of our American system of government is the division of powers, and if this Legislature and this committee does not follow too closely the recommendations of the Treasury Department in that respect then we will be better off. Their desire is to build up more revenues and take in more. It is your duty and it is our duty as the Members of Congress to make sure that we are going to continue to move forward. Let us lead for a change instead of following the Treasury Department.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. KEOGH has a question.

Mr. KEOGH. I have no question to put to my distinguished colleague, but I would be remiss were I not to commend him for his obviously studied and comprehensive legislative program, and to say to him again, and in public, that it is a source of continuing comfort to me, and I am sure to the other colleagues of ours from New York, to know that his very broad and mature judgment and experience are always generously available to us in the solving and facing of our legislative problems. I commend those fortunate people in that part of Brooklyn from which Mr. MULTER comes.

Mr. MULTER. Thank you very much.

Mr. MILLS. Are there any further questions?

Mr. MULTER, we appreciate your coming to the committee and discussing the several bills that you have introduced, and referred to the committee, giving us the benefit of your advice and recommendations on the bills. We appreciate it very much. Thank you very much.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 13, 1958

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, hallowed be Thy name. In this historic Chamber, with its cloud of witnesses out of the past, with the anxious gaze of vast hosts under all skies fixed upon this forum in the anguished present; before our human voices are lifted we would first of all listen to Thee; as we beseech, speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth. It is our kinship with Thee, our God, which lifts us out of our poor, petty selfhood to be heirs of Thy eternal kingdom.

By national and global tasks too difficult for us, we are driven unto Thee for strength to face what must be faced if freedom is to live, and for wisdom to rightly interpret the signs of these trying times. May these spokesmen for the people, serving in the ministry of public affairs, by their dedication strengthen the cause of our free land and of our common humanity, and so help to build the city of God on the ruined wastes of this disturbed and disordered world. We ask it in that Name whose is the kingdom and the power of the glory. Amen.

PRICE SUPPORTS FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS — RESOLUTIONS — ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, the first bill to be introduced in the Senate in this session of the Congress was the bill (S. 2912) to amend section 201 (c) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended, relating to price support on dairy products, which was cosponsored by Senators CASE of South Dakota, HUMPHREY, IVES, MUNDT, Mrs. SMITH of Maine, WILEY, and YOUNG. My colleagues, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] have asked that they may join in sponsoring this proposal to maintain the economic status of our Nation's dairy farmers. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that their names be included on any subsequent printing of S. 2912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I also ask that a resolution which I have received from the Blackduck Civic and Commerce Association of Blackduck, Minn., be printed in the RECORD, and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for consideration in support of S. 2912.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the dairy industry is one of the major industries in the Blackduck area and in Minnesota; and

Whereas the Secretary of Agriculture advocates the lowering of price supports on dairy products from 82 to 75 percent which is the basic minimum; and

Whereas the economic effect on the Blackduck area would mean the loss of approximately $29,000 per year income to the farmers and the business places on Main Street; and

Whereas the family farmers were in drastic need of financial aid prior to the lowering of dairy price supports: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Blackduck Civic and Commerce Association urge corrective legislation be enacted to at least maintain the 82 percent support for dairy products; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to United States Senator EDWARD J. THYE, United States Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY and our Representatives in Congress and others interested.

The above resolution was presented by the agriculture committee of the Blackduck

Civic and Commerce Association and, upon being put to vote, was unanimously carried.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, the members of the Fargo-Moorhead-Fergus Falls Milk Producers Association recently adopted certain resolutions at their annual meeting calling for action on proposals which would be beneficial to our Nation's agriculture. The first of these resolutions is substantially the same as the provisions of my dairy price-support bill in that it calls for the use of the parity equivalent formula for manufacturing milk based on the 30-month period from July 1946 through December 1948. I ask consent that a letter which I received from Mr. Kenneth Wenstrom, the secretary of the Fargo-Moorhead-Fergus Falls Milk Producers Association, be printed at this point in the RECORD and be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for consideration.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FERGUS FALLS, MINN., January 6, 1958.

Hon. EDWARD THYE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THYE: The following resolutions were passed at the annual meeting of the Fargo-Moorhead-Fergus Milk Producers Association. I hope that you will work for the enactment of these resolutions.

1. We urge that the present support program be restored from 75 percent of parity to 90 percent of parity, using the parity equivalent for manufacturing milk based on the 30 months' period from July 1946 to December 1948, both inclusive, and maintained in effect until such a time as the dairy farmers can provide an effective self-help program.

2. We urge the expansion of the Agricultural Trade Development and Extension Act, Law No. 480, to enable the dairy industry of the United States to gain a foothold in marketing in foreign countries.

3. We strongly oppose the 3 percent special Federal wartime tax on transportation paid by farmers for hauling their milk into the processing plants, and urge Members of Congress to work toward a repeal.

4. We recommend that a thorough investigation be made by Congress with regard to some of the policies and philosophies of the Department of Agriculture. It is our opinion that some of the policies laid down by those heading the Department have been detrimental to the welfare of the farmer.

5. We urge that Congress investigate the cost of carrying on the agricultural programs in order to determine what portion of it should be charged to the defense, which would include agricultural products given away to foreign countries who are considered our friends, and the portion that can be charged directly to losses in handling surpluses.

6. We urge that the available funds derived from percentages of custom receipts and used under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act be used principally for perishable, nonbasic, agricultural products including milk and butterfat and their products.

Yours respectfully,

KENNETH WENSTROM,
Secretary, Fargo-Moorhead-Fergus Falls Milk Producers Association.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I have also received a resolution adopted by the Beltrami County Board of Commissioners supporting my stand on dairy price supports. I ask that this resolution also be printed at this point in my remarks and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION REQUESTING CORRECTIVE LEGISLATION TO MAINTAIN PRESENT PRICE SUPPORTS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Whereas the United States Commissioner of Agriculture advocates the lowering of price supports on dairy products from 82 percent to 75 percent, which is the basic minimum; and

Whereas Beltrami County, Minn., is one of the counties in this area that derives much of its income through the dairy industry; and

Whereas the lowering of the dairy price supports will affect the family farmers throughout the area: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the County Board of Commissioners of Beltrami County urge corrective legislation be enacted to maintain the present price supports on dairy products; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to United States Senator EDWARD J. THYE, and to United States Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY and also to our Representatives in Congress.

RESOLUTIONS OF NATIONAL RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a number of resolutions which were adopted by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association in its region 6 conference held at Minneapolis, Minn. I hope my colleagues will find these resolutions edifying and also sufficiently persuasive to get their support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

HARD MONEY AND HIGH INTEREST RATES

Whereas for several years, the Federal Reserve System and the United States Treasury have collaborated on a so-called hard-money policy which has resulted in a restriction of credit and very high interest rates; and

Whereas while farm income since 1952 has fallen by 30 percent while income from interest has risen 40 percent; and

Whereas the enemies of the rural electrification program are using the high level of interest rates as justification for raising REA interest rates; and

Whereas an increase in our interest rate would be a destructive blow to our systems and to rural people; and

Whereas the only justification for high interest rates is that they are a device for controlling inflation; and

Whereas existing credit restrictions and high interest rates are inflationary, destructive to small business and farmers, consumers, homebuilders and purchasers, schools and hospitals and have increased the Federal interest burden by $1.4 billion a year, and have in many other ways been bad for the public welfare: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we do not believe in reliance upon high interest rates alone as an anti-inflation device; and be it further

Resolved, That we favor a thorough investigation by the Congress of the whole problem of hard money, credit restriction, and high interest rates and that until such an investigation has revealed the impact of high interest rates on inflation control and the welfare of farmers, working people, and small- and medium-sized business, we are opposed to any increase in the REA interest rate; and be it further

Resolved, That we are vigorously opposed to the Hiestand-Capehart bills to increase REA interest rates which were introduced at the request of President Eisenhower.

REORGANIZATION OF REA

Whereas the original REA Act of 1936 provided for strictly nonpartisan administration of REA and provided for the appointment of an Administrator by the President, with confirmation by the Senate for a 10-year term to insure nonpartisan, nonpolitical administration; and

Whereas Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson pledged himself to a Congressional committee to make no changes in REA without first consulting the proper Congressional committees and other interested groups; and

Whereas in June 1957 the Secretary did reorganize REA by requiring that all loans of $500,000 or more be reviewed by persons outside REA: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we are vigorously opposed to any reorganization of REA; we are absolutely opposed to this recent action by Secretary Benson which threatens to make REA a partisan political agency; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge that as soon as the Congress reconvenes in January that a bill be introduced and passed exempting REA from the Reorganization Act of 1953 and that this same bill stipulate that REA is to be reestablished as it was prior to the passage of the Reorganization Act.

PREFERENCE CLAUSE

Whereas for 50 years the preference clauses in Federal power laws, giving preference to nonprofit and cooperative electric systems have been an important influence in assuring the continuation of a healthy degree of competition in this vital industry; and

Whereas over 300 of the rural electric systems are dependent upon the preference clause to protect them in their right to secure power from Federal projects: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we reaffirm our strong support for the preference rights of nonprofit, consumer-owned electric systems and express our unalterable opposition to any repeal, watering down or evasion of preference; and be it further

Resolved, That we endorse the construction of Federal, self-liquidating transmission lines wherever they are necessary to firm up power, assure low-cost delivery of the power to the load centers of our systems, or are necessary in any way to protect the preference rights of our systems.

FEDERAL CAPITAL BUDGET

Whereas the present Federal budgeting and accounting system is confusing and misleading; and

Whereas the people have a right to know which expenditures are expenses and which are repayable as wealth creating investments; and

Whereas a businesslike system of budgeting and accounting is particularly important to REA and the Federal power program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge the Congress to enact a Federal capital budget system of budgeting and accounting; and be it further

Resolved, That we particularly urge those Members of the Congress who cry loudly for economy in Government to further public understanding by helping to pass such legislation.

PROPAGANDA ADVERTISING OF COMMERCIAL POWER COMPANIES

Whereas the power companies have been spending vast amounts for years on propaganda advertising designed to cripple or destroy the rural electrification and Federal power programs, and have compelled the electric consumer to pay the cost of such propaganda: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we favor the passage of legislation which would (1) ban dishonest advertiisng by power companies under the fair trade laws; (2) amend the Federal Power Act to forbid the deduction of costs of propaganda as an expense chargeable to electric consumers, and (3) amend the Internal Revenue Act to forbid deduction of the costs of propaganda by power companies as an expense in computing corporation income taxes.

HELLS CANYON

Whereas the Senate has passed a bill authorizing a high Federal Hells Canyon Dam to provide low-cost power by the full and comprehensive development of the Snake River; and

Whereas the House Interior Committee has refused to permit the House of Representatives to vote on the Senate bill; and

Whereas failure of the House to pass S. 555 would leave the Idaho Power Co. free to waste almost half of the power potential and produce high-cost power, thereby not only sacrificing much of the value of the river for flood control and power but preclude the economic development of rich phosphate deposits, and jeopardize the salmon industry by destroying spawning grounds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we reaffirm our support of the full, comprehensive development of the Nation's rivers, and urge the House committee and the House to pass S. 555; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress amend the Federal Power Act to forever prohibit the Federal Power Commission from issuing any license to any corporation for the development of any hydro site unless such corporation is pledged to full and comprehensive development in accord with the river plans of the appropriate Federal planning agencies.

TRIMBLE BILL

Whereas the new rate schedule for the SPA filed with the Federal Power Commission by the Department of the Interior has been approved; and

Whereas the rate for wholesale power charged by SPA to the rural systems and municipalities in the SPA area has consequently been increased by 27.5 percent; and

Whereas this rate increase is justified by and based upon an unrealistic cost allocation formula which saddles the power consumers with a disproportionate and inequitable proportion of the project costs; and

Whereas H. R. 7362 (better known as the Trimble bill) will reassert the control of the Congress over national water resources and accelerate the conservation and development thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That, upon recommendation by the Advisory Committee on Power for the Southwest the Trimble bill, subject to an amendment requested by the National Reclamation Association to be drawn and offered by Congressman CLAIR ENGLE of California, be diligently and forcefully pushed for passage in the next session of Congress.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY FINANCE PLAN

Whereas the Tennessee Valley Authority is and long will be the sole source of power for a large region of the United States inhabited by 5 million people whose right it is to be assured of a power supply adequate to their growing demand; and

Whereas, additionally, TVA has been required to furnish a great block of power—now amounting to 57 percent of its entire production—to be used by the Federal Government for the development and manufacture of material for the defense of the country; and

Whereas the people of the TVA region and the consumers of TVA power have up to now in good faith invested $775 million in their own distribution systems for TVA power, and in TVA itself, and are regularly repaying all Federal investment in TVA power facilities, as the law required, within 40 years; and

Whereas it clearly may be foreseen that unless new power capacity for TVA is begun promptly, the rise of demand in the valley will break through the supply of power by 1960, if not before; and

Whereas the need to schedule construction of new TVA capacity is more urgent this year than last, and has grown more urgent day by day, and threatens to impose a ceiling upon the economic progress of the region; and

Whereas the TVA Board has recommended that Congress allow it to meet this need by instituting a sound bond-financing plan which would supplement funds provided by Congress; and

Whereas it is the plain duty of TVA to provide adequate power in the Valley, thus it is the responsibility of Congress to enable it to do so: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we again urge Congress to approve at the next session, legislation which would implement the financing plan in the form originally recommended by the TVA Board, such legislation to be similar to the Jones bill as approved by the House Public Works Committee.

FUNDS FOR JOB TRAINING AND SAFETY PROGRAMS

Whereas the job training and safety training programs must rely upon sound educational practices for effectiveness; and

Whereas vocational education has cooperated in the job training and safety training programs by providing personnel to direct sound educational practices; and

Whereas there is need to continue and further develop the job training and safety training programs to train rural electrification workers in new techniques and safety practices; and

Whereas the job training and safety training instructor staff in many States is not adequate to meet the present needs for training; and

Whereas the continued success of the job training and safety training programs is dependent upon adequate Federal appropriations to the States to stimulate and assist them in conducting the programs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we express to Congress our appreciation for appropriating the full amount for fiscal 1958 as authorized by the George-Barden Act of 1946; and be it further

Resolved, That we request Congress to appropriate for fiscal year 1959 the full amount authorized for vocational education under existing laws; and be it further

Resolved, That we request Congress to amend the George-Barden Act of 1946 to authorize an increase in appropriation to be used by the States in further promotion and expansion of the vocational education programs that have been initiated but not fully developed; and be it further

Resolved, That we request Congress to enact into law legislation that will authorize appropriations to develop area vocational programs to serve areas that are not now being served by all phases of vocational education; and be it further

Resolved, That we request Congress to appropriate for fiscal year 1959 such sums as can be used by the States on a matching basis to develop area vocational programs.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Whereas the Russians have achieved a humiliating triumph over the United States by launching sputnik; and

Whereas this Nation cannot afford to encounter a similar Russian triumph in the field of atomic energy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge Congress to launch a crash program on atomic energy and that the Elk River Cooperative reactor be started as quickly as possible as a part of this program.

ENDORSEMENT OF TRADITIONAL FEDERAL POWER PROGRAM

Be it resolved, That we endorse the traditional Federal power program, including multiple-purpose dams, preference and transmission lines, a program which has done so much to enrich the Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That we advise our Representatives and Senators in Congress from this region that there is a close and vital connection between the Federal power program and the rural electrification program.

PREVENT WINDFALL PROFITS TO POWER COMPANIES

Whereas there is no justification for permitting windfall profits to private power companies resulting from accelerated and/or liberalized depreciation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we endorse passage of the Magnuson bill (S. 2113) and the Ullman bill (H. R. 7682).

GENERATION AND TRANSMISSION LOANS

Whereas the demands for increased power supply for the rural electric systems pose a continuing problem for the rural electric systems; and

Whereas the cost of power to the systems has always been favorably influenced by our right and opportunity to generate and transmit our own power where this would result in lower costs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge the REA Administrator to continue to lend funds for generation and transmission when such loans are feasible and will result in savings for our members; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress be urged to continue to provide adequate funds for this purpose.

COMMENDING THE REA ADMINISTRATOR

Whereas David Hamil has demonstrated his sincere belief in the rural electrification program as established by law; and

Whereas he has announced and followed policies which have earned the commendation and support of the many REA borrowers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we commend Mr. Hamil on his policies and his administration of REA.

DEFERRAL PERIOD ON TELEPHONE LOANS

Whereas the declining agricultural economy tends to make it most difficult for telephone borrowers in rural areas to obtain maximum usage and income in a short period of time; and

Whereas the electric borrowers have for a long time enjoyed a 5-year period of deferment in their amortization schedule: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we respectfully request the Administrator of REA to extend the same benefits of a 5-year deferment period to all telephone borrowers, both in the future and retroactively, by amendment to the loan contract, to those who have loans existing at the present time.

MISSOURI BASIN DEVELOPMENT

Whereas the Federal Government has completed certain hydroelectric installations and has others in various stages of construction on the main stem of the Missouri River; and

Whereas revenue from the sale of power from all the power installations in the Missouri River Basin project is expected to repay about 89 percent of the total reimbursable investment of the project; and

Whereas vast quantities of water from the Missouri River Basin project have been released in the interest of free-flowing navigation to the detriment of the supply of firm power; and

Whereas construction of dams and locks on the Missouri River would make better use of the water of the river and provide an adequate navigation channel, much additional flood control and water-conservation capacity, substantially increased quantities of firm power from the hydroelectric plants, and improve the ability of power to repay the reimbursable investment of the project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the delegates of region VI urgently request that adequate funds and proper authority be made available by the United States Congress in fiscal year 1959 for studies and surveys of costs for construction of dams and locks on the main stem of the Missouri River from Yankton, S. Dak., to St. Louis, Mo., and for determination of benefits which would accrue from such construction; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress be requested to authorize representation by the preference customers in the States receiving this power on the reservoir-control center of the Missouri Basin Interagency Committee; and be it further

Resolved, That control of this entire system be placed under a single agency, in the interest of greater overall efficiency and better use of the water resources of this area.

NATIONAL ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Whereas public-opinion surveys show that REA cooperatives are rapidly losing ground in public esteem and support; and

Whereas private power companies' national advertising program in all the major United States magazines is probably responsible for a large part of this loss, as well as for a large buildup in favor of the power companies; and

Whereas a large-scale national advertising program requires a large amount of money, as well as organization and preparation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge the national annual meeting at Dallas to approve a national advertising program for "co-op way" and member education in national magazines, and that the NRECA executive committee at its November meeting request the national member and public-relations committee to make a study of ways and means and make a report and recommendations to the annual meeting at Dallas.

TREATISE ON COOPERATIVES AND THE FARM PROBLEM

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, the Consumers Cooperative Association of Kansas City, Mo., which is a large cooperative, held its annual convention in Kansas City early last December. Howard A. Cowden is president of this organization and has been for many years. Delegates from 10 States gathered for the annual meeting and, of course, the farm problem was the topic uttermost in the discussions.

Earlier in the year Mr. Cowden wrote a very splendid treatise entitled "What Course for American Agriculture?" In this he discusses very frankly the cost-price squeeze on agriculture and states in his opinion it is one of the most pressing issues of our time. He does make a most interesting analysis of the problem and as it was the topic for discussion at the convention, I ask unanimous consent that the treatise written by Mr. Cowden be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the treatise was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COOPERATIVES AND THE FARM PROBLEM

Another year has passed without appreciable improvement in the general farm situation. The parity ratio stood at 81 in mid-November and will, in all likelihood, remain unchanged through December. This means that agriculture continued in 1957 to subsidize the prosperity of other segments of the national economy. Through lower prices for what they sell, farmers contribute to the profits of processors and distributors. At the same time, through increased prices paid for supplies required in farm production, farmers contribute to the profits of the industries from which these supplies come and to the welfare of the millions of persons employed in those industries.

This continued disparity is responsible for countless cases of individual hardship. It explains the steady decline in number of full-time farmers. It has, in all likelihood, contributed to the growing pools of unemployed in some of our larger cities. It has, without question, reduced farm buying power and helped bring on the so-called business recession about which we are getting the first cautious reports.

There is a growing uneasiness in many quarters over the future of some of our price-support programs. For one thing, they have not enabled agriculture to hold its own with the rest of the economy. For another, they have not convinced the consumer that Federal aid to farmers means lower prices at the supermarket. Finally, all our Federal farm programs are jeopardized by current pressure for increased defense expenditures. Already there are proposals in Washington that farm programs be pulled out of the Federal budget to make room for new satellites and guided missiles.

The price support programs have been of inestimable value to farmers. Yet we must face the fact that they become more and more difficult to maintain as agriculture becomes less and less important to the election of Members of Congress. While defending the support programs and what they have done, we must look for something to take their place.

Farmers and nonfarmers in the last few months have become increasingly alert to the need for more emphasis on self-help programs for agriculture. The only truly effective self-help agencies we have are our cooperatives.

Through cooperatives, farmers can build economic strength and improve their bargaining power. While our cooperatives are not large enough yet to match the power of big business and big labor, they must be developed with such a goal in mind. We must either have strong cooperatives in this country or surrender to the concept of an agriculture dominated by corporate industry and giant commercial farms—an agriculture from which the traditional family farm would all but disappear.

If our cooperatives are to realize their full potential, they must have help and encouragement at the national level. It is the declared wish of this meeting, therefore, that our National Government create a more favorable climate than now exists for the development of cooperatives. We think it should be the declared national policy that our Government should encourage cooperatives to the extent of direct assistance in their organization and development.

RESOLUTION OF KANSAS STATE BAR ASSOCIATION

Mr. CARLSON. TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF CIVIL AVIATION UNDER CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, as a member of the Aviation Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and as successor to Senator McCarran, who is known to many as the father of civil aviation, I thought it most appropriate that the Congress of the United States should recognize the 20th anniversary of civil aviation under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. I am, therefore, submitting for appropriate reference a concurrent resolution expressing continued support, by the Congress of the United States, of all phases of our civil aviation, on this 20th anniversary of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 54) was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the late Senator Pat McCarran, of Nevada, and Congressman Clarence Lea, of California, sponsored legislation for the regulation and promotion of civil aeronautics; and

Whereas this legislation became the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and established as being in the public interest:

"(a) The encouragement and development of an air transportation system properly adapted to the present and future needs of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, of the postal service, and of the national defense;

"(b) The regulation of air transportation in such manner as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of, assure the highest degree of safety in, and foster sound economic conditions in, such transportation, and to improve the relations between, and coordinate transportation by, air carriers;

"(c) The promotion of adequate, economical, and efficient service by air carriers at reasonable charges, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices;

"(d) Competition to the extent necessary to assure the sound development of an air transportation system properly adapted to the needs of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, of the postal service, and of the national defense;

"(e) The regulation of air commerce in such manner as to best promote its development and safety; and

"(f) The encouragement and development of civil aeronautics"; and

Whereas these 20 years have marked the unparalleled growth of civil aviation in the United States and witnessed the development of the world's largest and finest air transportation system; and

Whereas the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Civil Aeronautics Administration, together with our aircraft industry, our air transportation companies, our private fliers, and other aviation interests, have been primarily responsible for the orderly development of civil aviation in accordance with policies established by the Congress, leading to the world's outstanding system of civil airways and civil airports, and civil aviation; and

Whereas American civil aviation is on the threshold of new frontiers of travel, comfort, and safety as they prepare for the transition of our air transport fleets from piston-engined to jet-powered aircraft; and

Whereas current war plans of the military continue to place great reliance on our air carrier industry; and

Whereas American leadership in aviation must be maintained; and

Whereas the launching of Russian civil jet service has serious national defense and international prestige implications for the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States, on this 20th anniversary of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, reaffirms its support of the policies set forth therein; commends the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Civil Aeronautics Administration for their sound stewardship of the act and its objectives; and urges adherence to policies which will enable civil aviation to solve its present economic and technical problems and assure the public of the benefits of a strong air transport system and civil aviation industry.

Whereas there has been established at Green Bay, Wis., the National Railroad Museum whose purpose is to afford recognition in perpetuity to the role of the American railroad in our Nation's early history by preserving the railroad rolling stock and other memorabilia of the age of steam; and

Whereas there has been donated or pledged to the National Railroad Museum early and rare steam locomotives, other rolling stock, printed material, photographs, broadsides, and ephemera, including the Carl R. Gray, Jr., collection, thus insuring its place as a center for the preservation of significant physical evidence of American railroading's early history; and

Whereas the National Railroad Museum, as an educational institution of major significance to all Americans in its portrayal of the development of the American railroad and the lives of the inventors, managers, investors, and workers who created the ties of steel that bind our country together, is of national interest: Now, therefore, be it

AMENDMENT OF SOIL BANK ACT

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill which would strengthen the agricultural conservation program and encourage conservation practices by utilizing the unusued part of the soil conservation reserve funds.

We owe a great debt to future generations to wisely preserve and improve land productivity. We must meet this challenge.

We have about 1,444,000,000 acres on which to produce agricultural crops and livestock. For every person in the United States there are only about 3 acres of cropland and slightly over 6 acres of grazing land. As population increases, the average acres per capita will naturally decrease. Present estimates indicate that population in the United States will be 228 million by 1975 and 335 million by the year 2000.

The Soil Conservation Service estimates that over 282 million acres of land in the United States are severely eroded, 776 million acres moderately eroded, and 700 million acres slightly eroded. This certainly emphasizes the seriousness of this problem and the need for taking a new look at our long-range planning.

We must conserve, reclaim, and rebuild to fulfill the trust we have to provide for future generations.

Declining farm prices combined with sharp acreage reductions over the past few years have resulted in lower farm income and a depressed agricultural economy. One of the most serious problems has been, and continues to be, idle and eroded acres.

Despite great progress made in soil conservation, there remain millions of acres of land in the United States that have been permitted to wash away and become unproductive. These idle acres must be improved and made productive. Our pastures and woodlands must be improved and protected.

The conservation reserve phase of the soil bank must be modified to more adequately cope with conservation needs. This phase of the soil bank is a more constructive measure for it is an investment for the future and will provide long-range and lasting benefits to each individual participating. This phase of the program, however, must reach more farms and especially our small- and family-sized farmers.

It now appears that only 85,290 farms in the United States participated in the 1957 program, and that only about one-third of the funds allocated for the conservation reserve will be used. In the case of Mississippi, 1,544 contracts were signed, an average of less than 19 farms per county. Less than one-sixth of the funds allocated to Mississippi were used.

Thus, the existing program reaches only a fraction of our idle and unproductive acres. A redirected conservation reserve can put these acres to work through tree planting, pasture improvement, and other conservation measures. There is a great opportunity in growing trees for supplementing farm income. The unexpended portion of conservation reserve funds could be put to no better use than improving forest stands and establishing other conservation practices on idle acres taken out of production prior to passage of the 1956 soil bank program. According to a recent study by the Forest Service, there are 60,339,000 acres of land in the United States in need of reforestation, with over 4.3 million acres in Mississippi alone. Most of this land is not now eligible for soil bank participation. Improvement of this land through tree planting would be of lasting benefit.

The unused portion of funds allocated to the States for the conservation reserve should be used to put our idle acres into production. The bill which I introduce would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize the unused portion of the conservation reserve funds for this purpose. Under my bill, the Government would share in the original cost of establishing approved conservation practices, but no rental payments would be authorized.

We must develop a formidable, forward looking and broader conservation program built around the needs of the future. We must have an expanded and better-financed, long-range program which will assure lasting benefits.

I hope this legislation will be favorably considered at the earliest possible date. It merits the full support of every Member of the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2971) to amend the Soil Bank Act so as to permit unused portions of funds appropriated for carrying out the conservation reserve program to be used for other conservation purposes, introduced by Mr. STENNIS, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 120 of the Soil Bank Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(c) Any part of the funds appropriated pursuant to this section for carrying out the conservation reserve program during the fiscal year 1958 or any subsequent year which are not used for such purpose in the State to which they are allocated, shall be available for use in such State in accordance with regulations of the Secretary for making payments or grants of other aid to agricultural producers carrying out practices designed to effectuate the agricultural conservation policy set forth in section 7 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended."

PROPOSED FISHERY EXTENSION SERVICE IN FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize a Federal fishery extension service. I ask unanimous consent that a brief statement which I have prepared on this subject may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2973) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to establish a fishery extension service in the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior for the purpose of carrying out cooperative fishery extension work with the States, Territories, and possessions, introduced by Mr. PAYNE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The statement presented by Mr. PAYNE is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR PAYNE

Today I am introducing a bill to create a fishery extension service patterned closely after the Agricultural Extension Service which has been of such tremendous assistance to our Nation's farmers. Fishermen have, of course, frequently been called farmers of the sea, and the fishing industry is in a great many ways closely analogous to agriculture.

Fishing is one of the oldest and proudest industries of our Nation. In fact this country was really pioneered by fishermen who were followed by the colonists. From that early day to this fish have been, and properly so, a cornerstone of the American diet, and the industry has been an important segment of our national economy. To give some idea of the size of the commercial fishing industry to the State of Maine alone, 283 million pounds of fish and shellfish, valued at $16,855,000 were landed in 1954, the latest year for which complete statistics are readily available. In that same year nearly 3 million cases of sardines were packed, while almost 22 million pounds of lobsters valued at $8 million were trapped in Maine waters.

In spite of its importance, the American fishing industry today is severely depressed and faces the most critical problems of its entire history. The other major fish producing nations of the world have undertaken a wide variety of forms of assistance for their fishermen while in this country we have tended to let the industry go almost totally unheeded. This in itself has had a very adverse effect which has been compounded by the fact that the costs of producing fish in foreign countries are far less than those of our fishermen. The result is obvious—American fishermen under present conditions simply cannot compete with imports of low cost foreign fish.

In recent years there have been several attempts to adjust the tariff rates in order to help the domestic fishing industry but these have all met with failure. The only alternative is the development of a program of assistance designed to help the industry to improve its knowledge and technology to the point where it can compete. The first step in this program was taken with the passage by the 84th Congress of the bill which I introduced to authorize a program of fishery education and training in colleges, secondary schools, and vocational schools. In time this should offer a real benefit to the industry by making available specially trained personnel.

The bill I am introducing today is a logical followup to the fishery education act and is urgently needed by the industry. The benefits of an extension service are too well known to warrant reviewing them here. Obviously, the vast majority of our commerical fishermen cannot take time out to go to school. The alternative is to bring up to date information and modern techniques direct to them.

It is my hope that early hearings will be scheduled on this bill by the Senate Commerce Committee so that the Congress will be able to complete action this year. I feel very strongly that we must work rapidly to assist the fishing industry in every way possible, or we will soon find ourselves dependent on foreign countries for fishery products.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL AIRPORT ACT, RELATING TO EXTENSION OF TIME FOR MAKING GRANTS

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend the Federal Airport Act for a period of 4 years beyond the present expiration date. I ask unanimous consent that a brief statement which I have prepared on this subject may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2974) to amend the Federal Airport Act in order to extend the time for making grants under the provisions of such act, introduced by Mr. PAYNE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The statement presented by Mr. PAYNE is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR PAYNE

The Federal Airport Act was first enacted in 1946 to assist in the development of airport facilities to meet the rapidly growing needs of American aviation. In 1955 the act was substantially amended and the program of assistance was greatly expanded. The 1955 act provided for the expenditure of $63 million a year for fiscal years 1957, 1958, and 1959. As the law now stands the airport program will expire on July 1, 1959.

There can be no doubt that the airport program has provided its value many times over and much progress has been made in bringing the Nation's airports up to the present-day needs of aviation. But this is far from adequate since aviation in this country has mushroomed in the past 10 years and shows promise of an even greater rate of growth in the next 10. As a matter of fact civil aviation today is facing what will amount to a revolution—the advent of civil jet aircraft—within 1 or 2 years. At that point the airports of this country will be woefully inadequate unless action is taken now to prepare them for the jet air age.

The Federal Airport Program is, of course, a grant-in-aid type of program and is set up on a 50–50 matching basis. Although the present authorization will not expire until next year, I am hopeful that the Congress will approve a 4-year extension this year in order to aid States and local communities in maintaining an orderly sequence of planning and also to facilitate the appropriation process by not having to act on the airport program twice in the first 6 months of next year.

PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF RIO GRANDE BASIN PROJECT

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill for the purpose of supplementing the authorization for the middle Rio Grande project in New Mexico, with reference to which I have a short statement which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2975) to authorize the modification of the project for the Rio Grande Basin in order to provide for the completion of the middle Rio Grande portion of such project, introduced by Mr. CHAVEZ, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

The statement presented by Mr. CHAVEZ is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CHAVEZ

The bill which I am introducing is for the purpose of supplementing the authorization for the Middle Rio Grande Project in New Mexico, as authorized in the Flood Control Acts of 1948 and 1950, Public Law 858, 80th Congress, and Public Law 516, 81st Congress, respectively.

The present authorization provides for the construction of two flood-control dams on tributaries of the Rio Grande, channelization of the river and levee construction through the highly developed Middle Rio Grande Valley in Central New Mexico. The present authorization does not provide for the construction of a dam and reservoir on the main stem of the Rio Grande which has always been recognized as essential to the full protection of the Rio Grande Valley from floods and sediment encroachment.

We have been making good progress on the construction authorized. One dam has been completed and work has been started on the second dam. A large amount of channelization has also been completed and as a result of this, many thousand acre-feet of water have been salvaged which would otherwise have been lost to this drought ridden area. Some of the authorized levee work has been completed; however, there is considerable work yet to be done on this phase of the protective works. In general, the levees have been constructed to a size and height required if all three flood control dams are completed; therefore, in order for the job to be completed in accordance with the best engineering plans, it is necessary that we have the main-stem storage authorized and constructed. I am hopeful that we can obtain early action on the bill which I am introducing so that the Middle Rio Grande Valley can have the flood protection which is needed and which was anticipated when the initial authorizations were made.

PROPOSED CONTRIBUTION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM AND RESERVOIR ON CANADIAN RIVER, N. MEX.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to provide for a Federal contribution toward the cost of the dam and reservoir to be constructed on the Canadian River by the State of New Mexico. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief statement, prepared by me, relating to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2976) to provide for a Federal contribution toward the cost of the dam and reservoir to be constructed on the Canadian River by the State of New Mexico, introduced by Mr. CHAVEZ, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

The statement, presented by Mr. CHAVEZ, is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CHAVEZ

The State of New Mexico is entitled to Canadian River waters originating below Conchas Dam which now flow out of the State unused and the State is working on plans for a dam and reservoir to utilize these waters.

The plan of the State of New Mexico contemplates the construction of a reservoir which would enable the State to use their water for municipal, industrial, and irrigation purposes. In addition, this project would provide flood control, recreational, and fish and wildlife and other such benefits which would be regional and national in nature. Because of these benefits there should be a Federal contribution to the cost of this project.

The bill which I am introducing would authorize and direct Federal agencies to make studies and determine the extent to which monetary contributions should be made by the Federal Government towards the construction of this project. This bill also authorizes the appropriation of the monetary contribution which shall be agreed upon between the appropriate Federal agency and the State of New Mexico and approved by the President.

PROGRAM OF EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE TO VETERANS

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to establish a program of educational assistance to veterans who served in the Armed Forces of the United States after January 31, 1955. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with a statement, prepared by me, relating to the bill, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred and, without objection, the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2978) to establish a program of educational assistance to veterans who served in the Armed Forces of the United States after January 31, 1955, introduced by Mr. YARBOROUGH, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS—SHORT TITLE

SEC. 101. This act may be cited as the "Veterans Educational Act of 1958."

Findings and declaration of purpose

SEC. 102. The Congress hereby finds and declares that the national interest and the national security of the United States require the fullest development of the talent of its young men and women; and that to this end it is essential to reduce to a minimum the loss of highly qualified young men and women, because of lack of financial means, to attend educational institutions. It is therefore the purpose of this act to assist young men and women to further their education by establishing a program of assistance. It is the purpose of this law to extend the educational assistance provisions of the GI bill of rights to all veterans discharged (under conditions other than dishonorable) after January 31, 1955, both volunteers and draftees.

SEC. 103. (a) Section 201 (1) of the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1952 (38 U. S. C. 911) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The term 'basic service period' means the period beginning on June 27, 1950, and ending on the day before the date of termination of military service by a discharge other than dishonorable under the laws of the United States, except that with respect to a person in the active service in the Armed Forces on such day, such term means the period beginning on June 27, 1950, and ending on the date of the person's first discharge or release from such service after such day."

(b) Section 201 (2) (A) of such act is amended by striking out "January 31, 1955" and inserting in lieu thereof "the day before the date of termination of military service by a discharge other than dishonorable under the laws of the United States."

(c) Section 212 (a) of such act (38 U. S. C. 917) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; except that an eligible veteran who first entered active service in the Armed Forces after January 31, 1955, and who was discharged or released from such service prior to the date of enactment of the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1957 shall be entitled to initiate a program of education and training under this title at any time within 3 years after the date of enactment of the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1957."

(d) Section 212 (c) of such act is amended by striking out "February 1, 1955" each place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "the date of termination of military service by a discharge other than dishonorable under the laws of the United States."

(e) Section 213 of such act (38 U. S. C. 918) is amended by striking out ", and in no event shall education or training be afforded under this title after January 31, 1965."

SEC. 104. This act shall apply to all persons who served for a period of 90 days or more in the Armed Forces of the United States and who were by a discharge other than dishonorable separated from the service after January 31, 1955. This act applies to veterans who volunteered or were drafted.

Appropriations authorized

SEC. 105. There are authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary for the payments authorized in this act.

The statement, presented by Mr. YARBOROUGH, is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR YARBOROUGH

January 31, 1955, was the termination date of certain rights under the GI bill, and persons who entered the military service after that date were denied the educational benefits enjoyed by veterans in previous years.

Surveys made in the United States indicate that about half of the high school students with college aptitudes do not attend college, due largely to financial inability to attend. This Nation is losing the service of many bright youths who might be engineers, scientists, or leaders in other fields, if they were properly trained. This Nation cannot afford this loss of the undeveloped talents of such a large number of the youth of this country.

It has been the policy of this Government since the second inaugural address of President Abraham Lincoln in 1865 to care, in varying degree, for the veterans of our wars. The education of the veterans of the present cold war is a matter of pressing national concern. These young people who take 2, 3, or 4 years out of their lives to man our defense stations in the Arctic wastes, or serve in the Libyan Desert, or in a thousand other places of hardship, form the shield that is protecting the Nation in these vital days of decision.

A proper national regard for the welfare of these service men and women, and a proper consideration for the survival of our free institutions, compel us to furnish educational opportunities to these youths. This would partially compensate for the time they took out of their school years to serve in our defense installations.

After our young men and young women have given unstintingly of their service to their country, visualize for a moment what happens to so many of them. You've seen this happen to your friends down the street, your next door neighbors, or perhaps in your own family. Picture the young soldier returning home with his honorable discharge. He left home a boy and came home a man, and therein lies the trouble. He's not generally sufficiently trained or educated to earn a living in a man's world. Conditions at home have changed. Younger brothers and sisters require the family income for day-to-day living. He cannot or will not call on his folks to support him—to spend the meager family savings on his education. And, these days, the chances are that the family's savings are meager because statistics show that the majority of American families have no savings or less than $500 savings in the bank.

The direct result of this military cycle is that interrupted education is not resumed. The young veteran returns not to higher schooling, but to a lifetime of unskilled and semiskilled work. I propose to reverse this trend. I seek to extend to all of our young men and young women, who serve their country honorably, the opportunity to attend college.

Mr. President, I have prepared a bill to extend the educational provisions of the GI bill of rights to all veterans, volunteers as well as draftees, men and women, who served at least 90 days, whose service terminated after January 31, 1955. These rights would not extend to anyone who received a dishonorable discharge.

This bill would terminate January 31, 1965.

AMENDMENT OF REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 2 OF 1953

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am introducing, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend the Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 so that hereafter section 1 of the plan will no longer apply to the Rural Electrification Administration.

The bill provides for the transfer to the Administrator of REA all functions which were transferred from the Administrator to the Secretary of Agriculture under this reorganization plan.

Refusal of the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with a Senate committee seeking to look into his handling of the REA led to my decision to introduce this legislation.

Mr. President, the Committee on Government Operations is vested with authority over legislation relating to reorganizations in the executive branch, and further has the duty of evaluating the effects of laws enacted to reorganize the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

In carrying out this function, the committee established a permanent Subcommittee on Reorganization to which it has delegated the responsibility of processing reorganization proposals and of evaluating the effects of reorganizations of the executive branch.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Reorganization, it is my duty to follow closely all efforts and actions which attempt or do reorganize the existing structure and functioning of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, for example, in this case, any changes which have taken place, or are contemplated under Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953.

In keeping with this duty, I learned during the summer of the last session of Congress, that what appears to be a rather drastic change in the structure, and functioning and delegation of responsibility had taken place in the Department of Agriculture, without any consultation with our committee. This change involves the functioning of the Rural Electrification Administration, and what up until recently used to be the autonomous functioning of the REA Administrator.

Previously, on August 20, 1957, I explored this matter at great length on the floor of the Senate. Therefore, I need not at this time repeat in detail what I reported to you at that time. It will be sufficient, I believe, at this time, to merely summarize what I discussed at that time.

In testifying before the Subcommittee on Reorganization in 1953 in reference to the then-proposed Reorganization Plan No. 2, Mr. Benson assured the committee, the Congress, and general public, that it was his intention to consult with Members of the Congress, with the farming organizations, and other interested groups, in accordance with the intent of section 4 (b) of the Reorganization Plan, regarding any proposed major redistribution of functions within the Department of Agriculture, and that interested individuals and associations would be afforded appropriate opportunity to place before the Department of Agriculture their views with respect to any proposed redistribution of functions. In his testimony the Secretary stated that "it is contemplated that full publicity would be given to the matter through press releases and through direct notification to major farm organizations. It would also be our purpose to advise and consult with appropriate committees of Congress and leaders in agriculture."

The Congress, in voting on this reorganization plan, accepted the words of the Secretary in good faith. But, Mr. President, the Secretary has violated this faith.

He has done it in this way. He has undermined the authority of the REA Administrator—authority, I remind you, which has been granted by the Congress—to be sole judge in determining whether or not a loan to a rural electric cooperative can and should be made.

As Mr. Benson related in a press conference, David Hamil, REA Administrator, now must get clearance from his office to make loans of $500,000 or more. In a newspaper report—which has since been verified by the Secretary—of this conference, it was reported that Benson said that Kenneth Scott, Director of Agricultural Credit Service, per instructions issued by the Secretary, told Hamil that he must discuss with the Director of Agricultural Credit any loans of a half million or more before they are made. And, added to this, Mr. President, I have been reliably informed by one Mr. D'Ewart of Montana that it really is not Mr. Scott who passes on these loans. You all will recall Mr. D'Ewart as being a former Member of the House of Representatives and as an unsuccessful applicant, subsequent to his service in the House of Representatives, before the Senate for a position in the Department of the Interior. You will also recall that while serving in the House, Mr. D'Ewart compiled what one would consider anything but an enviable record in favor of REA legislation. And this is the man, I repeat, a man who does not favor the rural electrification program, who has reportedly been put in charge of passing on REA loan applications.

As I related to this body in August 1957, I submit that in all fairness this action on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture, as he has stated it in his own words, is in contradiction to and in violation of the assurances given to the Subcommittee on Reorganization and the assurances given to the Senate in connection with Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953. The report made in connection with this plan is replete with statements to the effect that the Secretary of Agriculture would give ample advance notice to all concerned within and without the Congress when any move was made to reorganize the Department of Agriculture.

What is the real purpose of this change ordered by Secretary Benson? I think we are entitled to know if it is an attempt to remove one of the most vital, if not the most vital, competitive weapons which the rural electric cooperatives have at their disposal. Namely, the right of the rural electric systems to generate and transmit their own power where it is to their advantage. Apparently involved in this issue which I have been discussing is what used to be at least the nonpolitical, nonpartisan administration of this vital REA generating and transmission loan program. Now, we have a case of an apparently conscientious Administrator being put into a straitjacket—removed of one of the most important authorities which has been granted by the Congress—by the utilization of a Government reorganization designed to promote, not sabotage, efficiency.

I believe my previous statements on this matter on the Senate floor have made it clear that I was not seeking to jump to conclusions. I was seeking, as part of my duty as a subcomittee chairman, to ascertain the facts. Charges about this REA reorganization were publicly printed by the national magazine of the rural electric cooperatives. I felt we, in the Senate, were entitled to an explanation.

As the records will show, subsequent to finding out about the reorganization of the Rural Electrification Administration, on August 5, 1957, I wrote the Secretary informing him that it was my intent to hold hearings on this matter so that the Congress may have firsthand information on the change in policy which has been made. I offered the Secretary several alternative dates, and went so far as to invite him to appear at any convenient time before Congress recessed. I was informed that the Secretary was out of town, that he could not appear on any of the specific dates I had mentioned, that the Secretary did not know when he could appear.

Subsequent to this I received, on August 12, a letter from True D. Morse, then Acting Secretary, in which he completely ignored the charges that have been made and, further, made no reference to my formal request for the Secretary of Agriculture's appearance before the subcommittee in connection with this matter.

Furthermore, Mr. Morse ignored completely, and in my opinion that is significant, the fact that it is the Secretary of Agriculture who is responsible for the Department of Agriculture for any basic changes in policy, such as the reported change affecting the Rural Electrification Administration, and for any accounting to the Congress for any such changes made.

Referring again to the testimony given in 1953 on Reorganization Plan No. 2, the Secretary of Agriculture specifically stated that he, and he alone, shall be responsible for reorganization plans and developments, and that he, and he alone, would feel under obligation to consult the interested parties and the Congress when such matters were under consideration.

And I might add, more than parenthetically, it was this same Secretary of Agriculture who in 1953 said to the Subcommittee on Reorganization that he contemplated no major changes in the administration of the Rural Electrification Administration program; and that if any major changes were contemplated, he would be the first to consult with the Congress before making such a change, and that if the Congress disapproved of any proposed changes, he was certain such changes would not be made.

I could go on, Mr. President, but to save the time of the Senate allow me to refer all those interested to what I had to say on this matter on August 29, 1957.

Further correspondence was received from the Secretary's office and replied to by me. In fact one such reply to subsequent requests by me to the Secretary to appear before the subcommittee was actually answered by the Secretary. It was hand delivered to my office on August 30, 1957, and if my memory serves me right this was the day Congress adjourned. It arrived at my office at 4:45 p. m., and again, if my memory serves me right, this was several minutes after the 1st session of the 85th Congress had adjourned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this letter be printed at this point in my discussion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., August 30, 1957.

Hon. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Reorganization, Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: I have carefully considered your further letter of August 22, 1957, about the questions you have raised concerning the rumored changes in the lending policy of the Rural Electrification Administration.

These questions were also discussed in Mr. Morse's letter to you of August 9 and my letter of August 20. Substantially the same questions were raised during my press conference of August 20. A transcript of that portion of the press conference which includes my answers regarding REA was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 21, by Senator MORTON.

In both the letters and the press conference I have pointed out that there has been no reorganization of REA. The request to Mr. Hamil that he consult or discuss with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services applications for loans over $500,000, has not curtailed his authority for final approval on those loans. This action was taken in view of the record volume of applications for REA loans and the many complex problems which have arisen in the administration of that program due to population shifts, increased costs of equipment, machinery and labor, and an increasing demand for more electric current for both farm and nonfarm use.

The changing character of the Nation's countryside is having a marked effect on the territory and electric service requirements of many REA borrowers. City people are moving to the country and building homes. Industry is locating in suburban and rural areas. The REA service territories are losing a good bit of their rural traits. About half of their revenue comes from farm service and the remaining half from nonfarm residences, commercial, and miscellaneous services.

The increasing demand for electric power throughout the country is reflected in constantly increasing demands for REA loans to provided needed facilities. REA loan approvals are keeping pace with this trend as shown by the following table:

Fiscal year:	Loans approved during year
1953	164,972,662
1954	167,104,100
1955	167,530,430
1956	189,804,800
1957	300,461,514

The request of Mr. Scott to Mr. Hamil that he be given a chance to review the applications for the loans in question was completely compatible with my testimony on Reorganization Plan No. 2. It is in line with the legal authority which exists in the basic law, in the reorganization plan, and in the public notices with respect to that plan which were published in the Federal Register in 1953 and 1954.

In my colloquy with you in the hearings on the reorganization plan held on May 18, 1953, 83d Congress, 1st session, at page 169, you asked whether it was my intention "to leave the REA pretty much as an autonomous organization."

I replied as follows:

"Certainly I do not have in mind weakening the service which REA is rendering. I think it is very essential, and I do feel that we have selected a good man to help it, and he will be given a pretty free hand, I am sure. But if we have in mind any major changes, certainly we would want to consult with the Congress before we took such steps, because I know there is a very wide interest in that agency, probably as much as in almost any other agency in the Department."

The requirement that these applications be reviewed by the Director of Agricultural Credit Services does not weaken the service which the agency was created by Congress to render. It was not a major change either in policy or in organization. It was not a transfer or an abolition of a function. The authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make that request of an agency head under his supervision and direction, including REA, existed even before the reorganization plan of 1953 was approved.

REA was created as an independent agency of the Government by the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U. S. C. 901, 914). Section 1 of the act provided that all of the Administration's powers would be exercised by an Administrator. However, that section was substantially modified by section 5 of President Roosevelt's Reorganization Plan No. II of 1939 (5 U. S. C., p. 125), which transferred REA and its functions and activities to the Department of Agriculture and provided that such functions and activities "shall be administered in that Department by the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture."

It appears that in 1944 a question arose about the making of allotments as required by the act. The Department took the position, with the full legal approval of its Solicitor, that the Secretary's duty to supervise and direct the activities of REA not only permitted him to approve the allotments but made it his duty to do so if desirable for the proper operation of the program.

This conclusion was based on decisions of the courts, notably Knight v. United States Land Association (142 U. S. 161), and the decision of the Comptroller General (19 C. G. 400). In the Knight case the Supreme Court concluded that the words "direction and supervision" are synonymous with the word "control" and import broad powers including the power to initiate, guide, superintend, manage, rule, review, notify, and overrule.

In that case the court was construing words directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to perform certain functions "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior." The court said that the words under discussion are an expression of the power of the Secretary to supervise and control the extensive operations of the land department and then quoted with approval the statement of the Secretary of Interior, as follows:

"The statute in placing the whole business of the Department under the supervision of the Secretary invests him with authority to review, reverse, amend, annul, or affirm all proceedings in the Department."

See also Orchard v. Alexander (157 U. S. 372 (1895)); Cameron v. United States (252 U. S. 450, 460 (1920)); and West v. Standard Oil Company (278 U. S. 200, 220 (1929)).

State court decisions also follow this rule. They have held that the terms connote a power to superintend generally together with the incidental authority to regulate and control. Vantongeren v. Heffernan et al. (5 Dak. 180, 38 N. W. 52 (1888)); State ex rel. Board of Transportation v. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. (22 Neb. 313, 35 N. W. 118 (1887)).

The courts apparently do not distinguish between phrases using the word "general" with "direction and supervision" from those where the word "general" is not used. See Great Northern Railway Company v. Snohomish County (93 Pac. 924 (Wash. 1908)).

This conclusion with respect to the Secretary's authority over the Rural Electrification Administration Administrator followed the policy determination of the Department reached in early 1940 in connection with the transfer of the Farm Credit Administration to this Department to be "administered in such Department under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture." The Comptroller General in 19 Comp. Gen. 400 said:

"Consequently the Farm Credit Administration must be regarded as no longer an independent agency but as an agency within the Department of Agriculture and under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. * * * there would appear to be no authority under existing law for the effecting of such a transfer of authority and responsibility as would amount to a restoration of the Farm Credit Administration to its former status 'an autonomous Federal agency.'"

It seems clear therefore that the request that the Rural Electrification Administrator review certain loans with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services is not the exercise of new authority vested in me by Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953. Moreover, it is a step which is well within the information given to the Congress and the public at the time Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 was presented, approved, and made effective.

The Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration is not only requested to discuss major loan problems with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services, but the law requires that all special livestock loans over $50,000 must be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture because of the major problems involved.

Soon after I became Secretary of Agriculture, I alined the agencies of the Department into major groups, each group to report to me through designated officials of the Department. During the Senate hearings on Reorganization Plan No. 2, I furnished and there was included in the hearings two charts showing the organization of the Department effective January 21, 1953, and as amended March 10, 1953. The January 21 chart shows the Farm Credit Administration, the Farmers Home Administration, and the Rural Electrification Administration grouped under agricultural credit and that these agencies are to report through the head of that group. The March 10 chart shows substantially the same arrangement (pp. 142 and 144, hearings before the Subcommittee on Reorganization of the Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate, on Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 and Senate Resolution 100 disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 2, 1953, May 12, 13, and 18, 1953 (other references to hearings contained in this letter are to hearings before this subcommittee)).

By Secretary's memorandum 1320, dated January 21, 1953, all employees of the Department were advised that "agency and office heads within each group will report to their respective group head. * * * The Secretary and the Under Secretary meeting jointly with the major group heads and the Solicitor will consider matters of policy determination and long-range planning. * * * This organizational arrangement will make possible closer coordination of related activities and will centralize responsibility for consideration and determination of operating problems and other matters requiring departmental attention within each group." A copy of this memorandum was furnished the subcommittee and appears in the hearings at pages 140–141.

