducted by a Scout troop in Weaver Park, in the city of Dunedin. The remains were identified during a recent re-inventory of materials collected from the excavation. The Trenner site is assumed to date to the late precolonial Safety Harbor period (ca. 1,000 to 500 years before present), based on ceramic types represented. We are not aware of the presence of any potentially hazardous substances used to treat any of the human remains.

Abstract of Information Available

Ancestors representing at least two individuals have been identified. There are no associated funerary objects present. Two ancestors are believed to have been removed from Tiburon, Marin County, CA. The exact location of the ancestors' burials are unknown however, they have been marked with a tag marked "Marin County, Seacliff Tiburon." It is not known how these ancestors were brought to SF State, at what time, or where from. They were labeled with tags marked with "Dr. Hirabayashi" and "Jane Schellenberg." In 1970, there was an Associate Professor of Anthropology at SF State named Dr. Hirabayashi. In 1998, Julie London determined that these ancestors were culturally unidentifiable. New consultation with Federated Indians of Graton Rancheria has determined these items to be reasonably associated with their Tribe.
