

Arkansas. The site name and number were not known until after consultation was concluded and the Arkansas Archaeological Survey was able to assist in identification of the site. These remains were accessioned into the collection at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1996.

Cultural Affiliation

The determination of cultural affiliation was based on multiple lines of evidence, including consultation with the Quapaw Nation, geographic association of the site within the Nation's ancestral territory, and the regional archaeological and historical record. Information considered included the Quapaw Nation's long-standing presence in the region, previous cultural affiliation determinations for nearby archaeological sites, and the presence of Mississippian-period ceramics at the site. Together, these lines of evidence support a relationship of shared group identity between the human remains and the Quapaw Nation.

Determinations

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has determined that:

- The human remains described in this notice represent the physical remains of one individual of Native American ancestry.
- There is a connection between the human remains described in this notice and the Quapaw Nation.