As you are aware, Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture all of the functions of the heads of the agencies with which it dealt, including REA. However, on August 28, 1953, I issued, and there was published in the Federal Register of that date (18 F. R. 5155), a delegation to each Assistant Secretary and to the Director of Agricultural Credit Services the authority to exercise general direction and supervision over the agencies of the Department designated in such delegation. The delegation also provides that nothing therein shall "preclude the Secretary of Agriculture from exercising any of the powers and functions or from performing any of the duties herein conferred."

This was implemented by Secretary's memorandum 1320, supplement 2, dated September 18, 1953, which directed the agencies of the Department to report to designated Assistant Secretaries or, in the case of the agencies grouped under Agricultural Credit Services to report to the Director. This was in line with my delegation of August 28, 1953.

On October 13, 1953, my office issued a press release outlining a proposed reorganization of the Department to which was attached an announcement of intention to reorganize and a chart showing the Rural Electrification Administration grouped with other agencies under Agricultural Credit, under an assistant to the Secretary, under the Secretary. (The Office of Assistant to the Secretary in Charge of Agricultural Credit is now known as the Director of Agricultural Credit Services.)

The assignment of functions to the agencies under the reorganization plan was published in the Federal Register for January 6, 1954 (19 F. R. 74). Among other things this assignment provides:

"No delegation or authorization prescribed in this document shall preclude the Secretary from exercising any of the powers or functions or from performing any of the duties conferred herein and any such delegation or authorization is subject at all times to withdrawal or amendment by the Secretary. No delegation or authorization prescribed in this document shall preclude the exercise of any delegation or authorization otherwise provided to the Under Secretary, Assistant Secretaries, Administrative Assistant Secretary, or Assistant to the Secretary for Agricultural Credit, or to the staff agencies as provided in section 112 hereof. * * * The head of each agency (1) will maintain close working relationships with the officer to whom he reports, (2) will keep him advised with respect to major problems and developments, and (3) will discuss with him proposed action involving major policy questions or other important considerations or questions, including matters involving relationships with other agencies of this Department, other Federal agencies, or other governmental or private organizations or groups."

I hope these comments answer the questions you have raised regarding any reported recent reorganization or major policy change in REA.

In your letter of August 22 you assign as one reason for the proposed hearing the necessity of this Department providing the Congress with its official position on any proposed changes in the policy of the agency which are contrary to the intent of the Congress. We, of course, would not initiate any changes which are contrary to the intent of Congress and we would be the first to suggest, as required by the reorganization plan, that we discuss with the Congress any major changes proposed to take effect in the future.

In these circumstances, there would be no information we could give in the proposed hearing which has not heretofore been given in previous letters, the press conference of which you have a transcript, or in this reply.

I know you will give careful consideration to the additional information about the working arrangements we have with regard to REA and the legal and administrative justification for them that I have pointed out in this letter.

After you have had a chance to study this communication it would be most helpful if you would let me know if there are any procedures or policies being followed by the Department in the REA loan program with which you do not agree.

Sincerely yours,

E. T. BENSON,
Secretary.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This letter, Mr. President, is a masterful piece of workmanship. It is an impressive letter, and a superficial reading would indicate that Secretary Benson has adequately proved that he has made no changes. Analysis of this lengthy and impressive letter, however, leads me to conclude in the opposite.

Mr. Benson adamantly holds to his position that there has been no reorganization of REA. Mr. Benson continues to argue, to use his own words, that "the request to Mr. Hamil that he consult or discuss with the Director of Agricultural Credit Services applications for loans over $500,000 has not curtailed his authority for final approval on those loans." Note the careful choice of words, Mr. President—"request," "consult or discuss." In my humble opinion, I feel that Mr. Hamil now has about as much authority or independent discretion to make up his own mind as I would if my banker told me I would have to take out the bank's insurance policy if I wished to borrow money to purchase a car. That is to say, I can either take the insurance policy or do without the loan. Mr. Hamil, in my opinion, is in the same position. He can submit all such loans to Mr. Scott or, if not, resign from his position.

The point I am trying to make is this, Mr. President: The Secretary of Agriculture has violated his trust. He, in my opinion, has set himself up as administrator and legislator. He has, in effect, usurped the powers and prerogatives of the Congress. In 1953, Mr. President, we took the Secretary at his word. He was to consult with the Congress before he took any steps to reorganize the Department of Agriculture. He has not done this. No fair-minded person could agree with the Secretary. By his action he has removed the autonomous status of the REA Administrator. And to me, Mr. President, this constitutes a major change, the Secretary's argument to the contrary notwithstanding.

And, furthermore, the Secretary has flouted the will of the Congress by, in my opinion, refusing to appear before a Congressional committee.

By his actions, Mr. President, I feel morally obligated to attempt to correct a situation which, as I have mentioned, could establish a dangerous precedent, and which, in this specific instance, could well lead to the beginning of the end of the rural electrification program.

I have consistently supported the reorganization proposals of the past, under this administration and the last administration. I supported Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953, admittedly with some misgivings, but did so in view of the personal assurances given our committee by Secretary Benson.

In view of those assurances being broken, I feel under no obligation to continue any support for that reorganization plan insofar as it applies to REA. The bill I have introduced would restore REA to its original status within the Department of Agriculture that it had when established and held until the reorganization authority was given to Secretary Benson on the basis of his pledge not to use it without consulting with our committee.

Perhaps Secretary Benson could have avoided this legislation if he had been willing to come before my committee for the hearings I requested. Perhaps now, if he is anxious to retain his authority, he will find time to come.

I ask unanimous consent that a resolution adopted at a meeting of region IV at Toledo, Ohio, on September 17, 1957, may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the resolution will be received and printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2990) to amend Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Government Operations.

The resolution, presented by Mr. HUMPHREY, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

REORGANIZATION OF REA

Whereas the original REA Act of 1936 provided for strictly nonpartisan administration of REA and provided for the appointment of an Administrator by the President, with confirmation by the Senate for a 10-year term to insure nonpartisan, nonpolitical administration; and

Whereas Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson pledged himself to a Congressional committee to make no changes in REA without first consulting the proper Congressional committees and other interested groups; and

Whereas in June 1957 the Secretary did reorganize REA by requiring that all loans of $500,000 or more be reviewed by persons outside REA: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we are vigorously opposed to any reorganization of REA; we are absolutely opposed to this recent action by Secretary Benson which threatens to make REA a partisan political agency; and be it further

Resolved, That as soon as the Congress reconvenes in January that a bill be introduced and passed exempting REA from the Reorganization Act of 1953 and that this same bill stipulate that REA is to be reestablished as it was prior to the passage of the Reorganization Act.

SMALL BUSINESS RESEARCH AND REDEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1958

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to expand the opportunities of small businesses to participate in and to derive the benefits from research and development.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 2993) to expand the opportunities of small businesses to participate in and to derive the benefits from research and development, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with the bill there be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement explaining the bill. The purpose of the bill is to expand the opportunities of small business to participate in and to derive the benefits from research and development.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FULBRIGHT

The growth and progress of industry and commerce in the United States has been, to a very considerable extent, the result of research and development. Research in the fields of electronics, chemistry, physics and other sciences has yielded principles which have been further developed and applied to reveal the new world we see around us. The patent system, the land-grant colleges and universities, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Bureau of Standards, the Naval Research Institute, and the National Science Foundation indicate the importance which the Federal Government has always placed upon the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men and the application of this knowledge to useful arts and sciences for the benefit of the Nation at large.

Basic and applied research and the development of useful applications of the principles which are discovered are going on at a remarkably high rate today. We can expect that the current research and development work will result in even greater changes in the world of tomorrow.

According to a survey made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for the National Science Foundation, on the research and development work performed in 1953, the total of this research and development work amounted to more than $5 billion during that year. Of this, programs financed by industry amounted to about $2.3 billion, and programs carried on or financed by the Federal Government amounted to almost $2 billion.

In its sixth report on Federal funds for science, the National Science Foundation estimated that the Federal research and development budget for fiscal 1958 would involve expenditures of $3.3 billion, and Business Week for September 21, 1957, estimated the total spending on research in 1957 at $10 billion.

Much of this research and development work will produce commercially valuable products and processes, which will benefit those concerns able to produce and sell them. Unfortunately for the free competitive enterprise system and in the long run for the national economy, a disproportionate share of the research and development is being done by large concerns, while the small concerns are able to do proportionately little research and development work. The National Science Foundation report on science and engineering in American industry in 1953 shows that only 8.3 percent of manufacturing companies with 8 to 99 employees engage in research and development and only 22.4 percent of manufacturing companies with 100 to 499 employees do so, while 94.3 percent of concerns with 5,000 or more employees carry on research and development. The same report shows that manufacturing concerns with less than 500 employees, which have about 35 percent of manufacturing employment, employ only 20 percent of the total scientists and engineers and account for only about 11 percent of the amount spent on research and development. Concerns with 5,000 or more employees, however, which have about 40 percent of manufacturing employment, employ more than 60 percent of the scientists and engineers and account for almost 75 percent of the research and development expenditures by industry.

The vast amounts spent by the Federal Government on research and development also go overwhelmingly to large firms. The Defense Department, which in 1956 accounted for $1.9 billion of the total Federal expenditure of $2.7 billion, reported only about 6 percent of its research and development contracts were with small business firms in fiscal 1956. The Atomic Energy Commission, which had the next largest research and development program, awarded only 1 percent of its research and development contracts to small business in fiscal 1953, 1954, and 1955.

The advantages to a concern performing this Government research are considerable. In addition to the assured profit on the contract itself, the concern will receive the inside track on substantial procurement contracts which may result from the research. It will also have advance knowledge and probably extra information about new commercial products which may be developed from the research. It will have built up a staff of scientific personnel familiar with the research and be in the best position to develop commercial applications. And in many cases it will be able to obtain patents, subject, in the case of research for the Department of Defense, only to a license to the Government, leaving commercial exploitation up to the concern. Under these conditions small business concerns must necessarily fall rapidly behind in the competitive race for new products and new processes.

In my judgment, three things can be done which will help to keep small business in the race and will thereby strengthen the free competitive enterprise system and the national economy.

In the first place, every effort should be made to see that small business concerns have a chance to obtain Government research and development contracts. I realize that this cannot be done in every case. In some instances only the large concern can do the research or may be interested in doing the research. Nevertheless, I believe that a vigorous effort should be made to award as many research and development contracts to small businesses as possible. This will be of direct benefit to the small business concerns and to the economy as a whole.

In the second place, every effort should be made to make available to small business concerns the benefits and results of all of the research and development work done by the Government or at Government expense. If the Goverment pays for research and pays a price which will yield the concern doing the research a profit, it would seem difficult to justify adding to that profit the right to all the commercial benefits of an invention derived from that research, paid for by the taxpayers, including small business concerns.

In the third place, I believe that arrangements should be made to enable small-business concerns to get together to carry on research and development programs, with an exemption from the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission Act. Research and development projects are often extremely expensive and the results do not always pay off at once in measurable profits. A single small-business concern may not have the financial resources to carry on over a period the kind of research and development work which would give it an equal opportunity to compete in a new fast-developing market with its giant competitor. However, a group of small-business concerns might each be able to devote a fraction of the cost of the research and development contracts and produce something which would benefit not only the small-business concerns involved but also the consuming public and the national economy.

This would not be inconsistent with the basic purposes of the antitrust laws and Federal Trade Commission Act. Rather, by increasing the opportunity of small-business concerns, it would promote and strengthen the free competitive enterprise system and the national economy as well.

In order to carry out these objectives, I have prepared a bill which will give to the Small Business Administration the duty and authority to pursue these three objectives in the interest of small businesses. Other Government agencies which have activities in this field will be called upon to cooperate with the Small Business Administration in pursuing these objectives.

This bill will not eliminate the need for other relief for small-business concerns, such as tax revisions and measures to provide access to credit. It will, however, serve to reduce substantially one of the handicaps under which small businesses now suffer, and to place them in a more nearly equal position with big businesses in the competitive race for the future. In my judgment, this will be a substantial benefit to the economy of the Nation.

PROBLEMS OF OLDER MEN AND WOMEN

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, among the problems of social welfare which require further attention and solution in our country, many—perhaps the majority—are problems affecting particularly our older men and women. Representative JOHN E. FOGARTY, of Rhode Island, who has been a leader in the Congress in all matters of social welfare and humanitarian concerns of our society, has proposed a very constructive step to accelerate our coming to grips with these problems of the aged in America. Representative FOGARTY has introduced in the House of Representatives a bill, H. R. 9822, which provides for the calling of a White House Conference on Aging patterned upon the recent White House Conference on problems of education. I consider it a privilege today to introduce in the Senate a companion bill to H. R. 9822, so that both Houses of Congress will have the opportunity at the same time to consider this worthwhile proposal.

Representative FOGARTY points out, and the findings in the first section of his bill declare, that older people face, to a far greater extent than is typical of the population as a whole, problems of health, housing, and financial costs of maintaining a decent standard of living. Beyond all this, there is a basic question of maintaining a constructive and meaningful role in today's society at an age when men and women are expected to retire from employment. This particular aspect of the problem, that of finding jobs after 40, has especially interested me as being one of the potential sources of real and unnecessary tragedy to many families. It should be one important topic to be taken up at the proposed White House Conference on Aging.

Representative FOGARTY's bill contemplates the holding of preliminary conferences in the several States prior to the convening of the national White House Conference, as was done in the field of education, in recognition of the very large responsibility which must rest on State and local authorities for the policies and services required to meet the needs of aging people.

I am pleased to announce that the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has kindly consented to be a cosponsor of this measure in the Senate.

To facilitate study of the bill by Senators, I ask unanimous consent to have the text of the bill printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2994) to provide for holding a White House Conference on Aging to be called by the President of the United States before December 31, 1958, to be planned and conducted by the special staff on aging of the United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare with the assistance and cooperation of other agencies of that Department and of other departments and agencies represented on the Federal Council on Aging; to assist the several States in conducting similar conferences on aging prior to the White House Conference on Aging; and for related purposes, introduced by Mr. NEUBERGER [for himself and Mr. KEFAUVER], was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "White House Conference on Aging Act."

TITLE I—NEED FOR LEGISLATION; DECLARATION OF POLICY; DEFINITIONS

Need for legislation

SEC. 101. The Congress hereby finds and declares that the public interest requires the enactment of legislation to formulate recommendations for immediate action in improving and developing programs to permit the country to take advantage of the experience and skills of the older persons in our population, to create conditions which will better enable them to meet their needs, and to further research on aging because—

(1) the number of persons 45 years of age and older in our population has increased from approximately 13½ million in 1900 to 49½ million in 1957, and the number 65 years of age and over from approximately 3 million in 1900 to almost 15 million at the present time, and is expected to reach 21 million by 1975; and

(2) outmoded practices in the employment and compulsory premature retirement of middle-aged and older persons are depriving the economy of their much needed experience, skill, and energy, and simultaneously, depriving many middle-aged and older persons of opportunity for gainful employment and an adequate standard of living; and

(3) many older persons do not have adequate financial resources to maintain themselves and their families as independent and self-respecting members of their communities, to obtain the medical and rehabilitation services required to permit them to function as healthy, useful members of society, and to permit them to enjoy the normal, human, social contacts; and

(4) our failure to provide adequate housing for elderly persons at costs which can be met by them is perpetuating slum conditions in many of our cities and smaller communities and is forcing many older persons to live under conditions in which they cannot maintain decency and health, or continue to participate in the organized life of the community; and

(5) the lack of suitable facilities and opportunities in which middle-aged persons can learn how to prepare for the later years of life, learn new vocational skills, and develop and pursue avocational and recreational interests is driving many of our older persons into retirement shock, premature physical and mental deterioration, and loneliness and isolation and is filling up our mental institutions and general hospitals and causing an unnecessary drain on our health manpower; and

(6) in order to prevent the additional years of life, given to us by our scientific development and abundant economy, from becoming a prolonged period of dying, we must step up research on the physical, psychological, and sociological factors in aging and in diseases common among middle-aged and older persons; and

(7) we may expect average length of life and the number of older people to increase still further, we must proceed with all possible speed to correct these conditions and to create a social, economic, and health climate which will permit our middle-aged and older people to continue to lead proud and independent lives which will restore and rehabilitate many of them to useful and dignified positions among their neighbors; which will enhance the vigor and vitality of the communities and of our total economy; and which will prevent further aggravation of their problems with resulting increased social, financial, and medical burdens.

Declaration of policy

SEC. 102. (a) While the primary responsibility for meeting the challenge and problems of aging is that of the States and communities, all levels of government are involved and must necessarily share responsibility; and it is therefore the policy of the Congress that the Federal Government shall work jointly with the States and their citizens, to develop recommendations and plans for action, consistent with subsection (b) of this section, which will serve the purposes of—

(1) assuring middle-aged and older persons equal opportunity with others to engage in gainful employment which they are capable of performing, thereby gaining for our economy the benefits of their skills, experience, and productive capacities; and

(2) enabling retired persons to enjoy incomes sufficient for health and for participation in family and community life as self-respecting citizens; and

(3) providing housing suited to the needs of older persons and at prices they can afford to pay; and

(4) assisting middle-aged and older persons to make the preparation, develop skills and interests, and find social contacts which will make the gift of added years of life a period of reward and satisfaction and avoid unnecessary social costs of premature deterioration and disability; and

(5) stepping up research designed to relieve old age of its burdens of sickness, mental breakdown, and social ostracism.

(b) It is further declared to be the policy of Congress that in all programs developed there should be emphasis upon the right and obligation of older persons to free choice and self-help in planning their own futures.

Definitions

SEC. 103. For the purposes of this act—

(1) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare;

(2) The term "Special Staff on Aging" means the coordinating and information service unit which operates within the Office of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare;

(3) The term "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and Guam.

TITLE II—WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON AGING

SEC. 201. (a) A White House Conference on Aging to be called by the President of the United States in order to develop recommendations for further research and action in the field of aging, which will further the policies set forth in section 102 of this act, shall be planned and conducted under the direction of the Special Staff on Aging which shall have the cooperation and assistance of such other units of that Department and of other Federal departments and agencies as may be appropriate.

(b) For the purpose of arriving at facts and recommendations concerning the utilization of skills, experience, and energies and the improvement of the conditions of our older people, the conference shall bring together representatives of Federal, State, and local governments, professional and lay people who are working in the field of aging, and of the general public including older persons themselves.

(c) A final report of the White House Conference on Aging shall be submitted to the President not later than 90 days following the date on which the conference was called and the findings and recommendations included therein shall be immediately made available to the public.

Grants

SEC. 202. (a) There is hereby authorized to be paid to each State which shall submit an application for funds for the exclusive use in planning and conducting a State conference on aging prior to and for the purpose of developing facts and recommendations and preparing a report of the findings for presentation to the White House Conference on Aging, and in defraying costs incident to the State's delegates attending the White House Conference on Aging, a sum to be determined by the Secretary, but not more than $50,000; such sums to be paid only from funds specifically appropriated for this purpose.

(b) Payments shall be made by the Secretary to an officer designated by the governor of the State to receive such payment and to assume responsibility for organizing and conducting the State conference.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Administration

SEC. 301. In administering this act, the Special Staff on Aging shall:

(1) Request the cooperation and assistance of such other agencies of that Department and of other Federal departments and agencies as may be appropriate in carrying out the provisions of the act;

(2) Render all reasonable assistance to the States in enabling them to organize and conduct conferences on aging prior to the White House Conference on Aging;

(3) Prepare and make available background materials for the use of delegates to the White House Conference as it may deem necessary and shall prepare and distribute such report or reports of the Conference as may be indicated; and

(4) In carrying out the provisions of this act, engage such additional personnel as may be necessary (without reference to the provisions of the Civil Service Act) within the amount of the funds appropriated for this purpose.

Advisory committees

SEC. 302. The Secretary is authorized and directed to establish an Advisory Committee to the White House Conference on Aging composed of professional and public members, and, as necessary, to establish technical advisory committees to advise and assist in planning and conducting the Conference. Appointed members of such committees, while attending conferences or meetings of their committees or otherwise serving at the request of the Secretary or Special Staff on Aging, shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary but not exceeding $50 per diem, including travel time, and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by law for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

TITLE IV—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 401. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as Congress determines to be necessary for the administration of this act.

AMENDMENT OF SERVICEMEN'S READJUSTMENT ACT OF 1944

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], I introduce for appropriate reference, a bill to extend for 1 year the GI home loan program and to make available additional funds for the direct lending program.

This is virtually the same bill passed overwhelmingly by both Houses of the Congress during the last session, but vetoed by the President on the ground that its enactment would be inflationary.

The passage of time has proved in the field of housing, as it has in other fields, that the Congress has had the foresight and the leadership so sadly lacking by the Executive. Nowhere is this more telling than on the question of the GI housing program.

I ask unanimous consent that there be incorporated at this point in the RECORD some remarks I made at the time of the Presidential veto, and a section-by-section analysis of the bill being introduced today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the remarks and section-by-section analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2995) to encourage new residential construction for veterans' housing in rural areas and small cities and towns by raising the maximum amount in which direct loans may be made from $10,000 to $13,500, to authorize advance financing commitments, to extend the direct loan program for veterans, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. SPARKMAN for himself and Mr. THURMOND, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The remarks and section-by-section analysis, presented by Mr. SPARKMAN, are as follows:

REMARKS BY SENATOR JOHN SPARKMAN AT THE TIME OF THE VETO OF H. R. 4602

The existing situation, characterized by high interest rates and a scarcity of mortgage money, has denied to many veterans the right to purchase a home. The bill which the Congress sent to the President would not only have provided more Federal money for direct loans to veterans but also would have extended the time during which veterans could have obtained both direct loans and guaranteed loans. By refusing to extend this date, we will find that a substantial number of veterans may no longer be able to avail themselves of either the VA guaranteed home-loan program or the direct home-loan program.

The administration's attempts to combat inflation have been confined almost solely to increasing interest rates. As the cost of borrowing money went up, more and more veterans found that they could not borrow money or that the house of their choice was too expensive. The President's action reflects a continuing disregard for human needs and a further attempt to protect the high profits brought about by the administration's tight-money policy. It is inconceivable that this bill would have created any additional inflationary pressures, particularly in an industry in which the productive capacity has fallen approximately 20 percent within the last year. The President's action in vetoing this bill will require the Congress to take further action on this same subject during the next session of Congress.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1: Amends section 512 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, by revising and extending the entire section in order to—

1. Define direct-loan areas as rural areas and small cities and towns not near large metropolitan areas. (Existing law does not contain geographical limitations.)

2. Make the interest rate on direct loans vary according to any changes in the interest rate on guaranteed loans. (Existing law contains a ceiling of 4½ percent interest rate on direct loans.)

3. Increase the maximum mortgage amount under the direct-loan program from $10,000 to $13,500.

4. Authorize the VA Administrator to reserve direct-loan funds for 3 months under commitments to builders for a 2-percent fee. Private lenders would receive the commitment fee, if such lenders purchase these loans within 60 days following VA disbursement. The VA would make construction advances up to an amount equal to cost of land, plus 80 percent of value of improvements.

5. Extend the direct-loan program by 1 year and 25 days to July 25, 1959.

6. Require VA to begin immediate processing of all direct-loan applications, such processing to run concurrently with a 20-day period allowed for Voluntary Home Mortgage Credit Program action.

Section 2: Amends section 513 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 to make available approximately $200 million for the direct-loan program until July 25, 1959 (the termination date proposed in sec. 1 of the bill).

Section 3 (technical): Amends section 513 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, relating to the date on which the VA guaranty of home loans made by supervised lenders become effective.

Section 4: Amends sections 500 and 507 (a) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 to extend the loan guaranty program by 1 year to July 25, 1959.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am vitally interested in any measure in behalf of the veterans of this country. We would not have a country if it were not for the veterans.

I am strongly in favor of the bill which has just been introduced by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], of which I am coauthor.

First, this is an emergency matter, in my view, and I urge the Committee on Banking and Currency to report the bill as promptly as possible, so that our veterans can obtain this very badly needed housing.

Second, by reason of the Chief Executive's veto of the bill in 1957, we have already lost the opportunity to construct 20,000 housing units for our veterans in small towns and rural areas, where the need for housing was amply demonstrated in the testimony taken last year.

Third, there is no need to hold further hearings on this matter. What was true when Congress passed the bill in the last session is still true, except more so.

Fourth and finally, Mr. President, I believe that the remarks which I made when the bill was considered last year have been amply borne out by subsequent events, and I ask unanimous consent to have those remarks printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY SENATOR THURMOND ON VETERANS' HOUSING AT 1957 SESSION

Mr. President, this amendment to the committee amendment is the first of a series of amendments which I intend to offer to H. R. 4602, for the purpose of extending the home loan guaranty program for World War II veterans for a period of 1 year from July 25, 1958, its present expiration date. The direct home loan program is extended for a like period by the other amendments. In the event my first amendment prevails, the other amendments to which I have referred should be adopted to effectuate the extensions.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a situation concerning our World War II veterans which now exists and which is becoming more aggravated each day. I refer to the inability of our World War II veterans to obtain loans for the purchase of homes, under the liberal downpayment and maturity provisions and at the 4½ percent interest rate now prescribed by the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944. As Senators are aware, under Public Law 898, 84th Congress, enacted August 1, 1956, the right of World War II veterans to use their home loan guaranty entitlements will expire on July 25, 1958.

In a hearing before my subcommittee on June 3, 1957, it was clearly indicated that there are many World War II veterans who intended to use their loan guaranty entitlements by July 25, 1958. Unfortunately, due to the tight money market, it has become quite clear that a large number of these veterans will not be able to use their entitlements by July 1958, and that the program will phase out more rapidly than was anticipated by the Congress.

One of the reasons for this situation is that the lenders have been charging unconscionable discounts to builders and sellers. I understand these discounts have been increasing during the past year, so that at present they range up to 9 and 10 points in some parts of the country. Under the law, these discounts cannot be passed along to the veteran, at least openly. However, the builders and sellers are reluctant to absorb the discounts, and commonsense tells us that it is the veteran home purchaser who ultimately suffers from this situation. Yet, without the discounts, the lenders refuse to make loans at 4½ percent.

That this has caused serious harm to the guaranty-loan program there can be no doubt. Very little loan activity exists today, although a large number of veterans were expected to exercise their loan-entitlement rights this year and through 1958. In fact, and in answer to a specific question propounded at the hearings of my subcommittee, it was stated by the Veterans' Administration that, as of January 1957, it expected from 850,000 to 900,000 World War II veterans to use their loan entitlements, or declare their intention to use them, by having applications filed by July 1058.

The VA's assumption was based on three premises:

First, that builders would, if construction and permanent mortgage money was available in reasonably plentiful supply, build at prices to meet the needs of the average-income veteran.

Second, that the demand for capital money by industry and others would have lessened by the middle or fall of this year and free funds for mortgage investment.

Third, that the funds from the amortization of principal or prepayment of loans and the payment in full of loans on the $100 billion outstanding mortgage debt as of December 1956, would represent a tidy sum of some $11½ billion or $12 billion for investment in new mortgages.

In connection with the last point, I have been informed by reliable sources that those institutions which invest primarily in mortgages may this fall be looking for mortgages if our present rate of housing starts declines and the general apathy of the buying public persists. I have heard reports that those veterans who now own homes, and have not used their entitlements and desire to purchase new homes, are either confronted with the inability to finance the sale of their old homes, particularly if the sale is to another veteran or are unable to finance the new homes with GI loans at 4½ percent. In the latter case, the builder or seller will refuse to pay the unconscionable discounts I previously mentioned.

There are many more facets to this mortgage-financing picture which have affected our World War II veterans. However, I am informed that the hard-money policy of the administration, which has been aired by my colleagues in the several committees and on the floors of both Houses of the Congress, has proved to be one of the deterrents to the use of guaranty entitlements by our veterans.

A review of the testimony of witnesses before the House Veterans' Affairs and the House Banking and Currency Committees advocating an increase in the GI interest rate to 5 percent shows that no assurances were given that the increase in the rate would assure plentiful money for GI loans. There was no indication that loans at 5 percent would be made at par. Discounts would prevail to a lesser degree, maybe, but it was, and now is, evident that discounts would still be in the picture. This is borne out by the marketing of FHA loans, which now bear 5 percent interest, but which are, nevertheless, selling at substantial discounts in most areas of the country.

We are told by the authorities in this field that there are some straws in the wind of an easing in the supply of mortgage funds. In addition, the provisions of the bill, H. R. 4602, which we are now considering, is bound to have some impact on the capital market. It is my view that we should observe the consequences of these actions and the trend in the supply of mortgage funds, rather than contribute to the interest rate spiral by rushing headlong into an increase in the GI loan rate. However, it would be manifestly unfair to World War II veterans to allow their loan entitlements to expire while we are awaiting the outcome of this situation.

Therefore, I am offering an amendment which will afford World War II veterans additional time within which to make use of their loan entitlements. This extension would allow the program to run until July 25, 1959, with an added year for processing. The direct-loan program would be extended for a like period, to take care of our veterans living in rural areas, when private capital is not available.

I do not want to belabor the point by discussing all of the economic problems resulting from lack of mortgage funds; but if we are to help the veterans who intended to use their GI entitlements by July 1958 and who currently and in the foreseeable future will be precluded from doing so, because of factors over which they have no control, a proposal such as this is no more than fair and equitable.

Finally, I point out that the loan-guaranty program is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and that every member of this committee has joined as a cosponsor of the amendment. Also a cosponsor is the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], who has been so greatly interested in housing, and who, over the years, has done work of particular excellence in connection with the veterans' housing program. The junior Senator from Alabama is the father of the program of direct loans to veterans. This program, in my judgment, is one of the most farsighted, beneficent programs ever provided by Congress. It fills a yawning gap in the overall mortgage situation by providing Government loans to veterans located in rural areas, which do not normally attract private capital.

TIMBER RIGHTS IN OREGON-CALIFORNIA LANDS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference, on behalf of the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER] and myself, a joint resolution to resolve a problem which the Department of the Interior says can be corrected only by legislation.

This proposal is designed to authorize the removal of a reservation of timber rights set forth in a patent issued to one Ivan H. McCormack pursuant to an act of August 23, 1935. We are offering the bill because we are satisfied that the timber reservation is of no value to the Federal Government. It stands as a cloud on the title, however, and in fairness and equity ought to be removed.

At this time I wish to make a few remarks which are pertinent and which I believe will help in making the legislative record.

By a special act passed in 1935 the Government conveyed title to about 120 acres of Oregon and California lands to a citizen of Oregon, reserving to the United States the rights to the timber on 80 of these acres. In return, this person conveyed to the Government another 120-acre tract which had been patented to him earlier from the Oregon and California grant lands. There was also contained in the 1935 act provision for a refund of $200 paid by this person for the lands he was conveying to the Government and the crediting of the balance, $100, to the purchase price of the lands being conveyed. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this act be included in my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the text of chapter 633, 74th Congress, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue to Ivan H. McCormack, of Alsea, Oreg., a patent for the northeast quarter southwest quarter and the north half southeast quarter section 31, township 14 south, range 8 west of the Willamette merdian, Oregon: Provided, That said McCormack shall reconvey to the United States the west half northeast quarter and the southeast quarter northeast quarter of said section 31: Provided further, That the patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of the timber on the northeast quarter southwest quarter and the northwest quarter southeast quarter of said section 31, which timber shall remain subject to sale, and the proceeds thereof shall be credited to the "Oregon and California land-grant fund" in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 218).

SEC. 2. That of $300 paid by McCormack prior to the issuance to him on April 12, 1927, of a patent for the west half northeast quarter and the southeast quarter northeast quarter of said section 31, $200 shall be repaid to him under the provisions of the act of March 26, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 48), and $100 shall be credited as payment on the purchase price of the northeast quarter southeast quarter of said section 31.

Approved, August 23, 1935.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in 1935 the Oregon and California lands were subject to sale. Thus, the transaction was in effect an exchange of lands and apparently in the interests of the Government and the person with whom it dealt.

An act of June 9, 1916—39th United States Statutes at Large, page 218—did contain certain restrictions on the sale of Oregon and California lands. For example, when there was over 300,000 board-feet of timber on a 40-acre subdivision the land was put in class 2—timberlands. These lands could not be sold until the merchantable timber was first removed by the Government. Then they became class 3 lands that were subject to disposal by sale. I add, parenthetically, that class 1 lands were reserved to the Government as power sites.

In effect, therefore, the law required the sale of timber separately from the land.

In the case of the special act of 1935 the exchange was made in conformance with the then existing law and since the exchange involved a request to grant lands then partly covered with timber, it was reserved.

Subsequently the Department removed the timber from the land. However, it now takes the position that the timber reservation still exists. It seems to me that this conclusion involves a debatable construction of the law. I think it can be argued persuasively that the reservation ran only to the timber then on the land. Obviously, if the owner of the surface in this case chose to farm it or put it in orchards, no timber would ever be grown again. In another case timber might again be grown by the landowner. In still a third case the land might be farmed or pastured for 40 years and then revert to timber either through planting or nature. It might even be planted to trees under the farm program. I do not believe that in these hypothetical cases the Government would have any claim to timber subsequently grown on the land. It is also pertinent to remember that the Government in this case not only granted lands but received an equal acreage. No collateral timber reservations were made.

Thus, while I do not wholly concur in the position taken by the Department, I think that the Congress must act on the matter.

I do not know how many special acts of this nature were passed in bygone years, but I would be hopeful that the legislative record would make it clear that if any other timber reservations such as this exist, they expired when the timber then on the land was cut.

I do not believe it has been the general policy of the Government in this sort of case to reserve timber rights beyond those applying to the timber then on the land. To do otherwise would in effect deny beneficial use of the land and the benefit of title to the private person.

In my judgment the Congress has too many pressing problems before it to expect it to consider numerous problems of this type. We should be able to expect that the departments of our Government could apply equitable remedies and not burden us with so much special legislation. To that end I hope that the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs will announce a general policy in this matter so that we will not have to lift each reservation of this type by passing separate special acts.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the proposed legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the point resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) to provide for the removal of a reservation of timber rights from a patent issued to Ivan H. McCormack, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself and Mr. NEUBERGER), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the act of August 23, 1935, authorized the conveyance of certain land in Oregon to Ivan H. McCormack; and

Whereas the patent conveying such land contained a reservation to the United States of the timber on such land; and

Whereas a field inspection by the Department of the Interior has revealed that no merchantable timber remains on such land: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Ivan H. McCormack," approved August 23, 1935 (49 Stat. 2163), is amended by striking out ": Provided further, That the patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of the timber on the northeast quarter southwest quarter and the northwest quarter southeast quarter of said section 31, which timber shall remain subject to sale, and the proceeds thereof shall be credited to the Oregon and California land-grant fund, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 218)."

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall execute and deliver to Clarence A. Sapp and Pearl E. Sapp, of Pilomath, Oreg., an appropriate written instrument which will effect with respect to the land conveyed under such act the amendment made by the first section of this act.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF HEARINGS BY THE FEDERAL PAY SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I have a very brief announcement to make at this time. I desire to announce that the Federal Pay Subcommittee, of the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, will meet at 10 o'clock on January 15, to consider amendments to the two bills presently on the Senate calendar; I refer to the bills which deal with upward revision of postal pay and upward revision of the pay of the classified workers of the Government.

Today, many persons throughout this country, if not nearly all the citizens of the United States, are concerned over the quality and caliber of the people who serve our Federal Government during one of the great crises and emergencies of American history. I firmly believe that we cannot expect people of education, talent, idealism, and high caliber generally to serve the United States Government if the levels of pay furnished them by that Government are not commensurate with the talents and skills which these people have to offer. This is elemental logic and justice. Therefore, our subcommittee, one of whose members is the present distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. PROXMIRE], will meet on Wednesday of this week, to consider amendments to the bills presently on the Senate calendar, in the hope that we can perfect and improve them and then have them before the full Senate at a very early hour. This is our goal.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF SERVICE IN THE SENATE OF SENATOR RICHARD B. RUSSELL

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, it is my happy privilege to call the attention of the Members of this body to the fact that on yesterday my distinguished senior colleague, Senator RICHARD B. RUSSELL, completed 25 years of service in the United States Senate.

Perhaps no man in the history of the Senate has made a greater contribution to all phases of the Nation's life than has Senator RUSSELL.

Certainly no Senator has ever done more to enhance the position and prestige of the Senate than he.

He has been steadfast in championing orderly procedure in the Senate.

He has been diligent in defending the Senate's role as the protector of the liberties of the American people.

He has been vigorous in upholding the principles of constitutional government.

He has been in the forefront of those who have labored to perfect an adequate establishment in times of both war and peace.

He has been outspoken in his efforts to secure for the farmers of America their proportionate share of the national income.

He has been indefatigable in his support of all programs to provide a better life for Americans today and a better America for the citizens of tomorrow.

He has pursued his tireless and unselfish course of service to his fellow man with quiet dignity and unassuming modesty. The fame which has rightly and deservedly come to him has sought him and not he it.

It has been said that he is a "Senator's Senator." With that I agree, and add he is also an "American's Senator."

Georgians are proud of Senator RUSSELL, and are proud that the rest of the Nation shares their pride.

Georgians remember him as a great governor.

Georgians love him as a great Senator.

Georgians cherish him as the personification of their beliefs and aspirations.

It is out of a great depth of affection and with boundless personal admiration that I speak for our fellow Georgians in saying to him on the occasion of his entering his second quarter century of service to his State and Nation in the Senate:

"Thank you, Senator RUSSELL, for all you have done, and Godspeed in all you are destined to do."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Georgia has very appropriately and properly invited the attention of the Senate to an anniversary of very great importance. To one of the most highly respected Members of our body today's session will recall many fond memories.

This is a fortunate country when it can produce men like RICHARD B. RUSSELL, of Georgia. I know of no man with a finer mind, no better parliamentarian, and no man who has a heart and soul more dedicated to the service of his country. RICHARD RUSSELL is a quiet man and a gentleman. He is not given, Mr. President, to harsh judgments or to hasty conclusions, but he is a tower of strength, and when it comes to preserving the institutions of this country DICK RUSSELL has a soul of marble.

Georgia is a State which has contributed many great men to the service of the United States. It is a State in which public service is a long and honorable tradition, handed down from father to son. But when the final chapter is written there will be no name in the book which will stand above that of this great statesman, DICK RUSSELL.

He has been my friend and he has been the friend, I think, of almost every Member of this body. Even more important, Mr. President, DICK RUSSELL is the friend of American ideals, and on this important anniversary we wish him well, and trust that there may be many happy returns to this gentleman, this legislator, this statesman of whom the Senate is so proud.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I would not wish this opportunity to pass without joining with my colleague, the majority leader, and others in paying tribute to Senator DICK RUSSELL on the 25th anniversary of his service as a Senator.

It was my privilege some years ago to serve on the Committee on Armed Services under his chairmanship. I have had a long and close association with him as a member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which is now so ably presided over by our President pro tempore, the present occupant of the chair.

I know of no Member of the Senate who is more devoted to his duties as the representative of a great State, or more interested in the problems which arise in the committee of which he is chairman, as well as upon other committees on which he serves, than our colleague the senior Senator from Georgia.

I fervently hope that for many years into the future Senator RICHARD RUSSELL will continue to render to the people of his State and the people of his Nation the great service which he has rendered in the past, not only as a Member of this body, but as Governor of his own State.

I know that I speak for all the Members on this side of the aisle when I say that, without regard to partisanship, we have a deep appreciation of his outstanding public service.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, I would not want this opportunity to pass without joining my colleagues in paying tribute to a great American and a great Member of this body, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

It has been a source of great gratification to me, during the brief period I have served in this body, to be able to call DICK RUSSELL a friend, and be considered a friend of his.

Like the other Members of this body, I hope that his service will continue for many years to come, because it is of great and lasting benefit to this country, as well as to the people of his own State.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I wish to pay tribute to our distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], to whom reference has been made by the distinguished majority leader.

This is now the beginning of my 10th year of service in this body. No Member of the Senate has made a greater contribution, from the standpoint of the example he has afforded, the high ideals for which he has fought, and the statesmanlike record he has made, than the distinguished Senator from Georgia. He has been a great inspiration and a help to me, and I am happy to pay tribute to him, and to express the hope that this country may continue to have the benefit of his wise counsel, his noble ideas, and his courageous heart.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the senior Senator from Georgia on the observance of the 25th anniversary of his service in the Senate.

The senior Senator from Georgia is an intelligent, wise, and well-versed man. What has greatly impressed me about him is that he always takes the time to advise with and to give his less well-informed colleagues the benefit of his knowledge and experience.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues, the majority leader, the minority leader, and others, in complimenting my good friend, RICHARD B. RUSSELL, for his quarter of a century service in the Senate of the United States, and for the excellent work he has done in preserving the American system of constitutional government.

He is a fighter, understands the working rules of the Senate, and I can wish for nothing of more value to the United States of America than another quarter of a century of service in this august body for my friend and colleague DICK RUSSELL.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues who have been paying tribute to the services of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

I have been a delegate to every Democratic National Convention since 1924, every 4 years. Every time I attend one of those conventions I am told that "the Democrats cannot elect a candidate from below the Mason and Dixon line."

Let me say to the Senate and to the world that we could elect DICK RUSSELL President of the United States if we were only given the opportunity; and, believe me, there would be no apologies whatsoever necessary when he was through with the Presidency.

I am so "sold" on his sincerity of purpose, his patriotism, and his Americanism, that I would be willing to vote for him, just as I would vote for any other Democrat who might be nominated.

I know that there are good men in Texas, in Georgia, in Arizona, and all over the United States. The question I wish to ask is: Are we a United States of America, or a United States of North-of-the-Mason-Dixon line?

I congratulate the senior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am happy to identify myself with the experssions of the leadership on both sides of the aisle and other Senators who have spoken in tribute to the distinguished Senator from Georgia [DICK RUSSELL], and his 25 years of service in the Senate. I have been a Member of the Senate 14 years, and during all those 14 years I have had the great privilege of working with DICK RUSSELL and of getting to know him. I have served with him on special assignments. In that connection I recall particularly his able handling and the leadership he gave all of us in the famous General MacArthur hearings a few years ago, when both the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Armed Services sat jointly to consider the whole problem involving General MacArthur.

I have been very close to DICK RUSSELL on other assignments. We were especially close together in our affection for the late Walter George, from his State. I had the privilege of traveling with DICK RUSSELL to the funeral of Walter George last year and meeting, with him, some of the wonderful people of Georgia at that time.

Mr. President, I wish to express my deep affection for DICK RUSSELL, and I hope that he will remain in the Senate for many years, continuing his outstanding service.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I desire to add my word of appreciation to the many expressions of Senators congratulating our distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. My acquaintance with him has not been for a very long time. However, I was acquainted with his father 20 years ago, when his father and I were delegates to the American Law Institute in Washington. The Senator's father, the distinguished Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia, made great contributions which were of great assistance in the formulation of the basic policies of that great institution.

Even before that, my family was acquainted with the Russell family. Many of Senator RUSSELL's cousins and other relatives live in Texas. Some of them are in the educational field, some serving in the capacity of superintendents of schools.

When I was a boy I used to hear about Gordon Russell, who was United States district judge for the eastern district of Texas. He served as county judge of Van Zandt County, and the county line ran within 1 mile of my home.

My father knew Judge Gordon Russell well, and it was he who induced my father to send me to law school. Gordon Russell served in the 57th and succeeding Congresses. Therefore, our acquaintance in Texas with the Russell family goes back a good many years.

For all of the reasons I have stated I wish to express my appreciation to Senator RUSSELL and to his family, and to several generations of them.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, I too wish to join in the tributes that are being paid to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia. I have not served with him in the Senate for a very great length of time, but I am thoroughly familiar with his keen knowledge of our problems both domestic and international.

If the farmers ever had a friend in the Congress of the United States, particularly in the Senate, it is DICK RUSSELL. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture, he has always brought the appropriation to the floor of the Senate with one thought in mind, and that is the improvement of the farmer's position in our American economy.

I have said on several occasions that the United States Senate and the country is fortunate to have the benefit of DICK RUSSELL's keen insight to the needs of our Nation. His integrity, his character and his sincerity are unquestioned.

I therefore wish to express my appreciation for his splendid service and hope that it will be continued for years to come.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I rather like the idea of eulogizing a colleague in the Senate while he is still with us, instead of waiting until after he is gone or until he decides to retire.

I certainly wish to join in the felicitations which are being extended to Senator RUSSELL on the occasion of his silver anniversary as a Member of the United States Senate. He is a man of a silvery tongue who has a heart of gold, and it is therefore fitting to extend congratulations on his silver anniversary.

DICK RUSSELL serves as chairman of an agricultural subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member. I have had an intimate opportunity to observe his steadfast battle in the interest of the American farmer.

However, above and beyond that, I have watched him for almost 10 years in the Senate battling for American ideals and constitutional concepts.

DICK RUSSELL is a man against whom I have been arrayed on occasion. That has happened in certain debates on the floor. I have found him to be a hard-hitting adversary, but always a fair opponent.

I am always happier when I am on his side. He is always a tower of strength, and it is a pleasant experience to be fighting with him.

In line with the suggestion made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], a few years ago some friends in the South entered DICK RUSSELL's name in the Democratic presidential primary. For what reason I will never know, some of his friends came to me and asked me if I would be willing to write a little piece in behalf of DICK RUSSELL. I knew that it was not his silver anniversary, and I asked them what the occasion was. They said, "DICK RUSSELL will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President. What do you think of his presidential possibilities?"

I then did something that I had never done before in my life—although I do not say that I would not do it again—and I wrote a statement in which I said that DICK RUSSELL would make a great President of the United States.

I believe then, as I believe now, that he would make a great President of the United States, and I listed the reasons why I thought so; and even though I am a Republican, I felt I could appropriately serve in a body of Congress with DICK RUSSELL as President.

Unfortunately, the Democrats did not nominate DICK RUSSELL. Perhaps the Senator from New Mexico can settle that matter at the next convention. Happily, Mr. President, a Republican was elected President in that year, and we were saved anyhow. [Laughter.]

It is unfortunate, indeed, that a dividing line, which should have been forgotten long ago, should deny men in the South of the caliber of RICHARD RUSSELL an opportunity, which should be theirs, to run for President.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, one of the greatest experiences of my service in the Senate, as it has also been of other Senators, has been the privilege of associating with the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. He has been an inspiration to many of us in the Senate. During our service here he has always been a model of senatorial conduct. This Nation has benefited in great measure because men like Senator RUSSELL have served in the Senate. A great many of us have had occasion to serve with him through the years; also, we have had the opportunity to judge him as a man, and to appreciate the wisdom of his statesmanship.

Speaking as one Senator, I can say that there have been many occasions when, to my personal knowledge, my vote has been influenced by his eloquence on the floor and by the wisdom with which he spoke. I have never yet had occasion to regret such a decision.

It has been a wonderful opportunity, and a great honor, to have the privilege of seeing him serve here. I join with my colleagues in congratulating him upon his 25 years of service.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I, too, wish to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I was an admirer of Senator RUSSELL before I came to the Senate 12 years ago. While serving as the Governor of my State, I was privileged to learn of the record of the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Being vitally interested in agriculture, I had always admired the stand which the distinguished Senator from Georgia had taken on agricultural questions. During my service in the Senate, I have been privileged to serve for a number of years on the Committee on Appropriations, and there I have experienced directly the impact of the able and fair manner in which the Senator from Georgia acts as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture Appropriations. I have admired his ability, his fairness, and his judicial as well as legislative ability.

It is a pleasure for me to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the man on this, the silver anniversary of his service in the United States Senate.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, I join with my many other colleagues on both sides of the aisle in paying tribute to Senator DICK RUSSELL, of Georgia, on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of his entrance into the Senate.

It seems to me that this Senator, a great son of a great father, has brought to the Senate, as the Senate has been fortunate to receive throughout its history, the background, experience, character, and talents which not only richly reward the Senate, but help to make it the outstanding legislative body of the world, because men like DICK RUSSELL have chosen to serve here and have stayed on the job.

Usually we think of DICK RUSSELL in connection with the spectacular achievements, accomplishments, and decisions which have been made in the past. We think of him in connection with the multibillion dollar defense activities of our country, which, through World War II and the post-World War II period, and now in our time of emergency, have found DICK RUSSELL with his firm hand on the helm, steering us through the troubled waters, but bringing commonsense and good judgment to our great military activities.

I, too, like to think of those great achievements; but more particularly I like to think of his great service in trying to preserve the family-sized farm. He has afforded great leadership in the matter of restoring the family-sized farm to its rightful position in the national scheme of things.

I like to think of DICK RUSSELL as having turned the tide against the erosion of our topsoil. I like to think of his pioneering and the vigorous fight he has always made to insure that soil conservation funds shall be forthcoming in order to save the most precious resource of all, the topsoil of our land.

As we fly over the country today and observe from a small airplane the ground which is below us, we know that DICK RUSSELL's hand has been at work to provide the sinews for the battle against land devastation through erosion.

I like to think of him as a great believer in helping not only the water resource development by means of the huge dams for hydroelectric power and flood control, but also as being one of the first men who assisted in providing upstream flood control, extending up the tributaries and the small creeks. The value of such flood control has been not only to eliminate the disaster of great floods but also to lengthen the life of our huge dams.

DICK RUSSELL is the friend of every Senator. He is the helper of anyone who has problems, when he knows those problems exist. We are all better for having DICK RUSSELL as a colleague in the United States Senate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I would be derelict in my duty if I did not at this time join with my colleagues in expressing the high regard I feel for Senator RUSSELL, of Georgia, at the beginning of his 26th year of service in the Senate of the United States.

As so many other Senators have pointed out, no one has been more interested in the welfare of our agricultural economy than has the senior Senator from Georgia. No one has been more interested in making certain that we have a good, sound, solid defense structure down through the years than has the senior Senator from Georgia. He is a man who has understanding in his outlook. He has been wise in his counsel and good in his advice to many of us who have had need of his services from time to time.

I express the hope that DICK RUSSELL will be with us for another 25 years, at least, because the contributions he has made to the welfare of his country and the Free World will be long remembered. He is the epitome of what many of us in this body would like to be.

Mr. MCNAMARA. Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to congratulate Senator RUSSELL on the 25th anniversary of his service in this body. I can add very little to what has been said regarding his service, in appreciation for the help he has given us as individuals, and for the contributions he has made to the United States generally.

I have been a Member of the Senate but a short time, but during that time I have learned to respect and appreciate the counsel which Senator RUSSELL has given to me on occasion, and to recognize the gentleman that he is, even in bitter debate on opposite sides of questions.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I should like to join the Members of the Senate who today on the floor of the Senate have paid tribute to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of his service in this body.

I particularly wish to associate myself with the remarks which have been made by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA]. The Senator from Michigan called attention to the characteristic courtesy and kindness which Senator RUSSELL always shows to new Members of the Senate, who, upon their arrival here, are inexperienced and untried and unfamiliar with the routine and with many aspects of senatorial tasks.

As Senator MCNAMARA has, I have always found Senator RUSSELL patient and kind. I came to the Senate at the same time when Senator MCNAMARA did, approximately 3 years ago. Therefore, he and I are what often are called junior Members of the Senate. I feel that Senator RUSSELL has been of much assistance and great cooperation to those of us who have a great deal to learn in this Chamber. I wish to join in congratulating and thanking him for that assistance and kindness. It is deeply appreciated by us, and we desire Senator RUSSELL to be aware of that fact on this eventful occasion.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Senator RUSSELL has served in this body for a quarter of a century, and he has served ably, faithfully, and well.

I knew Senator RUSSELL when I was Governor of South Carolina, and also prior to that time. He is held in high esteem by the people of my State.

In the fall of 1957, I was invited to attend the homecoming celebration for the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, held in his home city of Winder, Ga. One did not have to be there very long to observe the high esteem and respect and admiration of the people of his home city and of his home State of Georgia for him.

Senator RUSSELL has been a leader in agriculture in this Nation. The farmers all over this country have looked to him for guidance, for advice, and for counsel and help. He has served as, and has been a tower of strength as, chairman of the Armed Services Committee of the Senate. Nothing is more important to this Nation and to its survival than the national defense. Senator RUSSELL's wise counsel and advice have been of great help to the Nation in time of war and in time of peace. I do not know of any man who would have served more ably than has he in this important position, which means so much to our country.

On other occasions I have said that Senator RUSSELL is a great patriot, a great American, and would make a great President of this country. At this time I am pleased to pay tribute to this fine citizen, this great Senator, and this great American.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, RICHARD BREVARD RUSSELL is 1 of 13 children born to a brilliant father and a brilliant, charming, and beautiful mother. A quarter of a century in this body, Mr. President, is a landmark of achievement for any person. It is particularly so for the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], because his achievement of that mark has been characterized by a quality of service from which not only his State but the entire United States and the welfare of the world have benefited.

References have been made to his service to the farmer, to his service to the defense of the country, to his service to the Senate, and to his colleagues. I concur in the sentiments expressed in all those regards and others.

