PREFACE

The sixty-second section of the Act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, directs that "the Superintendent of Documents shall, at the close of each regular session of Congress, * * * prepare and print in one volume a consolidated index of Congressional documents." Heretofore the documents and reports of each Congressional session have been indexed in six different indexes, made by six different persons, on six different plans, and printed in six different places. There was one index for the Senate Executive documents, another for the Senate Miscellaneous documents, a third for the Senate committee reports, and a similar triplication for the like publications in the House, and the six indexes were separately printed, each in the front of every copy of the class of books to which it belonged—provided the book was printed in the document octavo size. If it happened to be an imperial octavo or a quarto, it got no index. Thus there was not only a double triplication of indexes, but a much greater multiplication of the number printed, for each index was printed and reprinted as many times as there were separate volumes in the "Congressional set" or "sheep-bound reserve." As there were usually a hundred or more volumes of documents and reports for each session, a hundred or more times as many copies of the index to the whole number of volumes were printed as were printed of any of the volumes.

It is expected that several advantages will result from consolidating these six indexes into one and printing that one in a volume by itself. The new plan will enable the Public Printer to have the Congressional documents and reports made up into the reserve volumes and bound at an earlier day, because there will be no waiting for the compilation and printing of indexes to be bound into these volumes. It will save a good many thousand pages of printing and binding. It will do away with the necessity for a confusing duplication of title-pages. Where before it was necessary to get together six bulky volumes in order to have a complete index to the Congressional documents and reports of any session, now the work is brought into the compass of a single handy manual. Finally, I confidently hope that the greatest advantage of all which experience will demonstrate as resulting from this change of plan is the production of a better Index.

Earnest effort has been made to this end. The principle of consolidation has not been limited to bringing the six indexes together in one book. They have been brought into one alphabet. All Congressional action on a specific subject, so far as it exists in a printed form, has been grouped together under that subject, whether it be a committee report on a bill, a memorial favoring it, a veto on it, a call for information, or the information itself, and whether issuing from either House, from any branch of the Government, from an individual member of either branch of Congress, or even from a private person. Entries are not made for bills and resolutions. Both the Journals and the Congressional Record give such a complete history of every one introduced that further mention in this Index would be unnecessary duplication. But in the entries for Reports from Committees the number and kind of the bill or resolution reported on, joint, concurrent, or simple, are noted. The Congressional Record and the Journals need no further indexing than already forms a part of those publications.

A word of explanation may be added as to seeming gaps in the Index, which are caused by important gaps in the documents themselves. As orders to print do not follow any settled rule, the printed documents of a session show but inadequately the action on the various measures which have come up. Important measures occasionally pass both Houses without any committee report being ordered printed on them, while the case of a bill becoming law with a committee of only one House printing a report on it is frequent. Occasionally a report on a call for information is printed, while the information itself, which one would consider far more important, has not obtained the privilege of appearing in print.

Not only are the reports brought together under their subjects, but there will also be found under the name of each Committee, each Senator, and each Representative a record of all action of that Committee or Member that has appeared in printed form. Thus there are at least three entries for each committee report. The Senate and House documents appear under their subjects, but long lists of issues under each Department and Bureau are omitted, as are the names of authors, except Senators and Representatives.

The Index is simply a guidepost, an indicator to the seeker where a certain document can be found. Two things it does not attempt to do. It does not attempt to index each publication page by page, as this would be duplicating the analytical index which should form a part of any publication of over 15 pages, and which does accompany many of the larger documents. To do this would swamp the references to each publication as a whole. It does not attempt to describe each publication so fully as to distinguish it absolutely from any other. That would require entries more full and detailed than the scope of the work permits. In fact, the index form can never so describe a work as positively to identify it, and great confusion would result if this abridged and compact form were to be adopted to describe the bewildering maze of editions into which, through the law of fortuitous concurrence which has ruled the history of their issue, the publications of the United States have fallen. But as a quick and ready guide to a limited number of documents the index form has its place, and the Document Catalogue, by its fuller description of each publication, complements the Document Index and supplies the permanent and complete record which an adequate catalogue of public documents must give. The issue of the Document Catalogue that will include the documents indexed in this volume will soon appear. As it will contain in more expanded and complete form everything which is contained in this Index, the question whether its preparation would not be expedited by abolishing the Index altogether (on the principle of not needing a little hole for the kitten when you have a big hole for the cat) will be for Congress to decide.