However, Mr. President, in addition to the quality of the service he has rendered, the quality of the man appeals to me. Patient and tolerant, able and determined, cautious but bold, Senator RUSSELL has been a leader among men in a body in which membership is difficult of attainment. The pleasure of the personal association which I have enjoyed with this distinguished Senator is something which I will always cherish.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is with personal pleasure and official pride that I extend my felicitations and congratulations to Senator RICHARD RUSSELL upon the attainment of the 25th anniversary of his service as a United States Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article entitled "Cheaper by the Baker's Dozen," which was published in Collier's magazine on September 2, 1950. The article is about the mother of Senator RUSSELL and his distinguished brothers and sisters.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHEAPER BY THE BAKER'S DOZEN

(By James C. Derieux)

Ina Dillard Russell, the youngest of 13 children and herself the mother of 13, is a frail little lady of 82 who must spend most of her time in bed. But her mind is merry, her heart gay, and the colors of her sunset are as bright as the flowers she loves. All her children are grown now, and doing well. There no longer is need for her to make the rounds on blustery nights to be sure they are covered; no need to sew by the light of an oil lamp until past midnight to stay abreast of their needs for rompers and blouses and shirts and skirts and underthings. The day when seven of them had whooping cough at the same time is far away and long ago, remembered only as one of the inevitable adventures and one of the victories along the road of family life.

Last May 11 the town of Winder, Ga., near which Mrs. Russell lives, declared a holiday in her honor. Twelve of her children (all but the Army officer, who was on foreign duty), most of her 33 grandchildren, several of her 7 great-grandchildren, uncensused nephews, nieces, cousins, HERMAN TALMADGE, the Governor of her State, and thousands of others, were on hand to celebrate the choice of this great woman as Georgia's Mother of the Year. It was a wonderful day of speeches, receptions, a parade with floats representing the careers of her sons, and handsome presents of silver. When the day was over, she still was smiling as her anxious children stood around and urged her to rest.

"I'm rested," she said. "I'm having a wonderful time. I did not know my neighbors cared for me like this. I never was able to do anything much for them, except maybe take care of them when they needed me. I had to give so much time to my own children that I never could do all I wanted to do for others. But I have loved them, and it is so good to know that they love me."

The children, to whom she gave so much of her time before her health broke, have rewarded her efforts and her faith.

Her oldest son, RICHARD BREVARD RUSSELL, named for her father, is now in the United States Senate. Before that he had been Georgia's youngest Governor. Her second son, Robert, is a justice of the United States Court of Appeals, which is next highest to the Supreme Court. Walter is a major in the United States Army. William is a farmer and manager of the old home place. Fielding is head of the English department at the Georgia Teachers College, Statesboro. (William and Fielding are twins.) Edward is pastor of the Trinity Presbyterian Church in Montgomery, Ala.; and Alex is a doctor with a general practice in and around Winder, a small county seat between Athens and Atlanta.

The six daughters all have had a turn at schoolteaching. Mary is Mrs. S. Gordon Green, of Alexandria, Va., whose husband is an inventor and small-arms expert employed by the United States Department of Defense; Ina, an attorney, is Mrs. J. K. Stacy, of Washington, D. C., whose husband is an official of Colonial Airlines; Marguerite is Mrs. James H. Bowden, of Atlanta, wife of an officer in the Federal Reserve bank there; Harriet is Mrs. S. Ralph Sharpton, of Falls Church, Va., whose husband is with the Maritime Administration; Patience is Mrs. Hugh Peterson, of Ailey, Ga., and Washington, D. C., whose husband was for 12 years a Member of the Congress and is now in private practice as an attorney; and Carolyn, the youngest of the 13, is Mrs. Raymond L. Nelson, wife of the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Stuttgart, Ark.

The Senator, his brother William and William's capable wife, live at the Russell home, a big white house amidst a grove of pecans, mimosas and numerous flowering shrubs. Robert and Alex live within a few hundred yards in handsome homes of their own. Grandson Bob and his family live in "Newlywed Cottage" on the home place, where a number of other young couples in the family have lived while getting underway. All the children, wherever they may be, come home whenever they can to be with the great lady who made the family what it is. She is never lonely. Evenings, now if there is no special family gathering, she enjoys television, including the wrestling matches. "I don't approve of wrestlers," she says. "They seem to be so rough. But I will look at them."

The father of this notable family, Richard Brevard Russell, was himself a distinguished man, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia at the time of his death in 1938. But for many years he served on lower benches, and at much less pay than the $7,000 a year he drew in his final years. His family did most of its growing up while he was drawing three or four thousand a year. For a time, when seven of his children were in college, he left the bench, practiced law privately until he paid his debts, then went back to his robes.

The old judge took little part in the details of rearing his family. His wife was the genius in that field. Usually she had a cook to help, but not always. For a stretch of time she prepared all the meals herself in order to save money and apply it to the building of what is now the family homestead. The judge ordered groceries at wholesale in Atlanta for his own family and for other families living on his cotton farm. His wife kept the accounts, and the old daybook shows some interesting notations. For example, it discloses that in the spring of 1912 she personally made 184 garments. Another spring she began to count the buttonholes, but gave up at 190 when something happened to divert her attention.

Through these busy years of sewing, cleaning, cooking, managing, she occasionally found time to hold school classes in her own home. Robert and several of the other children got their primary-school training from their mother.

On Sunday afternoons she played the piano as her family gathered around and sang hymns. Every child had to know the shorter catechism and at the Sunday gatherings each one was called on to recite verses from the Bible. Both the mother and the old judge were generous in praise, and as generous as they could be in other rewards for the children who did best.

Today Senator RUSSELL remembers that, as a child, he did not know mothers had to sleep. His own was up and busy when he went to bed and again when he awoke in the morning. If he became cold in the night, she covered him. If he was sick, she was beside him. "I was nearly 10 years old," he says, "before I saw her asleep. I still recall how shocked I was."

All through the growing-up years Mrs. Russell wrote frequently to children who were away at school, or at work; and many of these letters have been treasured and kept. They are good, long reports on events around the home, with nice touches that doubtless stirred nostalgic memories, or stimulated determination. To a child who was wavering about something she wrote: "We can stand a great deal in this world and stand it well if we have enough grit in our gizzards. You must decide for yourself."

And to one of her sons who had gone away for the first time: "How I do want to see you, but how proud I am that you are sticking it out and not coming home."

To a daughter: "As you know, in growing flowers I never have hothouse plants. I love the kind that can stand anything that comes along. And I love to think of my '13 varieties' growing and thriving and sending out fragrance, beautifying the world * * *.

She thought of her family as a cooperating unit. Many of her letters began: "I have a plan to lay before you," or "What do you think of this?"

In her efforts to have each child develop according to his own gifts and desires, she avoided giving specific directions, but there were many broad hints and principles, such as:

"Take good care of your little sister, but don't worry her with too much watching. * * * My child, cultivate a sweet disposition and practice kindness and gentleness in all things. If you do, you will give genuine pleasure to all you are thrown with. Study and be smart, too. * * * Do your part. * * * Just make others happy and you will be happy. * * * Make people love you. * * * I must say goodby now and make the fires for it is getting cold. * * * I am constantly thinking of my darling children. * * * You have been a fortunate girl, born with a good little body, a fair amount of good looks and a bright mind. Also you found a fond father and a loving mother awaiting you. You young people can't realize how much you are loved. * * * You must have a place to fill or you would not have been sent into this world. * * * Now don't say 'poor Mama' to me. I do have such a good time. * * *"

To a daughter who had written home that she was blue: "And how much exercise on the hoof do you take per day? Walk, walk. There is nothing like it. And your complexion will stay good and you will not be so fat either, when you grow older. Drink, drink water. * * *"

And to one who had said she was so tired of being poor: "Oh, my child, that hurts me. You are not poor, unless it is in your soul and heart. * * *"

As the children grew up and had children of their own, Mrs. Russell continued to write to them, her letters characterized by the same affirmative attitude toward life. Whenever word came of a new grandchild, she responded with as much enthusiasm as if there had been none before. "We are overjoyed," she wrote Mrs. Bowden when a son was born. "We are thrilled. * * * You should have seen Doscia (the cook) when I told her. She picked up a chair and went running around the dining-room table, said she had to hug somebody and as I was seated she hugged my head and I hugged her legs. Daddy was so happy, and Rob and Sybil (Rob's wife), Carolyn and Dick. * * * It's a great privilege we women have to bring forth human beings. I'm proud and thankful for all of mine."

Notwithstanding all the children, the innumerable visitors, the difficulties of living in a house without central heat, where many fires had to be made every winter day, and where all cooking was done on a wood-burning stove, life in the Russell home was orderly. Every older child was responsible for a younger one. The three oldest were girls, and to this day they point with pride to one brother or another, and say, "You know, he's my boy. I raised him."

IN A SPIRIT OF HELPFULNESS

As older sisters or brothers finished college and began working, they sent money home to younger members of the family to help them along with their schooling. All but one have college degrees. Household tasks were passed down the line, too; the milking from Dick to Bob to Walter and so on to Alex, who was stuck with it because there was no boy younger than he.

Mother Russell set the example for her children by her own strict attention even to the little proprieties. No sloppy—or casual—dressing was allowed at breakfast, or at any meal. Even when she did her own cooking she "fixed up" before coming to the table. The children were required to be punctual, or lose out on whatever was taking place. When, in their reading, they came to words they did not understand, she insisted they make notes of them and look them up before the day was done.

"I made them mind, too," says Mother Russell. "I had to. My goodness, how could I raise 13 if they didn't mind."

In the course of their schooling several of the children lived with relatives in the places where their schools were located, but each time Mrs. Russell sent one off to a sister or an aunt, she told her to "send him back the first time he disobeys."

Judge Russell commuted by train to Atlanta, about 50 miles away, much of the time he was on the bench, and always on the afternoons that he was coming home, whether on the vestibule to Winder or the local to his own flag stop of Russell, the children were bathed and freshly dressed to greet him. He was the honored member of the family. He sat on his wife's right at meals. He always made a nice talk at the table whenever the family was celebrating a birthday; and every year he stood before the Christmas tree and spoke of the meaning of the holiday before distributing the gifts.

Mrs. Russell did not hold back from switching her boys when she thought they needed it. William teases her now by relating that they had plenty of blackberries but no peaches when he was a child because of his mother's demand for peach twigs. But she had other disciplinary methods. A child might be required to sit utterly still and quiet in the clothes closet for half an hour or an hour, depending on the gravity of the crime. Once she taught Fielding, her teacher son, a lesson when he left his tricycle in the hall near the backdoor. She said nothing about it until dark, but neither did she move it. Then without making a light she told Fielding to go close that door. He started, but fell whammy over his own tricycle.

The Senator, when a small boy, was exceedingly fond of sausage, and often said he never did get enough. After a number of such comments, his mother asked him how much sausage would be enough, and he said he wanted a pound all to himself at one meal. At the next meal he was given a pound and directed to eat all of it. About halfway through he began to weaken, but his mother urged him on until he could stand no more.

Rob made a similar slip about wanting a dozen bananas at a sitting, and Mary, forgetting the experiences of her brothers, said she wanted a whole fried chicken. Mrs. Russell rocks back and forth in bed as she laughs at these disciplinary adventures of long ago. Daily around her bedside there is merry talk of the ways she managed to bring up all of her children. All the Russells are good and lively talkers.

The daughters tease her by insisting she always sides with the men against the women, regardless of the merits of a case, and they tell a story to illustrate what they mean. Once an enraged tenant on the Russell place struck his wife with a kerosene lamp, shattering the glass and spilling the oil. Mrs. Russell heard of the argument and went to the tenant's home to see what she might do. The woman was not badly hurt, and after some minor attentions Mrs. Russell admonished her: "You should not have made your husband mad enough to do a thing like that."

Incidentally, the daughters say their mother invariably sides with their husbands even against them, and she cheerfully declares, "Well, the men usually are right."

The doors of the white frame house that is the Russell home have always been open to guests, strangers or not. Visiting preachers more often than not had their Sunday dinners there. Every summer there were house parties when sons or daughters had their school friends in for a week or two. The family jokes now about how their mother could always find more hominy grits for the big pot, and somehow thin the gravy so it would go around; and William, the family's chief jester, says they had signals to indicate the state of the food supply. When someone said, "F-H-B," that meant "family hold back." All of which Mrs. Russell denies, but greatly enjoys.

A HOBO AS OVERNIGHT GUEST

In the first quarter of this century, when hobos and tramps were numerous, the children were convinced that mysterious markings on local railroad water tanks guided itinerants straight to their door. Mrs. Russell gave each one food, and talked with him about his family, and whether or not he ever went to church. Once she horrified her daughters by inviting a hobo to spend the night. They protested, "Mother, you aren't going to let that bum stay here."

"I certainly am," she said calmly.

So the hobo spent the night, went on his way refreshed and with the knowledge, if he had any moral perception left, that at least one person still had faith in him, and hoped he would do better.

She told these knights of the crossties, as she told her own children, that every person born into this world is here for a useful purpose; and she thinks it is possible that some of them may have done better after a visit to her home. "Who knows?"

Deeply religious herself, Mrs. Russell often prayed that one of her sons would enter the ministry, but she did not urge any one of them to take that course. "I never tried to influence any of my children to do any particular kind of work," she says. "I just taught each one to find why he is here, and to do the very best he can." So, when Henry Edward Russell became a minister, the decision was his, but the deepest delight was hers. "Edward will be ordained into the ministry tonight," she wrote to an absent child. "It is as thrilling to me as Dick's inauguration as governor."

Another of her great thrills, she says, was when her twins, William and Fielding, were born. "That was the proudest moment of my life up to that time."

Mrs. Russell was born at Farm Hill, Ga., February 18, 1868, and was teaching school at Athens when she met her husband. She will tell you now that her life from that time on has been peaceful, even calm, and "Oh, so happy!"

She recalls only a few occasions when she was terrified. Once was when Dick had pneumonia. Another was when she thought she had cancer and wondered what would happen to her little children. The time when Mary swallowed her Sunday school penny, when the horse bit Dick, and Marguerite had to run a mile for the doctor, are but incidents. Of course, such things, like measles, happen in any large family.

Even the summer of 1911, when her husband, the old judge, ran against Hoke Smith and Joe Brown for governor, seems now to have been a peaceful season. She says she did not have time to help her husband much, except by writing several hundred letters, because so many of the children were small then; and that she was not disappointed, except for him, when he was defeated. "I didn't want to take all my little girls to the capitol in Atlanta in gingham aprons," she explains.

The smaller children were eagerly interested in that political contest. When they heard their father was in a race with Hoke Smith, a rather rotund man, and Joe Brown, who was frail and small, they imagined it a foot race, maybe right down the big road in front of home, and they were sure their father would win because he had such long legs.

That race did not come off the way they hoped it would, but they saw the judge win many other foot races with the morning train to Atlanta. The Seaboard Railroad runs perhaps a hundred yards in front of the Russell home, and to accommodate its frequent and distinguished passenger, a flag stop was made where his lane crossed the rails. There was no agent, and the only way to know when the train was coming was to see it or hear it. So, each morning when the judge was going away a child would be posted at the track to look a mile down the line to a big curve.

When the locomotive came charging in sight the sentry would yell, "Train around the curve!" and the assistant sentry would make a dash for the house to warn papa to hurry. Mrs. Russell would look him over to see that he had on all his clothes; Laura or somebody would have a cup of coffee at the front door which he would grab and drink, then light out full speed for the station where 3 or 4 or 5 or 6 excited, dancing, waving children flagged the train down.

The judge was a devoted and indulgent father, and an adoring husband with the happy habit of expressing his feelings. A letter he wrote to Mrs. Russell after they had been married 39 years begins, "My precious little sweetheart," and ends "With a sense of love and gratitude that is overpowering, I can only say God bless you, idol of my heart." His rare ability to express his affection in words is a characteristic of many members of the Russell family. They are a deeply and articulately devoted family.

The old judge never realized either of his great ambitions—to be Governor of Georgia, or United States Senator, but he lived to swear in 33-year-old DICK as governor in 1931, and see him take his seat in the United States Senate in 1933. He and Mrs. Russell lived with DICK, who was and still is unmarried, in the governor's mansion in Atlanta. She was confident at the end of the first year there that her boy was a good governor, but she wanted to be positive beyond any possibility of doubt. So, she went to the one man whose unbiased judgment she trusted completely—her husband and DICK's father.

"I knew he would know," she says, "and I knew he could not tell anything but the truth. When I asked him about DICK he thought a while in silence, to be sure of his answer. Then he said, 'Honey, I have studied the history of Georgia, and I tell you positively that DICK is the best governor this State ever had.' I was so glad to know that, but not surprised."

On the afternoon of December 3, 1938, the old judge, then 77 years old, returned to his home, tired. He said he believed he would lie down a while, and Mrs. Russell went to get some letters just in from several of their children to read to him. But she never finished the letters, for the judge seemed to have fallen asleep. When she went to him, she saw that he had "gone away."

All the children were absent that afternoon, and when they heard the news they feared for their mother. But when they reached home they found her composed—and it was she who comforted them. Her religious faith, that had stood so many other tests, stood this one, too.

She is confident that she and the judge will be reunited, and to one of her sons she has confided that, when she gets there, she hopes to be given the task of caring for babies.

Her faith is absolute and affirmative. There is not a gloomy note in the song of her heart, and rarely if ever a gloomy thought in her mind. To be alive is to her a great privilege; to see the dawn of each day a new and nice adventure.

"Somebody gave me one of those black bands to lie over my eyes and shut out the morning light," she says, "but I never used it. Shut out the dawn? What for? It means another day to get something done."

So, this great lady looks both to the future and the past at 82, and finds both pleasing. She is watched over now by her children, even as she watched over them. The ties that bind them to her are stronger by far than apron strings. They are the ties of admiration, obligation, and love.

Her son, Judge Russell, summed up her influence over her children like this: "She never gave us a chance to fail."

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, despite the fact that the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia is marking the completion of a quarter of a century of service in this body, he is not an old man. As a matter of fact, he has scarcely attained maturity in years. This is because he was a little boy when he came to the Senate. [Laughter.]

I think the senior Senator from Georgia combines in the rarest degree the qualities which make a great statesman and a great Senator. He is industrious, intelligent, intellectually honest, and courageous. He does not mind hard work. As a consequence, he is industrious in informing himself as to the public issues of the day. Since he is so highly intelligent, the conclusions to which he comes are intelligent conclusions. Furthermore, since he is absolutely honest intellectually, the conclusions to which he comes are intellectually honest conclusions. And since he is possessed of political and moral courage of the highest order, he always has the courage to stand and fight for the conclusions at which he arrives.

I have frequently said that if I had the power to select a President for the United States of America, my selection would be the senior Senator from Georgia.

I should like to say, in closing, that despite his great attainments, his great public record, and his outstanding public service, what I love most about DICK RUSSELL is the fact that he exhibits, to a more remarkable degree than any person I know, the humility of greatness.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be able to join with my colleagues today in paying a very much deserved and highly earned tribute and word of respect to one of our most esteemed colleagues, the senior Senator from Georgia [RICHARD RUSSELL].

So many things have been said about this gentleman today that I suppose he himself must wonder what else anyone could add. I do not attempt to be original. I attempt only to give a personal evaluation of the man—of his character and of his public service. It has not been my good fortune, as it has been of other Senators, to have known Senator RUSSELL 20 or 25 years, or to have lived in his State, or to have known his family. But I can say that all I have ever heard has been good, and all I have ever known of him has indicated that he is a good and true man.

Senator RUSSELL has been a useful and hardworking United States Senator, but, more than that, he knows what are his objectives and the ideals for which he stands, and he pursues them with vigor, with scholarship, and with determination.

The senior Senator from Georgia is not only a gentleman, but he is also a gentleman of good taste, of intellectual attainment, and of fine scholarship. I should like to underscore the latter remark, because Senator RUSSELL digs deeply into research, and his arguments, whether one agrees with them or not, are always well stated, cogent, logical, and persuasive.

I have heard it said many times that Senator RUSSELL is the spokesman for the South. There is not any doubt in my mind that he is the South's most eloquent and powerful spokesman. But more than that, Senator RUSSELL is our spokesman in a great many issues that come before us. He is not only a great southerner, but he is a great American. He is a patriot, and not only a patriot by word and by mention, but by deed, as the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, as a worker in the United States Senate, in the field that leads to national security.

Many times I have said to my intimates and to the Senator's colleagues that without Senator RUSSELL's work and his voice, I would indeed be deeply worried over the security of our Nation. He has great responsibility today, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee. But of one thing we can be sure—his responsibilities will be honorably fulfilled.

Senator RUSSELL is also a great friend of the leader of our Senate and of the majority, a friend who does not always give "yes" as his reply, but one who gives counsel and one who gives, on occasion, an admonition. I know this, and I know it to be true, and I think it is fair to say that many times the advocacy of the senior Senator from Georgia has had a very powerful and meaningful influence upon the leadership of the Senate, not only on one person, but on those who are committee chairmen and members of the policy committee.

Those of us who are younger in the service of the Senate than is the Senator from Georgia have always marveled at his knowledge of parliamentary law and the rules of the Senate. Some of us on occasion have not only wondered about it, but, let me say, have been overwhelmed, in every sense of the word, by that knowledge. I might say one does not obtain knowledge of the rules of the Senate by surface attention. It requires thoughtful attention, study, and research that goes back into the history of the precedents of the United States Senate.

From all that has been said, one might assume that we always agree on every issue. That, of course, is not true. I wish to say that one of the great virtues of the Senate of the United States is that one has a right to dissent, and to dissent freely and without fear of intimidation. Senator RUSSELL can disagree with one without being disagreeable, and it is a joy and a challenge to debate with him, because one always learns, sometimes at the expense of his own defeat, but one always has the experience of enlightenment in those discussions with the senior Senator from Georgia.

Finally, I wish to point out, as others have properly done, that the Senator from Georgia is indeed a champion of agriculture and what we call the family farm. It is not just agricultural economics that interests the Senator, but it is the farm family and its relation in the American agricultural community. It has been my pleasure to join with him many times in support of his advocacy and his programs in the field of soil conservation.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that men and women who are interested in conservation of our great natural resources are generally the same ones who are interested in conservation and development of our human resources. The Senator has a warm heart for American farmers, and he has demonstrated a great mind in his knowledge and understanding of agricultural economics.

The same could be said in terms of our independent business enterprise. These are not just frivolous or generalized statements about the Senator from Georgia. These areas of the American economy are close to his heart. He comes from a small town, and I think he understands the intimacy of living which is so much a part of our agricultural and small town communities.

Mr. President, we are fortunate in having such a powerful advocate in our body. It has been a joy and a privilege for me to share in his fellowship and to also share in his admonitions and suggestions, and to be a friend. That I hope I may always be, because it is a privilege to be so.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, as the junior Senator from Arizona, there is nothing I can add to what has been said very eloquently and forcefully about the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], but I should certainly be remiss in my duty to my conscience, and I also feel to the citizens of my State, if I did not speak what I feel to be the general feelings of the people of Arizona regarding Senator RICHARD RUSSELL. They realize all the fine things that have been said about him.

Mr. President, in this day and age when our Constitution has had too little attention, in this day and age when there is a tendency by some groups in this country to belittle and attempt to get around our Constitution and the meaning of the Founding Fathers in writing our great founding papers, RICHARD RUSSELL stands as a bulwark against those enemies of that Constitution and our other papers.

Mr. President, I should like to thank the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia on behalf of myself and for the people of Arizona for his having taken such a constantly strong stand in defense of the oath he took when he became a Senator that he would support and defend the Constitution of the United States. Would that there were more Americans within our boundaries today who had as deep and fervent a love for the Constitution and all its meaning as Senator RUSSELL has.

In addition to my pride in calling him a friend, I think I have equal pride in calling him an American.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to pay a well-deserved tribute to a Member of the United States Senate, one who will go down in history as one of its all-time great men.

Senator RUSSELL possesses all the qualities necessary, in my opinion, of a great statesman. He is a brilliant man. He is a great student. He is a hard worker. He has an unusually fine personality.

In the nearly 13 years that I have had the privilege of serving in the Senate I know of no one who has enjoyed a wider and closer friendship than has the senior Senator from Georgia. Few Members have attained a position of such high respect in this body, both as a statesman and as a friend of good judgment.

I have served with Senator RUSSELL on the Committee on Appropriations for more than 12 years. I have sat with him in foreign countries when important matters were discussed with the top leaders of these nations. Always, in my mind, he displayed a keen knowledge of the subject under discussion, and always showed good judgment.

During my service in the Senate there have been four Members of the Senate who have stood out above all others. Of course, there are many fine Members in the Senate, but these four have stood out above all others. They are the late Senator Vandenberg and the late Senator Taft from this side of the aisle. Then there was the late Senator George of Georgia. Those three Senators have now passed on to their reward.

We have with us today, fortunately, one of the great men of our time. I went so far, some years ago, as to say that if the Democrats had had sense enough to nominate him for President of the United States, I would have supported him. I did not say that lightly; I said it because I meant it from the bottom of my heart. If we could always have as a candidate for President of the United States or for the United States Senate, or any other high position, someone who possessed all the qualifications of the senior Senator from Georgia, partisan politics, to me, should never be a barrier.

So, in my humble and inadequate way, I am happy to pay my respects to one of the greatest men who ever served in this body.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, it is an honor and a privilege to be able to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the 25 years of outstanding statesmanship performed in the Senate by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

I served with the Senator from Georgia for 8 years on the Armed Services Committee, where he made a record of great distinction in furthering the security and defense needs of our Republic.

I am proud to be able to report to the Senate today that I do not recall a single instance in those 8 years, on any issue of any consequence whatsoever, in which I did not find myself following the leadership of the Senator from Georgia and voting with him in committee.

There is a political myth in this country which I am sure, in due course of time—perhaps in the not far distant future—will be exploded. I refer to the political myth that no one from the South can be elected President of the United States.

I think the highest tribute I could pay the Senator from Georgia is to say that in my opinion, for some years past the senior Senator from Georgia would have been an exceptionally well qualified President of the United States, and would have served his country in the White House with great statesmanship and distinction.

Having said that, I think I have expressed as well as I can the exceptionally high regard in which I hold the Senator from Georgia. I wish for him many, many more years of service in the Senate, because this body and this country need the statesmanship of the Senator from Georgia.

If I were to be asked to give my definition of statesmanship, I would give it by outlining three criteria: Give me a man of high intelligence; give me a man with the courage of his convictions; give me a man dedicated to the constitutional system of America, and I will give you a statesman. On the basis of that definition I give to the country today the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I should like to say just a few words about our colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

I have been a Member of the Senate slightly more than half as long as he has.

The occasion of his 25th anniversary is a very appropriate time to pay tribute to him. I wish to associate myself with the remarks which have been made by my colleagues, and add 1 or 2 comments of my own.

I had the honor and privilege, as a delegate from my State, to vote for Senator RUSSELL as the presidential nominee of my party at the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia in 1948 and again at Chicago in 1952. I thought then and I think now, and with greater conviction, that he would have made a very fine President. He has all the qualifications for a leader in the political field.

It is a great tragedy to me, as I think it is a tragedy for the Nation, that the regional prejudices which exist in this country have, as a practical matter, made it almost impossible for any southerner to be considered for the Presidency. I think that had Senator RUSSELL come from any large State in either the North or the West, he would undoubtedly have been nominated, and, I think, elected.

Senator RUSSELL has an unusual store of knowledge about governmental affairs. I know of no other man, either in or out of this body, who has a more thorough understanding of the background legislation which affects our agriculture, our armed services, and even, one might say, the appropriations, which, in a sense, comprise all the Government. Senator RUSSELL has served so long on the Committee on Appropriations that he knows more about the whole Government than anyone else I have ever known.

I often think, when I consider the troubles in which we find ourselves in this country, that we have in the past made a fetish of having amateurs at many of the top places in the Government. We have gone too far in having in policy-making positions persons who have had no previous experience in any government.

I consider Senator RUSSELL to be a professional. He started many years ago, before he came to the United States Senate, in his own State legislature, as has already been stated. I shall not recall his whole career, but I shall merely say that here is a man who, in the best sense of the word, is a professional in governmental affairs, of whom we have entirely too few in this country. There are many of us—and I would include myself among them—who have had too little experience in government, in all the intricacies that enter into the vast and complex system of government under which we live today. I predict that unless we do something about developing more people with the professional approach, with a thorough knowledge of all the aspects of the government, such as Senator RUSSELL has, we shall have even more difficult times in the future.

I simply wish to say that in my opinion we have been extremely fortunate in having at least one man like Senator RUSSELL in the Senate. I know that his contribution to the daily work of the Senate is very great indeed. Unfortunately, from the country's point of view, that kind of work does not receive headlines, and too few people know what his contribution is. Unless one is here to observe at first hand the difficulties which confront anyone in trying to develop a progressive and intelligent program for the whole country, one never knows what it is that enters into the successful accomplishment of these projects.

So I sincerely hope the whole country will take great heed of the importance of having in public office people of the high caliber of Senator RUSSELL, and that they will see to it that they elect more of them in the future.

I end my remarks by congratulating the people of Georgia upon having the good sense to elect and to keep here a man who has rendered such great service to the United States.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I rise to add my voice to the many fine tributes which already have been paid to our distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

It was just 25 years ago that I came to work on the floor of the Senate as a deputy assigned from the office of the Sergeant at Arms. At that time Senator RUSSELL was just commencing his very illustrious service in this great deliberative body. I met him at that time, for the first time, some 25 years ago. Then it was, that his friendliness and helpfulness to one working on an attaché basis first impressed me.

I next met DICK RUSSELL in 1952, in Nevada, when it became apparent that the overwhelming choice of the people of the State of Nevada was that in the senior Senator from Georgia we had a leader who should be elected President of the United States. As a delegate to the Chicago convention in 1952, it was my honor and pleasure to go along with the Nevada delegation in supporting Senator RUSSELL. I felt convinced then, and I am even more firmly convinced now, that had our move been successful, he would have been a great American President.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is fitting that those of us who represent Nevada—coming from a silver State, and on the occasion of a silver anniversary—on this particular 25th anniversary pay our respects to this great man, this great Senator, and this great statesman from the State of Georgia. We wish him well on this occasion, and we know that his continued service in the Senate of the United States not only will enrich the history of our country, but also will add to the soundness and the saneness of our American way of life.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, one of the most distinguished Members of the United States Senate and certainly the Senate's most capable parliamentarian, today marks his 25th year of service in the United States Senate.

It is indeed a singular achievement for any man to be elected to the United States Senate, but it is an outstanding personal as well as political achievement for a man to serve in this distinguished body for a quarter of a century.

RICHARD B. RUSSELL has been graced with the unshakable trust of the people of his State, and he has endeared himself to all the people of the South. Certainly his abilities have gained him a healthy respect of lawmakers and citizens from all parts of the Nation, regardless of their personal beliefs on various questions that may come before the country.

As a neighbor of his from South Carolina, and as a colleague in the Senate, I wish to extend to RICHARD RUSSELL the heartiest of congratulations on his 25th anniversary of service to his people, and I hope he will have many more years of service in the Senate, where he is so badly needed by his State and Nation in our troubled times.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, a Rhode Island schoolboy learns to have an affection for the State of Georgia. His own Revolutionary heroes, like Gen. Nathanael Greene, have fought in defense of Georgia and that State has been generous to the Rhode Island soldier. A Rhode Island Governor learns to have admiration for the State of Georgia because the beautiful State capitol is fashioned from equally beautiful Georgia marble.

When that Rhode Island schoolboy who has also been Governor of Rhode Island comes to this Senate of the United States he soon learns to place his affection and his appreciation in the personality of a son of Georgia—now the senior Senator from the Peach State, or as she has often been called, the Empire State of the South.

RICHARD BREVARD RUSSELL comes naturally by those gifts which endear him to his colleagues and to the country. His legal genius may be traced to a father who rose to be chief justice of the State of Georgia.

But let us give gratitude to the qualities of his mother whose 13 children have distinguished themselves—and their parents—in ministry and medicine, in law and learning, in the arts of war and the agriculture of peace.

The merits of Senator RUSSELL have been best judged by those who know him best. For the silver years of his service in this Senate are but a continuation of the confidence that his neighbors have reposed in him since his early days as a lawyer with long service in the legislative halls of his native State before Georgia called him to the chair of governor before he was 34 years of age. Georgia likes to remember a story of a 9-year-old boy whose father saw to it that the boy spend a night in the governor's mansion of Georgia. The boy declared that he wanted to return to that mansion as governor; and RICHARD RUSSELL is the boy whose dream came true.

The life story of RICHARD RUSSELL is an inspiration to all youth and his life's labors are a gratification to all America and to the world.

There could be no pause more pleasant in the proceedings of the Senate than to pay honor to our colleague on the occasion of 25 years of eminent service to his State and to the United States. A man of character who can define and defend the Constitution, a parliamentarian of unbounded skill, an advocate of great power, an adversary that one respects even when one differs, this gentleman and scholar of Georgia gives dimension and distinction to the responsibilities of this great deliberative body. We never fail to learn something more from him. We never fail to love something more about him.

May the years be many and kind to this man of character and courage, RICHARD B. RUSSELL.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it makes me feel very humble to have men whom I hold in such high regard, and for whom I have so much affection, stand upon the floor of the Senate and pay such high tribute to my efforts here over the past quarter of a century.

The people of my State have honored me beyond my deserts, over almost a lifetime spent in the public service, since I was old enough to be a member of the lower house of the General Assembly of Georgia.

I am very grateful for the experience that has been mine of serving in this great body over the most thrilling 25 years of human history. Conditions change, and the problems which confronted the first Congress in which I served are not acute today, except in fringe areas of our Nation. They related almost entirely to our internal economy. Today, the great problems which confront us are international, as we move into the space age. I am indeed fortunate that I have been permitted to serve here and to be associated with the leading men of the 48 States of this great Union of ours, as we have wrestled with so many vital problems.

There has been a tremendous change in the Senate of the United States since I first became a Member. When I came here in January 1933, we were in the midst of a great depression, and men were groping in darkness, trying to deal with it. We did not have the mass of legislation that we have today, and Sentors could really undertake to study and analyze each bill in that period before the grim necessities of the day brought every citizen of the United States in direct contact with his Federal Government.

It has been my good fortune to enjoy 25 years of thrilling association with great issues and with great men. In times when all of us often have feelings of great frustration in our service here, the greatest remuneration we could have is the feeling that sometimes we can contribute in some small degree to some cause which will make life a little better for people somewhere. It is a high privilege indeed to be associated with my colleagues of this body. This association is of course the finest compensation that we enjoy.

In my opinion, no higher distinction can come to any American citizen than to bear the title and assume the responsibilities of a Senator of the United States.

So long as we each strive to measure up to our responsibilities, the Senate will endure as the bulwark of constitutional government and the protector of the individual rights and liberties of those we serve.

Mr. President, the English language is replete with descriptive and expressive words; and when we have not been able to find them in the old mother tongue, we have borrowed very freely from the Latin languages and, indeed, from the Germanic. We have a rich store of words which enable us to express thoughts. But we have never developed any superlative for "thank you."

So, Mr. President, all I can say to all my colleagues, with a heart that is full of affection and respect for each and every one, is "thank you."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. RUSSELL W. KEENEY, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

"YEARS OF CRISIS" AND "PROJECTION, 1958"

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, at the end of each year, the Columbia Broadcasting System presents a program known as years of crisis. For the ninth year in a row, this function has been performed by the many qualified overseas correspondents of the Columbia Broadcasting System. This year, for the first time, the National Broadcasting Corp. has broadcast a somewhat similar program known as Projection, 1958.

It is interesting to note that the leaders in these discussions, Mr. Edward Murrow and Mr. Chet Huntley, are from the State of Washington and the State of Montana, respectively. Both of them are outstanding commentators and news evaluators, and I believe it is an honor to the Northwest that it has been able to produce men of this character. Because of the extreme importance, frankness, and validity of the news expressed, I ask unanimous consent that both the Years of Crisis program of the Columbia Broadcasting system and the Projection, 1958 program of the National Broadcasting Corp. be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the programs were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YEARS OF CRISIS

ANNOUNCER. CBS News invites you to spend the next hour with Edward R. Murrow and eight members of broadcasting's most distinguished staff of news correspondents. This is the ninth edition of Years of Crisis for which CBS News has once again called in its correspondents from the important news centers of the world. Here now is Edward R. Murrow.

Mr. MURROW. Each year for 9 years, CBS correspondents have come home at about this time to try to cast up a sort of national balance sheet. Not even we have always been right. We sat around here a couple of years ago discussing whether the title of this program, Years of Crisis, was really appropriate. Well, this year it may be inadequate, because we certainly have no shortage of crisis. However, we will now attempt to unleash a not-too-agonized reappraisal of where we stand as the new year is about to begin. Welcome home, gentlemen. I suggest that, first of all, you answer for me a very simple question briefly as possible, and that is, what in your area happened that was basic, that was pivotal, in the course of the last year. Let's start with Howard K. Smith, who was for 10 years our chief European correspondent, and is now stationed in Washington. Howard.

Mr. SMITH. Well, in Europe in 1957, I'm afraid that neutralism became a doctrine with a future.

Mr. MURROW. David Schoenbrun, based on Paris, spends a lot of time in North Africa.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. I think the initiative in NATO passed out of America's hands into the hands of our allies.

Mr. MURROW. Alex Kendrick, from London.

Mr. KENDRICK. In Britain, Ed, we look like the second-class power that we have been saying the British look like.

Mr. MURROW. Winston Burdett, based on Rome, spends a lot of time in the Middle East.

Mr. BURDETT. In the Middle East, the Eisenhower doctrine collided with the Khrushchev doctrine.

Mr. MURROW. Ernie Leiser, from West Germany.

Mr. LEISER. In mid-Europe, Ed, this was the year that the Soviets put a couple of satellites up into orbit and pulled the rest of their satellites back into orbit.

Mr. MURROW. Pete Kalischer, based on Tokyo, just back from a trip through southeast Asia.

Mr. KALISCHER. In 1957, Ed, was the year that Asian astrologers cast their horoscopes by the light of two Russian moons.

Mr. MURROW. Dan Schorr, from Moscow.

Mr. SCHORR. In Russia, Ed, I think this was the year when a dangerous inferiority complex was replaced by a possibly more dangerous superiority complex.

Mr. MURROW. Eric Severeid, chief of our Washington bureau.

Mr. SEVAREID. Ed, I think this year Americans lost considerable faith both in their fighting apparatus and in their high command.

Mr. MURROW. Well, gentlemen, this is not a very optimistic opening, I would say, but let's examine now a little—how did it happen, how did we get ourselves in this fix? Schoenbrun.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. The world's balance of power changed very drastically this year. Russia outflanked us in the Middle East, outproduced us militarily, and our country, unfortunately, became vulnerable to atomic attack.

Now, as all of you gentlemen know, this situation is very different from that which existed when NATO was first created back in 1949 and it might be worthwhile looking backwards a little briefly to find out how we got here. Back then, we had an atomic monopoly and America was the invulnerable fortress of democracy, living pretty safely behind our wide ocean moats. Then everything began to change at about that time. We had a highly successful foreign policy, the Truman doctrine and the Marshall plan, the Russians couldn't attack us, they didn't dare attack our allies because of fear of instant atomic retaliation and I think we probably just fell asleep. We woke up pretty rapidly however, Ed. In the fall of 1949, the Soviets exploded an atom bomb, in 1953—a hydrogen bomb, and then this year for the first time our once safe moats can now be spanned by missiles and our skies by sputniks. That whole situation was so very different—today for example—that American leadership of NATO, which was once willingly given to us in return for our protection, has now been challenged.

Mr. MURROW. How'd we lose it?

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Well, probably we lost it because we thought that a balanced budget was more important than a balance of power—and a direct result of that was I think one of the most significant facts of this postwar era. President Eisenhower went to Paris as the first American statesman seeking security for our country, instead of offering it to our allies. We went there, Ed, you were with me in Paris, we went there to arm, to get missile bases. We were told instead to parley with the Russians. Now, East-West talks were not on the agenda of the NATO conference, not at least in the American plan. It was forced upon us. We did not lead; we were led. Why did this happen? Well, I think we changed or failed to change with a changing world. And I think the man who told us why it happened was President Eisenhower himself at that same conference. He said we've been guilty of false habits of thought. We thought that the free system was inherently stronger at all times, and in all fields, to the Communist system. We thought we didn't have to work or pay for freedom. Gentlemen, I would suggest that this is what it's brought us to, the brink of the gravest threat to our freedom in our history.

Mr. MURROW. Winston Burdett, how do you think we got into this fix?

Mr. BURDETT. Well, Ed, I think that if the past year has proven anything in my area, the Middle East, it is that something was fundamentaly wrong somewhere in our mid-East policy. The Eisenhower doctrine has not worked out. We went ahead on the promise that we could set up some kind of American protectorate over the Middle East by military names, that we could make anti-Communist allies of the Arab States and in this way exclude the Russians from the area. We proposed to extend the cold war to the Arab world and we ignored both the inherent weakness of the Arab States and the emotional backfire of Arab nationalism. We asked the Arabs to line up on our side, against the Russians, and in effect, we told them that they could get economic aid from us if they did. And this antagonized them. And in practice, we convinced them that our only desire was to dominate them instead of letting the Russians dominate them. In practice, I think we made one fatal mistake. We failed to keep calm in a crisis. When the Syrian leftwing regime took over our 6th Fleet sailed out on ostentatious maneuvers. A special envoy from Washington flew out on an emergency mission. And this proved to the Arabs that we were more alarmed by what happened in Syria than they were and they took this as a sign of fear and weakness. They took it also as attempted interference in their affairs—and even friendly Arab Governments had to come out and disavow us publicly on the ground that what happened in Syria was Syria's business. It's true of course that we face many psychological handicaps in the Arab world that the Russians don't have to face. Israel is the overriding issue of Arab nationalism and the Arabs look on us as Israel's champion. The word "imperialist" which both the Arabs and the Russians pin on us, still has a high emotional content in that part of the world. But for this reason, I think, we can't go on underestimating the Arab capacity for violent emotional reactions. Our handling of the Syrian crisis, certainly, convinced the Syrians that their deal with Russia was a great victory for Arab nationalism and independence and a great defeat for noisy Western diplomacy.

Mr. MURROW. From Pete Kalischer, as viewed from the Far East, how do we look?

Mr. KALISCHER. Well, when we lost our military preeminence, Ed, our bases there became more of a liability than an asset. We're not a member of the family in Asia, we're an alien Occidental Nation and our leadership there has always been based primarily on power. We beat the Japanese, Asia's first team, during World War II, we kept an edge, a military edge, thereafter, and then we lost our atomic monopoly. And the first big crack came, in our military reputation, when we didn't win the Korean war decisively. This enormously enhanced Red China's reputation and it put us in the position of not knowing exactly what to do. We didn't lick 'em, we didn't join 'em, and we certainly pretended more or less that they weren't there. Now, this was supposed to isolate our—isolate Red China from the rest of the non-Communist world, but actually, all it did was isolate us. It made the American eagle look like an ostrich. Now, Asians are perfectly willing to go along with an eccentric eagle, as long as it is an eagle and it can lick anything in the sky. But when the sputniks went up, the Asians decided that our military leadership had vanished.

Mr. MURROW. What did it feel like working in the Far East when you were not permitted to go to Communist China?

Mr. KALISCHER. Well, sir, pretty much like a fool. I mean we sat there and watched our colleagues from Australia and Britain and Canada and Japan go in and out and we kept our noses pressed to the window.

Mr. MURROW. All right; let's find out from Dan Schorr what the view is from Moscow. Dan.

Mr. SCHORR. The view, Ed, from the top of the Kremlin, where I spent so much time in the past year, has been somewhat dim and clouded though one thing has become clear. The sputnik which has been mentioned before was a symbol, a very great symbol although not the complete sum of what happened in Russia's dealings with the world this year. The sputnik and of course the missile that made it possible to launch these two sputniks, changed the power balance between Russia and the United States, if not actually then at least in their own minds, but had effects elsewhere as well. It had an effect on their control of the satellites. At the Kremlin Communist summit conference last month, the sputnik was used as a symbol to cow the satellites and get them back into orbit, as Ernie Leiser mentioned. That they in effect, hitched their wagon to this satellite up in the sky and used it to cow their earthbound satellites. And there're other effects in other areas. To the uncommitted nations they took this satellite and said "we are now the country to come to for aid, not the United States." And even internally it had very important effects, because in a—in a country like Russia, which had two purges in the past year, and where Khrushchev's regime had a great many other troubles. He was able to use the sputnik as a great attention distractor. He was able to tell the people "don't look down here where we have troubles with crops, with our industrial reorganization, and one thing or another, look up there in the sky and see our great achievements."

Mr. MURROW. Dan, did the sputniks distract attention from Marshal Zhukov's removal?

Mr. SCHORR. Well, in the first place, there was considerably less attention given to Zhukov's removal in Russia than in the United States. But the second sputnik, coming as it did the day after Zhukov's complete ouster, completely erased any idea of Zhukov from the minds of the Russians even if they were disposed to discuss anything quite as dangerous as that. In effect, what Khrushchev has begun practicing is something that we might call sputnikmanship and he's practiced it very successfully. That was Russia this past year.

Mr. MURROW. Well, Eric Sevareid, as viewed from Washington, how do we find ourselves in this position and posture?

Mr. SEVAREID. Well, Ed, we all get obsessed with government and I'm not willing to blame government for everything that goes wrong in a free democratic representative type of society. But we have to begin with government policy. It seems to me that we've seen over the years here a kind of a gradual, almost unconscious substitution of the word for the deed. Now, we have made rather binding verbal commitments all over this globe without really providing the flexible military policy that would make them good in a pinch. I think we've suffered from a paralysis, at the base, a paralysis of both our military structure and organization and our strategic thinking by reason of the Dulles massive retaliation doctrine wedded to the Wilson-Humphrey economy-first policy. I think people have quite obviously been lulled almost asleep over the years with endless assurances of peace and prosperity and a normalcy which we shall certainly not see in our generation. The strange thing is that the Government seems to have lulled itself with the same kind of wishful nonthinking. After all, it was just this spring that the President was assuring us—and I'm sure he believed this quite sincerely—that NATO had never been stronger, and this summer—that we could have a perfectly adequate defense for the $38-billion ceiling. It was just this August that Secretary Wilson actually reduced the moneys for missile development. And all this in the teeth of what seems to most of us to have been very apparent intelligence information available to them as to everybody else. I have a feeling there has been a response here not to objective facts enough but too much to subjective illusions. For example, that public opinion and the supply of money in this country are fixed ceilings under which—determine really what Government does instead of the other way around. And maybe more than just a technological lag, maybe a considerable breakdown, at least for a time, in—in the great art of leading a great people.

Mr. MURROW. Well, gentlemen, we certainly have not a problem but a whole covey or clutch of problems. Let's see if we can define at least 1 or 2 of them. Alex Kendrick, you've spent the last 2 or 3 months studying the whole missile and weapons programs, just how serious is our technological lag?

Mr. KENDRICK. Well, it is serious, Ed, as Dan Schorr made it quite plain. The two Soviet sputniks were not accidental, they were planned that way. They show that in science and technology and perhaps even in their educational system, which backs up science and technology, the Russians are our equal in some respects and perhaps even ahead of us. Of course, in military terms—everybody should know by now—the two Soviet sputniks mean that the Russians can send a ballistic missile 5,000 miles from their country to our country in less than a half hour. They can put a hydrogen warhead on this missile and it can cause widespread death and destruction. Now, it's true that they can't do this accurately enough yet—and our experts tell us that the Soviet ICBM is not yet operational. But the potential is there. And strategy is measured in terms of potential. And, strategically, possession of the ICBM by the Russians would cancel out our strategic advantage, that is, our advantage up to this point, our long-distance Air Force, SAC. Now, it's true that the Russians have a long-distance air force too, their SAC, but with our warning system and our defense system we would have some protection against an attack by their long-distance air force. If they attacked us with missiles we wouldn't have that protection. Now, it's also true that the missiles—without a defense—we can retaliate with SAC still. We can build up intercontinental missiles the way they are doing and the way we are doing and we may also be able to develop antimissile missiles. But this doesn't remove that potential I was talking about, the potential that they have of making a direct strike against our cities.

Mr. MURROW. Isn't it true also, Alex, that they lead us in intermediate-range missiles?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes, they do—in two respects, because they are also building submarines which will be able to fire missiles and these submarines can come rather close to our shores and they can bring American cities under attack from short-range distances rather than from long-range distances.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Well, Alex, they can also cancel out with their ICBM's our European bases——

Mr. KENDRICK. Well, exactly—what Ed said—they are ahead of us in intermediate-range missiles as well, and this gives them the potential of attacking the cities of western Europe, the cities of our allies, as well as our own cities.

Mr. SCHOENBURN. That's what made them so nervous at the Paris summit conference and so reluctant to give us launching pads in Europe itself.

Mr. KENDRICK. Our allies you mean.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Yes.

Mr. MURROW. Well, now, gentlemen, we went to Paris hoping that we could get permission from our allies to plant these intermediate-range missiles on their territory, but they seemed to be somewhat reluctant. Leiser, as viewed from Germany, what do you think our chances are of getting permission to place these missiles on the Continent?

Mr. LEISER. I'm not so sure we will, Ed. We, of course, extracted in Paris an agreement in principle to put those bases on the Continent, but actually in practice a good many of our allies only were willing to have those bases on somebody else's part of the Continent. The West German newspapers for example have been busily printing maps to show that it really doesn't make much sense to have the bases on German soil. They say that the only additional area brought into target range is a slice of tundra some place northeast of Leningrad. The idea seems to be "put the bases in Turkey or in Greece," anyplace but on our soil. Well, of course, this is quite a change from a couple of years ago when our allies were clamoring that we were depriving them of the modern weapons that they needed to protect their territories. Now for the first time we went to Paris and we asked them to accept the missiles or at least give us the real estate to put them on in order to help protect American soil. And, actually, there's another very remarkable change of scene from my point of view, the man who seemed to focus the reluctance to accept the missiles was old Konrad Adenauer, who up to now has been our most obedient ally, I think you might say——

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Unquestioning.

Mr. LEISER. Who has—spy (laughter)—anyhow, he certainly has been a rock of support for the Dulles doctrine of positions of strength. Well, at this meeting, the Europeans and particularly the Germans felt that he was the leader of opposition to Dulles. In fact, in Bonn after the Paris conference, the joke was that the German national anthem should be changed from "Deutschland Ueber Alles" to "Deutschland Ueber Dulles."

Mr. MURROW. Well, it's true that Adenauer led the procession demanding new parleys with the Russians but he was almost trampled by our other allies who were equally eager.

Howard Smith, one of the great advantages of being a chief correspondent is that you can wander anywhere you like and you've been doing that for the past 10 years, why don't you sum up now the political repercussions of sputnik?

Mr. SMITH. Well, I think the problem that sputnik creates for us outside our own borders has to be divided into two, the uncommitted world—about two-thirds of the world, and the western allied nations. To take the uncommitted countries first, we've always suffered from an advantage in dealing with them because Russia has no history in Asia and Africa and the Middle East while the western white men does. Until recently most of these peoples were subjects of western empires and so their resentment and suspicion are fresh and sharp and so * * * and also they don't distinguish between Europeans, who live in Europe, and Europeans, who over the centuries have emigrated and call themselves Americans. We're all the same to them. So in any competition for their favor we're like a mile runner who's forced to start every race a quarter mile behind the Russian opponent. Well, now, since sputnik I think our disadvantage has become greater because the main material aspiration of these people is to industrialize their countries rapidly and here they see the * * * to them, hopeful image of a country, Russia, almost as underdeveloped as they were a short while ago, is today able to beat the most advanced western white nation at putting an earth satellite into orbit. This is just bound to make them more receptive to approaches from the Russians and less receptive to approaches from us.

Mr. MURROW. One of our major miscalculations, wasn't it, was that we assumed that a backward people could not skip whole generations or centuries in technological development and progress?

Mr. SMITH. I think the floor is littered with fragments of that il—— [laughter]. Well, now, in the——

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Howard, wouldn't you agree that the Cairo conference this week is a particular example of Russia's political and economic appeal to the uncommitted nations, that they now can at least promise to export aid and technology to those——

Mr. SMITH. Absolutely. I think it's a perfect example of the way they're trying to exploit sputnik. But now, about the Western European allied countries, the problem's somewhat different. They're not so interested in the sputnik as they are in the mighty missile that put a half-ton sputnik in the air. As Alex Kendrick said, that implies that Russia is now ahead of us in a new field of weapons whereby the Russians can destroy Western Europe much more efficiently than ever before and America is less able to protect Europe than ever before. This is almost found to induce them to start thinking in terms of possibly becoming neutral in this battle, and I think that desire is increased by the fact that the Russians have, or will soon have, this intercontinental missile whereby they can hit America directly without even going over Western Europe. This is bound to bring about the thought in Western Europe that perhaps they might keep out of the next war and just leave it to the two giants. So I think the whole thing creates a trend toward neutrali——

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Known as the —— of defense.

Mr. MURROW. Yes.

Mr. LEISER. Well, Ed, I think that right now it makes them want to negotiate, not necessarily to keep out, but to find some way to negotiate out of the dilemma that they feel that they're in.

Mr. MURROW. Well, Mr. Sevareid, since we're talking about allies—and having allies is a relatively new experience for us—they represent a problem, too, don't they?

Mr. SEVARIED. Yes; I'm afraid Howard has stolen a little of my proposed thunder here, but [laughter] we talk all the time and the press is full of talk about the allied crisis of confidence in us. You can turn this around, too. There are a lot of worried people in Washington about their confidence in Europe. Lots of Asians who used to criticize us for concentrating too much on military power now criticize us for not concentrating enough and letting the Russians get ahead of us. There are Europeans who seem to want a double-standard alliance, one that will protect them and also give them an out if necessary. The words in the alliance, if they read it, say, in effect, one for all and all for one. We have not yet sought it out; some of them are.

Mr. MURROW. Well, gentlemen, let's look briefly at the immediate and crucial hazards that confront us, the things that represent an immediate danger. Kendrick.

Mr. KENDRICK. Ed, from the military point of view, the hazards are very simple. They are the hazards of sudden death and with no place to hide. Because even though it is fantastic to conceive of such a thing, a surprise attack by the Russians cannot be ruled out by our military planners. Every military man must have that as one of the possibilities on his drafting board. The possibility of adventurism, let us say, in the Kremlin, may not be a political factor but it certainly must be reckoned as a military factor or a possible military factor. Then there's the second type of sudden death, let us say accidental death. Somebody will push the wrong button and put us into war. And then there's the possibility that one of our allies might inadvertently or advertently start a scrape somewhere that would involve us in war. Those are the hazards that we face.

Mr. MURROW. Dan Schorr, what's the immediate danger as viewed from Moscow?

Mr. SCHORR. Well, I would tend to discount the immediate danger of any calculated surprise attack that Alex mentioned, but I go along with him on the possibility of adventurism in Russia, but only under certain conditions. Looking at it from the Soviet internal point of view, I think there is a possibility of adventurism arising if the squeeze is put too heavily on the present Khrushchev regime, if they're put into the kind of a corner where they feel it necessary to take certain chances as a diversion. I think one small example of that was the trumped up crisis over Syria and Turkey, which happened to come around a time they were having trouble over Marshal Zhukov. I think that kind of danger does exist and perhaps we might have to do something about it.

Mr. MURROW. Sevareid, what's the immediate danger as you view it from Washington?

Mr. SEVAREID. Well, I think the great thing is that this Government may not have grasped and may not help the people to grasp the full implications of this profound crisis, which is going to go on for a long time. I think there is another specific thing, Ed, relating to economics. I don't know if there'll be an economic depression in this country at all but we could do things that would produce overseas some of the effects of a depression, that is—and that concerns this new Congress more than the administration. We might even put up some tariffs. We may considerably cut the amount and scope of foreign-aid spending and technical help, and so on. This could have rather serious effects and this would split the present foreign policy down the middle. There was one witness, Ed, at a House subcommittee last week on this subject who said if we do this, this is like asking one Siamese twin to play the Moonlight Sonata on a ukulele while the other does a jailhouse rock with Marilyn Monroe. You can't—you can't do it that way.

Mr. MURROW. Mr. Kalischer, what's the immediate hazard viewed from the Far East?

Mr. KALISCHER. The immediate hazard, of course, is the accidental war, the adventurism which might occur say in the Formosa Straits or in a divided Korea. But I think really the great hazard is the fact that we'll lose the uncommitted nations like Japan and India to communism. If we do we could lose the whole shooting match with a whimper not a bang. India would tip the scales, I think, out of sheer numbers, 360 million people, Japan, because it's got the biggest industrial complex in the Far East, and when you've got that tied up with Siberia and China you have a very formidable complex indeed. And Japan is particularly vulnerable because it's in an export-or-die race for survival. If we raise tariffs, if we cut down Japan's free world market through a recession, Japan must look elsewhere for trade. And I say that we very possibly we can create the biggest ringtailed economic and political crisis in Japan by creating that kind of a crisis.

Mr. MURROW. Mr. Leiser, what's the view in Germany?

Mr. LEISER. Well, Japan's not the only place, Ed, where a depression could bring catastrophe. The Germans are seriously worried about a danger of a depression and they think that the principal likely source of that danger might be the United States. A depression here would infect all of the European economies. The democracy in West Germany has been growing surprisingly strongly in the * * * with its roots in the fertile soil of prosperity. But if the economy went bust, I think that all threats about the future of democracy in West Germany would have to be off.

Mr. MURROW. Mr. Schoenbrun, what is your view on the immediate hazard?

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. I see two ahead, Ed. One we saw at the Paris Conference together, that is, the state of leadership of the Western World is extremely precarious. The health of the American President, of course, is a principal cause of concern. As for the German Chancellor, he's, I think, 82 years old next week, and the 38-year-old French Premier is not likely to grow old in office. If there were a change of regime in France and Germany that could wreck NATO and such a crisis indeed is ahead in 1958. France is facing in the Algerian war a crisis that could bring about a right- or a left-wing coup d'etat. Now, gentlemen, don't hold me to this. I don't say it's going to happen. For the first time, however, it is possible. And that's the second hazard, the war in Algeria, which is spreading its flames throughout North Africa and which might well provoke an anti-Christian, anti-Western bloc from the Dardanelles to Gibraltar.

Mr. MURROW. And, Mr. Burdett, as viewed from the Middle East, what's the immediate hazard to us?

Mr. BURDETT. Well, there are immediate hazards, Ed, at almost every step that we take there. One Western diplomat in Jordan told me recently that the two worst calamities he could imagine happening would be the death of King Hussein and a revival of the Arab-Israeli dispute over the Gulf of Aqaba. Hussein alone holds Jordan together and his death would bring down the pro-Western government of that country. Now, nobody knows when or whether the Egyptians or the Saudi Arabians are going to try to close the Aqaba Gulf of Israel. But we do know that neither Nasser nor King Saud has forgotten that issue. If they revive it we will be caught again right in the middle of an Arab-Israeli dispute. There's always the hazard of new outbreaks on the borders of Israel. If there is serious trouble, even trouble short of war, on the Israeli border with Jordan, it will not be long before Jordan slides into chaos. Hussein would find it politically impossible to keep the Syrian Army from rushing to his aid in the name of Arab unity. And in that event it seems certain that the Syrians would not get out again. Finally, there's the danger that if Jordan falls, Amman will then become the base of operations for the Egyptians and the Syrians against their next target, Iraq.

Mr. MURROW. Not a very pleasing prospect, is it? Howard Smith, what's the immediate hazard as you view it?

Mr. SMITH. Well, with some reluctance, I must recall that before we got into the sputnik cloud we were suffering from a black eye called Little Rock. The ugly photographs of white mobs beating up Negroes appeared on the front page of almost every newspaper on earth and I don't think the press abroad was very fair to us. I don't think they noted the fact that in fact we've made a great deal of progress on this problem and I think we still are. They just noticed that the mob did this. And in a world which we have to court for our own survival and a world which is two-thirds colored, I don't think we can afford any more Little Rocks.

Mr. MURROW. Well, gentlemen, we've drawn up something of a list of our liabilities and a rather formidable one it is, too, which certainly leaves no room for complacency, but after all our posture is not prone, we have very considerable assets and I think it might be useful at this point to try to total up a few of the assets. Why don't you start, Schoenbrun?

Mr. SCHOENBRUN I think that one of our liabilities is still our greatest asset, and that is NATO. NATO is still the richest, strongest, voluntary coalition of free nations in the world and that's an enormous asset if we can hold it. NATO conducts some two-thirds of the world's trade. Its mines produce more coal than the rest of the world together. Its furnaces pour more steel. Unfortunately, the rest of the world, the Communist world, is using more and more of its steel to build schools. And, for example, although Russia has half as much steel as the United States it's turning out twice as many scientists. That's very real danger to us. I think that our basic health is sound.

I think our assets are very great. The problem is how do we make the best use of them.

Mr. MURROW. Kalischer.

Mr. KALISCHER. Well, I think Japan, the innate conservatism of Japan in Asia is one of our biggest assets, because they've got a high standard of living, which we helped them get, and they want to keep it. Surprisingly enough, our big asset in India is Prime Minister Nehru. Now, Americans often feel that Nehru is splitting hairs when the Indians should be out splitting logs. But he is a working democrat who wants to make a modified form of socialism work. I think we have an asset in South Vietnam, which is a little country, but symbolically 22 Vietnamese offered to man the first American space rocket once we got it up. And, finally, I think we've got an asset in the fact that China, Red China, is feeling the pinch of paying for the Soviet technical aid program.

Mr. MURROW. Winston Burdett, what are our assets as viewed in the Middle East?

Mr. BURDETT. Well, Ed, I think we have one big immediate asset in the Middle East, the United Nations, and that means two things: the personal diplomacy of Dag Hammarskjold and the United Nations emergency force, which stands guard at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba and in the Gaza strip. I think that very few people realized last month that for a few days at least, we were at the edge of something very deep during the latest border dispute between Israel and Jordan. Dag Hammarskjold flew out there himself and by what diplomats on the scene thought must have been some kind of wizardry, he cleared up the trouble. He's an invaluable asset. Also, there's very little attention given to the job done by the U. N. Emergency Force. A year ago, I remember, the Israelis were saying that the U. N. would be powerless in Gaza, it would not be able, they predicted, it would be unable to curb Egyptian raids across the border into Israel. And many diplomats and many correspondents, including me, were almost equally pessimistic. So, I think it's worth recording, a year later, that we were wrong and that the U. N. force has been worth every dollar that's been spent on it.

Mr. MURROW. Of course, it doesn't have enough dollars for its support at the moment because some nations have refused to pay their appropriations. Dan Schorr, as viewed from Moscow, what assets do we have?

Mr. SCHORR. I think, Ed, the greatest asset that we have in Russia is the growing desire of the Soviet people for something that I would call normalcy except that it's not normal, at least for some kind of a decent or better life anyway. Forty years after the revolution, I think the flames of fanaticism have damped down and the people are just in a state where they want something a little better and a little relaxation. I think they would like to be as we are accused of being—complacent. They'd like their chance at complacency too. I think this represents a pressure on the regime. It's one of the reasons why Khrushchev feels somewhat overcommitted in his promises of aid to uncommitted countries, his promises of aid to the satellites. I think he's been forced to promise some aid to his own people as well. And that represents a pressure for reduction of the arms burden. It doesn't operate as directly as it would in this country. The seat of power remains in the Kremlin, they're awfully far from the people, but indirectly it's increasing. And one of the reasons it's increasing is that the people aren't so numb or dumb any more. There's been a lot of education. And the education that it's taken to make sputniks has also produced a lot of thinking. And as the people think they aren't pushed around quite so easily any more. You feel it. You feel it as you travel through Russia.

Mr. MURROW. Are you suggesting that there might be a revolution of the sputnik makers sometime?

Mr. SCHORR. Well, I don't want to play with the word revolution, I wouldn't want to suggest that this—Russia is going to go up in flames of revolution or counter-revolution very soon. I think in the terms which you mean it, revolution as a kind of a mental and spiritual revolution—yes, I think that the sputnik makers don't like the Communist gobbledygook, I think they will rebel in their own way in time.

Mr. MURROW. Leiser, what are our assets as viewed from Germany?

Mr. LEISER. Well, in central Europe, Ed, a very strong asset is a Germany—at least a West Germany that for the first time in this century is not seeking military or political adventure. The Russians may, as Dan has just said, be looking for a better life—the West Germans have got it and they want to keep it. They have a standard of living that is now beginning to approximate ours and they like it. They have an economic way of life that is now beginning to approximate ours and they like it. They are not in a mood to tinker recklessly with events.

Mr. MURROW. Kendrick, what are our assets as viewed from London?

Mr. KENDRICK. From missile land.

Mr. MURROW. Missile land, all right.

Mr. KENDRICK. I'm with Dave Schoenbrun in believing that a liability and even a hazard can also be an asset. Now, missile warfare is still in the future and potentially Soviet missile might could cancel out our SAC force, but right now, we still possess the power of deterrents. We have airbases at home and overseas, we have allies, we have a long distance air force, we have carrier fleets—and all these, I think serve to remind the Russians, that whatever war may do to us, it would be suicidal for them. Now, this is a grim and a most horrible asset, but it's still an asset even though it may only be temporary.

Mr. MURROW. Dan Schorr, is there much widespread fear of war in the Soviet Union, would you say?

Mr. SCHORR. There is a great deal of fear of war in the Soviet Union. It goes up and down. It reached a new peak just around the time of the Turkish-Syrian crisis. Ah, they are constantly being told that the Russian Government doesn't want war but constantly being told also that we do, and they always interpret that in terms of the intentions of their own government.

Mr. MURROW. Eric Sevareid, why don't you sum up our assets as viewed from Washington.

Mr. SEVAREID. Well, Ed, we—since time and space are coequal, so the scientists tell us, that with the loss of the protecting oceans we have lost the asset of time, but that's about all, I think. This country is by no means a pushover. We have everything else if we use it. We've got the greatest industrial plant in the world and the greatest industrial leaders. We have a wonderful pool of scientists and engineers if their energies are channeled. We have unlimited money though we act as though we're almost broke half the time and I think we have a world record of generosity and good will toward other parts of the world and of nonaggression, that honest men cannot really doubt. We have a President that people will still most willingly follow—if he can summon the personal strength and the personal will to give them the lead. We have a great deal.

Mr. MURROW. Well, gentlemen, we have now at least tried to lay out in general terms our liabilities and our assets. Now, let's go to the simple problem, something must be done. What should we do? Kendrick?

Mr. KENDRICK. Ed, I think the first thing to do, and I don't mean the only thing, but the first thing to do is to catch up with the Russians in missiles. This may not change the fact that the Russians still have or will have the ability to bring our cities under their missiles, but it might at least give us a stalemate in this field of intercontinental missiles and certainly it would do much to restore our confidence and our psychology of leadership. And even though we started 5 years behind the Russians in the big missiles, a lot of people here believe that we can catch up with them in 2 or 2½ years, provided, of course, they don't step up their pace too much.

Now, another thing we must do is remember that a missile's test is also a test of nerves and we should not magnify the natural misfires and normal failures that you get in testing. Thirdly, I think we should lift the veil of atomic secrecy that still exists between this country and our allies, because only in this way can we further, instead of hinder, nuclear progress; and anyway we don't have secrets from the Russians.

But, most of all, I think that we have to change the climate in this country. I think we have to stop being anti-intellectual, we've go to recognize that an egg—that an egghead—may be a better investment than a blockhead. However, I wouldn't put all our eggheads in one basket [laughter], a basket of science. I think they should be spread around in the general field of education.

MURROW. Dan Schorr, what do you think we must do?

Mr. SCHORR. Well, I've been listening to Alex Kendrick, and I'll admit that I'm somewhat depressed. Not so much by what he has said, as by the emphasis that it seems to indicate. Of course, we have to try (voice in background: And your lucky) [laughter], although, I don't know, maybe before these missiles start to fly it would be luckier to be in Moscow. Of course, we have to try to catch up with Russia in the field of missiles—that sort of goes almost without saying—but even if we do, and I assume we can in proper time, I'm not quite sure where that leaves us and I think that it omits one opportunity that there is to find some kind of a better and more real solution than just catching up and then keeping pace in means of destruction. You remember a year ago we discussed just after the Hungarian rebellion, the possibilities that existed then for some kind of a deal with Russia to use a crude term. They seemed to be ready then for disengagement and had offered us some kind of a zone—deneutralized zone—in Europe extending 500 miles both sides of the Elbe. They were then off balance and I think the terms for such a deal were pretty good.

Now, they've subdued Hungary again, now they have their sputniks up in the sky and the terms are less good, but I still think there are possibilities for dealing with the Russians and for getting some kind of disengagement in Central Europe. The reason I think so, that the pressures are still strong in Russia. I think they need very badly disarmament agreement, I think this was indicated by the way only this past week Khrushchev announced a cut in the armed forces manpower based on nothing more substantial then NATO's statement that we didn't want to use force—a statement that NATO had made many, many times before. I would like to see those opportunities explored. If not, I don't know what's going to happen. But even after we've explored these opportunities and assuming—which I do not assume, that we could get some kind of disengagement, then we really go in for the long haul race—the big competitive coexistence and there it seems to me, we have to catch up with Russia, in those fields of science and education where at the moment they are ahead. And there, I just want to make one brief remark based on observations recently in talking to the Soviet professors and science students. Coming home, it seems to me that many Americans put too much emphasis on the price tag attached to catching up with Russia in science, and it seems to me from dealing with them, looking at and listening to Soviet scientists, that their money—the compensation that they get, how well off they are personally isn't the main point. The main point for them is they have the laboratories and the facilities and the opportunity to do the kind of work they love to do and that this work is valued in their society.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. And they have a status in their society.

Mr. SCHORR. Yes; it is status—a sense of—of role of function which everybody values, partly this is I think, because science is a kind of a holy word in a Communist state, but I think science can be a holy enough word here—even while preserving other holy things.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. You'd say they were pro-egghead in other words?

Mr. SCHORR. Yes, they are pro-egghead.

Mr. SMITH. I've heard it said, that part of the incentive to being a scientist in Russia is the disincentive of being anything else in Russia. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHORR. There is some truth in that, but I don't think it tells the whole story.

Mr. MURROW. Mr. Smith, what do you think we must do and urgently?

Mr. SMITH. Well, I am certainly in agreement with those who think that our diplomacy ought to be much more affirmative where it has been negative and should be more supple where it's been rigid. In fact, I don't think we're going to keep our alliance with us unless it becomes more affirmative and supple, but having said that I would like to agree with Alex Kendrick that our top priority has to be making those new weapons. In respect to getting a disarmament agreement I've covered almost every disarmament conference there has been and I think it's going to be extremely difficult without those weapons. This is a very complicated thought—can I pursue it a little bit.

Mr. MURROW. Please do.

Mr. SMITH. The thing that most disarmament talks run up against and stop at is the fact that Russia has one built-in advantage over us. She—she can launch a surprise attack on us whereas we cannot launch a surprise attack on Russia. Russia can keep secret all the movements it takes to prepare a surprise attack but we can't. They would read about movements in all our newspapers and hear it on the radio and possibly see a little of it on television, so it's very hard for us to do it. Now, any disarmament agreement requires a good degree of inspection of each country to make sure the agreement is being kept, and if Russia agreed to that she could no longer launch these surprise attacks. She could lose her greatest advantage.

Mr. SCHORR. If I could interrupt you for one minute here, I think as long as we concentrate on this question of inspection, the possibility of a disarmament agreement is going to be very slim indeed. The kind of inspection we want is a kind of inspection that the Russians won't let Russians do in their own country and with the underground launching pads and—and the missiles on submarines, it does seem to me that this question of inspection is getting a bit outdated.

Mr. MURROW. Well, then, you are saying that there is no real chance.

Mr. SCHORR. I—what the Russians want is a lot of things, which I don't hope that we will give them, but I do think the approach to the problem instead of an overall disarmament agreement with inspection is, instead of trying to decide to avoid surprise attacks in a clinch, is to try and break out of the clinch—to try to disengage, to try to——

Mr. SEVAREID. It takes two to try to break out of a clinch.

Mr. SCHORR. Yes. (Several speaking simultaneously.)

Mr. KALISCHER. Once you have inspection, Dan, how do you know that any agreement is going to be kept?

Mr. SCHORR. You can start with a partial agreement in an area of Europe where you can inspect, but an overall disarmament agreement with inspection in Russia is just unpalatable to that regime as long as it is Communist and I'm afraid it's going to remain Communist for still a little time.

Mr. MURROW. Leiser, what—what do you think we ought to do as viewed from Germany?

Mr. LEISER. Well, Ed, our European allies emphatically think that we should start to negotiate and start now. Their attitude seems to be, don't just stand there—say something. Well, if we're to say anything and find out what the Russians real answers are, I think that we're going to have to say it quietly behind closed doors, using the techniques of old-fashioned diplomacy. I think we've had enough of summit meetings, beating of the propaganda drums and the clinking of the martini glasses. I think perhaps an example offers itself in what happened when Russia's Malik and America's Jessup got together and settled the Berlin blockade—an agreement by the way that has stuck——

Mr. KENDRICK. What do you mean that the Russians wanted to settle the Berlin blockade, how do you know that they really want to engage in disengagement?

Mr. LEISER. I don't. I think we won't find out until we try.

Mr. KENDRICK. Well, they proposed it. (Several speaking simultaneously.)

Mr. LEISER. We can only find out by negotiating.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Alex, you used to be in Vienna and the Russians disengaged from Austria.

Mr. KENDRICK. That's true.

Mr. MURROW. Go ahead Ernie.

Mr. LEISER. Well, I was going to say, that the—the technique of negotiation must be the old-fashioned diplomatic kind. The substance of negotiation I think, must start modestly. We start small, we don't try and settle all the issues that divide us—perhaps we take one on disengagement, a small issue—a relatively small issue, we discuss the possibility of our withdrawing our troops or at least our atomic weapons to the Rhine and find out how far the Soviets are prepared to withdraw their weapons. I suggest that this is an area in which the Russians might be willing to permit inspection.

Mr. MURROW. Well, Winston, what do you think we must do immediately, what is the urgent thing we must accomplish in the Middle East—if we can?

Mr. BURDETT. Ed, I think that first priority in the Middle East must go to achieving or at any rate trying to achieve a settlement of the biggest single problem—the Arab-Israeli conflict. There will be profound instability in the Middle East as long as that conflict goes on and as long as there is this instability there will be no rest in the cold war between the Russians and ourselves in the area.

Mr. MURROW. How do you think it could be settled?

Mr. BURDETT. Well, we cannot get that settlement certainly without doing some unpopular things. I think it will take time and that a year will not be enough. But certainly we will get nowhere if we go on treating this as the untouchable problem, we've got to make a start and a try. The end purpose of any settlement of course, must be to get full Arab recognition that Israel is here to stay. But the Israelis, I think, must face up to the fact that they bear a major responsibility for the 927,000 Arab refugees. They have to make an unconditional offer to take the refugees back. Now I do not believe that such an offer would cost Israel a great deal, the refugees—like other Arabs have come to realize—especially since the Israeli invasion of Egypt that Israel is strong and cannot be wiped out. I think that only a small portion of them—even those who owned property in Palestine would want to return to Israel in order to become second-class Israeli citizens. Most of them would probably accept compensation which will have to be provided and would be willing to seek a new life elsewhere.

Mr. KENDRICK. May I ask you something? Why don't the Arab States take back the Arab refugees since they're the ones who caused them to be refugees in the first place.

Mr. BURDETT. Whether they caused them to be refugees in the first place, Alex, is a matter of great historical dispute. I think myself, that the Arabs and the Israeli's share a responsibility there. They do not take them back for a political reason. Namely, to perpetuate their grievances against Israel and thereby to perpetuate their argument against them.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. All right Winson, why don't these Arab States use some of their billions and billions of dollars of oil money to do something about taking care of Arab refugees? Why does Israel have to put up all the money?

Mr. BURDETT. Well, it's true that King Saud is a billionaire, but he's a broke billionaire. He's always running out of funds.

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. You should be so broke. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURDETT. But I think secondly as part of a general settlement, Israel must give up land—not a great deal of land, but enough to return to Arab rule the Arab villages and farms along the borders and also to end the absurdity of Arab communities being split down the middle by a demarcation line.

Mr. MURROW. Don't you think that any Israeli Government that accepted that proposal would be out of office in 24 hours?

Mr. BURDETT. No; I believe the opposite, Ed, I believe that such territorial concessions are a political necessity. I believe that no Arab Government could risk a settlement that did not involve such concessions. I believe that an Israeli Government could. There would be a crisis in Israel, the government might fall, but I don't believe that this would affect the ultimate stability of government itself in Israel, whereas, I believe it would follow—it would lead to a—a series of breakdowns in the Arab States.

Mr. KENDRICK. Well, Winston, you're saying—you're saying the same thing that Dan says, that it only takes one to unclinch.

Mr. BURDETT. There is a difference—there is a great difference. Ah, the Arabs are asking various things of the Israeli's, various relatively small practical concessions. I think they would settle. For Israel is asking only one thing of the Arabs, and that is, peace on her borders and full Arab recognition. This, she would have to get out of any settlement. She could not be asked to make these sacrifices in order to get an impermanent settlement and in order for this settlement to be accepted as permanent, there would have to be absolute guaranties of Arab-Israeli borders, in the first instance by the United States and certainly also by the United Nations. Now, I don't wish to imply, I think it would be absurd and dishonest to imply that there are no political risks involved in seeking a settlement of this kind. I think there are risks, there are great risks, for example, badly handled, this whole project could set off new dissensions among the Arab States, each of which is only too ready to jump on its neighbor with accusations of sellout to Israel. I think also, that there would be stiff resistance and possibly serious political repercussions in Irael itself.

I think though, that Israel could stand up to those repercussions, and the essential political fact here, is that the United States is the only country in a position to bring pressure and to induce the Israeli's to give up some of their fixed old emotional positions.

Mr. MURROW. Of course, the Russians are also in a position to encourage the Arabs in their ambition to wipe Israel off the map.

Mr. BURDETT. This is true, and all the more reason it seems to me that we should try to meet this problem before the Russians try to exploit it.

Mr. MURROW. Mr. Kalischer, what do you think we should do in the Far East?

Mr. KALISCHER. Well, we've got to do something that I think is a thousand times harder than the crash missiles program. We've got to revamp our thinking entirely in regard to about half the world's population, maybe more, the semicolonial and colonial and former colonial peoples. While we're staring hypnotized at Russia across Western Europe, we're being outflanked in Asia, in Africa, even in the South Pacific. Now, the present Afro-Asian Conference is a sort of thing that points this up. The Indonesians have a dispute with the Dutch. They asked us to mediate—we refused, now, they're getting the sort of support that they want from the Communist countries.

Mr. SCHORR. Not yet. They just asked for it.

Mr. KALISCHER. Well, they've asked for it, but you—well, they've gotten moral support and this is exactly what President Sukarno said to a visiting Congressman in Jakarta (interrupted). No, but President Sukarno asked our Congressman SAUND, he said, "I don't just want American military and economic aid, I want American political aid," and that, is what he is getting from the Communist countries. We've also got to do something else. We've also got to admit that our China policy is bankrupt. I don't think there is a general in the Pentagon who honestly believes that Chiang Kai-shek has a China mandarin's chance of fighting his way back to the mainland or that he'd be able to remain on Formosa unless we kept him there. I don't think there is a diplomat in the Far East that thinks that our policy of nonrecognition in 7 years of economic sanctions is going to bring down the Communist government. I think we've got to admit that we've got to do what our major allies in Europe and Asia have admitted and do—and that is, recognize the Peking regime for what it is—the unfriendly, but existing government of mainland China. We should recognize the Chiang regime for what it is, the friendly and existing government of Formosa, and then I think, possibly we might try something rather unorthodox like offering farm products aid to Red China the next time there is flood or famine. They—if they accepted, it would mean that Russia could not or would not help, if they refused, it would mean that they would have to explain this to their own people. In either case, we'd get out from behind this wall we're building around China which is really a wall we're building around ourselves.

Mr. MURROW. Schoenbrun, what do you think is urgent to be accomplished?

Mr. SCHOENBRUN. Well, I think we might begin by trying to correct those false habits of thought that the President talked about. If our free system is not inherently stronger than the Communist system, then it follows logically that we must work harder, pay more taxes, and have more respect for learning. I think too, we should give up some of our own self-deluding myths, for example, the illusion that Russia is going to come unstuffed because of internal pressures. Dan Schorr has told us that Russia is likely to evolve, but no revolution in sight. If that's so, we've got to start living with the idea that Russia is going to be around for a very long time, that the competition is not going to end, it's going to grow more intense. I think that's why our allies have asked us to negotiate. Not necessarily a global settlement, Ed, personally, I don't believe that disarmament can be brought about over night. I am more inclined to agree with those of my colleagues who said that we ought to try to have a series of disentanglements at the pressure points, in the Middle East, in middle Europe, in any specific area or on any specific issue, where we can seek the chances of agreements through normal diplomatic channels. And, finally, Ed, if I may say so very briefly, I think we've got to be true to our own faith. We cannot support colonial powers without weakening the moral posture of what we call the Free World. And, when Mr. Dulles tells the American people as he did recently, that our ties of friendship with Spain are symbolic of the links in the Free World, I think he's misusing the words "free world." Let us by all means have alliances with Spain and with Yugoslavia, let's admit, however, that they are alliances of mutual self-interest—not of mutual ideology, let's not misabuse and abuse that precious word, "freedom." President Eisenhower said that this is a time for greatness. I would suggest it is also a time for facing up to the full truth.

Mr. MURROW. Eric Sevareid, what do you think we must do?

Mr. SEVAREID. Well, Ed, to put it very briefly, I am assuming that a control of space over this—I am assuming that the world leadership and the very fundamental scientific revolution is at stake—a revolution is going to change man's life enormously. Therefore, I believe, so far as this country is concerned, we have to try to go all out. I think there will have to be, whether we like it or not, some Government hand directly on the economy. I think we must get some better control of our dwindling natural resources, some better control of our rather scattered and somewhat misused scientists and engineers. Surely, we've got to get at this shockingly delayed problem of an obsolescent educational system. We may even need a bigger army for more flexible military policy around the world. If all this means higher taxes, then so be it. I think most of us would rather be broke than dead, though sometimes the Government seems to have some doubts about it.

Mr. MURROW. Well, gentlemen, would any of you like to sum up this discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEVAREID. Would you?

Mr. MURROW. Well, I'll try and, if you have disagreement at any point, by all means speak up.

It seems to me there are certain things upon which you gentlemen are in complete agreement. First of all, you all agree that our lack of leadership is showing. That some of our illusions have been shattered and that many of our allies have become disillusioned. You agree that our allies are determined (1) to talk with the Russians, and (2) perhaps to do business with them. That they are not impressed with our belief, widely held, that the Russians are going to collapse from internal pressure. You also appear to believe that if we persist in our self-righteous, inflexible policy, matching bomb with bomb, missile with missile, threat with threat, that then, within measurable course, we in this country may find ourselves merely a great continental island off the coast of Kamchatka with the rest of the world either united against us or wholly indifferent to our fate. It seems that you also agree that we must somehow disenthrall ourselves and learn not only to think anew, but act anew, and I have also the impression that none of you believe that death in defense of a balanced budget is a proper way for free men to die. You all seem to feel that the President posed the question properly in Paris when he said, "What will we pay in freedom for freedom?" but that he has not yet made much progress in answering that question. You've cast up what I would call a rather ominous balance sheet; yet somehow I find your discourse rather optimistic. None of you suggests that humans, having devised a method of destroying humanity will now proceed to use it. None of you mention the phrase "preventive war." Several of you stressed the fact that the free world is richly endowed with men, metal, machines, and money, and that what is required is a call to sacrifice, which, according to Sevareid, would be promptly answered by the people in this country. Dan Schorr certainly made it abundantly clear that the Russians have their own problems frequently well concealed, but they are certainly not 9 feet tall. Most of you, I have the feeling, although you didn't say it, have rather the sense that this is the best of all possible times to be alive, because never before have the stakes been so high. Never before have the actions and decisions of this country been so important. And I think you also—most of you—had the feeling that if we spend too much time debating the past we may lose the future.

Thank you very much, gentlemen, and good health and good news. Good night and good luck.

PROJECTION 1958

ANNOUNCER. As we approach the close of the midcentury's most pregnant year—a year that has seen man begin to move out of the confines of his world—NBC News, mindful of the extraordinary significance of recent events, calls together, for the first time in its history, its news correspondents from abroad and here at home to bring you—against the reflection of 1957—their Projection 1958.

First, twice a Peabody Award winner for news: Chet Huntley.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Good evening. Perhaps never before at the dawn of a new year has there been such an urgent need to know: What are the basic facts of today that may help shape our tomorrows? What appear to be the trends in the making? What deductions, founded on trained observations, might with reason be called projections of the year ahead? Well, NBC News asked these questions of its full roster of correspondents—300 alert newsmen reporting to the network from 75 countries abroad and here at home, embracing the entire globe. We wish it were possible to bring all of these men back, and have them sit and chat with you informally in your living room. Since that's obviously impractical, we have sought to do the next best thing.

From their posts in distant news centers of the world and here in this country, we have brought together 12 key correspondents reporting on the most sensitive areas in the news today. They will answer questions that perhaps you yourself might like to put to them.

And as with any guests who enter your home, their opinions may be different from your own. But there is, of course, no obligation to agree with them. The hope is that the facts they report will help you make up your own mind.

Now, most of these newsmen are familiar to most of you—their voices, if not their faces.

From his base in London, where he is NBC's senior European correspondent, author and longtime news observer in many capitals of the world—Joseph C. Harsch.

Here from Moscow, to which he went after covering the Korean war for NBC News—Irving R. Levine.

From Paris, where he once studied at the Sorbonne, and for 20 years a member of NBC's news-gathering staff in Washington, the head of our Paris bureau—Leif Eid.

From Vienna, representing NBC News in Eastern Europe, NBC's former White House correspondent—Frank Bourgholtzer.

Next, from Egypt, the youngest member of the NBC foreign news staff, yet a veteran of the Suez crisis—Welles Hangen, NBC in Cairo.

From his headquarters in Rome, to which he went after years in London, NBC's correspondent in the Mediterranean area—Edwin Newman.

And from Tokyo, the one who traveled the farthest to get here, former editor and publisher in the Far East, NBC's James Robinson.

Now to our domestic staff. From Washington, my NBC News and 1956 conventions and election partner, David Brinkley, Good evening, David.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Good evening, Chet.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Next, one whose penetrating analysis of the news from Washington has often won him distinction, now editor of NBC's Sunday afternoon interview program, Look Here—Martin Agronsky.

From Washington, too, the network's former World War II Pacific correspondent, and once head of NBC's news bureaus in Paris and Germany—Robert McCormick.

And from NBC in Chicago, the newsman whose reports from Little Rock gained national distinction—John Chancellor.

Well, gentlemen, suppose we turn our attention to the major event of 1957, the first launching of a satellite into space by the Russians, which permeates every aspect of our national and international existence. Joe, suppose you bring its implication into focus.

"MAGINOT LINE"

Mr. HARSCH. I'll try, Chet. May I start by submitting to you that the year 1957 will have to go down as the second since the last war in which our pride was humbled, our complacency checked, and our estimate of the outside world corrected. The other bad year was 1949. We had entered it, if you remember, complacent—again—behind the "Maginot line" of our monopoly in atomic weapons. And that summer communism captured China, and Russia got her first atomic bomb.

During this year of 1957, this story was in large measure repeated. We entered the year complacent behind our new "Maginot line" of presumed superiority in technical skill. This, we told ourselves comfortably, was the American century. And then first one and then a second sputnik began circling methodically over our heads—and we tried quickly to match it with our own. We sent up Vanguard, and it fizzled. We had been beaten in the area where we were supposed to be strongest.

The laughter in Russia was raucous and triumphant. Among our allies it was muffled by anxiety, sympathy, and shared embarrassment. But the whole world laughed or grinned. We—the mighty, the omniscient, the all-confident—had been humbled. Psychologically, it was another Pearl Harbor. It challenges the adequacy of our military preparedness, our educational system, and our foreign policy. It challenges our capacity to estimate our opponent accurately. It leaves us facing the question, Chet, whether we have the will, the wisdom, and the maturity to recover from the year 1957—at least as well as we did, in fact, recover from the year 1949.

MISSILES AND REALISM

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, Joe, you've stated the basic theme of what I should think would be the remainder of this discussion and against which it's likely to develop. First, and most important, of course, are sputnik's military implications. Now, Irving, do the Russians themselves see any changes in their military position?

Mr. LEVINE. Well, certainly, Chet, Russia's leaders realize it takes more than two sputniks to tip the military balance of power. Shortly before I left Moscow, Premier Bulganin told me and other correspondents at an Embassy party that now it's America's turn to put up a satellite. This seems to recognize that before long the United States can be expected to develop a dependable rocket. Russia's leaders are realists—they know that their monopoly on intercontinental-ballistic missiles will acquire a decisive military significance only when they have a stockpile. Until that grim day, America will be able to devastate Russia from its overseas bases, and by the time Russia does acquire a military stockpile of missiles the United States should have its own rocket arsenal—at least let's hope so. Soviet propaganda ignores this possibility and is sputnik-boasting in order to try to inject futility into the American alliance and, most of all, to try to convince Russians that only communism can produce sputniks.

Well—many Russians are convinced. But other ordinary Russians with whom I've spoken see other problems on the ground—such as the housing shortage, which is so severe that sometimes as many as six people in a family live in a single room. Of course, Russians are proud of the accomplishment. But on the day that the first sputnik was launched, I saw very few Russians gazing into the sky, while there was a great crowd of Russians in front of my hotel staring with great envy at an American Ford. Well, I know one Russian who laughs every time he reads of talk of Soviet space travel to places like Venus. He knows that he isn't permitted to travel even to Vienna.

And then there's another Russian, Chet, who told me this story. It seems that when the beep-beep of the Soviet sputnik was decoded it was found to be crying, "I'll burn up and I'll break up but I won't come back to Russia."

BEEP-BEEP

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, that brings us to the next question, namely, What is that beep-beep saying to our military men, David?

Mr. BRINKLEY. Well, of course, our first response is to spend more time and money on our own weapons. This is the obvious and natural response, growing out of the instinct for survival. There is no doubt at all that we'll get the weapons. They'll be late but they'll be here because they have to be. That's our first response, and the easy one, because all it takes is time and money. The second one is more difficult. We learned in 1957 that while we are the richest country in the world we are not necessarily the brainiest. President Eisenhower, in Paris, said that while our free-enterprise system is fine, it does not necessarily come in, every time, first with the best. Well, we may not like to believe that, but there is no arguing with the Russian scientific-intellectual achievement that we cannot match.

Sputnik is both a work of mechanics and of a high order of intellect. Mechanics we have in plenty. On intellect we have not enough and we don't think highly enough of what we do have. So in 1957 we were shown that we need more money. And in 1957 and later we will be forced to realize that we will need all of the brainpower we can find and all the education we can get—and a new national respect for the intellectual, regardless of what his personal income may be. The first response, again, is easy. But the second is not because it requires us to look at ourselves critically and to see if we have not spent too many years putting the wrong values on the wrong things.

WHAT IT WILL COST

Mr. HUNTLEY. There's certainly no question about our being concerned, David. But to do what everyone is demanding that we do is going to cost money and it's going to seriously affect the size and breakdown of our national budget, and the status of our own pocketbooks.

Mr. BRINKLEY. I certainly think so, Chet.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, Bob, you've been watching the economic aspects of all this. Just how astronomic will it go?

Mr. MCCORMICK. Chet, I don't think there is any way in the world we could possibly meet all the money demands that have been stirred up by sputnik. Just consider a moment. The National Education Association has come out with a program that would cost $5 billion a year after 5 years. The program for atomic bomb shelters is figured to cost $20 billion. Then the supersecret Gaither report, we now learn, has essential recommendations that they figure will cost $8 billion—and probably much more, as a matter of fact. Then, there's the question of training scientists—and more and better laboratories—and more experimental missiles—and nuclear submarines—and everything else you can think of. As a matter of fact, nobody knows what, really, they cost. But one Washington guess is, it might be $50 billion a year. Now, $50 billion plus the $72 billion we're spending now come out to $122 billion, that's almost half of the public debt that we'd be spending every 12 months. Now, obviously, some or many of these requests are going to be refused. But it's almost certain we won't have a "feelable" tax cut next year. We might even get a Federal sales tax. And austerity is not the answer; austerity may be a result but austerity by itself cannot save money or make money—and money is what we need if we're going to stay in business.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, so much then for United States reaction brought on by the Soviet penetration of outer space. But what about its effect on the rest of the world? Now, you fellows from overseas have personally noted these developments on the scene. Suppose we start with a report from France. Leif?

OLD STORY FOR FRANCE

Mr. EID. Well, Chet, there certainly was no panic in France. You know, the Frenchman has lived with threats and aggression for a long, long time—three invasions in less than a century. He was a little ashamed of us for being panicked into a miserable Vanguard failure. But the Frenchman also spotted something new. For the first time the United States, itself, is definitely front line, and the Russians need not follow that bloody country's old path through Europe to get at their principal enemy. Now, or in the future, Soviet missiles can arch over Europe on their way to America and, for the present at least, we need Europe more than Europe needs us.

I've had this spelled out very carefully by men at the Quai d'Orsay. But I'm convinced that was French bargaining. I've heard no suggestion of French neutralism, but they have some bones to pick with us—old bones—and they know that we need France for the key to the defense of Europe. They know we need missile launching ramps in France and they'll agree—but for a price: military, political and probably economic.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Leif, we could probably do worse than remember that one line—France will have some old bones to pick with us. Frank, Eastern Europe is your beat. How have the satellite nations responded to sputnik?

Mr. BOURGHOLTZER. First, there are the people, Chet. I've talked to lots of them. In Warsaw, a couple of weeks ago, a friend said to me: "Ignore it, because we don't count on a war. If war comes, we will be destroyed. So we just don't admit the possibility."

SPUTNIK IS STRENGTH

But I think most people in Eastern Europe do feel that now is certainly not a time to deny the Russians no matter what they may ask. Now, militarily, the Polish Government, joined by the Czechs and backed by the others, is pushing a plan for a nonatomic arms area in central Europe. This is really a proposal to keep the lead in the ICBM's that the Russians have by denying us the bases for intermediate-range missiles. There's one other problem—that of whether the Russians can rely on the satellite armies. I think in 1958 they can rely on them much more than if sputnik had been American.

Mr. HUNTLEY. We will get back to you in a moment, Frank. Now, Welles Hangen, did you find that sputnik had any important repercussions in the Middle East?

Mr. HANGEN. Sputnik caught the eye—and the imagination—of many Middle Easterners. They've been scanning the heavens for a long time looking for signs of who's winning the cold war. Many of them said: "This is it. The West isn't all powerful. Russia, once as backward as we are today, is now in the lead." And you know how Arabs are impressed by strength. To them sputnik is strength. Nasser and the Communists, of course, made the most of it in their propaganda to exalt Moscow and ridicule America. But even pro-Western Arabs are asking nowadays: How can the Baghdad Pact stop Russia with Russian moons hurtling over Middle Eastern countries in a few seconds. What use is it for America to give recoilless rifles to Jordan and jeeps to Lebanon when a warlike sputnik can annihilate Jerusalem and Beirut? Many of them think that's a symbol of the decline of the West in their region: Britain and France pulling out, Russia offering aid to its Afro-Asian brothers in Cairo, earthbound America trying to catch up.

Mr. HUNTLEY. What you say was all there this past week in Cairo at the Afro-Asian Conference. What about the reactions you observed in the Far East, Jim Robinson?

NEUTRALISM LOOKS GOOD

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, initially, Chet, sputnik gave most Asians a big laugh. But now these countries are weighing future policies based around those things in the sky. It's not that the Soviet Union's reputation has been enhanced so much as that neutralism has never looked so good to so many people. Japan is the key of our defense structure in the Far East. United States intelligence in Tokyo has told me that we no longer can depend on Japan in case of a war. And the other day in Thailand, one of the policy-makers there said: "Well, I'm sorry, but you can't count on us." Sputnik is responsible for this trend of Asian nations stepping off the United States bandwagon.

Mr. HUNTLEY. How do they respond to sputnik in your area, Ed Newman?

Mr. NEWMAN. Chet, I'm that happy singing fellow who knows that in a couple of places sputnik made no difference at all. One is Israel, which still wants any protection the United States may offer. The other is Turkey. The Turks live much too close to Russia to worry about things that travel for thousands of miles before they hit. But if you want to talk about the difference sputnik did make, it seems to me that maybe the biggest was this: it foreshadowed the day President Eisenhower's open-skies proposal will take effect without any legislative or executive action by any government.

We—and the Russians—will be sending up satellites equipped with cameras and they'll photograph everything imaginable, and you can see what the effects will be on types of weapons produced, and where they're sited and how they are camouflaged, and so on. It's a curious development, I think. The West wants disarmament with inspection. Russia argues for disarmament without inspection. What we're going to have is inspection without disarmament.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, Ed, it seems to me you've rather adroitly taken us from a concern with armament to a concern with disarmament, only a few weeks ago as hot a subject, I suppose, as there was on the international agenda. What happened, Joe?

LONG-RANGE ROCKETS

Mr. HARSCH. Well, Chet, the sputnik has certainly completely changed the disarmament problem for 1958. The rockets that launched the sputniks were long in range. The Russians claim they were intercontinental. The long, long disarmament talks in London last summer all had as their main purpose an attempt to freeze the arms race before we and the Russians moved into the age of the long-range missiles. It's too late to freeze it because we're there now. So the experts have had to start all over again and try to figure out new formulas for limiting the costs and the dangers of the arms race.

If there are more talks in 1958 under the label of disarmament, of course, it will be a misnomer. They'll serve—they can only serve—as a sort of vehicle for diplomatic exchanges. Real disarmament still lies down at the end—the far end—of the rainbow.

FIELD DAY FOR PRESS

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, no doubt here about this conclusion, sad as it may be. Now, let's move from sputnik's impact on our defense to its effects on our foreign policy. Here, too, abroad, the papers have been enjoying a field day at the expense of the United States—as we can see from these foreign cartoons brought back by you fellows. In the arms race pictured by the London Daily Express you'll note the American flag is on the wheel chair. A Vienna Communist paper takes a crack at disorganized NATO at sea with the sardonic comment, "Splendid progress in the coordination of the common effort." A French cartoonist sees Dulles as a lurid belly dancer seeking to entice the leaders of the Middle East, while the Egyptians picture him here as a duck. (His vacation retreat is on Duck Island.) And here he's hatching all sorts of conspiracies. And beginning with this cartoon supposedly representing him at the age of five, it shows him gradually blossoming into a devil—no less—complete with horns. Now, invariably, I notice most of the bitter cartoons—and even the vulgar ones—seem to tear Secretary of State Dulles apart while bypassing Mr. Eisenhower. Martin, what's the significance of that, and what's the outlook on our foreign policy for the coming year?

Mr. AGRONSKY. Well, Chet, there are two reasons why Mr. Dulles gets the brunt of the editorial and cartoon criticism. First, there is the way that he has taken to himself the phrasing and the formulating of our foreign policy. It's becoming known as his foreign policy rather than the President's really. He's the front man. There's a penalty for that, Chet, and he's incurring it. And, second, more than usual, there's a discrepancy about what Mr. Dulles says that our policy is and how he actually conducts it. He sounds ready, for example, to go it alone one day and then he tries to put the Western Alliance back together again the next. He strides briskly to the brink of war in one declaration and he rejects war as a solution to anything in the next.

BRINK OF WAR

Naturally, all of this makes for uncertainty and for confusion as to where he really stands. And it inevitably opens him up to criticism for what he says rather than for what he does. As for where his policy leads in the year ahead, Chet, I think the great immediate question is whether Mr. Dulles will insist that his policy of negotiating only from a position of strength must preclude our dealing now with Russia. Our European allies want us to arm but they insist as much that we display the olive branch as prominently on the one hand as nuclear weapons on the other. Mr. Dulles seems reluctant to parley. Britain's Macmillan says: "We arm to parley. Let Mr. Dulles walk or appear to walk on the brink of war." We must expect that our allies will take over the lead—really—in negotiating the peace. Chet, we can only hope that Mr. Dulles' ways are right.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Now, Leif, bearing in mind what Martin has said and also the fact that you had a big NATO meeting in France, a couple of weeks ago—what's your feeling about all this?

Mr. EID. Chet, I'm sure you noticed one thing about that big NATO summit meeting, and that was a sort of gang-up of Continental Europeans to force Mr. Dulles to recognize the idea that NATO should be more than just a military alliance. They insist that it be broadly political too, covering in some way any ally's interest anywhere in the world. Mr. Dulles insists on America's right to go it alone or act alone outside the NATO area anywhere.

Now, this wasn't any challenge to America's leadership but some of the Europeans do deny that all diplomatic wisdom resides in Washington. The implications of the European ideas are very broad but what brought it up immediately was the arms-to-Tunisia issue, which was the latest flareup on the colonial question. The French don't deny the need for colonial reform. What they do deny is that independence is the only way to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and they think that anti-colonialist talk and policy only opens up a lot of new, unstable and uneconomic nations to Communist domination. They tell me that if the French are forced out tomorrow, it will be Algeria first—the next day all of North Africa. And then with the Communists on the Atlantic, the flank of Europe will be turned.

VANTAGE POINT IN MOSCOW

Mr. HUNTLEY. Irving, how does American foreign policy look to someone who's been sitting in Russia the past few years?

Mr. LEVINE. Well, I think the Soviet censors will probably change that to "lying" in Russia—at least that's what they say most American correspondents do there. To get to your question: Often it is difficult to see just what American foreign policy toward Russia is. American diplomats I've spoken to admit that it's mostly negative containment to resist Soviet expansion. Well, of course, that's essential, but is it enough? Once we spoke about liberation of Russia's satellites, but that turned out to be a mere impractical election slogan when we failed to intervene in the Hungarian revolt.

As seen from Moscow, Chet, it would seem that there can be positive objectives, beside the objective of overthrowing; for example, exchanges of Americans and Russians. Certainly, the more we crack Russia's shell of isolation, the greater chance there is of changing the structure inside. Shouldn't we explore the possibilities of exploiting Communist China's economic dependence on Russia? I think it can be argued that Russia has a more natural enemy in Communist China than in the United States. And might it not be profitable for us to reexamine our attitude of automatic rejection. Something need not necessarily be bad simply because Russia suggests it—and that includes conferences.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, Irv, what do you think are the prospects if this policy of yours is pursued?

HEADACHES FOR RUSSIA

Mr. LEVINE. Well, Chet, fortunately Russia has at least as many headaches as we do—Titoism; a drop in production due to Khrushchev's drastic reorganization of industry; the problem of how to produce both sputniks and shoes; how to satisfy the ever-growing yearning for freedom in the post-Stalin era without inviting self-destruction of communism. And this Soviet dilemma—this series of Soviet dilemmas—may produce promising opportunities for the United States if only the American policy is agile in 1958.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Then, Irving——

Mr. BOURGHOLTZER. Irving and Chet—if the gentleman from Moscow will yield the floor?

Mr. HUNTLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BOURGHOLTZER. There's another side to what Irving's been saying. Incidentally, we know you are not "lying" in Moscow.

Mr. LEVINE. Thank you, Frank.

Mr. BOURGHOLTZER. We have been helping two Communist countries, Tito's in Yugoslavia, and Gomulka's in Poland. There's a gag going around that perhaps Tito should have been allowed to go back to Khrushchev because they deserve each other so well. But this is only a flip way of stating the basic thesis which is that no matter how independent they may be, they continue to be Communists. Under them, the people may live better with aid. But the regimes—the Communist regimes—are perpetuated. Well, now, having made this argument, Chet, I think I should take the other side and say that under our present American policy I would think the welfare of the people should win out on the question of aid because, as we showed in Budapest, where we're concerned these Communist regimes will be perpetuated.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, Frank, let's see how Welles Hangen feels about this, reviewing our same foreign policy at work in the Middle East? Welles, with the Eisenhower doctrine at work in your area—which is not true of Frank's area—how does our foreign policy look from Cairo?

Mr. HANGEN. Well, Chet, we all know the Eisenhower doctrine has won ground to some degree in the Middle East—but, unfortunately, not many hearts. Some 10 Middle Eastern countries have taken up the doctrine's promises of economic and political help, but most of these countries—or at least their rulers—were already committed to the United States in one form or another. King Saud, for example, has an oil income of $300 million a year in Saudi Arabia. Naturally, he doesn't like Communists. The Eisenhower doctrine helps us to help people like Saud. But it does not tackle what most Middle Easterners consider their real problems—feudalism, Israel, and disunity.

One Arab said to me: "We're a sick people—frustrated—living in mud huts—just emerging from centuries of foreign oppression. When you talk about communism, you're only speaking of symptoms and not causes."

ARABS SUSPICIOUS

Then, in Arab eyes, let's admit any American policy is suspected of pro-Israel bias. The Arabs also suspect the Eisenhower doctrine is just another Western trick to keep them divided. One young Iraqi went so far as to say: "We would rather have unity under a demogogue like Nasser than what we have today, even if all our rulers were perfect—and they are not." The immediate outlook is for more Soviet influence in this area and not less. Perhaps in the long run we'll be able to stop Russia's inroads. But, immediately, the prospect is for Soviet influence—except in countries like Turkey that have bitter experience with Moscow. I think you will agree with that, Ed.

Mr. NEWMAN. Yes; I'd agree with that, Welles, but unlike the Russians the Turks do like us. And that is easily the most remarkable statement that will be made on this program today. Now, it's true that we supported and stood by Turkey when she was having her trouble with Syria and Russia. And it's true that Secretary Dulles said precisely the right thing to make the Russians turn the pressure off. But it goes deeper than this. It may be argued, I think, that Turkey is the most faithful ally we have. She stands between the Russians and the Arab world. She keeps a big and determined army in the field. And now, she can hardly wait to take our medium-range missiles. Now Welles said that the Arabs think we're too friendly to Israel. And, as you might suspect, Israel thinks we're not. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion told me, only a week ago, that he wants an American guaranty. I think, though, he knows he's not going to get it. That is why he's made his diplomatic approach to West Germany. He's really trying to get into NATO through the back door.