In preparing this work, the former sextuple indexes have been carefully examined, and every feature in them which was thought to be valuable has been retained. This Index has been made more compact, not by reducing the number of entries, for the number has been, in fact, largely increased, but by reducing their length, and it is confidently believed that a great mass of verbiage has been dispensed with without any sacrifice of clearness and definiteness. Compactness has been more a desideratum in this Index, because the amount of material to be dealt with was greater than has usually been treated in the six indexes. The number of committee reports printed during the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress was greater than the number printed during all of the three sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, and the number of documents was larger than at either of the sessions of that Congress. The number of committee reports entered in this Index is 1,140 for the Senate and 2,290 for the House, a total of 3,430, and of documents, 315 for the Senate and 429 for the House, a total of 744. The total number of publications indexed is therefore 4,174, which are or will be bound in 119 volumes—15 of Senate documents, 88 of House documents, 6 of Senate reports, and 10 of House reports. This is a greater number of publications than were indexed in the 18 indexes issued for the three sessions of the Fifty-third Congress.

It should be noted that by law, taking effect for the first time on the documents of the Fifty-fourth Congress, the distinction between Executive and Miscellaneous documents, which began with the Thirtieth Congress, has been abolished. Heretofore there have been four kinds of Congressional documents—Senate Executive, Senate Miscellaneous, House Executive, and House Miscellaneous. As these distinctions were almost wholly arbitrary and meaningless, little reason appearing in the character of the documents themselves to show why one should and another should not be called either Executive or Miscellaneous, it is well that a classification so useless has been done away with—the more so because every unnecessary classification and enumeration increases the complications of the public documents and adds to the great difficulties which librarians and investigators find in making intelligent use of them. There are now but two kinds of Congressional documents—Senate documents and House documents. There are also Senate committee-reports and House committee-reports. The committee reports are numbered consecutively through the Congress, and it would be a general convenience if the documents could be numbered on the same plan. That, however, is difficult, if not impossible, so long as the annual reports of the various executive departments, bureaus, offices, and commissions are numbered and classed as Congressional documents. As a new set of these reports is received at each session of Congress, a new set of numbers for the documents must also begin at each session. The abolition of the distinction between Executive and Miscellaneous documents was the first of several reforms which were needed to bring the Congressional documents into convenient form for the uses of librarians and scholars. The most important of those remaining to be accomplished is the exclusion of the annual reports of executive departments and offices from the numbered set of Congressional documents.

Neither indexing nor cataloguing of the Congressional documents can be done satisfactorily so long as the volumes of the "Congressional reserve" remain unpagged. As they are now and for many years have been bound, the original paging of the separate documents and reports, which was given them when they were separately printed, is retained, but there is no paging for the whole volume. It is therefore impossible in an index or catalogue to refer to any document or report contained in the bound volumes by its page or pages, as is universally done with other publications. The Index can only give the number of the document and of the volume in which it is to be found, and if it chances to be a one-page report bound in a thousand-page volume this is a very poor reference. After finding all the information that the Index can give him, a searcher for knowledge in the public documents may still have an hour or two's hunt before finding the little document or report of which he is in quest. As the Congressional documents and reports become yearly more numerous and voluminous, the necessity increases for having the volumes continuously pagged. When that has been done, a properly made index or catalogue will guide the searcher directly to the information sought. The only substitute for consecutive paging that is at all feasible is that of printing the number and title of each of the small documents and reports in the running heading at the top of each page. This method may be found in the United States public documents of many years ago, but in an evil day it was abandoned, and from that time really precise indexing of Congressional documents has been an impossibility.

In deciding upon the form in which the Index should be printed, it was thought that general convenience would be served by adhering as nearly as practicable to the form which has become familiar by long usage. For this reason the numbers of the documents and reports and of the volumes in which they are bound are carried in columns on the right-hand side of the page. The name Document Index will conveniently distinguish this volume from the larger Document Catalogue, also issued from this office.

To avoid confusion between the various numbered series of resolutions and bills their numbers in the entries of committee reports on them are distinguished by the shortest and clearest abbreviations that could be chosen, namely: H. for House bill; S. for Senate bill; H. R. and S. R. for House and Senate simple resolutions; H. C. R. and S. C. R. for the concurrent resolutions of each House; H. J. R. and S. J. R. for the joint resolutions of each.

It only remains to add that any corrections or suggestions designed to improve future editions of the Document Index will be gladly received by the compiler.

F. A. CRANDALL,
Superintendent of Documents.