Mr. HUNTLEY. That's a new thought. Well, we've touched the United States, Europe, the Middle East on foreign policy. Now Jim, what's the outlook for the success or failure of this foreign policy in Asia?

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, our foreign policy in the Far East is highlighted by what it avoids—recognition of Red China. There is increasing insistence by our Asian allies that we, the United States, must officially admit and act on the fact that Communist China is a going concern; that Washington policymakers can't continue airily dismissing 640 million Chinese as a passing phase, or acting on the assumption that revolt or war will soon topple the Peiping Government. These views just aren't valid in Asia any longer.

GIFTS VERSUS LOANS

While we're building a tremendous bureaucracy to give away money in Asia, the Communists are making hardheaded business loans. The result of this is that even our closest Asian allies are threatening to go over to the Communist camp if we stop this dole. And you know, Chet, there are growing numbers of Asians thinking of us Americans as the belligerents—for the American voices heard in the Far East today are mostly our admirals and generals, all giving fist-shaking speeches. In contrast, the Communists are tiptoeing through the Far East in ballet slippers singing gentle songs of peace.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Now, the phrase "foreign aid" has been invoked in a couple of ways. Bob, is the trend of reduced foreign aid of last year going to be pursued in Congress in 1958?

Mr. MCCORMICK. No, Chet; I think it'll go up because it's practically the only way we found to win allies and influence neutrals. And President Eisenhower has said that it's essential. But there's another danger—the revival of pressures for higher protective tariffs. Most foreign countries still buy more from us than they sell us and we've made up some of the deficit with our foreign aid. Obviously, if tariffs were raised, the amounts other countries sell us would be sharply reduced. Then, if foreign aid were eliminated, the trade deficits would be simply more than a great many of these countries could stand. They'd turn to Russia for help, literally, to keep from falling apart.

EFFECTS OF SLUMP

Incidentally, if our business slump should become much more serious, we might have considerable trouble with our program of helping to finance the manufacture of arms abroad because, already, a few businessmen and industrialists are complaining that we shouldn't give armaments contracts to foreign countries when our own industrial production is running at about 80 percent of capacity. But actually, one of the big fights will be over the question of whether foreign aid should be strictly military, whether it should be straight economic assistance, or whether it should be technical help—an expansion of President Truman's old point 4 program.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, I should think then that we might agree here that the continuation of our foreign aid—whatever the form it may take—is essential. But now, what are some of our other fundamental policy problems?

Mr. NEWMAN. Well, you know, Chet, if you would run an essay contest for American reporters and ask "What is right with John Foster Dulles?" you would not get a very spirited entry. But I think we must be fair. We must admit that Dulles has to conduct an extremely difficult foreign policy. You know we hold together an alliance that includes old friends and traditional enemies. We try to remain on good terms with all of our allies, with their former colonies and with their present colonies that really don't want to be colonies any more. We try to keep a balance between the Arabs and Israel. We try to crumble Russia's empire a bit without provoking open war. We have to judge at all times what changes in Russia are in policy or merely in tactics. None of this is easy. All of it is extremely risky.

Mr. AGRONSKY. You know, Chet, I think Ed makes a point that really deserves expansion. I think we can say—and I say this without sarcasm—that our hearts are pure. I suppose you have to make the additional observation that nice guys sometimes finish last. But the fact is, I think, that all of the criticism that we've addressed to our foreign policy is directed, really, at the methods, not at the goals. I think a few kind words can be said for Mr. Eisenhower on this score. After all, no one would doubt the sincerity of our dedication to peace. Certainly, we deserve credit for rejecting completely the thesis of a preventive war. We've never attempted to use our power for our own material aggrandizement. Certainly, we've adhered completely to the generous American tradition of helping those countries who really aren't in a position to help themselves. Chet, I think all of these things matter, really, and I do not feel that our foreign-policy custodians have treated them in such a way that they've not suffered at their hands.

FREEDOM FROM FEAR

Mr. HUNTLEY. Good, Martin. Well, Joe, do you suppose I could get you to put a tentative period to this foreign policy discussion?

Mr. HARSCH. I don't know if this is a period, Chet, but in addition to what's been said, I think we should remember that foreign policy is two things: It is what a country wants and it is a means toward those ends. In any appraisal of foreign policy such as we attempt here, we have to remember that no country in history ever got all that it would like to have. I suppose our major purpose in foreign policy now is to achieve freedom from fear of Russia. We haven't achieved it. I don't suppose we ever actually will achieve it. And during this past year there was even some slippage—let's put that down as one of my London-acquired understatements. But we cannot expect to be winning all the time. And curiously enough, Chet, in one respect sputnik was a good thing. Friendliness toward Americans improved greatly. Humility is a more attractive quality than complacency. And insofar as we acquire a larger measure of the grace of humility out of the year 1957, we are going to find friendlier allies—and allies more ready to cooperate with us in the year 1958.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Now, so far we've explored America's military status and our foreign policy. There's no doubt that in the coming year our policy abroad is going to be seriously affected by—and perhaps be at the mercy of—politics at home. What do you think is going to happen, David? Is it an aroused Congress that's going to return to Washington?

MORE MONEY FOR ARMS

Mr. BRINKLEY. I think it is, Chet. Of course Congress is not in session until the 7th of January but the Members are always more or less around, talking, making speeches and turning out statements on mimeograph machines. I think we already know pretty well that the Members are aroused. Many of them think that in these last few difficult months we have not had the leadership—and we are not likely to get it in 1958.

The Congress, whatever its faults, is a sensitive, responsive, political organism—sometimes too much so. Sometimes it is even nervous and jumpy. So it seems likely that Congress will be preoccupied with weapons, that it might overreact and that it might also be determined to apply—itself—the leadership that so many Members think we are not getting from the White House. In its preoccupation with weapons, we cannot at all be certain that Congress will deal with causes as well as effects. It certainly will insist that more money be spent on weapons. And in spite of some high-sounding statement about "Let's keep politics out of this," it just is not possible in this country to keep politics out of any national issue. So, politics there will be, laying blame either where it is due or somewhere reasonably close.

NEED FOR LEADERSHIP

But these are all effects, and Congress just isn't equipped to deal with the causes—including our national lack of interest in basic research, the failure on the part of the military to organize effectively a science program, and the years we have lost because of these failures in the past. This kind of thing calls for leadership and effective administration; it does not call for the passing of more laws and the voting of more money.

Three months ago I might have thought—I did think—this would be a civil rights-Little Rock session of Congress. But I think the best guess now is that it'll be a rockets and missiles session of Congress with civil rights in a very slow second place, Chet.

Mr. HUNTLEY. If I'm not mistaken, that's the first time we've heard that phrase "Little Rock." It was due to come sooner or later. John Chancellor, you covered the Little Rock story. Next to Russia's satellite, perhaps no other story in 1957 won such widespread attention. Do you agree with David that its political significance has been eclipsed by sputnik?

Mr. CHANCELLOR. There isn't any question about it, but I think the Little Rock story isn't over. There may be more Little Rocks. When school resumes in Little Rock in January some force will have to be at the school to keep order. There's a group of teen-agers within the school—white children—who have promised reprisals against Negroes when the troops leave. The troops are expected to leave in January and possibly be replaced by Federal marshals. And there's the hope that sometime this year the local police department in Little Rock will be able to guarantee the safety of the Negro kids. They can't do it now because Little Rock has a personnel problem. They have to hire a city manager, and until they do, the town is being run by a city board of moderate citizens who are so frightened of the school situation that they're not going to be able to do anything about it. So we can look for the local police to take over their own troubles. Now, if Federal forces stay at the school until June, that means Governor Faubus will have a strong issue in his campaign—his predicted campaign for reelection. The idea of Federal troops in a southern city is deeply damaging to southern pride. There is one other thing we ought to remember about Little Rock—that a racial fight of that bitterness corrodes and destroys and paralyzes the normal channels of community leadership in the southern town, drives the moderates underground, threatens them with boycott and ostracizes many in the community. This paralysis, I'm afraid, is going to repeat itself all through the South.

WORLD REACTION

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, John, if what you imply proves out the possibility of additional Little Rocks in the Deep South, then I suppose we can expect to see more cartoons like these that appeared in the foreign press This one is a Japanese reaction to the events that unfolded around Central High School. The French Communist cartoon is captioned "School Begins Again at Little Rock." And this Russian effort, well, I don't think any caption is necessary for this one. But I'd like to check just a few of you briefly on what you observed to be the reaction of the respective areas. Starting with you, Leif.

Mr. ED. Well, in France, Chet, they blame President Eisenhower for being too late—for ever allowing the rioting to happen. They said he let Governor Faubus damage the prestige of the Presidency, thereby hurting the entire western cause by giving the Communists a wonderful chance for propaganda among the uncommitted peoples.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Frank?

Mr. BOURGHOLTZER. A personal reaction, Chet. I happened to be in Bulgaria—a country where the Central Government makes the rules as to how the people behave toward one another. The police and, when necessary, the troops carry them out. Well, it was clear to me in Bulgaria that the troops were enforcing law and order. But then the Russians claimed they were enforcing law and order in Budapest last fall. The similarities seem to me frightening. The small example—the law being enforced—could have been an order for—instead of against—segregation.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Jim?

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, as you know, Chet, most Asians have felt and winced under the white heel of Western colonialism. So it's easy to project themselves into the role of the Negro in this country. It's needless to say where Asian sympathies lie, but it is necessary to warn repeatedly that Asian opinion of us is formed around Little Rocks.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Welles?

Mr. HANGEN. Middle Eastern people are color-conscious too, Chet. I remember—and so do the Egyptians—those latrines the British used to mark "Whites Only"—and the others marked "Native." It's easy for Middle Easterners who don't know the United States to equate us with British and French colonialism—to believe Communist propaganda about racial atrocities in this country. You know how emotional the Arabs are. Eisenhower-doctrine aid doesn't count for much in the world if they think you don't regard them as equivalent human beings.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Irving?

SIT TIGHT, TALK TOUGH

Mr. LEVINE. I can remember during Little Rock, Chet, the Russian student, a friend who is very skeptical about communism, expressing astonishment that the Voice of America and Radio Moscow were telling pretty much the same story. This disgusted him. And I think he may care less now about reshaping Russia because he's become convinced by Little Rock that there is oppression in America, too. But I think more important than that is the effect on the Soviet leaders. They've come to believe from things like Little Rock that they can sit tight and talk tough and make no concessions because class struggles such as Little Rock will cause America to decay from within.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Ed?

Mr. NEWMAN. Chet, I think the part of the world where this story had the greatest effect was in "Black Africa." I think it's also a fair question to ask: What if it did? One answer is that Black Africa is a vast source of materials and manpower still largely untapped. It is a vast market and it has strategic value. Also, from my observation, it is one part of the world where the Russians have not yet begun to work in earnest but where they very soon will. So, if you like, you can regard it as a sort of incidental stake in the civil-rights struggle.

Mr. CHANCELLOR. A lot of regrettable nonsense has been said about Little Rock. The Government of the United States guaranteed with force the orders of one of its Federal courts. These orders might have involved taxes, they might have involved public power; they happened to involve human beings with dark skins. What President Eisenhower did at Little Rock was not so much to guarantee the rights of dark-skinned Americans. But he made sure—as he had to—that the courts of this country were not mocked.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Thank you, John. Well, aside from Little Rock, there are certainly going to be other factors at work in this country—and some of them surely will affect the outcome of the 1958 elections. What are the possibilities there, David?

Mr. BRINKLEY. Well, I think—or know—we'll have all the old political factors plus several new ones. Here's an example of one of the new ones. Senator LYNDON JOHNSON, the Senate Democratic leader and a responsible Government official, said about 3 weeks ago that unless we get to work there is a serious danger that Russia will get to the moon before we do. Well, if he had said that, say, 3 months ago, we'd all have thought he was having a little joke. As it was, he said it and nobody cracked a smile. So I think in 1958 we will have that political issue discussed to the point where I suspect some campaign speeches will sound like science lectures.

PLATFORM PROMISES

We probably will have some platform promises to do something to help education—some of these promises coming from politicians who in the past have felt education should help itself. There will be some attempt to help pay for new weapons by cutting down on Government subsidies to various groups. Well, this will bring great loud cries of pain and anguish—and no cuts. Finally, the '58 elections will be a time for and an excuse for the 1960 Presidential candidates to fly around the country making speeches and being seen. Well, for the Republicans there's absolutely nobody in sight, to my knowledge, but NIXON. For the Democrats there are several—Senator LYNDON JOHNSON, who is avoiding the subject and hanging back; Senator KENNEDY, who is not, but who may be getting himself oversold too soon. Then there are Governors Meyner and Leader and several others not too well known now—but then whoever heard of Adlai Stevenson before 1951? But, as far as the '58 elections for Congress, well, President Eisenhower seems to be one of the very few Republicans nowadays who can win—but he's not running.

HOW TO CUT BUDGET?

Mr. MCCORMICK. You know, David, when you talk politics you always come to the question of money. One of the things Congress knows but won't admit is that the budget cannot be cut without cutting defense. If you eliminate national defense and security, and interest on the public debt, veterans' benefits, farm subsidies, grants to States, and all those other charges required by law, we spend only 13 cents out of every Federal dollar for what might be called normal operation. And if, in addition, you take out all the services given agriculture, and veterans, and if you eliminate the postal service completely, and the civilian functions of the Defense Department, you have only about 3 or 4 cents out of every dollar that could be cut. So, as usual, there'll be much whooping and hollering about cutting the budget, but what cuts are made will be fairly trivial—and they'll later be quietly restored, as is our custom. There may however be a big fight over the legal limit on the debt ceiling—it's $275 billion now and we're pushing it—so it probably will be raised after another scrap.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Granted, the budget will be a problem for the present. But I wonder—will the fact that Ike cannot run again deprive him of any power during this coming year? How do you see that, Martin?

Mr. AGRONSKY. Well, Chet, I do think it's been really sidestepping the underlying problem of the presidency to ascribe too great an importance to the new constitutional amendment that prevents Mr. Eisenhower from seeking a third term. The fact is that he is still one of our best-loved Presidents, and there's universal sympathy for the physical impairment that he's incurred through his three illnesses, the real problem that centers on Mr. Eisenhower is the growing concern about his capacity to conduct the office of the presidency. There's a good indicator of that: whereas there was overwhelming national concern after his first two illnesses that he should continue as President; after his cerebral attack there was widespread talk of the feasibility of his resignation.

STRONG MAN PRESIDENT

It is a curious thing that though we Americans invariably decry and constitutionally protect ourselves against the single strongman government, we want—especially in time of crisis—a strong man President. Now, even the President's most dedicated supporters wouldn't contend that he's been that. And I think there must be added to the fact that his health has forced him to be a part-time President the additional fact that Mr. Eisenhower repeatedly demonstrates reluctance to use to the full the great powers of his office. The bitter problem, really, Chet, that then results is how—when the full exercise of presidential power and leadership by a strong full-time President is demanded by the contemporary crisis—can that demand be fulfilled?

Mr. HUNTLEY. Well, you've all described some provocative observations on where the trend of 1957 might lead us. Now, I should like to have you conduct us just a bit into the future. And I suppose, in short, what I'm asking each of you for here is a single "Projection 1958." Irving, let's start with you.

Mr. LEVINE. Well, 1958 in Russia will not likely see Soviet settlements on major issues. There may be a third sputnik, weighing a full ton. Perhaps a shot at the moon. Probably new Stalinist repressions by Nikita Khrushchev to try to stay in power. But some diplomats think his chances are only 50–50 of surviving 1958 in power.

Mr. EID. Unless things get worse in North Africa than they are, 1958 should see the beginning of a great oil rush in the Sahara Desert. The French already have discovered oil. Now, they're calling in American, British, and Dutch oil interests for quick exploitation. If they succeed they may break the grip of the Middle East on Europe's throat, and Nasser and company would become considerably more reasonable.

HOTTEST THEATER

Mr. BOURGHOLTZER. All the Red regimes from Poland to Bulgaria will consolidate their positions in 1958. The word has come from Moscow to tighten up and that's what they'll do. That means fewer concessions for the people, rougher police control and greater fidelity to Moscow.

Mr. HANGEN. The Middle East will continue to be the hottest theater in the cold war. The Russians will keep coming, with propaganda, arms, ballerinas, technicians and smiles. America will get more deeply involved too. In Syria, I foresee a right-wing coup, or else the country will go left beyond the point of no return. Jordan is in the western camp today but one bullet properly aimed at King Hussein can send it the other way. In Palestine, no war and no peace—a kind of scoreless tie between good and evil.

Mr. NEWMAN. Next spring, Italy will have a general election. The Communists will not win it. They will not make appreciable gains—without sputnik, they would have lost ground.

Mr. ROBINSON. In 1958 Red China will assume a more Titolike role. There will be more turbulence in Malaya and Indonesia. There will be increased awareness that we Americans aren't responsible for all the troubles in Asia.

Mr. BRINKLEY. In 1958 we will compete with Russia not only for military but also for intellectual leadership. And this is a field where we're not accustomed to competing. We will buy the weapons we need, and wonder how to get the educated brainpower we need. And finally, Congress will face issues so new and complex that the old-fashioned—or model A—viewing-with-alarm will not be enough.

Mr. AGRONSKY. In 1958 the Democrats will continue to blame the world crisis on the Republicans and Mr. Eisenhower and the Republicans will continue to blame it on Mr. Truman. The world crisis will continue and, I'm happy to predict, so will peace. And finally, there will be a tremendous increase in the importance of the man who by the provisions of our Constitution lives one single heartbeat from the Presidency—RICHARD MILHOUS NIXON.

UNITED STATES SCIENCE AT ISSUE

Mr. MCCORMICK. Well, the Democrats have pressed hard on the most specific issue they've had yet—our lag in military science. But the scientists may come up with something so spectacular they will kill it as an issue. Our economy will sag until about the middle of the year when our new spending takes hold. Our foreign position will get worse and the Democrats are going to win the Congressional election.

Mr. CHANCELLOR. Well, I'm going to predict that before it gets any better it will get a lot worse in the South in the desegregation of American schools. Out of 2 million Negro schoolchildren in 10 Southern States today, 109 are registered in racially mixed classes. In 1958 this figure will have to increase and we will learn then that Little Rock was just the top of the iceberg.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Joe Harsch, you started us off—and I wonder if you'll give us your studied conclusion?

Mr. HARSCH. I don't know that there is one, Chet, but let's try. At the grave risk of sounding like John Foster Dulles, I do think we can end this on a moderately hopeful note. True, things look fairly bad from our point of view right now. But there's the Russian point of view right now, too. Her long-term prospects are far less bright. Western Europe is pulling together—if slowly. To Russia's south the United States has moved in to contest her advance and we are challenging her. On her back side is China, growing stronger every day and showing some signs of independence. This year, China did disagree with Moscow over treatment of Poland.

Now, the year ahead is, of course, Chet, going to be a tense and a dangerous one. The Kremlin right now is confident and brash, less ready to negotiate, more willing to brandish its new weapons. But down underneath the surface of all this the relations between the great powers are changing, as they always do.

AREAS OF AGREEMENT

We and the Russians appear to be at odds on every front but there are two fronts where I think we're less at odds than we were before. They officially disagree with our China policy but do you believe—I don't—that Russians really object to a policy on our part which restrains the day when the Russians will have at their back a China three times more populous and industrialized than they are, and armed with atomic weapons. Then, there's Germany. On the surface we disagree. Actually, France and Britain are less and less unhappy about the Russian policy of holding Germany separated. And we, while we preach reunification of Germany, we preach it by words and we do nothing about deeds. I'm sure that unity, the surface of next year's strains and dangers, the underlying changes between nations—will go on in the direction of diminishing differences. We've had a bad year. Yes, Chet; we know what it is now to be the laughing stock of the whole world. But we can come out of it wiser and stronger in friendships and alliances—except that we probably never will again be the one only great power in the world.

Mr. HUNTLEY. Gentlemen, I thank you. And to all of you a good new year.

BIRTH ANNIVERSARY OF CARL A. LOEFFLER

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, it is always a particularly happy occasion when a birthday is celebrated. On yesterday Carl A. Loeffler celebrated the 85th anniversary of his birth.

My colleagues will recall that Carl Loeffler served as Secretary of the Senate for the 80th Congress. When he retired in January 1949, he had completed 60 years of loyal and faithful service to this body.

Appointed as a page in 1889 from the State of Pennsylvania, he continued to serve in close relationship with the Republican Members of the Senate until his retirement.

I know I speak the sentiments of the entire membership of the Senate when I say to Mr. Loeffler that we extend to him our warmest congratulations and good wishes, and express sincere hope that he may continue to enjoy the good health and happiness which have been his for so many years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes, Mr. President; I yield to my friend the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The distinguished minority leader certainly speaks for me in expressing these sentiments about Mr. Loeffler.

Mr. Loeffler left the Senate as I entered it; but I had been privileged to know him, and had been an observer of his activities in his Senate position for many years before I became a Member of the Senate.

I know of no finer public servant or better man. It was my privilege and pleasure to congratulate him when he returned to the Senate a few days ago, to meet a number of his friends here.

I thank the distinguished Senator from California for the statement he has made.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I desire to thank the majority leader for his comments. I know he speaks for all of us on a bipartisan basis in wishing for Mr. Loeffler many years of continued happiness and good health.

PRAYERS FOR THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, each year the Lutheran Church of the Reformation usually conducts a special service on the Sunday after the Congress convenes. In the bulletin of yesterday's service in that church there were printed three prayers, as they were read in the Church of the Reformation on yesterday. I ask unanimous consent that these three prayers—one for the President of the United States, one for the Members of Congress, and one for a world at peace—be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the prayers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRAYERS

FOR THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Almighty God, graciously regard, we humbly beseech Thee, Thy servant, the President of the United States. Give to his body the strength of Thy divine healing; endue his mind with the wisdom of Thy divine guidance; and uphold his spirit with the power and presence of Thy Holy Spirit, that under his leadership and direction, the people of this Nation may take renewed courage, and work more resolutely for the establishing and maintaining of a better world; through Jesus Christ, our Lord:

FOR THE MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

O Merciful and Mighty Father, who holdest in Thy hand all the might of man, and of whom is all rule and authority in the kingdoms of the world, grant that "In God We Trust" may be engraved not only upon our coins but in our hearts, and that we may be in reality one Nation under God. Be daily present with each of our Representatives and Senators that in all of their action and legislation they may be graciously delivered from any narrowly partisan or selfish interests and that under their wise governance, the people of this land may be guarded and directed in righteousness, unity and service. Bless their homes and families and may they know the secret joys of lives consecrated to the service of their country; through Jesus Christ, our Lord:

FOR A WORLD AT PEACE

Guide, we beseech Thee, O Lord, all the nations of the world into the way of justice and truth, and establish among them that peace which is the fruit of righteousness, that they may become the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour; keep Thy children from the cruelties of war and lead all nations in the way of peace. Teach us to put away all bitterness and misunderstanding, that we, with all our brethren, may draw together as one comity of peoples, and dwell evermore in the fellowship of the Prince of Peace:

O Lord, enkindle in every heart such a passionate love for peace, that we may all, through Thy divine help, remove the obstacles, both individually and nationally, that make peace impossible.

May Thy kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth, and in us, as it is in Heaven. Amen.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER'S STATE OF THE UNION MESSAGE

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, immediately following President Eisenhower's state of the Union message to the joint session last Thursday, Mr. C. Wilson Harder, the president of the National Federation of Independent Business sent a congratulatory telegram to the President. In order to save the time of reading the message, which consists of a page and a quarter, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Harder's telegram be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congratulations on your stirring state of the Union message. On behalf our nationwide independent business and professional men membership, we are happy over your acknowledgment that our productivity is the source of our strength, and that Government stands ready to promote renewed business expansions. We hope this indicates your administration will recommend and follow through strong on legislative and administrative programs which it has promised for sounder independent business welfare.

Steps toward tax revision, more effective antitrust enforcement for broader and freer opportunities through fair competition, a stronger and permanent Small Business Administration, reductions in Federal redtape and competition are necessary to weld together dangerous fissures appearing in our small business structure, which is an admitted backbone of our economy.

Your stress on the need for fighting Communist imperialism is important. But one of the most effective and constructive ways of doing this is to insure continued freedom of opportunity for small, independent business. We must remember that Communists themselves have admitted that their totalitarian systems cannot survive where a strong, healthy, free-opportunity small business system thrives.

C. WILSON HARDER,
President, National Federation of Independent Business.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, on the day following the President's state of the Union message the New York Herald Tribune contained an editorial, entitled "A Great Speech," which I think was so effective and so much to the point that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 10, 1958]

A GREAT SPEECH

In his state of the Union speech, the President attained his finest hour.

It was the buoyant and confident Eisenhower of old who stood before the crowded Chamber and the packed galleries, rousing them again and again to thunderous ovations.

They had been thirsting for action and for leadership.

Now the man twice chosen as our leader arose, with bold and imaginative programs of action on two main tasks—safety through strength for building a genuine peace.

This was his message: We are not in present danger because our deterrent power is still adequate: our greatest danger is that it will fall behind. No matter what the cost to keep it up the American people will say as one man * * *. We shall maintain that necessary strength.

Some 37 times the applause thundered up at his words. Time and again he had to pause, raise his hand and smilingly wait for silence enough to continue.

The applause came from both sides of the aisles and from the galleries in about equal measure. Not in many years—even in the solemn wartime years of Franklin D. Roosevelt—had a President commanded so much bipartisan enthusiasm.

The reasons for this enthusiasm are clear:

The President's program provides a vigorous response to every single aspect of the Soviet challenge—and takes new initiatives as well.

It does not confine itself to a mere strengthening of our defense posture. It does not assume a race of missiles madness is sufficient to the problem. "We could make no more tragic mistake than merely to concentrate on military strength. For if we only did this the future would hold nothing but an age of terror."

It gives equal importance to the necessity of waging total peace.

It recognizes our menace for what it is—the expansionist aims of Communist imperialism. But it does not stop with a mere sterile denunciation of the threat.

Instead it holds out the hand of friendship to the Soviet peoples. It invites them not only to far greater exchanges of peoples and culture and information, it invites them also to join us now in joint science for peace programs to eradicate cancer and heart disease and in an existing international program to stamp out malaria.

This was the great strength of the President's speech. Even while proposing additional arms it pointed to the essential madness of a continued arms race—"the world must stop the present plunge toward more and more destructive weapons of war and turn the corner that will start our steps firmly on the path toward lasting peace."

In his specific, eight-point program the President tackled all the major areas of the problems now confronting us, and in each case offered specific proposals to meet them. Here are the problems and his answers:

SERVICE RIVALRIES AND CONFUSION

"America wants them stopped." He is making a special study of efficient reorganization, will soon present a specific program in a special message. Its object: real unity, particularly unified direction of strategic planning and control, single control in some of our most advanced development projects (e. g., lumping antimissiles and satellites).

STRENGTHENING AND ACCELERATING DEFENSE

Improvements of sure warning equipment. More bases and greater dispersal for our striking forces, stepped-up long-range missile programs, mobile forces to deal with local conflicts, more advanced aircraft; nuclear submarines and cruisers, improved antisubmarine weapons and missile ships to protect freedom of the seas. Approving the ideas of the Cordiner Report, he advocates increases in military pay and incentives. More emphasis on research and development.

MUTUAL AID

The President was at his most effective in stressing the absolute necessity of meeting the Soviets on their new front of expanded economic warfare. The Soviet threat is unique because of its all inclusiveness. Every human activity is pressed into service * * * trade, economic development, military power, arts, science, education. * * * The Soviets are waging total cold war. * * * Our only answer is to wage total peace. Communist imperialism, frustrated at expansion based directly on force, has begun to concentrate heavily on economic penetration. * * * This nonmilitary drive, if underestimated, could defeat the free world regardless of our military strength. Action: An increase in mutual-aid funds, stressing greater use of repayable loans, private capital. Attacking the catchword abuse of mutual aid as a giveaway, the President snapped: "We cannot afford to have one of our most essential security programs shot down with a slogan."

MUTUAL TRADE

Demanding a 5-year extension of the Trade Agreements Act and broader authority to negotiate, he said freer trade helps lay the groundwork for peace by making all free nations of the world stronger and more self-reliant. Senate Majority Leader LYNDON JOHNSON led the applause when the President quoted McKinley: "Isolation is no longer possible or desirable."

SWAPPING SCIENTIFIC SECRETS WITH OUR ALLIES

"It is wasteful * * * for friendly allies to consume talent and money in solving problems that their friends have already solved. * * * The task ahead will be hard enough without handcuffs of our own making." Action: Legislation for such exchanges.

EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

Federal scholarships at a rate of $250 million a year. A fivefold increase in sums for the National Science Foundation to stimulate and improve science education. A doubling of the funds for research purposes by the Foundation. A balanced education program, preserving local control.

SPENDING AND SAVING

An immediate $1.3 billion increase in defense. Next year, a bigger increase for missiles, nuclear ships, atomic energy, research and development, increases in pay and incentives. Nevertheless, economy in other areas will seek to keep these expenditures in balance with income.

WORKS AND PEACE

The President's imaginative proposal for United States-Soviet projects on science for peace. Also to offer to negotiate any reasonable proposal for disarmament which has reliable means to insure compliance by all.

The effect of the President's great speech was inspiring and created the needed confidence and unity of purpose both in Congress and in the people.

The old soldier who hates war drew his loudest and longest applause in restating his own dedication: "I say once more to all people, that we will always go the extra mile with anyone on earth if it will bring us nearer a genuine peace."

With this fitting motto, America will now go forward, in unity, in strength, in resolution.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, yesterday there appeared in the New York Herald Tribune a column by Roscoe Drummond entitled "The President's Unexpected Applause." The article concerns the whole question of dealing with Soviet Russia, and I think it is well worth our consideration.

I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 12, 1958]

THE PRESIDENT'S UNEXPECTED APPLAUSE

(By Roscoe Drummond)

WASHINGTON.—If Congressional response to the President's state of the Union message is a good gage of public opinion—and I believe it is—then the American people are far more eager to press negotiations with the Soviets than Secretary Dulles and some others in the administration have believed.

There were two evidences of this attitude in the reactions of the Members of Congress as they listened to Mr. Eisenhower's words.

There were more applause breaks in response to the President's emphasis upon the need to wage the peace than to anything else he had to say.

The largest and most sustained applause came toward the end of the address when the President declared that Americans "will always go the extra mile with anyone on earth if it will bring us nearer a genuine peace."

At a time when the most visible threat comes from the out-thrusting advances in Soviet weapons, at a time when the demand for missiles and more missiles gets support almost without asking, it was significant that the most spontaneous interruptions came when the President warned against "the tragic mistake of merely concentrating on military strength."

His appeal that the "world cannot stand still on disarmament" despite the standstill of present negotiations, his invitation to the Soviets to join the United States in a common global campaign against malaria—these and others like them touched a most responsive chord on Capitol Hill.

This does not mean that the American people want peace at any price or want agreement at any cost.

But it does mean, I think, that the American people want negotiations with the Soviets, however tenuous the prospects of getting anywhere, and are not going to be satisfied with the position that because negotiations are not likely to be productive, they shouldn't be started at any level and at any point they can be started.

I happen to believe that Secretary Dulles is absolutely right in his judgment that the Soviets, under present circumstances, have no intention whatsoever to accept any agreement that reduces any tension of the cold war except at the disadvantage of the Free World.

But the United States cannot safely stand in a position of grooved inflexibility. There is good reason to believe that the President does not intend to do so.

There are sound reasons to prepare ourselves to negotiate earnestly—with our eyes wide open.

The American people will find mounting defense spending and unabated taxes tolerable only as they are convinced that the United States is energetically and resourcefully doing everything it can to find some way to stop the endless and, perhaps catastrophic, piling up of the weapons of mass suicide. And that goes double for our NATO allies.

Furthermore, even if it is true that the Soviets have no present wish to settle any dispute under equally measured concessions, it isn't good enough to accept this state of affairs as though nothing ever could be done about it.

Obviously the Soviets aren't going to let up trying to subvert the soft areas of the free world as long as there is any good prospect that they can succeed at it.

Everything we can do to strengthen the free world economically and politically reduces the prospect of Soviet penetration and may well induce the Soviets to come to negotiate productively.

We have got to do more than we have been doing to show to the world that we are putting fair proposals upon the Soviets. We have got to get off the defensive.

There are dangers to negotiating when the Soviets want to use negotiations only as a means of propaganda. Moscow is constantly trying to separate us from our allies (by means of bilateral talks) and to separate our allies from us. That must be avoided.

But there are dangers to not negotiating, and the time may well be at hand when these are the greater dangers.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MUTUAL-SECURITY PROGRAM

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the compelling arguments advanced by President Eisenhower in requesting a $3.9 billion appropriation for our mutual-security program in his budget message delivered today.

I should particularly like to stress the President's plea that "it is critically necessary to carry forward our development loans, technical assistance, and other special types of assistance" if our military assistance and defense support phases of the program are not to be in vain.

In his state of the Union address last week, the President outlined the grim significance of the Soviet's intensive economic offensive against the free nations. In the days to come, as we consider the budget proposals designed to meet the Communist imperialist threat, let us remember President Eisenhower's warning that "it makes no sense whatever to spend additional billions on military strength to deter a potential danger, and then, by cutting aid and trade programs, let the world succumb to a present danger in economic guise."

Let us not allow this warning to go unheeded. At the outset I should like to state my wholehearted support for the President's budget request for mutual security, and I invite my colleagues to join me.

Mr. President, I desire to address myself to another subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

THE BRUSSELS FAIR

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, among the many aspects of our total peace effort, United States participation at international trade fairs is exceedingly important. One of the largest such fairs to be held this year will be the World's Fair at Brussels, and it began to look for a while that once again, as so often in the past, our participation would be too little and too late. Of an estimated $15 million requested originally as the amount necessary to enable us to portray adequately our cultural wealth, Congress has thus far appropriated only $12,345,000.

The distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] has announced that he is planning to press for an additional appropriation in the national interest of over $2 million for this very sound purpose. I commend the able Senator on his fine response to the effort to promote greater communication and understanding among the peoples of the world, and I want to assure him of my support and cooperation in this great work.

By request, as a part of my remarks I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial and an article from the Washington Post of today, January 13, 1958; an editorial from the Minneapolis Morning Tribune of January 8, 1958; and an editorial from the Milwaukee Sentinel of Sunday, January 11, 1958.

There being no objection, the editorials and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THYE ASKS MORE FUNDS FOR USE AT BRUSSELS FAIR

Senator EDWARD J. THYE, Republican, of Minnesota, yesterday urged speedy action to provide an additional $2.5 million to support American participation in the 1958 Brussels International Exposition.

THYE said he has carried his appeal to the Senate Appropriations Committee and the Democratic and Republican leadership in the House and Senate.

At the end of the last session of Congress, the request for additional funds was reduced from $2,889,000 to $545,000. THYE noted that the Soviet Union will spend approximately $60 million for its participation, while the total United States expenditure has been estimated at $15 million.

FAIR WARNING

It will be a grand moment when the Brussels World's Fair opens on April 17. Some 35 million tourists are expected to visit Belgium before the October closing of the first global exposition since the New York World's Fair 19 years ago. But will it be a grand moment for the United States? Or will this country's cultural contribution—like the Project Vanguard—sputter and sag?

Unhappily, the omens are not hopeful. Irving Kolodin, the distinguished music critic, finds that the planned American musical contribution is narrow and unrepresentative and that some of our proudest talents (Marian Anderson, for example) are destined to the sidelines. In the field of drama, American players will compete on a pinch-penny budget with the Moscow Art Theater, Old Vic, Kabuki Players, and Comedie Francaise. Strangest of all, a handsome American pavilion will be understaffed; funds may not be sufficient to keep the pavilion open on a 13-hour-a-day basis 7 days a week.

If this country has chosen to participate, manifestly it should not be represented in a tacky, helter-skelter manner. This is why Senator THYE has appealed to the leadership of Congress for an additional $2.5 million to enhance American participation. Surely the request is reasonable. When Congress authorized United States participation in 1956, the original plans called for a $15 million budget. But the operating amount was pared to $11.8 million, and much of this was eaten up by rising construction costs. (Russia, incidentally, is spending an estimated $60 million on the fair.)

Whether or not the money already voted has been used wisely in every respect, a practical problem exists. Prompt Congressional action can still save this country from what may otherwise be a washout.

SOUND INVESTMENT

Senator EDWARD J. THYE, who became convinced of the value of American participation in foreign fairs during a tour abroad a few years ago, is going to ask Congress for an additional $2,500,000 for United States participation in the Brussels fair this year. We think it will be a good if modest investment.

Present plans indicate that the United States will have some excellent cultural representation at the fair: The Philadelphia Orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting and Isaac Stern as soloist; the Ballet Theater with Nora Kaye as leading ballerina; the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical, Carousel; and The Glass Menagerie starring Helen Hayes.

However, there is concern that the United States will not have a broad enough representation on the cultural front. The additional appropriation sought by Senator THYE would finance additional performing artists in various fields, including a youth orchestra, a university theater group, and a college choral group. The funds also enable the United States pavilion to remain open on a 13-hour day 7 days a week, and would pay for additional booklets and brochures for distribution to fair visitors.

Even with the additional funds THYE seeks, the United States will spend only a small fraction of the $60 million that it is estimated Russia will invest in the Brussels Fair. Obviously, we do not need to match the Soviet spending, but we should make certain we have an exhibit that is representative of American culture as well as American accomplishments in commercial fields.

FUNDS FOR FAIR

The Brussels World's Fair, the largest of its kind in Western Europe since World War II, will give this country an opportunity to match or even surpass the skilled cold war propaganda efforts of the Russians.

But this rare opportunity can go down the drain if Congress persists in the shortsighted policy of whittling down the funds originally allocated for participation by the United States in the Brussels Fair which opens April 17.

How important the Communists regard the Brussels Fair as a propaganda showcase is evidenced by the fact that they are spending $60 million for their exhibits. This is four times the amount we set aside at the beginning. Now this $15 million figure has been trimmed down to $12,345,000.

Howard S. Cullman, New York businessman and civic leader, who is serving without pay as United States of America Commissioner General to the Brussels Fair, feels $2,500,000 of the deleted funds should be restored in order to insure a first-rate exhibit of the American way of life.

In Cullman's hands, we can be sure every dollar appropriated by Congress for the Brussels Fair will be put to the best possible use. As it is, he will have a difficult time to make a single American dollar do the work of every $4 which the Russians have.

As Congress reconvenes, we are happy to note support developing among the Senators to give Commissioner Cullman the additional funds he needs. We believe every dollar spent abroad should be carefully weighed and scrutinized but this is an expenditure that has much more importance than some others which Congress has seen fit to sanction.

YANKTON, S. DAK.—ALL-AMERICAN CITY OF 1957

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, Yankton, S. Dak., may stand with pride among the thousands of cities which form the backbone of this land of courage and enterprise. Yankton, S. Dak., recently was chosen to stand beside 10 other cities that have earned the distinction of all-American city for 1957. This salute by the jury of distinguished American citizens under the sponsorship of the National Municipal League and the editors of Look magazine is well deserved by Yankton.

Yankton stands as the oldest settlement in the Dakota Territory, having had her beginnings as a city in 1858–59, just a century ago, and consequently she holds claim to a colorful and historical past. It was here at the fork of the James River and the Missouri River in 1804 that Lewis and Clark, the great explorers, set up their winter camp. At that time the first formal council was held with the Big Sioux Nation, and Captain Meriwether Lewis wrapped an Indian babe in the American flag; the babe grew up to be Chief Struck-by-the-Ree who was important in developing friendly relations between the whites and the Sioux for so many years following. It was from here that General Custer later debarked for his last trip into the Big Horn area from which he never returned. It was here that the early settlers took shelter from the great Indian uprising of 1862, and it was here that law first came to the Dakota Territory with the conviction and hanging of Jack McCall. It was Yankton that provided a point of debarkation for the settlers and a port for the river boats that came to supply the westward development.

Yankton was selected as the first capital of the Dakota Territory, and is known today as the Mother City of the Dakotas.

Yankton has preserved her pioneer spirit and has continued to advance, and has grown and bloomed with an attitude of Christian well-being and of brotherhood. In the interest of improvement, and by virtue of a series of committees staffed by energetic citizens, a spearhead of action effected a program of beautification and of construction. They now have completed a $150,000 swimming pool, they have removed a large area of substandard housing, and they have placed more than $1½ million worth of new school facilities into operation. They should be complimented upon their retention of the efficient nine-man commission, city-manager form of government which they have had since 1955.

Yankton estimates its current population at approximately 10,500. It has a very stable basic economy that is well balanced between agriculture and manufacturing. There are over 80 industries, varying in their operations, and including: machine tools, trees, steel scaffolding, sheet metal, seeds, egg crates, sash and door construction, and poultry and meat processing.

More than 17 church spires rise above the silhouette of the residences of Yankton reflecting the Christian spirit of this wealthy community. Yankton truly deserves this tribute which has been paid to her.

PROPOSED RESOLUTION ON REVIEW OF FLOOD CONTROL ON RUM RIVER, MINN.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, on January 8 I addressed a letter to the Public Works Committee, transmitting a suggested committee resolution which would request the Corps of Engineers to review flood control on the Rum River in Minnesota.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this suggested resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE RESOLUTION SUGGESTED TO SENATE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS BY SENATOR EDWARD J. THYE, OF MINNESOTA, JANUARY 8, 1958

Resolved by the Committee on Public Works of the United States Senate, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors created under section 3 of the River and Harbor Act approved June 13, 1902, be and is hereby requested to review the report of the Chief of Engineers dated August 16, 1938, on Rum River, Minn., submitted to Congress on January 12, 1939, and other reports with a view to determining whether any modification of the recommendations contained therein is advisable at this time in the interest of flood control.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, 3 years ago, in March of 1955, I made a similar request to the Committee on Public Works in view of the fact that at that time there was no authority under which the Corps of Engineers could investigate the need for flood control improvements on the Rum River between Princeton and Isanti. As a result of my request at that time and the aid of my good colleague, the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the committee resolution was adopted, authorizing the survey of flood control needs on that section of the river.

The survey resulting from that resolution indicates that the survey should be extended to the upper Rum River but I have been informed by the Office of the Chief of Engineers that present authority for flood control surveys does not extend the length of the river. It is for this reason that I have asked that the Public Works Committee extend the authority of the Corps of Engineers.

It was in the last session of Congress that I asked approval by the Appropriations Committee of funds for final survey work based on the existing authorization. It would seem at this point that if further flood control on the upper reaches of the Rum River is justified, it would be proper that the authority of the Corps of Engineers be extended as a followup on survey work which has already been done.

LET US BUILD SCHOOLS

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, this year as never before there is tremendous public concern over the state of American education. I believe that our educational system—with the possible exception of our defense readiness—is the paramount domestic issue facing us. But preparing our defenses is at best a negative issue, making ready for something which may or may not happen. This of course we must do to guarantee our preservation.

However, nothing could be more positive or progressive than to improve and modernize the means of educating our children.

The new awareness, that our education machinery is in a shabby state of disrepair, is welcome, even though the reasons for bringing about this awareness may not be so welcome.

It seems to me that America in recent years has fallen into the sad state of being on the defensive in too many fields, both in world affairs and on the domestic front. Education is a prime example. Rather than meeting the challenge forthrightly years ago, we now have a new education crisis, pyramided atop the old ones that were never solved.

Unfortunately, too many are now looking at the education lag solely in the narrow field of science. This is shortsightedness and even dangerous.

The President, who waited until 1955 to tell Congress that he had any interest in education, has now endorsed a $1 billion, 4-year program, which leans heavily to scientific aid, and totally ignores the vital need of school construction.

By now it is obvious that what the President says or proposes in regard to education programs is of little importance. His record over the past 2 years on the subject demonstrates that he will not fight for even the little he proposes.

However, what is disappointing is that Mr. Marion Folsom, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, once an advocate of Federal aid for school construction, has permitted himself to be steered away from this objective. Both the President and Secretary Folsom should give at least a casual glance at the findings of another Government agency.

The other day the Census Bureau said there are now 29 million children in elementary schools, an increase of 5.7 million over 1952. And in the high schools there are 9 million students, an increase of 1.8 million in the same 5-year period.

In addition to the attempts to keep up with this increase in school population our States face the great task of replacing inadequate or antiquated schools.

Certainly we need more scientists in this modern world. But do we simply tap a student on the shoulder and say: "Here's a scholarship. Be a scientist"? No. We must start with our raw material, the children now in our elementary and high schools and the ones who will be there next year and the year after.

Only by a broad program of educational responsibility shall we produce the scientists and the members of trades, professions, and other vocations we need in America.

It should be basic with us to attack a problem at its roots, not by trying to prune the foliage. At the root of our problem is not only the need for adequate facilities. We must pay attention to our teachers, and must assure these dedicated people living wages.

These, I believe, are areas of legitimate Federal concern. This year must be the year for action—action on the basic issue of school construction.

POULTRY AND POULTRY PRODUCTS INSPECTION ACT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Department of Agriculture is currently completing the regulations to spell out the details of the Poultry and Poultry Products Inspection Act, which Congress passed and the President signed last year.

Hearings were held in many cities throughout the country on the regulations the Department has proposed. In December, the Department accepted written comments on them.

The Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, AFL–CIO, a labor union which has among its members more than 30,000 poultry workers, has asked the Department for more detailed provisions for the protection of poultry workers' health. Specifically, it suggests inclusion of some of the points of the Model Poultry Sanitation Code published in 1955 as a guide for legislation by States, counties, and cities. This code was developed by a committee of representatives of the Federal, State, and local public-health services and of the poultry industry, working closely with officials of the Department of Agriculture and Food and Drug Administration.

I know that the officials of the Department of Agriculture share the deep concern for the protection of poultry workers against infections and other illnesses transmitted by poultry. I sincerely hope that they will be able to include in the regulations the sanitation provisions for the protection of poultry workers from the model code which the Federal Government has previously recommended to cities, counties, and States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter to the Department of Agriculture by the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen outlining certain recommendations relating to the implementation of the Poultry and Poultry Products Inspection Act, which was passed in the 1st session of the 85th Congress. It was my privilege to handle the legislation in the Senate, and to report it both for the Senate and the conference committee. I hope these recommendations will be given the most careful attention by the Department of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS AND BUTCHER WORKMEN
OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL–CIO,
Chicago, Ill., December 20, 1957.

Re: Proposed regulations governing the inspection of poultry and poultry products.

Mr. HERMON MILLER,
Director of the Poultry Division, Agricultural Marketing Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MILLER: We are submitting herein the viewpoint of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, AFL–CIO, with respect to the proposed regulations governing the inspection of poultry and poultry products, as published in the Federal Register of November 22, 1957.

Generally speaking, we believe that an excellent job was done in drafting the proposed regulations, especially with respect to those portions dealing with the inspection of poultry. However, it is our considered opinion that the proposed regulations are entirely inadequate with respect to the protection of the workers in the poultry plants in that they fail to specify the necessary facilities for the protection of the workers' health. A healthy worker is essential for safe, wholesome food products.

The legislative history of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (71 Stat. 441, 21 U. S. C. 451, et seq.) shows conclusively that Congress had two purposes in mind in enacting this legislation: (1) The protection of the consumer, to assure him of a clean, wholesome, disease-free product; and (2) the protection of the persons working within the poultry establishments.

That Congress had the second purpose set forth above in mind as well as the first purpose, is shown clearly by the following excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Thus, when S. 1747 was being considered by the Senate on April 8, 1957, Senator ELLENDER stated as follows in explaining the bill:

"Processing plants would be required to conform as to premises, facilities, equipment, and operations with sanitary regulations issued by the Secretary of Agriculture." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 103, pt. 4, p. 5228.)

* * * * *

"In addition, there was testimony to the effect that those who work in the slaughterhouses may catch diseases by handling diseased poultry. For their protection, also, this provision for ante mortem inspection has been included in the bill." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 103, pt. 4, p. 5232.)

Senator TALMADGE corroborated Senator ELLENDER, stating (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 103, pt. 4, p. 5233.)

"I should like to say to my distinguished friend from West Virginia that when we drafted the bill we were trying to keep in mind a piece of legislation that would be fair to the consumers and provide for them adequate and nutritious meat. We tried, also, to keep in mind the processors and not place on them undue hardships or burdens in their efforts to process poultry and make it available to consumers. We tried, also, to keep in mind employees who work in plants and handle birds which may be diseased.

* * * * *

"With reference to ante mortem inspection, sometimes, though not often, flocks of birds become diseased. I believe in recent years there have been instances of poultry becoming affected with the disease called psittacosis that has adversely affected the consumer, and, I believe, in some cases, employees in the plants affected."

Both Senators ELLENDER and TALMADGE were on the committee which considered and drafted S. 1747 and served on the conference committee with the House, which approved the final version of S. 1747, as enacted by Congress.

Similar statements appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in connection with the consideration by the House of H. R. 6814, which was passed by the House on July 9, 1957. (The conference committee adopted many of the provisions of H. R. 6814 and inserted them in the final version of S. 1747.)

Thus, in the July 9, 1957, issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 103, part 8, page 11118, Congressman ANFUSO, in his discussion of the diseased poultry being processed in some of the plants in the United States, stated:

"These conditions exist in some processing plants throughout the country. They are a danger to the consumer, to the workers in the plant, and to the overwhelming majority of processors."

And in the same issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 11146, Congressman ZABLOCKI stated:

"The enactment of this measure is vital to the health of the American people.

"Most immediately, an effective, compulsory poultry inspection program is necessary to minimize the health dangers which face thousands of poultry workers in many plants. These dangers, which range from bothersome skin rashes and infections to killing psittacosis, have been recognized a long time ago by poultry workers and their organizations. It is to the credit of these organizations that they have consistently and energetically advocated the enactment of legislation to protect poultry workers against health hazards and to safeguard public health."

It is, therefore, evident that Congress intended that the legislation protect, not only the consumer, but also the workers in the poultry-processing establishments.

The proposed regulations have given this protection to only one class of workers, namely, the Government inspectors. Thus, section 81.33 (f) reads as follows:

"Inspector's office: Office space, including, but not being limited to furnishings, light, heat, and janitor service, shall be provided rent free in the official establishments for the use of Government personnel for official purposes. The room or space set apart for this purpose must meet the approval of the inspection service and be conveniently located, properly ventilated, and provided with lockers or cabinets suitable for the protection and storage of supplies and with facilities suitable for inspectors to change clothing."

No such provisions appear in the regulations requiring lockers and dressing rooms for the rest of the persons working in the processing plant, although there is an implication (but only an implication) in section 81.14 (d) that dressing rooms must be provided. This section reads in part as follows:

"The official establishment shall include employees' toilet and dressing rooms."

We believe that the Department of Agriculture has overlooked the fact that the United States Government has already approved standards for poultry-processing plants in the model Poultry Sanitation Code published by the Public Health Service of the Department of Health, Welfare, and Education and entitled "Poultry Ordinance, 1955 Edition" (publication No. 444). This code, which was developed jointly by the Public Health Service, United States Department of Agriculture, the Food and Drug Administration, the Department of Defense, and poultry-industry representatives, has been recommended by the United States Government for adoption by States, counties, and cities, and, we are informed, has been adopted by numerous States, counties, and cities. The preface to the Poultry Ordinance sets forth that it was developed as a guide to sanitation standards for poultry and poultry products and to encourage uniformity in poultry-sanitation regulations throughout the United States. It sets forth further that "the ordinance embodies the best information available at the present time on sanitary practices applicable to the commercial processing, distribution, and sale of poultry," and that the "sanitation requirements contained in the ordinance are substantially equivalent to the current regulations of the United States Department of Agriculture."

Section 18 of the Poultry Ordinance deals with plumbing and related facilities. Subsection (b) provides in part as follows:

"The following requirements shall be met and the meeting of such requirements shall be deemed to be compliance with this section.

* * * * *

"(8) Employee toilet facilities, adequate for the use of all employees during peak periods of operation, shall be provided in convenient locations in the establishment. Toilet rooms and fixtures shall be kept clean and in good repair. A supply of toilet tissue shall be provided in toilet rooms at all times.

"(9) An adequate number of lavatory facilities shall be located in or adjacent to each employee toilet and dressing room and at such other places in the establishment as may be necessary for the convenient washing of hands by employees engaged in the conduct of poultry-processing operation: Provided, That no utensil, or equipment, washing vats, or water-flushed trough shall be substituted for lavatory facilities.

"(10) Each lavatory facility shall be provided with warm water (at least 100° F.), either from a controlled-temperature source with a maximum temperature of 115° F. or from a mixing or combination valve. The use of steam-mixing valves shall be prohibited.

"(11) Control valves on lavatories used by employees before beginning or while engaging in the conduct of poultry-processing operations shall be operated by means of foot pedals, knee or elbow pressure, or other approved means, which in all cases shall be other than by hand.

"(12) Soap or other detergent, made available through the use of a dispenser, and individual paper or cloth sanitary towels shall be provided at each lavatory: Provided, That the health authority may approve other, equally effective, sanitary means for the drying of hands. The use of a common towel shall be prohibited.

"(13) Containers constructed of impervious material shall be provided near lavatories for the disposal of used towels.

"(14) Drinking-water facilities of a sanitary type shall be provided in the establishment, and shall be so located as to be convenient for use by employees."

Section 25 of the poultry ordinance deals with cleanliness of personnel. It reads as follows:

"(a) Persons who engage in poultry-processing operations, or in duties during which they contact poultry-processing equipment or utensils, and persons who contact poultry or poultry products during storage or sales operations, shall wear clean, washable garments, keep their hands clean, and conform to hygienic practices during all periods of such duties. Adequate facilities shall be provided in poultry-processing establishments for the storage of employee's clothing.

"(b) The following requirements shall be met, and the meeting of such requirements shall be deemed to be compliance with this section.

"(1) Persons who engage in poultry-processing operations, or in the performance of duties where they contact poultry-processing equipment or utensils or poultry or poultry products, shall, while thus engaged, wear clean, washable, outer garments, such as uniforms, coats, aprons, or coveralls, and shall wear caps, hairnets, or headbands.

"(2) Persons who contact poultry or poultry products, containers, or packaging materials therefor, or poultry-processing equipment or utensils, shall keep their hands and fingernails clean, and shall conform to all other hygienic practices while on duty. Such persons shall wash their hands thoroughly before starting to work and before returning to work after changing garments, eating, drinking bottled beverages, smoking, visiting the toilet, or soiling their hands in any way. The use of tobacco in any form shall be prohibited in rooms where poultry or poultry products are processed.

"(3) Signs directing employees to 'wash hands' shall be conspicuously posted in employees' toilet and dressing rooms in poultry-processing establishments.

"(4) Adequate lockers, or facilities in dressing rooms, shall be provided in poultry-processing establishments for the storage of employees' clothing. Such lockers and rooms shall be kept in a clean and orderly condition. Clothing shall not be stored in processing rooms.

"(5) Hampers shall be provided in poultry-processing establishments for temporary storage of soiled linens, coats, aprons, and other items of employee clothing. Soiled clothing and any personal items not used by employees in the performance of their duties shall not be placed on window ledges, on tops of lockers, or in similar locations."

Nearly all of the requirements set forth above relating to toilet rooms, dressing rooms, lunchrooms, clothes storage, et cetera, have either not been covered at all in the proposed regulations, or have been inadequately covered.

Our concern over proper employee facilities is supported by many public health organizations, one of the more recent being the American Public Health Association. In an article published in the October Journal, volume 47, the American Public Health Association has endorsed proper facilities for poultry processing employees as an integral part of any poultry processing inspection law needed to protect the health of the worker, and needed to assure proper preparation of a product, safe and wholesome for the consumer.

If you will examine into the background of Poultry Ordinance, 1955 Edition, you will find that the chief reason for the preparation of the model ordinance was the great variety of poultry legislation in existence in the various cities, counties and States which acted as trade barriers. To insure uniformity, therefore, the proposed regulations should be amended to conform with the provisions of the Poultry Ordinance, 1955 Edition set forth above.

A number of times during the recent public hearings held by the Agricultural Marketing Service in connection with the formulation of the proposed regulations, the question was asked as to why the proposed regulations were less stringent than the law in effect in many States, counties and cities. The reply given was that if State regulations were more stringent, then the State regulations would be followed. This is a novel viewpoint for a Federal agency to take, for in the past, the Federal Government has always led the way and set the standards in all regulatory functions. It is well known that without Federal compulsion and guidance, many States would not have enacted social and regulatory legislation in effect today. This is well illustrated by the history of unemployment compensation in the United States. Before the Social Security Act was enacted by Congress in August 1935, only one State had enacted an unemployment compensation law. However, due to the Federal unemployment tax and the offset credit allowed to employers in States which had approved unemployment compensation laws, by the end of 1937, all 48 States had enacted unemployment compensation acts.

On the other hand, you will find that where the Federal Government has failed to take action, the States and local governments have moved very slowly. Thus, in the field of disability insurance, only four States have as of this date enacted temporary disability insurance acts. This is due to the fact that there is no Federal law in existence compelling the States to act, and no model Federal law for them to follow. Furthermore, there is no uniformity of any kind among the four State laws which have been enacted.

Thus, we believe it essential for the Federal Government to lead the way with respect to setting high standards for the regulation of the poultry industry. Where such high standards have already been promulgated by the Federal Government in Poultry Ordinance—1955, and where the Federal Government has recommended to the States, counties, and municipalities that they adopt these high standards, it would be ridiculous for another arm of the Federal Government at this time to promulgate regulations containing lower standards than those recommended for the States, counties, and municipalities.

A hasty study of some of the State laws reveals many States have concerned themselves with employee facilities in food establishments. For example, in Vermont the law provides that food establishments must be constructed, maintained and operated with strict regard for health of employees and purity of food produced; in Kentucky, the law provides that food establishments shall be conducted with strict regard to influence of such conditions upon health of those employed; upon purity and wholesomeness of food produced; and in Massachusetts the law sets forth that if bakery is found unfit for production or handling of food or dangerous to health of employees, department of public health or local board may order it closed.

Our concern for the protection of the health of the workers in the poultry establishments is borne out by the latest United States Department of Labor release showing work injury rates in 1956 in poultry and small-game dressing and packing at an all-time high—nearly three times the average of all industries.

We, therefore, request that you amend sections 81.33 and 81.37 of the proposed regulations to conform with the requirements for employees' facilities contained in sections 18 and 25 of Poultry Ordinance, 1955 edition, as set forth above.

Very truly yours,

S. W. BARKER,
Director, Poultry Department.

THE BUDGET MESSAGE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the budget message is being read in the other body. I ask unanimous consent that when it is laid before the Senate its reading be dispensed with, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the budget message, and, without objection, its reading will be dispensed with and it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See H. Doc. No. 266 in today's proceedings of the House.)

OUTDOOR ADVERTISING ADJACENT TO INTERSTATE HIGHWAYS

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the position of the outdoor advertising industry in Arizona regarding Federal regulation of outdoor advertising adjacent to the Interstate and Defense System of Highways.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POSITION OF THE OUTDOOR ADVERTISING INDUSTRY IN ARIZONA REGARDING FEDERAL REGULATION OF OUTDOOR ADVERTISING ADJACENT TO THE INTERSTATE AND DEFENSE SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS

We, members of the standardized outdoor advertising industry, locate our advertising displays only on privately owned land zoned for commercial and industrial uses. If the local government has not yet actually zoned privately owned land, we build our displays only where other business exists or is permitted. In addition, the standardized outdoor advertising industry adheres to a strict code of operations wherein its members will not maintain any display in a scenic area regardless of zoning even if other business structures are allowed by local ordinance.

Our industry has no intention of exploiting the Federal Interstate and Defense System of Highways, as it has been emotionally accused by some critics. Our displays will be located on private land zoned by local authorities for other business uses. Much of the private property bordering the 41,000 miles of the system is unsuitable for business purposes and will be used for agriculture. In the so-called public land States, almost 87 percent of the total land area is Government owned where no advertising display will be erected.

Our position with respect to the Interstate and Defense System of Highways is as follows:

1. We are unalterably opposed to Federal regulation and control of standardized outdoor advertising. We have four reasons for taking this position. First, we believe that regulation and control is exclusively a matter of local interest and concern. Second, the Federal-aid highway legislation has always been limited to construction, and advertising in no way relates to highway construction. Third, we have received exceptionally well qualified legal opinion which raises doubts as to the constitutionality of such Federal regulation and control, and regardless of our personal desires we could not support legislation of doubtful constitutionality. And fourth, we oppose Federal regulation and control of business in general.

2. We oppose any Federal, State, or local regulation which would discriminate against outdoor advertising among other legitimate businesses.

3. Any regulation of outdoor advertising should recognize outdoor advertising as a legitimate business use of land, as it is recognized by planning and zoning authorities.

4. We will continue to support local regulations that permit outdoor advertising in all areas zoned or presently used for business, commercial or industrial purposes, or which subsequently may become business, commercial, or industrial areas.

5. We recommend that zoning authorities in the States who wish to protect areas of unusual scenic beauty along the right-of-way of the Interstate Highway System take steps to define such areas, from which all business, commercial, or industrial uses of land might be excluded. The States know much more about their historic spots and their areas of natural beauty than does the Federal Government or the Bureau of Public Roads. The States now have authority to enact any regulatory legislation which they desire or decide they need. Legislation for Federal control would not only preempt and usurp this right, but would assume that the States are unaware or unconcerned about their own resources.

There is no need nor reason for Federal controls of outdoor advertising when State and local governments have the authority to enforce regulatory and zoning ordinances. Proposed Federal controls seek to carve out for discriminatory regulations only one use of private land, namely, signs, while showing no concern for other land uses. The proponents of Federal legislation apparently are immune to unsightly factories, junk yards, open mining operations, storage yards, slaughtering houses, and other objectionable commercial and industrial uses. Our advertising displays are designed by outstanding engineers—the advertising copy executed by renowned artists—both the structures and surrounding land area maintained regularly for neatness.

DEATH OF RUSSELL W. KEENEY, A REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF ILLINOIS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, it is with regret that I announce the untimely passing of Representative RUSSELL KEENEY, of the 14th District of Illinois, who died Saturday night at the naval hospital. His was a rather untimely death. He has served only one-half of 1 term. Interestingly enough, he succeeded in the House his law partner, who died in February of 1956.

RUSSELL KEENEY was a topflight lawyer. He served as State's attorney, as probate judge, and as circuit judge in the district where he lived. So his death is very untimely, and brings to an end what had all the promise of a very brilliant career.

At some future time I shall address myself to other tributes. I felt that I should make the announcement now, and later today I shall submit a formal resolution concerning his death.

THE LATE HONORABLE AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY—STATEMENT BY SENATOR CLARK

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] regarding the death of Representative AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CLARK

The words already spoken by Members of the other body and the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania in tribute to the memory of Congressman AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, have already made abundantly clear the esteem in which he was held by his colleagues, and the affection all who knew him felt for this beloved public servant. Editorials and statements in the Pennsylvania and national press, in labor and religious journals, from members of the executive branch and distinguished citizens have told the story of his long and fruitful public career. We owe him much. All of us are the better for it that GUS KELLEY served as a Member of the House of Representatives for 18 years. All of us have suffered a real loss with his death.

Even before I became a member of the Pennsylvania delegation in Washington it was my privilege to know GUS KELLEY personally and my pleasure to work with him on programs which were vital to our State and the Nation. This was a signal honor, and I feel I have lost a friend as well as a fellow worker on behalf of those programs we both believed in.

Congressman KELLEY, over the years, made many contributions to our national welfare. His splendid work in the field of labor and employee legislation, and his services as Congressional adviser to ILO are especially well known. But he is perhaps best known for a piece of work that unfortunately remains unfinished—through no fault of his own. What came to be known to millions as the Kelley education bill is to my mind the high point of GUS KELLEY's dedication to the public weal, and its defeat in the House of Representatives by so close a margin in the first session of this Congress was his saddest day. America can at no time afford to be without men like GUS KELLEY; we can afford it now least of all.

As we eulogize GUS KELLEY now—as we think of his life's work, his splendid record as an employer, his devotion to his family and to his church—I hope we will especially realize that there is something we can do that GUS KELLEY, I feel sure, would have wanted us to do. I hope we will pick up where death took it from him, the work on behalf of a national education program which GUS KELLEY had in recent years been striving so hard to accomplish. This, it seems to me, would be a fitting memorial for him, the very best way we could say of the career of this great citizen of Pennsylvania and of America, "well done."

FOREIGN AFFAIRS—THE ADMINISTRATION'S PHRASEOLOGICAL APPROACH

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, a column published in this morning's New York Times, written by Mr. C. L. Sulzberger, dealing with our foreign relations problems.

I particularly recommend a reading of the column because I believe Mr. Sulzberger points our very clearly the need for us to proceed with negotiations on the whole subject of disarmament.

In the near future I shall make a major speech on the subject, setting forth some of my views, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the foreign relations problems of our country. They will be at some variance with the program being followed by Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, which latter program, in my judgment, will not improve the foreign relations of the United States, but which, unless we stop the Dulles policies, will inevitably result in war.

In spite of the high-sounding phraseology of the President and the Secretary of State, war will be the inevitable result.

I wish to summarize my criticism of the foreign policy of the President and the Secretary of State by saying that we will not win the peace by a phraseological approach to foreign policy. The time has come for America to demonstrate by action that she is ready to bring to an end this mad race of armaments. It is a mad race that I believe is stirring up a hysteria in this country, with the result that many people are greatly confused as to just where America is going in foreign affairs.

I say from this desk today, Mr. President, unless we bring to an end the phraseological approach to foreign policy of President Dwight D. Eisenhower and John Foster Dulles, the end will be inevitable war, which will result in the destruction of both Russia and the United States so far as their being world powers are concerned. Then Asia, in the next epoch of history, will take over.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW TO RESUME TALKS WITH MOSCOW

(By C. L. Sulzberger)

LONDON, January 12.—The United States has belatedly begun its own diplomatic offensive to counter Moscow's persistently skillful initiative. The first venture in our effort to regain some momentum was President Eisenhower's Congressional message. The second is contained in our reply to Bulganin's Christmas note.

The President, at last, has shaken himself free from a deluding slogan. He recognizes the primary menace as that of Communist imperialism, not international communism. We are not participating in a holy alliance engaged in ideological warfare but in resistance to all aggression, direct or indirect.

Eisenhower says somewhat vaguely that we must "wage total peace." What is this? How is it to be waged? Not by joining the Russians in a fight against malaria. This may appeal to the Chief Executive's romantic nature. But it is tangential to the problem.

The President's speech emphasized need to strengthen our defenses. At the same time it expressed willingness to talk with our opponents. His reply to Bulganin will close no door to such approaches, although it is scarcely sanguine about chances of success.

The main point of this far too tardy but well drafted paper is that established machinery for negotiation is stalled because of what has proved to be an unworkable United Nations apparatus. Specifically, he would have the Russians join with us in efforts to eliminate the restrictive Security Council veto, which has rendered mute what should be the conscience of the world.

U. N.'S FUTURE AN ISSUE

This is a valid point. Some day something must be done. Either the wheels of U. N. must again be made to turn, or we will have to cease basing our own policy so heavily upon that rusting organization. Nevertheless, it is not easy to imagine that Moscow is willing at this time to discuss the question. Should we therefore delay examination of other subjects? No.

We cannot continue to make excuses for not negotiating, and thus allow the Kremlin to proclaim unchallenged a desire to reach peaceful settlement. Indeed, thanks to our cumbersome methods, Bulganin has already publicized another dramatic idea before we have even answered its predecessor.

Eisenhower says he is prepared to go the extra mile if it will bring genuine settlement nearer. It was high time to make this clear. Our allies were clamoring for such a move while Dulles seemed obstinately to lag behind.

Should there be another summit conference, as both Bulganin and Gaillard suggest? How many nations merit representation? What is a fair proportion between Communist, anti-Communist, and neutral participants? Or should initial surveys be made bilaterally by only the two superpowers?

Despite Dulles' curious efforts to obscure the fact, it is our policy to meet again with the Soviets. We are not holding back until our missile program assumes shape. We reckon we are strong enough to treat now without fear of being bullied. The diplomatic value of new defense measures will only become ascendant 2 or 3 years hence. We are even prepared to take the initiative in seeking new talks.

MEETING TO DISCUSS WHAT?

But what can we discuss with any hope of progress? Not the Russian plea to recognize Europe's status quo. This would mean retaining an ideological curtain between the Elbe and the Adriatic, perpetuating a partitioned Germany. And certainly not the scarcely veiled attempt to oust us from our NATO bases and military dispositions.

The heart of the matter remains disarmament. It can only be partially approached at present. But we are not only willing again to attack the question, we are even willing to take certain risks if a start can be made along this immensely difficult road.

There is room for joint scrutiny of several aspects. We are not wholly averse to Soviet efforts to limit membership in the atomic weapons club; that is to say, to discourage other nations apart from Britain from manufacturing such arms if Moscow pledges to keep Communist fabrication within Soviet borders.

We are by no means opposed to some limitations on conventional forces if we can ever get precise and confirmable figures from the U. S. S. R. on the size of its present establishment. Above all, we are prepared once more to explore the chances of establishing an initial inspection system, no matter how limited. We believe the Russians will never accept the degree of controls we regard as an essential minimum. But we can lose nothing by reexamining the question.

Another negotiation is therefore indicated. But how can we get off the dead center of existing diplomatic doldrums? The evident answer is to revive the moribund but not defunct Council of Foreign Ministers. That would be a useful beginning. Without concession from either side, the Big Four could bargain over the shape and methods of an eventually more purposeful parley.

SUPPORT PRICES ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted at this point in the RECORD a letter dated December 30 addressed to me by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery of McMinnville, Oreg. The statement contained in this letter expresses the point of view of a good many dairy farmers in my State with respect to the unwarranted action of Secretary Benson in reducing dairy price supports.

Mr. President, that is one reason, I may say to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], why I was proud to join him the other day in the introduction of his bill dealing with the whole dairy problem.

It is protests such as these from dairymen throughout the State of Oregon which lead me to believe that we are on the right track in supporting the bill (S. 2924) introduced by the Senator from Minnesota, and of which I am a cosponsor.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARMERS COOPERATIVE CREAMERY,
McMinnville, Oreg., December 30, 1957.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We are greatly concerned with the Secretary of Agriculture's recent announcement that support prices on dairy products will be reduced on April 1, 1958. Our dairy people are just existing at the present prices.

We realize that the support program is a real problem; however, we feel that it is just not fair to lower the support prices on dairy products when so many other things are supported by the Government.

We note by our records that our producers received the same for their butterfat this past year as they received in 1945, or 12 years ago, and they received 23 cents a pound butterfat less than they received in 1948. We believe that we will be forced to give further wage increases, which squeezes the producer just that much more.

We understand that there may be two legislative proposals in the next session relative to support prices on dairy products. One of these is to raise milk support prices and the other is to propose the National Milk Producers Federation parity equivalent formula. We are favorable to both proposals.

Dairying is one of the leading industries of our area and makes a substantial contribution to the economy of our community.

Our people would be interested in your views on the lowering of support prices.

Sincerely yours,

DELTON S. RUSSELL,
Secretary-Treasurer.

THE BRUCELLOSIS ERADICATION PROGRAM

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in our deliberations upon the many problems that will confront the Senate in the months ahead, there will be those who, because of an earnest concern over our military status, will counsel us to cut to the bone all Federal expenditures not directly tied to the Armed Forces or our international commitments. We will do well, however, before accepting and acting upon such counsel, to weigh with great care the effect of funds curtailment upon domestic programs.

One such program, Mr. President, I cite to you this morning as an example of public money well spent in the public interest. I refer to the Federal and State cooperative brucellosis eradication program. As a farmer who breeds Devon cattle, I can attest from personal knowledge the importance to our farmers of maintaining that program at the highest level of efficiency. Bang's disease in cattle has an importance that transcends the economic difficulty to the farmer. Together with bovine tuberculosis, it stands as a threat to the health of human beings. To reduce that threat by a cooperative Federal-State attack, financed to the extent necessary by Federal funds, is, in my judgment, in the public interest.

Recently I read a copy of a communication dated December 20, 1957, signed by Lawrence Geraghty, president of the Oregon Dairymen's Association, Corvallis, Oreg., setting forth the association's Resolution No. 5—Federal appropriations for brucellosis control. In order that my colleagues in the Senate may have the benefit of the views of this representative group of Oregon dairymen on the subject, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be set forth in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the text of the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is danger that because of military preparedness hysteria, Federal appropriations for brucellosis control may be drastically reduced, and since the present level of Federal funds for this program are necessary for its survival in Oregon: Be it

Resolved, That the Oregon Dairymen's Association urge our Congressional delegation to see that Federal funds are sustained so that the excellent progress made in the elimination of this disease is not lost and our whole livestock industry put in jeopardy; and further be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Congressional delegates, all State legislators, the Governor, and State newspapers.

THE ADMINISTRATION VENDETTA AGAINST JOHN DAY DAM

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in regard to the President's budget, based upon a press release which I have just issued.

The President's 1959 budget continues the administration's vendetta against comprehensive resource development in the Pacific Northwest. The amount requested for construction of John Day Dam is a fraction of what is required for maximum progress on this great multipurpose dam.

Everyone knows that the Columbia Basin region faces a major power shortage in the years ahead. The low cost power from a John Day is indispensable in averting that shortage. Yet the Republican administration, by its budget proposal, continues the indefensible policy of stretching out the planning and construction of the million kilowatt dam. This budget continues the policy of starving Federal multipurpose development in an attempt to force its bankrupt partnership policy upon the people of the region who have repeatedly rejected it at the polls.

Let me advise the President of the United States that they will reject it again in 1958 and 1960. I assure him today that we shall make the administration's policy an issue in those two campaigns. The President of the United States has given away the heritage of future generations of Americans in their natural resources; and the senior Senator from Oregon does not propose to let the President of the United States continue to give it away to private monopolies in this country.

In his state of the Union message the other day the President commented on the giveaway phase, and he said, "Let us face the facts." I say to the President of the United States, "Why do you not face the facts in regard to the unconscionable giveaway program which has characterized your administration under two Secretaries of the Interior, McKay and Seaton, in regard to the natural resources of the people of this country?"

I say to the President of the United States, "You will have to answer to the people of the Pacific Northwest in 1958 and 1960 by way of accountability for the unconscionable course of action you have followed in scuttling the natural resource heritage of the American people in full river basin development. Now you send to the Congress another budget message in which, once again, you participate in a budget request representing underdevelopment of the river basins of this country."

I am glad to join issue with the President of the United States on this question, because I am satisfied that the people of the country will be with me once they have the facts with regard to the need of protecting the water resources of America.

I point out to the President that he had better study his history, and recognize that no civilization can climb on falling water tables. The fact is that the program followed by Dwight D. Eisenhower in the field of river basin development is resulting in falling water tables in large sections of the great West. The time has come to stop it; and the best way to stop it is to increase the budget, so as to give the people of the country maximum development of flood control and the electrical energy potential of the Columbia River Basin and other river basin areas of the country.

Concluding my comment on the press release I wish to point out that Oregon and Washington have a major unemployment problem. In my State there is the highest unemployment rate in America today. In my State there is the highest bankruptcy rate in America today, due in no small measure to the unwise economic policies of the Eisenhower administration, particularly in the field of natural resources development and in the field of the hard and tight money policy of the administration, which has resulted in closing one lumber mill after another in the State of Oregon.

Let anyone go to the State of Oregon if he wishes clear proof of what is happening as a result of the policy of this administration in selling out the economic interests of this country to big business. The situation will grow worse under the administration's policies. Our defense potential will suffer from the impending power shortage. I am confident that the people of Oregon and its neighboring States, regardless of party, will condemn the administration's short-sighted policy at John Day Dam.

I serve notice that at the appropriate time I shall offer an amendment to the appropriation bill, when it comes before the Senate, seeking an adequate amount of money for John Day Dam, so that we can proceed with the maximum development of electric power from that dam, for both the economic and defense needs of the American people in these critical times.

DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I think we all have cause for moderate reassurance in the reply which the President has at last sent to Premier Bulganin's letter of December 10. The Eisenhower letter's moderate tone is praiseworthy. The stress on disarmament involved more than words, because it included some new proposals for separate discussion rather than a mere reiteration of the old, inseparable disarmament package. The possibility that the letter may lead to new diplomatic conversations on the whole range of United States-Soviet differences is to be welcomed.

Mr. President, I was pleased to read in the New York Times this morning that the President's letter is supposed to be mainly the product of Secretary of State Dulles' pen. I hope this is true, because the letter is more encouraging than Mr. Dulles usually is on such matters. It is important at this stage of world affairs that Presidential letters and messages really amount to a consensus of Government opinion, rather than merely the opinions of the Presidential speechwriters. Only if these documents reflect the views and determination of the President's subordinates at the operation level will the messages themselves be fruitful.

Because of the great importance attached to the Bulganin-Eisenhower exchange, I wish to bring the Senate's attention to three articles and an editorial of particular value which have appeared in our Nation's newspapers.

The first appeared in yesterday's Washington Post. It is written by Chalmers Roberts. The second is an editorial entitled, "Reply to Bulganin," published in this morning's Washington Post. The third is a news story in the New York Times of January 13, written by Dana Schmidt. The fourth is a column in the New York Times written by C. L. Sulzberger.

I ask unanimous consent that each of these articles be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EAST-WEST JOCKEYING ONLY BEGUN

(By Chalmers M. Roberts)

Seldom, if ever, on a single day have the two giants of today's world declared their respective positions as did President Eisenhower and Premier Bulganin on Thursday in their discussions of American and Soviet policy.

Yet the listener-reader can be pardoned if he felt a bit confused by next morning as to where the Big Two really stand on the major issues which divide the globe. For the simple fact is that neither the President in his state of the Union address nor Bulganin in his latest round of diplomatic-propaganda notes spoke with complete frankness.

Stripping away the cover words on both sides, the two positions can be stated this way:

The United States, that is, the Eisenhower administration, wants to get its military house in better condition before another round of negotiation with the Russians. It knows that our North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies, however, are attracted by the idea of talks with Moscow before any irrevocable commitment to spread nuclear weapons across Continental Europe from Britain to Russia. Hence the partly open door to negotiation, with the hope that the Soviets won't be able, with the help of our NATO allies, to pry it wide open until American defenses are in order.

The Soviet Union, with Bulganin the mouthpiece for Nikita Khrushchev and company, doubtless want to keep American nuclear weapons as far away as possible, especially to keep them out of West Germany. Probably it would like some surcease from the costly arms race; almost certainly it is willing to see the general East-West balance remain in Europe, but with less possibility of conflict, while the Communist orbit makes gains in the Middle East, Asia, and Africa, areas of greater free world weakness.

A COMMON FEAR

These two brief summaries are not, of course, the whole picture from either side. But what Mr. Eisenhower and Premier Bulganin did say testifies to their validity—the Eisenhower reference to the "all inclusiveness" of the "Communist imperialism" threat and his stress on Communist economic penetration; the Bulganin talk of a European nonagression pact; of the dangers of missiles in Britain and on the Continent; of the necessity of ending nuclear tests and banning the use of nuclear weapons; of the European "atom free zone" idea.

Both sides share the fear of a nuclear holocaust. Both sides know that the arms race continues unabated—and today the Kremlin knows that very likely the United States really will make a major effort to make good its missile deficiencies.

Each side is convinced that its way of life is the last, best hope of man; each fears the inroads of the other; each denies any effort to force its system on unwilling peoples. These things were not said directly last week by either the President or Bulganin, but they were implicit.

What, then, are the possibilities for coexistence, assuming that total war can be avoided?

CAN'T STALL TOO LONG

The outlook is for a period of jockeying which will end up with some sort of East-West conference, perhaps later this year. Each side will have to throw overboard some of the excess baggage to reach agreement, as has been the case before all the other postwar conferences.

Dispatches from Western Europe indicate that Europeans are not now questioning whether there will be another conference but ask only when and about what. The administration here knows in its heart that it can stall only so long; that European pressures skillfully played upon by the Soviets will force a conference without American leadership if Washington says nay too long. Some administration officials say that the launching of the first American sputnik could make agreement on a conference much easier here.

But the question of when to meet is far simpler than what to do when the United States and the Soviet Union do meet.

DISENGAGEMENT AT LEAST

The last major go round concerned disarmament on the thesis accepted here and elsewhere in the West that the Hungarian revolution had frozen, through Kremlin fright, the Soviet position in Europe. This still is a prevailing theory, but increasing numbers of diplomats both here and in Western Europe are coming round to the idea that perhaps some half measures may be possible, measures which relates to disarmament but which more properly should be called disengagement.

The vast interest in Western Europe shown in the December series of BBC lectures by George F. Kennan, the former State Department official, is indicative of this interest. This is not to say that there is any general agreement on his exact prescriptions but that there is a wide belief that he is right when he says that the only hope for Eastern Europe, for moving toward German reunification and for lessening East-West tensions lies in getting the Red army to return home from East Germany, Poland, Hungary, and the other satellites.

And there is agreement, too, that the West would have to pay a price. Much of the current argument is over that price and over what any price should be paid for.

This is why there has been so much detailed searching of the December, and now the January, mass of Bulganin letters and the concomitant Khrushchev speeches—a search for clues to Soviet policy. What has been found?

There is one idea only which could be described as new, though it is in fact a variant on old ideas. This is the proposal first put forward by Communist Poland at the United Nations October 2 to create an atom free zone consisting of West Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia, Communist East Germany, in which nuclear weapons would be neither manufactured nor stationed. As the map with this article shows, this area is the core of two of the European inspection zone proposals, one by the Soviets, the other by the United States, which were put forward at the London disarmament talks last spring.

The atom (or nuclear) free zone proposal was brushed aside when the Poles first put it forward. But the Kremlin formally endorsed it in the Bulganin letters in December and the idea was reiterated in last week's letters as one of the topics for a proposed summit conference.

Polish Foreign Minister Adam Rapacki told the London Sunday Times a week ago that Poland had sought more modest solutions than those which failed at the London talks; that adoption of the plan could open the way to other disarmament measure; that it could facilitate German reunification but that the Poles do not foresee the plan as a prelude to a withdrawal of conventional forces from the area. That, he added, could become the subject of a separate agreement, first of all between the great powers. Finally, Rapacki said that Poland has some ideas on control measures for such a plan and that the London control proposals will be helpful on that issue.

From this and from other available information and hints, it appears that the nuclear free zone as viewed in Moscow—and Moscow, not Warsaw, will of course be controlling—has some very definite limitations. It is a device to keep American nuclear weapons out of West Germany, first of all. And very likely it is a Soviet device to avoid having to make nuclear weapons available in some form to the satellites if America distributes them in Continental Western Europe. After all, it must give the Kremlin pause to think of what might have happened if nuclear weapons had been in the hands of the Hungarian Army in October 1956.

The Soviets would naturally like to see the American Army return home and probably would risk trouble in the satellites by withdrawing the Red Army if the United States would strike that bargain. But the chances of such a move are indeed slim today.

French Premier Felix Gaillard, in a recent interview with U. S. News & World Report, flatly opposed the nuclear zone plan as a very dangerous idea because any nuclear disarmament of Europe would remove the American forces. * * * It would mean 1 mile of Soviet withdrawal to the east for 7 miles of American withdrawal to the West.

A realization of this attitude, which of course is the Washington attitude, perhaps accounts for Rapacki's cautious words on the troop withdrawal issue.

But Bulganin last week spoke again of thinning out troops on both sides of the line which divides Germany. This has attraction in London, which has been trying to cut its forces in West Germany despite NATO insistence that it cut no more.

On this issue, as on the nuclear free zone idea, a major obstacle is Soviet reluctance to grant the total inspection and control demanded by the West. Mr. Eisenhower termed this inspection the one indispensable condition of any arms agreement. However, it might not be so difficult in non-Soviet territory as it has proved to be when Russia itself was concerned.

Perhaps the rock on which the Polish plan will founder is the issue of German reunification, though the ultimate answer here lies with West Germany.

The latest Bulganin messages show an absolutely rigid position on German reunification: The West Germans must give in and negotiate directly with the East German Communist regime, which they so far have refused even to recognize as a government; they must form a vague sort of federation; they must insure no loss of the social changes in East Germany, meaning at a minimum the economic socialization. And "free elections" has disappeared entirely from the Moscow lexicon in speaking of German reunification.

Enough has been said so far to show the immense complications of any new negotiations on European political issues between East and West. And yet it will not be easy for the Eisenhower administration to escape such negotiations.

The difficulties may be immense, but the December NATO meeting in Paris demonstrated massive European determination to have a try at negotiation. The politicians on each side can expect warnings from their military leaders of the risks involved. NATO would collapse if there was a move leading to Germany's withdrawal, it is said here. And in Moscow, if some Washington readings are correct, the Red army marshals would not be happy to give up their advanced land positions despite the arrival of the nuclear age.

President Eisenhower got a lot of cheers last Thursday when he spoke of waging total peace. But in the comments, there were passing few who pointed out that he had failed to come to grips with the issue of negotiating with the Kremlin. A good many Americans, in and out of both the executive and the Congress, figure that the United States had better do some work on its military posture before sitting down at a conference table.

The West certainly wants to avoid the age of terror of which the President spoke. It would like to turn the corner, as he put it, on the path toward lasting peace. And Americans, as a Nation, indeed will always go the extra mile toward peace. Yet the problem remains how to find a way of translating this universal desire (for peace) into action.

At the moment the two major powers are far apart. But America's allies are bringing more pressure on Washington, and showing more leadership of their own, than at any time since the end of World War II. And on the Communist side, quasi-independent Poland, trapped in the vise between Russia and Germany, has put forward a proposal which merits examination and which cannot be brushed aside as merely a stooge operation for Moscow.

The new year did not dawn bright with many hopes. But it is almost certain to see a long East-West jockeying for position and then, in the end, another try at the conference table. At the moment that is the best that can be said for 1958's prospects. But it is something.

REPLY TO BULGANIN

President Eisenhower has replied to Prime Minister Bulganin with a sweep of argument and of constructive proposals that may astonish some of his countrymen as well as the Kremlin. The most dramatic item in his substantial list of offers is a proposal that outer space be controlled for peaceful purposes. Both the Soviet Union and the United States, the President noted, "are now using outer space for the testing of missiles designed for military purposes. The time to stop," he insisted, "is now."

The effect of the Eisenhower proposal would be to stop the missile race. Undoubtedly, the suggestion would be more appealing to the Russians if the United States were ahead in that race. But this country is on the eve of a broad stepup in its missile program. If Russia responds with a redoubling of her efforts, still greater exertions in the United States may be expected, and the end result will be a stupendous investment in means of destruction that will further intensify the pall of peril under which mankind now lives. Every consideration of humanity, of world peace, and coexistence thus calls for serious negotiations on this momentous issue.

The President's various proposals were coupled with a conditional acceptance of Mr. Bulganin's plea for a summit conference. His condition is that the complex matters to be discussed at such a conference should be worked on in advance by diplomats and foreign ministers so that the heads of state could determine in advance whether a top-level meeting would hold good hope of advancing the cause of peace and justice in the world. If the end to be sought is agreement rather than the broadcast of propaganda, some advance spadework would seem to be imperative. Instead of closing the door, the President has opened it to negotiations on a practical basis. In this, of course, he has support of the NATO allies.

The President replied in kind to Mr. Bulganin's propaganda thrusts, effectively puncturing many Kremlin pretensions. In our opinion, however, this part of the letter might well have been abbreviated or left out entirely. What is important at this critical juncture is exploration of every possibility of easing tensions and halting the arms race. The President should also have avoided reiteration of the charge that Moscow broke faith in regard to the reunification of Germany. His proposal for discussion of the status of the Soviet satellites in Eastern Europe, however justified by intrinsic merit, will likewise be regarded as inflammatory. If there is to be any agreement between the East and West, it will have to begin with less delicate issues on which there is some chance of reaching an understanding.

The important thing is that the President has offered constructive suggestions that will have a strong appeal for peace-seeking peoples. His plea for space control was buttressed by a proposal to end "the now unrestrained production of nuclear weapons"; for an end of nuclear-weapon testing as part of the production controls; for building up the authority of the United Nations and curtailed use of the big-power veto in the Security Council.

Though some of these proposals are not new, we wish the President had outlined his entire peace program, before he received Mr. Bulganin's letter. Indeed, his offers would have been far more effective if they had come before the launching of the sputniks. But past omissions can be minimized only by present performance. In this document the Government has taken a constructive and positive course. There is enough meat in the present proposals to enable the diplomats and foreign ministers to formulate an agenda for a summit conference if there is any disposition to seek peaceful settlements as distinguished from propaganda maneuvers.

NOTE TO BULGANIN—PRESIDENT SAYS TALKS MUST BE PREPARED AT LOWER LEVEL

(By Dana Adams Schmidt)

WASHINGTON, January 12.—President Eisenhower told Premier Bulganin today that he was ready to meet him in a top-level conference if it had been prepared at lower levels in a way offering "good hope" for the advancement of "peace and justice."

While agreeing with the Soviet leader's remarks, made in his December 10 letter, on the value of personal contacts at the top, the President cautioned that such a meeting, if ill-prepared or exploited for propaganda, could bring "disillusionment, dejection, and increased distrust."

In his letter of reply to Moscow, President Eisenhower suggested strengthening the U. N. by an agreement between the United States and the Soviet not to use the veto so that efforts of the Security Council to work out peaceful solutions of disputes would not be frustrated.

CHALLENGE ON GERMANY

The President challenged the Soviet Union to restore confidence in the pledged word by living up to its promises to reunify Germany through free elections and to give East European nations freedom to choose their own forms of government.

The pledge on Germany was made at the first East-West heads-of-government meeting in Geneva in July 1955. The pledge of freedom for Eastern Europe was made at the Yalta Conference in 1945.

At the head of proposals in his message looking toward disarmament, the President put an agreement to use outer space only for peaceful purposes. Recalling that in 1948 the Soviet Union rejected United States offers to renounce making atomic bombs, he wrote:

"The nations of the world face today another choice perhaps even more momentous than that of 1948. That relates to the use of outer space. Let us this time, and in time, make the right choice, the peaceful choice."

WARNING ON WEAPONS

The President warned that new weapons using outer space would greatly increase "the capacity of the human race to destroy itself."

As part of a program to end the production of nuclear weapons, President Eisenhower suggested a cessation in nuclear tests, "not just for 2 or 3 years, but indefinitely."

The President made two important shifts of emphasis in restating United States disarmament proposals.

First, he reiterated the standing proposal for halting the production of nuclear weapons and for beginning the transfer of fissionable material in existing weapons stocks to peaceful purposes. He then offered Moscow this new inducement:

"Since our existing weapons stocks are doubtless larger than yours, we would expect to make a greater transfer than you to peaceful purpose stocks. I should be glad to receive your suggestion as to what you consider to be an equitable ratio in this respect."

Second, General Eisenhower reiterated that inspection and control were an essential part of all phases of disarmament and could be usefully studied by technical groups. He continued:

"These technical studies could, if you wish, be undertaken without commitment as to ultimate acceptance, or as to the interdependence of the propositions involved."

Hitherto the United States had said it was ready to start technical studies only after the Soviet Union had accepted inspection and control. Furthermore, it had insisted that all phases of disarmament were inextricably linked.

If the Soviet Union insists on continuing the accumulation of nuclear weapons, the President said, it would be better also to continue tests to devise weapons that can be more accurately confined to military objectives, that are of defensive value and that eliminate the dangers of fallout, which could destroy vast segments of human life.

The United States Ambassador in Moscow, Llewellyn E. Thompson Jr., sent the letter to the Kremlin by messenger at noon today, Moscow time. The next steps in diplomatic preparation of a heads-of-government meeting presumably will be handled by the Ambassador.

The 4,000-word document, mainly a product of Secretary of State Dulles' pen, was coordinated at meetings in Paris last week with replies to Premier Bulganin by 14 other members of the Atlantic Alliance. The other replies are expected to follow that of President Eisenhower in the next few days.

ARMS CALLED KEY ISSUE

The President's letter called disarmament "the most important problem which faces the world today."

Discussing Premier Bulganin's December 10 proposals, he declared that he had found them to be "unfortunately inexact or incomplete in their meaning and inadequate as a program for productive negotiations for peace."

As the framework for a possible meeting with Soviet and other heads of government, President Eisenhower indicated answers to eight proposals made by the Soviet leader, and made a series of his own.

Some observers believed that the reference to "attendance as appropriate of leaders of other states" left the door open to the possibility of a bilateral United States—Soviet meeting.

The President answered the first four of Premier Bulganin's proposals by telling him that the United Nations Charter already provided the answers to the problems raised. They were as follows:

Respect for the independence of the countries of the Near and Middle East and renunciation of the use of force in settlement of their problems require no special agreements in view of the charter.

A nonaggression agreement to be submitted to the Atlantic Alliance and Warsaw Pact members would offer nothing not included in the United Nations Charter's provisions against aggression.

A suggested ban on the use of nuclear weapons is not needed in view of the charter's ban on the use of any weapons against the territorial integrity or independence of any state.

A proclamation of an intention to develop relations of friendship and peaceful cooperation is taken care of in the charter.

CONCRETE STEPS NEEDED

What is needed, the President said, is not another proclamation but concrete steps to achieve such relations. The proclamation of the Soviet Communist Party last November in support of the triumph of communism throughout the world by every means not excluding violence together with slanderous references to the United States would seem to make professions of friendship futile, he added.

"This declaration makes clear where responsibility for the cold war lies," the President said.

Discussing other proposals made by Marshal Bulganin, the President said:

The United States hopes that current negotiations to broaden scientific, cultural and athletic contacts will succeed in spite of the fact that the Soviet Union rejected such proposals in 1955.

Normal trade relations urged by the Soviet Union are much to be desired.

The halting of nuclear weapons tests would not go to the heart of the problem, nor would setting up a denuclearized area in Germany, Poland, and Czechoslovakia meet the real problem, since modern weapons know no geographical limits. A real solution of the menace of nuclear weapons lies only in ending their production, the President maintained.

The Soviet proposals on Germany offer no means of ending the division of that country; a solution would provide reunification and recognize the link between political solutions.

HOW TO RESUME TALKS WITH MOSCOW

(By C. L. Sulzberger)

LONDON, January 12.—The United States has belatedly begun its own diplomatic offensive to counter Moscow's persistently skillful initiative. The first venture in our effort to regain some momentum was President Eisenhower's Congressional message. The second is contained in our reply to Bulganin's Christmas note.

The President, at last, has shaken himself free from a deluding slogan. He recognizes the primary menace as that of Communist imperialism, not international communism. We are not participating in a holy alliance engaged in ideological warfare but in resistance to all aggression, direct or indirect.

Eisenhower says somewhat vaguely that we must wage total peace. What is this? How is it to be waged? Not by joining the Russians in a fight against malaria. This may appeal to the Chief Executive's romantic nature. But it is tangential to the problem.

The President's speech emphasized need to strengthen our defenses. At the same time it expressed willingness to talk with our opponents. His reply to Bulganin will close no door to such approaches, although it is scarcely sanguine about chances of success.

The main point of this far too tardy but well drafted paper is that established machinery for negotiation is stalled because of what has proved to be an unworkable United Nations apparatus. Specifically, he would have the Russians join with us in efforts to eliminate the restrictive Security Council veto, which has rendered mute what should be the conscience of the world.

U. N.'S FUTURE AN ISSUE

This is a valid point. Someday something must be done. Either the wheels of U. N. must again be made to turn, or we will have to cease basing our own policy so heavily upon that rusting organization. Nevertheless, it is not easy to imagine that Moscow is willing at this time to discuss the question. Should we therefore delay examination of other subjects? No.

We cannot continue to make excuses for not negotiating, and thus allow the Kremlin to proclaim unchallenged a desire to reach peaceful settlement. Indeed, thanks to our cumbersome methods, Bulganin has already publicized another dramatic idea before we have even answered its predecessor.

Eisenhower says he is prepared to "go the extra mile" if it will bring genuine settlement nearer. It was high time to make this clear. Our allies were clamoring for such a move while Dulles seemed obstinately to lag behind.

Should there be another summit conference, as both Bulganin and Gaillard suggest? How many nations merit representation? What is a fair proportion between Communist, anti-Communist, and neutral participants? Or should initial surveys be made bilaterally by only the two superpowers?

Despite Dulles' curious efforts to obscure the fact, it is our policy to meet again with the Soviets. We are not holding back until our missile program assumes shape. We reckon we are strong enough to treat now without fear of being bullied. The diplomatic value of new defense measures will only become ascendant 2 or 3 years hence. We are even prepared to take the initiative in seeking new talks.

MEETING TO DISCUSS WHAT?

But what can we discuss with any hope of progress? Not the Russian plea to recognize Europe's status quo. This would mean retaining an ideological curtain between the Elbe and the Adriatic, perpetuating a partitioned Germany. And certainly not the scarcely veiled attempt to oust us from our NATO bases and military dispositions.

The heart of the matter remains disarmament. It can only be partially approached at present. But we are not only willing again to attack the question, we are even willing to take certain risks if a start can be made along this immensely difficult road.

There is room for joint scrutiny of several aspects. We are not wholly averse to Soviet efforts to limit membership in the atomic weapons club; that is to say, to discourage other nations apart from Britain from manufacturing such arms if Moscow pledges to keep Communist fabrication within Soviet borders.

We are by no means opposed to some limitations on conventional forces if we can ever get precise and confirmable figures from the U. S. S. R. on the size of its present establishment. Above all, we are prepared once more to explore the chances of establishing an initial inspection system, no matter how limited. We believe the Russians will never accept the degree of controls we regard as an essential minimum. But we can lose nothing by reexamining the question.

Another negotiation is therefore indicated. But how can we get off the dead center of existing diplomatic doldrums? The evident answer is to revive the moribund but not defunct Council of Foreign Ministers. This would be a useful beginning. Without concession from either side, the Big Four could bargain over the shape and methods of an eventually more purposeful parley.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, one of the dramatic aspects of the President's letter was his proposal that outer space be controlled for peaceful purposes. This is a subject closely related to the disarmament negotiations, which, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Arms Control, I have followed with particular interest.

PROBLEMS OF THE NUCLEAR AGE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, entitled "We Are Facing a Danger Unlike Any Danger That Has Ever Existed." This is an excellent and well-reasoned statement of the problems facing us as Americans in the nuclear age.

I believe many people should read it and ponder its contents. The National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy was created in the summer of 1957. Its membership includes a distinguished list of Americans, including, as cochairman, Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review, and Clarence Pickett, executive secretary emeritus of the American Friends Service Committee. In its statement of purpose the committee asserts:

The inadequacy of the present response by national governments to international problems and the recognized ability of these governments to wage nuclear war which could end in mutual annihilation, prompted the formation of the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy.

The purpose of this ad hoc committee is to develop public support for a boldly conceived and executed policy which will lead mankind away from nuclear war and toward world peace with justice. To this end we propose:

1. Immediate cessation of nuclear tests by all countries, including our own, through a United Nations agreement.

2. International control of missiles and outerspace satellites through the United Nations.

3. The support and reinforcement of all agencies concerned with upholding and strengthening the United Nations as an instrument of effective world law.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE ARE FACING A DANGER UNLIKE ANY DANGER THAT HAS EVER EXISTED

A deep uneasiness exists inside Americans as we look out on the world.

It is not that we have suddenly become unsure of ourselves in a world in which the Soviet Union has dramatically laid claim to scientific supremacy.

Nor that the same propulsion device that can send a manmade satellite into outer space can send a missile carrying a hydrogen bomb across the ocean in 18 minutes.

Nor is the uneasiness only the result of headlines that tell of trouble between Turkey and Syria and a war that could not be limited to the Middle East.

The uneasiness that exists inside Americans has to do with the fact that we are not living up to our moral capacity in the world.

We have been living half a life. We have been developing our appetites, but we have been starving our purposes. We have been concerned with bigger incomes, bigger television screens, and bigger cars—but not with the big ideas on which our lives and freedoms depend.

We are facing a danger unlike any danger that has ever existed. In our possession and in the possession of the Russians are more than enough nuclear explosives to put an end to the life of man on earth.

Our uneasiness is the result of the fact that our approach to the danger is unequal to the danger. Our response to the challenge of today's world seems out of joint. The slogans and arguments that belong to the world of competitive national sovereignties—a world of plot and counterplot—no longer fit the world of today or tomorrow.

Just in front of us opens a grand human adventure into outer space. But within us and all around us is the need to make this world whole before we set out for other ones. We can earn the right to explore other planets only as we make this one safe and fit for human habitation.

The sovereignty of the human community comes before all others—before the sovereignty of groups, tribes, or nations. In that community, man has natural rights. He has the right to live and to grow, to breathe unpoisoned air, to work on uncontaminated soil. He has the right to his sacred nature.

If what nations are doing has the effect of destroying these natural rights, whether by upsetting the delicate balances on which life depends, or fouling the air, or devitalizing the land, or tampering with the genetic integrity of man himself; then it becomes necessary for people to restrain and tame the nations.

Indeed, the test of a nation's right to survive today is measured not by the size of its bombs or the range of its missiles, but by the size and range of its concern for the human community as a whole.

There can be no true security for America unless we can exert leadership in these terms, unless we become advocates of a grand design that is directed to the large cause of human destiny.

There can be no true security for America unless we can establish and keep vital connections with the world's people, unless there is some moral grandeur to our purposes, unless what we do is directed to the cause of human life and the free man.

There is much that America has said to the world. But the world is still waiting for us to say and do the things that will in deed and in truth represent our greatest strength.

What are these things?

First, as it concerns the peace, America can say that we pledge ourselves to the cause of peace with justice on earth, and that there is no sacrifice that we are not prepared to make, nothing we will not do to create such a just peace for all peoples;

That we are prepared to support the concept of a United Nations with adequate authority under law to prevent aggression, adequate authority to compel and enforce disarmament, adequate authority to settle disputes among nations according to principles of justice.

Next, as it concerns nuclear weapons, America can say that the earth is too small for intercontinental ballistic missiles and nuclear bombs, and that the first order of business for the world is to bring both under control;

That the development of satellites or rocket stations and the exploration of outer space must be carried on in the interests of the entire human community through a pooling of world science.

As it concerns nuclear testing, America can say that because of the grave unanswered questions with respect to nuclear test explosions—especially as it concerns the contamination of air and water and food, and the injury to man himself—we are calling upon all nations to suspend such explosions at once;

That while the abolition of testing will not by itself solve the problem of peace or the problem of armaments, it enables the world to eliminate immediately at least one real and specific danger. Also, that the abolition of testing gives us a place to begin on the larger question of armaments control, for the problems in monitoring such tests are relatively uncomplicated.

As it concerns our connections to the rest of mankind, America can say that none of the differences separating the governments of the world are as important as the membership of all peoples in the human family;

That the big challenge of the age is to develop the concept of a higher loyalty—loyalty by man to the human community;

That the greatest era of human history on earth is within reach of all mankind, that there is no area that cannot be made fertile or habitable, no disease that cannot be fought, no scarcity that cannot be conquered;

That all that is required for this is to redirect our energies, rediscover our moral strength, redefine our purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, in the near future, I intend to review the whole subject of disarmament and related issues, many of which have a bearing on the letter which the President has sent to Soviet Premier Bulganin and on the position taken by the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy. At that time I shall express my own views in greater detail.

Meanwhile, we should all welcome the President's letter as a concrete indication that our official policy is not adverse to negotiations. We must always be prepared to negotiate. We must not permit the U. S. S. R. to usurp our role of peacemaker. The important question at the moment is, What are the issues on which we should negotiate? Where will the negotiations be most profitable and productive? I have some ideas on these matters, too, Mr. President, which I shall shortly lay before the Senate.

MISS MARIAN ANDERSON

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to pay tribute to the splendid service performed for her country by the great and talented American singer and artist, Miss Marian Anderson, in her recent tour through Asia.

It was my privilege to see the Columbia Broadcasting System's special telecast at year's end produced by Mr. Edward R. Murrow and his "See It Now" group, which documented Miss Anderson's tour.

Miss Anderson's magnificent voice, her quiet dignity, her great faith and wisdom carried a message throughout the nations of Asia that will echo throughout that vast region for many years.

As Miss Anderson said, she was representing "not only her people"—that is, the Negro people of America—but also her country, her Nation. She did, indeed, represent our Nation in a way which must make every American, North and South, deeply proud.

Miss Anderson's triumphant tour was perhaps the most effective of the programs which have been set up and sponsored by our Department of State since Congress passed the International Cultural Act of 1956.

As a coauthor of the act with Representative FRANK THOMPSON, of New Jersey, I wish to compliment the Department of State, the Columbia Broadcasting Co., and, above all, Miss Anderson. I have urged the State Department and the United States Information Agency to make the broadest possible use of this message throughout all of Asia.

I cite this great success to my colleagues as an example of what can be done in the field of international cultural exchange to strengthen America's stature in the world with a very small expenditure indeed.

PROPOSED FEDERAL SCHOLARSHIPS IN SCIENCE

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a thoughtful and effective editorial entitled "Bring Back GI Bill?" which appeared in the Coquille Valley Sentinel of Coquille, Oreg., on November 7, 1957. This editorial, written by Ralph P. Stuller, publisher of the Coquille Valley Sentinel, emphasizes the challenge posed by Soviet technological advances to our entire educational system. Mr. Stuller has underscored the fact that restoration of the GI bill would help to send to college thousands of young Americans with brains, courage, and idealism.

I also endorse Mr. Stuller's view that we should set up a system of Federal scholarships based on merit to see to it that no matter the financial position of a youngster if he was the rich clay needed for molding into top grade people he would be educated.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Coquille Valley Sentinel of November 7, 1957]

BRING BACK GI BILL?

Suggestion of Senator RICHARD L. NEUBERGER that the GI bill—allowed to die by President Eisenhower on January 31, 1955—be reactivated will be backed by thoughtful people across the Nation who are seriously disturbed by the current trend toward downgrading scientific and liberal education in this country.

The deemphasis on the integrity of the human mind has been an unmet challenge to many people who felt that the Soviet's rise in intellectual work would eventually pose a real problem for us.

Senator NEUBERGER in his Washington column this week calls attention to the waste of human material. A waste we can ill afford in this day and age of the cold war and the two huge blocs of the West and the East in mortal competition.

There is no one who does not know of at least a half dozen brilliant youngsters in his community who through no fault of their own cannot take advantage of the higher educational facilities of the State.

We would go even further than Senator NEUBERGER. We would set up a system of Federal scholarships based on merit to see to it that no matter the financial position of a youngster if he was the rich clay needed for molding into top grade people he would be educated.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOV. J. LINDSAY ALMOND, JR., OF VIRGINIA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on January 11, the Honorable J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., was inaugurated in Richmond as Governor of Virginia.

On that occasion the Governor made a very notable and brilliant address dealing with the basic principles of our representative democracy.

I ask permission to insert this address in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF J. LINDSAY ALMOND, JR., GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, members of the general assembly, my fellow Virginians, It is with a sense of profound humility that I express to the people of Virginia my gratitude for the high honor they have conferred upon me. To stand here, on the steps of the building Jefferson built, close by a room where Marshall once presided; to take an oath in a long succession that began with Henry in the year of our Republic's birth; to address a general assembly that numbers among its former members the architects of our country's formation—all this is to sense deeply the history and the greatness of Virginia. We are, all of us, stewards of this inheritance, charged with conserving the best of a magnificent past, and charged also with bringing a new vision to the problems of our own time.

These contemporary problems are difficult problems; they are none of them easy.

As citizens of the United States, we must acknowledge soberly the global dangers that confront us, and bring to the defense of the Nation, without reservation, every ounce of loyalty, devotion, and courage that is within us. To those undertakings that are properly Federal in their character, we owe our obedience and support; this allegiance must be given with our whole hearts.

Yet we are citizens not only of the United States, but of Virginia also. Ours is a union of federated States, bound together by a compact to which the States alone are parties, and the strength of this Union lies in the nature of the Union. I think the phrase "States rights" is much abused; what we are speaking of, more often than not, is of State powers, and what we should be equally concerned with, in the years that lie immediately ahead, is with State responsibilities.

With your permission, I would confine myself today to some few observations on these issues of surpassing importance—the sovereignty of States, the security of a Nation—with particular reference to the problems of our public schools, and to the challenge that awaits our entire system of education in the light of the Russians' ominous moon. Without implying any invidious equations, I might remark that the matters with which I am here concerned stem from two revolving bodies: Sputnik, and the Supreme Court of the United States. Certain obvious similarities might be reviewed, but I resist the temptation.

By confining this address so narrowly, I do not mean to suggest that many other subjects are not of real importance to Virginians at this time. I am much concerned, for example, with the urgent need for economic development in Virginia, and will transmit a special message to the assembly on this topic. I have several recommendations in the field of highway safety which I hope will find favor with the assembly. There is much that might be said on this occasion of our natural resources, our penal institutions, our mental hospitals, our State sanatoriums, and public health programs. These I put regretfully aside for another day.

Yet, I would not want even to begin my principal remarks without expressing deserved tribute to the devoted and able leadership of Gov. Thomas Bahnson Stanley, whose firmness, patience, and fortitude have characterized Virginia these past 4 years.

Permit me to speak to you briefly on what seem to me certain great political principles of this Republic, and of their application to the perplexing problems so close at hand.

This Republic, as I have said, is a union of federated States. That is what it was in the beginning; that is what it is now, and the passage of 170 years, the adoption of various amendments to our basic compact, the waging of a tragic Civil War, have not altered this original structure of a Nation. If the constitutional position asserted by the Southern States is to be understood abroad in the land, these plain and unequivocal facts of history must be understood. They do not seem to me so complex.

In the beginning were the sovereign States—the free and independent States described by Jefferson in the document cherished by Americans everywhere—the States that voluntarily formed themselves into a limited union, the better to resist the mightiest power of the 18th century. As separate States, united for certain purposes only, they waged that war and won it; and still as separate States, they sent delegates to Philadelphia who there embarked upon the task of creating a more perfect union.

Out of their deliberations came the Constitution which remains the supreme law of the land to this day. It was, and is, a magnificent work of statecraft, a towering example of political design. I think of the Constitution sometimes as I think of a great bridge, soaring above the passing river of everyday life, a thing of strength, a thing of beauty. Resting upon solid foundations of political principle, the Constitution lifts its exposed beams and girders to the sky. It is a bridge that will bear any weight, any strain, now and forever, so long as its basic structure is left unimpaired.

In fashioning this sturdy charter, the great men who once walked upon this very hill were conscious of many considerations. The convictions that influenced them are familiar to us in Virginia—they are part of the very air we breathe—yet they scarcely can be recalled too often. The first is that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed; men do not derive their rights from government—the rights of man are not subject to alienation in this fashion. Secondly, they recognized that there is a tyranny of the majority, and from this despotism free men, and free States, must ever be protected. For a third, they knew that government must ever be tied down, as Jefferson phrased it, by the chains of a Constitution, lest even the most limited government exceed its powers and usurp the freedom of the people.

These considerations were among the elemental provisions written into the Constitution, and these were not paper provisions, designed like bunting for adornment only. These were the bones and sinews of the political body thus brought into being. There was a reason for the composition of the Senate, and a reason for the seemingly cumbersome provisions for the election of a President, and a reason for the language of Article V requiring the concurrence of a full three-fourths of the States for amendment of the basic law. And these reasons rested in the diversity of the ratifying States, in the certainty that government is most susceptible to popular control when it is closest home, and in the conviction—born of bitter experience under Great Britain—that despotism could be restrained only by checks and balances upon a Central Government.

Out of these desires and feelings and forebodings the Constitution was formed. The States, sovereign entities, created from the reservoir of their own sovereignty a central government, and conveyed upon it a unique sovereignty not paralleled elsewhere in the world. To their common government, the States delegated (not surrendered, but merely delegated) certain of their own powers; and by mutual consent, they prohibited unto themselves, through plain words and phrases, the exercise of certain other powers; and, finally, with meticulous care and providential foresight, they wrote into the basic law two express reservations. One of these went to the rights of men: the enduring liberties of the people were never to be construed away. The other went to the powers of States: these residuary powers, neither delegated by the Constitution to the Central Government, nor denied by the Constitution to the States, were to be ever reserved to the States, respectively.

These careful provisions, demanded by Virginia in her very act of ratification, were intended to foreclose pressures for strained and capricious construction of the Constitution. It was thought that in this fashion the organic law would be rendered immune to the gravitations of political expediency, and to the engraftment of personal and sociological predilections by judicial legislation. It was confidently believed that chains had in fact been placed securely upon the newly created Central Government, and that the instrument would remain responsive only to the expressed will of the people acting in their respective States.

Today, we face an ever-deepening constitutional crisis. Its scope and devastating effect are not limited to any particular States or to any single region. New Hampshire and Pennsylvania are told they may not inquire, as States, into possible subversion. Nebraska is told she may not protect a citizen from the tyranny of compulsory unionism. New Mexico and California are told they cannot fix qualifications for practice at the bar. Illinois is rebuked in her State rules of appellate procedure. Michigan is prevented from ousting two local officials charged with crime. New York is told she cannot fire a professor who refused to answer certain questions under oath, lest truthful answers tend to incriminate him. Oregon is inhibited in the regulation of nonnavigable waters within her own borders. In the teeth of history and in contempt of long-established constitutionally sanctioned law, the Southern States are advised that an amendment of 1868 really was intended to prohibit to them the power to operate racially separate schools. This was discovered 86 years after the amendment was ratified.

With the soothing assurance that this is all for our own good, our judicial surgeons have prescribed a massive political bloodletting, and it is not the South only that is being leeched—it is the whole body of the Republic. Weakened by this cynical phlebotomy, enervated by sweet anesthetic, the States gradually are declining to the insignificant role of dependent Federal satellites—mere municipal provinces of Washington, suburbs of the Capital. They are being drained of the vitality that has contributed so greatly to the Nation's strength, and the pity is that an apathetic people lie indifferent to the enveloping evil.

I do not think the people of Virginia are indifferent. They have not exhibited indifference these past 3 years. They have exhibited, on the contrary, by their own expression at the polls and through their representatives in the assembly and in constitutional convention, not a willingness to surrender to usurped authority, but a determination to resist. That determination must not falter now.

On November 5, 1957, the people of Virginia, with overwhelming voice, gave expression to their profound conviction that principle cannot be compromised, and that rights and powers cannot be abandoned, without forsaking every hope for their revival and reestablishment. I interpret and I accept that expression as a mandate to the general assembly and the chief executive to defend and preserve the inherent powers of Virginia's sovereign statehood.

I shall exercise every honorable means at my command in the observance of that mandate and in the execution of that trust.

I call upon the General Assembly, with the utmost confidence in the loyalty and devotion of that body to the fundamental precepts of our constitutional system of government, to stand firm with unwavering unity of purpose and high resolve against every assault upon the sovereign integrity of this Commonwealth. Against these massive attacks we must marshall a massive resistance.

It will be said that I am here referring only to the maintenance of a resolute defense against the catastrophe that threatens to overwhelm our public schools. I would not have the policy so limited. The importance and gravity of this crisis far transcend considerations of race and public education. Nor is my concern only for the integrity of the States; it is for the integrity of the Union also, and for the security and well-being of our whole people. For I say to you with all the earnestness at my command that the potential of this Republic to resist external aggression and the capacity of our Central Government to preserve domestic tranquillity evolves from and depends upon the continuing integrity of its structural components.

Virginia has a high responsibility, I believe, to contribute in whatever way we can toward the preservation of this constitutional structure. I therefore recommend that the General Assembly give thorough consideration to the establishment of an appropriate commission to work with the chief executive in cooperation with our sister States to the end that the several States may be restored to their proper dignity, and defended in the exercise of their nondelegated and reserved powers under the Constitution of the United States.

From these general comments, I must turn now to the specific problem which troubles us so sorely at this time.

I state now, without reservation, as I have so often stated: I am dedicated to the cause of public education in Virginia. I want to see every child possessing the capacity and will to learn afforded the best educational opportunities this Commonwealth can provide, irrespective of race or color. As I want to emphasize somewhat later, the processes of sound education that have been important in the past seem to me imperative now. The well-being of the State, the security of the Nation, even the survival of western civilization, depend to a large degree upon the education of the coming generation. In guiding our children along this urgent path, our public schools, in the familiar image, are like lamps; I deplore the very thought that even one of these should ever be dimmed or extinguished, however briefly. I am determined to do everything within my power to promote and to sustain an efficient, progressive, and well-functioning system of public free schools throughout Virginia.

Yet in approaching this critical matter, we must face certain facts of life squarely. Moderation may be, indeed, the noblest gift of heaven, but it is stark reality that confronts us here on earth. The people of Virginia, I believe, are overwhelmingly in favor of sound public education; and the people of Virginia, I believe, are overwhelmingly against racial integration of the public schools. These two convictions are mutually exclusive. The society in which we live demands that education reflect a spirit of progress and advancement. On a racially mixed basis, progress and advancement are utterly impossible in the public schools of Virginia today.

No public school system can survive when it is isolated from the loyalty, confidence and support of a large segment of the people whose tax dollars are its only source of material support. Yet consideration of public finance are possibly the least of the vital factors here, though many local governing bodies, irrespective of State appropriations, would not provide funds for the operation of racially mixed schools. Beyond the tangible matter of tax dollars are the countless intangible factors of community pride, individual choice, age-old customs, and deep political conviction. Thousands upon thousands of Virginia parents simply would not send their children to racially integrated schools; they have made this clear in every way it is possible for them to do so. By an act of the special session of the assembly, no child may be compelled to attend such a school; but even if this were not so, it would be absolute folly for the State to attempt such a compulsion. The result of forced integration would be half-schools or quarter-schools or no schools, struggling for survival in communities torn by dissension. There could be no education, not in any meaningful sense of the word, under these circumstances.

This is a somber picture, but I believe it is not overdrawn. I am convinced that there is not one political subdivision in Virginia where racially mixed schools can be conducted without such serious and irretrievable loss and danger to the cause of public education as to render the attempt, even on an experimental basis, all but futile. The agonizing study I have given this problem over a period of many months has persuaded me that so far as a State system of public education is concerned, integration anywhere means destruction everywhere. And to paraphrase a great statesman, I say to you simply that I have not been elected governor to preside over the liquidation of Virginia's schools.

Any concept of merely defying usurped authority is submerged beneath the importance and necessity of saving our public free schools from destruction. With fierce devotion, with relentless and uncompromising determination, we shall fight to prevent this tragic end. In honor, good conscience, and decent discharge of our inescapable obligation to Virginia and her children, we can do no less.

I call upon the people and their representatives in the General Assembly to support me in sustaining this cause which my convictions persuade me to be morally just and right, and indispensable to the happiness, prosperity, and culture of our people.

There are those who would have me recommend specific and detailed proposals for dealing with the complex problem confronting us. A number of suggestions have been pressed upon me in the nature of a "compromise," but I find no area of compromise that might be usefully explored. To compromise means to integrate. It is said that integration might be held to a little integration, or to what is called token integration. It is urged that each locality should be left free to decide for itself.

But the objections here are two in number: First, I cannot conceive such a thing as a little integration any more than I can conceive a small avalanche or a modest holocaust, and I am confirmed in this skeptical view by the plain—indeed, the blatant—statements of minority spokesmen. They have been armed out of political expediency with inordinate power to force their will upon the majority. They are indifferent to appeals for moderation. They are determined to substitute chaos for order, and to impose upon the people of both races, heedless of the bitter consequences, an intimate and personal association for which neither race is prepared. No plan would be acceptable to them except that which would open wide the door to complete amalgamation, with its consequent destruction of every semblance of hope for maintenance of an efficient and orderly system of public free schools.

Second, so long as ours is a system of State public schools, financed in large part by State funds, administered by a State agency under a State superintendent of public instruction, there must be one State policy in this regard. Section 140 of our State Constitution prohibits the teaching of white and Negro children in the same classroom anywhere in Virginia; and while I am told this has been voided by action of the Supreme Court of the United States, I know it has not been voided by any action of the whole people of Virginia. Legally, section 140 may not exist; but as an expression of statewide policy, satisfactory to the people of this State for a period of more than 80 years, section 140 remains a useful guide.

The difficulty in all these compromise suggestions, in brief, is that they are premised upon the voluntary acceptance of some unknown degree of integration everywhere in Virginia. To sanction any plan which would legalize the mixing of races in our schools would violate the clear and unmistakable mandate of the people to which I earlier referred. This I cannot do.

Virginia has no alternative but to seek to maintain a position of flexibility so as to meet to the best advantage, in the light of conditions then existing, any situation which may arise. She must utilize every honorable means through the adaptation of her sovereign power and governmental machinery to prevent that which will destroy her public school system. We ought not to rely upon any Maginot Lines. For my own part, I am not dissatisfied with the defenses erected by the assembly 15 months ago, but I will not hesitate to convene the assembly in extraordinary session whenever the public interest may so require.

One measure, however, I do recommend for immediate adoption. The preservation of public peace and good order is historically and constitutionally a State function and not a Federal function. This function I do not propose to yield. Nothing could be more provocative of civil strife and unrest, nor more conducive to racial tension and violence, than the patrolling of public-school property by Armed Forces of the United States. No public school can function at the point of a bayonet.

Therefore, I recommend to the consideration of the General Assembly the enactment of a law expressly authorizing the governor to order the suspension of the operation of any public school whenever and wherever military forces may be employed by Federal authority to police its operation.

I cannot leave this lamentable subject without one further word. I am keenly conscious that, as Governor of Virginia, I am governor for all the people of Virginia, white and Negro alike. To the Negro people I would say this: I cannot agree to any program of integration of the schools, for the overriding constitutional and social reasons I have attempted to set forth; yet I would express my profound hope that in the months ahead we may explore other areas of mutual concern, involving State services, with greater hope for resolving divisive issues in a spirit of unity and good will. I pledge my unremitting efforts, also, toward the end that educational opportunities, though separate, will be fully equal, and I call upon all our citizens who desire an effective and efficient system of education, available to all our children, to lend their aid and cooperation in this vital undertaking.

Permit me, now, to move on to a happier theme. I have treated the critical matter of integration at such length because the first imperative, in my own view, is simply to preserve our public-school system. The second aim, to which we must devote ourselves with equal energy, resourcefulness, and sacrifice, lies in the improvement of our entire educational offering.

There is so much that we can do. And, imbued with a sense of renewed dedication, let us agree that there is so much we will do.

The literary fund, one of the great assets of this State, must be brought to a higher level of usefulness as a convenient source of loans for local school construction and improvements. While public revenues, which are not unlimited, must be fairly distributed among many essential public services, I urge the General Assembly to appropriate a substantial part of the general fund surplus to the literary fund. It is my earnest hope that it may be possible for this appropriation to approximate the sum of $15 million. The demands of our pupil load are in excess of the adequacy of facilities, and will continue to rise at a rapid rate. These demands impose an obligation which must be discharged. This is our obligation, as Virginians. It certainly is not the obligation of the Congress of the United States. Our own localities should be encouraged to assume their full part of this responsibility, but should be aided by the State in every feasible and practical manner.

The present interest rate on literary fund loans is 3½ percent. This imposes an undue burden on the localities, and should be substantially reduced.

I advocate modification of school construction regulations, with more autonomy and its attendant responsibility at the local level. In spending public funds on school buildings, frugality must be the watchword, substance the goal, with dispensable frills and appendages eliminated.

Important though new buildings are, the efficacy of our public school system depends in largest measure upon the competency and adequacy of our teaching forces. In character and dedication this force excels. In numbers it is inadequate. This inadequacy makes it as imperative to recruit new teachers as it is vital to retain those who now compose the profession. Neither of these objectives may be attained without adequate compensation. The necessities of life, the right to a measure of security, the luring attractions of other fields of high and honorable endeavor and the dictates of simple justice and right demand that our teachers be paid better salaries. This is a matter of primary importance. I, therefore, urge the General Assembly to appropriate funds sufficient to assure substantial increases in teacher salaries.

The adequacy of school buildings and the sufficiency of teacher salaries are only two of the elements that must be provided for. There is a third: As never before, we must concern ourselves, thoughtfully and critically, with a reappraisal of what is taught.

It is a shopworn phrase, I know, to say that we live in a perilous time, and a great challenge lies before us. We have heard the admonition so many times that peril has lost its meaning, and challenge has lost its cutting edge. Yet the awesome, chilling truth is that our peril is indeed great: Russia has already demonstrated her power to deliver a major instantaneous attack; it would be folly to treat as mere sham the threat of her masters to bury us. If the Soviet Union continues unchallenged in her preeminence in the field of science, she can win the cold war over any length of time she chooses.

We are familiar with Wellington's famed remark that the Battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton; we must see to it that the mastery of space is not won in the Communist schools of Moscow. Russia attained her superiority in scientific achievement through her classrooms. We must meet the challenge to survival through ours. The demands of long-range technology, not merely in terms of our happiness and security but in the terms of survival itself, can be met only through properly educated men and women.

The common defense and general welfare are responsibilities of the Federal Government. Education remains one of the most important functions of State and local government. The direction and control of the classroom is a prerogative of the State. The State, therefore, controls the source of supply of advanced scientists needed for the present and future defense of the country, as well as for the broader programs of this competitive industrial age.

The rights pertaining to State sovereignty, about which we are so deeply concerned, are invested with corresponding responsibilities. Failure of the State properly to bear these responsibilities creates a vacuum and invites the exercise of invading Federal authority. Failure of the State to exercise its rights, in time of need, is tantamount to their abandonment. The greatest and most sincere demonstration, economically, politically and socially, which can be made at this time for the retention of our rights, would be a major assumption of State responsibility in the field of education in the present national crisis.

I urge the General Assembly and the people of Virginia to join with me in finding bold and imaginative ways in which we of Virginia may rise to this challenge. In this regard, I recommend to the earnest and urgent consideration of the assembly the excellent report of the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council relating to the education of scientists and other specialists. This report was prepared before Russia's convincing demonstration of superiority. These later developments impose a high degree of urgency that the recommendations be promptly implemented, and that they be deemed a minimum program for improving the quantity and quality of our education of scientists and engineers.

Let me emphasize that last comment if I may: Virginia ought not ever to be contented with merely a minimum program. We must never lag in preserving and cultivating Virginia's capacity for leadership among the States of the Union. We should never be content to rest upon past glories; these should merely inspire us to future achievements. With determination, with vision, and with a willingness to work hard, Virginia rightfully may aspire to a position of leadership in the natural and physical sciences, just as Virginia long ago carved bold new roads in the field of political science. Yet I would caution, in this regard, that a renewed emphasis upon training in science must never be imposed at the neglect of equal emphasis upon training in the humanities. It has been aptly said that the preservation of western civilization demands of our educators two things: the development of scientists who can build a more deadly weapon, and the development of statesmen who can prevent its being used.

There are many other matters of vital importance to the progress and welfare of Virginia that I would like to discuss with you. To do so at this time would involve further trespass upon your kindness and patience.

I wish to express to the legislature my supreme pleasure for the high privilege and opportunity of working and cooperating with them in a spirit of mutual good will, confidence, and respect. It has been my good fortune in recent years to have served with them in an advisory capacity. My respect and admiration for their assiduous attention to duty and their profound loyalty and devotion to Virginia are a deep source of encouragement and inspiration to me as I assume this high office.

With immovable faith in the efficacy of prayer; with full recognition of my own limitations; with firm trust in Almighty God; humbly invoking His guidance of my will and purpose, and in supreme reliance upon Him for wisdom and strength, I dedicate all that I am, and pray to be, to the service of the people of Virginia. With my whole heart, I pray to merit their confidence as we walk with firm step and high resolve into the days which lie ahead.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS AND THE FREE WORLD ALLIANCE

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, if we are to have a community of freedom-loving nations, there must be trade and commerce among those nations. Such trade has been promoted and advanced by the reciprocal-trade agreements, which were begun in 1934 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull. Happily, the basic spirit of these agreements has been continued by President Harry S Truman and President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In 1955 it was my privilege to support President Eisenhower's request for a 3-year extension of the trade program, which has helped to increase our ocean commerce and our economic ties with other free nations. Eastern Oregon grain growers are particularly aware of these overseas benefits.

On January 1, 1958, the Oregonian, of Portland, Oreg., published a forthright editorial urging extension of the reciprocal-trade program after its expiration in June of this year. The editors of the Oregonian also pertinently took the administration to task for proposed plans to broaden "escape clause" features of the trade agreements to the point where the entire program could be reduced to a nullity.

We of the Senate soon will be called upon to debate and determine this crucial issue, and so I ask unanimous consent that the Oregonian editorial of January 1, 1958, entitled "Hole in Trade Policy," be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOLE IN TRADE POLICY

Advocates of a liberal foreign-trade policy, an important element in America's approach to its allies, are expressing concern over escape-clause provisions in the administration's reciprocal-trade program announced in mid-December.

In a joint statement issued by the Departments of State and Commerce, it was revealed that the Executive will seek from Congress a 5-year extension of Presidential authority to adjust tariff rates on a reciprocal basis. So far, so good. But the announcement also disclosed a significant relaxation in the official attitude on the escape clause which permits the Tariff Commission to recommend and the President to approve increases in particular tariffs as a safeguard to certain domestic industries.

The present reciprocal trade law permits such increases to a maximum of 50 percent above the rates of July 1, 1945. The new proposal would change the base date to July 1, 1934, when tariff rates were generally much higher.

"European dissatisfaction with American trade policies," writes Brendan M. Jones in the New York Times, "has been concerned mainly with uncertainties arising from escape-clause actions. The basis for invoking the clause to oppose imports has been steadily broadened under protectionist pressure. This has made for marked instability in a field where long-term development is essential." He points out that the common-market grouping of six Western European nations, which becomes effective January 1, will make more necessary than ever a freer, rather than a more protective, trade policy. Free-trade supporters, he adds, may actually oppose the administration's free-trade program because of the escape-clause change.

President Eisenhower has rejected the bulk of escape-clause petitions under the current law, but he has approved increases in tariffs on such important imports as watches and bicycles.

There are no longer clear-cut party lines on the tariff issue. Congressional Democrats have grown more protectionist minded as the South has grown in industrial activity. And many Republicans in the North have been influenced by the dependence on world markets by such vast enterprises as the automobile and appliance manufacturers. In the last Senate struggle on the reciprocal trade program, in 1955, Oregon's Democratic Senator RICHARD L. NEUBERGER went down the line for the Eisenhower program, whereas his colleague, Senator WAYNE L. MORSE, opposed it at some points, although he voted for the final bill. All Pacific coast Senators, Democrats and Republicans, joined in the favorable action on the 3-year act.

The division is by economic rather than partisan interest. Oregon berry and nut growers have determinedly opposed trade concessions, which have weakened their domestic markets. But Oregon's wheat growers depend, in good measure, on foreign trade. Should the former gain their ends, the latter would certainly suffer.

An escape clause is an essential part of the reciprocal trade program, as a safeguard against real hardship. But it could be the destruction of the program itself if overdone. Reciprocity is by definition a process of give and take. Those who fancy they are required to give too much must come to understand that reciprocal trade negotiations are an essential economic tool serving the overall interest of the United States and its allies—an overriding interest even for those whose industries give in the form of tariff concessions.

THE FEDERAL BUDGET FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1959

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement I have just issued with respect to the Federal budget for the fiscal year 1959.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD IN COMMENTING ON THE FEDERAL BUDGET FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1959.

The new $74 billion Federal budget—highest in peacetime history—estimates that tax revenue will increase by $2 billion, or 3 percent, over receipts for the current year.

In addition, $700 million of revenue from postal-rate increases not yet approved by Congress is used to achieve a balance.

In view of the present declining business cycle, I believe a drop in tax revenue is more likely than an increase, as the Federal Government is mainly dependent on income taxes which fluctuate with business conditions.

In making these estimates of increased revenue, the administration should have taken warning from the fact that as late as October it was overestimating revenue for the current year, ending June 30, by $1.1 billion. Now, in January, it concedes that its $1.5 billion surplus will be changed to a $400 million deficit by the end of the year in June.

I call the new fiscal program for the coming year reckless. It is likely to lead to substantial deficit spending with all of its evil consequences.

Since 1940 the purchasing power of our dollar has dropped more than 51 percent, and deficit financing has been the principal inflationary factor.

Under conditions facing us now, it is more imperative than ever before to maintain the soundest possible conditions in Federal fiscal policy.

In view of the continuing necessity to increase essential expenditures for missiles, satellites, etc., to assure a balanced budget and a sound economy for the coming year and the future, it is absolutely necessary to cut nonessential expenditures in all areas—military, civilian, and foreign aid.

In this respect the President's new budget leaves much to be desired. There is a general pay raise of more than $1 billion; there are new grant programs for schools, slum clearance, and civilian defense; there is new authority to spend directly out of the debt for housing, Export-Import Bank, and TVA; and so forth.

Actually, expenditures for strictly domestic-civilian activities, exclusive of national security, foreign aid and international affairs, are estimated at the highest figure in history. In this new budget they total more than $30 billion, including highways, postal deficit, and FNMA. As compared with $19.1 billion in the first Eisenhower budget of 1954, this is an increase of 58 percent. It is $1.4 billion more than current year expenditure estimates.

This is an area which certainly should be reduced substantially.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET MESSAGE

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the President's budget message emphasizes again the necessity for approving a TVA self-financing plan. This is the second year in which his budget has contemplated large construction expenditures out of revenue-bond funds, and in which the appropriations for TVA have been negligible.

I am all for putting the TVA on a self-financing basis, but we cannot exist much longer neither fish nor fowl—neither receiving appropriations, nor authorized by law to finance ourselves.

We in the valley, therefore, will expect the President to help us pass the self-financing bill. A good self-financing bill was passed by the Senate last year, but we shall need the administration's help in the House if such a measure is to be enacted.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HENDERSON L. LANHAM, OF GEORGIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENDERSON L. LANHAM, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, on my own behalf and on behalf of my colleague, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE], I submit a resolution for which I request immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 215) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. HENDERSON L. LANHAM, late a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the State of Georgia and the Nation sustained a great loss on November 10, 1957, with the tragic death of the Honorable HENDERSON L. LANHAM, the Representative from the Seventh Congressional District of the State of Georgia.

Mr. LANHAM was on his way to address an educational meeting when, while crossing a railroad track, he was unfortunately struck by a switch engine, and was instantly killed.

Mr. President, it was my privilege to know HENDERSON LANHAM intimately for almost 30 years. He and I served together in the General Assembly of my State of Georgia in 1927. He was truly a dedicated public servant.

I have often heard the old expression, referring to someone, that "he was a scholar and a gentleman." That expression truly fitted HENDERSON LANHAM.

He was a retiring man. He was modest almost to the point of timidity in some of the social relations of life; but in the public arena, Mr. President, HENDERSON LANHAM defended his convictions and the principles in which he believed with the courage of a lion. He was a man of unblemished character, a devoted father, and a helpful friend. He spent the greater part of his life in the service of his State and Nation.

HENDERSON LANHAM will be missed in the Halls of Congress. He will be missed by the people of his State and district. His passing is a loss to the Nation. I mourn him as a personal friend who has crossed over to the Great Beyond.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, Thomas Jefferson once observed that "when a man assumes a public trust, he should consider himself as public property"; and Caroline Norton once wrote that "they serve God well who serve his creatures."

No man ever followed those worthy philosophies more conscientiously and unselfishly than did the late HENDERSON L. LANHAM, Congressman from the Seventh District of Georgia, whose unfortunate and untimely death last November saddened all Georgians.

Representative LANHAM devoted all of his adult life to the service of his fellowman—as chairman of his city school board, as representative of his county in the general assembly of Georgia, as solicitor general of his judicial circuit, and as Representative of his district in Congress for 6 terms.

And he died as he lived; for, at the time of the tragic collision between his car and a railroad switch engine, he was enroute to speak to a gathering of his constituents.

His undeviating dedication to his duty and responsibility as a public servant earned for HENDERSON LOVELACE LANHAM the respect, admiration, and love of all who knew him.

He was respected for his deep convictions and unimpeachable integrity.

He was admired for his great wisdom and recognized scholarship.

He was loved for his genuine humanity and heartfelt concern for others.

He was a man of forthrightness and vision who believed in and espoused the fundamentals of constitutional government and who sought progress for all within their framework. He once summed up his philosophy of Government in the statement, "I am a progressive without being radical."

His dedication, brilliance, foresight, and courage are attributes greatly needed in positions of leadership in these perilous times. He will be sorely missed.

In the death of HENDERSON LANHAM the Seventh Congressional District of Georgia has lost an able public servant.

The State of Georgia has lost one of its most illustrious sons.

The Nation has lost one of its most capable lawmakers.

And I have lost a warm and valued personal friend.

His example will long inspire those who follow in his footsteps and stand as a model to those who would fulfill the true vocation of man as defined by Tolstoi—"to serve other people."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, OF PENNSYLVANIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FROXMIRE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], both of whom are unavoidably absent, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 216), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution.

ABSENCES FROM DUTY OF UNITED STATES AMBASSADORS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, last year I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statistical table furnished by the State Department indicating the absences from duty of the United States Ambassadors, both career and noncareer. Since that time I have made a subsequent statement indicating that there was an error insofar as the duty of Ambassador Wiley Buchanan was concerned.

On that occasion the table furnished by the State Department indicated that Ambassador John Davis Lodge had been absent from his post in Madrid for 143 days for reasons other than official duty or illness. These alleged absences covered a 2-year period. I have found out since that Ambassador Lodge during the 2 years in question was absent from his post 127 days; and of these 127 days, 24 days were vacation, as vacation is counted for all Foreign Service personnel other than chiefs of mission. The act of July 2, 1953, 67th United States Statutes at Large, page 137, amended the Leave Act effective July 5, 1953, to exempt from the act chiefs of mission (1 F. S. M. 111) and career ambassadors. Of these 24 days' vacation, 16 days were taken in 1955 and 8 in 1956. The State Department states that this record of vacations compares favorably with the vacations taken by Foreign Service personnel. Indeed, it is considerably lower than the average home leave for career people which averages about 45 days—work days—vacation every 2 years. This is about twice the vacation time away from post which Lodge took during 1955 and 1956.

The balance of the 127 days during which Lodge was absent from his post in 1955 and 1956, or 103 days, is divided as follows: 29 days active naval duty, 58 days official consultations in Washington and elsewhere. This includes accompanying the Spanish Foreign Minister on his trip to the United States in 1956, going to Paris on confer with Secretary of State Dulles, going to Paris to attend a Conference of American Chiefs of Mission in Western Europe, at which Secretary Dulles spoke.

Sixteen days of weekends and holidays, which are not counted as vacation for Foreign Service personnel.

To recapitulate, Ambassador Lodge was absent from his post in Madrid for 127 days during 1955 and 1956 for the following reasons: 24 days, vacation; 29 days, active naval duty; 58 days official consultations in Washington and elsewhere; 16 days, weekends and holidays not counted as vacation by Foreign Service personnel; 127 days, total.

Mr. President, I want to state that, in my opinion, John Davis Lodge is performing a most distinguished service as the Ambassador of the United States to Spain. I wish to state also that I have in my possession a letter from Deputy Under Secretary of State Loy Henderson which corroborates the information I have already given and which expresses the regret that the State Department had issued the earlier misleading figures.

It is my hope that this statement will clarify the record of Ambassador Lodge and put it in true perspective. If I have in any way, as a result of inserting in the RECORD the statistical tables furnished me by the State Department, done a disservice to Ambassador Lodge or created the wrong impression I want to take this means to apologize and state to the Senate my high personal regard for him, and to say that we are fortunate to have in Madrid a man of the caliber of John Lodge, who has conducted himself with dignity and honor and has interested himself in the betterment of United States-Spanish relations. He is an asset to our country in a most difficult post and he represents us with honor, distinction and ability.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. PURTELL. Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to the Senator from Montana for correcting the RECORD. What the Senator has stated about the distinguished Ambassador to Spain, who, of course, comes from my State of Connecticut, is something with which I am sure everyone who knows of the work the Ambassador has done would agree. He is an outstanding Ambassador and certainly a credit to our State Department. We in the State of Connecticut are extremely proud of him, and we are glad to see the Senator from Montana recognizes these outstanding qualities, also.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

PRESIDENTIAL DISABILITY

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, it is generally conceded that the Office of President of the United States is one of the most—if not the most—important offices in the Free World. In addition to the awesome responsibilities originally conferred by the Constitution upon the President, practice and precedent have increased both the powers and the responsibilities of this office so that the occupant of that office now possesses tremendous influence not only in domestic but also in international affairs. Anything which affects an institution as important as this is, therefore, a matter of grave concern to the people of the United States and certainly to their elected representatives.

The recent illness of the President, telescoped as it was upon two prior illnesses, has served to focus attention again upon the exercise of the powers and duties of this extremely important office during periods when the President may be incapacitated. While there might have been some question of propriety in mentioning this subject at one time, the President's commendable initiative in submitting a constitutional amendment on the matter has served to dispel that concern. The President, in conference with Congressional leaders and publicly, has strongly urged that Congress act to clear up this area of doubt in our Constitution. The concern today is not, and should not be, obscured by the personalities of those who temporarily occupy the Offices of President and Vice President. The question which must constantly be uppermost in all minds in the consideration of this subject is the question of the successful operation of democratic institutions and their survival at all times, but particularly in time of peril.

The Constitution, of course, provides that in the event of the inability of the President to discharge the powers and duties of his office "the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected."

It is difficult to know what the authors of the Constitution intended by the term "inability" since inability or disability was never defined and was mentioned only once in the debates of the Constitutional Convention. According to Madison's notes, Mr. Dickinson expressed the thought that the section under discussion was too vague and wanted to know the extent of the term "disability" and who was to be the judge of it. So far as is known, no one answered the questions and there was no further discussion bearing upon this point.

The questions asked by Mr. Dickinson at the Constitutional Convention might not now be so important had it not been for the precedent established by Vice President John Tyler who, when he assumed the office of President in 1841 after the death of President Harrison, took the oath of President and contended that he was in fact the President and not Acting President of the United States. This contention rests upon an interpretation that the words "the same" have reference of the Office of the Presidency, as distinguished from the powers and duties of the office. The precedent established by Vice President Tyler has since been confirmed six times, by Fillmore, Johnson, Arthur, Theodore Roosevelt, Coolidge, and Truman, and is, therefore, well established by custom. The practice, however, of a Vice President assuming the office of President, rather than assuming the powers and duties of the office, has served to inject doubt concerning the power of a temporarily disabled President to resume the powers and duties of his office upon recovery from his disability after having relinquished such powers and duties to the Vice President. As a matter of fact, the doubt so created has been afforded such weight that in two instances in the history of the United States, Vice Presidents have refused to assume the powers and duties of the Office of President of the United States, although the situation, in retrospect, would certainly seem to have warranted such action.

In 1881, for example, during the 80 days of President Garfield's fatal illness, he performed but one single act—the signing of an extradition paper. The Cabinet at one time met and discussed the inability question. All agreed upon the desirability of Vice President Arthur's acting as President during President Garfield's illness; but 4 of the 7 Cabinet members, including the Attorney General, thought that the powers and duties of the office could not temporarily devolve upon the Vice President. As a result, the Cabinet decided that they would not advise the President to encourage the Vice President to act as President, since it might be construed that they were asking the President to vacate his office for the remainder of his term.

The second instance in which the Nation stood in peril for lack of resolution of this question occurred during the administration of President Woodrow Wilson. President Wilson's illness was of a more prolonged duration than that of President Garfield, lasting from September 25, 1919, until almost the end of his term in March of 1921. During this period, because of his inability, 28 acts of Congress became law without the President's signature. The President did not meet with his Cabinet for 8 months. The British Ambassador spent 4 months in Washington without being received by the President. Leaders in the Senate sought to discuss the terms of the Versailles Treaty with the President, but were refused permission to see him by the President's physician. The affairs of Government were largely disposed of by decisions of the President's wife, his aides in the White House, and certain members of his Cabinet. The Cabinet considered asking the Vice President to act as President, but the White House contingent fought the move. A prominent Cabinet member, Secretary of State Lansing, who approached the President's secretary with a suggestion of this nature, was rebuked and later forced to submit his resignation upon the recovery of the President.

Even from the vantage point of historical perspective, no one can accurately assess today just what damage was done to the United States and the world by this impasse. The League of Nations was then up in the air. Many today believe that greater United States participation could have so changed the international climate that World War II might have been averted. The League was President Wilson's brain child. Had he been succeeded by Vice President Marshall, who then would have borne the responsibility for decision and leadership, would the outcome have been different?

No one really knows—no one can really say. All we do know is that such a period of inaction in today's world might be even more costly, and thus it is well that we pay heed to the maxim that the wise prepare, while others postpone. The lessons of the past, combined with the concern of the present, have impelled me to explore the adequacy of the Constitution and the laws of the United States respecting this question and, in my judgment, they are in need of repair.

When these matters were previously considered by the Congress, solution was rendered impossible by the failure of those who desired a solution to agree upon the mechanism of that solution. Some have contended that the problem ought to be dealt with by act of Congress. Others have felt that a constitutional amendment was necessary. All seem to have recognized that a critical question to be resolved is, By whom shall the inability be determined? At present the Constitution seems to place the determination of inability in the hands of the Vice President, who must, of necessity, act at his peril. He must depend, of course, upon popular acceptance of his decision and he must face the possibility that the legality of his assumption of the powers and duties of the office may be challenged in the courts of the United States. As former Senator Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois, pointed out in a symposium printed in the North American Review in November 1881, just a few months after President Garfield was fatally wounded—

> Any Vice President who should assume those duties in a doubtful case, when the exigency did not unmistakably require it, would be treated as a usurper by all patriotic citizens.

POSSIBLE COURT TESTS

The Vice President must also reckon with the fact that in any court test the Constitution may be interpreted in such a way as to prevent the resumption of the powers and duties of the Presidency by the President himself upon recovery. This has, in the two instances cited, proved to be such an obstacle that the Vice Presidents of the United States have refused to accept the powers and duties of the office, although had they done so, history could not have been critical of them.

The role of the Vice President as the sole constitutional agent for the determination of the question of Presidential inability has been criticized, since the Vice President is, in a very real sense, a party in interest. This has led to suggestions that his discretion should be conditioned upon, or replaced by, a determination by, first, the Supreme Court; second, the Congress; third, the Cabinet; or fourth, a Presidential commission.

In 1920, Representative Fess, of Ohio, proposed a constitutional amendment which would have utilized the services of the Supreme Court, the Congress, the Cabinet, and the Vice President. He proposed that disability be determined by the Supreme Court when authorized by concurrent resolution of Congress. If Congress was not in session, the Vice President was authorized to call Congress into special session for the purpose of considering such a resolution upon recommendation of the Cabinet.

Currently, there are proposals before the House of Representatives which would make the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, or a Presidential commission the agency for determining or recommending Presidential inability. The proposal which the administration has indicated it favors, casts the Cabinet in the decisive role. At the outset of this session, there were only two proposals on this subject pending in the Senate. One is proposed as a constitutional amendment and the other as a straight bill.

Senator FULBRIGHT has submitted a proposed constitutional amendment which would provide that the Supreme Court, by majority vote, could determine the question of Presidential capacity to serve, after the passage of a concurrent resolution by the Congress stating that the Congress believed the President unable to perform the powers and duties of his office. Under the proposal of the junior Senator from Arkansas, the same procedure would have to be followed in order for the President to resume his constitutional functions.

Senator PAYNE has introduced proposed legislation which would permit the Chief Justice, after receiving notification from the Vice President that the Vice President believed the President incapacitated, to impanel a board of from 3 to 5 medical specialists from civilian life. Each specialist would examine the President and, if all concurred that the President was physically unable to perform his duties, the Chief Justice would so notify the Congress in writing and the Vice President would assume the powers and duties of the Presidency. His amendment reflects the view of those who believe that Congress now has the constitutional power to legislate in this field.

Last Thursday I introduced two additional proposals, which were in due course referred to the Committee on the Judiciary where the Fulbright and Payne proposals were already pending. I submitted these two proposals, not in anywise to prejudice consideration of the two pending proposals, but rather to lay before the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary alternative procedures for consideration. As chairman of the Judiciary Committee's Standing Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments, I am aware of the need for a thorough and dispassionate study of this whole area of the law. It seemed to me that a submission of these proposals would contribute to such consideration. Of the two proposals which I have submitted, one would merely confer upon the Congress authority to prescribe by law the procedure for determining the inability of the President of the United States and the question of his fitness to resume the powers and duties of that office. This proposal has the benefit of brevity, which most persons are willing to concede is a commendable consideration in the drafting of constitutional amendments.

The other amendment, however, is more detailed. This amendment would create a commission or committee composed of the heads of the executive departments of the Government of the United States and the majority and minority leaders of both Houses. The commission would be chaired by the Chief Justice of the United States, who would have no vote in the proceedings. It could be called into session by either the Vice President or upon written application of six of the members of the commission, addressed to the Chief Justice. The commission would call for such medical and other testimony as it desired and would be required to determine the question: Is the President able to discharge the powers and duties of his office? If a majority of the commission found that he was not able to perform the duties of his office, such powers and duties would then devolve upon the Vice President, who would continue to assume those powers and duties until the commission determined that the President was able to resume the powers and duties of his office.

The subcommittee, therefore, will have before it what I believe are four basic approaches to a solution of this problem, namely:

First. A simple amendment, granting Congress the authority to provide the detailed solution by statute, which is more easily changed or adjusted to meet future contingencies, but which by that very fact also lacks the stability of constitutional amendment.

Second. A constitutional amendment, conferring the power of decision in the matter upon the Supreme Court, following reference of the question to the Court by Congress.

Third. A constitutional amendment setting up a commission which includes representatives of all three branches of Government, but which admittedly is weighted in favor of the executive branch.

Fourth. A statutory approach.

I have not undertaken to discuss the issue of whether remedial legislation in this field must take the form of a constitutional amendment or may be accomplished by a simple statute. The former Attorney General, Herbert Brownell, has endorsed the view that the change should be made by constitutional amendment. Certainly such a method would present no opportunity for challenge at some future critical period on constitutional grounds. On the other hand, a statute on the subject might invite such a challenge which could serve as a severe hindrance to essential action. I expect, however, that this question will be fully explored at hearings which, as chairman of the Standing Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary, I have scheduled to begin on January 23, 1958. I have discussed this problem and make this announcement at this time not by way of suggesting that the subcommittee intends to consider this important subject in haste, but rather to alert those who are interested and knowledgeable on this subject that the subcommittee desires and intends to take information and testimony looking to a solution of what is surely a difficult and vexatious problem. Whether, after the subcommittee has completed this initial task it will prove more able to reach agreement on a solution than its predecessors have been, I cannot predict. I would suggest, that if we are not willing, in the light of our present knowledge, to undertake such a task, we will deserve the condemnation of those who must live with the uncertainties which our inaction will have served to perpetuate.

I hope that any Senators or citizens who have any suggestions, ideas, or proposals in this connection will see that they are sent to the Judiciary subcommittee.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JERE COOPER, OF TENNESSEE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 421) from the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JERE COOPER, a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. GORE] and myself, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read, and for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 217) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JERE COOPER, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, during the period of adjournment of the Congress, Tennessee and the Nation lost a dedicated public servant in the death of Representative JERE COOPER, of Dyersburg.

For 29 years Representative COOPER served in the House and through seniority and ability he rose to become chairman of the Ways and Means Committee which, as we all know, is the tax-raising committee in Congress. This is an exacting and difficult position. JERE COOPER served it well. It is a position in which one is constantly badgered by the pressures of special interests but he kept the national interest uppermost.

In that position he applied his own personal trait of thrift for even back in his boyhood days he had the reputation of saving odd bits, such as string, nails, and paper. He did what he could to conserve the funds of the United States. Representative COOPER was known as a man of political courage. He was a strong and consistent supporter of the reciprocal trade policy fathered by another Tennessean, the late Cordell Hull. One of his last official acts was to write a strong letter of protest criticizing a proposal to ask Congress to boost tariffs on lead and zinc. This took political courage, for there are strong interests on the other side in his home State.

Representative COOPER gained a reputation in Dyersburg as a working youngster, and he kept up that pace throughout his entire career. A veteran of World War I, he was first elected to the House in 1927 and was in his 15th consecutive term at the time of his death. He will be greatly missed on both sides of the aisle and in both Houses.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the late Honorable JERE COOPER was a man apart. Introspective and studious, he was sometimes regarded as alone or aloof. This, in my opinion, was never his intent or desire. Through a long association I found him warmhearted, compassionate, understanding. He was not only understanding of the foibles and problems of his close friends, but he had a true understanding of the sentiments and aspirations of those in the average walks of life. Through a long Congressional career his service was dedicated to the public welfare, as he understood it.

His understanding of public welfare was a broad one—so broad that it reached far beyond the boundaries of the Congressional district he was honored to represent, and in which representation he honored that district. Broader than his State, his was truly a national outlook.

Even more than that, as my senior colleague has said, he took broad positions of enlightened self-interest for America. On questions of foreign policy he was a leader for an enlightened economic foreign policy. He was a man truly worthy of the title "United States Congressman." His every sentiment was identified with the national welfare. His every aspiration was to serve ably, correctly, and nobly.

Mr. President, at the time I was elected to Congress, JERE COOPER had been a Member of the House for 10 years. I went to him for advice, for guidance, and for help. He gave all of them to me, literally taking personal responsibility in guiding my early years in Congress in responsible paths. I was grateful to him, and we enjoyed a warm friendship. I admired him. I loved him as a colleague and as a friend.

Congress has lost a great Member, the country has lost a Representative of truly national proportions. I join my distinguished colleague in the authorship of the resolution and in extending to the members of his family and to his many—yes, his legion of—friends the deepest sympathy and condolences upon the passing of this great American.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the State of Tennessee and our Nation lost another devoted public servant when the Honorable JERE COOPER, a Member of the House of Representatives in every Congress since the Seventy-first, was called from among us by a Higher Being.

JERE COOPER served in Congress during a long period of far-reaching changes in our country and in the world. He participated actively in the making of many of these changes. He was a forward-looking man, a man of vision, a patriotic man who worked hard for the people of his district and for Americans generally.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee during the latter years of his service in Congress, Representative COOPER occupied a position of great power. He used that position to advance the general good.

It was my personal privilege to serve with JERE COOPER during my years in the House. I know at firsthand of his devotion to the public welfare, and I miss him as a colleague and as a friend.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, it was in 1935, when I began my service in the House of Representatives, that I first met and learned to know JERE COOPER. As Members of that body, we became friends, and at the beginning of my third term in the House, I was elected as a member of the House Ways and Means Committee. At that time it was under the very able leadership of an outstanding American, a great patriot, the Honorable Robert Doughton, of North Carolina. Next to him on the committee was JERE COOPER, of Tennessee.

It was my privilege to serve on that committee for 8 years, and therefore I had an opportunity not only to be associated with JERE COOPER, but I learned to know him as a man of integrity, sincerity, and great ability.

Others have spoken of his great statesmanship, with which I am in thorough accord, and others have dwelled at length on his great integrity. I want to speak of him as a personal friend.

As you knew JERE COOPER, you could not help but learn to admire him for his sincerity and his integrity. It can be truly said that his word was his bond. When he made a commitment, you never had any fears that the decision might be something else, no matter when final action took place. I think it can be honestly stated that he never gave his word lightly; but, once given, that was it.

He possessed a keen and analytical mind which was capable of analyzing the most complex problems, and those of us who have had the privilege of serving on the House Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee can readily appreciate how complex and how difficult are some of the tax problems that confront the members of those committees.

JERE did not arrive at hasty decisions or make snap judgments. He explored every phase of the pending problem and I am personally going to miss his leadership in the field of taxation. Not only that, this Congress and the country are going to miss it, because he was an outstanding authority.

Another trait of JERE COOPER's that I want to mention was his fairness. He had some very definite views and never hesitated to express them, but during my many years of acquaintance with him, he never made a disparaging remark about those who had different views and different ideas on the same matter.

I know of no field in the legislative processes in which integrity, sincerity, and fairness are more vital than in the fields of taxes, tariff, and social security—measures which affect the lives of each American citizen.

I say again, JERE COOPER will be sorely missed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, JERE COOPER was my friend. For 10 years I served on the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, where Representative COOPER served so long and with such great distinction.

It has been said, so many times that it has become almost trite, that JERE COOPER knew tax legislation, and knew it very thoroughly. This is indeed true.

Congress and our country will miss the devoted service which he gave to the Government. He was thorough in his work. He was dedicated. As has been stated, in dealing with his colleagues he was always fair. He had his own viewpoints about taxation, but he was consistent. He held in high respect the opinions on tax legislation of those with whom he worked, including those with whom he disagreed.

He possessed a fine and noble character, and he was a great patriot.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word about JERE COOPER. When I first came to the House of Representatives in January 1937, I came to know JERE COOPER. He was the zone chairman on the Ways and Means Committee for the State of Alabama, as well as the State of Tennessee, and perhaps other territory. It was to him that I made application for committee assignments at that time. I came to know him, to know him well, to like him, to admire him greatly. He was a clear thinker, a forceful advocate of things in which he believed, and an effective legislator.

As chairman of the powerful Ways and Means Committee, a position to which he came when former Representative Bob Doughton retired from the House of Representatives, he became, naturally, one of the most powerful Members of the Congress of the United States, and by virtue of that office, one of the most powerful men in the Nation, certainly as one affecting our tax laws and the economic conditions. JERE COOPER worked hard at the job.

I was shocked when I learned that he had had an attack. I inquired about him from time to time. I was pleased when I learned he was making progress. But how greatly shocked I was the next day to get the sad news that he had passed away.

JERE COOPER was a good man and a good citizen. After all, Mr. President, I do not know of any better tribute that can be paid to a man after he has gone than to have those who knew him say he was a good citizen.

JERE COOPER was a fine, able, effective legislator; and I join with my colleagues in the many tributes which have been paid to him.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in tribute to JERE COOPER.

I was elected to the 72d Congress in the year 1930. The Democrats then had a majority of one. Incidentally, there was held a special election up in northern Michigan, and a Democrat was elected. He constituted the majority.

It was that Congress which elected John Garner as Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In order to have committee assignments, it was necessary to have a caucus. The caucus was presided over by the late John McDuffie, from Alabama, who was later a judge of the United States court. He had a terrible time with that bunch of Democrats feeling their power, being in the majority.

I recall vividly that when it came to the question of assigning Members to the different committees I voted for JERE COOPER to become a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. I have not had to apologize since. He did his job well. He carried on as only a sincere, devoted, dedicated Representative should. I am glad to pay this tribute to my late friend, to my good friend, JERE COOPER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 217) was unanimously agreed to.

THE LATE SENATOR KENNETH McKELLAR, OF TENNESSEE

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. GORE] and myself, I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of the Honorable Kenneth McKellar, formerly a Senator from the State of Tennessee and President pro tempore of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, since this body adjourned last August it was my sad experience to attend the last rites of one of our former colleagues who served here for many years. Senator Kenneth D. McKellar died in Memphis, his home city, on October 25, 1957.

Senator McKellar will long be remembered as one of the most powerful and forceful men to serve in the Senate. For nearly 40 years he was in the thick of any legislative battle. He played an important role in the enactment of a variety of important laws in his 5 years in the House and more than 35 years in the Senate.

He often told the story of how he began in 1912 to plug for the first Federal aid to highways bill because he had discovered 2 years earlier how hard it was to drive an automobile from one section of the United States to the other. He planned a motor trip to New England in 1910 but found he had to ship his automobile from Tennessee to Washington before he could start driving north.

Senator McKellar credited the appearance of the German submarine Deutchland off the coast in 1916 with helping him to get the first highway appropriation. The United States was not yet at war with Germany, and the submarine was paying a friendly call. But Mr. McKellar argued that if in time of war submarines attacked the coast, the existing highway system would prove inadequate to move defense materials from one point to another. The argument is said to have been convincing to President Wilson.

Senator McKellar is also credited with bringing the first airmail service into existence.

Senator McKellar was for many years chairman of the Appropriations Committee. When President Roosevelt died in the spring of 1945 and Vice President Truman went to the White House, Senator McKellar acted as President of the Senate during the period of Democratic control.

He will long be remembered in Tennessee. His great efforts and the power of his position on the Appropriations Committee were exerted for the benefit of Tennessee. Many worthwhile improvements in Tennessee attest to his efforts in behalf of our State. Among them is the Tennessee Valley Authority.

He maintained over many years a dominant political position in our State, and he could count many devoted friends among our fellow citizens. He will long be remembered as one of the most colorful and powerful men to serve in the Senate during a period when the United States was emerging as the world's dominant democracy.

Even those who disagreed with him respected the tenacity and the vigor with which he fought for that in which he believed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the late Honorable Kenneth D. McKellar rendered a record of public service which few persons can or will equal. The material landmarks of that service are many and are extremely useful to the people not only of his State, which he loved, but of the entire United States. The character and duration of his service itself was a landmark, extending, as my senior colleague [Mr. KEFAUVER] has said, over an almost unprecedented period of time.

His was a service which was never touched with the flame of scandal; a service which was never marred with greed for profit. His was an honorable career in the highest sense of the term and the word.

Few men could claim the loyalty—the intense loyalty—of so many people. Few men could claim the enjoyment of a greater number of devoted personal and political friends. He served them and his State long and ably.

A time came when the people whom he served so loyally decided that with the inexorable march of time and circumstance a younger man should succeed to the burdens of the position. In the contest, in which I was a participant, there was no bitterness or vilification, there was no recrimination, either during the battle or afterward. The contest was vigorous but clean. Senator McKellar, so I am told, confided to friends that he was willing to submit the decision to the people whom he loved, and accept their verdict. That he did.

As today the Senate considers this resolution, the Members of this body who had the privilege of serving with the late Senator McKellar can reflect upon the many acts which he performed, upon the moments of personal triumphs. His triumphs were for the people. To him, public service was a high calling. He was devoted to public service. He gave his life to public service. Few men have served so effectively or so long.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, as one who served for a number of years on the Appropriations Committee under the late Senator McKellar of Tennessee, I wish to add a brief word to the statements which already have been made about him.

I found Senator McKellar to be a very courteous and very generous chairman; when he recognized a member of either the majority or minority on the committee, he always insisted that that member have the privilege of expressing himself fully and frankly. In the deliberations of the committee I found him always willing to listen to the views of a member from another section of the country, as expressing the problems of that section.

I respected him as a friend, and I liked him. He was always a partisan on certain partisan questions; but on questions of appropriations and on questions regarding where money could best be spent for the benefit of the country as a whole, he was open to reason and was very conscientious and very understanding.

Like many other Senators who served under Senator McKellar, I wish to take this brief opportunity to pay my respects to him and to his memory.

Mr. President, I should like to state that I left the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] in charge of a committee of which I was a sitting member. He asked me to state that he wishes to join at the first possible opportunity in presenting his tribute to the late Senator McKellar, but that his duties in the committee prevent his doing so at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, in the passing last year of Senator Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee, the Nation lost a man who, prior to his retirement from the Senate in 1953, had made a lasting imprint on the history of the United States.

The late Senator from Tennessee, after serving three terms in the House of Representatives, was elected six times to the United States Senate.

He served with distinction as President pro tempore of the Senate.

He was acting chairman and chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee during the period when the United States was engaged in the greatest and most costly war ever fought.

To Kenneth McKellar, the Senate Chamber was home. He loved the Senate. In all the honors that came to him and in the face of the crushing burden of responsibility that was placed on him, he never neglected to look out for the interests of the people of the State he represented in the Senate. He was always on the job for Tennessee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I had the privilege of serving with Senator Kenneth McKellar during 20 of his more than 40 years in the Congress of the United States—36 of them in the Senate.

The longer I worked with him, the more I admired his courage and independence, and the more I respected the keenness of his mind, which was characterized by a fine edge and penetrating power. I have been deeply distressed by his death.

I learned to respect Senator McKellar through early association with him on the Senate Rules Committee. I learned to appreciate his loyalty by observing his great assistance to my late colleague, Senator Carter Glass, when he was chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I knew him intimately as he sat here directly in front of me on the Senate floor.

He had his critics, but the substance of their criticism was that he was a man of blunt frankness, without sham or subterfuge.

I learned to know Senator McKellar as a man who never mistook shadow for substance. He was a man who imitated no one. In him was nothing of false originality, nothing of false grandeur, and nothing of false genius. I never knew him to exaggerate an expression or play to the galleries. He was not a man who attempted to assume either character or characteristics which were not his own.

He was a man of tremendous native force, who lived and worked by his own resources. His center of gravity lay in his patriotic devotion to this country and his Tennessee constituency. His actions were motivated and controlled by a constancy of duty, and by nature he tended to subordinate himself to his objectives. He was unalterably addicted to hard work, honesty, and duty.

The monuments to his tireless work in Congress are all about, many of them in the form of tangible accomplishments, for this and other generations to see.

His record of six consecutive elections to the Senate, after serving first in the House of Representatives, stands to date as an unsurpassed symbol of esteem in which he was held by those he represented.

His, indeed, was a life used up in the service of his country, his State, and his constituents. I am sure that was the way Senator McKellar wanted it, and therein was great patriotic contribution to others which deserved to be of great satisfaction unto himself.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, after having served in the Senate for a number of years with the late Senator McKellar, I wish to add my word of deep affection and respect for him. I personally came to know Senator McKellar well. I did not have the privilege of serving on a committee with him; but all of us who knew him came to feel that he was an institution in the Senate. He was one of the Members who served for a very long period of time, and he was one who always could be relied upon to sponsor and support the very best of legislation.

I wish to add this word to the words of other Senators who have spoken to honor the service of Senator McKellar. I desire to express my deep affection for Senator McKellar, and to express my deep sympathy to his family at his passing last year.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, it may seem strange to the senior Members of the Senate that the junior Senator from New Hampshire would request time to join in the tributes to the late Senator McKellar, of Tennessee, because I did not have the privilege of serving in this body with him. But, strangely enough, my acquaintance and friendship with Senator McKellar have perhaps been longer than those of many of the senior Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, there are a number of Members of the Senate who, in days gone by, had the privilege of serving the Senate as attachés. On March 1, 1925, nearly 33 years ago, when just out of college, I came here and began my service as one of the clerks of the old Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I came under the patronage of Senator Moses, of New Hampshire, who was chairman of that committee; and Senator McKellar, of Tennessee, was then the ranking Democratic member of the committee. I served as clerk of a special subcommittee on post roads, of which those two Senators were members, along with certain Members of the House of Representatives. The subcommittee held hearings in various parts of the country. For 4 years I worked for Senator Kenneth McKellar.

I think some of the present Members of the Senate may well bear in mind that in the years to come, when we are gone and when the memory of our service here has been faded by time, we shall live longest in the minds of the younger men with whom we are associated—the men in our offices and those who serve us so well on the floor of the Senate.

I came to be very fond of Senator Kenneth McKellar. My association with him was made closer by another fact, namely, that during the time of my service, I fell in love with a girl who was one of his secretaries. I married her. She was a Tennesseean. She was a Democrat, as Senator McKellar was a great Democrat. We have been married for 30 years. It took me a long time to get her to vote Republican, because of the influence of her younger days.

The Senator from Tennessee referred to the fact that Senator McKellar liked to travel by automobile, and that he failed to reach New England. However, he did come to New England several times in later years, and I had the privilege of having him as a guest in my home on two different occasions in New Hampshire.

It was a source of sorrow to me that I did not come to the Senate until just after he ceased to be a Member, because it would have been a great privilege to me to have said that I had served with him even briefly after the years that I worked for him on committee.

Senator McKellar was a man of terrific energy and an intense, burning zeal. He was always forthright. He was always fervent. He was often fiery in his approach to questions in the Senate and in the committee. He was warmhearted, impulsive, generous, kindly. He had all the virtues, as he doubtless had some of the faults, of a very intense personality.

I deem it a privilege, 30 years after having worked for him in an intimate capacity on one of the committees of the Senate, to join with distinguished Members who have paused to pay tribute to a man who served in this body so long, who loved it so much, and who was so dedicated to its traditions and its history.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I wish to join with my colleagues in the Senate in saying just a word in tribute to the late Senator McKellar. Senator McKellar came from the State of Alabama originally. He grew up in a small town in south central Alabama, went to school at the University of Alabama, and even though after graduation from there he set up his residence in the neighboring State of Tennessee, he always retained a very active interest in Alabama. I may say that we were very proud of being able to claim him as a native son.

It was my pleasure to get to know Senator McKellar quite well both during my service in the House of Representatives and also during my service here in the Senate. We had many interests in common, but there was one in particular, the Tennessee Valley Authority, which has meant so much to our area.

Senator McKellar was a diligent, effective worker in the Senate of the United States. He was a good citizen in every sense of the word. He will long be missed, and I am glad I had the opportunity to say just these words of tribute to him.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, Senator McKellar was a very good friend of mine. I can say that because I used to be a clerk in the Senate from 1916 to 1920, when he was new in the Senate. He and John K. Shields were the Senators from Tennessee at the time.

Mr. President, when one is an employee of the Senate, he knows his place, and he looks up to Senators. Sometimes he may think he knows more than a Senator. Notwithstanding that, I admired Senator McKellar very much. I liked his persistence. As a matter of fact, when I came to the Senate I remember that the present secretary for the minority was a page. After I came to the Senate I said to Senator McKellar on one occasion, "Senator, you know, when you snap your finger I still jump." And I generally did.

I admired Senator McKellar for his persistence, for his interest in the United States, and particularly for his interest in the State of Tennessee and in the South.

I know on one occasion I was deeply interested in the construction of a dam right outside of Knoxville. I was on my way back from New Mexico by automobile, and it appeared that the Committee on Appropriations was evenly divided as to that particular item in the appropriation. He even had the United States marshal looking for me at Fort Smith. Eventually, at 2 o'clock in the morning, he got hold of me on the telephone at the Albert Pike Hotel in Little Rock, Ark. He said, "CHAVEZ, you have to come. Send me a wire now that you will be in favor of this dam." He said, "You can break the tie."

I sent him the wire, but he was not satisfied with that. He said, "Telephone to the committee tomorrow." So I did that. He certainly was a worker for Tennessee, and he was a good Member of the United States Senate.

I am very glad to pay my personal tribute to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, one of the first calls I made upon arriving in Washington to take my seat in the Senate was on the then senior Senator from Tennessee, Senator McKellar. My colleague had been unavoidably detained, and I went to the dean of the Senate to ask him to present me for the taking of my oath.

He was warm and gracious in his response and there began that day a friendship which grew warmer through the years and which I shall always cherish because to Kenneth McKellar friendship was a living and tangible reality, not a mere play on words. In countless ways both politically and personally he gave many of us his devotion in the years that followed.

He was a man of fierce loyalties and with tremendous courage. In his long service in the Senate and in the House of Representatives he had acquired an intimate knowledge of our Government and there were few who could match his skill and wisdom as a legislator. He fought with vigor against what he considered bad for the Nation and he strove with equal fervor for the program he believed necessary for progress and for the prosperity of our people. Those of us who served with him here knew him as a resourceful and powerful adversary in any cause he chose to champion.

Kenneth McKellar never forgot the people who sent him here. The farmer and the laboring man, the poor and afflicted, the widow and orphan and their interests were the compelling and motivating force behind all that he did. Where the rights and the aspirations of the lowly were concerned he stood squarely and immovably on their side.

Personally, I shall miss him as a friend; his wise counsel and affection I shall always remember and treasure as among the great privileges of my life.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, more perhaps than any other Member of the Senate, I feel deeply touched at the memorial ceremony in the Senate today. It affects me in a deeply personal way.

Senator McKellar was not only my colleague, but I can truly say he was one of the best friends the Senator from Mississippi ever had.

I was a very young man when I was elected to the Senate. Before I was sworn in, Senator McKellar, at his own invitation, asked me to come to Memphis and confer with him. I gladly spent a great deal of time in Senator McKellar's office. He did everything to pave my way into the Senate. When I got to Washington I found that very desirable committee selections had already been made for me.

After these years of experience in the Senate and looking back, I can see how extremely fortunate I was to have had such a sponsor. After I began my tenure of duty as a Senator I was never out from under his wing.

To me, Senator McKellar's most outstanding characteristic was loyalty—unswerving and undeviating—loyalty to his friends, loyalty to his people in Tennessee, and loyalty to the causes and issues he believed in and espoused. He coupled with this loyalty the highest degree of independence, determination, and courage. He was a friend to be proud of; a foe to be feared.

Senator McKellar was an indefatigable worker and a man of great and consummate ability. He was possessed with a rugged honesty and a great tenacity of purpose.

His life and accomplishments are indelibly inscribed in living and perpetual monuments spread throughout the length and breadth of Tennessee. No man had any more to do with the conception and development of the great Tennessee Valley project than did Senator McKellar. In every town and in every village and throughout the countryside there are living memorials to his achievements—the Federal Highway System, not only in Tennessee but throughout the Nation; the Great Smoky Mountains National Park; and numerous projects too varied to mention in these brief remarks.

At the time of his retirement from the Senate he had served longer in this body than any other man in American history. He could not have done this had he not had behind him the people of his great State in almost unanimity. The very length of his service bespeaks how practical he was—how close to earth—how close to his people and how he became the exponent of a State and the mouthpiece of the people of one of the most diverse political States in the Union; how he kept the various factions in his State, geographical, political, and ideological, together—a narrow State that stretched from the Father of Waters through the Appalachian highlands almost to the Atlantic Ocean—mountains, prairies, plains; parts old in history and hoary in legend—other parts of his State bustling and new.

The city to which he migrated, when a boy, was a burly river port. Steamboats were giving way to rail. The automobile was just emerging. Other sections of his State were old as the original colonies; different in tradition, different in outlook; and yet, under the political genius of Kenneth McKellar, all were welded into one.

He was as strong in Chattanooga and Knoxville as he was in Memphis. It has been said of him that he was as strong with the Republicans as he was with the Democrats. It was the touch of his political finger that knew the pulse. It was through political genius that he could represent such a State for such a length of time.

In his later years, Senator McKellar was a great man for reminiscences. I was fortunate enough to hear him recount many of his memories. I heard him tell about how when he was a young lawyer in Memphis he was on the first automobile trip from Memphis to Boston—a pioneering feat with an automobile in those days. While he was away from home on this trip he was selected to become the Democratic nominee for Congress from that district. He went on to election and thereafter there was never any serious impediment placed in his political career. His tenure dated from the League of Nations through the United Nations. It dated from World War I through World War II. Once he told me that he was a Wilsonian Democrat. He denied that he was ever a New Deal Democrat. I joshed and replied to him that he was a southern Democrat.

His sense of honor and propriety was high. Among the legends that grew up about him was that he possessed, in common with many other legendary figures of this body, an eruptive temper, but from my observations and things that I have heard about him, he was a Vesuvius that never erupted unless he felt that his sense of honor or propriety had been infringed.

For a long period in his senatorial tenure it can be said without contradiction that he was probably the most powerful single Senator in this august Chamber. No individual ever exercised power less for his own personal aggrandizement and more for his people and his country than did Senator McKellar. He was truly a dedicated and devoted public servant. For those of us who knew him well it was but to love and admire him. We mourn his passing; yet he lived a long, full, complete, and satisfying life and his epitaphs are written in contributions to the progress and development of his great State and country.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) was considered and unanimously agreed to.

THE STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND OF THE FUTURE

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, last summer Gen. Thomas S. Power became Commander in Chief of the Strategic Air Command.

He has a brilliant and distinguished military record. He had been commander in chief of the Research and Development Command for 3 years, and was stationed in Baltimore in that capacity when he was called upon to assume charge of the Strategic Air Command. In doing so he succeeded Gen. Curtis E. LeMay, now Vice Chief of Air Force, and for 8 years the signally successful commander in chief of Strategic Air Command in its most formative years.

General Power had served as General LeMay's deputy commander of SAC. Hence, his assumption of duty as its commander in chief was like coming home for him.

I express and share the general, widespread confidence that General Power will competently lead the Strategic Air Command in such a fashion as to retain for it the outstanding position of being the greatest single deterrent to world war III, a position accorded it by many authorities.

On September 19 of last year, 2 weeks before Sputnik I was launched, the new chief of SAC was honor guest of a public-affairs luncheon of the Chamber of Commerce of Omaha, Nebr., near which SAC headquarters are located. He gave a talk on that occasion on the Strategic Air Command of the Future.

It was a meaningful message. It cited the background against which SAC was originally conceived and created. It also set forth clearly its mission and the methods by which same are being and will be accomplished.

Prior to the spring of 1946 when SAC was created, enough of our thoughtful national leaders, to get a job done, became convinced of the proven determination of the Soviet dictators to achieve their goals of an all-Communist world under their undisputed domination at any cost and by any means. Of course, the United States was their only major obstacle, and an obstacle that every effort would be exerted to eliminate.

SAC was conceived of as an effective means to meet that threat by building an ability to defeat any aggression, but more preferably building up an agency to discourage aggression from occurring in the first place.

Thus it was that SAC was assigned the mission of being prepared to conduct strategic air operations on a global basis so that, in the event of sudden aggression, SAC could immediately mount simultaneous nuclear attacks designed to destroy the vital elements of the aggressor's warmaking capacity to the extent that he would no longer have the will nor the ability to wage war.

Since shortly after its organization, SAC has had that capability and readiness to achieve its mission. It has it today, and I am confident it will possess it as time goes on. What is more important, however, is that the Soviets are well aware of this capability and readiness.

SAC's mission today is the same as it was when organized.

Its means and manner of accomplishing this mission are different, however, today than they were originally, or even 5 years ago. SAC is not and never was inflexibly tied exclusively to presently known, proven and operational weapons. Of course it must rely on such weapons for accomplishment of its mission on a day-by-day basis, because it is a force-in-being, with a present, daily, and even hourly readiness to achieve.

However, its strength is not based on any particular weapon system but on an organization of well-trained and experienced men who are provided with the global communications network, the strategic intelligence, the logistic support, and the innumerable other tools required for the effective operation of any strategic weapon system, regardless of its complexity and radical features.

Hence it is that SAC must constantly keep itself fully informed as to technological trends and developments which might affect its operations. It must, moreover, insure that advanced strategic weapons are developed so as to meet its specific requirement. It follows that it should also initiate early steps to integrate these weapon systems into its inventory as rapidly as they become operational.

These and other basic considerations were set out in General Power's speech. The Strategic Air Command has none of the failings of the concept of the ill-fated Maginot line. It never will have any of those failings if the essence of the considerations set out in General Power's speech are carefully heeded and if they are woven into and become a part of our national defense policy.

After General Power's speech was delivered, I asked permission to have it inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He furnished me with a copy for that purpose and gave his consent. However, the speech was given on September 19, 2 full weeks before Sputnik I was launched by the Russians. It occurred to me that there might be some fashion in which General Power should like to alter or supplement his remarks, in view of the launching of an earth satellite. I wrote him accordingly.

Under date of December 17 he answered my inquiry in which he flatly stated that none of the events which had occurred subsequent to his making the speech in any way altered the concepts guiding SAC's present and future operations as he discussed them in that Omaha Chamber of Commerce talk.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted at the conclusion of my remarks the text of General Power's talk and also the text of his December 17 letter to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the address and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALK BY GEN. THOMAS S. POWER, COMMANDER IN CHIEF, STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND, AT THE PUBLIC AFFAIRS LUNCHEON OF THE OMAHA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, OMAHA, NEBR., SEPTEMBER 19, 1957

Mr. LeMar, Mr. Svoboda, Senator Hruska, Mayor Rosenblatt, honored guests, ladies, and gentlemen, to speak of the future, as I intended to do today, is always a risky business. To be sure, it is quite a temptation and even a challenge to speculate about the supermissiles, superplanes, and other superweapons which we might have tomorrow. But it is one thing for science fiction writers and comic-strip artists to give their imagination free rein for the sake of entertainment, and another thing to let fantasy and wishful thinking govern the strategic planning for the continued security of our Nation.

In order to predict the future of the Strategic Air Command with an acceptable measure of realism, we must take a sophisticated look at three distinctive areas and at the impact which changes in these areas could have on SAC's mission and operations. The three areas are: the international situation, advances in military technology, and ensuing changes in the techniques of aerial warfare.

SAC was established some 11 years ago in order to cope with international problems which our victory in World War II had failed to resolve. The Axis Powers had just been defeated; the Soviet Union was our ally. But while the threat posed by the Nazis and the Japanese nationalists had been effectively eliminated, not even the most optimistic Americans in responsible positions could fail to recognize the ever mounting threat of Communist aggression.

The doctrines and avowed goals of the Communist philosophy were well known. Equally well known was the proven determination of the Soviet dictators to achieve their goals of an all-Communist world under their undisputed domination at any cost and by any means. The United States, stronger than ever at the end of World War II, was their only major obstacle. It, therefore, stood to reason that the Soviets would make every effort to eliminate that obstacle at some propitious time. To protect ourselves against this contingency, we had to be prepared to meet it and, preferably, prevent aggression altogether by discouraging it through an overpowering posture of strength.

This was the background for the establishment of SAC in the spring of 1946. It was assigned the mission of being prepared to conduct strategic air operations on a global basis so that, in the event of sudden aggression, SAC could immediately mount simultaneous nuclear attacks designed to destroy the vital elements of the aggressor's warmaking capacity to the extent that he would no longer have the will nor ability to wage war. It is well known to the Soviets that SAC is capable and ready to do just that, and I am convinced that this deterrent has been an important factor in preventing world war III to this date.

The international situation which led to the organization of SAC is essentially the same today as it was 11 years ago. The causes which are responsible for these conditions have not changed in the past 40 years and are not liable to change in the foreseeable future. But because of forces such as SAC, these conditions have not exploded into total war. Therefore, it is mandatory that SAC must be prepared to successfully counter any attack and, thereby, deter aggression as effectively in the years to come as it can today and could for the past 11 years.

But while SAC's mission will remain the same, there will continue to be changes in the factors which affect the manner of accomplishing that mission. During the past decade, the Soviets have made an all-out effort to attain qualitative superiority in weapons and have made considerable strides in most fields of military technology. It is my considered opinion that, in spite of their efforts, we have been able to maintain the overall lead in this race and that we are in the position to maintain it indefinitely.

We must make sure, however, that our margin of technological superiority, translated into superior operational capability, is large enough to constitute as effective a deterrent in the future as it has been in the past. For the measure of deterrence is not what we think will deter the Soviets or any other potential aggressor but what, in their opinion, would demand too high a price for too little assurance of victory.

This brings me to the second area which we must investigate in trying to predict SAC's future—advances in technology. Today's military planners can no longer confine their analyses to matters of strategy and tactics but must recognize that the increasing potency and versatility of the tools of warfare have had and will continue to have a profound impact on the fundamental character and scope of war.

The task of today's military planner is greatly aggravated by the fact that it is no longer possible to make assumptions concerning future technological advances on the basis of extrapolation, that is, by arbitrarily extending the curve of past progress into the future. To illustrate this point—if someone would have tried only 20 years ago to predict our present problems of aerial warfare, he would have probably thought in terms of vast formations of propeller-driven bombers, carrying huge loads of TNT. To be realistic, he could anticipate only reasonable improvements in the aircraft and weapons then in existence or under development, but he could not possibly anticipate the availability of jet-powered bombers and nuclear weapons, and the tremendous changes they have wrought on aerial strategy.

Thus, we must avoid the fateful error of taking it for granted that tomorrow's weapons will be just improvements of today's weapons, and that advances in technology will result merely in advances of current techniques. We have witnessed many examples of the fallacy of this philosophy during the past few decades. Jet and rocket engines, nuclear weapons, radar—these are but a few of the more spectacular miracles of science which have radically changed both offensive and defensive strategy and tactics, practically overnight.

The unknown factor in our planning, therefore, is not the rate of progress in the future but what is known as the technological breakthrough, a revolutionary new phenomenon or technique which has a profound impact on a major field of military technology. A case in point is the so-called thermonuclear breakthrough in 1952 which established the practicability of high-yield nuclear weapons of relatively small size and weight. As a result, it suddenly became feasible to accelerate the development of long-range ballistic missiles which had been lagging for lack of a small warhead of sufficient yield to make such weapons practical.

The conclusion to be drawn from these considerations is that SAC cannot afford to be static and inexorably tied to presently known weapons and concepts. Instead, it must be as dynamic as the era in which we are living and maintain its organization flexible enough to be readily adaptable to the results of any unexpected technological breakthrough which would yield some radically new weapon or technique of strategic aerial warfare.

Since SAC is a force-in-being, it must concentrate all of its efforts toward the accomplishment of its assigned mission on a day-to-day basis. This means that its equipment must be proven and operational, that is, ready for instantaneous and effective use whenever the need arises. At the same time, however, SAC must also keep its eye on the future and keep itself fully informed as to technological trends and new developments which might affect its operations. In this manner, SAC cannot only insure that advanced strategic weapon systems are developed so as to meet its specific requirements, but can also initiate early steps to integrate these weapon systems into its inventory as rapidly as they become operational.

And here lies the answer to the unknown factor of the impact of future technological breakthroughs. Even though such breakthroughs may be entirely unexpected, their reduction to operational weapon systems takes enough time to prepare for their smooth integration into as flexible an organization as SAC has been able to develop. SAC's strength is not based on any particular weapon system but on an organization of well trained and experienced men who are provided with the global communications network, the strategic intelligence, the logistic support, and the innumerable other tools required for the effective operation of any strategic weapon system, regardless of its complexity and radical features.

Our planning for the future is further aggravated by the fact that the Soviets can plan or change programs and schedules so as to suit their purposes best, secure in the knowledge that they face no aggression by the United States. For our part, we must not only try to anticipate and prepare for their every move but cannot afford to make any mistakes since our planning may well be a matter of national survival.

Modern science comes to our aid in considering the vast number of conditions that might arise as a result of any type of aggressive action on the part of the Soviets. Using electronic computers, we conduct war games in which we express such factors as type and size of attack, timing, rate of recovery, and many others in mathematical terms which we can vary at will. In this way, we can establish the parameters for our defensive posture so as to meet the greatest number of eventualities at the least cost to us.

The results of our war gaming exercises have borne out our contention that the decisive phase of the next war—if and when it should come—would be very short, and that it will be won by the side which manages to win the initial airpower battle. In order to improve their chances of a quick, decisive victory in that battle, the Soviets would undoubtedly make the best possible use of their principal advantage in taking the initiative, namely, surprise. For this reason, we can probably expect only what we call tactical warning of their intentions—the information that hostile action has been taken against one of our units or facilities, or that Soviet bombers have taken off on what has definitely been ascertained to be an attack against the United States. Such a tactical warning would give SAC only a few hours to launch the bombers based in this country and even less time to launch those based overseas.

I spoke advisedly of bombers rather than missiles because, if an attack should take place today or in the very immediate future, the initial exchange of air strikes would feature almost entirely manned bombers. Just as SAC cannot afford to use equipment that is not fully proven and operational, so the Soviets would not start a war with weapons which are not dependable enough to insure, in their minds, the complete success of their initial strike.

There has been much public speculation about the Soviets' announcement that they have successfully flown long-range ballistic missiles. But our tests with long-range missiles, though not always spectacular from the public's point of view, have been quite successful, too. Since our missiles—and, undoubtedly, those of the Soviets—are test vehicles, indications are that the Soviets and we are in a neck-and-neck race for the development of long-range ballistic missiles, capable of carrying high-yield nuclear warheads, but that neither side has, so far, achieved an operational capability in this field. This, however, is no reason for complacency because, if the Soviets should succeed even momentarily in attaining operational capability which would negate our own mission capability, then the deterrent to general war would be gone.

We should expect little, if any, strategic warning of an impending missile attack. In fact, the Soviets' claim of possessing successful ballistic missiles could well constitute the only strategic warning we will ever get. And the tactical warning, on the basis of which we would initiate counteraction, would be reduced to a mere fraction of an hour—perhaps 15 minutes or even less.

These are some of the major factors which must govern our planning for the SAC of the future. Since my return to SAC last July, I have been given many detailed briefings by my staff at the headquarters and have visited numerous SAC bases in this country and abroad. I was deeply gratified to ascertain that SAC has achieved the highest state of combat readiness in its 11-year history. Our task for the future is to attain even higher plateaus of combat readiness, without any gaps in our relative strength-in-being, and continuously to improve our effectiveness so that it progresses at the same rate as the enemy threat.

While we must remain flexible enough to cope with any unforeseen contingencies that may arise in the future, we must also deal effectively with those contingencies which we can anticipate with sufficient assurance to warrant immediate and aggressive action. For instance, we consider it highly probable that SAC will have to carry the brunt of an aggressor's initial offensive, since any delay in immobilizing SAC's retaliatory forces would result in unacceptable damage to the enemy. For this reason, we must be fully prepared to prevent large-scale sabotage attempts immediately preceding an attack against this country and designed to keep SAC's forces pinned down. We must be equally prepared to protect these forces against a massive surprise attack so they will retain sufficient retaliatory capability to make such an attack too risky for the enemy.

There are several ways by which we are achieving this purpose. The first entails so-called hardening of our bases and launching sites, that is, the provision of some measure of protection against crippling damage by bombs and missiles. However, hardening of bases is expensive and can reach the point where it affects combat readiness and reaction time.

A more effective means of protecting SAC's overall combat capability is the dispersal method. Present plans call for dispersing our B–52's over a number of bases in this country so that there will be not more than one squadron at each base.

The advantages of dispersal are that it expands the enemy's target system, increases the number of targets that pose a threat to him, increases the speed of launching our alert force, and minimizes the effect of an enemy strike. Its main disadvantage is that it is, essentially, a defensive measure and cannot, by itself, win a war.

Although base-hardening and dispersal provide us with some degree of protection, our main reliance is on SAC's alert system. Under this system, SAC maintains a percentage of its aircraft and crews as well as of support personnel and equipment on a continuous alert status, ready to launch a counterattack at a moment's notice. Alert crews always stay and even sleep near their planes; new construction shortens taxiing and expedites takeoff sequence; pilots know their targets, navigators their route.

Thus, a sizable portion of SAC's striking force will be in the air within minutes after receipt of the tactical warning. And needless to say, a similar alert system will be adapted to the launching of missiles once they become operational and an integral part of SAC's weapons inventory.

The principal value of the alert system lies in the fact that it insures the preservation of at least some degree of strike capability even after an unexpected and devastating attack. The size of that part of SAC's strike force, which cannot be destroyed in such an attack, and the potential damage which this force could inflict on an enemy are among the most decisive factors an aggressor would have to weigh before launching an attack, be it with bombers, missiles or both.

It must, therefore, be our endeavor to continuously increase the percentage of SAC's force on alert status, and to do so within the limits of our resources in skilled manpower and materiel. This will be one of our most challenging tasks in the months and years ahead.

Today, SAC's striking force includes the B–52 and B–47, both excellent jet bombers equipped with the most advanced electronic navigation and bombing aids. Our C–97 aerial tankers are being augmented by KC–135 jet tankers which will further improve the performance of our bombers. As new and still more advanced strategic weapon systems now under development become operational, they will give increasing power and swiftness to SAC's mailed fist. And, in the not too distant future, long-range missiles will be added in gradually increasing quantities, not to replace but to supplement our manned bombers.

However, with every advancement in our weapon systems, the Soviets can be expected to make similar advancements, judging from the rapid progress they have made toward challenging our technological superiority. Unless we do our utmost to preserve our still existing lead, the Soviets could conceivably succeed in closing the gap and, ultimately, surpass us.

I am hopeful that this will never happen because our Nation has the capability, the resources and the determination to retain its technological supremacy indefinitely. If we exploit our technical advances by reflecting them effectively and rapidly in our operational equipment, and if we have always enough of that equipment, SAC can remain the best equipped long-range striking force in the world.

But qualitative superiority in materiel is not enough. We must also retain qualitative superiority in men because, just as in any other trade and profession, even the best tools are of little use unless there are men to handle them expertly. That is why SAC must have a sufficient number of experienced, professional personnel to make the most effective use of the superior weapons we now possess. And as our weapon systems continue to grow more and more complex, we will need commensurately more professionals, more skills and more training for the operation and maintenance of this equipment if we are to benefit from the technological advance it represents.

To cope with all these problems, and to do so with the least impact on our national economy, that is the grave responsibility which we must discharge successfully in order to preserve the protective and deterrent might of the "SAC of the future."

DECEMBER 17, 1957.

Senator ROMAN L. HRUSKA,
Omaha, Nebr.

DEAR SENATOR HRUSKA: In reply to your letter of December 11, I was very pleased to learn of your intention to insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the talk which I presented at the Omaha Chamber of Commerce luncheon on September 19, 1957.

I also appreciate your kind offer to make alterations or supplemental remarks to the talk prior to its insertion, and I have carefully reviewed it in this light. It is my considered opinion that neither the launching of satellites by the Soviets nor any of the subsequent events that have taken place since I presented my talk have, in any way, altered the concepts guiding SAC's present and future operations as I discussed them.

In fact, it appears that recent events have served to support my contention that, in order to keep up with the Soviets' all-out effort and steady progress toward attaining qualitative superiority in weapons, we cannot afford to rely on the mere improvement of existing weapons and techniques but must do our utmost to rapidly achieve an operational capability in highly advanced strategic weapon systems, such as ballistic missiles.

Since I presented my talk, SAC has taken further steps in implementing its gradual conversion to a mixed missile-bomber force which, as I explained, is our present goal. Sites for SAC's first missile division are being constructed in California and Wyoming. A large launching site for the jet-powered SNARK, which will be our first intercontinental missile until we can phase in the ICBM, will be built in Maine and operated by SAC's first missile squadron which was recently activated under our Eighth Air Force.

The vital need for a potent deterrent to aggression, as represented by the Strategic Air Command, is the same today as it has been for the past decade and will be for the foreseeable future. Notwithstanding any progress the Soviets have made or may make in the future, I reiterate my confidence that SAC can maintain its deterrent margin by growing with the threat because its strength is not based on any specific weapon but on an organization of highly skilled professionals which is flexible enough to be adaptable to any new weapon system or technique, no matter how revolutionary.

The continued validity of these considerations cannot be emphasized too strongly. For this reason, I am grateful to you for the opportunity of making my remarks of last September available to members of the Congress and of thereby stressing the fact that, while the factors affecting SAC's operations are bound to change, there can be no change in the principles guiding these operations.

Sincerely,

THOMAS S. POWER,
General, USAF, Commander in Chief.

RETURN TO GERMAN AND JAPANESE CITIZENS OF PRIVATE PROPERTY SEIZED DURING AND AFTER WORLD WAR II UNDER THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, on previous occasions I have discussed, on the floor of the Senate, the return to German and Japanese citizens of private property seized during and after World War II under the Trading With the Enemy Act.

The return of such property at an early date is urged.

First, because it is right and just. The sacredness of private property has a deep moral foundation.

Second, such return is in keeping with our historic policy. American precedents for such return go back almost 150 years.

Third, such a return would subserve our national interest in restoring our prestige standing in the eyes of the world. It would increase the sanctity of investments abroad of all nations including those of Americans.

Our refusal to return this alien property endangers the development of world markets by setting up an unfortunate precedent upon which other countries may rely in seizing foreign-owned property within their own borders.

A year and a half ago on this floor, I suggested that "the United States cannot long continue an anomalous policy of supporting confiscation at home and condemning it abroad. Even when the inconsistency of such action does not prove troublesome momentarily, it threatens to plague this Nation and its citizens in the future."

Within recent weeks, the fears thus expressed have materialized in the seizure of private property in Indonesia. The noted journalist, David Lawrence, in one of his articles a couple of weeks ago, drew attention to the fact that "there has not been a single protest from the major powers of the world against what is probably the handiwork of the Communists," and he concluded by stating that "certainly the time has come to champion the principle of simple honesty in international affairs as against the stealing of private property, coupled with brazen demands to extort political concessions from a foreign government as the price of recovering the stolen property."

I request unanimous consent that there be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point the article by David Lawrence, in its entirety.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Omaha World Herald of December 27, 1957]

ANTICOLONIAL POLICY BEARS GRIM HARVEST IN INDONESIA

(By David Lawrence)

WASHINGTON.—Organized brigandage in Indonesia—the theft of private property and an attempt to use the loot as blackmail against a foreign government—has hardly a parallel in international crime.

For several days the news dispatches have told of the confiscation of the property of Dutch citizens who live in Indonesia—formerly the Dutch East Indies.

But there has not been a single protest from the major powers of the world against what is probably the handiwork of the Communists.

Indonesia is the creature of the United States and its allies who helped the island empire achieve independence from Dutch rule in 1949.

The cry of "colonialism" had been raised, and the Department of State, under the Truman administration, did everything it could to bring about the separation of the Dutch from the island possessions where, during many hundred years, Holland's investors had aided in the development of such resources as rubber and petroleum.

BLACKMAIL

Confiscation of the property of foreigners is nothing new in the world, but in international law the precedents require that adequate compensation be made to the lawful owners.

In this case not only has no such provision for payment been made, but the Indonesian Government is threatening not to pay at all unless the Dutch investors bring pressure to bear on their own government to relinquish possession of another colony—Dutch New Guinea—thousands of miles away.

The government at The Hague can do little except to urge the democracies of the world to take a good look at the fruits of their anticolonial policies.

IS RED RULE BETTER?

All the important trade and business activities and all the communications between the various islands in the Indonesian group have been carried on heretofore by Dutch citizens.

To uproot all this suddenly is to bring a crisis to the little nation that must cause the governments of the world, especially the United States, to wonder if a continuation of enlightened colonialism, such as the Dutch furnished, would not have been much better for the average inhabitant of this colonial area than Red rule is today under a puppet government which obeys Moscow's agents.

THE TIME HAS COME

In recent weeks the anti-Communist sentiment inside Indonesia has been rising, and it is important for the non-Communist countries not to become entangled in the internal situation there.

But certainly the time has come to champion the principle of simple honesty in international affairs as against the stealing of private property, coupled with brazen demands to extort political concessions from a foreign government as the price of recovering the stolen property.

It makes many observers wonder whether the same thing isn't likely to happen in Algeria, where French interests have built up a big colony only to find themselves being forced out by a nationalist movement fanned to a frenzy by Communist intrigue.

Mr. HRUSKA. Whatever reason other major powers may have for not protesting the seizure of properties in Indonesia, it should be quite clear why the United States should hesitate to speak up in view of its own dereliction, in failing to follow American precedents of long standing in returning property of aliens seized during wartime.

Last July, President Eisenhower recognized the importance of this subject. He declared "In order to reflect the historic American policy of maintaining the sanctity of private property even in wartime, the administration intends as a matter of priority to submit to Congress, early in the coming session, a supplementary plan for the payment in full of all legitimate war claims of Americans against Germany, and as an act of grace, an equitable monetary return to former owners of vested assets."

Several bills are now pending in this Congress on the subject but they lag. It is hoped that the President's promised supplementary plan will be forthcoming soon and that it will result in an impetus which will bring prompt legislative action.

Mr. President, the nature and elements of this entire situation were the subject of an article by O. K. Armstrong, a former Member of Congress, in this month's issue of the Christian Herald. I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Herald of January 1958]

DOES AMERICA RESPECT OTHER PEOPLE'S PROPERTY?

(By O. K. Armstrong)

"Does not your Constitution provide that no property shall be taken from citizens without due process of law and without just compensation?" asked a professor at Bonn University, Germany, last summer, while I was meeting on the campus with members of International Christian Leadership, an organization devoted to making more effective the Christian witness in public affairs.

"Yes, Doctor, the Constitution of the United States provides just that," I answered. "But, unfortunately, in the fever of war, human rights are often ignored."

The professor's next comment was not so easily answered. "World War II ended more than 12 years ago." He was polite and smiling as we talked, but he was expressing the deep hurt felt by many thousands of German and Japanese citizens because their property, or that of their relatives and friends, was seized by the United States Government as a war measure and has never been returned.

Alien enemy property it is called, even though the war was finished half a generation ago and we in America are trying almost desperately to make friends and influence people to our way of life in the former enemy lands.

That particular German professor is devoting the rest of his life to training young men to be future leaders of a democratic, peaceful Germany. Yet, about $1,500 worth of property, left to his relative by another relative who emigrated to the United States 50 years ago, has been seized under the Trading With the Enemy Act.

About $390,808,000 worth of such property was vested by the Office of Alien Property (OAP) under the Department of Justice during the war or since the war ended. Suddenly, without notice, without trial, and with no opportunity for defense, German and Japanese citizens were stripped of all they owned in the United States. There were about 34,000 vestings, affecting more than 300,000 direct and indirect owners. Today that property has increased in value to an estimated $629,701,000.

We are not talking about public property—that which was owned by the governments with which we were at war from 1941 to 1945. It is understood that such property is open to seizure as an enemy asset. Our concern is with private property. A good point can be made for vesting—temporarily—the private property of citizens of nations with which another country is at war, in order to prevent its use during war. But there is nothing democratic, just, or fair in permanent confiscation of private property after the fighting has ceased and the people are trying to bind up their wounds.

Some of the property was in holdings of large corporations, as I. G. Farbenindustrie and the Stinnes Corp. But the vast majority of people involved each had investments or other property in the United States valued at less than $10,000, including household furnishings, jewelry, books, radios, cameras, clothing, and even dolls and toy ukeleles. There were around 50,000 patents, 650,000 copyrights and trademarks, and 36 million feet of motion-picture film.

According to the OAP, there were 469 large and small businesses taken, ranging all the way from interests in oil wells to an orange grove of a Japanese family. There were 1,300 pieces of real estate and thousands of holdings and small investments in stocks and bonds.

About $88 million, or more than 20 percent of the total amount, is known as estate and trust properties. This type of property is not alien at all, much less enemy. It was owned by American citizens, and was left to heirs or assigns in one of the enemy countries. For example, there was the American businessman who left $25,000 to be divided among five relatives in Germany. The American Government still holds it.

Several of the properties were owned by American veterans of German or Japanese descent, honorably discharged from the service. If such veterans passed away—even from battle wounds—any relative they might have in Japan or Germany are barred from receiving most of their legacies. Even social security and death benefits have been confiscated by Alien Property.

Most tragic in their absurdity are the amounts seized by OAP which were gifts or legacies to charitable causes. For example: John Meierdierks of San Francisco left $500 for the poor and needy of the Heitberg Home in Hanover. Marie Schreiner of Luzerne County, Pa., left $500 for a village kindergarten in Friestatt, Baden. Julius Zehnstner of Madison County, Wis., left $7,000 to the University of Marburg for its medical school. All these legacies were seized.

Henry Baumann of Chicago left part of his estate to the pastor and organist of the oldest church in Erligheim, Wurtemberg. That part of the estate was confiscated.

Even the dead must be treated as enemies. The alien property sleuths discovered that Pauline Jacobs of the Bronx had left $200 for the upkeep of her parents' grave at Bad Duerkheim, and they seized that along with all other such bequests.

The late Alfred Leutz, former member of the State senate of North Dakota, married a German girl shortly before World War II began. When he passed away, his estate, valued at about $50,000, was confiscated by OAP. Now his impoverished daughter Gretel, studying to be a nurse, is working her way through medical school.

A Japanese family, sharing in the proceeds of a fruit grove in California, found the returns from the investment seized by OAP. The patent rights of an outstanding Japanese inventor in Tokyo, whose electronic products are used in many of our military and civilian planes, were confiscated.

Thousands of such cases can be cited. What brought about this tragic situation? We must go back to October 1917, when the Trading With the Enemy Act was passed. Its purpose was to vest and hold in trusteeship the property of Germans and prevent its use to aid the enemy in war. It was never the intent of Congress that this property would be confiscated, and 80 percent was returned to the owners, 20 percent being reserved for later payment.

With World War II a new concept entered—that of economic warfare, whereby leaders in our Government, along with those of our allies, decided upon a policy of crippling permanently the economic strength of both Germany and Japan, so that they would not only be defeated in war but would never again have the potential to make war. Germany, especially, was to be made a "pastoral" country. From this grew the unjust and war-breeding stripping away of territories, dismantling of plants that could be used for peacetime production, and confiscation of private property.

It seems fantastic today that such policies could ever have been considered seriously as the basis for future peace on earth, good will toward men. Much of the harsh and vengeful program was abandoned years ago, but private property was being seized as late as 1953, and no provision has been made for return to the owners. By a clever legislative move in 1948, vested property was tied in with the payment of certain war claims of United States citizens against Germany and Japan. Under this War Claims Act, money from the sale of assets of vested property can be used to pay claims for the detention and ill treatment of prisoners of war, and for loss of property by members of certain religious groups. The act was backed to the hilt by officials of Alien Property, and by major veterans' organizations.

Thus far, around $250 million worth of the seized properties has been expended in the war claims. About $60 million have been used for expenses of the OAP, which now employs 300 persons with an annual payroll of more than $3 million.

"We have to enforce the law as Congress wrote it," officials of Alien Property always explain, when questioned about such rank injustices as I have given. Yet these same officials have appeared, time after time, before committees of Congress, protesting against any change in the law that would return the seized property.

Principal efforts in Congress to provide for return or just compensation to the owners have been made by two influential members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, EVERETT M. DIRKSEN (Republican) of Illinois and OLIN D. JOHNSTON (Democrat) of South Carolina. Both these statesmen, and many others I have interviewed on the matter, declare that they will again sponsor legislation for this purpose in the forthcoming session of Congress.

President Eisenhower recognized the importance of this move when on last July 31, after a visit by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of the Republic of Germany, he declared:

"In order to reflect the historic American policy of maintaining the sanctity of private property even in war time, the administration intends as a matter of priority to submit to Congress, early in the coming session, a supplementary plan for the payment in full of all legitimate war claims of Americans against Germany, and as an act of grace, an equitable monetary return to former owners of vested assets."

There are three compelling reasons why the American people should with a united voice back the President and our Congressional leaders in sponsoring the long-delayed legislation to provide that private property seized as a war measure is returned:

First, it is a legal obligation.

In the Bill of Rights, Article V, is something besides the "fifth amendment" which protects a person against self-incrimination. There are these words: "No person * * * shall be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

That statement has been a solid stone in the foundation of civil liberties and personal rights since the amendments were adopted. Without it, an arbitrary government, or even a despotic official of the government, could take property on a whim without payment to the owner. And that is precisely what will have been done to the owners of property seized in war unless due return or just compensation is made.

"But the United States Constitution does not apply to nationals of other countries!" is given as excuse for this confiscation. While that is technically true, actually the standard of legality in our relation with neighbor peoples has always been to apply the same rules to them as we hold sacred for ourselves.

Even if human rights under our Constitution did not apply to "foreigners," there is a solemn treaty obligation. In 1907, the United States, England, France, Germany, Russia and many other big powers signed a treaty, agreeing that no reparations (payments by defeated countries to pay for destruction of war) would be levied except under the express terms of a treaty of peace. When our Government takes part in the confiscation of property for reparations, without agreement and without compensation, it breaks that treaty. Actually, there is no legal basis for the confiscation of private property as the result of war, except under the concept of "to the victors belong the spoils"!

The very basis for our international relations is the good faith which we extend to our neighbors and which they in turn extend to us. When treaty obligations are broken and powerful nations discriminate against the weaker, we head back down the dark road of "might makes right."

Those who want the problem of vested property justly and finally removed can hope that in any bills submitted to Congress, the President's words "as an act of grace" will be changed to a more forthright "as an act of justice."

Second, return of vested property is morally right.

It is a historical fact that confiscation of former enemies' properties has always been looked upon by the United States people and Government as contrary to their moral principles.

At the close of the Revolutionary War, property of English Tories that had been seized was returned, and this practice was consistently followed through all our wars down through World War I. Speaking for the return of German properties in 1923, a Member of Congress from Texas, the present Speaker SAM RAYBURN, summed up the matter in these words:

"The most savage doctrine ever announced by any people anywhere was that private property should be taken for the satisfaction of a public obligation."

Following the seizure of the Suez Canal by Colonel Nasser of Egypt, this dictator announced he would compensate the canal owners. When Britain and France attacked Egypt and a state of war existed, Nasser vested the British and French claims for compensation of the canal property, declaring that he was merely following the lead of the United States in our Trading With the Enemy Act.

In the minds of all the people of Germany and Japan are the personal memories, or the stories of relatives and friends, of how the Communist regimes seized public and private property indiscriminately, during and after the war. We of the free world protest that there is a great and fundamental difference between us and the Communists in our respect for both life and private property. Yet our confiscation of property as reparations is precisely the same as that of the Soviets.

During the time that the Communists had fastened their cruel blockade upon Berlin, a Philadelphia attorney found an unexpected $300 in an account which he was managing for a German client. The German citizen told his attorney to spend the money for CARE packages for the starving people of Berlin. The lawyer checked with Alien Property before sending it, and was ordered to turn this amount over to the account of the Attorney General for seizure. At the same time, all other agencies of the Government were urging the American people to show by our aid to the Berlin airlift how we differed from Communists.

"Why should a few people—such as orphans—be punished by confiscation of property to pay a supposed obligation of a whole people?" asks Gustav Gedat, member of the German Bundestag and stanch friend of the United States. In Herr Gedat's district in the Black Forest is an orphans' home. A citizen of Pennsylvania left the home $1,000, which was seized by Alien Property before the orphans could get it. Dr. Harry W. Pfund, professor of German at Haverford College and an American citizen, has been trying in vain to have the money released. At each Christmas time he takes up a collection to send these orphans, to make up for the money they did not get. In Christmas, 1956, his donations came from people of churches in 30 States.

The policy of confiscating from a few just because their property can be seized as reparations, which should be the obligation of a government, is morally indefensible.

Third, return of vested property is economically and politically desirable.

From a practical business standpoint, the United States has much to gain in practicing the Golden Rule with respect to our treatment of the property rights of our neighbors, whether former "enemies" or not. Consider the economic stake which our citizens hold in foreign lands: On last August 26 the Department of Commerce announced that close to $40 billion are invested by United States citizens in projects overseas, and that they receive $3,400 million a year from these investments. A policy of discrimination against such property, to say nothing of confiscation, would be a serious matter.

The Soviet regimes are stepping up their economic and political campaigns to win the people of Germany and Japan away from the free world and into the orbit of Communist control. By psychological warfare, by promises and by boasts of superior military power, they seek to make themselves the friends and the United States the enemy of these peoples.

We in America are countering with our program of information and good will. But in the face of such programs, we deny rights to a group of citizens in these countries so widely scattered as to infect their whole nations with irritation and ill will. They ponder the absurdity of such examples as this:

A young man from Germany, now a student at Harvard University, was left $2,500 under the will of an American citizen. The student was a mere child during the war, and could not by any stretch of imagination be considered an enemy alien. He is being educated at the expense of the American taxpayers—while OAP holds the money he could use to pay his own way.

There is the obvious political discrimination whereby the vested property of citizens in Italy and the countries of eastern Europe with which we were at war was promptly returned, while that of Japan and Germany is not.

Return of vested property has been endorsed by numerous organizations and public-spirited leaders. The Methodist Woman's Division of Christian Service has urged the step as evidence of our faith in our system of property rights and in observance of American international legal practice.

The forthcoming session of Congress presents an opportunity for people of good will to correct an injustice and to prove anew our faith in moral principles.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 13, 1958

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Father Edmund W. Morton, S. J., president, Gonzaga University, Spokane, Wash., offered the following prayer:

Direct, we beseech Thee, O Lord, the thoughts and judgments of these, the lawmakers of our land. Grant them the courage to accept the grave responsibility which has been laid upon their shoulders by the people of this country. May they, with wisdom, deliberate the issues which confront them, and with justice, make their decisions for the common good of our citizens. Teach all of us this lesson, that when You created men endowed with freedom You put into our own hands the power to shape our destiny. Humbly we beg Thee to assist us in the use of this awesome power which we possess.

I am sure at this time that the Members of this House will join with me in an expression of condolence to the family of one of the Members of this House who recently was taken from us. Our sympathy is theirs, and our prayers are that God will give them courage and power to bear their suffering and loss.
